Why don't we get it? Because government chooses not to share it. Not good enough, Mr. Speaker. I think we want to see that document, and I hope every member is going to be able to vote for this, because the reason that's being proffered by the government is nonsensical. It's bogus; it's empty; it's vacuous. It simply doesn't in any reasonable sense provide justification for keeping this document secret.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 20 lost]

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M21. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of excerpts of cabinet agenda with attachments dated August 13, 1996, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 34 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that we are rejecting this question on the same grounds. I'd just simply add that in the last session of this Legislature there were a series of questions relating to West Edmonton Mall, which we debated ad nauseam in the House, as I recall, and all of that debate applies mutatis mutandis – I just wanted to say that; I haven't been able to say it for a long time – so I don't think it bears repeating.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to conclude debate.

MR. DICKSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what's more distressing: the fact that the government won't share the document or that our top law guy in the province, the Minister of Justice, doesn't seem to see any difference between a document and answering questions on a matter of government involvement. I could understand government having a higher and better claim to not have to disclose information about what government did or didn't do, but we're talking about a document. Once again, this is in an affidavit of records in action 18469, and if one looks at the first schedule, the first part, document 024, it's right there: excerpts of cabinet agenda with attachments.

Now, one might have expected that the government could say that cabinet privilege attaches. Maybe this is a section 21 or maybe this is a section 23 of the FOIP Act. That would be a reason at least to withhold it. Somebody could say that it was a privileged document. There's no claim to privilege here. If Albertans could only hear the top law person in this province standing up and simply saying: we choose not to share it with you. There's no legal impediment to sharing the document with Albertans.

You know, I was talking about what was scary before, Mr. Speaker. The prospect of the former Minister of Justice and Attorney General offering legal advice to the current Minister of Justice and Attorney General is frightening.

AN HON. MEMBER: He's not taking it.

MR. DICKSON: Oh, I'm heartened by that. That's really . . . Right, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry.

You know, I've always said that we'd never have had the strong freedom of information and access to protection of privacy law if it weren't for the member who formerly was the Minister of Justice. I have always given him credit, because he was the one, when the government caucus was wrestling with whether to do this, who sat down and industriously in the fall of 1993 did I think it was a 13-page analysis of the B.C. act and what ought to be done in this province. In 1993 that member was my hero, because he managed to persuade his caucus colleagues to bring in what is arguably one of the strongest freedom of information laws anywhere in Canada. He did a good deed, and he did good work on that.

It's too bad, then, that the government did a number of things. [interjection] I see that we've piqued the interest of the minister responsible for the FOIP Act, but I have to remind him that we then sort of screwed things up with our fee schedule and a bunch of other things, but the act has always been a fine act, and I tell people in Ottawa that, and I tell people in Edmonton that, Mr. Speaker, and in downtown Calgary.

AN HON. MEMBER: You're digressing.

MR. DICKSON: I am. Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I thought this might be a refreshing change from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who typically occupies the better part of most Wednesday afternoons in a single-handed stand for disclosure of documents. I thought I might be a little briefer, and I'm falling into the same trap.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: It's a very exciting subject.

MR. DICKSON: Hon. minister, it is a very exciting subject. I don't know whether he's seen the button my caucus made up with my smiling mug in the middle that says: don't FOIP with me. I'm going to share one of those buttons with the minister.

Anyway, those are the observations I wanted to make. There has been no proper explanation in terms of why the document cannot be shared other than that the government chooses not to. There's no legal impediment. There's no mandatory or discretionary exception in the FOIP Act that's been cited. It's just that government prefers secrecy to openness. Sad day, Mr. Speaker. Sad decision. Sad representation on behalf of the people of Alberta who want to see a greater degree of transparency and accountability.

Thank you.

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M22. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of excerpts of agenda and priorities committee minutes dated February 9, 1998, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 40 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

MR. DICKSON: Since I've managed to make a lot of the observations I wanted to, I'm hopeful I can be a lot briefer in the ensuing motions for returns. I'm getting some advice from my colleagues to my right here who I think are anxious about something more exciting to come along. I know that the Member for Banff-Cochrane was one of the members who was here at 2:30 this morning and is probably anxious to see us move to a speedy conclusion. Heeding that sort of great advice I'm getting from my three colleagues to my right, I'm going to sit down and keep quiet and look forward hopefully to a positive response.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Are we on Motion for a Return 22, Mr. Speaker?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We are.

MR. HANCOCK: I would advise that the government rejects this motion. As we've said in debate on numerous occasions with respect to questions relating to this matter, there was a complete review of this matter. I think it was by the Auditor General. Or was it by the Ethics Commissioner, or was it by everybody? In any event, this has been the subject of significant review. It's past history. It's long gone. It's of no more value. We just have to reject the question for the same reasons that we've given on an ongoing basis.

Thank you.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, all the minister has to do is say: we've disclosed it in our affidavit on production; we'll send it over. You know, if he were a little more creative, what he could say is: consistent with our past position, I won't answer questions about it; the government won't answer questions because it's been dealt with by the Auditor General. But he won't even give us the ruddy document to look at and make an assessment in terms of whether it's significant or important.

Mr. Speaker, in the affidavit of records, the affidavit on production in action 9903-18469, it's right here, the first schedule, the first part. It's document 024, excerpts of agenda and priorities minutes. The government is prepared to disclose it to litigants. Why can't it disclose it to Albertans?

You know, there's a kind of irony here. We've got a bit of a cabal, a little sort of secret club. We've got Alberta Treasury Branches over here. We've got the government of the province of Alberta. We've got the people involved with Triple Five Properties Inc. and the multiple associated corporations. They get to see these documents, but this minister is blocking. This minister is standing in the way of the people in this province being able to see this document. He's absolutely obstructing our access to it.

He didn't claim privilege, so we know it's not solicitor/client privilege. We know it wasn't part of a without prejudice letter. We know that it apparently doesn't offend sections 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23 of the FOIP Act, because we know that this minister is a competent minister, and if it had offended one of those, he would have used that. He would have cited that. He didn't cite any one of those exceptions. He comes forward and he simply says: no, we're not going to share it with you because somebody else has looked at it.

Well, you know, I could care less, Mr. Speaker, whether the Auditor General has seen it. I haven't seen it. My colleagues haven't seen it. The people of Alberta haven't seen it. And that was the problem with the Auditor General's report. So let us see it. You know, let the secret out. Lift the veil of secrecy back. Let us have a peak at this document.

I'd love to see excerpts of agenda and priorities minutes. It may be the closest I ever get, Mr. Speaker, to seeing a cabinet document. Just once in my history as a legislator, could I have a chance to look at one of those top secret, high-powered cabinet docs? I don't know. Are there little borders around it? Are there little animal stamps around the margin? Are there little places for people to . . . [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, we're getting a kind of disclosure here in the House that had never been contemplated by the Standing Orders. But thank you. I can die a happy man now that the minister has shown me one of those cabinet documents. If my 51-year-old eyes were a little sharper and hadn't started getting a little fuzzy around the edges, I might be able to read what she held up.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I've tried to make the point. I've tried to make the argument. Now it's up to the conscience of each man and woman in this place in terms of: do we support government secrecy when there is no compelling legal reason to do so, or do we say that the citizens of this province are entitled to know? The freedom to know, the right to know: it's guaranteed in section 3 of the FOIP Act.

You know, when the FOIP Act came into force, they had to delay the release of the government information video by two weeks because the Premier wanted to be on the front of that video. This is the training video they use. As the lights come up, we see the Premier seated there smiling behind a desk. He's grinning benignly, and he is saying to the people of this province and to everybody who watches the training video that his government is committed to a new culture of openness. I think those are the words he used. It gladdened my heart. As Chief Dan George used to say, my heart soared like a hawk, Mr. Speaker, when I heard that observation. Yet now when that same Premier's government has a chance to choose one of those two paths, they vote for secrecy.

Those are the points that I wanted to make. Please vote yes.

Royalty Tax Credit Program

M25. Mr. White moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies and reports prepared by or for the Department of Resource Development between May 25, 1999, and March 17, 2000, reviewing the Alberta royalty tax credit, ARTC, program.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister of natural resources I would reject Motion for a Return 25. The information that's been provided to me is that the department has no studies or reports on ARTC for the time frame given. The minister made the decision on what changes we were going to make on April 1, 1999. Treasury has met with industry on reporting requirements since then, but that would not constitute a report by or for the department.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to conclude debate.

MR. WHITE: This is probably one of the larger pieces, not in magnitude of the volume of writing but in the effect on one of the substantive industries in this province, and this government has just said that it doesn't do any study to change them. I mean, that bears repeating. That message will have to be sent to CAPP and a few others. We'll definitely send that message. This government is obviously not in care and custody of a large part of the income of this province when it offhandedly makes decisions and appears to make them ad hoc, without much forethought. It's unbelievable to this member that there could possibly be these changes without any study.

You'll recall that perhaps two to four years ago, in that time period, the Alberta royalty tax credit program was revamped considerably, and I would have thought that there would have been some writings, any kind of writings, recognizing that we're looking for all studies and reports prepared by and for the Department of Resource Development. It may have been at the time the department of energy, but regardless, the files moved from one to the other, and there may be some reports in Treasury. If those reports are in Treasury, then surely those opposite could say so and produce those reports. I mean, these cannot be secret documents. There may be some parts of the documents that may be a little sensitive and were sensitive prior to enactment, but after enactment, surely they couldn't be. This member fails to see how this government can justify this denial of information and still maintain that they're accountable and open and transparent. That is the worst hypocrisy that this member has seen in a long time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the motion upheld as presented.

Electrical Power Revenues

M26. Mr. White moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies and reports prepared by the Department of Resource Development between May 25, 1999, and March 17, 2000, evaluating the potential aggregate revenues in the balancing pool, BP, from the auction of the power purchase arrangements, PPAs.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Resource Development I've been requested to reject this motion requesting copies of studies and reports evaluating potential aggregate revenues, if there were any reports of this nature. I would have to advise that one of the reasons for holding an auction is to allow the marketplace to determine the values of the PPAs, and the proceeds of auction would be held by the balancing pool for the benefit of consumers. Speculation by the government about how much revenue and provision of estimates about how much revenue would be derived from it may well be harmful to the auction process and not in the best interest of consumers.

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's something to do with bovines that comes to mind in dealing with that answer.

It is unbelievable that we are going through, as we speak, today actually – they have just broken up a meeting of the bidders in the power purchase arrangements in Calgary today. This government maintains that they cannot disclose any reports and estimates of a balancing pool. The member opposite hedged his bets and said: if there were any reports even. Well, if there are no reports, then this is the biggest pig in a poke that this government has ever, ever seen. In fact, this member has done all he can to find out about what actually is transpiring in this matter, and having gained a certain amount of expertise, I'm beginning to think, as many members of the public knowledgeable in these areas are, that this government is running purely and completely on ideology to move the electricity business from a regulated industry to a quasi-regulated, quasi market driven business. They're doing it totally and completely on the basis of ideology.

Now, one would think that way back in 1994, when this was contemplated and contemplated out loud, you would have some due diligence at the time and understand that if an option was to take place, some kind of divestiture of the assets would be in order and that it would be thought out at that time such that a decision would have been made whether this long process, this five-year process, would be successful. It hasn't been determined until July of this year, and even then we're not sure. Five years in the making has stalled all capital investment in the industry in the base load development power in this province. You'd make that determination then whether it could be done or not, without breaking up the forced divestiture of TransAlta, which currently holds 60 to 65 percent of the generation capacity. You'd think that that determination would be made then.

Then to get this far along and have the minister through the Government House Leader say that there may or may not be reports and that if there are, they're held tight to the vest so that the rest of us can't see them – well, there are very few people in this province that are really interested enough to follow what the estimates of the balancing pool will be. In fact, to put a finer point on it, it's rather difficult for the average citizen to follow it. The balancing pool is in fact the net between that which is achieved by the power purchase auctions and the current costs in, which are determined already by the ITA and subsequently reviewed by the EUB. That being said, this is not a number that should not be disclosed. I mean, the bidders are going to review it and say, "Yes, maybe it is worth that or maybe it's not," but they certainly aren't going to change their bids because of an estimate.

In order to even go down this road, one would have to know what the costs are and what the expected realization is of the balancing pool. The balancing pool is the payback for us the citizens, that have supported the capital debt retirement of all of these facilities in the province under a regulated system. To do this transition, a balancing pool must have a substantial net positive balance in order to make it worth while. Otherwise, it would appear that the regulated system that we had prior, which, incidentally, guaranteed supply, which the current system does not appear to be doing, would be a much better system and should in fact prevail in the marketplace past July 1 and certainly be back in place on January 1 of this coming year.

Without this knowledge that this member is asking for in MR 26, if we don't have that information, the judgment can't be made. Quite frankly, the information will not affect any judgments of a purchaser in the power purchase arrangements, i.e. the bidders, and this member cannot see why this government wouldn't be open and accountable and set a bar, if you will, as to what is success in power purchase auctions and not.

Mr. Speaker, I would prevail upon the members present to vote in favour of this motion so as to truly be open and accountable to the people of the province of Alberta.

Thank you, sir.

[Motion for a Return 26 lost]

Electrical Power Revenues

M27. Mr. White moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies and reports prepared by the Department of Resource Development between May 25, 1999, and March 17, 2000, evaluating the potential aggregate revenues raised from the auction of the power purchase arrangements, PPAs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the of the minister of natural resources I would advise that the government is rejecting Motion for a Return 27. The rationale given is exactly the same as for 26, so I would ask members to refer to that and won't repeat it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to conclude debate.

MR. WHITE: The same arguments again apply, sir. The potential aggregate revenues are an estimate for the inputs to the balancing pool, and they have to have been studied. So either the government will not allow these estimates to be disclosed, in one case, which is way more secretive than is required in this matter, and/or they have not done any study at all, in which case it would border on negligence on behalf of the people of Alberta.

I would ask that the members present support the motion and, again, be truly open and accountable to the people of the province of Alberta.

Thank you, sir.

[Motion for a Return 27 lost]

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M28. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of excerpts of agenda and priorities committee minutes dated April 28, 1997, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall, WEM, as listed on page 40 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta, November 30, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This document, again, is one of the documents that was disclosed in an affidavit of records. The deponent in the affidavit, the Assistant Deputy Provincial Treasurer and representative of the Crown, swore an affidavit of records on November 30, 1999, in action 9903-18469 in the Court of Queen's Bench, judicial district of Edmonton.

One looks at the first schedule. "The first part: showing records in the possession of the Crown which it does not object to produce." If we go through the catalogue of the first schedule, we see number 24. The document is catalogued as "Excerpts of Agenda & Priorities Minutes."

Mr. Speaker, the issue is the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall. The interest is in accessing documents that Albertans have paid for with their tax dollars, and there's nothing more basic than that. Nobody's asking for the government to do anything other than to let us see a document which is being freely distributed and used in the course of the litigation. I suppose that the minister would say: Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you can go and sit in the courtroom and wait until this is used as an exhibit at some point in a six-week trial. It shouldn't be necessary to do that. Albertans have paid for this document.

It's only a document. We're not asking for the government to make a commitment, an analysis, or anything else. It's just a single document we're seeking. If the minister resists this, let him particularize specifically what legal impediment he is citing that would prevent Albertans from having disclosure of this document.

We see a very worrisome trend in a number of these things. Everything that's mentioned about West Edmonton Mall we see the government so anxious to put the shroud of secrecy over. In the words of George McClellan, the first Ombudsman in this province back in 1967: let's let a little sunshine into this dark corner of government activity. Let a little sunshine in. We'd all be better for it. Albertans will be better for it. Even the Minister of Justice is going to be darned happy. Once he's got the document out, he can say to his constituents that he believes in openness and he lives that principle. He doesn't just mouth it at election time, but he actually lives it in the work he does.

So with that, we're all waiting with bated breath to hear the minister rise and solemnly declare on behalf of the province of Alberta, on behalf of the government – will they let the sun shine in?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course the government will let the sun shine in, but we're rejecting this question. The fact of the matter is that I'm a very strong advocate and members in this government are very strong advocates of the people of Alberta having access to information and in fact brought in, as the member has characterized himself, the strongest freedom of information legislation probably in the country. Information is shared on an ongoing basis and a daily basis with Albertans.

What this question is asking for is excerpts of an agenda and priorities committee minute. I think the member would be actually quite disappointed if he were ever to read agenda and priorities minutes. That aside, agenda and priorities is a committee of cabinet. Cabinet documents are subject to the usual rules relating to discussions in cabinet.

MRS. SOETAERT: Oh, they're not open to the public.

MR. HANCOCK: No, cabinet documents are not typically in any parliamentary system open for public scrutiny at the time of creation or for some considerable period of time thereafter.

However, the Auditor General has fully reviewed this matter, has had access to all appropriate documents, and has made a report based on those documents. There is a lawsuit ongoing, and in the fullness of time, in an appropriate contextual situation, all documents that are relevant to be disclosed will be disclosed in the course of that lawsuit. The people of Alberta have been well served by their Auditor General, will be well served by their court system. I'm sorry; I had to slip that in there, being the Minister of Justice and believing that the court system serves Albertans so very, very well. The people of Alberta are well served by this government on freedom of information, first of all, in the context of bringing the freedom of information legislation in and, secondly, in adhering to the concept of open government, open democracy, and – was it sunshine you wanted? – sunshine.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 28 lost]

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M30. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of correspondence from Triple Five Corporation Ltd., N. Ghermezian, to Peter Elzinga dated February 14, 1994, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall, WEM, as listed on page 9 of the affidavit of records of the WEM corporate defendants, November 30, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point I'm almost to the point of having to implore members of the Assembly. I'm going to have to go back tonight and report to my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora that on his behalf I tried to do what he normally does, and I hate to go back and say that I have been no more successful than he has. I want to implore members. My reputation with my colleague is on the line. I need a little assistance here. I need a little help on this last motion for a return.

It's the same kind of thing we've talked about in all the other ones. I'm not going to go through the particulars. It's the same issue. I would say this: if the Minister of Justice were as proud of the FOIP Act as I am, then he'd look at section 21, and that deals with cabinet and Treasury Board confidences. Do you know what he'd find? He'd find that that exception, firstly, is mandatory, but it does not apply if it's information in a record of a decision made by the Executive Council. So once the Executive Council has made the decision, then under 21(2)(b) the exception falls. The exception doesn't exist anymore. Now what we've got is that the Minister of Justice wants to rewrite the law. He thinks section 21 doesn't go far enough. That would seem to be what he wants to do. Maybe we'll get some good advice from the minister responsible for the administration of the FOIP Act, but I thought we were all supposed to follow the law of the land.

Mr. Speaker, I'm anxious again to get to the vote. The Minister of Justice has done me no favour. I've already been embarrassed when I go to meet with my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora to report on my dismal success this afternoon on his behalf. My only hope is that I have to reach above and beyond the Minister of Justice. I have to implore colleagues on all sides of the Assembly to just give me a little bit of help here to be able to take one positive thing back to my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora. You know, members, we're doing it on behalf of the people of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, again on behalf of the government I would reject this question. First of all, I'd point out that this question deals with a document which isn't even a government document. The hon. member hasn't brought that forward.

MR. DICKSON: It's in your production.

MR. HANCOCK: Actually, the question refers to the affidavit of records of the WEM defendants, so it doesn't look like it's in our production at all. It looks like it's in the production of the other party to the lawsuit.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite did ask for some help, and I would give him some help. We've spent a lot of time in the last session and a little time in this session on these types of questions, and the responses have always been the same. I'd give him a lot of help in terms of: perhaps he could ask questions for information that would be helpful to him, and we would be happy to respond with the information in an appropriate manner.

Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing
Calculation Act

[Adjourned debate April 5: Mr. Paszkowski]

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, I'm pleased to be involved in the discussions regarding this particular bill. We've been working with municipalities as partners, and we find that we have a process in place in working with the municipalities to determine the physical challenges. They are basic.

Most recently we met with the two municipal umbrella organizations to talk about municipal/provincial financial issues, and we have agreed to work together as partners to try and deal with the issues at the table in developing long-term and lasting solutions. We're reviewing the education property tax. We're reviewing the farm assessment and taxation. We're developing new rates and schedules for the assessment of linear property. All of these initiatives have an impact on municipal sources of revenue. They have a very direct impact.

The Leader of the Official Opposition spoke about allowing local governments to determine infrastructure priorities. We're not just talking. We're doing something. Just last week we provided a million dollar grant to the development of a new web-based computer system to help municipalities judge the condition of their infrastructure. It's important to know existing conditions and future pressures on the order of setting priorities on infrastructure. Those are indeed long-range capital requirements and fit into the municipal long-range capital plans.

When my colleagues and I toured the province last summer, municipalities told us that there were pressures that needed to be addressed, pressures like roads, water and sewer, transportation issues, wastewater issues. We met with the municipalities, Mr. Speaker. We listened and we took action. This government is making a substantial investment in areas that are a priority to Albertans and meet the needs of the municipalities. We've put in $425 million in 1999-2000 and $475 million in 2000-2001. With this funding guarantee local authorities can allocate the accelerated dollars to their key infrastructure priorities on a preplanned basis over the next three years.

Government took over financial responsibility of all secondary highways and keeps primary highways along with major trade corridors through the cities. We also provided additional funding for water and wastewater facilities, reservoir projects, health facilities and other health projects, capital renewal and postsecondary institutions, environment and agricultural capital infrastructure, rural road studies, and to improve training of fire and disaster services personnel.

The hon. opposition member talked a great deal about the roles and the responsibilities. We've already agreed to work with the municipalities as partners in clarifying provincial/municipal roles and responsibilities. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it's in our business plan.

The Leader of the Opposition stated that according to Statistics Canada, provincial grants to municipalities went down between 1992 and 1998, when in fact the 2000-2001 budget shows that provincial funding to municipalities is the highest it has been in the last 10 years. The Liberal leader also alluded to an increase in education property taxes between '95 and '99. We listened. In fact, from '95 to '99 basic education spending – and that includes K to 12 – increased $693 million and is continuing to increase. Education funding comes from education property taxes and provincial general revenues. It's important to note that the proportion of education funding derived from education property tax revenues has decreased from 50 percent in '94-95 to 38 percent this year. The facts speak for themselves.

Let's take a closer look at what the Liberals are saying in comparison to what is actually in the bill. The descriptive rhetoric used by the hon. member to describe this bill in no way reflects the speculation that appears in the paper. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there is no resemblance between what's in this paper and what is being needed. The Liberal news release:

Bill 207 would provide local governments with access to a portion of the provincial personal income tax base in order to create more stable and effective funding arrangements.

Mr. Speaker, nothing is further from the truth. This bill could not do this even if it were passed. In fact, eliminating grants and relying on a source of income that can be unpredictable and uncertain would create a situation where funding to municipalities would reflect the volatility of this tax base.

This government has committed to ensuring that Albertans pay the lowest income taxes in the country and has even speculated about the possibility of eliminating provincial income taxes altogether. Where would that leave the municipalities?

Also, the bill actually before us gives us no idea of the method of the allocation to municipalities. Would it be allocated on a per capita basis? Would it be based on personal income taxes paid by the municipality residents? Would it be pooled and redistributed based on the equalization of need formula? Would this income tax revenue be a replacement for other sources of revenue, or would it be in addition to what municipalities already receive from the province? Nowhere does it show it in the bill.

If funds were allocated based on the place of residence, rich communities would get richer, and poorer communities would obviously be the ones that keep getting poorer and poorer and poorer. In fact, it could result in rural municipalities receiving comparatively very little income with such an approach. What if the amount of revenue allocated isn't enough? How would that be handled?

As you can see, this bill raises more questions than it has answers. Without these basic details it would be difficult, if not impossible, to provide a report that would be of any use. So how could you develop a report that could be of use and be functional? In its present form this is not a bill worth considering or debating. Most importantly, Bill 207 is not consistent with the collaborative approach we have taken in dealing with our municipal partners, and indeed, working with our municipal partners is the best solution.

Mr. Speaker, it's always worth while to look at other ways of doing things because that's how you improve and that's how you better yourself. Certainly that's the approach this provincial government is taking, and that's the approach that our municipal partners are anxious to participate in. This is the approach that we are using: working in partnership, working together, and working in all areas for the betterment of the province. I've said – and I mean it – that the municipalities are the foundation of this province, and the stronger the municipalities are, the stronger this province will be.

Working in partnerships in developing the solutions for long-term, long-lasting solutions, solutions that work, solutions that indeed are actually applicable to work with the success of municipalities is the process we want to work with. We're listening to the municipalities' needs. We're listening to their causes. Indeed, this summer we'll be traveling and meeting with the municipalities again to hear what their specific needs are. We want to hear from every municipality in this province what their specific needs are so that we can work with them. I'm looking forward to it. In our consultative process we've been able to keep the municipalities strong in the past, and we look forward to keeping the municipalities even stronger as we build a better and stronger province.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move adjournment of debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/04/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

THE SPEAKER: I'll introduce the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View in just a second, but might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Felix D'Souza, a grade 12 student at Austin O'Brien high school; Joanne Howell, librarian at Austin O'Brien high school; Rosemarie Humniski, careers and postsecondary education counselor at Austin O'Brien high school. head: Government Bills and Orders

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Havelock moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) the question on second reading of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be now put.

[Adjourned debate April 11: Mr. Renner]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening and speak to second reading of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, and offer some constructive comments on this very important bill. Indeed, the discussion surrounding this bill is important to all Albertans.

At the outset I would like to make clear that it is my belief that Bill 11 reaffirms this government's desire to improve our publicly funded and administered health system by entrenching in legislation our commitment to preserving the principles of the Canada Health Act. I also believe that one of the most important things to result out of the debate on Bill 11, Mr. Speaker, is that it has forced Albertans to think about their health care system, its positive aspects as well as its drawbacks and how they think they wish to see it survive into the future.

Canadians cherish their health care system. It's something that helps define us as a nation. This government shares this view and wants to preserve our medicare system, but everyone agrees that it needs to be reformed to stay sustainable into the future.

Today in Alberta we spend $15.5 million a day on health care. This number increases to $17 million a day by 2002-2003. Total health care spending will increase by $1.1 billion over three years, Mr. Speaker, from $5.2 billion in '99-2000 to over $6.26 billion in 2002-2003. Health care expenditures presently make up 31.9 percent of our budget. In 1992-93 the health system was spending about $4.1 billion per year in Alberta.

From 1980 to 1992 health costs increased by 215 percent. As a whole the province was spending over $3 billion a year more than it was receiving in revenue. Between '92-93 and '95-96 the health budget spending was reduced by approximately $500 million, from $4.1 billion to $3.6 billion, a reduction of about 12 percent, not the fraudulent 30 percent number stated by the Leader of the Opposition. Since 1995-96 our health spending has increased.

THE SPEAKER: We have a point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising under Standing Order 23, particularly the subsection that talks about making allegations against another member. I heard the Member for Calgary-Mountain View say that the Leader of the Official Opposition was somehow fraudulent in using the number 30 percent. I can understand why that member would be confused, because the government's own web site repeats the misinformation that the cutback was only 13 percent and also makes the allegation that the Leader of the Official Opposition was talking about health care funding when in fact a careful reading of her comments will indicate that she was talking about hospital funding.

Mr. Speaker, on several occasions, including sessional papers which had been tabled in the House, it is clear that the hospital funding cutback is documented in academic work and in the Canadian centre for health . . .

THE SPEAKER: I gather that the hon. member has made his point. Does somebody else want to respond to this point of order?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I want to make two points. One, under Beauchesne 490 "fraudulent" actually has been held to be parliamentary.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it's a question of interpretation. I think the hon. member across the way was clarifying his leader's position with respect to the issue. Our member was simply giving his own interpretation, which I might add was likely the more accurate of the two, of what has happened in the past.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Beauchesne very, very clearly says that unfortunately from time to time the House must accept conflicting interpretations or conflicting views on exactly the same situation. Not a point of order.

Would you continue, Calgary-Mountain View.

Debate Continued

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

Since 1995-96 the health spending has increased in each of the past four years. Overall annual spending on health has increased by 40 percent. Per capita spending on health in '99-2000 is the third highest in Canada, behind only British Columbia and Newfoundland. However, Alberta is also the youngest province in Canada, so when adjusted for age Alberta has the highest per capita spending in Canada.

DR. TAYLOR: Repeat that.

MR. HLADY: Highest in Canada.

DR. TAYLOR: You're sure?

MR. HLADY: Indeed.

As a province we have seen more and more money going into health care every year since '96-97. Clearly, Alberta is doing its part to ensure that our health care system is adequately funded. Yet waiting lists persist, and people continue to talk about how the system needs to change to address the problems within the system.

Clearly, the status quo is not an option anymore, Mr. Speaker, for our Alberta health system. We can no longer afford to continue adding more and more money to our health care system. It quite simply is not sustainable. The challenges of our increasing and aging population, new medical treatments and technologies, and increased public expectations require that the system change if it is to remain accessible and sustainable to all Albertans.

Some examples I'd like to use, Mr. Speaker. If we build it, more people are using the system. The best example I could come up with is around X rays, CAT scans, and now MRIs. As better technologies become available, people want to use them. However, there is not a lessening of use on our earlier technology. So we're actually seeing just increased spending. We are not seeing a more efficient use of the things that we've had.

Surprisingly, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition agrees, or at least she did when she was the minister of health in 1991.

Reform has to occur. It seems to me that if we keep adding new resources, we won't get to that reform. I'm not an advocate for adding on to the existing system. I think the existing system needs a whole bunch of change.

MacBeth, Hansard, June 10, 1992. Why doesn't she stand and say that now?

THE SPEAKER: Repeatedly, in the last several days reference has been made to names of individual members. That's inappropriate.

I'd ask you to move forward.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize. The Leader of the Opposition.

If I were to make the case for why Bill 11 is before the Legislature today, I do not think I could make a better case than the Leader of the Official Opposition did in 1991. "The existing system needs a whole bunch of change," she said. "I'm not an advocate for adding on to the existing system." Yet she stands in the House eight to nine years later and still offers no solution to the problems and states that we do not need Bill 11 when she did eight or nine years ago.

I'm extremely disappointed in the politics being played by the Liberals and the extremist rhetoric they are using in relation to this bill. Mr. Speaker, I think they lack honour. But they do not care. They do not think they should be accountable for the fear they've been creating in this province.

The Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert repeated this rhetoric in her speech last Thursday. The Liberals believe that if they repeat this rhetoric enough, people will start believing the lies and fears that they keep representing. As an example, the pamphlet they've been passing out around the city which states, "Legalizes private, for-profit hospitals." This bill does not do that. "Creates a two-tier health care system." We protect Albertans from that happening, Mr. Speaker. And it continues on and on.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is also guilty of this. He has spoken of closed beds and what he called "darkened corridors." As usual, Mr. Speaker, the opposition is using a song book full of wrong notes. So that Albertans will know the facts, 15 new or replacement facilities have been built across Alberta to meet increased demands since 1993. Each of these new facilities has opened new beds, brightened new corridors, and increased our capacity within the system.

While we have been actively doing something, Albertans might like to know what the opposition's real position is. Perhaps the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would ask his leader if she stands by what she told the Edmonton Journal in May of 1992, and I quote: I don't deny that the system's going to change or must change, nor do I assume that the number of beds is the only measure of the effectiveness of our health care system. He might also ask her about something else she said, again in May of '92: we have among the highest number of acute care beds per capita here in Alberta; maybe we should look at really making a concerted effort to move into more outpatient centres and care.

The member has also referred to the American health care system, and he doesn't like it. Neither do we, Mr. Speaker. Bill 11 bans in clear language any private, parallel, two-tier American health care system. Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, affirms Alberta's commitment to a quality publicly funded and administered health system for the province and to the preservation of the principles of the Canada Health Act, that foundation of Alberta's health system.

Currently there is no legislated authority for government to prohibit, restrict, or control private surgical clinics in this province. This is a serious legislative gap that the government has been asked by the federal government to address. Presumably, if a surgical clinic wishes to begin operation in Alberta, all it requires is accreditation from the College of Physicians and Surgeons. The government has no legal authority to intervene.

The legislation bans private hospitals and prohibits the development of any parallel, two-tiered health system in Alberta by controlling private surgical clinics. At the same time, it enables publicly funded regional health authorities to look for new and better ways to deliver health services, improve efficiency, and reduce waiting lists through limited contracts with surgical facilities to deliver some surgical services.

A private surgical facility cannot provide insured services unless that facility has a contract with a regional health authority to provide those services and unless the Minister of Health and Wellness has approved that contract, Mr. Speaker. Bill 11 also ensures that no private surgical facilities operate outside the control of the public system.

It prohibits queue-jumping. It prohibits facility fees for medically necessary surgical or physician services that are covered by the Alberta health care insurance plan. Bill 11 also prohibits anyone from requiring patients to purchase goods and services that are not medically necessary or to receive faster service. It also sets out clear rules for the sale of goods and services to patients that are not medically necessary. Mr. Speaker, the legislation sets significant fines, up to $100,000 for a violation of the act.

The government is committed to the fact that no parallel, private, for-profit health system will be allowed to develop in Alberta. The proposed Health Care Protection Act ensures that surgical facilities will only be able to provide services under a contract or agreement with the public system when it is in the best interest of the publicly funded health system. There will be no charges to patients for insured services, and the publicly administered system will have total control over any private facilities.

Mr. Speaker, there are currently 52 privately owned surgical clinics in the province accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Most but not all have contracts with the regional health authorities to deliver some surgical day procedures. A few of the clinics do only uninsured services such as cosmetic or dental procedures. Among the surgical procedures performed in these clinics under contract to the public system are ophthalmology procedures such as cataract surgery; ear, nose, and throat surgery; oral and dental procedures; plastic surgery; dermatology procedures; and pregnancy terminations. Interestingly enough, when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was the health minister, she allowed 35 of these clinics.

DR. TAYLOR: How many?

MR. HLADY: Thirty-five of these clinics she started and allowed them to charge facility fees, and she did nothing about it. We're doing something about it, Mr. Speaker. It is additionally curious to hear some of the criticisms leveled at us by the Leader of the Official Opposition. She suggests that we cannot be trusted on health care because we are creating a two-tiered, American health care system with the advent of Bill 11. This is preposterous. It's untrue, and she should be ashamed of herself for stating this.

In fact, how can Albertans trust the Leader of the Official Opposition now on her public stance against Bill 11 when in 1991 she said:

My view is that we don't have all the answers in the Canadian health system. I think we should always be open to learning more, and it may well be that we can learn something from the quality management structures that the Americans have put in place.

That was in Hansard, June '92. She now creates fear when a few years ago she moved away from that.

She then went on to say this about the U.S.

But I believe with their HMOs . . . there may be better ways to measure quality in health care than we may have imagined in Canada. In terms of learning, which I happen to believe should be a lifelong goal of all of us, including our health system, there may well be something we can learn from the American system without compromising our own.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we're doing in Bill 11. We're trying to make things work better in this province.

Indeed, apparently now the Leader of the Official Opposition feels differently than the rest of us. Apparently she is the one who feels that implementing an American health care system in Alberta would be beneficial. The record says so. It's an undisputed fact. Unlike the Leader of the Official Opposition, this government wants to protect and preserve our medicare system. We want to reform our health care system from within and come up with new and creative ways to make the existing system better. Bill 11 does this by giving RHAs the flexibility, the tools, and the options required to make the best use of their budget and their resources.

I would like to thank all my constituents of Calgary-Mountain View for their comments and suggestions on Bill 11. I have found them constructive and useful in preparing my comments for today. In particular, many have suggested to me that the government needs to examine further how to implement clear cost accountability measures in the system. People tell me that it would be nice to know what doctors are charging or levying on their behalf whenever they access the public system; in essence, what they are costing the public system every time they visit the doctor or the hospital.

Perhaps an amendment in the future, maybe not in this bill but elsewhere or in another bill, could be the introduction of a mechanism where every Albertan receives a yearly or monthly bill or a statement of account, similar to a utility bill, that shows their own personal cost to the health care system. This would close the loop on creating some accountability. This kind of mechanism would not only add cost accountability and transparency to the health care system and could help eliminate double and triple billing, but it would also allow Albertans to understand better the value the existing system provides.

I would also like to tell all the seniors in my constituency that Bill 11 will ensure that they will receive the care they need when they need it and when they need it most. It will help improve access and reduce waiting lists for the minor surgical procedures they require while at the same time freeing up valuable operating time for major surgeries in our hospitals.

In closing, I would like to share an observation. When medicare was introduced back in 1968, it was originally a 50-50 cost-share agreement between the federal and provincial governments. In 1998-99 the federal government contributed only 10 and a half percent of the funding for Alberta's health care system. In the recent federal budget these transfers were boosted, and Alberta received an additional $420 million from the federal government, Mr. Speaker, or enough to keep our hospitals open for about 30 days. For our system to become strong once again, the federal government has to either come back to the table as an equal partner or recognize the value of their contribution and let provinces like Alberta innovate and find new ways to strengthen our system.

The Health Care Protection Act will not solve all the problems in the health care system, Mr. Speaker. The government still needs the support and co-operation of all Albertans and health care professionals and administrators to find long-term solutions. Alberta also will need the continued support of the federal government and a renewed commitment to restore and enhance their funding commitments to Alberta's health care system.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to allow me to speak this evening, and I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have this opportunity to address Bill 11 in second reading. Before I get to the specifics of Bill 11, I want to speak just a little bit about the past, because it may help shed some light on where we are today, where we have been, and how we arrived at this point.

Some of you may or may not know that prior to being elected here in 1993, I served for four years on the Calgary General hospital board. I also represented the Calgary area on the Alberta Healthcare Association board for four years and was further elected by them to represent Alberta on the Canadian hospital board. I was, in fact, appointed to the Calgary General hospital board by the then Conservative minister of health, now the Leader of the Opposition. I was appointed not once but in fact twice by that same minister. I have heard the Leader of the Opposition talk about how when she left her ministry to run for the leadership of my party, she left things in good shape. I'd like to talk about that era, because during that time there were a number of things that did occur that have a direct bearing on the contents of Bill 11 today.

A nurse's strike had occurred, if memory serves, just before the Winter Olympics in Calgary back in 1988. The demands were for an over 20 percent increase in their wages. When the strike finally ended, the nurses in fact had won a very sizable wage increase, but the then hospital and health unit boards were told to find the money inside their existing budgets, as the minister of the day felt no responsibility to cover those increased costs of the single largest expense inside the health care system. That was, and still is today, wages.

The minister told hospital boards they had to improve their information systems so that the department of health and the minister could in fact have a better and more timely information system about what hospitals were doing with the money that was being allocated to them. They did not, of course, allocate additional dollars to the hospitals for those computer systems, nor were there any guidelines from the minister as to what types of systems we should have. We ended up with a variety of different computing systems and programs. For the most part, no one system could talk to any other system in the province.

We spent millions and millions of dollars that could have gone to patient care, but instead the money went to feed endless streams of data to a department that never did tell us what they wanted it for, nor did they ever respond back to us with advice on how to become more efficient inside our hospital system.

In addition to the money spent on the new and improved computer systems, we also had to hire more systems analysts, more programmers, and data entry clerks to input that endless stream of information. Every time things like this occurred, there were always dollars allocated away from patient care and over to more machines and more bureaucrats.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we were in a time of change, but the biggest changes were just coming. The next major shift in funding was called the acute care funding formula, the incredibly complex system designed in the United States for American private acute care hospitals. There was little or no consultation with the hospitals that would be impacted here in Alberta. The new funding formula was announced to the Alberta Hospital Association, and it was another example of the top-down management style that we had come to expect. The logic behind the funding formula was recognition of dollars to acuity level. In and of itself it was a very good idea. Everyone knew, for example, that a burn patient was going to require more care and attention than someone having a minor surgical procedure, and therefore that patient would cost more to look after.

Hospitals that had higher acuity levels would in fact receive more funding than those with lower acuity levels. There was a major flaw in the funding formula, though, and perhaps it's because private acute care centres in the United States don't have long-term care psychiatric patients. But here in Alberta many rural hospitals and some of our majors, such as the Royal Alex and the Calgary General, did in fact at that time have that type of patient and still do today.

The Calgary General hospital was in fact the psychiatric centre for southern Alberta. We had patients that were remanded into our custody by the courts for 30 days. We had a geriatric centre of excellence at the Peter Lougheed Centre, yet neither of these areas were recognized in the funding formula. The end result was that we were deemed inefficient inside the system. We made big headlines, Mr. Speaker, big headlines: Calgary General hospital inefficient.

We lost funding, millions of dollars a year. We lost it to the Foothills and to the U of A, who achieved increases, and please note that these were not new dollars in the system. It was simply a switch of dollars from one facility to another. When we would try to explain to the minister of the day that the formula was flawed and that while in fact it might work in the United States in private hospitals, it was not working appropriately here, we were told by her and her department that there was nothing wrong with the formula.

Well, that being the case, we did what others were doing inside the system: we hired a firm to come in and try to break down the funding formula so we could find ways to get around it. We were, however, forced by the annual reduction in our funding at the General to look for innovative ways to try and save money and try to maintain our patient programs. So we closed beds. We closed whole units. In fact, we closed whole buildings. We privatized everything we could, from biomedical waste handling to privatizing housekeeping in the hospital. We managed to save 2 and a half million dollars in the housekeeping move at a time when we had been cut 3 million dollars for being inefficient.

Because things were not interesting enough at the time, all hospitals were told to do a complete inventory of all programs offered in each facility. The theory behind this move was that at the end of the inventory there would be a rationalization of health care services to eliminate duplication. It turned out that the only program rationalized in the Calgary area was the cardiac program, and it still operated out of the Holy Cross, the General, the Foothills, and the Rockyview. Not much of a rationalization. All other programs stayed basically the same, and turf protection became the order of the day.

We were all told that our patients were staying in the system too long, and in order to comply with the acute care funding formula, pressure was applied across the board to get the length of stay down. A new computer system was invented, and its purpose was in fact to track doctors who admitted patients and the length of stay attached to each patient. This way pressure could be put on individual doctors to have a more timely release of their patients more in line with that of their colleagues.

Home care was the next big push from the department of health, but rather than have home care come under the same system that had the patients while they were in hospital, home care funding was given to the health units. There were not even any common linkages between the health unit system and the hospital system. We did not, for the most part, even communicate with one another. People being released from the hospitals were likely to have to contact the health unit themselves to try and arrange for home care as the pressure for shorter and shorter lengths of stay increased so that we could comply with the acute care funding formula.

Inside the health care system everyone was so preoccupied with the endless tasks required by the minister and her department that rare was the day when we actually talked about services for patients. And all this in the so-called great system that supposedly had few, if any, problems under her guidance. At the same time, this same minister was on Treasury Board helping to firmly place this province into a cycle of deficits, borrowing, and huge interest payments, interest payments that have not created one job, provided one service, or helped one sick or injured Albertan and are still close to a billion dollars this year. Ten years later we're still paying for it.

Private laboratories were encouraged to set up. Private MRI clinics came on the scene as the minister stubbornly refused to supply money needed to buy the new technology. Gimbels and Morgentalers flourished under a system that allowed for physician fees to be paid by the public system, but patients could be and were billed directly for the facility fee, and all of this under her watch. Health care boards were told that we were part of the problem. If we could not get our spending under control and balance our budget, she'd hire somebody who would. There was lots of big talk and lots of threats and very little follow-through.

There was no follow-through on the information system. We were never told what the data was for or how to improve our efficiency in the hospitals. There was no follow-through on the big wage settlement, just less patient care as we scrambled to cover the costs. There was no follow-through on the acute care funding formula even when defects in the formula were shown to be there. Millions of dollars were taken away from a few facilities and given to others. And there was no follow-through on home care. Instead, an idea became the rule of the day. The $35 million to start a new service which $500 million might well have paid for resulted in a shift of nurses out of the acute care system and into the home care system.

Some of the other things that were going on at the time were meetings, endless meetings, Mr. Speaker. Because in addition to the 200 or so hospital and health unit boards, we also had an Alberta Hospital Association, a teaching hospital council, a long-term care association, a mental health council, a Catholic hospital association, a rural hospital association, plus too many regional boards to count. All of these management layers, and no one listening to or agreeing with anyone else. One goal in mind was to survive with programs intact and funding restored. And once again, no follow-through from the minister. Yes, I must say that things were just great.

In 1993 this government did follow through. We eliminated all those boards and created 17 regional health authorities to try and bring together all those different elements of this huge, growing, and dynamic business. And have no illusions, Mr. Speaker: it is a business. It is one of the biggest and most expensive businesses in this province, and there are all kinds of people making all kinds of money out of the system. From the people who supply groceries to those who supply oxygen, from Aids to Daily Living to the diagnostic services, from the individual doctors and surgeons to the private contracts many nurses have to supply home care to the regional authorities, there is in fact profit being made. All of these elements go into making a health care system work, and despite the rhetoric and hysteria being manufactured by the opposition, this system does work.

Can it be better? Yes, absolutely, but one thing is certain. It will continue with or without Bill 11 to evolve and change, but with Bill 11 in place there are some basic truths. This bill and our system will not violate the Canada Health Act. This system will be universal. This system will be publicly funded. People will not pay for medically required services. This system will be publicly administered. Private clinics will do only minor surgeries, and private hospitals will not exist.

However, for the first time in the history of the system, private clinic contracts will be made public. They were not made public under her watch, Mr. Speaker, but they will be under ours. But the rhetoric and fear mongering continue, comments like "it will be a two-tiered system" and the "it is a slippery slope" argument, comments designed to create fear and mistrust when clearly the bill does exactly the opposite.

There is nothing in this bill that will encourage that, allow that, promote it, or legalize it. And let's be clear. It was under the leader of the Liberals that for-profit clinics started. Facility fees for eye clinics and abortion clinics came into being. Private, for-profit MRI clinics opened up, and privately owned labs that billed the government directly flourished. Was it a problem then? No, apparently not. Is it a problem today, when we try to get it under control? Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, today everything seems to be a problem.

So here we are today with the Friends of Medicare, the Liberals, and the unions mad about Bill 11. They see it as a panacea for the private sector to do something while possibly without union involvement. Who knows? Yet here we have today AUPE asking for over 20 percent wage increases for some health care workers. Some are suggesting that essential health care workers should be able to go out on strike. We don't hear any of the friends talking about that.

What should be talked about is that in 1969 when the publicly funded system started here in Alberta, the total cost was $34 million, 50 percent paid for by the federal government and 50 percent paid for by the province. Today, just over 30 years later, the cost in Alberta is close to $6 billion for 3 million people, and the federal government is paying less than 11 percent. In the decade between 1992 and 2002 we will have gone from a system costing approximately $3.5 billion to one exceeding $6 billion.

If there's one thing I'm thankful to Bill 11 for, it is that it has provoked a debate on health care, a debate we'd better not be afraid to have. We have to find new and innovative ways to sustain our system, a system we all want to preserve. We do have to be aware of the constant rise in utilization and the constant rise in cost. If we can't talk about it openly and honestly without hysteria, in 10 or 20 years we're going to have a problem so big that talking about it won't matter anymore, and then we'll all be worse off for that.

If a private clinic can do hernia operations in Toronto and because of their ability to streamline and become more efficient they've been able to cut operating time in half and the cost in half, why is that a bad thing? Why can we not do that here? There's not one member of this government that wants to destroy public health care. We all use the system. We have aging parents. I've got children. Some of us even have grandchildren. What possible motive could any of us have to destroy a universal, publicly funded system?

I am neither arrogant, stupid, nor greedy, as implied by the Liberal leader. The majority of us, unlike the leader of the Liberals, will not have a pension plan when we leave here. I have serious doubt that I would ever be able to pay for health care when I am 65, and for sure today I do not have the ability to go across that border and buy services in the United States, the way so many people do today. So many want to criticize the United States' system, yet so many Canadians go across the border to use it.

Funny, isn't it, that even in the United States there are commercials running on television telling people to be afraid, to be very afraid of any electoral candidate running in the U.S. election that might be talking about universal medicare or bringing in some kind of government-funded system. It's good to know that the rhetoric and the misinformation knows no borders in North America. There's just as much misinformation and fear-mongering about our system in the United States as there is about their system here.

Maybe just by utilizing some of our own home-grown health care entrepreneurs, we might find some innovative ways to improve delivery of health care services to our aging population, ideas that might improve universal access, streamline some procedures, and be cost-effective for all of us that not only use the system but in fact pay for it.

We seem to have forgotten that many of the facilities in the province of Alberta were not even built by government. Many hospitals were actually built by organizations like the Catholic hospital groups, the Salvation Army, and even the municipalities. Most of the long-term care facilities that are in use today in Alberta were built by organizations like Bethany Care and Carewest. One of the most effective assisted-living models in this province is the St. Michael's Extended Care Centre right here in Edmonton, and it was built by the Ukrainian community. Government funds these organizations only in part, by paying per diems for the patient residents and paying for home care and physician fees, yet few Albertans would realize that these facilities were not built nor are they owned by the government of Alberta.

One hundred and thirty-five ambulance systems throughout the province are not owned by the Alberta government, yet funding mechanisms exist to help Albertans cover part or all of the costs associated with ambulance and paramedic assistance. The government does not own the aircraft, either fixed-wing or rotary, that make up the 14 contracts used to transport people into the major centres from remote locations. Government pays for those services by way of a contract. Government does not own pharmacies, doctors' offices, chiropractic or physio clinics. We do not own optometrists' clinics. We don't own abortion clinics and we don't own eye surgery clinics, yet we use a contract system to help provide services to Albertans. Do these people make a profit? Well, I sure hope so. If not, why would they be here? They provide services to Albertans by being in business. They're here where they contribute to the well-being of all of us. I for one am thankful that they are here. I do not think it is a bad thing if somebody makes some money and pays income tax along the way.

There are many effective examples in this province of public and private and nonprofit organization partnerships that have evolved to serve the needs of Albertans. The complexity of the system makes it really difficult for people not involved on a day-to-day basis in that system to understand what the government owns or doesn't own and that universal access, publicly funded does not necessarily translate into government ownership. Health care technology is going to force the system to continue to evolve and change, and nothing can or will stop that. Pretending that the system today is all provided for by public servants in publicly built facilities will not make it so.

If the College of Physicians and Surgeons had approved the Health Resource Group to do overnight surgery for the regional health authority – and they could have, Mr. Speaker; they could have done so – there would have been nothing in place to prevent it, to question it, or to ensure that it benefited any of the people that live in this province. Bill 11 provides the law, the regulations, and the guidelines to allow not only clinics of today to be examined and monitored to assure the public that their money is well spent, providing much-needed services to them, but also the clinics of tomorrow.

I would like to talk briefly about the word "hospital," because the opposition have had a pretty good time with that word. The reality, however, is just a little bit different. Back in the late '80s and the early '90s many smaller hospitals in Alberta were going through a transition, and it was a change in their name from the word hospital to community health care centre. In fact, even the Alberta Hospital Association changed its name to the Alberta Healthcare Association. I wonder if anybody ever wondered why that happened. There was a time in Alberta, when you were driving the highways of this province, when you might in fact have seen a lot of big, green H signs, indicating that a hospital was so many kilometres away. It was a sign that indicated to the passing public that there was a hospital nearby where you could get the care and attention you would need if faced with an emergency of some type.

Many smaller rural hospitals and even a few of the larger centres had an emergency room with no emergency physician. They had fully equipped operating rooms yet no surgeon, no anesthetist or staff to handle an emergency surgery. The bottom line was that there was a growing concern as to whether or not a facility could be sued for calling itself a hospital when in fact it had no ability to respond to an emergency situation. They had no intensive care unit and, for the most part, no staff trained in trauma, unlike the advanced life support offered by many of our paramedics in this province.

So 10 years ago the shift started away from the term hospital to health care centre, and there was a very good reason for it. In people's minds a hospital was to be able to handle all manner of situations, when in fact many could not. So what's in a name, Mr. Speaker? Well, really quite a lot. When we talk about no private hospitals in Alberta, that is exactly what we mean, and the Liberal leader knows it because she was the minister of health when the shift started away from the word hospital to health care centre. A clinic can and does do surgery. A clinic does not handle trauma, as does a hospital, and while it might be easy to confuse many Albertans, I am confident that despite the rhetoric, truth and common sense will in the end prevail. After all, this would be the same person who said, while she was running for the leadership of my party, that she would not leave a legacy of debt and deficit to her children. Well, she was wrong then, and she is wrong now.

This bill is none of the things she says it is. It is a straightforward piece of legislation that allows RHAs one more option to look at in their quest to restructure this system to provide services and enhance access. It provides the College of Physicians and Surgeons with the regulations, guidelines in their mandate to accredit facilities to provide services to Albertans. It gives the minister the ability to review contracts to ensure that a net benefit to Albertans is achieved.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to address this Assembly this evening, speaking to Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. The main reason I ran for the PC nomination in Calgary-West in 1996 and then for the PC Party in the 1997 provincial campaign was because I had the greatest respect for the Premier's leadership in bringing this province's fiscal house in order and also overseeing the development of a strong economy, which is both envied and respected by provincial jurisdictions across Canada and beyond.

To quote from a recent supportive letter from a Calgary-West constituent: families are responsible for their household bottom line, and governments are expected to play by the same rules and act fiscally responsible by making their ends meet. I am not inclined to look over my shoulder at what-if life situations. Life is ever changing, and survivors look forward with an open-mindedness, learning from experiences.

I personally support this government's present focus to carry out business plans which will improve the quality of life for Albertans today and in the future. These business plans are grounded in Albertans' priorities and will provide a solid framework for a very bright future. They are innovative, achievable, and realistic and reflect the goal of sustainability in the future.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have very high expectations and standards, and I'm just one of those Albertans. We want excellent-quality service and results for what we pay, whether from chefs, hairdressers, accountants, teachers, our children, and our medical services. We want to stay young and healthy forever, and we don't like lineups. We want the benefits of efficiency and timely service. As a government we're willing to pay for it. Alberta is, as a result, tops in Canada in per capita funding, including recent increases in the health care budget.

Our increasingly high-tech, highly researched, and highly utilized public health care system comes with a price tag, and that is increasing at an alarming rate. Presently Alberta's health care system costs approximately 33 percent of our total provincial revenue pie. This is what I don't hesitate to tell seniors, for instance, in my constituency. I also tell them that at the rate we're going, in three to five years it could be 40 percent. They listen carefully to that and accept that information.

In speaking to my constituents of Calgary-West in past years, there's a clear majority that are satisfied with the services offered in the Calgary health services. As always, these people are the silent majority. I have also heard, though, from a small minority who are unhappy with their experiences with the system and want me to believe that all is dark. One of my tasks as MLA, I believe, is to put it in an objective perspective.

After a bit of reflection I've decided to include some of my own personal comments and experiences, only a few. I realize that actually in the last number of years I have had many personal, family-related incidents with our health care system in Calgary. I would say that most of these events are emotional and quite often have an unhappy ending, and therefore you have unpleasant memories, such as when a wee grandson of mine – his name was Scott – died of AIDS in 1995 or when a dear friend's 11-year-old son died just a year ago, in 1999, after a lengthy illness with a brain tumor. Speaking objectively, the services provided at the time were excellent, caring people looking after sick people and their families. I also remember when I waited not too long ago for two hours in a local hospital in Edmonton, acute care, for only three stitches. All of these experiences were basically positive in terms of the hard-working, dedicated people, but there was very noticeable evidence in my mind to bring about improvements.

Just briefly to comment on a few: physicians and staff could work as a much better team to provide more efficient and better service to the patients; citizens who go to emergency acute care who should be in a community clinic; critical funding dollars could go toward research that can save young lives.

A second major reality is the aging of our population, Mr. Speaker, which is also a worldwide phenomenon. Alberta's population is younger than most Canadian provinces and European countries, for example, so we can learn from their experiences while developing our own made-in-Alberta solutions. Demographics indicate that Alberta's seniors population will double in 15 years. In 30 to 35 years the seniors population will increase from 10 percent of the population as we have it today to approximately 25 percent. Population profile projections also indicate that there are going to be fewer younger taxpayers to support this increasing older population. Also, we know we are living longer, more so than anywhere else in the world. We know that at 65 years of age health care costs incurred by our older population are approximately 44 percent of the total health care budget. I said that's at 65 years of age, and we know this percentage increases with advancing years and frailty.

Mr. Speaker, it becomes clear that we cannot carry on with the same approaches to health care. The status quo is not an option. We have three choices in my mind: either increase the tax base to cover these increasing costs – and Albertans do not want increased taxes – or shift funding from other government-funded programs such as education – and young families, young adults don't want that – or develop innovative approaches that will provide increased efficiencies, cost-effectiveness, and better service to Albertans.

On March 11, 1997, a clear majority of the people of Alberta contracted with this government to manage this province and their tax dollars. The choices this government has made, to my mind, fit its philosophy and those expectations to encourage innovation so that quality government programs and services which Albertans value so much are assured sustainability.

The government's six-point plan for health has evolved from the recommendations of last year's health summit and the public input. This plan, which includes legislation that we now know as the Health Protection Act, is to protect and improve the publicly funded and administered health system in Alberta. There are six initiatives in the government's six-point plan for health which will address and actually are addressing present concerns and expectations and the future demographics.

First, by improving access to quality funded services. This involves, for example, ensuring adequate funding, which is now at an all-time high, as I've said; reducing waiting times for lifesaving surgeries and procedures – as I've said, we don't like to wait – increasing the number of physicians, nurses, and other health professionals; and increasing access to home care and continuing care.

Second, by improving the management of the health system: for example – and I was referring to that in one of my examples – establishing a health services utilization commission that will enhance public accountability of the health system, supporting improved management and delivery of health services, and also the launching of a health innovation fund project with goals to fund projects that improve patient access and ensure system affordability.

Now, I've only read two of the points in the six-point plan, but this is certainly far extending Bill 11.

Third, by reforming the delivery of primary care, supporting, for example, community-based projects that focus on health professionals working in teams and examining new methods of physician service delivery and funding, whether urban or rural; purchase of new high-tech medical equipment; expansion of telehealth services, probably the most outstanding initiative of its type anywhere; launch of the pharmaceutical information system providing vastly improved, cost-effective drug therapy across Alberta.

Fourth, by increasing emphasis on wellness promotion and disease and accident prevention; for example, launching a new five-year immunization strategy, implementing a new aging in place strategy for seniors or soon-to-be seniors, implementing a new provincial breast cancer screening program and a new provincewide metabolic screening program.

Fifth, by fostering new ideas to improve health care by establishing a special Premier's advisory council on health, which will provide government with advice on health care reform which will protect and ensure our health system.

Six, to protect the publicly funded and administered health system through introduction of legislation, the Health Care Protection Act.

I'm going to read four key principles of the act: that health funding will continue to go directly to publicly funded RHAs who will decide whether each contract with surgical clinics would be a benefit to the public system, also that any contracts would need to demonstrate a net benefit to the public system, that no Albertan would be required to pay for an insured service and surgical clinics would be prohibited from charging patients extra for insured services, and that no person would be allowed to pay to receive faster service.

Mr. Speaker, this government has spent a lot of time focusing on only one change but a worthy change within the comprehensive six-point plan. A very significant point, I believe, is that this government does have a plan and that the Prime Minister supports that plan, acknowledging that Canada has a health care crisis. Governments owe the public logical, innovative, cost-effective solutions to problems.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to be clear that today's seniors should be reassured as they will experience and are experiencing the positive impact of this government's realization that we need to reform our health care system. Seniors will benefit from increased access to acute care hospital services when they need them. That will evolve as a result of maximum use of present facility space and by more minor surgeries occurring in surgical facilities.

Seniors will also benefit from the development of an increasing number of long-term care facilities and Alzheimer's care centres built through partnership combinations of government, RHAs, private, and not-for-profit foundation funds. They will benefit from the trend encouraged by this government and stated clearly in the long-term care review final report: to age in place in their communities with the assistance of an increased number of better trained home care workers and other community supports.

Seniors will also benefit in that the informal caregivers or family members will provide better care as a result of training and much-needed respite supports. Seniors will also benefit from the increasing number of community-based health and wellness clinics which are already providing and will provide easier access and information on health and accident and injury prevention.

Speaking of benefits, Alberta's seniors have the best overall income support and benefits programs in Canada. Thousands of seniors from across Canada must recognize Alberta's strengths because they're relocating here.

With regard to the aging population or tomorrow's seniors, Mr. Speaker, if you're going to become a senior in the next 30 years, as most of us in this room I think will be, you will want to be a key participant in Alberta's health care reform. In order to control the skyrocketing costs of health care, I propose that we need to continue to actively pursue implementation of all initiatives in this government's six-point plan for health starting yesterday and with the co-operation of all key stakeholders. That, of course, means passing Bill 11, the sixth point in this plan.

There's much work ahead communicating information on an ongoing basis, developing different systems, setting realistic expectations, and encouraging changes in attitudes and behaviour regarding health and injury prevention. I believe we must move forward with health care reform, and by passing Bill 11, we will help ensure reaching that goal.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Before calling on the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, might we refer briefly to Introduction of Guests?

MR. JONSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I note that seated in the members' gallery is the president of the United Nurses of Alberta, Ms Heather Smith, and I would ask her to stand and receive the recognition of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The Official Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There are some folks I met earlier who came into the gallery this evening, and I'd like to ask all those people who are here to express their concern and their interest in Bill 11 to please rise and receive the customary welcome from members of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must single out one of the gentlemen up there who is a neighbour of mine, lives in my neighbourhood, and is an individual very, very dedicated to the public health care system. If you'll acknowledge Clarence Collins with the warm applause of the House.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Havelock moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) the question on second reading of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be now put.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to begin this evening by thanking the constituents of Lethbridge-West who have taken the time, either through telephone, through the normal mail, or of course through e-mail, to contact me regarding their concern about Bill 11. I'll get back to that in a few moments.

I also want this evening to talk about my experience and my relationship to Tommy Douglas and to the medicare system as it developed in Saskatchewan. That might be particularly poignant given the fact that, as I understand it, there's to be some sort of celebration here this weekend that might involve his daughter and grandson.

I also want to talk about Bill 11 and use the metaphor that I've used before in the sense of a sword and a shield, and then I would like to conclude by talking about some of the stakes that are at play over this particular debate.

Now, in terms of contact with constituents of Lethbridge-West, we have had to date something in the order of 210 contacts. We don't worry so much in Lethbridge-West about whether or not they are particular constituents. I think what has evolved in the city of Lethbridge through the representative of Lethbridge-West and then, of course, my colleague from Lethbridge-East is that people in Lethbridge understand that if they have an issue they wish to deal with and they want to present an opposition viewpoint, then they know they are free to contact the representative from Lethbridge-East. Likewise, if they have a concern and they want to express a concern about something that needs a government perspective and perhaps is even antigovernment, they know they can contact me as the representative for Lethbridge-West. So in that context we have had as of today, I believe, 210 calls. Now, just to place that into some context, that puts us into the midsignificant range.

We have certainly had to deal with issues that struck the fancy of the people I represent much more than Bill 11, but I don't want to in any way diminish the concerns those 210 people have and, in fact, others more informally that would have been expressed to me in just my normal goings-on throughout the constituency. But I think it must be made clear to all the members of this House – especially the colleagues in the government caucus know that Lethbridge-West has been a touchstone for activism and perhaps controversy for at least 20 years, far before I ever had the honour to represent that constituency. My predecessor, John Gogo, had evolved a system where they knew that if there was something they wanted to get off their chest, they could call the Lethbridge-West constituency office, and I'm proud to say that that has been able to continue.

Of the 210 calls, I would say that 200 of them have been opposed to Bill 11. What I have done, then, is try to contact the various individuals from time to time, as my time will permit, to discuss the principles of Bill 11. Now, I want to indicate once again that that level of calls puts this issue in the midsignificance area. This is a significant issue, but where this issue transcends all of the other things I've had to deal with in the seven years I've been representing those particular folks in Lethbridge is that there has never been such a divergence in the perception of the reality of Bill 11. Of course I would want to talk, then, about how some of that might have come about.

The important thing is that this government had the courage back in November of 1999 to release and distribute the policy that it was contemplating in terms of delivery of health care. This was further followed up by the distribution, then, of Bill 11. One of the things we noticed immediately in Lethbridge-West was that upon receipt of the bill and upon people beginning to read it, our phone calls – they didn't drop off a cliff or anything like that. We were still receiving a few calls a day, but two things happened. The first thing that happened was that the calls themselves diminished, but I can tell you that the most gratifying aspect, once Bill 11 got out to people's homes and they had a chance to read it, was that the viciousness of the phone calls then dropped almost to zero.

When I talked about the huge divergence between perception and reality, this issue was also characterized by some of the most vicious, emotional calls that I as an MLA have ever had to deal with. The circulation and distribution of Bill 11, I'm thankful to say – and I would thank publicly the Minister of Health and Wellness for doing this – took the viciousness out of the debate. Since that time I've contacted I'm not sure whether it's a hundred of those folks; it's not over 100, but it's certainly more than 70. We are now finally getting into a discussion where emotion doesn't take over, where at least now we can start to try to zero in on what some of the aspects of this bill might be.

So this has been an educational experience, as any of these issues are, for all of the MLAs in this Assembly but certainly for your representative of Lethbridge-West. I truly want to thank, then, all of those people that have contacted me, and to that end I want to thank the people that are here tonight listening to this debate, not only the members that are here in the Assembly in their places but also the people that are here in the galleries. Each and every one of us considers ourself an advocate for a health care system in this province.

MR. SAPERS: You're sending this one out; aren't you?

MR. DUNFORD: Absolutely. I don't know if Hansard was able to pick up the interjection. I hope they were. The Member for Edmonton-Glenora says that I'm sending this one out, and actually this is something I've learned from him. I would never have thought at one time to make copious copies of Hansard and circulate them to constituents. I certainly am going to consider doing that this evening.

Those of you here in the room tonight that consider yourselves an advocate for the health care system, I want you to know that I consider myself one of you as well. Now, I am a Progressive Conservative. I plead guilty to being a conservative when it comes to the fiscal management of this province, but I am also a progressive when it comes to social policy as it exists in this province. Here's where it comes from, because I have the moral authority to speak about this issue that some of you might not have. That is the fact that my father, honourably discharged from the Canadian air force after the end of the Second World War, moved his family, which at the time included my mom, myself, and my little brother, back to a little town, a little area called Portreeve, Saskatchewan.

Now, some of you might have heard me talk about this previously. Portreeve, Saskatchewan, is not a very significant place in this world, but it had something going for it in 1946. It was simply a matter of geography, but Portreeve happened to be in the Swift Current health region. Now, I have friends in Cardston who argue that Tommy Douglas was the first one to bring forward a co-operative style of health care system. Dr. Brigham Card, who has contacted many of you, makes an extremely good case. This evening I want to focus on what Tommy Douglas was trying to do in Saskatchewan, because many of you may not have had that firsthand experience like my family happened to have.

So July 1 of 1946 I happened to be living there.

AN HON. MEMBER: You're old.

MR. DUNFORD: Besides being old, as has been pointed out, I've probably lived in the medicare system longer than anybody in this room this evening. I believe that then gives me an opportunity to talk about my experiences, because after all, it's our experiences that form the character and of course the philosophies that we live by for the rest of our lives.

In that little town a little girl is born with a hole in her heart, and the family is not a rich family. In fact, in 1952 or '53, whenever this would have happened – and I can be corrected on those dates – our family had the general store. We actually were the social services of that little town in that particular way. We knew the families that we had to support, and this little girl was born to one of those families.

In the Swift Current health region this little girl born with a hole in her heart had at the time a life expectancy of six years. She was sent to Rochester, New York, to the Mayo Clinic, a private, for-profit hospital, to have her little heart repaired. She comes back to us, and she is not entirely healed. As she gets older, I believe at the age of three or four, she is sent back to Rochester, New York, to the Mayo Clinic, a private, for-profit hospital, and she has her little heart healed. The point I want to make as clearly as I possibly can is that from day one Tommy Douglas and the government of Saskatchewan, in looking at this pilot project in the Swift Current health region, contemplated the integration of the private and the public systems, because we the taxpayers of Saskatchewan at that time paid the full shot for that little girl to go to Rochester, New York. And that wasn't day surgery, my friends; that was major heart surgery. That little girl today is a grandmother, as I am a grandfather.

So on Sunday, when you're out there and you're having your rally and Tommy Douglas's daughter is talking to you about what her dad did, it was a great thing that he did. There's no way that I'm going to stand in this House or anywhere and bring down Tommy Douglas and what he did. I believe in a publicly administered, publicly funded health system. It's because of our verbiage in Bill 11 and what we're trying to do with Bill 11 that I can stand here as a Progressive Conservative and I can support this bill, and I can do it with a clear mind and an open heart.

Bill 11, the sword and the shield. Previous speakers on the government side have talked about the need to fill the legislative gap. So the shield part, then, of Bill 11 is to provide the protection for Albertans and for the Alberta system to prevent a parallel private, for-profit system from being developed in this province. I believe that to reasonable people with reasonably open minds, that is clearly understandable. I think they understand the metaphor of the shield.

The metaphor of the sword I think is easily understandable as well. Other speakers tonight have talked – so I don't feel like I have to get into it – about the role the private clinics play already in this particular province. So what is the sword part, then, of Bill 11? It would extend the opportunity for the private sector inside a publicly administered, publicly funded health care system to go to the overnight stays that would be required with minor surgeries, which would be determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in facilities that would be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. A significant step.

And the logic? I think the logic is apparent to everyone in this House this evening. If on the waiting list for the Lethbridge regional hospital or for any other public hospital in this province a knee surgery or a hernia repair is then off-loaded, contracted out to a private facility, there now is room for the patient who is waiting for hip replacement to move up on the list. It will work that way. The situation is that we have to take a look at this, and we have to find ways to bring down the waiting lists. While I've talked about the 210 phone calls that have been made about Bill 11, Mr. Speaker, I need to inform you and need to inform members here in the Assembly tonight that I receive more calls, many calls from families worried about where they are on their wait lists, asking me what I can do to get their loved one provided with the medical service that they need.

I want to talk about why this debate is as extensive as it is. There are huge stakes here. The president of UNA has been introduced to us, and of course Heather and I know each other anyway. In terms of the stakes that UNA and the other public unions might be faced with, I want to state it as matter of factly as I possibly can: we are discussing here tonight more money going into the health system. Bill 11 is going to determine in some small way where the money is going to go. The public service health unions have a virtual monopoly on all of the labour that's inside that area. So it is not surprising to me – in fact, I think she and others are doing what is morally, ethically, and legally their responsibility. When there is a possibility that increases in the labour force might end up in a non-union environment, I think they have a responsibility to take a look at that. The opposition parties – we clearly know what that is.

Later tonight the Minister of Health and Wellness is going to be tabling some amendments. I want to thank him for his timing, because this is going to allow me to go back to my constituency this weekend and talk about how we have listened to the concerns.

THE CLERK: Committee of the Whole.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, sorry. I know the chair cannot be in Committee of the Whole, but young Howard Yeung has his last evening with us tonight. He's going to do university examinations shortly, and then he'll be undertaking summer work with one of the hon. members as a STEP student. He'll come back later to get acknowledgment, but would you tonight wish him bon voyage.

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order. For the benefit of those in the gallery, this is the informal session of the Legislature. It's called committee. As you can see, hon. members are able to take off their jackets. They're allowed to have juice, coffee, or tea, and they're allowed also to be in places other than their own seats. Now, they're not allowed to talk unless they're at their own place, and the same rules apply as in the Legislature in the sense that we only have one person standing and talking at a time. We try and practise that.

Just so that you understand, according to one of the great books that we use, when a committee is examining a bill, the function of a committee on a bill is to go through the text of the bill clause by clause and, if necessary, word by word, with a view to making such amendments in it as may seem likely to render it more generally acceptable.

So the principle has been established by second reading. Now the detail is what we're about.

To begin this evening, I want to know whether there are any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill, and the first man to be called is the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise this evening to move a package of significant government amendments to Bill 11, which, as I've indicated, I wish to advise that I would move be voted on as a package. These amendments represent a very careful and thorough assessment of responses to the bill, and they represent an overall, comprehensive response to the issues and opportunities that were posed in the response to Bill 11.

These are amendments, Mr. Chairman, that will give us an improved piece of legislation and better protection for Alberta's publicly funded health system. You know, our government has said frequently since the very beginning of the process of developing Bill 11 that we wanted to hear from Albertans, that we wanted the bill to reflect the key priorities of our citizens. We should recall at this stage that the very development and introduction of this legislation was in response to the priorities and needs of Albertans.

It was the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta which first brought forward the need for legislation giving the government authority to prohibit, regulate, or control private health facilities. Mr. Chairman, a gap in legislative authority was further acknowledged by the federal Minister of Health and, indeed, by opposition members across the way. It was reinforced by Albertans, who wanted this government to fill the legislative gap and to have the ability to regulate surgical facilities in this province.

Our government then took the step of releasing some five months ago our policy statement on the delivery of surgical services. That policy statement, which identified the overall direction we planned to take with our legislation, was distributed widely across the province, and we actively solicited the views of Albertans on that proposed direction.

Mr. Chairman, we then took that extensive input received and used it in developing the formal legislation, Bill 11, which was introduced in this Legislature on March 2. But we were not yet done consulting with Albertans on this very important piece of legislation. We took the important, unprecedented step of mailing a copy of Bill 11 to each and every home in Alberta so that Albertans could read for themselves the content of the bill and give us their further comments. As we waited and assessed – and we waited a full month before proceeding with second reading debate so that Albertans would have ample time to provide their input – we used this time to meet further with many groups across Alberta, groups including the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Alberta Medical Association, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses. Throughout this long and thorough process we repeatedly stated – repeatedly stated – our willingness to bring forward any amendments that would clearly strengthen our legislation.

Mr. Chairman, today I am very pleased to bring forward the amendments that have resulted from this consultation process. They are, I am confident, amendments that respond to the concerns that we have heard with respect to Bill 11, and they are amendments that will give us stronger health protection legislation.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, in respect to the issue of queue-jumping, there will be no queue-jumping. One of the most important amendments brought forward will strengthen the prohibitions against people being able to pay to jump ahead in the line for insured services. The amendment will make it illegal under the legislation not only for a person to pay for faster service or receive a payment to give faster service, but as well it will prohibit giving faster access to an insured service through the purchase of an enhanced product or service or even through the purchase of an uninsured service. There will be no queue-jumping allowed by this legislation, Mr. Chairman. It will be illegal. There will be no loopholes and no exceptions.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, with respect to charges for enhanced services, we are introducing an amendment that will prohibit a public hospital, a surgical facility providing insured services under contract to a health authority, or a physician from charging more than the product costs and a reasonable allowance for administration for the sale of enhanced medical goods or services in connection with the provision of an insured service. This will eliminate any and all concerns with respect to patients being pressured to purchase such services and remove any reason for such pressure to be applied.

Thirdly, Mr. Chairman, we have the issue of use of existing space in public hospitals. We are also bringing forward an amendment that will make it very clear, that puts into law the requirement for a health authority to ensure the efficient and effective use of existing capacity in their own hospitals before considering a contract with a surgical service. We will make certain that existing operating rooms, existing hospital wings are assessed in terms of their best possible use before we approve contracts with surgical facility providers.

Fourthly, Mr. Chairman, we have the matter of withdrawal of designation. I am introducing an amendment that puts into law a clear process to be used by the minister in withdrawing the designation of a surgical facility. This will ensure that should the circumstances that existed when a surgical facility was designated substantially change, then there will be a visible and transparent process followed by the minister to consider and implement any necessary withdrawal of designation.

Further, Mr. Chairman, we will deal with the clarification and strengthening of the privative clause, which has been an area of some concern. We'll be amending section 23, the so-called privative clause. While this type of clause is frequently used in legislation here in Alberta and across Canada, there was some concern that this clause precluded any judicial review of the minister's decisions. This amendment with respect to the privative clause will make it very clear that while the minister's decision to approve or not approve a contract is final and conclusive, that decision is still subject to judicial review if the minister does not follow the requirements of the legislation or the authorities provided to him in the legislation or if the minister makes a decision that is totally unreasonable given the availability of evidence. The minister must make reasonable decisions. That is the bottom line.

Further, we are proposing changes and strengthening with respect to the conflict of interest provisions in Bill 11. Another important amendment to this bill, along with amendments to the Regional Health Authorities Act and the Cancer Programs Act, will address the concern that some potential exists for conflict of interest situations in the contracting process. These amendments, Mr. Chairman, will ensure that health authorities have in place clear conflict of interest bylaws for board members, agents, and senior officers and employees. They will also ensure that health authorities monitor physicians' practice to ensure that the College of Physicians and Surgeons' bylaws on conflict of interest and on ethics are not violated by physicians. For the record, I would like to table for the Assembly five copies of the appropriate bylaws of the college dealing with conflict of interest and the background to those bylaws, and I will do so in a moment.

Mr. Chairman, there are further amendments. With respect to physician payment, I am proposing amendments that will clarify that health authorities are only contracting and paying for facility services and that the payment of physicians will continue to be done through the Alberta health care insurance plan in the same way as for surgery in public hospitals.

Further, amendments with respect to the role of the college and the Dental Association. There are amendments that will clarify that it is the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta that will determine what surgical procedures can be safely performed in a physician's office. They will also clarify that major dental surgeries will only be done in public hospitals and that the Alberta Dental Association will be consulted in defining those major dental surgeries.

Each of the amendments reflects suggestions and concerns that were raised by Albertans or by organizations such as the Alberta Medical Association, the Chambers of Commerce, the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, and others. Each of the amendments reflects our best effort to listen to those concerns and to take action.

Mr. Chairman, some might claim that our amendments do not reflect every concern and comment that we heard, and that is true, because we accepted recommendations that would strengthen the bill, not weaken the protection it provides to the publicly funded system. We accepted recommendations that would help enhance the public system and give it greater flexibility in finding better ways to deliver services, not those that would restrict its ability to try and reduce waiting lists or improve access or improve in providing increased efficiency.

Mr. Chairman, we accepted recommendations that help meet the need to give the government a better ability to govern and regulate surgical facilities, not those that tried to close down a very valuable tool being available to and possibly being used by our publicly funded system. Bill 11 in its amended form will give very strong protection to our publicly funded health system, very strong protection to Albertans, and one more option for health authorities to use in building a better health system for the future. I would encourage each and every member to support these very important amendments. Each of the amendments reflects suggestions and concerns that were raised by Albertans or by organizations such as the Alberta Medical Association, the Chambers of Commerce, and many others across the province as well as many, many, many individuals.

That is, Mr. Chairman, my presentation of amendments. I believe that these amendments are comprehensive, that they are related, and they will further improve what is, I think, a very much needed and sound piece of legislation for this province.

THE CHAIRMAN: I just wanted to get some understanding of how it is we're going to approach this. They've been moved as one. Is it the agreement of the Assembly that you go through them as a whole or clause by clause, section by section?

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to address that, if I might.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before we commence our detailed review of the amendments, there is a process question we must deal with. All members, at least opposition members, have just been presented moments ago for the very first time with a proposal to entertain 14 separate amendments changing 14 different elements in the bill. In fact, the package is six pages long. The opposition has had no opportunity to review this before.

Here's my initial observation. When I look at it, I can see that we're dealing with provision of surgical services. There's a purported attempt to deal with conflicts of interest. We're dealing with 14 disparate elements. It seems to me that if I look at the authorities in Erskine May and the provision dealing with amendments, pages 343 through to 349, and if I look at Beauchesne in terms of the provision dealing with amendments, articles 567 through 579, what we find is the importance of amendments isolating issues to allow an informed debate of specific considerations.

Mr. Chairman, where am I going with this? I think, to be fair to all members, that rather than deal with this in an omnibus form, each one of these should be dealt with in turn so that it receives that kind of scrutiny. How could I possibly support all 14 changes? Maybe there are some that are positive, remedial that I'd like to support. Why would any member be put in a position where it's all or nothing? That's preposterous. It may be that if we'd seen some advance notice of these, if we'd had an opportunity to review them before, we might have a degree of comfort in saying: sure; we'll deal with the package. [interjections] Well, some of my colleagues think not. I'm just saying hypothetically, colleagues.

The point is this, Mr. Chairman. Why would any member in the Assembly be put in that position? It might be different if they were all speaking to the same issue, but they are truly 14 disparate elements. This is sort of an omnibus amendment set. It may be administratively nice and neat to put it forward as a package, but surely when it comes to consideration, debate, and then votes, why wouldn't we deal with each one sequentially?

So my proposal, Mr. Chairman, is that we would sever A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N so that we treat those amendments separately. That's the proposal I want to make. There may be others who have some observation on the process.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on how we're going to deal with this package.

MR. SAPERS: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that we have some precedent to help guide us in the decision about how to deal with these rather lengthy amendments on Bill 11 that have been proposed by the government. We have special provisions in our Standing Orders, for example, when it comes to dealing with so-called omnibus bills, bills that would be put forward by the government that would amend or alter more than one statute. By extension I think that we can take a look at such a lengthy list of amendments and treat it much the same way. So perhaps we need to have some special procedure or rule for dealing with such an exhaustive list of government amendments. Bill 11 itself is barely 20 pages long, and we have over six pages of amendments. Because of course these amendments deal with the entire breadth and width of Bill 11, it's very difficult to deal with them in one reasonable debate.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I will draw your attention to Beauchesne, pages 491 and 492, particularly when it deals with the sections on inadmissible amendments, and I will make specific reference to paragraph 6 on page 492, where it goes on to talk about: an amendment may not be moved to insert words at the beginning of a clause with a view to bringing forward an alternative scheme to that contained in the clause, et cetera. I look at proposed amendment H to section 23, which adds a new wrinkle to the government's interpretation of what a privative clause may be. I'm just wondering whether or not we may apply some of the direction given us in Beauchesne.

I could make a similar argument for the wording changes that are proposed in amendment I, which deals with the original section 25(1), in paragraph (c), where there is a fairly substantial change that may very well alter the meaning in a substantive way of the subclause. The original wording of the bill is to include "services and non-medical goods and services." It is now separating them. It's now making it selective. It can either be a medical good or a medical service. It's a very substantial change, I think, as all members of this Legislature will appreciate, that the words "and" and "or" make a world of difference.

So because the form of some of these proposed amendments is questionable at best and because it deals in such a comprehensive way throughout the four corners of the bill and because it is a debate of such public importance, I would support the submission of my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo that we deal with each of these as a separate vote.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I also want to speak to the process that I would hope the Assembly would use dealing with the proposed amendments. I trust that each of the amendments is substantive and serious. Otherwise, the minister wouldn't bring them forward. If that assumption is true, is valid, that the minister has given very serious thought to suggestions that were received and therefore each amendment is serious and substantive, then I would hope that the Assembly would adopt a procedure which allows each of the amendments to be debated and scrutinized separately in its own right. Six pages of substantive and serious amendments all bunched together cannot be voted on seriously by this Assembly to the satisfaction of Albertans.

Therefore, I would suggest, in order to make sure that the debate here is transparent and satisfies the concerns of Albertans and our constituents, including my constituents, that each amendment be debated and voted on separately.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members of the committee, if we look at the traditions of the committee, we are only occasionally faced with a large collection of them, and as it has been the case in the past, if there is not an agreement between the sides of the House, you go through it then section by section. If you are able to make arrangements that you put H and I together later on by agreement, then so be it. But we are going to proceed, then, as is suggested in Beauchesne and as tradition normally has it. We will go through this amendment, which is called A1, section by section – in other words, section A, section B of the amendment – and vote on them as such.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. I believe that the hon. health minister wanted the package voted on as one. Are you informing this House that based on Beauchesne, that will not be the case, that simply we will vote on this section by section? I understood the way that the rules worked is that in Committee of the Whole the committee determines how they wish to proceed. All right. So the minister has indicated that he wants it voted on as one amendment, and that's a decision for this Legislature in committee to make regardless of Beauchesne. Am I understanding correctly the way it works?

THE CHAIRMAN: How you go through a group is not a matter of whether one side of the issue has more members than the other side. The issue has generally been, certainly in my seven years of experience, that if there is a group of amendments that come through, even if they are requested – they can be moved as one, as was done this evening, but if we don't have consensus on both sides of the committee, then we'll have to go for it as instructed in Beauchesne, section by section.

MR. HAVELOCK: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. My understanding – and I did have a brief discussion with the Speaker earlier – is that it is up to the committee to determine how they wish to proceed with respect to the vote. I am not challenging the chair, although it may sound like it to members of the opposition, but my understanding is that if the committee wishes to vote on this as one amendment despite the fact that it contains a number of different parts – now I see the Clerk shaking his head. Perhaps we could have some clarification from the Speaker on this, because that certainly wasn't my understanding.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, your understanding is your understanding. All I'm just trying to say is that in committee we have been faced with this on occasion before, and always in my experience and that of others it has been that we have a consensus. It's not been a vote. I don't ever recall – and I have others that would substantiate – that we had a call for a vote on whether we would pass something in a block or in part. If the three sides are in agreement with that, fine and dandy, but if they're not, then we would go through it clause by clause.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: I appreciate your patience, Mr. Chairman. I guess the problem I have with that is that you could have a situation where only one member in the committee doesn't wish to proceed that way, and therefore the determination by what could be conceivably 82 members would be overruled by one member. I don't believe it's a reasonable interpretation of the way this committee is to proceed. [interjections] Excuse me, you can have your chance later, Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

I wouldn't suggest that the other side be commenting on this particular debate in light of what happened two nights ago with the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. [interjection] Well, to refresh your memory, it was when he stormed out of the House and showed complete and total disrespect for the Speaker.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, could you please point out for me where in Beauchesne that is mentioned? Also, I would like to ask you if you would consider taking about a five-minute recess right now just so that I could discuss this matter with you a little bit and perhaps you can further clarify it for me.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. A couple of observations I wanted to make. Because we're in committee stage, there's nothing to prevent the Deputy Government House Leader from stepping outside and caucusing and meeting with whomever he wishes. There's no reason why we have to adjourn this committee so that that member can find out what the past practices are.

I'd take this position, and I'm open to the comments of others. It seems to me that if one looks at the Standing Orders, they're very clear that we proceed in accordance with, number one, the Standing Orders and, secondly, with "the usages and precedents of the Assembly and on parliamentary tradition."

As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, what you've identified is that the default process when amendments come forward is that they be dealt with severally – that has also been my experience in my eight years in this Assembly – and only in the event that there would be unanimity in terms of dealing with it in another fashion. But the default process under Standing Order 2 and Standing Order 1, the cumulative effect of those is that we must deal with amendments severally. There were different times when I've been in this Assembly and I've agreed or my caucus has agreed to do some organization and some aggregation and some collecting, but we've always understood that the default process was that we would have to deal with them individually if they couldn't be dealt with in some different fashion.

So I would ask the Deputy Government House Leader to respect the traditions of this Assembly, to respect the past practices. Whether he may want to undertake a different fashion tonight, we've had that opportunity and we're signaling. This is not a case of one member being contrary minded. I think I speak for the Official Opposition when we indicate we feel very strongly. We want the opportunity that the customs and precedents of this Assembly permit us, which is to deal with each one sequentially, to carefully review each amendment, to debate it vigorously, and then to vote on each amendment.

To do otherwise, Mr. Chairman, would create this particular problem. The most fundamental right that every member in this Assembly has is the freedom to speak, the freedom to participate in debate. To lump all of these together, in effect, what you do is erode that ability of members to speak in favour of one amendment and contrary to another one. You put us in the proverbial cattle chute, and that would be completely inconsistent with the basic tenets of all of the authorities that talk about the ability of members to speak to those ones individually. So that's the technical argument.

The second argument would be what I might call the public policy one. Why would this government representative suggest that people's rights should be further curtailed? We saw a form of closure invoked but two nights ago. It was a form of closure. The authorities say it. We saw the government eliminate the opportunity to introduce further amendments. [interjection] Look at the authorities, minister of innovation. It makes it very clear that to introduce a motion that the question be now put is a form of closure because you can't move any further amendments. That's the reality of it. Talk to your Deputy Government House Leader. He'll tell you that.

So it seems to me that the signals that Albertans are getting and certainly members of this Assembly are getting is that the government is hell bent on jamming these changes through and doing whatever they can to minimize the full and complete public scrutiny that Albertans are demanding, whether they're in Lethbridge-West or Calgary-Buffalo or Edmonton-Riverview or Edmonton-Centre. Those people want us to deal with these individually. They want us to scrutinize each one.

Why would the Deputy Government House Leader try and move this thing along just because it suits the government's timetable? [interjection] Well, I was prepared to maintain my seat until the Deputy Government House Leader kept on getting up to try and assert a position which is at variance with the authorities.

Mr. Chairman, those are the points I wanted to make with respect to the comments we just heard from the Deputy Government House Leader. Thank you.

MR. HAVELOCK: Pursuant to 13(2), Mr. Chairman, if you could just once again, for me, please explain how you've arrived at the decision that you have.

THE CHAIRMAN: I'll reiterate some of the things and then give you the citations. Tradition and practice in this Assembly when we're in committee has been as I've described it. If there is not consensus or agreement between the parties, then we will go clause by clause. If you want to look at that, then Standing Order 1 is what goes there.

If you wish to appeal to the Speaker, just remember that the title that I hold is Chairman of Committees, and we'll go by past practice. You can look at Beauchesne 690 and 691, but the practice in this Assembly, which is Standing Order 1, has been to do it that way.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you. I appreciate that. The practice also in this Assembly is that the Assembly sets the rules by which it will govern itself. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, at this stage I will accept your ruling, certainly. However, I may need to seek further clarification from you later on.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. The two sides have either accepted what is established practice and the other side have requested that we go through it section by section.

THE CHAIRMAN: The first section is section A.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for that clarification.

I've got a couple of questions while we're dealing with amendment A. Once again I just received my copy moments ago, so I'm slowly working my way through, and I'd ask for the patience of members while I try to understand exactly what we have in front of us. It looks to me like the primary change in amendment A1 is to deal with dentists. We have a provision that provides sort of a parallel obligation for dental surgeons, as they used to be called, or dentists now. I'm wondering if we can receive some information from the Minister of Health and Wellness. What I'd like to know is some sense of what volume of cases we're dealing with in Alberta hospitals. For example, in the current year how many insured surgical services are done in this province by dental surgeons, by dentists?

There must have been a reason why dentists weren't initially dealt with. We know the government has been working on this bill since Bill 37 first came in – and when would that have been? – in about March of 1998. There are some pretty darn bright people in that Department of Health and Wellness. Last time I looked, we had about 700 employees. One would've expected that they wouldn't have missed something in the first go-round. So, Mr. Chairman, I'm looking for some clarification.

I know that other members may have other comments to make with respect to this amendment A1, but I'm hoping we could get some explanation of how many procedures would be done.

MRS. NELSON: You don't want to see this?

MR. DICKSON: The Minister of Government Services is asking me a question, and that would be excellent if the minister has maybe got an answer for me. I'd be very interested in having the Minister of Government Services . . . [interjection] Perhaps I'll sit down for a moment. I'm not sure I quite take her signal, but she's giving me some advice around this question I've raised. So I'm going to sit down for a moment and invite her to say it on the record, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much. I appreciate that. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment causes some confusion in my mind. I did listen carefully to the Minister of Health and Wellness when he was introducing his amendments, and it's not clear to me that this difference addresses the question that many people had regarding the lack of definition in the original section.

Now, if you take a look at Bill 11 as it was originally tabled, what section 2 tells us is that "no person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta." Now it's saying that "no physician shall provide a surgical service . . . and no dentist . . .", et cetera, et cetera. The original section dealt with the definition of person, that included corporations. The new section actually may cause me more concern than the original section, because what it's saying now is that "no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta" except in one of these approved facilities. The government is still calling them approved surgical facilities. The rest of the world, of course, still knows them as private hospitals.

It makes me think that somehow the government is trying to sneak something by in terms of the ownership of these so-called approved surgical facilities. The reason why is because this subclause (2) goes on to talk about bylaws made under the Medical Profession Act, and it's the Medical Profession Act, as I understand it right now, that prohibits anybody but a physician from owning or benefiting directly from the practice of medicine, so either owning a business that deals with the practice of medicine or directly benefiting. Now, the absence of the reference, as obscure as it was, to a corporate provision of services disturbs me.

Finally, my question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness, and I do hope he'll clarify this, because it's really quite important. When I anticipated an amendment to this section, I was looking for some clarification on the definition of minor and major surgery, because it seems to me that so much of the bill depends on what is a major surgical service as described under bylaws. Of course, when you look at the bylaws under the Medical Profession Act, the bylaws that can be established by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, right now they are silent on the distinction between major and minor surgery.

A couple of years ago, when the college visited this, they said that this was asking them to get involved in political decision-making, and they asked the government to come back and provide some legislative guidance. This is sort of a reverse shot now, saying: well, you still have to do it under bylaws. If you read the bill, you'd think that the bylaws were there, but they're not. Now when you look at the amendment, you don't take the argument any further. So you've taken out the whole distinction of major and minor.

In the first sentence of the clause you say that "no physician shall provide a surgical service," but then you go on to sort of confuse it in the second clause. If you were going to leave out the distinction between major and minor, why didn't you just leave it out entirely? If you were going to keep the bill sort of dependent on that distinction between major and minor surgical services, why didn't you clarify it instead of basing it on a college bylaw which doesn't yet exist?

What you'd be asking the people of Alberta to do, of course, is to just take an act of faith that there will be bylaws, that they will be to their liking, and that somehow there will ultimately be public accountability for that distinction that's made between major and minor surgery. The last time I checked, the men and women who sit on the board of the College of Physicians and Surgeons aren't accountable to anyone but themselves. They certainly don't run for public office. The college is a self-governing body, and they do an outstanding job, but what we're doing here is really imposing a public duty onto this nonpublic body.

So, Mr. Minister, could you briefly address my concerns, first of all about the reference to corporate ownership or the change in definition, anyway, between the original bill talking about "no person" and now narrowing it to "no physician" or "no dentist"? Could you also help me with this conundrum about the distinction between major and minor services and also the absence of current bylaws under the Medical Profession Act, which makes it impossible for anybody to come to a reasonable independent conclusion about whether or not the public good will be served by this section of the bill?

Mr. Minister, I'll sit down, because I appreciate the fact that you've been paying attention, and I would appreciate an answer.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the questions raised by the previous speaker, I think there are two specific points to be made. First of all with respect to the questions surrounding dentistry, quite frankly we did not make the connection in the original drafting of the legislation to the fact that dentists would probably – and they did – take issue with the College of Physicians and Surgeons making the rules respecting the type of surgery that could be provided in what settings as far as dentists are concerned. As you know now, they do have some dental surgery which takes place within their offices according to their overall standards, and there is other surgery that is provided for in hospitals. But they are a separate profession, and it was pointed out to us that they wanted to be designated as such under these rules.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, the member across the way might remember, I think, a very important sequence of events, and it's background is what we've said many times, and that is that in this province at this point in time we do not have the needed legislation to provide for the protection of the public health care system. I think this is well illustrated by some of the background to section 8. The college does see its role as being the most appropriate body to provide rules, policies, directions in terms of what type of surgical procedure should be provided in what setting and what the period of time required to recover might be.

Rather than talk about it generally, I'd just like to refer to an actual circumstance which occurred, and that is that a firm in Calgary – yes, HRG – applied to the College of Physicians and Surgeons for a designation according to the role that the college fills, and that is doing an evaluation, setting out rules in terms of a facility's, an entity's ability to provide certain types of medical services, in this case surgeries. So the college is quite capable – and we are depending upon them in the legislation to provide this service – to decide upon the nature and the listing of major and minor surgical procedures, and of course they are in the best position to judge this as medicine changes, as technology changes, and it is not a new role for them.

The point here is that we want to make it clear that we are depending upon the professionals to provide that judgment and that categorization. We also, of course, have in the legislation the requirement that even when the college gives that particular designation, there is a whole set of other rules and requirements that the surgical entity or surgical proponents must meet for protection with respect to enhancements being sold under undue pressure upon the patients, et cetera, et cetera.

So point number one is that, yes, the matter of the dentist was something that had to be picked up and covered, we felt, in the legislation. It was not given its proper priority and picked up in the original drafting. Secondly, with respect to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, this is a role that they have been willing to assume in the past. In the judgment of government they are the most qualified group of people or entity to make this kind of evaluation. They do it on an ongoing basis in any case, and we should recognize it in the legislation and use them for the purposes of this act.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks, Mr. Minister. You didn't address the issue that I raised regarding the removal of the words "no person shall" and inserting instead the words "no physician shall" and "no dentist shall." My question isn't whether dentists would or wouldn't be upset by being governed somehow by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. My question is that the legal definition of "person" includes corporate structures, and you've removed that notion of corporations being prohibited from doing certain things by changing the words. You didn't explain that, and that's a substantial change. I think we need some clarification.

The other notion I will raise with you, Mr. Minister, I do with some hesitation, because I in no way am suggesting that the College of Physicians and Surgeons does not discharge its responsibilities with professionalism and honour, but I will make this observation. The membership of the College of Physicians and Surgeons changes according to a schedule of their choosing. Most of the members of the College of Physicians and Surgeons are of course themselves physicians. Almost all of them are in active practice, if not in fact all of them. Some of them may be called upon to make decisions for their bylaws which will make a distinction between so-called minor and major surgeries that will directly affect their medical practices. Perhaps some of them may be owners or in partnership with those who would operate some of these private clinics.

In any case, the definition of minor and major will change, not just according to breakthroughs in medical technique and technology but also based on the composition of the members of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. This means that a regional health authority may be able to enter into a contract with a private hospital or an approved surgical facility at one point in time based on a ruling by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and then there may be a change in the membership and there may be a change in the view of the College of Physicians and Surgeons which may alter the definition or the understanding of that surgical procedure.

Then where are we? We may be dealing with a regional health authority that has perhaps entered into a long-term contract with a private clinic to do a certain kind of surgery that would now be considered contrary to the bylaws of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. On the other hand, we may find that the college would change its position and allow something that a previous college board had disallowed, which would then give a green light for a health authority to begin to contract.

So, through the chair to the minister, if you would please comment on the change in the wording regarding corporate ownership, and if you would acknowledge where in the bill this potential for change is in terms of the definition, where the Alberta public interest is going to be fully protected, and where accountability can be fully brought back to the government.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: I will, Mr. Chairman, just respond briefly. First of all, really, with respect to the member across the way, I think he fully knows this, and that is that we actually have in this province some of the best and most progressive and complete legislation for professions of any province in Canada. He talks about the accountability of the professions. Well, first of all, they have rather comprehensive responsibilities as a profession if they're going to function as a profession in this province, a very important part of which is that they must accept on their board members of the public as appointees. One of the purposes of that is to make sure there is another group of people represented on that board who are not solely physicians. There are a number of other requirements of professions in the way that they function which are designed to protect the public interest.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, the very essence, the very basis of designating any occupation as a profession is that they get that designation because of their devotion and having a structure which is designed to protect the public interest. Otherwise, they could be an association or they could be a guild or have some other organizational designation. That title of profession has a lot of meaning and a lot of responsibility attached to it.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, with respect to what I think is a question about what happens if the members of the professional council change, well, nobody lives forever; no one stays on a board forever. It is going to change, but as I said, with the professional legislation such as it is, designed to be there to protect the public interest, and with professions for the most part I think wanting to make sure they have very responsible people serving on the board or council of their profession, this is certainly a protection. At least it is certainly – and I don't think it can be argued – a structure which brings expertise to bear on such things as what can be done in one period of time or in one particular location with respect to surgeries versus another. I don't know who else you would better consult in terms of getting advice and direction on this. And because this legislation is designed to use the best options and decision-making available, this is the way we propose it.

MRS. SLOAN: I think, to begin, there's a bit of an allure and anticipation that exists surrounding these amendments. I would have to say on the record that I believe I've only had one direct call and probably less than five pieces of correspondence that have actually supported this bill in any form. The rest of my constituents that have corresponded or spoken to me about this bill do not have sufficient confidence, Mr. Chairman, that the bill is necessary. So I find this evening that entering into discussion on amendments to this bill is somehow engaging in this allure that if we amend it, it will be satisfactory. In fact, the majority of constituents who have spoken to me and expressed their concerns about the bill do not want Bill 11 in any form, amended or not.

We are debating section A, which has to do with a section that falls under the part of the bill which is designated as protecting the publicly funded health care system, part 1. There have been a number of concerns, but just let me say generally a few comments with respect this section first.

There have been a number of concerns expressed about the inability of this bill to protect the publicly funded system. I do not see within the amendments proposed in this section that there are really sufficient changes to offer any greater degree of protection than what was in the original bill.

What even I, as someone who has over 20 years' experience in the system, find myself deliberating about, Mr. Chairman, is the complexity of terms. As I read these terms, I'm thinking: all right; we have surgical services and insured surgical services. We have major surgical services. We have uninsured services and nonmedical services. We have a differentiation between surgical service being offered by a physician and an insured surgical service offered by a dentist. Despite all my experience, I find myself somewhat perplexed to differentiate these.

As I look through the amendments, the definitions – they were not strong in the original bill. There are no elaborations to the definitions accompanying these amendments this evening. How is the public to know? Where this really takes us in principle is down the road of defining insured and noninsured services, defining public and private services, defining basic and enhanced services. This is the road that this bill embarks us upon. We will come to a point shortly after the proclamation of this bill where the government then embarks on establishing that these services fall under the insured list, these services fall under the noninsured list, these services are designated as minor surgery, and these services are designated as major surgery. Given the advances in medical technology and expertise, we will probably find within 12 to 24 months of having things on the major list that they can now be performed in a minor capacity.

Clearly what I hear Albertans saying is that they don't want to go down this road. They don't want to go the road of having a list, as Oregon has, of 600 and some services, or whatever the number is, that are insured in the public system and then an accompanying list that is not provided in the public system. The public does not want that. Suffice to say that in general terms the amendments do not offer a great deal of assurance to myself, nor will they I believe tomorrow offer a great deal of assurance to the public, that this is actually going to make Bill 11 a salvageable bill, because it is not.

The federal government I believe talked about and expressed in a letter to the minister a number of concerns they wanted to see addressed relative to the protection of the publicly funded health care system. I believe Minister Rock, if I'm paraphrasing his letter correctly, expressed concerns about Bill 11's ability to permit for-profit facilities to sell enhanced services in combination with insured services, therefore creating a circumstance that would represent a serious concern in relation to the principle of accessibility. I do not see – and I'm not trying to jump ahead into the next sections, Mr. Chairman. In section A I would be most interested in hearing explicitly how this differentiation that

- no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and
- no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in
 - (a) a public hospital, or
 - (b) an approved surgical facility,

as section 2(1) says, takes us any further to overall protecting and strengthening the public health care system.

Accompanying what we're saying in this section about insured surgical services or major surgical services, we're not saying anything about whether or not those are overnight. Certainly gallbladder surgery was at one time considered a major surgery and required an overnight stay. With the advancements in that field, generally people will remain overnight following that type of surgery, but it is not anywhere near the weeklong hospitalization they used to be required to experience.

Under this section, which falls under "Protection of Publicly Funded Health Care," there is no differentiation about the private hospitals, and I see that the government hasn't offered any changes or enhancements to the definitions but has continued to leave the designation and definition of a private hospital in the definitions. So in essence, Mr. Chairman, private hospitals are going to continue to exist under the auspices of this legislation, and how insured and major surgical services are provided for is still a question in my mind.

I clearly cannot establish in my mind which services – manor/minor, insured/noninsured, enhanced/basic – in the government's conceived plan within this bill will be designated to approved surgical facilities and which ones will be designated to public hospitals. Is the minister suggesting that approved surgical facilities could provide both insured and noninsured? These are some of the basic questions Albertans want to know. Obviously, the public system, the public hospitals, are going to be providing insured services. What is envisioned, Mr. Minister, with respect to that? To me, despite my experience, it just proposes that we create a maze that is extremely difficult, time consuming, and complex for the average citizen to navigate.

I look forward, Mr. Chairman, to the further discussions on this bill and on the amendments to Bill 11. I'm also hopeful that we will see the minister of health or perhaps the Premier at some point clarify the application of these amendments. It's unfortunate that as we go along in this, we don't have the ability to have a televised debate, as we did at the onset of the discussion. I think there are many thousands of members of the public who would like to continue to monitor this debate, and because of their area of residence they're not able to do it as closely as they wish.

In any event, I appreciate the opportunity to provide those comments on section A and will look forward to further discussion of the amendments. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on A1, section A.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to stand – actually, you know what? It's not a pleasure. It's not a pleasure to rise this evening to talk to these amendments, because quite frankly they are not significant, nor do they address the major concerns that Albertans have with regards to this bill and the concerns I'm sure the MLAs in this Assembly have heard continually with regards to Bill 11.

It's unfortunate that the minister did not take the opportunity to have the bill state and be changed to reflect exactly what those observations have been from individuals across this province, nor did he take the opportunity to look at providing controls and prohibiting the sale of enhanced services in facilities that provide insured as well as uninsured surgical procedures.

He also did not take the opportunity to address other key areas that are of concern with regards to private, for-profit health care in this province, and those are areas with regards to diagnostic and laboratory provision of services.

Point of Order Relevance

MRS. NELSON: A point of order, Mr. Chairman, under Beauchesne 459, relevance. I understood we were debating the initial section A of the amendments, not the principles of the bill again. We have completed second reading.

THE CHAIRMAN: On the point of order, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: I just want to make a couple of observations. It seems to me that if we're going to talk in terms of relevance, that means we get to look at all the elements of amendment A1. It talks about "public hospital," it talks about "approved surgical facility," and it talks about a "surgical service" and an "insured surgical service in Alberta." I mean, I counted 18 different elements in this one amendment, so it may be that some members want to focus on the third element and some on the 18th element and some on the 13th, 14th, and 15th. Mr. Chairman, all of that surely would be relevant.

Now, I want to allow my colleague the chance to tell us which were the elements she was focusing on. I think it's pretty clear that we get to look at all the phrases and all the elements of it and the key words. As I say, there may be some who have found more than 18 elements in amendment A1. I was listening carefully, too, and what I heard was discussion that related to those elements. I think the member talked about three or four of the different elements.

I wanted to make that observation on the point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would observe that when we were discussing how we were going to deal with the amendment, collectively A1, it was decided that we'd go section by section. Certainly the chair heard the hon. member refer to other parts of it. We shouldn't have it both ways, should we? If we're going to deal with it section by section – I think the comments of Calgary-Buffalo were also well taken, that there is a certain amount of width, but I heard the hon. member being beyond the width. So in that sense the point of order is well taken.

Insofar as you can contain yourself right now to A1, section A, that would be helpful.

MS LEIBOVICI: Well, thank you to the chair. So I will contain my comments to this particular section.

When we look at the first line it talks about “no physician shall provide a surgical service.” It would have been opportune for the minister at this point in time to also talk about the fact that this particular clause in the bill could have talked about diagnostic services and it could have talked about laboratory services, and in fact the minister chose not to. What he chose to do is not amend this particular section of the bill, 2(1), which is under amendment A1 – I believe that is what the chair has called it – and has not chosen to amend it by including the words “diagnostic or laboratory services.”

That is quite frankly astonishing given the kinds of discussions we've had in the province and the concerns the people have had for the last number of months with regards to the services that are provided that are uninsured in this province. That is a key, key issue. For instance, the whole issue of MRIs is one that could have been addressed in the first line of this particular amendment. So that is a very key concern, and the Minister of Health and Wellness, in conjunction I would assume with his cabinet colleagues as well as the Premier of this province, decided to ignore what Albertans were saying to him.

It's interesting that they've changed the second word in that particular line. Originally it said that “no person shall provide . . .” Now it says that “no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta.” I would have liked to have known why in fact that has been changed or eliminated, whether that now means that only physicians can be owners of these approved surgical facilities, whether in fact we are now saying that there are no persons or corporations that can own these approved surgical facilities. What exactly is the meaning behind the changing of “person” to “physician”?

That is a very significant change that the minister has made. For him to make that change indicates that there has been some kind of decision that's been made by the department. He did not explain that decision when he produced these amendments, nor did he indicate what the amendment was supposed to do in the news release that was provided just probably an hour ago with regards to the meaning of that particular provision. So it would be interesting to know why the words have been changed.

You know, the hon. Minister of Government Services has indicated that I said that before. Unfortunately, she didn't hear me earlier, but we are going to be picking up on this particular amendment word by word, line by line if it takes us until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon. So that's what our plan is for tonight, and hopefully there's nobody in a rush here, because that's exactly what we are going to be doing.

Each amendment is important, and I would assume that if the government has spent a month, two months, three months, as the minister had indicated, and these are significant changes, then each word has meaning. I can see the lawyer in the crowd in the second row there nodding his head in agreement, because in fact he knows that every word has weight when it comes to an agreement, a contract, when it comes to legislation. As such, we will need to take apart and look at and dissect every word within these amendments. We must take time. We will not and cannot be rushed, because in fact what we are going to do is ensure that these amendments have been examined with a microscope, have been looked at, and in fact reflect what the minister would like them to reflect. So that is what we are doing right now, and that is what we will continue to do.

So, as I was indicating, there is some question in my mind. At any point when the Minister of Health and Wellness wishes to stand up and explain exactly what the amendment is supposed to do and what the change of the words is in those amendments, I will be willing to take my seat and listen to whatever his explanation is.

As I indicated, there has been a change from “person” to “physician.” That is to my mind a fairly significant change that we need some kind of explanation about. We need to have a full understanding of what exactly that means, because elsewhere in the legislation when it talks about “no person shall give or accept . . . money,” it doesn't talk about physicians. It sticks to persons, so it's only changed in clause 2 from what I can see. There has to be a meaning of what that reasoning is. That's my first point, on the second word in amendment A1.

The second point, that I had talked about and touched on briefly, was to deal with the provision of surgical services in Alberta. My question there was around: why did the minister not take the opportunity to expand that particular service to include the laboratory and diagnostic needs? That is something Albertans are concerned about. That is something the minister would've heard about.

If in fact he was looking at putting fences around the services that are provided, as the Premier has indicated, as the minister has indicated, as the junior minister, when he's here, has indicated, what needs to occur is that those fences should not be solely on surgical facilities but should be expanded to include the other services that are required when one requires medical intervention. That, to my mind, makes sense; doesn't it? I think it does. How could it not make sense that when you're looking at putting fences around medical intervention and procedures, those fences do not in and of themselves also include laboratory and diagnostic and medical services, that that would be part and parcel of the whole package. That should've been an integral part of this piece of legislation, could've been addressed in this particular section, and the minister chose not to.

It would be interesting to have the information from the minister and what the basis was upon which he decided not to provide that within this amendment. This is the opportunity to do it, and he decided not to. Did his research studies tell him that this was not necessary? Did any medical professionals tell him that this was not necessary? Did the AMA or the College of Physicians and Surgeons tell him that this was not necessary? Has he consulted with the AARN? Has he consulted with, perhaps, UNA or some of the other associations that are related in providing surgical services? Has any of that consultation taken place at all? Did he talk with the radiologists? Did he talk with some of the laboratory technicians? Did he talk with the Health Sciences Association to see what their involvement could be and some of the concerns they have with regards to the fences that are left out of this particular legislation?

That's the kind of thing I thought we would be hearing from the minister when he introduced the amendments and when he brought in these particular amendments, and in fact it's not here. It's not here, and I must admit that I'm disappointed that it is not here.

MRS. SOETAERT: I'm disappointed too.

MS LEIBOVICI: Well, I think our caucus is disappointed. I don't think it's just myself. I know that it's our caucus and it's Albertans who are disappointed that they are not seeing what they thought they would see: this much promised salvation, as it were, to Bill 11. In fact, the Premier and the minister have for a long time now said: wait to see our amendments, and it will alleviate the concerns you have with regards to the bill.

I look at the first amendment, and all I have to do is look at the first line and notice that a change which is not explained has been made and that there's another change that could have been made that was not made. That is just on two words in the first line of the first amendment. I know that at some point soon I'm probably going to run out of time, but I will rise again because I have the second line to deal with, and the third line and the fourth line and the fifth line, to ask the minister exactly what his intention was in bringing this particular amendment forward. I understand we may have lots of time to deal with these amendments, and I am pleased to know that we will not be rushed in that. I'm looking quite forward to dealing with these amendments on a word-by-word, line-by-line basis, to ask the questions that need to be asked that are of concern to Albertans when it comes to amendment A1.

Now, I don't want to tip my hand too much, but I notice that in the second line the inclusion has been made of dentists providing insured surgical services in Alberta. That is interesting in that that was left out of the original legislation and is now placed into this legislation. Obviously there have been some concerns brought forward by the Alberta Dental Association that in the government's haste to bring forward legislation, they must have left something out. They must have overlooked something. It was perhaps an oversight, though further on in Bill 11 it does talk about dentists. But they left it out of the front part of this section.

I think that's significant in terms of how that actually impacts on dental practice right now, or what the potential impacts could have been on dental practice with the way the bill was originally written, when they are now put into this particular section of the bill. What in fact does that issue address? Now dentists who have been performing surgeries in their offices may have to be accredited is what that sounds like, because they are now included under this particular amendment.

I guess it might be interesting to know what the Alberta Dental Association recommended with regards to this particular recommendation, whether in fact they will now be having to have excess costs out-of-pocket because of the accreditations that are required to perform these dental procedures in approved surgical facilities, whether the Alberta Dental Association has a process in place that can be easily transported to meet whatever flimsy conditions there are under Bill 11 with regards to accreditation, whether the dentists will have to pay out-of-pocket for that, and whether their annual fees will have to be increased now that there has to be accreditation processes put into place and more work in monitoring by the Alberta Dental Association. Just off the top of my head, those are some questions I have with regards to what the impact is now of having this particular provision and the inclusion of dentists in this clause within Bill 11.

It's a huge issue that's just been opened up that hasn't really been addressed in the past other than when you look at 25(1), where it says that "the definition of surgical services of minor surgical procedures that may safely be performed in a physician's or dentist's office" could be excluded. In fact, there is an amendment later on that deals a little bit with that. If my memory serves me correctly, it takes out the physician part of it but keeps in the dentist part of it.

So this is a package now, Mr. Chairman, that we're looking at in terms of the amendments that've been made that will affect the operations, potentially, of dental offices throughout this province. I think it's important that we recognize that these are not surgical facilities that are only confined to the medical clinics as we know them and/or the private, for-profit hospitals that will be opened – under this particular amendment, actually, will stay opened – or in public hospitals. We are now talking about dentists' offices as well, because that's what this amendment squarely does.

To do that without having addressed it openly in this forum, without having even mentioned it, I think, in the news release, and without having indicated what the recommendations were that brought this amendment into place I think is not being open and accountable with any of us in this Assembly or with the public. I think that when we look at putting in place another set of professionals into a particular piece of legislation, it's very important to have consulted with them and to know what the outcome of the consultation process is.

If I can just indicate that we passed in the last legislative session a piece of legislation that had to do with 43, I believe, health professions. That was a mammoth job, and I have to give credit to the Member for Medicine Hat, who chaired that committee and I don't think has ever quite got his due. I think he did a magnificent job in terms of ensuring and dealing with the concerns. There were some problems, I must admit, right at the end. But he was very good at working out and listening to what the problems were that the individual groups had, whether it was the Association of Registered Nurses, whether it was the ambulance or the paramedics and firefighters and the problems that were inherent with the health professions bill had it been passed there, as well as the – what are those guys on the ski hills called? – ski patrol officers. They had problems with the changes that would have been put in place. When push came to shove, he sat down and listened to the concerns of the various groups with regards to the health professions bill.

That, quite frankly, would have been a model that I would liked to have seen brought forward in dealing with this particular amendment, when we have now brought a professional group that wasn't discussed at all before in the amendments in this bill into and under the cover, as it were, of Bill 11. So that is a point I would like to hear from the minister on. I would hope that if the minister's staff is still around and listening to the comments I have, we will see some kind of response tomorrow. This is very, very important, and it needs to be addressed.

Generally, I have found that when we come to the amendments stage we ask the minister, and do you know what? We don't get the answer. We are then forced to make a decision whether we will vote for or against the amendment without any answer from the minister.

Thank you. I will rise again.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As is my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, I am not very happy to be rising this evening speaking to this amendment in the committee stage on Bill 11. I was one of those people who was disenfranchised by the moves of the government and not allowed to speak at second reading of this bill even though many people in my constituency wished me to do so. Unfortunately, because of the aggressive moves on the part of the government to stifle debate on this particular bill, I am forced to speak to this only at committee stage. That is really an indication of the kind of heavy-handedness this government has used in terms of trying to push this bill through the Legislative Assembly and down the throats of Albertans.

THE CHAIRMAN: Amendment A1, section A.

MS CARLSON: I am speaking to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN: Good. On the amendment.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking about why I am opposed to having to speak to it at this particular point in time.

MR. SAPERS: It works.

MS CARLSON: It works for me, Mr. Chairman, and I think it works for the people we have watching us here this evening.

There are a lot of things wrong with this amendment. Specifically, some of the things I see wrong with it right off the very top are that this particular amendment doesn't address any of the major issues that Albertans are concerned about with this bill. So when we take a look at this and go down to 2(1), we see that

- no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in
- (a) a public hospital, or
- (b) an approved surgical facility.

Read private hospital there, Mr. Chairman.

It strikes me that as the very first amendment this government brings in on this bill, it is very unsubstantive and doesn't address any of the major reasons people have concerns about this bill. For example, "no physician shall provide a . . . service," as the amendment says, doesn't address the definition of hospitals. That has not been cleared up in this amendment, and that is a major cause for concern for people throughout the province. It doesn't address their concern that private hospitals be banned in Alberta. It doesn't say that anywhere in here, yet this is the number one concern we have heard – well, I have heard, anyway, from my constituents. I know many of those constituents are also e-mailing, letter writing, and phoning the Premier.

Phoning the Premier is also a problem, because it's taking three days for many of those people to get through on the lines. I have had numerous reports of those people being treated very rudely by the people taking the calls, but that's another issue for another time. It's not addressing this amendment, which is a problem and something that we can talk to at this stage.

So it doesn't address the issue of private hospitals being banned in Alberta, but it does again address the issue of private surgical facilities. It doesn't go on to talk about them in any detail, but we know they're going to be allowed to perform a wider range of procedures that are currently only performed in public hospitals, Mr. Chairman, and we have a major problem with that. On behalf of the people of Alberta, those thousands and thousand and thousands of people who have signed petitions and sent in information to the government, we know they have a problem with private surgical facilities having a wider range of procedures that they can perform. That is not addressed in this first and what should have been the primary amendment the government brought in on this legislation.

These private surgical facilities that we're talking about here really are hospitals. You'll be able to take that label, that sign and plunk it in front of any hospital in this province and see that they provide exactly the same service as the hospital did before only under a different name. That hasn't been addressed in this amendment, Mr. Chairman. We would like to know why because tomorrow, when I go out into my constituency, people are going to be asking that question. They're going to be saying: have the amendments that the government brought in really strengthened the bill, have they addressed our major concerns, and have they addressed the concern about what a surgical facility or private hospital will be able to do? It hasn't. This first amendment doesn't even come close to addressing that, and we want the minister of health to explain why that is.

Does it address any of the concerns about public scrutiny and accountability, Mr. Chairman? Well, I don't see it here again, although the second part of the amendment starts to just touch on that, where it says:

- No physician or dentist shall provide a major surgical service, as described
 - (a) in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in the case of a physician, or
 - (b) in the regulations under section 25(1)(a.1), in the case of a dentist,
- in Alberta, except in a public hospital.

What does that really mean, Mr. Chairman, when we talk about lack of public scrutiny and accountability? Well, it doesn't address it at all. It says that now they are regulated by their independent associations, which is a good thing, but it doesn't talk about what's going to happen with those doctors and those dentists in terms of public scrutiny and accountability. That also is a very major concern that should have been one of the very primary factors addressed in amendments, and we don't see it.

So why is that a problem? It's a problem because by leaving the decisions about what surgeries are major and what are minor to the College of Physicians and Surgeons and now also to the Dental Association, this bill essentially gives a huge amount of power over provincial health policy to a body that is neither publicly elected nor publicly accountable.

We know that this is a huge concern for people, and we see a little tinkering with it now by addressing the concerns of the doctors and the dentists, but when are they going to address the concerns of Albertans? That's the big question here. Let's deal with the major concerns first and then deal with the minor concerns.

Speaking about major concerns, Mr. Chairman, how can it be that we have a bill that closure is brought in for at second reading, we get directly into speaking at a committee stage, and before anybody's even allowed to speak at committee, we have amendments brought in? How can that be? This government has so many resources at their fingertips. They've got departments with many, many employees who are well educated, who understand the issues, and they bring in a bill and on the very first opportunity that I get to speak to it, Mr. Chairman, I'm speaking to amendments instead of the bill itself. How can that be? How can they have done such a poor job on such a major piece of legislation in this province?

I think that's a question that needs to be answered, and it isn't addressed in these amendments at all. It seems absolutely baffling that a government which suggests to people that they can adequately manage $17 billion in revenue a year cannot properly draft a bill and bring it to the Legislature in a proper form that can be discussed and debated without a series of amendments coming forward on the floor of the House before we even have a chance to talk to it.

So far all I've been able to talk to on this bill, Mr. Chairman, is the adjournment motion that was brought up last night. It completely bypassed me at second reading. There were five of us in the Legislature who never got to speak to it at all on our side and I think more than 50 people on that side who weren't able to speak to it. How can that be that this thing is rammed down our throats in a fashion that isn't even properly drafted, because we've got all these amendments before us now, and we don't even get to speak to it. I think the people of the province want to know how that can happen.

Now it comes here to committee stage, and I still can't talk to the bill; I have to just speak to the amendments. I'm going to speak to this particular amendment in terms of what's missing in the bill.

If we don't have anything on the public scrutiny and accountability side, how can that be? That's a huge issue. These decisions are going to be made behind closed doors by associations and not in front of the general public, where they can have any kind of scrutiny by the general population, and certainly not voted on. That part, the lack of public scrutiny, is strengthened by A2 of this amendment. This is a place in the amendment where they could have addressed that issue. Instead of just talking about the accountability for the physicians, the dentists, they could have talked about adding a portion to that that talked about public scrutiny and accountability.

Certainly it could have come as A2 or A3. It could have been in there, and we could have talked about that. That isn't in this, and I want to know why. I'm hoping the minister of health will address that before this has to come to a vote this evening, Mr. Chairman. If he doesn't address it, I'm going to stick around. I'm going to keep popping up and asking questions as the night progresses into the next day. I'll be quite happy to stay here. How can it be, when we talk about accountability, that the general public is never going to have an opportunity to have any input into the decision-making process when we are limited merely to those two bodies to decide how and what kinds of major surgical services can be provided? So that's a problem with it.

Once again, one of the other major concerns people have had with this bill is the enhanced services portion, Mr. Chairman, and again I don't see this addressed here. One of the major concerns in this province, and it doesn't talk about it at all. It's very limiting in terms of the scope of this particular amendment. We should have been able to talk about enhanced services. It's one of the major flaws in this bill. It is what keeps it quite separate and distinct from the same bill that's been put forward and passed in the Saskatchewan Legislature. We know that enhanced services is the part of the bill which allows for the greatest scope for people of the province to be disenfranchised by the public health system, because what's going to happen is that the money is made for these private surgical facilities, or private hospitals, on the enhanced services portion.

We know what's going to happen. You go to a private clinic, you want a basic service that the government is going to pay for, including the profit portion of the private clinic, and the private clinic is going to say: well, you know, that isn't enough; if we can get them to just upgrade two or three times, we substantially increase our profit margin on providing this basic service. You've already got the body in the door. You've already got them in a bed. It's very little cost added to top up the services.

MR. DICKSON: How does it work with the Shouldice clinic?

MS CARLSON: With the Shouldice clinic. That's right. That's something that could have been addressed in this amendment, particularly when we're talking about the physicians providing services as described in the bylaws on the Medical Profession Act because I believe that's where Shouldice in Ontario is covered in that province.

Here's what happens there, Mr. Chairman. It's really too bad in terms of . . .

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the Shouldice clinic is a very interesting topic, but really tonight Committee of the Whole. We're dealing with it because by agreement, although it wasn't quite agreed, we did come down on that we're going to go section by section. You're talking about all kinds of things. I've admonished you before, but if you'd stick with what we're dealing with right now. I mean, you can talk about the moon or anything else, but really what we want you to talk about and what the rules are is that you talk about what's before us. It's A1 section A that's before us.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, if I might just make an observation on your direction, I'd appreciate it. I was just going to indicate . . .

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Order.

THE CHAIRMAN: He's been recognized.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, you make an excellent point in terms of the importance of staying on the amendment. I was thinking myself, as I was listening to the member speaking, about the reference in the amendment specifically to section 2(1)(b), "an approved surgical facility." I'm thinking, as I look at that amendment, that I've heard the government talk extensively – our friend from Calgary-Glenmore spent a good part of his second reading debate talking about the Shouldice clinic, and the Premier and the minister of health. It seems to me that the Shouldice clinic is put forward by the government, by the propounders of this bill, as an example of what an approved surgical facility is. I was thinking to myself, as I listened to those arguments, that it's clear the government understands that the Shouldice clinic is their notion of what would be an approved surgical clinic facility.

What I appreciated about my colleague's commentary is that she has some firsthand experience about how the clinic operates. When I decide whether this is an amendment I could support in terms of what an approved surgical facility is, I find it really helpful to sort of know what that means and how that operates in other places.

I'd be hoping, Mr. Chairman, that we'd be able to develop that element. As I say, it's amendment A1, section 2(1)(b), "an approved surgical facility," and just what that would be. As I listened to my colleague I think that's sort of where she's going. So I would hope, Mr. Chairman, as we get into discussing that that we'll be able to sort of tease out exactly what that means by reference to what the government has been putting forward as part of the argument.

I just wanted to make that observation, Mr. Chairman, and hopefully that's consistent with your understanding of what we're about tonight as well. I appreciate my colleague for letting me butt in and make that observation.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes. I think, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you did touch upon the right point, the definition. There's a whole section on definitions, and we're not there yet. But the hon. member said at the outset that she was going to talk about what was not in the whole thing and proceeded to do just that. The frustration of the chair is trying to keep people on the topic. I mean, if you want to talk forever on the topic, then so be it. But we were digressing all over the place, and I was just trying to bring her back. That's all. Is that clear, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

MS CARLSON: It certainly is, Mr. Chairman, and I thank you for that.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: I will limit my comments on Shouldice to how they apply to an approved surgical facility as outlined in the amendment, which talks about "no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta . . . except in an approved surgical facility" – and if you look a little further down the amendment – "in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act." That is exactly the example the Premier has been using. It's a very good example of private, for-profit operations, and we need to see what that's going to look like and how that will split out in terms of applying to this particular amendment. So I will limit my comments on Shouldice in terms of how they apply to an approved surgical facility.

The problem with that, Mr. Chairman, and the reason this amendment is not good enough in that regard is because Shouldice is an approved surgical facility that in fact gouges the provincial government, the public health care purse as compared to what a public hospital does. That's a real problem with an approved surgical facility as outlined in this amendment.

What happens in Shouldice is that there is a minimum three-night stay required. That three-night stay is paid by the Ontario hospital system. Shouldice only takes premium patients, Mr. Chairman. They cream-skin. They won't take patients who have any medical complications. They do not take patients who have high blood pressure, a history of heart conditions, diabetes, MS, CF, any of those kinds of chronic diseases, or anyone who has more than 10 percent body fat. So that's a problem, because they just take the very premium quality of patients for a very insubstantive operation and keep them for three nights.

In the public system that we have now, those kinds of patients are often in the system for just day surgery, which is a minimum kind of cost, Mr. Chairman. That's important, because it's we who pay for that cost. We pay through Alberta health care premiums. We pay through our taxes. We pay through a number of user fees. These are all the different ways that we are paying for that service.

So now you have an approved surgical facility which has physicians in it, whose services are described in the bylaws under the Medical Profession Act as exactly laid out in this amendment, who can charge more to the public system, to us as taxpayers than would happen in a public hospital. In fact, we have many cases of exactly that happening.

I have a situation where someone I know went to Shouldice to have a hernia operation performed, and they rejected him, Mr. Chairman. He met all of the physical criteria, but in fact his operation was a triple hernia operation, so widely outside the scope of Shouldice. So what happened there is that he went for the preop exam and spent one night in the clinic as a result of that. They rejected him the next morning.

So now the public system is paying for that preop exam. They are paying for the one-night stay. He gets rejected from Shouldice and has to go back into the public hospital system. They take him in, talk about it being a 45-minute operation, and set up the appointment for day surgery. Mr. Chairman, now this fellow's going to have a triple hernia, widely outside the scope of Shouldice, and it's going to be done in day surgery. He comes in at 7 o'clock in the morning, and he is gone at 7:30 at night for what is a much more substantive operation. So he goes in there. It's supposed to be a 45-minute operation, but it turns out to be longer than that, about an hour and 45 minutes. Still, everything goes smoothly, and he's out that night by 7:30.

So, what has the public taxpayer paid so far, Mr. Chairman? I think that's important for people to know. They paid for the preop exam at Shouldice. They paid for a one-night stay there. They paid for the preop exam at the public system. They paid for day surgery at the public system. Much more substantive than if we had just stayed with the kind of system we have right now in Alberta, which is the public system. Then he would have only paid for a preop exam in day surgery and been gone. Minimum cost to the taxpayers.

What happens in the case of somebody who is accepted at Shouldice? They pay for the preop exam, they pay for a one-night stay, they pay for a two-night stay, they pay for a three-night stay, and they pay for the operation. If something happens to go wrong, they also pay for the hospital ride back to the public system, where the cost associated with fixing the problem is incurred. That, Mr. Chairman, costs a whole lot more money to all of us as taxpayers than the current efficiently running public system that we have right now.

So the question is: is this amendment addressing that particular concern? The answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is absolutely not. The scope of the amendment is not wide enough. It only outlines the specifics of how the physicians can provide their services, public hospital or an approved surgical facility. Unfortunately, it doesn't refer to the additional costs that there are in the system and the kinds of concerns that we have about that. Overnight stays is just a problem because it is a mechanism by which the private operators can in essence gouge the public system. That's gouging our pocketbooks, not anybody else's.

The surgical facilities as they're outlined in this amendment are still private, for-profit hospitals. It's still a huge problem for us. Enhanced services are still offered, and that's a conflict-of-interest issue, as we can see in the case of Shouldice. What are the enhanced services there, Mr. Chairman? They talk about it right in their operating manual, and that is a country club atmosphere. That's the enhanced service of Shouldice. Who pays for that country club atmosphere? You and I, not anybody else. Those are the kinds of issues that we have to talk about when enhanced services are still offered. That is a conflict of interest.

Shouldice is well written up in a number of articles and textbooks across North America, and why is that? It isn't because they provide the best possible service in an enhanced surgical facility; it's because they are a very good example of an operation that is efficient and maximizes their profit. That's why they're written up in textbooks. They're written up in operational courses. In fact, I took a case study on Shouldice clinic for my MBA, and the model that we were doing there was taking the operations of Shouldice hospital and looking for maximum profit points. It wasn't for maximum benefit to the health care system, to the public system or to the private system. It wasn't looking for maximum benefits to the patients themselves. It was looking for ways to maximize the profits for the shareholders. What do you think happens in this province when we bring in private health care directly through approved surgical services? The same thing. We maximize profits.

THE CHAIRMAN: Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be able to speak to amendment A1. You know, I had great hopes when these amendments were tabled, and I thought maybe this would help this bill in some way. I thought it was beyond help, but I'm ever a hopeful person. You know, I am a person of hope. So I always had that hope. But, you know what? It still has that fatal flaw. That fatal flaw in the amendment and thus in the bill is still the reference to and the expansion of the private health care system. It didn't address that at all. So here we go with amendment A1.

I've asked a couple of my colleagues about one thing, and we chatted about it, but I'm hoping the minister will answer. I would like to know why section 1 was changed to:

as compared to before: "No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in . . ." Now, I haven't heard an explanation for that unless I missed it somewhere tonight. I still haven't got that quite clear. Does that mean that these clinics, these surgical clinics, that hospitals – anyway, I just have all kinds of questions around that. If I missed it, I will read the Blues tomorrow or tonight and see if the minister did answer that one, but I'm not sure if that was clear.

The second part says in a "public hospital," and that's good, but (b) still remains the same. It's called "an approved surgical facility." Now, Mr. Chairman, nothing happened to stop that from being overnight stays. We do have approved surgical facilities in this province, which I have concerns about, and this amendment didn't address them.

My main concern is that, as we give our taxpayer dollars to private surgical facilities, as well as maintaining their facility and hiring their staff, they also have to pay their investors, their board members, and they expect a minimum of 15 percent. That's a minimum. Now, that's quite a chunk of coin when we compare that to the public system. If there's a profit to be made in that, then why aren't we putting that money back in the public system? I haven't seen that addressed in this amendment anywhere, and that's what I was hoping. I'll tell you, right away when I saw that in the original wording of the bill, that was to me the two tiers, the two-tiered approach right there: an approved surgical facility. I can just see the neon lights: Hips-R-Us. You know. You've heard it . . . [interjection] No, I didn't say anything else. I'm always very proper in here. Very proper.

It also didn't address in this: how serious are these surgeries within this approved surgical facility? The amendment still refers to both "a public hospital" and "an approved surgical facility." I think that was one of the biggest concerns that people have asked me about. They're not fooled by this surgical facility line. You know, it's the old groups that say: "You know what? Don't use the term private hospital. That doesn't sell. That grates on people's nerves." So right away the spin doctors of the bill say: "Okay. Right in the bill, at the beginning, we'll say no private hospitals." So that was kept in, but guess what? They put in that we will allow "approved surgical facilities."

Well, they're really smart. They saw through that. That's a private hospital. And the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat argues with me every time I say that, but you know what? If they were to take a little straw vote of Albertans, they'd agree with me on that one, and I know it.

The other major impact is to designate who does the surgery, physicians and dentists. From my understanding as I look at the original, dentists had been forgotten or missed out, and now they're included. What a coincidence. I was at the dentist's this morning. But that's not on the amendment. It had me a little quieter than usual for about an hour, but that's all, and . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Strong teeth.

MRS. SOETAERT: Strong teeth. In fact my dentist this morning couldn't believe this whole bill. He didn't support it at all. He was asking – in fact, I was kind of sorry I had made such an early dentist appointment, but I kept it anyway. It was a good visit to the dentist, but it is hard to explain what you're doing in the Legislature, you know, when you've got all cotton wads in your mouth and he's working on you, and that's definitely the time they ask you a question. I guess that's just a habit dentists have.

So that is added, and that's most interesting. Now, I'm well aware that dentists do perform surgical services at clinics. I realize they must have been forgotten in the original, because actually a daughter of mine was under anesthetic to get wisdom teeth removed at a private clinic of a dentist. So I do see why dentists were added to that, unless they are under other legislation somewhere else. I see why they were added and am surprised they could have been forgotten before. In fact, I think I will phone a dentist tomorrow morning and say: "You've been added to the bill. How do you feel about that?" He didn't like the bill, so I don't know how he's going to feel about that. But that is a part of the amendment.

Then we look at the next part of this amendment, and it says:

- (a) in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in the case of a physician, or
- (b) in the regulations under section 25(1)(a.1), in the case of a dentist, in Alberta, except in a public hospital.

The reality is that this first amendment, which is one of many – it's interesting, Mr. Chairman, that we almost had to go through the whole alphabet to get all the amendments in. I have seen many pieces of legislation that this government has brought in. In fact, I think there was another bill that actually had more pages of amendments than the bill. With L, M, N, O, and P here, we're almost at that many amendments this time.

As always, I'm glad that the minister is looking to improve it. Regretfully, though, he hasn't improved it. He had the opportunity in this section to improve it but didn't, because it kept the same fatal flaw of an approved surgical facility that allows overnight stays. Mr. Chairman, that has not addressed my concerns.

When I take this back to my constituents – you know, it'll be interesting. When I get in my car tonight to leave, 10 to one there will be messages on my machine, and it'll be people saying: "Oh, I heard on the news that second reading is over. What can you possibly do to stop them from pushing this bill through?" We will speak to the amendments and make sure that every amendment has certainly been thought out. Obviously the bill originally wasn't, so we will force them step by step to at least make the amendments palatable.

Do you know what? Here's the first one, and it isn't palatable. I can't accept that. It does add dentists – and I realize that's a necessity – but the reality is that it didn't take away "an approved surgical facility." It could have added: with no overnight stays. Maybe we should make an amendment to the amendment that says: with no overnight stays. I'm going to think about that. I realize that if I do that, it has to go through Parliamentary Counsel and be written up, and I haven't had a chance to look at it enough to suggest that that might help. It might be a good idea to do that.

Do you know what else? This amendment does nothing to allay the fears of the constituents I have talked to, not just constituents of mine but certainly constituents from the whole area around my riding: people in Stony Plain, people in Onoway, people in Morinville, the good, good people in my riding of St. Albert, and all the people in St. Albert and Spruce Grove and Sturgeon. Honestly, I just brought in to show my colleagues the box of letters, e-mails, and faxes I have had on this bill: over 700. When I go back to the constituency or write an article for the local paper, when I say: I looked at the amendments and I hate to break it to you; they are still going to allow overnight stays in surgical facilities . . .

MR. CLEGG: Yeah.

MRS. SOETAERT: The Member for Dunvegan says: yeah. I don't know. [interjection] I can't believe that your constituents think so differently on this.

MR. CLEGG: I said that they're good thinkers.

MRS. SOETAERT: I thought that was what you said. I would really take offence to it if you were slamming my constituents, who've expressed grave concern over this bill.

I would express, then, once again that this "approved surgical facility" does nothing to allay the fears of my constituents that have called me. I must say that it's overwhelming at my office. Overwhelming. I only have one staff person. I have some volunteers that come in, but the e-mails are phenomenal. With e-mails, you know, some are from all over the province, but many are from my riding and the ridings around. People are not sure if they're being heard or considered when they phone and e-mail their MLAs.

Do you know what? If they had been heard, this amendment would be different. This amendment might have added: an improved surgical facility that did not allow overnight stays. Why can't we put that in there? I don't think the MLAs that have been hearing the concerns of the people have implemented the people's concerns in these amendments. Certainly not. They had a golden opportunity in A1 to add it, and they didn't.

I had a couple more things I had written that I wanted to mention about A1. You know, it doesn't change the idea that private, for-profit hospitals will be open, and often they say: oh, yeah, what's wrong with making money in health care? Well, the reality is: is that how our tax dollars should be spent? To have private operators make money off sick people? I don't think so.

I just have to express my concerns that A1 will not allay the fears of all the constituents who have call me. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 13, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/04/13
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Oh God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four distinguished visitors who are seated in your gallery: the past and the present Lieutenant Governors of the province of Rupertland and their wives. They are here today as we begin the second annual Mr. Speaker's Alberta Youth Parliament.

This wonderful project came to life thanks to the generosity of the Alberta-Northwest Territories Command of the Royal Canadian Legion. We all know how active the Legion is in communities all across this province. Legionnaires have proven repeatedly their profound commitment to our country and its democratic institutions in time of war and in time of peace. Their sponsorship of this youth parliament is one of the many examples of the Legion's commitment to Canada and to Alberta.

I'd ask all members of the Assembly to join me in recognizing His Honour the Honourable Stu Black and his wife, Flo. In addition to being Lieutenant Governor for a day, Stu is the Treasurer of the Alberta-Northwest Territories Command. Also in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, are Mr. Tom Barton and his wife, Sunny. Tom is past president of the command and served as Rupertland's Lieutenant Governor last year. We have them all standing and would appreciate the warm traditional welcome being extended to them.

The last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the requisite copies of a letter from the former Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Allan Blakeney, written to the Prime Minister asking him to intervene to stop Bill 11 from going through.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: I have two tablings this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. The first one is a summary I've prepared of Bill 11 debate from Wednesday, April 12, 2000.

The second one is a list of the 44 MLAs who did not speak to Bill 11 at second reading.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a report entitled Lone Female Headship and Welfare Policy in Canada, which was conducted by researchers at McMaster University and the University of Quebec.

My second tabling is a report on low-income cutoffs dated December 1999.

My third tabling is a report, Canada's Great Divide: The Politics of the Growing Gap Between Rich and Poor in the 1990s, which was completed in January of 2000 by Armine Yalnizyan.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have four tablings for the Assembly. The first is a copy of the Alberta government Bill 11 web site Bill 11 debate summary for April 10, 2000, indicating the errors on that web site.

The second is a copy of the government of Alberta Bill 11 web site Bill 11 debate summary for April 11, 2000, indicating the several errors in that summary.

The third, Mr. Speaker, is from the government of Alberta Bill 11 web site reports and studies summary indicating that three of the four studies cited by the government to support Bill 11 deal with private hospitals.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a copy of a report compiled by my constituency office regarding a letter count to 5 p.m. April 11, 2000, indicating that of the 208 messages I've received in my constituency office, fully 95 percent are opposed to Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour of presenting to you and through you to members of the Legislature two letters from residents of Calgary that are categorically opposed to the proposed development in the Spray Valley in Kananaskis Country. The first is from Deborah Sanderson from Charleswood Drive in Calgary. Briefly, it should not be allowed to convert the habitat of the Spray Valley into a . . . resort [development] simply because it [is] contrary to the wishes of . . . Albertans.

The second is from Miles Tindal of northwest Calgary in which he states that the major development in the Spray Valley proposed by Genesis "would inevitably have a major adverse effect on the environment."

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is from the Sierra Youth Coalition of Calgary and about 100 concerned citizens who attended the Tent Ridge Hurrah on March 5 of this year. They are adamantly opposed to any further development in the Spray Valley of Kananaskis Country.

The second tabling today is from Janet Miller, who lists nine specific reasons why she is also opposed to the proposed development in Kananaskis Valley.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly this year's Mr. Speaker's Alberta Youth Parliament. Today in our galleries we have 83 grade 10 students from across Alberta, each one representing one of our constituencies. They are now Members of the Legislative Assembly of Rupertland and will participate in their model parliament in this Chamber tomorrow.

Also in the galleries are 11 grade 10 social studies teachers who are here to participate in the teachers' component of this program. They are joined by approximately 12 members of the Royal Canadian Legion and five members of the teacher advisory committee who helped put this program together.

I should add that thanks to the support of CFRN television, Access Network, and Alberta Learning the proceedings of the model parliament will be televised on Access from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 3:30 tomorrow, and of course the galleries here will be open to the public at all times.

I'd ask all of these guests and legislators to please stand and be recognized with the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you and to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Thelma Lubchynski. Thelma has been out collecting signatures on a health care petition and has been very active in this regard. On behalf of the Legislative Assembly I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Conflict of Interest Guidelines

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is generally recognized that serious conflicts of interest can arise when public health care providers contract with the private sector. My questions are to the minister of health. Why is it government policy to allow regional health authorities to set their own conflict of interest standards? Are the ethics different in different parts of the province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the process is one in which, yes, regional health authorities do establish their conflict of interest policies. There are basic principles, of course, under which conflict of interest policies or charters, if you will, are established across this province. Through our business plan monitoring process and the overall supervision of regional health authorities, we make sure that they do have conflict of interest provisions, and of course the proposal before the Assembly ensures that as well.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the government rethink its policy on conflict of interest and ensure that there is consistency right across the province with respect to the regional health authorities and their conflict of interest policies?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the basic principles or characteristics of conflict of interest policies in all sectors, I'm quite confident that those are provided for with the regional health authorities. Also, I would like to mention that the government is proposing further action via legislation with respect to strengthening conflict of interest provisions across the health care system.

MRS. MacBETH: Will the minister show the leadership which Albertans expect and deserve by laying down airtight conflict of interest standards instead of abdicating his responsibility, or does he prefer a 17-tier policy for his two-tiered health care?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in terms of providing leadership and providing for this within the health care system, as I've indicated, regional health authorities do have conflict of interest policies. They do have a great deal of consistency in terms of the basic issues regarding conflict of interest. As I've indicated – and it's difficult to give the direct answer to the member across the way, and I think she knows that – the matters before the Assembly are going to further strengthen the whole area of conflict of interest guidelines and policies and rules within the health care system.

Government Reports on Bill 11 Debate

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the government has spent well over $1 million on its propaganda campaign, TV and newspaper ads, direct mail to every household, in a desperate attempt to sell its privatization plan. It's failed. They are now putting out their so-called Bill 11 debate summaries and trying to pass them off as factual. The truth is they are not fact, they are fiction. My questions are to the minister of health. Who is putting out these debate summaries? Is it the Public Affairs Bureau, is it the ministry of health, or do we have the truth squads back?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there is of course an overall and very concentrated effort on the part of government to provide accurate information with respect to all health policy and all department directions. With respect to the information being provided on an ongoing basis with respect to the matter before the Assembly, I would stack the accuracy and straightforwardness of our information any time against the kind of information that the Liberals have been spreading around this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that there's no answer as to the source, why is the government so ashamed to indicate the source of those documents?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Health and Wellness has produced a great deal of material on this particular topic. It's a very important matter. It's very important that the accurate information gets out there. It's increasingly important given the low quality and inaccuracy of the material put out by the Liberals, and we do not apologize for that because one of the major directions and efforts of the Department of Health and Wellness, as of all agencies and departments of government, is to inform the public of this province on important matters that affect them.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, let's try again for a third time. Who is responsible for putting out inaccurate debate summaries? Is it the ministry of health, is it the Public Affairs Bureau, or is it the truth spin doctors? Who is the source? We've identified the source on all of ours.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness does have the floor.

MR. JONSON: I have no doubt that the hon. member across the way is experienced in putting out and recognizing what isn't accurate because they've become experts at it.

With respect to information that's put out from the communication branch of Alberta Health and Wellness, I take responsibility for that as minister as to its value to Albertans in terms of informing them accurately of the nature of the legislation and other matters and initiatives that government undertakes on health.

MRS. MacBETH: So he's turning ministry of health officials into spin doctors.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Since December, Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the more Albertans learn about this government's privatization policy, the less they trust it. In poll after poll increasing numbers of Albertans oppose this government's privatization policy, and as of this week the latest poll shows that only one in three Albertans support the government's private health care policy. My questions are to the minister of health. Why does the government continue to proceed with its private health care policy when it is clear that the majority of Albertans oppose it?

Speaker's Ruling
Referring to Newspaper Articles

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the first two questions, pretty close. The third question is, I think, over the line in terms of extending debate on Bill 11, and we're going to move on with the next . . . [interjections] Well, if we're going to have interjections, then 408 in Beauchesne says that "such questions should . . . not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct." Polls are usually published in newspapers and the like, so that would rule that question out of order.

But I'm going to recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition to proceed with her second question in this set.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How many taxpayer dollars have been squandered on polls that have been conducted by the government on their privatization of health?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, given that a responsibility of government that this government certainly takes seriously is to provide information and inform the public of this province as to what the nature of legislation and other initiatives are, I think there is a great deal of expertise and quality exhibited in the work that our employees do in this particular area. Therefore, the answer is none. We have not squandered anything.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, is the government hiding the results of its latest government-commissioned poll, which has been referred to before, because it shows that despite the government's massive propaganda campaign Albertans are still overwhelmingly opposed to the privatization of health care?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the member across the way is certainly entitled to give her own interpretation to the information. We have found, however, that the responses we've had from Albertans, both in terms of answering basic sets of questions but also, I think, more importantly in terms of them providing their own thoughtful critique of the bill, has led to a very significant set of amendments placed before the Assembly yesterday. We are responding and listening to Albertans. We value that input, and we are responding to the concerns that they've raised.

THE SPEAKER: The leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I tabled a letter to the Prime Minister from former Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney. Mr. Blakeney says that it would be extremely unwise to have in-patient hospital services, both insured and uninsured, delivered by the commercial for-profit sector. Furthermore, he argues convincingly that not only public health care in Alberta but all across Canada will likely be thrown open for business because of NAFTA. To the minister of health: why does the government refuse to heed eminent Canadians like Allan Blakeney who warn that Alberta's for-profit hospitals policy would unravel the public health care system not only in this province but across the country?

Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, once again, I truly believe that question goes over the line in terms of where we've arrived at.

Considerable liberty was afforded in this Assembly in question period in dealing with, quote, health policy, always surrounding a certain bill. This Assembly yesterday gave second reading to that bill. This Assembly, one part of it, the Committee of the Whole, is now into a clause-by-clause review of this particular matter. With respect to Bill 11 questions in the question period there's ample opportunity now in Committee of the Whole to deal with such questions.

Second question, sir.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the minister of health. Why is the government risking national medicare standards in all Canadian provinces in its reckless pursuit to expand private, for-profit health care delivery in this province?

Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, once again, if that isn't a similar question to the first one, then I have missed something. It was simply an extension of the debate in the question period of something that has already been dealt with by this House, and there's now another mechanism dealing with it in Committee of the Whole. I'm sorry. We're going on to your third question now.

DR. PANNU: All right, Mr. Speaker. Let me have my third question to the minister of health. Saskatchewan was the birthplace of medicare. Why does this government want Alberta to be medicare's graveyard?

Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, you've risen. If you want to say something, I'll invite you to say it, but it seems to me that that question follows in the same tradition as the first two with respect to this.

The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Forest Fires

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. In the last two years there were more than 30,000 wildfires in Alberta's forests, and to say the least, these have had a very devastating impact on not only the forestry industry but also the tourism industry in Alberta. This year already there have been quite a number of fires, and we're not even officially into the fire season. I wonder if the minister could briefly update us on this year's conditions, focusing on the readiness of the department relative to firefighting.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, 1998 and 1999 were the two worst years on record for wildfires. There were approximately 1,700 fires in 1998 and roughly 1,400 fires in 1999. As a consequence of that and early indications that this year will also be a dry season, I can assure you, members of this Assembly, that our readiness has been heightened.

As an example, on 23 February of this year I signed an order starting the fire season one month earlier than normal. We have staffed-up our equipment; our crews are trained; our tankers are ready on a 12- to 36-hour notice. Ten lookout towers have been opened in the highest risk areas, and a number of other towers are due to be opened in the next few days.

We've also worked on a public education program. We are concentrating on the prevention of fires. This is particularly critical in the time leading up to the May long weekend, which is traditionally the first weekend that many Albertans will go out into recreational areas.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have done a number of things with respect to firefighting, readiness, and also with respect to prevention.

MR. FRIEDEL: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: considering that there have already been a number of fires, how does this relate to the same time last year in terms of numbers?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, as of the last date that I saw, which was April 6, there were 48 fires that had started in the province. That was significantly higher than April 6 of last year.

Our meteorologists have been tracking the snowfall. In most parts of the province the snowfall has been lower than the normal amounts recorded. This problem has been compounded by the fact that the previous fall was also very dry. I think, Mr. Speaker, in looking at the assessments of the conditions, that we would rate the fire rating as very high or high in many parts of north-central Alberta in particular.

With respect to how it might relate to the two previous years, 1998 had conditions of low humidity, strong winds, and grassy fuel. There was a very heavy load in grassy fuels. In 1999 there were a lot of heavy fuels and very dry spring weather. In this particular year, Mr. Speaker, all of those conditions exist, which will lead us to suggest that there is going to be a very busy fire season. Of course, that can all change with a good spring rain or a heavy snowfall that may take place.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans that may be interested in seeing these conditions being updated can go to the Alberta government web site for Environment at www.gov.ab.ca/env.

MR. FRIEDEL: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: considering that forest fires have a major impact on the forestry industry, is the role of the industry players changing at all relative to suppression and fighting along with the government?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, my department has been very actively engaged in working with the industry in terms of fire suppression and prevention. We've worked with both their staffs and with their equipment in terms of fighting fires. Just as importantly, though, we're also working with the industry on the subject of fire prevention.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, we struck a steering committee to look more closely at the subject of fire prevention. This committee will be comprised of stakeholders and government to offer directions and insights into helping us reduce fires from things like power lines and railroad fires.

Mr. Speaker, I think our commitment to fire prevention and suppression is evident, and I want to again assure members of this Assembly and the Alberta public that we are well prepared for this fire season.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MR. SAPERS: My questions today, Mr. Speaker, regard government practice and policy regarding the provision of information to Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Part of this government's multimillion dollar or at least million-dollar-plus propaganda campaign on its private health care policy is a web site. Why does the web site publish factually incorrect information on the progress of debate in this Legislative Assembly?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the member across the way is making an unsubstantiated allegation in this Assembly. As I've indicated, we certainly do have a web site to provide through modern technology information to Albertans on a whole range of important topics dealing with health and wellness. In fact, we've even been complimented periodically on having that particular avenue of communication available to the public of this province.

As to the allegation that the member across the way chooses to make in a very general way, I do not think that it really merits an answer.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, both the questioner and the responder, I hope we're not getting into debate here with respect to a certain health care matter, because I'm going to rule them out.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How much is it costing Alberta taxpayers each and every day to provide this one-sided reporting in the Legislature on the government's private health care policy?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated in this Assembly several times, Alberta Health and Wellness provides detailed information in terms of its expenditures through the process of public accounts and the Auditor General's scrutiny and the Public Accounts Committee. That information is certainly not going to be withheld from this process. It'll be an integral part of it.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If this government wants to be unbiased in its reporting on health care policy, will the minister make a commitment to post all current reviews and all reports on the web site and not just those selected comments that support the government policy?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in terms of Alberta Health and Wellness' record in doing detailed reports in terms of developing policies, I think I can refer to the recent ones. The report done by the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness dealing with persons with developmental disabilities, a very up-front presentation: the material was sent widely across the province, is available to anybody who wants it, is provided through means of technology as well. We had prior to that the Broda committee report in place, the committee that came up with the report on aging, Healthy Aging, a very comprehensive report, a very widespread initiative there to provide that, make that available, particularly of course to the senior's population and stakeholders but to the whole population of the province, too.

So, Mr. Speaker, yes, it is a policy, a part of this government to provide information in the most up-to-date and thorough way.

MR. SAPERS: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Health Care Funding

MS GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta has announced significant increases in health spending, not only for this year but for the next three years to come. These increases are in addition to significant increases in health funding over the past several years. My question this afternoon is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that some people continue to believe that government is still reducing health spending or in fact has never reinvested in the health system, would the minister explain to Albertans the facts about government funding measures in health?

THE SPEAKER: Well, once again if we're dealing with factual information with respect to the budget, so be it.

MR. JONSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I will certainly adhere to that.

In keeping with our overall government plan in Budget 2000, Alberta's health system will get an additional $482 million, or 9.3 percent, as of April 1, 2000. Also there's a total increase of nearly $1.1 billion, or 21 percent, over the next three years that is projected in our business plan. These increases mean that health spending this year will increase to $5.65 billion, an increase of $1.75 billion, or 45 percent, over the past five years as part of our overall performance here. This is the fifth consecutive budget to emphasize spending on health care, and, Mr. Speaker, that I think indicates that we have assigned priority to the whole area of the health system in this province.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that some critics, including some in this Assembly, allege that Albertans receive fewer health services today than they used to, could the minister say if the current and planned spending increases will in fact mean more health services?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I will not endeavour to cover all the initiatives and the program expansions that we are planning for. For instance, one of the priorities to be addressed with the funding available is that of our plan to be able to add to the health care system an additional 2,400 frontline workers, 1,200 of which we project to be nurses. Actually, we've had a very good year the past year in terms of retaining and attracting more physicians to the province, but the funding projects for another 90 physicians in this province. In addition, we are planning in the area of provincewide services to increase the performance of the system significantly. For instance, the capacity or the number of people being served in kidney dialysis will be up about 10 percent.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: can the minister tell the House if any of this increased spending will be targeted towards contracts with private clinics?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, in this particular year I think we will not be affected in terms of our budget with the passage of Bill 11. However – and I'd like to emphasize this – there is no additional money earmarked for contracts with surgical facilities. None at all. That has to be part of the overall budget and the overall decision-making process that regional health authorities will go through with respect to setting their priorities and their consideration of the most efficient way and highest quality way of delivering service.

Protected Places Legislation

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, for once industry and environmentalists agree. We need an effective natural heritage act. Without clear rules battles will continue valley by valley and hill by hill, creating uncertainty for industry and continuing the threat to our natural environment. My question today is to the Minister of Resource Development. Why is this minister preventing the reintroduction of the improved natural heritage act?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I am not.

MS CARLSON: Nobody believes that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: as a result of this minister's interference when can Albertans expect clear rules so that protected areas are properly protected with plans to phase out industrial activity? We expect an answer from you.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, there is legislation in place today that regulates and protects areas in this province. There is other legislation in place that the EUB operates under and the NRCB, the Natural Resources Conservation Board, that protects the environment and allows a balance between that environment and sustainable development. Those will continue until we have a full debate on this new act that has come forward. We want it complete. We don't want to introduce an act that has to have a thousand amendments in the first year. So in the fullness of time this legislation will come forward.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Environment this time: why does the Minister of Resource Development have more power than the Minister of Environment on this policy? When habitat and species are lost, they are gone forever, as you very well know.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this type of legislation really highlights conflicting values with respect to environmental values and economic ones. As the minister of natural resources said, it is important to strike a balance between the two, and we are working on resolving some of those difficult, difficult issues. This legislation will come back when it's ready.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Statute Revision Act

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past number of months I've had the remarkable opportunity to attend a number of forums to talk about the health policy. On those occasions, I've heard a number of concerns expressed by both my constituents and by citizens of the capital region, but I've also had the opportunity to hear some inappropriate, some misplaced, and some ill-informed comments made by opponents of our health policy. Most recently, on Monday evening I heard the leader of the Friends of Medicare say to the group who were gathered that they should be fearful of Bill 3, the Statute Revision Act. My question is to the Minister of Justice. Would you please tell us what is the policy that has prompted this act?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, once again Bill 3 is on the Order Paper. It's certainly not on the Order Paper today, but we're not going to have a debate in the House over matters that are already scheduled at one time or the other. Maybe the second question can give me more comfort, hon. member.

MRS. O'NEILL: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask a question that is a concern of mine and expressed by some constituents of mine as to why they should be fearful of Bill 3.

MR. HANCOCK: It's not on the Order Paper today.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, certainly it's not. Nothing is on the Order Paper with respect to Bill 3 for today, but a question dealing with why anybody should be fearful of a bill that hasn't arrived at a conclusion yet is really speculative. If we come to a point where a bill is voted on and becomes the law of the province of Alberta, then one could almost make the argument, yes, but we don't know if this bill is going to come to third reading. How can we speculate on things? This is my difficulty with it.

I'm going to invite the hon. Member for St. Albert to try it a third time.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Justice please tell me most specifically why the Statute Revision Act is before us?

MR. HANCOCK: I'll be brief, Mr. Speaker. This is an important issue. There have been a number of people who have indicated – and I've heard these concerns raised as well – that somehow the Statute Revision Act is allowing us to escape the Legislature in making laws for the province of Alberta. It should be perfectly clear to citizens of Alberta that the Statute Revision Act is a purely normal procedure that we use about once every 10 or 20 years to bring in a consolidated revision, an authorized legal consolidated revision of the statutes of the province of Alberta and results in no revision or no change to the laws of Alberta but merely a consolidation of those laws so that Albertans have a consolidated place where they can look for the laws of Alberta. It's not intended to make law outside this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: And the chair will certainly look forward to a full debate on this particular bill when the contribution just made by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General can appropriately be done with respect to debate of the bill and not debate of the bill in question period.

