One of the further principles is that any process in place should be fairly simple, that we shouldn't make the whole process of forming school divisions and of dealing with minority rights a complicated and convoluted process. I think they would maintain that that is still the case with Bill 16 and that the amendments we have before us do little to alleviate that.

The last principle they had drawn to the government's attention as being an important principle to follow was that any process that is put in place should reduce conflict. I think this is a matter of disagreement, and I think the government would maintain that by putting an alternative into the formation of four-by-fours, they have in fact reduced conflict in a community. The Public School Boards' Association for their part would argue that conflict is going to be increased as a result of Bill 16 and the amendments to it.

So unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, we don't have the specific amendments from the Public School Boards' Association or the Alberta School Boards Association, should they have them. The Catholic school trustees were quicker off the mark and did have their amendments in, but I think it's unfortunate that the timing is such that all those amendments weren't gathered and considered and made part of the amendments we now find ourselves considering in A1.

As I indicated before, the process has been from the outset one that sought to bring groups together to resolve differences. Unfortunately, that effort broke down with one of the partners near the end of the process, and all three of the associations weren't able to endorse a common set of changes, but there was a feeling among those groups that an effort should be made to resolve differences. I think this was an opportunity lost when the government failed to wait for all three associations should they have wished to provide suggestions in terms of how Bill 16 could better meet the needs of children and citizens in this province.

My fear is that the amendments, as they exist now, are going to cause more controversy. Hopefully not, but having ignored the fundamental beliefs, seemingly, of the Catholic School Trustees' Association and the Public School Boards' Association, it would seem to me that conflict is a real possibility. We've all heard from – and in fact government members have tabled in this Legislature letters that indicate their unhappiness with the provisions of Bill 16 and, particularly, their unhappiness with the creation of divisional boards that have the potential of changing quite dramatically their communities and the kind of education their youngsters receive. Instead of being a goal that we finally reached in the long-standing difficulties with the provision of minority education, this seems now to have just become one more mark along the road and again leaves both sides unhappy with the legislation they're going to have to work within.

I think that concludes my comments, Mr. Chairman, and I again would like to express my disappointment that the efforts that had been made by so many in the associations and school boards across the province were seemingly ignored in the formation of these amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. When I spoke earlier – it must have been about 7 a.m. – I commented at the end of my remarks that there was far too much and I would have to return, and I have.

This is a right shemozzle, this is. It's no wonder it had to be brought in at 5:30 in the morning, hoping that no one would notice or be awake, but wrong, wrong indeed. We have the Magnificent Seven and a replacement Lone Ranger to indeed speak for the people . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: On the bill.

MS BLAKEMAN: . . . which is what I'm going to do here, on the amendment. Heavens, no. We're to speak to the amendment here.

What's interesting to me is that now that we've been able to pull together the various bits of information we have on this, I hear the Member for St. Albert saying: support this with haste. That always makes me wonder. What's the haste? I guess that has to do with bringing this in at 5:30 in the morning.

MS CARLSON: What are they afraid of that they've got to do it with such haste?

MS BLAKEMAN: I don't know what they're afraid of that they have to do it with such haste. Boy, they're in a hurry for it. I guess they're hoping before the switchboards open at the school boards and they find out what has happened here. [interjection] Oh, I think . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, I'm sure a conversation can be held at some time out in the lounge, but right now we're in debate, and if only one member would debate at a time. Edmonton-Centre has the floor.

MS BLAKEMAN: This is not a conversation; I'm translating. But thank you for that reminder. It's instant translation.

The issue here is doing the right thing. I look at a stack of letters that have been mentioned previously, some indeed addressed to the Member for St. Albert, from various regional school divisions going: please don't do this; we object so much that we're asking you to please table this letter in the Assembly to prove that we don't want you to do this. They're asking for one set of things. I'm looking at what the Francophone schools have expressed as concerns, and they're asking for some different things here. Then I'm going back and looking at some notes from the public schools, and they're asking for different things again. So we have a right shemozzle here.

The amendment, three pages long I might add, 14 different sections that are being amended here, had to be snuck in at 5:30 in the morning, giving our critic a grand total of between 60 and 90 seconds to review this before he had to speak to it. Not the actions of honour, I would say.