Bill 11 Publicity

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, it's perhaps evidence of this government's desperation in attempting to hide the full cost of its taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign on private health care that we saw yesterday that they're now trying to change the mandate of the Public Accounts Committee. The Official Opposition has provided full accounting of all of the costs that we've incurred to protect medicare, including invoices and receipts, and we'll continue to provide those as any additional expenses are incurred. On the other hand, the government is still hiding in the shadows, failing to reveal the true costs of its multimillion dollar taxpayer propaganda campaign. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why should Albertans trust this government on health care when this department continues to hide the full cost of its campaign? We know it's not just $1.2 million. It's much, much more, Mr. Minister.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, we will as Alberta Health and Wellness, as all of government does, report on the expenditures that we make from public dollars. This is something that will certainly occur in a comprehensive way.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that it seems that the direction of the questions from the opposition is to indicate that we are not providing accurate and responsible information to the public. If I could, by way of illustrating my point, I would just like to refer to an advertisement which has the Official Opposition home page reference on it, and there's identification down below. You're supposed to come to a public meeting of some type, and it says that they will lead the audience to better understanding "Bill 11, The Private Hospital Act." Now, that is blatantly incorrect, wrong. It's deceiving in terms of the overall title of the bill. I could go on and elaborate.

If they think across the way that they can portray themselves as being accurate, honest, and straightforward and all the rest of it, there is a great deal of written material such as this, which I'm prepared to file copies of, that shows this not to be the case.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, will the minister meet the standards set by the Official Opposition and release all of the invoices, all of the receipts, copies of all of the contracts entered into to help spin and sell this private health care policy? That's the question, Mr. Minister.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we would not at all want to go that low in terms of our standards with respect to providing information.

Mr. Speaker, this Assembly has established the laws, the rules and regulations in terms of dealing with the accounts which account for the money we collect from the people of this province in terms of revenue and taxes. We will follow the rules, the laws of the province with respect to providing this information.

MR. DICKSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's put that to the test. Let me ask the minister right now: will this minister, instead of giving a partial accounting of the cost, fill out the form that we prepared for his reference, tell us precisely what the costs are of that advertising campaign component by component, give us the source documents, the receipts, and the invoices? Will you do that, Mr. Minister?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member across the way has an exhibit, obviously prepared from his own point of view. I'm not going to agree to anything with respect to any exhibit that he's waving across, and I think I'm justified in saying that because of this one, which is totally inaccurate, that is being put out across the province by the Liberals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Kananaskis Development

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week alone I have corresponded with over 400 individuals who have raised concerns regarding the proposed Genesis project in the Spray Lakes area of Kananaskis. While many of these individuals were from across the constituency of Banff-Cochrane, others were from Calgary, Red Deer, and Edmonton. They all reiterate the multitude of environmental concerns I have heard previously from many and are asking that the government act immediately to stop this development. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. With all the concerns being raised by so many Albertans, can the minister tell us why government is allowing this proposal to go through a review process?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, in light of the many people that have commented on the development in Spray Lakes proposed by Genesis, I believe that this a very important question.

Almost a year ago the Premier of this province announced that there would be a new policy with respect to recreation and future development in the area of Kananaskis, and that policy, which was the result of the input of many thousands of Albertans, clearly spells out that there will be no new development in Kananaskis Country. But because the Spray Valley proposals had already received some degree of processing prior to that policy being put in place, the fair thing to do was to allow them to still be eligible for consideration.

Now, having said that, Mr. Speaker, having consideration for the numbers of Albertans who have expressed concerns on both environmental and social issues, I think that the company, Genesis, the proponent of this development at Spray Lakes, must seriously consider whether or not they wish to continue to proceed with this particular application.

MRS. TARCHUK: Mr. Speaker, my second and last question is also to the Minister of Environment. With so much opposition, can the minister tell Albertans if he would consider terminating the review before we continue with what could be a very lengthy and expensive process?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, at last count over a thousand Albertans have had their views formally made known about the Spray Lakes proposal by Genesis, and I should note that the overwhelming majority of them have expressed their opposition in their comments. If I can refer to documents tabled by the Member from Edmonton-Ellerslie today, yesterday by Edmonton-Calder, by Edmonton-Riverview, by Edmonton-Glengarry, I have to say that the letters they have tabled have been consistent and constructive in terms of their suggestions for the terms of reference for the environmental impact assessment that Genesis must now go through.

December last, Mr. Speaker, I ordered Genesis to combine their environmental impact assessments for all three of their proposals: the heli-skiing, the boat tours on the Spray Lakes, and also their four-seasons resort. I think that is an appropriate cumulative approach which will take into account the proposed development that they have.

I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all Albertans that the comments being made by Albertans and the feedback on the Spray Valley proposals for development are being considered seriously and will form the basis for the environmental impact assessment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Premier once again promised to release the 30 blanked-out pages from his private hospitals policy. Actions speak louder than words, and so far the government has been all talk and no action, especially when it comes to releasing the 30-page secret agenda here. Albertans are really struggling to trust this government on any promises on health care. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Just how long will Albertans have to wait to see the secret, taxpayer-funded focus group research? A month? Two months? Or maybe until after the whole policy debate is over. Please let us know.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I recall the exchange, the Premier in his answer indicated that there would be certain requirements and expectations of the opposition with respect to their meetings and discussions and so forth. That is my understanding of the situation. To my knowledge the slightly bigger party across the way has not met that obligation, and therefore I can comment no further.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. When will the government stop hiding behind these promises and agree to release the full 30-page document of this private hospital plan, not some doctored version and not just the pages of the focus group? When?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm quite sure that with respect to any definitive commitment the Premier may have made, he will follow through on meeting it.

MS BLAKEMAN: Perhaps the Minister of Health and Wellness could explain why the government is so reluctant to release this document.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I recall the Premier, as long as both sides of the exchange are living up to their commitments or what was stated, the information will be provided. I'm not the expert on this particular exchange, but I'm sure the Premier will follow through on whatever he committed to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Victims' Assistance Programs

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although crime rates across our province have declined slightly over the last few years, many Albertans unfortunately continue to be victims of criminal actions. My constituents continue to raise concerns about some aspects of justice such as sentencing for serious crimes and how the system affects victims. We often lose sight of the impact of crimes on innocent victims, and it was just over a year ago that the Alberta justice summit recommended that our justice system should provide victims of crime with better supports. My questions are to the Minister of Justice. What is this government doing to support victims of crime in light of that review?

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has among the best victims' support programs in the country. Back in 1991 the government made funding available to victims' assistance programs for the first time, and at that time there were only eight victims' services programs available. We now have 60 police-based programs, which operate 110 victims' services units. These units are staffed by approximately 1,300 volunteers across the province, who provide victims with information and support during the criminal justice process.

In 1998-99 more than $9 million was collected from the provincial fines surcharge for programs to assist victims. The funding goes to Alberta's victims' services programs and to victims' financial benefits programs, which provide financial assistance to victims of crime in this province.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you. My second question. Victims' services units are staffed by volunteers, and I'm concerned about the quality of their formal training dealing with victims. Do Alberta Justice or the policing community provide any training or support for these volunteers?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has pointed out, each victims' assistance program is responsible for training its own volunteers. However, victims' assistance program co-ordinators have received training from Alberta Justice since 1992. The comprehensive training program provided for these co-ordinators has not been available anywhere else. It's unique to Alberta. In fact, we've had co-ordinators from other provinces, in particular Saskatchewan, come to take our co-ordinator training program. This year training was expanded to include Crown prosecutors to increase their awareness of the victims' issues in the criminal justice system and was undertaken as a direct result of one of the recommendations of the summit.

MRS. BURGNER: My final question is to the same minister. Does Alberta Justice have any plans to upgrade the training it provides to volunteer victims' assistance workers?

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. One of the projects that's under way right now in the department is the preparation of a victims' assistance program training manual. It is a major project at a cost of about $50,000. It will provide the training for the volunteer training program. It will be delivered to all victims' services units across the province. The net result of this training is that victims of crime will have improved service during the difficult time in their lives. We expect that the training program and the manual will be operational by the spring of 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Health Resource Group Inc.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary's HRG has a huge investment at stake in the HRG hospital in Calgary and has lobbied this government and this government's branch plant, known as the Calgary regional health authority. With donations to the government party coffers and a web of interpersonal and governmental relations, HRG has access and influence with this government, and it's well known. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that HRG's business plan calls for a co-ordination of messages and political strategies between HRG, the health authority, and the province, can the minister assure Albertans that there are absolutely no discussions, negotiations, agreements, or planning of any kind that have occurred between the government and HRG with respect to the communication plan of HRG and their operation?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a repeat question. Nevertheless, it is the case that quite a number of months ago – I would say at least a year or a year and a half – there were pieces of correspondence. There were a couple of meetings with respect to HRG and the regional health authority, also with government. This was around the time the very need to have legislation to control the situation with respect to private clinics was being identified. That took place at that particular time.

We, of course, have put our emphasis on protecting the public health care system and providing a very solid legal framework to protect our health care system and to provide for contracts and make sure that they're arrived at on a responsible basis with no detriment to the system. Beyond that, whatever discussions or news releases or whatever might have been released, they have not been significant nor have we had any contact over the last while.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister appears not to have knowledge of any of these discussions, if there are discussions, how does the minister explain that there's a fundamental problem here when it comes to dealing with a company that is in business for business, for profit and has a great deal at risk and has influenced this government? How does that jibe with having absolutely no indication that the government is willing to help this business along its way?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder is seeking an opinion. That, of course, is inappropriate. If the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has something to offer in response, please go ahead.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make one statement with respect to the question, and that is that the Minister of Health and Wellness has had no dealings with the Health Resource Group.

MR. WHITE: Mr. Speaker, then would the minister assure this House that the conflicts of interest legislation in this regard with the local authority will be of strength enough to prevent any kind of difficulties that may be foreseen?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the Calgary regional health authority, as indicated earlier, does have a conflict of interest policy. I am not aware of that conflict of interest policy, as far as the regional health authority is concerned, having been violated in any way.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in less than a minute from now we'll call upon the first of three members to participate.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

Fort McMurray Oil Barons

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today as MLA for Fort McMurray to rise and extend congratulations to the Fort McMurray Oil Barons on winning the Alberta junior hockey league championship last evening. In a hard-fought match with the Camrose Kodiaks and also the Lloydminster Blazers, the Oil Barons captured the Alberta junior hockey league provincial crown.

To perhaps the Fort McMurray Oil Barons' loudest fan, Brian Hatfield, who also happened to be my campaign manager, I can truly say that he is the only person I know who can talk the leg off a chair.

To Bob Clark and Kim Marsh, the president and chairman of the AJHL. They were on hand to make the presentation.

We'd like to invite all Albertans to come May 5 to May 14 to Fort McMurray, Alberta, when Fort McMurray will host the national junior A hockey championship, the Royal Bank Cup, previously called the Centennial Cup.

So to all of the players we want to say best of luck on their road to the national junior A hockey championship.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Labour Relations Policy

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unions are an important part of the fabric of a democratic society. At the most fundamental and basic level they involve the joining together of people to represent a collective interest. They operate democratically to give workers a strong voice to represent their rights as employees and as citizens.

The important role that unions play should be respected, because a union is more than an organization. It is the hopes, dreams, rights, and voice of its membership, all of whom are hardworking and dedicated Albertans. It is very unfortunate that this government does not treat unions with the respect they deserve. Instead, they view unions in much the same way as Conrad Black, as gangrenous limbs to be amputated.

Well, Mr. Speaker, unions are not going away, and it is this government's job to create a positive labour relations environment where unions and employers can interact on a level and fair playing field. This is not the case in Alberta. The current beer strike here in Edmonton and the long-standing strike, the unfortunate strike at the Calgary Herald are just two of the latest examples.

This government, like governments in other provinces, should make a simple change to improve the situation. They could introduce binding arbitration for first collective agreements so that unions, unions that have been legally created and supported by a majority of employees, by the way, are not simply cast aside by a company willing to wait them out. This is not fair, and it creates divisive situations that lead to hardships for workers and their families.

Unions have a positive and proactive role to play in our society. The government has a responsibility to recognize this instead of siding with bullies. We are talking about the democratic rights of hundreds and thousands of Alberta families. I believe the government would be very surprised at how well the system could function if they would just take off their ideological binders and act as consensus-builders instead of being part of the problem.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Men's Health

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several constituents have asked that I communicate their concerns on men's health issues to the House. In the movies John Wayne and James Bond don't worry about their health. They get shot at, get into fights. They get up, and they finish off the bad guys. Reality, however, is quite different.

John Wayne developed heart disease and had a cancerous lung removed. Ian Fleming, who created James Bond, died from complications of a chest cold because he bucked his doctor's orders and played golf instead. Look at any health stats and the real story is the same: men live much shorter lives than women, and they have higher risk for all 15 leading causes of death. Despite these stats most men think their health is excellent, and they're dying to prove it.

Although their health risks are largely preventable, it is obvious that men's health is in a far worse state than women's health. Millions are spent on women's health centres, women-only cancer screening and research, and preventative programs for illnesses that specifically affect women. There is little money spent on men's health issues.

A recently opened male health centre is the first centre in the U.S. specializing in male health. Taking a holistic approach to health care enables the centre's physicians to look at the whole man and not his symptoms. It provides support to men and helps them overcome the fears and misconceptions often associated with male health problems. Sharing experiences as well as treatment options, they often offer a sense of assurance and provide an additional perspective that helps ease anxiety.

Another advantage in men talking to each other is eliminating the fear of the unexpected, plus it's a lot more believable when another guy tells you that it's no big deal for what the doctor is suggesting, Mr. Speaker.

I encourage the government to look at initiatives and approaches in dealing with men's health. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, in fact, after hearing the last private member's statement, I'm feeling a little weak in the knees. But pursuant to Standing Order 7(5), I invite the Government House Leader, who hopefully is in better shape than I am, to share with us what government business we might anticipate to be able to deal with next week.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of your observation yesterday that we should be careful about personal comments, I won't be able to make the comment that comes to mind about where the Opposition House Leader might in fact be weak.

Nonetheless, under projected government business for next week, on Monday, April 17, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading in the afternoon we may deal with bills 3, 7, 13, 14, and 15, and in Committee of the Whole, Bill 11. On Monday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, bills 16, 17, 18, and 19, and in Committee of the Whole, Bill 11.

Tuesday, April 18, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, private bills as listed on the Order Paper, and in Committee of the Whole, Bill 11. Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, bills 20, 22, and 23, and in Committee of the Whole, Bill 11.

Wednesday, April 19, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders and Committee of the Whole, bills 10 and 11, and for third reading Bill 21.

Thursday, April 20, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for third reading bills 21, 2, 4, 5, and in Committee of the Whole, Bill 11.

Mr. Speaker, it would be fair of me to advise at this time that although we have a number of bills on the Order Paper, I expect we'll spend most of our time on Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we had 14 sets of questions today, which is the largest number we've had in this session. So thank you very much.

One point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to make reference to our Standing Orders, to Standing Order 23, in particular (h), the section dealing with making allegations against another member, and I'm also going to reference Standing Order 49, which has to do with the composition of committees.

Earlier today in question period I had an opportunity to question the Minister of Health and Wellness regarding the government of Alberta's web site as it relates to health care policy and particularly the summaries provided on debate on Bill 11.

Also, during tabling I tabled four documents. Amongst them were two pages, each being a single day's summary of the debate as posted on the government's web site for April 10, 2000, and the other for April 11, 2000. On both of these summaries there are in fact several factual errors. That information was tabled in the Assembly prior to question period. When I asked my question to the minister of health, he stood and he said: that member referring to me "is making an unsubstantiated allegation." Mr. Speaker, I take offence at that.

Certainly the question relating to the errors in the summaries was backed up by the tabling of the documents, which are now marked as sessional papers. I will draw your attention and the attention of all members to sessional paper 624/2000. It is the Bill 11 debate summary for April 10, 2000. The opening paragraph of that summary says:

MLAs spent much of the fourth day of Bill 11 debate discussing an amendment proposed by the Liberal opposition that the bill be referred to a little-known Standing Policy Committee.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the standing policy committees are committees created by the government. They are made up entirely of government caucus members. The amendment proposed by the Liberal opposition was to refer Bill 11 to a select standing committee that is established by Standing Order of this Assembly, an all-party committee, not a government-only committee, and a committee that has a long-standing history in this House, even though this government is loath to call it to action, that being the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on, because I have indicated at least five errors in those two pages of summary that I tabled with the Assembly. If the Minister of Health and Wellness does not want to take responsibility for the mistakes emanating from his department, that's his business, but it becomes my business when he makes the allegation that somehow I was misleading or misrepresenting the truth and the facts. I would like him to take back that allegation and accept responsibility for the errors that were presented to this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, heard during question period the exchange, and I very clearly heard the Minister of Health and Wellness take responsibility for all the documents that are issued under his direction. So that particular comment by the hon. member should be corrected.

What the hon. member has indicated is that he takes offence to a comment made about unsubstantiated allegations. In fact, until this very moment they were unsubstantiated allegations. The hon. member has now got up and in the House referred to what he considered to be not factual in that documentation. Now, if he had really wanted an answer to his question and if he had really wanted to clear up what he considered to be mistakes on the government web page, it would have been a good idea for him to actually send a copy of the document over. But as is usual in this House, the members opposite don't want answers to their questions; they want to obfuscate the issue and make innuendo themselves. So they table the document and then ask questions about it without the minister necessarily having had time to receive a copy of the document or know to which document they are referring.

At the time that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness responded to the question from the opposite side, there was a sessional paper on the table which was a copy, as I understand it, of a page from a web site, and a question by the hon. member alleging that there were facts in that document. But there in fact had been no substantiation of any of those facts or pointing out what facts were alleged to be wrong. At that point in time the minister of health was not incorrect when he indicated that there were unsubstantiated allegations, so it was quite appropriate for him to make that comment.

If, in fact, the hon. member wanted a real answer to his question, he would have provided the information to the minister and said: "This is not factual. Who's responsible? These are the errors that I foresee in it." The minister could then have ascertained as to the complaint that was made.

Obviously, this error that's pointed out – and I haven't seen those documents as yet, but I take the member at his word that it makes a mistake in referring to an SPC rather than a standing committee of the House. If that's the case, I will undertake to the hon. member to go back and have a look at it and make sure that those corrections are made on the web site.

But with respect to the point of order, I would submit that, at the time, the Minister of Health and Wellness was absolutely correct: it was an unsubstantiated allegation that there was a mistake in the document. If he had pointed out that mistake and in fact brought it to the minister's attention, it probably would have been corrected without all of this.

THE SPEAKER: There seems to be a higher charged discussion and debate on this particular matter in the last few minutes than actually the tone that was set during the question period. It appears that a question was asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to the Minister of Health and Wellness, with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora – and I'm taking his word, not having seen this sessional paper, and assuming it to be absolutely correct – pointing out that there was an error, a factual error with respect to something printed on a particular web site. The chair heard the minister say that the minister was responsible.

Now, this is part of our problem in this place. First of all, why would a government web site refer to the political name of a grouping in this House? One of the basic rules in this thing is that if public dollars are to be expended, the public dollars are not to talk about political parties, and that's a normal rule in any expenditure. So if a member of the opposition puts out a piece of paper and chastises the Progressive Conservative Party, they get a note from the Speaker. They get an intervention from the Speaker and in fact have been told that we are not paying for the publication of that document. That's factual. That's happened in the past. That's been done. That's been the penalty.

So why would the government then go out and print something that would refer to another political party, using taxpayers' dollars to do that? If it did do that – I mean, rules can't be two ways. The rules have to be one way. Secondly, there has to be a responsibility for the printing of anything that comes out, and the chair clearly heard that the Minister of Health and Wellness said that he would assume responsibility for that. The chair also heard that the Government House Leader said that he would personally look into this and assume a responsibility to make sure this is corrected, and I take the word of the hon. member on that as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is absolutely within his right to stand up and raise a question with respect to that if it's factually incorrect. It's not the member's responsibility, either, to convey something to a member of Executive Council before he asks the question on it. It's not the responsibility of the member to do that. It's the responsibility of the originator of the document to be correct, and if the originator of the document is incorrect, it's fair game for a member of this House to bring it to our attention in whatever form they want to use.

Now, some might argue that courtesy, politeness, harmony, tranquillity would suggest: "Gee, too bad. Gee willikers. Gee whiz. I read this thing, you know, and you really got me here. This really hurts me, and I'm coming to see you." But we also know that people's schedules are very difficult at certain times. You phone up; you want to deal with things. Sometimes the person is not in; you've got to wait until after. You want to deal with it. There are some reasons for all of this.

Number one, it's within the right of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora to raise a question with respect to this matter. Number two, the Minister of Health and Wellness assumed responsibility for it. It's truly unfortunate that the phrase "unsubstantiated allegation" was used, and it may have been factually correct, at the time, that the Minister of Health and Wellness was unaware of what the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was saying. Again, obliqueness is not a good thing in this place, and the closer you get to the actual words and the intent of it, the less trouble we're going to have. It would be helpful as well.

But it was correct to raise it, it's correct to deal with it, and as far as the chair is concerned, the matter's been dealt with. It certainly forms a correct point of order. I hope that the matter will be corrected factually, and I hope that everybody will learn a lesson.

I'm going to repeat: on anything that comes under the authority of the Speaker that has public dollars expended, it's a clear violation if political party names are used in the publication of any of those documents, and they are not paid for. They are sent back and rejected. We've had some pretty blatant and embarrassing examples in the past of that happening. I'm not going to put it on the record, say who it is or anything else, but there is a responsibility. There's a responsibility for the government to be correct. There's a responsibility for the opposition to be correct.

Orders of the Day.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry. The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: May I beg your indulgence? I've been advised by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora that the document in question was forwarded to a government member's office yesterday afternoon. I will investigate that and make sure, but I didn't want to leave the record uncorrected.

THE SPEAKER: Fine. Now that ends it. Harmony, and we smile.

Sorry. I know we said Orders of the Day, but I want to end this week on a high note. I don't like what happened Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. That's why I started interjecting yesterday and today, and I'm going to continue doing it on Monday.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: We have before us a collection of amendments under the title A1, and we're going at them one section at a time. So A1, section A, is what we're discussing.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to spend a few minutes talking specifically about the amendment that's in front of us, and that is the amendment you described that's numbered A: that section 2 is struck out and the following is substituted.

Now, when I say a few minutes, I'd like to spend 20 minutes on it, but I do have a duty to go up and talk to the young parliamentarians about the role of an effective opposition. I'm sure that even those enlightened people will have their opinions not only on this amendment but also on Bill 11 and the whole question of health care reform.

Looking specifically at the amendment in front of us, we're talking in terms of an amendment to section 2, which in the original document falls directly below a section called "Protection of Publicly Funded Health Care." Now, stop and think. Weigh those words very carefully: protection of publicly funded health care. If that's what this bill was all about and if that's what this amendment was to achieve, publicly funded health care, I think Albertans would be delighted. I think the opposition would drop, and I don't think you'd see this party opposing the bill once it is amended.

When we look at it very, very carefully, the original wording of the bill in section 2 was:

- (1) No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in
 - (a) a public hospital, or
 - (b) an approved surgical facility.
- (2) No person shall provide a major surgical service, as described in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in Alberta except in a public hospital.

One of the first things that strikes me when I look at the amendment is the wording. Instead of saying that "no person shall," it now says that "no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta." I'm not sure why specific reference to a dentist has cropped up in the bill. It was not in the original proposal, and now it's in there.

Getting back to what I said earlier about the publicly funded health care, the difficulty I have with the amendment as it relates to that aspect is that if it were truly, truly, truly an amendment that protected the publicly funded health care system, you would not have the (a) and the (b) in the amendment. You wouldn't have "a public hospital" or "an approved surgical facility," because an approved surgical facility is another word for a hospital. The difference would be that instead of a public hospital the opportunity would be there to contract out and provide a surgical facility that would not be funded by the public system.

As to how that provides a protection of publicly funded health care, I'm not sure, because once we get into the private sector, once we start talking in terms of enhancement, once we look at the various aspects, at queue-jumping and such, we are not talking any longer about a publicly funded health care system. We're talking in terms of an aspect of private health care. We're talking in terms of additional fees for enhanced services and so on.

Basically then, Mr. Chairman, what happens is that we go from a system that has been publicly funded in the sense that even the contracting out that takes place now basically is within the public system in most cases. There are some instances where there have been some cases where it's gone somewhat beyond that, which does cause concern to some Albertans. But we can't look at the past; we have to look at what's in front of us right now. Of course, the danger of this type of amendment that includes an approved surgical facility is the fear that it could lead to a two-tier system. Let's face it: a duck is a duck. If it walks like a duck, it talks like a duck, and it quacks like a duck, it's a duck. An approved surgical facility is nothing more, in my opinion, than a hospital, so let's not play around with terminology.

Now, when the minister gets up to speak to these amendments, he's going to have to explain the significance of the change in terms of including a dentist, which wasn't there. He's going to have to explain the significance of not only section 2(1) at the preamble but also (2)(b), where it refers specifically to "in the regulations under section 25(1)(a.1), in the case of a dentist." When we look at the concept of an approved surgical facility, the way I see the perception of it from the government's point of view is a facility that would provide for surgical services. It states that very clearly, "shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta," which again implies overnight stays, overnight stays of 48 hours, 72 hours. Who knows what length those overnight stays would be?

I'm not sure what type of surgical procedure a dentist carries out that would require that type of facility. Now, I may be incorrect, but I would believe, generally speaking, that a person would go in as an outpatient and be out later that day if there was a case to put the person to sleep or whatever before the surgery was performed.

An interesting aspect of these two sections. When we talk about 2(1) and we look at (2), we see a substantial difference in wording. The first 2(1) says that "no physician shall provide a surgical service," and of course (2) in the amendment says that "no physician or dentist shall provide a major surgical service." So we're talking in terms of a surgical service versus a major surgical service. The major surgical service under this amendment of course would have to be conducted in a public hospital. Those that would not be classified as major would of course be allowed to be carried out in an approved surgical facility.

When we start looking at definitions of minor, major, whatever, and try to look at a concrete definition of a surgical facility, it changes so rapidly, again, how do you start defining major, minor? There was a period of time, not that many years ago quite frankly, that if you needed an intravenous, for example, because you had an infection of some sort and you were required to be under intravenous for, say, a 10-day period, you had to be admitted to a hospital. You actually had to be admitted to a hospital and occupy a hospital bed for that period of time.

But now, with the changes in technology and such, you can do it under a program – I'm not exactly sure what it's called, but the concept of it is that you take your equipment home, and home care will come down and demonstrate to you how it's done. Then from there you're sort of on your own, with the assistance of a spouse or somebody else. In some cases you don't even need that assistance, because since then I understand – I haven't actually seen it – that they've actually advanced from that requirement to drain the fluid in your arm or whatever two or three times a day to a system where there's some type of pump that just automatically injects that. That's a significant change in a procedure that at one time I guess would have been considered major, because if you've got to go in the hospital for 10 days, that to me is quite major.

Without question, one would now classify that as minor, because you go to the emergency room and two hours later you can be back home. You don't see a great danger. You don't see immediate danger and something going wrong, because it's not a surgical procedure. However, a surgical procedure being done in an approved surgical facility can be a whole different ball of wax because they're not fully equipped like a public hospital is. When you look at the University hospital, when you look at the Royal Alex hospital and look at the Grey Nuns hospital, they are fully equipped. If something goes wrong, they're there. You can be attended to immediately. You can be whisked down to the operating room. They've got different equipment.

I've experienced it firsthand, so I have a pretty good idea of what can happen. It can. In my go-round in the hospital a couple of years ago, one night I woke up at 2 o'clock in the morning and thought for sure I was having a heart attack. It was just pounding and all that. It turned out it was just a buildup of fluid around the lungs that a week later kind of worked itself back into my system, but it was very, very scary. Now, had I been lying – and in that case, of course that would not have been a surgical facility. I'm sure it wouldn't have been. However, when you go to emergency, you never know. That was very, very scary. Fortunately, they were able to respond immediately, which gives a person a great deal of comfort.

Now, I realize I've only spoken for 14 minutes, 13 minutes, whatever, and I could go on for quite some time, but we do have 14 different amendments that one has the opportunity to speak to. So to get to my previous commitment of addressing those young parliamentarians about the role of an effective opposition, I'll have to conclude. I follow, I understand, the Minister of Government Services, who is up there right now.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood. I have a couple of names here.

MS OLSEN: Sorry. We're fighting here for position. It's a jockeying.

Thank you, and I appreciate the opportunity to get up and speak to amendment A1. I have some concerns about this amendment. I see that the amendment does not carry forward the worst element of Bill 11, and that is talking about the private, for-profit hospital as exactly that. Instead, the government continues to call it an approved surgical facility, and that causes me some concern.

We just recently received a copy of a letter that was sent to the Health and Wellness minister, Ponoka-Rimbey. I'm going to quote from this letter. "Private clinics or 'surgical facilities,' as proposed under Bill 11, are considered hospitals under the Canada Health Act." He in his letter says, "I do not believe there is any reason for confusion here." Well, neither do Albertans. Neither do Albertans, Mr. Chairman. There is no need for any confusion here. A surgical facility is a hospital. Enhanced services offered in surgical facilities, then, consequently would be in a private, for-profit hospital, because somebody is making money.

Mr. Chairman, I find it very difficult to accept the notion that a surgical facility is going to be operated independently and outside of the existing system, on contract, and that those people who are operating those surgical facilities on contract are not going to build in a profit margin. Very clearly this would say to me that that, then, is a private, for-profit hospital. To say otherwise, I believe, is to mislead Albertans, and I think the federal Minister of Health has identified that here in this very letter that he's written to the hon. Health and Wellness minister.

The issue of the interpretation goes back long before my time in this Assembly. At that time the federal Minister of Health, Ms Marleau, wrote to her provincial and territorial counterparts – at that time it would have been the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations – and stated that as a matter of legal interpretation, the definition of “hospital” set out in the [Canada Health Act] includes any facility which provides acute, rehabilitative or chronic care.

I guess I'm wondering what the problem is, why this government insists that these definitions are not solid. They know what the past history was. Certainly the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations knows what the history was. Now we have that history outlined in a letter. I guess I'd better table the letter because I did refer to it and quote from it. I table five copies of this particular document, Mr. Chairman. I probably should table 64 of them so that everybody gets a copy of it and understands the definition, but I'm sure there are some lawyers in their caucus over there that can help them out.

So what is the problem? What is it that this government doesn't understand? This particular amendment A1 should include “approved private, for-profit hospital” instead of the camouflaged words “approved surgical facility.”

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the minister will be able to respond in a timely fashion to the definitions outlined by the federal minister and give us some feedback on what he thinks the letter really means, and we'll go from there. I'm not sure the minister understands that what he is putting forward is in fact a private, for-profit hospital. It cannot be seen any other way. It cannot be read any other way, considering there's going to be enhanced services and those enhanced services are going to have a profit margin.

Another issue that I have in relation to this particular amendment, Mr. Chairman, is the addition in 2(1) that no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in

- (a) a public hospital, or
- (b) an approved surgical facility.

I'm wondering if the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has any data from the Alberta Dental Association determining what is a minor or a major dental surgical procedure, what sort of discussions he's had with the dental surgeons, the dentists, the orthodontists, and what kind of support he has received in this regard. I think that's important to the discussion.

To just decide you're going to change the definition or the meaning of section 2(1), the provision of surgical services, without any documentation or discussion from the Alberta Dental Association is a concern for me. We don't know if they've been consulted. We don't know what their position is. Albertans don't know what their position is, and Albertans don't know what the dentists have to say about this particular issue. Does that mean that as it stands right now, the minister feels that some of the procedures being performed in those particular facilities by dental surgeons are now illegal, or are they performing, as far as he's concerned, illegal services now? To what extent does the major/minor definition go? We haven't seen any of that.

The other thing that we don't know is what the guidelines are for this particular debate or for this particular issue in this debate. I think that that has to be outlined, Mr. Chairman. We don't see any of that here. We haven't heard any of that. We simply have an amendment put forward from the government that purports to do something but in fact doesn't do anything. A surgical facility is still a private, for-profit hospital. An overnight stay is still an overnight stay. We don't see any of that defined here.

I was reading an article in the Globe on Saturday, and in the article a plan has been outlined. Discussions have occurred between the federal government and the provincial counterparts. There are a number of issues that would address health care reform where the federal government is willing to be a productive partner in health care reform. We know that there are some pretty good facilities operating right now in this province.

In fact, the CHOICE program has been mentioned. I've been there on a few occasions. It's in my constituency and is an excellent facility for seniors, where seniors get care but can go home. They get delivered to the centre and returned to their homes. Their needs are taken care of. They're interacting. It's far more rehabilitative to have seniors in a location where they can interact with other seniors and have their health care needs met by a gerontologist, who knows the issues with seniors. Certainly the seniors like it. That to me is something I'd like to see expanded across this province. I think it's also a very efficient and cost-effective way to deal with the senior population, and the seniors like it.

I see that in some of the discussions that have gone on in relation to – well, the Globe calls it “the peace pact that may save health care.” I think there's some reality to that. The whole notion of reform across this country with health care cannot occur just with Bill 11 in Alberta or some other bill in some other province. I think that in order for the minister to work in the best interests of all Albertans, he ought to look at working with all the provinces and the federal government. That's in our best interest. That's in my constituents' best interest.

I just want to highlight some of the things that have been talked about in terms of broad reform. Bill 11 is not a part of the broad reform. We mentioned the CHOICE program, but home care is another issue. Better home care is seen as a key to relieving the burden on overcrowded hospitals. I think that's been said time and time again in this Legislature, that home care is an absolutely essential service that needs to be broadened. That will help relieve the stress on the existing system.

Drug costs. I mentioned in my debate a couple of years ago that drug costs have soared. The costs to insurance companies therefore have gone up. Subsequent to that, the costs to the insured and the noninsured patients have gone up. We need to see something dealt with from that perspective and on a broad base. We know that scales of economy are important when we're talking about things like drugs. You know, maybe the regional health authorities with their ability to purchase costly drugs on a provincewide basis are going to be more effective than one regional health authority purchasing one expensive drug for their own needs. Maybe it needs to be on a broader basis.

There are all sorts of programs, like co-payment programs, and many of us are in independent insurance programs. Certainly in the Legislature we have Blue Cross, and there are other programs, but for those people who don't have drug plans and those people who rely on the government for their drugs, there are better ways of dealing with this. I think the federal Health minister has talked about a pharmacare program, and I don't see that as something we should close the door to in this province. Like I say, it's the bulk buy, and that's better for all of us who are purchasing any medication and especially for those people who can least afford it.

Increased accountability is another issue talked about. We absolutely need to see increased accountability. This province got what it wanted when it said: we want no strings attached; we want to be able to take the CHST money and run with it in a way that suits the needs of the province of Alberta. I think that's fair, but on the other hand, it's a two-way street. It's not just a one-way street. To be constantly banging heads with the federal government isn't going to solve the problems in this province in relation to health care. I think there has to be political will to go to the table and not continue to fed bash and to certainly pick up the issue as a positive and remember who we're all here to represent. I urge the government members to remember who they're here to represent. They're here to represent Albertans, and it's Albertans who are suffering from the erosion of our good health care programs. So I need to see some commitment from the government in accountability – we also need that – and it has to work both ways. That's an important issue.

Primary care reform. We've talked a little bit about that. I brought that up. I think the updates the government put out on their web site from my initial debate suggest that I wasn't listening to the January news conference that the Premier had when he talked a little bit about health care reform. Well, you know, I couldn't have been more glued to my set. I'm not one for wanting the Premier in my living room, but I did listen to that debate and that production that was put out at taxpayers' expense.

We're still waiting to see what initiatives this government is going to move towards in terms of primary care reform. By working with all of the provinces and territories and the federal government, then maybe this government might start moving along with more effective primary care reforms in a manner that's going to really impact Albertans, because we haven't seen that yet.

Long-term care. Well, we are waiting for the government to respond . . .

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair has some difficulty with where we're going. We're on A1, section A. Long-term care and reviewing it with all of the other provinces and so on I'm sure are important thoughts and considerations, but I'm not sure that they're germane to what we're on.

MS OLSEN: In talking about a public hospital and approved surgical facilities, I think they're germane, but I'll take your remarks. I'll heed them and move on to something that's more acceptable to you. I can save the rest of this debate for later and certainly move on to other issues.

MS OLSEN: Let's talk, then, maybe a little bit more about the reason that this government is walking down the path of private, for-profit hospitals, and I can clearly say that today, Mr. Chairman. I feel that the letter I tabled in this Assembly today from the hon. Minister of Health, Minister Rock, speaks to that issue. I feel that we must look at the reason behind this. Were primary care reform and long-term care not issues that were in fact germane to this bill? I think they were. I think they do speak to the public hospital issue, and I think they do speak to the approved surgical facilities. Quite frankly, I would like to see that discussion happen, and I'm hoping that as we move through the amendments, we can have that discussion.

However, the private, for-profit aspect of it is clearly outlined. I would expect the Minister of Health and Wellness to explain to us why he would not withdraw this bill now, based on this particular letter. I think we have to also be clear. The federal government is moving in a direction, and I think the direction that the federal government is moving in with this province clearly says: this surgical facility is a hospital; private clinics are hospitals.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and share the podium.

THE CHAIRMAN: Would the committee grant unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of teachers from Hungary visiting Canada and at NAIT to learn more about our vocational educational system. They're in the public gallery, Mr. Chairman, and with your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to welcome our guests to our Legislative Assembly. I met with them earlier, and I'm delighted to see them here.

I want to move on a bit in my discussion. Mr. Chairman, maybe you could just advise me as to how much time I have left. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, the whole issue of public health care goes beyond this amendment, goes beyond this bill, and I'm waiting for the minister now to speak to us in a public way about how he's going to deal with Mr. Rock's letter and how he sees the position of this particular bill in relation to it. I think it's important because we are currently debating an amendment that talks about "approved surgical facility," and quite frankly we need to hear.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I hate to interrupt you, but the timer did go. That was 30 seconds.

MS OLSEN: Well, there you go. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll have ample time to carry on.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I'm sure we'll hear from you again.
The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make a few comments relative to the amendments that are before the House and dealing with where the surgeries can be done and what types of surgeries. Certainly in the Rocky Mountain House constituency I heard a number of concerns expressed about the whole issue of what is minor, what is major, and the fact that dentists are doing some things today in their clinics that would certainly fall under the definition of surgery that we're talking about here and what can happen in a surgical facility.

I think these amendments clearly, clearly outline what can be done in a surgical facility and what needs to be done in a full-fledged hospital, with all of the bureaucracy and with all of the other facilities that go with a hospital. Certainly in listening to some of the comments of the opposition and their discussion about what is a surgical facility and what is a hospital, for the life of me I don't understand how they are having so much difficulty understanding the difference with a facility that does certain surgical procedures that are clearly defined, clearly administered under the College of Physicians and Surgeons, clearly showing that they have to have a certain backup, a certain amount of ability to handle that type of surgery. With this amendment it now clearly indicates that when you get into the more difficult surgeries, those would have to move to a public hospital, where you have even more facility to take care of a patient and handle whatever that surgery might be.

Mr. Chairman, we all know the way technology is moving. To try to define today a list of what could be done I don't think is something this Legislature should try to do. I don't think it's something that politicians should be trying to do. I think it is extremely important that this be done by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. We have to make sure that we allow some latitude with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, because with the technological changes, that list will change. It's going to change as well relative to what one facility in one place can do and what another facility in another area can do. That will happen. The fact is that we will have to have the College of Physicians and Surgeons determining what kind of equipment is necessary, what kind of backup is necessary.

Also, I think it's really important that the College of Physicians and Surgeons have the ability to outline – there may be some patients wanting a certain procedure in a facility allowed to do that procedure, but because of some other complications that that individual might have in their health, they wouldn't be allowed to do it in that facility. Certainly that is something we cannot decide in this House, and it's extremely important that the experts are the people that decide that. I think that with these amendments, that's exactly what will happen, and we will find ourselves with a very safe system that will provide a very good service to the public. We'll be able to move on and lower the waiting lists and certainly have a more efficient system than we currently have.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm rising to speak to amendment A1, section A, put forward by the minister of health last night. I have to admit right off the bat that this amendment is a real struggle for me for a number of reasons. I've mentioned previously that I've had almost 400 pieces of correspondence from constituents now. I will be careful to mention that three of the pieces of correspondence were very much in favour of full support for Bill 11, and four and a half phone calls out of several hundred as well were in favour of Bill 11.

Those other almost 400 were not instructing me to put forward amendments or to support government amendments to the bill. Almost without exception they're saying things like – and I have to be careful here not to quote, because I do not have permission to table these letters. They're saying things like: we're against the bill; I'd like the bill withdrawn; I can't support the bill; it's not the answer to our health problems. As a representative of the constituents of Edmonton-Centre, it's a struggle for me because in even speaking to this amendment, I am in some ways going against the wishes of my constituents who are just saying: no bill; pull the bill, and that's the end of it.

I think one of the things that's become apparent to me as I studied the amendments overnight is that in particular with the clauses that have been raised – and A is one of them – that were causing people the most difficulty, this is not an amendment to remove the clauses. This is about tightening up those areas that were causing people concern, but it's not about removing them. Essentially, all of the issues and concerns that people have been raising are still in this bill. While there may be some changes inside of those individual clauses, they're not being removed, which is what my constituents are asking for. So as a good representative do I just say, "No; no bill 11," and sit down, or do I try raising in the context of the amendments the issues and concerns that have been identified in the correspondence I've received?

I'm familiar with the quotation that says that politics is the art of compromise, so I'm going to compromise. Having, I hope, clearly stated that the overwhelming majority of constituents that have contacted me have indicated nonsupport for this bill and for this bill in its entirety, I will nonetheless raise the points of concern and discussion that I am able to glean from this amendment.

Specific to amendment A1, section A. Actually, a lot of the areas of concern are contained inside of this amendment. I understand and I personally can have no fault with the attempt to clarify the initial part of section 2(1), which previously read, "No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, except." It's now been clarified to read, "No physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except." That's a clarification, and in my opinion it's probably a welcome clarification.

I think one of the points that I had seen raised is that in law, as I understand it, a corporation can be interpreted as being a person. They're both entities, and you can take a corporation to be a person. That sounds bizarre, but I gather that in law that's possible. So I suppose that could soothe some people. I understand, of course, that dentists do do oral surgery and should have been specifically included under this, so being in favour of inclusion, as I am, and being on record as many times as I am for being in favour of inclusion, I can find no objection in that change.

We go on, and very quickly the concerns that have been raised come up again. It does go into, once again, that they shall not provide this surgical service in Alberta, except in

- (a) a public hospital, or
- (b) an approved surgical facility.

So nothing was done with this definition that has caused so much concern for people.

I understand that the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development was wondering previous to my getting up why people couldn't understand that these things were very clearly there and that an approved surgical facility was very clearly not a hospital. I'm afraid I have to differ. There's nothing clear about this. You know, we've had correspondence flying across the country between our Minister of Health and Wellness and the federal Minister of Health, between our Premier and the Prime Minister, and between any other combination of those four people you want to talk about. So I would say that this is anything but clear. Certainly I'm sure that all of us in the Assembly have heard from constituents expressing concerns about "approved surgical facility" and their very real fear that this is a private hospital in everything but name. We've all heard a number of times the little children's nursery rhyme that if it walks like a duck and talks like a duck, it's a duck.

This amendment is doing nothing to deal with that. It's exactly the same as it was in the original. I think that as we get more into the intricate levels of debate on this piece of legislation, the specific wording becomes ever more important. In some ways I'm glad that we have gotten to a more complex level of discussion on the bill. I mentioned before that my constituents were starting to express a concern that this was a war of rhetoric and that, the way it was expressed to me, certainly the government and I think in a few cases the opposition could be accused of just repeating the same statements over and over and over again and that it wasn't moving the discussion further in any way. People wanted to see real, substantive discussion about exactly what this meant.

As we do get further into these discussions, more information comes up, more clarifications come up, and more concerns are raised on those clarifications, et cetera. In that way I'm glad to have the opportunity to debate this bill clause by clause and in some cases word by word. That's what I'm doing this afternoon with this amendment A1, because it does allow us to bring all of those other points out and to try and work this out, if it's possible to work it out.

Back to the discussion about section 2(1)(b), "an approved surgical facility." Nothing has been changed with this, and people really are concerned. [interjection] Yes, it is part of the amendment. It's clearly written into the amendment. People really are concerned that this can mean a private hospital in the sense that taxpayer dollars are going to a profit margin, a medical entrepreneurial endeavour that is providing medical services. I think we have to be very clear about this. If I could make a suggestion – which I don't think will be accepted – it might help if the government did call it a private hospital, because then there would be fewer people trying to argue the point about what exactly this stands for.

So "approved surgical facility" is still in there. We now have the federal government going: well, that may be okay under your laws and regulations and the various acts and statutes that you have that deal with the medical profession, but as far as the federal acts are concerned, what is being discussed here would indeed be considered a private hospital. Then that opens up a whole other series of ramifications on the federal level.

One of the things that I would like to see happen less or not happen at all is a searching for scapegoats, a blaming, a looking to place blame on some level of government or another. I don't think it's helpful in this process. The fact of the matter is that there's only one taxpayer in Canada, and that person pays federal taxes and provincial taxes and municipal taxes. It's not helpful to them to have one level of government blaming the other level of government for everything that's wrong. So I would hope that we could try and get over that.

There is a real issue about the "approved surgical facility." You see, when I look at the definition that's available in the back of Bill 11 – and that's really strange. I've never seen a piece of legislation that has the definitions at the back. They're always at the front so you can read them all and you know what you're doing, so you know what the definitions are as you start to read through the bill. It's never been explained why the definitions are at the back of this bill. It's an interesting departure from tradition. However, there are definitions at the back.

When I look, "approved surgical facility" means a designated surgical facility and a surgical facility referred to in section 16." Okay, hang on; we'll go to section 16. Section 16 says:

No person shall operate a surgical facility at which an uninsured day surgical service is provided unless the surgical facility is accredited to provide that surgical service.

Well, I suppose it's clear to some, but it's not clear to a lot of the people that are contacting me. What we're really starting to talk about here is that it depends on what you do as to whether you're classified as a public hospital, an approved surgical facility, or a private hospital.

Let's look at the "private hospital" definition in here. A private hospital, according to the act, is "an acute care facility." Now, that's an acute care facility. That's interesting. So it means no emergency care, and it probably has no intensive care. So there's no heart ICU.

DR. MASSEY: Intensive care unit.

MS BLAKEMAN: Intensive care unit. But there's also the coronary unit. There's a different set of initials for that one.

So it's an acute care facility that

- (i) provides emergency, diagnostic, surgical and medical services, and
- (ii) admits patients for medically supervised stays exceeding 12 hours, but does not include a public hospital.

So that's the definition of a "private hospital," which these approved surgical facilities are not supposed to be. A point that have been raised in the past is that there are some existing public hospitals that all of us would recognize as public hospitals that in fact would fit under the definition of private hospitals right now because of what they are or are not offering as services. So it does start to get clear as mud. So begging forgiveness for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, it is not clear.

The whole idea of a private hospital is abhorrent to many Albertans and certainly to many of the people that have expressed views in Edmonton-Centre. It's absolutely against everything that they believe a public health care system should be. I don't know what causes this fear in people. I know from the seniors that I've spoken to – and I just spent a couple of hours at lunch today with 50 seniors at the Minerva volunteer appreciation lunch – certainly what some of them were expressing was that they were here before medicare and they know what it was like. It frightens them, and anything that appears to be eroding, scratching away, lessening in any way really frightens them and causes them great unease, and I have to accept that when they say it to me.

I'm sure we've all noticed that it's been the seniors that have been in here with us after midnight a couple of nights lending moral support, and certainly at the lunchtime rallies that have happened on the steps of the Legislature on Mondays and Wednesdays, 12:30 to 1, a lot of them have been seniors. Seniors are taking this discussion very seriously. They don't want anything to threaten public health care. This whole idea: well, no, it's not a hospital; it's not a private hospital; it's an approved surgical facility that does everything except this or that, and therefore it's not a private hospital – this really causes people concern.

Now, another whole area that's opened up in the words here from amendment A – and we're still talking about section 2 of this act; we haven't gone anywhere else; we're still on section 2 – is the nondescription of the major surgical services. When we get up to section 2(2):

No physician or dentist shall provide a major surgical service, as described

- (a) in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in the case of a physician, or
- (b) in the regulations under section 25(1)(a.1), in the case of a dentist.

So what we have here is that no dentist shall provide a major surgical service as described in the bylaws of the doctors or of the dentists. That's the plain way to say that.

What we've got there is we get into the whole discussion of who decides what is a major surgical service and on what criteria that is decided. I think this is another area where people have raised some very valid points, because we are aware that technology is driving the provision of medical services forward. We all have stories of the old days when a gallbladder surgery took three weeks in hospital. Now they zap them with sound waves or something, or they do an operation through your belly button instead of a huge, major surgery. So we know that medicine is advancing, and we want to be flexible enough in our system to take advantage of that and not be locked into an old system.

What people regard as criteria for determining the difference between major surgery and minor surgery is more than just the clinical medical model. I think what's important here is that we look at whole health, because it is more than just that clinical model.

My colleague from Edmonton-Norwood was talking about home care and then started to talk about long-term care, but that is part of what we need to consider when we look at these definitions, when we look at the amount of time someone spends in the hospital after surgery, when we look at the very specific medical criteria for what is the difference between major and minor surgery. We get some idea of the points that come up for discussion when we look at the changes that have taken place in even the last three or four years.

Now, as everyone knows, I've got a lot of seniors in Edmonton-Centre, and I pay attention when they talk to me. What we hear a lot of people talking about is: they went for surgery – it was day surgery – and then they were sent home. There's a question about whether it was appropriate to send them home, not because of the purely medical definition but because of the kind of support system they had at home. Well, everyone says: "Don't worry about that; there's home care. Home care will be there for them. Home care will be there the instant they step out of the cab." Well, no. We have not increased the funding to home care to keep up with the demand.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The point of order is with respect to relevance. As I understand it, there was a substantial discussion last night about whether the amendment should be debated en masse or whether it should be debated clause by clause, and the opposition wanted it debated clause by clause.

Now, my initial feeling when we put in the amendments on the basis that we did was to allow the widest latitude for members to discuss and debate in this House the provisions of the act, and by putting all the amendments together, it would have allowed that wide latitude of debate. But the members opposite didn't want that wide latitude of debate. They wanted it narrowly focused on a section-by-section, clause-by-clause analysis. So I'm very curious as to where home care fits into a discussion of an amendment to the act which provides for the exchange of a new 2(1) and 2(2) for what was in the act before. The net result, if you read the two together, merely adds a provision for dentists and doctors.

Now, I would grant that they have the latitude to discuss in this section anything that's in this section, but home care is not in this section. The debate has been wide ranging and not narrowly focused. If the members of the opposition or any member of the House want a wide-ranging debate in Committee of the Whole, which was our original preference and the whole concept behind tabling all of these clauses as one amendment and bringing them in and moving them as one amendment, to provide for that wide latitude of debate that the opposition seems to want to have now, we would agree to revert to that. But if they want the clause-by-clause analysis, Mr. Chairman, then I would request that you keep them to the clauses which are being discussed at the relevant time.

THE CHAIRMAN: On the point of order.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. My understanding is that in Committee of the Whole one can discuss things even inside of the amendment to look at things even word by word. That is certainly what I was doing in discussing the implications of major surgical services, which are indeed a part of this amendment, and in bringing forward the views of my constituents. Their concerns around the major surgical services part of that definition include home care and what kind of care is available for them after the fact. I probably shouldn't get into the debate again, Mr. Chairman. I'm sorry. But certainly there is no point of order here. I have not wandered far off discussing exactly those words that appear in this amendment.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would observe that, indeed, last evening we had a discussion as to whether or not these government amendments would be put through as a package, which they were moved as, or whether they would go clause by clause or section by section. The two opposition parties wanted it section by section, and because we did not have an agreement, that's the way we're going.

However, the Government House Leader is only following up on what I would say has been an intervention on the part of the chair on most speakers, that they were extending it far beyond. Although you may make the point that home care is an extension of the surgical services, I think we would all in fairness agree that that's a pretty big stretch.

The question would really be: do you wish to discuss the whole of the bill through all of the different amendments, or do you want to go one section at a time? If you're going one section at a time, then you have to stay within at least section 2 of the bill and therefore what is being amended there. The rest is getting to be quite a stretch. Yes, it does pertain to medicine. Yes, it does pertain to health in some way. But I have to concur with what the Government House Leader has suggested in that home care, tying it in there, there's absolutely no mention of it. I know it's important to your constituents and I'm sure to all the constituents of all of the members. It doesn't take away from the importance of what you're saying. It's just that there is a time to discuss certain things, and the certain thing that we are on right now is section 2 of the bill, and it's part A1, section A. So the chair would ask again to please stay within the parameters of what we're supposed to be discussing, which was the request of your House leaders last evening.

Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for reining me in. I will do my best to concentrate on the words in front of me and not allow those definitions to take me too far away, even though my constituents insist that that's part of it.

My time is up? You're kidding me.

Debate Continued

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to just get in on the actual amendment that we're dealing with. I think it's still A1, section A. I'm afraid I stepped out of the Assembly to meet with the Youth Parliament delegates. I was telling them exactly how I felt it was important to have the process move forward when you bring in policy from a government and then put it into the frame of legislation and take it through the House. They asked me: well, what if you find something is wrong? I said: well, the government then has the opportunity to correct that through bringing amendments forward. I used the example of Bill 11 as one of those processes, where the government in committee would bring forward an amendment called a government amendment to a government bill, and that process would then be debated.

I did tell them that we were in the process of starting the debate on the government amendment. However, I didn't tell them that we'd spent two and a half hours last night on A1, section A and an hour at least today on A1, section A. I guess when you focus on that and you look at the section that we are amending, I've highlighted in my document the changes that have been made with this government amendment – I'd like to just clarify that so members opposite maybe won't spend three and a half to four hours – by simply inserting the terms that deal with the dental surgeons, being a part of this and clearly governed under this, plus the physicians. Surely to goodness it doesn't take three and a half to four hours to determine that they should be part and parcel of this bill. Maybe it's a little difficult.

Mr. Chairman, just for clarification, the original section 2(1) read, "No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in . . ." All that's being transferred in the amendment is: no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in . . . The next two subsections are the same, and then we go down to 2(2), "No person shall provide a major surgical service, as described," and we're substituting "no physician or dentist." We're just taking out "no person," and we're putting in "no physician or dentist." This is not real rocket science to put this in. Of course we have to acknowledge the bylaws of the governing bodies of these two groups. So all we're doing in this section is taking out the word "person," recognizing the dentists and the physicians and their governing bodies. The other sections of this amendment stay the same.

This is not a long one. This is probably one of the easiest amendments. To have gone now almost four and a half hours to decide whether you're putting physicians and dentists in there instead of "person" – surely to goodness the constituents of even the opposition would not want them to waste that much time to put the dentists into the bill.

So my argument, Mr. Chairman, is that surely we can move on to the other eight amendments or sections, that are now going to be A(1), A(2), all the way through at the request of the opposition. I think it would be a little embarrassing if I had to go back to my constituents who have also expressed concerns – and I would like to get into an actual dialogue on that at third reading or even part of this. My constituents would have no problems with substituting "person" with "physician or dentist." So surely the members opposite could go back to their constituents and have them agree that that would not be a contentious amendment, and we could reasonably move on with this debate.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a lot of concern about this amendment A. I was listening with keen interest to the hon. Minister of Government Services, and I am like the majority of my constituents whenever we have this long consultation process with Albertans, and this was outlined in the document We Are Listening provided to all Albertans.

Now, this came out in February, and it was a document on this public health policy that has turned into this Bill 11. If the government had been listening to Albertans, I don't think that on the first day of committee we would have – the government says that there are eight amendments; other people say there are 14 amendments. We're dealing with A1, section A right now, and I'm grateful we had the opportunity to break these up. I think that was a very prudent and wise decision on behalf of the chair last evening.

But if We Are Listening, the document, was fact and not fiction, then none of these amendments – A1 or it doesn't matter – would have been necessary. How can we have faith in the process when suddenly the Legislative Assembly is flooded with amendments? I can understand the hon. Minister of Government Services and the framework of the legislation, but I have concerns about this, Mr. Chairman, when we talk about an "approved surgical facility," as is in this amendment.

My colleague from Edmonton-Norwood presented to the Assembly earlier this afternoon the concerns of the federal Minister of Health, Mr. Allan Rock, about clinics, surgical clinics, and hospitals and just how strongly he feels about it and how he feels that in the definition of the Canada Health Act it is very important not only in this amendment to talk about the addition of dentists, but we also need to discuss the definition of an approved surgical facility. An approved surgical facility, Mr. Chairman, is another form of hospital.

Now, we can say that it's a public hospital, we can say that it's an approved surgical facility, or we can say nothing. That is one of the most contentious phrases in this bill. I would encourage the government that if they were sincere with their amendments, an approved surgical facility would simply be called what it is and what everyone in the province knows it is, and that's a private hospital. If a physician or dentist under the bylaws of their respective professional bodies wants to practise in that private hospital, then that would be entirely up to the individual.

Mr. Chairman, whenever we talk about the Medical Profession Act, as is outlined in this amendment, we realize that the College of Physicians and Surgeons advises on what constitutes major and minor surgeries. Now, earlier in the debate this afternoon in committee the hon. minister of agriculture talked about we should leave this decision of what's major and minor to the College of Physicians and Surgeons. I believe the theme of his speech was that this does not belong in the political arena, that it's not a political decision. Yet at the same time, members of the government, which he is an active participant in – and I think this is a double standard – are complaining about judicial activism and how judges are making decisions that rightfully belong in this Legislative Assembly.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the citizens of Alberta want us to make this decision on what's major or minor surgery or at least do it in co-operation or in full discussion with the experts, which certainly would be members of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, but we, all hon. members of this Assembly, should be involved in that decision. We shouldn't simply want to pass the buck, so to speak, to the College of Physicians and Surgeons. We've been trying to hand off this political football for so long. It is time for us to accept the political responsibility and deal with what is major and minor surgery.

Hon. members across the way, when we were in second reading on this bill, discussed how technologies are changing, medical technologies in particular, and as these technologies change, the definition of major surgery and minor surgery would also change. So we must accept our responsibility as legislators, I believe, and we cannot just simply pass this off to the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Now, the college, I would remind all hon. members of the Assembly, Mr. Chairman, is not accountable to the public. Furthermore, it was established to set standards for medical practices, not to accredit for-profit, commercial enterprises, that are the private hospitals that are disguised in this legislation as approved surgical facilities. For instance, let's say that one of these approved surgical facilities was going to locate up here on 100th Avenue in the city and it was going to have out on its marquee, "an approved surgical facility" – I just can't see that happening, Mr. Chairman.

In closing, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly that the decision as to which surgeries are minor and therefore open to contracting out in these approved surgical facilities in reality is left to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. I understand there's going to be this consultation process. Whether it's going to be open or secret, I'm not so sure. If the hon. minister could inform the House as to whether this consultation process with the College of Physicians and Surgeons is going to be open or secret I would be very grateful.

With those few brief remarks on amendment A, Mr. Chairman, I shall cede the floor to another hon. member of the Assembly. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd also like to speak to the amendment that's on the floor before us today, and in doing so, I would really like to say that I sincerely appreciated the points of view of my constituents, as well, whether it was through letter writing or e-mails or phone calls or personal contact. My constituents were very passionate and to the point, and one question that they always ask me, which this amendment addresses, is: what types of surgeries will these clinics be able to perform?

In addressing that question, I had the opportunity of asking the College of Physicians and Surgeons for their bylaws as to what surgeries are performed now as an approved medical service and are being performed in a diagnostic or treatment facility. A diagnostic or treatment facility, as we already know, means a medical facility. That means that it's supervised by a medical director, and that also means that it's accredited by a resolution of the council. The council takes their work very, very seriously, and I'm certain that this amendment they are taking seriously as well.

The council then gave a list of the types under these bylaws. They gave a list that I could give to my constituents of what were approved medical services that can be done, as I said, in these facilities. That list included diagnostic imaging services, medical laboratory services, pulmonary function diagnostic testing, neurophysiologic diagnostic services, sleep medicine diagnostic services, vestibular diagnostic testing. What's really interesting and was interesting to my constituents especially was the use of drugs which are intended or which may induce general anaesthesia or sedation requiring the monitoring of vital signs, including all uses of intravenously administered sedatives or narcotics, except in emergency circumstances.

We heard here earlier, Mr. Chairman, just when the previous member was speaking, that technology changes, practices change, and what that will mean for the future. I think this amendment addresses very much the vision of health care when we talk about the surgical facilities and the public hospitals. Currently there are 52 nonhospital surgical facilities that were approved by the college for day surgery.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when I reflect on this, as I said, you reassess your own viewpoints. You know, you think you have a certain belief in everything that you know about your health system and that it's going to remain status quo. This whole Bill 11 has caused all of us to reassess that, which is why amendments come forward. But then you also stand rooted in your years of knowledge you have about the health care system as a whole and the faith that you have within the system. So when I was looking at that, I asked the college as well: what are the types of procedures that we were doing and accomplishing 10 years ago in a public hospital that are now being performed in nonhospital surgical facilities? That list was extremely extensive, and I was very surprised when I looked at it.

I won't go through all of them, but there are a number that I would like to address. For example, today in a nonhospital surgical facility you can do an arthrotomy of the knee, with meniscus repair, using an arthroscope. You can have eyelid surgery, including removal of tumors on the lid, which used to require a stay in hospital 10 years ago; plastic surgery on the eyelids, like a blepharoplasty; lesions on the jaw removed by oral dental surgeons – and I'm pleased to see that this amendment includes oral surgeons – also carpal tunnel surgery and removal of ganglions.

You know, Mr. Chairman, the changes, as I said, that were addressed just by this previous speaker – what comes to mind for me for a public hospital and surgical facility is just one, and there are over a hundred on this list under the bylaws that are being done currently. The one change I know even right now is current discussion because of the screening that's being done for colon cancer. Colonoscopies can be done in these medical surgical facilities, but with colonoscopies they will no longer be doing fecal occult testing to the extent that they are, but they may actually be using colonoscopies more than they do now for screening. I think with the change in the future that perhaps nurses will even be doing colonoscopies for physicians, and that means that you may have a longer stay. You may need nursing observation which would require an over 12-hour stay in a clinic. So I think we really do need to keep in mind that these facilities are being governed in a way that sets very, very high standards through the college.

I must say that I really did appreciate the question from my constituents about what types of surgeries are being performed now in the nonmedical facilities and what can be performed in the future, because I had been completely unaware myself as to the extent of the numbers that are being done. An example I think that fits in with what is currently being done now of the kind of procedure with a stay longer than 12 hours that could be done in a surgical facility would be the nasal or facial procedures that would require, as I said, nursing observation overnight or even orthopedic procedures such as ligament repairs of the larger joints on healthy patients that require observation overnight. You know, that should be said for surgical facilities as well, that these patients are healthy.

So I am pleased to see this amendment here, and I am pleased that my constituents did address this important issue with me.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] Well, I appreciate hearing that from the Minister of Government Services.

Earlier today we heard that perhaps we're spending too much time on this amendment. You know, history will be the judge of that. The fact is that what amendment A does is really set the plate for this dinner of private surgery. It's very true that we're spending time on this amendment, but it's only because it's through this amendment that the whole privatization scheme that so many Albertans are opposed to is created. It's not simply, as it's been represented, a matter of substituting the word "person" for "physician" or "dentist." It goes much further than that.

In fact, I quite enjoyed the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross in her comments just now, because I think it brought some new information to the debate in terms of the breadth and scope of services that are provided. I do recall that a list of such services, I believe, was tabled by my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark. It's nice to hear the recognition of the variety of services that are going to be made available. I also wanted to commend you on the pronunciation. I dared not go down that path because I always get tongue-tied when I try to say things like arthroscopic surgery. So thanks for bringing that into the debate. It underscores why we're taking this amendment so seriously.

The fact is that amendment A divides the world into two places, places that have private hospitals and places that don't, and then Alberta becomes a place that does but will be calling them approved surgical facilities. We've had lots of conversation about approved surgical facilities in this House.

One of the private hospitals that's actually been referred to in the Assembly is the Shouldice Hospital in Thornhill, Ontario. I note that whenever the Premier talks about Shouldice, he talks about the Shouldice clinic. In fact, if you take a look at their own literature, they call themselves the Shouldice Hospital. The Shouldice Hospital is a licensed hospital, and it is licensed under the Ontario Private Hospitals Act. So I'm actually quite pleased that the Premier relies on the Shouldice Hospital as an example of the kind of thing that he's thinking should happen in Alberta, because what the Shouldice Hospital is is a licensed hospital under the Private Hospital Act; i.e., it's a private licensed hospital, which is exactly what the Official Opposition has been saying all the time, that what Bill 11 does and what's reinforced in amendment A is create private hospitals in the province of Alberta. The government for political reasons has chosen to call these private hospitals approved surgical facilities, but by their own words, by using the example of the Shouldice Hospital to bolster their argument, they are admitting that in fact what they are talking about are private hospitals.

Mr. Chairman, if you'll permit me, while I am talking about the Shouldice Hospital, I have received some new information just this afternoon about the operation of the Shouldice Hospital, and I would like to update the comments that I made on Wednesday, April 5, I believe it was, when I had an opportunity to first speak to Bill 11 at second reading, but it is relevant to the amendment.

When I was speaking at second reading, I entered onto the record my understanding of how the Shouldice Hospital operated and how it billed and I believe made reference to how the administrative costs, or what I called the profit, were legislated, and it had some relationship to the professional fees paid to the surgeons who operate in the Shouldice Hospital. In fact, I have found this afternoon that that's not the case, Mr. Chairman. According to the Shouldice Hospital, there is no relationship between the professional fees and the overhead costs, and that's because there is no contract with the government of Ontario. Isn't that interesting?

The earlier information which had been provided to members of the Official Opposition regarding the Shouldice clinic was predicated on the notion that there was, in fact, a contractual relationship. Again, I find this very interesting, because in clarifying my own understanding of how the Shouldice Hospital operates and having the opportunity now to put that clarification on the record through this debate on this amendment, I've learned something brand new about the Shouldice Hospital, which again makes me question why the government would use it as an example.

The Shouldice Hospital as a licensed hospital in the province of Ontario operates without a contractual guarantee from the government of Ontario, entirely different from what's being proposed in

Bill 11. I find that fascinating. So the private surgical facilities here under Bill 11 would be dependent on a contractual relationship; in other words, a minimum or maximum number of services that could be . . . [interjection] Should I wait for the minister? Okay. [interjection] Would the minister of environmental protection like to put something on the record? He's saying that there should be continued dribbling or driveling, and I'm just wondering whether he wants to get in Hansard that he's making some insightful commentary on Bill 11. His constituents would be thrilled to hear his insightful comments on private health care. So go ahead, Mr. Minister. Take it away.

Chairman's Ruling Factual Accuracy

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would observe . . . [interjection] Hon. minister. [interjection] Well, you do so in tones that we can't hear.

The chair would observe that there is no minister of environmental protection in the Chamber. The titles of certain ministers have changed. There's no longer a portfolio called environmental protection. It's the Department of Environment.

I would also encourage you to continue with the debate, and we'll try and deal with those people who would like to interject.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much. My apologies to the minister who is responsible for the environment. I was referring, of course, to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, who was making noises and inappropriately interjecting at this point. But since he won't take the occasion to rise and put his comments on the record, I'll just continue with my comments.

MR. SAPERS: The issue with the Shouldice Hospital is that they operate without any kind of a contract. In fact, in the words of one spokesman for the Shouldice Hospital that I was talking to today, they could do every hernia surgery in Ontario or no hernia surgeries in Ontario and they would still operate as a private hospital – and that is exactly what they are, a private hospital – without depending on any kind of government guarantees.

What the government of Alberta wants to do is handpick a few private clinic operators and then give them some kind of platinum card guarantee that they're going to get patients. They're going to guarantee them a certain minimum number of patients and therefore a certain dollar volume of services. I find it, as I was saying before, extraordinary that the government would continue to use the Shouldice Hospital as an example when it really doesn't reflect what the government is doing at all.

But that shouldn't really surprise me, Mr. Chairman, because as you've heard before, this is not the only misinformation that the government has been repeating and repeating and repeating regarding its private hospitals plan. So it shouldn't surprise me that they would distort what happens at the Shouldice clinic. As I said, I'm glad I had this opportunity to correct my own understanding about the manner of billing and compensation that reflects how the Shouldice clinic operates.

The Minister of Government Services should not be surprised with the robust nature of the debate on this amendment because this is a keystone section of Bill 11. I would suggest to that minister and all government members that this debate is going to continue on this amendment for some time, until we are satisfied that it makes good public policy sense to proceed. I think that if members of the Official Opposition can't be satisfied that it would make good public policy sense to proceed, then we'll use the opportunity in committee to make our arguments to try to convince members who would otherwise support the government of that conclusion.

When we think there's enough support to defeat the package of amendments or at least this amendment, if they can't be further corrected, then I guess we'll allow it to get to a vote. But until then, I don't think any government member should be operating under the impression that debate will be swift on these government amendments. The government amendments, in my reading of them, don't do a lot to deal with the deficiencies of the bill. So we will carry on with debate on this amendment as we see fit, and I look forward to additional opportunities myself to participate.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and start my part of the debate on this most important of all bills that this Legislature has ever seen come before it over its 95-year history, in my judgment at least. Bill 11 is indeed a piece of legislation that has roused unprecedented concern and opposition to it by Albertans.

At second reading on behalf of the New Democrat opposition I spoke to why the principles underlying this Bill 11 will lead Alberta and Canada down a blind alley. During committee stage I will explain why Albertans are not going to like what's at the end of this blind alley. Albertans in poll after poll have expressed a great deal of concern about this bill, including section 2 and the amendment that we are debating now. Amendment A1, section A deals with this very critical section of the bill, the section of the bill that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has called the keystone section of the bill. I agree, because it's in this section that for the first time we learn that there will be an approved surgical facility, which is a new entity being created by a sort of definitional fiat by this government in this bill.

Albertans in poll after poll have told this government that they don't want an expansion of private, for-profit health care. They don't want private, for-profit hospitals to be operating in this province. They have told the government, of course, that instead of costly privatization experiments, governments should be doing something more constructive rather than just hoping that private, for-profit hospitals will repair the damage from the government's own policies, certainly by way of first underfunding and then closing hospital beds in the hundreds and hundreds and hundreds, if not thousands, and also underfunding regional health authorities so that they can't even put into operation on a regular basis all the operating theatres that they have and thereby creating backlogs, long waiting lines and lists, and causing pain and suffering as a result of all of this.

Albertans were hoping that this bill would provide a serious and honest answer and attempt on the part of this government to relieve Albertans of the unnecessary problems that they have been facing when they get sick, when they need medical care and need to go to publicly funded, publicly administered, publicly delivered services and the locations where these services are delivered, that is the hospitals.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment A, interestingly enough, retains in it the very part of the section which Albertans are opposed to in the most strenuous way. That is, of course, it retains section 2(1)(b), "an approved surgical facility." After all the efforts that Albertans have made through a variety of ways, forums and meetings and vigils and petitions and letter writing campaigns and phone calls and e-mails to MLAs' offices and to the Premier's office and to the office of the minister of health, they find that the government has failed to respond appropriately and positively to their concerns.

Mr. Chairman, when you look at what's an approved surgical facility as it's defined in this bill and when it appears in section 2, with which this particular amendment deals, and you ask what is an approved surgical facility, you very quickly come to the conclusion and realization that it's different from a regular hospital only in the most minor – most minor – of ways. In other words, it's no different from a regular hospital that is defined in the Hospitals Act of this province and in the Canada Health Act.

Albertans were hoping that this sort of definitional trick that's represented in the way in which this particular entity is to be created, if this bill ever passes, will be different from a hospital. They are offended by this so-called amendment. I'm sure the minister has been serious about bringing this amendment forward to address the very concerns that Albertans had about the idea of the approved surgical facility.

This amendment is really not a serious attempt. In spite of his serious effort to accommodate the concerns of Albertans, Mr. Chairman, the amendment, I guess, specifically now includes reference to physicians and to dentists, and that's all it does, but that wasn't the primary concern of Albertans. So why make another attempt to yet again mislead Albertans into believing that some substantive change has in fact been made by way of this amendment to respond seriously and honestly to their concerns?

Albertans are continuing to express concern. I heard today, Mr. Chairman, from some of my own constituents and some other Albertans from outside my own constituency expressing extreme frustration with the effort of this government to in a sense stonewall this whole debate by bringing in these amendments, which really are no amendments. They really have no substantive content. This particular amendment falls short and in fact does absolutely nothing to assuage or to meet the concerns of Albertans about, what they see correctly, I think, an attempt by way of this section to approve and give legal status to the idea of private, for-profit hospitals.

Much has been made, Mr. Chairman, on the side of the government of the idea that this approved surgical facility is not really a reality; it's an idea that's offered as a choice to RHAs. It's argued that it's no more than enabling legislation. I just wonder how this enabling legislation and this amendment that sticks to that very basic idea that Albertans continue to object to, want excluded from this bill, should assure them that private, for-profit hospitals will not come into being and having come into being will not drain away, siphon away, badly needed public funds within the public hospitals themselves.

These people are concerned about and oppose the surgical facility alternative as proposed in this amendment and in this bill. They know from the evidence that's available to them, evidence that is produced by economists, by health care specialists, by university-based scholars, published in the most reputable scholarly journals in the world, which simply shows that if you send public dollars to a private, for-profit facility, another name for a hospital in this bill, it's going to cost you a lot more – a lot more – yet create all kinds of other problems given other sections in this bill which deal with enhanced services. I obviously won't talk in detail about enhanced services.

But the fact is that these facilities will be licensed now, if this bill were to be passed by this Assembly, to do what our public hospitals have never done as a rule; that is, sell to Albertans medical services that are not insured. Nevertheless, that will be proposed to them as something that they should consume. If they're treated as consumers rather than as patients, surely then they'll become the subject of high-pressure marketing techniques to buy these services. If that doesn't happen, then of course the so-called approved surgical facilities, in order for them to survive, will need payment for their services at a level that will be at no comparison to the costs which are incurred for doing the same surgical procedures in publicly owned, publicly operated and administered hospital facilities.

That's why the whole idea of having a private, profit-driven surgical facility doing what can normally be and should be done in facilities where we have already put public wealth, public resources in bricks and mortar, in all kinds of technologies and machinery, in all kinds of infrastructure – why would Albertans not object to a proposal as contained in this section 2, to which this amendment A speaks, when they know that this proposal will lead to enormous wastefulness, enormous drain, if you wish, of public resources?

So, Mr. Chairman, it really is a disappointment, a disappointment to me and to Albertans that this amendment has failed to address the most central, the most critical of concerns that Albertans have expressed – expressed through polls, expressed through their letters, expressed through public forums – about the fact that they consider this particular proposed development most undesirable and a most serious threat, not only a threat to the responsible way in which fiscal matters should be handled but a threat to the very idea of public health care that they so proudly own up to and identify with.

Mr. Chairman, it's an amendment – and I'm speaking to this approved surgical facility section of it – which I cannot lend my support to. I can't see how I, against the wishes of the vast majority of Albertans and the vast majority of my own constituents and based on my own judgment, can support it.

I go to section 2, which is part of amendment A:

No physician or dentist shall provide a major surgical service, as described

- (a) in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in the case of a physician, or
- (b) in the regulations under section 25(1)(a.1), in the case of a dentist,

in Alberta, except in a public hospital.

But what this amendment doesn't do is make any attempt whatsoever to indicate what this bill will mean when it says major surgical service. How is that to be determined? It seems to me this failure to define, a failure to even make an attempt to identify and give examples of what might be considered major surgical service is a cop-out. It's to leave the door wide open to let the surgical facilities engage in a contentious debate with some other authority, in some other forum to see whether or not the surgery they want to do, the surgery that they make an application to this entity to have approved in order that they could do it, is major or minor. It leaves the area of defining major surgical procedure service wide open to contention, perhaps even to legal challenge, and to something that may lead to divisions even within the community of experts who is responsible for providing us medical surgical services on which we all depend for our own well-being when we are in difficulty, when we are in need.

This amendment, therefore, Mr. Chairman, falls far short of what the vast majority of Albertans expected to see the minister and the government bring forward in this House. They are aware of the fact that the government itself has been wavering over whether hip surgery is major surgery or minor surgery. They know that government doesn't mean to seriously address the issue of whether or not these surgical facilities will be allowed to do minor or major surgeries. It simply wants to sneak its way around this whole issue and let the private providers who are in the business of making profit get into the battle of defining what's major and what's minor.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I will not be able to support this amendment A, as proposed by the minister of health last night in his submission to the Legislature.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to speak just ever so briefly to this amendment. Quite frankly, I'm very proud of section 2 of this act. When we reflect back to the policy that was put on the table last November, it talked about:

- No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in
 - (a) a public hospital, or
 - (b) an approved surgical facility.

One of the changes that was made in translating that policy into legislation, into this act, was to add subsection (2) which said:

- No person shall provide a major surgical service, as described in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in Alberta except in a public hospital.

What I believe the addition of that subsection in the act did was to respond to the concerns of Albertans and the concerns of Edmonton-Whitemud as expressed to me in the town hall meeting which I held – we call them community focus meetings in Edmonton-Whitemud – on January 13th, where people said that they were concerned about the types of services that would be provided in a surgical facility.

In translating the policy into the act, we were able to, in the course of our caucus discussion, bring forward some of those concerns and have them drafted into the act. One of the very important ones is subsection (2), which said that major surgical services must be done in a public hospital, and what is major would not be a political decision but would be a medical decision, a medical decision as determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

That's something the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud specifically asked me to bring forward and that I was able to bring forward, as did others in our caucus, and have it translated into the act. So that's a very, very important section and something that's been entirely overlooked by the opposition in their quest to have everything determined to be a private hospital and very clearly is not a question of everything being a private hospital, a very clear and distinct difference between what is a hospital and what is a designated surgical facility or an approved surgical facility under this section. Specifically, then, instead of putting in an artificial designation about how long one might stay in this place – because, after all, we're not talking about hotels, where overnight stays are the order of the day. We're talking about a surgical facility, which is a medical facility, and the question about how long one stays in a medical facility is a medical question. Whether it's appropriate for a person to stay in a medical facility is obviously a question which must be determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons as to what is medically appropriate and whether the facility itself has the type of instruments, the type of technology, the type of people, the type of medical staff which would make it safe and make it reasonable to do the procedure in that facility and to stay in that facility for postoperative follow-up and observation.

So instead of putting an arbitrary or irrational definition about 12 hours in the act, what we've clearly done is put in subsection (2) the concept that major surgeries must be done in "a public hospital." The College of Physicians and Surgeons on a medical basis determines what's major surgery, and it is open to them, of course, in their bylaws to determine whether something needs a 12-hour stay or a 24-hour stay. If that's how they define what's major or minor, that can be done in the context of the bylaws. That's an important thing to bring forward, and I just wanted to take this opportunity to put on the record that in fact we have listened to what Albertans have said, that we've listened to what the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud have said in the drafting of this bill and put right into the original drafting of this bill subsection (2).

All we're talking about now – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona indicated that we were trying to tell Albertans that this was a substantial amendment. Mr. Chairman, the amendments that were put forward by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, which include sections A to N, which will be dealt with by the House, are indeed substantial amendments, but A1, section A, is not substantial. A1, section A, is actually a very small and minor amendment.

The only people who are saying that it's a substantial amendment are the people who are taking some four hours now to debate what in essence is taking out the word "person" and inserting "physician or dentist" because in the original drafting of the bill it wasn't made clear; in fact it left out the concept of surgical facilities that happen in dental offices. That's the only impact of this amendment. The only people who are trying to pretend that this is a substantial amendment are the opposition by debating it for four hours, when the only real issue here at this stage on this amendment is to replace "person" with "physician" and to add the line "and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta," and then in subsection (2) by replacing "person" with "physician or dentist" and adding subsection (b), "in the regulations under section 25(1)(a.1), in the case of a dentist."

So that's really the only thing that's happening with this particular portion of the amendments which were put forward, and it bears no further discussion. It really doesn't need four and a half hours of debate, because that's not really substantive. So any proceeding ad nauseam on that one would be irrelevant.

I did want to take the opportunity to point out the important fact that subsection (2) in the amendment is something which was brought forward as a result of input that we received from the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud and others and the constituents of St. Albert and the constituents of many, many other constituencies in this province and many members in this province.

I just wanted to point those things out, Mr. Chairman, before I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 11.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that the committee do adjourn debate on Bill 11 at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. HANCOCK: I would move that when the committee rises, we report progress on Bill 11.

[Motion to report progress on Bill 11 carried]

Bill 21 Appropriation Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: The Hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's not necessary to move it in committee, but I would just like to indicate that we've had a month of debate on the budget. We now have it in committee for clause-by-clause analysis, if any is necessary. I would hope that we would be able to accomplish that this afternoon.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I share your frustration; believe me. The problem that we've got here is that this vote is going to be dictated by the clock. That means that at 5:15, if I'm not finished speaking, I won't get the benefit of the last eight minutes of debate time, that I otherwise would have been entitled to, because you'll be compelled to interrupt me. Now, of course, we had anticipated this and had some understanding about what may happen this afternoon in the House, and it didn't happen. This leaves me in a bit of a conundrum because I have some things to say about the budget process and about the implications of Bill 21.

Of course, one of the themes that you've heard so often from the Official Opposition is how much we resent the fact that we cannot fully do our jobs because of the budget debate process. We can't fully represent our constituents because the government has engineered, in fact the former Treasurer when he was the former Government House Leader engineered a process that curtailed our ability to fully participate in the budget process. Now we see that through some kind of procedural timing the government has once again limited final comments on the appropriation bill on some $17 billion worth of appropriations to about seven or eight minutes of discussion. I'm not fast enough to do the math about how many tens or hundreds of millions of dollars a minute that is, but it certainly is an insult to the process and to the taxpayers that we would be left such meagre time when it comes to the government's most significant policy, that being its budget, its spending policies. Mr. Chairman, I must say that I am very disappointed and very disheartened that we find ourselves in this position yet again.

Now, Bill 21, the appropriation bill, is the final step in something that started that day when the Treasurer stood up with his well-rehearsed speech and talked about the new vision. I have some questions about that new vision. Where was the plan to alleviate the shortage of health care professionals? Where in this appropriation is the money to hire 2,200 teachers and teachers' aides and classroom aides? Where is the money, in fact, for the new classrooms, for the refurbished schools? How does the government expect to hire and recruit these professionals? Where's the vision for the future of public education in this province? Where would we find that articulated in this funding policy?

Where's the plan to deal with housing shortages and homelessness? I understand that there was only an additional $3 million in new funding, so where's the plan for that? Mr. Chairman, what about shelters for adults? A 5 percent increase in funding there will hardly be adequate with the growth we've experienced, particularly in our urban centres in this province.

Where's the plan for postsecondary education? How are we going to make it more affordable? I was told today that fully 49 percent of the students at the University of Alberta are there with student funding of some kind, student financing of some kind, and that the cap of $40,000 is becoming insufficient. So it's not bad enough that so many of these students are going to be graduating with $40,000 worth of debt. For many of them that means they also can't then go on to graduate studies. Because they don't have the money and they've already reached their lifetime cap, they can't go on. Where's the plan to deal with that?

Where's the plan to deal with those students who the Students Finance Board determines come from households that are too wealthy because their family happens to have more than $10,000 worth of disposable income? Where's the plan to allow those students to carry on, Mr. Chairman?

How are we going to make sure that our children have the skills that they need to compete in the global economy? The Minister of Innovation and Science is talking about all of these new strategies for information technology and for moving ahead in the global economy, but we don't see all of those things that have to come behind that policy in terms of preparing our children to meet that future head-on. Where are the plans for that?

It certainly seems to me that the government is adrift, and when you get to read this budget in the detail that I've had an opportunity to read it in, you understand by looking at the business plans that are attached to the budget, you understand by looking at the performance measures that are in the budget – you get a picture of a government that once again understands the cost of everything. You know, they're good accountants, this government, but they're lousy planners. They know the cost of everything, and apparently they know the value of nothing or at least of very little.

The only thing that the government appears to continue to value is their budget numbers, and they seem to lose sight of what those budget numbers are supposed to support. Of course, the primary reason why you would have a balanced budget is so that you can afford to pay for the programs that are so important and so vital to Alberta and its citizens. To have a balanced budget as a goal is shortsighted. To have a balanced budget for the purpose of being able to pay in a sustainable way for core programs and services seems to me to be a much more laudable goal, a much more visionary goal.

Mr. Chairman, we see in this budget the coming of a flat tax, and I hope that the departure of the Treasurer who brought in this flat tax, who seemed to have the currency or the muscle in cabinet to convince his colleagues that this flat tax was a good idea, the fact that he's now moving along to pursue some other things means that the government will pause and reconsider this flat tax initiative and will in fact come to the same conclusion every other jurisdiction that's looked at a flat tax has come to, and that is that the flat tax is not the best way to give evidence to tax policy. It's not the best way to ensure stable funding. It's not the most fair way to impose tax policy. In fact, it's wrong-minded, because, particularly as a result of federal government tax initiatives, many, many Albertans, instead of getting a tax cut as a result of this flat tax or this 11 percent single rate, are going to instead receive a tax increase.

Mr. Chairman, the budget that we are presented with in the appropriation bill that flows from the budget does not deal adequately with the whole issue of user fees. It doesn't deal with it adequately at all. The government is in the position, after being embarrassed after their intervention in the Eurig estate decision, which flowed out of Ontario, to have to rethink its entire flat tax proposal.

I see that you are moving to interrupt.

THE CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, but under Standing Order 61(4) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for consideration by the Committee of the Whole.

[Motion carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 21.

[Motion to report progress on Bill 21 carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 21. The committee reports progress on Bill 11. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 11 and 18 are currently being proposed that would affect both the health care system and also the tax rate . . . we have been unable to attain any factual evidence to support the move to a privatized health care system and also to an 11% flat tax rate . . . By signing this petition, you are saying that if these two bills are passed and go into effect, then when you are able to vote you will not support the Conservative Party.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that immediately following the question period today I will move pursuant to Standing Order 40 the following motion:

Whereas this government has undermined, underfunded, understaffed, and destabilized Alberta's public health care system for the past seven years to create an artificial demand for private health care, whereas this government has pursued a policy of promoting private health care to take advantage of the turmoil it has created in the public health care system, whereas all legitimate opinion polls show that a majority of Albertans oppose Bill 11, whereas Albertans have signaled their concerns through tens of thousands of letters, e-mails, faxes and through their attendance at town hall meetings and rallies, including 3,000 at Calgary's Round-Up Centre on April 15, 2000, and 7,000 at the Northlands Agricom on April 16, 2000, whereas government is ignoring the advice and findings of its own report, produced with taxpayers' money . . . whereas the government has not released the true cost of its massive propaganda campaign, nor has it provided the people of Alberta with the information contained in the blanked-out 30 pages of documents requested by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, whereas the government has invoked a form of closure to limit debate at second reading on Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, and shows every indication that it will proceed to further limit debate on Bill 11 with a goal of passing [it] before the Easter recess, and whereas the amendments proposed by government ignore the many serious concerns with Bill 11, be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to consider the following motion: now therefore be it resolved that this Assembly has no confidence in the government.

I will seek unanimous support to allow the motion to be debated and voted this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of a comprehensive and collaborative strategy involving parents, communities, and the government: the report of the Task Force on Children at Risk.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 1999-2000 annual report for the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta; the 1999 annual report for the Alberta Association of Architects; and the Two-year Review of the Personal Directives Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings this afternoon. The first is a list of proposed amendments to Bill 11 submitted by Dr. Richard Plain.

The second is a number of letters all opposed to Bill 11, and I'll just read the names of the individuals: Brian Jackson, Pilar Gateman, Evelyn Soltys, Gabor Takats, Jack Clack.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have appropriate copies of a letter from Peter Nettleton of Calgary urging the Minister of Environment to listen to all Albertans when it comes to the consideration of the Spray Valley development public hearings.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is a letter from Justin Brooks. He's a grade 6 student in Brookwood school in Mrs. McFarlane's class, and he is expressing his concern and opposition to Bill 11.

The second one is yet another challenge to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to do a public debate in his constituency. I am challenging him once again because of calls that have come from his constituency.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling this afternoon that is a news release from the Official Opposition dated April 15 of this year, and it is urging all members of this Assembly to vote against Bill 11 and follow the wishes of their constituents.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is excerpts of a report titled Progress of Canada's Children, which outlines a number of indicators and measures which can be utilized to monitor children's well-being and may be a useful reference in contrast to the Task Force on Children at Risk report released today by government.

The second tabling is a report by Curtis, Dooley, and Phipps completed in December of 1999 titled Does Mother or Father Know Best? It is an assessment of parent/child agreement in the Canadian national survey of children and youth.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today my first two tablings are updated copies of the Bill 11 debate summaries published on the government of Alberta's Bill 11 web site for April 10 and 11. So there will be no confusion, these may look similar to sessional papers, but they are updates. Language has changed even though the government has not made any reference to what they've changed in their re-creation of history on the debate of Bill 11.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of a statement titled Is Bill 11 Good for Albertans? It is a statement prepared by the Interfaith Coalition on Justice in the Workplace, Edmonton, Alberta. It was circulated at the rallies in Calgary and Edmonton on Bill 11 over this weekend.

Also, Keeping Medicare Public, a document prepared by the savemedicare.org coalition: the words to the song Oh Medicare sung to the tune of O Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure this afternoon to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly members from Chateau Mission Court, which is a wonderful facility and housing centre in our community of St. Albert. They are here today and are seated in the members' gallery. With Trish Gyepesi, who is the activity co-ordinator, and the bus driver, Jack Soulsby, are the members and residents of Chateau Mission Court: Elizabeth Kehoe, Alice Brown, Jerry Chambers, Avenal Dayman, Kay Van Deelen, Pat Smart, and Donna Mitchell. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce Kellie Zdebiak and Caroline Landreville. They are two senior high school students who initiated the petition that I presented earlier. These two students were not satisfied with the answers that the government provided and, in their own words, indicated that "trust me" was not good enough. I would like to congratulate them both for their leadership and their commitment to public health care and ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to introduce to you and through you today seven people who are visiting here from Guadalajara in the state Jalisco. Patricia Martinez is the Alberta government representative. Martha Reinoso is a student education program director for the state of Jalisco. Karen Carter is the international program co-ordinator here in Alberta. With them and most important are Andres Ampudia, 14; Janet Nava, 15; Alfredo Gómez, 14; Alejandro Gómez, 11; and Rocio Avila, who is at Paul Kane high school. The first four kids that I mentioned are staying for a month at W.D. Cuts junior high in St. Albert, and the last lady that I mentioned is here for five months at Paul Kane senior high. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly several youths who are concerned about Bill 11 and are present, I think, in the public gallery. Their names are Yoav Englebert, Trevor King, Tom MacDonald, and Amy VanKeekan. Also, there are several other citizens who were present today at the citizens' vigil against Bill 11 on the steps of the Legislature. I'll ask all of them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, you'll have a school group that will come from Crystal Park school. They are scheduled to be here between 2 o'clock and 2:30, and they will not be in the House to hear their introduction. Would you like to introduce them now or at the conclusion of the question period?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: I'd rather do it after question period.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend almost 10,000 Albertans rallied in Calgary and Edmonton to speak out in support of public health care and against the Premier's privatization scheme. Despite this government's multimillion dollar taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign of misinformation, Albertans are speaking out against the government's policy and this Premier's policy through petitions and e-mails and letters, faxes, town hall meetings, and rallies. It appears that the Premier neither listens nor cares. My questions today are to the Premier. Why did the Premier not have the courage to show up at the rallies and defend his privatization scheme? He might have in fact seen some of his former supporters there.

Speaker's Ruling

Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on Wednesday and Thursday I clearly indicated that we were going to try and get to questions in question period that would be as brief as possible, would be nonargumentative, would not have an expression of an opinion, nor would they lead to debate or have expressions. I want to advise all members today that that's the expectation once again. The questions should follow through the normal urgency matter with respect to question period, and I would ask for brevity with respect to responses as well.

Thank you very much.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the only campaign of misinformation that is being conducted is being conducted by the Liberals and their cohorts. The truth is in the legislation. The legislation is the law. The truth is always in the law.

Mr. Speaker, I saw no need for me to attend the rally. There were plenty of people there, depending on which newspaper you read. There were 2,500 in Calgary and, I understand, anywhere from 5,000 to 7,000 in Edmonton. There was simply no need. I don't do protests, nor do I deny anyone the right to protest. Protest is the essence of democracy.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition was there. I don't know if any of the government MLAs were there. I very much doubt it.

When this member was a minister in this government, I can recall protests of the magnitude of 3,000, 4,000 people, mostly environmental groups. I can recall one at the Oldman River dam where there were over 10,000 protesters. I was the minister at that particular time. I didn't attend then, and I don't do protests now, nor do I deny anyone the right to protest. It's all part of democracy.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, how many more rallies and petitions and e-mails and town hall meetings and letters and phone calls does this Premier need before he does the right thing and scraps his privatization policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is the misleading misinformation. There is no private health care policy. This is a very simple policy that purports to and proposes to put regulations around clinics that have been operating in this province for 10 to 15 years, 30 of which were commissioned under the watch of the former, former, former minister of health, who happens now to be the leader of the Liberal Party.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier make a commitment to allow a vote on the motion of nonconfidence which I placed before the Assembly this afternoon?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know. I wasn't in the Assembly to hear the motion 40 petition, but as I understand the rules, we have to first of all debate the question of the urgency of the debate.

I will say something. Having come into the Assembly and having been informed that neither you, Mr. Speaker, nor the Government House Leader were informed of this motion 40, this was obviously another Liberal dirty trick and an absolute blind side.

MR. DICKSON: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Nonconfidence Motion

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we're going to deal with the basic rules of the question period, and the Speaker is now going to get – no, he won't get involved in the debate, but he will make some comments with respect to decorum so this matter does not go unattended.

First of all, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the question is directed to the Premier of the province of Alberta, who is not in a position to determine what the Assembly will do with respect to a Standing Order 40. A Standing Order 40 requires "unanimous consent" of all members "of the Assembly." Regardless of the position taken by the person to whom the question was directed, it will be the Assembly who will determine that question, not the leader of the government.

Secondly, to the leader of the government, the chair was verbally informed by the Official Opposition House Leader at mid-noon that there was going to be a Standing Order 40. In terms of the latter part of the statement, it would not be the leader of the government's right to know what an hon. member has conveyed to the Speaker, so he would not be in a position to know what has been conveyed or not conveyed to the chair. But it may very well have been the case that the Government House Leader was not informed. So that's just clarification for all of that.

Now, let's very calmly move on to the second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Opinion Poll

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend the government leaked another of its taxpayer-funded political polls as part of their propaganda campaign. Using a rather slanted question of 74 words, the government tried to put a positive spin on the fact that the majority of Albertans oppose this government's privatization scheme and the way the government is pushing it through the Legislature. My questions are to the Premier. Research shows that private health care institutions won't reduce waiting lists, so why does the government poll instead mislead Albertans by saying just the opposite?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the government poll doesn't mislead anyone. It asks honest questions to seek honest answers, unlike this piece of garbage which is Liberal propaganda that is full of absolute mistruths and fraudulent statements. It says: Bill 11 "legalizes private, for-profit hospitals." That simply is not true, and they know it. It says it "creates a two-tier health care system." Our policy, which is the framework for the legislation, specifically prohibits, absolutely prohibits the creation of a two-tier health care system, yet the Liberals will deliberately and maliciously put out this kind of misinformation, this kind of fraudulent material. And what's even sadder: they cheer for themselves. They're admitting that they're fraudulent, and they cheer for themselves. What is so shameful about this is that they also put it out at taxpayer's expense.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Words that may be used one day may not necessarily be used the following day, and so much of it depends on the tone. To the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition: I guess in the context of the day and the intent and the mood and what have you, words like "mislead" and others have certain connotations and can be very argumentative. To the leader of the government: if you want to respond to such words for clarification, it can also lead to inflammation. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora: it would be really welcomed if we did not hear from you by way of interjection.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that research and experience here in Alberta show that in fact private facilities such as cataract facilities are less efficient than the public sector, why does the government poll say just the opposite?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we're into the whole question of why, why did this leader of the Liberal opposition when she was minister of health allow 30 private clinics to operate, many of them cataract surgery clinics, and allow them to charge facility fees? Why?

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that this latest poll funded by the taxpayers shows less support for the government's privatization scheme than it did several months ago, will the government back down a third time and kill the privatization proposal?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, how can you kill something that is not alive? There is no privatization proposal. The only person in this Legislature to my knowledge who has proposed private hospitals – that is, private, for-profit hospitals – is the leader of the Liberal opposition, who has stated publicly that if there is a place for these hospitals and if they can add to the overall health care, then why not let them operate? She's the only person who has made a statement relative to the operation of private, for-profit hospitals.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Holy Cross Hospital

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After spending $32 million at least of taxpayer money on renovations, this government sold the Holy Cross hospital for only $4.5 million to Enterprise Universal Inc., a corporation controlled by the Huang brothers. Dr. Peter Huang at the time was the head of ophthalmology for the Calgary regional health authority. Now, Poon McKenzie Architects, on behalf of Enterprise Universal Inc., is applying for a development permit from the city of Calgary to redesignate the facility as a private hospital. My questions are to the Premier. Is the government's private health policy designed to accommodate the conversion of the Holy Cross site to a private hospital, or rather an approved overnight stay surgical facility?

MR. KLEIN: I have no idea what kind of a contractual relationship or any other relationship this operation has with the Calgary regional health authority, Mr. Speaker, but I'll have the hon. minister shed some light on the situation.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the words that are used here are quite flowery and quite possibly misleading. First of all, with respect to any proposals that might be put forward by the proponents mentioned, this would have to be considered by the regional health authority and go through due diligence and approval. I know of no interest, quite frankly, that the regional health authority has in this particular piece of property, and I think it might be quite a different proposal when you actually look at the wording of it. This is not something that has been approved or is about to be approved.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, my question is again to the Premier. What discussions has this government had with the owners of the facility regarding the redesignation of the Holy Cross hospital as a private hospital, or an approved overnight stay surgical facility?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there would be no reason or purpose for anyone in this government to have a discussion with the proponents over a land use redesignation. Maybe she needs a clinic in municipal politics and how it works. That is a matter for city council to decide. A land use redesignation is the result of a public hearing before the council. It has nothing to do with the province of Alberta or the government of this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What steps will this government take to assure Albertans that the Holy Cross hospital will not be subsidized by the taxpayers, who've already lost millions of dollars on the earlier fire sale of the site?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what is being proposed. I don't know the details of the land use redesignation application, if in fact there is one. I don't know of any discussions that have taken place with the Calgary regional health authority. I do know that the Huang brothers were proposing a long-term care centre, and there's been a demonstrated need throughout this province for more long-term care.

Also, there's been a lot of talk in all areas of this province about public/private partnerships relative to long-term care centres as they exist today. There are numerous long-term care centres that provide for the care of the elderly who are sick in long-term care centres. Is the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition proposing that we close all these down? If she is, stand up and say so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the government announced two new MRI machines each for Edmonton and Calgary hospitals even though they won't be up and running until next year. Their timing is suspicious, to say the least, given the current public opposition to the government's private health care agenda. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the government relying upon PR tricks in making the announcement of new MRI machines now instead of waiting until closer to the time when the new machines will actually be operational?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. minister supplement. But, you know, he called this a PR trick. I would challenge him to make that assertion, make that statement to the hundreds and hundreds of doctors who are standing up today saying that this is good news, that this is the right thing to do, that this will put Alberta on the leading edge relative to MRI capacity and the use of MRIs in this country and that is good. You know, this is the amazing thing about being in government. Anything that is good for this province, anything that is good for the people of this great province is bad for the opposition. They're so good at making pigs ears out of silk purses. Honestly. Any good news, they've got to find something bad with it. Right. Pathetic.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the Premier: how does the government expect to find enough qualified personnel to operate the new MRI machines when there's a severe shortage of personnel to run the ones already in place, a shortage caused by the five private MRI clinics hiring away staff from the public system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this all goes to one of the other points in our six-point program. Two ministers can allude to this, and that is the training of more frontline staff. You know, we don't get the opportunity actually to speak about the other five points in the six-point program.

Certainly I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond as well as the Minister of Learning, because there are some plans in place.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, members of the Assembly would recall that this matter has been announced before. There is actually a very good story which extends back over at least six months with respect to the expansion of MRI services in the province. I might just reference one that has been raised here before, and that is the establishment of an MRI service in Lethbridge. Lethbridge is doing MRI scans now for the people in the southern part of the province. They do have adequate staffing, albeit we do recognize that there will need to be additional people trained in the future. Certainly we want to extend the hours as long as possible per day per machine.

We have announced MRIs for Red Deer, for Grande Prairie, for Medicine Hat, and, Mr. Speaker, the four additional ones for the two major cities were part of our overall continuing effort to provide MRI services at a level right at the top of the list in terms of MRIs per thousand of population in this country.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very, very quickly in direct response to the hon. member's question, the access fund for this year will be keen on health professionals, and in that access fund MRI technicians will be one of the goals that we're looking at in the access fund for the upcoming year.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that two MRIs have been announced for Calgary, albeit not to be operational for another year, will the government put a stop to the ludicrous proposal by the Calgary health authority to install privately owned MRIs in public hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

We want to create as much capacity as we possibly can. Yes, we'd like to create it all inside, but if we can use the resources that exist outside to have publicly funded procedures – that is, procedures prescribed by a doctor under health care – for MRIs, why not do it? Why not do it? Why not use every possible method to get people faster access to MRIs? That's what it's all about. It's not about ideology; it's about access and getting people treated.

You know, to the NDs it's all about ideology. To us it's about getting people faster access to essential services, Mr. Speaker. That's what it's all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Children's Services

MR. HIERATH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Children's Services. Today the Task Force on Children at Risk released its report, which contains a number of recommendations. Will the government implement these recommendations, and how much funding will be provided for this purpose?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, today when we released the task force report, we identified as task force members that this is a report to government. It identifies the need for parents, communities, and governments at all levels to work in support of strategies to benefit their communities and to be assured that no tragedy such as the one in Taber ever occurs again.

Start young and start now is the thrust of this. Throughout the next few weeks the ministers that are working in collaboration on children's issues will review their own respective areas and determine what should be done, and those releases, in conjunction with the forum response, will come later this spring.

MR. HIERATH: My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Children's Services. The task force was established to help prevent tragedies like the Taber shooting. How will we know if these measures are indeed making a difference for children at risk?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, within the last two weeks I did identify in this House that we would be providing the first-ever Alberta children's initiative report card later this spring and annually. The task force has recommended that a similar report card on the effectiveness of all of the recommendations be reported to Albertans.

The report is to Albertans. It acknowledges that many circumstances may change. It acknowledges and anticipates that improvements will be made and that we will report annually on those improvements.

MR. HIERATH: My final question is to the same minister. The task force report is one of a number of reports regarding children recently developed by the government. Why are these reports being created, and how are they going to impact children, families, and communities?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, within the last decade there have been significant changes in the manner in which we organize and serve those that are at risk in the province. The creation last spring of the Children's Services ministry was a follow-through to some of the work that had been done by previous ministers in the evolution of the child and family service authorities in Alberta. All 18 authorities are relatively recent and have celebrated their first anniversary within only the last few months.

Through this process a number of things are being discovered, not the least of which are issues that relate to poverty, issues that relate to substance abuse, issues that relate to ideal circumstances for the learner. Mr. Speaker, throughout the reports and the recommendations not only do we want to identify best practices, but we want to be assured that overlap and duplication in programs between levels of government and in fact between community agencies does not occur. I would anticipate that will come out subsequently as the government ministers respond to this report.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The first casualty of this government's taxpayer-backed propaganda campaign to promote private health care has been the truth. The government continues to tell us that they have spent only $1.2 million to date as the cost of financing their propaganda campaign. When we ask the minister of health day after day after day, we simply get some vague indication that we may get some additional information. The Official Opposition has been completely up front on all of its costs. We've tabled the receipts, we've tabled the material. The Premier can't wait for the question, so let me go to it directly. How much more has it cost the taxpayers of this province over and above the $1.2 million that's already been acknowledged?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, everything will be disclosed in public accounts. That's a responsibility and an obligation of the government, unlike the Liberal opposition, who can, you know, dream up any amount of figures. We don't know any of the hidden costs involved in their real propaganda campaign, the propaganda campaign that included that pamphlet I waved around earlier. Imagine spending thousands and thousands of taxpayers' dollars on a piece of literature that contains nothing but untruths and is fraudulent. And they're proud of it. They're proud of something that is untrue, they're proud of something that is fraudulent, and they're proud that they spent thousands and thousands of taxpayers' dollars to create that kind of malicious piece of garbage.

MR. DICKSON: This Premier knows full well that we have tabled all of the receipts, all of the invoices documenting $29,000 in expenses. Will this Premier commit, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon that he will today or tomorrow table all of the source documents, the receipts, the invoices, the estimates? Let's have that material so we know exactly how much money has been spent by the government on behalf of Alberta taxpayers.

MR. KLEIN: You know, all the travel, all the research, all the collaboration with the Canadian Union of Public Employees, all the collaboration with the Friends of Medicare, all the collaboration with the New Democrats, all the collaboration with AUPE, the Federation of Labour, the United Nurses association, the Alberta Teachers' Association, all the midnight meetings and the travel and all the hidden costs: we don't know what that is. When you add up the whole campaign, whether it's supported by taxpayers or not, I mean, they have spent millions, millions, absolutely, to spread out misinformation and to bamboozle the people of this province. They have been part of a multimillion dollar campaign of misinformation and untruths, much of it very, very malicious.

Speaker's Ruling Inflammatory Language

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, an argumentative, opinionated question usually brings a response in kind. We have some very gifted orators in this Assembly, and we can live with that. What we shouldn't live with, though, is the insidious thing that it does to other members. It really moves them to want to participate in the volleys back and forth. The hon. Member for *Calgary-*Buffalo moves the hon. Premier, the hon. Premier moves the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, the hon. member moves the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and all of a sudden, we have excitement. So let's just deal with a question, and let's just deal with an answer.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll try harder to avoid being baited.

Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta Health must have over 600 employees, given that the Public Affairs Bureau has a budget of over $8 million, can the Premier not find a clerk somewhere that can fill out this checklist detailing all of the individual items of expenditure around the government's private health propaganda campaign?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I'll say that unlike the Liberals we have to be accountable. We have to be accountable. We just can't pull figures out and provide what we think is the right figure to add up to the right number. We have to show everything in the public accounts, and that will come out. I'll ask the hon. member to be patient.

MR. WHITE: Point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Health Care Workforce

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At one of my MLA open houses constituents raised the issue of the shortage of qualified doctors and nurses in Alberta's health care system. They were also concerned about doctors and nurses leaving the province immediately upon graduation from Alberta's educational institutions. My question is directed to the Minister of Learning. Since the taxpayers of Alberta fund in excess of 70 percent of their tuition costs, has the government considered making it mandatory for doctors and nurses to practise for at least two years in the province as a condition of graduation?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To preface the answer, we were signatories to the internal trade agreement. The labour mobility clause of the internal trade agreement specifically prohibits us from putting up undue barriers to mobility across Canada. So what actually sounds like a reasonable plan – the member is absolutely correct; we do fund 70 percent of the costs for the education. Due to the internal trade agreement we are unable to do that. I would also say that it is not something we want to do.

We expect doctors to move into Alberta, and indeed many doctors are moving into Alberta. We have a very positive atmosphere when it comes to health care. We have a very positive atmosphere when it comes to taxes. I would like to say today and I can confidently say that the brain drain is in reversal when it comes to physicians, as the number of physicians is actually increasing in the province. I would say that this will continue to be so.

I believe that the best possible way – and I'm speaking as a physician, Mr. Speaker – that we can have more doctors stay in the province is by doing exactly what we're doing: by putting more money into health care, by having a positive environment for health care and having a positive environment on taxation.

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. As the population increases and ages, the need for physicians will continue to grow. What is the government doing to increase the number of spaces available in Alberta universities for doctor training?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, that's an absolutely fascinating question. If I could just take you on a little trip back, about seven or eight years ago two health care economists who were actually recently referenced in this Assembly, Barer and Stoddart, put out a report that suggested that the number of spaces for physicians should be decreased by 10 percent. This was put out in about 1993-94. The federal Health minister at that time plus all the ministers across Canada agreed to that report. Using the retrospectoscope, using hindsight, we look back and we realize that the Barer/Stoddart report was absolute garbage, as are many of the other reports that they have done recently.

Mr. Speaker, we are increasing the number. As I mentioned earlier, the access fund this year will be specifically for health professions, and I have specifically put medical students in that access fund this year.

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the government doing to attract physicians to practise in rural Alberta?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we have had an overall initiative called the rural physician action plan with respect to recognizing, as the member correctly identifies in his question, a need in Alberta as far as physicians are concerned. We have established, first of all, parallel to the last round of negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association, a rural on-call payment program, which was very effective, in my view, in retaining and providing a more positive situation for rural physicians, who are usually in small numbers in a particular centre and have to provide 24-hour coverage. So that has certainly helped with respect to retention.

We have continued making available our overall rural retention initiative, which was successful in attracting to rural parts of Alberta 82, as I remember it, physicians to areas which needed doctors to be in service. That has been very successful.

We're not stopping there, Mr. Speaker. We are following up, working with the universities to establish a rural internship program, because of course I think all members of the Assembly would like to see our graduates, wherever possible, relocating to rural practice.

So it is very much a priority with Alberta Health and Wellness, and working in conjunction with Alberta Learning, we're making progress.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to put politics over long-term health care planning. Last week's announcement regarding four new MRIs is a perfect example of the government's efforts to deflect attention from current political criticism. Now, really a good-news story would have been the government announcing a policy that said that no Albertan would pay out of pocket for medically required services. My questions are to the Premier. Before having made the commitment to finance four new MRIs, can the Premier tell us what studies he has about the excess capacity that currently exists in the system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not so sure there is excess capacity. There is a problem, of course, recruiting technicians, and I think that we have already addressed that particular situation. We want to provide as much access as we possibly can.

Mr. Speaker, the assertion that Albertans would be denied medically required service is absolutely wrong. That is wrong. Bill 11 says that all Albertans will be provided medically required services under Alberta health care and within the parameters of the Canada Health Act.

MR. JONSON: Certainly the Premier has covered the essential point, but if the question is about MRI services in this province, we've recognized that we do need to increase capacity. That is what these announcements over the last number of months, including those just recently for Edmonton and Calgary, are all about.

MS LEBOVICI: Given that there are long waiting lists right now and that the new MRIs will not be operational for one year at least, what is the Premier going to do to accommodate those who are in need of an MRI today and are paying out of pocket to jump the queue?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there's a priority protocol, and if a doctor prescribes an MRI, that person gets in on a priority basis.

You know, I can allude to one MRI, and the hon. minister can correct me if I'm wrong. A case in point is the state-of-the-art neurological MRI at the Foothills hospital in Calgary. It's an MRI that's used for research, and it's also an MRI that's used to examine and do diagnostic assessments of those people who have been involved in serious trauma, a very serious car accident or other kind of brain injury. The priority, of course, is to get those patients in. The MRI is set up about three seconds from the emergency room, and research and research activities take second place to the trauma activities, which are medically necessary services.

MS LEBOVICI: He's still not answering.

Will the government reimburse those Albertans who today are paying out of pocket for private MRIs for timely diagnosis for medically required services? A simple question. Will you pay for those individuals who are paying out of pocket today?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if an MRI is prescribed by a doctor, that individual gets treatment. If a person is deemed to be perfectly healthy and asks his doctor for an MRI and the doctor says, "No, you don't need one," and this person says, "Well, I want to go to a private clinic and get one anyway," I guess that's up to that individual. Why would we pay? You know, the Liberals would have the taxpayers pay for a perfectly healthy person who has no need for an MRI to get the service. That simply does not make sense, but most of what they say doesn't make any sense whatsoever.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton Gold Bar.

Crop Insurance

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As farmers are heading to crop insurance offices across this province to file their spring cropping reports, they're expecting the 30 percent decrease in rates announced by Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Instead, they're quite alarmed to find out that the insurance coverage from their previous year has also been reduced by an equivalent amount. My question today is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Could the minister please explain why a program intended to benefit the farmers during these tough times seems to only maintain the status quo of last year in real dollars for the amount of dollars paid in premiums?

MR. LUND: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many factors that go into the coverage and what the premium would be for crop insurance. First of all, I guess it's important to understand that when a person takes out crop insurance, really what they're doing is insuring a certain yield. Where the price issue comes in is when you talk about the shortfall between the amount that the farmer is insured for, the yield that the farmer is insured for, and the shortfall, and that's the amount that the crop insurers pay.

Now, there are a number of factors that come in. A farmer has the option of picking 50, 60, 70, 80 percent of the risk area yield. On top of that, they can take two price selections, which is a low price and a high price. Then there are some other factors that come in that can change on an individual, that being their past record. If their record is good, they get a percentage increase in the insurance and a reduction in the premium. If the reverse is true, then the reverse happens. So there are a number of factors.

I can tell the hon. member that the ones I have looked at where in fact the price per commodity has gone down – and that's based on the average price on the market. In fact, if someone is trying to get to that same dollar value, if last year they took the low dollar value, this year they have to take the high to get to the same value, and if they take the same percentage, say 50 percent, well, in fact they will find that their premium is down. The one I looked at, they went to the 70 percent, 50 to 70, low to high. They got about the same amount of coverage.

The thing also that may be somewhat confusing is that the numbers that were sent out from the all-risk to the farmers is a price that was before the 30 percent reduction. So I would urge any members to in fact check if it's the true price or the one that was printed, because they'll find that when they actually go to sign up, there is still that reduction.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers have raised many concerns about the effectiveness of the current crop insurance program, could the minister tell me what other initiatives he has planned to improve the current system?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, crop insurance is a production insurance; it's not a dollar insurance. What a number of farmers have said to us is that they would like to see us look at some way that it would in fact be an assured income or insuring against input costs. Because there's quite a lot of discussion about the operation of all-risk insurance, we committed back on October 14 that there would be a complete review of the hail and crop insurance program, and we have brought on board a former federal agriculture minister, the Hon. Charlie Mayer, and he is going to head up this whole review. We're asking farmers to look outside the box: what kind of program would they like in the future?

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when can we expect those recommendations and the implementation of those recommendations?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are making some minor modifications for the year 2000, but that's not related to this review. We are trying to implement some of the more common things that we've heard.

The work of Charlie Mayer will continue. We expect to have the report some time in October, and hopefully we can then talk to farmers and figure out what can be done and what would fit the current program and hopefully make those modifications for the year 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier is not careful with his private hospitals policy, he's going to be able to hold a caucus meeting in his Volkswagen. It's now been 11 days since the Premier promised to release the 30 blanked-out pages from his private hospitals policy once the Official Opposition released its focus group research. The Official Opposition has fully lived up to its end of the commitment, and we've gone one step further by tabling all the invoices and all the receipts. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Premier refusing to live up to his commitment to Albertans to release the 30 blanked-out pages from his private health care policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, that information is being prepared, and once it's prepared, it will be released. I've given that undertaking in the past, and in the fullness of time – and hopefully it's not too much time – that information will be released. I simply ask the Liberal opposition to be patient.

I'll have to get – well, I don't know if you can get a bigger Volkswagen – a huge, monstrous Volkswagen. It would have to be a Volkswagen bus and more, Mr. Speaker, to hold not only the existing members of caucus but the increased number of caucus members after the next election. You know, they tried in 1997, and they tried in 1993. The leader of the Liberal opposition tried in a leadership race in 1992. And you know what? They lost, they lost, they lost, and they're going to lose again.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Premier also. Is the release date when the government will release the 30 blank pages timed with after your health care policy becomes law in this province? Tell us.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it will be tabled in this Legislature when it is ready. It will be tabled in this Legislature when it is ready.

MR. SAPERS: When?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, could you ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to button his lip, please.

THE SPEAKER: Again?

Final question, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is also to the Premier. Why is the Premier so afraid to release the 30 blanked-out pages immediately? Is he scared that Albertans will find out the truth, the real truth that it's hiding from everyone and that really the purpose of this secrecy is to set up private hospitals in this province?

Speaker's Ruling Imputing Motives

THE SPEAKER: It seems to me that question violated just about everything you'd find under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Advanced Education Funding

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans realize that there are many important priority areas that need public attention besides the health care issue that has recently been much politicized by the opposition forces. Last Friday I attended part of the forum organized by the postgraduate students at the U of C reflecting the concerns being voiced about the funding of postgraduate studies. My first question today is to the Minister of Learning. What programs are available to help students finance their studies?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, they are entitled to student loans. As I've said numerous times in this Assembly before, we increased the amount of dollars available for student financial assistance by 22 percent this year, by 50 percent over the next three years, so certainly they are able to get the student loans.

Mr. Speaker, we have a number of scholarships and bursaries that graduate students can qualify for such as the Sir James Lougheed awards, the Ralph Steinhauer awards, government of Alberta graduate scholarships and fellowships, Foundation for the Arts, the Alberta Ukrainian centennial commemorative scholarships, and on and on.

Graduate students are an incredibly important part of any university. They do a lot of research. They're the ones that go forward and get the master's degree, the PhD that is going to put Alberta at the top of the world. They're something that we feel very strongly about, and they're the people that we are trying to help.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among the topics discussed at the forum was the commercialization of research and the involvement of private enterprise in the university's work. My first supplemental question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What is the government's position on the influence of private enterprise on postsecondary research studies?

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. If I might, just before I answer that part, supplement the Minister of Learning a bit on the private bursaries. [interjections] Okay; I'll go on.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please. You pleaded so many times to have an opportunity to respond to a question. You've now been recognized to respond to a question. Please do it.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. One way to help graduate students, Mr. Speaker, is to look at our ICORE program. We are providing $15,000 to $20,000 bursaries for graduate students to be part of our studies in information and communications technology. As well, we have a number of programs that we partner with the private sector on, and we actively encourage private-sector partnerships. We have, for instance, the intellectual infrastructure partnership program, commonly known as I2P2 or, to the engineers, I²P². We have the Alberta oil sands technology research program. We have the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute programs that actively partner with the private sector. They have concrete results.

If I could give you an example; for instance, the Glaxo Wellcome chair in virology that was just announced within the last month. Glaxo Wellcome, a private company, Mr. Speaker, put in almost $2 million. I believe the figure was $1.75 million . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

DR. TAYLOR: It was $1.75 million, and from our budget, my funds, the government put in $1.25 million, an active partnership that created the Glaxo Wellcome chair in virology.

Another example would be the supercomputer, Mr. Speaker. We have one of approximately 40 supercomputers in North America, and it puts us as number one in Canada in terms of supercomputing opportunity. Number one. This was a partnership of the U of A, the U of C, and, once again, government dollars. It's about a $20 million project.

I can see the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert isn't interested in this. It's good news for Albertans.

Speaker's Ruling Brevity

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Innovation and Science, brevity is one of those wonderful things that we can call upon members to do. In considering that the House has now already dealt with the estimates of the hon. minister and, quite frankly, approved the estimates of the hon. minister and that there's been ample opportunity in the estimates to ask questions and debate it, we should actually focus on the question.

I think, hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, we've probably run the gamut today with respect to this.

Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of seven hon. members to participate in Recognitions today, but before we do that, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly the members from the Crystal Park school improvement committee. They are made up of a group of approximately 30 junior high school students from Crystal Park school, located within the constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky. This is a school . . .

MR. MAR: A great school.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Yes, it is indeed a great school. It's a unique school in that it deals with a whole gamut of students: students who are challenged, students who are normal, and students who are indeed exceptional, as these are. These are students who have come to contribute in a very, very significant way. These students are accompanied by Dr. Roger Mestinek, the principal; Mrs. Lisa Kenna, a teacher; Ms Wendy Kimble, a teacher; and Mr. Ken Skiba, a retired teacher. There are 27 students from grade 7, grade 8, and grade 9. The group is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them now to rise and receive the usual warm and cordial welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you someone who probably requires no introduction to you, but through you I would like to introduce to the rest of the Members of the Legislative Assembly my predecessor, the former Member for Medicine Hat and former Deputy Premier, who I see is in your gallery this afternoon. I guess he didn't get enough of this place in the 18 years he spent here, and he needs to come back for a little bit more. I'd ask Mr. Jim Horsman to stand and receive the recognition of all members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a student from Simon Fraser University in B.C. He is the president of the British Columbia PC youth, and his name is Warren Smith. I'd ask him to please rise and be recognized by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you members of the PC youth association, who were kind enough to ask me to join them at their table today at a function in honour of our esteemed Member for Leduc. I wonder if Ms King and her entourage would rise and receive a warm welcome and thanks for their generosity.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Volunteer Calgary Leadership Awards

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday, on April 13, I was honoured to bring greetings from the province of Alberta to 500 Calgary business and community leaders and youth volunteers at the Palliser Hotel. The fourth annual Calgary volunteer leadership awards, which is a local component of national Volunteer Week, is a very worthy recognition event to publicly celebrate the contributions of youth, business, and individuals to Alberta communities.

Volunteers of all ages are everywhere at the forefront of important community areas such as seniors, health, social housing, arts and recreation programming, and education. They make society tick. The individuals and corporations recognized last Thursday have given freely of their leadership ability, and it is critical that we all recognize their great contributions to keep our communities strong and to ensure that Alberta is the best place to live.

Congratulations.

84th Anniversary of Women's Right to Vote

MS BLAKEMAN: This week is the 84th anniversary of Alberta women getting the vote, Mr. Speaker. This is a critical achievement for women, as it entrenched our right to participate in the democratic process. While Alberta was the third province to enfranchise women, in April 1916, we were the first to have an election in which women could exercise that franchise, in June 1917. One of our Famous Five, Louise McKinney, was elected in that election.

However, I will note that aboriginal women or men did not share in this. They were denied a vote until the 1960s, a shocking denial and a blight on our history.

I think women's franchise has helped elect more women to all levels of government. I am proud that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition has 50 percent women in our caucus and is the first Official Opposition in Alberta led by a woman.

So here is my celebratory cheer to the women of Alberta. Congratulations on your ninth decade of democratic participation in this great province, and keep up the good work. Make your voice heard in the next election.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Speaker's Alberta Youth Parliament

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday and Friday, April 13 and 14, 83 grade 10 students from across this great province gathered in this Assembly and experienced democracy in action as representatives of their constituency in Rupertland in Mr. Speaker's Youth Parliament. I am confident that they enjoyed their experience.

I would like to recognize the Royal Canadian Legion, Alberta-Northwest Territories Command, for their sponsorship. The Legion's presence and involvement was also apparent as comrade Stuart Black of Innisfail branch acted as Lieutenant Governor and Danni Dundas of branch 215, one of two female branches in Canada, served as Sergeant-at-Arms. I would like to thank Jasper Place branch 255 for Thursday's banquet. I'd also like to extend to Dr. David McNeil and his officers and staff the thanks from the youth who benefited from your counsel.

To you, Mr. Speaker, and your staff for promoting and organizing the event, to the attending teachers who participated in the sessions, and to the teachers in every grade 10 class across this province for their encouragement to get participation and send quality participants, thank you for promoting democracy.

90th Anniversary of Girl Guides

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, as Girl Guides of Canada celebrate the 90th anniversary of their commitment to girls and women in our country, it is an honour and privilege as legislators to recognize their outstanding contributions today. Guiding has grown from a movement initiated by Lord and Lady Baden-Powell in 1910 to a global movement involving 140 member countries. Alberta has over 21,000 guiding members and 4,500 members in the Edmonton region alone. Honouring the fundamental principles of faith in a Supreme Being, responsibility to our community, and service to others, guiding achieves and promotes the development of young women who have strength of character, strong values, and sensitivity to the needs of others.

April 1 to May 15 marks the Girl Guides' tremendously popular annual cookie-selling campaign. An initiative which began as a home-based idea in 1927 has grown to become a nationwide campaign, with CIBC and SmartStart as national sponsors for 2000-2001.

I am proud today to wear my guiding sash and Canada cord, earned as a guide and cadet, and to acknowledge the significant impact guiding made on my life.

Special acknowledgment and thanks to our guests today. Happy 90th anniversary, and may 2000 prove to be the most successful cookie campaign ever.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Baisakhi 2000

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Saturday over 4,000 members of the Calgary Sikh community proudly celebrated Baisakhi 2000 by walking to Prairie Winds park from the Dashmesh Culture Centre, which is a Sikh temple in northeast Calgary. It was a very cold, snowy day, but the friendship among families and friends of the Sikh community was heartwarming.

Baisakhi is one of the most important events in Sikh history. This is when Khalsa, the brotherhood of the pure, was created over 300 years ago, a brotherhood committed to courage, sacrifice, and equality. Mr. Speaker, this event was an incredibly beautiful and colourful tribute to the spirit and joy of the Sikh community, a spirit that manifests itself in hard work, charity, and justice.

I congratulate the many volunteers, organizers, and members of the Sikh community who spent countless hours to make this event a tremendous success. Wah-i-Guru Ji Ka Khalsa, Wah-i-Guru-Ji-Ki-Fateh.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Brian Staszewski

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate Brian Staszewski for being recognized by Time magazine as a hero for the planet. Brian is one of only four Canadians to receive this honour. The destination conservation program that he founded in 1987 helps schools to save energy, conserve water, and minimize waste production. It is ironic that at a time when the Alberta government shut down its energy efficiency branch, Brian and his team have helped Alberta schools save more than $770,000 through energy conservation and other initiatives.

Destination conservation is now being delivered in 2,700 schools across Canada and is being piloted in 10 U.S. states. In years to come, destination conservation will be delivering environmental education to children in schools throughout the world. Brian's work, which started at the Environmental Resource Centre in Edmonton, is teaching future generations how to conserve resources and make tomorrow's citizens more environmentally responsible.

Our congratulations to Brian and those who work with him.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Tom Whiting

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tom Whiting, an honourable man with a kind and gentle face and manner, died in St. Albert on Sunday, April 9, 2000.

I had the honour of knowing Tom. He was an intuitive, industrious, and tenacious businessman who in the 1980s fought the national energy program for the jobs of his employees and all the oil patch workers in Alberta. Tom established his businesses in central Alberta and created in one of those endeavours a natural environmental product that absorbs and cleans up the oil spillage on your driveway, as an example.

Those who knew Tom and worked with Tom appreciated his loyalty, his hard work, and his wise advice. Tom Whiting will be dearly missed by his family and all of us who had the honour of knowing him.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader on a point of order. Did we deal with it?

MR. DICKSON: In fact you did, sir. You anticipated me very nicely. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: It's been dealt with.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. This is a point of order?

MR. WHITE: A point of order, sir.

Point of Order Provoking Debate

MR. WHITE: I rise to speak to the point of order, sir. It was during a response of the Premier, and I cite two citations, sir, in Beauchesne 417 and 408(2), which reads that "answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate."

You'll also know, sir, that section 416 cites that "a minister may decline to answer," which is logical. In this case, the Premier did not. You'll also note that in that whole section of question and answer there is no citation about the truth, so we believe that to be silent.

The Premier, while not ever wanting to mislead the House, may have misled the House in error in that he declared in the answer which he was giving to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo that all of the information he was requesting will be in due course presented in the public accounts. In public accounts that is, in fact, not the case. There is no breakout of individual expenditures to that extent, nor has there ever been in any of the public accounts, sir.

It may in fact be a correction, and the citation, reading in particular "should not provoke debate," did cause debate from this member and other members.

Thank you, sir.

3:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an interesting way to bring up the question. I think it's fair to say that anytime a question is raised – and you made the admonishment several times yourself during question period. When questions are raised in the manner in which they have been raised in this House, with the preambles that are in them, providing the appropriate answer can be, in fact, seen as well to be provoking debate, but the rules relate to the questions and not to the answers. It's not the answers that provoke debate. It's the questions that provoke debate, and the debate comes in the answer. [interjections] Read the rules. The rules are very clear about it: the question "should not provoke debate." It doesn't say anything about answers.

However, the point that I think the hon. member is trying to clarify is the role of Public Accounts in examining the public accounts of the province. The hon. member, as chair, should well know that when a minister and ministerial staff are summoned before Public Accounts to defend their accounts and defend the spending of money, Public Accounts can ask any question they want, and if they wished to examine on specific expenditures, they could examine on specific expenditures. The fact that they've never done it doesn't mean they can't do it. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: This is not a debate.

As a former member of this very esteemed committee called the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and as one who has spent many a Wednesday morning in this Assembly both going through public accounts as a member and being questioned as a member of Executive Council, my recollection is that for virtually any question under the sun that any hon. member wanted to raise on any specific subject with the requisition of any particular kind of a paper, it was always there.

I hope that hon. members are not taking the view that while a question cannot be provocative or argumentative or opinionated, that being the only rule, to suggest that the answers, however, can be argumentative, opinionated, or anything else is certainly not the case, not the case at all. The rules will apply equally to both the question and that response.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: Now, hon. members, we have before us a Standing Order 40 application. The chair would like to make this observation before we call on the Leader of the Official Opposition with respect to this matter, and that has to do with Standing Order 40. The rule is very, very clear in 40(1).

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 38.

Then the chair would also like to go on to Standing Order 42.

A substantive motion or any amendment shall be in writing before being debated or put from the Chair and shall contain no preamble.

This application under SO 40 certainly does contain a preamble, so let's get to the point. There's been a lot of time already in Notices of Motions with respect to this. Urgency is the question.

Nonconfidence Motion

Mrs. MacBeth:

Whereas this government has undermined, underfunded, understaffed, and destabilized Alberta's public health care system for the past seven years to create an artificial demand for private health care, whereas this government has pursued a policy of promoting private health care to take advantage of the turmoil it has created in the public health care system, whereas all legitimate opinion polls show that a majority of Albertans oppose Bill 11, whereas Albertans have signaled their concern through tens of thousands of letters, e-mails, telephone calls, faxes and through their attendance at town hall meetings and rallies, including 3,000 at Calgary's Round-Up Centre on April 15, 2000, and 7,000 at the Northlands Agricom in Edmonton on April 16, 2000, whereas the government is ignoring the advice and findings of its own report, produced with taxpayers' money, which indicates that private clinics will cost more and produce longer waiting lists, whereas the government has not released the true cost of its massive propaganda campaign, nor has it provided the people of Alberta with the information contained in the blanked-out 30 pages of documents requested by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, whereas the government invoked a form of closure to limit debate at second reading on Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, and shows every indication that it will proceed to further limit debate on Bill 11 with a goal to pass this bill before the Easter recess, and whereas the amendments proposed by the government ignore the many serious concerns with Bill 11, be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to consider the following motion: now therefore be it resolved that this Assembly has no confidence in the government.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't, according to your ruling, take the Assembly's time to reread the wording of the motion, which of course was read into the record this afternoon on notice, but I do think there are some very important issues which justify this motion being put forward as a Standing Order 40 under the rules of the Assembly. I will speak to both the urgency and the pressing necessity of this motion being dealt with this afternoon.

First of all and I think most important is the outpouring of public concern which we have seen over the past two days in both Edmonton and Calgary, where at least 10,000 Albertans came out and raised the very serious concerns they have not only about the legislation before this Assembly but about the government's overall policy and ongoing policy with respect to privatization and about the government itself.

It was unfortunate that no government MLAs that I'm aware of were able to attend the rallies, presumably due to pressing business that they had elsewhere. I do know that for those of us that were at them and at both of them, this is clearly, clearly, Mr. Speaker, an issue of urgent concern in the minds and hearts of Albertans, many of whom are in our galleries today, and I thank them for being there.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the reason for putting forward this motion of nonconfidence in this government arises out of those rallies and, as well, the Premier's indication last Thursday, outside of this Assembly but certainly as a matter of public record, that Bill 11 would be passed before the Easter recess. As I look at my calendar, that means that by Thursday it is the Premier's intention to ram this legislation through the Legislature, and that is offensive to Albertans. That is in fact an extremely pressing issue in the minds of Albertans. Albertans' anger is not just about the substance of the bill. It is about the process this government is using to quell the legitimate voice and the legitimate concerns of Albertans who don't want to see a privatization policy go further.

I think thirdly, Mr. Speaker, with respect to urgency and pressing necessity, there has been a very clear failure on the part of this government to say why this legislation is necessary. We know that the "why" question has not been answered or that it has been contradicted. Secondly, there has been inaccurate information with respect to the impact of this legislation on Albertans. That is clearly, clearly an issue of urgency to the people of this province who believe that it's important that this Assembly and the members of this Assembly accurately reflect not just the content but the impact and the consequences of legislation as defining and dismantling of public health care as this Bill 11 is.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the issue of urgency and pressing concern is the evidence that we brought forward today in the Legislative Assembly which shows that it appears that there may be yet another private hospital waiting in the wings, in this case again in Calgary, with a development proposal for the old Holy Cross hospital site. Of course, we mentioned in the question period today the reality that at least a $32 million renovation was done on that hospital before it was sold off for 4 and a half million dollars. The difference of almost $28 million is not the only issue. The issue of the capital structure and the value of the capital structure, let alone the renovations, is of urgent and pressing concern to the people of this province as they see proposals coming forth in a backdoor way. It would never have been found out if we hadn't been checking records of the development process in Calgary. That wouldn't have come forward.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would say that there is a very real issue of nonconfidence in this government. It is in fact extremely urgent, if we are to listen to the leader of the government and listen to the words that he has given out with respect to his intentions in this legislation. For that reason I think it would in fact be a very clear and positive action which could be taken by the government members to vote this motion, to allow the discussion to take place. Because clearly on the minds of Albertans and certainly those 10,000 at rallies over the last weekend the question is: how can a government proceed with legislation when clearly the majority of Albertans, according to any of the legitimate polls that have been done on this issue, are opposed to it? For that reason I propose this motion, and I look forward to the government coming forward and allowing it to proceed.

For a conclusion, I would simply say, in keeping with your ruling, Mr. Speaker:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to consider the following motion: now therefore be it resolved that this Assembly has no confidence in the government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, under Standing Order 40 unanimous consent of the Assembly is required in order to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to deal with the motion in question.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We are dealing with amendments to Bill 11. I see two members standing. I take it, hon. member, you wish to speak?

MR. SAPERS: With your permission, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We are dealing with amendment A1, section A, if everyone recalls from Wednesday evening and Thursday of last week. The chair will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much. Yes, I've had an opportunity to speak on this amendment previously. I've also had an opportunity to check with some constituents about the ongoing concerns with the bill. One of the questions that was asked of me was: since the government took it upon itself to spend more than a million dollars sending out its annotated householder with Bill 11 and saying that this was the bill they wanted to become law in the province of Alberta, will the government, now that they have proposed some 14 amendments, take the time to send out a new annotated version of the bill, as they would propose to have it amended, so that they can continue to get feedback from Albertans? So far I've been told that the answer to that question is no, that the government has no intention of sending out another householder with the updated version of the bill.

So Albertans are going to be a little bit confused. They won't know whether or not the government was serious when it spent the first million dollars saying, "This is the bill that we want," or whether the government is serious now by saying, "Well, this is the bill that we really meant to send out, the one with all of these amendments." Of course, I can understand why the government would like to keep that level of confusion in the minds of Albertans, because what we see, of course, is that they can reap some benefits from that confusion.

The government trumpeted just today the release of a poll where they claim that 54 percent of Calgarians are overall in support of Bill 11. I found it very curious, though, that in that very same poll where they say that 54 percent of Calgarians are supporting Bill 11, what the government didn't bother to highlight out of that poll is that 55 percent of Calgarians, when asked how familiar they were with Bill 11, said: not very familiar at all. So you have 55 percent of Calgarians saying that they're not very familiar with the bill, yet 54 percent of them said that overall they're in support of the bill.

To further indicate the confusion in the minds of some Calgarians, at least, when asked whether or not those who are willing to pay will be able to receive faster service at privately owned surgical clinics, it's very interesting that some 56 percent of Calgarians agree. So 56 percent of Calgarians in this survey agreed that you should be able to buy your way to the front of the line. Maybe that's why they're supporting the bill, but of course the government says that that's not really an intention of the bill, so we have all kinds of confusion.

I say to the government that if they want to use this poll to bolster their position, good on them. All that this poll tells me is that the government's communication plan has fizzled, that Calgarians, at least, are not well informed. They admit that they're not well informed, and there is some confusion about what the bill itself will permit.

Now, while I'm talking about this poll, I'll say that this April 17 poll showing 54 percent stands in contrast to the February 4 news release where the government was talking about how they had 59 percent support. Of course, February 4 was before the government launched its multimillion dollar campaign. So as a result of the government spending millions of dollars and several weeks trying to sell Bill 11 to Albertans, their support has actually dropped. Again I say that I welcome the government using this particular survey if they think it serves their interest, because it clearly does not.

When we look at what this amendment does, it reinforces another point that the Premier continues to deny. When members of the Official Opposition ask questions regarding the private health scheme of the government, the Premier says: well, we don't have one. But what the bill does and what's even reinforced in this amendment is that there will be private clinics. Now, those people who believe in truth in advertising will say that these private clinics are private hospitals. The government, who chooses to mince words, says that they are approved surgical facilities. But clearly the intent of this bill, as is reinforced in this amendment, is that there will be private surgical services provided. In other words, there will be nonpublic places to go. There will be private businesses that'll be operating under contract to the government of Alberta to provide insured medical services.

For the Premier to say that there is no private health scheme is clearly a fabrication of his making, because the government's own proposed law is to create these private hospitals, as I'll call them and as most people who recognize them will call them, or private approved surgical facilities, in the government's language.

Now, I have no quibble with the amendment in terms of it including dental surgeons in the act, and I have no quibble with the amendment in terms of making it more specific; that is, talking about a range of minor surgical services. What I do quibble with is that again we don't see the distinction drawn out well between major and minor, and we see the removal of the word "person" in terms of "no person" operating a hospital. I have not heard from the Minister of Health and Wellness or any other member of government as to why they dropped that legal corporate definition and instead replaced it with a much more narrow definition of physician or dental surgeon. So I'm still waiting for some answers to the questions that were raised when this amendment was first introduced.

I know I've heard some government members speculate inside the Chamber – it was the Government House Leader, I believe, last week – and I've heard outside through newscasts that they can't understand why members of the opposition are spending so many hours debating just this one seemingly innocuous amendment. Well, if the government would provide some rationale for the amendment, if they would help us understand how it's going to protect medicare and the public health care system in this province, if the government would give us one shred of evidence that they are sincere about the outright banning of the provision of medically insured surgeries in private hospitals, if they would give us the guarantee and the explanation as to how this amendment would accomplish all of that, well, then maybe we could get on with it. Maybe I could even convince my colleagues to support this amendment.

In the absence of any concrete answers, in the absence of that evidence, I don't know why the government would be surprised. In case members of the government haven't noticed, the majority of Albertans don't support them on this initiative, and in case the government hasn't noticed, most Albertans who have taken a look at Bill 11 don't like it. So why it would come as any surprise at all to the Minister of Health and Wellness or the Government House Leader or the Deputy Government House Leader that the opposition is not going to allow quick and easy passage of these amendments is really a surprise to me. Frankly, Madam Chairman, I think the best thing for this government to do is admit that the original draft of Bill 11 was flawed and wrong, admit that these amendments do nothing to rescue the bill, and quickly admit that they're running down the wrong path when it comes to embracing private health care.

The best way to demonstrate to Albertans that they are sincere about protecting medicare is to kill Bill 11 now. Given the input that we've had from thousands and thousands of Albertans in rallies, petitions – and I understand that the numbers are rapidly approaching 75,000 – and the e-mails and the hundreds of letters that each member of this Assembly has received, I would expect that the best way for the government to acknowledge all of that is for the Minister of Health and Wellness to rise as I finish my comments and say: the government does care; the government has listened, and we have decided to not proceed with Bill 11. Then we can move on to some other pressing business in this Assembly.

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Just before I recognize the next speaker, the chair would remind everyone that last week the Chairman of Committees indicated, after some discussion and in keeping with what was said last week, that we will be doing these amendments by amendment, and within the Committee of the Whole stage it is the intent that we look at the clauses principle by principle. So I would ask that we try to keep to that and avoid repetition and be cognizant of relevance to the amendment we have before us, which is amendment A1, section A.

Hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to the proposed amendment

A1, section A. This particular amendment still is causing a tremendous amount of confusion to all Albertans. They are having a great deal of difficulty understanding it, as I am. Again, what this amendment doesn't do is address a question that many people had regarding the lack of definition in the original section. What does section 2 look like in the original section? I looked at that, Madam Chairman. In the original section it says:

No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in

- (a) a public hospital, or
- (b) an approved surgical facility.

Now, when we look at the amendment, we see in 2(1) that "no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except," and of course there we go into that particular part of the amendment. Under section 2(2):

- (a) in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in the case of a physician, or
- (b) in the regulations under section 25(1)(a.1), in the case of a dentist,

in Alberta, except in a public hospital.

Again, what this does is certainly cloud the whole issue of exactly what the government intends to do or the intent of this particular amendment. We do not have a significant change and not a change that is going to address that confusion. People cannot understand how we can switch from "person" to "physician" and how that is going to clear up all of the confusion around this particular part of the amendment.

Now, as well, the original section dealt with an individual, and that will include corporations. Of course, this is the fear that all Albertans have, that this will allow private corporations to come in and run these facilities. There certainly isn't anything in the amendment which will stop this from happening. It now says that "no physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta" except in one of these approved facilities. The government is still calling them approved surgical facilities when in fact they are private hospitals. They are known by many Albertans as private hospitals, and the problem here is that once they are private hospitals, or approved surgical facilities, then these corporations, these facilities are accountable to no one but themselves. Even what is done there does not, under Bill 40, have to be made public, and certainly the medical information that's gathered there on patients is kept private. Again, this amendment does not address that problem as we see it.

As I mentioned, all of this is presently covered under the Medical Profession Act, under subclause (2), and it opposes anyone but physicians benefiting directly from the practice of medicine or owning a business that benefits from the practice of medicine. There certainly is an absence of reference in this whole amendment to corporations, and of course that really is what not only Albertans but all Canadians are concerned about, that we are constantly moving down this road to privatization.

You know, this is one of those areas that should be determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and of course along the same lines the college is the one that should determine what is minor surgery or what is major surgery. This is a very, very important component of all that is happening. Much of what this whole bill is about and what it depends on is this distinction between minor and major surgery. The College of Physicians and Surgeons, Madam Chairman, certainly don't want to get into these decisions that are based on politics and not on medical decisions. They have informed the government on many occasions that the government is the one responsible for providing the legislative guidance.

Certainly this bill does not do that at this particular time. These amendments that have been proposed will certainly not do this, and what this government is presently doing is forcing the College of Physicians and Surgeons to make decisions in their bylaws. You would think, upon reading the bill, that the bylaws pertaining to this were in place, but they're absolutely not. There are no bylaws in place under current legislation which will govern this.

So, again, we don't have any distinction here in this bill on the difference between a major and minor surgery. I note this with quite a bit of concern and quite a bit of interest. In northeast Edmonton we had Marion Spencer, who for years, since the late 1980s, pushed for the Northeast medical centre. Through all this time she certainly realized the importance of having an emergency component of that particular facility because emergency departments for any surgery are a must. The ICUs certainly have to be available.

What we see here is that "the College of Physicians and Surgeons decides what can be provided safely in a surgical facility." Now, these are the words of the government in their Coles Notes version of the bill that was sent out to the people of Alberta. When we start looking here at "an approved surgical facility" in section 2(1)(b), then certainly it just leaves too much confusion as to exactly how Albertans are covered.

With those few comments, at this particular time, Madam Chairman, I would certainly like to take my seat and listen to the concerns of other members of this Assembly. I thank you very much for this opportunity.

MR. JONSON: For the record, since this debate on this straightforward amendment has gone on for some time, I'd like to repeat what was stated in my opening remarks with respect to these amendments, and that is that the amendments in part A, section 2, deal with making it clear that when it comes to providing surgical services in this province, it is not exclusively done by physicians. There are also surgeries that are done by dentists. It makes it very clear that the College of Physicians and Surgeons will deal with physicians, pertaining to the standards that they have, and that dentists will have their responsibilities and their identity, as they do now, with respect to providing for bylaws and regulations pursuant to their practice in a public hospital or in an approved surgical facility. That is all this amendment is, Madam Chairman. It's important to have that clarification. It is something that has been drawn to our attention by the dental profession, and that is what that amendment is about.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I am happy to rise for the second time to speak to this particular amendment that is before us in the Legislature. Unfortunately, I have to rise a second time and speak to this amendment for two reasons. The first is that the minister of health, in spite of his comments just a few seconds ago, hasn't addressed the concerns that I brought up previously on this amendment, even though that was last week. I believe it was Wednesday evening when I last spoke to this amendment. I had expected by this particular time to see some response in Hansard.

In reviewing the comments that have been made since that time, I don't see any specific references to my concerns. However, Madam Chairman, in reviewing those responses, I did read the Government House Leader's comments on this amendment from Thursday past, and I do have some concerns with the items that he brought forward at that time. So in the spirit of debate in Committee of the Whole on this amendment, I would like to respond to some of those points that he made.

He talked about the initiation of this policy. He reflected that when the policy was first put on the table in November, it talked about how

- no person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in
 - (a) a public hospital, or
 - (b) an approved surgical facility.

One of the changes that was made in translating that policy into legislation, into this act [we see before us], was to add subsection (2) which said:

No person shall provide a major surgical service, as described in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in Alberta except in a public hospital.

The part that I have a problem with, Madam Chairman, and that is important to us today is the part where he talks about the changes made in translating that policy. It's the people of Alberta who have said to us that the changes this government made in translating that policy into legislation do not reflect their wishes in any part, particularly with regard to the approved surgical facility portion that we see in this legislation and in this particular amendment in section 2(1)(b). It's the problem that the government has in translating their policy into legislation that is the issue here.

The government, I believe, has not properly listened to Albertans in that regard. Even when they got a second chance in terms of bringing forward the amendments to this legislation, they still haven't heard what people have said, even though the message is coming through very clearly. Even though in the past the Premier has made his reputation on changing whatever he needed to change in order to reflect the wishes of the people, for some reason this time he has completely abandoned the majority of the people in this province when it comes to this legislation. Even though he's tried to sugarcoat private hospitals under the new heading of "an approved surgical facility," he isn't fooling anybody and certainly not the people in this province, who will be deciding in a few short months who to re-elect and who not to. I think what we need to reflect upon when we talk about this amendment are the kinds of problems that occur when the government, who doesn't listen to the people of the province, translates its policy into legislation. That is what we need to talk about.

The Government House Leader then said that he believed that the addition of this subsection in the act responded to the concerns of Albertans and particularly to the concerns of his constituents. Well, Madam Chairman, my constituency is a next-door neighbour to this particular minister's constituency, and I can tell you firsthand from the number of phone calls and conversations I've had with those people that this minor amendment we see here does not do anything to move forward to represent their particular concerns, except with the part that pulls out the regulations in the case of a dentist. That speaks to concerns that dentists had, but it doesn't speak to the majority of the constituents I have heard from in that constituency. I've logged over a hundred phone calls now from Edmonton-Whitemud residents, not to mention the number of people that I have met at different functions in and around the city since this legislation has been tabled. This is minor. It's in fact mickey mouse, I would say, in terms of any kind of substantive amendment and doesn't address the concerns that I have heard.

People are still having particular concerns with the "approved surgical facility" really being a private hospital. They would like that issue addressed. Why isn't this government just prepared to call it what it is, what people understand it as? Instead of trying to wordsmith or spin-doctor around the descriptors here, just call a spade a spade and put it on the table and say, "We're pushing private health care" – people know that's what they're doing; that's what people hear out there – and not the kind of speaking with a forked tongue that we've seen come from all members of the government on this particular legislation.

The minister talked about a meeting that he had in his constituency on January 13 “where people said that they were concerned about the types of services that would be provided in a surgical facility.” Of course they are, and we continue to have those concerns, certainly much more recently than January 13, Madam Chairman. I wonder that he hasn’t been out in his constituency since then with his ears open and listening to his constituents. If he had been, we would have seen a much more substantive amendment come forward and not one that just laid out two very small identifiers in terms of minor amendments to the bill.

I’ll go on to talk about what else he had to say in his debate. He talks about how, in his opinion, one of the important ones brought forward into their own caucus discussion and in having some of the concerns drafted into the act was subsection (2), which said that major surgical services must be done in a public hospital, and what is major would not be a political decision but would be a medical decision, as determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Yet what did we see happen last week, Madam Chairman? A political decision was made on the use of MRIs and the purchase of MRIs and jumping the queues in this province.

So what’s it going to be? The government has to be able to say, “Yes, they’re going to be political decisions,” or, “No, they’re not going to be political decisions.” If they’re not going to be political decisions, then they’ve got to get their nose out of health care in all regards in terms of these kinds of decisions. We had MRIs and foldable lenses last week, both issues that were purely politically driven decisions.

MR. BONNER: Ten million dollars and counting.

MS CARLSON: Ten million dollars and counting is exactly right.

In no case did he adhere to what he stated was his own policy when, in speaking to this amendment last Thursday afternoon, he said that “what is major would not be a political decision but would be a medical decision.” Well, that doesn’t wash with any of us, Madam Chairman, because we’ve seen the exact reverse happen in the very same week in which he spoke these words. I would like that minister to stand up and defend himself and these particular words.

Perhaps the minister of health could shed some light on this as well. Will he define specifically for us what are going to be political decisions in terms of health care and what specifically are going to be medical decisions made by the College of Physicians and Surgeons? We have two different messages coming from this government in the same week. We have two examples in the same week where they made political decisions and only one instance where a minister stood up and said that they would be medical decisions. Certainly before I am prepared to vote on this particular amendment, I expect an answer to that question, and I expect an answer that’s in enough depth that we can take it to the people of the province and ask them for their opinion on that.

He went on to talk about concerns that were translated into the act and said that it was a very, very important section and something that’s been entirely overlooked by the opposition in their quest to have everything determined to be a private hospital and very clearly is not a question of everything being a private hospital, a very clear and distinct difference between what is a hospital and what is a designated surgical facility or approved surgical facility under this section.

Well, Madam Chairman, first of all, that sentence didn’t make any sense, and he still hasn’t convinced anybody that I’ve talked to over the weekend that in fact there is a clear distinction between a private hospital and a designated surgical facility. A designated surgical facility will do medical procedures, and it is a for-profit operation. It is a private hospital.

So he has done nothing to clear up any division in terms of definitions, because in fact, I submit, Madam Chairman, there is no difference. I think that is something that those folks listening to us in the gallery would agree with. In the debate that we’ve heard here, in the hours of debate that we’ve heard at the different readings and now to this amendment, this government cannot defend the difference between a private hospital and an approved surgical facility because in fact they do exactly the same processes and procedures.

He goes on to say:

Specifically, then, instead of putting in an artificial designation about how long one might stay in this place . . .

He is talking, I assume, about the approved surgical facilities.

Because, after all, we’re not talking about hotels, where overnight stays are the order of the day. We’re talking about a surgical facility, which is a medical facility, and the question about how long one stays in a medical facility is a medical question. Whether it’s appropriate for a person to stay in a medical facility is obviously a question which must be determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons as to what is medically appropriate and whether the facility itself has the type of instruments, the type of technology, the type of people, the type of medical staff which would make it safe and make it reasonable to do the procedure in that facility and to stay in that facility for postoperative follow-up and observation.

Well, in fact once again we have a series of fallacies in this statement, Madam Chairman. This government has trotted out time after time after time the Shouldice clinic in Ontario as a good example of how private hospitals have operated for a number of decades in this country with approval of the federal government and have been a value-added service. They forget, when they talk about that, that that facility was grandfathered under the old regime. They forget to tell us that that facility also has to return its profits to the government of Ontario, so in fact it isn’t a for-profit operation, as is being proposed and supported and promoted by this particular government. There are some unique differences.

Also, with specific reference to this paragraph, Madam Chairman, there are also some unique differences. The minister says that for “a person to stay in a medical facility is obviously a question which must be determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.” But if you use Shouldice as the example and what happens in Ontario, that’s not the case at all. Shouldice has a mandatory three-night stay for patients for minor hernia operations. The same Ontario hospitals do complicated hernia operations and also minor operations as day surgery. Clearly the direction from the college in Ontario has to be that it is reasonable to do hernia operations as day surgeries, yet the private clinic, that this government promotes as a good example, has a mandatory three-night stay.

So which is it again, Madam Chairman? They’re speaking out of both sides of their mouth. Clearly they’re not giving us the kind of statement that we could take to the bank in terms of whether or not it’s really going to be the College of Physicians and Surgeons who determines the medically appropriate time to stay in a facility, be it a public hospital or be it a private hospital that they’re calling an approved surgical facility. It isn’t going to be the college that makes those decisions. It’s going to be profit that makes those decisions, profit motivated by how much money they can milk out of the government system and therefore out of taxpayers’ pockets.

We haven’t seen any clear kind of statement regarding this in terms of defining the time periods or who is going to be making those decisions. This minister is jumping to conclusions, Madam Chairman, about who’s going to be making the decisions in terms of the length of stay. Clearly, if they follow any of the examples that they have trotted forth in this Legislature and out in the public domain in terms of what they're going to allow and what they aren't going to allow, they've got conflicting evidence everywhere. This decision is going to be made either by politicians or by private clinics and not by those who are best able to make those decisions. Hopefully, the minister can also clear up some of those issues and talk about them.

Once again, he stated that the College of Physicians and Surgeons is going to be determining whether the facility has the type of technology to make it safe and reasonable to do the procedure. Well, we know now, again, that that isn't the existing case in this province. We know that the College of Physicians and Surgeons would like to have more MRIs in the publicly funded system so that the queues could be shortened up. That would be a good example of having adequate resources in terms of the type of technology, but that hasn't happened here, Madam Chairman. What's happened? There's been so much pressure on the public system because of inadequate supplies of the proper technology that we have huge waiting lists which have driven people to move out of that queue and into the shorter queue, where they have to pay money.

Speaking of queues, Madam Chairman, I would just like to put on the record a clarification for the Premier, who doesn't seem to get it in terms of queue-jumping and what that means. It doesn't mean that people in the for-profit queue are going to be able to move from the back of that lineup to the front of the line. What it means is that people who are now in the long public queue will jump across to the private queue and pay additional moneys, more than what they're already paying out of their tax dollars, to move up in terms of the time period to get to the front of the line in order to get the medically necessary service.

When the Premier talks about addressing queue-jumping, he only talks about moving from the back of a short lineup to the front of that line. In fact, there are two jumps that are made in queue-jumping. The first is to jump out of the public line into the private line, which gives them a shorter waiting time to get this service. Some people can afford to do that, but we have a lot of people in this province who absolutely cannot afford to do that for a variety of reasons. We're saying that those people are disenfranchised by this legislation and are not enfranchised by any minor adjustments that are made by this particular amendment. That, Madam Chairman, is an issue that needs to be addressed, and we'd specifically like the minister of health to address that. What about the jump from the long public queue to the short private queue? That in itself is queue-jumping, and it needs to be resolved.

To go on with the Government House Leader's comments that he made in terms of this amendment, he said:

So instead of putting an arbitrary or irrational definition about 12 hours in the act, what we've clearly done is put in subsection (2) the concept that major surgeries must be done in "a public hospital."

So let's talk about major surgeries. Who decides what major surgeries are?

DR. OBERG: Doctors.

MS CARLSON: Well, good for you to say that, because in fact this government said that hernia operations were not major surgeries, that hip operations were not major surgeries, and the doctors said that hip operations were major surgeries. The College of Physicians and Surgeons came out and said that hip surgeries were major surgeries and were going to be too complicated to put into private clinics.

So, Madam Chairman, the point on that is that there are all kinds of conflicting information out there. Today it's a major surgery; tomorrow it's a minor surgery. Who decides? Who decides at the end of the day is not the college, as they're pretending is happening out there, but who decides at the end of the day is the almighty buck and how long the lineup is. We've seen examples of that this week with the MRI decisions that have come down. That's who ends up deciding. Those are the wrong people to be deciding, the wrong concept to be deciding who gets health care and who doesn't and what is minor surgery and what isn't.

So those are the issues that we need to see addressed, and I'm hoping that the minister of health will get up and give us some explanations to those, because at the end of the day it's certainly not the college who is going to be defining what is major and minor when we get to the kinds of services that are borderline at this time in terms of technology and in terms of access.

When the Government House Leader talked about the ability of the college to make the decisions on what is medically appropriate, part of that was the type of people and the type of medical staff which would make it safe and make it reasonable. Well, they don't address in here, when they talk about the "approved surgical facility," where they're going to get the staff. They're going to scoop them up from the public system, Madam Chairman. Then where are we going to be in the public system? It's going to be way worse than it is now. So why haven't they addressed that issue?

We don't see any kinds of incentives to be training more doctors or to be training more nurses or the other appropriate staff that's going to be required here. If this government were serious about its commitment to fix public health care, then what they would have done is put a huge push within the system to attract doctors and nurses from outside Alberta and to properly train those inside. There's no doubt that we are going to be facing a huge shortage of doctors in the near future, and it hasn't been addressed by this government at all.

They think that by privatizing, they're going to solve all the problems, but we know in fact that that isn't true. All that's going to happen is that more people are going to be forced into the private system because they're not going to get access in the public system. Why? Because we're not going to have the proper staffing components to properly support them. Those people will have been attracted out of the public system and into the private system, and we'll have an acute shortage. We have a shortage now, Madam Chairman, but it's going to be acute soon in the public system. That has not been addressed in this amendment, and it's too bad. It's too bad that when the minister was referencing his remarks last Thursday afternoon, he didn't talk about how he was going to solve that particular problem.

Then he spends quite a bit of time talking about the College of Physicians and Surgeons on a medical basis determining what's major surgery and that it is open to them, of course, in their bylaws to determine whether someone needs a 12-hour stay or a 24-hour stay. So once again, Madam Chairman, he is unable to tell us there how it can be that in Ontario all hernia operations are day surgeries and they are not . . . Oh, my 20 minutes are up. Sorry. I'm not done. I'll be back.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm pleased this afternoon to rise and speak to amendments under section 2. As referenced in my earlier remarks, I'm still struggling and have not received any information from the government as to how insured surgical services or major surgical services are defined in this province, which leads me to assume that we are going down a road of defining basic and enhanced, public and private, insured and noninsured, minor and major, covered and not covered health services in Alberta. This is the subliminal route the government has us embarking upon in the discussion of this amendment before us this afternoon. I for one am not prepared nor have I been convinced that this is the route that we need to be taking in this province, and again the minister has not provided any additional supplements to clarify this for the public.

I could not find in the definitions section of the act nor in the accompanying amendments any definitions for “insured surgical service” or insured “major surgical service.” I’m wondering: as the professional colleges for physicians and dentists contemplate how they might want to instruct their members, how are those professionals in fact to know what services do or don’t fall under those terms of “insured surgical service” or “major surgical service” when the government has not defined them? I mean, really, we’re navigating the ship in the dark. We’re embarking on a course which the government declines to tell us what the destination is. They decline to tell us who is steering the ship. They decline to tell us what stops we might be making on the way or who the additional passengers might be that we might be taking on this journey.

I’m wondering this afternoon when in fact the government will get around to defining the particular terminology that they’ve chosen to use in the amendments and when they might be proposing to share that with the public and with the members of this Assembly. I think it’s vital. It’s vital because if their true intent is to define basic and enhanced or to define insured and noninsured services, then let’s do that at the onset, Madam Chairman. Let’s be transparent about that to the public. Let’s be clear that in the future there will be a list of services which the Alberta health care card will cover and there will be a list of services for which Albertans will need to get supplemental insurance in order to access. Really, at this point in time we’re all in the dark as to what services might fall under either heading.

Additional information that I’ve asked for on at least two occasions in this Assembly and have yet to receive is clarification with respect to how the U.S. trade representative’s office interprets Bill 11, the amendments and terminology used within it, and their commitment to not utilize any of the reservations or clauses in NAFTA to access health care services for market purposes in Alberta, utilizing the bill as it’s proposed or the amendments proposed in this Assembly. So in light of the fact that the minister has not provided any additional clarification with respect to that, I thought it might be useful this afternoon to in fact talk about the U.S. trade representative’s interpretation of insured . . .

Chairman’s Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I will go back to what I said originally. Last Wednesday and Thursday a determination was made in concordance with the wishes of particularly your caucus and the other opposition caucus that we would abide by going through these amendments principle by principle. Presently we are dealing with amendment 1A, section A, which does not talk about NAFTA. We are dealing with this, and I would hope, in keeping with the spirit – I’ve had the opportunity to read what several members of your caucus said in regards to going section by section, amendment by amendment – that we keep with that if we can. We are dealing with section 2, as you indicated when you first started to speak, so I’d ask you to come back to relevance, please.

MRS. SLOAN: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chairman. I will try to abide by your suggestions with respect to that, but I would point out again: exactly how is an approved surgical facility defined in these amendments? How is it defined for the purposes of Bill 11? How is it defined for the purposes of all of our other health legislation? How is it defined by our College of Physicians and Surgeons and the college of dentistry? How is it defined by NAFTA and the accompanying internal trade agreement? This is an issue that’s at the heart of this bill and of this amendment. We have no clarification before us, despite the fact that we’ve asked multiple times for the government to explicitly define their intent and their definitions.

There is a great deal of relevance to the discussions that occurred between Oregon and the U.S. trade representative’s office and how that might apply to Alberta, because Oregon in fact is one of the states that has gone the furthest in defining insured and noninsured services. They have approximately a 600-service long list of those services covered by the public plan and an accompanying list of those not covered. So when Oregon wrote to the United States trade representative asking a series of detailed questions about their health services list, they received the following reply, and I’m just citing some excerpts for the purposes of clarification in this House today.

While the U.S. trade representative’s office “did not include answers to each of the detailed questions posed by the Oregon Attorney General and fails [as well] to define key terms,” they offered the following response:

Describe and explain the scope of Annex II-U-5, including the definition of “public purpose,” and give examples of “similar services” provided on a “commercial basis” that might result in exclusion of state law enforcement, social or other state government services from this reservation . . . The reservation in Annex II (II-U-5) is intended to cover services which are similar to those provided by a government, such as child care or drug treatment programs. If those services are supplied by a private firm, on a profit or not-for-profit basis, Chapter Eleven and Chapter Twelve apply. If a private firm provides those services on contract to the government, then it is considered government procurement.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair is hoping that you will be tying this to amendment A1, section A, dealing with section 2.

MRS. SLOAN: I absolutely will.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Soon.

MRS. SLOAN: The most direct statement from the U.S. trade representative’s office on the scope of social services annex in NAFTA was this: “If (social) . . . services,” to which health would apply, “are supplied by a private firm, on a profit [emphasis] basis, Chapter Eleven and Chapter Twelve apply,” Madam Chairman, which means that NAFTA is engaged.

So what we are saying in the amendment is that there are going to be provisions to protect our public system. I’m going to take the government’s word that what they’re going to do is protect insured services and protect major surgical services from for-profit delivery. But what about the noninsured services, and what about the minor surgical services that are not mentioned? These are the two areas, Madam Chairman, which by de facto we must debate. We must acknowledge that these go hand in glove.

Insured surgical services and going down that path will result in an accompanying list of uninsured services. The definition of a major surgical services list will hand in glove result in a list of minor surgical services being offered. This is the tangled web that the amendments proposed to Bill 11 weave, and this is exactly the area that will engage NAFTA. The uninsured surgical services and the minor surgical services, which most certainly will accompany the definition of these two areas under these amendments in this section, will be the areas in which the private sector, the for-profit sector, can look to to expand their foothold in market-share delivery in Alberta.

Let me emphasize that those particular corporate entities will not be restricted to Alberta-based companies. That is clear. Again, for the record, we haven't had any additional information. I have called upon the government to table in this Assembly an assessment, an analysis, of Bill 11 and the accompanying amendments by the U.S. trade representative's office, and they have declined to provide that, Madam Chairman.

Let me move on. I have questioned the government's priorities relative to the emphasis on surgical services that Bill 11 and the amendments embody. Why is it that this government is choosing to put so much political policy, fiscal resources into emphasizing and highlighting?

The Friends of Medicare, which have been an absolutely stellar group in prompting debate on this subject, in their newsletter of February 2000 raised the following questions relative to Bill 11. They asked the questions: "What is to protect us when he's gone?" Meaning the Premier. Or what is protect us when this government is gone and there might be other representatives whose definitions or interpretations of the bill may be somewhat different? They also ask:

When and why did [the Premier] change his mind? In 1995, he argued vigorously with the federal government that the Canada Health Act should be changed to allow private clinics to charge patients "facility fees." That was two-tiered medicine in its purest form. Even just a year ago, he was saying that he could "see nothing wrong with a little two-tiered health care." The original Bill 37 would have permitted this. If he did change his mind very recently, what is to prevent him from changing his mind again?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On this particular amendment, hon. member.

MRS. SLOAN: Yes, Madam Chairman. I think the issue, again, is that this government has been somewhat all over the map with respect to their decisions, priorities, and initiatives in health care. We've gone from savage cuts in the early '90s . . .

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, this is the kind of debate we have in second reading. We have an amendment before us called amendment A1. I ask you to come back. I want to hear some relevance to do with amendment A1, section A.

MRS. SLOAN: Well, when the government was implementing their savage cuts in the early '90s, I happened to be asked in a previous position to sit on the health plan co-ordination project by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, which at that time was the hon. Member for Drumheller-Chinook, the intergovernmental affairs minister now. One of the items that was placed on the agenda of that committee was in fact to embark on the definition of insured and noninsured services. So this is entirely relevant, Madam Chairman, because the terminology and the differentiation of insured, noninsured, major, or minor surgical services has been something that's been percolating in this government since 1993.

MRS. SLOAN: Here we find it today in the amendment. We find it before us now finally on record, but the problem is, Madam Chairman, that they haven't brought an accompanying amendment to say what would be uninsured or to say what would be minor. As I said, this is the haphazard, all over the map type of response we've seen from this government on health care.

I have also questioned: why are we only looking at surgical services and not the equally important services for mental health, for palliative care, for home care, and public health, all of which have been absolutely, dramatically, appallingly underfunded by this government for at least the last decade? We didn't see any mention of children's mental health or adult mental health in the throne speech this year.

All the while the government seems to wish to torque a discussion about contracting out and private delivery of surgical services when there is a whole mosaic of issues that need to be addressed in health care, something which The Rainbow Report tried to bring forward certainly in a more substantive and comprehensive way than Bill 11 or the amendments before us this afternoon propose to do.

The other thing that I find somewhat concerning about the amendments before us is that we may in fact find that insured services and major surgical services become defined by regulations, and that causes me great concern, Madam Chairman, for this reason. Regulations are established by this government and approved by this government by an order in council. We've had unpleasant experiences with that in the course of this government's term. The most prominent that comes to mind is when they decided that they would retract the regulation that required registered nurses to be in charge of operating rooms. That happened in 1995 without any consultation, any public notice, no notice even to the professional groups affected. What occurred subsequent to that was an immediate widespread lobby by primarily the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses urging the government to rescind their order in council and reinstate that regulation. In fact that was done, and registered nurses continue to be in charge of operating room theatres today.

The risk that we fall into when we look at how significantly and dramatically regulatory definitions of major surgical services or insured surgical services could be is that we could in fact find ourselves somewhere down the road with the cabinet defining exactly what falls under those terms. Again, there is no requirement for public consultation. There's no requirement for public notice. There's no requirement for professional bodies to be notified. That is something, Madam Chairman, that the public is just not prepared to accept. They do not believe that this government has demonstrated or produced the substantive evidence that we need to go the route of defining what is insured and noninsured in Alberta or in Canada in our health care system.

Regrettably, the whole discussion of amendments to Bill 11 is somewhat moot. Really, I would state once again that Bill 11 is not a salvageable bill. It's not a bill that with amendments of any form is salvageable. It doesn't go where the public think we should go in health care. It doesn't heed the public's concerns over what has been happening in our health care system. It doesn't offer any substantive proof that the current inaccessibility that exists . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair is going to interject again. Basically, what you're talking about now is second reading debate. We are within the Committee of the Whole stage. We are dealing with amendments. Let's get on with amendment A1, section A, please.

MRS. SLOAN: Well, all right. Let me try this route. The longest waiting list that we have currently in the province exists in the area of surgical services: coronary surgery, hip surgery, MRIs, and orthoscopic surgery. Will those areas fall under the definition of an insured surgical service or a major surgical service? I ask the minister of health because we don't know this afternoon. Would those areas in fact be covered by these definitions?

DR. OBERG: What kind of surgery are you talking about?

MRS. SLOAN: Orthoscopic, hip, coronary. I repeat them for the hon. Minister of Learning.

The point is that without that assurance the public can have no faith that the extensive waiting lists that exist in those areas in Alberta today, where thousands of Albertans have to wait for surgery, are going to be reduced by this bill. There is nothing even in the research, the government's own research, that can prove conclusively that these amendments will reduce waiting lists for surgical services. That is one of the most critical issues that we as legislators should be debating this afternoon. We have citizens in this province who are waiting upwards of six months for surgery. They are deteriorating. They're suffering pain and hardship.

I thank you for the opportunity to make those remarks this afternoon.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. I see two members opposite. Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: That's fine. Sorry. Can I defer to my colleague, please?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. As I stand today to talk about the proposed amendment A1, Albertans are still having great concerns with both the main bill sections and now amendment A1. As we spoke on the main bill and as members of the Official Opposition said, Bill 11 does little to protect Albertans. I also closed my speech at that particular time stressing that the bill is so narrow that any tinkering would be lost in the actual overhaul. Albertans have, you know, no confidence in the actual tinkering with such a bill.

Now, we look at A1, section A: "No physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in . . . a public hospital." As I spoke last week in one of my times up here, I spoke of a four-year-old boy dying in a surgical suite set up because of the anesthetists being forced out of the main hospitals and wondering why they can't get more surgery time. Also, the surgeon, who was forced out because of lack of surgical time, had to slow down to a point that he was at a snail's pace. Then he goes over to a surgical suite where there is very little backup. We know there was no backup because there was a problem and he had to be rushed off to the hospital. This child died because of a pecking order.

Last week I was accused by the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti of having no confidence in the doctors. I have confidence in 99 percent of the doctors in this province. Who I do not have any confidence in is the 1 percent of the doctors that are pushing this. They're pushing this for their own profit. They're the same people that are creating the problems within our health system right now due to the fact that they're playing their pecking order, that they're the kings of the castles, and everybody underneath them has to fight to get what case they can get. We look at creaming from the top. If we do go with this new legislation, Bill 11, this same 1 percent of the doctors will be creaming from the top if they aren't controlled and aren't kept within the system. I don't care how many truth squads you send out there. You're not going to change my mind on that particular item.

We do look at the cost factor. We do look at approved surgicals as being the myth that we are going to save money. Are we going to save money? No. Chances are there's going to be more money spent. You know, we look at the faulty assumptions in Bill 11. Bill 11 is based on the assumption that private health care costs less and helps shorten waiting lists, but there's no data behind that. There is absolutely no data at all. Everything that has been done around the world, whether it's in England, Australia, or New Zealand, has come back to the point that the neoconservatives of the time – the full circle has gone around to proving that they were wrong, the Margaret Thatchers of this world pushing their agenda at the time, as she did. This woman is rated anywhere in history as how to destroy health in Great Britain. We look at New Zealand and what they're trying to rebuild today.

We have to look at the whole thing, even starting with A1, as being faulty to the point of why no physicians or dentists shall provide a major surgical service, as described, outside the actual public hospitals. It's because of write-ups in the paper: boy's death prompts investigation. If that death had been in the family of someone else within here, we'd be very, very concerned.

I think that it is disconcerting that members here just want to see how fast these amendments can go through. We're going to be here for days just on amendments, and maybe some of these will be picked up, maybe some of the items we said last week. Maybe the item on MRIs was picked up, but why weren't they part of the original bill? We look at the original bill and look at the faultiness of it but legally totally within all parameters, totally everything that the lawyers that this government actually paid to put this together. Did they consult with anybody but that 1 percent of the doctors that have lots to gain and little to lose? Experience from other countries suggests that this would not be the case; that is, that they're saving money. All available evidence shows that private health care costs more and leads to longer waits for treatment, not shorter ones.

The definition of a hospital, Madam Chairman, is something that should be brought into this amendment for sure. Section 1 of the bill says that the private hospital will be banned in Alberta, but the bill goes on to say that the private surgical facilities will be allowed to perform a wide range of procedures that are currently performed only in public hospitals. These private surgical facilities will be a hospital in all but name. So the promise to ban private hospitals, contained in section 1, is virtually meaningless.

Conflict of interest in this particular amendment, Madam Chairman, is that Bill 11 says that the private surgical facilities will only be allowed to perform minor surgeries, but what constitutes minor surgeries is never defined. The job of deciding which surgicals are for minor or enhanced or contracting out is left up to the College of Physicians and Surgeons. The problem with this is that some of the doctors sitting on the college's board have personal financial interests in the private surgical companies. This is clear conflict of interest. That's going back to that 1 percent I talked about before. These same doctors in that 1 percent surely do have a vested interest, whether or not they are the biggest funders of this particular government or they help to pay off somebody's – well, maybe it's a debt. We have to keep wondering about that.

Public hospitals are something that we have to protect. We cannot look at it in any other direction but to think that our hospitals – and maybe it's the health care people, the ones that have been totally decimated over the last few years. When we look at the health system in this province, where 10,000 medical people, from the janitors to the nurses' aides, the LPNs, the nurses – and chasing the doctors out of the country has created a void. As I talked last week, the void didn't just happen in this particular province. It's happened throughout Canada, the void of lack of planning, the void of not playing the game, of paying down your debt at any cost but forgetting that technology has changed. Technology and pharmaceuticals have exceedingly jumped, quadrupled over the last few years. Imagine what it's going to be over the next 10 years, if it has changed as it has now.

If the federal government and the governments of all the provinces and the territories aren't willing to sit down and get working at it, we're going to be sitting here – we think of what's happened over the last few years. The health system has only been looked at a few times. It's exceeding the costs of what's happened over the last few years. It should be an ongoing study. It should be an ongoing factor. Instead of this type of legislation coming forward and trying to play the heavy hand in the country, this province would've been better off coming out with a direction and working at the Premiers' conferences, pushing for a change, not looking at it and trying to play politics, what we're seeing with the federal government system and a member from this Legislature running for the position of leader of an opposition party.

You know, Madam Chairman, we look at different questions that should be brought forward. This government continues to tell us that it needs to find new approaches to health care. They claim that one of the approaches is to allow overnight stays in surgical facilities. Well, it might be an idea, but it's a bad one. Allowing overnight stays in private surgical facilities which are not fully equipped is, according to members of the department of public health sciences at the University of Alberta, a danger to the health of patients and thus ethically unacceptable.

Questions around this. If a patient experienced complications, like that of the surgical suite, beyond the ability of the surgical centre to treat, how are these private surgical facilities going to cope? Another question about the surgical suites, Madam Chairman: will this government admit that its policy of pushing for overnight stays in surgical facilities will not improve health care but will put the lives of Albertans at risk by placing them in clinics which are not equipped to deal with real emergencies? Now, we do see that they've actually taken action on the dental suites.

Looking closer, when this debate first came forward a few months ago, we were talking about hip operations. Then when that was disproved by the AMA, they came out with hernia operations. Well, we do know how little mistakes can happen and how a 21-year-old mother from Lloydminster, who has two young children, has no arms and legs. That's just astronomically terrible. I mean, it should bring tears to everybody in this room, how that can actually happen.

A question around health care professions. Economists and researchers continue to tell us that the government policies will undermine the health care system in Alberta and possibly put lives of Albertans at risk. Will this government do the right thing and listen to the evidence and abandon this private hospital policy?

You know, Madam Chairman, in its policy statement on the delivery of surgical services, the government claimed that there would be no two-tiered medicine in Alberta. However, the report prepared by the Institute of Health Economics for this government states that if there are no regulations to prevent the offering of enhanced services in private facilities, two-tiered medicine will be the result. A question around this: why is it this government's policy to allow the provisions of enhanced services to private facilities when this leads to two-tiered medicine, as we have already seen with the cataract surgeries in Alberta?

It was pointed out last week in a number of speeches by our members about the cataract operations in Calgary, that people can queue-jump, in the case of money $2,000 per eye. Now we see that finally the government is starting to talk about maybe they're going to put more control on queue-jumping. But believe me, who's going to monitor that? Who's going to tell if you actually paid the $2,000 to queue-jump? I wouldn't. Most of these people wouldn't even tell that story.

Why does the government turn a blind eye to the charging and the queue-jumping that is already creating a two-tiered system in Alberta? Will this government prohibit the offering of enhanced services in private facilities to prevent the two-tiered system that the Institute of Health Economics study warns about? Will the government prohibit the offering of enhanced services in private facilities to prevent those who can pay for enhanced services from getting quicker treatment?

Now, it was also brought up last week – and another one of my statements was: grabbing in the air, we're looking at different ways of what we can do in the private surgeries. One member from the other side brought up tonsils. Well, talking to a number of medical people over the weekend, as well as that particular night and next morning – I phoned a few people. Tonsils, if you work in surgery, is one of the scariest operations that can be. Maybe it's the one that's been around the longest, but if you get what they call a bleeder, everybody runs for assistance and makes sure that everybody is back in that surgical room.

You know, the Premier has told Albertans that this government policy to allow overnight stays in approved surgical facilities will not endanger the lives of Albertans. Well, Madam Chairman, allowing for overnight stays in private surgical facilities which are not fully equipped is, according to the members of the J. Dossetor Health Ethics Centre at the University of Alberta, a danger to the health of patients and thus is ethically unacceptable.

How are these private surgical facilities going to cope with patients experiencing complications in this particular one? You know, every report we're getting, whether it's the University of Alberta or other studies around North America or New Zealand and Australia, is discounting a lot of these myths that this government has actually been putting out as the reason why they want to do that. [interjections] Now, we seem to have other members wanting to enter into the debate, Madam Chairman. Maybe they'll stand up afterwards and help us out with this.

Will this government admit that its policy to push overnight stays in surgical facilities will not improve health care but will put the lives of Albertans in jeopardy by placing them in clinics that are not equipped with emergency backup?

We can go on and we can talk about data which we know that this government hasn't got. We can talk about no confirmed information. No, they haven't got that either, but we have to take a look and withstand some of the things that they've been putting forward to us, that hopefully the tinkering of 14 amendments coming forward will make Albertans forget what actually this is all about.

I didn't go to Calgary on the weekend, but I did go to the Agri-Com, where anywhere between 6,000 and 7,000 people were in attendance. Some of the placards probably were liable, but at the same time people were expressing their concerns.

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair will ask you to move quickly back to the amendment we have before us.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you for pointing that out, Madam Chairman, but at the same time, I think this is all pertaining to what's through this whole bill.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Well, the function of a committee on a bill is to go through the text of the bill clause by clause and, if necessary, word by word with a view to making such amendments in it as may seem likely to render it more generally acceptable. We are in the committee stage. We have before us amendment A1, section A, and I would ask that we talk about and debate in committee the relevant sections to do with the amendment that is before us.

MR. GIBBONS: Madam Chairman, the approved surgical facility is part of that, and people were bringing that up yesterday. At the rally that I did go to, they were talking about . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: You didn't have the answer; right?

MR. GIBBONS: Oh, don't worry about that. I've got the answer for it.

Madam Chairman, I would tell the people on the other side, if they want to get up and debate, to stand up in their own due time.

Debate Continued

MR. GIBBONS: Going back to the amendment, Madam Chairman, I think I was totally within the realm of this amendment, talking about how people are concerned about this, and a rally should be recognized for how important it is. I saw lots of people in the AgriCom that used to vote for this government. They were there showing their concern and their disappointment. Even if we are talking about public hospitals and surgical facilities, I do believe it is very important to bring that out.

Madam Chairman, with that I will sit down.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to participate further on amendment A1, section A. There were some things I didn't get a chance to say the other day when I spoke to it for 20 minutes. At the end of this, there were two things that crossed my mind, we may all think. The first one is a quote from Abbe Emmanuel Joseph Sieyès, who lived from 1748 to 1836 and who made the famous statement: "J'ai vécu. I survived." It strikes me that we may all be of that mind when we finish this process. The other one I was thinking of was the comment of Will Durant, the American historian, who said, "Democracy is the most difficult of all forms of government, since it requires the widest spread of intelligence."

Now, what I hope you're going to find, Madam Chairman, when I sit down in 20 minutes, however much of a stretch it is, is that we've been demonstrating if not breadth of intelligence at least a robust and vigorous examination of the amendment that's in front of us.

There are a couple of items I didn't get a chance before to query. Now, when I look at the amendment, there are some key parts to it that I wanted to run through and seek some clarification on, Madam Chairman. If you look at amendment A1, section A, it's the proposed section 2.

Might I just make a parenthetical comment? I think it was the Minister of Government Services who said: "What's the big deal? We're putting in dentists here." The point is that as I read the amendment, all of the old section 2 comes out. If this amendment passes, then the entire section 2 in the bill that we all got a couple of weeks ago comes out and this new section is imported into it. It would seem to me that this in fact is the chance we can explore each of the elements of this. If we don't do it, we may well find that once it's been voted, some sharp member on the government side is going to jump up and try and cut off a person like me from speaking to some of those things, saying, "Well, you had your chance on Monday afternoon, April 17." Madam Chairman, I wouldn't want that to happen.

This is my question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. If we look at the proposed new section 2(2)(a), we refer to "by-laws under the Medical Profession Act." Now, I don't know whether members have had the chance to do it, but I've gone to the Medical Profession Act. This is the one specifically referred to in the amendment. I thought: well, how many kinds of bylaws are there in the Medical Profession Act that A1, section A would relate to?

Do you know what I found, Madam Chairman? I didn't hear the minister explain this. You can look at section 31 of the Medical Profession Act, and section 31 provides that the council of the College of Physicians and Surgeons "may make by-laws." There's a range of things including 31(e), which is "the regulation of the practice of medicine and the governing of the affairs of the profession." Now, are those the bylaws the government contemplates would be referred to under A1, section A? I don't know, and I haven't heard an answer to that.

MRS. SLOAN: That was my question.

MR. DICKSON: Exactly. My colleague for Edmonton-Riverview may have the same query.

Madam Chairman, I think some of my colleagues are breaking out the Girl Guide cookies, and I think you should tell them it would be rude to be eating while there are other members that are talking. We hope that's not going to lead to an outbreak of cookie munching for the balance of the session.

So we have bylaws under section 31. We also have bylaws under section 32. "The council may make by-laws governing" a host of things. Now, I assume that that would not apply to this amendment, but I don't know that for sure because it's quite wide.

It could be under section 33: "The council may make by-laws." Now, that appears to deal with a special fund, so presumably that is not what the government had in mind.

Then we could go to section 74 of the Medical Profession Act. If you look at section 74, "the council may make by-laws" dealing with a bunch of things. That seems to relate to professional corporations, so I assume that's probably not what is intended.

Then I went to section 97, and "the council may make [certain] by-laws governing fees." Now, what I wonder there is whether in fact in the course of prescribing fees under section 97 of the Medical Profession Act, that would be one of those bylaws that's captured under the amendment in the proposed 2(2)(a). I don't know.

I know the minister is in his seat this afternoon. We've got lots of time. I'd specifically ask the Minister of Health and Wellness: will he identify the specific section in the Medical Profession Act? I notice he's ably assisted by the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness. Surely between the two of them they can give me a precise, specific answer to the question I'm asking: which section is this under, gentlemen, through the chair? Is it section 31, 32, 33, 74, or 97?

Now, if in fact it's under section 31, there's something that I notice hasn't been brought to the attention of members. We've heard a lot of concern – and the Minister of Learning said this earlier – with: why would we want politicians, politicians, involved in deciding what's a major service and what's a minor service?

Well, you know something, Madam Chairman? They already are. Do members not know that under the Medical Profession Act, section 32(2), we have: a bylaw “does not come into force until it has been approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.” Is that not the cabinet, and is that not the most secret, inappropriate, ineffective way of having some political control? Wouldn't we sooner have that done in some more public process?

My colleague for Edmonton-Riverview made an excellent point when she reminded us of the change, the de-skilling move in terms of the operating rooms of hospitals in this province. Was that subject to any sort of public review? No. It was a closed consultation with a few designated stakeholders, and the rest of us found out about it after we read the Alberta Gazette.

Madam Chairman, when I deal with this specific amendment and I look at section 2(2)(a), I've got those questions, and I'm sure hoping we get an answer. But it is interesting that under the Medical Profession Act we've got provision for at least some regulations to not become law until they've been approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. So what does that do to all these people who say, “Gee, we don't want legislators having anything to say about what's a major medical surgery or a minor medical surgery”? It might be fairly selective.

Now, it may be that I'm missing some key points here. So would the minister of health or the associate minister please clarify what specific section they're relying on? That's the first thing I wanted to raise.

Now, the second matter had to do with the provision specifically for dentists under there. You know, I'm glad this is there, because it raises a concern I saw. The Minister of Health and Wellness and his assistant, the Deputy Minister of Health and Wellness, I'm sure have seen the report. It's the Health of the Calgary Region. It's a report produced by the CRHA, 1999. It's come out just scant few weeks ago with a message from the medical officer of health.

What this amendment talks about is oral surgery. You know, it's an interesting thing. If you look at pages 91 and 92 of the CRHA status report on the health of Calgarians – and I don't want to be parochial, but we have over 900,000 people in the Calgary health region. My question, obviously, is: how is this going to affect my constituents? The Member for Calgary-Cross the other day and the Minister of Government Services and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General spoke in terms of how this related to their constituents, and in the same way the chair allowed them to speak to that, I know, Madam Chairman, that you're going to allow me also to speak to it while I'm addressing the amendment.

I look in Calgary, where in fact we've got an increase in the number of children two to nine with a painful tooth in a 12-month period. The children who miss school in a 12-month period because of a toothache has increased in the Calgary region from 1995 to 1999. A significant situation was the number of seniors who have only a few or no natural teeth. These are statistics, and, Madam Chairman, I have a particular interest. My father at one point had been the president of the Alberta Dental Association. I know that's a professional organization that's very much focused on the prevention of tooth decay and dental disease and the promotion of good dental hygiene, but it seems to me too often we are sort of worrying about complicated oral surgery after the fact when we don't do enough work in terms of prevention at the front end, and I'm not going to talk about the Halloween candy I was never able to have.

Madam Chairman, the other concern I come to quickly is, looking at the amendment, 2(1)(b). Now, I want to come back to this. I raised some questions the other day, and I hoped that there might be more compelling answers. Here I am a few days later and a number of hours later and they still haven't been answered.

This approved surgical facility. I'm very concerned with the news I found out on the weekend that the Holy Cross hospital – this is the place that had been renovated for $32 million and sold at a fire sale price of $4.5 million to Enterprise Universal Inc., the company controlled by Dr. Huang and Dr. Huang. That corporation is currently in front of the city of Calgary. Do you know what they are proposing to do?

This, I think, may be one of these approved surgical facilities, but I would like the minister to tell us. I can scarcely believe that since the CRHA is now simply a phone call extension away from the Premier's office – and we know the complete control asserted by the Premier's office over the Calgary region and the Calgary regional board. It would be beyond comprehension that the Huang brothers and the Universal company that purchased the Holy Cross hospital – and do you remember? The notion was that it was going to be used by Mount Royal College and it was going to be used for a private eye clinic, but there would be some other facilities, long-term care facilities.

Now what's happened is that Universal has made an application to the city of Calgary. Do you know what they are proposing to do? They are going to spend on two floors – and this may be news to the minister of health, because he professed not to be familiar with this in question period. Two floors are going to be committed to laboratory services. Now, this may be the answer. The Calgary region has been looking at where they're going to put their laboratory since it was not allowed to go beside the Colonel Belcher long-term care facility, on the old motor vehicle branch. They're also putting in a series of clinics there. You know, Madam Chairman, there's no question in my mind that the intention of Universal is to create an approved surgical facility.

Madam Chairman, if this section goes through, here's what will happen. Alberta taxpayers who have been burned, absolutely burned with what happened at the Holy Cross hospital, are now going to be invited to turn around and pay through rich lease payments, presumably, and service contract payments – we're effectively going to try and buy back the Holy Cross hospital. We're now paying a profit to the people who were skillful to persuade the government of Alberta to part with a gem, an asset like the Holy Cross hospital, and then be able to provide the same kinds of services that had been in the hospital before, but now we pay through the nose for them. I don't blame Dr. Huang and Dr. Huang. I expect that an entrepreneur's job is to maximize their profit, but I have absolutely no patience for a government that's prepared to sell out the interests of Alberta taxpayers. The question under section 2(1)(b): is the Holy Cross site going to be designated an approved surgical facility? Might that meet the criteria? Will the Minister or the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness tell us that?

The parking lot across the street from the Holy Cross hospital has been valued by the city of Calgary for assessment purposes at $3 million. The hospital itself was sold for $4.5 million, but fair market value for the parking lot is $3 million. The fair market value of the Holy Cross hospital is probably in excess of $30 million or $40 million.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: More.

MR. DICKSON: More? What do I know about property valuation? I'm getting some advice here that I'm way too low. Two of the wisest ministers in the government of the province of Alberta are telling me I'm much too low when I'm saying that the value of the Holy Cross facility is maybe around $30 million. What? Fifty million dollars? Sixty million dollars? Tell me when I'm warm. Tell me when I'm close.

MR. DICKSON: But they wanted to be included in the debate. With the respect I have for those two ministers, I would be prepared to sit down right now if they would like to offer their assessment of the value. All they have to do is give me a nod. If they'd just give me a nod, I'd sit down right now so they can tell us what the value of that facility is.

MR. SMITH: If it'll get this bill out of committee, I'll do it.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, they put forward a condition that pains me to no end.

In any event, I'm trying hard to stay on the amendment. You know, that's what the people in Calgary-Varsity want to know and the people in Calgary-Fish Creek. It's not just people in Calgary-Buffalo. People in Calgary-Glenmore want to know: is that Holy Cross hospital now going to be one of those approved surgical facilities?

If the Minister of Health and Wellness, who I have great respect for, really thinks that we're going to accept that there have been no discussions between the CRHA, those minions of the Premier's office, before they went ahead to get the facility redesignated, get a new land use classification, then, Madam Chairman, I have an enormous problem with that. I can't accept that. We're going to have, it looks like, two approved surgical facilities right off the bat in Calgary, HRG and this one.

Madam Chairman, I had a great note here, and I'm just trying to find it now. I can't put my finger on it immediately, so maybe it'll come back to me later.

When I looked at the amendment – and I'm trying to understand the amendment to section 2 – I looked to see what the Minister of Government Services had to say about it. I thought that might make it a little clearer. I regret to report that after carefully reading all of the comments of the Minister of Government Services, I'm more confused by the amendment than I was when I started reading them.

Then I went to the comments made by the Member for Calgary-Cross. She made some observations. She is a registered nurse, a proud graduate of, I think, the General hospital nursing program, when that still existed. She talked about a number of services that can be done on an outpatient basis in day surgeries now. She concerned me a little bit when she talked about a stay of more than 12 hours in the clinic. I'm just reading what the Member for Calgary-Cross had said at page 1000, Madam Chairman, on April 13, 2000, when she was speaking to this same committee. [Mr. Dickson's speaking time expired] Oh, I think there may be somebody else to follow up.

Thank you very much, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure once again to enter the discussion this afternoon on amendment A1 to Bill 11, or, as I like to call it, the public health care amendment act.

Now, we have to then look at the definitions, in this case 2(1)(a) if we're going to talk about "a public hospital" and/or (b) "an approved surgical facility." Well, when we do this, the big difference between the definition of those two facilities, Madam Chairman, is the fact that one has an emergency facility and the other does not. The public hospital is going to be the centre that is going to have to look after all emergency care. We know that as a result of the severe cutbacks that were initiated by this government, not only the cutbacks in beds and in emergency services but also in staff, that emergency care, this safety net has unraveled. It's very important that all hon. members of this Assembly understand that there's nowhere in the definition of "an approved surgical facility" that it has to provide any sort of emergency care.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning talked earlier of skimming off the top of the public health care system. All the difficult cases would wind up not only in the public hospital, but the majority of them would probably come in through the emergency ward. There is no money to be made in emergency care. This is certainly reflected in articles. I have read extensively on the model that is provided in the United States of America, Madam Chairman. There is no money to be made in an emergency situation, because of course you have no idea what's wrong with a person, and that's the problem. I think this is why an approved surgical facility, as we're talking about in this amendment A1, does not include emergency care.

Now, all hon. members can understand what has happened not only in the Capital region but certainly in other regional health authorities across the province. There are things that we commonly refer to as red alerts. You hear of the red alerts more often in the winter, during flu season, than at any other time. A red alert simply means that ambulances are shopping for a place to drop off a sick person. The emergency ward in one hospital is full, and the staff are working to maximum capacity. Another one on the other side of the city is also working to maximum capacity, and there are ambulances coming to and fro. One would question: well, if an approved surgical facility will improve our system, why aren't they deciding that they're going to provide emergency services? We all know that's not going to happen.

One of the reasons why the approved surgical facilities would certainly not be interested in providing this, Madam Chairman – and I will remind all hon. members of the Assembly of this – is that whenever there are fewer hospitals, like I said before, there are fewer emergency rooms as a result and there are fewer beds. So this is the reason for the ambulances having to shop around.

We've had the nursing cutbacks and the nursing shortages. We have the shortages of emergency room physicians and other official . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, we are dealing with an amendment before us. Can we have something relevant to the amendment at hand?

MR. MacDONALD: We certainly are, Madam Chairman. I'm talking about amendment A1, and I'm talking specifically about the difference in the emergency wards in a public hospital and in an approved surgical facility. An approved surgical facility has no emergency ward because they can't make a profit off it. It's as simple as that.

Now, I can't say that this amendment is going to improve access. It's not going to improve access for people who require emergency care. That is one of the most difficult items to fix in our current public health care mess. I'm not going to get into any detail about who created it, because everyone in the province knows that, but this mess that was created is not going to be improved by contracting out to any of these approved surgical facilities.

Now, when we talk about an approved surgical facility, if it's not going to be involved in any emergency care, what kind of services that a public hospital cannot provide will an approved surgical facility provide? For instance, maybe we're looking at a heart hospital down the road, because I understand, Madam Chairman, that we don't have public hospitals in other jurisdictions, but we have an approved surgical facility devoted exclusively to operations centred around the heart.

We could also have an approved surgical facility that would deal exclusively with issues related to women and women's health. I'm not talking about we're going to have an approved surgical facility that's going to deal with simply hip replacements or knee replacements or that we're going to have a facility that's going to deal exclusively with hernias, because I think that argument has been put to rest, so to speak, with the evidence. I've said it before and I've said it publicly that the Shouldice clinic in Ontario, which is brought up as a fine example of an approved surgical facility – I think some hon. members have even called that facility a centre of excellence. This is what we need in Alberta, these centres of excellence. This was the description of an approved surgical facility, but there could be any number of health care services that these facilities could provide that we have yet to see. We can only suggest just what might be behind this amendment A1 whenever we look at a public hospital and an approved surgical facility. It could be a heart facility. It could be a facility to deal with respiratory problems, anything that could be contracted out.

When I look at what's going on in America and I look at the health management organizations, now I wonder aloud to all members of the House whether an approved surgical facility, as it's described here, could be administered by a health management organization. If it's going to be administered by a health management organization, that company could have its headquarters, for instance, in Fargo, North Dakota, or it could be in Arizona, in Phoenix. It could be anywhere, and how many of these approved surgical facilities could that HMO own, Madam Chairman? That is an interesting part of this whole debate, not only on amendment A1 here but on the entire bill, the entire Bill 11, the not to protect public health care act, as I call it. We have to look at this, because when we look at this amendment and we see a public hospital and we see an approved surgical facility, that is the two-tiered system. That's the two-tiered system that everyone is talking about.

Everyone was certainly talking about it yesterday afternoon at the fabulous rally at the AgriCom. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was very busy there. She was collecting petitions, names, signature after signature after signature on her petition. Regardless of whether the hon. member said that the petition was on protecting public health care or on amendment A1, people were still willing to sign it. They were lining up to sign this. It is amazing. It is amazing that whenever we're here in this Assembly, we see ourselves removed, removed from public opinion as is obvious and is evident by the hon. members in the government refusing to not be satisfied with amending this bill.

We have to work with this bill, and we have to try, as difficult as this may seem, to improve it. It's a very difficult task, and I just cannot support this amendment because it does not serve a purpose in improving this bill. I encourage all hon. members to vote against this amendment.

I cannot go to a public rally where there are 6,000 people in attendance – I saw people with signs. They had signs up, Madam

Chairman: Vegreville, Alberta; Vermilion; Athabasca. I even had a busload of people – I was startled. I was standing by the door. They came from Innisfail – Innisfail – and they certainly want a public hospital. They want only public hospitals. They do not want an approved surgical facility in Innisfail. The Albertans who came from Innisfail were very delighted to sign the petition. The only disappointment I have is that I didn't keep their names separately on the petition. They're lumped with hundreds of other people. I would have been very proud to stand in this Assembly and present to all members of this Assembly that petition on behalf of the people from Innisfail.

When we look at this – and it's not left-wing nuts. It's not people who are opposed to change, because we have radically changed the health care system in this province in the last five years, but it's people who know that the government is not listening to them.

Now, Madam Chairman, whenever we talk about our amendment here, hon. members from the other side of the House can stand up, and I'm sure the argument will be: these amendments are because we have listened to the people. We have listened to the people's concerns across the province, and we know how they feel. But in reality these amendments, particularly this A1, are not a reflection of what Albertans are thinking. It doesn't matter whether you're in Calgary or whether you were in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, or Edmonton yesterday afternoon. People do not want this two-tiered system as is plainly outlined here.

The government gets quite defensive whenever they talk about this bill and this amendment. No, they assure everyone, Madam Chairman, this is not the introduction of the two-tiered system. Well, I'm afraid that it is. I'm sorry to disappoint all hon. members across the way, but as defined here in amendment A1, this is the introduction of two-tiered medicine to this province.

Now, where are we going to be if the government doesn't do the right thing and pull this bill? In five years we will probably have in this province a debate raging on how we're going to control the health management organizations, how we're going to control the whole idea of managed care, how we're going to control the growth of these health management organizations and possible mergers. These are all questions that I think in the future hon. members of this Assembly will be debating if this amendment goes forward in this bill.

In closing, I would like to say, Madam Chairman, that if the private sector – and the private sector in this case is going to be an approved surgical centre – gets a foothold or a toehold in Alberta, it's just a matter of time before it expands and we have what is called by everyone in this province, with the exception of the government, a two-tiered system, a two-tiered system of delivery.

Now, I know that government members are going to say that we've always had this system, but since the introduction of medicare, there has usually been about 25 percent of health care services provided by private or outside sources. Oddly enough, in the last decade it has risen. It has risen from that constant 25 percent to over 30 percent.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The chairman is going to ask you to please get back to the amendment that we have on hand, amendment A1, section A. Please refer to that and have your comments relevant to it.

MR. MacDONALD: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chairman.

Getting back to an approved surgical facility. Now, the approved surgical facilities are certainly going to pick up more of the slack. They're going to deliver more of the service, and essentially they are going to be businesses that are going to be subsidized with taxpayers' money. That's simply why, if I had the top 10 reasons why I could not support this amendment A1, that would be the first one. That would be at the top of my top 10 list. Patients, I do not believe, would be protected from pressures to pay for additional goods and services in an approved surgical facility.

Will this lead to pressure from the private sector to deinsure services that are currently paid for in the public system whenever we're talking about an approved surgical facility? Madam Chairman, I would have to say yes. If an approved surgical facility is, as everyone claims – and I believe last week we saw the start of this with the set fee. The minister is going to set that fee. That's the profit level in there. If private surgical clinics, or these approved surgical facilities, can't charge extra, then how are they to make a profit, if we are to believe the fact factory? Now, I know some hon. members call it the Public Affairs Bureau, but I have renamed the Public Affairs Bureau the fact factory, because I, like a lot of other Albertans, are getting very, very confused because there seems to be fact and there seems to be fiction.

I'm afraid that the fact factory, as I call it, is just like the pages in the document, the 30 pages in the FOIP request that we constantly ask the Premier for. Albertans and members of the opposition are looking at blanks, because there are no facts. There are no facts here. I cannot understand how this approved surgical facility is going to make our public system more efficient.

With those remarks, Madam Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. member of the Assembly. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I, too, rise this afternoon to speak to the amendment that's before us. I think it's A1, section A, or something along those lines. The last time I spoke to this amendment – and I was going through it word by word and line by line – I talked about the fact that change in the amendment was from the wording that indicated that “no person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta” to “no physician shall provide a surgical service,” and what was added in is that “no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service.” So it's interesting to note that when we look at the difference between what a physician can provide and what a dentist can provide, the physician can obviously provide insured and uninsured surgical services. The dentist is restricted to insured services. So that's an interesting differentiation between those two sets of services that a medical person can provide.

What we also saw was that not only has the wording changed from “person” to “physician,” but in actual fact now we've had the addition of dentists into a section that they were originally omitted from. So the question is: was this an oversight? If it was an oversight, how many other oversights are throughout this piece of legislation? This is one of the most important sections in the bill that sets up private, for-profit delivery of health care in this province, and obviously in the rush to put this together, the department has left out a whole group of individuals that are providing medical services.

The last time I spoke to this particular section within the bill, I had provided, I thought, some questions that were worthy of answers from the minister and, to date, have received no answers with regards to the inclusion of dentists in this particular section of the bill. The questions surrounded the consultation that had been done with the Alberta Dental Association, if there was any, and if there was, what was the context of that consultation? Have all their concerns, if it was brought up by the Alberta Dental Association, in effect been met?

What is the implication now on dentists who have clinics set up throughout this province who are providing an insured surgical service in the designation that has to occur as an approved surgical facility? An approved surgical facility is outlined in the bill, and the definition means something. It means that it is designated, and designation, in effect, means that it's designated under part 2, division 1 or 2 of the bill. So there has to be some kind of impact on those dentists' clinics that are throughout this province that provide services, and to date I've had no response from the minister.

Now, in fairness, the minister has asked for a meeting tomorrow to discuss amendments. I'm assuming they're his amendments that he wishes to discuss and am looking forward to receiving an agenda of that particular meeting tomorrow at 4:30. The minister is looking at me. I was informed on Friday that the minister's office had phoned to ask for a meeting, so if that's not the case, then I should know so that I can clear my calendar. If that is the case, it would be, I think, worth while to know what in actual fact the agenda of the meeting is. I will be making that request more formally to the minister as well.

The issue around that and the change from “person” to “physician” I think is also noteworthy. There is no definition in those provided in the legislation with regards to a person. We know a person can be corporate or it can be an individual, but there was no definition provided in here, so now it's been made more constrictive, that it's the physician who will be providing the surgical service.

Those were some of my initial comments when I spoke last time to this particular section within the bill, and as I indicated, I will continue line by line and word by word to look at what some other concerns are that we have with regards to this particular amendment.

It was very interesting, Madam Chairman, at the rallies – and I did attend the one in Calgary as well as the one in Edmonton. In the conversations I had with individuals at those rallies, they had a good grasp of what this legislation did and did not do, and they understood very clearly the dangers of having insured and uninsured services provided in the same facility. They very clearly understood that an approved surgical facility is nothing more than a private, for-profit hospital. That didn't need any explanation.

What I also found interesting is that that was corroborated by the government's own poll that they released this afternoon. In the poll it became very, very clear that most Albertans in this province are aware of what Bill 11 is. They understand. They've heard something about it, or they've read Bill 11. In fact, 88 percent of Albertans have actually heard of or read the bill, and that's an amazing number. What's most amazing is that they, I think, understand it as well.

They indicate that, yes, they would support a goal that would reduce waiting lists, they would support a goal that would increase overall efficiencies, and they would also support the fact that private institutions should not charge fees to Albertans who receive these services. There was 55 percent total support for that.

But, you know, they're not fooled by the bill. When they were asked specifically, “Will those who are willing to pay more be able to receive faster service at privately owned surgical clinics?” 59 percent said yes. That's the government's own poll. They knew that this bill does not protect against queue-jumping and that if you paid out of pocket – that's what this poll says – in effect what that would mean is you would get better service.

The other thing that the government's own polls said was that when it was asked: do you think that Alberta's . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, you're on amendment A1, section A.

MS LEIBOVICI: Absolutely. I'm right on it.

When it was asked, "Will Alberta's health care system be more cost-efficient?" 42 percent said no.

So what this amendment sets up is a private, for-profit hospital that in effect can provide insured and uninsured services at the same time, which in effect can provide for queue-jumping, can provide for faster access to treatment, and actually does not provide cost efficiency to the public health care system. That's what this clause, this section is about, and the amendment continues that distortion to our public health care system. The amendment does nothing to address the concerns that have been expressed and the reality that people know this bill sets up.

I think that what the amendment tries to do is address a concern that perhaps the dentists have brought up. It addresses perhaps a concern which should have been caught right at the front end, that you don't have someone who's unqualified provide a surgical service, that in fact it has to be a qualified individual, which, according to what we're looking at here, is a physician, that provides a surgical service. The way it's written right now, I guess I could perform surgery. As a result, what we've got is a clause that is unworkable.

My question is: how could the government, the Premier – this was his most important bill.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Excuse me, hon. member. It's very, very noisy in here. I would remind people that though in committee you certainly can visit, we are not to be standing in the Assembly in committee. Hon. members, please be seated.

Okay, hon. member.

MS LEIBOVICI: What this amendment does not do is address those key, key issues that have been brought up over and over and over again as to what the fundamentals of this bill are about. Now, this bill is the most important bill. The Premier has said that over and over again. This is a bill that's sponsored by the Minister of Health and Wellness. This is not a bill that should have come to us flawed in the first pages. This is page 3, the second section, and already we have some fundamental questions as to the drafting of this particular section.

So what we've got is an amendment that does not deal with the issues that are at hand with regards to whether we wish to set up in this province a system of private, for-profit hospitals, because that is in effect what we're seeing happen here, and whether the approved surgical facilities that are being set up are appropriately defined further on in the bill as well. What we've got are surgical services, insured and uninsured, as I indicated earlier, that are going to be performed in the same facility. The approved surgical facilities are in fact broken down into three different kinds of facilities. You have what is called a designated surgical facility, which is in fact then further broken down into insured and uninsured facilities, which further on the uninsured side is broken down into uninsured inpatient surgical facilities and uninsured day surgical facilities.

So by this very clause and the definitions that are therefore part and parcel of it, we have set up three kinds of surgical facilities in this province, three kinds, three different sets of rules, three different sets of requirements with regards to how they operate, and they can do both insured and uninsured services. Rather than trying to address the issue and the confusion that is around this terminology because of the three different kinds that exist, rather than admitting that in fact an approved surgical facility that provides either insured surgeries that have an overnight stay or uninsured inpatient surgeries by in and of itself means an overnight stay, rather than clarifying that so people know that's a private, for-profit hospital, what we still have is confusion with the way this sits.

The other part of the equation that should have been addressed with regards to approved surgical facilities is to do what every other province across Canada has done, and that is address the issue of overnight stays. The majority of the provinces have said that there are no overnight stays allowed in surgical facilities, that if it requires an overnight stay, it is in fact to happen in a public hospital.

Those are just some of the issues that have not been addressed when we look at this line by line.

We talked about the fact that "no person" shall provide has been changed to "no physician." We've talked about the fact that "no dentist shall provide" is an add-in to the section. We've talked about and addressed the issue of the surgical services that can still be performed in these facilities by physicians and that those are uninsured and insured and that the dentists are only insured and that there's a huge, huge issue around providing uninsured and insured at the same point in time. We've talked about the fact that an approved surgical facility, the way it's defined here, means that it's a facility that provides for overnight stays. That is a private hospital, and that's in 2(1) of the amendment.

I still want to address 2(2) of the amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair hesitates to interrupt you, but pursuant to Standing Order 43 the Assembly stands adjourned until 8 p.m., when we will reconvene in Committee of the Whole.

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 17, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/04/17

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order. First, I want to say to the people in the galleries that this is the informal part of the Legislature. It's called committee. Normally when we're in Assembly, the Speaker or his designate would be there, and hon. members would not be allowed to have coffee or juice nor take off their jackets. During this time, too, hon. members are allowed to go and sit in other places but not speak in other places. So you can see that it is less formal. The gallery is also reminded that you're observers and not participants.

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: We at the close of the day apparently had an hon. member speaking with a few moments remaining, although there wasn't an adjournment as such, so the chair would recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. You have, I think, about four minutes.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, in the four minutes that I have left, I'd like to just briefly recap and also welcome everyone to the Legislative Assembly. It's a little lonely in here sometimes, so I'm glad to see you all here.

To recap the amendment that we're on, we're on the first government amendment, which basically has not made any change with regards to separating insured from uninsured services being provided in a private, for-profit facility and has made no change at all with regards to the change in language that says "an approved surgical facility" and is in fact a private, for-profit hospital, nor have they addressed the issue in this particular amendment of overnight stays.

So what I am going to be proposing - and I do this with some trepidation in that we feel that this bill is a bill that should be pulled and withdrawn and that these amendments do not go far enough in addressing the issue at hand. But I'm going to be putting forward a subamendment to the amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies here with regard to that subamendment. Basically what it is proposing is that where the government's amendment indicates that "no physician shall provide a surgical service," we are proposing an amendment that says that "no physician shall provide an insured surgical service" and also amending the clause that deals with approved surgical facilities to indicate and make it very clear that that is to deal with 12 hours and under only. In other words, "no physician shall provide a surgical service" in Alberta in an approved surgical facility "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours."

I know that sounds a little bit complicated, but in effect what that does is that it separates out the insured from the uninsured services, and it also indicates that what will be provided is to take away the ability of private, for-profit facilities to have overnight stays. We know that that is one of the key concerns with regards to this particular bill.

We know that another key concern with this particular bill is with regards to the profit motive when an insured and uninsured service are provided at the exact same time. We feel that this subamendment provides an avenue whereby those avenues can be constricted.

Again I'd like to say that this bill needs to be withdrawn. As we go further on in debate, it will be very clear that the number of amendments that are required to make this bill halfway palatable to Albertans is so immense that in fact what needs to happen is the complete withdrawal of the bill and a rethinking of the philosophy that underpins the bill that is being put forward by this government.

By now most members should have received that particular subamendment, and I know that we will have some vigorous debate on this particular subamendment and will in fact be addressing it. I look forward to the minister's comments with regards to this particular subamendment. We know that in dealing with the subamendment, we will have to deal with both A and B, I am informed, at the same time, so unfortunately we will be unable to break out those particular subamendments. As I indicated, it does attempt to address a couple of the issues that are at hand with Bill 11, and I would hope that the government will see that this is in fact an amendment that must be supported.

THE CHAIRMAN: Before we move on, the chair would like to just be clear on this, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. This subamendment that you have moved would be called subamendment A1, section A. So that's clear to everyone, if you're following along? Then it's going to be, in terms of letters and numbers, SA1, section A. Okay?

Any further comments, questions, with respect to the subamendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to speak on the amendment as proposed by the good Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, my colleague, and if I do get offtrack, please direct me back on track, because when we talk in terms of an amendment, particularly an amendment to an amendment, at times it can be difficult to find exactly the content of the amendment in the related discussion because of overlap.

The subamendment itself to the amendment: let me just read it again into the record. The proposed section 2(1) is amended (a) by striking out "No physician shall provide a surgical service" and substituting "No physician shall provide an insured surgical service," and (b), in clause (b) by adding "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours" after "approved surgical facility."

Now, my colleague to my right said that it would be preferable to have the bill withdrawn, and there's no question about that. It appears, despite what we have heard out there, despite the howls of protest from 6,000 people yesterday at the AgriCom and probably another 4,000 that were turned away because of the overflow parking and the requirement that it took an hour to get off the Capilano to get into the facility - because I was there. I know it took an hour. Despite that, despite what happened in Calgary, despite that continuous cry that we hear of kill the bill, kill the bill - we hear it in the front here twice a week, every Monday and every Thursday. My constituency office has logged hundreds of phone calls, letters, e-mail. Everywhere I go shopping, people stop me and say: "What is wrong? Why is the government going ahead with Bill 11? Why don't they just kill the bill? Kill the bill." But obviously the government isn't going to kill the bill. The government now takes some comfort in their poll that they claim shows 54 percent support.

I listened to the question that was asked in that poll. It's like the Premier will say that he'll sign our petition . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Speak to the amendment.

MR. WICKMAN: I'm speaking to the amendment.

In that poll, Mr. Chairman, that leads up to the amendment, the wording was so misleading and so wishy-washy that I would have probably said yes had I been phoned, because it was like everything to everybody. It was extremely misleading.

Anyhow, to get to the amendment, the purpose of the amendment and a series of other amendments that we'll have to follow, of course, is an attempt to try and at least modify the bill so it's half-way compatible to the wishes of people. Because what I hear, what I heard at the rally there yesterday from dozens and dozens of people, from people I talk to on the phone when I take the opportunity to ask them, "What bothers you the most about Bill 11?" the one thing that comes out continuously that bothers them is that it allows for a surgical facility that allows for unlimited overnight stays. In other words, that's an interpretation by the welcomed guests in the galleries here that are watching the proceedings tonight that it's another name for a hospital. It's another name for a hospital. [disturbance in the galleries]

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Chairman, if the maximum stay for any type of surgical procedure, an insured surgical procedure in one of those facilities was 12 hours like the amendment proposes, of course it would no longer be perceived as a hospital in the eyes of the public, in the eyes of the opposition, in the eyes of most Albertans. So the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has drafted up an amendment to try and convince the government, and hopefully the government members will look at the amendment and feel that in fact this could be an opportunity for them, that this could be an opportunity for them to proceed with the bill, at the same time getting the egg off their face. In other words, a nice, gentle way of kind of wiggling out, because then you really wouldn't need the bill because it wouldn't serve the intent that the government wants it to serve; that is, to set up a system of what I call private hospitals. They may be referred to as private surgical facilities, but to me they're private hospitals.

Mr. Chairman, clearly this amendment if approved – and hopefully the government will allow its members to vote according to the wishes of their constituents. I would assume there are many, many members sitting in this House here tonight who, when they talk to their constituents – and we're hearing even more in rural Alberta than in urban Alberta that the opposition to Bill 11 is as strong as it is. Very, very strong. I would say that there are ridings out there, particularly in urban Alberta, where if the MLA had the opportunity to talk to each of their constituents and respected their wishes, they would realize the vast majority of their constituents do not want surgical facilities that allow overnight stays on an unlimited basis.

Once you start allowing that, when you say a surgical facility for minor surgery, we've got to remember that just as this government has the power, the authority to pass Bill 11, to pass its amendment, to pass this amendment or reject this amendment, the government at any time also has the legislative authority to redefine what they call minor surgery. Pretty soon a minor surgery could become more and more a major surgery that would be performed at one of these so-called surgical facilities.

Mr. Chairman, if the government were to amend the bill as recommended by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and supported by myself and I assume other members of this caucus – and I'm sure it would be supported by most Albertans as well – at least it would be one step in the right direction to try to minimize the damage this bill is going to do to the public health care system. Of course, this amendment then would have to be followed by some other amendments that would even tidy up the bill and make that bill more and more compatible to the wishes of the people. There's actually no question in my mind that what the public is saying is to protect our public health care system. The bill should actually read "protection of the public health care system," which it doesn't, but that's what Albertans want. They want to have a public health care system that responds to their needs, a health care system more compatible with what we saw five or 10 years ago, where you didn't have the massive lineups you have now.

Where you have more and more contracting out, where you have a bill that's going to allow even more and more contracting out until it comes to the point where a good portion if not the majority of health care provisions in the province are carried out by the private sector, the taxpayers are telling me, Mr. Chairman, that they don't want their tax dollars being funneled off to professional health care givers, who are businesspeople with a portion of those proceeds going into their pockets as profit. They don't want that. They want a system that is governed by the legislators, that is accountable to the legislators, that is accountable to Albertans. That is a public system, and they want that public system preserved. They don't want to see in Alberta what has happened in other countries, like New Zealand, where this type of experimenting has led to disastrous results.

Mr. Chairman, because of the number of members of our caucus that want to speak to this amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I'm going to conclude my remarks at that point and allow others to follow.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. You were looking around so hard I was thinking maybe you were hoping somebody else would speak at this stage of the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN: No, hon. member. To be truthful, another member indicated to me that he was going to speak and then chose not to. He would have normally come next, being on the other side. But Calgary-Buffalo is the one that stood up, and the other one didn't.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm not perhaps going to take all of my allotted time, so I'm sure that there'll be lots of opportunity for other members to participate in the debate.

I'm delighted to speak to the subamendment that's been brought forward. What are we, A1?

THE CHAIRMAN: SA1, subamendment number 1, section A.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much.

On the subamendment. I think what's important about this is that this really puts the test to the government's claim that we're not proposing to do anything different than what's being done in other provinces. We've heard in the House comments about Saskatchewan and comments about Ontario and British Columbia. Well, those of us who have done any independent investigation have determined that in none of those provinces are they doing overnight stays. In Saskatchewan, that we've heard so much of, we're talking about day surgery. In British Columbia it is day surgery. The Shouldice clinic I'll come back and address in a moment because there's so much confusion about it. In Ontario, if you look at the independent facilities act and the Private Hospitals Act, it's clear there that what you're talking about is you're not having insured services done in facilities that keep patients on an overnight basis other than public hospitals.

So my colleague for Edmonton-Meadowlark has put forward an amendment which really tests the government rhetoric. In fact, what she's challenging the Minister of Health and Wellness to do is to live up to those many bland assurances we've heard from the Premier since November: "Look, folks; don't panic. This is no big deal. It's just what's being done in other parts of the country." Well the reality, Mr. Chairman, is that what's proposed is significantly different, qualitatively and quantitatively different than what's being done in other provinces.

Now, the proposal also ties in with the concern that I raised earlier this afternoon. I've now got in front of me a city of Calgary application for a development permit, land use bylaw number 2P80. This is the one I referred to earlier where we discover that the former Holy Cross hospital operators are in fact . . .

MR. HERARD: Point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. HERARD: Yes. Relevance, Mr. Chairman, Beauchesne 409. You know, we're speaking to an amendment, and I don't know what the city of Calgary's development appeal and/or whatever has to do with it.

MR. DICKSON: To the point of order. Well, if the Member for Calgary-Egmont looks at the subamendment that's in front of him and he looks down to the (b) part, we're adding some words after "approved surgical facility." The words we're adding are "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours." What I'm attempting to do is talk about a proliferation of facilities certainly in the city I'm from and that member is from, the city of Calgary. That's what I'm speaking to, but it's specifically the (b) part of the subamendment. So people can look at it and see that what we're doing is talking about what kind of services are going to be possible in an approved surgical facility.

I'm raising the question as the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo. I'm very concerned about the proposal, which is currently in front of the city of Calgary planning department, to turn the old Holy Cross hospital into a private hospital. I would think that the Member for Calgary-Egmont would be as concerned as I am. I'd think he would be as worried about the prospect of yet another private hospital being set up in the city of Calgary.

The reason we talk about the importance of the 12-hour cutoff, which is the gist and essence of the sub part of the amendment, is the fact that many of us don't want to see us move from day services being contracted out to major surgery being done in overnight places.

Mr. Chairman, I'm talking specifically to the (b) part of the amendment that we have in front of us.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes. Thank you very much. I was just wanting to check and see whether you'd finished addressing the point of order before going on to the rest of your comments.

MR. DICKSON: Actually, that was all directed to the point of order, and if you're not persuaded yet, somebody else may want to speak to the point of order, but I'll wait for your ruling, Mr. Chairman, before I proceed.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont referred to – I thought you said 409, or was it 459? If it's 459 then it is relevance.

Just so I can understand what we're saying, you're talking about clause (b) of the subamendment, that it requires a stay greater than 12 hours, not under; right?

MR. DICKSON: Less than. We're explaining why that's important.

THE CHAIRMAN: If I understand you right, hon. member, the point is that no physician would be able to provide an insured surgical service, except in – that's where I'm kind of missing the point. The point is that we're talking about a property proposal in the city of Calgary, and you're trying to make this part of your discussion. That's what the objection is. I don't have a problem with your doing that as long as I understand how it is that it is part of the subamendment of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. That's what I need help with.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I wonder if I might try and help, Mr. Chairman. I understand the confusion, and I take full responsibility if it hasn't been as clear as I'd hoped.

The purpose of the amendment, of course, is to ensure that we don't have private hospitals in this province. That's really what this amendment is all about, and I think it's engineered and designed specifically to make it crystal clear to not just my 82 colleagues in this place but to Albertans that we're not sanctioning private hospitals. So what the subamendment currently says is that "no physician shall provide a surgical service," and there's the (a) part, which I'll come to in a moment, but the (b) part is what I'm speaking to: "except in . . . a public hospital, or . . . an approved surgical facility." Now the proposal here is that it would be an approved surgical facility "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours." So it's a limitation that's imported into the second part of section 2.

People may ask: why is that important? I think it's tough sometimes talking about legislation as if it exists in some kind of a sterile academic context. These things are in a real world context, and what I was attempting to do for our friend from Calgary-Egmont was to help him appreciate that we have decisions being made right now by the Calgary regional health authority, by Enterprise Universal Inc., the outfit that owns the former Holy Cross hospital, that in fact are going to give the meaning of these sterile words on a piece of paper a very real meaning, the real meaning being a private, overnight hospital.

That's what I'm trying to do. I'm trying to suggest that there is a context that this amendment should be reviewed in. I haven't even gotten yet to talk about the Health Resource Group, which is Calgary's other private hospital, just salivating at the prospect of more contracts and more public money, and they would love to be able to do overnight stays. That's what they've asked for.

I'm attempting to make the case, Mr. Chairman, why that 12-hour cap is in there, why it's in the amendment, and why it's necessary. That's what I'm attempting to do. I see that I'm not doing a good enough job, because I see the Minister of Learning, a very knowledgeable member, in fact the one member of the Assembly who is a physician – and I don't know whether he's on what would be called sort of the active practising list, but he's certainly a trained physician. If I haven't been able to make it clear to that minister,

I've got some distance to go, and I hope in the time remaining I'm going to be able to make it clear to the Minister of Learning as well as to his other colleagues.

So, Mr. Chairman, if there's any other confusion, just say the word.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you, hon. member. We're still on the point of order, if you believe it. To the extent that you've explained that, then that would presumably fit within the thrust of your subamendment, which raises a whole other question. I think we've explored that point of order enough.

Would you continue or conclude, whichever the case may be, your comments on subamendment SA1, section A.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much for the invitation, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps you might confirm that that time won't come out of my speaking time, that that time spent with the point of order won't count against the 20 minutes . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: No.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, the question is: why is it important that there be a 12-hour cap? Some people may say: why couldn't it be 15 hours or 20 hours? What's the magic in that? Well, I guess my view of this whole private health care thing is that there are sort of two fights that have to happen, two major things that have to happen. The first one is to absolutely, irrevocably say that in this province a private, for-profit hospital receiving taxpayer dollars is just plain outlawed. It's bad. It's forbidden, verboten. It can't happen. That's the first thing that has to happen.

The second thing that has to happen is to find a way of addressing the proliferation of private surgical services, whether it's ophthalmology or a host of other clinics, and determine how we get a handle on these things that in fact have created real issues in terms of accessibility. They have in many respects undermined what I understand to be the five principles of the Canada Health Act. So I think it's critically important, Mr. Chairman, that that be done secondly. That's sort of the context within which I speak to the two amendments.

In terms of the amendment (b), I understand from speaking to people who have been involved in health care administration, health care supervision in a host of other provinces and places . . .

MRS. SLOAN: Can you hear them chanting, "Kill the bill"?

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, it may be a reflection of the depth of conviction and concern that Albertans have that even in this place, not only do we hear the voices of legislators, but from time to time we hear the voices of Albertans. [disturbance in the galleries]

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: I will say again that people in the galleries are not participants in this debate. I'll clear the galleries the next time anyone claps. You're here to watch and that's it, regardless of what's going on out there.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair has some concern that what we're hearing outside this Chamber is in fact an intimidation of the Chamber, of how we should conduct ourselves in here regardless of how popular or unpopular whatever going on here is. I at times cannot hear the hon. member even though he be only a few metres away. I don't know whether other members are finding it difficult to hear.

Calgary-Buffalo, as long as we can hear you.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. The two comments I'd make. Firstly, the . . . [disturbance in the galleries]

THE CHAIRMAN: We'll continue as long as we can hear. For those who are still in the galleries, we presume that you're going to remain here with good purpose in mind as we carry on the debate. If you're going to be disruptive, then we will have to clear the galleries. That would not be something I would like to do, but we are going to continue.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I think the point I was making is that of all the concerns I have heard – and I have heard many, not just from Calgarians, not just from constituents but from a host of people in different places – the number one issue appears to be the prospect of allowing overnight stays in these approved surgical facilities. I see the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness is here. Maybe he or the Minister of Health and Wellness might challenge that. If they've heard another more frequently cited problem with Bill 11, I wish they'd stand up and say that. But the single one that seems to resonate, that seems to offend most Albertans is that one that specifically deals with a stay which is longer than 12 hours.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to carry on. As much as I'd like to take credit for all these people who've come out tonight, I can assure you that they have come of their own will. If you had been at the Round-Up centre at the Calgary Stampede grounds on Saturday afternoon and saw 3,000 people come out, you would understand why this subamendment is in front of us. This subamendment would go a long distance to addressing the issue that was identified by person after person. You know, it may be that some of the government members – I'd like to encourage them. They missed the opportunity to attend the Round-Up centre in Calgary, and perhaps they missed the opportunity to attend the Northlands AgriCom, where the meeting was on Sunday, but they would have found out how many people were looking for an amendment like subamendment A1. So it seems to me there's a very rich context that supports the need for this kind of change.

I see that I have not been particularly persuasive with the government members in the Assembly, so I am going to suggest that one of my colleagues who is a more effective presenter than me speak to this, and our colleague from the third party looks poised to offer some commentary as well. Perhaps I can offer some advice later on.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members will recall that when we're in debate, it goes back and forth and back and forth. If you go to one side and there isn't anyone wishing to speak at that time, then you might have two or three on one side speaking in a row. We do have an indication from at least one member on this side that they would like to speak, so we'd call on the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to the amendment, I would like to first of all put my opposition to it in context. In Bill 11 it is quite clear that the legislation bans private hospitals. There's clear provision in the legislation stating that categorically.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, the legislation does propose that there be approved surgical facilities under a very, very limited mandate in terms of providing a specialized targeted surgical service.

The issue as to 12 versus 24 versus 18 versus six hours: that particular provision is to be handled by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. They will decide the safety factor, the overall ability of the facility through its staffing and through its other characteristics to offer that service safely and in the interests of the patients they would serve.

I would like to further point out, because the amendment is quite wide ranging in terms of things that have been said in support of it, Mr. Chairman, that the legislation has very specific provisions, for instance, to prevent anyone being forced, or verbally harassed at least, to buy enhanced services. That is very, very clear.

It is very clear in the legislation that there will be no queue-jumping. There will be no incentive provided to the facility in any way to not provide services in a regular and equitable way to the people that are referred there for surgical treatment.

It's very important, I think, at this point to emphasize that the bill overall bans queue-jumping. It bans people from having to be forced into paying extra for either materials or services that are not required for dealing with their particular condition.

Further, since it is also being referred to in debate on this amendment, elsewhere in the legislation there are very strong conflict of interest provisions. There is a very wide-ranging set of criteria that has to be considered when a contract would be approved by a regional health authority.

So there are many, many controls and protections for the public interest in this particular section of the legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to a couple of other things that have been raised in debate. One is the reference to what is happening in other parts of this country. I notice that the reference to the Shouldice clinic was passed over rather quickly, but the fact of the matter is that that facility does offer surgical services. It does have overnight stays and has been operating quite successfully. I would credit the facility and the government of Ontario, but it has been operating quite successfully for many years. So that is an example.

We can refer to the Saskatchewan legislation, but the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that although perhaps at this point in time Saskatchewan has not chosen to have a surgical facility approved, the legislation is quite open to that occurring. In fact, it is more wide open with fewer requirements and protections than Bill 11.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that my reading of the amendment that's been put before the committee would in fact remove our ability to deal with another very important control and protection in this legislation, and that is to deal with the whole area of regulating uninsured services that would be offered in our public health care system in a surgical facility that might be approved but also throughout the system. So I do not support this amendment for that reason as well.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The opposition really finds itself in a bit of a tight spot with this bill, because in our minds Bill 11 is an unsalvageable piece of legislation. It doesn't matter how many amendments we make to it, it is not what Albertans want. It's not what numerous reports of government have told, and I'll make reference to the government's own health summit report in a moment.

The public have for weeks now been trying to get their message across to this government with respect to the bill. The government's response was to introduce a form of closure to quickly end the second reading of this bill. We now find ourselves in committee, which is the amendment phase of the bill, and if we took the solid position, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a salvageable bill, we would not be introducing amendments this evening. But, in essence, that would give the government what they want. It would give them an expedient passage through committee. So we find ourselves tonight proposing amendments to the bill under section 2(1) that have been read into the record, so I will not repeat them. I think it's appropriate, though, to just reference back to some of the suggestions the public made to this government in 1999 through the government's own orchestrated health summit.

I'd like to specifically highlight the two that related to the public wanting a clear plan for health care, recommendation 3. Under that recommendation the following reference was made:

Government should establish a forum for health planning to develop a long term plan for Alberta's health system." This is what the public told this government less than a year ago. "The forum should include an ongoing process for significant involvement of people across the province, people in the health system and community members." The government didn't respect that recommendation, Mr. Chairman. We didn't see widespread consultation on Bill 11. We didn't see any form of public input into the bill that's before us, and subsequently the government's got it all wrong. Now the public has found another way to express their opinions and give their input.

I'd like to make reference to another recommendation in the health summit report that is under: "The public should have effective ways of participating in future decisions." The recommendation: "Government should consider extending the public consultation process on a regular basis to involve more people in discussions about the health system and its future." It's interesting, Mr. Chairman, that we're here this evening debating subamendments to government amendments on the Health Care Protection Act, Bill 11. The public has not had any say on what was proposed in that bill originally, nor does the government find itself even honouring the recommendations made by its own summit less than one year ago.

I think it's also important to point out in the context of the subamendments that if we look back to what was perhaps the seedling of Bill 11, the Gimbel Foundation Act, it is important to reference in the record what the Gimbel Foundation Act was to accomplish. In its objects it said that the foundation would engage in every phase and aspect of rendering the same medical services to the public that a registered practitioner of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the province of Alberta is authorized to render. This was the legislation, the private member's bill, proposed by Howard Gimbel, who performs many of the cataract surgeries in the province.

Further, the proposed bill was also intended to establish and maintain health clinics, institutions, lodgings, and facilities for those in need of health care or education and for the aged; to engage in, conduct, support, aid, and advance medical, surgical, scientific learning, skill education, investigation and research; and most importantly, Mr. Chairman, to provide health care including, I would emphasize, surgical services in Canada and throughout the world. Exactly the intent that was in Private Member's Bill 6, the Gimbel Foundation Act, in 1994 we now find embodied . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Point of Order Clarification

MR. HERARD: Mr. Chairman, besides relevance, under Beauchesne 459, the hon. member has now several times said: private member's bill. Wrong, wrong, wrong. It was a private bill from a citizen of this province, not a member of this Assembly. Try and get it straight, because that is not the same thing.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Chairman, I think what the member is providing is a point of clarification. This is most certainly relevant to the discussion tonight. Explicit in the citations I've referenced was the discussion about the provision of surgical services.

THE CHAIRMAN: There are three kinds of bills: a public bill, a private member's public bill, and a private bill, which is by a private company and applies separately for usually insurance companies, religious orders, that kind of group. To be truthful to the committee, we were discussing other issues related to this and I did not hear the reference, so I can't really comment on the reference other than to make the comment that there are three kinds of bills. You know perfectly well, hon. member, since you sit on the Private Bills Committee, as does the chair, that there is a substantive difference between them. So if that was the point of the intervention, then it's quite right. Hopefully you can address the subamendment, hon. member.

MRS. SLOAN: My honoured colleague from Calgary-Buffalo would like to make a few remarks.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might make the observation that the Member for Calgary-Egmont stood and referenced a question of relevance. Well, I didn't hear a ruling on the point of order in terms of relevance. What I'm suggesting is that if the Member for Calgary-Egmont wants to harass opposition speakers while they're speaking to a bill . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair was trying to make a point. One, the chair could not hear the hon. member in the sense of what she was saying about whether it's a private bill or a private member's bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont got up and indicated that she was talking about a private bill. The chair confessed that at the table here we were discussing another issue, so the chair had not actually heard what the hon. member said, but if we are dealing with three kinds of bills and we're talking about a private bill – she's a member of the Private Bills Committee, as I am and some other members are – that is not the same as a private member's public bill.

MR. DICKSON: That's not a point of order, Mr. Chairman. That's a clarification. If he wants to debate it, he can.

THE CHAIRMAN: You can't make a point of order on a point of order, and I think you recall that.

Could we just move on – we're in difficult times anyway – and let the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview continue.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would hope the same provisions apply to the exchange relative to this possible point of order not being taken from my debate time this evening.

MRS. SLOAN: With reference to the Gimbel Foundation Act, perhaps to alleviate any discomfort the government members may have with respect to the reminder about this particular bill, one of the things the Gimbel Foundation Act also proposed was that the foundation would have the rights, capacities, and powers of a natural person, which makes it very, very interesting, Mr. Chairman, that the government's initial reference under this section 2(1) was with respect to a "person." We find ourselves this evening in a position where, in proposing the amendments to this section, it's a mechanism which the opposition is utilizing to restrict any intentions the government or potentially a government in the future might have of someday approving private hospitals, 24-hour facilities, under this bill.

I also, though, want to just quickly reference debate that occurred on Bill 37. Again, really we're redebating, Mr. Chairman, things we had debated in 1998 and in 1994. I would reference the Alberta Hansard of February 17, 1999. At that time we were debating Bill 37. I would like to cite statements made by both the Premier and the minister of health. The Premier says:

Well, Mr. Speaker, during the last session, the fall session, we attempted to introduce legislation that would indeed protect the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. Obviously that legislation was not acceptable to the opposition Liberals or the opposition New Democrats. So the Minister of Health struck a blue-ribbon panel to examine that legislation, and hopefully legislation will be tabled later in this session that will address that issue.

I will, if time permits, cite from the blue-ribbon panel report. Somehow I think the government has strayed yet again from the recommendations made by its own committees and summits.

The minister of health said on the same date:

What I am aware of is that the College of Physicians and Surgeons is working on by-laws and regulations with respect to what services or procedures require overnight stays in a facility and what procedures or services can be safely and appropriately provided within a less than 12-hour period. This area of developing clinical practice guidelines is something that the College of Physicians and Surgeons has had under consideration for some time. I am pleased to see that they are addressing that area in more detail.

My point, Mr. Chairman, is that we have not seen in this Assembly nor has the public had the privilege of seeing any of this work completed by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. So how are we to be in a position to be confident that in the designation of providing services, whether it's within a 24-hour period or a 12-hour period, the government vis-a-vis the College of Physicians and Surgeons has done their homework in this particular area? We don't have those before us this evening.

Now, I'm going to go back to the health summit report, and I'd just like to highlight a couple of other things Albertans told the government and the amendments to Bill 11 do not address. The first one is that the health summit told the government that "people know what they want from the health system," and they listed a number of areas: access, accountability, affordable and sustainable, adequately funded, publicly funded and administered, consistent with the Canada Health Act, standards, information, choices, and the list goes on. The health summit told this government that they wanted the government to "explore options for managing the growing costs of pharmaceuticals including the feasibility of expanding public coverage for pharmaceuticals," again something which Bill 11 does not address.

Thirdly, the health summit told this government that they should look at establishing a task force to review education and training programs for health care providers to develop better links among the programs, build greater awareness and understanding of the roles of . . . health providers.

They recommended the government look at alternative ways of paying providers, particularly physicians. I'm referencing all these areas, Mr. Chairman, because our debate, the debate on this bill, is being confined to a very, very narrow aspect of health care. The government, on the other hand, has been given by the public this broad range of recommendations which the public expected them to act on. Instead, we find the government bringing forward a bill which really doesn't benefit the public but demonstrates providers who will provide care in a private, for-profit context.

In terms of the subamendments which we've proposed, the first one this evening, Mr. Chairman, is just to clear up what I believe was probably an administrative error on the government's part. They indicated in their amendments that "no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service," but when they referred to physicians, they simply said that "no physician shall provide a surgical service." That clearly, I believe, was an oversight. I think they intended that it would be: no physician shall provide an insured service except in a public hospital or approved surgical facility. We've assisted the government in clearing that matter up.

In terms of our 2(1)(b), adding "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours" after "approved surgical facility," again, Mr. Chairman, to put it on the record, this is clearly that only patients whose surgery requires less than 12 hours' stay would in fact be appropriate for these types of surgical facilities, even though in principle we don't agree with the concept of contracting out public services to surgical facilities in the first place.

With respect to the subamendments that we proposed this evening, that pretty much sums up my comments. I know that there are other members of our caucus who are willing and ready to respond. I look forward, Mr. Chairman, to referencing the amendments made by government at some point later in this debate.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to stand up in the Assembly this evening and speak to the subamendment that's on the floor. But prior to doing that, I would like to say to you – and I know I'm not going to ask for a ruling on this – that I quite frankly see this subamendment as being contrary to the bill and the amendment originally. I know it's been signed off by Parliamentary Counsel, though, so I will speak to it.

We did have previously in the Legislature here, from a number of members in this Assembly, what I'm going to speak to, in regards to the 52 nonhospital surgical facilities that are currently operating in the province of Alberta. In those clinics, Mr. Chairman, we have over 150 surgeries that are taking place today and have been for a number of years. Those surgeries, I have to stress, have been approved by the College of Physician and Surgeons. They are surgeries that we look at as being elective surgery. It's surgery that's conducted on people that are relatively healthy. It is not surgery that is urgent or emergent but is elective.

In Calgary alone we have 12,000 people on the waiting list for elective surgery, which is one of the reasons why this bill has come before the Legislature. And that is – and it fits in with the Canada Health Act – that we look at accessibility for people that require day surgery.

Now, the college provided a list, and members of the Legislature have had the list given to them. I think it was the Member for Calgary-Buffalo who mentioned in the Legislature that this list was filed with the Legislature. In this list, which was approved by the college, I must say that many of these surgeries require a general anesthetic, Mr. Chairman. Not only do they require a general anesthetic or sedation, which means that you need to monitor the patients' vital signs, but they include all uses of intravenously administered sedatives or narcotics.

I think that is something that could be stated over and over again, and it may be during this debate in the Legislature. I really don't know. It's something that's very serious. You go in, and it's elective surgery. It means that you can have a general anesthetic, but also you can have the use of drugs by injection which are intended to or may induce a major nerve block or a spinal epidural or intravenous regional block.

I am absolutely amazed, when I read this list, that people would look at it and say: I can go in for my surgery and have a general anesthetic in the OR at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and because that clinic is open for 12 hours, I can have that surgery at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and can be in the OR for two to four hours. They may have complications arise with the nursing observation or whatever, when they've had sedation or if they require a dressing change or some pain sedation of some sort. I may have that, and you expect me to leave that facility within a four-hour period and go home and recover? I don't think so. I think it makes good sense for patients to be able to have nursing observation and stay in that facility as long as necessary.

So, Mr. Chairman, what I'm going to say too – and to the people in the gallery as well – is that patients that go home too early are the patients that get into trouble, and that is why it is so necessary to have this bill be over a 12-hour stay.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm very happy to be able to speak to this subamendment, which amends a very flawed bill, and eventually to respond to the Member for Calgary-Cross's comments.

First of all, on the subamendment. I would like to share with you what the folks outside have been saying to us about this subamendment and other components of the bill. Those several hundred people who have gathered in the rotunda have moved up the stairs to the Legislature and are up on the upper floor trying to get into the gallery. Of course, we're in lockdown now, so they can't get in. So to our guests in the gallery, if you leave, you can't come back in. Perhaps at this point in time this may be the safest place to be, because those folks out there aren't very happy. They're fully in support of all subamendments, not just this one but any future subamendments that we bring on to this Legislature floor this evening to prolong this bill, giving the government a chance to have sober second thought and do what they are asking for, which is kill the bill.

The hundreds of people out there are insisting that we prolong debate as long as it takes for the government to consider killing the bill, and you can hear them in support of that out there now. I would suggest that when hundreds of people start to gather and are this enthusiastic – and it's the first time certainly since I've been elected, since 1993, that we have seen this kind of response to any legislation that has hit this floor – the government has misjudged themselves on this legislation, and they need to kill the bill.

MRS. SLOAN: This is their House.

MS CARLSON: This is their House. This is the people of Alberta's House, Mr. Chairman, not the government's House. It is for the people of Alberta, and they have a right to have their voices heard. They are being heard in a lockdown situation right now outside of this Chamber. [disturbance in the galleries]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order. Order in the gallery. For the third time, you are not part of the proceedings. You are simply here to observe.

MS CARLSON: We certainly appreciate the support of all of you who have come this evening and those who are outside so that when we need information in terms of whether people support this legislation and any subamendments we may bring forward, we can get firsthand knowledge from those people. They support what we are doing. They do not support what you are doing, and you are going to find out next time in the polls. All of these folks who yesterday were not activists politically are today activists politically, and they will keep that in their minds when it comes to working on campaigns and supporting legislators who want to be in this Assembly after the next election. I thank you very much for that.

Mr. Chairman, the Member for Calgary-Cross made some quite frightening statements in terms of her comments. First of all, she talked about the parameters of this bill in terms of the connection to the subamendment fitting in with the Canada Health Act. You know, at the end of the day, Calgary-Cross, we may find that this bill does adhere to the letter of the law of the Canada Health Act, but one thing I know for sure and one thing that all those folks out there know for sure is that it is not in the spirit of the Canada Health Act. There is nothing in this legislation that adheres to the spirit of that act, and it is certainly not in the spirit of those people who founded the act.

THE CHAIRMAN: We have a point of order, hon. member.

Point of Order
Provocative Language

MRS. O'NEILL: I don't know what the point of order is except for the fact that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is inciting the gallery and the sentiment of the people outside. Quite frankly, it's unacceptable.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, you know the rules about speaking as you move and when you're not in your place.

To the point of order, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: If government members think that somehow they're going to discourage the opposition by standing up without citations, without authority, to harass opposition speakers to this amendment, I can tell them that they will be unsuccessful. Mr. Chairman, I know that you're not going to allow interruptions unless there's a properly documented citation. Without a citation, we end up with a bit of a free-for-all, and I would think that in this place we try and maintain some order.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader on the point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I'll provide the hon. member with a citation. It's 23(j) of our Standing Orders, which precludes members from using language "likely to create disorder." The hon. member is clearly speaking to the gallery instead of speaking to the members. Now, I appreciate that we have people in the gallery here tonight. Many nights we work late hours, and we have no one watching and no one listening, so I think it's great that we have people here tonight.

But the rules are the rules, and the hon. member should not be inciting the gallery to participate in the debate, nor should she be applauding what's happening outside. By giving any encouragement to that sort of disorder, it does abuse the privileges of the members of the House, and it could be something rather grander than a Standing Order breach that she's accomplishing. I would ask you to admonish members to be very careful not to breach the privileges of the members and not to create disorder by encouraging disruption from the gallery.

THE CHAIRMAN: I have several people wanting to speak on this point of order. You have spoken once already, Calgary-Buffalo – have you not? – on the point of order?

MR. DICKSON: Yes, I did.

THE CHAIRMAN: We have Edmonton-Rutherford on the point of order, which is Standing Order 23.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Chairman, government members are standing up and suggesting that we should somehow participate with them in muzzling Albertans. Certainly if you don't get the message by now, with all due respect, that Albertans don't want this bill . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, you're debating the issue. There's nothing wrong with debating the issue, but right now we have a point of order, and when it's your turn, you can have your opportunity to debate the issue.

MR. WICKMAN: I'm speaking on the point of order in response to the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

THE CHAIRMAN: Certainly you have a right to speak, hon. member, but you have to speak to the point of order as opposed to entering into the debate.

Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you wanting to speak to the point of order, or would you like me to rule?

MS CARLSON: To the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intent to incite anything in this Legislative Assembly. However, I was elected to be the voice of my constituents in this House, and I intend to do that. I intend to be a voice that is representative of what they want to say. It is not my intention to incite or to provoke, but if the government members feel provoked to enter into the debate based on what I have to say on behalf of my constituents, then I welcome that debate.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would observe that although the hon. member did not know the citation, it was presented to her. Citation 23(j): "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." Not unlike beauty, it's in the eye of the beholder. Nevertheless, it is a point to be recognized, hon. member. The hon. citizens who are without the doors, I am sure, are unable to hear us, so it would be of some difficulty to do that. To the extent that the present members in the gallery are prepared to listen without clapping of hands or encouragement or boos to discourage, as long as they're here as observers, that's perfectly fine.

So if the hon. member could continue her reflections on subamendment A1, section A. Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to continue. I was just getting to the part in my discussion here this evening on this subamendment where I was responding to the Member for Calgary-Cross. She made some statements that are clearly not accurate and are clearly out of touch in terms of how the current medical system is conducting itself. I expect that in her comments she was referring to the subamendment being amended in clause (b) by adding "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours" after "approved surgical facility." She talked to us about the sedatives in narcotics and the use of drugs by injection in terms of citing reasons why patients should be in the hospitals for longer than 12 hours in some cases.

But it's clear to me that she doesn't know what happens in hospitals now, Mr. Chairman. For sure there are any number of day surgeries that occur where in fact people are given injections, when people are put under general anesthetic, and it's day surgery. They're in at 8 o'clock in the morning. They don't go for their operation until 11 or 12 o'clock, lunchtime, and they're out of that hospital by 2 o'clock because the hospital needs that bed.

I know that from personal experience. My son, when he was 10 years old, had to go for day surgery to have a tube put down his throat to have his stomach looked at. Well, he was just a little boy, and we know how serious it is to put young children under general anesthetic and how they need to be specifically monitored and watched afterwards. Well, in we went, no breakfast. Of course, we're there by 7 that morning. He doesn't go in for the scoping until 11:30, 12 o'clock, at noon. He's out of there by 2 o'clock. He's out of the anesthetic by 3 o'clock, and we are out the door by 3:15.

So if the Member for Calgary-Cross is deluding herself by thinking that the kind of legislation they're going to pass here is going to change that in this province – it's not going to, Mr. Chairman. It's already happening, and because of that we think it's very important that the legislation be specific now and that we include a clause in this subamendment that states: "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours" after "approved surgical facilities." If you don't do that, you're talking about major surgery in this province, not minor surgery. That is exactly where we say the government is going on this bill, and that is not what they have been telling the people of the province.

I stand by these words, and I'm happy to see her correct them if she can, but she can't. In fact, the exact example they use in this Legislature day after day as being a good example of that is Shouldice in Ontario. Shouldice requires people for hernias to stay three nights in their hospital, when the same public hospital in Ontario will do complicated hernia operations – not simple hernia operations like Shouldice does – and kick them out as day surgery. Now, how can that be, Mr. Chairman? If we don't put some qualifiers in this legislation, like we have in this subamendment, then how are the people of the province ever going to know what's going to be happening with this legislation and ever have any control over what's happening? They're not going to, because this government wants people not to understand what's happening, to promote private hospitals, and to allow different kinds of behaviour in the private hospitals than is currently happening in public hospitals, and we know that because they've used example after example where across this country it's happening right now.

They say that's not the case, but in fact we have proof that it is the case, Mr. Chairman, and that is why we need to bring in these subamendments to tighten up this legislation. Who can believe that in a bill like this, that's been studied for years, we need to go to the extent that we have subamendments that we have to bring in? It's unbelievable that a government with the kind of manpower and alleged expertise that they have can bring in a bill that's so flawed that before it even gets to committee, the first thing they do is introduce amendments. The first thing that has to happen is we have to correct their amendments.

Look at what they left out. I refer now specifically to subamendment SA1. We're striking out "No physician shall provide a surgical service" and substituting "No physician shall provide an insured surgical service." Was it their intent all along, Mr. Chairman, to say that private hospitals in this province under their legislation would be able to provide surgical services that weren't insured? That's how the legislation reads right now, and that means that somebody out there is going to make a pile of money, and it means that it's completely contrary to what they've been stating in this House, that they were talking about only insured surgical services. Yet that's not what the legislation says.

So exactly what is the intent of this legislation? I believe that it is the government's intent to deliberately mislead the people of this province and ram this legislation through this House as fast as they can. We will see closure this week one more time, and it will be a shame, because this is the most substantive bill that has ever hit the floor of this Legislature since I have been elected, and it is the most seriously flawed legislation as well.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and make room for my colleagues.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It certainly is a pleasure to be able to get up tonight and speak on this very important bill. The hon. member's absolutely correct. It is a very important bill, as are the subamendments.

Mr. Chairman, I will preface my statement by first of all letting the gallery and the MLAs know that I am a licensed anesthetist; I give anesthetics. I'm also a licensed surgeon; I do surgery. I'm also a licensed practising physician in the province of Alberta as well as being the Minister of Learning.

Mr. Chairman, what I would like to do tonight is address three points as they pertain to this subamendment. The first point is the overnight stays or the 12-hour stay, depending on which side you look at. I would put to you that it is an absolute fallacy to put a time limit on the procedures. To put a 12-hour time limit on the procedures is absolutely wrong. What should be done and what we are looking at in this bill is that we must look at each procedure individually.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons is the licensing body of every physician in the province of Alberta. It is a public body. It is a body that has every one of its meetings in public. You can go and listen to what the College of Physicians and Surgeons are talking about at every single meeting that they have.

Mr. Chairman, the overnight stays, as I said first, are an absolute fallacy, because what has to happen is quite simply that a patient should stay at the facility as long as is necessary. The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross hit it right on the nose. There is no reason, if you go in at 3 o'clock or 4 o'clock in the afternoon and if you have a complication from an anesthetic – and as I've already said, I am an anesthetist, and there are complications from anesthetics – that that patient should be kicked out, that that patient should be sent to a hotel, which is what happens right now, or that they should be sent to the hospital. I say this a little bit facetiously, but half of it is partially true. I think that the 12-hour limit is extremely discriminatory against rural people.

Mr. Chairman, when my people come from rural Alberta to have surgery in a day clinic, whether it's day surgery in the hospital or whether it's in a surgical facility, because of the 12-hour rule they do not have the ability to go home and have their family look after them. They go to a hotel, and the nurse calls them in the middle of the night to see if they're okay. What is wrong with this scenario? What needs to happen is that these people need to be in a facility overnight if they need it. As everyone in this room knows, people are individuals. What that means is that . . . [interjection]

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, if you wish to speak to this bill again tonight, you're perfectly free to do so. As you know, you can speak an unlimited number of times in committee. So I wonder if we could just hear the Minister of Learning, and when he's finished, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, every patient is independent and every patient is individual in how they respond to an anesthetic. To put a 12-hour artificial time limit is wrong. What you must do is approve or disapprove procedures that are done in surgical facilities.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is absolutely wrong. It has to allow overnight stays where the procedure warrants an overnight stay, where the patient warrants an overnight stay. Let's get away from this . . .

MRS. SLOAN: Point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: I think, hon. members, we have a point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Chairman, under 23(i). The member is imputing that the opposition somehow has false motives in bringing forward this subamendment with respect to 12-hour stays, and I would cite from Hansard in 1994 where the hon. minister of health, in fact, indicated that he was directing the College of Physicians and Surgeons to establish what services and procedures can be safely and appropriately provided within a less-than-12-hour period. He's implying that we have some type of false agenda this evening when his own licensing body and the minister of health have clearly been on the record as saying that 12-hour guidelines are necessary.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members are reminded that the point of order as cited is whether or not a member "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," not to a group. We've had that raised a number of times. Whether you're saying it's the government or whether you're saying the opposition, it isn't a specific individual, so therefore it doesn't obtain. That why it's there, to protect an individual member, and there was no individual cited that the chair heard.

MRS. SLOAN: It's false.

THE CHAIRMAN: But it doesn't go to a group.

MRS. SLOAN: The individual is affected by the 12-hour stay whether it's appropriately applied or inappropriately applied.

THE CHAIRMAN: No. Anyway, the hon. Minister of . . .

MRS. SLOAN: I'd like to know, Mr. Chairman. I might need a 12-hour procedure someday.

THE CHAIRMAN: Right. You're arguing the issue, and that's fine. You can argue the issue when it's your turn, but you can't use it as a point of order, because it doesn't obtain. But you can argue that as an issue. You're free to do that. I'm just the referee.

The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member just said a very interesting thing. She said, "I might need a 12-hour procedure." I'm sure that what she is saying, because she is a nurse and I am a doctor, is that we want to stay in hospital as long as is necessary. We want to stay in the hospital if it's done in the hospital. If it's done in a surgical facility, quite frankly, if there are complications with my anesthetic, if it is me, I want to stay there where my doctor is, where my nurse is, and where the people who are recovering me are. The people who did my operation, who know exactly what happened in that operation, I want them to be there. I don't want to be transferred to a hospital anywhere to look after my recovery.

A couple of other points that I'd like to say, and the one issue is, I suppose, a little bit in rebuttal. The hon. member was talking about regional anesthetics, injectable narcotics, and she was talking about them leading to a general anesthetic. Well, obviously the hon. member does not know what she's talking about. In many cases they are given injectable narcotics. They are given benzodiazepines, and they are not asleep for some of these procedures. Mr. Chairman, you know as well as I know and as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross knows, often these drugs can cause as many side effects and can cause as long a recovery as a general anesthetic. So quite literally, if I were in a facility of any sort, I'd want to stay there until my recovery was complete. I don't want to be kicked out after 12 hours if I'm not well.

Mr. Chairman, there's one other point I'd like to say – and it is in this subamendment – and that's just the whole discussion about the hospital versus the surgical facility. I will fault our side a little bit, I'll fault the opposition a little bit in that it has not been absolutely clear what a hospital is and it has not been absolutely clear what a surgical facility is. I'll be the first one to say that. But it really is quite simple. Ask your 3-year-old kid, ask your 5-year-old kid what a hospital is. "A hospital is where I go when I get sick. A hospital is where I go when I have an emergency."

These surgical facilities have nothing to do with emergency treatment. Mr. Chairman, these are elective surgical facilities. They will undertake surgery on patients when it is an elective procedure. That is the difference. Hospitals provide all-spectrum care. They provide emergency services. They provide 24 hour a day emergency services, 24 hour a day inpatient services. When you get pneumonia, are you going to go to a surgical facility or to a hospital? You're going to go to a hospital because that is what a hospital is for. It is not an elective surgical facility, which is what is being contemplated here.

Mr. Chairman, quite simply, the elective surgical facilities will be in place. They will decrease the waiting lists in the public system. They will allow the public system to focus on the sick people. [interjection]

Obviously the hon. member who just threw out something at me has not been in a hospital. She is a nurse, but she obviously has not been in a hospital. Mr. Chairman, hospitals are for sick people, and when I'm sick, when I have diabetes, when I have heart problems, when I need surgery, I want to be in a hospital. That's what our hospitals are for. When I need a small operation, when I need a hernia done, when I need something minor done, I want to be in a surgical facility. I want to be in a surgical facility and I want to stay there until I am fully recovered. This is what this legislation is all about.

MS LEIBOVICI: On a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: A point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MS LEIBOVICI: Beauchesne 333. I'd like to ask him a question. Then why does Bill 11 define a private hospital as one that provides emergency services, diagnostic services, surgical services, and medical services? Why does your own bill say that, then?

THE CHAIRMAN: Order. Thank you, hon. member. As you well know, you're entitled to ask whether you can ask a question . . .

MS LEIBOVICI: And I did and I want an answer.

THE CHAIRMAN: No, no, no.

. . . but you don't ask the question. The hon. member who is being the question has two choices, to say yes or no, and they give no reasons for it.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Chairman, I will not answer that question, but I will allude to that question.

DR. OBERG: It is common sense that a hospital is where you go when you have an emergency when you are sick. In elective surgical facilities that is not what happens. Mr. Chairman, if these members don't know that, then these are the people that are trying to put across falsehoods to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, another thing I want to comment on – and this is indirectly what is related to the bill – is the whole idea of contracting out. Under section A in the amendment it says:

No physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in

- (a) a public hospital, or
- (b) an approved surgical facility.

Mr. Chairman, I have done lots of surgery. I have done lots of surgery in my clinic, that I built, that I own, that I pay the expenses on. If that is not a private clinic, I don't know what is. We do it all the time. If you go in for stitches, if you go in to have surgery on your back, on your arms, you do it in a clinic. That is contracted out from Alberta Health to the physicians. That happens every day in Alberta.

AN HON. MEMBER: Aren't you in conflict of interest? You're in conflict of interest.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Chairman, it sounds like they're calling me on a point of privilege.

Mr. Chairman, what it says in the bill, if I can read this in making reference to the question that was asked:

"Public hospital" means

- (i) a hospital that is established by or under, or the establishment or operation of which is governed by, the Hospitals Act, the Regional Health Authorities Act, the Cancer Programs Act or the Workers' Compensation Act, or
- (ii) a hospital that is established by the Government of Alberta or the Government of Canada.

It is very, very plain the difference between a hospital and an elective surgical facility. That is something that has not been brought out.

I was getting at the contracting out, and I was reading from subamendment A. Mr. Chairman, contracting out happens all the time. Contracting out is happening everywhere we go in Alberta. When we are talking about overnight stays, all we are saying quite literally is that where things can be done cheaper, where the quality is equal or better than what is in the public facility, where the contracts are made, where we can put money into getting people service rather than the bricks and mortar of hospitals, the bricks and mortar of surgical suites, we will look at that. I think it is imperative upon us as elected members to look at saving money for the taxpayer of Alberta if we can.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will say that we will not sacrifice patient care to save money. If the private sector can do it under the accreditation of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, under the numerous things that the Minister of Health and Wellness has put forward, if those are satisfied, then, yes, I agree that overnight stays should occur, I agree that surgical facilities should be open, and I agree that we should do it right now, that we should do it today.

Is this going to turn Alberta into a two-tier system? Absolutely not. Absolutely not. Mr. Chairman, we still pay as the government of Alberta. We're the ones who put out money. As an individual citizen of Alberta am I going to have to pay when I go to these surgical facilities? The answer is no. The answer is very simple. The answer is no. Regardless of who owns a facility the answer is no; citizens of Alberta will not be paying for health care when they go to the elective surgical facilities.

The elective surgical facilities will decrease waiting lists. The elective surgical facilities will increase patient care. They will decrease patient suffering, and, Mr. Chairman, that is what Bill 11 is all about. It is not about Americanization. It is not about two-tier systems. What it is about is improving patient care. Let's get off the politics. Let's talk about patient care.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the subamendment introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I think it's important to note the context of this subamendment and the amendment it would change.

Mr. Chairman, we have in front of us a bill that's been sent to all Albertans, a bill that is a little less than 20 pages in length, yet before the Assembly the government has placed in front of us six pages of amendments, so it's that subamendment that we're discussing tonight. But that's the context. How well thought through, how well crafted is a piece of legislation when just weeks after its introduction we're forced to look at six pages of amendments by the government and I'm not sure how many subamendments by the opposition and then some substantial amendments? So it's within that context of a very flawed piece of legislation that we look at tonight's subamendment.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, we have a point of order, I presume. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Pursuant to Beauchesne 333, would the hon. member permit a question?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes or no is all you have to say.

DR. MASSEY: No.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. You got your answer.

9:40

MR. MASSEY: The offending word in the amendment and the offending word in the . . . [interjection] You'll get your turn. The offending words in the subamendment that have been modified are "approved surgical facility." Those are the words that have everyone in the province hung up, and it doesn't matter how the government tries to spin, how the government tries to define what an approved surgical facility is, people read "approved surgical facility" as private hospital. No matter what kind of spin campaign, no matter how many million dollars are spent, that's how people are interpreting it.

I find it quite astounding that members opposite would stand up and try to declare that people don't understand, that they're being misled by the opposition. After all, this is the bill that was sent to every Albertan in the province, and as much as I like to think the opposition is powerful, we're not quite that powerful yet, Mr. Chairman.

The test of any amendment – there are a number of tests. One, does the amendment clarify? I would submit that's exactly what this subamendment does. It clarifies that the services are to be an insured surgical service. It clarifies that the approved surgical facility is not going to be an overnight surgical facility. Those are major, major items of importance to those people who are opposed to Bill 11.

Does it correct errors? Well, I think it does correct an error. The error was in ever introducing approved surgical facilities and trying to pass them off as something other than a private hospital.

One of the other criteria for a good amendment is that it should provide some assurance in response to a concern that's been raised, and that's exactly what the amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark does. It assures Albertans that approved surgical facilities will remain clinics, that they won't in any way become private hospitals.

Another criteria for a good amendment: does it strengthen the bill? Yes, certainly. By referring exclusively to insured surgical services, by limiting the length of stays in these approved surgical facilities, it assures Albertans that we don't see the introduction of private hospitals.

Does it change the bill for the better? Another criteria of a good amendment. Certainly it does in ways that I've already mentioned: by containing the kinds of activities that can be undertaken at an approved surgical facility and by directing the kinds of services that can be performed at those facilities.

Does it set some standards? It certainly does. By including the notion of 12 hours and limiting stays to that, it sets a standard that can be used to judge approved medical facilities.

Does it alter the bill for the better? Yes. Again, it makes the bill clearer, and it makes it very certain in people's minds exactly what these approved surgical facilities are going to be.

The last criterion that I would look at: does it correct some oversights in the original bill? I think it can be argued, Mr. Chairman, that these two subamendments do exactly that.

Mr. Chairman, all of the upset, all of the discussion, all of the protracted hours of debate could be eliminated if this subamendment were adopted. It would take the most obnoxious part of Bill 11 and make it palatable for people in the province.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I know there are other speakers that want to make comment.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak about the amendments, and I'm pleased to speak about Bill 11. Today it's not difficult to find a newspaper article that doesn't talk about physician shortages, long waiting times for treatment and lack of high-tech equipment. It doesn't matter what daily newspaper you pick up, the problems are the same in Saint John's, Toronto, Saskatoon, and Vancouver. They're the same all over this country.

Let's recognize what the political partisans reflect to acknowledge: we have a problem in health care. The Liberals speak with great passion when they espouse their point of view on health care. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre speaks passionately in her newsletter about Bill 11, and I'll quote: I personally feel strongly that Bill 11 will not address the problems in our health care system. Well, through the whole newsletter there is not one idea about how to fix that problem.

Why all the fuss? First, a vocal stand is popular with Albertans and Canadians. Health care continues to poll well. For all their rhetoric the federal Liberals cut the transfer payments by 50 percent to 13 percent, a cut that certainly impacted provincial health care funding. The federal Liberals are . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Relevance, Mr. Chairman.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we've given a lot of latitude tonight. Bear with me, please. We're talking about an amendment that's been brought forward from the opposition, and I'm speaking to the amendment.

The Liberals can easily blame all problems with the medicare system on the provinces by pointing out that health care is after all a provincial responsibility as set out by the Constitution, but the federal government does have an important role as the guardian of the principles of health care. The provinces have a legitimate grievance. The federal government contributes well under a quarter of the funds for health care yet refuses to allow flexibility. Well, Mr. Chairman, the simple solution is to put up or be quiet. One must examine the Canada Health Act and the irony of Mr. Rock, who has made it clear that there is no flexibility in the five principles of the act.

Let's examine it for a minute, Mr. Chairman. Portability: portability means that a Quebecker getting medical care in Alberta wouldn't have to worry; the insurance coverage is portable. Well, Quebec doesn't have an agreement with the other nine provinces. Many physicians in English Canada are reluctant to take Quebec patients because the Quebec government pays low compensations to physicians, and the Quebec government doesn't cover hospital stays in other provinces. Portability across Canada? I think not, Mr. Chairman. Not once did the hon. Leader of the Opposition talk about that when she spoke about her life and time spent in Quebec in her passionate speech about equity.

The principle of universality is supposed to mean that every citizen is covered by insurance, but this isn't the case in several provinces when citizens are charged to help fund some medical services.

Accessibility is another one, Mr. Chairman, a principle that Canadians hold dear. Wrong. Provinces must provide services with uniform terms and conditions.

MS BLAKEMAN: Point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order Relevance

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. The citation is 23(b), relevance. As I understand it, the amendment that we are looking at is discussing insured and uninsured services and stays of 12 hours. While I appreciate that the member may not have had an opportunity to do her second reading debate, we do have an amendment in front of us that's fairly narrowly focused.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you wish to make comments on the point of order?

MR. HANCOCK: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think it's passing strange that as we sit quietly and listen to wide-ranging debate from the Liberal side of the House and people shouting across at me, I'm wanting to muzzle debate when I'm asking for a little decorum. Then when one of our members gets up to speak to this very important section of this very important bill, members opposite want to curtail debate down to the narrowest of the narrow.

In fact, the hon. member is following the practice that has been happening in this House over the last, I think, six hours that we've had in debate on amendment A1, section A, and its subamendment SA1. There's been about six hours at least and maybe seven hours of debate so far on this particular section and this rather modest amendment to the bill. That debate, if we review Hansard, has been very wide ranging in coming back to this particular section, so it would be totally inappropriate for the chair to rule this hon. member's contribution to the debate as irrelevant when there's been so much irrelevant debate from the other side.

MR. DICKSON: I hadn't intended to join the point of order, but after hearing the provocative comments of the Government House Leader, let's recognize that every one of my colleagues who spoke to it has referred to elements of the amendment that's in front of us. [interjections] Every single one of them. I challenge any of these people . . . [interjections]

THE CHAIRMAN: I wonder if we would allow the gentleman to have his point. Calgary-Buffalo is the only one that's been recognized.

MR. DICKSON: I listened to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and no doubt they're heart-felt, genuinely believed sentiments, but they had absolutely nothing to do with the subamendment in front of us. You know, we started off with her colleague. I don't know what happened to the Member for Calgary-Egmont, who was quick on his feet a couple of times to raise questions of relevance when we started out but was nowhere to be heard when his colleague started taking us on basically her second reading debate speech. I understand she may have been one of the 44 government MLAs that never spoke at second reading of the bill, so she's probably taking some heat at home and she's anxious to get up and get some items on the record now, but she's not being relevant, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. On the point of order, or do you want to continue?

MRS. FORSYTH: I'd like to continue.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. Well, the ruling first, then.

The hon. Government House Leader has made an astute observation in that we have been trying, whether it's for five hours or seven hours or whatever, to bring members to please address the amendment that was before us for about four or five hours and now, since 8 o'clock, the subamendment. The chair feels that indeed it's been honoured more in the breach than in the keeping. To the extent that members are staying at least within the parameters of the package that has been referred to as these six pages of amendments, collectively known as amendment A1, then I think the chair has been relatively quiet on that.

However, the chair is anxious to hear how the comments you're making are related to the subamendment. If you can then make your comments and fit them to the subamendment, that really would be then in compliance with the rules of the House.

Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think, you know, I really have to say that sometimes patience is a virtue, and I am getting to the subamendments. I think if you hear what I have to say, you'll see how it all intertwines.

Debate Continued

MRS. FORSYTH: Now, I was talking about the universality, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to add that the Prime Minister and the Governor General in this country are treated at the National Defence Medical Centre in Ottawa. One must ask herself why the silence on the problem with the health care system? As I said earlier, when I mentioned the brochure from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, lots of talk and no action. Health care is a very emotional and sensitive issue, probably more important than any other issue in this country. Every citizen is touched at one time or the other by health care, and we must examine what health care means. Well, it means different things to different people.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MS CARLSON: It isn't relevant. She is not on the subamendment at all, Mr. Chairman. We have just had this discussion. She's not getting to the subamendment at all.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair will not reflect upon past members who were called upon a number of times to try and discuss the issue at hand but will say one more time: please tie your remarks into the subamendment.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To the subamendment, then, one must ask oneself: why have hospitals meant to provide acute care become centres for non acute care? Part of the answer lies with people's demands. Given the choice between in-hospital recovery and day surgeries, people prefer the convenience of a hospital stay. Given the choice between an impressive teaching hospital and a surgical facility, people choose the hospital. Why has the system become so reliant on institutional care? Why was an elderly patient occupying a bed in a surgery ward at approximately $800 or $900 a day when a home care program would be just as effective? Why would you take up an operating room for minor surgery when it can be used for major surgery?

The health service utilization working group report When Less Is Better: Using Canada's Hospitals Effectively cites several studies that estimate inappropriate use of between 19 percent and 60 percent of total patient care depending on the type of hospital. In other words, on any given day roughly half the hospital beds are taken up by patients who don't need to use them.

So in closing on the amendment, Mr. Chairman, we know health care is a big problem made up of several small problems. Firstly, health care is a societal problem; Canadians are getting older. Secondly, health care is a budgetary problem. Thirdly, health care is an economical problem. Fourthly, health care is a political problem. Fifthly, health care is a moral problem. With waiting lists continuing to grow, there are bigger problems, urgent problems, complicated problems.

Reform in the health care system requires people to change their thinking. The opposition asked in question period if there was a free vote. Yes, Mr. Chairman, my colleagues can make up their own minds on this very, very delicate issue. Yes, we are getting calls, faxes, and letters, and yes, we are listening to what they have to say. In the same breath we also are getting calls of support. The calls are asking questions about the bill. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I also believe that this government is doing the right thing.

As a baby boomer I will be utilizing the health care system in a few years. I have a 77-year-old mother who has not been well for some time and using her full share cost of health care. I have a son who was in a terrible, terrible car accident several months ago, and, yes, he used the health care system also. I have another son whose career continually takes him into high-risk situations, and, yes, Mr. Chairman, he uses the health care system too.

Hell will freeze over before I will jeopardize what we hold so dearly to us and cherish. Mr. Chairman, Bill 11 is about reform. Nothing more and nothing less, and I believe it's the right thing.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With this dissertation I suspect that this member could go on from bed knobs and broomsticks. The relevance in that last little speech left something to be desired, but I shall not. I shall do the best I can to deal with the amendment and the supplement to that amendment and therefore do the best I can to expose the fallacy of this entire bill. The effect of this bill is more than just that which is written on the pages, and we all know that. The effect is a fundamental change in how we perceive the deliverance of health care through the hospitals in our province.

This particular amendment, particularly the second portion, which would limit stays of a patient to under 12 hours would definitely make approved surgical facilities redundant. There would not be any need for them. In fact what is needed here is funds to run the hospitals that we have. There is no question about it. You needn't go so far as 12 feet out that door to hear the almost – almost, I say – riotous situation in the province of Alberta. Those people are here for a reason. It's not to listen to an amendment and a subamendment, and in fact it goes to the heart of the bill. They simply do not want two tiers. They don't want anything to do with private clinics. They don't want to have to concern themselves about the loss of the health care system for their lifetime.

I heard the member opposite speak of her 77-year-old mother. We all have those. We all have mothers and relatives and sisters and aunts and uncles that are elderly. We have younger people that require the system, and we all want the best that we can provide for them. But those people and this side are worried. This is the third time, not the first, not the second, but the third time this government has tried to – I can't say manipulate, but it certainly would be mold, change, augment, modify the current system of delivery. [interjections] Manipulate might be a little bit strong, Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

These people understand that. They don't have to understand the fine points of the bill. They don't have to understand that. They understand the intent of this government's work. They bring forward for the third time a bill that purports to modify the system – and that's being euphemistically correct – and they get worried. Listen to them. That's not insightful. I mean, how do you pay people to do that?

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I've listened for a while now, trying to weave the amendments into what you're saying, and I hope that you'll do the same. Please confine yourself to the amendments.

MR. WHITE: You're calling me on relevance after that? Mr. Chairman, you're going to call this member on relevance?

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: No, no. I'm saying, hon. member, that I'm hoping that you're going to weave the amendments into what you're saying, because the history of two other bills that have already been decided in this House is not relevant.

MR. WHITE: It is relevant relative to 12-hour stays.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Are you challenging the chair, sir?

MR. WHITE: I'm merely pointing out that what's good for the goose has got to be good for the gander here.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Please, on the amendment. Carry on on the amendment.

Debate Continued

MR. WHITE: Thank you. I'll do the best I can to weave, as you will, the patient stays under 12 hours.

Approved surgical facility is a misnomer at best. This is an approved debating facility, I suppose. We probably would not call it a House on any other day.

If we do restrict stays to 12 hours, then it is clear that all reasonable precautions would be taken for any kind of procedure in a hospital, in a proper hospital. You will recall that about five days ago the Member for Edmonton-Manning made mention of the loss of a child in what would be under this bill an approved surgical facility. This particular procedure was a dentistry procedure that in the current law is allowed to be held in another facility. There are a number of them in the province that dentists do their work within. That procedure was a normal procedure. An anesthetist performed the function, and that particular child developed complications. That child was rushed not to an approved surgical facility but to a proper hospital, where the child didn't make it, and that's a shame.

Would we want that to be repeated again and again? This member certainly wouldn't want that to occur. Not being a medical expert certainly but knowing the history, that complications do occur and reoccur from the simplest – the simplest – of procedures, this member would prefer that anything that requires over a 12-hour stay with a recovery would be in a proper hospital, defined in, I believe, the Canada Health Act. In any event, it is properly defined, and actually it is defined, I think, at one point in Bill 11 as a proper hospital.

Now, moving on to the other part of the amendment, "No physician shall provide a surgical service," there's a difference between a surgical service and an insured surgical service. This particular item is rather difficult to debate, because quite frankly it's an error, a void, if you will, in the act as it was written. This merely repairs that act so as to prevent any kind of misinterpretation of what actually should occur in those facilities. It is an insured service. Uninsured services, of course, can be left outside this subamendment, and it would not offend this member, nor would it offend this side of the House.

However, I do believe that the surgical services required are insured services, and so long as this government doesn't try to move away from or redefine insured services, this provision would be a natural. It would be quite reasonable and proper, and this member believes it would be a reasonable assumption to pass at least that portion of this subamendment so as to fully and completely define that which is required in the service.

So in closing, Mr. Chairman, I did try my best to stay on the topic, but quite frankly this particular amendment on 12-hour stays goes to the very heart of what an approved surgical facility is, in this member's view, and what a hospital is. That is the fundamental argument for a great many of the people that are gathered here today outside these doors.

Thank you for your time, sir.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to stand and join in the debate on subamendment SA1. Before I discuss the amendment in some depth, I would like to just quote Hansard from July 2, 1992, to put my remarks into context. The question was raised by Ms Barrett.

The government can save a lot of money if it doesn't allow hospitals to contract to the for-profit sector. On that basis alone, will the minister reconsider her position and tell hospitals the for-profit sector has no role in the public health system?

The answer from the minister of health on July 2, 1992, was this.

Again, Mr. Speaker, no, I will not, because the private sector does in fact have a role if it can prove that it is efficient, that it's operating fairly, and that it's meeting the responsibility of our health sector to provide access to health services.

Mr. Chairman, that is what Bill 11 is about.

I respect the right of every Albertan to provide their comments on this bill, and I think there has been ample opportunity to do that. In fact, I have had now three meetings in my constituency to encourage people to come and ask questions and provide their input, which has led in part, I believe, to some of the amendments that we are looking at tonight.

What is difficult in this debate and has been experienced tonight is that there is a lack of accurate information, and sometimes things are alluded to in a way that suggests things that don't occur.

I'll be interested to review the Blues on the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's statements on the Gimbel Foundation Act. That was, in fact, a private bill. It was not a private member's bill. It was not a public bill. The member should know very well that private bills can be brought forward. Some pass; some do not. This bill was in fact brought to this Legislature. This bill was in fact dealt with by this Legislature. In my recollection this Legislature defeated that bill, and it did not pass. I think we should have things on the record in the right context and displayed for the benefit of the people who are here and those who may choose to read Hansard. Accurate information should be given to them. That is a point that must be made.

Mr. Chairman, also raised in that discussion was the point – and I believe rightly so – that the College of Physicians and Surgeons are determining what array of surgical services might require an overnight stay, but the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's comments would leave me the impression that somehow that August professional body might not appropriately determine that. Well, I have a great deal of faith in the professionalism of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and I do believe that they are the appropriate body to determine the appropriate setting for surgical services. It gives me a great deal of confidence when any member of my family – and I've mentioned before I keep a picture of my three grandchildren on my desk to remind me very clearly of what this is all about. This is about the importance of a health system that will serve not only my generation, my parent's generation, my children's generation, but my grandchildren's generation.

I would remind all hon. members that 10 years ago or so a lot of services were delivered in hospitals. I recall all abortion services being delivered in hospitals, and I also recall the consternation of some professional staff in those hospitals at having to participate in that activity. They had a great deal of difficulty with their personal feelings and their professional life.

Cataract surgeries 10 years ago or so were all provided in a hospital and for good reason. The technology, the medical know-how at that time made that the most appropriate place to deliver that service. I recall that at the time elderly people in my community traveled 200 miles to Calgary to have this service provided. They were in hospital for a week or 10 days, their head in sandbags. When they were allowed up it was to be very carefully monitored. They were not allowed to lift anything. They came home to six weeks to six months of convalescence. They couldn't lift. They couldn't actually perform many of the day-to-day duties they needed to do.

Well, you know, the government didn't change that, ladies and gentlemen, colleagues. Medical technology changed that, and we should applaud that. We should say thank goodness for the people in the health field who are every day performing research and learning new technologies, new drug therapies that allow people to convalesce at home in a setting that is comfortable to them. We can't put our heads in the sand and say: the same as I've always had is all I ever want. The world will not allow us to do that. Technology and medical know-how will not allow us to do that, nor should we want them to.

There are some 52 clinics in this province. Over 30 of those operated under the past health minister's watch without guidelines governing them. We paid the price for that in 1994. The federal government at that time asked us to introduce private clinic legislation to deal with this very amendment, putting rules around how private clinics can operate. There were four provinces that moved ahead. We said that we felt we had a responsibility to have a discussion with the health professionals in our province to make sure the rules and guidelines that we put in place were appropriate, and out of that came the 12 principles that were agreed to by the federal government and by the province.

Today there are 52 clinics in this province. They provide about 152 services. They save 20,000 hours of operating theatre time in this province that can be awarded to those surgeries that truly do require a hospital stay. Mr. Chairman, I am not a medical professional, nor have I ever pretended to be. We do have some in this Legislature, and I listen with great respect when they speak, on either side of this House. However, this amendment talks about stifling the ability of the College of Physicians and Surgeons to determine the appropriate setting for services to be delivered in this province. I don't believe that this Legislative Assembly is the determiner of what services are provided. It is our responsibility to ensure that there are guidelines, appropriate rules that will ensure that those services will be delivered in a safe manner. The appropriate people to determine the setting and determine the professional security of care in that setting is the College of Physicians and Surgeons working with groups such as the AARN, who, incidently, were miles ahead of any of us in this Assembly on health reform.

We have examples in the nursing fraternity of nurse practitioners. It was not allowed a few years ago. However, it was happening in northern Alberta where, because of remoteness, nursing professionals were called upon to provide care that perhaps was not in their guidelines. We worked with them and the AMA, with some difficulty, to ensure that they were protected, that they were able to offer the care, and that they were trained to do that.

Mr. Chairman, that's what Bill 11 is about. No matter how much some try to say that it's something else, it is about protecting the integrity of the delivery of surgical services. It is something that perhaps we should have done in 1994, and you wouldn't have heard any of this today. Saskatchewan's legislation – and I've looked at it carefully – will allow, if they wish, overnight stays. It is totally silent on that subject. We're more up front, and we're saying that if this is allowed, this is how it will be done and this is who will determine it. I've looked at that legislation very carefully. It is not in any way as restrictive on the issue of overnight stays as, in fact, ours is.

One last thing about what happens when you bandy around information, and again I'm going to read from the bill, because I heard Edmonton-Meadowlark very indignantly quote out of the bill on a surgical facility. Well, I read it as saying that a "surgical facility" means a facility whose primary function is to provide a limited range of surgical services." What I read in here, which I understood to be the quote on surgical services, is that "private hospital" means an acute care facility that

- (i) provides emergency, diagnostic, surgical and medical services, and
- (ii) admits patients for medically supervised stays exceeding 12 hours, but does not include a public hospital.

Well, in fact, in this bill those hospitals are banned.

So let's tell the facts. Let's not try to incite people by misinformation. Let's be accurate. Let's depend on our medical professionals, in this case the College of Physicians and Surgeons, to determine what is appropriate for an overnight stay and what professional security of care should accompany that.

10:20

Mr. Chairman, all I ask is the opportunity for fair, honest debate. I have a lot of respect for this Legislature. When I came here almost 13 years ago, I promised my constituents that I would treat this House in a manner of respect. I have tried – I'm sure I've strayed once in a while – to keep that promise to them. When I met with a group the other day, I thought that one of the elderly gentlemen of the Legion was going to give me a bit of a lecture on Bill 11. What he said was: Shirley, I wish that when you stand up in the House, you'd speak into your mike; I'm having trouble hearing you.

The opportunity has been there in my constituency. I have had people who have raised concerns. I have tried to provide to them by simply using the bill – we sit down with the bill and go through clause by clause. Where there have been questions raised, I have passed them on to the minister of health and asked if we could amend this bill to clarify that. I believe that the minister has responded and introduced those clarifications.

If the opposition really wants to help the system that we have presently in this House, if they devote as much energy to encouraging the federal government to put $4.8 billion back into the system out of the $18.8 billion that they removed rather than passing that off as inconsequential, I think they would serve the people of this province in a much better way.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to be able to be here tonight and speak to the subamendment proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. With previous amendments, I had spoken of my frustration in trying to answer my constituents' concerns that this bill was not acceptable in any form or shape, yet I did want to be able to comment on amendments. This is an amendment that I can support, so I'm very pleased to be able to rise and speak to that.

Now, that is not to say that this amendment is perfect, that this makes the bill wonderful. It's amending one very small section. It doesn't correct a lot of things that are happening outside of this one section, but speaking specifically to subamendment SA1, I think this is worthy of our consideration because it is constructive. One of the issues that is concerning Albertans the most is the problem of overnight stays and getting into a definition of major surgery. For many people following the logic along, if it's major surgery and you need to be in this approved surgical clinic for several days or for a week, then that's pretty major surgery, and that's gone beyond the scope of what this legislation was supposed to be talking about. So the overnight stay really makes people uneasy, and having this amendment narrow that to 12 hours I think relieves some people's anxieties on this.

I have to be perfectly honest and on the record here. I have not had constituents writing, e-mailing, phoning, and faxing saying: please support this amendment requesting 12 hours. As I say, the overwhelming response – and I'm now at over 400 responses opposing the bill – has said: we don't want the bill, period; pull the bill; get rid of the bill.

Let me try to put something on the record for consideration. We all know and certainly I know that a major frustration with the bill has been the government's reluctance, inability – I don't know what words to use – to describe why the government feels that it needs this legislation. Well, it's to make waiting lists shorter, but when you look at the proof about shorter waiting lists, private clinics do not make the waiting lists shorter. So the whole idea of why we need this and the inability of the government to come forward with something concrete that Albertans can grab hold of has been a concern.

Now, the Minister of Learning spoke at some length that to put a 12-hour limit was not a good idea, that it wasn't long enough, that there were complications that could arise that would justify a longer stay. I'm not from a medical background, but I'm having trouble following that logic. Truly, this is a simple procedure that is being done in these clinics. It is minor surgery, and therefore it should be a very simple procedure. There should be no need for intensive or dramatic – or whatever the medical word is – intervention with it. Therefore, you shouldn't need to be in there longer than 12 hours. I mean, according to the definition in here, a surgical facility, section 29(q), "means a facility whose primary function is to provide a limited range of surgical services." I understand. That's the definition that's in the bill.

If what we're trying to do here is very limited, very narrow, very easy, very simple surgical procedures and then we have someone who's acknowledged as a medical doctor, trained, licensed, certified in this province, telling us, "Well, no; there could be complications; it needs to be longer than 12 hours," I say: where's the acute care in these clinics? There isn't one. Where's the emergency department? There isn't one. So if complications arise, as we heard the Premier say, no problem: pick up the phone, dial 911, get an ambulance and take them to a real hospital. Why would we need more than 12 hours? This doesn't logically follow. There's been more debate from members on the other side than I've ever enjoyed in my time in this House, so I'm sure someone will get up and answer me on that one.

MS CARLSON: It could happen; right?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, it could happen. Sure. There could be an answer there.

The second issue that's been raised by this subamendment is the concerns that come out about insured and uninsured services. That is the first part of this amendment, changing it from "no physician shall provide a surgical service" to "no physician shall provide an insured surgical service." That has been another issue of concern that's been raised through the letters and correspondence that I have received. That's the idea of the government being able, behind closed doors and without consultation with Albertans, without any kind of advance notice actually, to delist what's considered a covered medical service.

Now, let me stop here and say that I'm not asking and nobody that I've listened to in the Official Opposition has said: let's go backwards in time. No one on this side has said: let's stay with the status quo. Everyone is saying that there needs to be an improvement in our medical system, in our health care system. We need to have legislation to deal with controlling private clinics. We need to be flexible enough to recognize when procedures through the use of advanced technology and pharmaceuticals are no longer, for instance, major surgery and in fact could be considered minor surgery or at least less invasive surgery. A number of people have talked about gallbladder operations. I remember my aunt was in the hospital for about three weeks, and now I think they do it through your belly button or they shoot you with laser sound waves or something.

MR. JONSON: Orthoscopic surgery.

MS BLAKEMAN: Orthoscopic surgery. Thank you very much. That was the minister of health assisting me.

So I do understand the need for that flexibility. We do need flexibility. That's fine. But the idea that the services that people have come to expect can be uninsured, delisted, taken off the coverage behind closed doors and without them knowing about it really bothers people. They feel they got suckered somehow. That sort of debate needs to come out more into the public and have more consultation.

It's important that we tell people and be very up front about the fact that, you know, only the insured stuff is covered and don't be guaranteed it'll be covered forever. Because we already know that for those people who pay for Blue Cross, which is the extra coverage, the extended benefit coverage that's available, that's delisted all the time.

I have a constituent that grabbed me by the elbow and walked me about four blocks, telling me how some sort of dental surgery or dental checkup had been taken off that listing. That was a serious issue for her because it was costing her a lot of money out of pocket to be able to pay for a service that used to be covered. So that delisting really bothers people. We do need to come up with a way to involve people more in that whole discussion of how it happens, but I'm also not saying that we shouldn't be flexible enough to understand that things change.

I think that this amendment with its 12 hours and with its insertion of the insured services does give us some reasonable safeguards built around this first section in the bill. When I was speaking previously, I know I had been mentioning things like the idea that nothing had been done in the amendment to change these approved overnight-stay surgical facilities, whatever name we're calling them by now.

The other thing we have to remember is that legislation is not forever here. I mean, in my short time in this Assembly I've seen changes in the condo act from 1996. We're now amending it in the year 2000. It's only four years. I mean, if there's a real problem and adjustments need to be made, we can bring it back into this Assembly and open it up. [interjection] Well, actually if you had just waited, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, that would have been the very next thing on my list, talking about the number of changes and the number of times that the Municipal Government Act has come back into this Assembly. Well, I don't think that's a bad thing. If you didn't get it right, then keep bringing it back. We'll happily work on it. You know, there were problems with it. They were identified, and we brought the act back in again. How many times has it been back from the original time? Twice more since then. So in three years we've had it forward three times.

We don't need to be so concerned that the bill or these amendments be written in such a way that they're going to last us for 15 years. Let's be honest about it. The likelihood that the act will be back in front of us here in four, three, or two, like the MGA, is pretty high. Let's take the time to do it right; then it will last us a bit longer. This amendment takes us a little bit down the road towards doing it right.

Those were all the comments I wanted to make on this subamendment. There is no need for me to repeat the excellent arguments that have already been raised and brought forward by my colleagues. There's another colleague jumping up, and I will allow him to speak.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise tonight to speak specifically to the subamendment of the amendment. First of all, I'd like to talk about the duplicity that I've heard this evening coming from across the floor. When people argue that this is an unsalvageable piece of legislation and then proceed to suggest, as they have put before us, a subamendment to an amendment, it tells me that they want to be engaged, that they want to participate in something but for no other reason than to spout what they believe are the inconsistencies in their own minds. So I find it very difficult to put any credibility to what they are saying with respect to their subamendment to the amendment.

However, having said that, I would like to say that the suggestions that they have made in this subamendment seem quite inconsistent with what I have heard from a number of people, particularly those in my own community and my own constituency. The concerns that they have raised have been around the area of patient care. They want to be sure that this system is there for them. They want to make sure that this system is able to deliver the services to them in a very timely fashion. If we are to limit the procedures or the surgical services that this particular bill speaks to, if we are going to limit those, then we are going to break into what is called the vision or the ability that this piece of legislation enables health authorities to do, and that is to provide surgical facilities other than in public hospitals, the ability to provide surgical services and to deliver surgical procedures that are in the best interests of patient care.

So if we are to limit it to 12 hours or less, then what we are in effect saying is that the clinical care guidelines, which I heard a great deal of from a number of my constituents, those clinical care guidelines which are the guidelines that govern the stay, if you will, or the length of stay that is postoperative for minor surgical procedures as well as major – in this case I'll make reference to minor surgical procedures – then those clinical care guidelines would be enabled, put in effect, and brought to bear upon any stay that an individual would have in a surgical clinic, having received a minor surgical procedure.

There has been a lot said about the Shouldice clinic. From my experience I'd like to make mention of it, because it happens to be a facility that delivers a surgical service to a number of individuals and has done so over many, many years. In fact, it is the norm to stay longer than 12 hours after a hernia operation. I don't know whether anybody here has been to that facility, but it happened to be almost in my own backyard when I was growing up. This is a facility that provides for many, many, many people in the province of Ontario and beyond the opportunity for them to receive a surgical procedure, to get health care provided to them, and all they need is their OHIP card. Because it was built in the days when there were only semi-private rooms offered there, now there must be that cost, if you will, for the semi-private room, which is added to the OHIP care.

However, that is something that many, many people very happily pay because it provides them the ease of access, the surety of their appointments, and the confidence in the fact that they are receiving this surgical procedure delivered by those who are experts in that particular field.

So I would like to return the discussion to, again, what I have heard most specifically from my constituents when they say: please, make sure that the standards of care that are administered in these surgical facilities are those that are in due respect to the care that the patients deserve. So it seems to me extremely limiting, Mr. Chairman, if we were to prohibit a surgical facility to allow individuals or to disallow individuals to stay beyond 12 hours. It is not looking at the care for the individual. It is more specifically looking at what are the rules and regulations so that we can say we are in favour of the public health care system delivery over and above the fact that the public health care system most prominently and essentially is there to deliver health care and surgical procedures offered to individuals under the best conditions, not only for the procedure being done but for that care which follows the procedure.

So for us, Mr. Chairman, to agree to this subamendment, I think would be quite counter to the sentiments that Albertans who have spoken to me have expressed, and that is their desire to receive in these clinical or surgical facilities care that is specifically and very carefully and directly focused on the delivery of health care to the individual who has received that minor surgical procedure.

I would remind the opposition and those who are in effect proposing this subamendment that there are other areas of this bill – in fact clause 3, that immediately follows this section, begins a very restrictive designation, if you will, of how these surgical facilities as identified in section 2 should operate. So there is ample room in the rest of this bill to accommodate the concerns that we have that we must protect and regulate and give us as government the ability to regulate the procedures and the manner of operation in these surgical facilities.

Again I return to the fact that if you were going to limit the time of stay in these surgical facilities, then you are in essence saying that we really don't want to go by the best clinical care guidelines that are already established in the health care field. More than that, you are saying that we really, really don't want to give the best health care that we can possibly give to the people who have come to this facility to receive that service.

So to be so limiting I find is quite unvisionary. To be so restrictive I find is quite inhibiting. I believe the citizens of Alberta want us to put in place legislation that will not only protect the public health care system but will also make sure that in the delivery and implementation of our legislation we are not restricted from giving what is the best kind of health care that we possibly can give.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

MR. MacDONALD: No. I was next, Mr. Chairman. I'm sorry. You recognized me before, and I was sitting waiting patiently for my turn.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has been here about half a dozen times trying to get his chance, then goes back out.

MR. MacDONALD: He goes back out. Exactly.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the subamendment before the House. Speaking the other day on the amendment itself, I observed that this amendment as proposed by the government proposes no change of any significance in the original bill and that the substance of the proposed amendment was highly questionable. There was very little in it of substance, in any case.

The government amendment that's being amended by the subamendment reads: "No physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta." In this statement itself there is asymmetry. The first sentence only talks about "a surgical service," whereas the second sentence, which refers to what a dentist can or cannot do, talks about providing "an insured surgical service in Alberta."

Of course, the second part of the proposed amendment to which this subamendment refers says: "except in (a) a public hospital [or] (b) an approved surgical facility." Of course, the notion of an approved surgical facility has received lots of debate both inside this House and outside. Albertans have expressed and continue to express right at this moment, as we hear outside, their concerns about this far too fine a distinction that's being made between what is an approved surgical facility and what's a hospital.

Mr. Chairman, subamendment A1 is an attempt to lend some substantive status to the government's amendment A1. In section (a) in the subamendment it is proposed that "no physician shall provide a surgical service" be struck out and be substituted with "no physician shall provide an insured surgical service." The word "insured," which was missing in the original amendment, is now inserted in the proposed subamendment.

It's important to note that this subamendment is highly significant. It restores the balance to the government's amendment that was proposed, where the government saw fit to indicate that dentists shall provide only insured services while the physicians could provide any service, insured as well as uninsured.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, we have a subamendment, so you can't have a second subamendment. You can't have a sub subamendment, so we won't be able to move another amendment at this time.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Chairman, I take your point. I'm speaking to the subamendment.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. It's just that your amendments had come up here.

DR. PANNU: I have amendments, but I'm not speaking to those at all.

THE CHAIRMAN: Good. Wonderful. Thank you.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

DR. PANNU: I'm speaking to the subamendment which was moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Chairman, if I may go on. Speaking to the subamendment moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, what I was saying was that the subamendment makes a very important change in the amendment as proposed by the government. I was speaking in favour of subamendment A1, section (a) on the grounds that it specifies that "no physician shall provide an insured surgical service."

Mr. Chairman, part (b) of the subamendment, "in clause (b)," proposes an addition to clause (b) of the government amendment, which refers to an "approved surgical facility." So the amended subsection (b) of the government amendment reads then: "an approved surgical facility that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours." That, I think, is a very, very important addition by way of the subamendment to the proposed amendment by the government.

Speaking on it the other day, I drew the attention of this House to the fact that the reason that I considered this first amendment in the package of amendments moved on that day by the minister of health really didn't speak to the central concerns about the bill that Albertans have been conveying to all of us. My constituents have been speaking to me about their concern with respect to this particular provision, and I'm sure that constituents of my colleagues have also indicated to them their serious objection to the notion of "approved surgical facility."

The amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark does a great deal of service to all of us in that it clarifies that such surgical services will only handle surgeries that require no more than 12 hours of stay. If we were to approve this amendment – and I hope we do – we will do two things at least. We will address the most serious objections that Albertans have, short of scrapping this bill, which would be their preference and which is what my advice has been to the House and to the minister of health as well, that the bill be dropped rather than proceeded with. But given the stubborn resolve that the government has shown not to listen to not only members of this House in opposition but also to a vast majority of Albertans, we have to find ways of salvaging this bill by making the most reasoned and reasonable amendments possible, given the stance of the government not to listen to any major changes in this bill.

So this rather innocent little amendment that's being proposed here will limit surgeries in the so-called surgical facilities to those which require under 12 hours of stay. That's how it should be.

The Premier, talking on this bill, has talked at length about how concerned he is to provide some regulatory framework for the so-called 52 day surgery clinics that presently operate in this province. If this amendment were approved and received the support of the House, then we'd have a framework within which the very thing that the Premier so desperately now wants to do all of a sudden would be possible for us to do within the overall framework of this bill.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, the federal government has also belatedly made its position rather clear about whether or not the proposed "approved surgical facility," which is referred to in the amendment by the minister of health – and that amendment is being amended by way of this subamendment. The federal government has belatedly spoken to clarify its position whether within the Canada Health Act provisions such an approved surgical facility will indeed be treated as a hospital. The answer that the federal government has given to this question is yes, the Canada Health Act would see the approved surgical facility as nothing but a hospital, a point that Albertans have been making to this government ever since the introduction of this bill and a point that all of us have been making. Certainly I've been making it in this Assembly on this score, and my colleagues have been making it on this score.

So if this amendment of subsection (b) were to be amended as proposed by the subamendment A1, then this bill in its amended form will have met one of the most serious concerns that Albertans have about this bill, the reason Albertans find this bill unacceptable and the reason they're here tonight, were in the galleries, but they have not been able to return to the galleries if they left once. The galleries are locked, so I have met citizens who were sitting in those galleries waiting outside to be let in, but the galleries are locked up. They cannot get in.

These are the very citizens who are out there and were in here before. They are calling on this government, they're calling on us, this Assembly, to make sure that these approved surgical facilities do not have legislated authority to undertake surgeries which will require 12 hours or more of stay in these surgical facilities.

So we have here, then, in the making by way of this SA1 amendment a good direction in which we can move, on which we can all agree. All Albertans can perhaps be persuaded to agree and can feel somewhat assured, not fully assured but assured to some degree, that this Assembly has moved some way at least in addressing their concern. Also, we can move forward with some degree of certainty that the federal government's interpretation of the Canada Health Act and how that is seen to interpret this proposed approved surgical facility – that concern, that direction, which is clearly encoded in the Canada Health Act, can be respected as well as we as legislators, we as lawmakers, move forward our debate on this bill and take seriously our undertaking that the government has been trying to give to Albertans and to Canadians that this bill is designed to respect the Canada Health Act and the provisions of that Health Act.

If this amendment were to be defeated, I'm sure that this bill as amended through the proposal of the minister of health will be in violation of the Canada Health Act. That much we know. So why would we then want to proceed in full knowledge of the fact that to make approved surgical facilities legal in this province, giving the licence for overnight stays, would violate the Canada Health Act? Yet we say that we respect the Canada Health Act. There's a contradiction there in the logic of the government's defence, and the contradiction lies in this, Mr. Chairman. The federal government has clearly said that the proposed approved surgical facility will indeed be a hospital, and if it's a hospital, then it cannot be approved, it cannot be legislated unless we want to ignore what the Canada Health Act says. We have hospitals in this province. We have very good surgical facilities available in those hospitals, and what's not there can be installed on short notice without proceeding with this bill, which includes the provision of approved surgical facilities, which if approved will offend the Canada Health Act, and certainly it offends the citizens of this province who are out there chanting right now.

We must listen to Albertans. We must listen to them for a change. We have underestimated their resolve to make us listen to them. There's no point in pointing fingers at them in the galleries if someone sitting there shouts. There's no point in saying that that is wrong if we don't pay attention to what Albertans are saying.

What Albertans are saying loudly over and over again, whether they get together in the tens of thousands or whether they get together in the hundreds in the rotunda of our own Legislature, is to remind us that it is our duty, that it's our obligation to listen to them, to respectfully listen to them. We can ignore what people say to us only at the risk of imperiling the democratic institutions that we have. In a democracy legitimacy of authority is very, very important. If people withdraw their trust in your power to make rules, then the rules that you make become unacceptable to people.

That's the danger that lies in our proceeding with this bill without considering either dropping the bill altogether or at least doing everything we can to bring in reasonable and thoughtful amendments. That's what this subamendment SA1, section A represents. It's an attempt, as a last resort, to bring all of us back to reason, back to a stance where we can say that we're open to listening to the people of Alberta. If we don't, we'll be creating a crisis of legitimacy in this province, a crisis of legitimacy that we will regret to have created in the wake of the debate on this bill and in the wake of passage of this bill if it's not properly amended and, better still, if it's not stopped and scratched. That's what I think Albertans want. That's what we should do. Short of doing that, at least we should give our support to a subamendment like this, which will make some improvements. It would go at least a small way toward indicating that we understand.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt, but your time is up.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise tonight and speak to the subamendment to amendment A1 as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. She is to be congratulated for bringing this amendment forward. There is certainly no doubt that this was necessary. I'm surprised that it wasn't in the original bill, because it is in the original policy document that was presented by the government to the people back in the middle of November, and I will elaborate on that in a few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to hon. members who have spoken before me. I heard about the Shouldice clinic. I heard about the Canadian health and social transfer. I heard about a variety of issues which are really current to the discussion on Bill 11, which is not only going on inside this Assembly but outside this Assembly all across the province, Mr. Chairman. There was also a concern brought up about patient care and how this is going to be dealt with. Of course, as in the subamendment here, the number one concern of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is patient care in the public system.

In starting my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I am going to refer to the policy statement on health principles as released by the government of Alberta. This was dated November 17, 1999. It was not a fireside chat. I don't know what you would describe it as, but it was certainly the start of this entire public discussion since Bill 37 and the blue ribbon panel report occurred. This was the start of the current stage of the government's attempt to privatize the health care delivery system.

Now, the mission here was to adhere to the principles of the Canada Health Act. I'm not going to get into that, because I want to speak specifically to this amendment. If we go down a little further, we read the proposed policy on contracting for surgical services. This is where I have to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, because obviously she has detected something here. I don't know whether it was overlooked or whether it was omitted.

The government of Alberta proposes the following policy with respect to the delivery of surgical services:

1. All Albertans will have access to insured surgical services on a fair and equitable basis through the publicly funded and publicly administered health system.

That is why I want to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for proposing this amendment to describe and provide insured surgical services. This is what's in this document as provided to the Alberta public by their government of the day. I can't understand why "insured" would have been inserted in the following phrase to start with in section 2(1) of amendment A1: "No physician shall provide an insured surgical service" in Alberta.

If we go further down in this policy document, we see that another goal on the proposed policy is this, Mr. Chairman:

3. Private providers of insured surgical services . . .

Here we see the word "insured" again.

. . . will operate only under the jurisdiction of a Regional Health Authority. There will be no private hospitals; there will not be a parallel health system.

We know that there are going to be private hospitals, and this is where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has struck the nail on the head with her amendment, because "insured" is key. It's key to the whole debate what an insured surgical service is. It is a necessary word. We can go through these amendments one by one and satisfy not only the crowd that's outside but all Albertans. Sixty percent of Albertans, poll after poll after poll, tell us they're not satisfied with Bill 11.

Now, we look also at another statement from the policy statement. In here it states:

4. Regional Health Authorities are responsible for determining the appropriate means for delivery of all insured surgical services.

There's that word again to describe insured surgical services.

Now, if it was to be included in the policy statement, perhaps in the description of surgical services, it should be included in the bill. This is why I commend the hon. Member from Edmonton-

Meadowlark, and I would encourage all hon. members of the Assembly, to quote the hon. Member from Edmonton-Rutherford, do the right thing and support this subamendment. It is crucial that "insured" be in there to describe surgical services.

We are going to, if we are to believe what was in the policy statement, leave everything up to the regional health authorities. The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations spoke earlier about how the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses was miles ahead in health reform. When they go around the province and talk to their members in the professional association, it is interesting to note that they have a map, and I believe their map has the province divided up into seven different regions, not the 17 that came about with the Regional Health Authorities Act. I would like to remind the hon. minister across the way of that fact.

When we talk about an approved surgical facility, what has everyone in the province upset is the length of the stay. I think we should remember that when we talk about an approved surgical facility, this is a hospital, and it is a private hospital. No one in this province wants a private hospital to have this ability to provide an insured surgical service and compete with the public hospitals – that's what's going to happen – and also compete with the public hospitals for health professionals, which are in short supply. I do not believe that in discussing this amendment at this time we will talk at length about the health professions and the shortage. It doesn't matter which regional health authority you talk to. Every one of them is experiencing shortages in at least one discipline.

When we talk about the 12-hour stay and what exactly that means, I would commend the member for clarifying this, because if we don't clarify the length of stay – and it certainly should be reduced – we're going to have to start dealing with many other definitions. We're going to have to deal with coinsurance, cost shifting, copayment, employer contributions, fee for service, health management organizations. These are all definitions Albertans will have to familiarize themselves with if they want to understand the government's initiative with this bill.

The 12-hour stay as described here in this subamendment will satisfy the majority of Albertans, because that is exactly what is going on in the province now. When we talk about 12-hour stays, sometimes, Mr. Chairman, some hon. members of this Assembly get confused. They think that other provinces have these approved surgical facilities and they have more than a 12-hour stay. That is just – well, they've been misled or they've been misinformed. Certainly I wouldn't say this is going to change anything, but I don't think there is any need for change. This is reflected in the second part of the hon. member's amendment, but there's no consistency with this bill. What the hon. member is trying to do – and she certainly has her work cut out for her – is to give this bill some consistency and some direction, but it is difficult to see if the hon. members across the way are going to agree or not. I can only encourage them to support this subamendment.

In conclusion, I would like to remind all hon. members again that when we're talking – this is the government speaking, the policy statement on health principles going back to November – about surgical services, the word "insured" is there before it. And it's not on one occasion. In the entire document, when we describe a surgical service, we are using the words "insured surgical service" in an approved surgical facility.

So with those brief remarks, at this time, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this House. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise, although I hesitate to put it in these terms, and report progress.

Bill 7
Alberta Science, Research and Technology
Authority Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate April 4: Mr. White]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman – Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry. I've spent so much of the evening seeing you in the chairman's chair that it takes a moment to readjust.

A couple of observations I wanted to make with respect to Bill 7. Let me go specifically to the things that give me some concern. First I'd say that I think the new section 4, dealing with ownership of intellectual property, makes some sense. If you look at the old section 9, it was sort of convoluted, and it makes some sense in terms of dealing with who's going to have the copyright or the patent or the industrial design equity interest. I mean, it makes sense to deal with that, and in fact I think it's much clearer in the way this is being presented. So I think that's a significant improvement.

I should say that I'm supporting the bill, so whatever comments I make, Mr. Speaker, should not be taken as criticism of the bill or at least a reason to vote against it. Unlike some members opposite, if I've got a concern with a bill, I expect my constituents would want to see those things identified on the record. So I'm going to take a moment, depending on how much encouragement I get from across the way, from Dunvegan, to go through the items that gave me some concern.

The first one is the new section 7, 16.1(5) and 16.1(6). Now, if you look at the existing Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Act and the provision for who is going to be appointed to the authority, we have the provision for appointing citizens to the authority. In the new bill what we've got is that the persons appointed to the Alberta Ag Research Institute "must include at least one member of the Legislative Assembly." You know, Mr. Speaker, I've watched with some concern as we have seen members of the government caucus appointed to a host of boards and agencies. I don't mean to be critical of individual members, but, you know, I'm not sure it represents necessarily value added to each one of those agencies. That's not because the MLAs who are appointed to the boards don't have talents and abilities.

DR. WEST: What a slam. Shame on you. What a slam.

MRS. FORSYTH: Very offensive.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I was going to make a couple of observations and sit down, but I see I'm being encouraged to develop this line of argument more fully. It's clear – the Member for St. Albert is so busy shaking her head – that I didn't make it clear, so I'm going to spend a little time, then, going through and trying to explain why I think this is a problem.

I think the difficulty is that it sends mixed messages to members of the public. You know, whether it's the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute or whether it's the Alberta Oils Sands Technology and Research Authority, there is some value in these groups being seen to be at least independent of government. I would assume that government would not appoint fools and incompetents to these various boards. Why is it felt necessary to install a government member on each one of these agencies? I mean, what's the reason that advantages the work of the different institutes and so on?

I think of the succession of people who have been on the AADAC board. I pick on that because AADAC is in the same office building where I have my constituency office. You know, it comes up from time to time, and you look at the succession of government MLAs that have been appointed to the AADAC board. The question is: do these groups really have any genuine independence from government? Maybe the answer is that there's no interest in having these groups independent from government. I think there is. I think it affects the credibility of the recommendations. I think it affects the weight – and I'm not talking about the weight that I assign to it; I'm talking about the weight of Albertans. We can go through, and whether it's the Seniors Advisory Council or the board dealing with persons with disabilities, all those boards I think are in effect weakened and compromised by insisting on having a government representative on every one of them.

I note that it appears for each one of the boards that is covered in Bill 7, and I'm disappointed to see that. I haven't heard compelling reasons why we do it this way. The Member for St. Albert: I'm not sure what board she's on, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure she expects she's doing a darn effective job. But it seems to me that at some point we've got to look at what the impact is on the particular board or commission or agency. So I'm disappointed to see that, and I think it's not very helpful.

The other comment would be on page 5. If we look at 16, the new 16.12, where the institute, in the (b) part, "must, at the request of the Authority or the Minister, advise the Authority or the Minister on questions of science, engineering and technology," would it not make more sense to have the authority advise the Assembly? Why is it that we create these little loops where the minister gets advice from this group or that group?

You might use the example of the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission. The mandate of that commission is to offer advice to the minister. Well, some of us wonder why we don't get more advice from that human rights commission to the Assembly. You can apply the same test right across, Mr. Speaker, to a whole range of different authorities. So I have a real concern in Bill 7 when I see that in both 16.12(b) and (c) we have recommendations going to the minister and no recognition that the executive branch is but one component of government. The other component is the Legislature, and it's effectively written out of this process.

The other thing is that the Regulations Act doesn't apply to bylaws of the different institutes. There's no compelling reason that's being offered why the Regulations Act wouldn't apply. The problem with these bylaws – and we find bylaws for each one of these organizations – is that they can be virtually inaccessible to Albertans that are interested. You know, you talk to reference librarians in the province, and one of things people have a lot of trouble finding are bylaws. Whether it's bylaws of a professional organization or bylaws of a quasi-public authority, it's tough to find those things. One of the things the Member for Peace River and I have both heard from different panels we've been on is that citizens say they want laws to be accessible, understandable. They don't want to have to follow some great chase to be able to find out what the law and the regulation that applies to them or their interest area, what those rules are.

We have a provision here that makes it difficult rather than easier for Albertans to get access to that information, and I think that's a step backwards. Section 16.3 talks about an annual report being done by the ag institute "in a form satisfactory to the Minister." What we have seen in this Assembly is that too many reports come in, frankly, that are not very helpful in terms of answering the questions people in the Assembly have, so whether the minister is satisfied or not may not be the test.

If you look at the proposed section 16.4(5) and (6), the same observation that I made to the ag institute applies. Similarly in the new 16.42, the energy institute, once again we've got the authority advising the minister on questions on science, engineering, and technology. Why wouldn't that be a resource to at least the Legislative Assembly? If the group does credible work and they develop some expertise, why do we have to rely on a minister who most often will not share the information with the legislative branch of government? So that's a problem in 16.4(2).

For section 16.5(2) my question is: why? Section 16.51: why would we do it that way?

Part 4, section 8, the proposed section 16.7: I've got a problem with 16.7(3) and (4). Again in the proposed 16.8(2). So those are the concerns I've got.

I think we could just do so much better and frankly make the authorities far more effective than they're going to be with the limitation imposed by Bill 7, and I would have hoped we would have learned something from the record of having so many government MLAs on a host of these boards and tribunals. I think there's a better way of doing it and a way to make these boards and agencies more effective.

I expect the government MLAs have lots of other things they can do to occupy their time. I'd hope that none of them have so much time on their hands that they have to wait for an assignment like this, so I hope we'd see some changes in that respect with respect to Bill 7. Otherwise, I'll support the bill, but I'd sure encourage the Minister of Innovation and Science to try and address some of those areas of concern.

Thank you very much.

MRS. SLOAN: Just a very brief comment with respect to Bill 7 this evening, and that relates to the amendments proposed to section 9 being repealed and a new section substituted. These areas deal with the issues of ownership, and I think these areas have been quite elaborated from what was in the original bill. Again, as is the common practice, we haven't had the privilege of any kind of consultation or recommendations from those parties affected, but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that what was in the previous bill, all discoveries, inventions and improvements made in processes, apparatuses, or machines by a person while engaged under section 8(1), is quite different than the ownership of any invention, work, information or material, regardless of form, including any patent, copyright, technological or industrial design process or trademark acquired or produced by the person that results from or is connected with a person's engagement under section 8.

To me, Mr. Speaker, the government has chosen to quite extensively expand its ownership rights under the amendments proposed to the Alberta Science, Research, and Technology Authority Act. I think particularly as researchers, regardless of what field they may be in, whether it's forestry, whether it's agriculture, whether it's energy, these researchers spend considerable time, a considerable number of years in their professional career making discoveries, establishing the basis for their research and products, and all it says here is that "the Authority may compensate a person described in subsection (1)" and we really don't have the benefit this evening of knowing whether or not that compensation will be fair, whether it will be negotiated or made on the estimate of the market value of that particular work, patent, copyright. How are we to be assured that researchers in this province will in fact be fairly compensated by this government given the vagueness of amendments proposed under section 9?

I also would like to raise a concern with respect to section 16, remuneration. It has been quite a common practice for the government to provide honorariums for those individuals that have provided service, whether it be on community health councils, whether it be in the child welfare area. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, to be somewhat of an inconsistency to say that members who are not employees but are appointed by government to serve as members of the institutes, whether it be agriculture or energy, will in fact actually be paid an hourly wage, if I'm reading this amendment correctly. In addition to that they will be paid "traveling and living expenses." I think the government would be wise to consider having some consistency as they increase the variety of appointments they make to these boards, albeit they're not elected, that there be some consistency in those processes.

Relative to the comments made about appointment of members of the Legislature to the authority, I would read from the sections proposed in the bill that we would be seeing members of any party or any jurisdiction in the House really eligible for appointment, and I would expect there would be some diversity of representation on the agricultural institute or energy institute boards with respect to that area.

With those comments I would conclude my remarks. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Bill 3 Statute Revision Act

[Adjourned debate March 14: Ms Blakeman]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 3, the Statute Revision Act, at second reading. As I read through it and the comments we have heard in this Assembly on this particular bill, I do have some concerns.

As I read the bill, it looks like once again this government is taking sweeping powers to revise the Statutes of Alberta under the direction of the Minister of Justice. As we have said many times in this Assembly, we don't approve of that at all and don't support it. Why? Because we've seen some rather shoddy legislation come through this Assembly, legislation that has required many revisions and amendments, and there's no guarantee that wouldn't happen again when we see the government try to make a major power grab and diminish the powers of the Legislative Assembly and strengthen Executive Council's power. So what we see happen is that bills get passed in essence as mere shells, and the real laws are put forward through regulations as set out by the minister or by orders in council. It just doesn't work for us at all.

In this bill the power certainly is excessive, and I particularly have concerns about section 3, where they talk about revision powers.

- (h) make minor amendments to clarify what is considered to be the intention of the Legislature;
- (i) make changes to reconcile apparently inconsistent provisions . . .
- (n) make minor amendments to other enactments not being revised that are required to reconcile them with a revised enactment as if the minor amendments were amendments consequential to the revised enactment.

All those sections send up serious red flags for me, Mr. Speaker.

As I understand it, there are some amendments coming that we'll be seeing in committee, and certainly this is a bill that requires amending, Mr. Speaker. So I am looking forward to seeing that set of amendments and listening to the government's comments as they come forward, and I will save the rest of my comments until that time, at which point I will be happy to engage in debate on the amendments as they come forward.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had hoped that we could just proceed to a vote, but I think it wouldn't be appropriate to do that without making some comment on the comments we've heard tonight and comments we've heard previously in second reading.

Bill 3, the Statutes Revision Act, is simply that. It's the type of legislation which has been brought forward on a periodic basis every 10 years, in this case 20, to provide for the provision of an official consolidation of the statutes. This act that's being brought forward is entirely consistent with earlier acts that have been brought forward in this province since 1905. To suggest that in any way there's a power grab or executive lawmaking or any of those connotations which the hon. member tried again to allude to is absolutely untrue, unfounded, and patently inappropriate.

Now, I have agreed with the hon. Opposition House Leader, and we're working with the leader of the third party to bring forward some clarifying amendments. It's clear that there is absolutely no intention in this act to in any way take power or authority away from the Legislature, and there could not be in any way any attempt to write law outside the Legislature with this act. It is simply a process that is being brought forward, as has been done in the past, to consolidate and provide an officially consolidated version with one exception – and it's a very important exception: to allow the authority to continue to do those consolidations on an ongoing basis as and when it's needed.

So I have to rise and protest most strongly again the connotation that there's something insidious or wrong about this act. It's a very valid act. It's a very appropriate act. It has the powers and the authorities that these acts traditionally have. It's being done in the traditional way, but because there's some wording in section 3 that members opposite take some offence to, I'm perfectly happy to see if there's a clarifying way to make sure the intent of the act is clear, that there's no intention to bring forward any executive lawmaking authority.

I just wanted to put that on the record again, Mr. Speaker, before we went to the vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of an exchange of correspondence between myself and the Minister of Health and Wellness regarding the government's support for contracts with private medical laboratories.

I also have the appropriate number of copies of a single-page document that is entitled Vote No to Bill 11. It was distributed at the rallies in Edmonton and Calgary regarding Bill 11, and it calls for some participation in cyberdemocracy by voting www.voteAlberta.org.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I have five copies of yet the third version of the Bill 11 debate summary for April 11, 2000, from the government of Alberta's web site on the progress of Bill 11 debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to also table correspondence received from my constituents opposing Bill 11, 100 percent of which are opposed to Bill 11.

My second tabling is the most recent final report, Children and Youth in Care Review: Listen to Their Voices, published by the Saskatchewan Children's Advocate office, April 2000. Excellent reading, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today, both of which are in opposition to the Genesis plan in the Spray Valley, the first of which is from Peter Vermeulen of north-west Calgary. In brief, he believes that the project "will destroy grizzly . . . habitat, compromise a major wildlife corridor." As well, he believes the environmental protection is of such natural import that it should be in federal jurisdiction.

The second is from Dr. Clive Pryburn from Canmore, and he starts out, sir, by complimenting the government. He admires that which the government has done in the past two years – deficit and provincial debt pay-down – but he does believe that the government is in error allowing this project to go ahead.