When I look at the issues that the Francophone regional authorities have brought up – this came to mind when I was reading through the three-page amending document, and it's amending sections 33 and 34, which of course is what I'm speaking to specifically, Mr. Chairman. This is where we're talking about regional authorities. What they had been concerned about with the regional authorities – we're talking specifically minority language rights here with the Francophone regional authorities.

I'll just stop and point out that the Francophone regional authorities include the following. The Northwest Francophone education region No. 1; St. Isidore has 268 pupils. The Greater North Central Francophone education region No. 2; Edmonton, with 1,426 pupils. The East Central Francophone education region No. 3, in St. Paul, with 476 pupils. The Greater Southern Public Francophone education region No. 4, at Calgary, with 223. The Greater Southern Separate Catholic Francophone education region No. 4 – I wonder if that isn't a typo for No. 5 – in Calgary with 691 pupils. So it's the strong preference of the Alberta bishops that there were no blended authorities for the three northern Alberta Francophone regional authorities.

Now, I am not seeing that reflected in what's being put forward under sections 33 and 34. The board of directors had noted that even if the provincial government rejected the bishops' proposal for no blended authorities, it would have been in the alternative appropriate for Bill 16 to reflect the newer model of blended authority recommended by the Ducharme committee, which met between the 4th of April and the 11th of April of this year. I agree it's disappointing that the amendments negotiated with the Ducharme committee between April 4 and April 11 have not been reflected in Bill 16 or in fact in this amendment. If you scrutinize this amendment to section 33 and section 34, we're not getting that at all. We don't seem to be getting anything from the Ducharme committee, and I'm assuming that that's reflecting the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. That doesn't seem to be in here either, but I can be corrected. I hear the Member for St. Albert making comments, so I'm sure she'll be up and on the record again.

MS CARLSON: She could be recruited to our side if she'll get up a few more times.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, that's true.

Now it's the choice of separate school electors in new expansion areas to support either the new Catholic separate board or an existing public board. So the board of directors were looking for and supporting amendments proposed in Bill 16 which allowed the creation of separate school regions and the expansion of separate school districts to fill entire separate school regions, either by agreement with public school boards or by a process that's already in the School Act. I'm not seeing that in these amendments either. So how did this group get consulted? How were their strongly stated preferences and the issues that they definitely did not want included – how do I find these reflected in these amendments showing up under section 33 and section 34?

I mean, what we are getting out of that is the issue I raised previously about cutting out that "a Regional authority must be composed of at least 3 members and not more than 7," and that used to include a public school member. Now we've got the number of public school members of a Regional authority must . . . be in the same proportion to the total number of members of the Regional authority as the total number of public school electors in the Region is to the combined total number of public school electors and separate school electors in the Region.

Man, I love this stuff. Somebody wrote this one very late at night. Perhaps they wrote it very early this morning, which would account for the language used in this.

Again, that's not reflecting the issues that have been brought forward. We're looking at: "A Regional authority must have at least one public school member and at least one separate school member." Well, that's very equal of them, but again I'm not seeing that reflected in what anybody had been talking about.

"The Minister may appoint the first members of a Regional authority." Now, that's obviously to get a grand kickoff here and make sure that the government has control over the people and chooses the people they want to fulfill their wishes.

Then we move into section 34, which is amending Bill 16, which amends the School Act. Just so everybody is tracking here, we've got a triple layer thing happening. You know, specifically what we've got are amendments that look like they were possibly drafted in the wee hours, brought in at 5:30 in the morning with no chance for the opposition to really have a look at them or consult with anyone, seeing as no one was up at that time. These amendments are amending Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, which in turn amends the actual School Act. That's how you're getting the triple layer here.

I'm going back and looking at section 34: "A Regional authority must designate each school either as a public school or as a separate school." Well, certainly when I started with this with the notes from the Francophone regional authorities, they wanted blended authorities rejected, or if they had to have the blended authority, the newer model. What we've got here is: "designate each school either as a public school or as a separate school." I look at "separate school members of a Regional authority are a corporation under the name of" blank, and then you fill in the blank. "The Separate School

Members of the Regional authority of' blank, and then you fill in the blank, "Francophone Education Region No." blank, and you fill it in again there.

Then

subject to subsections (2) and (3) [above], a Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that both minority language educational rights and the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada are protected in the Region.

Hang on a second here. We've got minority language rights, minority language education rights, and languages and privileges with respect to separate schools. This is an interesting dilemma here. Is there an assumption that a minority language right is French? What happens if you've got a school area where a minority language is in fact not French or where the minority school is not a separate school? Do they get the same choices that are being laid out? That's not how this is reading. The choices only go when there's an assumption that the minority language is French and the minority school division is separate. So in those areas that have either/or or a combination – a minority language that is English, for example, or a minority school district which is a public school – those people are not granted the choices that are being put forward elsewhere, if I'm reading this properly.

Well, you know, I'd hoped that members opposite would get up and clarify, but I think I've stopped hoping for that. It just doesn't happen.

Okay. So continuing on, we've got that separate school members of a Regional authority have the responsibility and authority to ensure that the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools . . . are protected.

Oh, here we go. Here's the blended stuff. This is going backwards here. Section 34(3):

If a Public Regional authority and a Separate Regional authority are established under section 223.31 or continued under section 223.32,

- (a) the Public Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that minority language educational rights guaranteed under the Constitution . . . are protected in the Region, and
- (b) the Separate Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that both minority language educational rights and the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools guaranteed under the Constitution . . . are protected.

This isn't doing what was asked, so what was the additional consultation that took place with the Francophone schooling group? This is not what they were asking for.

Now, I'll admit that this is my 13th and a half hour in the Assembly and I may not be tracking this with quite the usual sharpness I have, but this is not reflecting what's been asked for. In fact, the Francophone groups are noting that Bill 16 went well beyond the granting of choice to separate school electors in the expansion areas. First, it granted choice to all separate school electors. Secondly, it required that those wanting to support the separate school board be required to give notice to the municipality to that effect.

Well, from a constitutional perspective, legal counsel advised that under the provisions of chapter 29 of the North-West Territories Ordinances, which is now under the Alberta Act, whenever a separate school district is formed or expanded by use of constitutionally mandated four-by-four expansion provisions, all persons of the same faith as those who establish the district, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, are required to be residents of the new separate school district.

I think what's happened is that's no longer there. In fact, I think this is going to cause a real problem in rural areas. If this is opened up, we'll have Catholic students that were attending a public school that could now be looking for their own school to be set up, which is going to draw students away from the already small public schools. You're going to have a bunch of one-room schools here with six kids in them. I thought the government was moving away from that, so I don't understand why these provisions have been brought in.

Now, I go back and look at what was brought forward with grave concern from the public school board. They point out that the amendments assume that the only faith minority entitled to separate school education is Catholic, where Catholics are the minority. This is the point I was making earlier. Indeed, there are communities in Alberta where Protestants are the minority compared to Catholics, and the amendments make no provision for this reality. Well, there you go. That's what I was talking about. These amendments, in effect, discriminate against the Protestant minority, and they also assume that local members of the minority faith invariably want separate school education. So there's no provision for these people to say no to separate school education.

There's a transfer of control of this issue from local electors to politicians who do not even live in the affected community. There's a lot in the letters that have come with concern around that issue, that decision-making is moved from local electors to politicians who could be miles away. Again there's schizophrenia, a disconnect in choices that this government makes. You know, it's supposed to be about flexibility and empowering on a local level, and then we see some of what is being talked about here being put into place that works against it. It works against citizen control. It works against local control. I really am coming to believe that this government is all about centralizing control and having absolute authority over things but dispensing the responsibility for providing service, whether it's to a regional health authority or a children's authority or in this case now these new kinds of school divisions. But it really is about the cabinet sitting behind closed doors with all the threads in their hands pulling and tweaking, I suppose, at the expectation that somewhere out there school boards and interested, committed parents and people affiliated with the school system are going to dance like puppets.