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. They are letters from Steve Arthur of Calgary and Bruce Green also of Calgary. Both are opposed to any further development in the Spray Lakes area of Kananaskis Valley.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to make two tablings today. They are from Martha McCallum and Dicksie Helm, and both of these tablings urge the government to reject a proposal for development of a high-priced resort/recreational facility in the Spray Lakes area near Canmore.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter to the Minister of Health and Wellness signed by four physicians: Dr. Schuurmans, Dr. Hanley, Dr. Wirzba, and Dr. Mackey. They are asking the government to assign sufficient priority to the prevention and treatment of osteoporosis, an entirely preventable disease.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 30 visitors who are coming to us from NorQuest College today. They are accompanied by their instructor, Elaine Nichols. I did have a chance to meet half of them, and they're a very keen group. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you 124 grade 8 students from the Olds junior/senior high school. They are accompanied today by teachers Gayleen Roelfsema, Kelvin Beaudry, Garry Woodruff, Jolene Burgeson, April Curr, Kara McDonald, and Terry Miller. Also in the group are parents Gayla Moore, Cathy Kemmere, Dwayne Becker, Sandra Sawkins, Julie Brennen, Bob Loyek, Tami Gardner, Adeline Johnson, Grace Frost, Sharon Pederson, Jean Sutherland, Betty Astell, and Bev Toews. Unfortunately, they can't all be in the members' gallery at the same time, and they will be changing shifts at 2 o'clock, so we could have them pass on the greetings. I would ask all who are in the gallery now to stand to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today visiting the Legislature are 21 special guests from Erskine school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Hank Boer, and parent helpers Mrs. Cindy Long, Mrs. Sandy Rairdan, and Mrs. Wendy Volker. Unfortunately, this group is not in the Assembly right now but will be here later. I would like for us to recognize them. I would ask that we give them the warm welcome, and it can be recorded in Hansard. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce two queens of the north. They are good friends of our government, and they truly are two senior citizens that make our province "the True North strong and free." I'd like to ask two ladies who have lived on this earth almost nine decades, Olive Woodward and Marthe Lovett, to stand and receive the warm welcome of all members of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and to my colleagues in the Assembly today the spokesperson for Friends of Medicare, Christine Burdett, and her son Kevin Burdett, both of whom are sitting in the public gallery. I would now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly Don Mitchell, who's a representative of the coalition of unions, and their focus is to prevent health care privatization. I wish Don to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night hundreds of Albertans came to this Legislature, their Legislature, to show their support for public health care and to show their sense of betrayal over this government's private health care policy. In fact, these citizens have been incited to protest by a government that refuses to listen. One way to stop the wrath of Albertans is to withdraw this fatally flawed policy. My first question is to the minister of health. Will the minister finally listen to Albertans, given that the Premier won't, and live up to his responsibility as a minister and a trustee for the health care system and pull his private health care policy?

Speaker's Ruling Inflammatory Language

THE SPEAKER: Once again I'm going to give the daily reminder about argumentative, opinionated, incitive language in the House, and if it continues, I'm going to move on to the next person I'm going to recognize.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the government is listening to Albertans with respect to this very important and necessary piece of legislation. We have demonstrated this by introducing a number of significant amendments to the legislation. We have committed more time as an Assembly under the government's leadership to debate of this bill than any other piece of legislation on record or certainly since I've been privileged to serve here, and we will continue to proceed as the government.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to this minister as well. Can he possibly explain how this government has become so detached, so arrogant that it is ignoring the will of the people when it comes to public health care?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the overall approach of government we are proceeding with this important piece of legislation. We have made health care in this province a priority in terms of our budget allocations, a very significant increase in funding. We are developing new programs and expanding others and improving the quality of health care as resources permit and making health care in this province a priority for the government.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the Minister of Justice. Will this minister confirm that this building will remain open to allow Albertans to show their passionate support for public health care?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Legislative Assembly is open to the public. We have public galleries. I would anticipate the public will be allowed to view the operations of the Assembly from the public galleries tonight as usual.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the words of an Albertan who was here at this Legislature last evening: "We've seen the cutbacks, we've seen the promises, and we have seen the lies. It's time Albertans stood up and said: no more." My questions are to the minister of health. Why doesn't the minister live up to his leadership obligation and respect the will of the people?

Speaker's Ruling Improper Questions

THE SPEAKER: The purpose of question period is for hon. members to ascertain information of the government, not to ask questions on behalf of other people, and there are enough precedents in all those documents that have been written with respect to this matter. So I'm going to ask the hon. minister to ignore the usage of the word "lies," which I view as totally inappropriate in the context of the question period, and to focus on the part of the question that he feels worthy of response.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to very briefly indicate that our provincial budget, which has been dealt with in this Assembly, is evidence of the priority that the government places upon health care in this province. Within that overall plan are initiatives which are actually leading Canada with respect to innovation and change and certain areas of increased funding. We will continue to place a high priority on quality health care in this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, is this minister refusing to withdraw his private health care policy because of the threat of lawsuits by private operators?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, and I feel it's rather ironic although not surprising given the statements of the hon. leader favoring a two-tiered health care system that she is now on the side of the private operators.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what was it that caused this minister to invest taxpayer dollars in public health care facilities in Ponoka but to do a complete about-face and recommend private health care facilities for the rest of the province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member and opposition leader should know, there is a process. There are criteria which are followed in the approval of capital projects. The government has a very extensive multimillion dollar commitment to new facilities in this province: a new hospital in High Level, a new hospital in Manning, other additions which I would be pleased if my colleague the Minister of Infrastructure would like to outline to the Assembly.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the public dollars that are going into public facilities, I'd like to very quickly inform the Assembly that we have invested over $947.2 million since '92-'93 in about 276 capital projects. I don't want to take the Assembly's time all afternoon to read off the hundreds of projects that have taken place and are being constructed in the province today, but new health centres in Airdrie, Drumheller, Fort McMurray, Grand Centre, High Level, Lamont, Manning, Medicine Hat, Peace River, Ponoka, Sherwood Park, Spirit River, Stony Plain. If we have more time this afternoon, I could even add further to that list.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time and time again this government has used the Shouldice hospital as an example for its private health care policy. What the government hasn't told Albertans is that Shouldice operates as a grandfathered, licensed private hospital without any contractual guarantees from the government of Ontario, and it's not for profit. So my questions are to the minister of health. Why did the minister fail to tell Albertans that the Shouldice hospital returns its profits to the taxpayers? It goes back to the department of health.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Shouldice hospital is operated under a foundation. I further understand that the physicians that work at the Shouldice clinic are opted out of the Ontario medical care plan, so they can be reimbursed as to the level that the foundation board deems appropriate.

With respect to the grandfathering, Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that this clinic has operated for many years in the province of Ontario. That is nothing that is new to this Assembly; it's been reported before.

MS LEIBOVICI: They operate under the same fee guide.

Given that the government's health care policy is to contract with private surgical facilities, is it the government's intention that these private facilities here in Alberta will return their profits to the taxpayers just like Shouldice in Ontario does?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: It seems to me, hon. minister, that on the agenda again today is some discussion on the Order Paper with respect to a particular bill, and there is a clause-by-clause review of a particular bill that's already been scheduled.

Secondly, the Shouldice hospital in Ontario does not come under the ministerial responsibility of anyone in the province of Alberta.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, do you want to proceed?

MS LEIBOVICI: Absolutely.

Will the minister give Albertans a guarantee that private facilities in Alberta will not get a guaranteed minimum for payment of any procedures that are provided in their facilities?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, to answer the question I have to refer directly to the legislation.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we're not going to do that because we're going to have a discussion clause by clause later today.

The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tens of thousands of Albertans have attended rallies and health care forums in every corner of this province for the last two months, yet this government refuses to listen. Instead, it insults and belittles prominent Albertans who disagree with this approach. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What steps will the minister take to correct the harm caused by his chief spin doctor's comment that the president of the Alberta registered nurses is indulging in rhetoric and is just plain wrong?

Speaker's Ruling Improper Questions

THE SPEAKER: I take it that this particular person made these comments in this Assembly? Other than that it tends to be hearsay. Now, hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, if you want to make a comment, you go ahead and answer.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, it's not hearsay. I tabled the document today in the Legislature.

So let me proceed with my second question.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, the chair would not know what the hon. member has tabled. Please go ahead.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What does it say about the state of democracy in this province when the president of the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses is not allowed to express principled opposition to government policy without being belittled and insulted by the chief spin doctor in the minister's office?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of inaccurate portrayals from across the way. There was a case I believe about three or four days ago in question period where I pointed out that on literature from the opposition party the bill was deliberately, I assumed, misnamed so it could create a false impression with respect to the content of the bill. This type of thing unfortunately does occur.

With respect to any particular specific the member is referring to, I think the facts of the case would have to be checked out.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the minister. Why has this government that he's a member of, which ran in the last two elections on a platform of listening to Albertans, suddenly stopped doing so, choosing instead to steamroll with his policies of health care privatization?

MR. JONSON: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, we have I think demonstrated our commitment to having very thorough debate over the legislation that is being referred to. We have spent more time on this bill than any previous bill in this Assembly's history as far as second reading is concerned. We are now into many hours of debate in committee. The government has reviewed the input from Albertans and has introduced a comprehensive set of amendments which deal in very great detail with concerns that had been raised. So the contention of the hon. member I just do not agree with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Medical Research

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been recently reported that two of the country's leading medical researchers are moving to Alberta and specifically to the University of Calgary. These are two skilled and renowned researchers in their respective fields, and their intention to locate in Calgary is a real coup for the province of Alberta. My question this afternoon is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Can the minister advise whether the Department of Innovation and Science played a role in recruiting these prominent researchers?

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. The two researchers are Dr. Frank Jirik and Dr. Jay Cross, and both of them are medical doctors and will practise medicine as well. We are excited to have them here.

Dr. Jirik is creating 18 positions for people at the university. These are highly skilled, highly paid positions. He's going to have quite a lab there. Now, what caused him to come here is that he's moving into a new lab that was partially funded obviously by the departments of Learning or Infrastructure through unit funding to the university. Also, we have a funding envelope in our department called the research excellence envelope, which is attempting and is determined to attract research excellence from across the country and across the world. So that applies to Dr. Jirik. His research is in the area of arthritis and cancer and several other areas.

Dr. Cross is coming from the University of Toronto. Once again, the research excellence envelope helped to attract Dr. Cross. Without that, these people would not be here.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to that answer, I'm wondering if the same minister would say what immediate next steps are being taken by his department to attract other highly qualified researchers to the province?

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of steps I might mention. One is the creation of ICORE, the informatics circle of research excellence. It's a $30 million commitment by this government to attract researchers in the area of computing and information communications technology. We recently placed the ads for people, and we're negotiating right now with a lead researcher in Europe and a lead researcher in the U.S. in the area of wireless and Internet protocol. Researchers are interested in having their research funded, and if we can guarantee continuity of research funding, these people will come.

Another step: we've just passed Bill 1 with an initial commitment of $500 million to AHFSEER, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research. That will increase $100 million a year for the next five years to create a billion dollar fund, and we can attract research. We're the only jurisdiction in North America that is doing this. I recently spoke in Seattle, and they had heard about it already down there and were asking me about it and were excited.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I'm wondering if the minister can say what policies his department, the Department of Health and Wellness, has in place to increase the number of practising physicians in the province.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in terms of people practising in the health care system of the province, we have announced an increase in internship positions available for graduates of the medical schools in the province: 20 this year and a further 20 the following year for a total of 40. We are going to have discussions with Alberta

Learning on an ongoing basis to look at our overall capacity for the training of physicians, because that is certainly a very important matter to be addressed in the longer term.

Further to that, of course we have our rural physician action plan, which has been very successful in attracting physicians to rural areas. Contrary to some impressions that're left by some people, our overall physician component during the last complete year has increased by about 250 physicians in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the government handed over facilities and equipment worth millions of dollars to private investor-owned medical laboratories some five years ago, they did so based on a document which I tabled earlier in the Assembly. This document, titled Laboratory Restructuring Proposal, was to serve as a template for this privatization. I'd like to quote from that document.

In Edmonton, Calgary and some other urban communities, the regional boards would be required to enter into contracts or joint venture arrangements with one or more investor owned laboratories to provide comprehensive services.

My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the government be using this laboratory model, this template, for RHAs when they contract out surgeries to investor-owned, overnight surgical centres?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's extremely important to keep in mind that the private sector has played a major role in the provision of laboratory services in this province since well before the advent of the Canada Health Act and the public health care system as we know it. They continued on with the passage of the Canada Health Act, and this is perfectly allowed all across this country under the Canada Health Act's application in the various province.

When the regional health authorities were formed back in the early 1990s, it was necessary to make sure that there was an opportunity on a fair basis for the laboratory companies that had been providing sound and quality service to those areas of the province to have an opportunity to enter into a new contractual relationship with the regional health authorities because the previous governing structure under which they were contracted, the local hospital boards, et cetera, no longer existed.

MR. SAPERS: I think he said no, Mr. Speaker.

I quote again from the government's document. Given the principle to ensure that provincially funded facilities do not have a price advantage over investor owned labs, regional boards will no longer have access to provincial funding for capital equipment, are there plans to cut the regional health authorities capital budgets so that public hospitals don't have a so-called price advantage over private hospitals or surgical centres?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reference to plans that the hon. member makes are rather convoluted and vague.

I'd just like to point something out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Assembly, and that is that we have in the province today very sophisticated laboratory services, which are serving the province rather well. In the course of reorganizing services around the regional health authority model, there was realized some $50 million in terms of overall cost savings. As I've indicated to you before, the material being referred to is material which was needed to be provided in policy terms to bring about the transition to the regional health authorities.

MR. SAPERS: To the same minister: is there a plan for mandatory joint ventures in contracting out between regional health authorities and surgical facilities just like the mandatory contracts that were imposed by your government with the private laboratories?

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government has recently announced a review of MRI services in Alberta and implied that access in Alberta was perhaps less than in other provinces in the country. Subsequently, on Friday of last week the Alberta government announced that both Edmonton and Calgary will receive two more MRI machines. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister please advise whether Friday's announcement was a direct response to the review by the federal government?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. I would draw members of the Assembly's memories back to a number of other questions that have been put forward with respect to MRIs and the capacity in various parts of the province for that particular diagnostic service. I have indicated on at least two previous occasions that we have been first of all planning for the expansion of diagnostic services. We have had an expert committee working on that and advising us.

Secondly, we have indicated over the past number of months approvals for MRI units in the Chinook region at the Lethbridge regional hospital, and that unit is up and running now, Mr. Speaker. Approvals have also been given for the installation of MRIs in Red Deer, in the David Thompson region; in Grande Prairie, in the Mistahia region; and in Medicine Hat, in the Palliser region. Very recently we announced the significant expansion of those services going forward in Edmonton and Calgary.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I appreciate the clarification.

Given that the announcements of the new MRIs is welcome news, the fact remains that waiting lists for MRI services are already long now, and it will take at least six months for the new units to be put in place. What, if anything, will the government do to address the current situation in the meantime?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the regional health authorities will be running their existing magnetic resonance imaging units to maximum capacity according to the staff and the resources they have available. I note that they are running far beyond the usual eight-hour days, usually being in full operation about 14 hours a day.

I'd also like to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that there's always provision for an emergency MRI to be done in the major cities should that be needed at any particular hour. There is also in Calgary a plan to enter into a short-term contract with a private MRI facility to provide additional scans until such time as their two new units are up and running.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us whether or not the addition of the two MRIs will be sufficient to adequately meet Albertans' needs for MRI services over the longer term?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is our judgment that when all of the MRI units that have been announced are up and in full operation, we will be meeting the need. We will be providing I believe somewhere in the neighbourhood of 42 scans per thousand of population, which is a measure that's used in comparing the provinces. This would bring them up to slightly over that of the leader right now, which is Ontario.

Child Welfare

MRS. SLOAN: Children's Advocate reports for the last decade have continuously raised warnings about this government's underfunding of child welfare and the accompanying impacts of the fiscal limitations imposed year after year on these services. Yesterday the fatality inquiry report into the untimely death of Jordan Quinney raised once again these same issues. My questions today are to the Minister of Children's Services. How do you explain your government's inaction in addressing these ongoing issues that have now been attributed to the death of a child in your care?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the death of a child anywhere is always a tragic loss not only for the family but for all Albertans. I take seriously the responsibility as Minister of Children's Services for the death of any child that is in government's care and protection.

We have fully accepted and acknowledged through the special case review process the recommendations that were made to us. We have in fact instituted and assured and confirmed that the training for all of the workers that was suggested in that review process would be in place so that proper training for workers is in place before they make very important decisions in regards to children.

In the release yesterday that has been provided, we have acknowledged further our belief that those recommendations are appropriate. If there's anything we take some satisfaction from, Mr. Speaker, it's the fact that it's recognized that our department, Children's Services, has followed through with commitments and recommendations made in the special case review.

MRS. SLOAN: To the same minister: what evidence will be sufficient to prompt your cabinet to allocate sufficient funding to ensure that vulnerable children in the care of this government are safe?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, a number of initiatives through the past year have been addressed as it related to children's authorities. The Children's Advocate review has in fact cited some of those areas that we have to improve upon that are areas of emphasis as we review the budgets of the child and family service authorities.

In terms of children that are very highly at risk, the work that we're doing on early intervention, early assessments, the work that we're doing with the Foster Parent Association, the work that we're doing in training child care workers and day care workers, every part of our training, every part of our work with the universities and colleges, whom I met with yesterday, is geared to making sure that in the very first instance when the parent is unable to follow through with the appropriate services and care of the child, we take action, that we assess the situation and follow through. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: I can't believe, hon. members, that when an hon. member is given the floor to ask about the death of a child and when an hon. member of Executive Council is responding, there would be members in this House who have to interject. I just find that astounding.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: When, Madam Minister, will the adequate protection of children in care be a priority for this government equal to tax reform and reduction?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in the task force report that we released yesterday, Start Young, Start Now, we identified that in many circumstances throughout the province there are excellent programs provided, but one of the particular concerns was the duplication of effort and support that is provided. In other words, we are frequently putting support in some areas where other gaps exist.

Mr. Speaker, an assessment of that will be done not only by myself as Minister of Children's Services but by all of the partnering members of the Alberta children's initiative, all of the other ministers who will, as I will, address those areas of program delivery to determine what gaps in fact exist and where the priorities can be given. I feel assured, as our Premier stated yesterday, that where we can provide funds and institute change and where it is demanded and needed, we will do so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Catholic School Board Boundaries

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Learning provided members of the Assembly with an update on a proposal put forward by Alberta's three school board associations related to the formation of separate school districts. As part of this update the minister advised us that school boards across Alberta were meeting last week to vote on this proposal. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Can you advise us as to what took place at this vote or what the results were?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The vote was held on Friday. Of the 61 school boards that participated in the vote, 37 voted against it and 24 voted for it.

MR. BRODA: My first supplemental: what are the next steps to be taken in resolving this long-standing issue?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the interesting point about this whole process is that following the vote, the school board chairmen that were present agreed unanimously to continue talking about this very important issue and to come up with a resolution of this very important issue as soon as possible.

MR. BRODA: My final supplemental to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: could you please advise us whether a time line has been set to complete this next phase of work?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I have not been formally notified of a time line. There has been some suggestion that they are working towards an October time line. I would say, though, that that time line is not hard and fast from my department.

I think what needs to happen is that the three associations need to get together. They need to sit down; they need to come up with a resolution that everyone will understand, that everyone will support and bring it forward to me. It may or may not need legislative changes. It probably will, but that's one of the things we'll be looking at.

Hopefully something will be brought forward in the near future, whether it's October, whether it's August, whether it's December. Again, I'll reiterate that it's a very critical issue to schools in Alberta, and I hope that there is a resolution that is brought forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is now day 12 since the Premier promised to release the 30 blank pages of responses from his private hospitals focus groups once the opposition released its research. The government's stonewalling is very reminiscent of the Premier's 90-day health care action plan. It's now in day 1,663. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister stop the nonsense and release the full 30 pages of responses from the private hospitals focus groups now?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this matter is being dealt with according to the legislation and the procedures and time lines that apply.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister assure Albertans that the full 30 pages of responses from the private hospitals focus groups will be released and not a sanitized version?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite sure that there are no documents such as the person refers to, and that is dealing with private hospitals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Foldable Intraocular Lenses

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government announced that the softer foldable lens sometimes used in eye cataract surgery will be fully paid for by the public health care system effective April 12. Some people who had paid for this lens from their own pocket before that date are asking where they stand now in light of this change. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: will patients who have already paid for this foldable lens be reimbursed by the government for their costs?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, if they have not yet been scheduled or had the surgery. There are cases, however, where a person had the surgery scheduled prior to the date of the announcement and also paid for the lens, and in those particular cases they will be reimbursed.

As with many changes with respect to coverage, whether it is pharmaceutical products or in this case an appliance, there is an upgrading here. Yes, there is an additional area of coverage for the public of this province, but there is also a definite starting date, and the date of this being announced is the point from which people will not have to pay.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the foldable lens now become the standard lens used in cataract surgery throughout Alberta?

MR. JONSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the standard foldable lens will be provided as part of an insured service when cataract operations take place. That is what the change is about. It is an upgrade of the appliance being used. Upon the advice of people working in the field, we have chosen a particular level or quality of lens of the foldable type, and that is what we will be funding.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: why was this change made now?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we covered the solid or rigid lens under our overall insured coverage. The technology, the material used, the type of lenses that are available have advanced in terms of the treatment of eyes and following up on cataract surgery, and after assessing the situation and finding the advice was that there was a clear medical benefit to having a standard foldable lens, we made the decision to provide that coverage.

MR. GIBBONS: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has told Albertans that this government's policy to allow overnight stays in approved surgical facilities will not endanger the lives of Albertans. Well, allowing for overnight stays in private surgical facilities which are not fully equipped, according to the members of the J. Dosseter Health Ethics Centre at the University of Alberta, is a danger to the health of patients and thus ethically is unacceptable. My first question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how are these private surgical facilities going to cope if a patient experiences complications beyond the ability of the surgical centre to treat?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have currently in the province some 152, as I recall, day-surgery procedures that are provided in a clinic setting. They have been provided for well over a decade. They were provided and approved by the government at the time the Leader of the Opposition was health minister and certainly expanded a great deal at that particular time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, very rarely there are unfortunately occasional cases where they need the services of a hospital emergency ward. Provisions are there to seek additional help and to transfer to an emergency setting for proper treatment when some difficulty arises.

MR. GIBBONS: To the same minister: will this government admit that its policy of pushing for overnight stays in surgical facilities will not improve health care but will put the lives of Albertans in jeopardy by placing them in clinics which are not equipped to deal with a real emergency?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the track record, the quality control with respect to what we do have to refer to right now – and that is over 50 day-surgery clinics in this province – is very, very good in terms of safety and quality treatment. They have a very good record in this province, and I'm sure that same level of quality will be maintained in overnight stay surgical facilities.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, see what you create with the seeking of opinion? Keep going.

MR. GIBBONS: To the same minister, a question that I asked yesterday: what deal is so important that this government is willing to put the lives of Albertans in jeopardy? [interjections]

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the member's colleagues were enjoying his question so much, I did not hear. Perhaps it could be repeated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Child Care

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend about 300 child care workers gathered in Calgary to look at what they're calling the wage crisis for child care workers in Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the minister doing to address the concerns of these child care workers in Alberta?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I have met with the network of child care providers who have approached me and identified a number of options that we could discuss. I think that on reflection the operating allowance that was provided for families with children in need was exactly the right way to go. Today we serve more families. We serve families with dual incomes. We are able to provide more money for more families receiving child care.

Mr. Speaker, one of the options that I related in this House last week relative to training is that we could expand in fact some of the options of training, and we're looking at that. We expended $370,000 last year training level 1 child care workers. They apply for that directly through the colleges, and we subsidize the colleges. As I've stated earlier, one of the ways that we can help enhance the opportunities for retention of staff is assuring that we're providing options and opportunities for training and support of those staff.

Mr. Speaker, one final note. Those same people from the day cares, for example, have determined that they would like to make a presentation to government, and I understand that they will be doing that in the near future.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: in the matter of training needs identified from the special case review in the death of a child, what specific action has been taken in this respect?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the time of the special case review was prior to the actual implementation and the opportunities for local child and family service authorities to be fully up and running, but since that time there has been extensive work under way with those agencies as well as with child welfare workers to provide and ensure that child protection services training is available for the workers. As I indicated earlier, our relationship is such with Justice that we ensure the adequacy of those courses provided, that child protection workers have in fact got all the training they need, and even those that are home workers and others that are in charge of children at risk or families at risk will always be assured of having been provided services.

Mr. Speaker, we are working on tools for assessing risk from May until September this year. It is a pilot that we hope will enable us to make sure that we have child care protection workers fully cognizant of all the risks when children are in care, risks that might lead to very tragic conclusions.

One final item, Mr. Speaker. One of the key components of a CPS training program is to know how to identify abuse and to expand and improve information for workers and for that sharing. These are some of the ways that we hope to address some of the tough questions that have arisen as a result of the death of a child.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Private Health Services

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Political leaders can strongly influence our life. As Kevin Taft said in 1997:

People with differing points of view can be sincerely considered, or they can be called humiliating names. Governments can help people get a fair break and build a better society, or they can further enrich and empower those who are already rich and powerful.

My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why does this government call people left-wing nuts instead of sincerely listening to them?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, members of government caucus have, I know, been extensively meeting with people all across this province in their constituencies and other constituencies. They have been reading their correspondence, replying to correspondence, and they have brought their views to the table of government. We have introduced extensive legislation dealing with key issues brought to our attention, so I think we have demonstrated that we are following the proper model and fulfilling our responsibility in government.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. This question is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why does this government not build a better society instead of promoting the privatization of health care, which will benefit a few who are already rich and powerful?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to preface my answer by saying this, and that is that the government is not taking sole credit in any way for what a great province we are privileged to live in. The province of Alberta is a place which is a destination sought by many people in terms of relocating, whether they are coming to do business and to pay taxes and to support our government services or whether they are seniors, which are very welcome, who are coming here to access some of the programs that we have. Our population is growing steadily. We are regarded as a good place to live because of our education systems, because of our health care systems.

Therefore, I think we are following through to the best of our ability in taking our responsibility in government very, very seriously and taking advantage of what is Alberta.

MS BLAKEMAN: After the thousands of people who have protested this weekend and the hundreds more last night, will the government finally tell the truth about why it wants to privatize more health care? Why? Who benefits?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, that question violates Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) by going to aspersions, so we're going to wrap this up.

In 30 seconds from now we're going to have the Clerk stand up and call Members' Statements.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Bill 11 Protest at the Legislature

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night in this Assembly we saw democracy come through the doors. Nearly 500 Albertans came into their Assembly and made it clear that they want the government to kill Bill 11. They made it clear that their MLAs were elected to represent the public good for Albertans. MLAs are not elected to bend to the wishes of a few who want to get rich by pushing an agenda of private health care.

Democracy is about the will of the people. It is about freedom: free votes, free speech, and freedom of association. Every member in this Assembly was elected to make good decisions on behalf of their constituents. MLAs have a responsibility to listen to their constituents. Listening does not mean nodding in agreement and then dismissing the views of those constituents. It means giving careful consideration to all ideas and looking at all the facts. It requires MLAs to understand the issue at hand and to make decisions based on the collective will of the people. It means, Mr. Speaker, that a democratic Assembly must use its collective wisdom if the people are to continue having trust and faith in the democratic process.

Last night's peaceful protest was a success due in part to the professionalism of the Legislature security. They handled a difficult situation with calm and reason. I would like to commend them for the job they did. They're an important part of the democratic process. Other staff essential to the operation of this Assembly are to be commended for going about their business with calm and professionalism as well.

Tonight we expect another successful demonstration to occur. I know the doors of this Assembly will remain open to the people of Alberta. It is their Assembly, after all. Democracy is not always quiet, and sometimes the will of the people needs to get loud to be heard.

Bill 207 Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Calculation Act

[Adjourned debate April 12: Mr. Paszkowski]

MR. GIBBONS: I'm pleased and proud to stand today to speak in support of Bill 207, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Calculation Act. This is the first private member's bill to be put forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition in this spring session. It speaks to the importance of creating stable and predictable funding for Alberta's municipalities.

It has been my pleasure for the last three years to hold the position of Official Opposition shadow critic for Municipal Affairs in this Legislative Assembly. In this capacity I've traveled the province extensively, meeting Albertans as well as municipal administrators and elected leaders from both the rural and urban municipalities. In attending the AUMA and the AAMDC regional conferences and their conventions, I've had the pleasure of speaking with and getting to know about 60 percent of the elected municipal officials in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 is brought forward with the best intentions. The Official Opposition wants to engage all members in discussion of how we can ensure stable and predictable funding for our municipalities and our communities. It is about realigning existing revenue sources to meet roles and responsibilities. It is not about creating a new source of revenue. The source of revenue we're talking about is the taxpayer. The provincial government must respect the taxpayer and be committed to working with Alberta's municipal leaders toward responsible funding arrangements for communities. Bill 207 is a framework for discussion. That is what Bill 207 and the provincial-municipal tax sharing calculation are about.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to some of the comments made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs regarding this constructive piece of legislation. On April 11 in this Assembly the Member for Livingstone-Macleod raised a point of order so that the Minister of Municipal Affairs could try to avoid debating this bill. These hon. members tried unsuccessfully to state that this is a money bill. They tried to say that this bill is about creating a new source of revenue. As I've already said, this is not about creating a new source of revenue; it is about equitable, predictable sharing of existing revenue. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod have both been members of this Assembly long enough to know that political games should not be played when constructive legislative initiatives are presented. I am pleased to let these members know that their reluctance to debate this bill, a bill which is intended to establish stable and predictable funding for Alberta and municipalities, will be widely communicated.

The minister has been critical of this bill on several points. He raised concerns because he feels that there are necessary components missing. As the minister is well aware and pointed out, this is a private member's bill and therefore cannot be what is described as a money bill. When the Leader of the Official Opposition made her opening remarks on Bill 207, she noted that this is a framework for discussion. She also noted the limitations that are placed on private members' bills.

There are other areas of provincial/municipal relations where the minister has said some troubling things, and I would like to take a moment to clear up this misinformation. In his comments on April 12 regarding Bill 207 the minister indicated that the government is "reviewing the education property tax." This so-called review will see education property tax increase from $651.2 million in 1995 to a projected $774.7 million in 2002. This, Mr. Speaker, is a projected increase of 19 percent. The only long-term solutions that the government has publicly suggested for replacing the education property tax are a 4 percent sales tax and a 38 percent increase in provincial income tax. Those figures are from the hon. minister in this Assembly on March 13 of this year.

I think Albertans should be very concerned if this is the type of review currently going on regarding education property tax. I think it is important to note that the MLA for Medicine Hat recognizes the need for realistic long-term solutions regarding the education property tax, and it is seen in Motion 518 on today's Order Paper. This motion states:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore alternative means of funding education other than through municipal property taxes and to begin discussions with municipal governments to develop new cost-sharing formulas that could be implemented after the provincial government removes requisitions for school taxes.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to develop new cost-sharing formulas. That is exactly what Bill 207 is about.

As I've traveled across Alberta, I've spoken to municipal leaders about this bill. These leaders have been impressed because finally somebody was listening. I impress upon everybody in this Assembly that there are very, very many fingerprints on this particular bill. On many occasions I have heard that the Ministry of Municipal Affairs should include as part of its business plan the creation of a legislative framework which would include municipalities' access to long-term, stable sources of revenue to ensure self-sufficiency and sustainability. Continued reliance on the province for grants and other programs prevents municipalities from becoming self-sufficient. Access to stable sources of revenue is the best way to ensure municipalities will remain sustainable during a high-growth period.

In the minister's further criticism of this bill he alluded to the idea that grants are a more predictable source of income and would in some ways be preferable to relying on a percentage of the tax base for income. These comments were made in the Assembly on April 12, Mr. Speaker. On this point I'd like the minister to note that the government's grants to municipalities have been very uncertain over the past eight years. In 1992, 21 percent of a local government's revenue in Alberta came from the provincial general or specific purpose transfers. By 1998 only 10.2 percent of a local government's revenue came from the provincial general or specific purpose transfers.

Accelerated onetime increases in 1999-2000 and 2000-2001 for these same grants are expected in the general or specific purpose transfers, up to 27.1 percent of local government revenue for 2000. Mr. Speaker, the grant level has gone down from 21 percent to just over 10 percent and now back up to just over 27 percent. How can the minister call that a stable source of funding? In contrast, provincial personal income tax, the taxes that would be the basis of the funding arrangement as proposed by Bill 207, have increased an average of 11.2 percent per year between 1992 and 1999-2000. I think a funding source with a history of progressive increase is a far better base from which to create stable sources of funding than the grants.

Bill 207 is a product of the Official Opposition to forge a new partnership with Alberta municipalities. This partnership, Mr. Speaker, would be based on values of accountability, efficiency, responsibility, and equity. By providing access to a portion of the personal income tax revenue through revenue sharing, Bill 207 recognizes that local government authority and financial resources should correspond to their responsibilities. The Official Opposition believes that we need a long-term vision to sustain our local communities. The ad hoc, reactionary funding announcements from the Conservative government are not acceptable.

The Official Opposition values and respects our fellow leaders in this province and respects the taxpayers. Bill 207 is about respecting the roles and responsibilities for the provincial government and our partners in Alberta's municipalities. The Department of Municipal Affairs in their 2000-2003 business plan has no performance measures for the target of "a coordinated provincial government approach towards municipalities." They also have no benchmark or target for this performance measure:

Level of satisfaction with the Ministry's activities, services, programs, and legislative framework in enabling and promoting a cooperative and well managed local government sector.

Bill 207 is an integral part of the framework for discussion of improvement of provincial/municipal roles and responsibilities in Alberta. A minister whose business plan talks about the need to redefine the relationship with the government but then does not include the targets or benchmarks is hardly in a position to try to dismiss a constructive piece of legislation which is part of the framework for this discussion.

One of this government's favourite pastimes is being critical of the federal government. It is curious that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would not support a revenue-sharing principle in Bill 207 when he constantly criticizes the federal government for failing to return a fair share of the federal fuel tax to Alberta. The minister is even on record as supporting tax realignment. It makes sense that if the minister would be in favour of the federal government sharing tax dollars with the province, he would also be in favour of the provincial government sharing taxes with our municipalities. Bill 207 would allow for this tax sharing to take place in a predictable way, and this would help the provincial and municipal governments provide the best services to Albertans.

There also seems to be some confusion on the part of the minister as to how Bill 207 would allocate these dollars. On April 12 this minister asked about the money.

Would it be allocated on a per capita basis? Would it be based on personal income taxes paid by the municipality residents? Would it be pooled and redistributed based on the equalization of need formula? Would this income tax revenue be a replacement for other sources of revenue, or would it be in addition to what municipalities already receive from the province?

I'm pleased that the minister has thought through this issue and realizes the questions that need to be asked.

It's also my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to quote the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod as he reads from an opposition press release, a release which was tabled by this minister in this Assembly.

Bill 207: the Provincial/Municipal Tax Sharing Act will allow for the allocation of a percentage of provincial personal income tax revenues on a per capita basis to local government.

The minister also had concerns that under those arrangements those communities which are more prosperous would get richer while other communities would get poorer. The per capita formula would not lead to this situation, Mr. Speaker. The mechanism for this formula would be an agreement between the province and the associations representing municipalities in Alberta: the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, known as AUMA, and the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the AAMDC. The per capita allocation would be based upon the latest census, updated by population figures on municipalities prepared by Statistics Canada and the Ministry of Municipal Affairs.

I commend the minister for his concern about the fair and equitable distribution of taxes. Government grants of 5 percent per litre from fuel sold in Calgary and Edmonton will go directly to those cities, and future allocations of this grant will be tied to the population growth. Interestingly enough, other cities and municipalities will not be able to access this revenue stream even though almost 39 percent of fuel tax in Alberta is collected from outside these two main cities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 is about equity. This is clear in the per capita formula that is proposed. Revenue sharing has the advantage of promoting greater fiscal co-operation between the province and Alberta local governments and heightens the awareness of specific roles and responsibilities of each level of government within the overall framework. This will result in improved communication and consultation between the levels of government and greater accountability to citizens.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 is brought forward before this Assembly to serve as a framework for discussion on revenue sharing between the province and our municipalities. This bill will provide local governments in Alberta, whether they be rural or urban municipalities, with access to a more stable and predictable source of funding. This will give our municipalities an enhanced ability to meet their priorities.

I have today, Mr. Speaker, a complete set of copies, which I'll table, of my dissecting the actual speech put forward by the minister when he spoke on the 11th and the 12th about this one. It's pertaining to items like what the Minister of Municipal Affairs said and what our Official Opposition's response was to it point by point. These I believe will be tabled tomorrow at the AUMA meeting in Lethbridge, and one will be tabled in Calgary on Thursday.

Mr. Speaker, one thing, one of the few items the minister did say that I totally did agree with in his statements was that our communities are the backbone of Alberta's society. We live and work and raise our families in our communities. The quality of our life within our communities is dependent on the availability of local infrastructure. Maintaining our infrastructure is critical to Alberta's future competitiveness, providing the means of adding value to the products and services we produce and sell both here and in Canada and abroad. Infrastructure planning should and must be the core business function of the provincial government, in close collaboration with the municipalities.

The province likes to take the credit for the $4 billion surplus at the provincial level, but why do they refuse to take responsibility for the infrastructure deficit they created over the last seven years at the local level? Between 1992 and 1998 general and specific purpose grants from the Alberta government to the municipalities declined by $48 million, the second highest level of decline of any province in this country. Our municipalities have been subjected to a financial squeeze by the provincial government. Not only were provincial grants to municipalities reduced; the province also took access to a portion of the local property tax base. Meanwhile, provincial education property tax burdens – we all know about that. We also know about the committee. We all know about the tinkering.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I will sit and let somebody else stand and speak on this one.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to have the opportunity to add to this debate on Bill 207. I agree with the previous speakers from this side of the floor, and I'm somewhat confused as to the advantages that this bill would supposedly bring to Albertans.

I had the honour to serve as the Minister of Municipal Affairs from 1995 to 1997. During that time I worked very closely with all of Alberta's municipalities, particularly in relation to determining their needs and the kinds of funding pressures they were experiencing. And they were; it was a difficult time for all levels of government. All levels of government were facing budget pressures, and difficult decisions had to be made on what programs and services were of greater priority. We met many, many times with the associations and with individual municipalities, and thanks to them, in part, we were able to come through this as well as we have.

Municipal governments faced the same decisions that we as a provincial government faced, that being: do we raise taxes, bring government spending under control and in some cases reduce government spending, or do we do both? As is so well known and documented – it is no secret – this government of Alberta, on the direction of the people of Alberta I might add, brought government spending under control through sound, reasonable, and responsible economic management, and I think we should give credit where credit is due. These measures worked, and the prosperity we are all enjoying today is a direct result of this effort that was put forward by not only municipalities but by this government and the people of Alberta.

Hindsight is always 20-20, as the cliché goes. It is always easier to criticize than to do, and at its heart this is what this bill is all about. Bill 207 seems to propose an arbitrary and artificial process that is only likely to cause confusion and difficulties between the province and the municipalities. There is no recognizable benefit from this bill.

This bill would require the Provincial Treasurer to prepare a public report each year that sets out in detail the effect that sharing an assumed percentage of provincial income tax revenue with municipalities would have on provincial finances. The assumed percentage is to be determined by the Legislative Assembly on a motion moved by the Provincial Treasurer. If the Legislative Assembly does not approve the motion, then the Provincial Treasurer must set the assumed percentage himself and then make it public. In this case the rate chosen by the Treasurer must then be debated and voted on by the Legislature within 15 days of being established. If the Legislature is not in session, then it must be debated within 30 days of the commencement of the next sitting of the House.

There's no guidance in this bill regarding what factors are to be taken into account when determining this percentage either from the perspective of the province or of the municipalities. There's no mention of tying the funding given to municipalities to performance measures, objectives, or goals. Albertans want to see targeted funding and accountability, and this government has supported such measures through our budgets and business plans.

There's also no mention of the effect that contributing a percentage of provincial income taxes, whatever that percentage might be, would have on the existing funding in the municipalities. Would the system envisioned by the sponsor of this bill replace existing municipal funding? I don't know; it doesn't say. If so, causing municipalities to rely on fluctuating provincial income tax revenue will destabilize their funding and make budgeting very difficult both in the short and the long terms. Or does the bill propose that in addition to the provincial funding and revenue generated by the municipalities themselves through their property taxes and services, the province further grant them a percentage of provincial income taxes? It doesn't say. If we were to dramatically increase the amount of funding going to municipalities, this would be done at the expense of other priorities such as health care and education.

Bill 207, in my view, would entangle municipal and provincial tax policies in an undesirable way. Calculating a transfer amount to municipalities as a percentage of provincial income tax revenue would tie municipal revenue to provincial tax policy decisions. This would leave municipalities with less independence than they currently possess. They've asked for independence, they've asked for powers, and we've been giving them that over the years. It would just mess up everything. They wouldn't have a chance to know what they were getting. It would also leave them more vulnerable, since reductions in provincial income tax revenue would translate into a reduction in the revenue which would be transferred to the municipalities.

We have three-year business plans now that generate a foreseeable future for them to determine the amount of money that's coming to them. For the same reason that we as a province argue to delink our income tax regime from that of the federal government, so also should municipalities not have their revenue tied to the province's tax policies, over which they have no control. The government is already addressing pressures on municipalities by increased funding and providing onetime grants, when we have the money, to address infrastructure problems associated with strong economic growth in our province.

Currently we have a stable and predictable funding arrangement in place with municipalities. The sources of funding are certain, coming from the various grant programs. As I mentioned before, the department's three-year business plans have contributed to this stability, enabling municipalities to forecast their budgets predictably over the next two to three years.

In 2000-2001 the province will fund approximately $815 million directly to municipalities. Of this, $110 million will come from Municipal Affairs and $705 million will come from the Department of Infrastructure. In addition, a new system of transportation grants will be phased in over the next year to help address pressures in Calgary and Edmonton.

This current system is far superior to the method proposed by Bill 207, which would essentially require the Treasurer to pull a number out of thin air to determine the level of funding that municipalities should receive. This bill serves no purpose other than to create municipal/provincial conflict with respect to funding. It is possible that the percentage voted upon by the Assembly would be criticized by municipalities, regardless of how high it is, as being insufficient. Since the bill provides no mechanism for consulting municipalities in determining the percentage that would be proposed before the Assembly, conflict would very definitely arise here as well. Finally, as somebody has pointed out a little earlier here, Bill 207 really wanted to be a money bill, which of course private members' bills cannot be, and that's one thing we do agree on.

There are many problems and disadvantages with the proposal contained within Bill 207 and no advantages that I can see. Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members to vote against this bill because it's a know-nothing bill.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to go over a little history of municipal finance in this province and understand a little bit about what a municipality does and the breadth of a municipality's interest, and then I'll perhaps debunk some of the statements by Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Having had some experience in that arena, in municipal finance, I can tell you that the breadth of decisions that one makes is relatively narrow and that the expenditures are very, very predictable in a municipality. The level of taxation does not vary a lot on the income side, so the income side and the expense side are relatively stable, as you'd find in a large corporation that doesn't have a great deal of income that is related to income of its citizenry or income of the tax base.

Saying that, when this province downloaded a great deal of the services – i.e., police, transportation, social services, and general municipal grants – onto the municipalities, they were hard pressed to make up the difference. In fact, they cut and cut and cut, and today I believe there's probably in the order of perhaps 20 percent fewer employees in that level of government than there were in, say, about '89 to 90. They have jumped to the pump, as it were, and rose to the challenge. Yes, their taxation rates had to increase, and they apologize for that profusely at every opportunity to their electorate and in fact are held accountable for those increases.

The difficulty they find themselves in is from the expansion of the areas of responsibility without the commensurate expansion of taxation. We all agree in this House that there is but one taxpayer. It's the same one, whether it pays provincial tax in the way of income tax or federal tax or excise tax or gas tax or municipal property tax. The difficulty the municipalities find themselves in is that they are taxing on behalf of the province for education and on behalf of themselves in the way of their municipal allocation, and the municipal allocation is based on the value of property. It's not based on services to property. Otherwise, things like recreation, social services, and the like would not attract tax. Those would be expenditures of the general revenue. Those would be expenditures that should fall from the generation of wealth in a province, not from the expenditure of wealth; i.e., on personal property.

I'm sure every member in this House would agree that it's wise to encourage our residents to expend some time, effort, and money on the development of their personal properties and therefore their quality of life and enjoyment of life, but this taxation system in the province of Alberta is a detriment to that end. It does nothing to further that end at all. This piece of legislation goes somewhat in that direction. It says to municipalities, "Here is an opportunity, albeit we'll have to cut back some granting and some solid granting," that is supposedly ongoing, although it never is. "We'll cut back on that and give you some percentage points on a per capita basis for your residents," knowing full well in doing so that that rate will rise and fall and vary with the economy.

Now, I believe, as most others believe, that the elasticity in a municipal tax budget is rather limited, as I said earlier, but it does have some elasticity, and that is demonstrated very well by virtually every municipality. They do manage. On a day-to-day basis they are much more reactive than a provincial government. A provincial government by its very nature must take care of all of the parts of a province. A municipality is much more locally based. It can act and react much more quickly.

Aside from that fact, when you have municipal governments in the order of, say, 300 municipalities that have some magnitude, that can act and react to these expenditures and have a staff to assist them to that end, and one provincial government, if there's a large influx of income over one year to the next or, on the contrary – we don't like to think of it – perhaps a drop in income, then the elasticity in the entire province and therefore the utility of the expense in those areas and the product it will turn out is so, so much better in aggregate. It's this member's view that in allowing municipalities that leeway and in fostering that growth so that they are continually thinking of the economic good of the province, because it has a direct relationship to that which they call income in their budgets, it would be, I would think, of benefit to all concerned.

Now, this perhaps is not the be-all and end-all of provincial/municipal taxation sharing, but it goes some way to doing a very, very important thing also. It does speak to respect for that level of government. We heard the member opposite awhile back say – I think I can quote him fairly closely – that this bill would make the municipalities less independent. Now, this member has a great deal of difficulty understanding that logic, because the current system is a system of grants which can be modified, added to, taken away from at the whim of a minister, and in fact history has shown that it changes ever so rapidly with the mood change of a province or an election or a new minister. It changes not on a daily basis but certainly changes on a year-to-year basis, and municipalities hang on tenterhooks every year to find out what the minister is going to grant them or not. It's not quite always a crapshoot, but it is certainly not as predictable as one might like.

To have a percentage of an income tax that's generated in the province of Alberta, which is a well-known, published number, to know that that comes out on a quarterly basis perhaps, and to then say that that is less predictable and makes the municipalities less independent is absolute balderdash. It could be said worse too. Any member of any council will understand that fully and completely.

The member opposite also said that he found a great deal of difficulty deciding on how the percentage would be arrived at. Well, that's a matter of negotiation between the municipalities, of course, and it has to work over time. It has to be structured, and it would have to be dealt with by the AAMDC and the AUMA, of course, and have their input. It may start out as a relatively small figure, until such time as the municipalities felt comfortable with the method of finance, and then move into a final level of perhaps as high as 11 percent, with the commensurate reduction in the grants as they sit today. The funds would then be relatively stable and predictable over the course of time and do that which is so important to a municipality, which is to actually respect their opinions and their positions.

Now, I haven't touched on a very, very touchy subject with the municipalities that they would dearly love to do away with, and that's the collection of the property tax along with the municipal tax. That of course is a bit of a sore point with all of the municipalities because while receiving no funds or recognition for collection of those funds, they continually receive at tax time, when municipal taxes are due, all that negative feedback from their electorate, which is of course understandable.

There are a number of reports, the most recent of which was really quite an enlightening report from November of '98, not that terribly long ago, Mr. Speaker. It was titled Joint Calgary-Edmonton Case for Provincial Investment in the Two Cities. It's quite emphatic about the cities being the generators of more growth, and quite frankly I can't see how any arguments can be made that in fact they're not. Yes, the gross domestic product is aided and abetted by traditional industries: the oil and gas industry of course; the timber industry; the coal industry, which is in a low ebb right at the moment, but it shall return; and of course the solid agricultural base we have. But that is not the area of growth that is going to sustain the growth at a level in this province such that our children and grandchildren are able to have stable and solid employment. It's actually in the cities.

These cities in their municipal management are exceedingly sophisticated, and I'm not talking just about Edmonton and Calgary. I'm talking about Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie. These people that manage these municipalities, from the administrators to the politicians, are exceedingly good at managing their funds. I recognize, as I said earlier, that there's limited scope for variance from one year to the next because their capital expenditures are laid out in lockstep. As well, the maintenance programs are fairly well laid out too.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So the range of expenditure is rather limited, and they can spend a great deal of time working very hard at deciding where the next major capital expenditure is going to foster growth in their area, to be a facilitator for those entrepreneurs that wish to take advantage of some special conditions or an initiative designed to enhance value or to allow the entrepreneurs of the local area to be able to grow in and foster their community. Well, this particular piece of legislation aids in that area. This rises and falls with the economic generation in any given area. Yes, it falls perhaps a year, perhaps 18 months after the fact of this increase, but it does nonetheless, such that that element of the budget of a municipality can rise and fall and vary with the economic activity. They can predict it, they understand it, and they can manage it exceedingly well. This piece of legislation says respect, respect, respect and that we understand how you can manage better than we the province.

There are a number of other areas that need to be covered in this debate. Some of them are quite easily understood in putting this piece of legislation forward. When one reviews the amount of money that in fact is generated by the residential property tax in the province of Alberta, the education portion is that sore point, of course, and we remember the $650 million that was generated in and around the '95-96 budget area. It will be going up to some $775 million in the year 2002. That's an increase of some 19 percent over that six- or seven-year period.

On the face of it, it would not sound to be a great deal, but recognize that that is coming out of the hide, if you will, of that beleaguered taxpayer every time that homeowner puts an addition in the way of a porch on the back or rebuilds a carport. Anytime they get a building permit to with their own hands build something, the value of their property goes up, which makes them very pleased and makes them much more proud citizens of course, but it's double-jeopardy. Now they pay more tax upon that property and in an area that has nothing, absolutely nothing, to do with the services that that property attracts; i.e., education, recreation, social services.

I suppose one could say that land use management would be related. Emergency services certainly would be. Infrastructure elements such as the roadworks, the underground sewers, all of that lot would be related. A property owner can understand that, can understand how an addition to their property could in fact trigger more tax – that's not so difficult to understand – but in an area where tax would be likely to be attracted, not in some totally, completely unrelated area.

There was a time not long ago that the province actually forgave the educational portion of the tax to senior citizens on the basis that they were no longer using the service. Well, that was some recognition that these services were paid from the property tax when in fact they were not in any way related. This government dropped that provision in the early '90s. Quite frankly, I think it did nothing but terrible things to the senior population. It moved a lot of them out their homes because one of their fixed costs was of course tax, and it added burden onto another area of provincial expenditure now, which is long-term care and the like. That's the extent of changes in taxation policy. This government does not pay a great deal of attention or at least does not appear to pay a great deal of attention when these bold strokes do occur, incidentally with very, very little debate in the Legislature.

There are of course a number of studies, and I think that by my count the AUMA has fostered in my time, from about '83 to today, in the order of seven studies that would say: look, provincial government; share a little of the economic largesse with us, and we will be respectful of that and will do the best we can to expend funds as they should be expended. I believe that at virtually every AUMA annual meeting the resolutions come forward, and there are at least three and sometimes as many as 17 elements of taxation that deal with provincial/municipal taxation and the sharing of what is sometimes gas tax, sometimes income, sometimes any number of things.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I see that you've indicated that the time has expired for this portion. I shall take my seat. Thank you, sir.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are you ready for the question?

MR. WHITE: No, sir. I believed that you were indicating that the time ran out. At least the table officers indicated that the time was expired.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you. The chair was asleep.

We have to interrupt your speaking because the time consideration for this item of business has expired. It was just that the cries of "question" triggered the wrong response.

Long-term and Home Care

507. Ms Leibovici moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to further increase the number of beds and improve standards for long-term care facilities and home care services with regard to staffing ratios and levels of service to adequate levels and ensure that regional health authority boundaries do not become barriers to placement.

[Debate adjourned April 11: Mrs. Soetaert speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have a few minutes left on this very important motion, just three short minutes on this very important motion. It is a motion expressing concerns and the need to act upon the lack of long-term care beds for people who need long-term care placement and on the issue of accessibility across boundaries in regional health authorities. I know that members have said, "Oh, we addressed this in the Broda report," but that's just not so. There are still issues of not being able to access a long-term care bed in a regional health authority that you do not live in. The reality of our world is that people like to be near family in their last stages of life, so if they're sent far away – yes, they need care, but they also need family near – that makes it very, very difficult, I would say, for everyone involved.

This motion virtually states that the number of beds is inadequate. We know that. I'm tired of reports that say that we have to address it and then we don't. I would urge all members to support this motion. It is calling for some action.

Home care services. Wouldn't we be smart, you know, if instead of investing in all kinds of private opportunities, we would properly manage home care and promote that? We would save money and be far more efficient and serve our constituents' needs far more than they are now. Certainly we have wonderful people working in those areas. All we need to do is ask them for input, and they could tell us. They could tell us how to make it better.

It also expressed concern about "staffing ratios and levels of service to adequate levels." Often we're concerned about de-skilling, and we certainly have to be cautious of that in these situations so that these people are well cared for.

Of course, the one that always concerns me the most – and people here have heard it often – is the ability to access care in a different health authority. If we're doing this with physiotherapy and we're doing this with long-term care, how soon will it be before we're doing it with acute care? I think we should all be concerned, especially those of us who don't live in the big centres of Edmonton, Calgary, and Red Deer. Those of us who have constituents who are just outside a boundary had better be concerned about that. I know they've heard the same heartaches and have had the same calls about families unable to access long-term care beds close to them.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I urge all members to support the motion.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Apparently the 55 minutes allowed for a private member's motion have elapsed. That's what the timing was, not that the hon. member had but three minutes to speak. While that was true, it was that the whole debate, the 55 minutes, was finished.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:35 p.m.]

Cell Phone Use while Driving

508. Mr. Trynchy moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to examine the results of the study undertaken by the provincial auto insurance Crown corporation of Quebec, Societe d'Assurance Automobile du Quebec, SAAQ, on the dangers of handheld cellular telephone use by drivers of motor vehicles and then consult with Albertans on whether and what restrictions should be imposed on the use of handheld cell phones by operators of motor vehicles while driving.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce Motion 508 this afternoon. As a cell phone user myself, I must say that I find them to be a very useful tool in allowing me to stay in contact with my job here as MLA, with the business world, with family, and with other people.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The proliferation of the cell phone since its introduction in 1983 and its usefulness have caused me and many Albertans to see this device as essential in our everyday lives. The cellular phone allows a new freedom to Albertans, the ability to be mobile and still able to reach and be reached by family and work. This ability to communicate underlies this communication revolution that our global society is currently engaged in. This device has proven to me and many Albertans its usefulness. It allows Albertans to be more efficient and productive with their time and dramatically cuts down on emergency response time to accidents. But we have heard some concerns. In 1996 the cellular phone had penetrated 20.8 percent of households in the province of Alberta and 26 percent of households in Canada by 1998.

Mr. Speaker, in my travels through my constituency and the province I have heard a great deal of concern regarding the safe use of handheld cellular phones by drivers. The use of such a device could be a threat to traffic safety and may be causing accidents on Alberta highways. The reason I brought this forward is that when I received my cellular phone, I looked at the instructions in the pamphlet, and something struck me as quite important. I want to read into the record just part of what was in there. It said:

Check the laws and regulations on the use of wireless telephones in the areas where you drive. Always obey them. Observe the following guidelines when using your phone while driving.

- Give full attention to driving – driving safely is your first responsibility.
- Use hands-free phone operation, if available.
- Pull off the road and park before making or answering a call if driving.

That is quite a message from those people who provide the cell phones.

Many of my colleagues have expressed the same concerns, and also we've heard it from the police sector. That's why I'm introducing this motion. It is a responsibility of this Assembly to address issues that concern Albertans and to protect the motoring public. The purpose of this motion is not to ban cellular phone use. It's not worded that way, and it's certainly not my intention. It's my intention to ensure that constituents and Albertans have a say in what, if any, restrictions should be initiated on drivers using handheld cell phones while driving and to base those decisions on accurate and viable scientific results, results that only a comprehensive study of the risks and dangers of handheld cellular phones used by drivers can establish.

Mr. Speaker, currently all Canadian jurisdictions by virtue of their membership in the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators are awaiting the results of the Quebec study referred to in this motion before considering the restriction of use of handheld cell phones. Lawmakers in many countries and provinces are waiting for full direct evidence that indicates that the use of cellular telephones in cars contributes to roadway collisions. Despite the lack of conclusive evidence, laws against using handheld cellular phones while driving have been put in place in Brazil, Israel, Japan, China, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and two Australian states and have been debated in many jurisdictions. Even in New York City a limitation of cell phone use applies to city taxicab drivers.

Advocates can cite both simulations and real driving experiments showing that a telephone conversation involving mental tasks slowed reaction times by half a second or more. Placing a call was found to be more distracting than turning on the car radio or engaging in a conversation, and it makes steering more imprecise in city traffic, especially by users of handheld phones.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that handheld cellular telephones cause a distraction to drivers. Although there is no direct evidence to prove that distractions cause vehicle accidents, it is important to note that 99 percent of total accidents involve driver error and distraction that can cause a driver to err.

Overall, the number of reportable collisions in Alberta has been increasing in recent years. Reportable collisions for a thousand drivers exceed the old Alberta transportation and utilities target rate by 2.5 percent, for a total of 44.7 collisions per 1,000 drivers in 1997. Moreover, Alberta has the highest rate of injuries, 84 per 10,000 motorists, and the second highest rate of fatalities, 1.6 per 10,000 motorists in Canada. In 1998 the overall number of collisions increased by 6.8 percent to 98,601, while injury collisions increased by 4.3 percent to 24,935. Fatal crashes increased by . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. Hon. members are reminded that this is Assembly and not committee.

Hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, sorry to have interrupted you because two members forgot where they were.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you. As I mentioned, the overall number of collisions increased by 6.8 percent to 98,601, while injury collisions increased by 4.3 percent to 24,935, and fatal crashes increased by one death to 429. Over the last five years the number of collisions were the lowest in 1994 and the highest in 1998. Mr. Speaker, it's yet to be ruled that cellular phones used by drivers account for at least some of the increase in collisions.

The Department of Infrastructure recently conducted a survey called Rules of the Road. In that study respondents were asked if they felt regulations should be put in place to address distractions that take a driver's full attention away from the care and control of a vehicle. Mr. Speaker, more than 70 percent of the respondents and stakeholders agreed that restrictions should be in place. Of the general public 73.1 percent felt some restrictions should be in place.

The most highly publicized study on this issue between cell phone use and accidents was printed in 1997 in The New England Journal of Medicine. The study was conducted in Toronto and polled 699 drivers who owned cell phones and were involved in motor vehicle accidents. The researchers then compared accident reports against phone company records to determine whether the driver was actually on the phone at the time of an accident. The authors concluded that the use of a handheld cellular phone while driving actually quadrupled the risk of collision.

Quantifying the risk of using a cell phone while driving was the subject of an exhaustive 1998 report from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration in the United States. The study, an investigation of the safety implications of wireless communications in vehicles, drew on industry surveys, state highway agencies, its own fatal analysis reporting system, and other evidence. The study concluded that the use of cell phones while driving does increase the dangers of a crash. While stopping short of indicating a natural increased risk level, because that data to quantify the risk does not yet exist, the study nevertheless made some interesting discoveries.

Mr. Speaker, they found that it was not just the actual handling of the phone that was dangerous but the mere act of having the conversation that increased the risk of an accident. The study also indicated that the overwhelming majority of handheld cell phone users were in the striking vehicle. Finally, the most prevalent factor in crashes attributable to cellular phone use was driver inattention. Although these studies indicate safety concerns of cell phone use by drivers, none have claimed to be comprehensive enough to justify legislation on the matter. Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 is a proactive measure that may decrease the 17,345 casualty collisions on Alberta roads, many of which are caused by driver distraction or inattention.

The idea of banning the use of cellular phones while driving is getting a lot of attention. Bills have been introduced in Arizona, Colorado, Florida, New York, and throughout the States, but so far none have been passed into law. Currently the only jurisdiction in North America to pass an ordinance is a small town of 11,000 people, Brooklyn, Ohio. Except for emergencies Brooklyn forbids drivers from using handheld cell phones while the car is in motion.

It does not forbid the use of handheld phones or talking on these phones while the car is parked. Mr. Speaker, this ordinance took effect in March of 1999, and by the end of August of 1999, a short time later, 150 warnings had been issued. It is interesting to note that this municipality was also the first North American jurisdiction to institute mandatory seat belt legislation back in 1966.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage debate on this motion because Albertans have asked for it, but I also want to ensure that Albertans are consulted before any legislation is put in place and that there is conclusive evidence of the dangers of handheld cellular phones while driving. Let's review the study. Let's find out what the results are and find a way to educate the motoring public for the safety of our Alberta highways.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, may we have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really honoured today to introduce to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly a very bright young woman who is the provincial vice-president of the Metis Nation of Alberta, the first woman ever elected as the provincial vice-president. She's doing some really absolutely wonderful things with the MNA, and I know that she's very proud of what she's been able to accomplish to date and continues to do so. She's standing in the members' gallery. Her name is Ms Brenda Bylan-Calliou, and she hails originally from Buffalo Lake but now lives in Edmonton. I'd ask that the Assembly give her a warm welcome, please.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I looked at this motion and thought: I know I'm the transportation critic and I know that it's dangerous to be driving while you're on the phone, yet so many of us in here do it. It's kind of hard to really speak on one side about safety and no cell phones and on the other side be doing it. So here I am, doing both.

Of course, if we're going to look at a study – and as I understand it, it's part of a consultation process right now within the department under the regulations of the Traffic Safety Act. Now, I could be wrong on that, and maybe the minister will clarify that later. Who knows? My understanding of that is that Albertans are being consulted right now in our own province. However, I see no harm in looking at a study that's been undertaken in Quebec. If they've done a lot of research on it and it can give us some information, of course we should accept that.

The reality is that it is dangerous to drive while on the phone. Some people shift gears while they're doing that too. They're shifting and clutching the phone – and if this was a visual, I think people in TV land would appreciate it – putting on lipstick and shaving at the same time, I heard the Minister of Transportation say at a conference. I hope he wasn't referring to women on that. [interjection] "Putting on mascara too," says the minister across the way.

Seriously, I do believe I read somewhere that Alberta has one of the highest use of cell phones in the country. Anything to do with cell phones is certainly going to affect a great many people. I have to say that I do worry when I see somebody making a lefthand turn while they're talking on the phone during rush hour, probably telling somebody to pick up milk and bread on their way home. That's worrisome. That's very dangerous.

On the other hand, I know that in instances of calling 911 or calling the police on dangerous drivers and drunken drivers, then the reality of using a telephone in your car is essential. Plus there are many of us who spend many, many hours in our vehicle and sometimes that's the only way to contact our offices and make business connections, et cetera. Maybe that's not an excuse, but I'm wondering in this report if hand held is different from hands free, if the results on the safety of hand held is different from hands free. Some say there is no difference. I would like to think there is. I'm going to be interested to see the results of that.

I know most of us probably have hands-free phones in our cars, and now there's about a $40 attachment that you can just wear as ear phones and connect to your cell phone to be used in the car. I'm sure as we drive along and people look at the neighbouring car and see you talking to yourself, they may wonder who you are talking to, or maybe you're just singing along with something. I think we do have to address the issue of safely driving in this province in many aspects.

We have one of the highest accident rates in the country, as well. Cell phones are most likely attached to that. There are laws in different parts of the world about using handheld phones while driving. It's interesting though. There are studies on fatigue while driving, and I've got to say that sometimes driving home late from the Legislature – I'm probably one of the few people who drives a bit of a distance home every night. There are probably a couple of others in the Assembly that can commute, but they don't live within the city. Actually, I will phone someone at home who I know will be awake just to touch base and kind of wake up again. Now, that's not safe driving, but it's the reality of cell phones in some ways being an assistance.

So I of course support this motion. We do already have the capability within the law, if we are driving dangerously, for policemen to enforce dangerous driving. I believe that's under the highway Traffic Safety Act as well.

I look forward to the results of this. I realize that before any legislation on cell phones takes place, it's going to be a while and we're going to have the people in Alberta aware of the dangers of it. With the reality of a $30 piece of equipment that you can plug into a cell phone, maybe that's the answer. I don't know. Many people who do not have cell phones have phoned me and complained about, you know, the dangers. Being on the phone and driving is very serious. I don't allow my children – isn't that funny? – to use their dad's cell phone while they're driving. They can take it with them, but they'd better not use it while they're driving. Once again, it's hard to preach if you don't practise. However, mine is hands free, but it still is not without a concern for safety, and I think people recognize that.

I think this will be an interesting study to look at. I look forward also to the consultation progress and process of our own government and what they're doing in the Department of Infrastructure. I don't know the answer to the whole cell phone issue. I wish I did. I think the reality of our world is that we do have cell phones available to us in most parts of this province, though I have to say that some areas need more towers, because the reception isn't good all over the province.

The reality of the advantages of being able to use a cell phone - and I often think: you know, we have home care workers in isolated parts of this province. It's a safety feature for them. It's the availability to phone the office and say: "I'm going into this home. I know that some things have not always been safe there, and I want you to know I'm going in. I will be checking in with you in another 20 minutes or half an hour. If I don't, would you please send someone?" It's a safety feature for many health care workers. We should be looking at better reception all over this province, because there are parts of the province where the reception isn't that good.

I think there is a balance to be found here. Maybe the balance is in that they are a hands-free phone when you are speaking in the car. I don't know if that's the answer. The reality is that we're in that age when phones are available everywhere and people have them in their vehicle. They should pull over when it's a dangerous situation or they shouldn't be using it or they should have at least hands free.

I've been all over the map here, but I want to say that I have concerns about people using handheld phones in the car while they are driving. I do think we have to address that. I've seen instances where really it's a good thing somebody is defensive driving because other people using those phones are not. So I understand the concern.

I look forward to the report. I also know the reality of our world is that we do have phones in the car, so maybe we will need some guidelines and restrictions within that. I look forward to the government examining the results of the study. How could I not support that? It'll be interesting when we see if we are going to have legislation or regulation regarding that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak in favour of Motion 508, proposed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. It is a motion urging the government to examine the results of the study undertaken by the . . . Societe d' Assurance Automobile du Quebec . . . on the dangers of handheld cellular telephone use by drivers of motor vehicles and then consult with Albertans on whether and what restrictions should be imposed.

Mr. Speaker, the cellular phone has become part of the everyday life of many Albertans. Mobile phones are an enormous asset to people in all sorts of ways. They help us at work, they help us stay in touch with our families, and they are of great benefit in emergency situations. In fact, since the proliferation of cellular phones the response time for emergency vehicles has been significantly reduced, no doubt saving lives. Over 7 million cellular phone calls a day are placed in Canada.

While cellular phones are a great asset to many Albertans, they may not be an asset to a driver seeking to properly control a vehicle. Mr. Speaker, we all know that the use of cellular phones by drivers of automobiles is becoming a concern for many Albertans. As the use of cellular phones grows, so does the potential danger on Alberta highways. I must say that I drive quite frequently in this province, and the evidence of my own eyes identifies the need to address this issue.

We have all seen that guy in the car swerving through the traffic with a phone glued to his ear. The driver endangers himself and the lives of other drivers and pedestrians on the road because his phone call is so important. That image is a frightening one, indeed, and the main reason why this motion has been brought before this House.

Cellular phone use by drivers has been banned in many jurisdictions throughout the world. From Victoria, Australia, to Brooklyn, Ohio, legislatures and local governments have decided that driving and talking on the phone shouldn't be done at the same time. New York City taxi drivers can't use phones and drive, and in England, Singapore, and Brazil drivers must use hands-free devices while talking on the phone.

The question is, Mr. Speaker: does outlawing cellular phones while driving make sense? It seems like a no-brainer here. Surely the cellular phones could be banned if they are the cause of many fatal accidents in Alberta. But are they? We cannot reach a conclusive answer to this until we have more evidence to support this claim.

Mr. Speaker, the reason this motion is worded as it is to bring much needed information into the debate on the safety of cellular phones and to initiate consultation with people affected by any law that would be put forward. Albertans have to have their say. Furthermore, any decision to ban the use of cellular telephones by drivers in the province of Alberta should be based on scientific evidence. That evidence will be available with the conclusion of the Quebec study.

All Canadian jurisdictions, by virtue of their membership in the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators, are obligated to the council. This is to ensure some level of uniformity in driving regulations across all provinces in Canada. In addressing the issues of cellular phones, the council decided that the evidence that was available on the issue did not apply well to Canada and left some gaps and questions unanswered. That is the reason the provincial auto insurance Crown corporation of Quebec was commissioned to conduct a study. It was Quebec's turn to conduct a study, and all Canadian jurisdictions are awaiting the results before considering restricting the use of cellular phones.

Mr. Speaker, in order to facilitate discussion on the issue, the Department of Infrastructure recently conducted a survey called Rules of the Road, a consultation that asks some serious questions about traffic safety issues. In that study respondents were asked if they felt that regulations should be put in place to address distractions that take a driver's full attention away from the care and control of an automobile (e.g. reading, eating, family pets, cellular telephones.)

More than 70 percent of respondents and stakeholders agreed that restrictions should be put in place. Of the general public 73 percent felt some restriction should be put in place.

These figures are important in this debate because before we discuss banning phone use, we must address other distractions that drivers face. There are clearly many activities that drivers participate in behind the wheel that could cause distraction. We must assess the relative level of distraction. If we ban the use of cellular phones, should we also ban the whole list of other actions? Would it be necessary to ban drivers from tuning the radio, drinking coffee, eating a sandwich, or conversing with passengers in the car?

Mr. Speaker, that is why, first of all, we need to establish what sort of danger a cellular phone represents relative to other distractions that drivers face, a distinction the Quebec study should provide. Studies and polls have been conducted in other jurisdictions, but they have been vulnerable to scientific criticism. Although these studies have been highly questioned, I would like to discuss the results, because they provide evidence as to why more study is needed on the issues.

The most publicized study appeared in The New England Journal of Medicine in 1997. It indicated that drivers whose attention is distracted while talking on a cellular phone are four times more prone to having an accident. The University of Toronto study discovered that younger drivers are more prone to problems than older drivers. The study also concluded that talking on the cellular phone while driving was at least as dangerous as driving while at the threshold of legal intoxication.

This study was highly criticized within the medical and statistical communities. The final figure was seen to be overexaggerated because the sample group only included vehicles that had cellular telephones and did not include nonusers of cellular phones. The study also faulted cellular phone use if the phones had been used up to 10 minutes before an accident occurred. Even the author of the study admitted that the media was making erroneous claims from the results. They also indicated that the study only examined the association of accidents and cellular phone use and did not examine the cause and effect relationship. Therefore it cannot indicate if drivers using cellular phones were at fault in a collision.

Mr. Speaker, multitasking has become a familiar buzzword in the last few years. When we work on our computers, we can accomplish one task while the computer does many tasks. In the workplace people who can manage multiple tasks without confusion are often the most efficient employees or businesspeople. However, the act of driving is a task that should require the full attention of the driver. With modern technology people have been trying to find ways to make that time behind the wheel more productive and entertaining. It seems that this modern and technically advanced society does not see driving as a task requiring concentration but as an inconvenient time spent getting from A to B, time that could be made more productive.

Indeed, for some people a car is a perfect place to apply lipstick, to do crosswords, to guzzle coffee while keeping one eye on the road and one hand on the wheel. These days it is also a good spot to plug in the laptop, the fax machine, the cellular telephone. If the market demands it, the producer will build it. Many cars nowadays come with not only one power outlet but three so that we can plug in all our gadgets and gizmos. In fact, in Japan, where traffic jams are a national pastime, a world-renowned car manufacturer offers a new option, an in-car karaoke machine. We can do some singing. Mr. Speaker, multitasking can make commuting more effective or fun, but it also makes driving more dangerous.

In a district of Japan a law prohibiting the use of cellular phones while driving a car has local police claiming a 75 percent reduction in the number of traffic accidents. In the month of November of 1999 62 accidents were caused by drivers using mobile phones, compared to 223 the previous November. Researchers in Japan found that overall the use of mobile phones while driving was responsible for 27 percent of all car accidents last year in Japan, resulting in 33 deaths and 3,473 injuries. [interjection] But in Japan they drive on the left-hand side.

In Taiwan a survey found that 7 percent of respondents openly admitted to having been involved in car accidents because they were talking on a mobile phone while driving. Researchers in the U.K. and Switzerland also found that drivers were distracted and reacted poorly to emergencies and drove slower when talking on mobile phones. Admittedly, driving the streets of Tokyo and the U.K. would be a far cry from driving on an open part of our highway 2. That is why it is important to have a Canadian study on the table before the discussion of regulation begins. These figures and studies cannot be discounted, though they certainly point to the existence of an astonishing problem that we must address.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that any law that comes about due to this motion would largely be a preventive measure. After all, we have seen the effect of seat belt legislation. Sure, it was controversial at the time, but I doubt that now many of us would question the impact of driver safety with safety belts. Lives were saved, and that occurred simply because wearing seat belts became part of the law of the land. Albertans are law-abiding people, and when the measure became law, that had a significant effect.

When Brooklyn, Ohio, was the first jurisdiction in North America to pass a seat belt law, many people laughed at them. Today seat belts have proven to be lifesavers and are the law of our land too. Today Brooklyn is the first municipality in North America to fine people who drive and use their cellular phones at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, our government is not in the business of restricting personal freedom. However, sometimes government officials must act responsibly and with courage in the wake of opposition and intervene for the greater good. If it becomes a specific offence to use a handheld mobile telephone while driving, I believe few people will wish to be seen as pariahs on the road, prepared to use a mobile phone while everyone else is obeying the law.

Already a vast majority of people are well aware of the common sense of not using a mobile phone while driving one-handed on Alberta's busy roads. Sadly, there are deaths which are directly connected to the use of mobile phones while driving. Experts are quite sure that this has been a significant contributory cause of many other deaths and accidents that have resulted in injuries.

We have heard from our constituents that cellular phones are a danger on our road, and now there is a motion before the House that allows us the opportunity to look into the matter. I'm sure that we all recognize that too, although we have fewer causes for anxiety. All of us experience tension when driving a car in today's road conditions. We are all concerned when people take liberty with our road space or endanger us in any way. We all know the importance of trying to keep calm while driving. What greater affront is there to one's sense of safety on the road than to see people making mistakes on the road because they are using a handheld mobile phone while driving?

Mr. Speaker, around the world many jurisdictions have voted to simply ban handheld cellular phones, but similar legislation in the U.S.A. has been voted down. I feel that given the scientific evidence available, a move to ban cellular phone use behind the wheel would be premature in the province of Alberta. A cellular phone in your automobile can be an effective and productive tool and an invaluable link to the outside world. It is also an important safety aid to drivers. We must stress to Albertans that they need to be used safely.

Mr. Speaker, the conclusion in the Toronto study gives us more questions than answers.

Also at issue is the level of congestion on Alberta highways as opposed to other jurisdictions. Banning the cellular phone in Tokyo makes more sense, given the level of congestion on the streets and freeways. Driving leisurely down an open stretch of an Alberta highway and using a handheld cellular phone is surely less of a threat than driving down Deerfoot Trail in rush hour and talking on the phone at the same time. Different jurisdictions require different laws. What is good in the U.K. or in New York, for that matter, may not have the same implication here.

Throughout the process we set out in this motion a conclusive snapshot of what issues should come about. The Quebec study should clarify some of the questions that previous studies have brought about and have been ineffective in answering. Mr. Speaker, from this study we should be able to tell without a shadow of a doubt what sort of risk is involved.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Bill Pr. 1
Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Province of Alberta Repeal Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Province of Alberta Repeal Act.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 2
William Roper Hull Child and Family Services Amendment Act, 2000

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, it's with pleasure that I move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, William Roper Hull Child and Family Services Amendment Act, 2000.

I'd like to make a couple of brief comments about what this is about. It changes the name of the act to Hull child and family services act. The corporation which is established by the act has a corresponding name change to Hull child and family services. The objects of that corporation are expanded so that it promotes the emotional and psychological well-being of not only children and their families but also adults through the provision of educational, preventative, and treatment services. There are some corresponding amendments with respect to the powers of the corporation reflecting the expansion of the scope to adults.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 4
Calgary Municipal Heritage Properties
Authority Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill Pr. 4, the Calgary Municipal Heritage Properties Authority Amendment Act, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, this bill creates a new entity by the merger of two existing historical committees which act on behalf of the citizens of the city of Calgary in the preservation of historic sites. The Calgary Municipal Heritage Properties Authority and the Calgary Heritage Advisory Board will be joined under the new title of the Calgary heritage authority.

I would urge all members to vote for Bill Pr. 4. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 5
Calgary Foundation Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill Pr. 5, the Calgary Foundation Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill responds to the growing aspects of the Calgary Foundation and the role it has had in our community. I am pleased to be its sponsor.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: This afternoon the committee has under consideration amendment A1, section A and the subamendment to that amendment.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is the first opportunity I've had to speak to this subamendment. I think what this subamendment is about is not allowing overnight stays, which is one of the largest concerns I have had with people calling and contacting my office, because virtually once you allow overnight stays, you are allowing private hospitals. The people of Alberta are smart. They've connected those two. No matter what you call it, it's a private hospital, and they don't want that.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Chairman, I was at a DARE grad at Muriel Martin school in my riding last Thursday, and the constable and the class told me that I would be welcome to use their eight ways of saying no to Bill 11. It was quite well received by all the people in the gymnasium, and I said that I would share with the Assembly the eight ways to say no to Bill 11, indeed supporting this subamendment that we have put in.

One of the ways is to just say: no, thanks. I think several people have said, "No, thanks" to Bill 11, thousands and thousands of people. So here we are putting in subamendments to try to make it palatable, but it certainly isn't.

The second way was giving a reason or an excuse. Well, I think the reason is that we know public health care serves us better. It's more efficient. It's cost-efficient. Going private will not reduce waiting lists, and I think we have to question who benefits, because it certainly looks like private health care providers are the only ones that will benefit by this and certainly not the general public.

The third way of saying no was repeated refusal or keep saying no, like a broken record. No. Just keep saying no to Bill 11. Certainly people have said no to Bill 11 a thousand times over, so just maybe the government will catch this.

The fourth way was walking away. You know what? That would give the government an opportunity to say no to this bill. They could walk away from it. They could table it if they don't like this subamendment. If they don't like the pressure they're getting from the outside, they should listen and walk away from this bill. Leave it on the Order Paper or dump it or kill the bill, as the chants are now out and about in Alberta.

The fifth way is changing the subject. Well, certainly we could change the subject and say: put that money that you're putting into private health care into public health care; open the beds that are available in public hospitals all over rather than supporting private industry that will allow overnight stays. So our subamendment would stop the overnight stays.

Avoiding the situation. Well, I don't know how we would avoid discussing Bill 11 unless, of course, it was dropped from the Order Paper, and that would be a good suggestion on my behalf. You know, the longer we spend on these amendments, the more time it gives the people of Alberta to have a real look at this and say: no, we don't want it.

Another way of saying no to Bill 11 is the cold shoulder. Now, I'm wondering how many MLAs have received the cold shoulder from constituents on Bill 11. If they're getting the cold shoulder, maybe they just haven't picked up that that is another way of saying no to Bill 11.

The very last and most powerful way of saying no – and any of you who have been to DARE grads I know have heard this – is strength in numbers, and I think that's been indicated across this province time and time again, a huge rally in Calgary, a huge rally in Edmonton. I know that the Member for Lethbridge-East had three town hall meetings, virtually hundreds of people showing up, expressing concerns about Bill 11 and wanting more information. They're opposed to it. They are saying no.

Petitions. With all the combined petitions in this Assembly I bet it's close to 90,000 people who have said no. They don't want this bill.

I think it was part of Alberta's history last night that the Legislature was stormed by people who said no to this bill. In fact, I read in a book about the history of natural gas in Alberta that the only time the Legislature was stormed – people were in the Legislature and on the stairs. It was farmers in the late '30s, possibly. It would be interesting to see when that has happened before, maybe only once in the history of Alberta. I have to have the time to do a little homework on that, but that would be most interesting and most telling about the number of people saying no to this bill.

This strength in numbers is, I think, a very powerful, powerful way of saying no. I think everybody should pay attention to how many people are saying no to Bill 11. Certainly DARE graduates and their parents across this province are saying no. "Use our eight ways of saying no in the Legislature, please, Colleen. Go tell them no from us." I have done that. I will send this out to Muriel Martin school and thank them for their help and their participation in democracy and on the issues of Bill 11.

Specifically to this subamendment, Mr. Chairman. People have said: why do they want overnight stays? There are private clinics right now that do some surgeries, which, by the way, have not been proven to be more efficient. Instead of promoting that, I would think government members would be questioning it and certainly wondering what's going on and where our tax dollars are going.

It's interesting people will say fiscal Conservative with pride, but I would question that pride. The fiscal Conservatives I have seen have run a horrendous debt for this province, cut and slash programs without a plan, and now we're putting in a Bill that will give money to private industry rather than back in the pockets of the very taxpayers. Fiscal Conservative are certainly not words of pride that I can see anybody being proud of.

These overnight stays are where dangerous situations can occur. I think the Member for Edmonton-Manning today expressed that in his question very well. When you don't have the medical backup for an operation that requires an overnight stay, I think in this province we're going to start seeing headlines that say: tragedy occurs at a clinic because of lack of medical backup. In fact, I think we read about that the other day in the paper. I don't mean to exploit anyone who's going through a tragedy. It's a very difficult time for their family, but the reality is that we have to be aware that we are putting citizens at risk if we are going to allow surgeries that are that complicated that they require an overnight stay, yet the medical backup is not there at that facility.

All kinds of things can go wrong in surgery. People can have an allergic reaction to the medications or to the anesthetics. Often people don't realize how very serious – you go in thinking it's a simple operation, and it is not. I think I gave the example in here the other day of tonsils. People think that's a quick and easy surgery. But, actually, it has quite a high risk factor. You know, that was one of the concerns expressed to me. If we end up putting all the tonsillectomies in private clinics, then what about those cases where it is not just a simple tonsillectomy? What about the difficult ones where there are complications or the patient is an older patient, not just a child? Those clinics won't have the backup for that kind of operation. Will these still be available in the public sector? You've got to start wondering, as we totally go to private industry, what it is going to do to our public sector.

I am very concerned. I am hoping that members of this Assembly will support this subamendment. Maybe, in fact, it would change the bill so much to their liking. Certainly I know that this is one of the most contentious things in this bill. I know it from calls to my constituency office. I know it from doctors who've talked to me about the realities of the abilities of these clinics to take overnight patients and what that means. So I'm hoping that everyone here will support this subamendment.

MR. DICKSON: I'm persuaded.

MRS. SOETAERT: I've persuaded the Member for Calgary-Buffalo – and that makes me happy, because he's a very intelligent man – and there are more. There are more and more MLAs, I think, across the way who are going to be convinced. Certainly their constituents are calling them, because they're calling me. They are calling me concerned about this bill and saying, "What can you do to not put it through?" They've asked me twice to challenge the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. They say: "Come on. Make him speak about it in public if he's so determined." He said: no; I won't debate you in public. Well, I challenge him again. He learned how to say no but, of course, to the wrong things.

I had calls from Stony Plain as well concerning this bill and the realities of overnight stays being one of the major concerns they have. That's why this subamendment might actually help some of the Conservative MLAs. Maybe they'd say, "I support it", and they're not going to have overnight stays anymore. Maybe that would help them, because certainly they must be getting that kind of call.

We're way over 800 contacts to our office right now: e-mails, letters, faxes. My constituency office can't even answer them in a timely manner, which I like to do, but we can't. There's only one person working in my office, and believe me, she's a gift to me and my family for the workload she carries. People are aware of that. I've put it in the columns in the local paper about the reality of the phone calls. Of those over 800 – I think we were at 820-some today – 58 have been in support of the bill and the rest are opposed. One of their main concerns is: once you stay overnight, that's a private hospital, and here we are losing something very, very dear to us in this province.

You know, one thing someone told me: "Do you know what? This government is trying to push its values on me". They resent that. That's the opposite way of the way it should be acting. A government should be reflecting the values of the community of people they represent. The values of the people in this province are to totally protect public health care and to not put tax dollars into private operators' pockets. Absolutely. They've said that time and time again. They said it about Bovar and MagCan and NovAtel and Gainers and West Edmonton Mall, and here we are. We'll have scandal after scandal in a few years about private operators that have got all kinds of taxpayers' dollars in their pockets.

I see my rural counterparts out there, Lac La Biche-St. Paul and Redwater and Whitecourt-St. Anne, just chuckling a bit. At a mutually agreed upon time I'll gladly come out to your constituencies and debate this. If you think your constituents are this supportive of it, I can take the heat out there. But I'll bet you that you couldn't get 20 people to come and support you on this out there.

So on the subamendment, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: It's not necessary for other members to enter into the debate. You know that the tradition of the Assembly and of the committee is that we only have one person speaking at a time. So hon. members who wish to enter into it may do so in their turn, but right now it's Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think I've pretty well expressed some of my concerns about this subamendment. I realize other people want to speak to it.

But just to recap. It's funny. The wise words out of the mouths of our children gave me eight ways to say no to Bill 11. Say no, thanks; give a reason or excuse; repeated refusal, keep saying no; walk away; change the subject; avoid the situation; cold shoulder; and strength in numbers. Good advice from wise, wise students across this province. They have said no to Bill 11. A gymnasium full of parents supported that statement when these young students and their constable gave me permission to use eight ways to say no to Bill 11.

This subamendment is a start in making this bill a bit more palatable, but to be honest, the best thing we could do to this bill is give it a decent burial.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

4:50

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm standing this afternoon to speak to the subamendment to government amendment A1. I find it interesting that we're not hearing anything new on this particular item from the government. As I spoke in moving to disagree with Bill 11, I stated that it's too vague and that it lacks hard facts. Now that we read amendment A1, we still lack the commitment to stop surgical suites. This is one of the most contentious items of this whole item.

Our subamendment to this, by adding "insured," seems to add some squeamishness to this government on this particular item. Albertans are still trying to comprehend this bill. It is not what the bill says; it's what it doesn't say. By that one slip of the word right there, by not adding "insured," it is doing nothing to make them feel any better.

You know, if we want a true amendment put forward, we have to commit to certain items, and I really believe that the surgical facilities referred to in this bill are in reality private hospitals. The bill claims to ban private hospitals, but on closer examination it fails in this promise. For example, the bill could not stop a person from providing hospital services as long as the facility were not a full-service hospital. If emergency services were not provided, for example, the institution would no longer fall within the definition of a private hospital.

Mr. Chairman, in my questions today I pointed out – and I pointed this out in the last few days, and I pointed this out before the dentist part of this came in – the tragic happening in this province last month. It happened in March.

I want to point out one of the principles in the case of hospitals. If there is a case for opening up hospital sectors to for-profit, overnight-stay facilities, then it must rest on the argument that such facilities can provide care more efficiently than is possible in a public hospital.

We did hear yesterday from the hon. Minister of Learning that by putting this subamendment forward, we're actually picking on rural Alberta. Well, I find that is very false. The fact is that what's happened over the last six years has been a restriction, something that should have been brought out, and we tried to bring out a number of cases of what was happening to rural Albertans when they did come in.

We see a hotel being built over by the University hospital right now. In conversations with different people that are involved in it, I said: "Oh, boy. Are there that many foreign students coming into this great province we have and going to the University of Alberta?" The answer back to me was: no; it's all the patients coming in from northern Alberta that have to be put up overnight. Well, there's something wrong with a system when that is occurring. They should not be coming in, bumped out of the system, and having to put out their own dollars to keep themselves going. They're the ones that waited on the list for a matter of months to get there. Those stories keep adding up. I don't believe there's anything in this bill or in this amendment that is going to give any safeguard to rural Alberta, and that is something that rural Alberta MLAs should be very concerned about.

The word "insured" there is something that we feel is going to bring out what was missing in it.

We also bring out the fact of a 12-hour stay. Well, we look at day surgeries that were disseminated throughout this province over the past few years and the lack of planning and the experiment: first taking major day surgeries out of major hospitals in our own cities, putting them out to what they call the community hospitals, very good hospitals but community hospitals; totally dismantling teams and sending them every which way to work. Blame it on the unions. Blame it on whatever you want. I sit in the middle and say that, you know, unions have their place, that unions have their reason for being. If we're doing everything on union breaking, there's something totally wrong.

Talking about justifications offered to Albertans for the proposal – that is, meeting the unmet needs of expanding service capacity to deal with shortages, waiting lists for care – this argument seems to be seriously incomplete. Alberta cuts to hospital spending since 1992 to 1995 were dramatic. The 1999 levels were still in the figures of 15 percent below 1992.

You know, these figures combined with the lack of dealing with the federal level, that they pull out of any necessary plans to go anywhere, all add up to the fact that we are in serious shape. Mr. Romanow, the Premier of Saskatchewan, I believe has got a good case that he's brought out in the last few days; that is: when are we going to as a complete country sit down and make sure, as we go into this new millennium, that our cost factor and everything else that actually happens in health isn't going to force bills like this coming forward? If it is the political game played, that seems to be playing out, that it's this government against Albertans in general and this government and the federal government, I don't like the game. The game isn't for the people that I represent.

Nothing in this bill ensures that the contracting out of services to private facilities will open up more beds within the public system, and this is where we really have missed it. We have those facilities. We have places we can open up. Let's enshrine that into our system without bringing amendments to a bill that actually came out before.

Hospital beds, operating theatres, and other services are already available, Mr. Chairman, to open up within the public hospitals but remain closed because of the shortage in funding of professional staff. It is fundamentally incorrect to think that the solution to the problem of scarce resources within the public system is to split the resources between two systems. Why isn't it better to take the same amount of money that this government would hand over to the private hospitals and give it to the public system, which has the capabilities to meet the needs?

If we look at what we have just in our own city of Edmonton, we have wards. My mother was in the St. Albert hospital last month. Walking out of the ward that she was in, looking down another ward, all I could say: there's another dead ward in our system that could be opened up, could be part of the system.

You know, we have the capabilities. Where's the evidence that the same amount of money to private hospitals is going to cost less in the long run or provide better incomes?

Going back to the insured surgical services, why are we promoting something that we do not – this is why I'm trying to translate the amount of dead wards we have in this province. We have the argument, the items we read, of Didsbury maybe selling off the centre core to HRG and actually having different wings going off. This is a program that actually is in place throughout the country. There are places like this in actuality, out of Quebec City, and I do believe that it probably is a system to work at. The fact is that when people in Didsbury have to start wondering where they're going to go from there – if you're worrying about rural Alberta, maybe some of the helicopter pads, like the one that's been announced in the last while at the Misericordia, could be set up so we can move our physicians out to our public hospitals in rural Alberta, when we can set up enough cases for them. I think that if the system is costing what it is today, what is it if we can't transport some of our surgical people to those and make sure that we have a team?

The government has no data to show that this will add any benefit to the health care system. Perhaps the data is available, but the government does not want to show us any information because maybe it doesn't play into this overall scheme, like the government-sponsored study that the Official Opposition tabled and have had questions on over the last while, Mr. Chairman.

You know, we read that this government admits the fact that this legislation is based on a philosophical basis. If they have data, then show us, the severely normal Albertans. I really call myself a severely normal Albertan, and I am having trouble understanding where this amendment is going. I look at our subamendment. I believe that by adding the word "insured," it is clarifying it a lot closer, tightening it up. The 12-hour stay: well, we had day surgeries. We should keep the day surgeries open. We should reopen them. We should go back and look at the teams that made up those.

It all reflects what has actually happened in our province over the last few years. Under the leadership of the Premier in 1992-93 the political spin of this province was no different, no different at all from other countries like Australia, New Zealand, and England, where cash-strapped governments were looking for ways to react to overspending. You know, when you look back on it – and we've seen charts in this province – it wasn't a case of it climbing exceedingly. It needed a plan. You had The Rainbow Report, that had to come out. It was worked on by this particular government. The fact is that someone had the brilliant idea to decimate our health care because health care was at the root of government overspending. I really believe it was a total falsehood, but it was the political spin of the day. The political spin of the day was tax cuts. In listening to what the minister said on Bill 207, it wasn't tax cuts on his part but listening to other parts.

Going back to the subamendment. You know, with the spin that dismantling the health care system would save the government money, the slow creep of privatization began, especially in Calgary. With the control of our health care, everyone would be happy. The government would save money. The small percentage of friends of this government, private operators, would make money, and the patients would be served.

Mr. Chairman, one little phrase like adding "insured surgical services" – this is the point that is very, very important. I'm not as hung up as maybe some are on the 12-hour, 72-hour, or whatever, but the 12 hours is just totally back to a day-surgery system, which I think should be opened up.

We're looking at the value of physicians in this province. Ninety-nine percent of physicians in this province really want to go about doing their work. They really want to go about going to work every day and making sure that they have enough theatre time that they can do their job. If the word is right without insulting – because I do have a lot of respect for doctors – they're eccentric. They want to go to work, and they want to get better. They want to improve their technique of operating, like the cataract operations today where you can have the foldable lens.

I'm glad that this province finally realized that the time saved with the foldable lens was very important. With the foldable lens today, some physicians that are doing it don't even do stitches. They just have a tiny, little slit. They slip it in and move on to the next case. One of the members was saying yesterday that years ago people would have to stay in for a week and be ice packed and everything. I totally agree. We have gone miles, but this bill in its entirety is not going there. What we need is government on both levels that really, really wants to drive to make our health system endure the costs of technology, endure the pharmaceutical costs.

Actually everything has happened to them over the years: a void of planning. With everything that actually has happened over the last 10 years, we have slipped behind in this particular case, but we could be the leaders in this world again by sitting down, working on the public system as it is today, thinking about what type of enhanced services we have to have, what type of insured surgical systems that are in place within the system, and working on that. Quit tinkering. Tinkering is as bad as saying you're experimenting, when we're talking about billions of taxpayers' dollars being spent per year. I really believe that we've gone beyond where we should.

I hope that we can convince this government that adding insured services to their amendment A1 is a very important one, and at this time I will sit down, Mr. Chairman, and let somebody else stand.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't know whether I'm going to have time to say everything I wanted to in the remaining time, and I know there will probably be some other colleagues that may want to say a few words before we get to 5:30, but let me try in the allotted time to make a couple of observations.

The first thing is that I've received a copy of a Bill 11 debate summary prepared by Alberta Health and Wellness, and this is on the subamendment because we've got a section here. It's produced April 17, 2000, day 8. It says ominously "total time elapsed: approx. 29 hours." It reminds me of the debt-o-meter that Laurence Decore had developed in 1993, Mr. Chairman, that clock that talked about the provincial debt that was running out of control. Anyway, I digress.

The Bill 11 debate summary I'm looking at has been prepared by Alberta Health and Wellness. Now, I take it that the purpose of this is to give some accurate information to the people of this province in terms of what's going on in the House around the most important bill that we've seen in decades. So one would assume that the Minister of Health and Wellness would be chiefly concerned with accuracy and precision in terms of dutifully reporting what in fact is going on. You know what we find in here? We have this note about the subamendment. "The Liberals proposed a subamendment that significantly changes the original."

Then they go to a quote from our colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark in explaining one of the major modifications, and in four lines they take a quote. Now, what's interesting here is that I've got the Hansard from last night, or I guess these are the Blues. This is sort of the Blues-plus, because it's organized and formatted in a way we typically see it when we get it tomorrow. My colleague spoke to the amendment for, it looks like, 15 minutes, in two columns, to make it very clear what this subamendment was all about. What has been taken is two sentences and not the whole two sentences but phrasing from them, and this is what somebody who had not been in the House last night would take from it.

In other words, "no physician shall provide a surgical service" in Alberta in an approved surgical facility "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours."

Now, that's nonsensical. That's not what amendment A1, section A says at all, Mr. Chairman. In fact, if you were to go on and read the text of the subamendment and read the explanation by my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, you would know that this skews completely the thrust of the subamendment.

So I think that the Minister of Health and Wellness does an enormous disservice to all of us in this Assembly and certainly shows a complete lack of respect for Albertans and a lack of appreciation of his key leadership role by putting out a summary that so distorts the purpose of the subamendment.

You know what's interesting is that they don't put in the text of the subamendment. As my friend here from Calgary-Glenmore with his many years of legal experience would tell you, leave out the editorial comment, put in the precise text, and everybody then can form their own opinions. But that's not what happened here. The Minister of Health and Wellness has taken a quote out of context on the subamendment. In fact, we're talking about how the subamendment has been viewed by the Minister of Health and Wellness, and the statement of it in here is just wholly misleading and wholly inaccurate. I'm not accusing the Minister of Health and Wellness of misleading the House, but I'm certainly accusing his department of misleading Albertans and misleading this House. I hope that's going to be changed.

As we go on to read this, we have a comment from the minister, one of my favourite ministers in the House, International and Intergovernmental Relations, a woman with a great deal of wisdom in this House, not just because she recognizes my old hometown of dear old Drumheller but because she's a pretty sharp minister. There aren't very many things you get past this minister. When she speaks in this House, many of us listen . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: On the subamendment.

MR. DICKSON: On the subamendment, because what I'm reflecting, Mr. Chairman, is the comment that this minister made the other night. She said:

This [subamendment] talks about stifling the ability of the College of Physicians and Surgeons to determine the appropriate setting for services to be delivered in this province.

Now, the subamendment does nothing of the kind. It's her interpretation that this would stifle the ability of the college council.

This raises a real conundrum, Mr. Chairman. I had the privilege of being the opposition health critic between about January of 1998 and about February of 1999, and that was the time when we dealt with Bill 37, version 1, and Bill 37, version 2, and what we found is how scary it was to go to a meeting of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, that governing council. Let me tell you how, in some respects, inaccessible it was to go.

Before I go there, I just want to say that I have enormous respect for the men and women who serve on the college council, and I think of people like Dr. Betty Flagler, from Calgary, in her term as president of the college council and what wonderful, wonderful leadership she provided. But I think that here, in talking about the comments on the subamendment, Mr. Chairman, the College of Physicians and Surgeons is not an ideal forum to reflect public concern, to reflect broader constitutional issues.

I went to some of those college council meetings. First, the meeting would be scheduled for two days, and I would plan on coming to Edmonton for a Thursday morning. Then, on an hour's notice, I'd get: no, this item on the agenda has been moved to Friday. Then I'd get there and find that there were only maybe 10 or 15 seats for members of the public to go and sit in, and you'd discover there's no opportunity to speak. I went one time with Harold Swanson, who's a former president of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. They may have heard I was coming and didn't want to give me the floor, but you would think they would've given a former president of that college council the opportunity to speak. He didn't have that opportunity to do it. [interjection]

Now, my friend from Calgary-Egmont wants to get into the debate, and if he signals when he's ready, I'll sit down so that he can speak, but I want to finish my train of thought first. [interjection] Colleague from Calgary-Glenmore, I have a lot of trouble staying on task, so I'm afraid if I surrender the floor to you now, I may lose the train of this thought, and I'm working so darn hard to stay on task and on relevance.

What I'm saying, Mr. Chairman, is simply this. The College of Physicians and Surgeons is a respected, competent organization, and we should be proud of the work they have done. We should be proud of the work the council has done, but it is no appropriate vehicle to be deciding issues of public policy. They certainly bring to bear an expertise in the area of the practice of medicine, but what we have been doing with them and what this government was attempting to do with the college in the spring and fall of 1998 was effectively abdicate to that college council a policy-making role that people on the college council told me personally they felt uncomfortable with.

Well, what we're talking about is the very essence, because if you look at the second part of the subamendment, that deals with the Medical Profession Act and the bylaws under that. That's a key part of the amendment. It's a key part of the subamendment, and that's what I'm addressing right now. I think what I'm saying is that the concern around the college and the way they operate is not in any sense an ideal forum for public policy to be developed in.

I'll bet people in Peace River right now are saying: "We've got a darned effective MLA. We know what he does, because he comes into a public forum and speaks occasionally in this place, and there's Hansard, that records his voice." There's no public record of the college council. It's difficult to get access to one of their meetings. There's no equivalent to Hansard. You don't get advance notice typically of what they're dealing with and when they're dealing with it. My experience in 1998 left me with a sense that no matter how important the role of the college council is, it is a far, far less satisfactory forum for discussing important public policy questions than this place is, Mr. Chairman.

That's one of the reasons I'm supporting the amendment, because that tries to address some of those concerns. [interjection]

Now, the second point on the subamendment is that we had the Minister of Learning . . . [interjection] I'm sorry. I've got the Minister of Government Services excited thinking I'm supporting the amendment. I want to make it clear that I'm speaking to the subamendment, and I'm sorry if I've misled any members in the Assembly. I support the subamendment. I was about to be drummed out of the caucus. In fact, the papers for expulsion were being drafted as I spoke.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, these side comments and conversations are all very interesting, I'm sure, to the individuals involved and directly engaged in them, but it's not part of the decorum of the Assembly nor of the committee. So I wonder if we could address ourselves to the issues that are in front of us and not engage members of either the other side or of your own side in these kinds of side conversations, hon. member.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, thank you for your guidance. My colleague for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who succeeded me as health critic, is much more competent than I ever was, and I need all the instruction and advice I can get from her as I try and soldier through.

MR. DICKSON: On subamendment SA1, we had the Minister of Learning, who again reaffirmed his credentials as a physician licensed to practise in this province, speak, and the theme was picked up on by our friend for Calgary-Cross, who we know has been trained and practised as a registered nurse. They both talked about some of the value of overnight stays and their concern about people being discharged too early from a clinic.

You know, when I listened to the Member for Calgary-Cross – remember that she highlighted some of the things on that list of things that could be done in day surgical services – I cringed. You may have cringed and winced, whatever, too. I'm always bothered by the notion that general anesthetic can be administered in a day clinic. Maybe the solution to some of those things is not then allowing more day clinics to keep people on an overnight basis. Maybe the solution is to ensure that we are more selective in looking at the list. Maybe some of those things should properly be done in a hospital that's got the backup to be able to deal with the complications.

I mean, I think the concern I heard from the Member for Calgary-Cross was that people shouldn't be discharged, that in some cases people need to be kept overnight. I respect her training and her experience, but there are two solutions, members, to that. One is to then allow more of these clinics to have beds and allow people to stay on an overnight basis. The other one is maybe to say: we should be more selective and more discerning, more discriminating in deciding on what procedures can be done outside hospitals that have that sort of backup and support.

I'm reminded by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek that time is marching on, and we want to hear from the Member for Calgary-Egmont yet, so let me quickly move to the other part that I hadn't touched yet in dealing with the subamendment. It's this. I had asked a question the other day that has not yet been answered.

Mr. Chairman, I'm getting tired of speaking to subamendment SA1. I expect there are members in this Assembly that are getting tired listening to debate about subamendment SA1. Maybe we should be starting to think about moving on, but before we can move on, we have legitimate questions that have not yet been answered.

In Hansard the other day I had identified some issues around which bylaws under the Medical Profession Act were in question in terms of the subamendment and the amendment. Here we go. Those questions were asked, and this is for the reference of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and any other members that may be getting ready to speak. They maybe can answer this. If our friends from Calgary-Egmont or Calgary-Fish Creek could answer this question: when we talk about bylaws under the Medical Profession Act, are those bylaws under section 31(e)? Are they under section 32? Are they under section 74? Are they under section 97? Those are all bylaw-making powers in the Medical Profession Act, and nobody's answered that question yet. Has anybody heard an answer, Mr. Chairman to that question? [interjections]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I heard someone say that it doesn't matter. [interjections] Does not matter.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. member should address himself to the amendment. If you're trying to engage others, as I suggested that you not do, and then trying to catch whatever is said and by so doing invite them to say it louder or whatever, this is really not what this debate is supposed to be about. So, hon. member, if you could engage yourself in the subamendment to the amendment, that would be helpful.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, thank you for the direction. I have to confess that every now and again in sort of a Walter Mitty-esque frame of mind I dream of actually engaging people in real debate, not 15-minute, 20-minute set speeches. I'm sorry. Every now and again I just think that there's maybe a chance that we could have a more meaningful exchange in this place than we do.

Anyway, we're enforcing the rules here, and I'm not doing a good enough job of following them, so I'm going to try harder.

MR. DICKSON: In any event, I do think that it would be very easy. Maybe the sort of shadow health minister, our friend from Calgary-Glenmore, who probably knows more about this bill than any other person in the Assembly, can tell me which bylaws in the Medical Profession Act are the ones that are an issue with the subamendment and amendment A1 itself. Those are answers that I think we're entitled to know. We want to know, and I think we have to have some response to that.

People may say: why do we talk about the medical profession? Well, we have two choices here. We have two options. We either completely subdelegate it to the College of Physicians and Surgeons – and that would be the government model – or what we do, Mr. Chairman, is build in a 12-hour limit, which is what the Liberal opposition would do with this subamendment SA1. I mean, isn't that really what we're confronted with here? Isn't that really the issue here? We either, on one hand, have the college determine it on some basis that we don't really know, using criteria we don't really know, or we set out some kind of formula in the legislation.

If I get a signal from the Government House Leader, I'm happy to adjourn debate. Otherwise, we'll keep on going until 5:30. Fine. I'm encouraged. I think the direction I'm getting from the side opposite is to keep on going. Maybe that means there's some prospect of changing some minds here in the three or four minutes that we've got left.

Is my time up, Mr. Chairman? Okay. Thank you.

MS LEIBOVICI: I had the opportunity to introduce the amendment and only got four minutes on it, so I didn't really ever have an opportunity to actually speak to my own amendment. I'm more than pleased to start it now and to finish it when I get back at 8 o'clock, and then I know I will have ample opportunity tonight to get up over and over and over again. Unfortunately, all we have are the Blues this afternoon from the Hansards last night. What I plan to do in my remarks on the amendment is to actually look at the indications of the Member for Calgary-Cross, I believe, the minister of intergovernmental affairs, as well as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I think those were the three that had spoken. Did I miss one?

AN HON. MEMBER: Dr. Oberg.

MS LEIBOVICI: Oh, yes, and especially the Minister of Learning. I will look at what the remarks were that they made which were pertinent to the bill, which were absolutely pertinent to the amendment. I plan to go through each and every one of those speeches to address their concerns so that they can fully understand what the amendment was that I proposed.

The amendment, as I've indicated – and it's unfortunate that the little government blurb that's put out every day seemed to take it out of context and spin it a little bit – was meant specifically to do two things. One was to ensure that both the uninsured and insured services were split apart so that there could be no profit motive. I would think that every government member would say: yes, that's exactly what we want to see in health care, that there is no profit motive and that in fact every decision that is made is based on whether it is the provision of good health care and not on the issue of whether it is the provision of cash in someone's pocket. That is exactly what has to occur.

The other one has to do with the issue of the 12-hour stays. I had indicated – and I'll repeat it – that what the clause does, and it's in Hansard . . . Oh, we do have the Hansards. When did those appear?

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 18, 2000 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 00/04/18
 [Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order, please.

Before we proceed, I have been asked whether we can have unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It is my pleasure to introduce to members of the Assembly tonight a number of guests of mine and my Liberal colleagues who are in the galleries. Some of them I just met this evening for the first time while they were waiting in line to go through the security doors to get a pass to come in. Many other guests are still waiting outside and for some reason have been denied access. At this time I would like to call upon all of my guests who are here to show their anger about Bill 11 to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Chamber. [disturbance in the galleries]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order in the galleries. Order in the galleries. Order.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Committee of the Whole

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We are dealing with subamendment SA1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was the last to speak and is on her feet.

Before I begin, I should tell the guests in the gallery that Committee of the Whole is a stage within the bill where we deal with amendments, and we go clause by clause through the bill. It's more of an informal stage. The members can move about, and they can take off their suit jackets and be more comfortable. We do allow people to move about the Chamber and have coffee or juice.

With that, hon. member, go ahead.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, and I'd also like to thank everyone who's come to watch the proceedings this evening and to participate in the democratic process.

I'd also like to let you know that the score, as of about five minutes ago, was 2-2 in the Oilers game. I know we have a lot of Oilers fans in the balconies tonight.

I'd also like to thank the security guards and the others who are manning the doors on behalf of the individuals within this Assembly. They do not have an easy task. I know that their position is one we all wish they were not in, but I do want to thank those individuals for being there to protect us if required.

What I would also like to say at the outset is that I resent the position this government has put us all in. It's a position where we are in lockdown, where in fact the democratic rights of individuals who usually have the freedom to roam this Legislative Assembly at will are no longer able to do so. It is their building. I resent the government who has put us and them in the position of not being allowed to enter their own building.

I would also, on the other hand, like to thank them for the awakening of democracy that is occurring not only in this city but across the province everywhere. From the e-mails, the faxes, the letters, the number of people that have come into all of our offices in the last few days and in fact over the past few months, we know that this is an issue that is not going to die and that will continue and continue and continue to grow until this government recognizes the mistake they have made and the underestimation they have made of people's ability to understand exactly what Bill 11 is about.

I would also like to remind the government and ask them if they think this is what it felt like during the French revolution, when Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette were holed up in their castle as well, and the people were at the front door waiting and pushing to get in. Marie Antoinette said: let them eat cake. What this government is saying is that . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Meadowlark, we are dealing with a subamendment that you introduced. Could we please proceed with the subamendment?

MS LEIBOVICI: Absolutely.

Those who can afford private health care will get it, and those who don't will get the underfunded, understaffed public health care system. [interjection] It is true, member.

The subamendment that we have in front of us this evening is an amendment that will attempt to make a god-awful bill maybe a tiny bit better. What the amendment does is split out the insured and uninsured services so that only insured services can be provided. What it also says is that surgical facilities will not have overnight stays. We know that that is a major concern individuals have, that this legislation sets up the ability for overnight facilities, private, for-profit hospitals, to set up in this province, to do so with the blessing of this government, of the Minister of Health and Wellness, and that in effect what we are setting up is a two-tiered system. Everybody knows that, yet this government denies it.

I was in a coffee shop the other day, and I said that I was getting a coffee because I had to go back to work at 8 o'clock at night. The young lady behind the counter said: well, what do you do that you have to go back to work at 8 o'clock at night? I said: I'm one of the MLAs. She said: oh, are you a Liberal MLA? And I said proudly: yes, I am. And she said: "Thank you. Thank you so much for standing up to protect our public health care system." I didn't have to twist her arm. She was no member of a union. She was not a left-wing nut. She was an educated, informed Albertan who knew exactly what the dangers of this bill present. And she thanked us for what we are doing.

I just came back from one of the schools in my constituency. It was a heritage fair there. It was a wonderful exhibit of what the students have put together to celebrate our heritage. As I was walking around the room, people talked to me about Bill 11. They said: "Go and fight for us. Make sure that Bill 11 does not pass, make sure that this government withdraws the bill, and make sure that you tell Ralph," which I wish I could, "that he needs to pull the bill." And that's what we are doing right here and right now.

For those individuals who weren't here the other night, I will put into the record exactly what the amendment tries to do. It says: "no physician shall provide an insured surgical service" in Alberta and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta except in a public hospital or an approved surgical facility "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours." No overnight stays and splitting apart the insured from the uninsured services so that nobody can make a buck off someone's illnesses. That's what the amendment says, and that's what we have put forward and will speak to tonight.

I listened very carefully to the speeches, and I know I will get an opportunity, because I do not have a lot of time left, to rise again. I have indicated that I will do so, and I will very carefully continue to look at the speeches that the government members made last night with regards to their defence of a bill that is indefensible. I must admit that in listening to those speeches, for the first time I heard the government members admit that they have a number of constituents, more than five or 10, that are phoning them to complain about this bill. That, I think, is an important first step. We now have government members admitting in fact that they are hearing from their constituents about this bill. So I thank all the constituents who are phoning their government members, and I hope they will continue to do so to bring that message home.

The second step that I found encouraging was that the Premier today it seems indicated that closure would not be brought in this week. That is a move from what he said last week, when he indicated that in fact closure might be brought at the end of this week before the spring break. So at least now he is saying very clearly, unless I misunderstood his comments that were on the radio at 6 o'clock, that closure will not be brought in at this stage and, I am assuming, at the next stage of the bill. In fact, we will be able to go to spring break. People will have the opportunity to meet with their MLAs yet one more time to explain what the problems are with the bill. In fact, what it does is allow us to bring forward amendments like the one that I have on the table tonight. The amendment is a very important amendment, that we need to keep talking about.

The third step that I think needs to still occur is for the facts now to be heard, to be listened to, and to be understood by the government members. As part of the bringing forward of those facts, the amendments are very, very important because they allow us to indicate to the government members what the facts are with regards to private, for-profit health care.

Now, the government members that spoke last night were very passionate in their defence of the public health care system. They indicated that they would do nothing to harm our public health care system, but somehow I fear that they are – and I'm perhaps a bit bold in saying this – misguided in their reading of what this bill is. So I find it necessary to talk and explain the amendment so that they can understand exactly why we need to pull the requirement for overnight stays, why we need to clarify that in fact an approved surgical facility as outlined in section 2(1) of the bill, as defined in the definitions in the back portion of the bill, is nothing but code for private, for-profit hospitals.

In fact, what needs to be understood by the government members is that there is not one shred of evidence that either the department or any of them or any of their researchers have been able to produce since November – I believe that was when the policy statement was brought forward. Since November 400-odd employees of the Department of Health and Wellness and millions of dollars spent have been unable to prove one shred of evidence that this providing for overnight stays at private, for-profit hospitals in this province is going to be more cost-efficient, is going to be more cost-effective, will reduce waiting lists, and anything else they've dreamed up in the last five months to try and sell this bill.

If the passionate appeals of the government members in preserving and maintaining our public health care system are to be believed, what needs to be recognized is that that belief does not mesh with the facts, and dissonance amongst the members themselves I think must be pretty amazing. To be able to sit and justify a position that is not based on fact is one that I find very difficult to understand. There have been countless studies that we in the Official Opposition have put forward. In fact, as promised to the Minister of Community Development and the Minister of Infrastructure, I am sending over some of those studies, and you will probably be receiving them in your mailboxes within the next couple of days. I indicated in the speech I gave a few days ago that I would be doing that because the ministers were asking for that information.

Obviously, we are for this amendment. If in fact the government members are to vote against this amendment, they must do so with full knowledge of what they're voting against. They are voting against public health care when they vote against this amendment. They're voting against preserving our publicly funded health care system. They're voting against the principles of the Canada Health Act. They may shake their heads as much as they wish and say that it's not true, but there are too many opinions out there, too many research studies that are out there that indicate that it is true. As I indicated earlier, with the strength and might of the Department of Health and Wellness the minister has been unable to prove otherwise. We have sat here day after day and have listened carefully, and other than a Fraser Institute report based on old studies, that were not relevant and that were quickly discredited, in fact there is nothing else that the government can put forward.

I think it is established here that what we are voting for is a very important principle, that this amendment addresses that very important principle, that as long as overnight stays remain part of this bill, as long as surgical facilities are defined to be hospitals, and as long as approved surgical facilities can do both insured and uninsured services at the same time and charge for enhanced services as well, and later on – I don't think today, not sure if tomorrow, but at some point in time we will be dealing with the enhanced services part of the amendments that the government has put forward.

As long as those elements remain in the bill, this government is doing something that no other government across Canada has done. In fact, what this government is doing is opening up the doors to private, for-profit businesses that thrive on making a profit on people who are vulnerable, people who are sick, and people who are ill. I don't think that is something the government members want to see occur, yet they stare the facts in the face and deny them. They deny the reality that is in front of them. Based on what? If you could at least tell the people of Alberta what it is based on other than a whim, a wish, ideology, then maybe they might start to think that there's some substance in this, and they might understand what in fact you are trying to do. But that's not what this is. Bill 11 is not that. Bill 11 is just the opposite, and I know that each one of you in your heart must know that as well.

This is important. This is something we will stick with for a long time because it is important. It is the essence of the bill, and until it is taken out or the bill withdrawn, which is definitely preferable, there doesn't seem to be a lot of reason to move from this particular amendment. Hopefully I will get a sign of hope from the House leader, from the Minister of Health and Wellness that can tell me differently, but I don't think that that will be the case. I don't think so at all.

I know that I'm drawing near to the end of my time and I know that there are others anxious to get up as well, and I thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm delighted to rise and enter this debate between second and third readings on an amendment to an amendment. Before I go ahead, I just want to say hello to the people in the galleries and welcome them to this part of the democratic process. It's very good to see you all here. Thank you for coming.

I also want to comment specifically on some of the statements that were just made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, whose opinions I respect and whose viewpoints I also respect. However, there were a couple of points that she mentioned which in relation to this subamendment certainly need some clarification. One of the comments she made was that people are voting against or that the government is somehow moving against the spirit, the principles, and the concept of the Canada Health Act. Now, that is absolutely false. Madam Chairman, the people in this House and the people in the galleries know full well that this bill, the Health Care Protection Act, goes a long way to strengthening some areas that were weak in the system, and that's very true. I'm going to give you a couple of examples of where and why that is the case.

I hear the fire alarm bell ringing, and I'm not sure – do we just keep going? Okay.

First of all, Madam Chairman, as many people perhaps know and perhaps many others do not know, there is currently no legislation in the province of Alberta to prohibit private, for-profit hospitals, but Bill 11 will in fact do that. Now, I understand the comments with respect to defining the difference between a full-fledged, full-functioning, acute care, emergency care hospital versus the definition of a surgical facility or a private clinic or a clinic of any kind. There are ample examples of this in our system today not only in Alberta but elsewhere. I would tell you that the fundamental difference is similar to the definitions that must have been used 10 or 12 years ago when clinics first started up in this province.

Madam Chairman, the fact was that 12 years ago or thereabouts there were a number of pressures on the health care system, and private providers were brought into that equation in a stronger way than ever before to look at where they could help out so that the spiraling costs in health care could be maintained in order to protect one publicly funded health care system.

Now, today we're at a similar point. We know that the federal Minister of Health, the Hon. Allan Rock, and the Prime Minister of this great country, Jean Chretien, have written to us, put in writing, that they want us to look at creative and innovative ways of addressing the future demands of our health care system because, in their words, the status quo is not an option. Now, having said that, I was expecting that they might provide some kind of clear comment, some kind of clear direction on what they meant by an innovative, creative approach to health care, given the increasing costs.

Unfortunately, up until now they have not provided any of that, so each province is kind of left on their own to try and come up with some ways of dealing with these advancements that have been made in medical technology, the advancements that have been made in surgical procedures, the advancements and the tremendous amount of advancements specifically in information technology, all of which are very, very good, solid things. I think we all have to keep in mind that as a result of these tremendous advancements the expectations that we all have of the health care system have changed dramatically.

Madam Chairman, what was laser surgery eight, nine years ago? Virtually unheard of. What was orthoscopic surgery? A similar amount of time . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The chair does have to remind you that we are dealing with an amendment to an amendment, as you indicated when you first stood up. I would ask if we could move back to that amendment, please.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I appreciate the reminder, which I know you've given to all members here, because we do tend to get wrapped up a little bit.

I just want to make the point as we're looking at the amendment to the amendment, that in fact what would happen if the subamendment that was brought in were to be enacted is that it would take away the right for us to look at and to have regional health authorities consider as an option what is central to this whole issue of redefining and re-examining overnight stays.

Overnight stays, for the information of everyone listening, are simply a stay that is longer than 12 hours in length. It doesn't matter what time of day it happens. Technically, if you're in a facility longer than 12 hours, you are deemed to be in an overnight stay situation. The fact is that with the improved amount of technology now, we know that recovery times have changed. This subamendment is unacceptable for that reason, because it fails to acknowledge that. I acknowledge and I respect what they are trying to do here, but the fact is that they are wrong in some of the explanations. So I needed to clarify that.

In fact what the amendments do, Madam Chairman, as you well know, is talk about not only strengthening the many things that Albertans have asked us to do, but they also provide a tighter package of guidelines and restrictions that govern our clinics that are out there today. Without them we may have . . . I'm sorry. Are you signaling the fire alarm again? No? Okay.

Without those stricter guidelines in place, we would be accused of not having a uniform system across the province. What is important with these amendments is that we are trying hard to make things uniform so that the level of care and the level of service you would receive in northern Alberta or southern Alberta or Edmonton or Calgary or Sangudo or Okotoks is standard for everybody, and that is a good thing.

These amendments are necessary for some of those very obvious reasons, but I would also tell you that in the process of these amendments, Madam Chairman, we are also strengthening the prohibition against things like queue-jumping. We know that there are concerns about that. It's important for the individuals listening and for people participating in the debate to understand that we're not trying to do something here that would harm that. We're trying to improve the prohibition against it. That's a critical part of the bill, because Albertans asked for that to be done, and we're intending to do that.

There are a number of other things that these amendments speak to that the subamendment, if brought in, would curtail. But the essence of the first amendment, Madam Chairman, has only to do with adding in a particular definition to include dentists. That's really what the first amendment is all about, but the subamendment as worded would not only take away that particular necessary change, which we've been asked to put in, but it would also defeat a lot of the other points that are trying to be advanced.

Now, another comment that the hon. member made was saying that someone is denying the reality of what the health care pressures are today. In fact, Madam Chairman, the exact opposite is the case. We are acknowledging the reality. The reality is all of the advancements I mentioned before. The reality is that we have a very fast-growing population, which is a great thing, and we have an aging population, which is also a great thing. What we're trying to do here is to simply say that those growing pressures have to be addressed somehow. Yes, money is part of the issue. Of course it is, and that's why we're pressing Ottawa so hard to restore its funding back to 1994-95 levels. But this subamendment would take away some of that thrust, and that's why the subamendment is unacceptable.

We know that when medicare was first brought in – this will come as no surprise to some of our listeners. Do you know, Madam Chairman, that circa 1960 when Tom Douglas brought in the idea of a medicare program in Saskatchewan, there was tremendous opposition to that. That's why this amendment, which speaks to change, which speaks to progress has to be looked at in that context. Yes, of course there are some people who are opposed to this. I understand that. But so, too, were 90 percent of the doctors opposed to what Tommy Douglas was trying to do back when he was trying to bring in medicare. Who would argue that he was wrong? Who would argue that Tom Douglas was wrong with his dream for a medicare program? Obviously he was right in spite of the fact that there was a lot of opposition to it.

Now, what we're talking about here and what this amendment and consequently the subamendments are talking about is simply bringing us up to speed in a very progressive way to allow us to have regional health authorities consider as an option one set of very narrow, very low-risk, minor surgeries that could possibly be done in a private setting that is safe, that is fully accredited. That's what the amendment is all about, Madam Chairman. This amendment that simply reads "no physician shall provide a surgical service" and substitutes "no physician shall provide an insured surgical service" and so on speaks against the spirit of that necessary change.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, there's a point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MS LEIBOVICI: Beauchesne 333, if he'd entertain a question as to when HRG became a regional health authority so that they could ask for overnight stays.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We first ask the hon. member whether or not in fact he will entertain a question.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Madam Chairman, the hon. member has been here for seven years, and she knows full well that there is a point for questions in question period. She's welcome to ask that question. If she has a question about the amendment or the specific subamendment, that's a different issue. This has nothing to do with HRG, so it's totally irrelevant.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Continue the debate, hon. member.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: What I also want to refute here are some comments and some references that were made earlier in the debate in reference to this amendment and subamendment, the fact that there are no more beds being opened up, which is obviously not true. In our Capital health region alone over the last several months we have opened up literally hundreds of more beds. Literally hundreds. Right now we are in the process of opening a further set of beds, about 63 right now. We're also in the process of hiring 90 more doctors and 2,400 more nurses to help staff and look after those beds. [interjections] That's all part of what was offered earlier in the debate, and if it was allowed earlier in the debate and questions asked, then they need to be answered. I heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo say this afternoon that questions were being asked in relation to this amendment and this bill that were not being answered, so I'm trying to answer some of those questions. He offered them in good faith, and I'm responding in good faith.

Now, I just want to go on with this subamendment and some of the comments that were made there by previous speakers. The fact is that we have to look at this amendment and subamendment in the context of the bigger picture of health care delivery right across Canada, not just what's going on in Alberta but particularly what's going on in Alberta and also with reference to the national context. It may surprise you to know that we will be, I think, the only province that will ban private, for-profit hospitals, and we will be the only province that comes out and openly says that there is a problem in that regard, that there's a loophole in that regard, and once this amendment is dealt with and brought in, we will see a much stronger piece of legislation. And do you know what, Madam Chairman? Nothing will happen in the end. We'll have a lot more people accessing faster service, better service with high quality being provided the way it has traditionally been provided. That's the truth. That is precisely why we need to look at health care through the eyes of the broader picture.

With this amendment, Madam Chairman, we are making a very sincere effort to honestly address some very stark and harsh realities with respect to not only today but the future. We're all concerned about health care. We all use it. We all need it, and we all will. So for members opposite to suggest that somehow there's a self-serving element in this is absolutely false. It would not benefit anyone to take away or to destroy something that is very, very solidly enshrined as one of our Canadian values. We strongly believe that, and we're doing what we can to help improve it and help protect it.

Now, as I look at this amendment, which we're supposed to be discussing, regarding section 2, we are simply saying – and I'll read this into the record, because a lot of people may have just joined us for this debate – that section 2 is struck out and the following is substituted:

2(1) No physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in

- (a) a public hospital, or
- (b) an approved surgical facility.

What the subamendment says is to strike out "no physician shall provide a surgical service" and substitute "no physician shall provide an insured surgical service." Then it goes on to talk about the issue of the 12-hour stay, which I talked about earlier.

Since they've referenced 12-hour stays, I want to just comment briefly on what that means here, Madam Chairman, and because it's part of the subamendment. At the moment we all know that a full-fledged public hospital is the only place you can go for major surgery and for minor insured surgery that requires a stay of longer than 12 hours. But we have advanced beyond that now. We have surgeries that can be performed much more safely in surgical settings, and that's what this discussion is all about.

Madam Chairman, as you look at this and you consider the 12-hour stay, think of it in terms of some of the orthoscopic surgery. What was a hip surgery 12 to 15 years ago? It was virtually unheard of 15 years ago – virtually unheard of – because of the technology not having existed at the time. Today we have enormous advancements that have been made in that regard. I'm not for a moment saying that hip surgeries for everybody is a minor surgical procedure, because for some it's a major surgical procedure. If the doctors deem that it's a major surgical procedure or if the patient is somehow in need of the full backup of a full service, an acute care emergency centre, then I can tell you for sure that doctor would undoubtedly be recommending that that particular person's case be dealt with in a full-fledged public hospital. It might have to do with the patient's age. It might have to do with the patient's heart condition. It might have to do with the patient's blood pressure. I mean, come on. What you have to look at here and trust is the doctors making the right decisions on behalf of their patients. To suggest that we have no trust in the doctors, as some members opposite are inferring, is simply absolutely wrong.

The fact is that under the 12-hour stay rule we do have people that are being in some cases rushed in and rushed out because they don't want to violate the 12-hour rule. Well, what happens if a particular surgery requires a 13-hour stay or a 14-hour stay? What happens in those cases, where we're sort of borderlining it? Can't we take a look at taking some of the minor surgeries that are currently only allowed to be done in a full-fledged public hospital and move them over here into a different setting where that is safe to be done, that is fully accredited by the college, where the minor surgery has been defined as being okay to be done, but for some reason, Madam Chairman, it takes longer than 12 hours of stay?

Now, hernias are a popular example of the 12-hour stay rule. I've had constituents and other people calling me saying: you know, I've had a hernia operation, and I was in and out in four or five hours. I think that's terrific that they have. I've also had others phone me up and say: no, no, no; I had to stay longer than 12 hours. As the subamendment talks about 12-hour stays, Madam Chairman, it's important to realize that there is a difference of condition that we all have with respect to our own medical health and with respect to the medical health of others. So let's not be blindfolded into thinking that one size fits all here. Patient concern will remain the number one priority of our doctors and of our health authorities.

Even having said that, the guidelines, which we are toughening up through our amendments, by the way, are very, very strict. We need to put in some kinds of restrictions and stronger guidelines surrounding the operation of these clinics. Madam Chairman, these clinics that are out there, be they privately owned or else how owned, are not going to go away. They are here. They are all across Canada. It's part of the evolution of health care. They were allowed and – you know what? – medicare never fell apart, and it's not going to fall apart now either.

The fact is that those clinics provide a very valuable service. They provide an efficient service or they wouldn't be there. It's simply impossible for some members to suggest under this amendment or some other amendment that we should cancel all our associations with some of the privately provided services. All we're doing is contracting for the service only. The doctors get paid the same amount of money on a fee schedule if that surgery is done in a hospital or if it's done in a clinic for insured services, and members opposite know that. We are outlawing facility fees. We have now for some time, but this bill strengthens that resolve, and that's what's important.

AN HON. MEMBER: Read the bill.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Read the bill is exactly right, hon. member. It's in the bill, and facility fees are prohibited. Don't confuse facility fees with facility services. Those are two different things. Facility fees, okay? Facility services are just a definition of what's provided, everything from nursing care to food to whatever.

My 20 minutes are up for now. I'll come back later. Thank you, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. So that's what our health care system has come to, I suppose, four-hour posthernia stays. Well, that will be news to the college.

You know, context is very important. Context helps us understand the meaning of so many things, so in the context of debating this subamendment, I would like to comment on the circumstances that we find ourselves in here this evening. As a member of this Legislature, who is being called upon to pass judgment on the subamendment from my colleague, I find that I am now being treated as somewhat of a second-class legislator. I was told earlier this evening that if I wanted to enter the Chamber, a Chamber which I'm very proud to enter every day, being elected and then re-elected to represent my constituents, very proud to walk through the front doors and walk up those steps into this Chamber . . .

Privilege

MLA Access to the Chamber

MR. DICKSON: A point of order, a question of privilege, Madam Chairman. I've just been advised that two of my colleagues are unable to get access to the building. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry are outside the east entrance and unable to get access to the building. I understand that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is out there as well. Now, there's no more basic right than the right of members to be present in this Chamber to be able to participate. I'm raising that at the earliest opportunity. I'd be raising it under Standing Order 15.

AN HON. MEMBER: Did they have their security card?

MR. DICKSON: Well, my understanding is that they have used their security card. It does not work. They're not able to get access. Three MLAs are down there at the entrance, and I regard this as a serious matter.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, leave it with us for a minute. We will check on this. I'm sure that we will ensure that they are indeed welcomed into the building, and we do want them in the Chamber.

Go ahead, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much. Of course, that information just furthers the point that I was making, Madam Chairman, that when I was told that at 6 o'clock this evening that I wouldn't be able to walk up those front steps and walk through the doors that I normally access this Chamber through so I can do the job I was elected to do, I felt that this government was trying to not just intimidate so many citizens but also intimidate this member of the Assembly.

While we're talking about context, of course, we're talking about the context in which we were told one thing up until 4:30 this afternoon about the accessibility of the Chamber and then something else entirely different when it was too late to do anything about it, and I don't appreciate that kind of duplicity either, Madam Chairman.

Now, when we take a look at the amendment that's before us and the argument we just heard – I suppose the associate minister was speaking for the government – the one thing that certainly struck home to me is that this government is trying to have it both ways. They're trying to defend their move to privatize health care in the province of Alberta by using the example of some existing freestanding day surgery clinics where a very limited number of very low-intensity surgeries are performed right now. They're trying to use that experience and then extrapolate that, jack that up into an experience that would call for much more complex and major surgeries.

Nowhere in the associate minister's talk did he actually give us that distinction between major and minor. Nowhere did he tell us what kinds of surgical procedures there would be. He gave us some hyperbole about the miracles of modern science and the fact that there may be some new surgeries, but the fact is that this government first tried to sell its private health care initiative by using the example of hip surgery until the College of Physicians and Surgeons quite rightly pointed out that that was far too complicated a surgery to be done in a day surgery setting or in a freestanding clinic setting.

Then this government used the example of the Shouldice hospital in Ontario, which of course bears no resemblance at all to what this government is trying to do. The example was hernia surgery, and there is no appreciable waiting list for general surgery or hernia surgery in this province right now. The fact is that in the Shouldice hospital in Ontario patients stay for as long as three or three-and-a-half days after their surgery.

So it seems to me that this government is trying desperately to find examples to trot out when in fact there are no examples in this country of what this government wants to do, because this government is going into uncharted territory. They are pushing well beyond any reasonable limits that any other jurisdiction has put around private involvement in the provision of surgeries, and they are embarking on this quest now to serve some corporate interests instead of the public interests. I think that the associate minister's remarks themselves speak directly to the fact that this government has abandoned the public good when it comes to health care. It is instead catering to the selfish interests of a few who may profit from private health care.

Now, I have some questions that were provided to me. They come in the form of a copy of a letter that was sent to the Premier from Mr. Cetinski of 160th Avenue in Edmonton. He asked me if I would make sure that these questions were asked. In his letter he talks about a "Big Business culture," and he wants to know whether or not this big business culture is somehow running roughshod over the government of Alberta. He says in his letter:

Economic efficiency as it pertains to commodities is very measurable and can be attained in the free-market concept, but truly how can this efficiency be transposed to the treatment of illness in mankind which cannot be measured by scientific rationality?

A very good question. He has not received a very good answer from the Premier.

He asked a second question as well that he wanted me to raise in debate today. He says:

The second thought that comes to mind, should a competitive relation between private and public health care culminate (as your proposal does not take this in account) how will resources of professionals in this industry be attained to satisfy both the public and private health care systems?

Again, an excellent question.

This government talks about its policy being one that will alleviate pain and suffering. Somehow, they say, without offering evidence, it will shorten waiting lists. This would of course be based on the simplistic notion that if you have surgery available in two centres, you'll somehow diminish the waiting time. But it's not the surgical centres that create the problem, Madam Chairman. It's the number of surgeons available to do the surgery that creates the problem. So if you have, as this bill would call for, the same number of surgeons working in different settings, you're doing nothing but splitting resources. So, again, Mr. Cetinski asks a very good question.

His third question has to do with this point directly.

Thirdly will this two tier system of health care greatly reduce the waiting list for needed treatment (keeping in mind question #2) and has the projected cost figures, keeping in mind the demographics and escalating cost runs to year 2016 when baby boomers will all become senior citizens, accomplish any savings?

Now, in response to these very thoughtful questions from an individual whom I'm assuming the Premier may have been thinking of when he dismissed critics of his policy as left-wing nuts, for these very thoughtful questions, Mr. Cetinski received not a response from the Premier but a form letter response that did not address his questions at all from the Minister of Health and Wellness. I can tell you that he's not the only Albertan that has brought this to my attention. They took the Premier at his word when he invited comment from Albertans. He asked them to respond. He invited them to visit their web site. He asked them to read their brochure, and he asked them for their feedback. When they provide their feedback and their thoughtful questions, they get back form letters. I think that is very unbecoming of the government, Madam Chairman.

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, the chair would be amiss if she didn't mention that we are dealing with a subamendment here. Can we please discuss that?

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. I was of course dealing with the subamendment in the same way as the associate minister of health was. I think he said: the rather wide-ranging and international aspects of the issue. I will try to constrain myself to comments much as he did, Madam Chairman.

8:50

MR. SAPERS: Now, when I took a look at the government's web site – and I was anticipating debate on this subamendment which would limit stays to 12 hours – I wanted to see what the government had to say about the difference between a private hospital and a surgical facility. The government web site gives us the following explanation.

A surgical facility, as referred to in Bill 11, would only provide limited minor surgical services based on contracts with regional health authorities. These surgical facilities would not charge patients for medically necessary services.

What we have heard from the associate minister again is this reference to only minor surgical services. Well, my question to the government which I would dearly love an answer to is: would they provide us with this list of minor surgeries which require contracting out? Could we please see this list that could not be done within the existing legislative and regulatory framework?

We already have guidelines established by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. We already have bylaws under the Medical Profession Act. We already have sections of the Alberta Hospitals Act that allow for the contracting out of some services. We already have regional health authority guidelines and Auditor General guidelines for the contracting out of services. We already have a well-established protocol within the AMA for dealing with fee-guide issues. The government has already admitted that there are, I believe, 170 minor surgical services which don't require any kind of intensive, invasive procedures that are being done on a day-surgery or outpatient basis right now.

So if that's the case and this regulatory framework currently exists, what possible thing could Bill 11 add unless it is that you have to read between the lines? And reading between the lines, what we're hearing is: well, we need Bill 11 because we have to allow for greater than 12-hour stays; we have to generate a new regulatory framework so that Albertans, instead of going to hospitals for complicated surgery, will go to private health care centres or private surgical facilities or whatever the language of the day is from this government.

So my challenge to the government is: provide us with the list of surgeries. Let Albertans know exactly what it is you have in mind for them. Let Albertans know if in fact, contrary to the wishes of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Albertans will be sent to private hospitals for a hip replacement or a knee replacement. Let Albertans know if that's the way Albertans are going to receive orthopedic surgery. Let Albertans know if that's the way Albertans are going to be receiving other kinds of general surgery or ENT or cancer-related surgeries. Let Albertans know if in fact that's your plan, that you want to set up this array of for-profit, private surgical facilities that have to do much more invasive and much more complicated surgeries, and that's really why you need Bill 11, because we all know that it's those more complicated surgeries that generate more income for those people who are responsible for providing them.

Is that really the pressure that's on this government? To provide those income opportunities for those people who benefit directly from the ownership and the operation of these private surgical facilities? Is that why you want to extend the 12-hour rule, and not this nonsense that somebody might run into a complication and they're being kicked out of the clinic sooner than the 12 hours would allow for? If you could name one example where that's happened, then I would like to see that reported to the College of Physicians and Surgeons for follow up. That was a very insulting argument that we heard from the associate minister.

I'd also like to refer the Assembly once again to the government of Alberta's web site on Bill 11, where they answer the question, "How would contracts between regional health authorities and surgical facilities be approved?" What we learn when we read this information from the government of Alberta's web site is that this is going to be done on a piecemeal basis. There is not going to be one protocol or one set of guidelines. This is going to be done on a very situational basis. It means that depending on who you know and who you talk to and how soon you talk to them and how fast you get into the line, you will get an answer on whether your contract is approved or not.

After the College of Physicians and Surgeons decides that the facility can be approved, which is a fairly narrow process in terms of the guidelines that the college has, then it will be up to each regional health authority. So the people of Edmonton may have to go to a private clinic for knee surgery, and the people of Calgary may have to go to private clinics for ophthalmology, and the people in Grande Prairie might have to go for general surgery to a private centre. So what we're dealing with is not two-tier medicine. We're dealing with 17-tier medicine. We're dealing with a situation where Albertans won't know from region to region what kind of services they can be entitled to. Not only that, but we won't know in terms of the quality.

Can you imagine the audit costs and the control costs and the downside if one of these private businesses should fail? Then where are the residents going to go in that particular jurisdiction when the regional health authorities put all of its surgical eggs into that one private basket? Then what's going to happen to the quality of patient care and accessibility and cost control? Who knows whether or not that regional health authority will have the ability to negotiate a contract that's in the best interests of Albertans? How will we know that it's in the best interests of all Albertans and not just those few who are going to directly benefit?

When I see this answer on the government's own web site, it generates so many more questions. For example, it says that the contract would provide a benefit to the public system by improving access to publicly funded services or increasing cost effectiveness or efficiency in the delivery of services.

Well, those are some mighty big ors, and I would ask the minister how exactly he is going to determine that. What are the criteria? What are the performance measures? How are you going to determine whether it's more efficient or less efficient? On what basis of cost-effectiveness?

You haven't done the studies, Mr. Minister, and in correspondence you've sent to me, you've told me that you haven't even done a capacity study of the 17 health regions now. You don't even know what capacity there is in terms of surgeries and facilities right now, and that's in correspondence with your signature on top of it. So if you don't know that basic information now, how can you possibly make a judgment on whether or not it'll provide a benefit or greater access?

You've said in your amendments that what you're going to do is ensure that the capacity in the public system is used first, but you haven't even measured that capacity. You don't have audit information on all the existing public hospitals now, and that's according to the Auditor General. It's going to be a matter of three blind mice or eeneey, meeneey, mineey, mo. It certainly is not going to be based on fact. It's going to be entirely based on fiction, and what we're left with is a government that has nothing more to back up its private health care policy than saying: trust me.

Privilege

MLA Access to Chamber

MR. SAPERS: Now, Madam Chairman, you had said that in leaving my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo's motion on privilege to you, you would deal with it. I've just been informed that there are three more members – the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – who at this very minute are being denied access, including the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-McClung. I would like to know before we continue what it is you're going to do to ensure that these elected members of the Assembly can take their seats in this Chamber and participate in the debate?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member, please have your seat a moment. A few minutes ago the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo rose. We talked to the Sergeant-at-Arms. He has gone out, if you'll notice, to see what the situation is. He is not back yet to report to me. I do notice that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry made it into the Assembly, and we are trying to see where the rest of the people are. I will report to you and the rest of the committee when I've heard back. Okay?

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. I understand that he was escorted in by six policemen, and I would like to request that perhaps we should ask him.

Madam Chairman, I'm just wondering whether or not you might consider an adjournment until we can get all members into their places so they can participate, because it is a breach of their privilege that they are being denied access to this debate at this time.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I'm going to wait until the Sergeant-at-Arms comes back to report to me. I'm going to have you continue the debate until I have a report back. We have sent someone out. Two members have now entered the Chamber.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, I apologize. I just entered the Chamber, and I didn't hear your full comment.

We've managed to find one member who with some difficulty managed to access the east entrance. We still have a number of other members who have been attempting to get access to the building but have not been able to make their way to the east door.

I think it is appropriate. There is no more fundamental right than the right of every member of this Assembly to be here for all of the debate, not part of it. Madam Chairman, I'm going to respectfully urge you to declare a recess until every member of this Assembly who wishes to be part of this is in fact present in the Assembly. To do anything else is effectively denying members the right to speak and to participate, and I don't think you would want to be complicit in that sort of travesty.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Madam Chairman, I too came from the Annex, and the east doors were blocked. It's easy to go back to the Annex, enter, and come through the pedway using your security card. I was out there, and two members were outside at the same time I was. I had no trouble accessing the building. You can go to the Annex, go through the tunnel with your security card, up to the Legislature, and into the Chamber with no problem.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I'm going to take all this under advisement.

A few minutes ago, Calgary-Buffalo, I asked the Sergeant-at-Arms to go out and see what the situation was and report back. He will be coming back, and then we can deal further with this.

I would ask that we continue the debate on the subamendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora still has some time remaining.

MR. SAPERS: It's very difficult to continue the debate, Madam Chairman, while I know that some of my colleagues are feeling denied their ability to do the same. You and I seem to have a history of getting into this kind of situation. I would simply say that I still believe the most appropriate course of action would be to recess until this is resolved. I don't know why some members can get in and some members can't, but the very fact that some can and some can't is disturbing to me.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, on the subamendment.

MR. SAPERS: Yes, well, on the subamendment. The subamendment of course is only as relevant as the democratic process in which it will be voted on, Madam Chairman, and of course that's what I'm commenting on.

The amendment is one that I believe my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark started off this evening by saying that it may help save this bill in part. I don't believe that this bill is entirely salvageable, but the one issue that seems to really crystalize the debate is this question of minor and major surgeries, and part of that debate, of course, is the over-12-hour stay. So if there is one way that this government can demonstrate that it's putting Albertans' money where the government's mouth is, it's to accept this amendment. At least then we would know that this government is sincere that they don't want to contract out major surgeries. We'd know that they are sincere that they don't want to erode the role of public, full-service hospitals in the province of Alberta. I would ask all members of this Assembly to give this subamendment their full consideration.

Madam Chairman, before I take my chair, let me just register again my disappointment in the circumstances in which we find ourselves this evening. It seems to me that the much more honourable thing for the government to have done is to welcome Albertans into this Chamber, particularly after inviting them to participate in the debate.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm going to keep my comments relatively short because I spoke on this subamendment last night, but I have some further thoughts.

Let me say, first of all, that in everything we can find something positive. The one thing positive about the subamendment, about the amendment, about the issue we're dealing with, Bill 11, is that it's demonstrated the passion, the appreciation that Albertans have of the public health care system that we have, and it shows, Madam Chairman, by the number of people that were here last night, the number of people here tonight, the hundreds of people I expect are outside right now trying to get in because they want to demonstrate their passion, their appreciation, their commitment to the system that we have, a system that unfortunately this government is intent on destroying, a passion and an appreciation that was demonstrated Sunday at the rally at the AgriCom attended by 6,000 people, probably another 4,000 turned away because they couldn't get into the parking lot. It took me an hour to get in; it took me one hour to get off the Capilano into the parking lot. In Calgary, thousands of people showed up.

It doesn't matter where I go, Madam Chairman; I am stopped. I am stopped and people say to me: why is Ralph Klein determined to destroy the health care system that was built here in Alberta? I have friends, I have relatives, I have an MPP from Ontario phoning me saying: you guys have to get Ralph Klein back on track, because if he destroys the health care system in Alberta, you're going to see that contagious disease spread to Ontario by the Premier down there, Mike Harris, possibly by that new Conservative Premier that was elected in Prince Edward Island. Fortunately, up north there at least we have a Liberal Premier that has enough sense not to follow the lead of this particular government.

Clearly, Madam Chairman, whether you're the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and you go into a store or a cafe and somebody says to you, "Oh, you're an MLA," right away what do they want to talk about? They want to talk about what's happening here, what was happening yesterday, what's happening today, and what will continue to happen. The people here have to be thanked and they've got to be welcomed and they've got to be appreciated. How often do we see the galleries the way they are tonight? How often do we see the type of demonstration we saw last night? In my 11 years here I've never seen that.

Madam Chairman, this is the first time that security has had to – and I don't blame security for what they're doing. They've got a tough job. They've got to protect us. Mind you, when you're on the side of the angels, you probably don't need the same degree of protection that you would otherwise. They're doing their job, but it's the first time in 11 years that I have seen Members of the Legislative Assembly, members of the public denied access to their building. It's not the government's building. It's not our building. It's the taxpayers' building, and let's remember that. It's like you going home and being told that you can't enter your own home, even though you paid for that home. [disturbance in the galleries]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order in the galleries. You will not participate. You are there to watch only.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, would you get back on the subamendment, please.

MR. WICKMAN: Madam Chairman, what is this subamendment all about? This subamendment is an attempt to at least modify somewhat the amendment, the concept of Bill 11, what's behind it. Ideally, if we respected the wishes of the people, we would simply kill the bill. We would set up some type of mechanism where we could work as partners with Albertans, with the people that elected us, with the taxpayers. We would work as a partnership, and we would come to some type of an agreement. We would come to respect the public health care system, and we would look at other mechanisms such as opening the three floors of beds that have been converted at the Misericordia in the west end, the beds that have been shut down at the Grey Nuns – you can't rebuild the hospitals that have been blown down in Calgary – building additional facilities rather than farming it out to the private sector.

The question of 12 hours came up last night, and there were references made to it again tonight by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek as he spoke about the subamendment. It was implied that there would be dangers if you restricted it to 12 hours. What would happen if somebody needed 13 hours? Well, first of all, if the surgery was of that nature that there was that type of risk, then you would go to a proper facility to have it done, and a proper facility to have it done of course would be a hospital, not a clinic. The government is not proposing clinics. The government is proposing surgical facilities. The same argument could be used for any surgical facilities that have an unlimited stay in terms of overnight – and we're not talking 24 hours; we're talking unlimited, but we're talking in terms of hospitals not properly equipped. A person could go in for some type of surgical procedure, and there could be complications. Then what happens? Is that person rushed out then to a public hospital? Is that what happens to that individual because they're in a facility that is not properly equipped to deal with emergencies that may arise as a result of that surgical procedure that's being carried out?

Now, one thing that has been accomplished – and I listened to the radio tonight. The expression that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo likes to use is that his spirits soared to the sky. They're lifted because of something positive happening. Well, I listened to the news earlier on today, and I heard the Premier of this province being quoted as saying that the original plan for closure or to end this bill by the conclusion of this week because of the Easter break has been derailed.

We will come back after the Easter break, and we will deal with Bill 11. We'll continue to deal with it. Why? Because the people that have come out here have shown their distaste for the way the government was trying to ram the bill through, force the bill through. We saw that indication at second reading of the bill when the Deputy Government House Leader brought forward the previous question limiting the amount of debate that could occur. So again something positive has happened, but it didn't happen on a voluntary basis by the members of the government. It happened because the people of Alberta have spoken out.

Madam Chairman, there's a member standing.

MR. HLADY: Madam Chairman, a point of order.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. HLADY: Madam Chairman, thank you very much. Beauchesne 459, relevance to the subamendment. He's not even anywhere near it.

MR. WICKMAN: Madam Chairman, let's talk about the subamendment for a minute. When I talk about the subamendment . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

On the point of order, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Just a couple of points I'd like to make quickly. If our friend from Calgary-Mountain View refers to Beauchesne 459, I'll quote it for him:

Relevance is not easy to define. In borderline cases the Member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished Members who have strayed in debate.

I reference the latitude given the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness, who led us on a tour of things that the federal Minister of Health had neglected to do or failed to do. Madam Chairman, I'd say that if you were to intervene now and limit the debate of Edmonton-Rutherford, having allowed the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness to take us on his meandering path around the health care issues of the nation, then we'd be having a very uneven application of the rules. I know that that has never been your custom, and I'd ask you to use your usual even hand and make sure that the same rules apply equally on both sides.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

MS CARLSON: On the point of order, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On the point of order, Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: I would like to reference Erskine May: Rules Governing the Contents of Speeches, Relevance in Debate on page 378. This is an often used book that we refer to when members are called on relevance, Madam Chairman. In the past you yourself have so designed to take relevance in debate as it is outlined in this particular book, where it says:

A Member must direct his speech to the question under discussion or to the motion or amendment he intends to move, or to a point of order. The precise relevance of an argument may not always be perceptible.

In fact, that is the particular line that has been used a number of times in this Assembly to support items under discussion.

Sometimes it takes some time to get to the exact essence of the point that you are making, particularly when it comes to amendments, Madam Chairman. So we would ask you, in reviewing this particular part of Erskine May, to take that into account in your ruling.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. We tonight are in Committee of the Whole. We are dealing with an amendment to an amendment, a subamendment introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Since we've started tonight, the chair has allowed each and every committee member speaking a lot of latitude – each and every member.

Now, I would ask that we do try, please, to look at the subamendment which you have before you and try to reference your remarks to that subamendment. This particular stage that we go through in Committee of the Whole is supposed to go through each and every section within the bill, and we look at that. It is not second reading debate. It is not third reading debate. However, it allows us to look very, very closely at the bill and to bring forward, if necessary, amendments. This is what we are doing here tonight.

I've allowed each and every one of you latitude, so I don't think we need to point fingers at anyone. The chair has allowed some latitude, and I will continue to do so. But I also want to remind you that we are dealing with the subamendment, and I want to hear some discussion as to the contents of this subamendment and how it interacts and relates to the amendment.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. We all appreciate that latitude that's shown. This is an issue of deep, deep concern, and it's an issue that at times we do get emotionally wrapped up in.

MR. WICKMAN: I just have a few more comments. I am going to relate it in terms of the subamendment. When we talk about the subamendment, one of the terminologies that's used is "surgical facility." That same expression, surgical facility, that same term, that same definition, name, whatever you want to call it, is also used, of course, in the government's amendment, and it's also used in Bill 11 itself: "surgical facility."

Now, let's remember that for a second, surgical facility, because I want to draw a parallel. The poll that the government boasted about earlier this week that showed 54 percent of Albertans agreeing with Bill 11, which is down, incidentally, five points from their previous government controlled or sponsored poll, shows a decline in support even though the poll may be somewhat questionable.

I'm going to read the question that Albertans had to answer. Listen carefully just to see if you can even find any reference to "surgical facility." This is rather clever. This is rather good.

The stated goal of the Health Care Protection Act is to reduce waiting lists and increase overall efficiency. Under this plan, Alberta Health will pay for all insured services performed at private institutions and these private institutions will not be able to charge fees to Albertans who receive these services. Based on this, would you say you strongly support its position, somewhat support its position, somewhat oppose its position, or strongly oppose its position?

Now, we're talking in terms of private institutions. Suddenly the government is afraid to use their own terminology, "surgical facility," because they know that Albertans will not be deceived. They will not be fooled. Albertans know a surgical facility is simply another name for a hospital, so they use the term private institution. A private institution could be a dental clinic. A private institution could be a school. A private institution could be whatever. It could be Hallmark, Wal-Mart, whatever. If I was asked this question, I would say yes, but had the question been properly phrased and included the term surgical facility rather than private institution, I would of course have said no. But despite all that, there were still 36 percent of Albertans who said no even to this question, because 36 percent of those polled instantly saw through what the government was doing. Instantly saw through it. That is marvelous that Albertans can be so perceptive when government makes a manoeuvre to try and cleverly disguise some terminology.

As I conclude, I am reminded of a movie, and you have to wait for the conclusion of my remarks on this as to how it draws into the subamendment. Just like yourself, Madam Chairman, a person who enjoys reading books, so do I, and I know there are members in this House – the Member for Sherwood Park, for example, enjoys going to a good movie once in a while. I see her there quite often. Quite frankly, I'm a movie buff myself. Some of the movies I really, really enjoy are the old black and white classics.

Now, there's one that reminds me of the situation that we're dealing with at the present time, and that movie to the best of my recollection was called All the King's Men. It was about this man. He was the editor of a small newspaper, not a reporter. He attacked the politicians in Washington, the powerful politicians who catered to the select few to retain their power. He did his editorials, and pretty soon he became very popular, and people urged him to run as the people's choice. The grass roots wanted this guy to be their voice in government. He went to Washington being the voice of that grass roots, those people.

After he was there for a while, he got a taste of this power. He surrounded himself with these influential friends and suddenly he forgot his roots. He forgot about the people who put him there. Pretty soon he started to ignore the wishes of the people, and he chose instead to listen to those select few, to those very, very select few. It's very similar to what we see happening here.

We have a Premier in the province who was elected on a grass-roots movement. He was very popular with the grass roots, because there was the perception that he listened to the people, that he listened to the little guy. But is that happening now? Is the little guy being heard?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Rutherford, excuse me. Does Edmonton-Ellerslie have a point of order?

MS CARLSON: No, I don't. I'm sorry. I'm just organizing my desk. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. Go ahead, Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: My colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie is not going to rise on a point of order against one of her own colleagues. I would hope not.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Rutherford, the chair never knows.

MR. WICKMAN: Do you see what has happened here, Madam Chairman? We're in a similar situation, where government has forgotten the people that have put them in power and has allowed itself to be swayed by a small number of influential people that stand to gain, that stand to profit, who have interest, motivation to have this bill passed even with these minor amendments, because the minor amendments are not going to affect the potential that they see as a result of this bill.

I read a column recently in the Calgary Sun written by – well, he goes by the name Dinger – Rick Bell, in other words, who used to cover the Legislative Assembly at one time, a very popular writer, by the way, a columnist who ran for mayor of the city of Edmonton and fashioned a campaign very similar to the campaign the Premier had when he ran for mayor of Calgary. We all know that this columnist, Rick Bell, has had a very close and still may have a close association with the Premier of the province. That's obvious by talking to him, by reading his columns.

He made a plea in his column there. He made a plea: Mr. Premier, don't forget who put you there; don't forget the people you once used to defend; don't forget the people you spoke out for; in other words, return to your roots. There are thousands of Albertans that are asking the Premier of the province to return to his roots, to again listen to the people of Alberta, to respect their wishes and do what they're asking him to do. In this case, Madam Chairman, without any question, without any doubt, they are asking the Premier, they're asking this government to kill this bill.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Madam Chairman, I would like to first of all indicate that the amendment to which the opposition has made a further amendment was a section whereby we were just clarifying that in terms of the standards, in terms of the approval process that had to take place with respect to surgical clinics, we were including dentists and the whole area of dental surgery in addition to that provided by physicians. So in terms of the issue before the House at this particular point in time, that is the issue. This particular amendment I think is very straightforward. It could have been approved by the committee, and we could have gone on to more relevant debate.

Since the debate has ranged perhaps somewhat further, there are two points I would like to make at this particular time. In keeping with the commitment of the government to use the best information sources available in terms of making decisions about what might be approved for a day-surgery clinic, of which there are 52 in the province, Madam Chairman, and well over a hundred, about 170, different procedures that can be performed therein and extending that to the provision of overnight stays, the important thing here is that the legislation provides that the College of Physicians and Surgeons will make the judgment as to what setting a particular surgical procedure will be provided in. That's very clear in the legislation.

There was the challenge that was brought forward with respect to some examples of what procedures could be provided in a surgical clinic, and there's quite a list actually. As I said, there are some 152 listed in the blue-ribbon panel report as to those things that can be done in surgical clinics. But I would just like to perhaps mention about half a dozen or so that would fall into that category: drainage of a pilonidal abscess; a colonoscopy; hernia repair; evacuation of incomplete abortions; bone tumours; a radical resection with respect to bone tumours; carpal tunnel release; surgical excision, removal, of malignancies; and orthoscopic surgeries of different types. So those are just a few examples of what is on the list.

But the important thing here is that the amount of time, the setting, and the standards in which such a procedure would be provided is the decision of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. They have established lists in these different categories, Madam Chairman. The legislation is very respectful of that role the college has, and that is referenced and dealt with in the legislation. So it is not a matter that people who are not qualified will be making decisions as to what can be provided on a day-surgery basis or on an overnight-stay basis within the overall health care system.

The thing that is very, very certain in the legislation is that surgical clinics will deal with a specific area of surgery which is approved by the college and satisfies the criteria that are listed in the bill. Further to that, there is a whole set of criteria in the legislation which makes sure that before the regional health authorities issue any kind of a contract or get into any type of agreement, they have to consider such things as the existing capacity within the health care system, the regional health authority in which they're considering a contract, the overall benefit that will be gained in their view by entering into such a contract, and the amount or the volume of work that needs to be done in this specialized area, Madam Chairman. These things are all referenced.

Finally, I think the important thing is that we're dealing here initially with an amendment proposed by the government to add to the criteria, to add to the legislation the reference to dentists and dental surgery.

The second point here is with respect to surgical clinics. This particular section of the legislation deals with, as I've said, a process where the college deals with the judgments that have to be made on a medical basis, in the interests of the patient, in the interests of safety, and the criteria for such a contract reflect that plus a number of other considerations, such as the whole area of dealing with any possible conflict of interest, dealing with the whole area of overall benefit in terms of balancing financial savings over the existence of additional capacity within the health care region. All of those criteria are built into this overall bill, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Part of your difficulty this evening, I suspect, in trying to call for relevance is that this subamendment and the amendment that the government put forward is the first time in Bill 11 that the term "an approved surgical facility" appears. So I think it's that term that has us bogged down, and it's that term that has led to the wide-ranging debate, and it's of course that term that is at the root of the dissatisfaction and the outrage across the province by citizens who see approved surgical facilities as code for private hospitals. We are stuck on a subamendment and have been for a number of hours, and I suspect we're going to be here for a number of hours more until it becomes abundantly clear that Albertans, our constituents, do not want private hospitals.

If you look at the subamendment as put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the subamendment attaches to (b) an approved surgical facility "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours," and by that subamendment the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is making sure that these are not private hospitals but that they remain as clinics. I think that's crucial and that's what Albertans want.

It's been very, very difficult, sitting on this side of the House, trying to understand why the bill is going ahead. The evidence, the correspondence, the pleas, the research are all anti what this bill is all about, yet the government plods ahead with it and tries to convince us that this is going to be a good thing.

I looked at the stack of reports on my desk that have to do with it and picked out a couple of those reports because I knew I'd have a few words to say this evening. I looked at the Alberta Medical Association's position statement on RHA contracting with private surgical facilities. I'd like to read into the record one of the underlined principles and statements that they have in that document on page 5. This is the Alberta Medical Association. This is what our doctors are saying about Bill 11.