You know, as the members like to point out, they had lots of people vote for them, but I'm also conscious of the fact that 70 percent of the people didn't vote – I mean, half the people didn't vote that were eligible to vote. You can halve that 60 percent that the government did get, and that comes down to 30 percent, and that tells me that 70 percent were not supportive of what's going on here or in truth we don't know. We just know they didn't vote for them. Well, who knows? We'll see in the next election if people wake up and care as to what kinds of things are being put through here. They are obviously concerned about fragmentation, and I can certainly see that. We don't have local autonomy that somehow rolls up into a larger coalition or a matrix structure. We do have fragmentation that all seems to be controlled by the central Wizard of Oz. It is Oz-like; isn't it? It's not quite Emerald City, but certainly everybody's wearing funny-colored glasses.

Now, the provision of separate school education within the Francophone governance model. This is again coming from the public.

Oh, I'm going to run out of time right away. I may have to come back on this again, because I certainly haven't managed to get through the issues that I wanted to raise. I see that my time is up.

Thank you very much for the opportunity.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak on amendment A1. This amendment is to Bill 16. Bill 16 is about our public education system, K to 12.

You know, Mr. Chairman, I've kind of been reflecting on this. This bill came before this House early this morning, in the dark of the night, and I asked myself: is this a way of keeping people in the dark? Is this what this government is doing?

It also kind of reminds me of all kinds of historical events. We seem to be making history in this Legislature today by continuing this debate, starting debate on a bill as important as Bill 16 in the way we have, as I said, in the dark of the night, in the middle of the night, so that Albertans don't get an opportunity to watch what we're doing, to oversee and monitor how we operate in this Legislature, and such interesting symbolism of darkness, keeping people in the dark about your real intentions about the debate that's so vital to their interests.

I tried to think of some metaphors to understand why this is happening, you know, what's going on, and Pearl Harbor comes to mind. It's a legislative Pearl Harbor. That's the only way I can encapsulate my feelings about what's going on. We are under attack; Albertans are under attack.

So this is one way, I guess, of remembering this night, this morning, today, Bill 16, and this sort of clandestine way in which this government has broken all the rules, all understandings, and come to attack just as the attackers came to wake people in Pearl Harbor that night with their destructive force. I guess it's the Pearl Harbor of our legislative process here. That's a quite a memorable way of thinking about it.

Mr. Chairman, A1 as an amendment I think mocks at the concerns of Albertans as they have been expressed. It makes a mockery of public participation, of public consultation, of listening to Albertans. Why this mocking? I guess it comes from the presumptuous view that this government has taken, that since 60 percent of those who voted in the last election voted for the government, it has now the licence to ignore the other 40 percent.

What a strange way of looking at democracy. What a strange way of building consensus in the province. What a strange affront to many decent values of democracy that all of us, I presume, subscribe to. So it's quite an assault. It's quite a frontal attack on those basic understandings of how we should govern.

I think the people of Alberta, while they understand that there are 74 government members sitting over there, won't undertake legislative debates in a way which look indecent, which smell of arrogance. So when Albertans wake up this morning, they have quite a shock for them, news for them, that what's happening in the Legislature is happening behind their backs, when in fact we're supposed to be accountable, answerable to them, accessible to them, transparent and public about what we do, but, no, we have turned this Assembly, it seems to me, into a private club which closes doors on everybody.

It's ironic that we are talking about closing doors, this government side trying to shut the doors in the face of Albertans while it debates this important bill, and the bill itself is about opening minds. That's what education is about, opening up and caring. The very word education comes from the Latin language and is about awakening, opening up our minds. What we have here is the opposite happening in this Assembly, happening opposite in this province, as we speak to this amendment to Bill 16.

I want to refer to a couple of letters, Mr. Chairman, with your permission, and these are letters that are quite telling in their poignancy, in the kind of language that they use and the concerns that people express. I was speaking with a member of Sturgeon school division No. 24 last Thursday. This trustee stopped me as I was about to leave – some of my colleagues from the government side were with me at the time – and she was trying to access their ears as well. She reminded me, she said: you guys who live in urban areas have no understanding of the challenges that we who live in rural Alberta face. She said: I want to remind you that there are lots of Albertans who live in rural areas, and their concerns better not be ignored; we'll remember that. [interjection] I'm glad the Minister of Energy is listening to this as well. Being a member from Calgary I'm sure he knows the problems and the concerns that rural Albertans have, which is very good. I'm glad that members of the cabinet as well as backbenchers are attentive. They are not asleep, and we are all paying attention to matters of vital importance.

MR. SMITH: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: A point of order.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

MR. SMITH: Citation 23(h) and (i). There are no members of the Conservative government that are referred to as backbenchers. All members are private members, and I would ask that the member retract his statement.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Chairman, the point of order clearly is not of much consequence. I mean, we use the language, you know, the metaphors, the idiom that's common. I'm willing to call them private members. Many of the members sitting on the back benches on the government side see themselves as private members, so I take the point that maybe I should call them private members. With your permission, I would like to continue.

The private members, so-called, on the government side, sitting on the back benches as opposed to the front benches – I'm referring to those private members, and indeed there are those benches all around, some in the very back of the House. Such a specious metaphor. You know, when we use these metaphors, we're trying to use habitual ways of looking at things. I think it's quite appropriate for us to do that because that facilitates communication. I'm using these terms essentially to make my message rather simple, rather than use some obscure jargon to refer to those who don't get a chance to be sitting there in the front benches.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I hope . . .

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Are you finished on the point of order?

DR. PANNU: I'm finished with answering the point of order. May I continue with your permission on A1?

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your contribution to the point of order. I think the point is well made. It would behoove you to speak directly and clearly and accurately in all cases, and we'll expect that you would continue as you resume your speech.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your generosity. Thank you for your forbearance. Thank you for your understanding. You have been very lucid in what you said. Thank you for that.

Debate Continued

DR. PANNU: I want to refer to two letters here, Mr. Chairman. The first one is dated May 22, just about seven days ago. It was written by Judy Muir, chairperson of Northern Gateway regional division No. 10. This division falls within the constituency of the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, I believe, and this is about Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, 2001.

I want to read this short letter into the record of the Assembly.

The Board of Trustees of Northern Gateway Public Schools discussed the above noted act and the particular section dealing with Separate School District formation at its regular May 22 meeting. The Board asked me to raise the following concern about pending changes to this section of the School Act. Many of our rural schools are finding it more and more difficult to maintain programs and even to keep some of them viable. Further fragmentation of our student populations in rural areas will cause greater hardship. Our Board would ask . . .

And this letter is addressed of course to the Minister of Learning. . . that you reconsider this legislation as it can easily decimate some of our rural schools.

Mark that word, Mr. Chairman: decimate.

As I said, I heard from a trustee from the Sturgeon school division and her language, her message was just as powerful and poignant as this brief letter that I've just read into the record.

Another letter here, Mr. Chairman, that pertains to the concrete fears that rural Albertans have about the consequences of the further fragmentation that they fear may result from these particular provisions in the bill. This letter is a bit longer, but I'd like to again read this into the record of the House. It's from Renee Seitz from Medicine Hat, and it's also to the Minister of Learning. It says:

I'm writing you this letter as a concerned parent in southeast Alberta. My children attended Manyberries School and because of budget cuts my children will be triple graded next year. This makes me very angry when we live in a province that prides itself in a provincial surplus this year. Should we really be bragging about a surplus when there are schools out there such as ours that are fighting to maintain an adequate education for our kids. I don't think so.

This year and for many years we have been double graded and this seems to be workable. It has been workable due to the fact that we have an excellent teaching staff as well as some paraprofessional help.

This year we have 7 teachers including our kindergarten teacher. We can not count her into the picture because our kindergarten will more than likely become private next year or non-existent due to the fact 2 years ago our board decided that they would not fund any schools who have a kindergarten program of less than 10 kids. We also have 2 paraprofessionals on staff right now taking care of secretarial duties, librarian, and also aiding teachers in the classroom. Included in these 7 teachers is our principal also. So his time is split among administration and teaching.

Next year with these cuts our school will be left with 4.25 staff. This includes 3 teachers for the triple grades, our principal who will still split his time between administration and teaching, and 1 paraprofessional who will become the secretary, librarian, and aide all in one. This is a skeleton of a teaching staff in my opinion.

The writer continues, Mr. Chairman.

Sure the numbers do show that we have a great pupil teacher ratio, but not when you take the whole picture into context. Our school will not even have a full time secretary to answer the phone or just monitor the comings and goings in the school. As a very informed person you should know . . .