In our view therefore, Alberta's plans to privatize the delivery of surgical health care services threaten the integrity of Canada's public health care system in a manner that has far-reaching and adverse implications both for Alberta, and for the rest of Canada. That's our doctors, and they're telling us: look, this movement to privatization is going to be bad for us; it's going to work against that very strong health care system we have tried for so long to put in place. This amendment would take away that criticism that the AMA has levied against the system.

Another report, one of the two that I picked out, Madam Chairman, is an analysis of Bill 11 done by the law firm of Arvey and Rankin. Their analysis concludes with this statement: "When Quality and Speed of Service Varies with Ability to Pay, the System is 'Two-tiered'." That's exactly the fear that the many in this Assembly and in these galleries and out on the lawns and across this province have: that if Bill 11 is enacted without the subamendment that we proposed last night and again this evening, then that is where we're heading, to a two-tiered system.

Madam Chairman, a lot of what Albertans fear is rooted deeply in memory. We remember the days before we had medicare, before there was a strong health care system. Every family in this province that's resided here for any number of years I'm sure has a tale of woe to recount in terms of the damage that was done to their family economically by not being covered by a universal health care system. I look at our own family, where after the birth of my younger brother my mother needed an operation, and it took the family 10 years – 10 years – to pay for that one operation. That memory remains strong with Albertans. We know what it's like when we don't have the strong universal system that we have come to expect and that Albertans are standing up and defending in the face of Bill 11.

I decided I'd keep my comments based on the kinds of remarks that physicians have made, and I referred before in debate to the Physicians for a National Health Program in the United States, a group of physicians down there who have come together and are trying to get what we have here. They live in a privatized system, and they know what privatized medicine is all about. If you get on to their web site, you can see the kinds of points that they're making, and it refers directly to the subamendment and those approved surgical facilities when they grow into the kinds of private hospitals that we know they are destined to become.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Commenting about the American system, those physicians said: "Our pluralistic health care system is giving way to a system run by corporate oligopolies. A single payer reform provides the only realistic alternative." That's what we have, a single payer system, and Bill 11 without this subamendment would move us to the very thing that those doctors are railing against. They go on to say that "the winners in the new medical marketplace are determined by financial clout, not medical quality." Again, that's at the root of our fears. When you move to privatized medicine, the bottom line, not patient care, becomes the major concern of providers. They talk about the growth of private chains south of the border.

A second major point that they make in their materials is that "a single payer system would save on bureaucracy and investor profits, making more funds available for care." Just what we have here and what Bill 11 without this subamendment would have us move toward, a system where a number of private companies, a number of private hospitals are destined to try to cover overhead, to try to generate profit to cover their own billing systems, and they go on to detail the waste in such a private system.

They talk about physicians there, and the comparison they make is between a physician south of the border and a physician here in the public system.

The average office-based American doctor employs 1.5 clerical and managerial staff, spends 44% of gross income on overhead, and devotes 134 hours of his/her own time annually to billing. Canadian physicians employ 0.7 clerical/administrative staff, spend 34% of their gross income for overhead, and trivial amounts of time on billing.

Is that where we want to go with our physicians? That's why this subamendment to Bill 11 is so important, so that we make sure those approved surgical clinics remain that and don't become those private hospitals that we all fear.

A third major point they make in their materials is that "the current market-driven system is increasingly compromising quality and access to care." These are physicians talking. Why would they say that if they weren't concerned? Why in heaven's name would we head in that direction or in any way that might possibly take us in that direction? Why would we want a system that compromises quality? Why would we want a system that compromises access to care? That's what Albertans are asking: why? They cannot understand the focus and the thrust of Bill 11.

They go on to enumerate the number of Americans that are not covered by health care. They list the woes and the kinds of distress that Americans suffer because they don't have the kind of system that we have here, and they envy what we have.

A fourth major point that those physicians make is that a single payer system is better for patients and better for doctors.

Canada spends $1000 less per capita on health care than the U.S., but delivers more care and greater choice for patients.

That's what we have in a public health care system, that's what we want to avoid by having the government Bill 11 go forward, and that's what this subamendment is all about: making sure that Alberta and Canada don't head down the road to where those costs per patient are higher, the quality of service is lower, and our health care system – something that we value dearly and that has been built up over a number of years – is destroyed by a government that seems determined to proceed with a scheme that has no support from any study in a refereed journal, to proceed with a scheme that, on the face of it, can only benefit investors.

Again it has Albertans puzzled and as many times it's been asked over and over and over again in question period in this Assembly. It's been asked in forums across the province. It's been asked everywhere – coffee shops: why are they proceeding with a bill with the inclusion of approved medical facilities which can be interpreted as private hospitals. Why are they proceeding when it doesn't shorten waiting lists? It doesn't improve the system and it has every chance to destroy what we have in place now.

So, Mr. Chairman, it's very important that the members of this House look very carefully at subamendment SA1, section A, and what that would do to Bill 11. If that subamendment were passed, then I think there would be some truth in Bill 11 where it, in the preamble, talks about being dedicated to the principles of the health care act, but without that subamendment, that preamble remains hollow.

I think with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll await my turn to comment again. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Chairman. I'll wait my turn. You might keep me in mind.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again to debate the subamendments presented on Bill 11, and let's focus on a couple of issues on the debate.

Firstly, Albertans have had private clinics doing medical procedures such as abortions for some time. No one objected. Everyone took it for granted that these clinics would carry out insured services by private providers. Now, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to take a little walk down memory lane just for a minute. The then health minister and now the Leader of the Official Opposition was asked in question period the following:

MS OLSEN: Was this just e-mailed to you?

MRS. FORSYTH: No, it wasn't. And Mr. Chairman, I will quote: "The government can save a lot of money . . ."

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor. Would everyone please respect that?

You may proceed.

MRS. FORSYTH: And, Mr. Chairman, I'll have it on the record that it wasn't e-mailed to me. I'm in my WordPerfect, so thank you.

Then the health minister and now Leader of the Official Opposition was asked in question period the following, and Mr. Chairman, I am going to quote:

The government can save a lot of money if it doesn't allow hospitals to contract to the for-profit sector. On that basis alone, will the minister reconsider her position and tell hospitals the for-profit sector has no role in the public health care system?

Her response, Mr. Chairman:

Again, Mr. Speaker, no, I will not, because the private sector does in fact have a role if it can prove that it is efficient, that it's operating fairly, and that it's meeting the responsibility of our health sector to provide access to health services.

Ironic, isn't it? Here we are debating a subamendment that states, "No physician shall provide an insured surgical service" in Alberta, and adding under (b), after "an approved surgical facility," "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours."

You know, Mr. Chairman, when medicare was introduced politicians had little to worry about: costs, Canada's population was young and healthy, the economy was booming, the high-tech high-cost revolution had yet to take place. Government spent freely. In many ways medicare was successful in its early days because it was untested.

The first period was its golden era. In debates over health care, people often point out that health care worked well. We recently heard about Shirley Douglas speaking about the golden era. She recalls the golden era fondly. The problem with that is that was then and this is now. People didn't anticipate that one day every province across this fine country would be facing long waiting lists.

The problem with the golden era was that when the program was introduced the Canadian population was young and healthy with half under the age of 21. The median age of Canada's population was 25 when Parliament passed the Medical Insurance Act. In subsequent years the median age hit 30. Today the median age is approaching 40. [interjections]

An aging population means new and more demands are placed on . . .

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Order please. I think members should have the courtesy, the decency to allow members who have been recognized the opportunity to express themselves. You will have your time as well.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you. I am continuing to speak on the subamendment.

The second trend was the advance of medical technology. In areas such as diagnostic equipment and pharmaceuticals, major breakthroughs have taken place over the last three decades. So, Mr. Chairman, in the year 2000 tough decisions have to be made. We now know that as long as we seek band-aid solutions for the problems of the health care system, as long as we are not prepared to embark on miracle solutions, we will never move forward. Bill 11 to me is the miracle solution.

Sustainability is the most significant health care issue in the country, more important than hospital closures, physician compensation, or any of the other issues politicians are not willing to discuss.

It is difficult to fully appreciate how much modern medicine has improved our lives. These advances have improved not only healing – doctors have a greater ability to diagnose and treat diseases – but also quality of life.

Recent figures in the winter 2000 Innovation magazine provide some startling figures, Mr. Chairman: total patient visits to doctors' offices from 1989 to 1990, 18 percent increase; drug store pharmaceutical purchases from 1989 to 1999, 112 percent increase; total patient visits with treatment recommended from 1989 to 1999, 29 percent increase; total prescriptions dispensed from 1989 to 1999, 36.3 percent increase.

Mr. Chairman, in the same period, what is even more scary is prescriptions, and I will provide just a few examples: cardiovascular, 44.1 percent increase; cholesterol reducers, 655.6 percent increase. The top 20 that were listed are all showing increases except for two. These figures clearly show the cost of progress. The catch is that easy advancements in medicine come with a price tag. We are clearly now seeing only the tip of an iceberg.

So we have an amendment before us, and does that solve the problem? No, Mr. Chairman, it doesn't.

So if patients are troubled today by lengthy waiting lists, overcrowded emergency rooms, what will health care be like in the coming years? Over the next 40 years the number of seniors will continue to grow; emergency rooms will still be overcrowded; health care workers will continue to be discontented.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is rising on a point of order. Citation please.

Point of Order Tabling a Cited Document

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, in accordance with Beauchesne 495 to 500 and also in accordance with the Speaker of the Assembly's admonition on March 4, 1998, at page 684 about reference to notes and reading speeches, I'm making a request that that hon. member table the document she is reading from.

We have heard repeatedly from the Speaker of this Assembly that any information provided in debate that is an essential component or from which a member is quoting should be tabled in this Assembly so that it is available to all members of the Assembly.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The citation that the hon. member has used is Beauchesne 592?

MS CARLSON: No. Beauchesne 495 to 500. In addition to that, I'm using a citation from Hansard, page 684, specifically Speaker Kowalski's comments on March 4, 1998.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Okay.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View on the point of order.

MS HALEY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First off, you don't table things that are already in the record in this Assembly, and she was quoting from a Hansard. Just, you know, for the record, Hansard is something that you have in your desk. [interjection] Would you like to sit down? Sit.

Every person in here from time to time uses notes that they've handwritten or typed themselves in order to be able to reference back to the debate. We are having a debate in here. I really resent the implication that my colleague is not allowed to speak in here without the constant interruption of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the point of order.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I'd be pleased to provide the quote from Hansard where I quoted the hon. member from the opposition. It's page 1,746, July 2, 1992. Please feel free to look for it.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: In that case, I guess this clarifies the issue.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you can proceed.

MRS. FORSYTH: I'll repeat that so she understands it: Hansard, page 1,746, July 2, 1992. I can repeat the quote if you would like. May I start again? Thank you.

Debate Continued

MRS. FORSYTH: Over the next 40 years the number of seniors will continue to grow. Emergency rooms will still be overcrowded. Health care workers will continue to be disconnected. This is not a transition; this is transformation.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood speaks about Michael Rachlis and may consider him a guru of sorts. Rachlis recognized, however, that health care must be changed. He is quick to point out in his book Strong Medicine, and I will quote:

An important step in making our health care system more efficient and effective is to examine the respective roles of governments and service providers. Medicare is often called a government-run system, but of course only the insurance side is run directly by the government. Most doctors are in private practice and most hospitals are non-profit, private corporations. Is this . . . right . . . [a] public/private mix? What role, if any, should governments play in health care delivery?

Mr. Rachlis talks about:

Any offers to radically change Canada's health care system along these lines must deal with long-standing beliefs about what is really wrong and how to fix it. Some of these beliefs are supported by good evidence; others are not. Most curious of all are these ideas that ought to have been killed off completely because the evidence against them is overwhelming.

Madam Chairman, he further goes on to express that the politics of health care are challenging.

Mastering the art of the possible takes courage, strategy, and perseverance. We can learn a lot from the debates over public health care insurance [and] how to do it well. The issues may be different because at times we are talking about restructuring health care delivery.

Mr. Rachlis also acknowledges that Ottawa has an important role to play in making medicare work, including a role in supporting health care system reform. After all, at least part of these difficult decisions provinces face were made in Ottawa. He suggests in his book that, one,

- Canada needs an overall strategy for health . . .

Two,

- Ottawa should transfer enough targeted cash to the provinces so they can provide reasonable equal access to health and social services. These cash transfers should grow at the same rate as the country's economy (measured by the gross national product).

Madam Chairman, I wish I was a fly on the wall listening to Mr. Rachlis speak at the recent opposition's policy conference – and the costs to have him speak to 300 delegates. I had the privilege of listening to him speak a couple of years ago at a health policy conference, and he credited the government at the time for their health reform. He even signed his book for me.

Another well-known health guru, Mike Decter, also acknowledges and recognizes that medicare must be changed: it isn't reform that will bring about the demise of medicare but the absence of it.

So, Madam Chairman, on the subamendment. Does it make the health care more appropriate, efficient, and effective? I think not. One must remember that hospital reform has been the preoccupation of all provincial governments for close to a decade: private providers providing care. I'll give you an example: hospice care contracts with the regional health authority, providing loving and tender care to the dying. Madam Chairman, my father-in-law died in a hospice, and he stayed overnight. He was well taken care of. We were all well taken care of as a family, all provided by private providers.

Again, and on the subamendment, one must ask the relevant questions. Why have we become so reliant on institutional care? Why have hospitals meant to provide acute care become centres for non acute care? Why not utilize the surgical facilities for minor surgeries? Several years ago I entered the hospital for a day-surgery procedure for a tubal ligation. They found out I was allergic to the anesthetic and had to send me home. The ability of the surgical clinics would be to keep me overnight and observe me.

Closing on the subamendment, Madam Chairman, when it comes to health care, we must decide on the direction of health care reform. A painful question with painful results is shown tonight. We have to make hard and difficult decisions. People of all ages are afraid of change. It's doing what's right. The protestors can protest, but we must move forward. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. I was able to speak briefly to this subamendment last night, but I have had some information from my trusted and wise constituents in Edmonton-Centre and have been asked to raise a few more points, which I'm happy to do on their behalf. Democracy is a wonderful thing, I think. It can be noisy, it can be messy, and it can be time consuming, but I certainly think it's worth it. I'm very pleased and proud to be standing in this Assembly participating in a democratic process. I hope that all members that wish to be in this Assembly were able to be in this Assembly tonight.

Specific to this amendment. You know, it's really interesting. I've heard the Minister of Health and Wellness rise a couple of times and say, "Why are they talking about all this other stuff: approved surgical facilities, overnight stays, defining the length of the stay, what's an insured service, an uninsured service? Why don't they just know that this amendment that was put forward is just about adding in physicians and dentists as being those approved to provide surgical services?" Well, the point is that we're in Committee of the Whole. In Committee of the Whole we can discuss this bill clause by clause, word by word, and there are a lot of interesting words in this particular amendment that has been opened up by the government putting the amendment forward. Some of those words include words like "insured surgical service," "approved surgical facility," "public hospital," and "major surgical service." There are a lot of interesting concepts that get opened up there, and we're perfectly entitled to be discussing them.

The instructions I have from the people in Edmonton-Centre that contacted me are saying: why didn't they change some of the things that we've been asking them to change, that the people are telling this government it's important the government change if this bill is to be acceptable to people? Now, what we've had happen in this building and what I gather is still happening outside of this building should be telling the government how much the people of Alberta do not want this bill. If it is going to be acceptable, if the government is going to put forward amendments, then there are a few more things they need to be looking at changing than simply adding the words "physician" and "dentist" into this particular amendment.

So we have a subamendment that's been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark which is an attempt to try and address some of the key concerns that have been identified by people about this particular section. A big part of that concern is the whole idea of a public hospital and an approved surgical facility and what's the difference. I've heard the government also speak about approved overnight-stay surgical facilities, which I presume are the same as an approved surgical facility since in this amendment they're certainly talking about overnight stays. This is what really concerns people.

The whole idea of the 12 hours being the sort of cutoff line, the guillotine line, that you've got to be able to stay over 12 hours. The subamendment is proposing that the 12 hours is a good cutoff. If this is going to be minor surgery, 12 hours is perfectly appropriate. If you're going to go over 12 hours, you've gotten into something different here. The government is indeed claiming that the contracts are issued by the regional health authorities to the private clinics for provision of minor surgery. Well, I would think that most minor surgery could in fact be done in under 12 hours.

If you need longer for complications – and those are some of the issues that have been raised by the other hon. members in the context of debate on this amendment and subamendment – well, then is this really minor surgery anymore? If you're dealing with trying to open that window of more than 12 hours because of some sort of complications that might arise in this minor surgery, how is this going to help us? We know that according to the definition of these approved overnight stay surgical clinics, there are no acute care beds in there and there are no emergency care beds. The Premier himself suggested that these clinics would deal with those kinds of emergencies or traumas in the same way that any other clinic does: pick up the phone, dial 911, and get an ambulance to transport you to a hospital.

I guess one of the questions that I have for the Minister of Health and Wellness is: will the government then be paying for that ambulance that is now transporting this person from a private clinic to a public hospital? Right now individuals pay for ambulances themselves out of their own pocket, unless they happen to have Blue Cross, which is the extended health care coverage. I think that's an interesting dilemma, and I would like to hear the minister respond to that.

If somebody went in and the government is paying for someone to have minor surgery and complications arise, there are two things that are happening here. One is that the person gets punted back into the public system. When that happens, first of all there's the ambulance ride. Who is going to pay for that? It certainly wasn't the patient's fault that these things have happened. It certainly wasn't the patient's fault that they got put into a private clinic for this surgery and the private clinic is unable to deal with their trauma or complications. So is the government going to pay for the ambulance ride there?

Two, is the private clinic then going to reimburse somehow the public system because the public system is now dealing with the acute care or the trauma treatment from the complications for this patient? The public system didn't get the money for the original surgery here. So are they going to get reimbursed for having to deal with the complications arising out of that surgery? I'd like to get an answer to that, please.

Essentially, I guess I have to ask: if the private clinic cannot care for that person receiving minor surgery, then why do they need the overnight? You know, keeping them overnight isn't going to help any more. As we know, they're either going to get shipped off or they won't be accepted into the private clinic. So I still don't see how the private clinics move us further forward here.

Flexibility is a reason that the government often gives, and the point was raised I think last night that we need to be giving the regional health authorities flexibility to deal with changing medical requirements, changing population, new technology, pharmaceuticals, et cetera, et cetera. Well, I raised the point last night that there have been a number of acts brought back into this Assembly in my short time here. The condominium act from '86 was also brought back in 2000. The Municipal Government Act was introduced and passed in '97 and has since shown up in '98 and '99. So there's obviously no hesitation on the part of government in a number of other instances. If you need to be flexible and adjust your legislation, bring it back into the Legislature. You had no problem doing it with the MGA and the condo act. Why would it be a problem doing it with this Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act? So you can set limitations inside of this act that will relieve some people's concerns about what's being put forward here.

There is also the argument that I've heard that the clinics need to be able to keep people longer than 12 hours for narcotics or local or general anesthetic to wear off because this affects different people differently. I'd be interested in hearing what the doctors have to say about that, because I suspect that those kinds of decisions about whether someone is suitable to go for that kind of surgery should be made by their doctor, not necessarily by an RHA contracting with a private service provider.

A number of times the constituents of Edmonton-Centre have talked about getting lost in the rhetoric here. Every time I go back to the beginning and try and work my way through the different arguments that I've now heard about this, I don't get very far. Was there a need for legislation to regulate private hospitals and private health care in this province? No question. Nobody on this side has ever disagreed with that. We all recognize the need to be able to regulate private health care and private hospitals.

The Premier says that this Bill 11 will reduce waiting lists and reduce pain and suffering. Well, a couple of points there. This government is really good at taking the credit for things that it may not have done and not taking the responsibility for things that it shouldn't be getting the credit for. For example, I don't know that the price of a barrel of oil and the ability to balance the budget on that really had much to do with the government. I think it had to do with the price of oil. In this case, you know, what did that pain and suffering get caused from? I think it got caused from a number of cuts to the health care system and choices that the government made, that caused some of those waiting lists.

I won't say that the government caused all the waiting lists. We do have an increasing population in Alberta. We certainly have to deal with that increase in volume. But everybody seems to want to talk about those long waiting lists, and I don't think we can blame all of that on an increasing population. So the idea of reducing these waiting lists – we don't have enough doctors and nurses. Doctors and nurses fled Alberta and went to other places. I still can't understand how opening up private clinics is going to shorten those waiting lists. Where are the doctors and nurses supposed to come from? When you've got a supply and demand situation, I think that the doctors and nurses are likely to move over to the private system, where they're going to be wooed with higher money, and leave the public system. So we still don't have more surgeries being performed in the public system.

I thought this whole thing about private clinics was to take the weight off, that they would take the extra lines and allow a whole bunch more work to be done in the public system. By whom? Who's left? Where are these doctors and nurses supposed to come from? In addition to that, the minister has never been able to answer my questions about the availability of surgical suites for residents to practise in, for want of a better word. My apologies to those in the medical profession. I don't know what you call it. I understand that as a resident you must spend a certain amount of time . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Excuse me, Edmonton-Centre. I do have to remind you that we are dealing with a subamendment.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. Thank you very much for the reminder.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Let's focus on the subamendment.

MS BLAKEMAN: I am certainly willing to talk about the subamendment, which is covering a number of things, including public hospitals and approved surgical facilities. I'm talking about how that's going to get staffed. If we don't have the staff, how do we create the positions for the new staff when those residents cannot get time in those surgical suites, particularly as we have more surgical suites opening in the private clinics? They won't allow the residents to observe or to practise. That's a real catch-22, and I'm not hearing any answers. This is the second or third time I've raised that issue.

Another question that has come up is that the Associate Minister for Health and Wellness underlined several times and with great drama that there would be no facility fee being paid to the private clinics. But something that's occurred to me is that we now have this foldable lens that's going to be paid by the government, but we also had quite a debate going on about how much those foldable lenses actually cost. I think we have Lamont hospital talking $200, their ability to do it for that amount of money, yet people at private clinics were being charged up to $750 an eye. There's quite a difference there. That's five hundred bucks difference. So my question is: will the government be paying the private clinics that use this foldable lens the same rate at which they pay the Lamont hospital for this surgery, or will they be paying what the private clinics currently charge for any enhanced service? I think the taxpayers would have a lot to say, not only if their tax dollars are going to subsidize private business, but they're going to pay those kinds of truly enhanced fees that go with the enhanced service. Why do the people in Edmonton-Centre, if this is the case – and please, answer the question. Why should the people in Edmonton-Centre and elsewhere in Alberta have to be paying a private clinic $750 when the Lamont hospital manages to do the same surgery for $200? I look forward to the minister's response to that question.

Now, we also have the whole idea of insured and uninsured services in this particular amendment and subamendment being discussed along with it. I'm really glad that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark raised that inside of her subamendment, because it's certainly an issue that's been raised with me a number of times. When you start talking insured services and uninsured services, the first thing that happens is that certainly the seniors in Edmonton-Centre start going: "I've been there before. We used to have things that were insured, and then the government deinsured them, delisted them. We weren't involved in the consultation. We didn't know what had happened. In many cases we didn't receive any notification about it. We didn't know until we'd actually gone to the doctor or to the clinic or to whatever medical service." Had it, then: "Oh, by the way, this is no longer covered. Can you get out your wallet or your credit card, please?" This is a real shock to seniors and to anyone that is living on a fixed income, because they didn't plan to spend that extra money. So the concept of whether you've got an insured service or an uninsured service is a really important one and needs to go in, and this amendment is proposing to do that quite clearly.

I just have a few minutes left, Madam Chairman, but there are some points that were raised by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek that I just want to comment on. She raised the idea of sustainability of the health care system. I found that a really interesting concept, because I don't view health care like a tree or an oil well or coal, where you're worrying about whether we can harvest enough and can we get more of it from somewhere. I think the point about health care and sustainability is political will and the will of the people. Frankly, if that is the single most important thing to the people of Alberta and they want full service health care and they're willing to pay for it, then that's what should be delivered to them. So I think sustainability is about political will and following the will of the people, not some sort of definition that comes from natural resource development.

MS OLSEN: Nonsustainable.

MS BLAKEMAN: Nonsustainable. Thank you. Nonsustainable resources.

Health care is a service and in some cases a product that is offered by the government to citizens by way of a publicly administered, single-tiered health care system. At least, I hope it still will be.

Madam Chairman, I'm going to have to rise to speak to this amendment again because I've made notes and I can't read my writing anymore. So I'll have to try and search through and find out what the rest of my notes were trying to say. I look forward to continued debate on subamendment SA1.

Thank you very much, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I've had indication – Minister of Health and Wellness, did you wish to speak?

MR. JONSON: Not at this point, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to the subamendment as proposed by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark. Once again I'm rising to urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support the initiative from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Yesterday we talked at length about insured surgical services and what exactly that means to the public health care system in this province. I referred to the document that was put out by the government on November 17, 1999. This document was the first stage of the plan to further privatize our public health care system. However, in that document we described services, interestingly enough, as insured.

Now, we go along further in the debate and we wonder why this amendment has come forward, and we wonder why it is so suitable and why all members of the Assembly should support this initiative. At least you have to give the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark credit for trying. She is working diligently to take a very, very poor piece of legislation and trying to improve it.

The majority of Albertans, Madam Chairman, are very concerned not only about their health care system but about democracy and free speech. It keeps coming back and back and back to the statement that the Premier used in Fort McMurray in the 1997 election, and that was: I believe in free speech as long as you say the right thing.

I realize that my comments should be on the amendment, and in light of what happened this evening, I shall keep them to the amendment. We look at what has been done with taxpayers' money, and we look at what's been accomplished or at least tried, because it is yet to be seen if this amendment will be successful. We look at this study funded by the taxpayers, by Cam Donaldson, PhD, and Gillian Currie, PhD, experts at the University of Calgary.

Now, this is the interim study, and I'm very, very anxious to receive the final report. Perhaps I can get my own personal copy from the hon. minister of health. I understand that it is near completion. It's going to be, I think, an interesting read not only for hon. members but for the public. But there is no published study of the efficiency of the purchase of surgical services and private facilities by public funders such as regional health authorities.

Now, when the hon. member proposes that we restrict an approved surgical facility to 12 hours or less, what the hon. member is doing is saving Alberta taxpayers money. We know that the existing clinics, the day clinics as they're called, are well regulated within existing legislation. We do not need Bill 11 for those 52 or 53 clinics that already exist. We don't need this legislation. What we need this legislation for is to provide these overnight stays, and as a result of these overnight stays these health entrepreneurs, these providers of market medicine are going to need Bill 11. But if we all vote for the hon. member's amendment, then there will be no market niche for them, because there will be no overnight stays, and the first finding of the interim report will be honoured. It will be recognized by all members of this Assembly – and it may be recognized by some hon. members sooner than others – that this is not the way to improve our health care system.

Now, we can say: what should we do? Well, we don't need an approved surgical facility that requires a patient stay of over 12 hours. We don't need any of that. We should open up hospital beds. We should open up operating theatres, and these operating theatres and these beds are already built. It would be nice to say to all hon. members, when debating this subamendment, that maybe those beds would never be needed, but in case they are, they're there. Emergency rooms and the crisis we have in emergency care I talked about last night. In emergency rooms people wouldn't have to wait for up to 48 hours, sometimes longer on weekends, to get to one of these beds. In an approved surgical facility with the overnight stay we get into what is called the bricks and mortar argument. In this regional health authority there is sufficient capacity to last – and this is according to the CEO of the regional health authority – until the year 2008.

Now, it's a different situation in Calgary. I can understand if some hon. members are a little bit reluctant to see the truth about this amendment. Two hospitals have been closed in Calgary and a third has been demolished, but an approved surgical facility is not the answer, and I can understand the hon. minister from Calgary-Varsity. In that part of Calgary they would have been served very well by the hospital that was demolished. However, when we use an approved surgical facility, it's not going to pick up what that hospital used to provide Calgarians.

I believe I'm quoting from memory here, Madam Chairman. Earlier in the debate, going back to 1994, the hon. minister of international and intergovernmental affairs said that the Foothills hospitals was going to be adequate as an inner-city hospital, because in some other jurisdictions, I believe, it could be used for that, but that is the furthest from the truth. This is why this approved surgical facility and this idea, this amendment as proposed, is an excellent way of taking Bill 11 and actually diffusing the situation.

Whenever we talk about an approved surgical facility that allows a 12-hour stay or less, one that is going to be allowed as Bill 11 exists now, it is essentially a private hospital. It is essentially a private hospital if it allows overnight . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I do ask you to talk about relevance. We are dealing with subamendment SA1. I've had to remind each and every member, but I would ask if we could focus our debate, our dialogue on the subamendment, please.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. I certainly am. Madam Chairman, I'm trying to display to all hon. members that by adding "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours" after "approved surgical facility" is making it quite understandable for all hon. members. When we talk about a private hospital, that certainly is what has my constituents and the majority of Albertans concerned. They say to me: if I go in there and there are hospital corners on the sheets, then it's a hospital. Those are their words. So when we look at this amendment, through the keen legislative mind of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, she is removing private hospitals from all talk in Bill 11. She's simply doing that by this amendment, by restricting the stay to 12 hours or less, and there is going to be no one, hopefully, that is going to try to have a private hospital under those conditions. This is what the majority of Albertans are concerned about, the private hospitals. They know the difference. They know that the Walter C. Mackenzie Health Sciences Centre is a hospital. They know that the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota is a hospital.

Facts that every hon. member should know about the private versus the public health care system – because what we're also talking about here in this amendment is the two-tiered system, the public hospitals and this "approved surgical facility" that requires a stay by the patient. Now, in this amendment if it's accepted by the House, Madam Chairman, it will be 12 hours, but if it's not, then we're simply talking about a private hospital. All hon. members of this House should know that where we have so many private hospitals, in America for instance, health care administration costs. In this province administration costs are certainly going to go up with the contracts that we're looking at here, and sure we're looking at them in this amendment. We are looking at them in this section. Administration costs are going to go up. That is the joy, the benefit of our system, but costs in the private American system are $995 per person. In our Canadian public system they are $248 per person.

Now, we will lose if we do not vote for this amendment. We will lose our economic advantage in this country. I'm not going to go into that in detail because I've spoken about that before in this Assembly. Hon. members across the Assembly are very proud to talk about the Alberta advantage, but we would be selling out our Alberta advantage if we were not to support the amendment and restrict these approved surgical facilities or private hospitals to less than the 12-hour stay. You can say anything you want about our system, our Canadian public health care system, and how it's been devised over the last 30 years, but you must admit that it is far more efficient and it gives us an economic advantage that our neighbours to the south do not have.

With private health care – and that's what we're going to have. That's what we're going to have here in this amendment, a public hospital or an approved surgical facility. That's the two tiers. That's the parallel stream we will have if we allow this to come to pass and become law, Madam Chairman. We will have, eventually, Albertans and Canadians that are without any form of health care. This will be a step backwards. This whole bill – I know I'm getting off the subject and the subamendment here – is a step backwards. We're going backwards because we are increasing the section of our health care delivery system that will be provided in an inefficient way through the private sector.

Now, we look at the amount of business, and we can say to start off on this amendment that with an approved surgical facility the door is just open a little bit. The amount of business which the approved surgical facility will receive from the health authorities is going to be very small. It's going to be very, very small, but we look at other parts of the health care administration system. We look at long-term care. We look at how the regional health authorities are taking that out, and they're delivering that through a series of contracts here and a series of contracts there. We don't have any accountability for this.

The private surgical facilities that require a stay by the patient of under 12 hours: will they provide faster access to those who pay? Whether it's a 12-hour stay or whether it is an indefinite stay, will we talk about the delivery or their offer of enhanced services? I'm looking forward, when we get further into debate on Bill 11, to the discussion we're going to have about enhanced services.

At this time I'd like to cede the floor to one of my colleagues. In closing, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to say yes to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and support her courageous effort to take what is really one of the worst pieces of legislation I've seen in my short time in this Assembly – it had hardly got to committee when there was a rush to table 14 amendments. And we went through this long process. We went through this long, long process. We went through panels, the blue ribbon panels. We went through the whole exercise of Bill 37. We went through the Premier's speech in November.

MS BLAKEMAN: A fireside chat?

MR. MacDONALD: It was sort of like a fireside chat, but it certainly wasn't a New Deal for the people of Alberta. It certainly wasn't an FDR style fireside chat, because it had been discovered by all Albertans when they got the bill in their mail that this is an attempt to privatize their health care system and further increase this manner of delivering services with a two-tiered, parallel system.

With those remarks, Madam Chairman, I cede the floor to one of my hon. colleagues. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I've been listening here this evening to what is being said, and I couldn't resist but to rise and make some comments on the approved surgical facilities' 12-hour stay. I think there's maybe a little bit of misunderstanding. When we say over a 12-hour stay, what we're talking about is that sometimes there may be somebody who has minor surgery who needs observation that requires an overnight stay. This way here, taking that particular surgery out of the public system and doing it in a private surgical facility, would alleviate the pressures out there and allow somebody else to go into the public system and receive a service that requires more medical attention than possibly one that could be done safely, efficiently, and effectively in an approved surgical facility that would have overnight stays.

Since I guess the beginning of session, we've heard nothing but "private health bill." Well, I want to make it clear that there is no such thing as a private health bill. What we have is the Alberta Health Care Protection Act. I see the members opposite don't even want to hear because they know they're wrong by making false representations . . . [interjections]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. Order. Hon. members, there's one member speaking, and that's the hon. Member for Redwater. Please let us continue.

MRS. SLOAN: But he's not making any sense.

MR. BRODA: Madam Chairman, I sat here all evening listening to the people opposite, listening to members on this side as well, and I think I deserve the courtesy to continue speaking. And if I'm not making sense, neither is that member over there. I think there was a member that mentioned free speech. Obviously they don't believe in that as well. Tell the truth when you go out there instead of . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chairman is going to ask you for relevance. We are dealing with a subamendment. Please, let's be relevant here.

MR. BRODA: It is very irrelevant, but anyhow, Madam Chairman, thank you for the reminder.

We are talking about the subamendment to an amendment. Yes, we have had 14 amendments that were put into place, and we've been listening to Albertans. As one member said, that's why the amendments are here. We are listening to Albertans. We're making reasoned amendments, not making some subamendments to amendments just to delay time and have rhetoric here this evening and yesterday without making any sense, if that's what you want to call sense.

Going on to the amendment, Madam Chairman, the "approved surgical facilities" that we're talking about and, again, overnight stays. If we say 12 hours, what happens if you go into a facility and have surgery done at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and you do have to have observation overnight because of anesthetics or whatever? It is probably very, very minor surgery, but you need observation. We're not permitted to do that, so by allowing overnight stays, we would allow that particular procedure to follow, that an individual could get – or the physician is the one who's going to determine what kind of surgery will be provided in a surgical facility. Now, when we talk about private surgical facilities, those will only be put into place if the regional health authority can see that there is a need for them in their own region. Speaking of my region, I don't even know if we'll ever see any private surgical facilities because there is no need for them.

So the fear out there, telling everyone that you're going to have overnight stays, you're going to become a hospital – well, I think that's very false, and I think a lot of people that are hearing this are really saying: is that true? When I go out there and explain it to my people, they say: that's not what we've heard. So I think it's important, because the thing is that what is being spread out there has been very untruthful. I think it's about time the opposition sat down and listened to what they're talking about and what kind of false information they're spreading in our communities.

Madam Chairman, the overnight stay in the subamendment by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is an amendment that I think would restrict us from doing any different types. If we look at technology today, we have changes in technology. The surgical procedures we're seeing are different than what we saw 10 years ago. You can have a gallbladder operation which is only a half-inch incision that is done laparoscopically or done overnight. But sometimes there may be a need for additional surgery in gallbladder operations rather than laparoscopic which may need observation overnight, so that's not restricting them to having to go only into a hospital. It could be done safely in a surgical facility.

Madam Chairman, I think we need Bill 11. It gives regulations to our private surgical facilities that we don't have right now. We've heard from the College of Physicians and Surgeons saying: we need regulations. This bill will place the regulations to the private surgical facilities. I think we've even heard from the federal government that the status quo is not an option, that we have to look at change, and I think we're innovative. This province has always been a front-runner to all provinces in Canada here, and I think not only in Canada but in the world. When people look at Alberta, they know that we have done the best possible for everybody. We're the envy of all the world, and people are moving to this province because of what this government has done.

When we talk about our Premier, that there's no trust for him, I have a lot of trust for the Premier. I think he's one of the most honest persons I've ever met, and he's got a lot of integrity, not like the members on the opposite side.

With that, Madam Chairman, I move that we rise and report progress.

Privilege
MLA Access to the Chamber

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before we leave Committee of the Whole, I said that I would address an item the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo brought up earlier. I did in fact talk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, who did go out to find the members that were mentioned, and the chair would duly note that the members did finally make it to the committee. We are pleased that they did.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has given notice that he would like to raise a point of privilege or a question of privilege with the Speaker tomorrow after question period regarding the MLA access. The chair would duly recognize that this can be done tomorrow, and I thank the hon. member for his indulgence.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MR. SHARIFF: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 11.

Madam Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Third Reading

Bill 4
Surveys Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has made a number of comments in regard to this particular bill, and I've given her my undertaking that I will review those questions. My understanding is that a memo has been prepared in complete answer to the inquiry she made when we last discussed this in second reading, and I'm prepared to look into the status of that particular memo and answer fully accordingly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to hear that a memo is in transit to me regarding these issues that we had with this bill. I feel that at this point in time I'm satisfied with the answers being supplied. If there are any concerns still outstanding after receiving the memo, I will be in contact with the minister on the issue.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I do have to ask the hon. Minister of Environment whether he would please move third reading.

MR. MAR: I move third reading of Bill 4, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To conclude my remarks at third reading on this bill, I am looking forward to reviewing the memo sent by the minister, and subject to that, any concerns I have will be brought up with him in writing with regard to the issues we discussed.

Other than that small outstanding item, we don't have any concerns with this bill, and we're happy to support it at the third reading stage.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Bill 2
First Nations Sacred Ceremonial
Objects Repatriation Act

MS CALAHASEN: Madam Speaker, I'm going to make a few comments before I move third reading. This is a bill that has been very important to aboriginal people. First Nations and Metis people are looking forward to this bill being passed. In fact, elders continue to reiterate that we need to ensure that these sacred ceremonial objects are returned to their rightful owners, and with elders being part of the process, which I will ensure occurs, I am positive it will work out extremely well.

I thank all the people who have contributed to this debate, Madam Speaker, because this is such an important bill for aboriginal people across this province. I thank all those who have taken part in this debate.

I move third reading of Bill 2.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's good to be able to get up and agree on a bill and its swift movement through the House.

I've brought up my issues and concerns regarding this bill. I still have some concern that it's paternalistic. I think the reality is that the section that gives the minister full control still bothers me. However, I would appreciate it at some point if the hon. minister could forward the regulations, when they're complete, so that we have a good sense of what's happening. Then we can also be sure to pass the information along.

In our discussions we talked about the need for the aboriginal community to take control of their own environment and their own world. This is part of a step to doing that. It's part of a step to self-government. It does still cause me some concern. I often think that if we're going to achieve something, we should do it the whole way and not partway, but this is a step in the right direction. I'm hoping my questions at some point will get answered.

Madam Speaker, hopefully this bill will be closed off very quickly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A couple of points I wanted to make. I'd just indicate, as I had done at second reading and then at committee, that while I support Bill 2, I register again my concern that throughout the entire course of the treatment of this bill, we never received a satisfactory explanation in terms of why we have not only the provision to make regulations but a minister who has the absolute discretionary power to say no. Even if all the provisions in the statute have been met, even if all the regulations have been followed to a T, the minister under Bill 2 still has the power to nix, to say no to a proposed transfer, repatriation.

Madam Speaker, I've listened to explanations that have been offered, and people talk about this being what the elders want or this being what certain aboriginal organizations wish to see, but I suspect that it was a question that you had groups agreeing to sort of the principle of the bill, not necessarily agreeing to the absolute discretion that's vested in the minister. I actually have to say "a minister" because this is one of those things where the minister could be any one of a number of people, anybody designated under the Government Organization Act.

So the problem still persists, not reason enough to – I was going to say torpedo the bill, as if one member could do that. It wouldn't be reason enough to vote against the bill, but it continues to be a concern. All of us feel a degree of responsibility for every bill that leaves this Assembly. Somewhere down the road people are going to look at this and say: well, how is it that legislators could agree to give a minister this absolute, wide, sweeping discretion without setting out some criteria, without setting out some kind of fairness test?

We just finished a little while ago dealing with Bill 11, which once again has huge discretionary powers, and it just seems to be setting the new standard for lawmaking. It's not a new standard; it's a standard we see in a lot of statutes in this province.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, I know you didn't want a tour through the 10 least favored elements of current legislation in the province. I think I've said enough. I'm simply reinforcing a concern I'd expressed earlier with respect to the bill. Having said all of that, I'm going to take my place, and I'll be voting with, I expect and would hope, all members in support of the principle of the bill, which involves repatriation of aboriginal valued objects to the people and the nations from which they came.

I'd conclude by acknowledging again the excellent work of the Glenbow institute, that has, I think, shown some real leadership. Let's also acknowledge the work of people in the office of the Department of Community Development, who I think showed some leadership in this area as well. So a lot of people can be proud of this bill as well as the bill's sponsor. Let's just hope that we'll be able to bring it in next year and touch up the discretionary power provision that's too vague now.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure this evening just to make a few comments before we vote on Bill 2, the First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act. Again, I do agree with the Member for Calgary-Buffalo that certainly I can accept the principles of the bill.

The concerns I have are the concerns that were expressed by others as well that there is a paternalistic approach to this bill. I certainly don't see anything wrong with the repatriation of the sacred objects to the First Nations. Certainly they are more than capable of taking care of their own artifacts, and this self-determination is one of the things I would have liked to have seen in this bill, but it certainly does not omit them being included at some later time.

I do continue to have some concerns with the amount of power given to the minister under regulations, but I do support this bill, and I would also urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I would also like to compliment the member from Lesser Slave Lake for all of the work that she has done on this bill and the passion and concern she showed in speaking to it.

Thank you, very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs to close debate.

MS CALAHASEN: Just to say that regarding the regulations, as I indicated, I'll make sure we send the information over to the critic for the opposition members.

In terms of looking at some of the issues that have been brought up, I really feel strongly that whenever we're doing something, we have to ensure that, as the elders have indicated to me, these objects go to their rightful owners. We have to ensure that there is a mechanism in place for that to occur. They have certainly brought forward some recommendations that we will be following. I think it's very important to look at that when we see some of the regulations that have come forward in a number of instances. We've made decisions for aboriginal people in the past without their involvement. We need to ensure that whatever we do, they are part of this process. As I indicated, we'll continue to make sure they do that.

So on that basis, Madam Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 2.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

head: Second Reading

Bill 20

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure tonight to move second reading of the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000.

Last year people from across the province sat down at the justice summit to tell us how we could make our good justice system better. One of the main themes that came out of the summit was simplification: make the justice system more accessible and user friendly. We have listened to what Albertans have been saying, so access and simplification are the main focuses of this bill.

Madam Speaker, in dealing with the court system, it's never easy, and for Albertans, trying to work their way through a legal case can seem quite daunting. If you will allow me a moment to describe our court structure, you will see what I mean.

We have three levels of court in Alberta. The lowest level is the Provincial Court, which sits full-time in 23 communities and part-time in 51 others.

Provincial Court is broken down into three divisions. The Provincial Court, Civil Division, hears small claims cases under $7,500. This level of court provides Albertans with quick civil remedies and with relatively little cost.

The Criminal Division is the court of first appearance for all criminal cases. It holds trial and preliminary hearings for these cases.

The Family Division and Youth Division deal with maintenance, guardianship, and custody and access matters not dealt with under the Divorce Act and all matters under the Child Welfare Act except adoption. It also hears all cases under the Young Offenders Act.

The Court of Queen's Bench is the superior court for criminal and civil matters and sits full time in 11 locations and on specified days in two others. It hears criminal cases by judge and jury or judge alone, as well as civil cases. In addition, it deals with family matters including divorces and maintenance and custody and access matters under the Divorce Act. Issues of guardianship, adoption, custody and access, spousal support, and maintenance for children of both married and unmarried parents are also included. Finally, foreclosures and bankruptcies are also handled by the Court of Queen's Bench.

Then, Madam Speaker, there's another court, the Surrogate Court, which sits in the same locations as the Court of Queen's Bench. This court hears cases pertaining to wills and estates as well as applications under the Dependent Adults Act. The jurisdiction of the Surrogate Court to hear dependent adult matters has recently been called into question in the courts. Some decisions have held that only the Court of Queen's Bench can deal with dependent adult matters, even though the same justices serve on both the Court of Queen's Bench and the Surrogate Court.

Finally, Madam Speaker, we have the Court of Appeal of Alberta, which sits only in Edmonton and Calgary, and hears appeals of decisions made in the lower courts.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, sometimes it can be a job for Albertans just to determine which court to go to, and then there's the matter of hearing the case. This bill aims to simplify that process for Albertans.

As I said earlier, the Provincial Court sits in 74 communities across the province, while the Court of Queen's Bench is only located in 13. It makes sense that to give the most access to Albertans, we should broaden the jurisdiction of the Provincial Court, and this bill accomplishes that goal in a number of ways.

First, the bill allows Provincial Court judges to carry out some procedures that currently can only be carried out in a higher court. For instance, if an individual breaches a Provincial Court order, right now the case must be heard in the Court of Queen's Bench. In our view, this is an unnecessary step when a Provincial Court judge is already familiar with the individual and the background of the case.

With this amendment the Provincial Court will be able to deal directly with breaches of its orders, as well as breach of orders granted by justices of the peace. This means that serious issues like breaches of emergency protection orders can be dealt with quickly, particularly in areas where there isn't a Queen's Bench location nearby. I know this would be of assistance to many Albertans who are being protected by emergency protection orders.

In addition, Provincial Court will be enabled to deal with tenancy agreements, and it will be able to deal with contractual issues more effectively. Under these changes Provincial Court will be able to terminate or order compliance with a contract. It will also have the power to grant orders for the return of personal property other than land, normally referred to as a replevin order.

At the present time, Provincial Court can only order monetary payment for civil claims. I'll give you an example of what I'm talking about. Let's say I'm taking a case to a court in the Civil Division of Provincial Court because a person borrowed a stereo from me and failed to return it, saying it was given as a gift. My only option in Provincial Court is to sue for the monetary value of the good. Under this amendment the court could order a replevin. In other words, they could order that the stereo be returned to me, something that right now can only be done in the Court of Queen's Bench.

So these changes, Madam Speaker, will allow Albertans to bring more matters before the Provincial Court, where proceedings are less formal and where they can represent themselves in many cases for much less cost than required to hire a lawyer and also, as I mentioned earlier, in many, many more locations around the province. It will also free up Queen's time in the Court of Queen's Bench so that other matters can be heard more quickly, and that is part of what we're striving to do.

The bill will also simplify the organization of the Provincial Court by enabling the three separate divisions, civil, criminal, and family and youth, to be merged. In other words, we'll take out the statutory requirement for three civil divisions. The operation of the court would still function in those types of divisions, but by removing that formal structure, it will allow the court to organize itself more efficiently, and it will allow the Chief Judge of the court to ensure that judges of the court sit in whichever area they're most needed at the time.

For example, if there's a long waiting list in family and youth court, it may be possible for the Chief Judge and the assistant chief judges to organize the judges on the bench who would normally hear civil claims or who might normally be in the criminal division to have them sit in family and youth division and hear cases in those divisions and thus put the bench power, so to speak, where the immediate need is. It will also help us as we look to the longer term in terms of the unification of the family court perhaps, which is a process which is under way right now. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. minister, you do have the floor.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you. When you were waving at me, I was wondering.

In any event, what it will allow is for the Chief Judge and the Assistant Chief Judge to better organize the bench power, as I said, to areas of need, and it will provide for a better alignment after the review is done, for example, with the task force on the unification of the family court or perhaps as we look further at unification of the trial division. It will allow us to do that more straightforwardly. The courts will continue to be administered in the same way as they are now, but by eliminating the formal divisions, it will be possible to, as I said, assign judges to meet the needs of the court with more flexibility and efficiency.

This bill, Madam Speaker, raises the potential civil claims limit of Provincial Court from $10,000 to $25,000. The current actual limit, as I mentioned, is $7,500. That's set pursuant to the regulations. By raising the potential limit, we advise the public that we're moving in that direction, and it allows us, as and when we have the adequate resources to deal with the increased limit, to raise that limit on a progressive basis. Again, that will provide the public of Alberta access to civil claims resolution at lower costs.

With the success of the civil claims mediation program, the increased workload in Provincial Court has been successfully handled, on the previous increases in limit, and in fact the use of mediation and pretrial conferences for civil claims has worked so well that these amendments put forward will enshrine them in legislation.

By increasing the potential civil claims limit, we have the opportunity to further increase the actual limit, as I said, as resources come available.

In addition, Provincial Court judges will be allowed to award costs in family court matters where a party has been guilty of delays or has brought forward frivolous proceedings. This puts a tangible penalty in place for those who bring forward unnecessary court actions or who waste the court's time, time which could be used to hear other cases, and the time and money of others involved in the proceedings. Those who are guilty of delays or frivolous proceedings may be required to pay the other party's court fees.

A further change will result in the broadening of a section of the Provincial Court Act that allows for civil judgments out of Provincial Court to be filed and enforced in Court of Queen's Bench. With this change, orders granted in Provincial Court for the payment of money under the new access enforcement amendments of the Domestic Relations Act can also be filed and enforced in Queen's Bench. This means that remedies under the Civil Enforcement Act, such as writs of enforcement or garnishee summons, can also be used to collect the money owing.

Another issue that we're aware of is that creditors who receive civil claims judgments need a more effective means of collecting those judgments. So these amendments will provide for default hearings in Provincial Court.

At the present time when defendants fail to appear on a claim in Provincial Court, a judge can rule in favour of the plaintiff without hearing evidence, but the same rule is not in place, Madam Speaker, when a defendant has a counterclaim and the plaintiff fails to appear. So changes are being proposed in this bill which will allow the corollary to occur. That again will help speed up processes and access for litigants in Alberta.

The bill also deals with issues of when administrative decisions of the Chief Provincial Court Judge and Assistant Chief Judge can be challenged in the courts. The amendment ensures that purely administrative decisions on the part of the Chief Judge or Assistant Chief Judge will not be routinely challenged in the Court of Queen's Bench, tying up court time and resources. This will not prevent any clearly unreasonable decisions from being reviewed by the Court of Queen's Bench.

In addition we have put forward a number of other amendments which will benefit Albertans involved in the legal process. For example, the bill amalgamates the Court of Queen's Bench and the Surrogate Court. As I mentioned before, judges of the Court of Queen's Bench are also judges of the Surrogate Court, and it seems an artificial distinction in this day and age to require them to remove one hat and put on the other just because they're hearing a different type of case. By amalgamating the courts, it becomes much easier to deal with all of the issues at hand. The Surrogate Court has a very specific mandate of what it can and can't hear, and even though the judges are the same judges, anything that arises in Surrogate Court that doesn't directly fall under the jurisdiction of the Surrogate Court must now be dealt with in Queen's Bench.

Other changes. We're bringing forward a civil claim appeal. Anyone bringing forward a civil claim appeal will be required to file transcripts within three months instead of six. Again, when we're looking for access and ease of process, litigants want a speedier result. As transcripts are now available much sooner than in the past, this restriction will ensure that civil claims appeals are not delayed unnecessarily.

Other administrative changes enable Provincial Court to strike out pleadings or enter default judgments when parties fail to attend a pretrial conference. Provincial Court judges will be able to award costs for pretrial conferences as well as for hearings. Pretrial conferences are important to help narrow down issues before the trial begins and sometimes, Madam Speaker, even to resolve the issues without the need of a trial.

In addition, Provincial Court will be granted the authority to deal with the destruction of exhibits. That's currently an authority that the Court of Queen's Bench has, but the Provincial Court does not have that authority.

Other minor amendments are included in terms of dealing with registered mail, et cetera.

The Provincial Court Act will be amended to allow any person to apply for access to a child if the parents are deceased. This fills a gap in current legislation which only allows an application to be made when parents are living apart.

Finally, the bill makes changes to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. Back in 1989 the limit for what were called part 3 tickets was set at $400. These are tickets where you can't be arrested or serve any jail time for failing to pay the fine. However, they can be enforced by placing restrictions on your motor vehicle privileges, like not being allowed to register a vehicle until the fine is paid. Usually these tickets are issued for violations of the Highway Traffic Act, the Motor Transport Act, and the Motor Vehicle Administration Act. We're increasing the limit for part 3 tickets to $1,000 to reflect changing economic times.

I should also advise that we're working with the federal government to allow our provincial ticketing scheme to issue penalty tickets for some minor federal offences. Some of these federal penalties already exceed our current $400 limit. Other changes would make it easier to pay traffic tickets by giving Albertans the option – and I would underscore that, the option – to pay at registry offices rather than just courthouses. Albertans will still be able to pay offence tickets at the courthouse or by mail-in, but this provides one more option to them. A small fee, of course, would apply at registry offices, but that would be a choice that the person paying the ticket would make. As I stressed, they do have the option of paying them at the courthouse.

Simplicity and access: that's what Albertans have asked for in their justice system. Madam Speaker, that's the object of this bill. It's one of the steps that we're taking to simplify the system and provide better access for Albertans to their courts.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I'd like to thank the opposition critic in this area and the Opposition House Leader, who I had an opportunity to talk to about the bill in bringing it forward. The bill covers a number of justice statutes which we've encompassed in one bill. It's convenient. They deal with similar theme areas. It allows us to bring forward a number of amendments to a number of acts which we wanted to deal with in a packaged way which makes sense, and I appreciate the co-operation that we've had from the opposition in allowing me to do it in this manner.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I hope that members opposite hadn't thought that the bill would come in and be introduced and there would be no opposition commentary on it. In fact, I want to tell my friend from Calgary-North Hill that I think we're actually under Standing Order 29(c). That would be:

A member other than the mover, speaking in debate on a Bill proposing substantive amendment to more than one statute, shall be limited to 30 minutes' speaking time.

So in fact, as I understand it, unless I'm advised otherwise, I'd think that if I needed it, I'd have a good 30 minutes to review Bill 20.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I think, hon. member, that we will tell the Assembly that the mover of the bill under that Standing Order has 90 minutes.

MR. DICKSON: Quite, quite. To disarm me further, the Minister of Justice said some very complimentary things about my colleague and about this MLA, so that makes it really tough, then, to aggressively challenge the government on the bill. But, you know, I wasn't going to do that anyway.

Actually Bill 20 is for the most part pretty much a good-news story. People are always saying that the opposition is always so darn negative and are always poking away and saying that this isn't good enough and this doesn't meet the standard. You know, Madam Speaker, the reality is that too many bills don't measure up and don't meet the standard. But in this bill, it's a compliment to the Minister of Justice and his officials that in fact many of the things in here represent what Albertans want to see. They represent changes that are overdue in terms of our justice system, and they're reflective of a number of things that are very positive developments.

Now, it's not all perfect. I'm going to spend a minute, Madam Speaker, pointing out a few things that could be done better. For the most part, this is a bill that I'm still going through, but there's a darn good chance that some of my colleagues are going to be prepared to support Bill 20. We're still looking for some more feedback from people that are going to be directly affected. That continues to be a concern, but I'm happy to say that I don't think we're going to have to spend 17 or 18 hours going through Bill 20. Maybe only one bill a spring session warrants that kind of treatment, Madam Speaker.

Let me highlight a couple of things, though, in going through it that I think are worth comment, and I'm hopeful that people directly affected by the bill will take the time to communicate by e-mail, if they can get through to MLAs, and certainly the Official Opposition is looking for advice and input before we get much further on the bill.

One of the things that came to my attention immediately is on page 4, and it's section (6) of the proposed section 21.1. It's interesting. After we have just gone through this situation with his honour Judge Reilly, who had been the Provincial Court judge in the Cochrane-Canmore circuit, we've seen some interesting litigation over questions of the power of the chief provincial judge, the ability of that officer to designate and redesignate the areas in which different Provincial Court judges should operate. If members look at page 4, the proposed section 21.1(5)(a), (b), (c), and (d), it looks to me like there is a power that the province has decided they're going to codify.

Now, the Minister of Justice has accused me from time to time of being a codifier, probably just the nastiest thing one could say about another legislator, and I know he means it in a generous way. His argument would be that I think legislation should codify rather than leave things to the discretion of somebody, and you know, he's right.

For the most part I start off feeling maybe just a little distrustful, and I like to see things spelled out. I get a little nervous when I see broad discretionary power like we saw in Bill 2 and we see in Bill 11, but here we've got one where now I'm going to sort of change roles a little bit. I'm going to ask: is it perhaps appropriate that the Chief Judge should have this power? I want to be able to review more carefully the decision, and I'm not really sure of the justices who went to the Alberta Court of Appeal. As I recall, there was a trial judge, and I don't know whether it was Justice Mason or not who heard the first application, and then I think it went to the Alberta Court of Appeal, and we saw that judgment recently. I'm hopeful that my colleagues and I are going to have a chance to be able to review the lower court judgment, the Alberta Court of Appeal decision, and see if there is some discretion that we lose, Madam Speaker, by going through the provision that we see in section 4.

The provision in terms of eliminating the distinction between the criminal division, the civil division, family division, youth division makes some sense, because even now Provincial Court judges who are in criminal courts may do a bit of a tour where they spend some time in small claims court or whatever. That happens from time to time, and judges will tell you, as they've told me, Madam Speaker, that they find that's often a useful experience. They appreciate the chance, having done some small civil claims material, to be able to go and spend a little time in criminal court or to be able to go into youth and family court, but there's one nagging concern I've got, and I put this to the Minister of Justice.

What this nagging, niggling concern is is that many of us on this side support the notion of a unified family court, that notion where you develop a body of expertise. You get judges who specifically want to deal with those most vexing, complicated, challenging of all issues that lawyers can deal with. My own bias is showing, the issues in the area of family law. We've seen in Ontario and in Manitoba and in other places where they have done an integrated family court. Do you know what? It's been pretty darned effective.

One of the things I didn't hear the Minister of Justice address is: does he still have that interest in a unified family court? Now, I think in fact he does, but I'm not sure I heard him say that. If he did, I didn't hear it. I think it's important that we hear from the minister how we can allow, on the one hand, for an integration of all the provincial court judges despite the different sectors they work in and yet, on the other hand, be pursuing a unified family court. My caucus, unless since the last caucus meeting there's been a change of opinion, feels pretty strongly that we want to see the advantages of a unified family court.

MRS. SOETAERT: Absolutely.

MR. DICKSON: We need that kind of assurance. Well, we've got one colleague that is paying close attention, Madam Speaker. That's not bad; we've got one out of 82. [interjections] Oh, I'm sorry. I'm in big trouble now.

MR. SHARIFF: It must be a pretty boring speech.

MR. DICKSON: Well, it may well be a boring speech.

I said that in jest when I suggested there was only one other member paying close attention. I know that there is a roomful and of course you, Madam Speaker. I know that just because people listen with their eyes closed and the book open doesn't mean they're not paying attention to what's being said. I know that. It may be just a little fiction I like to manufacture for my own purposes, but that's what I like to believe.

Madam Speaker, there is a concern with this bill with regulation-making power. One would think that the Minister of Health and Wellness, who has endured how many questions about the regulation-making power in Bill 11, would have taken his colleague the Minister of Justice aside and said: you know, this just doesn't work in Alberta; this notion of secret lawmaking has got to come to an end. If we can't find a champion in the Minister of Justice to ensure that subordinate lawmaking is done in an open and responsive way and is something that's overseen by elected legislators, then who the heck is going to champion that on the government side?

Do we have to wait for new cabinet appointments? When the cabinet shuffle happens, let's say in a month, is it a question of having to start buttonholing the people we think may be in cabinet next time and start trying to see if we can develop a little sensitivity around this issue early in the hopes that they'll transport that with them when they move into cabinet? Madam Speaker, it might be you. I mean, we could go around and spin the dial. Who knows who is going to be in cabinet after the cabinet shuffle? Will one of those people be the champion? I'm afraid to say that the Minister of Justice, very able legislator and cabinet minister that he is, shows us in Bill 20 that he's not going to be our champion in terms of law and regulations, so we're going to have to find somebody to pursue that concern.

We have a provision that the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations outlining situations in which court fees can be waived. That's important because there are no provisions now in terms of a waiver of court fees. It's not just a Liberal researcher who shows up at the courthouse trying to get the latest scuttlebutt on some litigation involving the government of the province of Alberta. There are interested Albertans that try and do that.

Sometimes the fees are steep, very steep, Madam Speaker. Sometimes I think in this province we're just nickle-and-dimed. The fees for FOIP requests, fees for accessing court documents: every time you turn around, there's another user fee. But members should take some comfort. The Official Opposition Treasury critic, with his expertise in the area of the Eurig decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, has developed some particular expertise in that area. He's applying that expertise to a host of other user fees in the area of the court system, and I'm hopeful we're going to have a report, an analysis which is going to identify a number of others.

We saw some movement. I think the Surrogate Court fees have come down. It's a huge amount, $60 million. You know, there's a reason why the Eurig case was the one where the Supreme Court of Canada was given the platform and the opportunity to identify user fees as being illegal taxes. That's because it's through our court system that we find so many of those illegal taxes and user fees. To the everlasting embarrassment of many of us in Alberta, it was the province of Alberta that was an aggressive intervenor in that Supreme Court challenge. This was not a case – what do we call the former Provincial Treasurer now, in his hiatus period?

MR. SAPERS: The member from Edmonton-North.

MR. DICKSON: The Member for Red Deer-North.

MR. SAPERS: Well, he wants to be the member from Edmonton-North. That's right.

MR. DICKSON: In any event, the former Provincial Treasurer always used to make those speeches about what a great job we were doing in terms of responding to the Eurig decision, never to my knowledge ever acknowledging in this House that the province of Alberta was right there at the table fighting with the province of Ontario to try and defend illegal taxes. To read the factum of the province of Alberta is to weep. It is a document that is discouraging and depressing. Enough of that. Let's move on to some of the other things.

One of the positive things is the provision in section 5(a)(iii). I skipped over to that. That's on page 2. I'm not going exactly sequentially, Madam Speaker. I'm sort of bopping around here a little bit. The item is on page 2, section 5. Something that when I was Justice critic I always encouraged the provincial government to look at was raising the small claims fee, and we suggested $10,000. What the province did was actually bring in a change a couple of years ago that it could go as high as $10,000 but that it would be set by regulation. I think it is set at $7,500 now.

This is one where in fact the provincial government has trumped the opposition. We were looking for a $10,000 limit, and the Justice minister – and nobody ever accused him of being afraid of a challenge – has increased the provision to $25,000. The issue and the question that goes along with that, however, would be this, Madam Speaker. Is the money going to be there to hire the additional provincial court judges to make this work? We understand that there was a great deal of consternation on the part of the government for moving it from $5,000 to $7,500, and the argument was: it's going to cost us more money because we're going to have to hire more judges.

That was always a bit of a specious argument because on the other hand, you know, we have other judges. It means we've got more Queen's Bench judges. Now, the difference is that they're paid by the federal government whereas the Provincial Court judges are paid out of the Provincial Treasury. So we've got a little bit of: after you, Alphonse. It's sort of a question of everybody agreeing that we'd like to see small claims jurisdiction enlarge, but the question is: who's going to pay for the additional judges that's going to require? So we actually have quite an audacious, quite a bold move by our provincial government in proposing a $25,000 ceiling. You know, I support that, but I do want to know where the provincial judges are coming from there.

There may be members in this Assembly that decide that rather than running again, they'd like to apply for a Provincial Court judgeship, knowing that now there's going to be a need for new Provincial Court judges subject to the six-month cooling off period. Maybe what we should do is circulate a list. In our caucus we have sign-up lists to be a speaker to a bill. Well, if anybody here would like to have one of those new positions, we can distribute the list around and see who signs up.

Madam Speaker, that's a good item in 5(a).

Now, there's a provision for payment hearings in 5(b), and that's also a good move. You will have noticed that most of the things I'm saying are pretty positive, and this is another one.

We have a provision, though, that too much of this is being done by regulation so why don't we get that out of the way right now. I've always said, Madam Speaker, that I'm ready to retire the day the provincial government finally addresses regulations and says that we're going to . . . [interjections] Well, this may be my final offer. I've exhausted everything else. Maybe I could suggest that if the provincial government will commit to actually giving our friend from Banff-Cochrane, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, the power to actually deal with regulations, then maybe we're in a position where some of us can move on – well, not to our great reward or no reward – and then it's somebody else's turn to carry on.

So that's my challenge to the Minister of Justice. I think it's a great bargain. We'll send over the contract tomorrow. If we can take all the regulations here and get a commitment to submit them to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, boy, you know, we'd be able to get some real change going.

Madam Speaker, maybe the thing to do, maybe there's a spot in Calgary-West. Maybe the nominations haven't closed in Calgary-West yet, and maybe there are more people that should join that race.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, this is too much fun, and we've got a lot of stuff to deal with yet. I'm not sure how much of my 30 minutes I've got left, and we've barely started here. [interjection] Okay. Thank you very much, Madam Clerk.

MR. HANCOCK: You don't have to do it all at once.

MR. DICKSON: Well, there'll be some left for committee, I'm sure.

I should have mentioned before that I'm simply standing in for my colleague from Edmonton-Norwood, who has done, as is her usual custom, a much more organized presentation. So overlook the sloppiness tonight. When my colleague speaks, you're going to hear a very pinpoint analysis of the weaknesses in the bill. All I'm trying to do now is just hit some of the things that are a bit of a highlight for me.

I think there's a very good provision here in terms of authorizing pretrial conferences and mediation. I think that's a really important area. I know that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has a lot of mediation experience, and I think that's been very effective. I think that . . . [interjections]

Well, Madam Speaker, there may be other people that wish to speak. On the other hand, we may just want to go home. I would hope that my colleagues would stand because they're interested in this bill. [interjections] I'd like to think that was going to be a pat on the shoulder, an encouragement to keep on going. Who says you have to be delusional to be in opposition in Alberta, Madam Speaker? It isn't so.

Madam Speaker, just a couple of other things quickly to identify here. There's a provision in here – and I can't find it readily – to deal with contempt, and I think that's a positive thing.

The privative clause on page 4. I think everybody in the Legislature has now become an expert on the privative clause, what it means, what it doesn't mean, and I see it's in fact one of the interesting amendments we've got. In fact, the interesting amendment on Bill 11, the House amendment that's come forward, says nothing other than what the section currently says. It just says it in different words. It doesn't expand or restrict the notion. The minister of health may think he's somehow contracting or narrowing the scope of the privative clause, but as I read it in Bill 11, it's exactly the same after as it was before. I don't see any change.

Here we have a privative clause, but we know it's going to do something. It's going to mean that if there is a Provincial Court judge like His Honour Judge Reilly and there is an issue in terms of whether that judge can be exported to another part of the province, he would be denied that kind of redress. I think the Minister of Justice would agree. If this becomes law, we wouldn't see what happened most recently, where there was an application to the court that went on to the Court of Appeal. That wouldn't happen.

I guess we have to ask ourselves: is there any value in leaving that in? From an administrative point of view there's never anything good about an appeal or a judicial review, but sometimes there are issues of fairness that warrant some further review. That's a policy question. I haven't resolved in my own mind whether this is appropriate or inappropriate, but it's something that ought to be designated.

The provision in terms of contempt of the court, page 12, section 21.61, I think is interesting.

The management of exhibits. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar has raised a concern around what happens to exhibits in a Provincial Court trial. In fact, we've seen an issue recently on quite a famous environmental matter trial where there were matters that were put in front of that court, exhibits that members of the public were keenly interested in seeing. You know what? People may not recognize that pleadings are accessible but exhibits are not for the most part accessible. Madam Speaker, I think it's appropriate we see some provision dealing with exhibits. [interjections] There are so many things I can think of saying, but that's going to take us on longer and longer, so I'm going to try and fix my attention on the chair and we're going to try to get through this.

I think there are some useful provisions in terms of if both parents of a child are dead, a person would be able to make an application for access. I'm not sure how often this comes up. I haven't run into it very often. It looks like it was a gap that's now addressed by this.

We see the end of the Surrogate Court, and that's something that the Legal Archives Society may regard as a significant black day in the history of the province. I've always found it a bit of a nuisance. The Surrogate Court was never anything different than the old district court when we had a district court, then the trial division of the Court of Queen's Bench now. It's been a long time since I've looked at a style of cause in a document. It was always pretty silly. The difference, I understood, was that there was some additional money involved to somebody who sat as a Surrogate Court judge as well as a regular judge, so we've ended it. It was a bit of a fiction. I think it just meant a lot of articling students probably having documents rejected for errors in the style of cause. It probably confused members of the public who had to access the court system in terms of accessing documents and so on. So I think that's probably a very positive matter. In fact, I compliment the minister for moving on that.

The Contributory Negligence Act is amended so that the last clear chance rule is finished, and that's probably a good thing. The last clear chance rule made lots of sense before we had contributory negligence legislation. We have that now. It's well established. It's been the subject of a lot of judicial determination, so we know that's there.

The provision in terms of amendment to the Survival of Actions Act. There is a question of an estate claiming for loss of life expectancy, and that makes some sense as well.

So, Madam Speaker, far too many regulations. Some questions around some key parts but, on balance, a lot of actually really positive provisions in this act. The more I read through it the more I like it, but we have some questions we're looking for some information on, and we hope we'll be able to get that information sooner rather than later. I think this is one that has a lot of detail in it, and I'm hopeful members are going to have lots of latitude at the committee stage. Maybe we should tell the minister now that this is a bill that probably won't attract a lot of attention at second reading, and that's probably why I've gone maybe a little longer than members would have liked. Probably we won't hear a lot of other commentary on this at second reading.

MRS. SOETAERT: I might; you've inspired me. I want to talk about regulations.

MR. DICKSON: Well, maybe we'll hear some tonight. Maybe we'll hear some other second reading debate tonight. Certainly at the committee stage, Madam Speaker, we're going to be able to do a lot of work on this bill, and we'll be bringing those amendments forward. [Mr. Dickson's speaking time expired] Is that my 30 minutes already?

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice, I think, gave us a very, very good overview of this bill, and I think every member in this Assembly recognizes the amount of work and collaboration and consultation that went into developing this rather complex piece of legislation. I think the opposition critic has given some interesting comments on it.

I had intended to spend a few minutes on this bill, Madam Speaker, but in view of the hour I would suggest that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 11:53 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Opposition House Leader, do you have a notice that you want to present?

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, there's a matter that was going to be dealt with after question period. I'd given notice last day, and the chair of the committee had indicated that it would be dealt with at that time. I haven't done a formal written notice.

THE SPEAKER: That's fine. Notice has been given.
The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) earlier today I provided written notice to your office of my intention to raise the matter of privilege, which I hope I will have the opportunity to do later on.

Speaker's Ruling Privilege

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, notice has now been given that there will be two questions of privilege to be dealt with at the conclusion of question period today. In the 21 years that I've had the privilege of being a member of this House, I view these questions of privilege to be the most significant procedural matters that this Assembly will have to hear in 21 years.

So my advice to those who are rising this afternoon after question period is that one be absolutely sure of what one wants to say. Be extremely well prepared. You have approximately an hour. You know what the rules of this House are and what the traditions of Assemblies are. I will invite all members who want to participate on these questions of privilege to participate. I will want no emotional responses to anything: clinical, factual information with respect to the questions at hand.

The penalties for privilege are very severe in this Assembly, as they are in all parliaments in the world.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to table for the Assembly copies of answers to questions from Committee of Supply.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I wish to table five copies of the president's letter from Dr. David W. Bond, president of the AMA.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings here today. The first one is a letter from Alise Palk opposing Bill 11.

The second one is a letter from Wayne Sklarski, a constituent of the Premier's own riding, again opposing Bill 11.

And two letters, Mr. Speaker, one from a grade 8 student from Edson and the other one from a grade 10 student from another town, also opposing Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first tabling is a letter to the Premier regarding the development proposed in the Spray Valley by Genesis Land Development Corp. signed by Garry Denman of Calgary, Alberta.

My second letter, again to the Premier, is regarding the Genesis proposal for the Spray Valley and is signed by Bonnie Roll of Exshaw, Alberta.

My third tabling, again to the Premier, is again on the Genesis proposal for Spray Valley and is signed by Peter Laird of Banff, Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter from Dr. Peter R. Winters to the Premier expressing opposition to the development of the Spray Lakes area by the Genesis corporation.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three letters to table with the Assembly today, all three directed to the Premier and all three categorically opposed to the Genesis proposal in the Spray Valley. The first is from Alison Kranias and Keith Etsell where they say that "large mammals need wildlife corridors."

The second is from Kathy and Michael Brett of Edmonton citing the same: "degradation of one of the finest valleys in our province."

The third is from Sue Arlidge from Exshaw, and she wants no further commercial development in the valley.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings. The first is from Mary Trumpener of Edmonton, who is requesting protection of wilderness areas in the province in a letter to the Premier.

The third letter is also addressed to the Premier from a Mr. Nick Chamchuk indicating that he's filed a complaint with the Advertising Standards Council of Canada regarding the government's ad on Bill 11.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first one is copies of my correspondence to you, sir, and to the Government House Leader identifying certain concerns with what happened last night and some suggestions to prevent a recurrence this evening.

The second thing is a copy of an invoice for $50. This was an additional cost with respect to the campaign of the opposition around Bill 11.

The final one, Mr. Speaker, is an estimate of the government's expenses in trying to promote Bill 11 totaling $2,239,570. That's our best estimate of the government expenses in promoting Bill 11.

Thank you very much.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of my responses to questions raised at supply subcommittee D, Resource Development, on 13 March 2000.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a letter from constituent Eugene Mondor, who is expressing his opposition to the plans for privatization in the creation of for-profit hospitals.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Opposition House Leader, you rose in the Assembly a few minutes ago to table a letter that's been conveyed to the Speaker. It arrived in the Speaker's office at 1:44 p.m. today. Just a little reminder. It is most unusual for a member's correspondence to the Speaker to be tabled, as it is most unusual for correspondence from the Speaker to the member to be tabled.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today the public inquiry into the death of Jordan Quinney. The facts contained herein indicate child welfare abdicated their responsibility to protect this child through their failure to apply for protection orders, their failure to apprehend this child, and their failure to assess the issues of caseload intensity and staff training in child welfare.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a single tabling today. It's a one-page chart. It is taken from a book called Clear Answers, authored by Kevin Taft and Gillian Steward. The chart is titled Conflicting Interests at the Calgary Regional Health Authority, and it was handed out at the rallies protesting Bill 11 in both Calgary and Edmonton.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am privileged to have two introductions this afternoon. The first one is the introduction of 19 guests, and I wish to introduce them to you and through you to members of the Assembly. They are from St. Mary's high school in Vegreville. He is a bright young man, very articulate, and is showing a great amount of courage as he has recently lost his mother in a car accident close to the community of Two Hills. I know I speak on behalf of the House when I offer sincere congratulations to Dustin and give him a warm welcome, not only a thank you for your courage but also a job well done. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly here today some grade 10 students from Thorsby who haven't actually come into the House yet, but I want it on the record that they were introduced properly in here. There are 31 intelligent and dedicated grade 10 students. They also have one student in there who I might mention is the nephew of the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. They're also accompanied today by their principal, Mr. Al Bratland. I'd like to give the traditional warm welcome to these students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three of my constituents from Camrose, including Rita Kane, outreach supervisor with Camrose and district community living and two of her clients, Carolyn Bell and Sara Pound. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make today. The first one is a guest, Mr. Abdul Bhimji. He's seated in the public gallery. It's my pleasure to introduce him to you and to my colleagues in the Assembly. Mr. Bhimji came to Edmonton from Toronto 16 years ago, and while in Ontario he worked for the ministry of health. I would ask Mr. Bhimji to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

It's my pleasure to request that Mr. Staszewski and Ms Flo David, a board member with Destination Conservation, please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's both an honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 65 very bright and enthusiastic students who are here today from Holy Family Catholic school. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Beth Devlin and Mrs. Juliet Lidstone and also by parents and helpers Mr. and Mrs. Bud Arbeau and Mrs. Bobbi Stevens. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you very much for coming today.

I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Representing the Public

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just eight weeks ago the former Provincial Treasurer stood in this Assembly and referred to the Premier when he talked about the process that had led to the development of his budget. In fact, he commented in his opening remarks in that budget by saying:

It's input based on government MLAs following the instructions of our Premier, who above anyone else reminds us in a regular way that we need to listen to our bosses, our bosses being the people of Alberta.

Albertans deserve an answer to urgent questions. To the Premier: why has the Premier stopped listening to his bosses, the people of this province?

MR. KLEIN: I haven't, Mr. Speaker. I haven't. You know, I try my best to stop listening to the lies – oh, I'm sorry – the misinformation of the Liberal Party and their ND allies and their union allies, CUPE and AUPE and the Federation of Labour and the Friends of Medicare. You know, I try not to listen to the misinformation that is being put out by these organizations, because it is so wrong. It is so fraudulent. It is so dishonest that these people should be ashamed of themselves. I try not to listen to it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, wouldn't the Premier agree that the unrest his government has provoked is because government MLAs are following the instructions of the Premier instead of following the wishes of the people that they were elected to serve?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. She's got it all wrong. She's got it all backwards. The only people who have provoked unrest through a malicious campaign of misinformation and absolutely vicious propaganda are the Liberals – the Liberals – and the NDs to some extent and certainly backed by the Friends of Medicare.

You know, when you talk about the agenda and the program, I had a friend who attended the rally in Calgary. The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition alluded to me not being at the rally. He says:

For example, I was singled out even as I entered the rally, with one red-vested rally official telling me that a special table had been reserved for the likes of me. Presumably this was the table with a card saying that the table had been reserved for the P.C. party, but they were unable to attend because their safety could not be guaranteed.

He goes on to say:

We were denounced as “Tory spies” over the loudspeaker and our location within the rally area announced so that we could be further insulted . . . Despite being billed as a family event, one of my friends who had brought his very young son was nonetheless happy to leave this decidedly un-family atmosphere at this point.

He said that “at the back of the room, there were tables and tables of printed materials, featuring Castro, Lenin, Marx . . .”

Speaker’s Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much. [interjection] Hon. member, please. Please. Thank you very much. Would you do the House the courtesy now of tabling the document you’re quoting from.

Hon. members, the purpose of question period is to ascertain information about the policies of the government, and events which occur outside the precincts which have nothing to do with the government are not really subject matter for the question period.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, with public health care in crisis, with people rallying in front of this Legislature, can the Premier explain how he became so out of touch with what is going on that watching a movie is more important than doing his job as the Premier of this province?

THE SPEAKER: Okay. I’ll recognize the hon. Premier, but, boy, this tone is inflammatory once again.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what has watching a movie – I very seldom get to watch a movie at all. What was the question? The question alluded to me watching a movie. It has nothing to do with health care policy. It has nothing to do with the work of this Legislature. It has to . . .

MS LEIBOVICI: It’s like Getty golfing.

MR. KLEIN: Yes. Maybe it’s like golfing or fishing. Is this member over here saying that she doesn’t get away to her little chalet in Jasper and do a little R and R some time, Mr. Speaker? Let’s get real.

Speaker’s Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Okay, hon. members. Again there’s going to be a lesson reviewed here about the question period. There’s an oblique connotation with respect to the questions – nothing oblique about the answers – having to do with some bill that apparently the Assembly has before it. Well, it’s clearly on the agenda that the bill will come up again for debate, so perhaps at that time those questions might be reserved for the appropriate time.

The Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main question.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Father Lacombe, the Grey Nuns, the Holy Cross, the Edmonton General, and the Misericordia hospitals: Alberta’s Roman Catholics have bestowed a legacy of providing nonprofit health care to Albertans for well over a century, a legacy of tending to the sick not for profit, but because it is the right thing to do in a caring and compassionate society. Their principles are very simple: one helps another human being; one does not profit from another human being’s suffering or illness. But now there is concern that this government has forsaken those values. The bishops of Calgary, the archbishop of Edmonton, and now the Catholic Health Association of Alberta and Affiliates, whose letter to the minister of health I will table, are calling for private health care plans to be set aside immediately. My first question is to the Premier. What or who is so important that this Premier and his government have chosen to ignore the pleas and the values of over 700,000 Roman Catholics in this province?

Speaker’s Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I stood up less than several minutes ago basically saying that if we’re going to have a question and we’re going to have a debate, there is time allocated in the Assembly for something called Bill 11. It’s up again on the Order Paper for the day. Now we’re having a question which directly relates to it.

I have observed and I have listened to all of the discussion in committee. The Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chairman of Committees have provided the widest variety of options for participation. Normally committee goes clause by clause. Both of these distinguished members of this House gave ample opportunity for wide-ranging debate.

If there’s a specific question, get to the specific question, and if it’s argumentative, opinionated, misleading, or anything else, the person to whom the question is addressed does not have to feel compelled to respond.

MR. DICKSON: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to make one statement. The government and the RHAs value tremendously the relationships they have with various religious boards that operate hospitals, including the Catholic organizations.

Mr. Speaker, there are contractual relationships with groups like Caritas here in Edmonton. Relative to the policy surrounding those contractual arrangements, I’ll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, our policy in this province is to maintain our agreements with the voluntary hospital sector. They, of course, are mainly facilities and programs that are run by the Roman Catholic church, but the United Church of Canada is also involved and other agencies and organizations. Perhaps one of the ironies here is that this sector of our health care system operates under contract or agreement with the public health care sector. It has a certain amount of independence and latitude and decision-making ability that is not there as directly in the public health care system. In other words, they certainly show the benefit that can come in some cases from more independence, more creativity, more flexibility with respect to offering a particular program.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier listen to the Catholic Health Association when it says:

We believe that Bill 11, with the proposed amendments, is premature and that it is imperative that it be set aside until the broader dialogue around sustainability and the common good has occurred.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, please take your place.

Okay. Now, this is the third time today I've interjected with respect to questions in the question period specifically with respect to Bill 11. It's on the Order Paper today. It will be dealt with later.

Do you have a third question, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition?

AN HON. MEMBER: Point of order.

THE SPEAKER: You've got your point of order.
Third question.

MRS. MacBETH: Third question or third part?

THE SPEAKER: Third question, please.

MRS. MacBETH: Third question of the second set of questions?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader. Hon. leader.

MRS. FORSYTH: Not too bright, are you?

THE SPEAKER: Please, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. This does not help the situation.

Hon. leader, I said the third question, meaning the third main question of the Official Opposition, and if the Leader of the Official Opposition chooses to begin raising it, one question with two supplementaries. Please.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you for the clarification, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 11 Protest at the Legislature

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier had been on the Legislature Grounds last night, he would have seen and could have listened to hundreds of Albertans: seniors, families, parents and grandparents, young people, people in wheelchairs, children in strollers, women and men in business suits, young Albertans in jeans, health professionals. They were here because they tried to tell the Premier and his government through letters and e-mails, through faxes and phone calls, through petitions, coupons, rallies, and town hall meetings that they do not want his government's health care privatization agenda to proceed any further. Yet the Premier proceeds with his agenda and ignores the fact that these Albertans have urgent questions, and they deserve answers. Given that the Premier has ignored all attempts of these people to communicate with him, exactly what form must their message take for this Premier to listen and pay attention?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, with regards to what happened last night, certainly I wouldn't be at a rally such as that, because that was simply a manifestation of the rallies that took place over the weekend. Obviously I wasn't welcome at those particular rallies, because they were rallies that were organized, aided, and abetted by the Liberals, the NDs, the Friends of Medicare, and all of the unions to spread a lot of misinformation about what we're trying to achieve.

I wouldn't attend a rally where the tires of police cars were slashed, where a security official of this Legislature was struck. The only picture I saw, the one that is indelibly in my mind, is this angry-looking person hanging on to a doorknob that he had ripped off the Legislature door. A person who is alleged to have deliberately set off the fire alarm and the Liberals out there inciting all that: that's what I saw, Mr. Speaker. They should be ashamed of themselves. That is the most shameful activity I have ever seen.

MR. DICKSON: Point of order.

MS OLSEN: Point of order.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what will it take for this absentee Premier to stop watching movies and pay attention to the people he was elected to serve?

MR. HANCOCK: Point of order.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what movie is she talking about? Tell me. What movie is she talking about? The last movie I went to I think was The Insider. You know, I happened to have a little bit of time off that day. I think it was a Sunday or something. But what movie is she talking about? Do you have the name and the title of the movie? [interjections] Well, she's talking about a movie.

Relative to my record in this House, I think my attendance record is pretty darned good, Mr. Speaker, pretty darned good. You know, I figured it out I think it was a couple of weeks ago that I sat in this Legislature and answered I think it was over 200 minutes' worth of questions from the Liberals, none of them intelligent. That's what made them so difficult to answer. Mr. Speaker, over 200 minutes. That was a question every 2.7 minutes.

AN HON. MEMBER: You're an embarrassment.

MR. KLEIN: No. Mr. Speaker, I heard across the way that I'm an embarrassment. They're an embarrassment. These are the people out there inciting riots. These are the people that condone slashed tires. These are the people who condone people ripping off door handles. These are the people who condone striking and using violence against security people at the Legislature. These are the people who are out there inciting this kind of deplorable, despicable behaviour.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, with over 60,000 signatures on a petition, tens of thousands of phone calls and faxes and letters, thousands at rallies in Calgary and Edmonton, and now nightly rallies at this Legislature, what more must Albertans do to have this Premier pay attention and withdraw the bill?

MR. KLEIN: Maybe I should send over a Fisherman's Friend. Her voice is starting to crack, Mr. Speaker.

The bill is the right thing to do. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. The policy is the right policy. The policy is the right policy because all it does is put fences and rules and regulations around what has been in place for years and years and years. If they do not support the policy, then I take it that they do not support RHAs contracting out to clinics, which means that they should now stand up and be honest to themselves and to their constituents and say that the 20,000 procedures now being done, 152 different procedures in something like 52 clinics, should all go back totally into the public system. Can you imagine the kind of chaos that that would create?

If they want to say that, if they want to eliminate contracting out, which, by the way, the leader of the Liberal opposition started when she was the minister of health, and allow them to charge facility fees, if they want to do that, then go to the Morgentaler Clinic and say: we want you to shut down. Be honest. At least the NDs are honest. They would prohibit all of those clinics from operating.

We say that those clinics provide a very good service. They take pressure off the public system, but they've been operating without rules and regulations, and that's what the policy is all about. It is benign, it is simple, but it is being misunderstood because of the deliberate malicious and vicious misinformation and misrepresentation that is taking place by the Liberal Party of Alberta, backed by their ND friends, the Friends of Medicare, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Alberta Federation of Labour, and all the rest.

Speaker's Ruling Adjournment of Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, it's apparent to me that now after spending 19 minutes with respect to three sets of questions and at least three, now four, interjections from the Speaker about the tone of question period today, the subject matter covered, the responses covered, and then the constant interjections about kill this or kill that, this whole thing here in the last 20 minutes is about a bill that is already on the Order Paper.

In addition to that, six points of order have been directed to the chair, and we've got two points of privilege, so I'm going to declare a recess under the authority given to the chair as chairman of the House. We will reconvene back in here at the conclusion of question period, which is at 2:52.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:23 p.m. to 2:52 p.m.]

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we're now back to work. We're into Recognitions, and in just a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first hon. member to participate.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Edson Legion Midget A Sabres

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize members of the Edson midget A Sabres. This has been an extremely successful year for this team. Their most recent achievement was winning the gold at the Alberta provincial midget A championship, which was held in Slave Lake during the weekend of March 24. Their passion for our national sport of hockey is evident in their commitment and dedication to the game and to their teammates. They are enthusiastic, energetic young Albertans who use their free time well.

I also recognize the coach, Harold Switzer, the assistant coaches, the sponsors, the parents, and the fans for their support, time, and expertise and the encouragement they provided to the members of the Sabres team.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens of West Yellowhead were indeed proud to have these young ambassadors representing our region. I would ask all members of the Assembly to join me in extending our congratulations and best wishes to the members of the Edson Legion midget A Sabres.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Passover

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you. My recognition this afternoon is in honour of Passover, which starts tonight. I will be reading an excerpt from the Saturday Prayer Book, which explains the story of Exodus.

Indeed, the story of the Exodus has entered the stream of world history to become a saga of the universal struggle against tyranny and of the promise that freedom's cause is irresistible and is destined to prevail no matter how formidable the forces arrayed against it. "Let my people go!" has been reiterated by the oppressed of all the ages . . . And the vision of the children of Israel marching toward the Promised Land has been the inspiration . . . for peoples on the march toward . . . a better life enabling them to fulfill their God-implanted yearning to be free.

This reading is still applicable in our everyday lives, Mr. Speaker, especially given the events of the previous days. We urge the Premier to recognize the concern of all Albertans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin Composite High School Musicians

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to recognize today a group of 105 talented young people from the music groups of Wetaskiwin composite high school. They are leaving today to represent Canada in the Harrogate International Youth Music Festival in England. International events such as this one provide an important opportunity for young musicians to perform in the company of their peers from other North American and European communities. In addition to the invaluable musical experiences these students will receive, these talented performers will return home to Wetaskiwin with many new, lifelong friendships and wonderful memories of their visit abroad.

I'd like to compliment the city of Harrogate for organizing this festival. It provides a unique and welcome opportunity for over 1,400 young musicians from around the world to get together and share their talents and celebrate their common love of music.

I know that Mr. Paul Sweet, Wetaskiwin composite high school's music director, will prepare the Wetaskiwin music groups well for this great challenge. I wish them all a wonderful journey and great experiences abroad.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

McHappy Day

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we think of McDonald's, we think of our children, our grandchildren. We think of teeny-weeny Beanie Babies, little Furby's and other toys, Happy Meals, Big Macs, and Quarter Pounders. Yes, they are superb at marketing, but there's another aspect to McDonald's. They are a good corporate citizen, and they support many worthwhile causes.

One of their most noticeable causes, which occurs every second year or every 18 months, of course is McHappy Day. McHappy Day this year is set for May 16, and the proceeds are being earmarked for two different charitable organizations, one being the Aaron Moser foundation for spinal research, which has deep meaning for me and I know has deep meaning for the local franchise of McDonald's for that particular individual.

On May 16 each of you as individual MLAs will be asked to participate for an hour or two. Please do it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

Privilege

MLA Access to the Chamber

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I take it this is with respect to the notice I'd given last night during Committee of the Whole. I had indicated that I wished to raise a question of privilege because I'd just been informed that three of my colleagues could not get access to the building and to the Assembly room. Subsequently my colleagues were able to obtain access to the building.

I have decided in the circumstances not to proceed with the question of privilege. I raised it last night before we had more information. With the subsequent information, I'm not going to be proceeding further with it. We think there are more important public issues to be addressed, and that's the reason for the withdrawal of that question of privilege.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise with pride today to recognize Mr. Brian Staszewski, head of the highly successful . . .

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry, hon. member. We've already done that. This is your point of privilege. We've already introduced the gentleman.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I had a recognition; did I not?

THE SPEAKER: Just a second here. Usually I get notification that an hon. member wants to do a recognition. I have not received such a notification, but if it's okay with the House, could we revert to Recognitions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Brian Staszewski

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I proudly rise to recognize Mr. Brian Staszewski, head of the highly successful Destination Conservation school-based program. Over 973 schools across Canada participate in this very excellent program in which students, staff, and utility companies interact to initiate environmental education. Such interaction results in the conservation of energy resources in schools.

Mr. Staszewski is also executive director of the Environmental Resource Centre, located in Edmonton-Strathcona. He's been a most valuable resource for me and my colleagues when dealing with environmental concerns. Time magazine has declared him a hero for the planet. I couldn't agree with them more.

I take this opportunity to congratulate him for receiving this distinguished honour and applaud his singular achievements as an environmentalist.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. members, for allowing that last recognition to proceed.

Now, hon. leader of the third party, we're going to deal with the point of privilege notice that the hon. member provided to the chair.

Privilege

MLA Access to the Chamber

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a question of privilege pursuant to Standing Order 15(1). I want to note that I do it with a great deal of reluctance and regret, but as a member of this Assembly I want to respectfully submit to you and to all members of the Assembly that my experience yesterday evening obliges me that I bring this matter to the attention of the Assembly. Yesterday evening I was denied entry into the Legislature Building for some 35 minutes and thus prevented from being present in the Chamber while Bill 11 was being debated by my colleagues. I believe that denying me entry constitutes a breach of my privilege as a member of this Assembly.

I also cite in this regard Beauchesne 129. Pursuant to Standing Order 15(2), earlier today I provided written notice to you of my intention to raise this matter. I will briefly outline the reasons why I believe a breach of privilege has taken place.

I recognize that a question of privilege is a most serious matter, and I fully appreciate the seriousness of my doing so. The events of yesterday evening were also extremely serious and have left me somewhat shaken. I'm sure that these events were also upsetting to all members of this Assembly. I think it's incumbent for all of us to learn from these events and ensure that they are not repeated. It is in that spirit, Mr. Speaker, that I rise to make this case.

In support of my argument for privilege, I will briefly recount the events of yesterday evening that gave rise to it. I arrived at the Legislature front steps at about 8:05 after parking my car at the west end of the grounds of the Legislature, which is what I normally do when I come back for the evening session. I arrived at the Legislature front steps at 8:05, as I said. I was informed by one of the several hundred citizens gathered that the front doors were locked and no one was being allowed in. Shortly thereafter John Kolkman, the research director for the New Democrat opposition, who had been in the building, informed me that all of the entrances to the building were locked and that he had been informed by security personnel that no one else was being allowed to enter the building by these doors. This included several people outside the building including an Edmonton city councillor and others with valid visitor passes for the public and members' galleries.

I then walked from the front steps to the east door of the Legislature beside the loading dock along with Mr. Kolkman. I noticed two of my Liberal colleagues being interviewed by a TV reporter. After the interview they informed me that they were not being allowed to enter the building. I approached the east door myself and was immediately recognized by two security personnel who were standing some 10 to 15 feet from the door. I first asked to enter the building by the east door at about 8:25 p.m. At the time that I was seeking to enter the building, there were only a handful of Albertans at the east door. The manner in which I sought to enter was to press the doorbell, which I did five different times over this period.

Shortly after being denied entry, several police cruisers arrived, parking on the access road to the loading dock. This, of course, caused some of the people who had been peacefully protesting in front of the north door and other locations to make their way to the east side of the building to see what the arrival of the police was all about. I and several of my Liberal colleagues were finally allowed into the building at about 10 minutes past 9 last night. I estimate that this was about 35 minutes after I first requested to enter. By this time the crowd gathered by the east door was considerably larger than when I first requested to enter.

I think it's important at this point, Mr. Speaker, for me to also note that at no time during yesterday or before was I informed, formally or informally, that I might have difficulty entering the building except through the pedway. I use the pedway only when I park my car in the underground south parkade, and since I have always used the front door to come in when I am coming here in the evening and parking outside, I never thought that it would cause a problem.

So I want to just make sure that you understand, that all of my colleagues understand the context in which I experienced this problem.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it's incumbent on all of us, as members who learned from yesterday evening's events, to ensure that they are not repeated. I recognize that the security personnel were doing their job in the best way they knew how. However, I believe it is incumbent on us as politicians accountable to our constituents to learn from past mistakes in order to avoid future ones, and it's in that spirit that I am speaking.

The rights of people to freedom of speech and expression are basic rights of democratic citizenship on which we all agree. Sometimes democracy can be a little noisy and messy. On Monday evening those gathered in the rotunda were peaceful, if not a bit vocal and exuberant. No one was assaulted. No property was damaged. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, I'll be closing soon.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, as the chair had indicated at the beginning of Routine today, the chair views a question of privilege to be a very serious question. The issue before the Speaker to determine is whether or not there is a case to make a recommendation that the matter move forward, so it would be helpful to be very clinical, very factual, very specific about the event that the hon. member is raising the question of privilege on.

If the chair understands it correctly, the event that the member is raising before the House is that he was denied entry into the Legislature Building for 35 minutes and was thus prevented from being present in the Chamber while Bill 11 was being debated by his colleagues. That occurred last night, not Monday night.

So, please, specifically to the privilege before the chair.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the event that I rise to speak on occurred last night. You're absolutely right.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I want to be clear that I am rising here in a constructive spirit, not to seek any retribution or anything of that sort. So to avoid repetition of yesterday's events, I have two suggestions to make. First, please don't lock the doors of the Legislature to keep out the public, or MLAs for that matter. Let Albertans freely enter a building that belongs to them. Second, have a security presence commensurate with the security threat posed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 15(6) I urge you to "allow such debate as . . . appropriate in order to determine whether a prima facie case of breach of privilege has [indeed] taken place."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, again, some time ago I alerted the House that I expected all members to be aware of essentially what would be the parameters of such a discussion. I'm prepared to hear any and all members who feel directly implicated in the matter, and when I'm satisfied, then I will terminate the discussion on this and take the matter under review.

This is a very fine point and an extremely important point, and it has to do with a member making an argument that he was denied entry into the Legislature Building.

Hon. Government House Leader, did you want to participate?

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is indeed a very serious allegation and a very serious point of order. There could be nothing more serious, in fact, than a member not being able to take his place in this House and participate in the debates of this House. So I take the comments of the hon. member in the spirit in which he's offered them, in that he wants to move forward and make sure such incidents as he's alleging don't happen again, and I appreciate that that's the spirit in which he indicates he's bringing it forward.

First of all, however, I would argue that the hon. member was not denied access to the House. There were security measures in place, as now is common knowledge among all members and in fact the public, which would deny the public access to the building after hours, which is in fact the normal procedure. We don't necessarily always lock the doors, but in fact the building is not open to the public after hours for indiscriminate viewing. We don't have tours after hours. We don't allow the public in to walk around after hours. We do allow the public to come in, because we have debates in the evening, and be in the galleries.

So in that spirit and in anticipation of a number of people coming, more than would fill the galleries, a procedure was put in place then, through the co-operation of the Legislature security and the Legislative Assembly Office, to ensure that people, the public, could have access to the galleries but that other members of the public could not have indiscriminate access to the building. As a result, I understand, of those security procedures being in place, the hon. member is indicating that he was denied access to the building.

I would first of all point out that I have canvassed members of our caucus and have been told that no member of our caucus, certainly none that I'm aware of, had any difficulty accessing the building. Some members indeed indicated that they'd presented themselves at the selfsame door that was mentioned, and upon discovering that they weren't able to get access through that door, they went and gained access to the building through the pedway, which every member knows is open and available through their access cards. I would suggest that the hon. member could have done, in fact, the same thing.

Now, I did ask Legislature security about the incident relating to access at the door. I was advised that indeed some members had presented themselves at a door but that there were a number of members of the public, demonstrators, behind them, and for obvious reasons they could not open the door at that point in time. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this does not constitute a denial of access to this Assembly to the hon. member because there were options open to that hon. member to access the building and access the Assembly, in fact options that were taken advantage of by other members of the Assembly at or about the same time.

Also, I would indicate that a denial of access is a very serious charge, as you have mentioned. One would think that before indicating that they couldn't get through one door of the building, being a denial of access, one would – and I understand that this perhaps was a tense time, a difficult time. But any member in that situation I think would simply call security, call the front desk of security and say: I'm here to do my job, and you must let me in. They would have to find a way to let them in, and I'm not aware of that having been done.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think there's another issue that needs to be addressed specifically in this context, and that is the privilege for all members of safety and security. There's been some suggestion – and even the hon. member suggested it – that perhaps the building should be open tonight, that that would be one resolution. It is important for us to have safety and security for our members in order to be able to do this job. I think the measures that were taken last night to provide that safety and security in this building were demonstrated to be prudent in that there were, for example, incidents reported to me that eight police tires were slashed, that the window of a police vehicle was broken, that a security officer was assaulted. In other words, there were people here.

Now, I would stop there and say that I expect and believe that most of the people who came to the Legislature grounds last night came to proffer their opinion in a peaceful way about a bill that was before the House. I think most people did that. I think a very few people might have had other things on their minds, and those are the people who perhaps participated in the slashing of tires. You don't do that with a pen, Mr. Speaker. You must have a sharp object, probably a knife, to slash a tire. I think the fact that those incidents occurred demonstrates that prudent procedures were taken to protect the safety and security of members in this House.

I have been approached, as I assume others in this House have been approached, by members of the Assembly indicating that they did have some concerns about their safety, about their security. I have assured them that we will take every step, insofar as it is my responsibility as Minister of Justice, through the public security division to provide that safety and security. It is unfortunate that if in providing for the privileges of the members of this House in terms of their safety and security, it might have for a brief period of time inconvenienced a member's access to the House.

But, as I say, the member did have access to the House, as I have been advised by other members of my caucus who were there at about the same time and were able to obtain access rather readily by coming through the pedway, which every member knows is available to them. If they had any problem with that, it would seem to me that the next step would have been to ascertain from security why a member was not being allowed into the House, because members do have a right to be in this House.

So, Mr. Speaker, speaking directly to the question of privilege that is being raised, I would say that it is unfortunate, very unfortunate, that due to the circumstances last night, some members when they approached the Legislative Assembly building, in recognition of what was happening – and I think it was fairly obvious what was happening outside in terms of the crowd, but one might have spent a little time thinking about how one might reasonably gain access. I myself never park underground. I parked underground last night so that I could access the building through the pedway.

It's unfortunate that the member was not advised earlier. I took specific care to ensure that the Liberal caucus was advised as to how they might access the building. I take the member's word for it that he was not advised ahead of time as to how he might safely access the building, but I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the member had options and he didn't choose to avail himself of those options.

The right of access is not a right of access through any door of the Assembly at any time. It's a right of access to the Assembly, and if there's an appropriate way of getting that access, then the hon. member has not been denied access.

I understand his feelings with respect to what happened. I don't try to in any way detract from his sense that he has been aggrieved by what happened. I'm simply saying that, from the perspective of the privileges of the House, this hon. member was not denied access to the building. In fact, the security measures which were in place were reasonable given the privileges of safety and security for all the members of the House in terms of the conduct of their business. There was an option for him, which he was able to avail himself of later on and could have availed himself of immediately if he had thought to do so.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, I'll recognize you. I want to make it very, very clear that the question before the House is a question of privilege, and if it has to deal with the obstruction of a member, then it is more than that. It is also contempt of this Legislative Assembly, which impacts and affects all Members of this Legislative Assembly.

Now, we're not going to have a debate. If you want to add additional information with respect to that, I will recognize you, leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to additional information, I want to state categorically that I was not informed that only certain access would be available to us. I want to put it on record. The hon. minister has indeed recognized that problem, and I appreciate that, but I want to put on record that I was at no time aware of that fact. In fact, I left my security card at home in another pocket because I changed my jacket as I was leaving. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please. I'm going to ask for absolute quiet on this. Because some members may have known, it doesn't mean that all members knew, and that's a very important point.

The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So I want to categorically state that I was not informed. I did not know ahead of time that there was only certain access available.

As to ascertaining it with security, I had no phone with me at the time. I waited for half an hour, and the security personnel who were there at the door, which I was advised was the only one through which one could enter, did not offer this information to me. So I just want to put it on record again, Mr. Speaker, that I was not advised by the security personnel who were there that there was indeed another entry I could use.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to limit my observations to facts which are relevant to entry having been denied to me. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have a number of hon. members that have already advised me that they want to participate. I am going to ask for brevity on this. I'm going to insist that we're dealing with the point of privilege and that it has to do with entry and it has to do with contempt of the Assembly with respect to that matter. It's not a debate. It is a matter of adding information that would assist the chair in coming to a conclusion on this question.

I'll recognize the following three members in this order: the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just address the point of privilege very briefly. I have great respect for what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has brought forward in regards to access to the building. I can tell you that over the past seven years as a Member of the Legislative Assembly I have felt very safe in this building. I have always been aware that there has been access in different ways to the building – and one of those, of course, is through the pedway – and have not needed to be notified that I can access the building in a certain way. You've certainly brought forward what you saw as being a need to be notified about access to the pedway.

Also, Mr. Speaker, it was mentioned that there was a peaceful demonstration which was occurring outside the Legislature Building. I think that's the area of this point that I would like to address. I really think it's important that it be stated for the record, and I know that the Government House Leader did state this. I as a member of the Legislature was made aware that we did have a security guard assaulted and that we had vandalism of the Legislature Building itself, that there was property damage, and that there were tires being slashed. I want to tell you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that I did not feel safe with that occurring. I do not like the feeling of being vulnerable. I did feel far more safe in knowing that the doors to the Legislature were locked, although I understand that when the fire alarm was set off, the doors were opened and many people could access the building in that way as well. Hopefully, that too has been looked at.

I can also tell you this. I am very, very grateful for the strong presence of our security personnel, the Sergeant-at-Arms and others, both inside and outside the Chamber during this very difficult event last evening. I really believe, Mr. Speaker, that their professional demeanor and skill level served to de-escalate the situation, and that included locking the doors in the appropriate areas that they did. I thank you all for that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I choose also to comment briefly on the point of privilege that's before the House this afternoon. Like my colleague from Calgary-Cross, there is a certain amount of vulnerability that one feels when the building is under siege. While the majority of the demonstrators were handling their presence and their concerns in an appropriate civic display of frustration and in a public display that they are allowed to do and that we welcome in this democratic society, I myself witnessed a number of citizens crashing through a door. As I was watching, there was no opportunity to hold these people back from coming into the building.

Like my colleague who just previously spoke, Calgary-Cross, we are not used to this facility being under siege in such a way. I want to just make it very clear in the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in your deliberations and in your considerations, that it would be very important to me that my community and my constituents understand the difference between access to the Assembly, which allows us to conduct the business of this government and of this House and the provincial responsibilities that we have, separate from what I believe to be access to the public facility. I don't believe that many people separate those two issues. Right now there are a number of people who feel that they have been denied access to government and to their due process of law by virtue of the fact that the building was secured by the security officers last night.

I think that in addition to the issues raised by the point of privilege, it's important if you could in your ruling please acknowledge that difference so that the recognition of the security of all members of this Assembly, not ones for or against Bill 11 but all members of this Assembly, be understood by our constituents.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to add a note as to my experience with respect to last night. About a quarter to 8 I was returning to the Legislature, and after having some difficulty getting around to the west side, I did park my vehicle there. I found that my normal route had been locked, so I went around to the front of the building, and of course there was a large crowd that had gathered.

There was a lot of chanting and so on, which I assessed as being in quite a peaceful demonstration type of manner.

I did go to a security guard who was stationed nearby and said: how do I get in? He said: well, it's obvious that we can't open the doors for you right now, but if you want to get in, go to the Annex and use your card. I was informed that that really should be the way to enter this building. It was a very simple question, but the guard had the answer. "You wouldn't expect me to open the door now," so to speak: he was implying that you couldn't control the crowds. So I did in fact get the appropriate direction to enter the building in that way.

I, too, want to express my thanks to all of the security people in this building, who day in and day out do their job extremely well. Certainly I think it's a very sad day in the history of this Legislature when one of those would be assaulted in this sort of way.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just briefly. I, too, was one that tried to enter the east side just slightly after 8 o'clock. I might add that I did not have any notice ahead of time that it was a lockdown, so I'm the same as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I had no knowledge of the lockdown. But I just returned to the Annex. There's easy access to the Annex. There's a button to call the security guard if you don't have your security card with you. I entered through the pedway, which was secured, and there were security guards in the pedway for our safety.

I would just like to express, as the previous member did, my appreciation of the security around here. I think maybe members should sometime go and look at the door of the elevator coming in from the pedway. There's a bullet hole in that door from the general public. They've made great strides over the years in improving security for all of us in this Assembly. I find it quite difficult to think that members took 35 minutes to realize that they can have access through the pedway. It took me about two seconds to realize that I had to turn back and go through the pedway to get access to the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be appropriate to add just a few specific comments which perhaps would assist as well.

We had a meeting of three House leaders in your office yesterday afternoon. While normally discussions of House leaders are not commented upon, in a general sense I think it's important for this debate to comment on some of the context in that there was a discussion about members of the public being in the building, and there was discussion about providing for those members an ability to hear the debate even if they weren't going to be able to be in the gallery. There was specific assurance given that to the extent of the capacity of the gallery, people would be allowed access, but we discussed the ability to provide for the security of the building if members of the public were let in.

It was specifically indicated that members of the public would not be allowed in the building. I think that's important, because while I didn't feel that I was in a position to specifically comment on security measures – it's not normal procedure to comment on specific security measures – the clear indication was that members of the public were not going to be allowed into the building unless they were going to go through the process and into the galleries. That should have been, I think, fair indication to everyone there for communication to their members that there might be some difficulty accessing the building and that they would have to be conscious of that, that it wouldn't be a normal process. One wouldn't normally, I would think from that, expect to be able to walk up to the front door and gain access to the building. So I add that.

I don't intend to indicate that there was any specific reference on my part at that meeting to indicate that the doors would be locked or that there would be a lockdown or that city police would be used, although we did indicate that there was a protocol in place as to when and if police might be called. The bottom line is that my feeling is that there was a good indication at that meeting that security measures would be in place with respect to the building to protect members and to ensure that public access to the gallery was maintained but not to the building. I think the members there should have taken from that that access would not be of the usual walk up to the door and open the door variety. So I just bring that to the attention of the House.

I would also indicate that while I did personally take the responsibility of calling security and making sure that they got a message to the Liberal caucus – and I have to apologize to the members of the House for this – I did not take that same step to advise members of my own caucus as to access to the building, nor did I take that step to encourage them to bring to the attention of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that access should be through the pedway or the east door.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to also put two more facts on the record. I appreciated the opportunity to meet with you and my colleagues who are House leaders for the other two caucuses yesterday at 4 o'clock – I want to thank you for making that happen – at which time we did discuss, I think rather openly and in a spirit of co-operation, the concerns that had come to all of us and how to deal with them. I also want to thank you for meeting with me prior to that, at 1 o'clock, when I had first approached you and requested that perhaps there was a need for a meeting. So I took every possible action that I could as a member of the Assembly to make sure that we dealt with the probable situations that were going to arise in ways that would serve the best interests of this House and of Albertans.

The only other matter on which I want to make a statement, Mr. Speaker, is that I finally entered through the east door. It was this morning that I realized the door flung open. It wasn't opened for me. It flung open for other reasons, but I entered. When I did enter the building, I entered through the east door, and the security people, who were about 10 feet away from the door, were doing their duty. They at first stopped me, but one of the security persons was regular Legislature security staff, and he was most courteous when I said: would you let me go in? He said: certainly, sir. So I walked in, with his consent, through that door at that point, around 9 o'clock.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'll be very brief. Clearly I acknowledge that I was part of a conversation with yourself and the other two House leaders. I'm going to respectfully suggest that if we're going to be in a lockdown situation, at minimum there ought to be some memorandum that's made available to, ideally, all members of the Assembly or, failing that, at least to some responsible officer of each of the caucuses with specific particulars in terms of how access may be gained not only at 8 o'clock but subsequently during the course of the evening. I'm following up on the suggestion of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who invited you to give some direction.

The second concern I have is closely related, and that is that I think it's important that if in fact the only access members of the public will have to the building is 250 seats, whatever it is, in the two galleries, that's information that should be shared with people in advance so that people coming to the Assembly to see debate on a bill as important as Bill 11 come with a clear expectation in terms of what sort of access they're going to have. I think that's important.

The last thing I'd suggest and that our caucus has suggested before is that some attempt be made to find an audio feed to ensure that people who are unable to get access to the Chamber would at least be able to follow what's being said in here. It's a poor second, but it's far better than leaving out people who are so vitally concerned, particularly about this bill that's an issue they desperately want information on, and they want a window into what's being debated. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think they're entitled to that.

So, Mr. Speaker, I sent to you – and it is somewhat out of the ordinary – a letter listing a number of concerns. A copy went to the Government House Leader, and a copy is making its way to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Now, they relate more to how we allow the public access and information. I meant no discourtesy to the Speaker, but because my colleagues have an enormous number of constituents who want to find out what's going on and how they can follow what's going on, I think we have an obligation not only in terms of the safety of members in the Assembly but to ensure the access side, that all citizens of this province are entitled to access what's going on here and get information on it.

Those are the observations I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West on the point of privilege.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes. I just have some information that I would like to contribute to the discussion based on what I observed and personally went through last night.

Well, first I'll make a subjective statement about myself. I think that normally I'm fairly observant and calm about situations around me. I would have to say that I was not in the House on Monday night, but because I did hear reports of what had happened, especially in the public area outside the Chamber on Monday night, I decided that I would move my car to the west side of the parking lot outside the Legislature. For one thing, when I leave later at night – and I knew it would be late last night – I am concerned about going back to the Annex. That's where my office is. I have to say that sometimes in the Annex you do have concerns about arriving on your floor later in the evening, when all the lights are off and you know that no one is on that floor. So there's always some small degree of apprehension.

However, when I looked out the window of my office last night at the east side of the roadway going around the Legislature, this building, I could tell from the crowd that was out there that there was no way I was going to get my car through there to go around to the west side, though the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont did get through. I decided not to, and my colleagues on my floor said, "Well, let's go through the pedway," which is what I felt confident to do. But I would like to add that as we came up the stairwell to the north end of the building, there were many persons – definitely more than one person – loudly banging on the glass of the window. That was my first indication of what the evening was going to be like, having not been here on Monday night.

I won't go on about anything that happened during the evening here. I certainly respect everything that security did for us and the need for the city police and having them stay so that when we did leave, there were many of them at the doorway. We walked back over to the Annex through the pedway, which is the right thing to do.

I guess what I have to say is that one of my colleagues had to come with me and another colleague to my car, which is just outside the Annex building. Normally you don't even really think twice about that unless, as I say, it's late. We'd been advised to check the tires to see that they hadn't been destroyed, but it was also just for the security of walking outside our building 20 feet to the car. This experience has left me very shaken.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, how would you like to proceed? Do you feel that you've had a chance today to air your concern? Do you want the chair to continue the review of this and come back to this House and rule on the question of privilege? Are you satisfied that the points you've made will now be dealt with without a ruling on the question of privilege?

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I am concerned about us being able to take effective action and develop a policy that will help us avoid similar difficulties in the future. What's the best way to accomplish it? I'm going to leave it to you and to other members of the House. I have no particular preference in that regard so long as we get the results that we all desire, it seems to me. There's a consensus in the House that access for us should be facilitated, and if there are any chances by way of certain protocols that that access might be obstructed or may be less easy, then we need to address that part of the protocol and make that information available to all of us ahead of time so that we respond appropriately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, I appreciate that. I'll continue to take this matter under review but will make some preliminary remarks about some of this now, at this point in time.

Security is one of those things that is seldom talked about in a public environment. After all, why would you talk about security measures publicly? They wouldn't be security measures. I want to advise all members that in the variety of involvements I've had in the 21 years that I've had the privilege of being here, they include the following. When I was minister of the environment, I was also minister of public safety services for a rather lengthy period of time, five or six years as I recall. I've also had the privilege of being minister of public works, supply, and services. When I was a member of Executive Council, I also chaired the cabinet committee on security. There were a number of members of Executive Council on security, but I was the chairperson.

There have been events in this building either prior to my being an elected person or since then. We have had deaths in this building. Members may not know this, but in the early 1970s, before this person was an elected person, this person was in an office of the building currently now occupied by the Minister of Environment. Early one afternoon this person was having a meeting with another individual in that office, and there was a gunshot. The person beside me ran out of my office, out of the current Minister of Environment's office, and passed at that point in time the Provincial Treasurer, Mr. Hyndman. It may have even been that the Leader of the Official Opposition was working in that office on that particular day.

As the individual ran out of my office and ran by the office I think currently occupied by the minister of human resources, a bullet flew through the door, past the individual who ran by, went through the door on the other side and lodged itself in a file cabinet in an office then occupied by Mr. Getty, who was later to become the Premier of the province of Alberta. A man had come into the building to visit his lady friend, and he shot her and committed suicide. He came through the front entrance of the building.

A number of years ago there was an event around 7 o'clock in the morning – and some in this Assembly may even have been participants in it – when several members arrived in one of the parkades at a quarter to 7 and there was a person with a gun who wandered through the pedway and the precincts. There is a remnant of that event, a bullet still lodged in the elevator as you walk out of the main Assembly and go down on your way to the pedway. You can observe the bullet in there. It was kept in there.

In Canada there have been events. There was a recent event a number of years ago in the National Assembly of Quebec where a person entered the Chamber, and you can still all remember the visuals of the person sitting in the Speaker's chair with a gun and shooting sporadically.

Now, despite all of that, every intent, to my knowledge, about security in this environment is to keep security to an absolute minimum. An absolute minimum. From all of the elected members of the province of Alberta that I am familiar with, who I've ever participated with in a discussion on this in previous cabinet positions or since being in the chair, there's almost been an insistence that this is a public building, open to the public, and there should be a minimal amount of security. Since I've had the privilege of being the Speaker in this Assembly, the advisers on security consistently come to me and say: this place is too lax. As security people they're consistently providing recommendations about improving security.

The position I've taken as the Speaker is: "Fine. The people of Alberta are very honourable. We'll have a minimal amount of security, but we're not going to go overboard with it." In consultations that I've had with the current Minister of Justice and Attorney General, who's responsible for the security outside of this Chamber and in the building and on the grounds, he also has taken that view. It may very well be that the security forces or advisers to both the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly and to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General want to have greater amounts of security. The response has been: no; we will go with a minimal amount of security. So what do we have? We have a situation that invariably works very, very well for the most part. There are very, very infrequent and unique circumstances.

In the last couple of days there have been some events, which is not uncommon, by the way, in the history of Alberta. We've had other events, and I dare not perhaps even mention them here this afternoon for fear that it'll give rise to somebody else's imagination to go to the next step to try and pull some of them off. But we've had events. I'll just give you one. It was a fanciful day in the history of this Assembly when hundreds of people were in the rotunda and they released chickens, pigs, rabbits, goats, what have you. It was a fine day.

We've had a camp-in on the grounds of the Legislative Assembly, where a number of people showed up with hay bales, erected a hay-bale city, and spent the winter on the grounds of the Legislative Assembly. I for one know that I was an employee in this building at the time, and my minister would say: why don't you go out there and let them into the building and give them some hot soup and let them use the bathroom? I think the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was here at the same time too. We probably went out hand in hand to do it. That happened. But in the background were highly trained people who knew how to respond and knew how to react, who kept a low profile, and that's what we have today: people with a low profile. That's what I hope we will always want.

Now, having said all of that, I also have received a dozen or more contacts from hon. members in this Assembly expressing a great degree of discomfort over what transpired on Monday, over what transpired in terms of them being able to conduct the business that they feel they are responsible to conduct in this Assembly, because of disturbances outside of those doors. That's something that had to be recognized, and that's something that had to be taken into consideration. Members should not be interrupted in the conduct of their business, and I'm talking about the process here. The issue of the day is not the important point in my discussion here. This has to do with the privilege of the hon. members to conduct their business without any intimidation and/or anything else. Not only hon. members have made comments to me, but others have as well, using such words as "intimidation" and a whole series of other things. So that's something that certainly had to be considered.

Yesterday the hon. Government House Leader, the hon. House leader of the Official Opposition, and the hon. leader of the third party and I had a brief discussion. Again, it was just a wide-ranging discussion about concerns that would happen. I made it very clear that the people who would deal with the security on a minute-to-minute, hour-to-hour basis would be those who are in charge of the security business. The Sergeant-at-Arms has a protocol and ultimate direction from the Speaker, the director of security for the building has a protocol and ultimate direction from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and protocols have also been established with other police agencies in the province of Alberta, depending on the type of circumstance.

On a moment-to-moment basis, the chair would not be aware of what's going on. The chair's focus or the Deputy Speaker's focus or the Deputy Chairman of Committees' focus is on what's going on in the House. So that is handled and that is being dealt with without interference, and decisions have to be made for whatever the circumstances are and, hopefully, will be responded to in an appropriate way.

It is regrettable – it is regrettable, I repeat – that yesterday not all Members of the Legislative Assembly were aware of the preferred entrance into the building as a result of the unique circumstance. I'm going to say it for the third time. It is regrettable that not all hon. members were aware of that.

A few minutes ago a memo was circulated from the Sergeant-at-Arms to all Members of the Legislative Assembly with some advice.

As a matter of prudent security practices, I wish to advise all Members of the Legislature Assembly that access to the Legislature Building is available through the Legislature Pedway system by use of Members' personal security access card.

Members are reminded that this access card is provided solely for their personal use and cannot be loaned, transferred or used to provide admission to any unauthorized person into any building.

Members are also strongly advised to use the underground parking facilities.

Perhaps that's a reminder.

Secondly, yesterday in the discussion among the four of us it was made very clear that access to the public galleries was there, that it was open, and that the public would be invited to occupy the chairs in the members' gallery and the public gallery. Once the chairs are occupied, there can be no more access and entry into the building.

There's a protocol for demonstration that has been developed, long-standing use in this province, for years and years and years. If individuals want to have a demonstration on the steps of the Legislature Building, they are free to do so. In fact, we even go beyond. A podium is provided. Electrical systems are provided. They can have the demonstration or call it by whatever other name you want.

I've been here long enough to have seen demonstrations that have gone from the steps of the building to way over on the other side of the grounds where the other buildings are, way on the other side. I haven't seen anything even comparable to that in the last few days. But who knows what'll happen with respect to that. That's part of the process, and that's in there, but there has never been a tradition for demonstrations within the rotunda of the province of Alberta, particularly when it intervenes with the work of the members or the table officers associated with it. So access again.

I have to believe that in terms of today and any other day in the future the process will be followed that, in essence, entry to the building will be accessed in a similar way, presumably, to what it was last night. The first 200 to occupy a chair in the gallery will be welcome, and the others unfortunately will not be able to come in. I suppose it's akin to saying that if you have a hall and the seating capacity is X amount, you can't put in any more than that. It's prudent management, and I don't think it's overt security.

Now, the other point then is: how do members and how do individuals have a knowledge base of what's happening in here? The chair finds it rather interesting that at a quarter to 5 yesterday afternoon this Assembly broke itself into Committee of the Whole and was discussing clause by clause Bill 11, and there were that many people in the Assembly. How is it that from a quarter to 5 to 5:30 there are two people but at 8 o'clock there are hundreds? Now, some hon. members might make the argument: well, everybody's at work. But the chair was here last evening to observe, to make up with the individuals who were here, and not all of them were either of working age or anything else. That's subjective of the fact. It's just that I wanted to make the comment that the building was wide open at a quarter to 5, and there could have been 198 more people in the Assembly if they would have exercised the right to do that.

Now, the last several points that I want to make, then, have to do with: how does anybody find out what's going on in here? Hon. Opposition House Leader, I think you missed what I said earlier today. The chair rose in this Assembly on March 14 and said that technology is now available, that this Assembly has wanted to make itself an open Assembly. This Assembly was the first in the Commonwealth in 1972 to actually go to television and televise the proceedings of this Assembly. That was a first, a unique experience. Great debate among some members saying: oh, heavens no, we could never have television in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. There still may be some today who feel that we should not have, but the fact of the matter is that we did it. This Assembly did it 28, 29 years ago.

We have Hansard, every word recorded in this Assembly. In the last couple of years members were asked if they wanted to have their desks wired so that they could have access to a laptop. Well, more than half of the Assembly now have access to a laptop. We have programs, and we have communications. We hear the Minister of Innovation and Science from time to time standing up and talking about all the new ideas and all the innovation in the province of Alberta.

Well, one of those innovations is basically the Internet. We now have complete access to the Internet, and as of 1:30 today all of the proceedings of this Assembly are now available to any citizen in the world who has a computer and access to the Internet, every word, gavel to gavel. As we're talking right now this can be picked up. The web site, again, is www.assembly.ab.ca. More than half the citizens of Alberta, I'm told, have access to a personal computer or own one, told consistently that this is the highest number of these machines anywhere. So it would only seem logical to me that every citizen in Alberta should have access to the proceedings of this Assembly, and no member would even want to suggest that they should be denied any access to their Legislature and their parliament from gavel to gavel. Why else would we have the wires and the lines and the machines and anything else? So that's in place as of 1:30 today. No one can say that they cannot hear what's going on at 8 o'clock tonight.

The last point. If there are some individual members in this room who feel that, you know, it's too bad that only 200 can access the Assembly, please remember that every office of every MLA in this Assembly is connected to this Chamber. We have provided a box in your office so that you can follow exactly what is happening in this Assembly at all times. There is nothing to prohibit you from inviting anyone you want to your office to have them join with you or without you in listening to the activities of the Assembly. That was available last night. That was available Monday night. Any member can invite anybody they want into their office. If you want to invite 30 people, that's your business. If you want to invite four, that's your business. You're responsible for your office; you're responsible for your guests. That is available.

So we've got the proceedings, everything, gavel to gavel, available on the web site, the Internet. It's there. Members can invite people to their offices if they want. Two hundred will come into this Assembly tonight, and if people want to assemble on the steps, they can do that. I'm not sure if there's anything more I need to clarify as far as I know about this in the interim.

Again, if there is anything further that needs to be communicated with respect to security, you have to recognize that the Sergeant-at-Arms will look after the security in this Assembly. Discretion and integrity will be followed in that. The same will apply to the security people outside this Assembly. If the Government House Leader has something that he feels he wants to share with the House leaders of the two other parties in this House, then I would encourage him to do that, but there may be some things that he can't share, as well, on the question of security, and members have to be apprised of that. I don't know what further can be said about this matter at this point in time.

There is a provision, hon. members, under Standing Order 13(2): "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision upon the request of a member." I'm not sure I made decisions here in the last few minutes, but if anybody wants to ask a question about any of this, do it now. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments. I listened to them in depth. I have one small problem with your comments, that being your suggestion that our offices are open at any hour, night and day within this building or in fact within the Annex for those of us who do work out of the Annex. There are a number of floors that are specific to each of the various parties in this province, and I have to say after last night's interesting episode that not only was I intimidated by a great deal of what went on last night, but I feel that by allowing our offices to receive as many people as the individual MLA wants on a particular floor, as one of those MLAs that has to move within that building from the ground floor to the sixth floor, I would indeed be intimidated if I had that same crowd that was here last night, with all their malingering and their nasty tactics – I would feel very, very intimidated getting into the same elevator with those same people to go up to my office. I feel that by making this ruling, while I understand your predicament in that MLAs should have some rights to take people into their office, I don't feel that those MLAs who happen to be on the other side of any given issue at any given time should be intimidated on the way to their own offices by an elevator full of demonstrators.

THE SPEAKER: Well, I would be very, very pleased to clarify that for the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. There was not a ruling by the chair with respect to this. The chair simply pointed out the opportunity for individual members in this Assembly to invite guests to their office if they want. Also included in there is the assumption of absolute responsibility by the hon. members for the conduct of their guests. Now, an honourable person with honourable guests: there should be no problem. If something dishonourable occurs, then it is the member's responsibility to answer for that.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, you have a question?

MS OLSEN: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. I just wonder if you could clarify for me. I was a little concerned. You suggested that the House leaders could get together and discuss anything else they might want around security, but then you said that all security measures may not be discussed between all House leaders. We're all Members of the Legislative Assembly, and if there are security practices that are going to be used this evening, for instance, I think it's incumbent upon all members to be aware of what is going on and what security measures are going to be taken. I understand and of course fully acknowledge that security measures can be – we don't want the public having access to them, but I as a Member of this Legislative Assembly believe that we should be aware of those measures that are going to impact me and impact my colleagues, not just half or one person in the Assembly but all of us.

THE SPEAKER: That's exactly my point, hon. member. I have to assume that if you have a House leader, the House leader is conveying those messages to you. I just have to assume that.

Secondly, hon. member, there are no different procedures that I'm aware of that are going to occur tonight than occurred last night, none whatsoever. The hon. member comes to the building. The hon. member parks her car in the parkade. The hon. member takes the pedway to the Assembly, and she's here at 8 o'clock. No issue. No problem. If the hon. member chooses to do something else, that's the hon. member's privilege too.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to clarify something. The last statement you made was that the hon. House leader may not be sharing all of the information about security. Now, if I have to get the Blues, I will.

THE SPEAKER: Sit down, hon. member. Please sit down. There are some events which will occur that are not the right of hon. members to be aware of per se. Let me give you an example. If there is a death threat against a member in this Assembly . . .

MS OLSEN: Fair enough.

THE SPEAKER: Well, that's the type of example. [interjection] Well, I presume that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood as a former member of the Edmonton police force might understand some of these things. There are some things . . . [interjection] Please. [interjection] Please.

Does anybody else have a question they want to raise on this matter? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Mr. Speaker, I do require some clarification on your invitation for our offices to be made available to our constituents. As you're aware, some of us will be in the House and consequently not necessarily able to manage who may or may not be in our offices. I would also like to know what security will be provided to conduct our guests up and down to those offices.

I have a discomfort with that particular blanket statement that you have suggested. I appreciate that you have suggested it so that the people who want to understand what's going on in this building – you have expressed to them in your statements that there are a number of opportunities, one of which would be to visit in our offices. Quite frankly we've had some wonderful visits in our offices and in 503 on the opening of the Legislature, when we're debating the budget, when something is happening in a standing policy committee. There is a long-standing tradition of having guests visit in our office. I want to clarify. What you are suggesting is that in answer to accessing the Legislature during the proceedings that we're now debating before the House, we can accommodate demonstrators from outside by giving them access to our offices.

I would like to categorically state that that is inappropriate. I would also like to know what security measures will be made available to me to (a) greet those guests, (b) accompany them to my office, (c) have them monitored while I may or may not be in the House, and (d) escorted out if something unruly happens or if proceedings complete.

I am having a great deal of difficulty with that recommendation.

THE SPEAKER: Are you on this point, hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose? Because I've got to clarify that. There's total misunderstanding here again.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the part that you mentioned before was very, very clear. Every Member of this Legislative Assembly has the right to invite whoever they want into their office. That doesn't mean that the Speaker condones people bringing demonstrators into the office in any way, shape, or form.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a very serious issue of decorum in the House. Never before in this Legislature have I seen members sitting in their chair and speaking directly to the Speaker when you are making a ruling, sir. What I am saying is that if we do not respect the decorum of this House, if we do not bring respect to this institution, who do we expect will bring that kind of respect here? I find that type of action very, very disturbing. I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to exercise all of the powers vested in you to make sure that this kind of action will not happen again, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, just a question.

MR. MAGNUS: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a member of this Legislature for the last seven years I know and I expect that all of us in this Legislature will be expected to be honourable members, to in fact use the traditions of this House to allow ourselves to act in a responsible manner. After listening to the debate and the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, I have a tremendous concern. Last night, as an example, within the vicinity of this building some people definitely had sharp objects. There was a baseball bat seen. There were windows broken. At this point in time I'm not convinced that when I get into an elevator with 10 or 12 people, which is, I believe, about the maximum any elevator could take, I could in fact trust an hon. member who happened to bring those people in the elevator to control them. As I said, it is extremely intimidating, and your ruling on this in allowing great gobs of people into an elevator is disturbing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, both you and the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie are totally out of line on this. You've not listened to what I've said, and that's very, very abusive language, which I find totally disturbing.

This is what I said. Every office in this building comes under the purview of the hon. member who occupies it. So the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill has an office, and if the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill wants to invite somebody to his office, he can. If the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill chooses not to invite somebody to his office, he doesn't have to. Nobody compels him. If the hon. member invites somebody to his office, he's responsible for the conduct of those people. Right now individuals from across the province visiting Alberta are in offices in this Assembly. There is no marshaling to say that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul can invite somebody to his office but somebody else cannot. Nobody knows, and there's no great surveillance, so don't get carried away. If the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill doesn't want to invite anybody to his office, he doesn't have to. Nobody is going to make him invite anybody to his office. If he chooses to bring somebody to his office, he's responsible for their conduct in his office.

What would be the purpose of bringing anybody to his office in the context of what we were talking about? It had to do with listening to what was going on in the Assembly. As of 1:30 today we have a web site that they can be referred to, so they don't even have to go to the office to listen to it. They can listen to it at home. So what have we missed here?

Hon. Government House Leader, if this is the kind of communication problems we have, then I can understand why the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona rose on a point of privilege. We've got to make sure people start listening to what's going on in here.

Okay. We've got six points of order. We had a question period that was abbreviated. We had a recess in the question period. We've had a discussion here now. Six points of order: the Opposition House Leader, the Opposition House Leader, the Opposition House Leader, the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, the Government House Leader, the Opposition House Leader. I'm going to ask this question: have we dealt with these six points of order, or should we now entertain these in the order in which they are?

It was not – it was not – a good situation in the question period. There were six interjections by the chair in a matter of minutes. Six interjections. We'll have a debate, scheduled for 8 o'clock tonight, on Bill 11. The language was not appropriate. The atmosphere was terrible. Do you want to deal with the six? Well, that's okay with me. It's only 10 after 4.

The first point of order.

Point of Order Oral Question Period Rules

MR. DICKSON: Thank you. Actually, both the first and second would be under 13(2) in terms of Standing Orders. I wanted to ask this question of you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize the difficulty the chair has in question period with the kind of intensity we are seeing these days, and I understand that it's an art, not a science, but the most recent authority, the House of Commons Procedure and Practice book, edited by Marleau and Montpetit, identifies at page 425 that the primary purpose must be the seeking of information from the government and calling the government to account for its actions [and that] members should be given the greatest possible freedom in the putting of questions that is consistent with the other principles.

Mr. Speaker, you referenced the matter of inflammatory questions, but I have to understand where the balance is with urgency. When we have an issue that is galvanizing the people of the province and our job as legislators, in particular as the Official Opposition, is to test the government, challenge the government, to reflect this enormous degree of concern, how do we ensure that that high, intense level of public concern can be reflected in the one and only place where the government can be held accountable if the questions are deemed to be inflammatory, when the subject itself is inflammatory?

I don't mean to be argumentative, but I'm trying to get some clarification in terms of how we address the urgency and how we ensure that that sort of public focus can be fairly and accurately represented in here by the opposition.

That's both my first two points of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate having the opportunity to address this. First of all, let me say that I think your interjections were entirely appropriate this afternoon. This is a passionate subject, and it does have intensity. It behooves every member of this House, then, in asking questions in the House and in providing answers in the House, as you pointed out, not to further inflame it by using inappropriate language which would be argumentative or provoke debate. It should not be very difficult for a member to phrase within the rules of procedure of this House a succinct preamble, not more than one sentence, if I remember the rules correctly. Presumably, a preamble is to put something in context and then to frame a question. What we've been seeing in this House and what you quite correctly have been admonishing us on for the last month and a half or so is that the preambles have not been succinct and in fact have been putting hypotheses which, in this member's humble opinion, have been in many cases totally incorrect, which then begs response and does inflame the debate.

Now, if one were to keep to the rules of the House, one would provide a succinct preamble, presumably a factual preamble, but I understand that sometimes different people see facts in different ways. Rather than colouring and providing a wide scope of both content and length in the preambles, it would provide for better decorum in the House if members opposite, when raising their questions, provided that one succinct preamble, to the point, and then a brief question and did not then proceed to try and in fact inflame the House with the type of language that we've seen, the type of language that we saw on the two questions on which this point of order was raised.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, today is nearly day 30 of this particular session. Let me just say two things. I've said this time and time again. The briefer the question, the briefer the answer, the more questions and the more participation by hon. members. I view very, very strongly that the chair's job is to ensure that hon. members have an opportunity to participate in the question period.

The British Columbia Legislative Assembly, where the Speaker was several weeks ago and observed the process in the House, has a daily question period of 15 minutes. In the 15-minute time frame, when this Speaker was there, there were 13 questions and answers. No parliament in the country is more divided nor polarized than the British Columbia Legislative Assembly in terms of intensity. Today in the House of Commons they're timed: 35 seconds for the question, 35 seconds for the answer.

When I hear the questions and the stuff that goes on in here and the recognition that this many days have been spent in here, the general recognition that if the matter is on the Order Paper, it's not to be the subject matter of debate in the question period, and when one looks at the Order Paper again for today and sees a certain subject matter on the Order Paper at 8 o'clock tonight, then it causes interjections.

This is not the first time this has happened. This chairman started saying that as soon as we passed second reading of this particular bill, which was more than one week ago, and has interjected on numerous occasions since then, including today: in a 20-minute time frame six interjections.

This is question period. Latitude is given to questions. Well, let's try brevity of 35 seconds and see how many interjections there will be. Let's try that tomorrow: 35-second questions, 35-second answers. Please convey that to your hon. leaders.

Third point, the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

MR. DICKSON: Actually, I'll deal with the next two together because it was twice. This was, I think, in the third set of questions from the Leader of the Opposition to the Premier. The Premier said that the Liberals were inciting the crowd outside. He came back and said that again.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you talk about provocative language and inflammatory language. Given the history of what we've just been through a scant few moments ago about damage to property, about MLAs feeling fearful for the Premier, who to my knowledge was not on the premises either Monday night or Tuesday night, to accuse my colleagues or this member of being inflammatory is an irresponsible statement.

The reality, as I understand it, is that both on Monday night and last night some of my colleagues were encouraged by security officials to in fact speak with people. There was advice given each night after we adjourned, at least after we left Bill 11. Some of my colleagues informed people outside that it had been dealt with and were thanked by some of the people responsible for our security because it allowed people to disperse and go home, knowing that was the end, presumably making it safer for members to make their way back to their cars or their offices.

I understand that those of my colleagues who have spoken to people outside who came to participate in fact have encouraged people to act appropriately, to be peaceful and have given them information, which has reduced, I believe, the frustration of those who are so frustrated about this issue.

In any event, I just think that for the Premier to make that sort of allegation - and I note, Mr. Speaker, that you have talked about inflammatory questions that caused you to intervene numerous times when questions were asked by my colleague the Leader of the Opposition, but there was no intervention when the Premier twice made an allegation which is as inflammatory about Liberals inciting the crowd outside. There will be people watching that on TV who will assume that the Premier was there and that some of my colleagues were encouraging people to slash tires or to enter a window improperly.

AN HON. MEMBER: He never said that at all.

MR. DICKSON: Well, that's the implication. That's what it does. It suggests that there's a nexus between what my colleagues have been doing on the last two nights and anything else that happened. I think, frankly, that the Premier should be thanking my colleagues who have been taking the time to keep members of the public informed.

That's the observation I wanted to make on those two points of order, and that exhausts the points of order I have this afternoon.

4:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood was on this same point of order. They both rose at the same time.

MS OLSEN: Yes. Actually I'll speak to this one, and it will also address my further point of order.

THE SPEAKER: I didn't know you had a further one.

MS OLSEN: Oh, well. Okay. We'll deal with this.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague has made some interesting points. I think it's very important that all of our colleagues in here understand that at no point did our leader or anybody in here incite anybody to behave in an illegal – illegal – manner. I think it would be highly unfair of the Premier or any other member in this House to suggest for one minute or to leave the impression with people who are watching on television today and in the audience today that we were responsible for slashed tires, for security and special constables getting beaten up, and all of those kinds of things. In fact, that is so highly untrue, and that is inflammatory.

In fact, if I might say, myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora went outside specifically to talk to people at the end of Bill 11 to tell them: please, head on home; it's over. At no time did the Leader of the Opposition or the Liberals here in this caucus do any such thing. We encouraged peaceful demonstration. That's what we believe in. We denounce the violent behaviour that was exhibited by a very few people outside. That's why the police were here. That's what they were here to deal with, and that's what they should deal with. For the most part, the folks that were here were quiet. They were here for a reason. They were expressing their frustration. For me and for my colleagues it's very important that the Premier acknowledge that nobody was encouraging rabble-rousing. I don't want to see that kind of behaviour tonight. I don't want to see that kind of behaviour on these premises or on these grounds at any time and do not condone it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on this point of order.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the hon. House leader rose and brought up what went on Monday night in his point of order, I'd like to read to you from Hansard. After the Sergeant-at-Arms had intervened twice and asked the gallery to come to order, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said:

This is their House. This is the people of Alberta's House, Mr. Chairman, not the government's House. It is for the people of Alberta, and they have a right to have their voices heard.

She was speaking directly to the gallery when they had interrupted the proceedings of this House two times earlier.

The Sergeant-at-Arms had to intervene again: "Order. Order in the gallery. For the third time, you are not part of the proceedings. You are simply here to observe." Then when decorum came back, Edmonton-Ellerslie led off: "We certainly appreciate the support of all of you who have come this evening," again addressing the gallery. If that isn't inciting the gallery to get involved and do away with our right to represent our constituencies, to speak and to be heard in this House, then I don't know what is.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: On this point of order, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul?

MR. LANGEVIN: Yes. On this point of order. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some members of the opposition are trying to deny that they tried to incite the demonstrators, but last night I was sitting on the balcony with the hon. Member for Dunvegan, and the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Glenora walked out to talk to the crowd. There must have been 150 to 200 demonstrators out back there, and if that's not inciting the crowd, I don't know what it is. He thanked them for coming. He said: we need your support; we need your assistance; we can't fight this alone; I will come out every 15 minutes or half an hour to update you on what's happening in the House; this is your House. So I was a witness that he was really trying to incite the crowd on this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on this point of order.

MR. SAPERS: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I guess that's why there's a problem with eyewitness testimony. In fact, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul is correct. He and I also exchanged words immediately following my address to the crowd. I asked the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul if he knew who it was that made the decision to lock up the Assembly, and he said: I don't know, but if it were up to me, I wouldn't have locked up the Assembly; I would have used a water cannon on the crowd. So in terms of making inciteful comments, I'm surprised he didn't put it all on the record.

Now, as a matter of fact, on Monday night I talked to many of the Albertans that were here at the Assembly and made a point, Mr. Speaker, of going out into the crowd and doing a little temperature check and seeing what was going on when we heard pounding at the doors, et cetera. As a result of that, I've had comments from several members of the security staff acknowledging that and in fact expressing some gratitude for not just my efforts but in fact members of the Official Opposition in terms of keeping things as cool as they were on Monday night.

On Tuesday evening, last night, it was made very, very clear that if I left the Assembly, I would have difficulty getting back into the Chamber. Somewhere around 8:35, 8:40, I think it was – and maybe the Member for Dunvegan or Lac La Biche-St. Paul can confirm the time, because I wasn't looking at my watch – I heard some noise coming from the south lawn area. I looked over the balcony to see what that was. There was an assembly of I'm not sure how many hundred Albertans there. They were chanting. They were quite boisterous, but they were not violent. At that point I motioned for them to please be quiet. [interjections] The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul will confirm that and so will the Member for Dunvegan. I told them that we were proceeding with debate on Bill 11. I passed along the information that was provided to us, that should members of the public who were present in the gallery leave, we were informed that as they left others would be allowed in. I told them that, that they should be patient because they may be able to come into the Chamber, and I told them that I or somebody else would make an attempt to keep them updated on what was going on. You see, Mr. Speaker, I think it's very important in terms of communication, in terms of crowd control, in terms of honesty of the process to keep people informed as to what's going on.

Now, if the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul believes that was inciting people, to provide information, to acknowledge their presence and their frustration, well, then he and I have very different interpretations of what inciting a crowd is. I would ask that Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to take the opportunity to clarify his allegations about my behaviour and to reflect carefully before he does. I had an opportunity to briefly work with that member before he sat as a member of the government, and I know that he is a man of some integrity, so I would just ask for him to carefully consider the allegation that he just made.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would take the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood at her word, as we must in this House and as I want to do, because she is a member with a great deal of integrity and a police officer. It should be clear that at no time was anybody suggesting – and I was here right beside the Premier. I think it would be a real stretch to suggest that the Premier was alleging that the members of the Liberal opposition were inciting the crowd to do illegal acts or inciting anybody to slash a tire or do any of that. I don't believe that was the intention or the import of the words that the Premier used, and I think that should be perfectly clear. I do not believe that any member of the Liberal opposition was inciting any member of the public to do an illegal act or to go to any extreme.

It is, however, I think quite appropriate to recognize that people must take some responsibility for the natural consequences of what they do. In a situation where we have a very heated topic with a lot of passionate people involved in the topic, we as members must be very, very circumspect in our actions and very, very circumspect in our words in terms of what we do when there is a crowd of the nature that we had Monday night and of the nature that we had on Tuesday night. It behooves all of us as members of this Assembly to respect the dignity of the Assembly and to deal with our differences as matters of principle and matters of issues and not as matters of personality and not as matters of creating passions which are reflected in manners which do not contribute to debate and sound discussion of ideas but rather contribute to emotionalism with the ultimate intention of trying to change a result by overpowering or by creating an emphasis of power. I only say that because I think it is important to reflect on what happens when a member leaves this Assembly and goes out to a crowd and makes comments to that crowd.

Now, I would not deny any member of this House their right to speak to any member of the public at any time in any circumstance. I simply suggest that we all as leaders must reflect on what happens when we do that, how we do that, and what the intended result or the unintended result might be when we do that. In that case, using the word inciting and talking about inciting, the actions must be taken in that context. Because by going out to a crowd – and it happens all the time. When there are demonstrations on the steps of the Legislature, members of this Assembly go out and join the demonstrators and speak to them and talk to them.

MR. DICKSON: Some government members too.

MR. HANCOCK: Sometimes government members. I said members of the Assembly. I didn't limit it to any particular party.

That is appropriate. But one must always be circumspect in terms of the circumstances in which they do that, the method in which they do that, and what the intended and perhaps the unintended results of doing that might be. I simply put that on the floor today because I think it is very important when we're in a discussion of health care, which is a passionate discussion for most Albertans, if not all Albertans, and when we can expect people to come to their Legislature and not have enough room in the galleries for all people who might want to be here.

The question then is: what is there for other people to do who are on the grounds of the Legislature? For some of those people it's making noise and making their views known, and that is an entirely appropriate form of representing one's viewpoints although, in this humble member's opinion, not a very effective one. But it's there, and it's used from time to time, and it's appropriate, and it happens on the steps of our Legislature. But we should not as members try to raise those passions or by our actions, whether trying or not, raise those passions to a level which is inappropriate. I think it's appropriate to say to members that they should not incite that type of inflammation of the passions of the people who are coming to make legitimate protest.

We also have to recognize that when people come to the Legislature to make legitimate protest or anywhere to make legitimate protest, sometimes there are people who none of us condone, not the members opposite and not the members on this side. There are people who take advantage of a situation like that to cause mischief, that have nothing necessarily to do with the issue at hand, but because there is that type of emotion at hand, it's time for them to do illegal acts. We don't condone that, we don't encourage that, and we don't incite that, but it is the natural consequence of an inflamed crowd. So again I would encourage all members to be very, very circumspect in terms of how they deal with crowds in this sort of a situation.

With respect to my friend from Edmonton-Glenora, when there's a crowd of that nature, speaking from the balcony at the back of the House might well have the effect of encouraging the crowd in terms of their antics of banging on the door or shouting louder or doing other things. Some of those might be very legitimate, but one has to be in a circumstance where we have security in the building – we have police that have been called because there have been some acts which are not routine acts. In fact, when there have been people come in through a window – and I believe the hon. member knew this, and I'd be happy to be corrected if he didn't – and there has been an altercation with a security guard, then it's even more necessary for us to be circumspect in our actions and not go out and play the crowd, so to speak. Even though in our normal course that might be considered appropriate, in a circumstance where the situation is already very inflamed and we must deal with the security of members and the security of the building, some of those same actions may be inappropriate in that circumstance.

So I'd just ask all members of the House to reflect on that as we go through this debate with passionate people, passionate Albertans and passionate people on the floor of this House, that we deal with how we interrelate with the people who come to the Legislature to make their expressions known and that we be very careful that we not encourage them to do more than bring a reasonable protest, which is the norm in Alberta.

MR. SAPERS: Talk to your staff.

MR. HANCOCK: The hon. member says talk to my staff. I wasn't going to allude to this, but the invitation is now open for me to do so. Last night I left the House on several occasions to consult with members of the security staff in the House. On one of those such occasions I had to intercede in a heated discussion between a member of my staff and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I had to tell both of them that in a circumstance like this, we should be leaders. We should not be having that type of heated discussion in the midst . . .

MR. SAPERS: Explain why.

MR. HANCOCK: It doesn't matter why. The hon. member says, "Explain why."

THE SPEAKER: Please. Please. You see, hon. members, with all of the words that are said and everything else, both of you violate the fundamental principle of this Assembly and cause an inciting of disruption in the Assembly by failing to abide by again the most fundamental of all rules: you speak through the chair. If you speak through the chair, you don't hear what anybody else says and you don't get baited by what anyone else says, and then the chair will take the time to recognize the other person maybe.

Put it akin to fishing. Okay; you're sitting there on a nice happy day. The boat is bobbing in nice water, and you throw out your line. Wow, it's peaceful and everything else. But if some silly fish out there makes a mistake and snags that hook, then all of a sudden the adrenalin in your body starts to move, that fish starts to fight, and, boy, there's a great adrenalin flow. You don't ever catch the fish by throwing out the line. It doesn't happen.

So address your comments through the chair and focus on the issue and ignore everybody else, both sides. We don't have any inciting.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, having started, I must finish, because I think it is appropriate to have it in context. At the front door in the midst of security and in the midst of dealing with this issue, it was not an appropriate time or place for a heated discussion about who was told what, when, and where. So I had to prevail upon both the hon. member and the member of my staff not to engage in that type of a discussion at that point in time and in that place and to be leaders. Now, if that's the type of calming influence the hon. member was having outside the House, then I think there may be some merit to the Premier's remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I go back to my earlier point, and I do apologize. I only made that reference because I was baited. You're right. I shouldn't have listened, and I couldn't keep my mouth shut because I was speaking. The important point that I have to make – and I've said it a few times, but I think it bears repeating again – is that all of us must be circumspect in how we deal with members of the public when we have an issue of this passion, and it's not appropriate for us to be making inflammatory remarks, but it is entirely appropriate for us to be out and talking among the members of the public. If that's what the hon. members were doing, then I don't fault them for that. But I think in doing so, if that were to cause additional demonstration of an inappropriate behaviour – for example, if one were to say to people that the building was open and they could come inside and demonstrate, that would be inappropriate and that would be inciting the type of thing that we had on Monday night.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Thank you very much, hon. members, with respect to that.

This all started with a point of order with respect to the usage of words in question period today. There was very, very inflammatory language in the question period today, and that prompted the recess that we were given. I can go back. I have the Blues in front of me: words like "absentee Premier," "stop watching movies," "pay attention to the people" and then the response coming from the leader of the government and then some hon. members' interjections saying, "You're an embarrassment," at which time the hon. Premier says:

Mr. Speaker, I heard across the way that I'm an embarrassment. They're an embarrassment.

Well, okay.

These are the people out there inciting riots. These are the people that condone slashed tires. These are the people that condone people ripping off door handles . . . These are the people, Mr. Speaker, who condone striking and using violence against security people at the Legislature. These are the people who are out there inciting this kind of deplorable, despicable behaviour.

None of this, from the absentee this to you're ignoring "the pleas and the values of . . . 700,000 Roman Catholics" – and, oh, by the way, I am one – to stuff like that which is just . . .

Let's try a 35-second question tomorrow and let's try a 35-second answer. Okay? Let's just try and see what happens. We're going to try it. We'll try really, really hard to do it; won't we? That's going to be brevity. Let's try and do it tomorrow, and you're going to get away from inflammations and big speeches and everything else.

Then, in terms of all the other information things, here's the latest note I got. "Mr. Speaker, last night I was off from House duty just past 8 o'clock. On my walk home from the Legislature Annex I met a man with a shovel and hammer in his hand. I made the comment that he was going to fix the flower beds." He said: "No. Hell, no. I'm going to the demonstration," and raised the shovel up and hit it with the hammer, apparently to make a noise. "Please let our security know this."

Let's be careful with some of this stuff.

Government House Leader, you have a point of order now. It had to do with somebody's use of the word absentee.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

MR. HANCOCK: It did indeed, Mr. Speaker. We had a series of questions or an attempt at a series of questions this afternoon which clearly, clearly attempted, in an absolute breach of the rules of this House, to refer to a member's presence or absence in the House.

Now, the members of the opposition have not been so subtle in terms of recording their presence by voting on adjournment every night. That's perfectly valid. It's perfectly valid to do so, to have a standing vote at any time that there's a vote and by so doing record their presence in the House. But by raising questions in the House relating to an allegation that the Premier was watching a movie, the clear intention in that question – and by the way, I checked with the Premier's security staff, and he hasn't been to a movie in weeks. I think it is a rule of law that you can't do indirectly what you're prohibited from doing directly. What they're trying to do is skirt the rules of this House which say that you cannot refer to a member's presence or absence. The hon. Leader of the Opposition clearly had designed in her question and in the comments which you just read out about "absentee Premier," a flagrant abuse of the rules by attempting to do indirectly what you can't do directly, which is attempting to make allegations as to the Premier's absence for a particular discussion in this House, and that's entirely inappropriate.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, as I understood the reference to "absentee," I understood it to be reference to a big rally in Calgary on Saturday, a big rally in Edmonton on Sunday, a large demonstration in terms of people here on Monday night and people here on Tuesday. I don't have the Blues. That's what I understood it to be. The Leader of the Opposition knows full well that we don't make reference to people not being present for House business, and I understood it to relate to those other matters.

I understand it was the Premier in a television interview that at least one of my colleagues had seen where he had been at the Salvation Army in Calgary speaking and then told a reporter where he was going to be, why he wasn't going to be here. He was asked what he thought about the demonstration. His comment was that he chose to watch a movie instead and he wouldn't attend. I didn't see the TV thing. I'm reporting thirdhand what I heard.

The point is this: if you look at the context, I did not understand it to be a reference to the Premier not being present in the House. I understood it to mean the Premier not being present for a host of other demonstrations and expressions of the popular will of Albertans, the people we're supposed to be representing and advantaging with the work in this Assembly and the legislation we pass. The argument being that with a bill like Bill 11 and the private health care policy, we're doing none of those things.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, it wasn't that long ago that I was born, but I wasn't born yesterday. There is so much innuendo in some of these questions and everything else. I really like the Government House Leader, and I really like the Opposition House Leader, but I think you both like playing lawyer, and you both like doing it in this Assembly. There are some basic rules, so I'm going to say again, one more time, let's try tomorrow a 35-second question, a 35-second answer, sort of like mimicking the House of Commons in Canada. I see a lot of members sort of nodding and saying that's probably a pretty good idea, so let's see how we go with that. [interjection] Oh, no. It's absentee, watching movies, not paying attention, and on and on and on. Anyway, I've made enough comments about that.

Speaker's Ruling Addressing the Chair

THE SPEAKER: I'm going to say one other thing as well about inciting and playing to the crowds, that came up as well, because I neglected to comment on this a little earlier. I believe the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake in his point was talking about inciting, presumably inciting people in this Assembly and talking to the galleries. We don't do that. Nobody talks to the galleries.

Now, listen. This chairperson was either in the chair or observed or listened to the proceedings of this House, and the first person to speak to the gallery was not a member of the opposition. The member knows who he is, and he's smiling, and he got a note from the chair at that time. After that, several members of the opposition played to the gallery. Then last night another minister of Executive Council spoke to the gallery not through the chair, and that was – well, we didn't mention any other names, so we won't mention these. So don't anybody start calling the kettle black here. Don't start doing that. You talk to the chair – tonight it'll be the Chairman or the Deputy Chairman of Committees – not to the crowds. I've had a discussion with them, and they're going to be very, very firm about repeating that again, and if people want to play to the crowd, that's inciting. That's a contempt of this Assembly.

There's a reason for doing it. There are long historical reasons why you speak to the chair. There's a reason why you're supposed to address and look at the chair. You don't turn your back to the chair, because who knows what you'll do with your back to the chair about somebody else from – well, I'm not going to give any examples. There are enough in trouble in here as it is. There are many, many examples in the history of parliament why that is there, why you face the chair, why you speak through the chair. You are also protected by the chair as a result of that. That's just a little example about avoiding inciting of this or inciting of that.

Now, hon. members, it's 10 minutes to 5. We've dealt with these points and what have you, and the only bottom line through all of this is that if chaos is going to be the order of the day around this place, then a lot of people have got to do some real deep, deep thinking. I'm telling you that the letters I'm getting in my office about the conduct of this Assembly and the e-mails that are mentioning names of hon. members on all sides of the House are not complimentary. These same people are going to send those letters to the newspapers in your constituencies, not by any encouragement from this person. They're going to do it, and they're going to circulate them, and there's not one person out there who elected anybody in this House to have them come and be anything but the most honourable of honourable. If you feel really moved that you can't control yourself, get up, go to the washroom, hit your head against the wall, or go for a walk.

4:50

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science on behalf of the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 14, 15, and 16.

[Motion carried]

CRHA Acute Care Beds

Q14. Ms Leibovici moved that the following question be accepted.

What are the actual numbers of and occupancy rates for acute care beds serving the Calgary regional health authority from April 1, 1992, to March 20, 2000?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question given the context of the debates we've had over not only the last few months but the last number of years. We know that there are concerns regarding the availability of acute care beds in the Calgary region. We know that in fact there have been two hospitals that have been sold and one that has been blown up, yet we keep being told that there are more beds now than there were in 1993, I believe. The question, though, is: what exactly are the numbers of those acute care beds in the Calgary health authority, and what are the occupancy rates for those beds from April 1, 1992, to March 20, 2000?

Now, the government may well say that they can't provide those figures because in fact they did not have a regional health authority at the time, but they had a number of individual hospitals. I would think, Mr. Speaker, that given the fact that those hospitals would have had to supply information to the department of health at the time, in fact it would be very easy to count the number of beds that were available at that time and the number of beds that are available at this time. So I will wait for the government's response to my request.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me. A response maybe?

DR. TAYLOR: I apologize. I was listening to the House leader, Mr. Speaker.

I'm pleased to be able to say that the government is accepting this Written Question 14.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to close debate.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you. I look forward to the response.

[Written Question 14 carried]

Shooting of Bears

Q15. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

How many bears were shot between April 1, 1998, to March 31, 1999, and April 1, 1999, to March 31, 2000, by private landowners and grazing leaseholders on Crown land or by anyone acting on their behalf, and in how many cases did landowners or leaseholders call Alberta Environment to trap nuisance bears?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. I am pleased to respond that the government will accept Written Question 15 with the amendment. I move the amendment as well. Do I need to read that, Mr. Speaker? It has been distributed. Okay.

I move that Written Question 15 be amended by (a) adding "According to Alberta Environment records," before "How"; (b) striking out "shot" and substituting "killed"; and (c) striking out "trap" and substituting "deal with." So Written Question 15 will read:

According to Alberta Environment records, how many bears were killed between April 1, 1998, to March 31, 1999, and April 1, 1999, to March 31, 2000, by private landowners and grazing leaseholders on Crown land or by anyone acting on their behalf, and in how many cases did landowners or leaseholders call Alberta Environment to deal with nuisance bears?

We will be accepting that amended written question.

MR. DICKSON: I have no expertise in the area of how we track this kind of statistic. I expect we would be pleased to get the information, and I suppose to the extent that we require additional information, we will pursue that, but we'll appreciate the information we can get and thank the minister for providing us with this information.

Thank you.

[Written Question 15 as amended carried]

Maintenance Enforcement

Q16. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

How many agreements is the Department of Justice and Attorney General currently negotiating with other jurisdictions pursuant to the Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science on behalf of the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Once again on behalf of openness and attempting to please the opposition we're pleased to accept this Written Question 16.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm pleased to hear this, because this is a question and an issue that I know many members in the Assembly deal with. It seems to be on the problems that arise out of the lack of reciprocal agreements that seem to be on the rise and is causing not a large number of individuals but certainly those individuals that are affected. It affects them in the most intimate way possible in that they don't have the finances to provide for their family, or in the opposite case they are not able to release the money that they would like to. Specifically I'm looking for how many agreements are being pursued, and I expect that with the answer will come an indication of which jurisdictions are being pursued currently.