The reference is to the Minister of Learning.

. . . that in this day and age with all that has been happening in our schools (e.g.: bomb threats, shootings) that we need to be in contact with the schools at all times and should have someone in the office to report any strangers or incidences.

Have there been enough studies done to prove that being triple graded does not harm our children educationally?

That's the question that she asks.

If there has been any research done to prove my fears wrong about triple grading I would like to see that research. I need some convincing that it will not harm them. It is also a possibility that our children from grades 1-6 could be taking option classes together. To me that does not make sense mentally or physically when you are dealing with a child in grade 1 and a child in grade 6 [at the same time].

The teachers in our school that we have now are wonderful teachers who enjoy their jobs. What will happen to them teaching three grades together, having little or no preparation time, and no help from an aide that they can count on when they need the help? I feel that this is a fast recipe for teacher burn out. Once our teachers are burnt out how do we attract new teachers to our school with working conditions like this?

With possible teacher burnout and the lack of attracting new teachers to our area who suffers? Our children are the ones who suffer. Is this fair to them when all they are trying to do is obtain a good quality education? Our children already lack in the area of options due to the fact that there are just not enough children to offer a variety of programs. Options to me are totally different than core subjects. Core subjects are needed to further their education and to just have a solid educational background.

In the concluding paragraph, Mr. Chairman, Renee Seitz says:

I am asking you as the Learning Minister to take a serious look at the situation because it is a very serious situation. Please do not let our children become guinea pigs in a society that is supposed to be ahead not back in time. Rural children's educations are just as important as urban students are. We all have the same educational right in this province no matter where we live. Children are our future.

Mr. Chairman, I read this letter into the record of the Assembly because I think it speaks to those very fundamental concerns that I have heard about directly from trustees who represent their rural constituents on school boards and school divisions. There are these concerns about how the rural schools are doing even before the changes that are anticipated in this act after amendment A1 goes through. Given the fact that these problems exist already, if further fragmentation of our public school system were to arise from this bill as it becomes law – and amendment A1 doesn't seem to give us the slightest assurance that the potential for fragmentation that's implicit in this bill will be in any way remediated, mitigated, or reduced – then I think it's important for this Assembly to ask: why go that route? If we go that route, what we will do will be doing a serious disservice to our rural communities and our children who are going to schools in those communities where triple grading and double grading are already a reality.

It is deplorable that our government is allowing such conditions to obtain in our rural communities. It simply says to rural residents that their concerns are not the primary concerns of this government, that it will do things regardless of the concerns that may be expressed by ordinary concerned citizens, by parents, by teachers who teach in those schools, and by the community leaders in the rural areas.

Amendment A1 is a serious disappointment to the people, and furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the manner and the speed with which we are discussing these amendments give no opportunity whatsoever, deny any participation to these very concerned voices that are desperately trying to speak to us before we proceed any further with this bill.

So, Mr. Chairman, I implore this Assembly, I call on the Minister of Learning to stop this bill at this stage, engage in consultation, bring this bill back after having consulted and having made changes that will meet these concerns from rural communities in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, I wonder if we might consent to briefly reverting to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some special guests who have traveled from outside the province to visit us here. We are joined by a group of 44 junior high students who have come from Fort St. John. B.C. They regularly attend Dr. Kearney school, and I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 16
School Amendment Act, 2001

MR. CAO: Mr. Chairman, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 16.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:58 a.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Parliamentary Counsel began calling the standing vote. Several members entered the Chamber accompanied by the Sergeant-at-Arms]

THE CHAIRMAN: This is quite a different procedure, that we're not familiar with. The committee is voting. Now, I know there are two functions going on at the same time, so with your indulgence I think we'll all sit down and we'll start again because we ran through the middle of O Canada.

The committee was asked to have a standing vote. Normally, for those that are in the gallery, no member is allowed to come back in when the bells finally stop ringing. However, we did have another formal function here in the Legislature at the same time, and actually our bells rang right through the middle of the national anthem, that we didn't know about here but was going on outside.

So what I would ask is unanimous consent for us to begin the division again.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. Now to explain the division. We are having a standing division on a motion by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort that the committee do now rise and report progress.