I did ask this question last year at the same time, and I'm hoping that each year I'll be able to have more names added to the list that the government is pursuing to get reciprocal enforcement of maintenance with additional countries, states, and provinces, as appropriate.

With those words, I thank you.

[Written Question 16 carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour and the emotion of the afternoon and all the other things that go into it, I would move that we adjourn at this time until 8 tonight, at which time we reconvene in Committee of the Whole.

THE SPEAKER: On the motion put forward by the hon. Government House Leader that the Assembly do now adjourn but reconvene at 8 o'clock this evening in committee, would all those in favour please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Carried. Thank you.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:59 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 19, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/04/19

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. We have as our first item for consideration Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act.

Before we proceed with that, I'd like to just address the gallery for a moment. This is the informal part of the Legislative Assembly. You're probably used to seeing the Assembly when the Speaker is up here, and there are a certain set of rules and regulations that govern that process. This is the informal part, where you're allowed to go clause by clause through a bill, to look at it, to ask questions, and it allows either side to ask an unlimited number of questions – whereas in the Assembly there are specific limitations to that – or to debate unlimited amounts of time, except only 20 minutes at a time.

I would also like to remind people in the gallery that you're here as observers, not as participants, which means, then, that if something good is said, you're not to encourage that through clapping or cheering or, if it's something that you don't care for, by booing or stomping your feet or whatever. In other words, you're not invited nor permitted to engage in whatever debate goes on here.

For those of you who are here and may wish to sometime later on this evening or at another time, we are on the Internet. I can't say that I'm that fluent in the language, but if you want to copy down the location, it's www.assembly.ab.ca. You might want to refer to that later on this evening or perhaps at another time.

The chair would make the usual reminder to hon. members that only one member speaks at a time. Only one member stands and speaks at a time, although, as you can see, hon. members are allowed to take off their jackets, because it does get warm in here. They're allowed to have coffee or juice at their desks, and they're allowed to go and sit and talk to other members. Very quietly they're allowed to talk. It is much less formal than the regular Assembly.

With that, I would begin this evening with the opportunity to introduce guests. May we have unanimous consent for Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two people seated in the members' gallery this evening: John Craig from Ardrossan and John Stainton from Sherwood Park. I would ask that the members here present do acknowledge their presence with pleasure.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Sorry, Calgary-Buffalo; I'll get to you.

MS BLAKEMAN: You'll get your turn.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very active family that lives in my constituency. I think there are four of them here tonight. This is John and Diane and Tim and Kate Oxenford. John and Diane are very active with the Concerv group in Rosedale, and I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE CHAIRMAN: Now the patient hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Not wanting anyone to be left out, I'd like to invite all of those people that are here to express their concern with Bill 11 to rise and receive the warm welcome of Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Bill 11

Health Care Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, just to remind ourselves where we're at, we're on a subamendment to the first amendment. So it's subamendment SA1, part A.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to again thank the citizens that have expressed so much interest in this particular bill and have made a point of coming out and viewing the debate that's carried on here. This is now the third night in a row that we've seen the galleries full, and in my 11 years that I've been here, I haven't seen that before. It's the third night in a row that we've seen crowds: Monday night, of course, inside the building; Tuesday night and Wednesday night, outside of the building. Again, there's a crowd out there tonight.

Mr. Chairman, I would hope that you would show us the same latitude that was shown by the chairman last night when we were making comments. At times we do stray somewhat, but that latitude was basically given to all members. Again, I thought it provided a great deal of assistance in allowing the members that participated in the debate to really participate. So if there's no objection to that.

Mr. Chairman, on the way here I drove into the parking lot where the people are gathered. I was going to go out last night and speak to the people out there and explain to them what we were doing, why we were working on this subamendment that we feel is so important, but because of what I saw there on the main floor – you know, the full alert, basically, the sort of a shutdown – I kind of hesitated. I thought: well, maybe it would be a bad scene out there. But when I drove there tonight and I looked at the young people and the people with Canadian flags and a fellow pushing his wife in a wheelchair, to me it looked like citizens that are peacefully demonstrating, that are very, very concerned about this particular bill.

Mr. Chairman, the frustration that these people find and that I find and that I'm sure all members of the opposition find is: what do we have to do? Now, this is the third night we've been debating this subamendment. What do we have to do to try and get the viewpoints of Albertans across that there is major concern with this bill, with the amendment that was proposed? Albertans want to see it radically changed. Despite the fact that we had 8,500 participating in two rallies over the weekend, with potential for thousands more if the AgriCom could have accommodated them, despite the rallies, despite the petitions, despite everything, the government for some reason chooses not to listen.

So as we are the voice of Albertans in the Legislative Assembly who want to express an opinion that's contrary to the government position or philosophy, they have no choice but to come to us and ask us, and we have no choice but to aid them and do what we're doing now by debating this and continuing to debate it. If we've got to go till June, if we've got to go till July, if we've got to go till August, so be it. Eventually somebody is going to start to listen to Albertans, and they're going to realize the error of their ways. They're going to say: well, we've been wrong, and we've got to in fact make some changes in our philosophy towards health care reform.

On this subamendment specifically, Mr. Chairman. I know that last night and the night before there was a tendency for the audience to want to participate and show their agreement or disagreement with statements that were being made by various members. When the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, for example, was up and sort of indicated that he felt that Albertans in the gallery were supportive of what he was saying, well, there was a chorus of boos that came down. Of course, our good Sergeant-at-Arms has no choice but to call the House to order. Mr. Chairman, if people really want to show their displeasure, can't they do like those guys do on TV reviewing the movies: two thumbs down or two thumbs up? If you like what I'm saying, two thumbs up. That'll give me a signal. If you don't like what the government members are saying . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, just listen. All hon. members, when you have the opportunity to address the committee, you do so through the chair, not to the gallery, not to your opposite number over here but through the chair. That's a long-standing tradition that helps keep our tempers down and helps us to perhaps focus. That's why I try and keep visual contact with you, and if I nod from time to time, it primarily means that I'm agreeing that I'm hearing you, not that I'm agreeing or disagreeing.

So with that in mind, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, would you continue.

8:10

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you once again, Mr. Chairman, for your valuable guidance. It's always appreciated when we go off track just a wee, wee bit, and it helps put us back on track.

Debate Continued

MR. WICKMAN: One of the things that I talked about last night when I spoke – and I want to touch on it again because it is so, so important to the subamendment. The subamendment that we're dealing with right now really revolves around one of the most important aspects of Bill 11, one of the aspects that I feel that Albertans object to so strenuously, as I'd indicated, and that is the question of the surgical facilities being allowed to operate with no maximum stays in terms of overnight stays and that type of thing.

There is a perception out there, which I agree with, quite frankly, that these surgical facilities are for-profit hospitals, and that's what's so bothersome. Now, we see the terminology "surgical facility" of course used in our subamendment because we're addressing the amendment that was put forward by the Minister of Health and Wellness, which again referred to surgical facilities but added the terminology of the dentists. Of course, "surgical facility" is in the original bill.

I would have hoped that one of the government members, when they stood up last night to speak, would have addressed one of the concerns that I expressed. I'm going to express that concern again in anticipation of being somewhat optimistic that it is going to be addressed. That goes to the whole indication of the government's perception of the overall support for Bill 11 where they indicate that a majority of Albertans support the particular bill, down from their own previous poll, by the way. I just wonder why the government didn't have the courage to state within the question that Albertans were asked that it was surgical facilities that were being referred to, not private institutions.

Why did the government choose to be so misleading in that question they asked Albertans if they really wanted to find out how Albertans felt? This question doesn't give any indication as to how Albertans feel. In the previous three polls that we have access to, where the question was more direct and addressed the issue, in all three cases without question the vast majority of Albertans by a substantial portion indicated that they were opposed to Bill 11. Had this been properly worded, the same thing would have happened as well.

It troubles me, Mr. Chairman, that we see that type of thing happen, because when the government brings forward a bill, the government has a duty, a responsibility to try and sell the content of that bill to the public based on what is in the bill, not on some cleverly worded terminology that may deceive Albertans or may fool them or mislead them, whatever expression you want to use. That's what's happening here. First of all, in that poll using the term "private institutions" is really, really startling. Equally startling is why in the bill they used the term "surgical facility" instead of just saying what it is, a hospital. Just imagine. If the question asked of Albertans would have read, "The stated goal of the health protection act is to reduce waiting lists and increase overall efficiency; under this plan Alberta Health will pay for all insured services performed at for-profit hospitals," how many Albertans do you think would have said yes?

MRS. SOETAERT: Maybe two.

MR. WICKMAN: Well, one doctor would have said yes for sure, because he does stand to benefit. He made that position very, very clear in his support of Bill 11, that he did in fact support the bill.

You know, interestingly, Mr. Chairman, in the hundreds of phone calls my constituency office has received, the e-mails, the letters, the people that I have talked to, there's only been one – and I tabled that letter in the House as well in fairness to the person that sent it to me, because I promise people that if they want their views tabled in this House, I'll do it. Just one has contacted me and said, "I support Bill 11," and he raked me over the coals for opposing it, and he said that I was way out to lunch, that I hadn't read the bill. I didn't want to get into a debate with him, but I could have pointed out that there were government members that were confronted by the media that obviously hadn't read the bill, because they weren't sure of the content of the bill.

But all members of this caucus have read the bill, studied the bill. We've debated the bill. We've talked to Albertans about the bill. We've talked about the amendments. We've talked about the subamendment. We've gone over it so many times that I am extremely comfortable that I have a pretty good perception of what this bill is going to do, what this amendment would do, what this subamendment would do, and I think the people that come out here and listen know what's going on, and that's why they're coming out here. It's a fine evening. If you had your druthers, would you rather be sitting here watching us or would you sort of rather be at Hawrelak Park on a picnic with your family, whatever, or enjoying a good movie, like some people do? Now, on occasion I do enjoy a good movie myself, although I don't make movies priorities over the opportunity to debate here in the House when we have a chance to present our views to Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, you may wonder and government members may wonder why we have made a point of going on with this subamendment for the number of days that we have. It has now been – what? – three full days, or did we first introduce it last week?

MS CARLSON: Wednesday night we started.

MR. WICKMAN: Last week, Wednesday night. We're already a week down the road, and we're still dealing with the same subamendment. It's so important to us, and I guess we'll . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: No, don't conclude, hon. member. It's just that I want to try and discourage this business of engaging others in the discussion and also those people from entering into the discussion, because it isn't. It's a debate, one person at a time.

So if we could keep that in mind, hon. members, and with your indulgence and the indulgence of all members, please stick to the script or your heartfelt thoughts.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Chairman, I don't know what we'd do at times without you trying to keep us on track.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Chairman, questions on the surgical facilities have been raised, and I've gone through some of the documentation here. Government members have stood up and talked about the various issues. They key in on what they support in what the Minister of Health and Wellness is proposing in terms of the original bill, in terms of the amendment that he's proposed, and why they denounce the subamendment that we've made. When I go through, the one thing that comes out the most often that they refer to, that they're uncomfortable with is this 12 hours. They're feeling that this 12 hours is going to create a problem.

I guess they feel the 12 hours is going to create a problem in the same sense that we recognize that if there isn't a subamendment to that, then the other option the government is proposing is to allow the overnight stays to continue to happen on an unlimited basis. So what we're trying to do through a subamendment is take what the government is attempting to do, turning these facilities into private hospitals, and we want it focused on just the clinics we see out there now. When you need surgery that's going to require more than a 12-hour stay, then it should be done in a proper facility, and a proper facility of course is a public hospital that we as Albertans pay for through our taxes, pay for through Alberta health care premiums.

Mr. Chairman, I know there are members in this House besides myself that have had to use the emergency services because we saw a need for some type of surgical procedure. When I had to go by ambulance a couple of years back – I didn't actually have to go by ambulance; I drove. I was having a medical problem, and my first thought was: "Well, where am I going to go? I'm going to go to a hospital because I've got a problem here, and I would venture to say that I'm going to be there for more than two or three hours." I called that one right, because I ended up being there for actually 10 weeks. Had I gone to a clinic at that particular time, I'm not sure what would have happened. They, of course, wouldn't keep me in there – I would hope not – for the whole 10 weeks.

If the government feels that 12 hours isn't acceptable, that it should maybe be 14, well, fine, then bring in a sub subamendment.

But 14 hours, 12 hours, that two hours wouldn't make any difference. The point is that in my opinion you cannot allow facilities that are going to perform the basic function of being a hospital that provides some enhanced services that are going to cost taxpayers more dollars than they're presently paying through their tax base and such.

Mr. Chairman, I've said it before; I'll say it again. When we come back after the Easter break, I'm sure this debate is going to continue, and we're going to have lots of opportunity to repeat it. I plead with Members of the Legislative Assembly of all three parties that are represented here: recognize what Albertans are telling us; recognize our obligations to those people; recognize that they put us here to respond to their wishes, to respond to what we feel will benefit them, not an agenda that we choose to take upon ourselves because we feel, for whatever reason, that it's government's right to do it and government is the first to have it done that way.

Mr. Chairman, that's not right. That's not what we're elected for. We're elected to listen to the people. We're elected to act upon what the people are telling us, and other than the one day when the Premier rushed out of here – I think he may have been a little upset that day. He came back with two letters of support that he read into the record, and of course previous to that he read into the record a letter from Dr. Dennis Modry. Other than that, there hasn't been any evidence presented to me, to this caucus by government that Albertans want this.

What are they basing their decision on that this is for the benefit of Albertans, that this has to be done, that this is good? Whose wisdom is directing them? It's not coming from the people that elected us. I don't care if one is from Edmonton, if one is from Calgary, if one is from Drayton Valley, if one is from Beiseker, Thorsby; Albertans are saying the same thing. That evidence is being tabled in the House. That evidence is being tabled by members of this caucus when we table the petitions day after day after day from all parts of the province. We're over 60,000 now. By the time the dust settles, I would say well over 100,000 people will have asked us to represent them, to table on their behalf their opposition. If you look at where those petitions come from, they don't all come from Edmonton; they don't all come from Calgary. They come from all parts of the province.

This concern is very widespread. Our member here from Lethbridge-East is participating in the agricultural summit, and from his comments that come back to us as he travels northern Alberta, there's a fever out there, and the fever out there is the opposition to Bill 11. That fever continues to grow. It continues to escalate, and it's going to continue to escalate. It's not that this caucus is directing that opposition. That opposition is developing on its own; it's growing on its own. Certainly there are groups out there that are representing their members, whether it be CUPE, the Alberta Federation of Labour, Catholics. All types of various segments of the population are expressing their opposition to the bill.

We can't just write these people off as left-wing nuts, Mr. Chairman, because they're not left-wing nuts. They are concerned Albertans.

THE CHAIRMAN: We appear to have a point of order. The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. SMITH: Beauchesne 459. Mr. Chairman, as engaging as the speaker is and as far as the latitude ranges, from The Pas to La Paz, Bolivia, I can assure you that I have heard no word of amendment SA1, and I believe A1, section A has been the subject of discussion and debate since last week sometime. I would just ask that the speaker stay on topic.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would comment that the chair has heard on a number of occasions the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford referring to subamendment SA1, but the other part of the commentary is quite correct. The hon. member is ranging wide. If hon. members recall, this afternoon the Speaker commended the chairs for allowing a wide range of . . .

Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the point of order.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, it seems that on these points of order at the beginning of every evening here we have to establish the parameters that are allowed for the speech. I would remind the member who brought up the point of order and refer him to Erskine May, page 378, Relevance in Debate, where wide scope is given to people in debate on subamendments and in committee. It has been the standard practice. We have seen that from all members in the House on both sides of the Assembly.

Specifically with reference to page 378 I would point the chair to the sentence that says, "The precise relevance of an argument may not always be perceptible." We do have 20 minutes of speaking time in our debate time to get to the point, Mr. Chairman. Certainly the hon. member who has the floor at this point in time has several times referenced the subamendment and the amendment to which it refers. So we would point that he was entirely within his mandate to make the comments he did.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Edmonton-Ellerslie and Minister of Gaming.

As the chair was trying to say, there is a bit of a contradictory nature to this. When we were discussing whether or not the group of government amendments should be dealt with as one unit or separately in the 14 units, both the House leaders of the two opposition parties wanted to go at them clause by clause or section by section, and because it requires a unanimous sort of arrangement to make it otherwise, then one would have thought that the debate would have followed the request. If you request them to be voted on one at a time, then the debate would. However, the chair has experienced that this is darn near impossible to enforce, and unless one wants a life of continuous hassle, then the wide-ranging would be allowed, hopefully, staying within basically the parameters at least of the bill and, better yet, of the set of amendments that have been forthcoming.

So in that light, the chair has not interceded with relevance because if we were on the narrow application it would be certainly called. Again recalling that the Speaker had indicated that this would be allowed, then we will continue to hear. But, please, let us not stray beyond the confines of the bill, and I don't think that the hon. member has.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you. Mr. Chairman. A ruling with a great deal of wisdom, I might say.

Debate Continued

MR. WICKMAN: In any case, I'm down to my final minute of speaking time. So I'm going to conclude by saying that as long as I sit here, as long as this bill is in front of us, I'm going to continue to support the subamendment, I'm going to oppose the government amendments, I'm going to oppose Bill 11, and eventually the will of the people of Alberta will prevail. I'm convinced that somewhere along the line the government will see the light.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would make one other observation. It's quite warm down here, and I can imagine that it's even worse up there. We have arranged for the outside and the inside doors to be opened. I don't know whether it's our imagination, but there is a little bit of breeze, so hopefully it will be able to reach the levels there.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont to enter into debate. [interjection] You remember the long tradition that debate is on one side, then on the other side, then back? Okay. Good.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in committee on the amendment. I'm going to try and speak to the amendment rather than everything else.

I think it's important to start to realize that, first of all, there's been, from what I understand, a total of 31 hours of debate so far on this bill: 19 and a half hours at second reading and 11.6 hours in committee, 6.4 hours on the amendment and 5.2 hours on the subamendment. We're still on the first amendment, so I'd like to speak to the amendment. To speak to the amendment, I think we have to look at where we are in this province prior to Bill 11 and then after Bill 11.

The thing is that we have to recognize that private clinics have been a reality and a fact of life in this province for a decade or longer. This is not just in Alberta. This is pretty much all over Canada.

AN HON. MEMBER: Not with overnight stays.

MR. HERARD: I'll get to that, hon. member, through the chair.

Over the last 10 years, there have been a large number of surgical clinics in operation. I know that they began at a time when the hon. Leader of the Opposition was health minister, and I don't really have a problem with that. You know, that was then, and this is now. It started back then. There were 30-some odd clinics during that time, and now there are approximately 52. Over the last 10 years improvements in technology and surgical procedures have made it possible for 52 private surgical clinics to perform more than 20,000 – 20,000 – relatively minor surgeries that formerly were all done in hospitals. So I can understand why the Leader of the Opposition, when she was minister of health, could see that there were better ways of doing things.

In fact, when you look at 20,000 surgeries per year, that's quite a few per day, isn't it? Because I would imagine that we're not looking at any more than perhaps 200 or 250 days a year when surgical facilities would be in operation. That's a lot of Albertans who are getting the benefit of surgeries done in private facilities. The reason they're being done there is because they can be safely done there. That's the reality that we have in this province at the moment.

In the last decade we've had an increase in the volume of procedures done safely every day in clinics, and it frees up thousands of hours of hospital operating room time per year and releases expensive hospital beds. We all know that they can be up to, you know, $800 a day or more. That's the reality in this province as we speak. What this does is improve access for more serious cases that continue to be done in our hospitals. In other words, if 20,000 of these cases were put back into the hospitals, imagine just what would happen to the waiting lists. So this improves access.

In addition, cancellations due to emergencies are all but eliminated. We all have heard of cases of that; I've had it happen in my family. I'm sure everyone has. It happens much too often. You know, you go to the hospital at 6 or 7 in the morning, you're prepared for surgery, and all of a sudden you're told that due to an emergency they can't do you today. They can't tell you when they can do you, but they'll be in touch. So there you are, having to go back home, and you've got to reschedule the operation.

Currently we have more than 150 different types of surgical procedures that are done safely every day in existing clinics, but they are subject to the 12-hour rule. That's where we go from prior to Bill 11 to after Bill 11. Essentially they are subject to a 12-hour rule. This prevents the health system from taking advantage of continuous improvements in technology and surgical procedures such as laparoscopic and laser techniques, that continue to be performed, perfected, and improved, with improved outcomes every year. Essentially the College of Physicians and Surgeons can look at what's being done in hospitals today, and we know there are certain numbers of these procedures that could be done safely in an accredited facility, assuming that the College of Physicians and Surgeons accredits the facility and the staff and the procedure and so on. But today, you know, if it takes a little bit more recovery time or monitoring time, then you have to keep that procedure within the hospital system, the most expensive route, even though a clinic properly equipped and accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons could quite safely do the procedure. I know that all of us have a great deal of esteem for the College of Physicians and Surgeons because they represent the professional side of the medical profession.

So should the province continue to use the most expensive route to health when every month we all marvel at the new techniques that are implemented by our health professionals? Why should regional health authorities be prevented from implementing new, accredited advances brought about by an increasing investment in high technology and world-class medical research? We know how proud we are over medical research that's being done in this province and how successful it's been, but for some reason there's some magic around this 12-hour thing. Why should regional health authorities not have the option? If in fact a facility can be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the procedure can be done safely with good outcomes, why should they be forced to continue to use the most expensive OR and surgical recovery and hospital bed?

So that's really the issue around what we're talking about, because before Bill 11 all those things that I've talked about happened every day in this province and with great success. After Bill 11 there is the 12-hour situation that as a result of the bill is now opened up so that . . .

MRS. SLOAN: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on a point of order.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MRS. SLOAN: Under Beauchesne 482, I'm wondering if the member would entertain a question.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is reminded that you only have to say yes or no and you don't have to give any reasons.

MR. HERARD: No, Mr. Chairman, because I didn't note what time

I started, and I don't how much time I've got left. Therefore, I think I'll just continue. She'll have her chance many times, I'm sure.

Debate Continued

MR. HERARD: Anyway, the bottom line, I guess, the fundamental question is that if the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the federal Health department didn't want us to look at this, then they would not have asked for this bill. In fact, the bill introduces controls that should've been there from the start but weren't. I'm not going to point the finger as to why that may or may not have happened.

MS OLSEN: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: We appear to have another point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MS OLSEN: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to know, under Beauchesne 333, if the member would entertain a question regarding his comments on the federal government.

THE CHAIRMAN: No, no. Just: would he entertain a question? Again, either a yes or a no.

MR. HERARD: That meant no.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. That's the second time, hon. members. I think maybe we get the point that the hon. member does not want to answer any more questions than almost anyone else when they are in debate.

Before I call the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, perhaps I'll explain a little bit to the gallery. Each member is allowed 20 minutes. As I've already said, they can speak unlimited times; they just can't succeed themselves. Many have spoken three or four times to this already. When someone has a point of order, the clock stops and doesn't start again until they have recommenced, so it doesn't take away from their speaking time. They still get their 20 minutes. If you get a lot of interruptions, it could be 25 minutes, but they only get to speak for the 20 and the other five are taken up in the interruptions or points of order.

So with that explanation, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. I guess the bottom line is that if you look at the province before Bill 11 – and I guess that's where we're at today because Bill 11 has not passed – then we know what is happening everyday safely in 52 clinics, and if Bill 11 were to pass tonight, tomorrow the difference would be that the College of Physicians and Surgeons could look at a list of procedures that could be safely done inside a clinical setting that could take longer than 12 hours if required.

Now, it doesn't make a whole lot of sense to have an artificial regulation get in the way of a doctor's performance with a patient. It seems to me that things go well in many cases, not so well in some cases, and not very well at all in other cases, and a doctor should be free to make the decision as to how long that person should be under his or her care, because it's the doctors that discharge patients. It's not the regional health authorities or, thank goodness, politicians. So doctors have to have the flexibility to be able to treat their patient with absolutely the best possible care, and that's what this is all about. There's no magic with respect to a 12-hour or an 18-hour or a 22-hour or a 27-hour stay. If that's what's required medically, then that should be done automatically and not stopped because some piece of legislation says you can't do that.

You know, there's not a lot of real science with respect to what we're trying to do here. It's very simple, but unfortunately it's been blown into a whole host of things that it isn't. So from that perspective the amendments that are being proposed would in fact, I think, almost be considered negative amendments to the principle of the bill, because they're just reversing what it is the bill is trying to do. If that isn't negative, I don't know what is. So I could not support that amendment, and I would hope all hon. members would see their way clear to not supporting it as well.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to address the issue. A key point for me under the subamendment is that the clause that adds "that requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours" seems to be a significant issue.

Before I move on to that, I had wanted to ask the last hon. member – he talked about the last 10 years, but he failed to mention the pre-Pearson era, when there was no medicare, when people didn't get surgeries because they didn't have the money or people lost their homes because they didn't have the money to pay. As I've previously said, I had a constituent who wanted to bring their very ill son home from the hospital and were told that unless they came up with 10 more dollars, the child was going to be staying in the hospital. God knows what would have happened to him.

It was the collective wisdom, I might add – and there's not a lot of collective wisdom happening over there – of Emmet Hall, Tommy Douglas, and Prime Minister Pearson that allowed for medicare to expand across this country, but the other side seems to neglect the purpose of this whole process and the purpose of medicare. I think it's important that we keep highlighting that.

The other aspect that I was trying to focus on. The hon. member brought up the notion that the federal government asked for this bill. Okay? Well, I'm asking through the chair for that member to table all the documentation, the letters, the source material, to back up his statement.

I'm going to read into the record here, quite clearly, that private clinics or "surgical facilities," as proposed under Bill 11, are considered hospitals under the Canada Health Act. I do not believe there is any reason for confusion here.

That was from a letter, tabled in this Legislature, to the Hon. Halvar Jonson, Minister of Health and Wellness, and it was written by the Hon. Allan Rock, the Health minister. He has very clearly stated that a surgical facility is, in fact, a hospital under this bill.

I want to get back then, Mr. Chairman, to the issue at hand, and for me that's the 12-hour stays. I find it interesting that the associate minister of health states that, technically, if you are in a facility longer than 12 hours, you're deemed to be in an overnight stay situation. Well, there's nothing technical about that. The relevant fact right now is that if you are in a facility for over 12 hours, then you are considered to be in a facility that should have overnight stays, and that's a hospital in this country. That's a hospital in this province. It's not a surgical facility. It's not anything by any other name. It is a hospital, and that Mr. Rock has addressed. So I'm wondering where the leap of logic is missed here for the other side. I'm wondering what they don't get, and what they don't understand.

I'm going to also speak to this issue. Dr. Bond from the AMA has also denounced the bill once again; the AMA has denounced the bill once again. He has a number of concerns that were outlined. His letter was also tabled in this Legislature today. There are a number of issues that he has identified, and in one of those issues he says:

There are no "provincial standards on what services are covered and the level of access" as called for by the position statement. If contracting out of services is to be extended, there has to be much greater attention paid to the mechanisms that will ensure that patient interests come first.

The AMA is saying: nix this bill because it doesn't do the job right now. So again I'm not sure where the leap is for this group over here. They don't seem to get it.

I want to then draw your attention to some of the statements that have been made by previous speakers from the other side. I will start, Mr. Chairman, with the notion that the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross stated on April 17, 2000, and for Hansard's reference, page 1041 in Hansard: "They are surgeries that we look at as being elective . . . It's surgery that's conducted on people that are relatively healthy." Okay? Surgery conducted on people that are healthy. "It is not surgery that is urgent or emergent but is elective."

Now, I'm just wondering. All surgeries that are going to be performed in these facilities are not elective surgeries, Mr. Chairman. Hernias and the proposal for gallbladders as well may be deemed nonurgent, but they are not necessarily elective. In fact, those specific surgeries may need to be done sooner than later in some instances, and a lot of that depends on the patient's overall health, the patient's well-being, emergency situations, complicating factors such as other diseases, maybe diabetes or something like that. There's a whole range of issues to deal with. They're not all just elective, that healthy people are going in and having surgeries, because healthy people don't usually have surgeries.

The second comment that hon. member made was regarding waiting lists. She stated in this respect that in Calgary alone we have 12,000 people on the waiting list for elective surgery, which is one of the reasons why this bill has come before the Legislature.

Two points I want to make very clearly, the first one quickly. The Calgary regional health authority chair, Mr. Dinning, has stated as recently as today, as a matter of fact, that they have more money in their budget, so they're going to be able to address the waiting list, but he'll need Bill 11 down the road. Well, maybe if we fund the system adequately – and that is what Mr. Dinning has just said: oh, my goodness, we're being funded adequately – they don't need Bill 11 down the road. Okay? So I'm not quite sure again. Leaps of logic are being made that are incongruent.

Let's go back to that waiting list. Clinics in the province, in Edmonton and Calgary, that are doing procedures such as hernias have waiting lists, and they're not diminishing. We've already stated a million times in this Legislature that a lot of those procedures that are being done currently in those private clinics have not – not, I repeat – reduced any waiting lists. So I'm wondering what the hon. member was driving at there. I can't see how private surgical clinics, hospitals, whatever you want to call them, are going to reduce the waiting lists. What we have Mr. Dinning telling us today in Calgary is that they have money, that they're going to be able to reduce the waiting lists.

Maybe it's a management problem. I don't know. [interjection] There are no beds in Calgary because they blew them up. That's why there are no hospital beds in Calgary. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, we've made intercessions before.

Certainly one of the rules is that you don't speak when you're not in your own place, and only one member speaks at a time. So we ask hon. members not to engage one another in a dialogue when an hon. member is actually speaking. That goes two ways.

Sorry to interrupt you, hon. member, but I didn't want this to encourage others to do the same.

MS OLSEN: Thank you. Sometimes I take guidance from my colleagues, and I apologize. I should have been paying attention to you. Sometimes their guidance is really wise.

Debate Continued

MS OLSEN: Mr. Chairman, I want to go on and highlight another point, and that is where the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross speaks. I'll quote from Hansard again, page 1041. I don't know why I look up to the Hansard people. She says:

What I'm going to say too – and to the people in the gallery as well – is that patients that go home too early are the patients that get into trouble, and that is why it is so necessary to have this bill be over a 12-hour stay.

Well, okay. Yes, she's right. Patients that go home too early are patients that may be at risk. However, they go home early. They get readmitted, and that's another cost on the system. But that's not a reason for this bill. That's not a reason to give private clinics stays over 12 hours. Again, I'm looking for some good deductive logic here, and the dots aren't connecting.

MR. DICKSON: We're all looking for it.

MS OLSEN: Yes, we are.

So I would challenge that member that if patients are sent home too early, then the operation should not have been done in that particular facility. You know, the comments that the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross made indicate to me that current facilities are not being properly monitored if patients are being sent home too early. Or is it that these patients go into clinics that are under 12 hours and they just want to make so much money that they're just putting them in and throwing them out the other side? All of a sudden we have people who need to be readmitted to the RA or the University hospital with some serious problems. So again I'm looking for some logic that is going to make sense, because that just doesn't.

The hon. member also said:

I am absolutely amazed, when I read this list, that people would look at it and say: I can go in for my surgery and have a general anesthetic in the OR at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and because that clinic is open for 12 hours, I can have that surgery at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and can be in the OR for two to four hours.

Then she talks about, "They may have complications." Well, if they have complications, then their surgery shouldn't have been done there. If they have complications, then maybe there's not a good management use of the surgical facility they're in and they should go to a hospital. That's what would make sense to me, Mr. Chairman. I'm still waiting, and I'm hoping that one day we'll be able to connect the dots, but we can't right now.

I spoke a little bit about some of the issues that other provinces have talked about, and we know that other provinces don't have overnight stays, so we know that when the Premier and the truth squad and all the other players in this puzzle here tell us that this is just a little bit different than the other pieces of legislation in other provinces, that is untrue. That is absolutely untrue. Okay? The other provinces do not allow – and I will repeat for the members in this Chamber: do not allow – overnight stays in a private, for-profit facility. So that's a big difference, if you ask me. You know, for the life of me, I wonder why this connection continues to be made when it's very clear.

Again we have a letter from the federal Health minister, and he very clearly states the position of the other provinces. A lot of people have done a lot of work. All these folks in the galleries have done a tremendous amount of work to try and educate this Conservative caucus over here, but they're not getting it. They're not getting it. So, Mr. Chairman, we're going to keep going, and we're just going to try and try to help them out.

I think it's absolutely necessary that we educate people. I think it's very important to have an education process in place where everybody gets a little bit more information. You see, just saying: oh, you're telling me that, Mr. Health Minister; I'm going to take you at face value – a couple of members in this Assembly did that. They didn't believe the bill allowed for overnight stays. In fact, they went out and gave out bad information to their constituents based on that good faith they had. So you can't always just believe what you hear. You sometimes need to go out and check all other sources of information, and with that, Mr. Chairman, we have better informed legislators.

I in fact know that my colleagues have done that. We've got pounds and pounds and pounds of information in our offices, and there's not a whole lot of it that's similar. We all took on a different responsibility to attempt to keep ourselves informed, look at what's going on around the world, look at what's going on in the U.S., look at what's is going on everywhere else. Quite frankly, that has been part of the strength that we have. We've actually opened a book. We've actually done so much work that I couldn't file all the information I have on this. But I do know one thing. I do know where this bill is going. I do know where this amendment is going, and I don't like where it's going. I'm having difficulty supporting any notion and of course I'm not supporting any notion that this is the best direction for Albertans.

If I can just grab one of the books that I've read, Mr. Chairman, on this issue, one of the things that I did learn about the American system – and this is a quote from John C. Goodman on health insurance out of The Fortune Encyclopedia of Economics. It's a great text for people to read. You don't have to believe everything in it, but you certainly need to read it. What Mr. Goodman says in his quote is:

In the thirties and forties a competitive market for health insurance developed in many places in the United States. Typically, premiums tended to reflect risks, and insurers aggressively monitored claims to keep costs down and prevent abuses.

Do we think that for one minute that if this bill is passed, if this government gets that opportunity, we're not going to have an explosion of health insurance? We're going to have more American companies come up here. They're all going to be going out there, and they're going to be going to all of these folks here and all those folks out there, and they're going to be saying: Hey, we've got a good deal for you.

Point of Order Referring to the Galleries

MR. JACQUES: Point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti rising on a point of order.

MR. JACQUES: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to reflect back on your earlier admonishment this evening with regard to reference in debate particularly to the gallery and to others who may be observing and in particular to the ruling and to the advice that was given this afternoon by the Speaker on this subject. I believe that all members in the Legislative Assembly at the time took this to heart and are attempting to follow it, but I do notice there is consistent reference by the member, and I would ask that you uphold your original concern in this area as well as the concern that was expressed by the Speaker this afternoon.

Thank you.

MR. DICKSON: On the alleged point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the point of order.

MR. DICKSON: Yes. I heard no citation, but let's be absolutely clear. What the Speaker admonished all members not to do was to solicit reaction from members in the gallery, to involve members in either the public gallery or members' gallery in what's going on down here. Never was there ever a suggestion that a member cannot refer to the fact that we have Albertans in the gallery. That would be as foolish as saying that we can't talk about Albertans who are outside the building or Albertans who are in your constituency in northern Alberta, in Grande Prairie. I mean, those people exist.

I'm sorry if I was speaking too loudly, Mr. Chairman, but my concern was simply this. We do not operate in a vacuum. We're not here representing numerals. We're not here representing some abstract quantity. We're here representing the 3 million people in the province.

There's absolutely nothing offensive – and I'm astonished that the Member from Grande Prairie-Wapiti would take issue with it – for any member in this Assembly to simply acknowledge that there are people that have concerns. That was not a solicitation. It was not an invitation. It was not some means of invoking any other reaction. I think the thin skin that we've seen evident around the debate on Bill 11 keeps on getting thinner and thinner.

Let's be real focused here and allow members the kind of liberty and the kind of latitude that all members are entitled to as part of their freedom of expression in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members will reflect back, as the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti has, on the Speaker's direction about calling upon the gallery and making a visual reference to them by waving one's hand, et cetera, in the spirit of debate. This is a contentious debate. We did have some examples of people speaking to the gallery in the past couple of days that was probably less than parliamentary, and that's what the Speaker was speaking about today.

I was trying to pay attention, but a number of individuals felt it important that they convey their thoughts to me at the time that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood was speaking. I wondered whether or not she was beginning to tread on the admonition that was given this afternoon. In that sense, the point is well taken, although I didn't hear a breach, nor see it, but just so we all take that caution either in praise of or in condemnation of.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, with those strictures in mind.

Debate Continued

MS OLSEN: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, if you could just advise me of how much time I have left here.

THE CHAIRMAN: About two.

MS OLSEN: Thank you.

I was speaking about the 12-hour stay in relation to health insurance, and there is a correlation because health insurance could be offered for surgical facilities, well, maybe we could have health insurance that reflects a 15-hour stay or an 11-hour stay or a 24-hour stay. The reality is that the longer you are in a hospital, the next time you go to get a premium, it's going to cost you a lot more.

I just want to address that. This is out of The Arizona Republic.

Health Plans Fight Hard for Business

Health insurers fought hard last year to grab a bigger share of the managed-care market, snatching up contracts with big employers and shedding money-losing operations.

The health plans that came out on top were those that could bargain a price, volume, good medical results and geographic convenience.

Mr. Chairman, that speaks a lot to this whole bill.

There are inequities for sure. The whole issue of 12-hour stays is an issue. And trust me, it will be an issue with health insurers. We already know that Liberty Mutual, I believe it is, are offering to insure people for the gap that now exists between Alberta health insurance and what used to be covered and is no longer covered.

So as we go through this process and we look forward to deinsuring more things, then we're going to have all of these insurance companies come out and market great insurance plans to Albertans, and I have a little difficulty with that. We have Alberta health care. We have a good health care system. We need to look at the management of it. We don't need to go down this path. We don't need to go over a 12-hour stay in these clinics that exist right now. We do not need private health care, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, as is sometimes the case in committee, debate becomes quite wide ranging, and I hope you will allow me some latitude in my remarks this evening.

The previous speaker, correctly I think, referenced Saskatchewan being somewhat the origin of our current health care system vis-a-vis the Canada Health Act in terms of the leadership of Mr. Douglas and others, but this province of Alberta has been, I think, a leader in developing programs, developing protection for its citizens. [disturbance in the galleries]

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and other hon. members. Again, hopefully those people who remain in the galleries are there for a good purpose, to hear the debate and not to disrupt it as we've had several instances of. With that idea, then, I wonder if we could have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness continue without interruption.

9:10

MR. JONSON: The point that I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is that in Alberta I think we've had leadership for a long time that has been demonstrated in terms of being innovative, wanting as a province through our health authorities and through the government to provide for the health care needs of Albertans on an equitable basis.

If we go back to the 1950s, Mr. Chairman, one of the very first programs or initiatives that took place anywhere in Canada in terms of providing a base of support for its citizenry was exhibited in the area of Lamont. The people in the municipal government area of that time decided that in their limited scope of operation at that particular time, they would levy I think it was a $10 or $20 levy against each quarter section of land so that there would be a pool of money which would support the local hospital, which was very highly regarded at that time and on into the years following. People wanting to access hospital services would have the ability to go there without charge. They would be covered within that limited area of the province.

Then later on, Mr. Chairman, in the history of Alberta – and probably one of the reasons that we're not identified as much with the Canada Health Act and its inception and later on with the commission that took place and so forth is that we developed an affordable insurance program which was a combination of something called MSI and Blue Cross. There were also provisions within that overall scheme for those people that were totally without income and resources to be able to use the health care system on a reasonable and equitable basis. So Alberta has not in many areas of providing services to its citizens been in any way behind or reluctant to provide the needed basic services to its citizens.

When the Canada Health Act came into existence, there was debate, as there was in all provinces across this country, in terms of what their obligations were going to be: was the federal government going to treat us fairly in terms of the way the legislation would be outlined and how it would be funded and supported at the federal level vis-a-vis the provincial level? But Alberta is a full participant in the Canada Health Act in the overall approach to health care being provided for people in this country. The legislation that is before the Assembly certainly states very, very clearly our adherence to the principles of the Canada Health Act, and those things which flow from it.

The second point I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that there have been also in these wide-ranging remarks on the subamendment to the amendment that we are currently debating this evening to the federal government, and I think that's probably quite relevant. I would like to just point something out, though. We have had correspondence back and forth between myself and the Hon. Allan Rock, Minister of Health for the dominion of Canada, and also there's been correspondence going back and forth between our respective first ministers.

The point that I would just like to make is that the Hon. Allan Rock has written to me and indicated:

It is my intention to ensure that medically necessary services are provided on uniform terms and conditions. The principles of the Canada Health Act are supple enough to accommodate the evolution of medical science and health care delivery. This evolution must not lead, however, to a two-tier system for health care.

And we agree, and we're very careful in this legislation to make sure that is the case.

However, he also says in his letter, "In summary, the position of the federal government has not changed since the introduction of the federal policy on private clinics in 1995." Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to 1995, when Ms Marleau was the Minister of Health for the federal government. She indicates in her letter – and I quote from it. This is public knowledge. I think it has been tabled in the Assembly already. I'm quoting from her letter. She's talking about equitable access to health care services, which we certainly agree with. She says:

I want to make it clear that my intent is not to preclude the use of clinics to provide medically necessary services. I realize that in many situations they are a cost effective way to deliver services, often in a technologically advanced manner. However, it is my intention to ensure that medically necessary services are provided on uniform terms and conditions, wherever they are offered. The principles of the Canada Health Act are supple enough to accommodate the evolution of medical science and of health care delivery.

This evolution must not lead, however, to a two-tier system of health care.

This government completely agrees with that. So that is a bit of background.

Let's get to the amendment which is before the Assembly. If we could just possibly, Mr. Chairman, get back to the actual amendment. The government has brought in an amendment to a section of the legislation which makes it clear that in terms of a judgment being made as to what should be offered in a surgical clinic and for what period of time, that is a judgment that should be made by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. That is what our original legislation said, and I think that is a very, very sound approach to this matter.

The amendment, which has been debated for a record period of time, Mr. Chairman, is simply to acknowledge that as part of our overall health care system in this province right now, it is a fact that dentists do surgery. We want to make sure that dentistry and dentists are included in this particular process and that there is reference to them, that we recognize that they do surgery in clinics, and it sets up a regulatory framework for the supervision of the dentists' surgery as well as for that which deals with physicians. That's what the amendment is about.

It would be, I think, helpful if we could get on with focusing on the actual amendment, deciding whether or not we should have dentists under standards, under regulations, or not. We on this side of the House certainly believe that should be the case. We feel the amendment as proposed should be passed. It was part of the representation that was made to us as we listened to Albertans on all aspects of the bill, and there are some very substantive ones in our other amendments as well.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, to all members of the Assembly that we just possibly deal with the amendment – I think it's a meritorious amendment – and get on with what I think is a very sound piece of legislation, which, yes, needs some amendment and improvement. We have responded to Albertans. They've indicated to us that those changes which are in our overall amendment package are needed and get into place what I think is a very important piece of legislation.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I was interested in the minister of health's intervention and the issues he raised. I think it's important, and the reason why we have proposed this subamendment is . . .

MR. JONSON: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Reflections on a Member

MR. JONSON: Just very, very diplomatically. I would just like to indicate that I thought the Liberal opposition recognized that the people on this side of the House, including the Minister of Health and Wellness, had the ability to engage in debate. I did not think it was a negative matter.

9:20

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, my responsibility is to respond to legitimate points of order. As hard as I listened – and maybe it's later than I thought or I'm more tired at the end of the week than I thought – I don't have a clue what the Minister of Health and Wellness was saying. Can I make a proposal? After the Leader of the Opposition is finished, maybe the Minister of Health and Wellness would like to get up and spend his full 20 minutes developing that thought so it's comprehensible not only to me but to all members of the Assembly.

Thanks very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader on the point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, I wouldn't have risen on the point of order. I thought the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness made his point perfectly clear, but because we've had this rather flippant response, I think it does bear saying that we have been in debate on the amendment and the subamendment for in excess of 13 hours. We have listened and relistened and sometimes relistened to points being repeated, and then when members from this side get up in the House, they are met with chastisement and obnoxious comments from the other side. That was the point the hon. minister was making, and he made it very quickly and very diplomatically and didn't need the type of response that he got.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has some additional thoughts on this point of order.

MS CARLSON: I do, Mr. Chairman. We speak about irreverence in this House. If a member is going to stand on a point of order, at least they could do the proper thing and bring forward a citation before they rant when a member on our side barely has a chance to make her opening comments.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Oh, I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. I apologize.

THE CHAIRMAN: No, no. I wasn't recognizing you. I was just hoping that . . .

MRS. NELSON: I thought you were, with my laughing at the hon. member.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes.

The chair must confess that he missed what struck the chord of the Minister of Health and Wellness, and if that's inattention on my part, then I apologize that I missed it. I assure the hon. minister that I will henceforth listen very carefully to the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition as she continues her thoughts this evening.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: Start over.

MRS. MacBETH: I will start over.

Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I was rising because I wanted to pick up on some of the comments which the minister of health made. I thought it was important to put into context the reason we in the Official Opposition are proposing this subamendment. Really, if we look at the bill and look at part 1, Protection of Publicly Funded Health Care, and go to section 1, "No person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta," that's a pretty clear statement. You know, I think most Albertans would have picked up this bill with, as I keep saying, this dear little boy on the front of it and thought: well, that's a good sentence. I think it is important to put our subamendment in context, and that's what I'm going to attempt to do tonight.

If we say, "No person shall operate a private hospital," I think it's very important to then go to the definition section of what a private hospital means. If we go to that section on page 17, section 29(m), we will see the whole definition of what a private hospital is. It says that it's "an acute care facility." This is one of the issues which the government members may not have heard in terms of the work they have done to listen to the input on the bill, but I think it's a really important one to highlight. If we then look at the definition of a private hospital, which is allegedly prohibited under this act, we see that there are five criteria which need to be met. For a private hospital, that's an acute care facility it has to deliver "emergency, diagnostic, surgical and medical [facilities]" and admit patients for . . . 12 hours." So there are five criteria that have to be met.

The question becomes – and most people who have read the bill understand – when you then look at that definition, let's say that only four of those criteria are met; for example, let's say diagnostic, surgical, and medical, but no emergency services are delivered in an acute care facility, and it "admits patients for medically supervised stays exceeding 12 hours." Basically what you have there is a hospital, leaving aside whether it's private or public for the moment, which is delivering everything except emergency services for a period exceeding 12 hours. So that by the definition under this act would not be a private hospital. Yet I think most Albertans would say: "Wait a minute. Of course that's a hospital. It's delivering all those services." But under this act it would not be prohibited.

That in a nutshell is why people have concern about a bill that says, in the context of our subamendment, when we look at it, that part 1 bans private hospitals. It only bans the private hospitals as defined by this act, and if the criteria are not those that meet the definition, then that thing can go ahead. It's not banned by this bill, and a person will be able to operate it if we read the legislation as it's written. I think it's a very important context upon which to look at this bill.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Then becomes the question, as we move to the subamendment, of the whole issue of overnight stay. People will often say: "Why is overnight stay such a big deal?" Why has the opposition made it its first amendment of many that will come, and why is it so significant? Well, there's a reason why overnight stays are as significant as they are. The best example I can give is that if we find our daughter or son comes home and has a crooked arm and we think, "Oops, we've got a broken bone here," you go to the hospital or emergency, and they look at the arm and they say: "Yup, take an x-ray. Yup, it's broken." So that young person then goes in, gets the arm set, gets the cast put on, maybe gets a fibreglass cast, maybe not – that's not what we're talking about here – but gets the cast, walks into the casting room, walks out. Their stay at the emergency maybe, if they're lucky, will have been about, say, three to four hours. It's done. They're in; they're out. That's part of the delivery of the service. That's what's known as an outpatient service.

But what happens if a child, for example, wakes up in the middle of the night wheezing terribly, has asthma perhaps or at least early asthma? You go to the hospital, the same emergency department. You walk in, and you perhaps expect to get emergency care. But just a second. The attending physician comes in and takes a look at the child and says: "You know what? I'm not comfortable with this. I'm going to admit this child to the hospital." At that point the child is no longer an outpatient service, no longer an emergency service. The child is then admitted to the hospital. That's the difference between overnight stays, admitted to hospital, and an outpatient service. At least that's the way I think of it in my mind, and perhaps it can clarify some of the reasons why it is such a significant thing.

Now, the minister of health referred to the record of Alberta when it comes to health care, and he's absolutely right that before medicare there were MSI and Blue Cross insurance schemes in place that covered most Albertans, and it was certainly a precursor to medicare, which began to then come in at different stages from about the mid-60s on. I've told people that my father was a physician and never was able to practise in the medicare system because he passed away before it became operational. I actually remember that sometimes he was paid for physicians' services with things like fresh farm chickens. I mean, I love fresh farm chickens, and they used to come as part of the payment for the medical services if someone couldn't quite afford the dollars. To this day I miss those farm chickens and try to get them at the market or on the farm or wherever I can get them. That's part of the wonderful history of this province, part of the wonderful story that then led to medicare.

I would like to correct the minister's point about Alberta being such a leader in health care, because I think that in fact Alberta has been a leader and has the capacity to be a leader, yet we need to point out that the Canada Health Act, which the government says they are becoming strong proponents of in this bill, in the legislation – I think it's important to recall that Alberta was the last province to come under the umbrella of the Canada Health Act in 1984. Alberta felt that the extra billing – isn't that interesting that it was extra billing that was the key? – that was going on should continue. So let's not rewrite history. Let's accurately reflect the history of this province.

Mr. Chairman, getting back, then, to the bill, I now want to move on to section 2(1). Of course, this is the section which is the subamendment that we have proposed. The second section says: "No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except." Here's where we come to the creation of two tiers of hospitals in this province.

- No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in
- (a) a public hospital [where we're used to having them provided],
 - or
 - (b) an approved surgical facility.

Mr. Chairman, what I believe and what I have heard from Albertans is that, on the one hand, you have the first section of this bill saying that "no person shall operate a private hospital" – we've already talked about what that might mean – and then the second section goes on to set up a framework by which exactly that, a private hospital, can operate. That is what gets people riled. That is what leads people to say that this is deceptive. This is not clear. That's why the issue of trust is before us in this legislation.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont made some comments this evening with respect to the issue of facilities that may have been in place, really, in the late '80s and into the early '90s, facilities that were operating, if you like, almost as an outpatient service. He is very accurate in saying that those facilities were operating. He tried to make the connection, I think, that it was during the time I was the minister of health that these facilities began. That's inaccurate. In fact, there had been some in place in Alberta from about the mid-80s and on in various kinds of degrees.

One of the reasons why the facility fee issue was not one the federal government penalized Alberta for in that period from '88 to '92 was because we were working very hard as a province when I was the minister of health to come to grips with this whole issue of the independent facilities. The federal government was well aware of what was going on, was well aware of the issues that were being addressed, and I think it's important to talk about the ambulatory care services policy paper which was around at the time. The reason this is so important to this discussion is that the ambulatory care services paper was a very important part of getting a framework, a handle, a legislative control over these stand-alone facilities.

I think it's important to talk about what ambulatory care means. The definition in the policy statement that we came up with was: ambulatory care is defined as "the mode of service provision that requires the patient to ambulate," that is walk, "to the location of the provider," that is wherever the service is being provided, "and leave on the same day after receiving care." In the example I gave, it's the child going to the emergency clinic and getting the cast and leaving. That was the framework of this paper. This paper that we were trying to put in place, or at least beginning the discussion to put the legislative framework in place back in the early '90s, was simply for outpatient, non overnight stay services.

So when the government says that it's no big deal to just take this next wee little step, as the Premier is fond of saying, to move beyond these surgical centres that deliver day services into overnight services, in fact it's a huge step. It is a massive step, and it is a step that none of the other provinces have taken. Despite the attempts by this government to try and talk about what the other provinces are doing, none of them are sanctioning overnight stays and all that implies.

Mr. Chairman, I think there's another important part of this ambulatory care services. I kind of like talking about this paper because I think it actually laid out a framework, and had it been approved by the government of the day, we wouldn't be in this mess right now that Alberta is in. The Premier said and in fact repeated today at his news conference: you know, we have to get some kind of framework around these surgical centres because Alberta's behind the eight ball. He's absolutely right, but I guess it begs the question of what he's been doing for eight years. What has been going on for eight years?

So let's look at the process. The minister mentioned the whole issue of the subamendment, which is this whole issue of overnight stays, and said that it was important to look at the overnight stays in the context of the information he had received from Albertans. Well, the consultation process that led to this is puzzling to everybody. It's puzzling because the question becomes: who is supporting this legislation? The physicians don't like it. The nurses don't like it. The Roman Catholic health association doesn't like it. The Dental Association obviously didn't like it, because there's now a new amendment to involve them. The Calgary Medical Staff Association, the Edmonton Medical Staff Association, and all those people out there tonight quietly lighting and holding their candles are saying: we do not like this legislation. So the question becomes: how can the minister stand and say that he's consulted in order to come to this provision under this particular subamendment? It's beyond me.

The one group the Premier could name today that was supportive of this legislation was the regional health authorities. There you go. The people appointed by the Premier. I wonder why they might be saying they're supportive of this.

I think the process that's involved is extremely important. Let's look at the process that led to a paper like this. It isn't just something that lands on someone's desk out of some free thought by a couple of people in the public service. No, Mr. Chairman. It's a process that was first of all chaired under the utilization committee of Alberta Health back in the late '80s by a physician by the name of Dr. Moe Watanabe from Calgary, a fabulously committed Canadian to the Canadian health care system who led the utilization committee, whose recommendations then formed the basis for this paper. These were the issues that needed to be identified, and here was this very fine person. So there was a step-by-step-by-step process to lead to this.

Mr. Chairman, that process is extremely important. That process is what then allows pieces of legislation or policy papers to go out and be discussed without this question of why. Why do you need it, and who supports it? I mean, why wouldn't that be just checked off right off the top, right before anything else is done? But it hasn't been done. So that's why Albertans are concerned, and that's why we're spending the time on this vitally important amendment, which is one of several we will be bringing forward, but certainly overnight stays is a big one, a huge one, and one that we think is very, very important.

Now, I just have a couple of other points I would like to make, Mr. Chairman. I think it's important to just say that this section . . . I found my thought. It must be too many late nights. This particular section:

- 1 No person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta.
- 2(1) No person shall provide surgical services . . . except in [one of two tiers]
 - (a) a public hospital, or
 - (b) an approved surgical facility, and then simply for purposes of context – I'm not diverting from the subamendment:

- (2) No person shall provide a major surgical service, as described in the by-laws.

In those three points, Mr. Chairman, lies the essence of this bill, the essence of it, because let's look at the issues of minor and major, which is clearly . . .

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Are you rising on a point of order, hon. member? The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Mr. Chairman, under Beauchesne 333, I wonder if the hon. member would entertain a question.

MRS. MacBETH: No. No, Mr. Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: You may proceed.

Debate Continued

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, the point I wanted to make in terms of the context is that in these three sections this whole issue of minor and major is a very big one. I've been here each night to listen to the remarks by the members, and several have talked about this whole issue of the advancement of technology.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

You know, the advancement of technology has been going on since the practice of medicine began however many hundred years ago, and the advancement of technology is a very tricky thing when it comes to the safety of patients. I know that my learned colleague from Edmonton-Riverview is far more informed on the issues of patient and clinical care than I, but I suspect she will corroborate the whole notion that safety in terms of medical procedures is not just about the amount of time it takes to deliver a service that's been advanced technologically. Sometimes something that takes very little time – for example, a gall bladder operation may be relatively simple from the point of view of being three minor incisions, but don't ever mistake that that is major surgery. That's a major operation on an individual. [interjection] Sorry, Mr. Chairman. You're saying something to me, and I don't know what it is.

Chairman's Ruling Speaking Time

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes. I'm trying to indicate that the 20 minutes are up.

AN HON. MEMBER: Mr. Chairman, point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes. Right. I know it has been drawn to our attention that the Leader of the Opposition and the Premier are allowed 90 minutes' speaking time, but 62(1) deals with committees.

The Standing Orders of the Assembly shall be observed in the committees of the Assembly so far as may be applicable, except that

- (a) a member may speak more than once, and
- (b) in committees of the whole Assembly no member may speak for more than 20 minutes at one time.

There's no exception that I understand here.

The fact is, though, hon. member, that if you want to speak for another 20 minutes, as soon as someone else has spoken, you're quite free to speak again. It's no reflection on you as a person. It's just that that's the rule.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Chairman, I will thank you for your ruling. I will look forward to that opportunity.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Debate Continued

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in this debate and voice my support for Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. It's clear throughout the province that health care is an important issue to Albertans, and I'm proud to stand today and say that the government is doing something about it.

Mr. Chairman, before I go on about the subamendment, I want to make some comments that the Leader of the Official Opposition made in reference to a definition on page 3 of the bill in describing what public hospitals are, and she then went on to describe what her thoughts on surgical facilities are. She neglected to go back to page 17, where in the bill they describe what a public hospital is, and I'll read it:

"public hospital" means

- (i) a hospital that is established by or under, or the establishment or operation of which is governed by, the Hospitals Act, the Regional Health Authorities Act, the Cancer Programs Act or the Workers' Compensation Act, or
- (ii) a hospital that is established by the Government of Alberta or the Government of Canada.

Then farther down it gives a definition of a surgical facility, which "means a facility whose primary function is to provide a limited range of surgical services," and that's the key, Mr. Chairman. The description in this bill makes a definite difference, because it's a limited range of surgical services that can be provided by a clinic. The Leader of the Official Opposition made it sound like a surgical facility could do a wide range of services, but it's prohibited in this act by the definition.

Mr. Chairman, I have some points that need to be addressed in regards to the subamendment. This subamendment would undermine the whole purpose of this legislation. The reason the government has brought this legislation about in the first place is because currently Alberta has no legal authority or regulation governing surgical services being performed that require overnight stays. Currently our government has no method of controlling or regulating private health entities that perform overnight surgeries in this province. This is a serious gap in the law. Without legislation there's a real possibility of a two-tier system developing. Bill 11 gives the government the authority to protect the publicly funded health system by prohibiting, restricting, or controlling private surgical clinics.

Mr. Chairman, I want to remind this Assembly that this legislation was brought about at the request of the Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons. I'd like to remind members across the way that not only has the College of Physicians and Surgeons agreed upon the need for such legislation; so has the federal government.

Mr. Chairman, this subamendment would leave us with the same problem that . . .

MS OLSEN: Why don't you just table that information so you can substantiate that?

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, by and large during the course of the evening we've been able to get by without additional help to the speaker, and I wonder if we could continue to allow speakers to go unaided and unabetted.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, this subamendment would leave us with the same problem that brought about Bill 11 in the first place. It would have no legislation to govern overnight stays. Any private clinic that performs surgery that requires overnight stays needs to be regulated. They need to be monitored to ensure that they do not contravene the Canada Health Act, so they do not create the ability to queue-jump, and so we can shut them down should they become a second-tier health provider.

Mr. Chairman, we are at the crossroads of how health care can be provided in this province. Every day new medical advances are occurring that make it safer to provide surgeries. Bill 11 allows us the ability to adjust to the new realities. It allows us to supplement our current health care system with private overnight clinics that can provide these services safely and only if it benefits the current public system.

Mr. Chairman, as we face the challenge of a growing and an aging population and changing health care needs, we need legislation that will adapt to the needs of Albertans. The consensus is that it would be irresponsible for this government to sit back and do nothing while the current state of our health care system needs to be addressed. The status quo is clearly not the option.

Right across this country, in every province, we have problems with health care. Presently in this province we're spending 33 cents for every dollar we spend on government programs. Mr. Chairman, that's 33 percent or one-third of all our budget that is spent on health care. Inaction would send the message to Albertans that the current inefficiencies are okay and should be accepted by Albertans, as the opposition would have us do.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 11 is only part of the solution that will ensure that Albertans receive the medical care they deserve. The Alberta government is firmly committed to protecting and improving Alberta's publicly funded health system, as it's committed to preserving the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Chairman, when considering the health of Albertans, we need action. We need to be aggressive to ensure our system provides the best for Albertans. Our government will always be committed to a quality, publicly funded health system that is accessible to all Albertans. That is what Albertans want, and that's what Albertans deserve.

Bill 11 will allow RHAs to contract out some minor surgeries requiring overnight stays. This subamendment would remove this possibility and maintain the status quo, with long waiting lists and inefficiencies. I do not believe that the way Albertans receive health care will change much with this legislation, but faster quality service will result, and the system will be prepared to adapt to future needs and developments. As elected representatives, we must provide solutions. We must support Bill 11 and reject subamendment SA1.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Patience and patient waiting helps, doesn't it?

Mr. Chairman, with your permission I would like to speak to the subamendment before the House. I heard the Minister of Health, when he was speaking a while ago, saying that we have spent so many hours on this, and of course so did the Minister of Justice and Government House Leader sort of complain about the fact that so much time has been spent on this particular amendment. This amendment speaks to the most important section of Bill 11.

Bill 11 and the government amendments proposed to change the original version have now been available to Albertans, professional bodies, and nonprofit health delivery organizations, and they have been, of course, also listening to or watching the debate in the House on this particular subamendment. Some of these bodies have come to the conclusion that in spite of all the government amendments proposed, the bill "is premature and . . . it is imperative that it be set aside until the broader dialogue around sustainability and the common good has occurred." These are words that I take from the Catholic Health Association of Alberta & Affiliates' news release dated April 18.

If we were paying heed to the advice we are getting from these responsible public bodies, nonprofit health delivery organizations, we would be seriously considering the withdrawal of the bill on that side of the House, on the government side, but that has not happened as yet. I continue to hope that good sense will prevail and the government will in fact heed this advice and withdraw the bill, but until that happens, we must take very seriously the debate on amendments to the bill.

While I'm making reference to these either learned professional bodies or nonprofit delivery organizations giving this advice, I would also make reference to another letter, dated April 13, issued by the College of Family Physicians of Canada, Alberta Chapter. This is an important letter, Mr. Chairman; it does get to the heart of the subamendment and the issues associated with it. So with your permission I would like to read a few sections of the letter in order for me to get to the subamendment itself, because the letter does speak to the subamendment and what it proposes to do.

Just to give you background, the Alberta chapter of the College of Family Physicians of Canada is a provincial organization composed of more than 1,500 voluntary members. This organization focuses on the quality of family practice and on the role of family physicians within the health system of Alberta. The college strives to provide an environment for family physicians who offer the best possible care for patients. Among its many endeavours, the college supports and facilitates postgraduate training, continuing medical education, and primary care research. The activities of the college are guided by the four principles of family medicine, and the family physician follows the following four principles. He or she has a patient/physician relationship based on trust, has comprehensive clinical skills, is community based, and is a resource to a defined practice.

I move on to the key and important observations made here by Dr. Connie Ellis, the president of this association, in her letter of April 13 addressed to the Premier. Dr. Ellis goes on:

While we must be concerned participants in the debate, it is not the role of our College to lead the discussions about the funding implications of Bill 11, or whether or not this Bill infringes upon the principles of the Canada Health Act. However, as a standard setting body involved in ensuring the highest quality of care in the relationship between family doctors and their patients, we do have a responsibility to challenge the introduction of any model that could threaten the integrity of our publicly funded health system.

The model they refer to being introduced is by way of this new surgical facility in Bill 11. Dr. Ellis then suggests:

We do question therefore, the validity and veracity of the research evidence that purports to support the underlying thesis of Bill 11, namely that the growth of private surgical facilities will reduce waiting lists, and that the services provided by these private facilities will be based on high standards, best practices and effective patient outcomes.

This challenge presented by Dr. Ellis on behalf of 1,500 family physicians in the province is an extremely important and serious challenge presented to the section of the bill that amendment A1, section A proposes to change. Dr. Ellis goes on to say:

The practice of medicine is based, as much as possible, on evidence-based research and the application of the outcomes of this research to foster thoughtful and sound patient care. What evidence-based research has been done to validate the underlying thesis of Bill 11?

Has the government conducted any studies to determine why the current system cannot manage long waiting lists? For example, it is well known to family physicians in all practice settings – rural, regional and urban – that a key element to expand surgery in any form is the availability of trained, experienced staff, yet almost every jurisdiction in Alberta is experiencing a dire shortage of physicians and nurses. The introduction of new facilities will not address that concern but will compound this serious problem.

The next paragraph in this letter by Dr. Ellis is most important, Mr. Chairman. Dr. Ellis observes that physicians, by the very nature of their profession in patient care, are required to first consider what is best for the patient: . . . ‘first, do no harm.’ All decisions in the provision of health care, whether they be in the doctor’s office or by the government in the introduction of new health delivery systems . . .

as is being proposed, by the way, in Bill 11, must bear in mind that the primary responsibility of all parties is to ensure patient well-being. It is not sufficient to introduce change in the delivery of health care simply because the current options are difficult to sustain. [The first, do no harm principle] implores all those who are responsible for the care of patients to utilize the best of the current system until there is clear evidence of improvements available.

In summary, the good doctor says that the Alberta Chapter of the College of Family Physicians of Canada questions the fundamental premise of any health reform measure that is not based on clear evidence that supports and enhances the best interests of patient well-being.

Mr. Chairman, that is why it is so significant, so important that the subamendment before us should be debated for as long as it takes until the point becomes clear to the minister of health and to the government of Alberta that this bill is premature, it does not put the best interests of the patient up front, and therefore it’s not worthy of further consideration by this Assembly and should be withdrawn.

Mr. Chairman, a few other important observations that I would like to put on record. The Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons has restricted private facilities to doing day surgery since the first private surgical suites were accredited in the 1980s. It is only because of constant pressure from private interests like HRG that any consideration is being given to accrediting private facilities for overnight stays. There is nothing artificial about a 12-hour recovery limit, as some have argued. Twelve hours is the very outside of necessary recovery time for a day-surgery procedure. The 12-hour limit already exists in the college bylaw. Putting the 12-hour limit in Bill 11, as the subamendment attempts to do, will bring this very flawed legislation – nevertheless, since it’s before us, then we must debate it – into line with what is already the practice of the College of Physician and Surgeons.

Make no mistake, Mr. Chairman. The reason for Bill 11 is to allow private facilities to expand into surgeries with a post-operative recovery time of more than 12 hours. With the 12-hour limit gone, the college will face constant pressure from private facility owners, some of whom are college members, to allow more and more complex surgeries to be performed by the private sector. That is the reason, Mr. Chairman, it is important in this bill to do what subamendment SA1, section A proposes to do, and that is, insert this statement which says that the surgeries will not be done except that it “requires a stay by the patient of under 12 hours,” thereby banning any facilities from going on to take patients who need surgeries that require many nights’ stay in those places.

Another authoritative professional body with a great deal of credibility, the Alberta Medical Association, after having carefully studied all the amendments proposed by the government, has come back and in its letter of April 18 has restated that the position that it has taken with respect to Bill 11 remains. It has not changed its position. In the view of the Alberta Medical Association, a body of physicians, Bill 11 should be withdrawn; it doesn’t serve any useful and helpful purpose.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, I just want to bring some ordinary Albertans into the picture as well. What we are hearing from these professional bodies, from these highly reputable and credible social agencies is echoed in the letters to us in the House, letters by ordinary people, including grade 11 or 12 students. Let me just bring the ordinary grassroots Albertans into the picture here in concluding my observations on this bill.

There’s a letter from Wayne Sklarski, a constituent of the Premier. In a letter to the Premier dated April 17, Sklarski asked the Premier:

Honourable [Premier] Klein, Premier of Alberta and MLA for my riding, I would like to voice my opposition to Bill 11, the so called “Health Care Protection Act”. I believe that passage of this bill will erode our medical safety net.

As a former U.S. citizen who has fully experienced both systems (i.e., Canadian and American), I can tell you that the U.S. system disenfranchises many people from receiving even the most basic health care; a deplorable state of affairs for the “world’s richest nation”. In contrast the Canadian system of health care is excellent and available for meeting the needs for all Canadians.

I strongly oppose Bill 11 and feel that it should be withdrawn.

Moreover, I feel an election should be called on this matter.

The point Mr. Sklarski is making here is the point being addressed by the subamendment: to give some assurance to Albertans that if this bill passes with these amendments that are being debated now, it’ll perhaps help slow down the slippage toward the two-tier American system. That’s why I’m speaking in support of subamendment SA1, section A.

Mr. Chairman, would you indicate how many . . . Three more minutes. All right. Thank you.

I just want to read a letter from a young Albertan, 14 years old. The writer says:

My name is Alise Palk. I am 14 years old, I live in Edson, Alberta. I am in grade 8 and attend Jubilee Junior High School. I have received honors in every subject, every year that I've been in school and like to think that I am a pretty reasonable person.

Then she goes on. I'm just reading some excerpts from it.

10:10

The majority of Albertans are middle class citizens who can barely afford health care as it is now with all the extra billing. With Bill 11, I am positive that things will undoubtedly decline. This morning before I went to school I was listening to the radio. They were talking about the protests that had been going on at the legislature. Mr. Klein then gave his opinion of the ordeal. It was something like, we are free to protest, disagree, and have our own opinions, but he is also free to govern just because he was elected, and that's what he will do. To me, a 14 year old, it sounded like he was saying that we can do anything and everything in our power to try and get him to see that we do not want Bill 11! But our efforts will be ignored because he is almighty, all powerful so he can't be bothered by what his people think. Oh I probably shouldn't say his people, it might lead him to think that he owns us!

Pretty telling words, Mr. Chairman, from a 14 year old living in Edson, a grade 8 student.

With all due respect, [she continues] if certain people (meaning you) . . .

Here this letter is now addressed to all of us. I've received it as part of everyone else receiving it.

. . . do not open your eyes and stand up for Albertans, I doubt you'll be in a position to do so for very long. I am sure that deep down you are all good people, so please do not make the mistake of letting Bill 11 pass. By the way, this letter was not influenced by the opinions of anyone but me, and I took time out of my life to share my opinions with you so I would appreciate it if you would share yours with me.

That's a moving statement by a 14 year old, a young student who is going to spend most of her life in the next century. Mr. Chairman, I say, let's pay attention to it; let's look at the amendment before us seriously and support it.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure tonight to join in this debate on the subamendment that's put forward by the members opposite on Bill 11, particularly what appears to be the early stages of committee stage before us.

The subamendment that we're dealing with right now would limit stays in an approved surgical facility to less than 12 hours. What I'd like to do is provide a perspective on this subamendment and what the less-than-12-hour stay would mean as it applies to my rural constituency. In doing so, I'd like to make reference back to the comments the hon. Minister of Learning made in this House last Monday night. I'd like to echo some of those comments as well as some of the comments I've heard from some of my colleagues on this side of the House regarding overnight stays and what constitutes an acceptable stay within an approved surgical facility under Bill 11.

The hon. Minister of Learning is a qualified physician, surgeon, and anaesthetist, and the Minister of Learning quite obviously points out that it is difficult and even improper for us to outright limit the length of stays at facilities. He suggests that it should be up to attending physicians to determine on a case-by-case basis what constitutes an appropriate stay in a facility. Any one of us who has been to a public hospital or even a private clinic can tell you very clearly about how they feel following the completion of a procedure. They may tell you that they feel sluggish. They may feel tired, fatigued, and perhaps in some minor discomfort. They may also suggest that they need some time to recuperate, possibly to even sleep or relax and to recover from whatever procedure they just went through.

One of the issues related to health care that my constituents constantly bring up to me is that they feel rushed getting out of a hospital following any procedure that they undergo. I know that I share their feelings on this issue, and I assume the members opposite do.

A couple of contrasts when it comes to a city versus a rural setting. I recently heard from someone here in Edmonton who underwent a procedure where she was put under anesthetic that left her groggy and incoherent for quite some time after. Despite this, she was sent home in a cab shortly after the procedure ended while still having some effect from the anesthetic. She commented that she was very surprised to wake up in her own bed later that day, because she didn't remember leaving the hospital to get into the cab.

Now, I'd like to compare that with a lady from Crowsnest Pass who a week ago last Monday was referred by her doctor to a specialist. That specialist had time and a place in a private surgical facility in Calgary to do the procedure that she required. She got in there, and the procedure was done. This lady traveled two hours and forty-five minutes to get to Calgary. She's a senior; she's a feisty lady. She had the procedure and luckily enough nothing went wrong. However, if something had gone wrong, she would probably have to have been put into a hotel or something like that without any care or any attention and probably made her way back home the following day.

No one knows what can or can't happen when you're dealing with folks who are elderly, and a procedure that might seem quite normal can give them some discomfort. So in a case like that, the private surgical facility could have given my constituent some reassurance and some comfort level that she could be looked after.

A two hour and forty-five minute drive down highway 22 to Blairmore could be a very, very uncomfortable situation for my constituents. So that shows you the need for a safe, well-regulated surgical facility that might have the opportunity to have a stay longer than 12 hours.

Mr. Chairman, doctors and nurses should be able to decide on a case-by-case basis, just as I have pointed out tonight, when it is appropriate to send a patient home. However, the deciding factor on when a person leaves a clinic should be when they feel better, not simply when a doctor or nurse is assured that a person isn't going to take a turn for the worse. If it is after just a few hours, fine, but if someone needs a little more time, a little more sleep, they should not be tied to an arbitrary number that is devised by the politicians and particularly, in the case of this subamendment, the members opposite.

I disagree with members opposite when they suggest that any procedure requiring a stay longer than 12 hours constitutes a major surgical procedure. The College of Physicians and Surgeons will make the determination of what procedures are major and can only be done in a public hospital. This is the way it is now, and it is the way it will continue to be under Bill 11.

I want to encourage all members to reject the Liberal subamendment and support the original amendment presented by the Minister of Health and Wellness, and on behalf of my rural constituents who need that comfort level, Bill 11 will supply that comfort level for them with the amendments that we have brought forward for Bill 11.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to ask the committee if you would agree to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I see in the gallery a good friend of mine, Mrs. Ellen Tarvis. She actually taught me when I was in grade 4. I went to school with one of her sons. She's a very good, well-informed community volunteer who often gives me some very sage advice, which I appreciate. I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 11

Health Care Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, it's a privilege to stand and debate the subamendment to the amendments to Bill 11 this evening. I have listened to the majority of comments being made on both sides of the House tonight, and I think that in general they've had everything and nothing to do with the subamendment, which is perhaps fitting, because in a way Bill 11 has everything and nothing to do with the future of our health care system.

Really, the irony of all this is that I find myself sitting here as a health care professional wishing that we could channel the collective wisdom and effort and energies that we're expending in this Chamber this evening and have expended now for several weeks on Bill 11 to developing a collective vision and plan for health care in this province, because truly that is what is needed. That is what the citizens and the electorate that we represent want, I believe, and I believe that is also what the system wants. The problem is that politics, I have come to find, is sometimes more debilitating than facilitating, and there is a huge price that's paid for that, a huge price.

We've heard comments this evening about Alberta being a leader in health care. There is certainly truth to that statement, and there is untruth to that statement. We have been leaders in many areas, including the disabled programs and bringing in programs that at the time in which they were created were more comprehensive for disabled people than existed anywhere else in our nation. We have, however, had a period of time in this province when those same programs were cut and, similarly, a time in this province when our health care system was cut.

The debate – the bill, the amendment, and subamendment SA1 – really has everything and nothing to do with that history, the present or the future. I'm pretty new at this political game, and I've thought about how long the government has been in power in this province. What you come to learn very quickly, Mr. Chairman, is that politics is a lot about, if not completely about, relationships.

In the course of 30 years I am certain that relationships are built that are very strong and loyal and that are trusted tremendously. I've found myself contemplating what I would do if I'd been in politics for a long period of time and the network of relationships that I had built, that I trusted and relied upon, that had supported me through the peaks and valleys of my political career, if those mentors and supporters told me that the only way to reform the public health care system was to introduce private, for-profit delivery. That's a perplexing contemplation for me.

I certainly value the relationships that I have had both prior to and during my political career, and I rely on the judgment and advice of those people tremendously. I'm sure that the minister of health and the Premier have similar relationships, and it is the input that they receive from those relationships upon which they have introduced Bill 11 and the amendments.

I haven't fully finished exploring that thought, but one of the things I have concluded is that we are here today for reasons that are partially my fault and the health care system's fault and the health professionals' fault. Number one, we haven't built relationships that convey the degree of trust and support and wisdom that those recommending Bill 11 to the government have. We have not come up with an alternative to reforming the public health care system or addressing the expenditure side of the equation. We haven't collectively come up with a plan or a vision for the system as health care professionals, as citizens, as a public interested in maintaining and preserving our public health care system. So I have concluded, Mr. Chairman, that there is an onus and a responsibility that perhaps we can take up that torch, if you will, and do something about it.

Nellie McClung once said, "It is so much easier sometimes to sit down and be resigned than to rise up and be indignant." That was a quotation from In Times Like These. Her words ring very clearly. I'm amazed. She is a woman that I've acquired quite a degree of respect for even though I obviously didn't know her and she lived in a political time that was very different but also very similar to the time that we're in now. I think there is a lot of truth to her words and a lot of application.

As I indicated earlier, we focused a lot of energy on debating this bill, debating the amendments and subamendment, the terminology of surgical services and insured services, of physicians and dentists, of 12-hour stays and overnight stays. We've gone, I think the hon. minister said, 13-some hours on the amendment at this stage. Probably much to the government's relief there is going to be a day when we will not be debating the subamendment. I'm sure we will all be quite relieved.

MR. DICKSON: I'm grieving it already. I'm grieving that moment already.

MRS. SLOAN: There are times when I worry about my hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, as he says that he will be grieving when that day comes.

We have to find a more comprehensive way to develop that plan and the solutions that are required in health care.

The debate this evening has also talked about the federal government and the provincial ministers and the discussions, correspondence, communications that have been conveyed with respect to Bill 11 and the issues confronting public health care. One of the things that I've concluded – and I may be incorrect, and I will expect that the minister of health will correct me if I'm wrong – is that Bill 11 really wasn't shared or discussed in any draft form before it was introduced in this House with any of the provincial ministers or the federal minister.

I've been in situations where, perhaps, there's not a lot of trust or there's a degree of competition, so that would lead to some things being withheld. I see it, and I think the public sees that kind of politicking. The public sees that as politicking. Really we're talking about a system that to most Canadians there is nothing more sacred or precious. I think we discredit our profession as politicians when we go about negotiating or planning or legislating things without communicating those plans or legislation to other parties that will be affected by it. I'm doing my best to not be provoking, Mr. Chairman, but in many respects the lack of communication that occurred with the federal and provincial ministers has also existed in the lack of communication with respect to this bill and its intent with the public.

I spoke in my debate some time earlier about the health summit, and even in my career in the health care system, which is encroaching on 22 years this year, we had a variety of consultations about health care. The Rainbow Report being one, the health care roundtables occurring in the early '90s another. The health summit which occurred in 1999 was probably the last one. What I find difficult to understand is that all of those consultations produced reports. I happen to have only the health summit report with me tonight. I believe that in the health summit report, as an example, there were 30-odd recommendations, quite comprehensive and broad recommendations, Mr. Chairman, but as I refreshed my memory and looked through those, the majority of them have not been acted upon.

I think back to the roundtables, which I participated in as a registered nurse, The Rainbow Report, which our nursing association made submissions to, in addition to making submissions on the community health centre model, alternative proposals for the delivery of care. Where are those proposals and plans? Where is the government's action plan, if you will, in undertaking the public's suggestions and recommendations that have been contained in all of the consultations? It doesn't appear to be publicly available, Mr. Chairman.

It is quite extraordinary to be in the position of being in this Chamber at this point in time and seeing the level of interest and activism that Bill 11 has generated. It's not something, I think, that we will see probably for some time again. I thought it was also kind of an interesting contrast on Monday night when the first spontaneous rally happened here inside the Legislature Building on the same night that the Oilers' game was on, the contrast in interests and priorities, I guess, if you will. Don't get me wrong. Our family has a healthy passion for hockey, so it wasn't like I didn't have an eye on both.

I think what this bill has done has really brought people right down to basics. As I said in the beginning, Bill 11 has everything to do with and nothing to do with reforming the health care system. It has everything to do with, even in a more general sense, the system and respect and integrity of our democracy. I certainly will have a lot more contemplations about this whole process of Bill 11 once we're through and it's a piece of history, some of the extraordinary debates and circumstances that we have witnessed as this debate has proceeded. I'm anticipating my time is up.

The whole 12-hour issue and the comments that have been made about doctors and nurses should be able to decide when a patient goes home – you know, I hate to tell you, but the doctors and nurses' ability to be able to determine when patients go home, Mr. Chairman, has already been constrained and restricted because of the funding limitations that exist in our health care system now. [interjections] I kid you not, government members. I kid you not. Physicians are forced to discharge patients because the bed is needed for the next patient. Whether they are medical or surgical, that has been the case. Listen; I am not feeding you a bogus argument here. If you talk to any practising physician in the urban areas for sure, Calgary and Edmonton, their judgment relative to how long a patient should stay in hospital is constrained by the number of functioning beds and the number of cases waiting in the operating room.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is saying what she believes. All hon. members are entitled, when it's their turn, to say what they believe, but if we all enter into each other's debate, we'll have babel. That's in a biblical sense. So I wonder if we could continue in the vein that we have for most of the evening, and that is determine what things we're going to say when we have our chance and say them then as opposed to being spontaneous.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to continue.

10:40

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Chairman, if I can characterize the argument, the argument is that physicians should want to have Bill 11 and the accompanying private clinics because then there would be more accessible beds. Well, that argument is not true. Number one, physicians are opposing Bill 11 quite solidly, at least from my reading and my contact with them. [interjections] Let's also acknowledge the fact that . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, we seem to have enlivened one of your own supporters here. Edmonton-Norwood, I wonder if we could try and practise what we were trying to preach on the other side.

MS OLSEN: I apologize, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hopefully, we'll hear you no more until it's your turn to speak.

Sorry, Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: It should be a lightning rod to government, Mr. Chairman, when physicians say that Bill 11 will not solve the waiting list problem. It should be like a bolt of lightning that they acknowledge and respect. The reality is that the physicians know. They've worked in the system for years. They know how it works. Many of them have gone to the States to take their specialties and have chosen to come back here, and they know, as well, how the private/public system mix works. So with due respect to the government members who say that this is going to solve those problems, that just will not be the case.

As I said in my introductory remarks, I think we would get far further on this debate if government members could look beyond Bill 11 and beyond opposition and focus on the development of a plan that will truly sustain the health care system. Bill 11 amended or not will not do that, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to stand this evening and speak on this subamendment before us tonight. I'd like to start by speaking to the fact that this subamendment would put a 12-hour limit on patient stays in approved surgical facilities, and I'd like to mention that it has been implied that this subamendment could clear up the misunderstandings that Albertans have on the difference between a private surgical facility and a hospital, and I believe we can clear that up right here tonight without this subamendment even being necessary.

Hospitals are for emergencies or major surgeries. Surgical facilities are for procedures that are advantageous to the patient but not urgent or life threatening. Elective surgical facilities are the focus of Bill 11, not a hospital, not something that provides 24 hours a day emergency service.

Mr. Chairman, it's common sense that a hospital is somewhere to go when you're sick and an elective surgical clinic is not. It's where you go when you need a procedure that's not putting your life in imminent danger, and it's something that should be defined, that can be safely done by and defined by the medical professionals that do this. A 12-hour limit on patient stays is not necessary to differentiate between surgical facilities and hospitals.

Mr. Chairman, the contracting out is already happening in Alberta, and it has for many years. All we're talking about here is the addition of overnight stays. We are regulating surgical clinics in a way we never have before, and yes, we are expanding the scope of what they're doing, but we're regulating how they do it. If this means that we can do things cheaper with the same quality or better quality than a public facility, then we should look at doing that.

I'd like to get back to the gist of this subamendment, the 12-hour cutoff. Whether a length of stay is 12 hours, 18 hours, 24 hours, or whatever, should that be decided by legislators in this House or should it be decided by medical professionals, such as the College of Physicians and Surgeons, or, even more importantly, by the medical professionals that have done the surgery and that are attending to your recovery?

The college should decide this safety factor, Mr. Chairman, and the ability of the facility to offer the services safely and in the best interests of the patient. It makes good sense for patients to be able to have nursing observation and stay in that facility for as long as possible. My colleague from Calgary-Cross previously made the statement that patients that go home too early are patients that get into trouble, and this is very true. I know that if I were to one day be a patient in a surgical facility, I'd definitely not want to be evicted before I totally recovered just because of the 12-hour rule.

I have some personal experience in this. I haven't had to undergo this myself, but I just checked with my family member, and it was back in '95 that I had a family member that underwent spinal surgery for a herniated disk at a major hospital in Calgary. The doctor suspected this would be a seven-day stay, depending on how she reacted to the surgery. Monday she went in for the surgery, and after me going down every day, she called me Thursday night and said: "Don't bother coming down Friday, because the doctor's going to see me and I may be able to get out. I'll phone you if I need you to come." Friday morning she called and said: "The doctor was just in. I can't leave, and I'll be here till Monday."

So I made arrangements to come earlier that evening to visit, stay overnight, and visit again on the Saturday. When I got there at 5 o'clock in the evening, she was sitting in the waiting room with a suitcase beside her and had been there since 10 o'clock in the morning. She was told about an hour after the doctor left that because the other patients were discharged, she was the only one left in the ward, and rather than move her, they were going to discharge her. This had nothing to do with the doctor's orders. It was what she was told by the staff.

Mr. Chairman, this had nothing to do with legislation, and it had nothing to do with policy. It had everything to do with a specific attitude of some people that worked in that facility at that time. As a result, after getting her home, there were some complications, and I had to take her back into a rural hospital, where she spent a number of other days.

So I've got some real experience with a specific time limit that would be superimposed on a patient's stay, and I believe it's totally unacceptable to impose such a time limit based on policy or based on a specific time frame. I believe that the medical professionals, the doctors, are the ones that should decide how long a person stays in care.

Under this subamendment I'm afraid to contemplate what would happen if a patient were to have a complication, and as I stated, these things are not unheard of. I think it's careless to consider that a patient not be allowed to recover past the point of danger in the care of the doctors and nurses that treated her. The people that performed the operation are without a doubt the best people to recover a patient. They know exactly what happened, and they should be there.

Some argue that if a patient's stay is not limited to 12 hours, it could be a major surgery that is performed in surgical clinics. Mr. Chairman, this is simply not true, and section 2 makes this impossible to happen, even as it's amended by the minister of health in the amendment that he introduced, which clarifies it even more so.

To put a 12-hour time limit on procedures is absolutely wrong, and it does nothing to take into account new technologies and procedures that come onstream almost daily. Last week when I got back to my constituency, I contacted my mother-in-law, as all good sons-in-law do, and I asked her for some clarification. She's in her early 80s, and her husband had cataract surgery, which I thought was about 10 or 12 years ago. But after talking to her, she said that it was in 1974, so time does fly. He had one eye done at a time, and he spent four to five days per eye in the Holy Cross hospital, and it was a couple of months between surgeries. So that's just an example of how technology has changed the way we deliver health services in this province.

What was commonly a lengthy stay now can be done in day surgery, but should we limit that day surgery to a specific time frame? I don't believe it's in the patient's best interest to do that. I think every procedure must be looked at individually because we're talking about people and their well-being here. Everyone reacts differently to different procedures. Bill 11, as it is proposed and as the amendments are proposed by the minister of health, allows us to provide individual patients with the care they require.

Mr. Chairman, with that, I'll conclude my remarks by saying that if an overnight stay is warranted, then an overnight stay must be allowed. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. First let me say that if my children are still listening via the Internet, they should go to bed now. I would also like to thank the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for his comments. I will in a moment take issue with a couple of them, but I appreciate him participating in the debate and letting us know how he feels about the distinction of a 12-hour stay, plus or minus, or what's major and what's minor. It made me think that there is a fundamental flaw, though, in the argument and this whole discussion we're having on the subamendment in terms of what would require more than a 12-hour stay.

See, we have to have a cutoff somewhere. Even the government's legislation talks about the college developing new bylaws that would determine what's major and what's minor. One of the ways that those decisions are made right now is based on how invasive the surgery is, and one of the aftereffects of major surgery is that the body takes longer to recover from the anesthesia, from the incision, from whatever the procedure was. It's been explained to me that, you know, the deeper you go in and the more you cut out, the longer it takes to recover. So you've got some general distinctions between what might be considered major and minor.

Now, current bylaws, current provisions, part of the current regulatory framework already calls for this 12-hour distinction. In fact, that 12-hour distinction is referenced in Bill 11 itself. Because we need to have some cutoff, because we have to have some demarcation between what's major and minor, we could do what the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was suggesting the Liberals want to do. I suppose we could. We could have legislators sit and list all of those procedures and then say that everything that's on the list is either in or out. Or we could do what I think is much more reasonable – this is where I will agree with the hon. member – and we could leave that medical decision to medical experts: to the physicians, to the college.

There is no way that the subamendment, if it's passed, will take that away from the profession, because what it says is: no procedure that requires more than a 12-hour stay. But the College of Physicians and Surgeons are still going to be required to determine that list of procedures. We're not going to legislate the list of procedures. So if we're going to legislate that it's going to be major or minor, depending on some bylaws that the college will develop, we could just as soon give them the direction that it was only for day surgery purposes.

Now, there are lots of reasons for that, because as technology progresses, we will be able to see miraculous surgeries take place in a matter of minutes that right now take hours. We will see recovery times that right now might be a matter of days become a matter of hours, and there is nothing in this subamendment that would prohibit Albertans from taking full advantage of that technology. You see, the beauty of this subamendment is that it is giving some assurances to the people of Alberta that if they are going to have to go through major surgery – and we will define major surgery as that surgery which at that point in time requires, according to clinical practice guidelines and the best evidence that we've got in medicine, more than a 12-hour stay – it will be done in a full-service public hospital that has trauma and ICU capability and everything else, not in a freestanding clinic.

So this would give assurances to Albertans that the government means what it says when they say now that Bill 11 is just about building some fences – that's the language I've now heard coming from the government – around the existing clinics, those 52 day surgery clinics, those private clinics now.

Now, I don't believe that Bill 11 is just about building these fences. I think Bill 11 is all about expanding the role of the private sector in the provision of surgical services. I think Bill 11 is all about the creation of private hospitals. The government says that they're not private hospitals; they're approved surgical facilities. But, you know, when they used the Shouldice hospital as an example, I think we see clearly what the government has in mind. They would like to see private hospitals, and they want to see the role of these private hospitals expand from the current day surgery utilization. So if the government is now sort of changing its mind and saying, "No, no, no; what the bill is really about is just building fences around these existing clinics," then so be it.

One of the ways we could make sure that this legislation is just about building a fence around the existing clinics is to put in a limitation in terms of recovery time, because none of these existing clinics do any overnight surgery. All of these existing clinics do day surgery, and as the government themselves have put forward, if there is a complication, if there is an issue that comes up in somebody's treatment that requires them to be admitted to hospital, they will be taken to a hospital. They will be admitted. As the Premier has said himself, if something goes wrong at the Gimbel clinic, they call an ambulance, and the ambulance takes them to a hospital. So this whole sort of bogeyman – that if this amendment becomes law, it would mean that people will get kicked out before they've recovered – is really nothing more than that. It's a bogeyman. It doesn't make sense. In fact, it contradicts what the Premier has said himself about how private clinics would handle emergencies or a medical crisis.

It just seems to me that while the argument is presented, it doesn't really make a lot of sense in comparison to how the system operates today, so the government needs to make it very clear. Is Bill 11 now just about building fences around private clinics? If this is the case, then we don't really need Bill 11. We could do some other things within the existing regulations or the existing Alberta Hospitals Act. Or is Bill 11 about expansion of the role of private surgical facilities? Now, if it's about the expansion of private surgical facilities, then I can understand why the government would vote against my colleague's subamendment, because my colleague's subamendment really slams the door on the expansion of private facilities.

So if the government wants to support their new contention that this is about building fences, support the subamendment. If the government wants to say, "No; really what we're saying, Albertans, is that we want the private sector to have an expanded role," then I can understand why they would want to defeat that subamendment.

Now, I've been doing some very interesting reading over the last few days about the ability of the private sector to work in public/private partnerships. There has been lots of research done in North America in terms of government contracting out services, some of it done right here in Alberta as a result of government deregulation and delegation and the creation of delegated administrative organizations. Some of it was done in Ontario. Ontario has an extensive history of privatized child care services, with some of it done in the field of corrections, mostly community corrections, and a little bit of it in terms of institutional corrections. Road maintenance, bridge and dam construction and maintenance: there's been a whole host of research when a government privatizes what used to be a public service.

This research, I think, is very relevant to today's debate; for example, an article that was published by a researcher by the name of Hurl. The article was titled Privatized Social Service Systems: Lessons from Ontario Children's Services. This article was published in a journal called Canadian Public Policy. He found that the delegation of governmental authority for decision making and/or task performance to nongovernmental (private sector) organizations contravenes [several] tenets of democratic government by [giving] these private organizations with . . . what we could only describe as . . . public power. Further delegation was thought to create organizations which are [therefore] vested with public authority, carry-out public functions, and spend public funds, yet are able to resist government influence because they operate at arm's length.

Hurl found that the self-interests of non-governmental organizations will therefore ultimately act to confound government efforts at planning.

Now, what he based this on is that these organizations have a survival instinct. They want to keep going, whether they be not-for-profit or for-profit, and because they have this survival instinct, they will work towards ensuring their continuing role in whatever the service provision is, often in contradiction to what existing government policy may be or in opposition to where government may want to take policy in the future.

The Ontario experience with privatization of children's service systems highlights major problems in the integration, cooperation, and accountability of privatized systems, and illustrates the difficulties of exercising control over [these] service systems [which are now] dependent on the nongovernmental sector.

If we can apply this experience in children's services to what may happen in health care, we can begin to see the dangers.

For example, if all surgery of one type is contracted out in one region and then that contractor decides to make a unilateral change outside of the contract, the ability of the government to react is very much diminished because there has now been a dependency created on that provider. Now, this is not a fantastic or unimaginable circumstance.

Mr. Chairman, I've had the experience of being a contract provider of services to government. I can tell you and maybe the Acting Provincial Treasurer at some point might want to remind you or familiarize you with an experience that we shared regarding young offenders open-custody facilities and the dependency that the government had on provision of open-custody young offender beds on the nongovernment sector. Now, I don't think that dependence worked out poorly for the public interest in Alberta of the day, but I think at the time the then Solicitor General might have voiced a disagreement.

Clearly, when the private sector is in a position where it has a monopoly service, government is at a disadvantage because government typically can't react with the speed that happens in other private-sector to private-sector transactions to those kinds of changes in relationships.

Now, in a paper called The Prison Business: A Literature Review of Privatization In Correctional Institutions, that was done by Jamieson, Beals, Lalonde and Associates in Ottawa, published in April, 1989, they come to the following statement:

In Canadian and other democratic societies, a major societal value is the idea that the general public (voters) shall hold their elected officials responsible for the actions and omissions of all public sector employees (including both bureaucrats and civil servants).

When a public sector function is assigned to a private entity, such as through a contract, there is an inevitable weakening in the lines of political accountability and decision-making capacity.

Now, this loss of accountability is something that I haven't heard the government talk about. If you follow this through, Mr. Chairman, you'll see where my worry is. We have the government of Alberta, and it creates the Department of Health and Wellness. Now, most taxpayers, most voters would assume that if they have an issue with government policy or the delivery of health services, they would be able to get in touch with the minister or maybe the Premier or certainly the executive branch of government and be able to communicate their concern and have it dealt with and resolved.

But what happens right now quite often – and I know this from my own experience in my constituency, and I'm sure, Mr. Chairman, you've had the same experience in your constituency – is that when a constituent comes to you with a concern about medical treatment and you contact the Minister of Health and Wellness, either on the telephone or in writing, the response you receive back is: well, that's very interesting, and thank you for bringing it to my attention, but you should really direct your inquiry to the regional health authority.

Then you take that advice and you contact the regional health authority. Now, what I'm worried about is we've already gone down one notch in terms of accountability, in terms of that direct relationship between those who are governed and those who govern. We've already diminished that relationship by a factor of one. Now, if this bill goes ahead, what we'll see is that the relationship will be diminished even further, because not only will you not be able to go to the Minister of Health and Wellness without him directing you to the regional health authority, but the regional health authority will in turn say: "Don't come knocking on our door. If you have a problem with the XYZ clinic, you have to go to the XYZ clinic. You have to deal with them, because, you see, they're just a contractor that provides services to us. We don't deal with those kinds of complaints."

Now, another concern that I have is the role of the Ombudsman, for example. The Ombudsman does not get involved when it comes to dealing with those who provide contracted services. We don't know what the relationship will be in terms of the Health Facilities Review Committee and what their role will be when it comes to dealing with these contracted services.

You know, when it comes to nailing down accountability – and again I'm sure you've had the same experience, Mr. Chairman, that I've had – often corporations for various reasons, most of them legitimate, will have a variety of legal entities, some would say shells, around them: numbered companies, interrelationships, partnerships, proprietorships, holding companies, and just a whole variety of corporate construction around them. Sometimes that makes it very difficult to pursue any kind of satisfaction when you're looking for either compensation or an explanation or somebody to take responsibility for something when something goes wrong.

Certainly these issues of accountability and the transference of responsibility are serious and significant issues. Again, if we look at the literature, what we will find is that there are many circumstances where the government as an unintended consequence of its privatization has lost the ability to fully account to the taxpayers, to the people who foot the bill, for the provision of services and how those services are ultimately received by the recipients.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think that the government is working very hard to have it both ways. They want Albertans to embrace privatization, the expanded role of privatization, yet they say that they are intolerant of or unwilling to accept in law a limitation that would speak directly to the nature and the quality of the service provided, a limitation that would speak directly to the fears and concerns of Albertans about their ability to know what kind of services they can get and where and under what circumstances, and they are unwilling to entertain an amendment that would make the law, at least on the surface, look like it was paying attention to the experience in other jurisdictions when they have contracted out other public services.

To conclude my comments, this unwillingness to accept this constructive assistance to Bill 11 leads me to question the government when they say that this is just a bill about building fences so that medicare can be protected. I remain convinced, particularly based on the comments from government members who have urged members of this Assembly to vote against the amendment, that Bill 11 is all about the expansion of private surgical facilities at the expense of support for public hospitals in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure to participate in this debate on the subamendment to Bill 11. This bill, along with the amendment and the subamendment, has received the most debate in the history of this Legislature. I believe that it's about 35 hours and still counting. This bill is a straightforward bill. It's designed to erect fences and place rules and regulations around the existing private facilities that are in existence at the present time, many of which were established under the watch of the former health minister, who happens to be the present Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chairman, when I ask my constituents as to whether or not we have private health care facilities at the present time, the answer is no. But when I bring to their attention that all the walk-in clinics, the lab services, the abortion clinics, the eye clinics, and many others that are providing many valuable services and taking a load off our health care system are private clinics, privately owned and operated, and when I tell them that these clinics perform over 20,000 operations every year at no cost to the patients, they realize that we are doing the right thing.

Bill 11 states very clearly that no person is allowed to pay money for any insured services and that no person is allowed to receive money for any insured services. Mr. Chairman, this is the law. Nobody can pay for and nobody can receive money for any insured services. It's very hard to accept the opposition allegation about the two-tiered health care system or that a stay of less than 12 hours is a one-tiered health care system or that a stay of over 12 hours is a two-tiered health care system.

Mr. Chairman, I lived in a country where a two-tiered health care system exists. The system did not resemble in any way, shape, or form the system that we have in this province. We had the private hospitals, where people went and paid the full shot for all the services, and we had the public system, where people received services and did not pay anything for them. To me this is a two-tiered health care system.

Mr. Chairman, I've heard a lot of mention about the great Tommy Douglas, the father of medicare, and how disappointed he would be if he was alive today. We certainly heard from his daughter and his grandson. Even the great Tommy Douglas, the father of medicare, did not say where an operation should be performed, whether it is performed at an approved or an accredited clinic or at a public hospital, as long as it is paid for by the publicly funded system.

Mr. Chairman, approximately two years ago I went through a gallbladder operation. That operation took only 12 minutes in the operating room, but I had to stay at the hospital for three days due to unexpected delays. To me the operation could have been done at an approved clinic instead of occupying a hospital bed for three days.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard a lot about American doctors and American companies. I am really puzzled here. On one hand, we have the opposition complaining about Canadian doctors moving to the United States because of more money, more opportunities, and less taxes, and on the other hand we hear the opposition tell us we should stop the brain drain and end this migration of our well-qualified doctors to the United States.

The opposition is talking about the American invasion of our health care system. This doesn't make any sense to me. The free trade agreement has been in place for the last 10 years and the North American free trade agreement, NAFTA, has been in place for five years, and we have not seen any evidence that the Americans are moving to Canada in droves to take over our medicare system.

I think what is being done here today and over the last two weeks is only adding to the confusion of the public and planting fear and doubts in people's minds, especially our seniors. Mr. Chairman, it's incumbent upon each member of this Assembly to be honest with his or her constituents and tell them exactly what Bill 11 and this amendment are all about and what this legislation will accomplish and how it will improve our sacred health care system.

The health care system that we are accustomed to as Canadians and as Albertans is what sets us apart from other countries, mainly the United States. Bill 11 will not change our valued health care system. On the contrary, it will enhance it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know, there is so much to say. I started out trying to make notes as government members were speaking to this. First, I'm still so overwhelmed with the kind of participation we have seen, and I'd like to pay tribute to every one of those government members who has had the courage to stand up and share with us their views and their opinions. I respect each of them for doing that.

Too often, you know, we go into an election, Mr. Chairman, and we never really know where those government members have stood on the key issues. You might see in a standing vote. It is wonderful to see these members stand up one by one and indicate why they think Bill 11 is a good idea and why a little further erosion of the public health care system is not too prejudicial. I think it's important that we hear those comments, and it's important that Albertans are able to access them.

Mr. Chairman, a couple of concerns in terms of dealing with subamendment A1. The whole business, of course, is the notion of trying to limit overnight stays. I start off by thinking of and referencing a letter that's already been tabled in the Assembly, so I won't be tabling it tonight. It was a letter from the Hon. Allan Rock, Minister of Health, April 7, 2000, to our Minister of Health and Wellness.

You know, he makes the point in this letter – and I'll just quote the one sentence from page 3 of that letter.

MR. JONSON: Read the whole thing, Gary.

MR. DICKSON: I'm delighted to see that the Minister of Health and Wellness is showing that same level of energy we saw earlier when he was getting into debate.

He makes this observation.

In this respect, the Alberta Government has now proposed a role for private, for-profit facilities that goes beyond what is already in place in other provinces of Canada.

He was referring there, as the Minister of Health and Wellness will remember, to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Ontario. Why? Because Alberta had attempted to make an argument, actually quite a bogus argument, that in fact Bill 11 was no different than what was being done in other provinces.

11:20

You know, I would think that a government might be able to try and get away with that, but not when you've mailed out copies of the bill to households across the country. People look at it, and they can see that there's something qualitatively different in terms of what's being proposed.

The further comment I'd quote from the federal Minister of Health, who says on the same page in that same letter:

Since the prospect of overnight stays in private, for-profit facilities represents a significant enlargement of private, for-profit delivery of health care services in Canada, and since it may have implications that will be felt in provinces and territories across the country, I suggest that it might be helpful to add a provision to prohibit overnight stays until the full implications for Canada's health care system are understood.

Well, what subamendment SA1 does is attempt to do exactly that, to prohibit overnight stays until the full implications to Canada's health care system are understood.

There is always an advantage in being prepared to be a pioneer; there's an advantage in having the courage to be a pioneer. But to charge blindly down a road that all of the evidence suggests is going to prejudice your health care system is not farsighted. It's not progressive. It's stupidity. This is not an issue of leadership, as sometimes this thing is tarted up and touted to be. It's an inane kind of action that we're going to have to pay the price for for a very long time.

One of the tests I typically use in this House in assessing bills and Legislative initiatives is: what impact is this going to have on my constituents? I've got some good information, Mr. Chairman, on that. At 11:30 this morning the CRHA held a news conference, and Dr. Kabir Jivraj made a number of announcements. Dr. Jivraj is a former president of the Alberta Medical Association, and he is the chief medical officer for the CRHA. Now, he was the spokesman at this briefing. I know this is old news to the minister of health, but it may be news to some of the Calgary members, in particular the Minister of Government Services and some other members who may be interested in this.

In the course of the presentation by Dr. Jivraj – what was interesting was that he took questions from the media. We shouldn't be surprised, that. Until the intervention of Mr. Roman Cooney, the media guy for the CRHA, most of the questions were about Bill 11. Mr. Chairman, I think one of the most interesting parts of the presentation – and once again I'm confident that the minister of health has seen this. When you go through the budget presentation for the CRHA, you come to an interesting section, and this is Increasing Access to Operating Rooms. In one of the little nuggets in here, which I'm drawn to immediately – and this is directly relevant to SAI, the overnight stays. Now, this is a note in terms of hospital beds in the Calgary region. This is the sentence:

In 1994/95, when all of Calgary's hospitals and community care facilities were organized under one Region, there were 1,748 staffed hospital beds. Today there are 1,818.

Mr. Chairman, we have added 116,000 new Calgarians, and the CRHA is touting the fact that we have something less than 100 additional hospital beds. If you look at any statistic I've ever seen in terms of number of hospital beds per thousand population, what you find is that in the city of Calgary there has been a dramatic erosion in terms of necessary hospital beds.

In all of those clinics that our friend from Calgary-Cross talked about the other day – remember that long list of services she went through that can be done in outpatient clinics? That does not change the need for an adequate number of hospital beds. I cannot help thinking that much of the impetus for this bill comes from the city of Calgary.

It's interesting that Mr. Dinning was not there answering questions, the gentleman from the provincial government who was sent to the CRHA. In fact, we have a bit of a trade going on. I understand that we have a member of the CRHA board who would like to be the Conservative candidate in Calgary-Buffalo. I see now we have a wonderful two-way exchange. The Legislature sends Mr. Dinning to the CRHA, and the CRHA starts sending board members into the Legislature. What we have is a very nice sort of connection. In case we thought communication wasn't going adequately between the Premier's office and the CRHA, we're going to have some additional lines of communication there. That's real good, Mr. Chairman. When we're dealing with subamendment SAI, it's good to know that the Calgary region is lockstep with the machinations of the Department of Health and Wellness, and whether that person will become the Conservative candidate, whether he'll be successful, is for the voters to determine, but the closeness is interesting.

The other thing that was interesting in the CRHA presentation this morning at 11:30 was your plan in terms of surgical services. Now, I suggest that particularly all the Calgary members in the Assembly, Mr. Chairman, might want to look at page 9 of the CRHA operating plan. This is where we talk about what's going to be done in terms of our operating capability within the CRHA for budget 2000-2001. I won't go through all the detail now because that would probably exceed even the generous terms of relevance that we've set this evening. But I do want to make the point that what's proposed there is that they're going to operate another operating room at the Peter Lougheed centre. They're going to convert a second operating room at the Foothills medical centre.

But you know what this puts me in mind of? When Mr. Dinning was being interviewed in the early days, when we had the private health policy, before we'd seen the bill, I remember Mr. Dinning being asked by reporters: "So you've got this $1 billion budget. How much of it could potentially go out in terms of being spent on these private facilities?" He suggested: well, it might affect like 3 percent of our budget. Three percent. What astute reporters asked Mr. Dinning was: if it's only going to impact 3 percent of your budget, how is it going to make a significant impact in the wait lists, which are chronic and so serious in the city of Calgary, in the Calgary region? No compelling answer. No complete answer.

I see my friend from Calgary-Cross is shuffling her notes. I'm hoping she's going to get up and she's going to maybe have some answers on some of these things, or there may be some other Calgary members who have better information than I do. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. I'm doing what you asked us not to. I'm going to focus back on you. I think that's the question. And I'm not going to be looking across either because I just get baited too darn easily.

We've got this problem in the Calgary region, and as a Calgary MLA I'm asking: why wouldn't we go for an amendment like this to make it absolutely clear that we don't need what the government is offering? If, in fact, they want to regulate clinics, which was the original rationale for the bill, then they should embrace this subamendment.

Now, the other comment I wanted to make. It's interesting. We heard a long discussion, page 1043 in Hansard, from the Minister of Learning, who reminded us that he is a physician, so I was interested in what he had to say. I had occasion to look at a speech that that minister had delivered. This was a speech that had been delivered when he was the chair of the standing policy committee on health care restructuring to an insight conference in Calgary on March 11, 1996. I was wondering what he'd had to say about this notion that we see subsumed in amendment A1, section A, in March of 1996. He wouldn't have seen the bill. He wouldn't have seen the subamendment, but he was talking about the notion of overnight stays and so on.

The minister in that speech is making fairly inconsistent points. He starts off by talking about: "We need to develop more consistent criteria for what health services are collectively provided through the public purse." He goes on to talk about:

We often wonder why the federal government and the press focus so much attention on a handful of private clinics in Alberta rather than focusing on the real reform efforts in Alberta.

Well, doesn't that capture it, Mr. Chairman?

11:30

The provincial government is focusing this huge amount of energy and effort on some potential overnight clinics that are not going to make a significant difference, according to Mr. Dinning, the chair of the Calgary regional health authority, because it's a tiny, tiny sliver of the budget of the Calgary region. They're not going to make a big impact there, and it seems to me the Minister of Learning – well, I can't characterize the way he presented his speech because somebody could turn around and accuse me of the same thing. When the minister talked about the merits and the advantages of Bill 11 and why he was opposed to the subamendment, what he was doing was exactly what he accused the federal government of doing on March 11, 1996: we see the government focusing "so much attention on a handful of private clinics in Alberta rather than focusing on the real reform efforts."

You see, what I don't understand is how it can be that the National Forum on Health, that was a federal initiative with leadership from Dr. Moe Watanabe and from Dr. Tom Noseworthy – we have some tremendous experts in this province in the area of health care reform. They have done outstanding work. They did outstanding work for the National Forum on Health. They came out with a report that identified the need in terms of better health information systems.

What did we do in Alberta? We brought in Bill 40. The government's idea of health information was a skewed and distorted version of what was required. We saw recommendations in terms of home care. Mr. Chairman, what I'm attempting to address is the commentary that is available in Hansard, pages 1043 and 1044, when the Minister of Learning was speaking. Having staked out a position, he can't then hide – and I know he wouldn't want to hide – behind some argument of relevance when those who come back challenge his arguments. The point I'm making is that the Minister of Learning had made the very argument which those of us now opposing the subamendment would use. In that same speech by the Minister of Learning, he said:

Canadians deserve a serious discussion of this issue and not political posturing by anyone. Sloganeering has populated the health debate for too long. I hope that this conference can allow for some open debate and does not descend into silly ideological posturing.

Well, you know, if there's anything about the bill that we're being sold, this is ideological posturing, the very thing our Minister of Learning cautioned us against in 1996 about the government's not heeding that advice and then going helter-skelter down this very dangerous road.

The other observation I wanted to make in speaking to the amendment. I've got some more questions about the operating budget for the Calgary regional health authority, but I'll come back to that tomorrow.

The other point I was going to make is this. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek – I pay particular interest to what my Calgary colleagues say in the House – raised some issues when she was speaking to the subamendment that require refutation. The first one is that she used inaccurate figures about the federal government contribution to health care. She talked about it being 13 percent. The reality is that the federal portion of health care spending in Alberta is in excess of 30 percent. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek may be accepting the propaganda her government puts out, but if you look at the numbers and look at the information put out by the Institute of Health Information, a reputable independent organization that has no particular axe to grind, those things have all been identified.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Gaming is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I feel compelled to rise on a point of order under Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). The numbers quoted by this member and the numbers quoted accurately by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek are evidently in dispute. By declaring that those numbers are false, I think the member is clearly out of line. If he can acknowledge that those figures are in dispute or that his figures are bigger than her figures, that would be acceptable, but to say categorically that these figures are wrong I think is a false assertion on the member's part and should be stated as such.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the point of order.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I hadn't heard a point of order, Mr. Chairman, so I was going to carry on with my debate.

THE CHAIRMAN: The member said 23(h), (i), and (j) and proceeded to refer primarily to what I presume is (i).

MR. DICKSON: Well, in fact the Minister of Gaming argues against himself. Mr. Chairman, he actually had me a little worried when he threw out the citation, and I must admit I caught my breath for a moment. But then what he pointed out is that there's a serious disagreement on the facts, and serious disagreement on the facts is what debate is all about. I'm glad he acknowledges that the figures the government propounds and promotes and publicizes are contested, are disputed, are not accepted. It's a really important myth to put to rest, and I thank the Minister of Gaming for clarifying the fact that some of the information that that $8 million budget in the Public Affairs Bureau is distributing . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you. I think we've heard quite enough from both sides on this point of order.

Firstly, 23(h) says: "makes allegations against another member." I didn't hear that in what he was saying, other than that the figures used were inaccurate, which is a debatable point. The second one, (i), is: "imputes false or unavowed motives." I didn't hear any motives being referred to in the speech, but there was certainly the assertion that the figures were in fact false or unreliable or whatever. [interjection] Whoa, hon. minister, if the chair is speaking, it's bad form.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Chairman, I feel compelled to apologize for my outburst from my chair, and it was only at the anger of . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: No, no, no. Thank you for the apology.

Hon. members, the third point of order was: "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." Obviously, there was something, whether it was abusive or insulting but certainly language that somehow struck a chord in the hon. minister. I think at best it's a point of clarification.

I would ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to continue.

Debate Continued

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the intervention from the Minister of Gaming, because what it allows us to do is recognize that the entire basis of Bill 11 is built on a series of faulty assumptions, inaccurate information, and in fact when that Public Affairs Bureau with its $8 million budget rolls out the ads and the radio announcements and the myriad kinds of publications they have with their inexhaustible reserves and resources, Albertans are understanding that a lot of that information is just plain wrong, just as they're understanding that the bill is just plain wrong. They remind us of that every day in our e-mails.

You know, the people in Calgary-Varsity that I get a chance to talk to from time to time have seen through the government PR campaign. These are not stupid people, Mr. Chairman. Now, I was going to say there were two exceptions, but no, that's fine.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Due to the hour – it's a quarter to 12 – I'm just going to make a few very brief comments in regard to the amendment that's on the floor. The reason I've chosen to make these comments is that the Member for Edmonton-Norwood in her debate earlier this evening said she had a very difficult time in connecting the dots. In fact, in that debate she highlighted and commented on the earlier debate I'd made in the House, and still she as unable to connect the dots, so I think we have a responsibility to assist one another in the Legislature with understanding. Having said that, I'd like to just offer further clarification on what emergency surgery is, what urgent surgery is, and what elective surgery is and how that relates to this amendment.

This is my understanding, Mr. Chairman. It's not been given to me by medical personnel. This is completely my understanding of what these surgeries involve. Emergency surgery is when surgery is done within 24 hours in a public hospital, and there are several classifications under emergency surgery which are universally used by the operating room staff in Calgary. This list, I must emphasize, is prioritized by the OR staff. There are six elements to this list. E0: to my understanding would be that it would be very, very high risk, very high need, and an example of that would be gunshot wounds coming into emergency. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood would understand, given her background as a police officer, how high risk that surgery is. The second is E1, surgeries that are necessary to be done within an hour. Third, E2: an example for an E2 emergency surgery would be open fractures. An E6, which is a point 4, Mr. Chairman . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: If we could just maintain that silence for the next few minutes so we can hear the rest of Calgary-Cross's speech, that would be helpful.

Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Point 4 in the classification is what we consider to be an E6 surgery, which is done within six hours. An example of that would be an appendectomy, which of course can be upgraded to an E2. An example of an E12 surgery would be if somebody came in with kidney stones. An example of an E24 would be fractured hips. What I'm trying to emphasize for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood is that emergency surgery occurs in a public hospital, and it occurs within 24 hours.

Now, the second classification I discussed earlier in the Legislature is called urgent surgery, and there are two classifications to urgent surgery. The first is when the patient is already in hospital and the surgery is necessary and required within three days. The second classification of urgent surgery is that the patient is outside of hospital and surgery is necessary within two weeks. As I said, Mr. Chairman, this is simply my understanding of emergency and urgent surgery that I'm explaining.

Then we come to elective surgery, Mr. Chairman, which currently can be done in a public hospital or it can be done in a private surgical clinic. This is really important for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood to understand: the priority list and facility for elective surgery is determined by your physician. It's not determined by the OR staff in the public facility. The College of Physicians and Surgeons, which is a public licensing body . . . [interjections]

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, you may disagree about what one nurse thinks and another one thinks, but right now we're listening to the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross if you could only remember to save your comments for later.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know we've discussed this in the Legislature before, and many members have stated it over and over again, but we'll restate it once again: it is the council of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, which is a public licensing body – and members are welcome to attend the meetings because they are public – that has determined the list of elective surgery that can be performed in a nonhospital medical clinic. As we said earlier, that list can be quite extensive. There are specific types of surgical services, and they are very appropriate for currently operating surgical facilities.

I can tell the hon. member that I can't change the facts. The facts are here. They've been filed in the Legislature. They have been determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. There are over 150 minor procedures being performed. They are being performed in 52 surgical clinics in Alberta. Quite frankly, as has often been stated as well, there really aren't government regulations at this point in time for those clinics, which is why this bill is before us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, also in Calgary we have approximately 28 operating rooms – there may be a couple more than 28, but I think it's about 28 operating rooms – outside of hospital which perform minor surgery that was determined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. I want to go back to: they do not do emergency or urgent surgery; they do elective surgery. Now, the minor surgery that you have in that clinic can still require a general anesthetic, an intravenous, an intramuscular type of pain sedation.

I'm also hoping that in assisting the hon. member to connect the dots – I know that in her debate she said she believed that even if you have your surgery in the late afternoon and your surgery requires a general anesthetic, you should get up and go home. She also believes that if you have a minor complication from your surgery where you don't believe you should go home – for example, if you have nausea or dizziness following your general anesthetic or pain requiring a bit more sedation – you should then get up and go to the hospital.

Well, I happen to disagree, Mr. Chairman. I continue to believe that you should be allowed to stay in a surgical clinic following minor surgery for as long as it takes you to recover. I can also tell you this: on Friday I met with a very experienced OR nurse that I have a great deal of respect for. It was in the hospital, and it was at the OR. I went and just had coffee and met with her about the bill. She did say to me: "Yvonne, you know that when a patient comes in for surgery, it can take place at any time in that 12-hour window. It can take place at the end of the 12-hour window, and you know this. Sometimes all that patient really needs is to stay a little longer and to sleep before they go home." Those are her words, and I agree with her as well on that point.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I think it's really important for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood to get the letter that was filed in this Legislature earlier today. It's the letter from the president of the AMA, Dr. David Bond. If she would refer to the second page of the letter, it's the third point. I happen to agree with Dr. Bond when he makes this statement. It's a very important statement. It says:

Regarding overnight stays in private facilities, the AMA's focus is assuring that quality care will be delivered in the appropriate place by the appropriate caregiver, regardless of when or for what hours the care is received.

They couldn't say it any more clearly than that.

Having said that, I would like to say that if the hon. member continues to not connect the dots, I'd be more than willing to meet with her privately or hear her debate this once again in the Assembly.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise and report progress.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

Speaker's Ruling Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Before calling on the hon. member, I'd just like to make a brief comment with respect to Presenting Petitions. When we have Reading and Receiving Petitions, that is actually when the petition is read. Standing Order 82(2) indicates that there should be brevity in terms of presenting the petition, so it's not required that when presenting the petition, it actually be read. Now is the time at which it will be read.

Anniversary of Taber High School Shooting

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 28, 1999, two students on their way to class at Taber's W.R. Myers high school were shot. One of these students, 17-year-old Jason Lang, died. In the tumultuous days that followed this tragedy, Albertans watched the television coverage and read the stories in the newspaper. We saw headlines like Terror in Taber, and we saw the images: students consoling one another, flowers and mementos stacked around the walls of the school. There were extraordinarily moving and often disturbing scenes set against the familiar backdrop of small-town Alberta. This tragedy shook our province. We were disturbed and deeply saddened by it.

Today, almost a year later, we are still trying to understand and come to terms with what happened that day. As we near the one-year mark since the shootings, I know a lot of Albertans are looking back and revisiting this tragedy. Many are still mourning the loss of Jason. April 28 is not going to be an easy day, but I think we owe it to ourselves and to Jason's memory to approach it in a spirit of hope and understanding. The past year has after all been a time of profound healing and learning. Albertans have really come together. They've rallied around the people of Taber. Their hearts and prayers have been with Jason's family and friends. The people of this province have resolved to make something positive grow from this tragedy.

Over the course of the past year parents, students, teachers, social workers, law enforcement professionals, and other concerned Albertans have sat down with one another to talk openly and tackle the difficult issues surrounding school safety. Jason's father, the Reverend Dale Lang, has been instrumental in these efforts, and I applaud him for his courage and dedication. Together, I believe, Albertans are making some very valuable changes.

We all have a role to play in ensuring that our province's schools and communities are safe and caring places. On April 28 I would encourage Albertans to take a few moments to think about their individual roles and how we can come together with our neighbours from across the province to improve the quality of life for all of us, especially our children.

As Minister of Learning, a parent, and a citizen of this province I am personally committed to doing my part to continue to build this great province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This month marks the anniversary of two high school tragedies. Today we mourn with our neighbours to the south the loss of life at Columbine high school, and next week we will turn to our own grief at the loss of Jason Lang in a shooting at Taber's W.R. Myers high school.

Since those young lives were lost, we have asked ourselves over and over again: how could it have been prevented? We have grieved, we have prayed, we have tried to take precautions against a recurrence, and we have suffered the frustration such untimely deaths leave.

Albertans will pause on April 28. They will interrupt their everyday tasks, their telephone conversations, their meetings, and their family dinners to remember Jason and the Lang family. The remembrance will be difficult. We have come to know that Jason was a fun-loving, talented, compassionate, and committed young man. The remembrance will be difficult. We have had shaken our belief that the most trusted of our institutions, our schools, are always a safe haven for our children. The remembrance will be difficult.

In the next few months many in this Assembly will be looking into young faces much like Jason's as we speak at graduating classes across the province. Let us tell them in those speeches and everywhere we meet those young Jasons how much they are loved, how much they are valued, and how much it hurts when we lose one of them.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you. I'd like to say welcome to the Legislature to 56 constituents from the Whitecourt area. There are 46 students from St. Joseph Catholic school accompanied by 10 adults, two teachers and parents. Awhile ago I met with the students, and we had a good discussion over a long, long time. I think it was two hours. They asked me a number of questions about the Legislature, and a question they were most concerned about was: how does question period work? I went on to explain. In the end I had to tell them the truth. I said to the students: if you acted the same way as some of our members act in this House, you would be sent to the principal's office very quickly. Mr. Speaker, we look to you as the principal of this Assembly to keep law and order. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly five members of the organ and tissue donation awareness committee. I would ask them to rise as I introduce them. First, Kathy Tachynski – she is the chair of the committee and also happens to be my niece – Karen Ashby, Howard Guse, Gurpreet Dulai, and Marla Rohde. They're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask everyone to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

In my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a Rotary International exchange student from Belgium, Pierre Brennecke. DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of introducing to you and to all members of the Assembly a very special guest today, Mimi Williams. She's a social activist and a longtime New Democrat. She's a single mother of two sons. The younger of the two, Alex, celebrates his sixth birthday today. Mimi Williams is also a graduate student at the university. I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two people who are joining us today who have worked very hard to preserve the wildlife and the landscape in this province and work on behalf of the people of the province in doing that. They are Dave Poulton, the conservation director of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society for the Calgary and Banff chapter, and Dieter Gade, the wilderness campaigner, who is located in Bragg Creek, Alberta. They are in the members' gallery. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Would Syrena please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly someone described as a great friend of the PC youth of Alberta, a constituent and a resident of Sherwood Park, Mr. Jack Nickerson, who is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that he stand and receive the accolades of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege today to introduce to you and through you a lady who has been working in my communications department for the past two months. She is a student at Mount Royal College. Her name is Anika Woycechowsky. She's been a great help to us. I would ask Anika to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Brevity in Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before recognizing the first speaker today, I would like to make a brief comment. Some time ago I provided to the three House leaders in this Assembly a book called House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and I would like to quote some lines from a certain text in that book. They amplify what I've said in this House on numerous occasions.

There is a statement made by the then Speaker of the day, Speaker Bosley, who said:

Mr. Speaker Jerome, in his statement 11 years ago, put his view with regard to the first principle of brevity so well that I would merely quote it:

There can be no doubt that the greatest enemy of the Question Period is the Member who offends this most important principle. In putting the original question on any subject, a Member may require an explanatory remark, but there is no reason for such a preamble to exceed one, carefully drawn sentence.

It is my proposal to ask all Hon. Members to pay close attention to this admonition and to bring them to order if they fail to do so. It bears repeating that the long preamble or long question takes an unfair share of the time, and invariably, in provoking the same kind of response, only compounds the difficulty.

And I further quote:

I agree with these comments and would add that such comments obviously also apply to answers by Ministers. I would also endorse Mr. Speaker Jerome's view that supplementary questions should need no preambles; they should flow from the Minister's response and be put in precise and direct terms without any prior statement or argument. It is the Chair's view that it equally follows from the first principle, that time is scarce, that Members should seek to avoid merely repeating questions that have already been asked. I do not mean that other questions on the same subject should not be asked – as apparently I have been interpreted – just that subsequent questions should be other than ones already asked.

For similar reasons it has always been a fundamental rule of questioning Ministers that the subject matter of the question must fall within the collective responsibility of the Government or the individual responsibility of one of its Ministers. This is the only basis upon which Ministers can be expected to answer questions.

I further quote:

These two statements, along with some of the guidelines adopted by the House [of Commons] in 1965, are used today by the Speaker as a reference in managing the Question Period. In summary, when recognized in Question Period, a Member should

- ask a question;
- be brief;
- seek information;
- ask a question that is within the administrative responsibility of the government or the individual Minister addressed.

Furthermore, a question should not - be a statement, representation, argument or an expression of opinion.

Yesterday in dealing with the question period, at the conclusion of the question period when there were points of order and points of privilege, the chair further indicated that brevity would be the key of the order in terms of the question and brevity would be the key of the order in terms of the response. It appears that a great number of members heard what the chair said yesterday. Today is the longest list of questions that I have been advised hon. members would like to ask since I have been in the chair of the Speaker.

It's my intent to see if we can move this question period on the basis of a brief question and a brief response so that I can actually work in the 19 additional private members, in addition to the two leaders of the two parties, who have indicated that they want to ask a question today.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 11 Protests

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Fifty years ago Supreme Court Justice J. Abbott said that "the right of free expression of opinion and of criticism" were "essential to the working of a parliamentary democracy." Given that nearly 1,500 seniors, children, moms and dads, and health workers peacefully gathered at the Legislature Building and McDougall Centre in Calgary last night, will the Premier explain his rather inflammatory labeling of these citizens of Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I've always said that protest is the essence of democracy, and I mean that. I deny no one's right to protest. I've been in this business now for 20 years, and I've undergone my share of protests when I was Minister of Environment and certainly as Premier, when I was the mayor of Calgary. I know what protests are all about. I certainly don't deny anyone the right to protest.

What offends me and I think what offends Albertans is misbehavior that destroys property and misbehavior that results in one case in an assault on one of our security people, the kind of misbehavior that saw a handle being ripped off the Legislature door. It's that kind of behaviour that I object to and that I believe Albertans object to.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier join me and speak to the citizens who are peacefully assembling at our Legislature Building?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the citizens are being heard, and although the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition characterizes all of those who are protesting as peaceful people, seniors and so on, I have been advised by our security people that within the crowd there are people who have the potential of being violent. I don't want to expose myself to that, and I don't think the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition would like me to be exposed to that.

MRS. MacBETH: Given that Premier Hamm of Nova Scotia had the respect yesterday to go out and face those citizens of Nova Scotia who were concerned about education cuts in their province, will this Premier show the same respect to our citizens?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I explained before, I have been in this business for 20 years, and I've been through a lot of protests. Some of those experiences have not been very pleasant. I'll recall – and I'm sure the leader of the Liberal opposition will know of this because she was in cabinet at the time – when I went to a protest rally in Calgary then concerned over some environmental moves that were being made, especially with respect to the Alberta-Pacific pulp mill, which was supported by this government at that particular time, having dead fish and dirty water thrown at me and on Christmas Eve having a coffin put on my front lawn and people chanting and yelling outside my house.

Mr. Speaker, I respect people's right to protest, but I don't any longer do protests.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are still waiting for the Premier to present one shred of evidence that shows that private hospitals or approved surgical facilities achieve anything other than higher costs and longer wait lists. The latest annual report of the Calgary regional health authority makes reference to a number of studies comparing the costs of acute care facilities and private facilities. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier table any studies that might be helpful to Albertans in understanding the dynamics and the evidence on this very important issue?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will allude to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, but I'm sure there are plenty of studies that do demonstrate that surgical clinics – and they are nothing new at all. They've been operating for years. As a matter of fact, all ophthalmology services in Calgary are operated by surgical clinics under contract to the regional health authority.

Now, I understand that some 6,000 procedures are allowed in Calgary per year. It only stands to reason, Mr. Speaker, that if you were to put all those procedures back into full-scale hospitals, it would put tremendous strain and pressure back on the system, and what we want to do through our policy is to provide options where people can get faster access to the surgical procedure that is required and take pressure off the system so the system can accommodate more complex and more serious procedures.

MRS. MacBETH: Will the Premier confirm that the Calgary regional health authority study shows that there is no evidence to support the Premier's claim to Albertans that the private facilities are less costly than public hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that may or may not be true, but relative to future contracting and what is proposed in putting fences around the operation of these, they will have to show beyond a doubt that there will be cost-effectiveness and that it will reduce waiting lists.

I would hope that the evidence is in the law that will make those requirements. Right now there are no requirements for surgical clinics that operate in this province and have been operating for years and years. There are no rules or regulations relative to the operation of these clinics relative to contracting with RHAs. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, recognition was given to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. The floor then was given to the hon. Premier to respond, so there's no need for interjections from other people to incite debate in this Assembly.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the Calgary regional health authority receives 850 million taxpayer dollars, will this Premier instruct the authority to release all of their studies and evidence on the cost-benefit analysis of contracting out surgical services?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that they have good reason now to contract a number of surgical services. I would like to point out – and this is not speaking to the bill – that right now there are I believe 52 or maybe 53 surgical facilities operating in the province of Alberta. All of those surgical facilities have contracts with various RHAs. I understand that they perform some 152 different minor surgeries, and I understand about 20,000 procedures are done per year.

MRS. SOETAERT: Cost-benefit analysis.

MR. KLEIN: Well, the analysis – and you don't need to be a brain surgeon . . .

THE SPEAKER: Please, there is a response there to an interjection from the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and if it happens one more time, I'm going to invite her to take an early Easter break.

Queen Elizabeth II Hospital

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, three operating theatres sit empty and idle at the Queen Elizabeth II hospital in Grande Prairie because of staff shortages, yet another symptom of this government's mismanagement of public health care. As of March 1 of this year almost 1,100 patients are on the wait list of the QE II, a 100 percent increase over this time two years ago. People in Grande Prairie don't want their tax dollars siphoned off to investor-owned surgical clinics; rather, they want the money used to open up the public operating rooms that are already there and waiting. And the debate goes on in Grande Prairie. My questions are to the Premier. Why is this government spending millions of taxpayers' dollars on advertising agencies and media consultants instead of using that money to open up operating theatres in the Grande Prairie QE II hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond to this issue, because indeed this is one of the issues we plan to address in our six-point plan, of which the policy relative to contracting out and putting rules and regulations around surgical clinics is one component.

Certainly there are problems relative to waiting lists, not only at QE II but in other hospitals. As a matter of fact, I'll take the leader of the Liberal opposition back to 1990, when she was the minister of health. This is what she said then, and she's alluding to heart surgery in this particular case: waiting lists for heart surgery are the price Albertans pay for a universal health care system, says health minister Nancy Betkowski.

She goes on to say: at times for certain procedures waiting lists are part of the universal system; Betkowski said solving the waiting list problem is not just a matter of pouring in more dollars; if you're going to allocate more resources, where are you going to find the resources?

Mr. Speaker, I simply put it back to her.

THE SPEAKER: We'll ask for a tabling of that document if it's not already been tabled.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier agree with his chairman of the Mistahia health region that the solution is to rent out the operating rooms already paid for by the taxpayers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness heard the question, so I'll let him answer.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think there are two points that need to be made with respect to this situation. First of all, in the budget recently passed by this Assembly we have provided very significant additional dollars to the Mistahia region specifically for expansion and improvement of secondary services at the Queen E hospital.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I will not elaborate here, but there is an issue of management and administration and scheduling and co-operation with respect to the physician component up there, and we have been providing assistance with respect to resolving those difficulties.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the situation, and we are directing resources towards it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, does this government, either the Premier or the minister of health, agree with its own appointed chairman who says that the solution to the Queen E II operating room problem is to rent public operating rooms out to the private sector?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in my previous answer I clearly indicated the action we are taking to resolve the difficulties facing the Queen E hospital. That is our answer. That is our approach. The chairman of the board may have expressed that particular view. It is not the view of the minister or, as far as I know, of the overall board collectively, and I've outlined the action that is being taken.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Opposition to Bill 11

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday evening over a thousand citizens of all ages and walks of life held a peaceful rally on the front steps of this Legislature. Over 400 citizens held a similar rally in Calgary in front of the McDougall Centre. All participants at the rally in Edmonton were peaceful and respectful of persons and property. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier please reciprocate and start listening to the heartfelt concerns of the citizens with respect?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we are listening to citizens. Yes, last night there was – I think the fellow was quoted in the paper today – a Conservative supporter who was out there, and he was out there because he was frustrated. His wife unfortunately had just been diagnosed with a very serious ailment, and in his mind she couldn't get timely treatment. That had nothing to do with the issue at hand, Bill 11. It had something to do with what we're trying to address through the other six points, and that is timely access for people with serious ailments to the full-scale institutions that we have today. That has something to do with business plans that call for the hiring of more nurses and more doctors and more equipment such as MRIs, and the fellow admitted that.

Those are the kinds of things where we would like to sit down with people like that and say: "Lookit; this has nothing to do with your concern over a particular bill. This has something to do with the long-term sustainability of health care." This has something to do also with the health ministers from across this country working with their federal counterpart to find a way to make sure the health care system is sustainable.

His concern had nothing to do with Bill 11, if I can mention that bill. It had something to do with his frustration with another component of the system.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier also listen to the Alberta Medical Association, the Alberta College of Family Physicians, Alberta's registered nurses, the Catholic Health Association, grassroots Conservatives, all of whom say no to the government's health privatization scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, we will listen to the AMA. As a matter of fact, I would point out that the AMA was reasonably pleased with the treatment of the amendments that they proposed. I have spoken to Dr. Bond, the president of the AMA, and I have said that we would pursue with the AMA concerns that they have that do not relate to Bill 11, concerns that relate to some of the underlying causes for strain on the system. How do we approach hiring more frontline staff, doctors and nurses and LPNs? How do we go about putting in place sustainable funding for capital costs? How do we address a multitude, a myriad of issues that pertain to the sustainability of health care?

I would be willing to talk to all of the associations that were mentioned about those particular issues, because we need their help. We need their positive input to help us deal with these issues that go far beyond the simple issue of putting rules and regulations around the contracting out of certain surgical procedures.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why does the Premier continue to insist that only he is right and that doctors, nurses, seniors, families, clergy, grassroots Tories, and hundreds of thousands of Alberta citizens are all wrong?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is not the case at all. That is not the case at all. If people have reasonable comment such as the AMA have on Bill 11, we will address those particular issues, and we have.

Bill 11 does not address some of those other issues, Mr. Speaker. Those are contained in the other five points of our plan. We would welcome the associations to which the hon. member alludes to sit down with our Minister of Health and Wellness, myself, our officials to find ways and design ways to address these issues.

Mr. Speaker, I guess when it comes to dealing with the issue that has caused so much controversy, my frustration comes again. Well, I have in my hand a document from the Liberal web site.

THE SPEAKER: With all respect, brevity please. Thank you very much. Let's move on.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Economic Outlook

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Premier. A Swiss-based institute for management released a study yesterday on the economic competitiveness of countries. The study notes Canada as slipping in its competitiveness, falling behind resurgent north European countries. Will the Premier tell us how Alberta's competitiveness through our fiscal policy of balanced budgets, debt pay-down, and low taxes is affected by Canada's competitiveness?

MR. KLEIN: Well, it's quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that if Canada is not competitive, it greatly diminishes the opportunity for Alberta to be competitive. It's not good news for Alberta that Canada's competitiveness is slipping. Many financial analysts have alluded to this. This has been cited as one of the causes for the brain drain. So it's not good news for any Canadian province or territory.

The member is correct that the institute for management ranked Canada 11th for competitiveness, down from 10th in the previous two years. Meanwhile countries like Ireland and Sweden have jumped ahead of us, and that is wrong.

We are trying to do the best we possibly can in this province to maintain within Confederation our competitive edge. I'm not just saying that, Mr. Speaker. We've got the proof to back it up. The Dominion Bond Rating Service has now upgraded our short-term debt credit rating to R-1. This shows that those in the business of measuring economic competitiveness recognize Alberta as a leader.

MR. DOERKSEN: Again to the Premier: can the Premier tell us how this rating measures up against other provinces?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, Alberta is given the highest rating mark of any jurisdiction in Canada, and it has pushed us to top spot ahead of Ontario and British Columbia. Now, I know that the Liberals don't like to hear that because it is good news. This is what the people who are not protesting like to hear. This is what the people like to hear, the people who have a tremendous amount of pride in our province and the people who are concerned about maintaining our economic sustainability and the tremendous prosperity that we have created in this province. That's what the majority of Albertans want to hear about.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, while Dominion is just one of several major rating agencies, can the Premier tell us where Alberta ranks with the other agencies as well?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, all the major bond-rating agencies have recognized our fiscal strength. Not only did the Dominion Bond Rating Service just upgrade us; Moody's has also put us on notice as a possible upgrade. In fact, they were in town, I understand from the Provincial Treasurer, just this week meeting with the Acting Provincial Treasurer and department officials.

As a matter of fact, I had the opportunity of listening to the Rutherford Show for a short while today, and a fellow by the name of Mr. MacBeth was on the radio praising not the Liberal Party but praising Alberta. As his company pointed out: another day in paradise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bill 11 Publicity

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, when the Premier says that Albertans like to hear good news, I think he's right, but I think Albertans also want accurate information on how their tax dollars are spent, and they want that information in a timely way. Yesterday the Official Opposition tabled an additional invoice, bringing the total cost of its campaign to protect medicare to $29,340.78. In the meanwhile, the Premier's $8 million Public Affairs Bureau and the gigantic Health and Wellness department continue to put out deliberate misinformation, claiming that the cost of the propaganda campaign of the government is only $1.2 million. Nobody believes that, Mr. Speaker. So my question to the hon. Premier would be this: will the Premier promise to release all of the invoices, all of the receipts, copies of all of the relevant contracts and to do that today so Albertans can find out precisely how much of their money, their tax dollars, is being spent to privatize health care in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that will all be compiled and reported in detail in the public accounts.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Calgary-Buffalo in that Albertans do indeed want honest information for their tax dollar, and that takes me back to the web site publication of the Official Opposition, where it says: Understanding Bill 11 The Private Hospital Act. That is wrong. That is misleading. That is fraudulent. There is no bill, no piece of legislation before this Legislature called the private hospital act, yet they deliberately go out and publish at taxpayers' expense Understanding Bill 11 The Private Hospital Act, a bill, a piece of legislation that simply does not exist. That is misinformation.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Somehow in the exchange it seems that there was a lot of yelling and bantering, and I distinctly looked at the eyes of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who was expressing something which I did not hear. Did you want me recognize you?

2:30

MR. SAPERS: No. I'd like question period to continue.

THE SPEAKER: Well, stand up. If you stand up, you can be recognized. If you don't want to stand up, you will not be recognized.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, given that my question must not have been clear to the Premier, will the Premier promise to release today copies of all the receipts, all the invoices, all the contracts representing the cost to Alberta taxpayers to spin, sell, promote the private health care agenda of this government?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have spent nothing on promoting what the hon. member alludes to as a private health care agenda. Yes, we have spent some money on distributing a bill relative to the protection of health care in Alberta, the Health Care Protection Act.

What is false, what is wrong, and what is misleading is this publication. I want to table five copies of this publication. It says: Understanding Bill 11 The Private Hospital Act. That is fraudulent. It is wrong. It is misleading. Not to my knowledge, not to the knowledge of anyone in this caucus is there any such bill called the private hospital act. They have used taxpayer's dollars – I don't know how much – to put out this deliberate, malicious, and absolutely false information. That is a misuse of taxpayers' dollars.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, when the hon. leader of the government was responding to that question, there was a very sharp interjection that the chair did hear from the hon. Minister of Gaming. The tradition in this House is that members do face the chair; they do not turn their backs to the chair. It seems that the reason for the provocation of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora perhaps a few minutes before was that the hon. Minister of Gaming in fact did turn his back to the chair and did utter something. That is totally inappropriate.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier can't seem to find anyone in his 128-person, $8 million Public Affairs Bureau to do the math, will he confirm that the estimate the Official Opposition put forward yesterday, which suggested that the cost of the taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign will likely exceed $2.2 million, is accurate?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there was no propaganda campaign. There was a mail-out of a document that had the contents of legislation in it. That was not propaganda. That was something that purports to become law. There is nothing more truthful and nothing more basic in a democratic society than a law. Moreover, there is nothing more fundamental and nothing more basic in a democratic society, where all Albertans have an opportunity to provide input into a law, reasonable input.

The only thing that is disgraceful and dishonest is this publication put out by the Liberals at taxpayers' expense that alludes to the private hospital act, an act that doesn't exist, an act that has never existed, an act that never will exist as long as this government is in power. So that is false, and it's misleading, and it's an absolute misuse of taxpayers' dollars.

THE SPEAKER: That series of questions, hon. members, took seven minutes. We're now behind schedule.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Liquor Sales

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Gaming. Please tell the Assembly if the AGLC review on exclusivity and inducement is complete, and if so, what are the results?

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me apologize for inadvertently turning my chair earlier and say that, yes, the AGLC, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, has completed its review related to exclusive sale of product and using cash to induce selling of alcoholic spirits. There's been a solution to the violation of the program brought forward by industry. Fines have been levied on the appropriate parties, and new regulations are prepared to go forward. I believe they're already in process.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. What effect will these changes have on consumers and small licensees?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, this new set of regulations will induce some market discipline. It'll induce regulatory discipline, which was asked for by industry, to industry. It will level the playing field so that all people involved in the sale of alcoholic spirits in Alberta will be able to compete on a level playing field. There will be no volume discounts. All sizes and types of licensees will be able to participate, and all regulations are directed towards consumer benefit.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell the Assembly any penalties or fines that have been assessed to licensees for action related to product exclusivity or inducements?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, all licensees who were involved in the activities were being reviewed by the board of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, which runs as a regulatory board, and they are prosecuted or subject to penalties under the act. They're within the purview of the commission. The process is to inform the violators. Then there's an appeal process. The board may hear the appeal, and then the fines and all the information are posted on the AGLC web site.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, by the way, both hon. members, that was just excellent in terms of brevity.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

MRS. SLOAN: On the eve of a federal government investigation into the inaccessibility of MRIs in Alberta, the province announces that they will purchase four new machines while many in the province remain underutilized because of cash shortages. My questions are to the Premier. Just how exactly, Mr. Premier, are you going to explain to the federal government how Alberta has allowed private, for-profit MRIs to proliferate while public MRI machines have remained underfunded and understaffed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's a matter of striking the right balance. If the hon. member thinks it's wrong to provide more MRIs for the public system, then stand up and say so. I mean, she seems to have a problem with this. If she thinks it's wrong and it's not the right thing to do, then stand up and say so.

Relative to the operation of MRIs generally, yes, when I alluded earlier to the overall problem of sustainability, not only of MRIs but any other component of the medical system, this has to be a national effort, and we would encourage and welcome the participation of Mr. Rock to find solutions. I know that in our six-point plan we will be allocating resources to bring into the stream as quickly as we possibly can the technicians that are required to operate those MRIs.

I'll have the hon. minister expand even further.

THE SPEAKER: We're going to keep going with our process of brevity as much as we can.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier explain what economic sense it makes to buy four new machines when the MRI at the Grey Nuns hospital in Mill Woods sits unutilized because there are no staff to operate it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you know, again it is so frustrating. [interjections] No. It is. The Liberal opposition seems to want to read only what they want to read, and they want to be negative on the points where they either don't know the information, haven't taken the time to research the information, or want to ignore the information.

I take the Liberal opposition and you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues in the House to an announcement that was made I believe it was in January, and I'm going to have the hon. minister supplement. It says, "To address the increasing demand for MRI technicians, Alberta Learning announced in January, an increase of 26 post-secondary spaces to train MRI technicians." Now, that was a public news release, and it amazes me that they wouldn't have the honesty, if they had read this, to allude to it.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will say that we are even going one step further in that our access fund for this coming year will be aimed solely at health professionals, with MRI technicians being right at the top of the list.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, isn't this situation just further evidence of this government's unrelenting pursuit to privatize health care services regardless of the delays in procedures for citizens in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, how could anyone, even with an imagination as wild as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's, construe that buying four MRIs for the public system is playing into the hands of the private operators? I mean, this is beyond comprehension. To explain exactly what we intend to do and how they'll be used, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Minister of Learning has indicated the commitment to add to the current complement of people being trained as MRI technicians.

Secondly, the four MRIs, plus those I've announced previously for the regional centres, will be in the public system, Mr. Speaker, and the end result will be a per capita capacity in this province for MRI scans which ranks right at the top of the provinces in this country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Workers' Compensation Board

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few months ago the Minister of Human Resources and Employment ordered an MLA WCB service review as well as a WCB appeal system review. As a member of the MLA WCB service review committee, I'm finding that many injured workers still have no knowledge that the process is taking place and, in fact, is well under way. So my question today is for the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Can the minister explain his communication plan and how he is informing the WCB injured workers that these reviews are in fact taking place and that their input is required in order to effect meaningful change?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I think we need to make sure that all members realize and appreciate that the main service review is under way by the WCB. Now, what we've done with the MLA input committee is provided another way and perhaps a more streamlined way for members of this House to be able to provide input, then, to that main service committee. So to that end we have been utilizing that in our correspondence, and of course a press release was released yesterday.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that yesterday's press release announcing the extension to May 15 for submissions has, to my understanding, not been published in any daily newspapers, will the minister ensure that injured workers are aware of the process by placing advertisements in the daily or weekly newspapers?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, we did provide a press release yesterday, and yes, it's true that there's another issue here in the House that is perhaps using up all of the ink on the part of the media. I did not see any communication on our press release in today's clippings, so it puts me in the situation of indicating to the hon. member that we're going to have to go back and take a look at what it is that we are doing. Certainly the Workers' Compensation Board itself has been advertising the times and places where injured workers can have the input. I have not provided the MLA input committee with a budget for any advertising at this particular point in time and am not currently contemplating doing that.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the hon. minister. Given that he's indicated that there won't be any further advertising at this point due to budgetary constraints, will he then agree to take other steps to ensure that injured workers are informed that the reviews are ongoing?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, we will have to do that, Mr. Speaker, because it's very, very important, when you set up a review mechanism, that in fact you do get the input. Part of the rationale behind not only convincing the Workers' Compensation Board to do their system review but in putting together the MLA input committee was that I believe MLAs are in a great position to know and understand what is going on inside of their constituencies. So I would put out the call right now that if any MLA here in the Assembly feels there is inadequate information that is being provided to their constituents, they join me in using some of their budgets to get that information out.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Medical Laboratories

MR. SAPERS: On Tuesday in the Legislature I quoted from the government's document entitled Laboratory Restructuring Proposal, which states in part:

To ensure that provincially funded facilities do not have a price advantage over investor owned laboratories, regional boards will no longer have access to provincial funding for capital equipment.

My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that this policy is the reason that public laboratory facilities in Calgary are underfunded and lineups and wait times are as long as they've ever been for simple tests?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true, and quite frankly I simply don't have the information on that situation. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness does.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the laboratory system in Calgary, as I think you're referring to, is a very effective one. It's a partnership between the regional health authority and the private firm that is involved in providing the service. They have very good equipment and very good procedures. They have been improving their turnaround times in terms of providing test results. Yes, I am aware that at the sites, with respect to gathering material or specimens for testing, there have been lineups at certain peak periods. People go to these locations, which are often close to a shopping centre and so on, and concentrate at certain times of the day, but the system seems to be working very effectively in Calgary.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Premier, is the government's underfunding of public labs a result of a deliberate plan to create a favourable market condition for the private sector?

MR. KLEIN: I take exception to that, Mr. Speaker, because we have increased funding by 40 percent over the past four or five years. We're planning to put about another billion dollars in the health care system, and that will take our spending to well over $5 billion annually, over $15 million a day. For every dollar that was taken out of the health care system, we put $3 back in.

Relative to the specific situation as it concerns, I believe, diagnostic services in Calgary, I'll have the hon. minister reply.

MR. JONSON: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, what the members across the way – and I could expect this type of position being taken by the leader of the NDs. The fact of the matter is that our health care system has benefited from having the private sector involved in laboratory and diagnostic testing for years and years and years. That has been perfectly legal and appropriate according to the Canada Health Act. It exists in other provinces, and this is a very effective part of our health care system. It's a mixture of public and private, and private has been there for a long time, stayed there, complied with the Canada Health Act, and continues to contribute to the health and well-being of Albertans.

MR. SAPERS: Given the population growth in Calgary and the long lineups that Calgarians are experiencing today, will the Minister of Health and Wellness please advise the House what specific steps he has taken that will alleviate those problems in the immediate future?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there have been a very few number of times that it has been brought to my attention that there has been a lineup which has caused some concern. However, it was the regional health authority that contacted me indicating that they recognized they had this particular problem on a particular day and advised on what they were doing in terms of rescheduling and opening new capacity.

They do respond to the difficulties they face in terms of these gathering centres, Mr. Speaker, but overall my information is that the waiting times for tests on average are shorter than they used to be when they had the previous system and approach.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Workplace Health and Safety

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary-Fort constituency covers a large industrial area in Calgary. Recently there have been quite a number of industrial accidents, resulting in fatalities, injuries, and property damage. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Could the minister update the Assembly on the statistics of industrial accidents in Alberta?

MR. DUNFORD: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the member for the question. It certainly is timely in the sense that next week we will be observing the Day of Mourning for Injured Workers, and this might be an opportunity, then, for me to just stand in my place and to express our sincere sympathies to all of the families that have been affected by workplace injury or incident over the past period of time.

I also have to say, Mr. Speaker, that we don't have all of the statistics for the year we're now in. We have not started out very well, I have to admit to you, but I guess we'll just have to see what develops through the rest of the year.

We do have preliminary numbers, though, in terms of injury in the workplace in Alberta. As a matter of fact, in the year 1999 we did drop to an all-time low of 3.2 lost-time claims per thousand person-years worked, and of course I want to thank all of the previous ministers that were in place at that time for their care during their particular watch. I would indicate that in Alberta we're on a downward trend, and of course maintaining that trend will be a priority of this ministry.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplement is also to the same minister. What is the enforcement program to monitor the safety compliance of companies and to penalize those who fail to protect workers?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that I advise all members of the House that in workplace health and safety we think it is very prudent and very wise to be educators rather than enforcers, and I believe that I've tried to bring that message through to this Assembly on more than one previous occasion. Having said that, of course we have workplace health and safety officers that do investigate every incident and respond to any question or any concern we get regarding workplace health and safety.

When we see a trend start to develop, then we would assess the particular industry or company, and if we feel there's a problem there, then of course we will target that industry or that specific company for more frequent inspections. I must say that we also ask for and direct our workplace health and safety officers to do so-called cold calls and do unannounced inspections of work sites, and if we have willful noncompliance, we will enforce the act.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is also to the same minister. What is the proactive preventive program, and how is it carried out?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we're extremely proud in Alberta of the partnerships program that we have in health and safety. This works very, very effectively. It's based on a co-operative joint approach, and this involves workers, involves the companies and the industry associations. We strive to achieve practical solutions to work site safety issues. We believe in this program and will continue to support it.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before the Clerk rises and calls Members' Statements, please join with me in acknowledging that today, April 20, is the anniversary of the Member for Calgary-McCall, who was first elected to the Legislative Assembly in a by-election on April 20, 1995.

Following Members' Statements, I'll also be making a statement on the question of privilege that was dealt with yesterday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week takes place next week, April 23 to April 30, 2000. Organ and tissue donations save lives, restore health, and give hope for new beginnings. Unfortunately, the need for organs and tissues for transplantation is far greater than the available supply. Last year in Alberta 22 people died waiting for donations.

Everyone should consider themselves a potential organ and tissue donor regardless of their age. It is the health of the individual, not the age, which is the deciding factor. One critical reason why waiting lists are so long is that the family does not know the wishes of the potential organ donor. This is critical, because in Alberta it is the family that makes the final decision regarding donations. Less than 50 percent of Canadians are aware of their family members' wishes regarding donation.

The green ribbon you were all given today symbolizes the promise of lives that may be saved or improved through organ and tissue donation. The Canadian Transplant Association, the Kidney Foundation of Canada, and the HOPE program have been promoting public awareness of donation through the distribution of green ribbons across Canada since 1997. We hope all Albertans will wear it proudly, especially during donor awareness week, April 23 to 30, and talk to their families to show their support for the greatest gift of all, the gift of life.

Remember, transplants work. Between 80 and 95 percent of recipients are doing great one year after surgery. Please make a lifesaving decision for the nearly 3,000 Canadians waiting. The five members of the organ and tissue awareness committee I introduced earlier today are transplant recipients, and their quality of life has improved immensely.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Bill 11 Protests

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with pride that I rise today to note that the citizens' democratic spirit is fully alive once again in Alberta. Where the people of this province once felt they had no voice because the government didn't listen, we now see a citizenry galvanized, energized, and determined to make their voices heard. The recent protest rallies have been truly breathtaking events of democratic, peaceful power.

One significant result of recent protests is that it reaffirms overwhelming opposition to Bill 11. This is a fact that has long been known to us. Poll after poll has shown overwhelming opposition to Bill 11. However, the larger and infinitely more important point, Mr. Speaker, is that people of this province are feeling empowered. They are seizing their inherent rights to free speech, free assembly, and political participation. Albertans have rediscovered and recovered their voice, and they know in their hearts that with persistence, passion, and clarity they will be heard and they will carry the day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

3:00 Anniversary of Taber High School Shooting

MR. HIERATH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning and the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods have already mentioned that almost a year ago a young teen walked into W.R. Myers high school armed with a .22-calibre rifle and opened fire. In the aftermath 17-year-old Jason Lang would die of his wounds, and another student was seriously injured, a tragedy that touched all Albertans.

April 28 marks the first anniversary of this tragedy. W.R. Myers high school held a memorial service on Tuesday, April 18, with a theme of Hope, Remember, and Challenge. W.R. Myers students, teachers, and parents gathered to sing songs, pray, and listen to a speech from Reverend Dale Lang, Jason's father. The service was held 10 days early because the anniversary falls during the school's Easter break. The town of Taber will also be holding a memorial prayer evening service on April 27.

Mr. Speaker, it has been almost a year of healing for the community of Taber, especially those whose lives have been personally affected by this tragedy. I would like to recognize the personal commitment and contributions of certain individuals that were first at the scene and have continued to provide support and counseling for the staff and students of W.R. Myers. Their efforts have reassured the parents and students that their school is a safe place to be. A special thanks to Reverend Dale Lang for his personal contribution and for demonstrating the power of forgiveness.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 7(5), for those of us who cannot wait to get back into the Assembly on May 1, I wonder if the Government House Leader would tell us what treats he has in store for us for the week of May 1 to May 4.

Thank you.

MR. HANCOCK: There likely being few in that category, maybe I should just send you a note.

However, on Monday, May 1, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading we would anticipate discussion on bills 13, 14, and 15 to the extent that we don't complete that today; in Committee of the Whole, bills 3, 7, and 11; and as per the Order Paper. Monday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, subject to completion of the earlier agenda, second reading on bills 16, 17, 18, and 19; Committee of the Whole on Bill 11; and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, May 2, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, bills 22 and 23, and, time permitting, Committee of the Whole on Bill 11, and as per the Order Paper. Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, bills 22, 23, and 20; Committee of the Whole on Bill 11; and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, May 3, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of the Whole, bills 10, 13, 14, 15, 11; and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 4, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, bills 20 and 23; for third reading, Bill 5; and thereafter as per the Order Paper.

Privilege MLA Access to the Chamber

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, yesterday, April 19, the leader of the third party rose on a purported question of privilege under Standing Order 15. The chair would note that proper notice of this matter was provided in accordance with Standing Order 15(2). The purported question of privilege concerns the ability of the member to access the Legislature Building on the evening of Tuesday, April 18.

At the outset the chair would like to state that there is no doubt that Tuesday night was an out-of-the-ordinary evening for the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. The chair would also like to emphasize to all members that obstructing a member from attending the House is a very grave matter and in most circumstances would give rise to a prima facie case of privilege. The chair wants to assure all members that this matter is taken very, very seriously.

The events on Tuesday night and the week in general bring to the forefront some of the most fundamental issues in a parliamentary democracy. It is fundamental to any parliament based on the Westminster model that members have unimpeded access to the Assembly. To emphasize this principle, the chair wants to quote from page 176 of Joseph Maingot's text Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, the second edition:

No impediment should be placed on the Member in going about his [or her] parliamentary business, whether in the House, on his [or her] way to the House, or while on his [or her] way home. On the contrary, Members are "to have free and unimpeded access to the Parliament buildings."

The Assembly is the forum where democratically elected members represent the views of their constituents. No function is more sacred. In order for a member to discharge his or her parliamentary duties, that member should not be obstructed or intimidated in speaking or attending.

Several members indicated during yesterday's discussion on the purported question of privilege that they felt intimidated by the demonstrations in the building on Monday night. While there were no violent confrontations that night, it could have deteriorated into a most regrettable situation. The events on Monday night led to the implementation of Tuesday's security measures in order to protect the ability of members to represent the views of their constituents. However, as the Minister of Justice and Attorney General intimated, events unfolded rather quickly, and the security service had to put a program in place quickly, without knowing what circumstances would be encountered.

The hon. leader of the third party was aware of the general approach on Tuesday afternoon at the House leaders' meeting in the Speaker's office. As the chair emphasized yesterday, it is most regrettable that the member was not advised of the specifics of the security measures, but it seems clear that other members were escorted in or went through the pedway to gain access to the building. The hon. member volunteered that he did not have his security card with him.

The chair would also like to point out to members that it is a well-accepted principle that members of the public, as opposed to members, do not have access to Legislative Assemblies as a right. This principle was established in 1904 in the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Payson versus Hubert. It is very interesting that a case from Nova Scotia that was decided just before Alberta became a province could have so much relevance to the life of a Legislature in the next millennium. Mr. Justice Davies said this at pages 212 and 213:

The true rule which must guide the Speaker and the offices of the House in the exercise of their duty of preserving order and decorum is, in my judgment, that the public have access to the Legislative Chamber and to the precincts of the House as a matter of privilege only, and under either express or tacit license, which can at any time be withdrawn or revoked when in the interest of order and decorum it is judged to be necessary.

This 1904 case was referred to and cited with approval by the majority of the Supreme Court of Canada in their 1993 decision in New Brunswick Broadcasting versus Speaker of the Nova Scotia Assembly, which established that the inherent privileges of Assemblies enjoy constitutional status. One of those privileges is the ability to exclude strangers. Of course – and the chair wants to stress this – the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has attempted to ensure the greatest possible access to the galleries consistent with the security of members, staff, and the preservation of order.

It is most regrettable that the member was delayed in attending the Assembly on Tuesday evening. In the chair's view, a delay in accessing the building does not constitute a denial, especially in this case where the member indicated that he was without his security card and he did not point to anyone who specifically denied him access. Accordingly, there is no prima facie question of privilege.

The chair would note that in the Canadian House of Commons on May 25, 1970, Speaker Lamoureux found that a delay in accessing the Parliament buildings did not give rise to a prima facie question of privilege.

The chair certainly wants to encourage a practice of giving all members adequate notice of any security measures in a timely fashion so that this matter does not arise again. The Sergeant-at-Arms has worked closely with Justice staff to ensure that members have access to the building while preserving the safety of members and staff, and that procedure and process will be continued.

Thank you.

Bill 21 Appropriation Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Treasurer it's my pleasure to move Bill 21 for third reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government's appropriation act, of course, is to seek the authority for the spending of all supply for all departments. In this case it will amount to in excess of just $15 billion. That's the amount net of lottery fund transfers. Almost all of that is for operating expenses across various government departments.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, for the most part, the Official Opposition doesn't have a lot of question or quibble with individual initiatives of individual departments. We have some initiatives going on in Justice or Children's Services or Human Resources that are quite supportable. The difficulty is that when you're dealing with an appropriation bill such as Bill 21 and you're asked sort of a yes or no question, it's all or nothing, and this is often the position that the Official Opposition find themselves in.

The Premier and other members of Executive Council will often accuse Liberals and others who oppose the government on specific issues of always just criticizing and complaining, of never being supportive. Today, in fact, there was a question that was clearly a setup kind of a question or what probably should have been a ministerial statement about the financial affairs of the province and the credit rating of the province. I think the Premier during that exchange made some comment that they, referring to the Official Opposition, "don't like to hear that because it is good news." Well, I don't know any member of the Official Opposition that doesn't like to hear good news about the province of Alberta. We are proud Albertans, and we are proud of the men and women who make this province work. Those men and women are the ones to be congratulated on the state of the economy.

But you have to understand, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that some Albertans are enjoying prosperity does not mean that all Albertans are enjoying prosperity. We believe that the role of government should be, to the extent possible, to help everybody have some equal opportunity to participate in that prosperity. A government that loses sight of that and simply wants to rest on the laurels of others is a government that I think is clearly out of touch.

When we come to look at the appropriation bill, I have many concerns about the government's priorities when it comes to spending. Those concerns may in and of themselves be enough to tempt me to vote against this appropriation act. Now, if I were to stand up and say, "No, I am in opposition to supporting the appropriation of nearly $15 billion worth of taxpayers' money for operating expenses or the transfer of nearly a billion dollars of the lottery fund to meet the commitments that have been made through that fund," then I know full well what would happen. Members of the government would stand up and say, "Oh, well, that hon. member is against providing funding for long-term care centres," or "That hon. member is against road construction on this dangerous highway," or some other nonsense like that, Mr. Speaker. Of course, that's what it would be. It would be nonsense.

As a member of this Legislature and as a member of the Official Opposition what I want to do is make sure that the government exercises its responsibility carefully, after due consideration, when it comes to spending plans. While this government brags that its budget, which this appropriation bill reflects, sets new high-water marks when it comes to funding for public education or funding for public health care, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that's just simply not the case. It's simply not the case. The money put into this budget for education, for example, doesn't even bring us back to where we were before the massive budget cuts began. It doesn't in any way account for inflation. It doesn't account for population growth. It doesn't really help us get to the place where we can have even national averages when it comes to pupil/teacher ratios.

When the Minister of Learning was asked, "Will this guarantee the hiring of X number of new teachers?" he said: well, no; that would be a local school board decision. Those same local school boards have to weigh the priorities against hiring new instructional staff, new maintenance staff, and putting money into the crumbling infrastructure. There are schools all over the province that really don't provide very safe or sound places of learning. In my own constituency there are schools where I've been taken on tours where the windows are so loose in the frames because the frames are rotting that a good push would pop the windows out, where doors don't close, where furnaces or boilers haven't been properly inspected. So, Mr. Speaker, saying that we've solved the problem in public education because we've put some new money into it is really underestimating the problem.

There are still parents and students all over this province that go door-to-door selling goods and services for the purposes of providing textbook sets for their schools. There are children that go door-to-door around this province soliciting funds so that they can upgrade their schoolrooms to accept computer installations. There are children that literally go begging saying, "Please buy these chocolates or these cookies," so that the schools can have some discretionary funds to provide some services or some programs that are readily available in other jurisdictions. So, Mr. Speaker, when I say that I'm not in favour of this government's spending priorities, those are the kinds of things that I'm thinking of.

When I turn my attention to public health care and I see the extent to which this government is going to sell its private health plans, it just makes me wonder what the government priorities truly are. You know, the Premier has said as early as today in question period – I believe he said it today in question period; you know, these last few days have been a little compressed, but it's certainly been this week – that the government has no private health care plans.

MR. BRODA: It's true.

MR. SAPERS: I hear an hon. member, I think the Member for Redwater, barking out, "It's true". Well, Bill 11 is a private health care plan. It's called the Alberta Health Care Protection Act, but the purpose of the Alberta Health Care Protection Act is to allow the minister of health through the regional health authorities to contract . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, do you want to explain to the government members about appropriation debate, or may I just continue and ignore their interjections?

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum
Relevance

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First of all, hon. member, if someone does interject when they're not supposed to, then making reference to them and about them only encourages more of the same, and you wouldn't want to do that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is perfectly right that this is an appropriation bill, and the appropriations do cover health care in all of its ramifications, as it covers everything that government does. To that extent, then, it's part of debate. People may or may not appreciate the comments of the hon. member, but it is right to make them.

Debate Continued

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

As I was saying, while the government may protest that they have no private health care plan, the heart of Bill 11 is to provide authority for the expansion of contracts through regional health authorities to private surgical facilities. That's what it's all about.

So, you know, whether we call the bill one name or another name, the purpose of the bill is to enlarge private care, to see the provision of more private care in the province of Alberta.

When I take a look at the appropriation and I hear the government say, "Look at all the new money we're spending in health," then I realize, based on the research that's been brought to my attention, my own research into the issue of the provision of private care, the comparisons in terms of cost-efficiency in the public sector versus cost-efficiency in the private sector, when I look at the experiences in the United States, in the United Kingdom, in Australia, in New Zealand, when I look at all of that and I understand all the additional expenses that come into play when you increase the delivery of surgical services and hospital services through the private sector, when I look at those additional overhead costs, the administrative costs, the legal costs, the monitoring costs, the standard-setting costs, the negotiating costs, all of those other costs and I understand that those services provided in the private sector cost more, that it's not as efficient as doing the same services in the public sector, then I begin to understand why this government is putting more money into health care. They are going to have to send more money to the regional health authorities simply to meet the additional expense, the additional cost, that is going to come along with the provision of care in private clinics.

So we're not going to see that additional money go into reducing pain and suffering, which was the claim of the government. We're not going to see that additional money going into hiring more frontline staff. We're not going to see that additional money going into shortening waiting lists. We're going to see that additional money going into advertising and legal fees and all of the guaranteed profits to the private providers. That's where the additional money is going to go, Mr. Speaker.

So when I take a look at the government's appropriation bill and I say that I'm not happy with the amount of money that's being spent on health care, I know what the government is going to say. They're going to say: ah, there's another one of those tax-and-spend Liberals who just wants to solve all the world's problems by throwing more money at it. I'm saying that nothing is further from the truth. It's these tax-and-spend Tories that are creating the problem. They know the cost of everything and the value of nothing. They want to throw more money at the private sector, and they want to see taxpayers subsidize that private sector, the very same government that ran an election and said: we're out of the business of being in business. I think they're back in business, Mr. Speaker. They're back in business.

Again I find it difficult. I may very well find somewhere in the budget something that I like. I may find, for example, that I am entirely in favour of the plans to allocate $500 million to a new foundation to support basic science and engineering research. I'm happy to see that, but then my joy turns to dismay as I move from the estimates of Innovation and Science to the estimates of Learning. I look at the estimates of Learning and I see that there is still this 30 percent legislated cap; tuition fees are still rising through the roof. I see that there is still not adequate funding so that library collections in Alberta's advanced education institutions can come up to par. I see that there is still not enough money to attract scholars at the world-class level throughout all faculties, not just science and engineering. What about the arts and the humanities? I see that there is no commitment to ensure that we are going to be world leaders in cultural pursuits.

I can find something to support in the budget. I can say that this innovation and science foundation is a good thing and something that will be of benefit to the people of Alberta. But then I think to myself: why can't this government understand the concept of balance? Why can't they get that right? Why can they only do one thing at a time? It's like that old joke about not being able to walk and chew gum at the same time. Why can't they support business, economic prosperity, and the generation of wealth at the same time that they're supporting the continuation of Canadian cultural pursuits, at the same time that they are supporting the voluntary sector, at the same time that they're supporting advanced education and the creation of knowledge for the sake of the creation of knowledge?

Why can't they support the public institutions that Albertans rely on? Why is it that so many of our public institutions are under siege? Why is it that police organizations and the courts and our correctional system and our public education institutions and our hospitals and all of our public institutions are so constrained or still feeling the burdensome effects of those budget constraints even though we had the Premier and the Treasurer trumpet from the hilltops, "The deficit is over. We're past that debate, and we're into bold new plans. We're into reinvesting, and we're into making this a wonderful place"? Well, why is it that those public institutions are still feeling the burden? Why is it that those public institutions are still being told that they have to continue to tighten their belts and there's not enough money to go around, that we don't have enough money to hire enough men and women to get rid of the waiting lines, that we don't have enough money to hire the teachers that we need so that our children have access to the best education? We could afford the best education in this province.

Why is it that we have reports coming out of fatality inquiries that say we don't have enough people doing child welfare and child protection work? Why is it that we don't have enough men and women providing community-based correctional services? Why is it that we don't have enough money in this province to make sure that those nongovernment organizations that work in partnership with government can pay their staff a fair wage when they're doing that work on behalf of the government for the benefit of the people of Alberta?

Mr. Speaker, these questions have not been addressed in the budget or in the appropriation bill. I think the government needs to take its blinkers off and it needs to understand that a real balance sheet, when it comes to governance, is not just about dollars and cents. A real balance sheet is about quality of life, and a real balance sheet includes things that you can't find in an auditor's report.

Mr. Speaker, this government needs to maybe stop thinking so much about GDP measurements and start talking about something that's perhaps called a GPI, a genuine progress indicator, that has been suggested by some. The difference between the two, if I can just use an example – when you only measure things based on dollars and cents, you have a situation where you add up all of the benefits of economic activity, but you don't necessarily subtract any of the difficulties that that economic activity may have resulted from. So the GDP sometimes is not a very good indicator. A GPI, on the other hand, would be able to do a net gain kind of an analysis. For example, last year we had the worst forest fire season, I believe, in Alberta's history. [interjection] I've been corrected. The last two years have been worse and worse.

MRS. SOETAERT: Point of order. That's not proper English.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, that's precisely the thing I was talking about just a few moments ago. Once you start engaging one another in debate, then it degenerates from there. So that's why the centuries old tradition of speaking to the Speaker or the chair, whichever the appropriate case may be, is the best way to go. If you could adhere to that.

While I'm up on my feet, I might mention to the three or four gigglers in the back that sometimes your voices come very clearly over the PA system, so if you could suppress your levity for the period of time that your colleague is speaking, that would be helpful.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and you're right. Of course, the only reason for those interjections is that I was having fun at the expense of the English language, and I'm sorry.

Debate Continued

MR. SAPERS: We've had two horrible forest fire seasons in Alberta. Extra money has had to go into the suppression of these fires and into reforestation and the cleanup.

Now, if you just look at the traditional way of measuring economic activity and GDP, what happens is that all of that extra money that's spent dealing with forest fires is part of the economic activity. It's part of the measure of the growth of the economic activity in the province, so it's seen as a positive thing.

Now, forest fires aren't a positive thing. Forest fires are a negative thing. They are a bad thing. We don't want to see our standing timber burnt out in that way. We don't want to see the loss of property or the threat. We don't want to see that. So that's a negative.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the balance sheet, it all gets added up. All that economic activity is seen as a positive. All those transactions, all those men and women that were put on the payroll temporarily to go into fire suppression crews, all of the money that was spent on the temporary lodging, and all of the money that was spent on the transportation is all seen as good economic activity. So, you see, simple measures don't really tell the true picture.

We could say the same thing about how the government does its budget. As long as they see themselves in a simple way saying, "Well, here's how much money we're going to use to address the problem," they think they've done what's required of them. But often what we see when we look through the plans of the government is that when it comes to their spending priorities, there hasn't been any analysis, there hasn't been any rationale, and there hasn't been any connection made to the performance measures and the outcomes. We haven't seen any true measure of value, and we haven't seen any big picture or long-term review of what the spending plans have wrought.

When we consider that, Mr. Speaker, all we have to do, once again, is look at our health care system. Over the last seven years we've seen the continual erosion of that system. It's brought us to the point where we are now, where the government believes the only way to save the system is to further privatize it. I don't think that serves the public good, and that's why I have difficulty in supporting the Appropriation Act. I think it reflects a government that is devoid of long-term vision and hasn't been able to see beyond its rather blinkered view of the world.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to participate in this debate. Bill 21 is sort of like an old friend that we haven't seen for a bit. It's been around, but it seems like so much has happened since we had a chance to offer commentary at second reading, and it's important to come back and recognize that what drives the provincial government over and above their privatization agenda is the budget.

This is really our last opportunity to reflect before we vote what is a very large sum of money. It's an opportunity to reflect a little bit in terms of what it tells us in terms of the spending priorities of the government of the day. As my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora had said before, it's really a question of reflecting on this in terms of what it tells us about the priorities that the 64 members in the government caucus and the members of the cabinet think are appropriate for the province. We've certainly had a chance through the estimates process, leading up to the appropriation bill, and now in debate on the appropriation bill to identify some of the areas that we think government has missed.

Some specific examples. You might take, for example, the funding for the DARE program, the driving and alcohol education program that's been so successful. We're talking about a very small, a very modest number of dollars in a budget the size of the one for this province. But it's one of those things you look at and you say: there's really no substantial public support for a program that makes a difference in terms of making (a) our roads safer and (b) ensuring that hopefully young people aren't drinking and driving. Sometimes I think it's so easy to get lost in the magnitude. You talk about $17 billion of spending. Sometimes what we lose sight of are the individual trees in the forest, and it's important that we identify some of those trees and identify some of the areas where we're not meeting the needs that have to be met. Certainly the DARE program is one of those examples I've heard my colleagues speak of so often, and one would expect we'd see some action there.

You know, once again, the budget is not just an academic matter, Mr. Speaker. It's something that affects real Albertans in terms of their real lives. You might take as an example the Jordan Quinney inquiry report. This was a child in care of the province who died while a charge of the province, and there were a host of thoughtful recommendations that came as a result of the fatality inquiry.

You know, the notion of a fatality inquiry, particularly when a child dies who is in the care of the province of Alberta . . .

MRS. SLOAN: He was known to them. He wasn't exactly in care when he died, but he was known to them.

MR. DICKSON: Okay. I don't want to misrepresent the situation. I understand that it's inaccurate to say that the late Jordan Quinney was in the care of the province, but he was certainly a child identified as being a child at risk and receiving monitoring from the child welfare authorities in the province.

When we're voting a budget, sometimes we should sit down and take a look at the specific recommendations that were made by the learned Provincial Court judge who heard that fatality inquiry. What the Provincial Court judge identified, I think it's fair to say, was a lack of independent checking. There were issues of supervision that didn't happen. There were probation officers who perhaps didn't do as much investigation, weren't perhaps as diligent as they should have been. I'm sure those workers were probably committed professionals working as hard as they could. As I know from my encounter with social workers working for government in Calgary, caseloads are huge, stresses are enormous, and supports often aren't there. So what you've got are significant problems. It's all laid out. This is only a nine-page report from the Jordan Quinney fatality inquiry.

You have to ask yourself: are there answers in this budget to ensure that another child isn't going to die as Jordan Quinney did? Is this budget going to make a material difference in the lives of other children who are identified as being at risk, known to the province? Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that I can say with any degree of confidence that that's the case with this budget.

We might turn to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Goodness knows, it's not because he has not had a tough spring session. I don't want to be accused of piling on in any way, because he's a minister who works very hard. But I look at this budget, and I hear the announcements about the additional amount of money going into health care. Somewhere along the way government seems to have forgotten what I and my colleagues in this Chamber from the city of Calgary know, that since this government got elected in 1993, 116,000 new people have made their home in the city of Calgary. That's a staggering statistic. It is to me, anyway. You can say that this is wonderful because it shows confidence in the province and in the city, and there's certainly an element of that. Doesn't it also follow that that means that there were huge additional needs to be met?

When the Calgary regional health authority yesterday released their local budget for 2000-2001, it's right here on page 9 where they note: we've gone from "1,748 staffed hospital beds [in '94-95]. Today there are 1,818." Well, Mr. Speaker, that's less than 100 new hospital beds. I must say and the Minister of Health and Wellness knows that the number of beds that existed in Calgary before – in fact, this is in dispute, but the point is that even if you take the CRHA's number, you've got significantly less than 100 new hospital beds, but you've got 116,000 new people. So when we hear government in a sort of corporate way beating its chest and saying, you know, "We're just doing such a darned good job in this province," we have to say: where's the recognition of the growth? You can put in significant additional amounts of money, but it doesn't mean a net improvement, a net enhancement of the quality of service for people requiring health care.

In fact, what else is instructive, if you read the Calgary regional health authority report that was released on behalf of the chairman by Dr. Kabir Jivraj yesterday at their 11:30 CRHA advance briefing, they're talking about provisioning a second operating room at the Foothills medical centre, opening one more operating room at the Peter Lougheed centre. You want to ask: why wouldn't we be pursuing that, and why haven't we been pursuing that instead of this nonsense around creating more opportunities for a private hospital? It's those niggling questions that still cause me distress even as we're about to vote this budget.

As a Calgary MLA one of the things I always look forward to – and I expect my colleagues on the government side also look at it – is a wonderful publication that's produced every year. It's called Health of the Calgary Region. I must say that as critical as I have been about different decisions made by the provincial government, I also, to be fair, have to acknowledge that there has been some excellent work done by the health regions, certainly the Calgary and Capital regions in particular, because I'm most familiar with those, in terms of trying to look at a systemwide analysis. In Calgary's case we've got – what is it? – about 924,000 people in the Calgary health region. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I didn't mean to try and invite debate from government members. I just hope for answers. It's been a positive thing to gather that information, but then my question is trying to relate the statistics in here to the budget we've got in front of us.

You know, you go through here and you look at some of the key indicators, Health Status at a Glance, and you look at some of the statistics in terms of economic influences. In the Calgary region you can go through and identify issues like husband/wife families below the poverty line, and you see a trend that's increasing from the last census. You see women with children below the poverty line. You see a decrease there, but it's not as big as you want it to be. You look at some of the gaps in income, the households that run out of money, parents with no dental coverage, seniors' households who run out of money. I mean, you can go through the list – and I won't bore you with all the individual numbers – and what it identifies is this big, wealthy, prosperous province that has such an abundance of natural resources and clever people and strong, creative entrepreneurs, and we still have an unacceptable rate of teen suicide. We still have an unacceptable rate of single mothers struggling with a couple of young children. We still have really major problems with access to mental health services.

You know, the minister of health or somebody may get up and say: why is the opposition always with the doom and gloom scenario? I think it's part of our responsibility, because I don't hear the acknowledgment from government that these problems exist, and if we can be accused of taking too dark a view of the province, then surely the government can be accused of continuing to never take off the rose-coloured lenses. The hope would be that if we were to acknowledge some of the things that really work in this province and if the government would reciprocate by not trying to deny the reality that we have a lot of needs that aren't being adequately addressed in this province in April of 2000, then maybe we'd be able to come up with some of the concrete solutions to make things work.

One of the other areas that's of huge concern in downtown Calgary is access to mental health services. When the health plan done by the Calgary region did some consultations, one of the major things they identified as being a problem was mental health. In fact, at page 10 of the CRHA budget plan for 2000-2001 they say, "Mental Health care emerged as one of the single most important issues in the Health Plan consultations."

What we have are huge problems. It's partly a question of money, but it's also partly a question of leadership and clear direction. We have some excellent, excellent people working at the service delivery level. What seems to be lacking is the kind of co-ordinated focus and leadership at the cabinet level, at the highest levels of decision-making. That continues to be a significant concern, Mr. Speaker.

Some of the other things that I'd like to see addressed in terms of how we make this region and how we make the entire province of Alberta a more terrific place in which to live and raise families – we would go through this thing, and we'd be working through the statistics. Maybe what we should really do as a companion to the budget is highlight some of the statistics of children at risk that are done on a provincewide basis.

You know, the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness devoted a good part of the last year to deal with persons with developmental disabilities, and I think the associate minister, to his credit, did a good job of listening to what those groups said and produced a report that identified some of the needs for flexibility in terms of program criteria, in terms of funding support, identified a need to provide agencies that provide support to people with developmental disabilities, that there's a need for that too.

We don't sort of always see enough awareness of those kinds of issues on the part of government, and it always seems to be groups after the fact coming and looking for assistance in key ways and a government that too often isn't prepared to recognize that if you spend a dollar on prevention and early intervention, you may save spending $6 or $7 later, when the problem becomes more severe at a later stage in the process.

There are currently between 3,000 and 4,000 people who are homeless on any given night in the city of Calgary, arguably the most prosperous city in Canada right now, and you've got 3,000 to 4,000 people homeless. There's been an analysis done by the city of Calgary, not by the Liberal opposition but by the city of Calgary. The Member for Calgary-Bow would certainly be able to confirm this. They estimate that there could be 30,000 to 40,000 additional people in Calgary who are one slim paycheque away from the street.

When you go to some of those consultations like they have in Calgary where you see all these agencies working together, what you find is that it's the same problem that comes up time and time again. By having the lowest minimum wage in the country, by having supports for independence rates that don't take into recognition the high-rent areas like the city of Calgary and Grande Prairie and Brooks and places like that, you create enormous problems for people. By not adjusting the income thresholds for seniors with the Alberta seniors' benefit plan, what you're left with are too many seniors that still have to choose between paying the rent and buying medication. You know, that's part of this province too. I'm not sure we see the kind of focus by the provincial government that's going to address that. We're doing a little better in some areas, but when you look at some of those key indicators like homelessness, like suicide rates, like access to mental health, what you see are ongoing problems.

We have a large percentage of people in the Calgary region who do not have sufficient money all the time to buy food. In 1999 the number of seniors reporting that they didn't have sufficient money to buy food in Calgary dropped, which is good news, but it's still significant. In 1999 we had 21 percent of people over 65 years of age who reported they didn't have sufficient money all the time to buy food.

What you've got is a huge gap between income of the highest and lowest quintile in our society in Calgary. It's an important measure of social cohesion, and that's increasing. You know, if you want safe, stable communities, what you have to do is ensure that you don't have this enormous and growing disparity between the wealthiest people in the community and the poorest.

Just so many concerns, more than I'm going to be able to list in the time available to us, but I did want to make those observations. We ask this time after time, and I know I've had the chance to speak to previous budgets. You know, before we get to the appropriation thing, we go into the consideration of the estimates. As opposition MLAs we go in with long lists of questions, and I'm often told by government members: "Why do you have all those questions? Why do you just have all those things? Why are you trying so hard to point out the things government isn't doing?" Well, the answer, Mr. Speaker, is that nothing would make me happier than to be able to go into one of those committees reviewing the budget for the department that deals with children, Children's Services, or dealing with mental health and not have anything but praise to deliver. I'm still waiting for that opportunity.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Second Reading

Bill 13

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Hancock]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to be speaking to Bill 13, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2000. Finally in this Legislature this session we have a good-news bill. Certainly, from all aspects this particular bill is an improvement on the system that we had before, and from an environmental perspective we are very happy with the progress on this bill. The expansion of the orphan well program as outlined in the bill is now going to include the abandonment and reclamation of upstream oil and gas related facilities, including pipelines, and it deals with many of the concerns expressed by us as the Official Opposition and other stakeholders back in 1994, when the original amendments to the Oil and Gas Conservation Act were brought forward. We're very happy to see the government incorporate these concerns in legislation, and certainly this is a step forward.

The orphan well program, Mr. Speaker, is a unique example in this province of how a joint industry/government regulator consultation process and partnership can lead to the development of reasonable and prudent criteria for dealing with a particular issue. We could only hope that the government would take the same action on Bill 11 when we come back from our spring break in terms of dealing with that legislation as well.

So with those few words I commend the government on their actions on this particular bill, look forward to them using this model with other legislation, and I will conclude my remarks.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to conclude debate.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from across the floor. I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 14

Alberta Treasury Branches Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mrs. Nelson]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to rise and speak to Bill 14, the Alberta Treasury Branches Amendment Act. We certainly support the changes that are proposed by this bill. It changes the fiscal year of the Alberta Treasury Branches and the establishment of policies and procedures relating to the treatment and disbursement of unclaimed balances. These changes are necessary to bring the operations of the Alberta Treasury Branches in line with the standards and processes established by private-sector financial institutions such as Canadian chartered banks.

We also believe that changing the fiscal year-end of the Alberta Treasury Branches from its current March 31 to October 31 in accordance with the year-end of chartered banks is a positive step that will permit more effective benchmarking of performance against comparable financial institutions in Canada and the U.S.A. in Alberta Treasury Branches' annual report. Currently, Mr. Speaker, the March 31 year-end makes it difficult to compare Alberta Treasury Branches' performance versus other comparable financial institutions which operate on an October 31 year-end.

Currently the ATB uses the following performance measures to benchmark itself against comparable financial institutions: operating revenue growth, net interest margin, net interest spread on average earning assets, other income to operating revenue, return on assets, operating expense growth, net impaired loans to total growth loans, credit losses to total loans, loan growth, deposit growth, and asset growth. We are hopeful that with the change in the fiscal year-end, the ATB will expand its performance benchmarking versus other comparable financial institutions to include such key performance indicators of profitability, liquidity, credit quality, and productivity used by private-sector financial institutions such as average assets as a percentage of average equity, operating profit as a percentage of average total equity, operating expenses as a percentage of average total assets, loan loss provisions as a percentage of operating profit, gross impaired loans as a percentage of total equity, and operating expenses as a percentage of operating revenues.

Establishing policies and procedures relating to the treatment and disposition of unclaimed balances is long overdue. In fact, it was mentioned as a concern of ATB management as far back as the Flynn report in December 1994.

With those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly urge all members to support Bill 14 at second reading. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to adjourn debate on Bill 14.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15

Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Hancock]

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to provide some comments with respect to Bill 15 at second reading. The Official Opposition is supporting the amendments that are being made to remove section 42 from the Business Corporations Act because it makes good business sense. The government has received input from lawyers, accountants, from businesses who have been impacted by this section of the act, and these parties have indicated that it has been restrictive and cumbersome and unworkable for them as businesses to comply with the section's requirements.

It's important to stress that the changes proposed still offer protection to parties that are involved. It certainly continues to provide and protect shareholder and creditor protection. So we are pleased this afternoon to support this amendment.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to adjourn debate on Bill 15.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

4:00

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Government House Leader.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very long week, and there's an Easter weekend coming up when members want to be with families and friends. Therefore pursuant to Government Motion 7, agreed to by the Assembly on March 7, I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until Monday, May 1, at 1:30 p.m.

[Pursuant to Government Motion 7 the Assembly adjourned at 4:02 p.m.]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, last week my office received notice of the passing of a former member, Mr. Al Hiebert, who passed away on April 23, 2000, at the age of 61 in Edmonton, Alberta. Mr. Hiebert was first elected in the election held March 14, 1979, and served until May 8, 1986. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar for the Progressive Conservative Party.

During his years in the Legislature Mr. Hiebert served on the select standing committees on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; Private Bills; Public Affairs; Public Accounts; Legislative Offices; and Law and Regulations. He also served on the following special committees: the Auditor General Search, the Chief Electoral Officer Search, and the Ombudsman Search.

Mr. Hiebert leaves his wife, Lorraine, and children, JoAnne, Arlene, Lois, and Douglas. With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember Al Hiebert as you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

National Day of Mourning

THE SPEAKER: I would now ask members to observe a moment of silence to commemorate the National Day of Mourning, April 28, 2000, a solemn day when Canadians remember and recognize those workers who were killed or have been injured on the job.

Please be seated.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to request that the petition standing on the Order Paper under my name concerning the protection of workers in after-hours employment now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation requiring a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of the following motion.

Be it resolved that further consideration of any or all of the resolutions, clauses, sections, or titles of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, shall when called be the first business of the committee and should not be further postponed.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is regarding employment standards information for employers and employees in the restaurant and hospitality industry.

Secondly are the answers to the questions that came up in Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have six tablings. The first one is from the Alberta Building Trades Council, which represents 22 locals of various unions around the province. This letter is in favour of Bill 23 and the amendments to the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act.

The next five are from Construction Labour Relations, An Alberta Association, the Merit Contractors Association, the Alberta Construction Association, the Motor Dealers' Association of Alberta, and the Construction Owners Association of Alberta, all in favour of Bill 23.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. They are from Allison Burstin of Canmore, Barbara Hardt from Calgary, and Kristian Kiml from Calgary. They are all in opposition to the Genesis proposal for Spray Valley, another issue that this government would like to force closure on.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first item I'd like to table is one of only five letters that I have received in favour of Bill 11. This is written by a constituent, Kyle Franz . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: One, eh? Okay.

MS BLAKEMAN: Out of five.

The second is the appropriate number of copies of a new publication called The Thorn. I believe this is their premiere issue, so I encourage everyone to have a look at this.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, and I have the appropriate number of copies of each. The first one is a letter from four residents of Edmonton-Manning who are psychiatric nurses concerned with Bill 11.

The second one, Mr. Speaker, is about a great evening I went to last Thursday, April 27. It was called the 2000 Rotary integrity awards to Edmonton and area citizens for their contributions to business and community. This was made up of 12 clubs in the Edmonton area, eight from Edmonton and four from the outside areas.

The third one, Mr. Speaker, was a weekend full of events in northeast Edmonton, and it's called Together 2000, a reunion of people who attended north Edmonton public and St. Francis Catholic schools prior to 1950. There were 500 in attendance, and they came from all over the world. So the roots of north Edmonton have branched out from there.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter from Robert Blakely, the president of the Alberta Building Trades Council, endorsing Bill 23.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is from Joanne Ramondt. She is a striking Calgary Herald employee, and she is urging the government to resolve this long and divisive labour dispute.

Thank you.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, facts about health care are very important, and I'd like to table two reports today that will contribute to the factual information relative to our health care system in Alberta. The first is a report titled Health Care Facts, primarily facts which come from Alberta Health and Wellness, including a breakdown of CEO and executive salaries by regional health authorities in Alberta.

The second report is the first annual report of the Canadian Institute for Health Information. This report contains a great deal of information that would be relevant for the government to consider in the context of Bill 11, and I regret to say that they most likely will not have a chance to read this substantive report before closure is invoked tomorrow evening.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a two-page document. The documents are reprints of web pages from voteAlberta.org, the first dated the 24th of April, 2000, the second from the 30th of April. What it shows is that support for Bill 11 from those people who have voted at this web site has decreased from 27 percent to 23 percent, so 76 percent of the more than 2,700 Albertans who have voted in this format are firmly against Bill 11.

MRS. SLOAN: That's reason to bring in closure.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, did you have another tabling?

MRS. SLOAN: Regretfully, Mr. Speaker, I don't.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is a speech given by Dr. Dennis Modry and submitted to the Fraser Institute. It's entitled Medicare is Killing Us: Patient Choice in a Re-engineered Health Care System. I think it's the basis for this government's Bill 11.

The second is a statement by the Interfaith Coalition on Justice in the Workplace, where there are nine recommendations under the heading: Is Bill 11 Good for Albertans?

The third is the Angus Reid poll on April 20, 2000, which indicates that 59 percent of Albertans are against the new health care scheme.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is from Kenman Gan, which is a letter expressing concern about osteoporosis.

The second is a number of letters all in opposition to Bill 11, and I'll just read out the names to expedite things: Steve Virag, Len Douziech, James Fleckenstein, M. Boisvert, Barb Baker, Edwin Parks, Linda Cheu, Dorothea Thielmann, Noel Somerville, Joseph Buijs, Brent Jeffery, Keith Leal, and one jointly signed by James Edwards and Iqbal Lakhani, all in opposition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased – well, maybe “pleased” is the wrong word in light of the closure motion by the Government House Leader. Let me table the text of a eulogy for the burial of Bill 11 which was given this weekend in Ponoka on Friday, April 28 at 10:30.

Secondly, I'd like to table a list of contributions to the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta with some interests in private health care, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got five tablings. The first four are letters or statements signed by Albertans opposed to Bill 11.

The first one is from Carol and Murray Roy from Camrose expressing opposition to Bill 11.

The second one is from Mr. Con Duemler from Edmonton opposing Bill 11.

Then there are two statements; the first one signed by 96 Albertans who are opposed to Bill 11 from Andrew, Lamont, and Chipman, and another similar statement signed by 13 Albertans from Clyde, Rochester, and Westlock. They're all opposed to Bill 11.

The last one, Mr. Speaker, is a document that I'd like to table today. This is the Calgary regional health authority personal conflict of interest guidelines for medical officers. This is dated January 2000.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Alberta Dental Hygienists' Association for the year ended October 31, 1999.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 100 bright, enthusiastic students from the Morinville high school. Accompanying them are four adults: teachers Rosie Kruhlik, Debbie Wojtkiw, Michelle Boucher and parent helper Bonnie Brochu. They are seated in both the members' and public galleries. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Economic Development and MLA for Calgary-Shaw I wish to introduce to you and through you Miss Victoria Conway. Victoria is a grade 6 student from his constituency and is here to learn about the government of Alberta. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly 25 bright students from St. Anne Catholic elementary school, which is located in Edmonton-Glengarry. They are accompanied today by Mr. Shawn Carson, their teacher. They are seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I would ask that they now stand and receive the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a member of the Edmonton-Glengarry constituency. His name is Jim Ragsdale. Jim is sitting in the members' gallery, and it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly Jimmy Ragsdale. Jim, I'd ask that you now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Closure on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's obvious that the Premier has lost his patience with democracy, and rather than allowing Bill 11 to have full and open debate in this Assembly, we have now been given the introduction of closure. Have the Premier's special interest groups been exerting so much pressure that he has listened to the very few and has invoked closure in order to satisfy them?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, notice was given to bring about closure because there has to be some finality. This gives everyone an opportunity to vote. Closure simply means that we're bringing about a process to have a vote on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are on record 33 times saying the bill cannot be amended to make it acceptable to them. They are on record 14 times saying nothing will stop the complete filibuster of Bill 11. So just as a filibuster is a tool of the Legislature, closure is a tool of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, having said that, it seems that they're very anxious to speak on this bill. In one breath they say that they want to filibuster it, that nothing will be acceptable in terms of amendments, yet the Member for Edmonton-Centre has spoken on this bill five times, the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry two times, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie five times, the Member for Calgary-Buffer 10 times, the Member for Edmonton-Manning four times, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark eight times.

THE SPEAKER: I think we'll move on, with brevity being the key.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, thousands of Albertans are on record as saying: pull this bill. So why is it that the Premier thinks the protection of public health care in this province doesn't need more debate? Could he share his perspective on that with Albertans, please?

MR. KLEIN: I'd be very happy to, Mr. Speaker, because the bill in its entirety is designed to protect the public health care system as we know it today and to fulfill our commitment to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. If the Liberals are opposed to those principles, let them stand up and say so now.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has refused to meet with the citizens who come to the Legislature. He's now closed off debate. Why doesn't he just call an election and pull his blasted bill? Chicken. Call an election.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we're only in the third year of our mandate. There will be an election called sooner or later, and I'm sure overall, when Albertans have an opportunity to consider the bill in question in the context of our six-point health care plan, when they put it together with the fantastic financial record that this province has, when they look at the economy and they look at this province being the envy of all provinces in the country, you know what? They're going to give us another mandate. Just watch and see.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has not presented a shred of evidence in this Legislature to show that his private health care policy will not increase costs and waiting lists. In fact, in setting the rules that private companies can play by, this government demonstrates its intent to sell off our public health care assets. Since 1993 private health care services, management, and an insurance company have poured over $300,000 into the Alberta Progressive Conservative Association coffers and those of individual candidates. My questions are to the Premier. Are substantial financial contributions to the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta the only way the Premier will listen to the people of this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, is this hon. Leader of the Official Opposition saying that no doctors, that no operators of private doctors' offices or private clinics have donated to the Liberal party? If she is saying that, I don't think she is telling the truth.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, how much does the average Albertan have to contribute to the Premier's party before he will start listening to their concerns about health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this leader of the Liberal opposition knows about donations to Tory candidacy both during the elections and leadership campaigns because she was part of it and a very, very substantial recipient of many donations to her own constituency and her party when she was a Tory.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why will the Premier meet with and listen to large political donors, yet when ordinary citizens gather, the Premier simply turns a cold shoulder?

MR. KLEIN: No, I don't, Mr. Speaker. I just don't do protests, especially Liberal-organized protests.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 11 Publicity

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been 25 days since the Premier promised to release the true costs of his massive taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign. Now the ads that have been unleashed show another barrage of television and radio spots for its private health care proposal propaganda complete with blatant deceptions on issues such as similarity with other provinces' legislation and reducing waiting lists. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier promise to release all of the invoices, all of the receipts, all of the contracts today, as he promised, so that Albertans can find out how much of their money has been spent on propaganda for the government's private health care policy?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, not one single cent has been spent on promoting a private health care policy. Not one single cent.

MRS. MacBETH: So in the absence of a response, as the Premier promised, will he just confirm this estimate prepared by the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker, which shows that the real costs of the taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign are now nearly $2.7 million and counting?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there hasn't been a single cent spent on a propaganda campaign. Yes, money has been spent on a campaign to get the truth out.

The shameful waste of taxpayer money is contained in this document that appeared on the web site where it says, "Join the fight for Alberta's Public Health Care. Understanding Bill 11 The Private Hospital Act." Mr. Speaker, that is fraudulent; that is wrong. There never has been and never will be before this Legislative Assembly a bill called the private hospital act, and for the Liberals to go out and to tell the public, using taxpayers' dollars, that there is a bill in this Legislature called the private hospital act is untruthful. It's a flagrant misrepresentation of the facts, and they should be ashamed of themselves.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why did this government spend so much money over the past weekend with its new message on its campaign when its whole intention was to issue a closure motion today?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, a reasonable amount of money has to be spent to get the truth out. The truth, as I say, is in the bill, which purports to become law. There is nothing that is more truthful than the law. But in light of the massive misinformation campaign being conducted by the Liberals, the NDs, and all of the unions combined – I would suggest that they have spent millions and millions of dollars to spread misinformation to put out fraudulent material – I think that Alberta taxpayers deserve to know the truth, and a reasonable amount of money to get the truth out there is not an unreasonable expenditure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past six months the Conservative government has defied the will of Albertans and chosen instead to placate a few private business interests like those at HRG. As a final insult to Albertans the government has introduced closure to the most important, crucial, and hated piece of legislation in Alberta's history. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the government so afraid of public opposition that it needs to choke off debate in this ruthless manner?

2:10

MR. KLEIN: First of all, it's not ruthless. It's a tool of the Legislature, Mr. Speaker.

As I've indicated before – and I'm sure the ND opposition is of the same bent, the same mind as the Liberal opposition in that they would want to filibuster this bill – at the rate we're going now, our researchers estimate that it would take until December of the year 2003 to debate this bill. Seven times the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has spoken on this bill. That's in addition to the countless hours he has spent in question period questioning myself and the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and other ministers on this particular matter. When the opposition members make it quite clear that they are going to filibuster this and filibuster this, there has to be a point where the vote is called. That's democracy.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised that this powerful Premier is afraid of this one single member prolonging the debate beyond his limits of tolerance.

My second question to him: will the Premier have the courage to join me outside the Legislature this evening and justify his decision to suspend democracy in Alberta, and if not, why not?

MR. KLEIN: To stand in front of a thousand committed NDs and a spattering of Liberals – Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, I recognize that politics from time to time is a blood sport, but I'm not a masochist. No.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier doesn't have the courage to call a general election, will he at least call a by-election in Edmonton-Highlands before proceeding with this closure motion, and if not, why not?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, an election will be called in due course. We have a mandate of a maximum of five years. Like the Liberals and the NDs we're in the process now of nominating candidates. There will be an election in the fullness of time.

You know, once Bill 11 is through, people will see that this is not the end of the world, that this has done something very significant to enhance and protect public health care as we know it today. Mr. Speaker, politically speaking, I think they don't want to see that happen. They don't want to see that happen. That's why they want to prolong the debate. That's why they want to keep us in the House, so they can continue with their campaign of malicious misinformation and confuse the Alberta public. They don't want to see this bill passed, and they don't want to see Albertans saying: "What was all the fuss about? This is working. This hasn't destroyed public health care. This has gone the extra step to protect health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Bragg Creek Water Quality

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Environment. The University of Calgary has released the results of a study that indicates that 39 percent of drinking water wells in the hamlet of Bragg Creek are contaminated. Would the minister please tell us whether his department concurs with these findings?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By way of background the study that was conducted was a joint project between students from the University of Calgary as well as the regional health authority, and in my review of it we can say that the students did a very comprehensive study. As the hon. member indicated, 39 percent of the water wells in the hamlet of Bragg Creek were found to be affected by contaminants from private sewage systems used in the hamlet. I can confirm that this number is consistent with earlier water well surveys conducted by the Department of Environment.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you. My second question is also to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister tell us how private sewage disposal systems in Bragg Creek are impacting water quality in the Elbow River?

MR. MAR: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to comment and emphasize that the water quality in the river is still good. My department has been studying water quality trends in the Elbow River for some time. We are, however, seeing a trend in increasing levels of nutrients, bacteria, and sediments, and while these levels are not sufficient to cause alarm, I am concerned about the possible long-term environmental effects associated with shallow groundwater contamination in the hamlet of Bragg Creek.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a long-standing issue with the residents in the hamlet of Bragg Creek, and I understand the concerns that the residents have with respect to the cost of a wastewater pipeline and the resulting impacts on the hamlet. The Department of Environment is committed to working with the residents in the hamlet as well as with the regional health authority, the MD of Rocky View, and groups such as the Bow River basin council to protect water quality not only in the Elbow River but also in the groundwater. Currently, the council is working with the community and stakeholders to develop recommendations about the flow and water quality in the Elbow River.

MRS. TARCHUK: My final question is also to the same minister. As stated, constituents are concerned about the financial and population growth impacts of a wastewater pipeline to Calgary. Can the minister tell us more about what solutions are available for the hamlet of Bragg Creek?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to emphasize that there is not one simple solution to this particular problem. There are a number of options available, including individual pump-out tanks to a wastewater pipeline to the city of Calgary. My department, in addressing this particular issue, has concluded that a wastewater pipeline to Calgary is a practical long-term solution for the hamlet of Bragg Creek and will also provide benefits to the broader region. However, it is important that we work together to find a solution that Bragg Creek residents will ultimately be comfortable with, so the department is dedicated to working, as I indicated, with stakeholders in the area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of thousands of Albertans from across this province are speaking out against this government's private health care policy. Rallies, petitions, e-mails, faxes, letters, and phone calls: Albertans are just saying, "No dismantling of public health care." The Premier has one last chance to admit that closure on Bill 11 is a mistake. Will he undertake to instruct his House Leader not to move closure?

MR. KLEIN: Of course not. Notice of closure has already been given. No, I'm not going to instruct it, Mr. Speaker.

The Liberals and the NDs are the only ones talking about a private health care policy. This government is talking about protecting health care. [Disturbance in the gallery]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

MR. KLEIN: Protecting health care: that's what we're talking about. That is the name of the bill before us. The only people talking about private health care are the Liberals. As a matter of fact, the leader of the Liberal opposition says that if private health care can find a place, then why not let it happen? She is widely quoted as saying that. So the Liberals and the NDs are the only ones talking about private health care. The only ones.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Premier: what is the test to move closure on health care? How many hours of debate, how many people at a rally does it take, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've already indicated that thus far the opposition members have risen to speak to this bill 84 separate times. There has been a total of 2,071 minutes, or 34.52 hours, of total debate on this bill, plus another 12.5 hours of question period time on Bill 11. That's 47 hours combined. That is the most that any bill in the history of this Legislature has ever been debated.

Now, I said to the Liberal opposition: if you don't filibuster, we won't use closure. Mr. Speaker, they are on record 14 times as saying that nothing will stop the complete filibuster of Bill 11. Fourteen times they have stated that they will filibuster this bill. I have promised that there would be no closure if there was no filibuster. They have not promised that there would be no filibuster. Therefore, I am now promising that there will be closure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Well, Mr. Speaker, over 50 government MLAs have not spoken to this bill.

Will the Premier stop hiding from the truth and agree to show up this evening and face Albertans in the people's Legislature to discuss health in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Absolutely. I go many places and attend many functions and talk about Bill 11. No, I'm not going to go to Liberal-orchestrated protest meetings or ND-orchestrated protest meetings or protest meetings organized and orchestrated by the Canadian Union of Public Employees or the Friends of Medicare backed by the Alberta Federation of Labour or the United Nurses Association or the Alberta Teachers' Association. No. Of course not.

Mr. Speaker, there were six people associated with my constituency who attended the Friends of Medicare rally in Calgary. Just to give you an indication as to how these people were treated, they had a table set aside, and it said: this is for Tory supporters; it's vacant because we can't guarantee their safety. At the back of the room were the writings of Trotsky and Lenin and Che Guevara. One of our people said: what has this got to do with Bill 11? The person behind the desk replied: it has nothing to do with Bill 11; this is about protecting the rights of workers. They were snapping pictures of our people. They announced who they were and where they could be located on the bullhorn. Finally, fearful for their safety, they left the rally. That's what those rallies are all about, and that's why I don't do those kinds of protests, never will.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Construction and Renovation

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently met with the ABC charter school as well as the Waldorf school in my constituency. Both of these schools have space requirements which need to be addressed. The Calgary board of education is proceeding with the learning environment action plan and met recently with Calgary caucus to outline their plans. The master plan for CFB Calgary is also considering community needs in their discussions. Clearly there is a need to communicate between our schools and the community to respond to the appropriate allocation of resources to meet the needs of students. To the Minister of Infrastructure: how will the learning environment action plan, or LEAP, as it's called, be considered or implemented by government?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary board of education initiated the LEAP project, which is the learning environment action plan. From that has come a request for the disposition of seven schools. The action committee, the task force, had members from of the Calgary board of education, the Calgary Catholic school board, Alberta Infrastructure, Alberta Learning, and the city of Calgary. There were seven public schools and two separate schools that were identified for disposal.

We will be reviewing each of the nine individually and recommending alternate and best uses or disposition on those schools that have come forward. As of today no recommendations have been made as yet, but we are in the process of making those recommendations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will private or charter schools be given equal consideration if any excess space is identified by the Calgary board of education?

MR. STELMACH: The task group, Mr. Speaker, will certainly look at the best use for each of those facilities, and the needs of the private and charter schools will definitely be considered.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister considering the growth of the number of students in these schools in facility planning in the future?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, there is a process in place for reviewing enrollment growth. We also have criteria put in place that the School Buildings Board follows quite closely. The School Buildings Board, of course, is the independent body that reviews all of the applications and facility funding decisions. At the same time, we now also have a committee comprised of members of the Alberta School Boards Association, Alberta Learning, and Alberta Infrastructure looking at the whole issue of utilization rates and how those fit into future funding decisions as well. All of that information will come to this body sometime in June.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Cancer Treatment

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mismanagement of health care by this government continues. Timely treatment for cancer is unavailable in Edmonton because of a severe shortage of radiation therapists. Fourteen months ago the final report of Alberta Health entitled Current and Emerging Health Workforce Issues in Alberta identified a shortage of radiation therapists at the Alberta Cancer Board. This now has resulted in unacceptable waiting lists for radiation therapy, which are so long that the Cross Cancer Institute no longer meets national treatment guidelines for breast or prostate cancer patients. My questions are to the Premier. Why was nothing done to address this shortage when waiting lists were identified because there was a shortage of staff?

MR. KLEIN: These questions are specific to the delivery of health care. I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness answer these and subsequent questions.

Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health and Wellness has worked with professions and occupations in the health workforce in terms of establishing an overall health resource plan for the province in terms of professionals and workers. We have added through the good offices of the Department of Learning a number of training positions in our postsecondary institutions across the province. We have also announced additional internships for physicians. We have anticipated that there will be a demand for health care workers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Cancer Board is taking every possible measure to retain and to attract and to move the technician resources that there are in this province and use them effectively. I would draw to the attention of the opposition members of the House generally that this is a situation that has been faced before and more dramatically by other provinces in Canada. It is my understanding that there are provinces in eastern Canada that have been sending patients out of Canada to receive treatment in the United States. We are still optimistic that we can cope with the situation here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the rest of my questions, then, will be directed to the minister of health. Given that last month recent graduates in radiation therapy left the province, why did this government wait so long to renegotiate wage increases in an effort to retain and recruit these necessary and vital health professions?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we have through the Alberta Cancer Board been at the table. We have negotiated, I think, within a very reasonable period of time additional compensation for the radiation technicians. That has been part of our overall effort in this particular area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question, also to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness: given that 10 radiation therapists are urgently needed in this city alone, can the minister tell this House how many radiation therapists are currently being trained at the Cross Cancer Institute?

Thank you.

2:30

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite aware, as I've indicated, that we have a shortage. It is a shortage nationwide.

In terms of the Cancer Board, which is of course very, very concerned and working hard to meet this particular challenge and rectify the situation, they have negotiated I think fairly and reasonably with the technicians with respect to remuneration. I think that will help. They are looking, as I've said, at the best deployment of the staff that's available to them, and as I've indicated, this is not unique to Alberta although we are certainly very, very concerned about the situation here as it applies to people in Alberta. [Dr. Oberg rose]

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry. We're well beyond my definition of brevity.

The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Grain Transportation

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Last week the federal Liberals' Canadian Transportation Agency announced another increase of 4.5 percent in freight rates charged directly to the farmers. This is in addition to an average increase of more than $17 per tonne all absorbed by the Alberta farmers since the elimination of the Crow rate. The Premier has written the Prime Minister demanding quick action on transportation reform, and I know that the minister of agriculture has lobbied Ottawa in favour of implementing the Kroeger/Estey reports. To the minister: what does last week's announcement mean to Alberta farmers?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, this is very concerning to us and to all Alberta farmers. The fact is that this increase in freight rates will come directly out of the farmer's pocket, and we estimate that it'll probably mean between $11 million and $12 million direct increased cost to the Alberta farmer.

Now, that's the direct cost. There's another cost here that we have to also recognize, and that is the fact that the price on the domestic market is somewhat related to the export market. So when you create a lower price for the farmer at his gate by this increased cost of transportation, you are also going to be lowering the gate price for the domestic market.

In direct costs it looks like a farm of about a thousand acres of wheat will have an increased cost of $1,400 to $1,600. So it's very significant when you consider that this is increased cost. We've got the cost of fuel going up; fertilizer is going up; land prices are going up. It's not a pretty picture.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you. Having not heard a decision out of Ottawa on the issue of transportation reform, how does the minister plan to pressure Ottawa to ensure that maximum efficiencies will be sought rather than the full burden of the costs being continually passed on to the farmer?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, last spring the Premier and I met with a number of organizations, and these organizations have representation from right across the prairie provinces. All of them were urging that we push ahead with the reforms that we find in the Estey/Kroeger reports. I went down to Ottawa and met with eight senior ministers in the federal government along with representation from the Prime Minister's office, from the Privy Council. We were urging that they move forward with the reforms that are suggested in the Estey and then the Kroeger implementation reports. We're worried that they may just come with part of it.

One of the examples, of course, would be a cap on the rail. While that would help and would be a good thing particularly in light of this most recent increase, the difficulty is that that's only one component of a more major problem that we have, and until the government starts to listen to these groups from across the prairie provinces as opposed to the people on the board of the Canadian Wheat Board, we are going to have a problem. So we are going to continue to lobby. We'll be on the phone, we'll be writing letters, and we will be speaking to ministers of the federal cabinet.

MR. FISCHER: Is this indecisiveness on grain transportation reform a systematic example of Ottawa's record of contempt in dealing with the issue facing Alberta farmers?

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, if a question ever invited an opinion, that certainly did. So let's stick to the facts and briefly.

MR. LUND: I will stick to the facts. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The facts speak for themselves. The fact is that the Alberta farmer was left out of the most recent announcement for Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The fact is that the Alberta farmer has had a vote on dual marketing while the federal government has chosen to ignore it. There have been a number of other cases where in fact the Alberta farmer has spoken loud and clear that they want reforms, but these reforms have not been forthcoming. Mind you, they're dealing with Liberals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mental Health Services

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 29, 1999, the Minister of Health and Wellness stated in this House, "Since 1993-94 spending has increased 100 percent or it's doubled as far as community mental health services are concerned." In contrast to that claim the now disbanded Provincial Health Council of Alberta commissioned a national health practice report by Deloitte & Touche in 1997, which found that between 1992 and '96 mental health expenditures were reduced by 4 percent for community services and mental health was reduced by 9 percent. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister provide proof of his claim that spending to deal with the mental health crisis has increased by 100 percent when in fact funding for community programs appears to have decreased?

MR. JONSON: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important for the hon. member to recognize that this is the year 2000, and he is quoting from a period of time between 1993 and 1996, as I understand it. The questions that he is referring to me were raised with me last fall, in 1999, and I'm quite prepared to provide him the statistical information he's seeking.

MR. GIBBONS: Will the minister of health commit funding to a comprehensive system of community-based services in line with nationally endorsed best practices in mental health reform?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the statistic that I was referring to before – that is, a doubling of the overall financial effort in terms of community programs – is the case. We have a number of initiatives under way. Most recently we announced – and this would be above the money that I mentioned earlier – a program for anorexia/bulimia treatment, something very much needed. I think we are leading in many ways in that particular area now in the country. We have been active participants in the children's mental health initiative through Alberta Learning. I could go on with quite a long list of initiatives that are under way in the area of a community-based system of support for those people in the mental health system.

MR. GIBBONS: Will the minister answer as to how Alberta's psychiatric hospitals, in particular the Ponoka hospital, fit within the contemporary system of mental health care delivery in this province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is recognized that there is a necessity to have a hospital type of facility for the care of the mentally ill.

One of the things, of course, that has happened and that the system is not given a great deal of credit for is that the length of stay in these hospitals is reduced. Certainly the whole area of mental health treatment has changed a great deal, but there is still a need in the system for hospitals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Workers' Compensation Board

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday, April 20 the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, in response to a question from my colleague from Calgary-Cross, agreed to take additional steps to let seriously injured workers know that a WCB service review and a WCB appeal system review process are currently under way. Despite the minister's latest press release extending the deadline for submissions to May 15, I'm finding that many injured workers have no knowledge that the process is even taking place. Can the Minister of Human Resources and Employment explain what additional steps he is taking to ensure that WCB injured workers know how to participate in this process?

2:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be some concern about the amount of knowledge that injured workers might have in order to provide input. It was one of the reasons, then, that in my answer previously I talked about perhaps the need for MLAs to become directly involved. We've tried to examine what it is that in fact we have done, particularly with the questionnaire that's been involved. I'm assuming that the hon. member is questioning about the ability we have to get that questionnaire into their particular hands.

I would like to point out to the hon. member and the rest of the members here in the Assembly that we have provided 500 of these questionnaires to the Alberta Injured Workers Association, 300 have gone to the opposition parties here in the Legislature, 300 were sent to the Calgary injured workers group, and then 50 were sent to the group that has been recently formed down in my area. Actually, they were sent to Taber, but they are the southern Alberta chapter of the Injured Workers Association. We have also sent out and responded to 600 individual requests. So, Mr. Speaker, we have something in the order of 1,750 questionnaires out there, and of course we're awaiting their return.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the latest press release announcing the extension for submissions to May 15 has not been published by any daily or weekly newspapers that I'm aware of, will the minister place ads in those dailies and weeklies to make sure that we get meaningful input for a meaningful outcome?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, again I want to indicate to the hon. member and to members here in the House that in putting together the government MLA input committee, I had not contemplated the expenditure of funds for the realm of advertising in terms of input. As I stand here today, I'm still not inclined to do that.

I believe that it is my responsibility as a steward of taxpayers' money to use my budget, as other ministers do, in the most meaningful way and of course in a way that's based upon the business plans that have been approved by this Legislature. I know that with advertising you have the constant problem of: are you getting through the clutter of advertising that's out there, or are you simply adding to it? Thus far in my analysis of the situation, with 1,750 questionnaires that have gone out to the specific groups that we are concerned about in this input review, I do not see the need for paid advertising with the use of taxpayers' money.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With great trepidation, to the same minister: what's the good of having a review process on the WCB service and appeals issue without funding an appropriate communications plan, which results in what you've got today? The majority of injured workers don't even know that it's happening.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I'm not prepared to accept at this time that a majority of the injured workers are not knowledgeable of the particular situation. Through the initial discussion about what was going to be done regarding the Workers' Compensation Board, there were a number – I don't recall them initially, Mr. Speaker – of press reports about whether or not the minister was doing enough, whether he wasn't doing anything. The opposition managed to get into the situation, as they should. I mean, that's a responsibility that they have here. Every MLA in this House has had an opportunity to deal with this particular situation.

It was determined, Mr. Speaker, that the simple addition of a service review by the WCB would not be enough, so I was able to arrange, I believe on behalf of every MLA sitting in this room, the opportunity to provide some input. If not directly to the WCB, they could do it to this government input committee. Every MLA has had an opportunity to do that, so now if the message is not getting through, I ask all MLAs to look in their mirrors.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, it's now day 25 since the Premier promised to release the 30 blank pages from his private hospitals policy research. This Premier's suppression of the contents of his 30-page private hospitals policy is as toxic to democracy in this province as the Premier's $440 million hazardous waste plant was toxic to the pocketbooks of taxpayers. There's something hazardous about this government's behaviour when it comes to health care, and it's called hiding the truth. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the government keeps talking about giving Albertans full information on health care, why are the minister and this government withholding the 30 blank pages from their private hospitals policy playbook? When are they going to keep their promise and release the documents?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there is no private health or private hospitals paper.

MR. SAPERS: Point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. We recognize that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora wants to raise a point of order later.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Given that this document says "private hospitals policy" on page 31, on page 34, on page 41, on page 44, and on page 47, will the minister promise Albertans that they will see the full 30 pages from the private hospitals policy, not some sanitized version prepared by his $8 million Public Affairs Bureau, before the final, forced vote on his private health care policy?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I believe that this question has been raised before, and as I've indicated, the matter is being followed through on according to the rules that apply as far as the release of information and our own legislation in this Assembly.

MS CARLSON: Stop the stonewalling, Mr. Minister.

Will the minister put the $8 million Public Affairs Bureau and the $5 billion Ministry of Health and Wellness on full alert and give Albertans access to the 30 blank pages tomorrow, before the closure vote hits the floor of this Legislature and that bill is gone forever?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, the legislation that applies to this particular matter is being followed, and that is the process that's in place.

Creative Library Service Award

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Library Trustees Association board established the creative public library service award in 1986 to recognize innovative achievements, activities, programs, and partnerships. So it is with pride and appreciation that I wish to note that a service that connects seniors to our community through Internet training as well as the formation of a book club has made the St. Albert library this year's creative public library service award winner.

As the Minister of Community Development noted, the St. Albert library responded to a real need in the community by providing useful, imaginative, and creative services. We all know that this week, May 1 to May 7, is Alberta Library Week, and as such it is dedicated to raising awareness of library services and promoting lifelong learning in our communities.

I wish to take the opportunity now to express my appreciation for the remarkable resources offered at St. Albert Public Library.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Library Week

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is the first day of Library Week in Alberta, and I want to recognize, celebrate, and give a cheer for our libraries. I know that many of us have fond memories of the local library from our youths, whether that be for the summer reading contests or for that special librarian who helped you find the information you needed to finish your student essay. Well, keep those memories in a safe place, but open your eyes to what is happening now.

Let me tell you, libraries are happening places today. To quote the nearest 15-year-old: sweet. All libraries have computers with Internet access, and many have rentals of tapes, CDs, and even videos. So any Albertan with a library card can access the Internet, even accessing Hansard at www.assembly.ab.ca. Libraries have kept up with changes in technology, and this year's theme is Reading is Smart Technology.

Sadly, the government is still funding libraries on a 1997 per capita basis. Given the increase in population for many Alberta centres, this has really made it difficult for the staff and the boards. So this week get way cool and check out your local library, and while you're there, give the staff a big smile and a thank you.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort-McMurray.

Fort McMurray Oil Barons

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today as MLA for Fort McMurray, the oil sands capital of the world, to extend my congratulations to the Fort McMurray Oil Barons for not only winning the Alberta Junior Hockey League but as of yesterday defeating the British Columbia Chilliwack Chiefs to win the Doyle Cup and Pacific championship. They now move on to the premiere of national championships, the Royal Bank Cup, to be hosted here in our province of Alberta, in fact in the city of Fort McMurray, May 5 to May 14, starting this Friday. As co-chair of the national event, along with Robert Campbell and 500 volunteers we're very proud to be hosting all of Canada in junior A hockey. We wish all teams from across Canada the very best in this national championship.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Earth Day

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was Earth Day, the day when we remember the finite nature of our planet and the need to preserve it for future generations. As caretakers of this planet we must safeguard the biodiversity that exists here now. Environmental diversity is crucial because of the interdependence of living things.

Since this interdependence is not fully understood, human beings must be careful to respect and preserve all species in sufficient numbers. This means preserving their habitat as well. Unfortunately, this government has not committed to this goal. We see Bill 15, the Natural Heritage Act, shelved for another year because of ministerial infighting. We see a government approve the import of hazardous waste from around the world in spite of significant public opposition.

On Earth Day we remember that time is running out, and I call on the Alberta government to return to the vision that originally inspired the special places program, to become inspired by what we can still save in this province. They are headed in the wrong direction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

55th Anniversary of Liberation of Holland

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and recognize the contributions made by Canadian soldiers from the Lord Strathcona's Horse regiment in the Second World War. On April 19, 1945, soldiers from this regiment liberated the village of Nunspeet, Holland. This was the last village liberated by this regiment, and the Dutch people have not forgotten these heroic Canadians. Now, 55 years after this historic moment, the people of Nunspeet have honoured our veterans with a memorial, placed next to the town hall where the liberation was signed.

Mr. Speaker, our veterans are honoured when Canadians recognize their contributions, but to hear thank you from half a world away and 55 years later, to know that people have not forgotten their sacrifices and that Dutch children will continue to be told of the battles fought by Canadians must be a special honour, which words fall short of truly expressing.

Mr. Speaker, war is a horror that no person should have to endure. I believe the best way for Canadians to honour the victories of our veterans is to never forget their sacrifices and to continue to be a nation that leads the peace process around the world.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, I have notice of at least three points of order. Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, do I have notice of a fourth? The hon. Opposition House Leader, first point of order.

Point of Order Abusive Language

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'll collapse my second one into the first one because it was the same wording used by the Premier. This relates to the first set of questions and the authority would be 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I heard the Premier say that 14 times the Liberals said that they would filibuster Bill 11. That was in the first set of questions. Then he came back and said it later.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I spend as much time in this Assembly probably as any member, and I specifically have never heard a single member of my caucus at any time in the entire debate on Bill 11, at second reading or in Committee of the Whole, talk about a filibuster. The Premier was waving some papers, and hopefully he tabled those, but I challenge the Premier to find a single time when a member of the opposition caucus said that what they were about was a filibuster.

Now, that's an American invention. You don't find it in the parliamentary authorities, but in December of 1912, when the Naval Aid Bill of Sir Robert Borden was being debated, that was a filibuster. In 1983, when the bell-ringing episode occurred in the House of Commons, that was a filibuster. To have members of the Official Opposition stand up and make thoughtful, forceful debate about a bill that they can see through . . . [interjections] If the 15 members of the government caucus don't understand when the wool is being pulled over their eyes, the opposition clearly does not have that problem. We see the bill for what it is. If you look at the Hansard, it speaks for itself. You go through and you read the Hansard. That is not a filibuster. It's people repeating and emphasizing and stressing weaknesses in a bill that's ill conceived, poorly drafted. Then all of that's compounded with this enormous $2.7 million marketing campaign.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is not a filibuster, and I challenge the Premier or the government representative to find a single incident in Hansard where a member of my caucus has said that the opposition had undertaken a filibuster in Bill 11. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on this point of order.

MRS. NELSON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that the Opposition House Leader raised the issues of the response to the debate and particularly in committee of the opposition to Bill 11. When the Premier was talking about progress and the time frames that were involved in the debate at committee – when we last debated the bill, the last evening we were in debate, I believe we had spent a number of hours on subamendment A1, section A, and all we were trying to do was to add the dentists to the clause, "physician or dentist." That was the only amendment, and I don't believe that we've got off that.

Just to give you some idea of how this debate has gone, I will say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who is chitchatting over there, is quoted in Hansard, page 1002, on April 13:

When we think there's enough support to defeat the package of amendments or at least this amendment, if they can't be further corrected, then I guess we'll allow it to get to a vote. But until then, I don't think any government member should be operating under the impression that debate will be swift on these government amendments. The government amendments, in my reading of them, don't do a lot to deal with the . . . bill. So we will carry on with debate on this amendment as we see fit, and I look forward to additional opportunities myself to participate.

Then the Leader of the Opposition, who was having a hissy fit here today, came with: we believe the bill is beyond amending and needs to be pulled completely; they are scrambling in desperation to find out how they can get the bill somehow palatable to Albertans. Then she says: I don't think this bill is amendable. It goes on and on.

Another one. This is about the amendments. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark: it won't make any difference; the bill is flawed; what they need to do is to go back to the drawing board; what they're doing is just continuing to move towards privatization of health care; it won't make any difference at all.

It goes on and on. There's a whole list of them. It doesn't matter what the amendment is, Mr. Speaker. One of the members opposite said that this bill is narrow and there's no option, no amendments, no tinkering, no bill; scrap this bill. Right at the back, Edmonton-Manning.

It just goes on and on. There's a whole list of them. There's no intent, Mr. Speaker, for the amendments that have been put forward in this House to be debated in a logical, rational fashion by the opposition. In fact, if you look at the debate and the hours that have been spent on the first amendment, there's been everything else discussed but that first amendment, which was simply to add the dentists to the original bill with the physicians. Then entering into a subamendment on that clause was another play to deliberately delay passage, and there were other amendments to come.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, you can go on. Every one of them has just gone off on little tangents and said: it doesn't matter what comes forward, we're not going to debate it; we're not going to deal with the issue; we're not going to look at the amendment; there'll be no tinkering; there'll be no responses. I don't know what you would call that but filibustering.

I don't think there is a point of order. I think the Premier was simply telling the truth, telling Albertans how many hours have been spent to simply add the word "dentist." That's all we've got to on this bill on the amendments. It is ludicrous to carry on like that. I think the point of order is ill founded. I don't think that there is one, Mr. Speaker, and I hope you'll rule in that way.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Opposition House Leader, you rose twice on it. We've dealt with both of them at the same time, so I don't have to get up twice to deal with this?

MR. DICKSON: I'm sure, Mr. Speaker. If I was not clear, the second one was a second reference by the Premier to exactly the same point, so my arguments would apply to both, please.

THE SPEAKER: Well, one has had the ability to review the Blues, so here's what the Blues say. These are the words of the hon. leader of the government:

So just as a filibuster is a tool of the Legislature, closure is a tool of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, having said that, it seems that they're very anxious to speak on this bill. In one breath they say that they want to filibuster it, that nothing will be acceptable in terms of amendments, yet the Member for Edmonton-Centre has spoken on this bill five times; the Member for Edmonton-Glangarry, two times; the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, five times; the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, 10 times; the Member for Edmonton-Manning, four times; the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, eight times.

At that point in time the Speaker interjected and talked about brevity. Then a little later, again the leader of the government:

Mr. Speaker, notice was given to bring about closure because there has to be some finality. This gives everyone an opportunity to vote. Closure simply means that we're bringing about a process to have a vote on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are on record 33 times saying that the bill cannot be amended to make it acceptable to them. They are on record 14 times saying that nothing will stop the complete filibuster of Bill 11.

So there's certainly reference to the use of the word "filibuster," which is an acceptable word in the parliamentary text which we have.

In essence, the chair looks at this, hears this, and basically would note that one person's filibuster is someone else's legitimate democratic expression. We might have two versions of the categorization of the same action. That ends that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on a point of order.

Point of Order Offending the Practices of the Assembly

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is, I suppose, an accumulation. I'm rising under Standing Order 23(1), which reads in part: "introduces any matter in debate which offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." That is, of course, that a member will be called to order if that happens.

I'm referring specially to the exchange that involved my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie and the Minister of Health and Wellness. Of course, I could have also risen when the Premier, as he has on several occasions, said: the government has no private health care policy. Specifically what triggered my intervention, Mr. Speaker, and what I'm hoping you will call the minister to order for is his assertion that there is no private health care policy.

My colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie was making specific reference to a package of information that was provided to the Official Opposition on February 3, 2000. It comes from Alberta Health and Wellness information services unit in correspondence signed by Mr. Roger D. Mariner, the freedom of information and privacy co-ordinator. The package of information, Mr. Speaker, which is several pages long, in no fewer than a dozen places and perhaps even more, if my count is faulty, makes specific reference to: private hospitals policy and policy position on private hospitals, cabinet, October 1999, for example, for discussion only. Throughout the pages it talks about the private hospitals policy of the government.

The minister and the Premier may wish that they had no private hospitals policy. They may be trying to convince Albertans that they have no private hospitals policy, but clearly from the government's own Department of Health and Wellness in policy document papers, in briefing notes provided to cabinet, in copies of e-mail between senior members of the minister's policy branch there is repeated reference after reference after reference to the private hospitals policy of this government.

The government can't have it both ways. They should not be introducing into debate in this Legislature something which is contrary to the practices and precedents and that is to be misleading about what government policy is.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call the Minister of Health and Wellness to order, to accept responsibility for the private hospitals policy and for the paperwork provided by his own department, which makes repeated reference to the private hospitals policy, so that we can get on with dealing with what this bill is, and that is a bill that creates private hospitals under the name of surgical facilities.

THE SPEAKER: The Deputy Government House Leader.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only people who keep spewing about private hospitals in this Legislature and outside are the opposition.

He talks about misrepresentation. The documents that the hon. member is waving came from focus groups that looked at concepts prior to a policy decision coming forward by this government. Clearly, in this bill the first clause says: there will be no private hospitals in the province of Alberta. That's the policy statement. The misrepresentation of standing up with photocopied sheets, that were letter sized and that they've put to 11 by 14 and wave around as blank little pages and have their little hissy fits, has gone on long enough in this Legislature. They talk about misrepresentation and misleading Albertans. That's the only group that's doing it.

The policy of this government has been clearly enunciated in Bill 11: there will be no private hospitals in the province of Alberta. End of debate right there. For him to run around and say something different is misrepresentation, Mr. Speaker, and I hope you'll rule on that.

THE SPEAKER: Well, the only thing the chair is going to rule on – and this was raised time and time again in the days prior to the break – is that question period is a time for the solicitation of facts and information with respect to government policy. It's not a time for debate. So when debatable points are introduced in questions in the question period, I guess this leads to this sort of thing. So let's deal with the question period the way we're supposed to, and we'll have ample opportunity to debate whatever it is we're supposed to debate. No point of order. Let's move on to Orders of the Day.

MS OLSEN: Shame on you.

THE CLERK: Government Bills and Orders . . .

THE SPEAKER: Mr. Clerk, please sit down.

Did the chair hear the hon. member say to the chair, "Shame on you," in terms of this ruling? I'm going to give the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood an opportunity to rise and say it to the chair or withdraw it.

MS OLSEN: I'll withdraw that, Mr. Speaker. I'll withdraw the comment that I said, "Shame on you." Thank you.

Bill 18
Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

[Adjourned debate April 3: Mrs. McClellan]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and offer some comments on Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. In fact, my comments on Bill 18 are not favourable. The object of this bill is to establish the rules and procedures of implementation and administration of Alberta's 11 percent single-tax system, as originally announced in the government's budget.

This is a significant deviation from the way Albertans are taxed now, and the government would like to put forth that this is the best and the only way to tax Albertans. Well, I think we need to put some perspective to it. I think we need to talk about some of the background and the history of how this government feels it's been brought to this place and how, I guess, the opposition feels that Albertans will not be fairly taxed. Fair taxation is the issue here, Mr. Speaker.

I have to point out that although the Provincial Treasurer seems to maybe admire some of his southern neighbours and looks at some of the fiscal policy in the south, especially the Republican view certainly falls in line with his ideology probably, let's also note that the U.S. right wing, the Republican Party and its extremes, have also distanced themselves from this tax strategy. They have said: "You know what? This isn't a fair and equitable system, and we are not going to pursue this path. This is not a tax strategy we want to see for the citizens of the United States." They have a tremendous number of economic think tanks in the U.S. that talk about this.

Let's go to the history, Mr. Speaker. We'll go back a couple of years, to December 1997, when federal and provincial finance ministers agreed that provinces should be able to levy tax directly on taxable income. It was also agreed that provinces could choose to move to a tax-on-income structure or remain within the tax-on-tax structure.

Under the agreement reached between the federal and the provincial finance ministers, the following elements are applicable to this structure. The provinces would agree to adopt a federal definition of taxable income as a base upon which to levy provincial income tax. The provinces would agree to limit the number of provincial tax brackets, including a zero rate on a narrow first bracket. The provinces would be permitted to establish a distinct block of provincial nonrefundable tax credits, to be multiplied by the lowest nonzero provincial rate. The provincial credits would be based on the federal credits but would add supplemental provincial amounts. I think it's interesting that this province would be involved in a tax credit system as we're talking about health care and we're talking about the federal responsibility and the federal share – this particular government doesn't like the idea of tax credits – and would misinform Albertans about how much, between a tax credit and the actual cash, is being paid by the federal government. I find it interesting that they would want to adopt a tax credit system here.

Provinces would retain access to existing low-income tax reductions with either individually based or family-based income testing, and not all provinces would have to move to the tax-on-income system at the same time. Some provinces would levy tax on income while other provinces could continue the current system of levying tax on tax.

In October 1998 the Alberta Tax Review Committee recommended that the province of Alberta move to a new system of tax on income from the current system of tax on tax. As to the elements of the tax-on-income system in Alberta, the Alberta Tax Review Committee made the following recommendations. They stated that the province should introduce a single rate of provincial income tax. The single rate should be set at 11 percent for all taxpayers, and the basic personal and spousal exemptions should be increased to $11,620 and fully indexed to inflation.

They also stated that the temporary deficit elimination taxes, the flat tax rate of .5 percent and the 8 percent Alberta surtax, should be eliminated in conjunction with the implementation of the 11 percent single rate. According to this committee, the implementation of the 11 percent single rate with personal and spousal exemptions of $11,620 would have taken an additional 78,000 low-income Albertans off the provincial tax rolls and would have reduced the differences in provincial income taxes paid by double- and single-income families.

So, Mr. Speaker, that's a bit of the history of how we got to where we are today.

I think there are some other key points that we need to talk to as well. In the province's budget the government adopted the key recommendation of the Alberta Tax Review Committee, and the following key elements of the Alberta tax plan were presented at that time. They stated that in 1999 Alberta matched the federal increase in the basic and spousal exemptions to $7,131 and $6,055 respectively. The 8 percent surtax was to be eliminated by July 1, and the .5 percent flat tax and the selective tax rate were to be eliminated on January 1, 2002. On the other hand, the committee did recommend that they go hand in hand, that the deficit elimination taxes be eliminated at the same time that a flat tax is brought in. The 11 percent single rate on taxable income is to apply as well.

Mr. Speaker, there are some flaws with this whole notion, as we have spoken to. There are some major flaws. I want to focus on the 11 percent single tax rate. The first thing I want to draw to the attention of the Assembly is the fairness and equity issue. I believe that fairness and equity are being compromised under this particular tax system. The distribution of tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate is skewed towards the 4 percent of tax filers earning above $100,000, while the 39 percent of middle-income tax filers earning between $30,000 and $70,000, who pay over 45 percent of the provincial personal income taxes in this province, receive smaller tax cuts as a percentage of the current PIT paid. So where's the fairness in that? It's the middle-income people who are also again getting shafted by a tax system.

This also erodes the progressive nature of the tax system. All taxpayers regardless of taxable income pay the same 11 percent single rate. This is mitigated to some extent by the fact that some 132,000 Albertans are taken off the provincial tax rolls because of the increase in basic and spousal exemptions of $11,620.

We talked about the tax grab on the middle class. Those taxpayers who earn less than $70,000 in taxable income would receive a larger provincial tax cut under the current tax-on-tax system starting in 2001 – that's the existing system – if the federal tax measures announced in the 2000 federal budget are flowed through than they would under an 11 percent single-rate system. So already the notion of this flat tax system, this single-rate system, has created a problem in terms of how the government is going to show an actual reduction to Albertans.

Taxpayers in the high-income bracket, above $60,000, would have a significantly lower Alberta marginal tax rate under this system as well, but the marginal tax rate for the low-income earners would rise to 11 percent from 7 percent, and the tax rate at 11.4 percent, I believe it is, for the middle income would be reduced by only .44 percent, Mr. Speaker, under this particular scheme.

Also, when we talk about the tax grab and look at the alignment between the existing federal structure and the existing provincial structure, we see that the greater reduction in that structure would occur in that particular system for the middle-income earners. So again we have some concern about who is going to get the biggest share of the tax break, and it's not the people in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, not them at all.

Let's talk about the higher marginal rates for low- and middle-income earners. That's going to prove to be an interesting issue. As we've already said, we're talking about trying to flatten out the tax rate, but we still have those low-income earners who are still going to remain taxed. Their particular marginal rate is going to go up. That's significant given the notion that this is supposed to be in the best interests of the middle-income people, and that's just not bearing out to be true.

I think what's interesting is that the hon. Treasurer and the Premier and this government could get into: who's going to lower taxes further? Well, we know who can lower our taxes further, and it's not this government. They don't have the base to do that. First of all, they don't have enough taxes to do it. Second of all, they don't have enough money to do it. Even reducing this particular tax now to give the tax break that Albertans were supposed to receive if they were to remain under the current system, which they won't receive, is going to cost this government far more money than they anticipated.

You know, I wonder how that whole concept is going to come to a conclusion. Is it going to be a tax race? Who can lower the taxes fastest? Who can give the biggest tax break? Is that the kind of game that the government wants to get into? I don't think that's in the best interests of Albertans, because let's not forget that when we're talking about tax reductions, we're talking about tax strategies, and strategy is the operative word here. So we don't want to get into a position where we're playing a game of who can reduce their taxes the fastest here.

I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, to point out that a comparable $877 million tax reduction package under the current tax-on-tax system consisting of the elimination of the 8 percent surtax, about $162 million, the elimination of the flat tax rate, about $325 million, retaining the Alberta selective tax reduction, about $85 million, and a reduction in the basic federal tax on tax from 44 percent to 41 percent, about $305 million, would result in a far more equitable reduction on all taxes across the board, including, as I've said before, significant tax cuts for middle-income earners.

A key point here is this whole notion that the flat tax is going to be the be-all and the end-all, and that just isn't true, Mr. Speaker, and it has been pointed out by other chartered accountants in this city. Mr. Brad Severin, I believe, has identified that as a huge deficiency in the tax policy that this government is going to.

I'll be interested in hearing from the Treasurer or anybody else that can help me understand how they're going to meet the tax reduction that they aimed for without causing considerable concern in other areas of fiscal restraint or having to make adjustments by reducing the flat tax rate from 11 percent to, say, 10 or 9.5 percent. At 9.5 percent that would cost a significant amount of money.

You know, if we look at the whole issue of the tax grab and if we look at that based on the federal tax measures, we see that, and I'd just like to highlight a few key points here. In 2001 a taxpayer earning $35,000 will pay about $2,300 in provincial taxes under the current tax-on-tax system while paying $2,700 in provincial taxes under an 11 percent single rate. That, Mr. Speaker, is a tax grab of about $186. If we look at 2004, that same $35,000 income earner will pay about $2,200 in provincial taxes under the current tax-on-tax system while paying $2,500 in provincial taxes under the 11 percent single rate. That tax grab is $322.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at the $50,000 income earner, they'll pay just over $4,000 in provincial taxes under the current tax-on-tax system, and under the proposed 11 percent system they would pay $4,221, a tax grab of about $177. If we look at that same income earner, by 2004 we look at $3,700 in provincial taxes under the current structure and $4,100 under the 11 percent tax structure, and that is a $379 tax grab.

If we just keep looking at that, as you move up now, look at the $65,000 a year wage earner. Under the current system they pay $5,700, and under the 11 percent rate they pay only $5,800. That, Mr. Speaker – and this is where you can see the actual rate for the higher income earners is less – is only a tax grab of $76. If we look at that into 2004, we also note that same $65,000 income earner will pay $5,300 under the current system and $5,800 under the 11 percent structure. That's a tax grab of $436.

Mr. Speaker, my time is running short here, but I think the point is clear. Going to the 11 percent tax scheme – and it becomes a real scheme in my view – deprives middle-income earners in this province of an acceptable rate of tax reduction. They don't see the intended tax reduction by this government, and it behooves me as to why the government would want to continue on this path when there is no tax break for Albertans under the 11 percent scheme.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is my first opportunity to speak to Bill 18, and I'm glad to do that. I have to tell you that it takes a bit of doing some homework for me to speak to this bill.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think a lot of people, unless they take some financial courses or go to some accounting courses or some business management courses, kind of just deal with taxes with a blind eye. They just know they have to pay them. I see some people disagreeing, but listen to the whole discussion. They know they have to pay taxes. They know stuff comes off their cheque. They're very busy with life, and then come time to file their income tax, they hand it over to somebody who does it for a living and they do it. They're glad if they get some money back and upset if they have to pay a little extra, but on they go with life. But what we all have in common is that we don't want to pay more taxes. We realize that we pay them for the benefit of what we value, so we pay them, but we don't understand sometimes the intricacies of how they are paid and how different levels happen.

Here we have a proposal that looks simple. It looks simple. In fact, a lot of people don't understand there's a federal level and a provincial level. They think: oh, good; I'll only be paying 11 percent on all my taxes. That's totally false. I like to think I'm an average person, but I don't think the average person truly understands all the implications of an 11 percent flat tax. It may seem simpler, but I don't think it's fairer. So I'm glad to take a few minutes to talk a bit about it and to talk about some of the things that this bill will do if it goes through.

It's going to unhook from the federal system by levying a provincial tax on taxable income rather than on a basic federal tax as of next January. A single provincial rate of 11 percent will apply on taxable income as of next January as well. We're going to have basic and spousal exemptions of $11,620 established as of next January and indexed to Alberta CPI, and then other federal nonrefundable tax credits will continue to apply and will be indexed to Alberta's CPI.

Now, I remember the Treasurer who had the young couple in the gallery when he brought in his budget and talked about how it will save them money, et cetera, et cetera. But what he hadn't accounted for was the federal budget and how this flat tax is actually going to hurt some Albertans, because the federal minister did a far fairer job of reducing taxes. So I'm hoping there are going to be amendments, and hopefully we can see them before we get into committee. Are there going to be amendments to this bill, Mr. Acting Treasurer? I'm hoping there are going to be amendments to Bill 18 in committee, the 11 percent one. The changes at the federal level, I'm thinking, may make you want to rethink some of the things because it's not going to be as fair as it could be if you addressed that. He's going to think about that, I'm sure.

In the 2000 tax year alone under the federal government tax plan the middle-income tax bracket will be reduced from 26 percent to 24 percent as of July 2000. So there will be an increase in the threshold of the middle- and high-income tax brackets to $30,000 and $60,000 respectively, and the basic and spousal exemptions will increase to $7,231 and $6,140 respectively.

Its impact on these tax measures on Alberta could be $66 million in the 2000 tax year alone. As a result of the impact of the federal government tax measures through to the year 2004, it's going to happen that Alberta taxpayers below $70,000 in taxable income are going to be paying more in provincial personal income taxes under an 11 percent single tax rate in the 2001 tax year and subsequent tax years than they would under the current tax-on-tax system.

On March 14, this past March 14, the Provincial Treasurer announced that the provincial government reduced the 11 percent single rate and raised exemption levels in order to flow through the federal government tax measures contained in their budget. But on March 15 it was announced by the Premier that the government would introduce amendments to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

Remember the big kerfuffle? We had the big announcement here of the 11 percent cut. Then the federal budget came out, and it was: oh, my gosh; this isn't going to be good for Albertans. So the Premier said: well, we're going to have amendments to our bill. But we haven't seen those yet, so I'm assuming they must be in the works or worked out. Actually, if the Acting Treasurer were really smart, he could send those amendments early. We'll look at them and be ready to support them or not support them. Maybe they're not drafted. I don't know. Anyway, I know that announcement was made, and I am sure that those details will follow. In all fairness it's really hard to support this at this reading if we don't know what the amendments are going to be, because to support this would be unfair to Albertans.

Now, if we talk about some of the major flaws in this bill – and I think all of us like to talk about fairness and equity. Well, certainly I do. When you look at this, the distribution of tax cuts under the 11 percent rate is skewed towards 4 percent of the tax filers earning more than $100,000. They get a bigger break than anyone else, so we have to wonder who this bill is for. If it's only serving a select few at the very top end of the pay scale, then it's not the best move for this province, certainly not when we're thinking: how can we serve all of the people of Alberta, not just a few at the top end of the pay scale? It's skewed towards the 4 percent of tax filers earning above $100,000, while 39 percent of middle-income tax filers earning between $30,000 and $70,000, who pay over 45 percent of the provincial personal income taxes in Alberta, receive smaller tax cuts as a percentage. So we've got something that isn't fair for everyone and certainly beneficial for a few.

The progressive nature of the tax system will be eroded. All taxpayers, regardless of taxable income, will pay the same 11 percent to the extent that some 132,000 Albertans are taken off the provincial tax rolls because of the increase in basic and spousal exemptions. What happens is that there's going to be a tax grab on the middle class, taxpayers who earn less than $70,000. You know what? People think: oh, well, $70,000 is a pretty good wage. It certainly is, but when you're raising children and they're going to college and they need vehicles to get to and from university or a bus pass, et cetera, et cetera, of course every dollar saved helps during those very expensive years. I do believe that people have expensive years in their lives. Once your mortgage is paid off and your car payment is paid off and your kids are done going through college and maybe they've left home, just maybe there's money left at the end of the month.

Now, I'm not there yet, and the Speaker in the chair right now says that he isn't there either. [interjections] We've got people who didn't get a good enough break, Mr. Speaker, but that's okay. I am speaking about what the 11 percent tax means, and you can speak very generically at this second reading about taxes and what they mean to families.

Of course I think we do have to look very seriously at what this bill means to the middle income. It's going to be a higher tax grab for them. Taxpayers who earn less than $70,000 in taxable income would receive a larger provincial tax cut under the current tax-on-tax system starting in the year 2001 if the federal tax measures announced in the 2000 federal budget flow through than they would under an 11 percent single-rate system. This is due to the fact that the distribution of tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate is skewed towards those taxpayers earning $100,000.

Now, you know, Mr. Speaker, I had to read this, and I've read it over three times. This is confusing stuff to the average person out there. The reality is that this is not a good bill for middle-income earners. Simply put like that, most of us know that there will be less dollars in our pocket, in the middle income, if this goes through.

Higher Alberta marginal rates for low- and middle-income earners, assuming the elimination of the .5 percent flat rate tax in January of 2001 goes through – taxpayers in the 17 percent bracket, which is up to $30,000, and 24 percent of the middle-income tax bracket, which is between $30,000 approximately and $60,000, would have a higher marginal rate under the 11 percent single rate than they would under a tax-on-tax system in the 2001 tax year. Taxpayers in the high-income tax bracket, above $60,000, would have a significantly lower Alberta marginal rate under the 11 percent single-rate tax than under the current tax on tax. Those are some flaws I see in this bill. I'd like to see some changes made to this.

Let's have a look at some other fairness and equity that I think is compromised under Bill 18. If we talk about the 39 percent of Alberta taxpayers in the income class between $30,000 and $70,000 per year, they receive a cut of an average of 9 percent in their provincial taxes under the 11 percent single rate. The top 1 percent of Alberta tax filers in the income class of $150,000 and over per year receive an 18 percent cut in the provincial taxes under an 11 percent single rate. I just don't see that as fair. Unless I'm missing something – and I welcome others to join the debate to explain it to me – I have real concerns that the group around the $40,000 to $50,000 is going to only see a 9 percent cut and the people over $150,000 will see an 18 percent cut.

I guess it's the old argument: well, those people have worked harder for their money; they get to keep more of it. I guess that is an argument, but we can also say that I'm glad I have the ability to pay. Those struggling on minimum wage – I'm glad I make a better wage than that and can afford to pay more than they can. I'm grateful for the opportunity to have a job that pays better and to work at that. Not everyone has the capability of making a large income. We can say: oh, some people just don't work hard enough. That's not true, Mr. Speaker. That's not true. Lots of people work very, very hard, but they truly only have the ability to make a minimum wage.

I have concerns that we're going to a very self-centred, me first, what I make is mine kind of mentality in this province. I think we're forgetting that collectively we do care about our neighbours. Part of that caring is making the tax system as fair as it can be. I agree that nobody likes to pay more than their share of taxes. On the other hand, we should be grateful that we have the ability in our personal lives to make the money that allows us to pay taxes, that we're not sitting there below the poverty line and going to food banks or going to local organizations to maybe help our children with school fees.

I look at the whole issue of taxes maybe not from an accountant's point of view or a business management point of view but maybe from a social or a community point of view, where we try to make it as fair as we can. You know, if I'm making a decent wage, I don't want to pay over half of it into taxes. I don't. But I also know that I do have to pay some and that there are others who I'm going to have to help along the way. When looking at this bill, I do think we've missed some of the fairness in this issue.

A few more points about fairness and equity in this. The middle 39 percent of Alberta tax filers in the income class between $30,000 and $70,000 receive 26 percent of the total tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate. The top 4 percent of Alberta tax filers in the income class of $100,000 and over receive 31 percent of the total tax cuts under this flat tax rate. So once again we've got a difference, where people making more money are getting more of a cut than people making less money. I just don't see that as equitable as it could be. Maybe that's my own perspective, but that's the way I see it.

Alberta's tax filers in the lowest 52 percent of the income scale – that's under $30,000 – get an average annual tax reduction of $358 under this single rate. Alberta tax filers in the middle 39 percent – that's between $30,000 and $70,000 – get an average annual reduction of $368 under this single rate. The top 4 percent of Alberta tax filers of the income scale – that's over $100,000 – get an average annual tax reduction of $4,000. The top 1 percent of Alberta tax filers – that's over $150,000 – get an average annual tax reduction of $9,000.

A taxpayer with $35,000 in taxable income paid $2,499 in provincial taxes in 1999 but pays $2,571 in provincial taxes under the flat rate that this proposes. So that's a tax increase of $72. I'm hoping that wasn't the intent of this bill. I don't think the homework has been done on this like it needs to be, especially after the federal budget came down. Now, a taxpayer with $50,000 in taxable income paid $4,333 in provincial taxes in 1999 and will pay $4,221 in 2001. So that's a cut of 2.6 percent. A taxpayer with $65,000 in taxable income paid $6,344 in 1999 and pays $5,871 under this flat rate. Now, that's a cut of 7.5 percent. Meanwhile, a taxpayer with $100,000 in taxable income paid $11,342 in provincial taxes in 1999 and pays $9,721 under this single rate in 2000. That's a cut of 14.2 percent. So you see the differences. The higher we get, we get a larger cut percentage-wise. I don't see that as fairness across the board.

However, a taxpayer with $125,000 in taxable income paid $14,912 in provincial taxes in 1999 and pays $12,000 in provincial taxes in 2001. He gets a tax cut of 16 percent.

I only have one minute. I can't believe it. I'm just getting into this.

I guess I have concerns about this bill, very big concerns. The feeling out there is: oh, this must be a good thing. In reality, it's a major tax grab on the middle-income earners, so I have deep concerns about this bill. I haven't seen the amendments. I'm anxious to see those. I can't support it the way it stands right now.

It's interesting. I've only had, to be honest, about four calls on this whole thing from people who truly understand this. They're not in support of it, and they're saying: look; I used to be an accountant; I used to be a treasurer's assistant.

I thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

3:50

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand and speak today on Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. When we look at the bill in its entirety, we start wondering: why was it brought forward? Was it the spin toward a federal election, or was it in actuality what Albertans were asking for? You know, it was interesting in today's paper. According to one letter to the editor on this particular item, is there some correlation between this and Bill 11, with this present government talking about Bill 11 and bringing it in because of some vested interests and people backing private hospitals? Then we get back to this particular item. Is this something to do with the vested interests, that this present government only cares for those with $70,000 plus as an income?

I really believe that we do have a concern with taxes throughout the country, but at the same time we're not the United States. We do like luxuries in different things, but we do have to look at taxes in their entirety. Taxes should be another item that should be dealt with from the top down and dealt with as the federal Treasurer brought out this year, where some of the tax cuts – I know we get a lot of complaints and a lot of flak thrown at myself that maybe he should have been paying down more of the debt, but at the same time, everybody was demanding some cuts to certain things or the paying of dollars toward more of our programs.

The object of Bill 18 is to establish the rules and procedures for implementing and administering Alberta's 11 percent single-rate tax system as originally announced by this provincial government in Budget '99. Alberta's 11 percent single-rate system has the following major components. Alberta will delink or unhook from the federal system by levying provincial income tax on the taxable income rather than on the basic federal tax as of January 1, 2001. The single-rate 11 percent provincial tax will apply on taxable income as of January 1, 2001. The basic personal, spousal, and equivalent-to-spouse exemptions will be established at $11,620 by January 1, 2001.

Other federal and nonrefundable tax credits really relate to the age amount, dependant amounts, CPP and EI contributions, pension income amounts, disability amounts, tuition and education amounts, medical expenses, caregiver amounts, interest on student loans, and donations and gifts. They will continue to apply and will be levied at 11 percent of the maximum amount permitted by each credit. The basic personal, spousal, and equivalent-to-spouse medical expense, pension, education, caregiver, age, and disability credits will be indexed to inflation on a year-to-year basis.

The full cost of implementing Alberta's 11 percent single-rate tax is estimated at $852 million for the 2001 tax year, Mr. Speaker. The government is estimating a $181 million, or 21 percent, recovery on the implementation of the 11 percent single rate in the 2000 tax year, leaving the net costs of implementation at $671 million. According to the government, by the year 2006 Alberta's real gross domestic product is expected to be about 1 percent, or $1.3 billion, larger than it would have been without the tax change. Alberta employment is expected to be about 20,000 higher based on the scenario we're looking at.

You know, as I peruse Hansard, I look at what the Acting Treasurer said when introducing this bill: let's get down to lowering taxes. But I look at the graphs that illustrate Albertans' yearly income. As the Provincial Treasurer at the time was putting a spin on his budget, he stressed that Albertans making $50,000 would be getting major reductions. Well, the case is that as we go through different graphs and we look at this, it isn't so. I am concerned that this is another case of words: how are we spinning this?

Now, the problem that I have with Bill 18 is the fact that more of this increment is politically driven as a tax reform. The government would have us believe that they have to delink from the tax-on-tax system to pass along the true tax savings, but as the facts comes out on Bill 18, what we will quickly discover is that all Albertans would receive more than their fair share of tax relief if we simply lower the existing rate.

The government would also argue that we had to move to a flat tax to get rid of bracket creep. Well, similar to what we're seeing in many other cases, there seems to be a lack of planning before some of these bills go forward. So when I hear the government defend its own ideologically driven bill to the exclusion of the facts, it makes me wonder exactly whose interests they are serving. Of course, we know that Bill 18 answers that question. They are serving the interests of a select group of taxpayers that they seem to be listening to, similar to what was brought out in question period today as to who this government or the Premier is really listening to on some of these bills.

Mr. Speaker, you may be interested to know that this government has increased taxes by billions of dollars since 1993. In fact, over 12 percent of the fiscal dividend, over 12 percent of the more than $9 billion worth of budget surpluses have come about exactly as a result of tax increases. While the government prides itself on saying that the only way taxes are going is down, of course the facts tell us an entirely different story. I'd hope that the government will quickly rethink the position on flat tax and will come up with the conclusion that it is not a fair implementation of taxes, that it's an unequal distribution of benefits, and that it destroys some of the parts of Canadian tax policies which have made this country one of the most desirable places in the world to live and this province one of the most prosperous places in the world to actually do business.

I think the government at its peril will dismantle this kind of progressive tax regime by pushing this one through. Right after talking about the budget, the Treasurer at the time said that he's considering personal income tax cuts in the year 2000. This wasn't anything that was announced in the budget, but it was part of the government tax plan. Why did the Treasurer actually start pushing for this? Like I mentioned before, I think it was a push towards where he was actually thinking of going over the next few months of his life.

In December '97 federal and provincial finance ministers agreed that the provinces would be able to levy tax directly on taxable income. It was also agreed that the provinces could choose to move to a tax-on-income structure or remain with the current tax-on-tax structure.

You know, Mr. Speaker, what I'm seeing by going through a lot of this literature is that there are major flaws in the 11 percent single-rate tax. Fairness and equality actually come out loud and strong. The distribution of tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate is skewed toward the 4 percent of tax filers earning above $100,000 while 39 percent of the middle-income tax filers earning between $30,000 and $70,000, who pay over 45 percent of the provincial personal income tax in Alberta, receive smaller tax cuts as a percentage of current PIT paid.

The progressive nature of the tax system is eroded. All taxpayers regardless of their taxable income pay the same 11 percent rate. This is mitigated to some extent by the fact that some 132,000 Albertans are taken off the provincial tax rolls because of the increase in the basic and spousal exemptions to $11,620. Taxpayers who earn less than $70,000 in taxable income would receive a larger provincial tax cut under the current tax-on-tax system starting in 2001. The federal tax measures announced in the 2000 federal budget are flawed, though, under the 11 percent single-rate system. This is due to the fact that the distribution of the tax cuts under the single rate is skewed toward those taxpayers earning over $100,000.

You know, we look at higher margins for Albertans in tax rates for lower and middle-income earners. Assuming the elimination of a .5 percent flat rate tax on January 1, 2000, taxpayers in the 17 percent bracket and the 24 percent middle-income tax bracket would have a higher margin rate under the 11 percent single rate than they would under a tax-on-tax system in the 2001 tax year. Meanwhile, taxpayers in the high-income tax bracket – that is, $60,000 plus – would have a significantly lower Alberta margin rate under the 11 percent rate of tax than under the current tax-on-tax.

I'd like to point out that a comparable $877 million tax reduction package under the current tax-on-tax consisting of elimination of the 8 percent surtax eliminates the flat tax rate. Retaining the Alberta selective tax reduction and the reduction of basic federal tax-on-tax from 44 to 41 percent, which actually stands for $305 million, would result in a fairer and more equitable reduction of taxes for Albertans, including significant tax cuts for middle-income earners. Now, just think about an attempt to rectify the major flaws of the 11 percent single rate by proposing a constructive amendment to improve the prospect of significant tax cuts for middle-income earners by flowing through the federal tax measures. What the minister should be proposing back to us is that the 11 percent single rate be reduced to 10.5 in the 2001 tax year. Maybe we've got to be careful about what is actually presented, because when you start getting into $30,000, $35,000, they are following the actual current rate.

Mr. Speaker, back to the fairness and equality comprised under Bill 18. The middle 39 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income class between $30,000 and $70,000, receive an average of a 9 percent cut in their provincial taxes under this 11 percent single rate. The top 1 percent of Alberta taxpayers, in the income class of $150,000 and over per year, receive an 18 percent cut in the provincial tax under the 11 percent single rate. The middle 39 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income class between $30,000 and $70,000, receive 26 percent of the total tax cut under the 11 percent single rate. The top 4 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income class of $100,000 and over, receive 31 percent in total tax cuts under this 11 percent single rate. You know, Alberta's tax filers are the lowest, at 52 percent, on the income scale between zero and $30,000, with an average annual tax reduction of $358 under the single rate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we can go through this and bring all of these figures out, but the fact is: has the government actually gone into looking at different margin rates for lower income earners? We look at what can happen to these earners over the next few years, and Bill 18 is a tax grab on the middle class based on the federal reduction measures contained in the 2000 federal budget. In 2001 a taxpayer earning $35,000 will pay $2,385.69 in provincial taxes under the current tax-on-tax system while paying $2,571.80 in provincial taxes under the 11 percent single rate. That is by all measures a tax grab by this present government of $186, and this keeps creeping up each year. By 2004 it's $322.76.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 18 may also force Alberta taxpayers with income derived exclusively from dividends of up to $24,114 to pay the provincial tax under the 11 percent single rate when we currently could earn the dividend tax free under the existing tax-on-tax system. That is because the 11 percent single-rate system establishes a rate of 32 percent on gross dividend income. If the equivalent dividend income credit is conformed with the current treatment under the tax-on-tax system, it would be 33.8 percent.

We need to get some answers on some of these items, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that maybe when we get into amendments, we can see some of these coming at us. We're making policies on the fly, and we are going to feel this over the next few years. It's obvious that the government has not done their homework by assessing the distribution effect of the 11 percent single rate on various income classes and family types as it relates to the impact of federal government tax measures once the province delinks the tax-on-tax system in 2001. That is why the government will be required to amend Bill 18 in order to reduce the 11 percent rate and increase the exemption level to ensure that all taxpayers receive the same benefit under the 11 percent single rate as they would by remaining under the tax-on-tax system. We need only examine the record over the past eight months to see that this government has been making, as I mentioned before, policy on the fly without assessing the impact on taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I will sit down and let one of the other members speak to this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the Assembly this afternoon and enter into the debate on Bill 11, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. There has been a lot said not only in this province and in this country . . .

DR. WEST: A point of clarification. He addressed it as Bill 11.

MR. MacDONALD: I apologize to the hon. minister. The minister is absolutely right. This is Bill 18. I don't know how I could have become fixated on Bill 11, especially with closure on Bill 11 today. Maybe that's why: I'm disappointed. But I did say, "Bill 11, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act," Mr. Speaker, and I apologize to the hon. minister. I'm amazed, and I compliment his keen hearing.

In regards to Bill 18, the flat tax has been discussed, Mr. Speaker, in various jurisdictions, not only in this province and in this country but in the United States of America as well. In fact, some presidential candidates have devoted their entire presidential campaigns to this idea of flat tax, and none of those individuals has even come close to the presidency. They've had difficulty even winning primaries.

When we have a look at this notion of flat tax, we have to look at the thoughts of others. There have certainly been accountants come forward who have reservations. Many groups have come forward. At the moment, the only benefit that I can see in this proposed flat tax of 11 percent is raising the personal exemption to slightly more than $11,000. This allows some tax relief, and I congratulate the government, in the development of this policy, for looking at this issue of tax relief for stay-at-home parents. That is a very positive thing in this bill, but I don't think it is reason enough that we should devote all our attention to this concept. That tax relief could be done in many ways, and when we discussed this in this Assembly earlier in Motion 506, I was disappointed with the discussion that came about regarding alternatives to the spousal exemption.

When we look at the highlights of Bill 18, Mr. Speaker, the province will unhook from the federal system by levying provincial tax on taxable income rather than on the basic federal tax as of January 1, 2001. Now, when that occurred, we saw suddenly the comments not only by media people but also, as I said before, from the accountants, and they confirmed what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora had been saying for months, that perhaps this was not as fair as we had thought.

Now, the Treasurer of the day acknowledged that the 11 percent rate would put working couples at a disadvantage. This was back in March, and this is the quote, Mr. Speaker: one-income families do very well, even after the federal government makes these changes, and we will make adjustments that will sweep in for all families. When we look at this, we have to acknowledge what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning said, and that was that this is making taxation legislation on the fly, or words to that effect. The hon. member is absolutely right.

If we go back to December of 1997, federal and provincial finance ministers agreed that provinces should be able to levy tax directly on taxable income. It was also at that time agreed that provinces could choose to move to a tax-on-income structure or remain within the current tax-on-tax structure. Under the agreement reached between the federal minister and the provincial finance ministers, the following elements were applicable, and this is information for all hon. members of the Assembly. Provinces would agree to adopt the federal definition of taxable income as a base upon which to levy provincial income tax. Provinces would also agree to limit the number of provincial tax brackets, and it's interesting to note that this included a zero rate on a narrow first bracket. Provinces would also be permitted to establish a distinct block of provincial nonrefundable tax credits to be multiplied by the lowest nonzero provincial rate. The provincial credits would be based on the federal credits but would add supplemental provincial amounts.

Now, with this agreement provinces would also retain access to existing low-income tax reductions with either individual-based or family-based income testing, Mr. Speaker. Not all provinces would have to move to the tax-on-income system at the same time. Some provinces would levy tax on income while other provinces could continue the current system of levying tax on tax.

When we look at the Alberta Tax Review Committee – this is going back to October of 1998 – the committee recommended that the province of Alberta move to a new system of tax on income from the current system of tax on tax. As we discuss this bill, we need to note the recommendations that were made by the Alberta Tax Review Committee. The recommendations are thus, Mr. Speaker. The province should introduce a single rate of provincial income tax. The single rate perhaps should be set at 11 percent for all taxpayers. The basic personal and spousal exemptions should be increased to $11,620 and fully indexed to inflation. The temporary deficit elimination tax and the 8 percent Alberta surtax – and this goes back to what has been said in this Assembly and also outside this Assembly at various public forums and what has been said by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora – should be eliminated in conjunction with the implementation of the 11 percent single rate.

Now, the hon. member was talking about the elimination of the flat tax and the Alberta 8 percent surtax, and I want to make that perfectly clear for all hon. members of this Assembly. It is next summer, I believe, that the 8 percent surtax is going to be eliminated. When we look at the studies that have been completed and we look at what has happened, we need to take a moment and point out some – they're not inconsistencies – flaws in this Alberta 11 percent single rate tax. I believe that these are the major inconsistencies or flaws, whatever you want to call them. I believe that fairness and equity are compromised, and the reason for this would be the distribution of tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate. This can be skewed, and I'm not going to go into any details on that at the moment because I think other hon. members of this Assembly have been very thoughtful in their remarks regarding this whole idea of fairness and equity. That's for everyone, regardless of their income, regardless of whether they're earning $10,000 or whether they're earning $100,000.

I would like to see the disposable income of Albertans increased. When we look at the disposable income of Albertans, they're working harder and harder for less. This has been documented at the University of Calgary by an economics professor and his staff. They did a study of three American states and the province of Alberta, and the reason why they chose Oklahoma, Colorado, and Texas in America, Mr. Speaker, was because of the composition of the economy in relation to agriculture and natural resources and activities that are involved in extracting those natural resources. In the last decade the disposable income of workers in this province remained flat while in America, in Colorado, Texas, and Oklahoma, there were significant increases in the disposable income of the workers, in the amount of money they had in their pockets to spend on whatever they wanted to. Whether it be on private health care or not, I'm not going to say, but what they wanted to spend their money on after payday was their business.

So the notion that Albertans have that they're working harder and harder and harder for less certainly is true. It's unfortunate, but it is true. If people are working hard, then they should be rewarded. I don't think that the tax system is going to be improved by this scheme. There are certainly a number of groups and a number of citizens that think this is ideal – and they certainly are entitled to their opinions – but it is not going to be for the benefit of the majority of Albertans. In fact, I believe it will be a tax grab, Mr. Speaker, on the middle class. The reason why I would say that is because taxpayers who earn less than $70,000 in taxable income would receive a larger provincial tax cut under the current tax-on-tax system starting in the year 2001.

Now, this gets back to the discussion that we had a little earlier about increasing the disposable income of Albertans. Some hon. members across the way always describe these individuals as severely normal. Well, the severely normal people I believe are earning in that range of income. If we are to have the distribution of the tax cut that is due under the 11 percent single rate, the majority of the benefits or the strongest gain is certainly not going to be made by those in those income levels but in the $100,000 range and over. This is quite unfortunate. It is quite unfortunate. It is something, I believe, that the majority of Albertans, as they study this issue, are beginning to realize.

We need to talk about taxes certainly, but we don't need to launch political campaigns on one specific idea. We look at what happened whenever some individuals made calculations and discovered "oops." Well, I was there. I was present when the hon. Premier stated that adjustments will have to be made. If it is not the case, then, that we are going to have a substantial tax cut for the individuals as it was described in their targets – we'll see what happens with this whole idea.

We need to be talking to all Albertans whenever we say that we're going to have fair taxation, Mr. Speaker. The middle 39 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income class between $30,000 and $70,000 per year, receive on average a 9 percent cut in provincial taxes under the 11 percent single rate. Nine percent. The top 1 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income class of $150,000 and over per year, receive an 18 percent cut in their provincial taxes under the 11 percent single rate. Is that fair?

Perhaps the individuals in the income class of $150,000, with closure on Bill 11, are going to be able to go to these private hospitals and have who knows what accomplished in the surgical centres or private hospitals. Who knows what they're going to be able to spend their money on? But the middle 39 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income class between $30,000 and $70,000, receive 26 percent of the total tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate. Now, is this fair? Is this equitable?

The top 4 percent – now, this is very interesting – of Alberta tax filers, in the income class of $100,000 and over, receive 31 percent of the total tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate. Is this fair? Is this equitable?

The top 1 percent of Alberta tax filers in the income scale – this is $150,000 and over – get on average an annual tax reduction of $9,700 under the 11 percent single rate.

MR. HERARD: Yeah, but how much are they paying?

MR. MacDONALD: The top 4 percent of Alberta's tax filers, in the income scale of $100,000 and over, get an average annual tax reduction of $4,700 under the 11 percent single rate.

Mr. Speaker, I heard an hon. member over there mumble, "How much are they paying?" The whole idea of fair and equitable taxes belongs in every bracket, no matter where you're at. A government that's only creating taxes and tax breaks for the fortunate few, for the rich and the powerful and the influential, this to me is a signal of a government that's out of touch. Not only is it out of touch with the taxpayers; it's also out of touch with people who are seeking treatment for illness in the public health care system. This is further evidence of a government that's out of touch, whenever we do not have a fair and balanced tax system.

We have to ask ourselves: who is this going to benefit? I know people ask that question with Bill 11 all the time, but I'm asking it here with Bill 18. Who is this going to benefit?

MR. HERARD: The people who've been paying for everything.

MR. MacDONALD: The hon. member across the way said: the people who keep paying for everything. Well, that's an interesting observation from the hon. member, but we have to devise policies, as I said before, that are balanced for everyone, not the fortunate few, not the individuals who are – and I don't want to go there, where there are tax laws for political contributions, because I think I would be a voice in the wilderness there. This whole idea of tax credits and what laws we can make or what laws we can enact – oh, my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I'm disappointed.

With those comments on Bill 18, I would cede the floor to an hon. colleague. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, at second reading and to speak to some of the principles that are embedded in the bill or that are supported by the bill.

Before I look specifically at those principles, I wanted to talk a little bit about the context in which this bill comes forward in our province at this time. One of the unfortunate things, I think, in talking about tax cuts is the absence of any consideration of why we pay taxes in the first place. Just exactly what is it that we are trying to do through our tax system? I know it's fairly clearly understood by most of us that the tax system is used to pay for government services that we need and for the administration of those services, but we seem to be long on rhetoric about the need for less tax and very short on rhetoric in terms of the good that those tax dollars that we do pay do for society and for our community. I think that's unfortunate for a number of reasons. First, I think it tends to negate the responsibilities we have as citizens for the well-being of others in our community and the well-being of the community itself. Again, I say that's unfortunate.

A tax system, for all we rail about it – and it's been railed about since time biblical – is a powerful instrument in terms of community development and support of individuals. So I'm always somewhat I guess reluctant to jump onto the "let's cut taxes" bandwagon without pausing for at least a few minutes and reflecting upon the purposes of those taxes and what we try to do with them. That's an important consideration in this province because we have been, up until recently, one that was very, very dependent on resource revenues, and boom-and-bust cycles have been, I guess, one of the strongest characteristics of our economy in the province.

I guess I would have liked to have seen Bill 18 – and all the other suggestions that we've had from the government – put into the context of some long-term plan for the province. Where are we going, and what is it exactly that we are going to have to pay for, now and in the future? How are we best able to pay for them? How does Bill 18, how does a flat tax proposal fit into that larger scheme?

We've seen a lot of tax changes since I first came to the Legislature in 1993. There have been some changes, some dramatic changes; for instance, in the taxing authority of school boards. They no longer have that ability. The municipalities have been very vocal in their concerns about the lack of tax revenues for them to carry out the obligations that they have. We have seen the machinery and equipment tax abolished, and I recall some of the discussions when that particular tax was deleted. There were promises about new investment that that would bring to the province and new jobs that that would bring to the province, yet I don't recall – and I may have missed it, Mr. Speaker – any report back to ratepayers on those promised benefits. Did the abolition of that particular tax bring the kinds of benefits that were promised by those who supported its abolition?

We've seen a lot of tinkering in terms of gasoline taxes, and there have been a number of announcements. On November 23 of last year the Premier mused about the lowering of the 9 percent per litre gasoline tax. Later that year he mused about a tax rebate for Albertans. Even later, after Christmas of 1999, the Premier was talking about a $100 tax rebate for Albertans.

Starting at the beginning of the year, on January 7, the Provincial Treasurer started talking about personal income tax cuts for the year 2000. A little later that same month the Treasurer said that the government was talking about eliminating or reducing health care premiums. The very next day the Treasurer indicated that any surplus would be used to pay down debt rather than being used to provide tax cuts in 2000. On January 26 the government's 18-cent reduction in the mill rate for the education property tax applicable to the 2000-2001 fiscal year amounted to about a $22.50 tax cut for the average homeowner. In February the Treasurer announced – I think at that time it was the eighth time the Treasurer had made this announcement – that there would be an 11 percent flat tax scheme in the provincial budget.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So there's been a whole series of announcements from the government about taxes – income, personal, gasoline, municipal – and I suspect that a lot of that rhetoric culminates in what we have before us in Bill 18. I think all of those announcements only add to the discomfort many Albertans feel, that the tax changes have not been very carefully thought through and that they are predicated on some questionable economics.

I look at the kind of trickle-down economics that drove the tax cut rhetoric in Thatcher's England and in Reagan's United States, and a lot of that seems to be what we're hearing here, that somehow or other people have more disposable income, that that's going to be spent and that will improve the economy. So we hear some of that same rhetoric here.

I hear, on the other hand, worries from Albertans that the promoters of the tax cuts are forgetting about the very, very dire need our health system finds itself in. They're forgetting about the concerns that parents across the province are raising about schools: the underfunding of schools, the increasing class sizes, and the lack of resources. They're forgetting about children living in poverty. They focus on the tax cut as being a distraction from those very real issues that many Albertans are concerned about.

If you look at the polls, a number of polls have indicated that when you ask Albertans about tax cuts, it will rank third, fourth, or fifth in terms of their fiscal concerns in the province, and the majority of them would still prefer that money be spent on the health care system and on schools prior to tax cuts being undertaken.

I did a short survey in my own constituency, and certainly the overwhelming evidence from what is a very informal and not at all scientific survey from that group of constituents was that tax cuts were very low on the agenda compared to the need for putting more money into health care and into our schools.

The other concern is that there's only one person that pays for public services, and no matter how we cut it, we all end up paying one way or the other. Our history in the last number of years in the province has been to shift that burden to a number of user fees. I think the last total was something like 700-plus user fees in the province. Of course, the government has been forced by the courts to look at those user fees and to ascertain whether they are really fees for service or are really, as many of them are, taxes.

One of the other concerns is that things will worsen for people at the bottom end of the economic scale. Although there are exemptions for very low income earners, the benefits of this bill will accrue to those people who earn above middle income, and the people at the lower ends are going to actually end up paying more. So there's a continuation of what has become almost a war against low-income families in the province that is again perpetuated through Bill 18 were it to become law.

I wanted to talk about some of the specific principles that we hold important and then to measure those principles against Bill 18. The first principle, of course, is that the tax system should be fair. I think the calculations that other speakers have read into the record show that this proposal, the 11 percent flat tax, is not fair in terms of treating all ratepayers the same. That's an important principle to have violated and I think one that many in this House are going to have difficulty supporting when Bill 18 does come to a vote, because there are enough inequities built into the tax system now that building in more through Bill 18 I think should be the last thing that we are about.

I think one of the other important principles is that the tax system should be progressive, not regressive. Income tax rates rise as taxable sums increase, and that's considered a progressive tax system, while in a regressive system sales tax and GST are considered regressive. The burden decreases as taxpayer income increases, and that's what is a characteristic of Bill 18, that it's not progressive.

I think my colleague from Lethbridge was able to outline four other principles that are in the bill and are worthy of comment. The first is that we should unlock or unlink ourselves from the federal system. Again, it's a principle that I think would find general support in that it does allow us, then, to be masters in our own house, and it allows those changes to be made unrelated to what is happening on the federal scene.

A second principle the member outlined was that the relationship between wage earners and income tax should be adjusted for family circumstances. Again, that's become the history of our tax system in this country, that we do recognize the value of families and their need for support, and we have made adjustments to the tax system to accommodate families and their particular circumstances, particularly low-income families. So I guess there are two sides to this principle: the adjustments for families, but that is balanced against the proposal being regressive in many ways.

A third principle was that the federal accommodations, the federal tax point system where credits are made available for the province, are left untampered in this legislation. Again, I think most would support that, that there won't be changes made at the federal level to in any way influence what's proposed in Bill 18 or change what Bill 18 would have.

Of course, the fourth principle, that there should be a flat rate, is the one that we are arguing very strongly against in terms of the implications for middle-income and lower income Albertans. That flat rate, as the calculations have shown and as outside independent analysts have indicated, is not fair and is certainly not equitable.

So with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to more detailed consideration of Bill 18 at the committee level. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to second reading on Bill 11, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Bill 11?

MRS. MacBETH: I did it too. I'm wrong. I'm sorry. It's a Freudian slip, Mr. Speaker. We're just so overcome by the closure thing. In fact, it is Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. Actually, at the end of my remarks I will show how in fact Bill 11 and Bill 18 are quite linked in terms of the way this government views the world. [interjections]

You know, they were really quiet until I stood up. I don't understand it. They were just sort of sitting there doing their work, and suddenly they are awake to the fact that there are some problems with this flat tax they have put into Bill 18.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to a couple of points on this bill. First of all is the whole question of a progressive income tax system and why we have it and why it's important that any tax cuts be done within a progressive structure. Secondly, why the single-rate tax is a bad thing, in our view. Finally, I want to look at the combined effect of the flat tax plus some other pieces of legislation and some other actions this government has put into effect which in their combination create the reality of some very disturbing things in terms of where this government is heading.

First of all, let me then move to the whole issue of progressive tax. Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on Bill 11, I talked about the whole question of values in terms of how Canada had originally been structured. We have built a country; we have built a Constitution.

We have built structures within our country and our Constitution to try and share our commitment to each other. Certainly, when we think about the reality of some provinces having greater fiscal capacity than the others, we've embodied in our Constitution the whole concept of equalization. Equalization, of course, ensures that there are have and have-not provinces, yet fundamentally we are all, first and foremost, Canadians.

The fact is that we are fortunate enough to live in a province with the wealth of resources that exist in Alberta, and high commodity prices for those resources have given Alberta remarkable revenue over most of the last decade. Yet we as Albertans I think are proud to share some of that benefit we've been able to have with others in our country who don't have that level of support, the same way that when commodity prices drop and the price of oil falls to $10 a barrel, as it did in 1986 in this province, Alberta becomes the benefactor of that whole notion of fiscal sharing or equalization amongst all of the provinces. I think it's an important statement in terms of how we feel we are committed to each other and committed to supporting each other.

4:50

You know, there was a wonderful thing at the rallies that were held on Bill 11 in both Calgary and Edmonton when Kiefer Sutherland, who is the grandson of Tommy Douglas, spoke at that rally, Mr. Speaker. Of course, Kiefer Sutherland's mother was there, and Mr. Sutherland told a wonderful story about going to see his grandfather, who was Tommy Douglas. The story that he told was that he and his family had been living in the United States for several years, and they had returned to their summer home, I guess their grandfather's summer home, in Quebec. The story Kiefer Sutherland told was that he went to his grandfather and was talking about living in the United States and then returning to Canada. He said to his grandfather: what is it that distinguishes us as Canadians? What his grandfather said to him was: well, there are two things that distinguish us as Canadians; the first one is we're able to . . .

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I think there should be a point of order here. Relevance, Beauchesne 459. We're really discussing Bill 18, which I believe is what's up for comment this afternoon, not Mr. Kiefer Sutherland or which province you thought he was in or anything else like that.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, it is true that one has to take a great deal of liberty at times with their imagination to see the connections that one hon. member would want to make in terms of their presentation or their discourse in the House. It is also true that there's pretty wide-ranging latitude in second reading when one is recognized to have debate on the floor. The chair is hoping, hoping, hoping that soon the chair will discover the connection the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition said that she would provide with respect to this debate.

So let us be patient. The hon. member has been recognized, and all hon. members could be recognized for participation in this debate as well. Just advise the chair, and we'll be happy to bring you to that point.

Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, please continue.

Debate Continued

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Anyway, Kiefer Sutherland was talking about this conversation that he had had with his grandfather about what distinguishes us as Canadians, and I think this, with respect to how we built our health care system, is very much a part of the discussion we're having here on Bill 18, very much in keeping with this argument.

Mr. Speaker, Kiefer Sutherland said that his grandfather responded to this question by saying: well, there are two things that distinguish us as Canadians; the first is that we really love the cold weather. He said: all Canadians seem to thrive in cold weather; they like to go out and work; they play; there's no way they stay inside when the winter's cold. Really, that's consistent with the people that came to Canada in the first place. They wanted to settle in this wonderful country with its great resources, and that was one of the features that he thought was really important as a Canadian.

The second feature was our health care system, because, he said, it's sort of the most tangible indication of Canadians' commitment to each other, that we have put in place this health care system that recognizes that every single Canadian will be treated as equally as we possibly can. Certainly the principle of equality is in there. That's one of them.

I would add two more things that distinguish us as Canadians. The third one is the whole issue of our education system, which, like our health care system, says that education and health care are deemed to be a public good, Mr. Speaker.

DR. WEST: A point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer on a point of order. Yes, sir?

Point of Order Relevance

DR. WEST: Under Beauchesne 459. I hate to belabour the point about relevance, but the hon. leader of the loyal opposition, when she started the debate, did make reference to Bill 11 instead of Bill 18, and then of course she has proceeded to go on about Kiefer Sutherland and the health care system and his grandfather Tommy Douglas. It escapes me how you could, even with the breadth given to second reading on any bill, jump forward to the connotation that this is a discussion about Bill 18 when indeed she's already referenced Bill 11 and is concentrating more on health care than she is on the taxation system in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Comments on this point of order? Well, let's just review what Beauchesne 459 actually says in its totality. The subject heading is Relevance and Repetition.

Relevance is not easy to define. In borderline cases the Member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished Members who have strayed in debate.

That was point (1) under 459, and point (2) under 459 is:

The presiding officers are directed by Standing Order 11(2) . . .

Now, these deal with the Canadian House of Commons, not this particular parliament.

. . . to call to order members who indulge in persistent repetition.

The rule against repetition is difficult to enforce as the various stages of a bill's progress give ample opportunity and even encouragement for repetition. In practice, wide discretion is used by the Speaker and the rule is not rigidly enforced.

This is one source of information, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, and there are other citations as well.

Once again, the human spirit is really quite imaginative. There are some 6 billion of us on planet Earth, and it's absolutely amazing how imaginative we might all be in how we might bring to a conclusion something that all of us who are mere mortals might not have yet discovered to this point in time. Perhaps there is some form of wisdom here that will become so peculiar and so unique in all of history that this will be the day of reckoning in this Assembly.

So, hon. member, please continue your debate and your participation on Bill 18.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, they're getting a little bit antsy over there, kind of like kids. I talked about education, and it's kind of like kids at the end of the school day. I'm building a case, a very solid one with respect to Bill 18 and progressive income tax and how it is contrary to the values that built this country, and I'm intending to do it.

MRS. MacBETH: Anyway, we've gone from health care, and now we go to education, both deemed to be a public good, a public good that is available to all. We don't say that because someone has more money – at least we haven't up to this point – they should get better health care or that because somebody has more money, they get better education. The reason for that is because we as a society have said that these both are very much public goods; they deserve to be delivered to all in the fairest way possible. So that would be the third point in terms of what distinguishes us as a society.

I would say that there is a fourth point, Mr. Speaker, and that fourth point is a progressive income tax system. Here we have a structure where we have education being delivered or available to all and health care being available to all, but we know full well that someone in the middle-income group or slightly below middle income, say in the range of $35,000 to $65,000, could not afford the quality and the calibre of education and health care that we have been able to give them in this country were it not for a distributive tax system that brings in more dollars from those that have greater ability to pay in order to support those things that we as a society have deemed to be a public good.

MRS. NELSON: It's called socialism.

MRS. MacBETH: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills says that this is socialism. Well, the question I would ask is: what's she been doing in the Progressive Conservative Party for the last 30 years, which of course has built a whole issue around a progressive tax system? It is this government and members like this member who are now taking it towards a whole throwing out of those values of a progressive income system and bringing in this flat tax, and I think it's very much a selling off and a demarcation of a lot of the people who have worked hard for that party and in this government for many, many years.

5:00

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we know that the flat tax is a regressive tax. It's regressive because it says that those in the higher income group will pay less than the ones in the middle-income group. We're seeing this shift by the flat tax proposal of this provincial government, a shift away from those in the higher income group, a rewarding of high income, as if high income weren't enough reward of itself – rewarding those with the high income and putting the marginal tax rate up more for people in the middle-income group and down more for the people in the high-income group. Now, those members over there may well argue and say that's not happening, but of course we know it is. We know that the provincial marginal tax rate benefit is flowing greater to those in the higher income group than those in the middle-income group. So, in fact, the argument stands.

With respect to it being regressive as well is this whole argument about marginal propensity to consume, because we know that people who have a lower income, or in that lower to middle-income group, have to spend a greater proportion of their income on supplying basic services than does somebody in the higher income group. Yet here comes the government along with their flat tax proposal to make that even greater, even worse. Our tax system until now, the progressive value of it, has reflected the differential ability of individuals to earn money and therefore a differential ability to pay taxes in order to support a public good. Really, as my colleague from Lethbridge-East has pointed out, we are seeing, instead of a sharing of wealth, Mr. Speaker . . .

DR. WEST: Is that because you live under the shelter of a professional corporation at home, Nancy?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, it's only 2 minutes after 5 on a Monday afternoon. There is time for some opportunity here to listen to hon. members.

The chair counts out the number of members in the House and sees there's approximately 35 to 7. The seven members of the opposition are no threat to the 35 members in the House. Words cannot walk down walls, so let the hon. member go without interjection please.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, up until this government had introduced its flat tax proposal, the whole notion was about sharing the wealth, sharing the wealth as consistent with the Constitution and with the actions that have been taken by this government at least up until now. What's now happening with this legislative proposal is there's now being a concentration of wealth, as my colleague from Lethbridge-East has so eloquently expressed on several occasions.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, that instead of being called the Progressive Conservative Party, we should call them the regressive conservative party for many reasons, one of which is this regressive flat tax which they seem to be proposing, and the notion that the effect of the flat tax is that the rich get richer. You know, that's who they're fighting for. The rich get richer, and the poor and the middle income of course pay for it and pay for the brunt and the shift towards that middle-income group.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would say that there is value in a progressive income tax system. There is value which is consistent with the kind of country we've built where we have our education and our health care access based on our view as a society that this should be something we support for everyone, not just those who can afford to pay, and finally that the whole notion of flat tax is one that's regressive.

Mr. Speaker, the question of why keeps coming up in so much of this government's actions, and the question of why on the flat tax is very, very interesting. You know, the question of why. Certainly we see the Reform or Canadian Alliance or whatever it's now called moving towards this whole notion of flat tax. In fact, it may well be that the reason the Provincial Treasurer brought in the flat tax bill and the flat tax notations before the federal budget was just simply so he could get on with his arguments based on ideology, because certainly there's not benefit to the taxpayers, as I will be able to show in my remarks.

Let's just for a minute go to the United States, where of course five years ago the federal Republican Party was talking about income tax based on a flat tax rate. Certainly, the majority leader at the time, Dick Arme y's flat tax proposal would have resulted in significantly higher taxes for the middle class they said, but in our case the middle-income group. I'm quoting here, Mr. Speaker, from the American Legion magazine of December '95.

Echoing . . . complaints about the scheme, the economic consulting firm of Lehrman, Bell, Mueller and Cannon argues that by eliminating many popular deductions, the plan will end up increasing federal taxes for most workers.

In a letter to key Republicans, they pose the semi-rhetorical question, "Does the Republican Party want to take into 1996 a flat tax proposal that raises taxes on most American workers and worsens the middle-class squeeze?"

Mr. Speaker, the reason why this is so germane to this debate is that even the Republicans in the United States have moved away from talking about flat tax because they realize the shift is onto the middle-income tax group. So even the U.S. Republicans are seeing their way through it and aren't acting like a regressive Conservative Party as they had before they came to that conclusion.

I think it's important as well to go to that good old father of modern capitalist thought on progressive taxation, Adam Smith. Quoting from his Inquiry into the Nature & Causes of the Wealth of Nations, written in 1776, he said:

The subjects . . .

That's us.

. . . of every state ought to contribute toward the support of the government, as nearly as possible, in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state . . . [As Henry Home (Lord Kames) has written, a goal of taxation should be to] "remedy inequality of riches as much as possible, by relieving the poor and burdening the rich."

In other words, the argument is for a progressive income tax system. It makes sense, Mr. Speaker, and it's made sense in this country.

I know there are some people on the government benches who don't want to hear that, but believe me, there are a lot of people in the electorate who do know that, who do value a progressive income tax system. While they may have 35 in here today, these seven that are here now, and more of course available, will be growing as we move towards an election.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important as well – and I just wanted to put a little bit more information about this whole notion of the flat taxers. I want to quote from the distortions that the flat taxers have put forward. This is from an article by Robert S. McIntyre, which I pulled off the web site in recent days. It says:

Having attacked the . . . accomplishments of the Great Society . . . Congressional Republicans . . .

Now, here this is the American argument again.

. . . are preparing to eliminate a reform that stretches even further back into history . . .

This is, in terms of historic, why the Republicans have dropped this notion of flat tax instead of continuing on.

. . . the progressive income tax [that is]. Republicans in both houses of Congress have introduced plans for a flat tax, claiming that its simplicity and fairness . . .

Does this sound familiar in terms of the rhetoric that we've been accosted with in this House?

. . . will be a boon to all. Majority Leader Dick Arme y, presenting his plan, states that millions of taxpayers are taken off the roles entirely, and middle Americans receive a tax cut.

5:10

Well, the first part of that claim is true, as it is here in Alberta where a higher level of people will not be paying any tax at all.

Since Arme y's plan does not tax income from interest, dividends, or capital gains, those taxpayers who live completely off of investment income would be taken off the rolls entirely. The second part of the claim is, by any serious accounting, wrong.

That's the second part that talks about middle Americans receiving a tax cut. They don't. We know that.

Arme y's plan has two parts: It replaces the progressive income tax with a flat tax, and it replaces business tax with a consumption tax.

Both elements would dramatically shift the tax burden from the wealthy toward the middle class and the poor.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe in helping those who are less able to help themselves. I believe in making sure that those that are in the higher income pay a higher portion of the tax than those in the low- and middle-income group.

I don't just approach it from an ideological perspective, as the government does. Instead, I think the second point of my remarks is to move to this whole issue of: why is a single income tax rate, a flat tax, bad? Well, the answer is that it shifts the costs onto the middle-income taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, the most interesting thing about this government's flat tax proposal, which of course they jumped and put in at 11 percent before the federal Finance minister had in fact given a tax cut, not just talked about it but given a tax cut to the people of this province and the rest of the provinces – you know, it's interesting, because as soon as it became clear that the 11 percent flat tax was going to mean an increase in taxes for that middle-income group, what did the government respond? They said: well, then we're going to bring the flat tax rate down to 10.5 percent. Well, guess what? An even greater benefit to those in the higher income group who will come from a provincial marginal tax rate of about 12 and a half percent now down to 10 and a half percent, as opposed to 11, whereas the people in the low income that were at 10.5 percent will stay the same or, worse, have their income tax rate rise.

It's one thing to talk about the provincial marginal tax rate, Mr. Speaker, which we know, of course, benefits even greater the higher income group, but let's look at the payment of taxes. Let's even go to the example of the 10.5 percent flat tax, which of course the government then responded to. Let's look at someone at the $35,000 income level. Let's look at their provincial tax payable. We're not talking about the rate here; we're talking about the tax payable on a tax-on-tax system. In other words, simply flow through the tax cuts which the federal government has announced, which all Canadians will benefit from. So in 2001 the provincial tax payable is $2,385.49. This is a person with a $35,000 income. That's the provincial tax payable.

Let's look at the provincial tax payable under a 10.5 percent flat tax rate if this bill goes through. That will mean that instead of $2,385, that income earner in 2001 will be paying $2,454. That's an increase. In other words, if the federal tax cuts were simply flowed through at the current rate of provincial income tax, Albertans would be paying less tax at the $35,000 level.

So what have we got here, Mr. Speaker? Let me be absolutely clear. They're increasing taxes. It's a tax grab. It's an income tax grab. That's what it is. You know they might not like to hear it. In fact, I can well understand why they wouldn't want to hear it, but that's the truth. Not only is the marginal rate benefiting the higher, but the lower income group, some in the $35,000 and others, will not be gaining but will in fact be paying more tax under the flat tax proposal at some of those income levels.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we believe a far better solution for a tax cut would be to look at lowering the provincial rate and then capitalizing not only on the federal income tax cuts but increasing it, improving it with the actions by this government. But, no. The ideologues have to take over, one of whom is now running for the leadership of a federal party and basing his campaign on it. You know, I think the people of this country will see through this plan and see that in fact the tax rates will mean an increase in their taxes.

Next, Mr. Speaker, having outlined what the value of a progressive income tax system is, having outlined why we believe the single-tax rate is not part of the public good – in fact, it is contrary to the public good – let me look at the combined effect of several of these actions, as I said I wanted to do. First of all, who is benefiting from the flat tax proposal? Well, the greatest benefit will flow, as we've seen in the concentration of wealth, to those in the highest level group. They will get the best tax break. Their marginal rate will come down the most, and they will end up getting the greatest benefit; i.e., in terms of paying their taxes. So that's an interesting thing to note, that they are the ones that are benefiting the most, not the middle-income group, as we've seen, but the higher income group.

I think it's in fact very important on this second reading to bring forward the issue of Bill 11. Let's look at who benefits from Bill 11. Well, it's either those who can afford to pay or those who can build a business opportunity out of taking away some of the public asset of health care and building a business around it. So who benefits the most? Those who can afford to pay, those who are in the higher income level group.

Let's look at somebody else who has been hit by the actions of this government in terms of user fees, increases in health care premiums. I talked earlier about the marginal propensity to consume. Well, people in the middle-income group are paying higher fees for all of those services. You know, someone at the $200,000 mark, Mr. Speaker, doesn't really have to concern themselves all that much with paying things like health care premiums. They just pay them, and it's no big deal. But for somebody at the $50,000 or the $40,000 income level, where certainly the bulk of Alberta taxpayers find themselves in terms of income, that money they have to spend on health care premiums becomes a much greater proportion of their income than those in the higher level income groups.

So who benefits in terms of user fees? Maybe some of the people in the $200,000 income bracket. I know a lot of those people enjoy using the parks. Well, the cost for someone at the $200,000 level using the parks, the proportion of their income, of course is far less than a family who wants to go out and spend some time in the summer and go to the parks and has to pay those kinds of fees.

So, Mr. Speaker, I guess the question becomes: what kind of a society is this government trying to support and trying to build? They're trying to assist in the greatest way those people who have the greatest ability to buy those things that they want anyway. I'm not criticizing people in the high-income level. Why would we? I mean, those people have certainly a differential ability to earn, and so be it. That's fine. The concern is that it's the people at the middle-income level who are being the most hurt by the collective coming together, the comprehensive actions by this government. Those actions are ones that see that the progressive income tax rate is one that should be maintained, in our view, rather than removed and a flat tax used instead.

5:20

You know, Mr. Speaker, there was a famous American President who said that when you involve yourself in politics, you have to decide pretty quickly whose side you're on. In his view, you're either on the side of the people or on the side of the interests. This government has obviously made it very clear that they've decided that they're on the side of the interests, not of the people, the side of the interests who have the greatest benefit from things like private health care and flat taxes.

Really what it results in finally is an assault, a clear assault.

What's happening is that there's really an assault going on by this government on the middle-income group. We know that as the flat tax continues over the next several years, that comparison that I gave that was a $69 difference – the $35,000 taxpayer in 2001 would be paying $69.41 more under this provincial government's flat tax proposal as opposed to a provincial tax payable under tax on tax, but let's project it ahead to 2004. Mr. Speaker, we're not going to know, we have no idea what the price of oil, what the price of commodities will be in 2004, but let's look at that same example of what the provincial tax payable would be in 2004 if this government simply allowed the federal tax cuts to flow through to the taxpayer.

That same $35,000 taxpayer would be paying provincial income tax in 2004 of $2,194.60 on the tax-on-tax system, but guess what they'll be paying under this government's flat tax proposal? Well, of course, the difference gets bigger and bigger. This is under a 10.5 percent tax rate, which of course the government has said they're going to think about bringing in. The provincial tax under a flat tax in 2004 for a $35,000 income would be $2,402.92; in other words, $208.32 more under the provincial flat tax than it would have been if they'd simply flowed through and not even cut the rate, you know.

MR. SAPERS: They're tax creeps.

MRS. MacBETH: They are tax creeps. That's exactly right. They're tax creeps.

It just keeps getting worse. You know, the thing is that the government has given us this issue, and our effective work in terms of this issue, lifting out from the excellent papers which have been done in Alberta opposed to the flat tax, has given, between the health care privatization and the flat tax, a very good snapshot of who it is this government is trying to benefit. We've seen it loud and clear in these two areas.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on, but I will save some of my remarks for another time on the bill. Let me simply close by saying that we believe a far better way to deal with the issue of tax cuts would be to preserve the progressive tax system that we have rather than a regressive tax, which this government has decided they want to opt for. I look forward to the continuation of this debate on second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure this afternoon to rise and make a few comments in regards to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. It comes at a particularly interesting time, because I know that probably most members of this Assembly have either filed their income tax or are in the process of trying to meet a deadline here in short order.

Of course, when we look at this whole idea of Bill 18 and why we want to move to a flat tax, then we have to look at why we would want to change a system which is based right now on a tax-on-tax issue. We also want to question whether or not a tax-on-tax system or a tax-on-income system is the best.

So in looking at this new proposal, Alberta's 11 percent single-rate system, when we look at the major components of this particular bill, we see that in actual fact what it will do is delink us from the federal tax system, which is a tax-on-tax system, and move to a system where we do have tax on income. This new system, of course, will come into effect for Albertans on January 1, 2001, and the basic personal spousal amount and spousal to equivalent exemptions will be established at $11,620 as of January 1, 2001.

Again, Mr. Speaker, when we do look at it – and it was pointed out very well by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. It has always been thought that we tax those people who are able to pay, who have the ability to pay. I know that I don't have too much time, so before I get into other parts on the principles of this bill, I want to look at a particular principle, and this is section 46, which deals with Canada pension plan or Quebec pension plan "disability benefits for previous years."

Now, we have a group of people in this province right now who when they are injured, cannot work are paid 90 percent of their net earnings, but in the calculation of those earnings, what is deducted from the gross are such things as employment insurance premiums and Canada pension plan premiums. Those are deducted in determining their net income. However, when those people are injured, those payments do not flow through to the federal counterparts. So when those people are injured, effectively their benefits for employment income, their benefits for Canada pension plan are seriously curtailed for the time of their injury. Now, if they can't get back to work, then from that point on those benefits do not increase.

So particularly looking at section 46 of this bill, I certainly would like to have seen something to address this fact that puts the most vulnerable in this province, those that because of injury are not allowed to work or cannot work – this should have also addressed a shortcoming in this bill for them.

Now, as others have said here as well, Mr. Speaker, this particular Bill 18 really is politically driven tax reform, and it sounds an awful lot better than it really is. You know, the government doesn't have to delink from a tax-on-tax system. We certainly saw when the federal budget was brought in that true tax cuts across the board occurred under their system. Under this particular system, a flat tax system of 11 percent or even lowering it to 10.5 percent will not result in a tax cut for a certain portion, the middle class of Albertans. If we indeed wanted taxation that would be spread across the board and would be fair to all people, then of course what would have been best would have been simply to reduce . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, the House now stands adjourned until 8 o'clock this evening.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 1, 2000

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Good evening. Please be seated, and we'll call the evening session to order.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 18

Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

[Debate adjourned May 1: Mr. Bonner speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to continue the debate on Bill 18 this evening, and I would also like to continue with my remarks, particularly along the lines of how this is not going to be a fair and equitable tax.

We have seen that when we deal with taxation – and it's an issue that many Albertans are dealing with right now – that there are federal nonrefundable tax credits; for example, an age amount, a dependant amount, CPP contributions, EI contributions, pension income amount, disability amount, tuition and education amounts, medical expenses, caregiver amount, interest on student loans, and donations and gifts. Many of these, again, Madam Speaker, are nonrefundable tax credits.

We also have other nonrefundable tax credits when we're looking at our income tax, such as medical expenses, education amounts, tuition for students – or the portion they don't use can be transferred to an adult, to a parent – donations and gifts to different organizations. All of these will continue to apply, and they'll be levied at 11 percent of the maximum amount permitted for each credit. As well, when we look at the object of this bill, the basic personal, the personal spousal or equivalent, medical expenses, pension, education, caregiver, and disability credits will be indexed to inflation on a year-to-year basis.

Now, unfortunately, when we look at all this, Madam Speaker, this is not going to be fair and equitable to all people, and it's certainly going to impact the most that percentage of the population which now is the group that is earning between $30,000 and $70,000 a year. It was good to see in all this that there will be a zero percent increase on the first tax bracket. Those people who have very limited resources should not pay.

As well, I think it's very important that when we look at all this, Madam Speaker, we look at the background of what has led us to the point where we are today. In December of 1997 federal and provincial finance ministers agreed that the provinces should be able to levy taxes directly on taxable income. It was also agreed that the provinces could choose to move to a tax-on-income structure or remain with the current tax-on-tax structure. What we have seen is that if we'd remained on the tax-on-tax structure, certainly we could have given a tax break that was equitable to all brackets on the tax scale.

However, with this particular tax, when we go on tax on income, we find that the people that are getting the greatest benefit from a straight flat tax are those at the very upper end. Somehow this isn't the way taxes were meant to be. Taxes were based on your ability to pay, and certainly the people that can pay the most taxes are those earning the most money, and they should be the ones that are paying more. So there seems to be a reversal in our thinking here or in what the outcome of a flat tax would be.

Now, under the agreement reached between the federal Finance minister and the provincial finance ministers, the following elements are applicable. The provinces would agree to adopt the federal definition of taxable income as a base upon which to level provincial income tax. Provinces would agree to limit the number of provincial tax brackets, including a zero rate on a narrow first bracket. We've already mentioned that, and I don't think there are any members in the Assembly that would disagree with that particular statement, that the people who are earning the least amount of money should not be required to pay that type of tax.

Now, as well, the provinces would be permitted to establish a distinct block of provincial nonrefundable tax credits to be multiplied by the lowest non-zero provincial rate. The provincial credits would be based on the federal credits but would add supplemental provincial amounts. The provinces would retain access to existing low-income tax reductions with either individually based or family based income testing. Again, we look at who has the ability to pay and who is going to benefit from any revision in the tax system.

What was agreed between the finance ministers and the federal Finance minister was that not all provinces would have to move to the tax-on-income system at the same time. Some provinces would levy tax on income while other provinces could continue the current tax system of levying tax on tax. As well, Madam Speaker, as we look at other jurisdictions who have attempted or even looked at this particular style of taxing on income rather than tax on tax, we find that all of those people have moved away from that particular system and have found that the best system is of course tax on tax.

Continuing on why we have arrived at this point today, in October 1998 the Alberta Tax Review Committee recommended that the province of Alberta move to a new system of tax on income from the current system of tax on tax. As to the elements of the tax-on-income system in Alberta, the committee made the following recommendations. One of the recommendations here was that the province should introduce a single rate of provincial income tax and that this single rate should be set at 11 percent for all taxpayers. A further recommendation was that the basic personal and spousal exemptions should be increased to $11,620 and fully indexed to inflation.

Other recommendations here were that the temporary deficit elimination taxes, the .5 percent flat rate tax and the 8 percent Alberta surtax, should be eliminated in conjunction with the implementation of an 11 percent single tax rate. According to the committee the implementation of the 11 percent single rate with personal and spousal exemptions of $11,620 would have taken an additional 78,000 low-income Albertans off the provincial tax rolls and would have reduced the difference in provincial income taxes paid by double- and single-income families.

In the budget of 1999, Madam Speaker, the Alberta government adopted the recommendations of the Alberta Tax Review Committee. The following were the key elements of the Alberta tax plan presented in Budget '99. Alberta matched the federal increase in the basic and spousal exemptions to $7,131 and $6,055 respectively. The 8 percent surtax was to be eliminated by July 1 of 2001. The .5 percent flat rate tax and the selective tax reduction were to be eliminated by January 1 of 2002. The 11 percent single rate on taxable income would apply on January 1 of 2002. The basic and spousal exemptions would be increased to $11,620 on January 1 of 2002.

The cost of implementing the tax package announced in Budget

1999 was estimated at $600 million. The revenue recovery from the tax package when fully implemented was established at $120 million, or 20 percent, in the year 2002-2003. By 2006-2007 it was estimated that there would be a 40 percent revenue recovery from the tax plan, and this would be a .8 percent increase in the real gross domestic product and a 17,000 increase in employment from a base case scenario.

With higher than anticipated revenues expected over the next three fiscal years, the Alberta government decided to accelerate the implementation of the tax plan in the 2000 budget, and the February 24, 2000, provincial budget announced the following modification of the tax plan.

Now, at this point I'd like to interject on some of these suggestions, Madam Speaker, to outline that here again we are taking higher than anticipated revenue and taking that surplus and putting it into something when we certainly could be using that additional revenue to prop up our public health care system. We certainly could have been using that additional money to cut our pupil/teacher ratio in school. Those are two areas that could certainly use a great amount of our assistance, and instead some of those projected surpluses are going to be going into a tax plan.

As well, the 8 percent surtax will be eliminated effective January 1, 2000. The .5 percent flat tax and the selective tax reduction will be eliminated effective January 1, 2001. The 11 percent single rate and the increase in the basic and spousal exemptions are now slated to take effect on January 1, 2000. As well, Madam Speaker, an additional $100 million was set aside in the 2000-2001 fiscal year to parallel any federal tax cuts applicable to the 2000 tax year while Albertans remain linked to the federal tax-on-tax system.

On February 28, 2000, Madam Speaker, the federal budget announced a reduction in the middle-class income tax bracket from 26 to 23 percent, an increase in the threshold for the middle-income and high-income tax brackets to at least $35,000 and $70,000 respectively as well as full indexation of nonrefundable tax credits, including the basic and spousal exemptions, all to be implemented over a period of five years.

As well, Madam Speaker, in the 2000 tax year alone under the federal government tax plan the middle-income tax bracket will be reduced from 26 to 24 percent effective July 1, and there will be an increase in the threshold of middle- and high-income tax brackets to $30,004 and $60,009 respectively, and the basic and spousal exemptions will increase to $7,231 and $6,140 respectively. It is estimated that the impact of these tax measures on Alberta will be $66 million in the 2000 tax year alone.

As a result of all of this, Madam Speaker, the impact of the federal government tax measures through 2004, it was revealed that Alberta taxpayers below $70,000 in taxable income would be paying more in provincial personal income tax under an 11 percent single rate in the 2001 tax year and in subsequent tax years. They would be paying more under this 11 percent flat tax system than if they had remained on the tax-on-tax system.

My last point here is that on March 15, 2000, it was announced that the government would introduce amendments to Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, to ensure that all federal government tax measures impacting on Albertans would be passed through. Details on those changes are expected to follow the release of the province's first-quarter 2000-2001 results in September 2000.

Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak to Bill 18, Madam Speaker, and I look forward to participating more in Committee of the Whole.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure this evening, on this beautiful spring evening, to rise in debate on Bill 18. You know, when spring comes, I always find that it rejuvenates and gives me some energy, and it's equally pleasing tonight to see that spring appears to have arrived at the Legislature with hundreds of people gathering in anticipation of debate on Bill 11. I think it gives us good reason to pause and reflect on why we're in this Assembly and on the importance of the debates on bills that come before this Chamber.

Regrettably, we won't have long to debate Bill 11, because we're very alert to the fact that the government is closing debate on that particular bill. It's sort of odd that we don't see closure on a bill like Bill 18, Madam Speaker. This is another bill which the government is certainly strongly supportive of. Again, they don't have a lot of evidence that it's going to be effective or to prove that it's going to be even implementable in conjunction with running a broad spectrum of public programs. Much like we have seen with Bill 11, they don't have a great deal of proof, but they're in a position where they're just prepared to go full speed ahead and let the chips fall where they may.

The bill before us, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, is a rather unique bill. It proposes that Alberta is again going to, quote, unquote, lead the country in establishing a flat system of tax, an 11 percent tax rate. Now, for the average Albertan, in terms of all the breakdowns, Madam Speaker, I think quite simply their primary question is: how is it going to affect me, and how will it affect the programs that I expect to be funded from my tax dollars and from provincial revenues?

Well, when we look at the '99-2000 budget, which the government released in February, showcasing this new proposed tax plan, we really don't see a lot of information, Madam Speaker, about how in fact the security of our public programs will be guaranteed. In fact, we see repetitive quotes by the Globe and Mail, repetitive quotes by the National Post, repetitive quotes by the Calgary Herald indicating their pleasure and their glee in the establishment of this tax structure.

Oddly enough, we don't see quotations from groups like the Friends of Medicare or the Alberta Teachers' Association or perhaps even the Taxpayers' Federation, and that is possibly because this government, number one, really hasn't planned or thought through how programs will be affected; number two, haven't communicated that to the sectors or groups that would be impacted; and number three, have taken the easiest route possible to market that bill. That is to rely on media interests like the Globe and Mail, like the National Post, like the Calgary Herald, who are all owned by one media mogul who happens to promote this type of corporatism.

Really, Madam Speaker, it's not of interest federally, nor should it be of interest to some large-scale newspaper owner. The people who this will impact most is Albertans, and the questions are about how education funding will be secured and maintained, about how health care spending will be maintained and secured if we implement an 11 percent flat tax and all of a sudden the revenues don't turn out to be quite what the hon. Member for Red Deer-North so eloquently waxed on about in his budget address this February. What if they fall short and then we take this bill in combination with the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Deficit Elimination Act, which this government has also seen fit to impose on this province, and find ourselves in a position where we don't have enough money to fund?

Well, perhaps the government has anticipated that, Madam

Speaker. I'm just thinking this through. Perhaps that's why we have a bill like Bill 11. They just may be anticipating that there won't be enough money to fund health care down the road, so we have to have some mechanism by which the taxpayers pay for their own services. Then, lo and behold, isn't it amazing that we have Bill 11 accompanying Bill 18, so if health care funding falls short out of the public purse, Albertans can pay out of pocket for surgical services? It's just part of a master plan that this government hasn't had the political courage to share with their electorate.

Now, just a few more facts. This year the Auditor General – and I know that the minister of energy will be most interested in his remarks – in his report talked about a number of concerns that he had about Treasury and particularly their calculation of budgets and their reporting of budgets. Let me be specific. He recommended that ministries work with Treasury to develop a strategy to improve the definitions of the components of business plans.

Accompanying that, he made recommendations that ministries clearly reflect the cost of implementing their core businesses. In essence, Madam Speaker, he expressed concern about this government accurately and clearly reflecting the costs of doing business in their ministries. Others might call it the fine art of fudging numbers, but really what the Auditor General was saying is that you must clearly reflect your expenses in your business plans and budgets, and that is not something which this government has chosen to do.

Let me read specifically from recommendation 48.

It is again recommended that the Department of Treasury develop a methodology to allocate all significant costs to the entities responsible for delivering outputs.

Similar to the 1997-98 fiscal year, there are reservations in my auditor's reports on the 1998-99 financial statements of all of the Ministries and all of the departments. The nature of the reservations is described in more detail in the following paragraphs.

The purpose of these audit reservations is to maintain a focus on all of the assets, liabilities, revenues and expenses for which the management of the Ministries are accountable, including performance measurement and financial management responsibilities. The reservations alert readers that the related financial statements are not complete and accurate. Also, where possible, the reservations provide the reader of the financial statements with the supplementary information that was missing . . .

Lo and behold, Madam Speaker, missing.

. . . from the financial statements. Further, they are intended to identify circumstances where decision makers are at risk of arriving at faulty conclusions.

So here we are this evening, Madam Speaker, faced with a government that's been fudging the numbers in their ministries, not accurately and completely sharing information on the costs of doing business, and Bill 18, which proposes that we go to a flat system of tax, with no accompanying information on how ministry programs would be impacted. [interjection] I know that the minister of energy is enjoying this line of debate so much, so I'm going to continue on another area relative to my same points.

The Auditor General pointed out that ministries and departments contained reservations because they did not report their share of pension liabilities and expenses.

So we have in essence, Madam Speaker, outstanding debts within the ministries for pension liabilities and expenses. They haven't accurately reflected that in the business plans. That money is owing, and at some point in the future, probably in the next 10 to 20 years, when a large component of our public sector retires, that money owed will come due. If we find ourselves in the position of having Bill 18 implemented and the flow of revenues to this province reduced, what exactly are we going to say to the public-sector employees who have retired? Are we going to say that we're not able to fully fund their pension plans, that they won't receive a full pension?

DR. WEST: That's misleading. You know that the actuarials have been done.

MRS. SLOAN: I know that if the minister of energy has got the mettle, Madam Speaker, to stand up and debate this, he'll have a turn after I've finished. I'm sure I'll have given him ample material upon which to debate this bill.

The question is about adequate funding to public programs, adequate funding to cover off the significant pension liabilities that exist. Where will that money come from, Madam Speaker, if Bill 18 takes us to a future where the provincial tax revenue is reduced?

My third point, arising from the Auditor General's report. On page 275 he talked about the "existence of social programs within the tax collection system." Again, I quote.

There are social programs within the tax collection system the cost of which are reductions of tax revenues on income and consumption. In quantifying the impact of these items in the discussion that follows, the amounts shown are actual revenues foregone. The cost of these social programs typically arises through the use of tax deductions, exemptions, credits, incentives, preferential rates and deferrals. These programs promote social or economic purposes to a specific group.

There is a view that these social programs within the tax collection system are an alternative to direct expenditures as a form of government assistance or subsidy.

And he goes on to provide a bit of education about that.

Then he draws the conclusion that a preliminary estimate indicates that the cost of these social programs is significant.

A limited review by this Office of 1998-99 financial information indicates that for programs administered solely by the Province, there were disclosed costs of about $300 million for royalty tax credits and undisclosed social program costs of approximately $700 million . . . In addition, because the Province's assessments for personal income tax are based on the federal personal income tax collection system, there are effectively other Provincial revenue reductions as a result.

He goes on to say:

However, in none of these instances is there disclosure of performance targets and results.

He gives a suggestion that the Department of Treasury should incorporate those within their annual budget.

Now, I looked at the government's marketing material on this bill that was released with the budget, and I don't find any reference to how those social programs and the component of that revenue would be protected. If I am correct, I think that this would impact seniors, the seniors' health insurance premiums, things in that area, Madam Speaker, where we have developed and implemented a program where there is a . . .

DR. WEST: A point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Acting Provincial Treasurer has risen on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

DR. WEST: Under Beauchesne 459, relevance and repetition. The hon. member has strayed away from the principles of the bill, that are discussed in second reading, the principles of Bill 18. The discussion that she's having would be more pertinent to the debate on the budget, which we've had. We've had many, many nights and many, many hours on the budget and the Auditor General's report and its relevance to the budget. I find tonight we're discussing a specific tax bill, Bill 18, and the hon. member chooses to wander considerably and as well use language, by repetition, that incites the decorum of this House. I heard "fudging." I heard some other comments made in reference to the integrity of the ministers of the Crown, and I feel that she's totally off base for Bill 18.

8:30

MS CARLSON: Madam Speaker, on the point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Yes, Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Madam Speaker, one week off and the Minister of Resource Development forgets the rules of this Assembly. I would refer him, please, to Erskine May, page 378, where we talk about relevance in debate, rules governing the contents of speeches. He knows that the hon. member has 20 minutes to come to the point. He knows that many times every speaker in this Assembly has followed the rulings outlined on this page where it says:

A Member must direct [their] speech to the question under discussion or to the motion or amendment [they intend] to move, or to a point of order. The precise relevance of an argument may not always be perceptible.

We have seen many speakers on that side of the House take their full 20 minutes to come to the point. In fact, the Member for Calgary-Egmont on the last day of speaking in this Assembly took 12 minutes to speak to Bill 11, at which point in time he never once referenced the subamendment under debate or brought the discussion back there at all. So if he could go 12 minutes without ever even referring to a point, this hon. member, who has several times referred to the bill under question, is completely within order. I understand that you know the rules, but clearly the minister needs to brush up on the rules in this Assembly. There is no point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I would ask that we do look at what is before us. We are in debate in second reading of Bill 18, which is the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. It is often very difficult for a Speaker or someone sitting in the chair to define relevance. As was indicated, sometimes the chair does allow a lot of latitude in the debate and in the discussion that's taking place, but I would ask everyone to keep in mind that we do have before us Bill 18 – and it is the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act – and try to ensure that your debate and your discussion is relevant to the bill under debate at the moment.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I certainly acknowledge that I'm relatively new to this Chamber, and I may be under some false assumptions here, but I always assumed – and the minister of energy may wish to correct me if I'm wrong – that our programs in this province are funded from tax revenues. Would anyone in this House like to correct me that they are not? I believe that our programs are in fact funded . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I would ask that we try not to be confrontational in this debate. We are only in second reading.

MRS. SLOAN: I'm being as personable and jovial as I possibly can. I know the minister of energy finds me particularly personable and in some cases provocative, but if he would just follow my . . .

MS LEIBOVICI: You'll get him all excited, Linda.

MRS. SLOAN: Oh, dear. Heaven forbid that I would do that.

Debate Continued

MRS. SLOAN: Our programs in this province are funded through our tax revenues, and Bill 18 proposes to fundamentally change the way in which we collect taxes in this province. My point being: how do we continue to fund programs and how do we in an accountable fashion assure citizens that we will be able to continue to fund programs if we fundamentally change the tax system so that it's no longer equitable and fair, contrary again to the government's marketing documents?

In fact, what Bill 18 will do is distribute or skew in some respects, Madam Speaker, the tax system towards the 4 percent of our citizens filing taxes in this province who earn above $100,000, while the 39 percent of citizens who find themselves in the middle-income bracket, earning between $30,000 and $70,000, will pay over 45 percent. So in essence we are in fact creating with Bill 18 an inequitable tax structure that offers no assurance that our public programs will be able to be maintained in the future.

[Disturbance in the gallery]

THE ASSISTANT SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

MRS. SLOAN: With the system now, Madam Speaker, in a pure form, everyone regardless of their income pays the same rate. Under Bill 18 that won't be so. The higher income earners are going to get an advantage. The middle-income earners are going to pay more.

Now, that also brings to mind a similarity. We could say that 18 and 11 are sister bills. With Bill 11 the wealthy in this province most likely won't have concerns about paying extra for health care if in fact private hospitals and a private system of delivery come into play because they have the disposable income to do that. The middle-income people, on the other hand, who do not have as much disposable income, are going to find themselves putting out more money for taxes and putting out, equally so, money for third-party insurance or for the cost to go to get their radiology in the United States, as many people who are trying to access services at the Cross Cancer Institute in my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview are now finding.

While all other provinces are sending people waiting to other provinces or to the States, this province chooses not to. Given the fact that even with the revenue we have now the province is not doing an adequate enough job in ensuring access for Albertans to the health care system, how are they going to assure and guarantee Albertans that they will be able to access health care if our provincial revenues decline under Bill 18?

I'd also just point out that another principle of this bill is that it's going to delink Alberta from the federal tax system, so we can take that on its merit. But at a point earlier this spring, sometime in March, I believe, I think March 11, the Premier in fact said that if the federal government brought in any tax reduction measures subsequent to this taxation year, he would allow those reductions to flow to Albertans, in effect now making a commitment that relinks Alberta to the federal system. That's very confusing, Madam Speaker.

I'm pleased to have had the opportunity this evening to make these debates, and I will now conclude. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The interim leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to have this opportunity to speak on Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, in its second reading. It is legislation that if passed by this Legislature will, I guess, reflect an interesting legacy that will be left here by the former Treasurer of the province. Bill 18 is legislation that doesn't really pass the test of fairness. If approved by this Assembly, Bill 18 will result in a massive shift of the tax load from high-income Albertans onto middle-income Albertans. Bill 18 represents nothing more or less than an attack on middle-class Albertans.

Every tax accountant and economist who has independently crunched the numbers on this flat tax proposal has reached the same conclusion. The main beneficiaries of this bill will be those with incomes above $100,000 a year. Middle-class Albertans with incomes from $30,000 to under $100,000 will pay a disproportionately higher share of the tax load.

For instance, University of Alberta economics professor Mel McMillan has this to say about the government's flat tax proposal, and I quote: this would really shift the tax burden to the middle class; the big winners are those in brackets beyond $150,000 and especially those in the $250,000-plus income bracket, end of quote. Dale Meister, a senior tax accountant with PricewaterhouseCoopers had the following to say, and I again quote: the higher income earners get proportionately bigger savings than the middle-income earners; the tax savings increase in the higher brackets, unquote.

In addition to not passing the test of fairness, Madam Speaker, Bill 18 also fails the test of transparency and honesty. The provincial government knows that reducing tax rates for higher income earners will result in a massive transfer of the tax load onto middle-income Albertans. That is why, to hide the redistributive effects, the introduction of the proposed flat tax is being combined with an overall tax cut in this bill.

Despite the deep cut in personal income tax revenue, however, some middle-income earners will end up paying more tax, not less, under Bill 18. This was the case even before the recent federal budget. Before the recent federal budget the provincial government's own budget documents show that a single person making $30,000 per year will actually pay $28 more under the government's flat tax proposal, under Bill 18, than they would under the current tax system.

The recent federal budget has demolished any remaining questions about the fairness of the flat tax scheme set out in Bill 18. A front page story in the Edmonton Journal aptly said, "Air gets let out of flat tax." The Edmonton Journal story contained an analysis done by income tax specialist Brad Severin. Severin found that middle-class earners will pay about $170 more next year than they would have under the existing system. That number rises to $440 by the time all the federal cuts come into effect by the year 2004. A quote from Mr. Severin: "It only gets worse as time goes by." Severin's analysis emphatically concludes that middle-income Albertans would be better off staying with the existing system rather than moving to the regressive flat tax proposal in Bill 18.

I find it appalling and unacceptable that such a fundamental restructuring of the personal income tax is taking place with virtually no public consultation or debate. The so-called Tax Review, which consisted of handpicked Tory insiders, held a few meetings in the dead of summer a couple of years ago. I also find it incredible that a bill which fundamentally changes the personal income tax system in a very regressive manner is being sponsored by a former Provincial Treasurer and shepherded through this Assembly by a caretaker Treasurer.

In my remaining time I would like to briefly debunk some of the arguments made in favour of the flat tax proposal contained in Bill 18, Madam Speaker. One of these arguments is that a flat tax would make the income tax system simpler. Nothing could be further from the truth. Should Bill 18 be passed by this Assembly, Alberta's tax system won't be any simpler with a flat tax rate than it currently is. What makes a tax system complicated are the numerous exemptions, deductions, credits, and other loopholes encountered in calculating one's taxable income.

The only way to simplify the tax system is to remove the complexities in calculating one's taxable income. Not only does Bill 18 fail to do this; through section 5 it codifies these complexities into provincial law by using the federal definition of taxable income.

The proposed flat tax does not get rid of a single loophole. All of the existing tax credits and deductions would remain. Your tax return would not shrink at all. In fact, your tax form would actually become more complicated. For instance, taxpayers currently need to do only one calculation to determine their nonrefundable tax credits. Under the flat tax plan proposed in Bill 18, they would need to do not one but two calculations, one to calculate their federal tax credits and a second to calculate their provincial tax credits. Despite having three tax brackets, a single tax table can be used to calculate federal and provincial taxes at present. Moreover, over half of tax filers have taxable incomes of less than $30,000 per year. They already pay a flat tax, or single tax rate, of 17 percent federal and 7.48 percent provincial on this income.

There are those who argue that there are too many tax brackets. The Mulroney government tax reform of 1987 already significantly flattened the Canadian tax system. There are only three tax brackets now. Before 1988 there were 10 different tax brackets, ranging from 6 percent to 34 percent. Going back even further, in 1970 there were 17 tax brackets.

The United States has a more progressive income tax system at the moment than Canada does, especially for those with higher incomes. At the federal level the U.S. has five tax brackets, ranging from a low of 15 percent to a high of 39.6 percent. By comparison, Canada has only three tax brackets, and the top federal tax rate is only 30.9 percent. Some American states have as many as 10 tax brackets. Only six states out of 51 have implemented a flat tax.

Another argument made by flat tax advocates, like our former Treasurer, is that marginal tax rates are too high and are a disincentive to work harder. Marginal tax rates, Madam Speaker, refer to what's paid on the last dollar of income earned by a taxpayer. Effective tax rates, on the other hand, refer to the average rate paid on every dollar of income earned. Marginal tax rates will and should be higher than effective tax rates in a progressive income tax system. It is misleading to focus on the marginal tax rates to measure the fairness of the income tax system.

Effective tax rates are a much better indicator because they measure the rate of tax paid on every dollar of income earned, not just the last or the top dollar. Effective tax rates tend to be significantly lower than marginal tax rates even for those with high incomes because they, like low-income people, are able to benefit from the lower rates applied to their first dollars of income. Higher income earners are also able to reduce their tax liability by taking advantage of things like credits and deductions. Unlike middle-income earners, those with higher incomes are able to afford to maximize their RRSP contributions, to set up family trusts, and to take advantage of capital gains exemptions.

Under the current system, Alberta has by far the lowest marginal tax rate of any Canadian province. In the year 2000 Alberta's top marginal tax rate is 13.26 percent. The next lowest province, Ontario, has a top marginal tax rate of 17.42 percent, which is almost 25 percent higher than the one in Alberta. Under the proposed bill, Bill 18, the flat tax plan, Alberta's top marginal tax rate would drop to 11 percent, fully 14 percent below Ontario's rate. It's one thing for this government to try and make Alberta some sort of tax haven for the wealthy. It is another thing entirely to do this at the expense of middle-class Albertans, which Bill 18 does. It is not even true that higher income earners have the highest marginal tax rates. When calculations of marginal tax rates include the impact of refundable tax credits, middle-income earners and not high-income earners are already paying the highest marginal tax rates.

The personal income tax system contains a number of refundable credits including the child tax benefit, the goods and services tax credit, the seniors' credit, as well as provincial credits like the seniors' benefit and Alberta employment tax credit. These credits are recovered by being taxed back as income rises. If calculations of marginal tax rates include the impact of refundable tax credits, middle-class earners, not high-income earners, are already paying the highest marginal tax rates.

Robert Brown, the past chair of PricewaterhouseCoopers, calculates that a single-earner family with three children, making between $30,000 to $40,000 annually, faces a top marginal tax rate of over 60 percent. By contrast, the marginal tax rate of a similar-size family making $110,000 a year is just over 50 percent. That is because a family making $30,000 gets to keep less than 40 cents of every additional dollar earned as a result of the combined increase in tax payable and the reduction in refundable tax credit payments. By contrast, a family making $110,000 gets to keep almost 50 cents of every additional dollar earned. If anyone has a distinct disincentive to work, it is the middle-class earners, not high-income earners. Imposition of a flat tax as proposed in Bill 18 will make this inequity even worse by raising the marginal tax rate for the middle-income earners while lowering it for high-income earners.

Proponents of a flat tax say that a flat tax will end bracket creep. When the Mulroney government got itself into financial difficulty a decade ago, they stopped full indexation of tax brackets and exemptions to inflation. Now adjustments are only made for inflation above 3 percent. As a result, until this year's federal budget there had been no increase in the income threshold for the three federal tax brackets for a number of years. The basic and spousal exemptions were increased, starting in the 1999 federal budget, after a number of years of no adjustments.

The Alberta government has as much as any government in Canada benefited from tax bracket creep. Surely the answer to this phenomenon is not to get rid of tax brackets, thereby undermining fairness, but rather to restore full indexation of both tax brackets and basic spousal exemptions. If it wanted to, the provincial government could cut taxes or user fees without bringing in a regressive flat tax as proposed in Bill 18. Moreover, with the size of the budget surpluses in recent years, the Alberta government clearly has the fiscal capacity to cut taxes, increase spending in priority areas, and keep retiring debt.

The question is not whether Albertans should have a tax cut but rather what kind of tax cut. Tax cuts directed at low- and middle-income earners will generate more economic activity than tax cuts directed at the wealthy. That is because the wealthy will likely invest their tax savings in investments – GICs, mutual funds, including foreign-content ones – while low-income and middle-income earners are likely to spend their savings on things that more directly lead to local job creation; for example, buying goods and services.

Are there alternatives to the Tory flat tax proposed in Bill 18 that are fairer to low- and middle-income Albertans? Absolutely. The

New Democrats advocate phasing out health care premiums as an alternative to the flat tax plan set out in Bill 18. While delivering a comparable amount of tax relief, the New Democrat approach would give each Alberta family an $860 break and a single person a $408 break regardless of income.

There are many sound reasons why this approach is better. AHC premiums, Madam Speaker, are the worse kind of regressive tax. A family earning $20,000 pays exactly the same $818 per year as a family earning $2 million. The income levels at which Albertans receive premium subsidies are ridiculously low. To receive a full premium subsidy, families must earn less than $7,500 and singles less than $5,000. Furthermore, AHC premiums get rotten tax treatment. They get terrible treatment by Revenue Canada. Unlike premiums paid to private health insurers, AHC premiums paid by individuals are not tax deductible. Middle-income seniors and those working in jobs without benefits are particularly hurt by this. Those working in better jobs are also hurt because any portion of AHC premiums paid by employers is fully taxable at the employee's top marginal tax rate.

AHC premiums, Madam Speaker, are costly to administer as well. Alberta Health wastes enormous time and resources to collect premiums and track down those in arrears. In '96-97 the department spent $11 million on premium collections, more than it spent on administering the health care insurance plan itself. About half of the $11 million was paid to external collection agencies to track down those with premium arrears. Despite this, the government still wrote off $29 million in uncollectable premiums in '98-99 alone.

The last point on AHC premiums, Madam Speaker. AHC premiums are a drain on jobs and the economy. As a payroll tax, employers face substantial compliance costs in deducting and remitting health care premiums to the government. The New Democrats would ensure that the savings resulting from the phasing out of premiums are added to the remuneration of employees, not pocketed by employers.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, Bill 18 does not deserve the support of this Assembly. It's a regressive piece of legislation that benefits only the wealthy at the expense of the middle class. It was the brainchild of a Treasurer that's no longer even in this Assembly to defend it. Instead of blindly moving forward with legislation that's fundamentally unfair and deeply flawed, I urge the Assembly to vote this bill down or, much better, the government to withdraw this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I wanted to enter into the debate at second reading on Bill 18, where we're talking about the principles of tax reform insofar as the personal income tax side is concerned.

I'm sure all hon. members or their constituents have had the pleasure this last few weeks of filling out their tax returns and filing them, as they're due by midnight tonight. I know that I myself had the onerous task of preparing 11 returns this last week and going through the calculation that is required for filing those returns. They ranged everywhere from some returns for seniors to students, to what I call severely normal working Albertans, to people that are living and trying to avoid taxation.

It brought to mind a situation I had a number of years back. I was asked to be on a white paper task force for the federal government on tax reform when the original tax reform program was going to take place in this country. It was under the leadership of the then newly elected Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney. However, after a great amount of work on that white paper, the bureaucracy of the federal government didn't have the will or would not co-operate, and the government of the day didn't have the steel to go forward and make tax reform a reality in Canada. As a result, when I was in the private sector, every year there were more complications added to tax returns, to the point where if someone did this for a living, the client base grew and grew and grew because they were so ridiculously out of whack that basically you had to have a road map to figure out what the calculations would be.

There hasn't been much improvement. There have been all kinds of different types of tax credits put in place and RRSPs that then transfer into RRIFs when you're older. There are all kinds of write-offs, but they never have dealt with the real problem. The problem with the tax system is that, number one, it is so cumbersome and so out of whack that it becomes a disadvantage for people to actually operate.

One of the things that I think is a misnomer I wanted to mention before I get into the actual bill. If the hon. member would like to refer back to the budget document, the responses to the Auditor General's comments are in the document. Quite frankly, every one of the recommendations from the Auditor General – and this budget document was debated in the House for 25 days, Madam Speaker. If she would refer to page 167 in the budget document and go through every recommendation from the Auditor General – they're listed in this section of the budget document that we spent 25 days debating – I can say, if the hon. member would not interrupt, that every recommendation that was given by the Auditor General has been accepted by the departments or is in the process of being put in place.

She made reference – and I want to clarify this because I think it's very important – to the liabilities that are not disclosed by this government, and I think the word that was used was “fudging.” All of the liabilities, including the long-term pension obligations of the government and all the pension plans, are disclosed in the financial statements. In fact, if the hon. member would refer to the financial statements . . . [interjections]

9:00

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services has the floor.

Carry on, hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If the hon. members would refer to the financial statements, which are filed, they would clearly see that the pension obligations are in fact shown and disclosed within them. Now, recently there has been a new actuarial value on those pension obligations. I can tell you that when I first sat on the Treasury Board and looked at the pension obligations, they were reassessed, and those obligations, because of the actuarial assessment that was done, dramatically changed the outstanding liability.

She's right that they are not allocated out on a department-by-department basis, but that is not normal public accounting procedure, and they are acceptable accounting procedures for all governments in Canada. In fact, most governments do not include the liability in their financial statements at all. In fact, in Alberta we did not have that disclosure in our financial statements until the 1993 budget came around. That was off balance sheet financing and was not included. It needed to be included. It had to be included.

The other thing that Alberta does on its financial statements – and clearly the hon. member I think needs to look at the financial statements – is that we actually do an accumulated depreciation, an amortization of assets. We list those in our financial statements. We work on an accrual accounting basis, and we try to have a fully consolidated balance sheet, which you can't completely have in a public sector.

The other thing she mentioned was revenue base. Well, I used to have the job for five and a half years of forecasting revenues. I can tell you right now, on forecasting revenues – if you looked at the last two months, oil revenues went as high as $34 a barrel. They're now down roughly around the $25 a barrel mark within probably about a six-week time frame. They fluctuate back and forth. If you had in fact, as a lot of people on the opposite side, Madam Speaker, would have suggested, gone in with a budget number of $25, $30 a barrel and budgeted for allocation of funds based on that revenue picture, we could very well be in trouble. As I'll remind hon. members, it is against the law in this province for us to run a deficit budget. That's against the law. So I would remind hon. members that fluctuations occur.

Now, we are fortunate in this province in that we have a strong economy and one that has been successful. It's been successful . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I'm just going to wait, hon. minister, until everyone allows you the opportunity to speak. I've mentioned it a couple of times. We allow everyone in this Assembly to speak when they're recognized. You now have the floor, and I think the people in this Assembly should pay you the due respect and listen to you.

The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I guess the point I'm trying to make is that while we went off the track of the bill, I couldn't leave those statements outstanding, because clearly there have been 25 days of debate on the budget. The budget has gone through and has been passed. The appropriation bills have been voted on, and there has been debate on those.

Today we're talking about a change in the system. Yes, as the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry said, there was a Tax Review Committee that was struck by the Provincial Treasurer to look at how we could make Alberta more competitive not only on the business side but on the personal side. We've heard time and time again in this Legislature about what's called brain drain, about how people are leaving, particularly our young people who are graduating from our colleges and our universities and our technical schools, and they're going stateside. Why? Why do they go? If you ask them why, it's because of a tax advantage that occurs when they go across the border. [interjections] The Liberals may laugh at that, but quite frankly it's absolutely true.

When you look at the tax disadvantage that occurs for Canadians today – and Alberta's been part of this; let's be very clear. We have taken taxes and taxes on people when those dollars should be left in their pockets so they can make choices and decisions. One of the reasons I looked at this bill with quite a lot of interest, quite frankly, was the fact that if you give governments money, they'll find ways to spend it. In fact, it may sound like a negative, but I can tell you that there are programs on programs that could in fact be introduced if there were money to pay for them. The worst thing that can happen is to take taxpayers' money and put it into programs that are not necessary. Governments have to focus on what it is they're responsible to deliver, because they are dealing with tax dollars.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview was right. Government's source of revenue is taxation. Let's be very clear about that. That's the only source of revenue a government has. It comes in tax in one form or another. So let's be very clear. The more they have, the more they spend. You don't often see refunds going back to the people who are paying the bills, who are the shareholders, or the taxpayers, of Alberta.

This realignment in this bill I believe does a number of things. We've heard news reports and we've heard people talk about bracket creep, how you move up. The more you earn, the higher you go in your taxation, and you end up just being moved forward, moved forward, moved forward. Sometimes, I can tell you, when you're doing a tax return and you look at how someone has moved above, it's almost: why did they work so hard? Why did they earn that extra $5,000 or that extra $10,000 just to be moved up that much higher through bracket creep. By putting in a flat tax, you take away, in essence, that bracket creep. In fact, if you looked at our tax form this year, you'd find that Alberta, like other provinces, had simply just said: well, we're going to take 44 percent of the federal tax payable. Why? Well, because that's the way it was done.

No one can tell me – and I've looked at this for years – where the rationale came from to piggyback onto the federal tax payable system. That affects everybody, but by making a move and saying that Alberta will have a flat tax base, you take away that bracket creep. You take away that bracket creep so you don't have the disincentive of succeeding and moving forward. It's pretty difficult to tell someone to work hard and to keep working hard and work extra time to all of a sudden have it all taxed away. What's the incentive? There isn't an incentive. So you end up with people paying more, working harder, and wondering why.

The flat tax takes a lot of that away. The flat tax helps out people so they can do some planning. It also puts us in a competitive advantage so that we can in fact attract people to this province, and we've been quite successful, I might say, at doing that. If you look at the companies that have moved people to Alberta to help them develop their own corporate sectors, it's amazing the influx of people from all over Canada. In fact, it's amazing to me, when I hear people complaining here about Alberta, and I go home and I look around my own community and constituency and realize that I've had 6,500 new houses built in my constituency in the last three years. Now, these people are coming from somewhere, a lot of them from British Columbia but a lot of them from down east.

Why are they coming to Alberta? Because there are good jobs here, because the economy is healthy, there are good education programs, there are good health programs. They're coming here to Alberta, plus they're looking at what they can do. Now, why are some of our young people leaving Alberta? Because they're going down to take advantage. They're portable. They don't have children in school. They go down from the universities, they go stateside, and they have an advantage down there.

So why not combine the two? Why not attract companies here, bring people here but also keep our young people in Alberta so that we keep the brains in Alberta, so that they don't go out?

The other thing that I think this bill does, quite frankly, is level the playing field between the two-income family and the one-income family. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Edmonton-Norwood, you don't have the floor. Hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer, you don't have the floor, and Edmonton-Riverview, you don't have the floor. The Minister of Government Services has the floor.

Debate Continued

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm going to give you a real-life example of the discriminatory practices that existed in the tax act between a married couple and a nonmarried couple. I did a tax return – not this year; I didn't do this one – and if this couple had not been married, they would have had an $8,000 net tax saving between the two of them, but the fact that they were married cost them $8,000 more in taxation.

This bill levels the playing field. It leaves the choices up to people to make, choices of life: if they want to work, if they don't want to work. It doesn't penalize someone because one family member may stay home or both family members may work. It doesn't penalize them because they're a married couple. This bill brings it into line. This bill brings a level playing field, and it's something that hasn't been there. It's something that has been neglected for a number of years. Now, it doesn't do the whole job. Let's not kid ourselves. It doesn't do the whole job, but it's a good start.

We've also made the commitment that as the federal government revamps their tax scheme, which I hope they do more of, quite frankly, we will make sure that the advantage of that federal tax scheme is passed on to Alberta taxpayers so that Albertans can enjoy every bit of advantage that comes from tax reduction. As you know, we've said time and time again that the only way taxes are going in this province is down. They're not going up. We want to make sure that Albertans have the best tax advantage, not only corporate but also personal. This bill brings this into line.

One of the other things I find is that taxes were used for the wrong reasons. We all saw that, and everybody here knows about it. We had put taxes in place supposedly to eliminate deficits, taxes in place to have economic well-being. That's nonsense. You don't take money from people to solve a problem. You solve the problem and leave the money with the people. It was a reverse effect. The elimination of those flat taxes is absolutely critical from the standpoint that they were used for the wrong reason. For a government to come forward and say that I think is a fundamental statement, that taxation shouldn't be used to eliminate problems. Taxation should be used after the problems have been solved to support the core programs that a government has to deliver, nothing more.

There are statements here about income levels. Again I'll refer hon. members to the budget document. There is an example here listing the single-income family with two children earning $50,000 and the advantage of this bill, what it means to that family. Under the existing system that family would have an Alberta tax payable of $2,834. Under the new system that will be reduced to $1,927. Now, that is a clear advantage for that family. You can go through. There are charts in this document that show how the advantage is there.

Senior citizens. I just finished doing tax returns, and where I find it is unconscionable – a lot of our seniors rely upon dividends as income. They don't necessarily have pension plans; they have dividends. When you have the gross-up of income on a dividend and you put that into income, it affects all of the benefits. The age exemption is reduced because of the gross-up on the dividend because the dividend tax credit doesn't come in until after the fact of the calculation on the tax credit. Then the senior loses the benefit of that age exemption because they have over the years put their dollars into preferred shares or some sort of dividend-bearing instrument that gives them a workable income.

Not only does it hurt them there. I mean, you take the fact that when you go through their tax returns and because they have put dollars away, they not only get a claw-back on their old age security, but they also have a disadvantage for the existing tax credits that are there. It's unconscionable that that can happen to our seniors. This program starts to help address that. It doesn't do it all, but hopefully if the federal government follows suit and amends and looks back at some of those white papers and realizes that tax reform is critically important in this country if we are going to be competitive and fair to the shareholders, the people of Canada, they will adopt some of those things, some of the instruments in this bill, and put them in place federally so clearly we can have a better tax system that is not cumbersome, that is not burdensome, and doesn't provide a disadvantage for Canadians to live in this country. We're going to be doing that here through this bill in Alberta, and hopefully the rest of them will follow suit.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is my opportunity to speak to the principles of Bill 18 during the second reading stage, and if I had my druthers, I'd druther be outside, where we have hundreds of people making a great deal of sense.

Madam Speaker, in the 11 years I've been here, which counting fall sessions would be close to 20 sessions in all that have been held, I've seen hundreds of bills go through. The two worst bills that I've seen in those 11 years ironically are both happening during this session, those of course being Bill 11 and Bill 18.

The effects of those two bills are dramatic throughout the province in terms of restructuring health care and in terms of restructuring taxation, and when we look at Bill 18 and we equate it to Bill 11, we see some ideology that is very, very similar as to those particular people that will welcome the bill or have least resistance to it because it doesn't impact on them as much. Those, of course, are the wealthy of the province. Those that will have resistance to both bills are those that see financial implications down the road, that being the middle class. When we look at the lower class, there will be some benefit for them in terms of taxation under Bill 18 but very marginally.

In my opinion, the former Treasurer saw that his concept of what he calls a single-rate tax, which has now become known as a sort of flat tax – I think he perceived it as his legacy, and he was so anxious to leave that legacy prior to his departure to the Alliance that he even upped the date of the budget so that he could jump the gun on the federal minister. It was almost like a snooker game.

However, what happened is that he jumped the gun a bit too fast. I think the federal minister outsnookered him, because when the federal minister made his sensible tax reforms, that basically destroyed the benefits that the former Provincial Treasurer had been saying would occur as a result of his concept, and a bit of mathematics determined that quite easily.

As tax reforms continue to occur at the federal level, the impact provincially is going to be more and more dramatic on Alberta taxpayers in terms of the provincial tax. Of course, we hear the Premier saying that they can adjust the 11 percent to 10 percent, to 9 percent, whatever, but I don't see any indication of amendments coming forward that the 11 percent is going to be adjust to, say, 9 percent.

Of course, the new Acting Provincial Treasurer could do the honourable thing and just simply scrap Bill 18, scrap that particular concept and work with the federal ministry rather than fight them or try to outdo them because it's a different political party. Remember, we're in a confederation here. We're not one island unto ourselves so that we can just go off in our own far-fetched direction.

The previous speaker talked in terms of the number of tax returns

she's done and the complications of the tax return. I have a couple of QuickTax programs myself. On the one at home I do about 15 returns. We also have one I purchased for the constituency office so that we could do tax returns for those on lower incomes. That's one of the things that I paid for out of my own pocket because it's not covered under our budget, but so be it. It helps people out. It's given me a great deal of knowledge as to how the tax situation operates both federally and provincially, and I do agree with the previous speaker that taxation is a very, very complicated situation. Even though there have been attempts to simplify it in terms of the forms and such, really when it comes right down to it, the best change that ever occurred was the computerization that allowed for programs like QuickTax, because that has helped.

It continues to remain complicated at both levels. We see surtaxes, and we see additional surtaxes. We can look at the exemptions, for example, where we have an exemption, but then there's an additional personal exemption depending on what your income is. Again, some of that is the fault of the federal government; I'll acknowledge that. But, again, the way to resolve it, the way to simplify it is not to go off in our own direction, which is going to hurt Albertans but rather to work with the federal government and come up with a system across Canada in terms of sensible tax reform at both the federal and the provincial levels.

Madam Speaker, I'm going to reflect on some of the comments that were made during the last number of months that have led us to the position we are at today. We can go back to July 26, 1999, when Klein mused about accelerating the Alberta single-rate tax scheme in 1999 and 2000 by increasing the basic personal and spousal exemptions to $11,620, first as a means of providing tax relief to low- and middle-income Albertans. The Premier did not recognize that under the current tax collection agreement the province cannot adjust federally defined amounts of refundable tax credits while remaining linked to the tax-on-tax system.

What occurred at that particular point when there was talk about the single-rate tax scheme being introduced is that somewhere it was flogged out there by the spin doctors on the government side that this would mean provincial tax relief ultimately of up to $1,500 for any person that was making $30,000 income or less. In effect, the statement was made that anybody making $30,000 or less would not pay any provincial income tax. There were people that came to my constituency office and said: "This is great. I could potentially save up to $1,500. I hope your caucus is not going to oppose it."

So I started to ask some questions and got some research done. Basically, somebody had come up with some type of notion that if you took a certain scenario of a married couple with two dependants, this, this, this, and this, in that one particular category at $30,000 you wouldn't pay any income tax because of the amounts of exemptions that would apply. We're talking in terms of a married couple with a couple of dependants.

Then we jump ahead to November 23, 1999. The Premier said that the government might lower the 9 cents per litre gasoline tax, and then a few days later, in fact two days later, the Premier mused about a gasoline tax rebate. Then on December 29 the Premier mused about providing Albertans with a $100 tax rebate; in other words, cheques for $100 were going to be sent to every taxpayer across Alberta, like the old Social Credit dividends if any of you have been around long enough to actually receive one of those dividends. I certainly haven't been, but I did hear about them. An actual cheque or dividend was mailed out to Albertans, and this was the same concept.

However, on January 7, 2000, just a few days later, the former Provincial Treasurer said that the government was considering a personal income tax cut in the year 2000. Then 10 days later, on January 17, the same former Provincial Treasurer said that the government was considering a reduction in health care premiums. The next day that former Provincial Treasurer said that the surplus would be used to pay down the debt rather than to provide tax cuts in 2000.

On January 26 the Premier's government stated that an 18 cent reduction in the mill rate for the education property tax would be applicable to the 2000-2001 fiscal year, which amounts to a paltry $22.50 tax cut for the average homeowner. Now, that was actually implemented; that did provide a $22.50 tax cut for the average homeowner. There we actually saw a reduction, a benefit of $22.50 to the average homeowner, and I didn't see a great deal of dancing in the streets over that particular one.

We jump ahead to February 24. The former Treasurer then reannounced the 11 percent flat tax scheme for the eighth time since the 1999 provincial budget, the eighth time that that was announced. We go then to February 27. The former Provincial Treasurer called on the federal government to cut taxes, and he's quoted as saying: what we're saying to Mr. Martin is try it; you'll like it. On February 28 the former Treasurer commented on federal government tax measures. He said that the federal cuts didn't go as far as Alberta's but that they're better than tax increases. On February 28 the former Provincial Treasurer speculated about a reduction in the 11 percent single-rate tax. Quoting him: if it stays up throughout the whole year, maybe we could look at a reduction there and go to 10.5 percent.

I could go on and on and on. The point I'm trying to make here, Madam Speaker, is: where exactly is the provincial government headed in terms of their tax reform? We now, of course, have the former Provincial Treasurer in a position where he is no longer accountable for the various proposals that did come forward, for the actual bills that were introduced. Of course, the Premier has the flexibility, if he chooses to, to simply scrap that and again come out with something that's a bit more feasible.

Madam Speaker, I want to speak for a bit on some of the principles and use some actual figures just to give an indication as to how the mechanics of Bill 18 would work from the research that I've been able to gather. The figures clearly point out to me that Bill 18 is a tax grab on the middle class.

In the year 2001 a taxpayer earning $35,000 will pay $2,385.69 in provincial taxes under the current tax system while paying $2,571.80 in provincial taxes under an 11 percent single rate. That's a tax grab by this government of $186.11. Now, that's not exactly what we would call tax relief, not to the middle class, not to that particular taxpayer earning $35,000 a year.

When we look at the year 2004 under the proposed formulas, the same taxpayer earning $35,000 will pay $2,194.60 in provincial taxes under the current system while paying $2,517.36 provincial taxes under the 11 percent single rate. That's a tax grab by the government of $322.76. So, again, we don't really see what I would call tax relief.

If we look at the year 2004 again, a taxpayer earning $50,000 a year will pay $3,787.60 in provincial taxes under the current tax system while paying $4,167.36 under the 11 percent single-rate tax, a tax grab of $379.76. Again, very consistent.

We see one thing occurring as I go through these particular figures, and that thing of course that occurs is a tax grab on the middle class. Now, if we turn around and look at the Alberta marginal rate for taxpayers with taxable incomes in the high-income tax bracket, above $70,000, comprising 13 percent of the tax filers in Alberta, it would be 13.26 percent under the current tax system versus 11 percent under the single-rate tax. That means that a taxpayer earning above $70,000 would have to pay $110 on each additional thousand dollars earned under the Alberta single-rate system while paying $132.60 in provincial taxes under the current rate.

The bottom line is that we see as things escalate – and here's where a bit of really simple mathematics comes in. When I do these tax returns, I talk about the same tax returns, but for different people, that the former speaker spoke of. When we talk in terms of the various taxation at the federal level, we can look at – what is it? – the 17 percent and the 29 percent, if I remember right, and then it goes up to about 39 percent, depending on your income. Now, our provincial tax is based on a percentage of that federal tax. If I recall correctly, off the top of my head, the rate has been reduced from a high of 44.5 or 45.5 to 42.5 over the years.

We start looking at 42.5 percent of, let's say, the federal rate. Of course, we're going to see a situation where as the income increases, that flat tax of 11 percent as it applies, because it's not progressive, is going to mean more and more savings. When we talk in terms of a flat tax or a single-rate tax, it takes away that whole concept of the progressive nature of most taxation, even in things like the licensing of a vehicle. Provincial governments across the country, municipalities – you have a progressive tax at the municipal level in the sense that the more your property is worth, the more you pay. If you improve that property, your amount of taxes goes up.

Madam Speaker, as foolish as it may sound, when I was on the municipal council – and I don't know if you experienced the same thing when you were on the municipal council in your particular municipality, when you were in fact Her Worship the mayor – I had people say to me: well, it's a disincentive to increase my assessment when I improve my property; why should I improve it if I'm going to have to pay more? They actually suggested that it should be reversed, that as you improve your property, your taxes would go down. Now, just stop and think about that for a second. It may on the surface sound like it makes a bit of sense because it would provide some incentive for people to improve their property. Those that didn't would be taxed at a higher rate. We actually had one former municipal councillor that agreed with that concept.

Can you imagine a person of very low income being faced with that situation where they've got to pay a higher rate of taxation because they can't afford to fix their property or bring it up to the same standard as somebody a few blocks down the road that has money to build a sauna, has money to put in a fireplace, has money to build an attached garage, whatever, and who for those additional luxuries would get the benefit of an additional tax break? That takes away from the nature of a progressive tax system.

It can be argued that a progressive tax system can contribute to the so-called brain drain. I don't buy that myself. I think there's a great deal more involved with those people that decide to leave Canada and go to the United States or people that leave the United States and come to Canada. I think there's a whole lot more involved than the actual amounts of taxation that may be paid. For example, any Canadian moving down to the United States realizes right off the bat that any tax savings that may occur because they happen to have a lower tax rate are going to be more than offset by the health care costs. Ironically, we could find ourselves in the same type of situation here in Alberta in years to come if we proceed with Bill 11. That could very well happen.

I think when people move, when people relocate to a different country, they do it for several reasons. One may be because of climate. It may be because they see some opportunities in their particular field, like we saw here a number of years ago when we saw the health care system slashed and nurses could no longer get jobs here in the province of Alberta. Sure, they went to the United States, not necessarily because it was their desire at that particular time to go to Texas and leave their family here, but they were forced to because the opportunity that they had been educated for, that they had trained for was taken away. They had no choice.

So you see, I think there's a great deal more to the whole question of relocation than the matter of taxes being a wee bit lower. In fact, I feel sorry for an individual that would be that motivated by saving a few dollars that they would actually forsake their country, that educated them, to go to another country that they may not particularly care for. They may not particularly care for the environment there and the social programs and such, but they save a few dollars. I would feel sorry for that type of person.

Madam Speaker, when we look at taxation, we look at the amounts of dollars that are achieved. We always talk in terms of tax reform, which we have to do. I hear the Association of Alberta Taxpayers coming out quite often in recent times, in fact very, very aggressively, against this government in terms of some of its proposed tax reforms and such.

Madam Speaker, I would like to go on, but I have to conclude at that point. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm glad to have the opportunity to join in debate on second reading of Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. Second reading is about the principle of the bill, the ideas that are being put forward in it. I'm glad of the opportunity to explore some of the principles that are being set forth here.

The whole idea of taxes, I think, is raised by this. The first thing that comes to mind is: do we need an improvement in the system that we have? I think most people would say: absolutely; you bet. There are lots of flaws. It's difficult. In some cases there are loopholes that are accessible to some and inaccessible to others, so there's an inequity that can be created. I'm not debating that the tax system needs improvement, but do I think that the principles being set forth in Bill 18 are the improvement? No, I do not think so.

Let me set the record straight right here. You know, I don't want to be accused of being someone that wants to charge everybody more taxes just because. I'm one of those people that would love to pay less in taxes, along with many, many other Albertans out there, but I still want the balance. I'd also like to see the good services and programs that are provided that we as Albertans receive in exchange for the taxes we pay.

There's a really interesting ideological principle that is encased in Bill 18. The former Provincial Treasurer - I'm not sure what the exact title is - set it out pretty clearly when he moved first reading of Bill 18. For reference, that is on page 470 of Hansard. He talks about the fact that he thinks taxes are punishment, which I find really interesting given that taxes pay for all those things that I think many people in Alberta want. The former Provincial Treasurer has spoken a number of times, in Hansard and in the media and other places, so he's well on the record that somehow taxes are punishment.

That's a really interesting concept to me. I guess what it brings to mind is: when did having a fire service and a police service available when you call 911 become a punishment? When did having roads in the cities and highways in the rural areas become a punishment? What about signage on the highways? When did that become a punishment? When did street lights and sewage systems and having water delivered to your home become a punishment? When did the availability of health care, such as it is, become a punishment? When did pension plans for civil servants and others that fall under the local authorities pension plans become a punishment? When did monitoring and licensing and evaluation and adherence to standards in safety become a punishment? You know, when did the inspection that we get for pressure vessels or occupational health and safety or building codes become a punishment? When did it become a punishment to get education between K and 12 or a subsidy for postsecondary education?

This whole concept that taxes are somehow punishment I find really puzzling. You know, when did social programs like child welfare become a punishment? I would have thought that was something society wanted to have and was willing to pay for, but somehow that's become a punishment. When did having an Ombudsman as part of our system, the payment for that Ombudsman's office, become a punishment? Or even Elections Alberta. That's paid for out of taxes. That's part of what's paid for from our taxes. When did that become a punishment? How about the subsidies for the seniors' health premiums? When did that become a punishment?

So there are a number of issues that start to roll through your brain when you look at the principles that are in this Bill 18 and this idea, certainly as espoused by the former Provincial Treasurer, that taxes are a punishment. I really struggle with that one.

What's the deal with this flat tax? Goodness knows there are numbers and percentages, and this percent is this amount of money and that percent is that amount of money. I'm going to do you all a favour by not reciting any of those figures, because they are readily available. For anyone listening along, I encourage you to check it out on Hansard at www.assembly.ab.ca. The proceedings are also available in real audio for those of you that don't want to read Hansard. [interjections] My colleagues are saying hi, and I'll pass that on.

The flat tax I think moves the burden of taxes from those who can afford it most to the middle class. It's moving us from a progressive system to a regressive system in that the progressive system we have is where those who could pay more did pay more. That was the concept our tax system was based on. Certainly when you examine that, you do have people in upper levels of income who use a smaller percentage of their income to cover the basics of housing and food and shelter and clothing and transportation, that sort of thing, and I think that's appropriate. A regressive system means that everyone pays the same amount, the same percentage exactly. That, of course, when you look at what percentage of your income is being used to cover those basics, definitely becomes a disadvantage to the lower class.

Someone suggested to me that the scheme of this flat tax was sort of like a reverse Robin Hood or Robin Hood's evil twin brother in that it's a plan to steal from the middle class to give to the rich. That, I'm sure, was said with a good deal of humour. I think there's something in it, though, because I think it is a tax break. It's disguising a tax break that benefits the wealthiest, the elite, and is put forward as something that is of benefit to all Albertans.

Here's the one set of figures I'll use. This proposed flat tax gives 3.6 percent of Albertans earning more than $100,000 a 29.1 percent tax cut. Yowza.

AN HON. MEMBER: Good.

MS BLAKEMAN: I hear members opposite saying "good." Well, I'm sure those that are earning more than $100,000 feel that's so, but if they are gaining that kind of tax cut, where is the, you know, equivalency as it shakes down for the rest of the income earners?

An interesting thing has happened here in the sort of selling of the idea, the principle of this, to Albertans, and I think there were sort of three stages to this. One was that I don't think the middle class, which is the majority of the voting base, would accept the poor being gouged as they would be if a flat tax were put all the way across the board. It truly would disadvantage people. The first thing you do is raise the exemption threshold so that the poor, many of them in fact, will be exempt from paying tax, and that's a bit more acceptable, a bit more palatable to people. So that's the first thing you do in trying to sell this thing.

The second thing is you tell people that it's something else, that it's not so much a flat tax. I mean, we've heard all kinds of discussions tonight about how it's going to benefit people, single-income families over dual-income families. I'll just refer people to Hansard to read the comments that have been made previously about what else this bill is supposed to be.

I think this is the real genius of it. The third part of this is that you give the people a tax cut to sell this scheme to begin with, so instead of them understanding or seeing right away that in fact this is going to be them paying more money, especially if you're in the middle class, that sort of $30,000 to $80,000 income range, make sure you set the level at such a point that they'll get a tax break the first time out. It's like a sale. You know, it's like a loss leader. So the first year out that's certainly what will happen, and in a lot of cases people will indeed pay less, a little less in some cases and a lot less in other cases. That way you just really get people hook, line, and sinker. It's brilliant marketing, but then again this government has a lot of resources to pull on for marketing of what they would like to institute. Is it $8 million in the Public Affairs budget? That helps a lot. [interjection] Oh, my goodness; each ministry has a marketing budget. Well, no wonder they do so well.

So here we now have kind of sold this with a loss leader of setting the level at a point where even the middle class, which are the ones that are really going to get soaked in this whole idea, get a tax cut. It's interesting, because for those who understand the microeconomics of all of this, with this flat tax and the exemptions on the bottom for the lower income earners you really do create a ratchet effect, so not if but when the percentage amount on this flat tax is raised, it is really going to torque the middle class the most significantly.

So here we have a state where I think it's fair to say that the elite, those earning substantial amounts of money – and certainly you start looking at the $250,000 mark a year, but I think for lots of people even $100,000 and up is a substantial amount of money to be earning in every year – are going to really get good tax cuts. What was the amount I mentioned? About 30 percent? And the lower income are not paying any at all, so who's paying? Well, the middle class is going to be paying, and with this setup you end up with a real ratchet effect, a torquing of it, particularly when the rate starts to rise, and you get a perpetual bias, a leaning towards the lower taxes and the lower spending all the time. That hearkens us back to this whole idea of: well, what do we get for our taxes? I don't think that taxes are punishment. I think they should be a balance. They should be common sense, and it should be a fair exchange for the services that are provided.

So we have a government doing a really good sales job here of getting people to try and accept this flat tax, and then the feds came along and did a better job of it, because they actually did reduce the taxes for the middle class in a meaningful and sustainable and long-term way, and that makes this flat tax idea even worse.

As I think about this, I think: well, how far will the government go? In order to catch up with the position the federal government has now placed them in, the 11 percent I don't think is going to fly.

I suspect there will be an amendment coming forward that actually drops it to 10 percent or 9 percent or something in order to make that happen. Remember my number three, the actual tax cut that people get? In order to make that happen, they're going to have to keep dropping this rate in order to get that sales effect happening here, that loss-leader effect. So I'm just wondering how low the government is willing to go. I mean, are they going to cut it to 9 percent, to 8 percent? Where are they willing to go in order to sell this the first time out to get everyone hooked into it? Then they can start ratcheting it up.

Right now we're in a very enviable position in Alberta because of the high oil and resource revenue, but as we well know, this is a cyclical economy and oil prices will not stay high forever. It's not as though the present government can actually either create that oil or create the high prices for that oil. They are just able to take advantage of it. So I really do see the principle of this bill as being an ideology that's disguised as an economic policy, and I think there's good reason to question that in the same way as the cuts that were based on the so-called out-of-control spending – and I'll put that in quotes – which was really about some other agenda to do with cuts to the health care system, I think, to bring in private health care.

So I'd like to hear from members of the government: what is the evaluation system that's in place to determine whether this is going to work or not? I'd like to see a bit more of the cost-benefit analysis, the studies that show this is really going to benefit people, because I don't think it will. The things that I've laid out already indicate that it won't. I'd like to know: what are the key performance indicators for the success of this program? I'd like to see those up front, and I'd like to know what the goals are up front before we have something like this bill pass.

I'd also like to know: if this is the plan the government has, then what is the stable funding the government is looking at to be able to pay for these services? Or is the expectation that there wouldn't be any services offered anymore? I mean, are we looking to lottery dollars for the stable funding that we can predict on? Are we perhaps going to look at the price of oil to base everything on? Neither one of those is reliable long term or stable, so I have real concerns about this.

You know, this is the government that had to pass a law to keep itself from having a deficit, which always sort of scares me, when people have to put those kinds of restrictions on themselves. It seems to indicate that they're just bursting to go out and actually do that thing that they have to put those kinds of restrictions on themselves. I did note in that legislation that was passed – and I think it's been mentioned previously by the Minister of Government Services – that there was no real punishment involved in that. Usually when you set something up and say, "This thing shall not happen," then there's a punishment involved that says: if it does, then here's the punishment. While this government was willing to pass a law that said, "We cannot have a deficit; we must stop ourselves from doing that," there was no punishment involved in that legislation. So given past performance, I think I have some reason to be suspect about what is being proposed in Bill 18.

Now, a few other points that I made while I was listening to other people debating. The Minister of Government Services was talking about – and I just found this far too much of a contradiction – on the one hand how people are fleeing the province because of the high taxes. Well, you know, I have never met these people. The people I've met left to get jobs in other places. They left because they honest to goodness really preferred a different lifestyle, an ideology to live under. They preferred the American way of thinking. They wanted to go there. Okay. Fine. But it wasn't for the taxes. Then in the next breath the minister is saying that all these people are moving to Alberta. I'm sorry. All these people are leaving Alberta; all these people are moving to Alberta. Those two things don't quite go together.

I do agree that people are moving to Alberta, because I have certainly been the beneficiary of that in my riding of Edmonton-Centre. We're trying to revitalize our downtown, so there have been incentive programs there. A lot of new accommodations have been built in my riding, so I know there are people moving to Alberta. We also know that there have been things like the agreements that have been worked out with Calgary for infrastructure dollars, for instance, because of the large population growth there.

When I take a step back and try and say, "Okay, when we look at the principle of this bill, is this a good idea or a bad idea?" I think it's a bad idea, and I'm deeply suspect because of the ideology inherent in this bill that's disguised as economic policy. I've talked about that from this government in other scenarios before. But there are a few things that those wiser than I in economic policy – you know, I don't want to just slam this bill and say that there's not one single good thing in it. I'll try to be fair here and evenhanded. I think people better versed in economic policy than I have indicated that the unhooking from the federal system is something that should be seriously considered. Okay. The relationship between the wage earner and their family circumstances and the taxation system needs to be reviewed, and I think it does but perhaps not for the reasons people would suspect. I think we still need to seek an equity and a fairness in that whole system so that we are neither rewarding nor punishing people for whatever their family circumstance happens to be, and there are a variety of different family circumstances that do exist in this country and in this province. I'm looking for fairness there, and I don't see it today.

I think it's important that it be clarified very clearly whether the federal tax point system would be left in place, because that's one of the things that's not clear when this is talked about. If we talk about wiping everything out and going to this flat tax system, do we wipe out all those credits that go along with it? [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

Well, I'll have to continue this in Committee of the Whole, and I do look forward to it, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As much as I'd love to join this scintillating debate on Bill 18, I will move adjournment.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two sets of tablings for today. The first one is a set of five amendments to Bill 11 that I now understand won't be available to the Assembly for debate if the motion for closure is passed today.

I have included the response from the Minister of Justice, which did not answer that question.

Thank you.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings for the Assembly today. The first is correspondence written to myself from Janet Boulton of my constituency with the request that it be passed along to the Premier. Janet, who has been afflicted with multiple sclerosis, writes stating her concerns, as someone who relies on the health care system, regarding Bill 11 and the encouragement of the privatization of our public health care system.

The second letter that I have five copies of for the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, is correspondence from Carol Vander Well also of my constituency. This correspondence was copied to me and sent to the Premier, and it reads in part:

"Trust me", you said, as you reneged on your promise to give regions a morsel of self control through local elections of members of the regional health authority boards. You proclaimed you had to continue to appoint all the board members as the work to reform health care was not yet done. It is so very apparent now what additional controversial measures you had in mind.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. The first one is a copy of my correspondence of even date to the Premier that I sent to him this morning requesting that he acknowledge that the two statements he made yesterday are false statements.

The second item is an invoice for $21.19, which would be added to the total of costs incurred by the opposition around Bill 11, making that total $29,361.97.

Finally, the very last item is an updated cost/benefit analysis which shows that the government has spent $69,846 for each percentage point of Bill 11 support. The opposition has spent only $497.66.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got the appropriate number of copies of a conference that I'm going to be taking part in in Medicine Hat called Confronting Poverty: Making a Difference. It's going to be held in Medicine Hat on May 5 and 6. It says: Taking Action for Stronger Communities.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first are copies of the songs that were sung last night at the peaceful rally held in front of the Legislative Assembly.

The second is a copy of the letter from the mayor of the city of Edmonton to the Premier asking that Bill 11 be withdrawn.

The third is a copy of a letter from Mr. and Mrs. White regarding the fact that 24-hour blood pressure cuffs are not covered by Alberta health care.

The fourth is a submission to the Minister of Infrastructure from William Dascavich asking for answers to questions on Bill 11.

The fifth is a letter from Kay and Ross Gould to the Member for Calgary-North West asking for answers to their questions on Bill 11.

The sixth is a letter from Harold Moore to the Premier regarding donations to the Conservative Party.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an information brochure on a project that has as its community advisory committee Changing Together, the cultural brokers' network, the Vietnamese community, NorQuest College, and Treaty 7 tribal council among others. The brochure is on A Study of the Socio-Cultural Factors Affecting TB Treatment and Prevention in Immigrant & Aboriginal Populations in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is on behalf of a Calgarian, Gina Djuff. She is very concerned about the strike at the Calgary Herald, and she would like to see a resolution to this strike.

The second tabling is quite interesting, Mr. Speaker. It is a top 10 list of movies in Alberta. Albertans who are not expressing their opinion on Bill 11 can sit in front of their television and, with the convenience of this, watch a movie.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly one of the province's great entrepreneurs. Many years ago he started from the ground up to build one of the largest restaurant chains in Canada. It's my pleasure to introduce Mr. Walter Chan, president and CEO of Smitty's, and his friend Dale Richardson, who traveled from Calgary today to see the Legislature at work. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some 56 bright and active young students from the Aurora elementary school in Drayton Valley. I have to say that I think they've brought more cameras with them today than any other group I've had in here. I really appreciate them. They're very nice young students. They're accompanied by teachers Mrs. Diane Orr, Mr. Bob Irwin, and Mr. Paul Vickers and parents and helpers Mrs. J. Hartt, Susan Hines, Monica Neilson, Catherine Belva, Donna McQuarrie, and Randall Lynch. I would ask that they rise now and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the balance of the Assembly 29 energetic students and teachers from Archbishop Jordan high school in Sherwood Park. Miss Yolande Joly and Audrey Gordey have done an excellent job of inspiring interest in the Legislature. I would ask that they rise and that the members of the Assembly welcome them as they stand.

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the team handball players representing Team Alberta. They are from all over central Alberta, several from Strathcona county, and they will be representing Team Alberta in the upcoming national finals team handball competition in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on May 11. I know I speak on behalf of the Legislature when I wish you all the very best. They are accompanied by coaches Megan Henkelman and Ryan Hornbacher. I'd ask that they please now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first are Lesia Kozak and Evelyn Butler, two terrific volunteers that offer their services to the Official Opposition on a regular basis. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction is to welcome 25 guests from Parkallen elementary school from Edmonton-Riverview. We have students with us today from grade 6 accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Joseph Ewasiw, and parents Betty Rothwell, Karen Marlin, and Barbara Herrett. I would ask these students to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I'd like to introduce to you and through you 33 young, energetic students from the Kneehill Christian school in the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills constituency. These young students are accompanied by teachers Miss Terri Miller and Miss Raquel Toews and by parents Mr. and Mrs. Frank Isaac, Mr. and Mrs. Randy Reimer, Mr. and Mrs. Ches Toews, and Mr. and Mrs. Lorrin Baerg. I'd like to ask these visitors to rise and receive our warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Rakhi Pancholi. She is a fourth year political science student, and this year she's going to be working on the politics because she is going to serve in the Edmonton-Centre constituency office as our summer student. I would ask Rakhi to please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce two visitors to the Assembly. The first is Pat Cassady, who is my constituency manager in Edmonton-Meadowlark and who keeps the office running and without whom I would be very lost most of the time.

The second is Raechel Carpenter. She keeps us going. She will be a University of Alberta graduate in June of this year in political science. She is originally from Fort McMurray, and she will be helping Pat in keeping the constituency office going during the summertime. So if they can please rise and get the traditional welcome of the House.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Closure on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has said that he has cut off elected representatives from speaking on Bill 11 because it's been the longest debate of any bill. The Premier says that 36 hours are more than enough to discuss the implications of legislation that undermines Albertans' and Canadians' most cherished and in fact unifying program, and that is medicare. Albertans want to know exactly what has been learned over the course of those 36 hours of debate, and we're hoping that the Premier might clarify some unanswered questions that remain. Where is the proof that his plan for private health care won't be more expensive?

2:00

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, this is again another manifestation of the kind of misinformation that is being spread by the Liberals and their new friends, the NDs, backed by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Alberta Federation of Labour, and the Friends of Medicare.

There is no plan for private medicare in this province. There is a plan, Mr. Speaker, to protect the health care system as we know it today. There is a plan to protect health care. That's what the plan is all about.

MRS. MacBETH: Still no answers.

Where is the proof that it won't lengthen waiting lists?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, where has this hon. member been? You know, she seems to forget that when she was minister of health back in the early '90s she allowed 30 private surgical clinics to establish and to operate and to charge facility fees. Now it seems to me that she's saying that they didn't exist, that they've never existed before, that they've just existed in the last two or three months since the introduction of Bill 11, since the introduction of the policy.

Mr. Speaker, these clinics have existed for years and years. All we're doing now is attempting to put some rules and regulations around them, and they oppose that.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, where is the proof that costs won't escalate as private facilities compete with public ones for a limited supply of health care professionals?

MR. KLEIN: I'll answer the question with a question, Mr. Speaker. What was the rationale back in 1990, when this leader of the Liberal opposition was then the minister of health in a Conservative government? What was the proof then and what was the rationale then to establish these clinics and to allow them not only to operate but also to allow them to charge facility fees?

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why won't the Premier open up excess capacity in public hospitals rather than siphon off public dollars to private health care?

MR. KLEIN: Again, we have a perfect example of the Liberals not reading the bill, not reading the policy. If they have read it, they are wilfully misrepresenting it, Mr. Speaker.

Relative to the section of the policy – I can't allude to the bill at this particular time – I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness explain it one more time, slowly.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, there is in the legislation before the House in the section dealing with the criteria that has to be considered under the awarding of contracts very specific reference to a regional health authority having to consider the existing capacity within the system and its utilization.

MRS. MacBETH: Why does this Premier refuse to stop the queue-jumping going on today through private MRIs?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, much to the chagrin of the Liberal opposition the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness recently announced an increase in access relative to MRIs in public institutions.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Private ones.

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. We announced just recently four more new MRIs in hospitals, and guess what? Guess what? Immediately the Liberals jumped up, and they said: how can you do this? If it's good, they don't like it. If it's bad, they do like it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why wouldn't the Premier create one strong conflict of interest standard that will apply across the province rather than 17 different standards?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal opposition would help us with our policy and our legislation, they just might see that happen. Conflict of interest is indeed a matter of great concern for this government, and through legislation and through policy we are trying to address this as it relates to regional health authorities.

Again, I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, with respect to both the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the regional health authorities we are working on improving and making more consistent their conflict of interest policies, but contrary to their inference there are conflict of interest policies in place now.

The other thing I have to indicate, Mr. Speaker, is that the premise on which the question was based initially is totally wrong. We announced four publicly funded MRIs for this province on both the capital side and the operational side to be operated directly under the regional health authorities.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why won't the Premier simply tell taxpayers today how much his communications plan for Bill 11 is costing them?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, up until March – and we haven't done the total calculation – it's about $1.2 million, not the $2.7 that was recently suggested, not the $3 million that they threw out about two or three weeks ago.

MRS. MacBETH: How much was your ad on the weekend before you put in closure?

MR. KLEIN: I have no idea how much the ad was, but, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you something about the ad. At least the ad told the truth, unlike this malicious piece of Liberal propaganda that says: understanding Bill 11, Klein's private hospital bill. There is no private hospitals bill before this Legislature. Never has been, never will be, and to put out that kind of advertising at taxpayers' expense is fraudulent. It's an absolute misuse of taxpayers' dollars, and they should be ashamed.

MRS. MacBETH: So where are the 30 censored pages that talk about focus groups and private hospitals policies that this Premier promised to give to Albertans 26 days ago? Where are they?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness indicated, that information is being compiled and will be tabled in this Legislature in the fullness of time. We have given an undertaking to table that information and it will be done, because this is a government that does what it says it's going to do.

MRS. MacBETH: Another broken promise, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, is the Premier's slogan for the next election going to change from "he kept his word" to "he broke the trust?"

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer that question. You know, our strategy leading into the 1993 campaign was to eliminate the deficit, to get this province on sound financial footing, and we did it. We did it. We overcame a $3.4 billion deficit partially due to the negligence of the then minister of health to create a yearly annual surplus in excess of $2 billion. To have a $30 billion turnaround is absolutely remarkable.

Mr. Speaker, after we went through that era of reconstruction, of getting our finances in order, we went to the polls again. We went to the polls again, and guess what? We won again with an even larger majority. You know why that happened? Because the people trusted us. And they will trust us again.

THE SPEAKER: Well, that was sure exciting. I've certainly worked up a good appetite. If we keep this up, we might invite all of you to go down to Smitty's with me for something.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Conflict of Interest Guidelines

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary regional health authority's conflict of interest policy, copies of which I tabled yesterday in this House, says that conflicts are avoided so long as medical officers aren't directly involved in decisions about contracts with private clinics in which they have an ownership involvement. This weak-kneed policy sets up a you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours scenario in which entrepreneurial doctors can be involved in making decisions about any medical contract other than their own. My questions are to the Premier. How can the government justify using the hammer of closure and end debate about how to effectively address conflicts of interest that arise when those in leadership positions financially benefit from contracts with regional health authorities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's quite obvious. I don't know where this hon. member has been. You know, maybe he's been spending too much time out on the steps of the Legislature with people singing songs and so on to get to the issue of the day. We want to get to the issue, and we want to have a vote on the amendment that specifically addresses conflict of interest, but these people across the way don't want to do it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The College of Physicians and Surgeons does not allow doctors to own drugstores because this is deemed an inherent conflict of interest. Why does the government not impose a similar prohibition on physicians owning private, for-profit facilities that contract with the public system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness explain the situation to the hon. leader of the third party, but virtually every physician, not all physicians – those physicians who are staff doctors with hospitals, of course, have a special and unique position within the system, but those doctors who operate in their offices and operate also in the hospitals have a relationship with the RHAs. My God, if you prevented 4,000 doctors operating out of their offices from operating in the public system because they have a private business, there would be absolute chaos, chaos that even the MDs couldn't even attempt to undo.

DR. PANNU: My last question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: while nurses who only earn a professional salary are not allowed to serve on RHA boards of directors, why are physicians allowed to hold senior administrative positions within RHAs while simultaneously holding financial interests in private clinics that contract with that RHA? Why this double standard, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I do not think – and I stand to be corrected, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement – that practising physicians or nurses who are engaged in a full-time practice are allowed to sit on regional health authorities. I stand to be corrected, but maybe the hon. minister can help me out with this.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is correct in that nurses practising with a particular RHA are not able to serve on that board, nor is a practising physician in that particular regional health authority.

Secondly, with respect to the Calgary regional health authority's conflict of interest policy, Mr. Speaker, it was clearly stated. One of the physicians that was involved as chief of staff declared his interests under that policy as provided for. It was known to the public, the people of Calgary, and to this point in time I have not had any charges made.

The most important thing, I think, to be recognized by the opposition, which they have not done thus far, is that Bill 11 further strengthens the whole area of openness of contracts, conflict of interest, but they don't want to debate it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

High-speed Internet Access

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our committee on lifelong learning, myself and two hon. members, from Wainwright and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, have been holding public consultations across the province. One of the needs we have heard is the local ability to access learning services. That means high-bandwidth connectivity. My question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What is the government plan for such high-bandwidth connectivity across our province? [interjections]

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We can see that there's considerable interest in the House here.

We have recently concluded an RFP that was put out to provide high-bandwidth, high-speed access right across this province, and it's particularly important to the rural areas and small centres. That will enable them to offer educational services, health care, and all kinds of different advantages, both for the public and the private sector.

So the RFP has been put out. We received I believe it was 10 proposals, and we are now in the process of shortlisting those proposals. Once those proposals are shortlisted, we will have to go back to the shortlist for further information on their proposals, and once we have that information, then we will come to a decision.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the cost projection to the government and the end user, and if there is no such cost at this time, what is the process to estimate the costs, especially the costs to the end user? The question is to the same minister.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. I obviously haven't seen the proposals, so I can't comment on the costs of the various proposals, but I can say that as part of the RFP one of the issues is cost to the end user in small communities. Typically costs to end users in small communities are much higher actually than costs to end users in large centres like Calgary and Edmonton. So as part of this RFP we said that there had to be a postage stamp rate, that the cost to the end user in rural Alberta and small communities in Alberta had to be exactly the same or no more than the cost to the people in the large urban areas.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary question is to the same minister. From my technical knowledge I learned that the low-orbit satellite system is more cost effective than the fibre optics connection in rural areas in Alberta, so my question is: is there any consideration of using the satellite system for the high-bandwidth communication?

DR. TAYLOR: The member has more technical knowledge than I do in this area, I would readily admit, Mr. Speaker. Rather than specifying a type of technology, what we did was specify what we needed at the end. So for school jurisdictions we said 100 megabits, for hospitals 10. What we've done is specify the amount of bandwidth and the speed needed, and then it is up to the various proposals to provide that to the end user. That will certainly consist of some fibre optics, and it may consist of some wireless as well. As I say, it has to be 10 megabits to the schools and hospitals and 100 megabits to the jurisdictions and so on. So that's the way we're handling it.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, hundreds of thousands of Albertans from across the province are speaking out against a closed-minded, bullheaded, and arrogant government that appears determined to ram through its private hospitals policy at any cost. Meanwhile, this Premier spends his evenings elsewhere, missing in action here.

MR. HANCOCK: Point of order.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Premier, with all due respect we can all recall that the last time a Premier decided not to listen to Albertans he ended up humiliated by a six-foot stuffed chicken. How many Albertans have to come to the people's Legislature to speak out against the Premier's private health care policy before he accepts the responsibility of facing Albertans one on one: 50,000, 70,000, 100,000, 200,000? At what point do you blink?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, relative to the very rude, obnoxious preamble, I am not close-minded, nor are members of this Conservative caucus close-minded. We're not bullheaded. We're doing what is right: what is right in accordance with the requirements of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, what is right in accordance with the requirements of the federal government relative to compliance with the Canada Health Act.

With respect to the question, Mr. Speaker, we are listening, and we are doing what is right. We are trying to put rules and regulations around surgical facilities that have been in place for years, and for some reason the Liberals find something wrong with that.

I think it goes a lot deeper than that. I think it is politics. I think it is a matter, Mr. Speaker, of the Liberals wanting to drag this on as long as they can so they can prolong their vicious and malicious campaign of propaganda and misinformation.

MR. WICKMAN: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: just how many more health care petitions does the Premier have to receive before he has the moral fortitude to look Albertans in the eye and come clean with the real agenda behind his private hospitals policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, quite candidly, quite frankly, the real agenda behind the health care policy is protection of the public health care system as we know it today. It's as simple as that.

MR. WICKMAN: My last question, Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: why not simply do the honourable thing? Call an election, and let Albertans decide the future of health care in this province.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you know, how many times have I heard that in this Legislature, not only from this Liberal opposition, but from Grant Mitchell when he was the leader of the Liberal opposition? Whenever he didn't get his own way: call an election; call an election. Well, we finally called an election, and guess what? They got their butts whupped.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

School Lunch Supervision

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There are some 110 parent-operated school lunch programs currently in place in the Calgary board of education. These programs are for students who are not bused to school and otherwise need or want to stay at school for lunch. One hundred and ten schools represent about one-half of the schools in the system. An Alberta Labour Relations Board member has made a recommendation regarding whether certain lunchroom supervisors should be included in the Calgary Board of Education Staff Association bargaining unit. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Could the minister advise the Assembly as to why the Labour Relations Board has become involved in this issue?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The understanding I have is that within the Calgary public school system they had divided themselves into what are called collaborative learning communities, and I believe there are eight of them that cover these 110 schools that the hon. member made reference to. If I have my numbers correct, I think there are approximately 220 parents that really were involved in this lunch program, again as described by the hon. member. The Calgary Board of Education Staff Association looked at the situation, and they believed that the parents were being paid but were also being scheduled, so they made an application to the Labour Relations Board asking them to become involved in the situation and to make a determination as to whether or not these parents were in fact employees.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, since the board has become involved, could you advise as to what is happening now?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Upon receipt of the application the Labour Relations Board then made available a member of the board to try to effect a settlement between the parties to this issue; namely, the Calgary board of education, the Calgary Board of Education Staff Association, and of course the parents. There were a number of meetings that were held. In the determination of those meetings there was going to be no agreement between the parties, so in fact with the authority that the board member was given, she has made a recommendation. In fact, to be technically correct, Mr. Speaker, she has made eight recommendations, one for each of these community areas. That recommendation, of course, is a sealed recommendation, and we are waiting determination from the parties.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister is: how are you prepared to resolve this matter?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, of course, it's a delicate system, and there are other matters that are ongoing currently within the labour relations scene in Alberta where parties have asked me to get involved, even to the point of intervening. It is not the position of the minister of labour to intervene in this situation. In the situation that is involved today, everything is proceeding according to the act and its regulations. The minister at the appropriate time will be advised as to whether or not there is an agreement between the Calgary board of education and the staff association as it relates to this particular matter, and then we'll see where the next steps have to be, based on whether we have an agreement or not.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Bill 11 Publicity

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Official Opposition tabled an additional invoice bringing the total of our campaign to protect medicare – that's to protect medicare – and save democracy in Alberta to $29,361.97. Unfortunately, the Premier's $8 million Public Affairs Bureau and his 5 and a half billion dollar Ministry of Health and Wellness either can't add or are under strict instructions to put out deliberate misinformation about the costs of the government's massive propaganda campaign to sell its private health care policy. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier quit ducking and hiding and promise to release all of the invoices, all of the receipts, all of the contracts today so Albertans can find out just how much of their money has been spent on selling this government's private health care policy? Now. Not 10 months from now.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can stand before this Legislative Assembly and say that not one single penny, not one cent has been spent on any advertising campaign to sell a so-called private health policy. Not one penny.

MS OLSEN: Given that the Premier's $8 million Public Affairs Bureau seems to have lost its pocket calculator, will the Premier just confirm this estimate prepared by the Official Opposition – that's the one that has been tabled here – which shows that the real cost of the taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign to privatize health in Alberta is over $2.7 million to date?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I reiterate: not one single penny, not one single cent, not one nickel has been spent on promoting or advertising a private health care policy.

If the Liberals say that they've only spent somewhere around $30,000, I will accept that, but what I won't accept is that they have spent that money to maliciously, purposely, and viciously mislead the public, to put in advertising that there is somehow before this Legislature a private hospitals bill. It's wrong. It's misleading. It's an absolute abuse of taxpayer dollars. I don't know why they haven't been called on this, because it is blatantly false. It is blatantly untrue, it is blatantly fraudulent, and they continue to do it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I accept the fact that they have spent $30,000 on a campaign of malicious misinformation, but they've been aided and abetted by millions and millions of dollars from the Canadian Union of Public Employees, by the Alberta Federation of Labour, by the United Nurses of Alberta, by the Alberta Teachers' Association, by the Friends of Medicare. Let's not let them fool the Alberta public. There has been a multimillion dollar campaign of misinformation relative to this bill, and the Liberals have been a big part of it.

THE SPEAKER: The Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can Albertans trust one word that this Premier says on health care when he hasn't got the courage to give taxpayers a true cost breakdown of the government's dismantling of public health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you know, they're yittering and yattering that they can't trust me. Well, I'll tell you, as I've told this Legislative Assembly before: they trusted us in 1993, the people trusted us in 1997, and they will trust us again when we go to the polls. Just wait and see. Wait and see.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Day Care

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the hon. Minister of Children's Services. Over the past few weeks a number of my constituents in the child care field have voiced their concern that the quality of day care is being eroded by the inability to recruit and retain trained staff. To the minister: could the minister tell child care workers around the province what is being done to address this very important issue?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am well aware of letters in the last few weeks that MLAs and others across the province may have received about the wage enhancement proposals that have been in front of day care operators.

As of April 1, '99, this Assembly would be aware that we put in a child subsidy program that took the subsidy for day care directly to the parent. It increased the amount of money that parents were able to receive for children, and it also provided an opportunity for parents to make the choice for family day homes.

Mr. Speaker, we have not been in the business of subsidizing businesses. Operating allowances directly to day cares has been contrary to the opportunity that parents have to make choices and deliberate where they themselves wish to have their children placed.

So although we're very sensitive to the issue that has been raised by a number of day care operators, we have evidence that we have ample numbers of workers that will take those positions. We also have evidence that the system where parents are receiving the moneys permits that choice and thereby in fact encourages the standards and day cares that are operating viably.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. There are a number of important issues affecting the quality of our provincial day care programs. Has the elimination of the day care operating allowance affected the ability of day care operators to appropriately compensate employees?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we do not directly intervene between employers and employees on the issues. However, we're well aware that retaining quality caregivers in day cares is an extremely important issue. We have met with representatives from the day cares. We are working with them to look at options that might be available.

As I've identified in this House previously, we have provided some $371,000 to provide 50 hours for basic training to any person who wishes to be qualified to work in a day care. As a result, we are, at least at the admissions level, providing that support for tutorial. Beyond that, we're looking at an opportunity for these operators and groups, when they have collegially gelled on some of their issues and management, to come forward before the standing policy committee and discuss what the ways and means are that would best and most appropriately meet the needs of the day cares.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done by the government and by the minister's department today to assist child care workers in Alberta?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, indirectly there's assistance provided as the child and family services authorities liaise with the day care operators in the examination and the licensure, in the inspection of day cares. There is significant opportunity for tutorial and advice being provided. In Calgary work done with the Calgary regional health authority and with the Calgary public school board as well as liaison with the university is examining the ways that we can provide assessment tools to families and to teachers and to day care operators in determining what is in the best interests of the child and looking individually at the child to determine whether or not it could be beneficial to provide them other supports.

So we are indirectly and with other partners, Mr. Speaker, through the children's initiative providing other supports to day care operators.

Bill 11 and the Democratic Process

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, the current Prime Minister of Canada has used closure eight times since 1993. In stark contrast, this Premier has used closure 26 times since 1993. To the Acting Premier: why is this government so much more willing to stifle democracy and freedom of speech?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, democracy occurs every day in this Legislature in the afternoon and in the evening. The bill that's before the House that's been talked about for two months, plus a public discussion on policy for several months before that has received more debate at every stage to this point. When you cannot move off a definition amendment onto the substantive discussion of the bill in committee, I would suggest that taxpayers' money would be better spent in continuing the debate, which we are not doing in this Legislature in a meaningful way at this time.

Mr. Speaker, this is the place where the democratic process works.

Closure is a tool of this Legislature, a legitimate tool. The government will only use it when it is absolutely necessary, and that is the case now.

MS CARLSON: Closure is how this government defines democracy.

To the Acting Premier: given that the majority of Albertans believe in free votes, why won't the government allow its members a free vote on health care policy? Why won't you do that?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the members of the government caucus will have the opportunity to vote on this legislation, probably later today, as will the members of the opposition caucus. Frankly, I've not heard from any member of this caucus that they're uncomfortable with their voting ability and their opportunity to vote on this bill. They will, it will happen, and they'll vote freely.

MS CARLSON: To the Acting Premier: given that the Premier of Nova Scotia can go out and safely face thousands of citizens at their provincial parliament, what has this government done that the Premier is so afraid to face Albertans who gather at this Legislature?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that question is in order for anyone other than the subject of the question to answer. However, I will say this. Every member of this government caucus has attended meetings either individually or in groups. They have received written submissions, they have talked on the telephone, and they have gathered all of the information that they possibly can on this subject. With that information and with facts that are in this bill, they will make their decision on how to vote.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Youth Employment

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rate of unemployment among youth is twice the national unemployment rate. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why is youth unemployment higher than that of other segments of the population?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a complex issue. Generally speaking, it seems, as the member has pointed out, that the youth unemployment rate is always twice what the mainstream rate is. Of course, I can point out that in Alberta we have excellent youth employment rates, but our youth unemployment rate is still double our main rate. Basically, it is a lack of work opportunities. At times there is, of course, lack of knowledge and skills. The young people just haven't had enough time to develop some of the work skills that are required.

There's no question that we have a more challenging labour market, and there are some barriers that are preventing youth from getting into the workforce. One of those main barriers, by the way, is leaving school early, and as there are young people in the gallery today, I must encourage them to please, please complete high school and then to take a really good look at what my colleague to my right offers in terms of learning in the postsecondary education system.

MR. JOHNSON: To the same minister: what is this government doing to help Alberta youth overcome these barriers to employment?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, as I've indicated, we're trying to make sure and encourage young people that are currently in the school system to stay in the school system and graduate. For those that qualify we want to see them then move into the postsecondary system, and to that end my colleague the Minister of Learning and ourselves have a youth employment strategy.

I would highlight today, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. members our Youth Connections program. This program started out as a pilot project in both Edmonton and Calgary. It targets 16 to 24 year olds that are either unemployed or would be considered underemployed. The reason for calling it Youth Connections is that we're trying to connect young people to information and to resources that would allow them to explore career opportunities and interests and then allow them, of course, to connect with the workforce.

Now, Alberta is not only a great place to grow up, but it's a great place to work and to develop a career. Of course, it's our responsibility as a government to make sure that we have a climate where the private sector can continue to grow and prosper here in our province and thus create more and more opportunities for our young people.

MR. JOHNSON: My final question is to the same minister. For young people living outside the two major centres of Alberta, how can they become connected to youth employment services?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's always risky when you interrupt a pilot project and start to react to it, but I can say with some assurance that the pilot projects in Calgary and Edmonton were working so well that we said: hey, we think this is a winner that we have here, so let's spread it across the province. So what we've done in our current business plan is increased the funding. Although I might be corrected on the numbers, I believe that we've now been able to extend Youth Connections to 23 other communities within the province, and I'm told that we are currently offering counseling, mentoring, and job shadowing opportunities to something like 28,000 young Albertans. We believe that this has been a tremendous success, and the feedback has just been excellent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary regional health authority has contracts with 17 private surgical clinics performing over 12,000 insured procedures per year, but the Premier and his appointed CRHA board seem unwilling to release evidence to show whether Albertans receive any cost savings from the $4.7 million in facility fees paid under contract to the private providers. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How can the minister claim that his private health care policy will save money when he won't release the analysis prepared by the CRHA which evaluates the cost-effectiveness of contracted surgical services?

MR. JOHNSON: At this point in time, Mr. Speaker, as members of the Assembly well know, Alberta Health and Wellness has to follow the provisions of our current privacy legislation, legislation which all members of this House approved in this Assembly unanimously, as I recall, and we are following that particular legislation and the procedures and administrative action that follow from it. Therefore, the very specific details of these contracts is not public at this time.

However, should the opposition want to look at all of the very, very good features of Bill 11 and be more co-operative in getting this very important legislation through this Assembly, there is a section in the legislation which provides for the openness of contracts and would be very satisfactory, evidently, to the hon. member across the way.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. Will the minister confirm that he and his appointed CRHA chair are withholding the evidence from Albertans because it shows that there is actually no cost benefit to contracting surgical services to private providers?

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that his private health care policy has nothing to do with saving money or reducing waiting lists and everything to do with pressure from private providers to increase the volume and variety of contracted out surgical services in order to increase their profit margins?

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker. In the Capital region I have received no particular pressure from anybody about the alleged firms or groups that she's referring to.

The whole point of our legislation is to protect the public health care system in this province, as the bill is correctly entitled. Secondly, it is to provide for some options in terms of contracting, yes, for surgical services in this province under very strict controls in compliance with the Canada Health Act, and there are a number of provisions in the legislation dealing with the overall protection of the public health care system. That's the legislation which this government has put before this House and wishes to move ahead and get in place for the benefit of Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call on the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today, but might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that accommodation. I'd like to introduce two constituents of mine from Calgary-Lougheed. They are John and Irmgard Silchmueller. They are very proud Albertans and very keen watchers of politics in Alberta. John is 69 today and is celebrating his birthday here. I'd ask that they rise – they're in the public gallery – and that we give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Holocaust Remembrance Day

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring attention to one of the world's greatest crimes imposed upon a people by people. Today, May 2, is Holocaust Remembrance Day, a day in which all humanity is called upon to remember the senseless and systematic annihilation of 6 million innocent European Jews as well as millions of others during the Holocaust of World War II. Out of racism and hatred individuals and entire families perished by the deliberate actions of one's fellow human beings, a disgrace to humanity. The world will never know how many of the world's future leaders, peacemakers, doctors, scientists, writers, artists, mothers, fathers, and siblings died in the death camps.

While the Holocaust is a subject whose gravity may be obvious, we must never let ourselves become indifferent to it. We must use this day to serve as a reminder that we need to be accepting and respectful of others, the true cornerstones of a civilized society. We must dedicate ourselves to the memory of those who perished and continue educating our children about the perils of hatred and racism to ensure that such terrible crimes may never happen again.

I urge all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to pause today and reach out with understanding and compassion to our friends of the Jewish faith as well as all others who were persecuted during World War II. Perhaps we may never fully comprehend or understand your grief, but we extend to you our deepest sorrow and with it our perpetual and sincerest commitment to ensuring that such an event never again darkens the face of this Earth.

THE SPEAKER: To the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, thank you for that statement.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mental Health Week

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week marks the 49th anniversary of Mental Health Week in Canada. During those 49 years the issue of mental health has overcome the negative stigma that has been attached to it and is now widely recognized to be as important to our well-being as our physical health.

The theme of Mental Health Week this year is the workplace stress, with special emphasis on how it can throw each one of us off balance. Workplace stress affects not only our personal lives but also takes a heavy toll on the nation's economic balance sheets. The annual cost of work time lost to stress is approximately $12 billion, and recent Canadian data suggests that work stress is considered by workers to be much more prevalent than work-related injuries or illness.

While mental health is an important issue for all of us, it is also important to recognize that there are many people among us who suffer from one type of mental problem or another. It is estimated that this year alone 9,000 Canadians will take their own lives or die from complications related to mental illness.

In the past governments resorted to hiding these people in large institutions away from major cities, but today we know better. Today we know that the best approach to mental health is one based on community mental health services. In Alberta 60 percent of mental health patients live within the community. The ability of these people to lead happy and productive lives rests upon the adequate funding of community-based mental health services.

Given these consequences, this government must do more to assist mental health patients through increased support for community-based programs. This year the government committed no new dollars to community mental health programs and has cut funding to several volunteer organizations in central Alberta. With this in mind I would like to know whether the Minister of Health and Wellness will commit to funding more comprehensive systems and community-based services in line with nationally endorsed best practices in mental health service reform.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary-West Constituents

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I think it is very important to recognize personal achievements of our young people as they may well become leaders in the future. I am proud to recognize many special achievers in my constituency of Calgary-West.

Charissa Tomczak, a grade 10 student at Calgary Christian high school, very capably represented Calgary-West at Mr. Speaker's Youth Parliament on April 13 and 14.

A special acknowledgment is due to seven young outstanding constituents who were nominated for the Alberta government's first Great Kids award: Hannah Bruins, Meaghan Dykema, Jackie de Graaf, Brent Kettles, Danielle Lee, Anne Madsen, and Elizabeth Stolte.

I am very pleased to also recognize 19 young athletes and two coaches from Calgary-West who competed with more than 2,000 of the best young Alberta athletes in the 2000 Alberta Winter Games. Congratulations for your skill, commitment, and sportsmanship: Kirsty Blair, cross-country skiing, silver and bronze medals; Lyndi Christofferson, shooting, air pistol; Jason Coke, speed skating, silver medal; Karen Coldham, figure skating, gold medal; Heather Fearon, diving; Kevin Handcock, archery; Matt Henley, biathlon, silver medal and two bronze medals; Amie Hickerty, hockey; Dallas Jones, diving; Andrea Longworth, diving; Eric Murray, speed skating, two gold medals; Kevin Sandau, cross-country skiing, silver medal; Michael Schleppe, archery, bronze medal; Todd Sullivan, alpine skiing, silver medal; Jeffrey Terner, alpine skiing; Wesley Thauvette, diving, silver medal; Jessica Tink, synchronized swimming, gold medal; Zane Westerbeek, speed skating, silver medal; Shannon Wilson, hockey; Donna Millar, coach, synchronized swimming; and Robin Sandau, coach, cross-country skiing.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you to the three hon. members today for their statements.

Now, hon. Government House Leader, you caught my attention for two points of order. The first, please.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on my first point of order under Beauchesne 489 and 494 with reference to a tabling that was made by the hon. Opposition House Leader, where he tabled a letter that he purported to have sent earlier to the Premier. Certainly it's well within his right to write letters to the Premier and to table those letters in the House, but in tabling it, he made allegations and used statements – I think the words, if we checked the Blues, would be that the Premier had made “false statements.”

Quite frankly, I take objection to that. I believe it's unparliamentary and contrary to the rules; 489 indicates some expressions which have been ruled unparliamentary, and “false statement” is covered in that context. Of course, we know that statements can be parliamentary at some times and unparliamentary at others.

However, the other citation I gave, 494, indicates that it has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had far too many occasions in this House where allegations are tossed back and forth. We've got out of the discussion of ideas and the debate on concepts and into the bismirching of character.

I think this is an opportunity for me to raise this issue because clearly the Premier indicated yesterday – and I'm not going to go over it, although I could. I have many quotes which could be used to justify the statement, but that was the subject of a point of order yesterday, and you ruled on that point of order yesterday. It is entirely inappropriate, in my humble submission, for the Opposition House Leader to then come in today and attempt to get back into that discussion, in effect to overrule your ruling of yesterday, and to make a statement which is contrary to parliamentary practice and contrary to the rules of this House, saying on the record that the Premier's statements were false.

In fact, I could go on, as I say, to indicate that those statements were not false. I would just want to indicate one occasion, again quoting from Hansard, page 1002, April 13, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora:

When we think there's enough support to defeat the package of amendments or at least this amendment, if they can't be further corrected, then I guess we'll allow it to get to a vote. But until then, I don't think any government member should be operating under the impression that debate will be swift on these government amendments.

Well, if that doesn't say that the opposition is going to stand in front of this bill and filibuster this bill until they get their way, if they think that's a democratic process, then I don't know what it does say. It says exactly that, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark went on record as saying:

We are going to be picking up on this particular amendment word by word, line by line if it takes us until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon. So that's what our plan is for tonight, and hopefully there's nobody in a rush here, because that's exactly what we are going to be doing.

Over and over again members from the opposition side have indicated that they are prepared to talk forever on this bill.

So to allude to that, to indicate that there are 14 references where the Liberal opposition has indicated that they're going to filibuster the bill, is absolutely correct and not a false statement. But more importantly, Mr. Speaker, it is inappropriate for the member, in tabling his letter, to make that statement in a context when it can't be responded to, even as it might have been responded to in question period. It can't be responded to at all. It's a tabling. It's a bare-faced statement, and it can't go unchallenged.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition on this point of order.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of points to make. Firstly, one looks at Beauchesne 486(2). It requires contextual consideration by the Speaker in terms of words that are used. It's a strong word, but yesterday, indeed, the Premier made two statements, and I reference the letter that in fact I tabled this afternoon. I did raise a point of order yesterday, and you heard from the Deputy Government House Leader. As a result, you disposed of it, as you were able to do, and therefore you became functus officio. You rendered your ruling, and that was fine in terms of the points of order.

We still have, however, the fact that the Premier of the province yesterday made a statement that was false. He was given an opportunity to show that it was correct. In fact, you may recall that I challenged the representative of the government, the Deputy Government House Leader, to provide an example of any hon. colleague who had claimed that the opposition had undertaken a filibuster in regard to Bill 11. She could provide none. We are here 24 hours later, and there's still none.

What we have is this. You dealt with the point of order yesterday, and that exhausted your ability under the rules to provide redress. Therefore, I would respectfully submit that I'm entitled, as any member is entitled, to specifically request that a member do the right thing and acknowledge that what they said was false.

If we look at what the Premier said yesterday, he specifically said twice that the opposition had said certain things, said certain words. He was very, very specific about that. In fact, I'm suggesting that those were clearly false. All of the evidence says that they're false.

Now, I can't ask you to do anything further, Mr. Speaker. I did that yesterday, and you disposed of that. But as a member who is offended by those two false statements, which continue to be republished by the Premier both inside and outside this Chamber, surely I'm entitled to write to the Premier and point out that the appropriate thing for him to do is to acknowledge that those statements are false. He also made those announcements while the cameras were running in question period yesterday. That is highly prejudicial, and I didn't see the Government House Leader rise to his feet or even try to caution the Premier in terms of the kind of misstatement he was making.

So what have we got? I say that in the context my use of the words "false statement" is borne out by the evidence. If you look at the letter I tabled today – and I continue to challenge. If the Government House Leader can point out to me an example where one of my colleagues or this member said, as the Premier asserted, that the opposition is undertaking a filibuster – that's a very specific word; it means something very specific – if he can point that out to me, I will in a moment apologize and I will withdraw my characterization of the word false. His colleague didn't do it yesterday; he hasn't done it today. What am I left to conclude but that there is no evidence that the word filibuster was presented by one of my colleagues.

It's a significant matter. As I say, I'm happy to withdraw the word false if in fact the statements that the Premier made were accurate, but on all the evidence they were not accurate, the ones they've made, and there has still been no correction of that record. I would expect, Mr. Speaker, that you would be as concerned for accuracy of the record on both sides.

Those are the observations that I wanted to make with respect to this point of order. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on this point of order.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker. I hesitated because I thought you might be prepared to rule.

The Government House Leader made allegations in attributing certain motivation to comments that I have made in this Assembly regarding the government's amendment package, and he read out a quote from Hansard, every word of which I stand by. He went on to then put words in my mouth, so to speak, by suggesting that my comments would somehow justify the Premier saying that the Official Opposition forced the government's hand to closure. That is wrong, and that is misleading, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader knows better.

As someone who has told me himself when we were both House leaders that he believes in debate, that he doesn't believe in closure, I understand how uncomfortable he must feel being the message carrier on this and having been the one to be tapped on the shoulder by the Premier, I suppose, to introduce the closure procedure on Bill 11. But I don't think his discomfort with the role that he finds himself in is any excuse or any rationale for him to mischaracterize my remarks or to put words in my mouth or to suggest that somehow I have used any words at all that would justify the Premier mischaracterizing what is debate. As unrecognizable as that may be sometimes in this Chamber, what members of the Official Opposition have been doing is engaging the government in debate on a policy which we are fundamentally opposed to, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, this point of order arises as a result of words that were uttered under one aspect of the Routine called tablings. The chair has provided ample comment in the past during this session with respect to tablings. We've now, in terms of this session, surpassed the record number of tablings by quite a quantum leap as to any other tablings before.

This parliament is rather unique in the sense that it does provide through its normal Routine in the early afternoon an opportunity for tabling. The tablings are to be tabled, the name of the subject matter identified and laid down. Every time hon. members decide to add adjectives or descriptions with respect to the comments, there seems to be items that arise from it. That causes quite a consternation, because oftentimes we're spending upwards of 10 minutes a day.

I repeat again that in most other parliaments there's a way of dealing with this, either by not having tablings permitted other than those which are statutory, which is the norm – in most parliaments only statutory tablings are permitted – or by having another time allocation in a different part of the day when the members can deal with that. If you have such a provision in place in here, then we won't have this kind of point of order, because no private members are then in a position to provide a tabling. That's one alternative to this dilemma, and it's an alternative that the hon. members of the House might want to consider. Periodically there will be a review of Standing Orders, and one might want to deal with that.

Secondly, a matter dealt with yesterday is not going to be raised again in this House today. It has been dealt with. It is not the tradition that once the House has made a decision, we reflect upon the decisions of the House. And there was a decision made with respect to it yesterday.

Thirdly, the use of the word false can be ruled parliamentary at some time and unparliamentary at another time, and much of it has to do with innuendo and suggestive statements and what have you. So what we have here is a situation where an hon. member rises today and says: "Well, an hon. member yesterday said, 'You're filibustering,' and I'm saying that I'm not filibustering, so that was a falsehood, and because you uttered a falsehood yesterday, I'm going to make the claim that you're now making false statements today."

The chair hasn't seen this letter that has been conveyed. Presumably it was tabled here today. The fact of the matter is that there's absolutely nothing inappropriate with the utilization of the word filibuster in this particular Assembly. If hon. members choose to use the word filibuster, they have the right to use the word filibuster. There's nothing wrong with that. If another hon. member feels that somebody else is not engaged in a filibuster, then the other hon. member can stand up as part of the debate and say: well, we're not into a filibuster. So what you've got here is a point of a difference of opinion.

There's been a great embarkation of debate in question period which violates all of the rules in every parliament. This has been going on from day one. So if it's the decision of the House that they want to see it continue despite all the admonitions, it seems that we're going that way.

It will be interesting when there is finally a debate on this particular thing and a decision has been made in the House with respect to the matter. Should the decision be that a positive decision is made with this Bill 11 – the House will have made a decision. It would be difficult to see, starting tomorrow, if that happens, how questions could then be phrased admonishing the House for the decision that was made the day before. So once you carefully read the rules and understand that in preparation for what might happen in the future – but it's clear. If one wants to use the word closure, they can use the word closure. That's a parliamentary tool. If one wants to use the word filibuster, that's a parliamentary tool. It applies throughout. If someone says, "Well, it's false; we're not using a filibuster; in essence, we're getting down to debate," there's nothing that says it's unparliamentary to use the word false or falsehood. So much depends on the tone of the reading of it.

The hon. Government House Leader is absolutely correct that when used at a certain point in a tabling, there's no opportunity for any hon. member then to stand up and explain, defend, or deal with it. So I think that's a very unfortunate use of the word at the time because it does not allow another hon. member to rise on this point other than the way in which the hon. Government House Leader did, as a point of order, which is after the fact.

Perhaps the biggest problem is the provision of tablings. The chair will ask the House to review the current policy with respect to tablings, should there be a review of Standing Orders in the future.

Second point, the hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

MR. HANCOCK: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My second point of order is with respect to a reference made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford during his question. I'm rising under Beauchesne 289(3) and 409 obliquely. Under 289(3) there's an explicit reference to the fact that while members are called to duty in this House and are bound to attend, the duties of Members have become extremely varied and Members must travel frequently. The discharge of those responsibilities will sometimes take a Member away from the House. This absence from the chamber should not be the subject of comment.

Over the last number of days, specifically today by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, there has been a serious and quite intentional abuse of the rule. I can understand when members slip from time to time, but when there's intentional abuse of a rule of that nature, I think it's time to call the House to order and call the particular member in this case to order.

Mr. Speaker, I absolutely have to concur with your comments with respect to the tabling of documents. Today there was tabled in this House a document called Bill 11 Top 10 Movie List. This was in the same context as the member's allusion to the Premier's absence. What the opposition have attempted to do through shouting things across, through innuendo, and through direct references, such as this member has made, to a member's absence, inappropriately and contrary to rule 289(3) of Beauchesne, is to refer to, I think – and if I'm wrong, I'd love to be corrected – a television comment that was made where the Premier indicated that he had seen a demonstration on television. There have been allusions in this House to the Premier watching a movie, and now they've tabled a piece of paper which has no bearing on what we're doing here. It's a self-created document. It's what we would call in the legal business a self-serving document. It's childish and it's a cheap trick.

What has been happening in this House and what I'm going to continue to raise points of order on from now on, Mr. Speaker, is when we degenerate from debate on issues, from differences of opinion about concept into this inappropriate habit of intentional breaches of the rules, commenting on a member's absence in this case, and the degeneration into casting aspersion on our character, talking about being motivated by political contributions, those sorts of issues that have come up.

Now, on this specific point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it's time to admonish all members of the House that intentional abuses of the rules will not be tolerated. The occasional slip by a member talking about someone leaving, that happens. The occasional breaches of the rules as we're in the passion of debate, that happens, but the intentional abuse of the rules in the manner that's mentioned in this case is inappropriate.

It's quite appropriate for the opposition members to do as they have been doing, call a standing vote on adjournment so that their attendance at a certain hour of the night can be recorded and then referred to publicly. That's an acceptable parliamentary tool to draw attention to the fact that some or all of their members are here at a particular period of time. That's great. I love to see them here and I love to see them do it, although it does take 10 minutes every time. But an intentional abuse of the rules such as this member has used this afternoon, in the context as well, I might say, of a totally inappropriate preamble to his question, should be ruled out of order, and the member should be called to account.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, did you want the hon. Opposition House Leader to speak on your behalf, or do you both want to?

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, I respect what the Government House Leader is saying and the reference he's making to Beauchesne and such. However, in this particular situation I would argue that the normal rules would not apply in that the Premier himself has on many, many occasions stated explicitly that debate will take place in this House. He's left the impression that he will participate in that debate, that we will have every opportunity to engage with him in that debate, and it hasn't happened.

I would not have raised that particular reference had the Premier agreed to debate in the public arena with the Leader of the Opposition, for example, which he's refused. The only alternative that we've been left with is to debate the health care reform here in the House, but with the Premier not being here to engage in that debate, it leaves us powerless. So I'm simply making reference to a statement. I'm simply making reference to a fact that the Premier has brought upon himself by his references. I would suggest that in this case the Government House Leader is not correct in his arguments.

MR. DICKSON: I'd just make these comments. I'd say that the Government House Leader stood on one point of order and gave some citation and then attempted, to my hearing, to roll two or three other matters into that. Let me deal specifically with the question, and that's ultimately what we have to deal with. We can spend a lot of time speculating on people's motives, on other plans, on other issues, but surely all we can deal with is what has been said in this Chamber.

If you look at the question, it specifically is focused not on the presence or absence of the Premier in this Assembly. The whole question is about thousands of Albertans, about people outside coming to the Assembly. I myself was in Calgary last night at McDougall Centre. There were over 100 Calgarians, and they wanted to hear from the Premier.

You know, the Premier may well have dozens of things in any given evening to attend, but surely we have not come to a point where in this place we cannot ask why the most senior elected person in this province is not meeting with people who are concerned about an issue. I'll read what I understand to be the question.

Hundreds of thousands of Albertans from across the province are speaking out against a close-minded, bullheaded, and arrogant government that appears determined to ram through its private hospitals policy at any cost. [Meanwhile, the Premier is missing in action, spending his evenings elsewhere.] Mr. Premier, with all due respect . . .

I'm not sure I can read the rest of the wording, but the question is: "How many Albertans have to come to the people's Legislature to speak out?"

Clearly, that's not talking about what's happening in this Chamber. It's about what's happening in that large public space outside this building. I mean, that's where the thousands of people are. We can only take 200 in here at a time. As I understand the question, it is: why the Premier wasn't at McDougall Centre to hear those Calgarians last night, as I was; why he wasn't outside on one of the nights when Calgarians were there. Now, he may have perfectly good reasons for why he's not there, but surely it's not improper to raise that matter and raise that question.

If you look at the citations that have been used, 289(3) – or the Government House Leader might have referred to 481(c) – that all refers to the absence or presence of members in this Chamber. I take it that the question is not about this Chamber. I take it that it's about being out and talking to Albertans who come. The Premier may have good reasons, but that's not a reason to rule on this point of order in a way that would be in any way supportive of what the Government House Leader is suggesting.

Those are the observations I wanted to make. If you look at the text of the questions, it is all about reaction to other Albertans, those severely ordinary Albertans the Premier talks about so much who don't have the privilege of sitting in one of the 83 chairs in this Chamber.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, let's deal with the actual text. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford says the following:

Mr. Speaker, hundreds of thousands of Albertans from across the province are speaking out against a closed-minded, bullheaded, and arrogant government that appears determined to ram through its private hospitals policy at any cost. Meanwhile, this Premier spends his evenings elsewhere, missing in action here. Mr. Premier, with all due respect, we can all recall that the last time a Premier decided not to listen to Albertans he ended up humiliated by a six-foot stuffed chicken. Mr. Premier, how many Albertans have to come to the people's Legislature to speak out against the Premier's private health care policy before he accepts the responsibility of facing Albertans one on one?

So presumably the question is:

How many Albertans have to come to the people's Legislature to speak out against the Premier's private health care policy before he accepts the responsibility of facing Albertans one on one?

Previous to that it seemed to be a significant amount of preamble. But there is that statement again, and I use it again: "Meanwhile, this Premier spends his evenings elsewhere, missing in action here."

Hon. members, it's one of the basic, basic, basic statements that we don't refer to the absence of hon. members. I mean, of all the multitude of rules that we have in here one is not supposed to do that and one avoids doing it. Examples are perhaps important.

Yesterday afternoon during the question period it was noticed by many that at the 13th minute in the question period a prominent member of the Assembly departed. Some members made interjections. At about the 45th minute of the question period another prominent member of the Assembly departed, and there was a whole series of interjections, including cluck-clucks, and somebody yelled out "chicken" and what have you.

Well, maybe there are reasons for people to have to go places. There are always reasons, and one of the reasons that we basically follow this tradition of not referring to the absence of a member at a particular time is that there are reasons. They may be very personal reasons, they may be very serious reasons, and they're not reasons that others should take to their advantage to try and humiliate somebody about. There are members missing in this House today because of sad situations in their families, very severe and sad situations. Now, for somebody to basically downplay that and denigrate that would be absolutely, I think, intolerable and totally discourteous.

I don't recall last night that there was a full House here, and I think right now 30 government members and six opposition members are in the House, and one independent member is in the House. I don't know if we should put that statement in here every 12 minutes, 23 minutes, 46 minutes, or what have you. In fact, one member of this Assembly has missed more days so far in this session, and it's not the person that most of you think it is. It is not the person that most of you think it is. But somebody is going to do something with respect to that one of these days, and they're going to be wrong, and they're going to embarrass themselves. There are reasons we don't do these things. They're courteous reasons, also traditional reasons.

I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is really proud of himself and his six-foot chicken, and maybe that was the point he was trying to make today, but he also knows better than what he said as well. I think he is an hon. member, and I think he can do better.

Thank you for raising the point of order.

Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'll call the committee to order. The chair would like to say that we have about a minute and a half, and we are going to have to report.

Bill 206
School (Students' Code of Conduct)
Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole and just take a couple of brief moments to talk about some of the things that were specific in Bill 206. In second reading there was overall support for the spirit of the principles of the bill, and I'm happy that all hon. members took the bill at face value as a positive initiative for our schools and subsequently pledged their support.

There were a few comments made regarding the particular aspects of Bill 206 which I hope will be alleviated here in the committee. I believe the foundation for this bill is solid as it is a step towards standardizing and clarifying the rules in Alberta schools, and there is a definite need for this to occur. Not all school boards have codes of conduct. Every single one of them has a policy on rules, but they're not all standardized, and that's why it is so important to have this bill brought forward.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The chair hesitates to interrupt, but the time for this item has now expired.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, we need a motion to rise and report.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I'm sorry. I would move that we rise and report. I didn't notice the hour, Madam Chairman.

[Motion to report progress on Bill 206 carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 206.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Cell Phone Use while Driving

508. Mr. Trynchy moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to examine the results of the study undertaken by the provincial auto insurance Crown corporation of Quebec, Societe d'Assurance Automobile du Quebec, SAAQ, on the dangers of handheld cellular telephone use by drivers of motor vehicles and then consult with Albertans on whether and what restrictions should be imposed on the use of handheld cell phones by operators of motor vehicles while driving.

[Debate adjourned April 18: Mr. Cao speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. There were a couple of observations I wanted to make. You know, I applaud the member for bringing the motion forward. One of the interesting things about the job we have is that you get to talk to an awful lot of Albertans, and they tell you things that irritate them and they're bothered by and things they'd like to see remedied, and I'd have to say that this is a complaint I hear frequently: the use of handheld cell phones while people are operating motor vehicles in the province.

I've had the benefit of talking to some extent with the transportation critic for the opposition, and she's persuaded me that there's some actually very good material that exists and some studies that show that there appears to be a significantly higher risk of motor vehicle accidents that are attributable to the use of handheld cell phones.

I understand that there is some other work being done. I read an article entitled Association between Cellular-Telephone Calls and Motor Vehicle Collisions, that appeared in volume 336, the February 13, 1997, issue, of The New England Journal of Medicine. I thought it made some compelling good sense, that this is something that has to be addressed.

You know, there are lots of causes of accidents. You don't have to spend very long on Crowchild Trail in Calgary or Macleod Trail, for those who live in the south of that city, to find what seems often one out of every three or four motorists operating a cell phone, I suppose as a kind of conceit; that is, we can operate the radio, the cell phone, put on makeup, check ourselves in the mirror, and do all of those things – we see people doing it all the time – and still be able to pay due care and attention to vehicles around us and hazards on the road and that sort of thing. So I think this is an issue that warrants some attention.

The motion has really two elements, I understand: one, to look at the Quebec study and then, secondly, to consult with Albertans on what sorts of restrictions ought to be imposed. I'd just make this observation. I don't disagree with anything in the motion, and in fact I'm going to vote for the motion. But why is it, Madam Speaker, that we'd be so anxious to consult with Albertans on handheld cell phones and we couldn't have public hearings on Bill 40, the Health Information Act, last year? We can't have public hearings on Bill 11, and we run like heck when anybody suggests a plebiscite. You know, at some point in this House don't we have to try and attach values to the things that we talk about?

This is not an argument for a moment in terms of why we should not consult with Albertans on this issue, but if there's such a thing as an objective observer of what goes on in this province, would that observer not be entitled to say, "Why is it that we're all set . . ." I can't presume what private members are going to do, but let's assume this passes, because I think it makes good sense, and I hope all members will support it. But if we were to pass it, how do we reconcile with the fact that we absolutely denied Albertans the right to be consulted on how their health information can be used, which is, I'd suggest, a vastly more important issue?

Madam Speaker, I see that somebody else wants to join the debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. HERARD: Madam Speaker, relevance. The hon. member while supporting the motion uses the opportunity to rattle on about things that were passed in this Legislature in the past – you know, that's over and done with – and things about Bill 11. I mean, it has to be relevant to what we're dealing with.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, my response to the point of order is simply this. We have an authority in this Legislature – and in a moment I'll find the specific time when it was used – that said that you have to allow a speaker an opportunity to develop a line of thought, and it's been acknowledged . . .

DR. TAYLOR: It's impossible to do, Gary, develop a line of thought.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I may be the worst example of trying to develop a coherent argument, and I may have distinguished myself by my inability to persuade, but, Madam Speaker, I think I'm entitled to use examples and illustrations and to be as creative as I can to try and make a point in terms of why members ought to support or ask questions about it. You know, I'm happy to talk further about the relevance issue, but for somebody to stand up in the first three or four minutes of a member's speech and complain about relevance seems to me to be a bit worrisome.

In fact, I wonder what Calgary-Egmont is frightened of. What is he worried about? What is it about health information, that I should happen to choose that as an example . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Because it's been decided.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I acknowledge it has, but if he were paying more attention to what I was saying, Madam Speaker, he'd understand that I'm using an example, that I'm trying to hold up and give some bigger context to what we're dealing with on the motion.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: This Acting Speaker, as I know my other colleagues that sit in this chair do, allows a lot of latitude in this Assembly on all sides of the House, but we do have before us a motion that is a private member's motion dealing with cellular telephones. I would ask that we try to be succinct and we try to be relevant and we not try to be confrontational. Can we get on with the debate with the time that's left?

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, just to conclude my comments. I in fact was almost finished before the intervention. I suspect we've spent more time on the intervention than we have on the argument. [interjections] I'm not sure when I've seen so much rapt attention paid by members of this Assembly to one little motion, that I'm hopeful most members are going to support. It's fascinating to see. I'm looking forward to the vote.

I just wanted to finish making the observation that everything we do here ought to be able to fit into some kind of a coherent plan. There ought to be some kind of consistency to the way we vote and the bills we pass, and whether it's a private member's bill or a government public bill, is it unrealistic to expect that we be able as legislators to defend to constituents why we would have a public hearing in one case and in so many other cases we shun public hearings? I mark that observation. I'm still going to vote for the motion, but I think that as a legislator I'm entitled to make the query. Maybe some others will have the answer for it.

Maybe Calgary-Egmont has the answer why, if he's supporting Motion 508, this is something that we can go out and spend money on. We'll take out ads, and maybe we'll send the sponsor of the bill on a trip around the province. Maybe we could have a steering committee, a cell phone steering committee, hopefully that would always maintain close communication. We could send them traveling around the province to find out what Albertans are saying. Maybe at the same time they could solicit the views of Albertans on Bill C-6, on privacy protection in the private sector, something the minister of intergovernmental affairs has been doing some work on but not involving a lot of Albertans. Maybe we could seek some input on Bill 40, and maybe we could seek some input on Bill 11.

Those are my comments. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before the chair calls the vote, I will remind everyone that this afternoon is private members' business and we are dealing with a private member's motion. It is not a government motion. The chair just heard that we're talking about consultation to do with government bills versus a private member's motion that is before us.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried]

Vehicle Front Licence Plates

509. Mr. Lougheed moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reinstate the requirement to display front licence plates on all vehicles registered in the province.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to lead off discussion of Motion 509, the motion dealing with the reinstatement of front licence plates. This issue came to my attention six or seven years ago when I was invited to the Good Hope hall, a community hall just a few miles down the road in the rural part of Strathcona county. At that time Rural Crime Watch was holding a meeting, and they were discussing the issue of increased break-ins in the community in the rural area.

One of the topics of concern was the absence of front licence plates and the inability of the rural people to identify vehicles in their community. At that time there were probably over a 100 members of Rural Crime Watch there, and they were talking about several issues, including this issue of front licence plates. Bus drivers made comments about their concerns with respect to front plates, and several topics were discussed along those lines.

At that time I suggested that it might be a good idea to write a letter to their MLA, having no idea that a few years after that in fact I would be the recipient of several of those letters and many comments from Rural Crime Watch people in my community that I represent, to suggest to me that this would be a good thing to bring forward, and they still have those concerns. Those concerns have been clearly and consistently expressed over these past few years by these same people, the Rural Crime Watch associations throughout the province. They've been accompanied with rational arguments put forward by these members, stating that the reinstatement of front licence plates would be a good idea for several different reasons.

They include, for example, bus drivers concerned about the safety of the students disembarking or loading on their busses when exposed to the possibility of oncoming traffic or traffic from behind the bus not stopping for their flashing red lights and putting in danger those students that are getting off the bus, especially getting off rather than loading. When a bus driver observes a car coming from the rear passing him, he's able to pick up their rear licence plate, phone it in, and that driver of the car who failed to obey the flashing light signals has the opportunity to correct his behaviour by perhaps either getting a fine or else a warning from the RCMP about his behaviour.

However, when a car approaches from the front, it's really difficult for that bus driver to pick up the plate. He has to try and see it in the rearview mirror or try and look around through the window somehow and pick it up, and it's difficult for him to do so. So that person coming from the front does not have the opportunity to correct his behaviour and some day in the future, not recognizing the danger he's put the students in, may in fact clip one of those young people getting off the bus, and we'll have a death or a serious injury of some young person because of that.

Farm and acreage owners also express very often their concerns in their area when people drive into their lanes. When they see that somebody is home, instead of turning around and driving out, as all our neighbours would do, these vehicles with people unknown in them back out. They'll back down sometimes quite a long lane to avoid having their rear licence plate seen, again an opportunity missed to report the vehicle. You can only report the vehicle and the type of vehicle it is but not some identifying number that it would have on its front plate.

It's possible those plates may be stolen, that the vehicle may in fact even be stolen, if these people are out there looking to break into rural community homes. That's also a benefit though. If the front plate in fact is stolen and that's reported and doesn't match the vehicle that it was attached to, that's another quick clue for the RCMP that something is amiss here and that they should be out there trying to find that person.

Actually, though, upon investigation we find the concern is much more widespread than just a rural issue. For example, all members and all Albertans are concerned about our wildlife and the situation in the green areas. We know about the situation of poachers backing onto fields or onto cutlines and thereby concealing their rear licence plate, and not having a front licence plate makes it more difficult for people driving by, wondering who that might be in the area and what they are up to. By just taking note of the front plate, they could report it, especially if they hear through the Rural Crime Watch phone lines or some other mechanism, their neighbours reporting some gunshots in the area out of season, that kind of thing, being able to report that these things are happening.

As well, rustlers in some of these areas driving pickups, pulling some trailer – the pickup rear licence plate is covered by the trailer, that may have some old plate on it that is no longer able to be identified, and who knows where it came from. That pickup licence plate being covered by the trailer offers a great deal of anonymity to that person out in that rural community.

Citizens on Patrol is another group, mostly an urban group, that also has expressed concern. One fellow just the other day from Citizens on Patrol in Fort Saskatchewan told me that he was driving by on duty one evening. He was going along, and a car tore out of a laneway. Just as he was coming about even to the laneway, the car turned and went the opposite direction to what he was driving, and of course he had no opportunity to pick up the rear plate. If the car coming out of the lane had its front plate on, he could have read it, identified the vehicle, and called that in right away.

Just this morning I glanced through my e-mail. I had an e-mail from another Citizens on Patrol person. He says here: I'd like to give you just one example. A couple of years ago I was on patrol and saw a small black Ford truck, a couple of young men. It was backed into an unused driveway. A day later we found out that a home was broken into about half a mile away from where the truck was. The culprits were never caught. This is one crime that may have been solved if we had front plates.

Block Parents have also expressed concerns. If front plates were there, it would give them an additional opportunity to identify the vehicles around their communities. Fish and game associations have also expressed concerns going along with those expressed by people concerned about poaching and the Report a Poacher program, those kinds of programs, people concerned about our wildlife. Conservation officers have also expressed the same concern. In fact, I did receive a letter from the conservation students at Lethbridge Community College stating that they fully supported the reinstatement of front licence plates. Last month or perhaps two months ago now the AAMDC voted at their annual meeting to move or push for reinstatement of front licence plates.

Urban as well as rural police forces are also interested in this issue. This afternoon I tabled letters from the different police services throughout the province. The Edmonton and Calgary police services sent letters expressing that the single rear plate has made it more difficult for officers to identify stolen motor vehicles, and of course it's particularly true when an officer observes a vehicle in oncoming traffic that matches the general description of a suspicious vehicle. They tell me it can be difficult and unsafe for a police officer to try and read the rear licence plate of a vehicle as it travels by in the opposite direction.

The RCMP have also written a letter expressing support for reinstatement. They say, as a police force concerned about the safety of their clients, that there are many reasons to use two plates. For instance, they cite that front and rear plates would assist citizens who have witnessed a crime in identifying vehicles involved. The Medicine Hat Police Service recently contacted me seconding the RCMP and the Edmonton and Calgary police departments' position that front plates can assist in the identification of stolen vehicles or vehicles committing offences such as dangerous driving and speeding. Also, I received letters from the Lethbridge force and the Camrose force.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to tell you about a particular gentleman who contacted me regarding this issue. This gentleman is a retired detective from the Calgary Police Service with 30 years' experience specializing in fatal traffic accidents. He's testified many times in the field of fatal traffic accident investigation, and he knows what he's talking about. He tells me that in over 80 percent of all hit-and-run accidents the front licence plate, if it exists, is sheared off the front of the vehicle and left at the scene. As you can imagine, this information would greatly assist officers investigating the incident. It would save valuable officer time, tax dollars, and get that information into the hands of the enforcement agencies really quickly so that they would not be trying to find these vehicles. You can imagine the amount of time saved and the concern over those who were involved in that accident and perhaps even killed by a hit-and-run driver. For this reason and for suspicious vehicle identification, this expert in traffic accident investigation believes that front licence plates make a tremendous improvement to law enforcement effectiveness.

Madam Speaker, the majority of provinces in Canada use front licence plates. Most of the Canadian provinces and most of the states in the U.S. use a two-licence-plate system. These jurisdictions believe that the law enforcement benefits of having front licence plates are worth any associated extra cost, and I believe that Alberta should look carefully at these other jurisdictions and see what we can also learn from them.

I believe it's important to consider the experience of Manitoba. In 1987 as a cost-saving measure, much as happened here in Alberta in 1991, they adopted a single rear plate. A decade later, in 1997, they reinstated the front plate use. Their government states many reasons for this reversal, but primarily it was a law enforcement issue. Law enforcement agencies and rural crime watch groups highlighted the need to return to a dual-plate system. Manitoba decided that the extra cost would be well worth it for law enforcement agencies, and because the law enforcement agencies work for the citizens, certainly the citizens of that province also benefit.

According to the Department of Infrastructure here in Alberta, it's estimated that reintroducing a two-plate system would cost from $1.7 million to $4.5 million, and the amount would depend, to some extent, on whether the plates were reflectorized or not. It's based on about 2 and a half million vehicles requiring plates. That cost includes the cost of notification, replacement of a pair of plates, and the destruction of the single plates that would be turned in.

Many of the licence plates that are in use currently have deteriorated to a large extent, and they're soon going to have to be replaced. In fact, sometimes we see front plates on some vehicles and know that those plates have been on for quite a few years. In fact, these plates in Alberta have been the same since 1983, and that's a long time for a plate to be used, perhaps much longer than its intended life span, certainly longer than in most provinces, where they update the look of their plates every few years. Alberta's plates are going to have to be replaced soon. I think that we could use the opportunity to reinstate front plates when a new issue of plates occurs. That would certainly reduce the costs and reduce the inconvenience to Albertans.

Several people have written, once this issue was made known, that in 2005 we've got Alberta's centennial year, and they say that maybe that's a great time to bring in a new plate. I'd propose that if that's the time a new issue of plates is being brought in, it would be a good time to replace the old plates and institute front plates as well. This would give Albertans plenty of notice to prepare for any change that's coming.

Madam Speaker, support for reinstatement of front plates comes from a diverse range of stakeholders. Many petitions have been filed already, and there are many more to come over the next week before the expected vote on this motion in one week's time. They will be tabled in this Legislature. We appreciate the help of groups, especially Rural Crime Watch – and we have some of the members with us today – in getting that word out and getting the message to MLAs, especially in the rural areas, that that's of concern and that they would like to see the reinstatement occur.

We can help law enforcement agencies function at their best by reinstating the front plate, and if we do it when licence plates are replaced, it can be a cost-effective measure as well. The small problems that might be encountered with the reinstatement of front licence plates are insignificant considering the potential increase in security and the opportunity to identify stolen vehicles or suspicious persons in our community, whether it be a rural community or an urban community. This is a small cost to pay to improve the safety and well-being of our children and our communities.

Madam Speaker, I would urge the members of this Legislature to support this motion and to lend a hand to Alberta's law enforcement agencies by asking for the reinstatement of front licence plates.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before we continue, could I ask for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce members of the Rural Crime Watch Association that are here today to listen to the debate on Motion 509. They are Clark and Doris Steele and Lewis Compigla* and Deb Kurylo. Clark Steele has been with the Rural Crime Watch Association and a co-ordinator of the front licence plate initiative for a number of years. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have a couple of questions with respect to the motion. I'd start off by saying that this has not been a big issue in my constituency. I just finished sending out to constituents I think 27,000 copies of an annual report I do. It's mailed out, and I've got lots of response, lots of feedback from constituents on a range of things. I've not got any specific constituent feedback on this one.

The motion seems to make such eminent good sense. As a native Albertan I still remember when we eliminated the front licence plate. Was it just about cost? I understand the arguments in terms of hit-and-run drivers and school bus drivers. I mean, that all makes perfectly good sense. You know how I was saying before that what we do here should make some sense in a bigger picture? It must have been during the Getty years – I don't remember exactly; there'd be members who would remember – when this came out. I remember asking the question at the time: what does this do in terms of law enforcement? I didn't have the rapt attention of all these MLAs. I would have asked this question to maybe a co-worker or my family, but I remember asking the question: what's the price in terms of public safety and highway safety in deleting this thing? I never got a satisfactory response.

What I do remember reading and hearing at the time was people saying: "This is done in American states. We've checked with the police, and the police don't think this is a major safety issue." You know, I don't have the text of what I was told at the time, but I remember this being such an obvious question. It just seems to me there were all kinds of assurances from all kinds of different areas that this is no problem, that this is not going to in any way impede the work of law enforcement.

As I understand it, the RCMP – that would be K Division – now supports this. That's what I understood him to say, and he's got some kind of a letter or some kind of communication indicating that the Edmonton Police Service, the Calgary Police Service, and I think he said the Medicine Hat Police Service have all indicated that they support this. I don't know if those documents have been tabled in the Assembly. [interjection] Excellent. Okay. I haven't had a chance to look at those, but I'll be happy to look at those letters because I'm interested in seeing what they have to say about it.

Then I guess my other question is just in terms of the cost of this. As I understood the sponsor – and this is just what I heard, so I'm looking for some clarification – he said that the cost would be somewhere between $1.7 million and, I thought I heard him say, $4.5 million, depending on whether there's some luminescent properties or whatever in the licence plate. He said that that cost would also include notification of everybody who is a registered owner now and destruction of old plates, plates being turned in, and so on. I wasn't clear on what the cost was if we didn't go with the fancier licence plate, if we just went back to having a front licence plate which is really no different than the one I've got on the rear of my vehicles now. Is that the $1.7 million? I don't know that.

I guess the question is: what's the cost thrown away? If we had until 1992 rear and front licence plates, as I'm advised, and we changed, I'm interested in what the estimate is of the taxpayer cost thrown away by having made that decision in 1992. Now, eight years later, really nothing has changed, I take it. We had lots of school buses on the road in 1992. We had police services who were anxious to monitor hit-and-run drivers and all that sort of thing. We had people in rural communities who were anxious to be able to identify vehicles in their area. I'm interested in knowing: what's the cost thrown away? I hope the member understands what I mean when I say that; in other words, in having gone from the system that existed at that point to what would happen if we do this. I'd be interested in that sort of information.

Otherwise, as I say, I don't think I've gotten a single call in my constituency office on the issue, but I respect the fact that there are many Albertans who are concerned about this, particularly people in rural Alberta who have raised that concern. I follow that in the provincial media, so I respect that interest and that concern.

I am interested in some of the cost issues. I am interested in seeing the letters from the different police services that relate to this. I'm interested in terms of that time, and I have to go back – and I confess that I haven't had the chance to do this yet – to look at the Hansard at the time the decision was made. Now, I'm not sure whether that was the decision of the Legislative Assembly or whether that was just an administrative decision, done by regulation or whatever, to announce that we're not going to have these. I'm interested in seeing what the representations were that were made at the time, the defence of it.

I'm not sure who the minister was. The current minister of natural resources might have been the Solicitor General at the time. I'm just thinking back, and I'm interested in going back to see the comments he made at that time. I hope he'll be able to join in this debate, because he always speaks with such conviction about everything he does. I'd be interested in having him explain why he was convinced in 1992 that this was of no consequence and no problem to do and why it wouldn't compromise public safety.

Those are just some of the questions I've got. As I said before, my inclination is to support the motion, but I just have to understand how come we're doing this 180-degree turn in the space of just eight short years. There may be some other members who want to participate in the debate, but I might ask the sponsor of the motion if he's got some further information around the costing and particularly the cost thrown away. If he can make that available – and, I expect, not just to me – if that could be tabled in some fashion, I think that would help inform the debate.

Anyway, those are the questions I wanted to ask, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much for your patience.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before we proceed, can I again ask for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

MR. LOUGHEED: Madam Speaker, a name was missed during the introductions before. At least I didn't hear the hon. member mention a lady who's done a great deal to help with the petitions, a lady who lives just east of the constituency I represent. Carol Marko is with us. I'd ask that she rise and be recognized by the Assembly for her hard work with respect to this issue.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased today to have the opportunity to speak in support of Motion 509. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing this important concern forward. As my constituents and most of my colleagues here might know, I've been an advocate of the front licence plate reinstatement for some time now, and I'm most encouraged that this issue is now before us for debate.

Reissuing front licence plates has been in the media a fair bit in the last few days as more people voice their opinion on the potential benefits of this licence plate and the drawbacks of the lack of it. Only last month at the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties a motion was put forward by the reeve of Leduc county, Edward Chubocha, proposing the reinstatement of front licence plates. This motion was adopted by the AAMDC, and law enforcement officials subsequently expressed support for such an initiative.

Why bring back front licence plates, Madam Speaker? There are a variety of reasons. First, it would be easier for police officers to make a positive identification when a vehicle that matches the general description of a suspicious or stolen vehicle is seen in oncoming traffic. In this respect I contacted all four of the RCMP detachments in my constituency of Highwood and asked the officers there if they would support this motion, and they agreed. I asked if there were any officers in any of those detachments who would be opposed to it, and they said absolutely not.

Complaints have been raised with respect to vehicles which illegally pass school buses on the highway. Such infractions are serious as they pose a real danger to young children who cross the road when boarding or disembarking from the school bus. Many Rural Crime Watch groups have maintained that front licence plates would increase the opportunity to identify these vehicles. With that in mind, Madam Speaker, I again checked with the three different school divisions in my area – Christ the Redeemer school division, Foothills school division, and Livingstone Range school division – and in all three the transportation people that I spoke with support this motion and think it would be most valuable in their everyday lives.

Madam Speaker, Alberta's Provincial Rural Crime Watch Association has been lobbying for the return of front licence plates for many years. This association represents over 60,000 Albertans involved in 110 local organizations. Again, I took the opportunity to contact our local range patrol, which covers a fair bit of Highwood, and they strongly support this motion and hope and urge that it be passed.

A third reason, Madam Speaker, for front licence plate use is a problem that has been experienced by many of my constituents who are on country residential acreages, farms, and ranches. A suspicious vehicle enters their private property, comes up the lane, the driver presumably detecting that someone is at home or out in the yard, and the vehicle backs away instead of coming in, leaving the property and avoiding identification. What are the people who are there to think except that they might have been a victim of burglary or worse? Anyone with lawful purpose coming into the lane would then be expected to continue on up to the house and speak to the people and maybe ask directions or explain their presence. When someone sees you and then backs out, the alarm bells ring. You can't do anything about it. Even with a pair of binoculars you can't spot a licence if it doesn't exist on the front.

Many of my rural constituents have spoken to me of their concerns about passing vehicles that are backed into a farm-field approach. They may belong to Rural Crime Watch or the range patrol, but the car or the truck or the van is backed in, and there appears to be no one there. When that rural resident knows that no one lives within a mile or two of the location where this vehicle has been parked front end out, they can only report that there is a suspicious vehicle or an unfamiliar vehicle at this spot, as was mentioned of course by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Without a front licence plate, all that local concerned citizens can report, then, is a suspicious car or truck or van. I believe that positive identification would be much easier if vehicles were required to have a front licence plate. The end result would be that more criminals are apprehended, and rural Albertans would be safer.

Part of life in rural Alberta is when you're driving on a gravel road, it's a little bit muddy, and there's some moisture on the road. The back licence plate invariably gets obscured, but the front almost never does. Of course, we often see in the wintertime as well, on roads that aren't neatly plowed, that a lot of the snow comes up and sticks to the whole back end, again obscuring the back licence plate. There's no front licence plate and no such obstruction even if there was a front-end licence plate, so it is an important consideration.

As has been mentioned, there are concerns about livestock theft in the rural area. This indeed, Madam Speaker, as you know, is a much bigger problem in Alberta than many people realize. It's not just in the old Roy Rogers' movies that we have rustlers. There are lots of them now, and they're highly organized. In many instances pickup trucks pulling a stock trailer and large tractor trailer units are especially difficult to identify without front plates. Two plates would go a long way to identifying and perhaps leading to the punishment of perpetrators.

Rural Crime Watch groups, then, are organized because there is a genuine need for them. When someone lives in an area where the nearest police officer may be 30 or 40 miles away, those residents often do what they can to ensure the safety of their community, and I don't mean a vigilante squad. It's just an observation function that they do. This effort usually takes the form of identifying suspicious and unfamiliar vehicles as just a precautionary tactic. A front licence plate would make their valuable work that much more effective. They need every tool that we can give them.

Not only can front licence plates serve as a means of visually identifying a motor vehicle; the plates themselves may end up at the scene of an accident and thus serve as evidence, Madam Speaker. I've been told that in a significant percentage of hit-and-run accidents the front plate is sheared off. For a police officer investigating such a crime, the presence of such a piece of evidence would be invaluable.

As has been mentioned by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, urban police departments are very supportive of a return to the front licence plates as they would be beneficial to their police officers on patrol, not only from an identification point of view but also from a safety perspective. Two licence plates provide two chances at identification, and police officers feel that this alone speaks to the utility and value of returning the front licence plate to Alberta motor vehicles.

One of the keys to the debate on Motion 509 is balancing the costs of reinstating front licence plates with the benefits of public safety and law enforcement which could be achieved. There's no denying that there's a cost to returning to a two-plate system, Madam Speaker. However, as I will outline, this cost should not pose a barrier. Manitoba's experience with single rear licence plates began in 1987, but 10 years later that province returned to the two-plate system. As in Alberta, many of the voices speaking in support of this move included law enforcement agencies, Rural Crime Watch associations. While there's a cost in reinstatement, it is not substantial, equaling, apparently from the Manitoba example, about $7 for a pair of licences or $4 for a single plate. Similar costs, then, would likely result in Alberta. Surely such a small amount, only a few dollars in a onetime user fee, is worth ensuring that our streets and our children are safer. Remember that these licence plates are used for many years.

Madam Speaker, I want to see two licence plates on every vehicle in this province. As I stated earlier, I believe that there's a way to make this motion before us even better. I believe that Motion 509 should be amended so that reinstatement would happen when a full licence plate reissue is made. This would allow time to complete studies on the effectiveness of front plates and would allow reinstatement to be accomplished in the most economical manner. I would like to propose, then, that we amend Motion 509 so that reinstatement would happen at the same time as the licence plate reissue. Although I'm certainly an advocate of front licence plate use, I believe there is a way we can do this while minimizing expense and hassle. Eventually we're going to have to do a wholesale transfer of licence plates in this province. Waiting for this change would be the most cost-effective and easiest way to put front plates back on Alberta vehicles.

I therefore move the following amendment, with the concurrence of the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I move that Motion 509 be amended by adding "in conjunction with a licence plate reissue" after the word "province." I believe all hon. members have received a copy.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: It's being distributed now.

MR. TANNAS: It would read:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reinstate the requirement to display front licence plates on all vehicles registered in the province in conjunction with a licence plate reissue.

Madam Speaker, it only makes sense to wait until we have a full reissue. It may be in the year 2005, in Alberta's centennial year, that it might come about. There has been apparently some thought of a special licence being issued for that. If it can be done earlier, it would be a good time to reinstate the front licence plate. Also, many licence plates are currently in a state of severe disrepair and will have to be replaced whatever happens, whether it's in the year 2005 or much earlier.

There's considerable support for reinstatement in our constituencies. I believe, Madam Speaker, that this is not just a rural issue. It's an issue that affects law enforcement agencies across the province. Front plates are an important law enforcement tool, and I hope all of us are committed to putting them back on our vehicles. If we wait for a full reissue, then we can bring back the two-plate system with as few complications and as little expense as possible, without the need for reregistering all of the licences under the present licensing. I think this would be an ideal solution then.

Madam Speaker, I support the two-licence-plate system, and if Motion 509 is amended so that reinstatement will take place in conjunction with the full licence plate reissue, then I think it makes a good motion that much better.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

4:20

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Speaking to the amendment to Motion 509, I was going to stand and support Motion 509 in its entirety. I totally agree with both speakers that have stood and spoken. I am a split urban/rural person. The fact is that my parents owned a school bus business, with a number of school buses. In 1992, while driving in the province and going on holidays, my mother, who is a past bus driver, always commented: how could bus drivers actually nab one of these people or write down the licence plate of a person who is going through when the red lights are flashing and students are already out of the bus and so on?

On Motion 509 all the different points that were actually brought out are very good. The one thing I did highlight in here was the accommodation of new licence plates and when was it going to be. We are now on the amendment put forward. It is a public safety issue. The fact is that we did take this out in 1992. You know, I don't care how many people are going to deny it – we can go back into Hansard and go back to previous members speaking on why and whatever – but it was a cost savings. It was $700,000 at the same time that there was a major shift in trying to save and react to the overspending over a few years and the bad times in Alberta during the 1980s.

I'm stressing the point that instead of waiting until 2005, we should be coming up with some mechanism to introduce the double licence plates right now. It is – and I'm going to stress over and over again – because of safety, and it is very, very important. I commend the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Until I saw this on the Order Paper, I wondered how this was ever going to come forward again. You know, why was it to the point where we were one of the very few provinces – and I don't think there are very many states, period. Wherever I've traveled in the United States, I've always seen double licence plates.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I believe that with the presentation of arguments or ideas brought forward by both the members for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and Highwood, the fact is that in the city we have the same concerns. I have a 95 percent rural constituency. I've heard this over and over again. I've heard it as I travel the province as the shadow critic for Municipal Affairs. Without even bringing it up to people when I drive through, this has actually been brought up in meetings. The majority of people that I know would be totally for this, and I thank the people that have come forward that were introduced in the members' gallery.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak in favour of the amendment to Motion 509 that would delay the reinstatement to coincide with the full licence plate reissue. I want to commend the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing forward Motion 509, the reinstatement of front licence plates on Alberta vehicles.

I'd like to begin by saying that this issue has been around and has been discussed many times since the removal of front plates in 1991.

DR. TAYLOR: Were you here in '91?

MR. FISCHER: Yes, I was, and I wasn't in favour then either.

The Alberta Provincial Rural Crime Watch Association has played an integral part in promoting and supporting the reinstatement of the front plates. I wish to commend Clark Steele, the provincial co-ordinator of the front licence plate initiative. He's a fellow citizen of the Wainwright community, and I'd like to commend him for his dedication and commitment to getting these plates back on Alberta vehicles.

I strongly support Motion 509 because I believe that anything we can do to assist the police forces in crime prevention is not only beneficial to our communities but contributes to the betterment of all our society. I think it's interesting that they took the front plate off. I mean, we see the front of the car just as often as we see the back of the car, and you make people run around now to the back of the car to see the licence plate. Well, maybe they should have made them run around to the front of the car. To me, by removing the licence plate, it cut in half the opportunity to identify the vehicle. The front licence plate will definitely help with vehicle identification and could even assist in cases of reporting poachers, child abduction, hit-and-runs, theft of livestock, and instances of stalking. If the transition back to a two-plate system is delayed so that it can be accomplished in the most cost-effective manner possible, as was proposed by the hon. Member for Highwood, then all the better.

The front plate reinstatement is an issue that has generated great interest in my constituency, and I've had numerous constituents come to me with concerns like those already detailed by my colleagues from Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and Highwood. These are people who have seen a vehicle quickly backing out of a driveway when they come to their front window. These are people whose children have almost been hit by vehicles that illegally pass school buses on the highway. These are people who have been victims of hit-and-run accidents who have no way of positively identifying the culprit. I've had constituents come to me with stories about witnessing poaching but being unable to get a look at the rear plate before the offenders realize they've been discovered and take off. I've even been told of people trespassing on posted land and backing into driveways and approaches to avoid having their licence plates noted.

In all of these cases a front licence plate would have substantially increased the possibility of identifying suspicious offending vehicles. By trying to positively identify these vehicles, people are doing what they can to keep our rural community safe, and that is what Motion 509 is all about: supporting community-based crime prevention.

If they say that they need the front plate, then I say that we give it to them, and, Mr. Speaker, they have asked for it. The Alberta Provincial Rural Crime Watch Association has been lobbying for the return of the front licence plate now for nine years. I was pleased to hear that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties decided at its convention this March to request the province to reinstate front licence plates. For years urban police departments throughout the province have declared their support for reinstatement. Their number one reason is that a front licence plate makes it so much easier to identify vehicles that are involved in or suspected of criminal activity.

Concerns about the lack of a front licence plate were even discussed at the spring meeting of the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. I'd like to read you a quote from the letter from our assistant commissioner of K Division, Don McDermid.

From a police perspective, front and rear license plates would definitely be beneficial to officers when attempting to identify vehicles approaching them. Also, as a police force concerned about the safety of their clients, which for "K" Division are the residents of Alberta, front and rear license plates would assist citizens who have witnessed a crime in identifying vehicles involved with that crime.

The role of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is to enforce the laws made by our Federal and Provincial governments. The efforts made by the residents of this province to enhance the laws that would benefit any police force must be applauded.

Mr. Speaker, for years . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time allocation for discussion of this matter today has now left us.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 23
Apprenticeship and Industry Training
Amendment Act, 2000

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000, standing in the name of my colleague the Minister of Learning.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's apprenticeship and industry training system is known as one of the best in Canada and in fact many people would say the best in the world. One of the things that has made it very strong and continues to make it strong is the strong partnership between government and industry. The amendments in the bill that we have before us today grew out of discussions and consultations with key industry and labour organizations. It has the very broad support of these organizations, which represent hundreds and in some cases thousands of workers and employers in the province of Alberta. These discussions and these consultations have been ongoing since 1996, and the work that has culminated in this bill seeks to make the system more responsive to both employees and employers and, indeed, to the important subjects in this, the apprentices themselves.

Why the amendments in this bill, and what do they contain? The board certainly recognized that there were some specific problems being experienced with the description of some trades and is working with the provincial apprenticeship committees to look for solutions. These amendments will allow the board to address some of these problems. Amending the act will provide for the removal of program and process detail from regulation. This means that program standards will continue to reflect the needs and high standards of industry in Alberta, but the process will be less cumbersome.

We're also seeking to amend the act to provide for a competency-based certification program for designated occupations which brings the focus on individuals' competencies rather than on how these competencies were gained or acquired. This allows the board to be far more responsive to industries' needs, and it's consistent with Alberta's current labour market practices and workforce development strategies.

The bill also contains amendments that will strengthen local and provincial apprenticeship committees, the backbone of Alberta's apprenticeship and industry training system, and provides the board the authority to establish or recognize industry advisory committees in addition to local and provincial apprenticeship committees.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would just say to hon. members that these amendments, as I have indicated, have the broad support of industry and employers and apprentices, I believe, in the province. These amendments will ensure that we continue to have industry as a strong partner, a strong player in Alberta's apprenticeship and industry training system, the best in Canada. I would on behalf of my colleague ask all members to support Bill 23, as it will further improve our apprenticeship system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In rising this afternoon to enter the debate on Bill 23, I would like to thank the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations for her remarks.

I certainly believe that in this province we are educating some of the finest tradespeople in the world. Albertans are working across this globe as we speak. Many of them are involved in trade-related work, not only as tradespeople but as supervisors. This in itself is a testament to our past apprenticeship programs.

Now, I can understand that there has been a lot of consultation involved in the drafting of this legislation. We're going back a few years now; 1996 I believe is when the first consultation started, and it certainly continued with the discussion paper in January of 1998. The hon. minister and his staff I believe are to be congratulated for this consultation process. In my duty as a critic I circulated this bill, Bill 23, some time ago to various stakeholders across the province. They have reported back to me, some sooner than later, and they have mentioned to me the fine job that was done by the minister and officials from his department in discussing the bill, but I know there need to be changes.

I said earlier that I would be supportive of this legislation, but last week I had the opportunity to have extensive consultations with some individuals, and they brought some concerns forward regarding this bill which I hope are discussed at length in the debate on Bill 23. Perhaps by the time third reading comes around, I will be in full support of Bill 23.

This whole idea, Mr. Speaker, of implementing changes to the operation of the apprenticeship and industry training system in Alberta to make it more responsive to employers, employees, and apprentices is noted. The proposed changes redefine the governance provisions of the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board. As the hon. minister said earlier, the entrance requirements for trades in some cases are going to be removed from regulation, and they're going to be added to the legislation. There are going to be changes made to competency testing, and I don't have any problem with this. Whether a baker learns to bake bread on the job and can pass the test that is provided by the government or whether the baker goes to, say, NAIT or to SAIT or some other recognized school, there are different streams of learning for everyone.

There are other members in this House, I for one, who were disappointed whenever there was a restriction or a limitation put on individuals who had life skills and life training who could challenge an exam. I was delighted to see the government bring that back, but I was not satisfied that in some cases it was a $450 fee to write this exam if people are trying to improve themselves as a result of passing this test and earn a larger income. I think that was a good idea, but the high fee I was concerned about.

Now, we think of trades in this province, and there's quite a list of trades. Not everyone realizes that there are different kinds of trades. There are designated trades, and there are occupations. There is optional certification of trades, and there is compulsory certification of trades. Now, a cabinetmaker is an optional trade. Perhaps some people would call the Premier of Alberta a cabinetmaker. It could be.

We could look at compulsory certification trades. There's one that comes to mind of a great deal of interest to me, and that's welders. The welding trade is a compulsory trade. You can get a red seal from this province and you can practise this trade, after you test, in other provinces, in other countries. As industry changes and we become more sophisticated in our production of metals and their alloys, welding then becomes much more of an art. We're not just welding in a flat position. We may be welding in a tight spot; we may be welding overhead. You know, there are many, many, many different types of welders.

Now, a few of us say to ourselves: well, yes, this is true, but the province seems to be functioning very well; welders are doing a very good job in this province. But I would like to note that the Provincial Court of Alberta heard a case between the Crown and Chem-Security (Alberta) Ltd. In October of 1996 near Swan Hills there was a significant release into the environment of a substance that causes adverse effects on humans and on wildlife. This release came from the flue gas stack off the transformer furnace at the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. The substances released included PCBs, dioxins, and furans, and these substances are some of the most toxic known to mankind.

I heard an hon. member across the way say: what does this have to do with Bill 23? Well, the answer is quite simple. When the company, Chem-Security, made changes or repairs to the transformer furnace to repair the flue gas duct, a steel plate, a stainless steel plate in this case, was welded onto the furnace shell to refit the flue gas ducting. This steel plate developed holes in the welds around it, the plate failed, and this caused the PCBs, the dioxins, and the furans to escape, via the flue gas duct, into the surrounding environment, into the atmosphere.

Four mistakes occurred on the part of Chem-Security, and this is where having competent tradespeople comes into play. The first mistake was that there was no insulation placed over the steel plate to protect it from high temperatures. Now, I'm going to get into this in a minute in the Alberta welding regulations, but that was the first mistake.

The second mistake related to the lack of fusion on some of the welds. Lack of fusion, Mr. Speaker, occurs when the welding electrode melts but does not stick to the parent metal, or in this case the plate that it was intended to stick to.

The third mistake was weld cracking. Weld cracking can occur in certain grades of stainless steel as the weld cools and solidifies.

The fourth mistake was stress rupture or creep mechanism, as it's called in the trade. Stress rupture is a failure that occurs when materials are held under stress for a length of time at high temperature.

These mistakes resulted in the release of toxins and other poisons, and I have to remind hon. members of the cleanup that's going to go on up there someday in Swan Hills. As I understand it, incredibly the province is going to pick up the tab.

So we had faulty welding. We're talking about changes in Bill 23 here. We're talking about changes that, well, seem to be above-board, were done under a great deal of consultation, and they were. There are some very, very good aspects to this bill, but I'm thinking to myself: hold on here a minute. The welding repairs were certainly not done properly. Who did these repairs? Were the welders qualified? Who supervised them? Who tested them?

In Alberta regulation 135/94, or the Welder Trade Regulation as it's called, there are many tasks and activities and functions within the trade that occur "when practising or otherwise carrying out work in the trade." These are the words of the regulation, Mr. Speaker. One of these functions – and there are too many to list here – is "identifying metals and performing preparation and assembly tasks prior to welding." I'm thinking this wasn't done in Swan Hills, or we wouldn't have had this leak. Also, there's "sketching and interpreting blueprints." This was obviously not done, because if one could have a look at this blueprint, I'm sure it would say there that insulation goes on after all welding is complete. Or perhaps there's an inspection process, whether it be mag particle or whatever process would be used, to determine that there are no cracks in any of this welding.

We have to ask ourselves: were the workers doing repair work in Swan Hills capable of performing these functions? Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, these concerns are going to go unanswered as we debate Bill 23. It has been recognized that there was a failure to properly supervise and inspect the work. Not only was the welding faulty; the inspection process, as I said, was as well. Needless to say, my confidence in the repair job is not that great. This accident demonstrates, I believe, not only to all hon. members of this House but to all Albertans – particularly those many thousands and thousands of Albertans, as the hon. member has said, who are employed in the trades in this province – how important this bill is to their livelihood.

We will have a discussion here on this bill. Hopefully it will be a lively discussion, but we will determine whether this bill actually improves the delivery of apprenticeship programs in this province, because they have to remain sound. Now, this is why Bill 23, Mr. Speaker, is vital for the smooth operation of this province's economy, attracting and training apprenticeships in all trades and occupations, but also in supplying a skilled, competent workforce for the growing industrial base of this province.

Whenever we're discussing this bill and we see just what can go wrong in the welding trade, we should try to correct it, and would we be able to correct it with this bill? Unfortunately, we cannot even get to the bottom of this problem, because the judge in this case, Judge E.J. Walter, directed that all exhibits attached to this hearing be held with no access to the public, and at a date to be determined later, there would be a discussion or the whole issue of public access with respect to exhibits would be dealt with. Now, this is an unfortunate event, because as a result of this a person can't get a look at this blueprint to see what welding specs were required, what sort of training the welders were to have, what sort of inspection process was to be used. All these things are very necessary to the conduction of a skilled occupation. If you're going to conduct yourself as a skilled worker in this province, these are part of your training, and they were overlooked in this situation.

I'm not convinced as I go through this bill – and I've read it several times – that this incident would not occur again. We look at the tragic explosion in Calgary last summer at Hub Oil. As I understand it, there was repair work going on there. Were the workers qualified? When we look at the details of this bill and we look at the exceptions to compulsory certification trades, welding is a compulsory certification trade. What sort of exceptions were going on up in Swan Hills? What exactly was going on up there, and how are we to find out? Whenever exhibits are sealed, we don't have the opportunity to pursue this. When we look at section 22.1, to follow after section 22, and we're going to have exceptions to compulsory certification of tradespersons, well, this is why I'm questioning the direction of this bill.

We can carry on and go a little further. After section 23, what is going to happen with apprenticeship programs in regards to technical programs and standards, the documentation of the programs or the examinations? I would appreciate answers from the government on this.

Now, some ironworkers – and ironworkers are a compulsory trade – have some concerns about the repealing clauses that with respect to compulsory certification of trades will allow, as I understand it and as they understand it, the establishment of criteria that will allow an optional certification of a portion of that trade. [interjection] An hon. member said: well, what exactly does that mean? As I understand it, as it was explained to me, I can perhaps take a group of individuals off the street and, in the ironworker trade, just have them doing bolt up, assembling large components of, say, a steel bridge. All they would do is install bolts and tighten them up. Now, can we be confident in the structural integrity of the bridge after this would be done? I don't know. This is one example that has been given to me.

There are also the regulations in here. The Regulations Act is mentioned in here on several occasions, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has some observations on the use of the Regulations Act.

The hon. minister also said earlier in her remarks that there were other committees to be established, and I am questioning why these other committees are necessary in this act. Who are they going to be? Why can't they work through the existing apprenticeship committees? Why can't they work within the existing structure? Why do we have to have other committees, and who are they going to report to? What is the reporting mechanism? Is this going to be done in secret? These are important questions.

The Regulations Act. Now, I found it here, Mr. Speaker, under the general responsibilities of the minister.

The Regulations Act does not apply in respect of any documentation prepared by or on behalf of the Minister relating to the carrying out of any functions [in this act].

Is this more secrecy in government? What happens? Do we certify a whole group as members or people who are qualified to work in a compulsory trade? Yet we're going to keep that information, because of this, from other industrial sectors.

There are lots and lots of questions that I have, and hopefully, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, by the time third reading comes around for this bill, I will be able to support it. Maybe my questions will be answered by the minister who introduced this bill or by other members, because certainly there are people who have familiarity with the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have the opportunity to join in the debate on second reading of Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000. I will admit up front that my qualifications as a tradesperson are limited, but I think I can claim some genetic connection in that most of the other members of my family are involved in the trades, and I'm very proud of that. My father held five different tickets as a journeyman, both of my brothers are journeymen ironworkers, and another whole branch of the family are also involved in the ironworking union.

MR. MacDONALD: What trade certificates did your father hold?

MS BLAKEMAN: I'll check. I'll get back to you and list them and read them into the record, for the benefit of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Therefore, I take an interest in any legislation that is going to be amending and hopefully improving apprenticeship and industry training. I think there's a very large safety aspect that goes along with this that has to be used as a screen as we examine this or as a filter as we examine any changes that are being contemplated in this area, and that screen you have to use twice.

The first screen is about the health and safety of the worker. You know, in the trades they're working with heavy equipment. You can be working with substances that could be dangerous or toxic. You're working with, in some cases, building material which, if it falls or is installed improperly, can cause injury to the worker, and these injuries are lifelong. In many cases that's the end of their working career for a worker, and then we have them dealing with the Workers' Compensation Board, which, as a number of members in this Assembly have brought up, is a whole other kettle of fish. To me the important part of this legislation and other pieces of legislation like it is: is this going to uphold and secure health and safety for the worker?

The second filter that needs to be used around this is the health and safety of the public. It is equally important, and it is the second filter or screen that needs to be used when we look at any possible changes to this act. We are talking about things like bridges, which can be a fairly minor bridge, but they can be fairly major. I mean, look at the High Level bridge in Edmonton. I for one want to know that every single bolt that's in that bridge is in there well and securely, that there is all of the necessary evaluation that needs to be done as to the qualifications of the person installing every bolt and nut and that that person has been supervised, and that all other technical requirements are being met there, because an industrial accident doesn't hurt just one person. It hurts many, many people, perhaps even thousands.

Just briefly, I'm thinking of that suspended bridge that was in a Hilton or a Hyatt or something in the States, and they were having a tea dance. It collapsed and came down on all of these people that were in the main rotunda of this hotel, and that was a structural problem. So we do have to consider the health and safety of the general population as a result of the actual building that's being used. Again, we're using building material which can be injurious to people, and this stuff is tricky to work with. I'm putting that forward at the beginning of my remarks to give a context for some of my concerns and questions that I'm raising in discussion on this bill.

I have a concern, and I'm looking to the sponsor of the bill or to others that might wish to address it. What I am reading in here – and I'm happy to be corrected on this, so I do invite debate from the members opposite. I am reading in here that there is a movement or an indication of a movement towards a de-skilling of the trade professions that are contemplated under this bill. I want to be sure about that, because I have talked about these health and safety issues, and on those two levels, both for the worker and for the general public, I think we all want to be assured that everything that is possible to be done is being done here.

There are some interesting complexities involved here, because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had mentioned that there are different streams of learning. Indeed I'm a big proponent of that, and here are a couple of examples.

When we were looking at making the occupation of midwifery legal, a recognized profession here in Alberta, it was important to me at the time to work along with those that were putting this into place, to make sure that there were a number of different streams by which someone could approach this profession, that it could be based on experience, tested experience but on experience. It could also be based on a university degree and sort of book learning or some combination of the two in order to achieve certification here.

I'm not going to say that every single person has to come through some sort of postsecondary education to achieve this, and indeed part of the long and honourable history of apprenticeship into the trades is that there isn't a postsecondary educational component to it. It has been apprenticeship. You go on the job. You work with a journeyman, and you learn the job from someone that knows it and with careful supervision. It is that time served and the actual hands-on experience of doing it that allows you to achieve that journeyman status. I'm looking for the reassurance around the de-skilling, but I'm also looking for what else is being contemplated here.

Now, the minister that introduced this bill talked about making it less cumbersome and alleviating some of the problems that have arisen in this bill. I'd like, please, to get an elucidation of what exactly were the problems that have been identified in this system. I'm struggling with this bill because there's a lot of vagueness in it, and I'm trying to figure out exactly what's being contemplated here. As a member of this Assembly I should be able to figure this out as well. So I'm looking for the specifics of what was it that was being considered problematic in the existing legislation. What was it exactly that was being considered cumbersome in the existing legislation? So I look forward to the minister or the minister's designate being able to respond and detail the answer to that question.

The minister also spoke about this being a move to testing or certifying individual competence rather than how that competency was obtained. I've already talked about different streams, different ways to approach a level of competency, but I'm looking for specifically what's being addressed in this bill.

The other reason for my coming up to looking for why this bill is being changed is I'm wondering if there has been a gender analysis done on this. I'm interested in whether this is being contemplated with both eyes open to encouraging more women to enter the trades.

It was interesting. The other day I was at the annual general meeting for the YWCA. One of their main accomplishments has been a program in which the YWCA here in Edmonton had hired a journeyman carpenter who was a woman. She was training a number of other women to learn that trade of carpentry, and the number of successes they were able to detail for us at this annual general meeting as a result of initiating this program and having this one female journeyman carpenter involved in and running this program – I think the trades are a real avenue for a lot of women, and it's something that women are interested in, but it sure hasn't been an easy field to get into.

I'm thinking back to some of the restrictions that were in place that we have slowly discovered over the years weren't really about health and safety. It was about getting a certain kind of person into the job and precluding other kinds of people from the job. The one that springs to mind very quickly was that there used to be a height requirement for transit drivers. You know, did you really have to be more than six feet tall to drive that bus? No, you didn't. You had to have a certain amount of strength and agility and good eye/hand co-ordination and a number of other things, but the height requirement was not necessary. You could be much shorter than six feet and still hit the pedals and properly manage to drive that bus. So that requirement of six feet was not a fair one, and when it was removed, we ended up with a number of females qualifying for this.

So when I look at the principles, which, as I say, are vague, that are I think being set out in this Bill 23, I want to know whether there has been consideration here for inclusion or encouragement of women into these sectors. I've brought this up a number of times in budget debates and in other areas, asking what specifically this government is doing for women, and I'm told: oh, lots of stuff, lots of stuff. But then when I say: "I want to see it specifically. What exactly is the program? What exactly has been done here?" "Ah, well, hmm, ah." There's no specific answer from that. So here's an opportunity for the government to truly shine and stand up and tell us exactly why they have done this, and boy, I'd sure like to hear that something was going to be done to encourage more women into the trades. It's a great work opportunity, and if the women are qualified and if they can do the job properly – and I'm being clear here. I'm expecting that there would be no arbitrary and unreasonable barriers to that, but if they're qualified to it, boy, they should be doing it.

One of the other things that has concerned me aside from the de-skilling – when I see words like competency-based training, the red flags always go up. But as I say, I can think of other examples where that might be quite a reasonable and good idea. So I'm really looking for the detail on this.

The second thing I'm looking for is about access to information. It strikes me, as I've gone through this bill, that there's a lot of sort of: well, it'll be published in some magazine. But it's a running theme with me, and I've often brought it up here, and I think it applies to this bill as well. This government can make it very difficult for people to access information on what legislation and particularly what regulations exist and particularly where there have been changes in regulations. The Regulations Act turns up over and over again in different clauses in this bill. How is someone, a tradesperson or someone considering a career in the trades, supposed to know about this? How are they supposed to figure it out? How are they supposed to know that there's been a change in this?

I have a real concern that there is a problem with access to information. Both now and particularly if this act passes into law, there would be a further problem with access to information. So I'm inviting members of the government to prove me wrong on that one, to detail how people are supposed to find out what's going on here, because that is not clear to me, and it should be clear to me. I'm an intelligent person with a university education. I'm a member of this Assembly. This should be clear to me when I read this legislation. There has been a commitment from this government to write plain language legislation and regulations, and this is striking me as very vague.

The third concern I'd like to raise as we consider Bill 23 in principle in second reading is the exceptions to the compulsory certification trades that are being raised. I won't go into detail here in a clause-by-clause consideration, because that of course is what we do in Committee of the Whole, but I get concerned when we start talking about exceptions. If we have a lot of exceptions to the rule, then I start saying: well, then what good was the main rule in the first place? Maybe that's what we should be looking at. So I want to know why that is happening.

That probably feeds back to the original question I was asking. What exactly are the problems? Could those be detailed? What exactly in this process is so cumbersome? But, boy, exceptions I think can be really problematic, because to me that starts signaling that there is more of a concern with the overriding principle or the guiding rules that one is working with.

So those were really the three sections that I wanted to raise: the de-skilling, the access to information, and the exceptions that are being put out. Those are the questions that I'm putting forward in second reading, and I do look forward to having a response from the government that would give me more information and answer the questions that I've put forward.

Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to participate in this debate, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you a visiting MLA from the Saskatchewan Party who I've gotten to know over the last two years. Her name is Arlene Jule, and she was instrumental in bringing forward the child prostitution legislation in Saskatchewan. She's here watching the proceedings, and I'd ask her to rise and receive a warm welcome from the Assembly.

Bill 23
Apprenticeship and Industry Training
Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today to speak on Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000. I kind of look at this one with a little bit of interest and a lot of back history, because looking at some of the designated trades and occupations, I realize from my years of managing and running different companies and working for companies like Krupp industries, Great West Steel, Edmonton Wire, Metal Fab, and a number of other companies that a lot of these trades fit under what I used to supervise.

As I was listening to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations speak on this, she talked about having the best apprenticeship system there is. Well, I really believe that we still have a very good system, but we did have the best. We had fantastic trainers, educators that came over from Europe in the early 1950s and then again in the 1970s. We had a very, very good program.

I trained in some welding shops under some fantastic tradespeople. By any comparison, whether they were German, Dutch, Czechoslovakian, they were true tradespeople. They came over in the 1950s and were called displaced people. They arrived on the trains in Edmonton and were met by owners of companies like Edmonton Iron & Wire. A gentleman called Lou Gaul could speak seven different languages, and he met them and brought them to work for him. I went to work for him in the late 1960s and worked for a number of years before going back to NAIT to take drafting and then metallurgy and so on. So some of this all fits into place.

I have had a recognition of some failures that we did see in the early 1990s, and some of these things are coming back. We talked earlier about Motion 509 and what happened with the dropping of licence plates in the early 1990s. We see what happened to health. We were all narrowly focused on the fact that we had to control our expenditures.

We also went through the 1980s, and I got crippled just like anybody else in the 1980s with the up and down of the economy, running sheet metal companies, having my own, and watching as the industry fell when the price of oil fell and whatever. In the mid-1990s, prior to having my arm twisted and coming into this particular job, I actually had a number of sheet metal people working for me, plumbers, pipe fitters, and so on. I had trouble hiring people. I interviewed a lot of people before I brought them in to work for us, because, number one, you have to have your best people out there. Nothing is worse than sending somebody else back out to take care of a job that wasn't done properly.

You know, I want to point out a few things. As I talk to a lot of friends that are still in the steel industry and so on, we presently have a shortage of tradespeople in this province, a huge shortage. With all the work going on in Fort McMurray, all the steel fabricating shops where I'm still friends with the owners and so on are talking about how they're backlogged to the point where we were in the 1970s.

My job between '76 and late '78 was going throughout Canada inspecting welding shops, fabricating shops that could do work for us. I worked for Krupp, the largest steel fabricating shop in western Canada. In Alberta we were so backlogged with work that we couldn't even begin to do it here. We had to go to Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg, all across. So I would go out and inspect the work that was happening.

After already being successful in quoting for the job in this province – I was in charge of a number of projects, Dow Chemical, Joffre. We had to meet deadlines, and we had to meet them at any point, so people did the fabricating for us. A lot of work came out of Toronto, where I got lots of work galvanized and shipped over. We did have the problems with CN strikes in those days and having to panic at the last minute and get work done on overtime and so on.

We're looking at a major problem of shortage of tradespeople right now. I do know that a number of job finders are out in Europe looking for tradespeople, trying to convince them to come to Alberta, the land of plenty, the land of lots of work right now, and hopefully they're successful. I believe that what is really at fault is the fact that we didn't recognize some of the problems that we were going to hit. If you always ride and budget and plan or not plan on the bad times – different times from 1982. Then '85 was a boom time, '88 was the low time, and in 1992 it started to climb again. Ups and downs. We have to really emphasize that we messed up on how our apprenticeship system went in the early and mid 1990s. Sure it was recognized by 1996, and the consultation started in 1996.

As I read it, several recommendations have been made to improve the apprenticeship and industry training system for employers, employees, and apprentices. Mr. Speaker, that is fine and dandy, but I really hope that we are going to work diligently and recognize how important tradespeople are to us in this province.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought up the different types of welding. Well, in welding, anywhere from the welders to B pressure to MIG, overhead bridges, stainless steel – every one of these people is under a red seal type of item. Their certification is compulsory, and they have to go beyond that to be able to challenge, to move on. Some people, because of actually being much better in the trade – I mean, it's like any other job, whether it's accountants, lawyers, or whatever. Those that are very competent move ahead a lot faster, and we cannot hold these people up. We have to be able to move them ahead.

You know, education in this province has to be recognized and pushed forward, so I am commending and supporting this bill but with some questions that we do have presently. I'm reading from a letter that the International Union of Operating Engineers, local 955, 955B, and 955C, wrote to us.

The fear is that competency based training will find its way into the apprenticeship trades. While there are some positives to competency training, it can, through abuse, lead to the breaking down of high standards that exist at present.

You know, there are some points to that.

Some form of qualifier, for example, written in the Act or in the Regulations that Level Three does not do Level Four work. In other words, we need protection of some sort that protects the Journeyman.

Then I look at different points of interest. Some of these stakeholders are concerned that regulations to be drafted that will tighten up the requirement of new competency training will not allow a high enough standard to be kept. It is absolutely essential that there are uniform standards to protect the professional reputation of current journeymen.

Listening to the minister and what was mentioned to us today, there has been broad support from the industry. Well, the broad support from the industry is in the fact that they didn't want the changes in the first place, and now that they're in desperate need to get trained people, they are going to be totally behind this. And, you know, let's commend the Ministry of Learning that something has been recognized and that where we've been sitting for the last few years, in a void, has maybe been overcome, and we can move forward.

In phase 1 in the consultation back in October of 1997 six new actions in apprenticeship and industry training were proposed. More options for training: that was to open it up more and let a lot of the tradespeople have easier access to being trained.