For the motion:

Abbott	Hlady	McFarland
Cao	Jablonski	Norris
Danyluk	Jonson	O'Neill

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 11 and 7. The committee reports progress on Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Before we commence with third reading, I wonder if we might have consent for a brief introduction of guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

(reversion)

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a young lady named Rebecca Demoissac. Rebecca is our summer student in our constituency. Rebecca is attending Grant MacEwan college this fall. I would like to say that I did meet Rebecca as a volunteer in our constituency. She did all the data input for us and all the research and phone surveys, and I can say that she was .3 of a percent out. So, ladies and gentlemen of the Assembly, I'd like to introduce Rebecca Demoissac.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before we commence third reading, just to refresh our memories and refresh mine as well, debate on third reading is similar in process but not in kind to second reading. "Debate on third reading . . . is more restricted than at the earlier stage, being limited to the contents of the bill." This is from Erskine May, and you can go on to read the rest of it.

The point is that we can't talk about, as we do in second reading, what might have been, should have been, and isn't in the bill. We can only talk about what is in the bill. With that, we'll commence third reading on Bill 1.

Bill 1 Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the clarification in terms of what the parameters are for speaking on Bill 1 in third reading.

This is, of course, the Premier's flagship bill, a flagship bill that comes in after the fact. We had the regulations passed and the moneys spent long before we saw the legislation, which is really the way this government likes to do business these days. It isn't very informative, it isn't participatory, and it isn't really democratic, if you ask me, but that's the process they like to pursue.

This bill comes to us now in third reading, which is the final stage, so we're going to see royal assent to it very quickly and it becomes legislation for this province. It looks like this week, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the way this government is going today, it could be tomorrow.

It's interesting to see the process of how we got to third reading of Bill 1 today, which is really the continuation of Monday's business. We haven't had Tuesday yet because we haven't recessed, and all the commitments we thought we had in terms of progress in this Assembly were for naught. We're now talking on final reading of a bill.

MR. WOLOSHYN: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Minister of Seniors is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, you just instructed the House that the debate must remain on the content of the bill. I do believe that since the speaker started, we haven't referred to anything in the bill yet.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: On the point of order, Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. Certainly I have talked about a number of issues: this being the Premier's flagship bill, this dealing with legislation that is being put in place after we've seen regulations made and moneys spent.

I will refer that hon. member, who understands the rules very well, to Erskine May on page 378 in terms of relevance. I took the Speaker's ruling to heart in terms of sticking to the matter of the bill, but I would remind that hon. member that if we take a look at "Relevance in Debate," the appropriate sentences for us to consider are:

A Member must direct his speech to the question under discussion or to the motion or amendment he intends to move, or to a point of order. The precise relevance of an argument may not always be perceptible but a Member who wanders from the subject will be reminded by the Speaker.

We have had many instances in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, where it's taken nearly the full 20 minutes to get to the point. In fact, hon. Speaker Kowalski was one of those members in this Legislature who liked to expand on his points.

So I would like to state that there is no point of order, Mr. Speaker, because I did preface my remarks directly referenced to the bill, and I am shortly to get to the point of my comments on it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair would observe that much of what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has said is correct so far. I think the hon. Minister of Seniors was making the point that we are, as the chair had reminded all hon. members, dealing with the bill as it is. To a certain extent one was beginning to stray, but I'm sure that you were going to bring back very quickly the point and remain on the point for the rest of your talk.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You're absolutely right. I was soon to get back to the main points in here, and it's nice to see that the minister was paying attention to my comments, so I thank him for that. [interjection] Perhaps some of the rest of you would like to participate in this debate too. That would be great, because that would help us out with the timing of when this gets passed.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, the object of the bill was to establish in legislation the ability to provide rebates to Albertans for high natural gas prices. Already done. Already accomplished. We look forward to seeing what kinds of regulations get passed in this blank cheque bill as we move forward so that we can see what kind of support and sustainability Albertans will see in the coming winter season when prices will be high.

What we saw with this bill was really it being introduced to follow up on the government's promise to provide long-term protection for Albertans from the high natural gas prices. Good news, except that this government was partially responsible for those high prices. We had talked about, way back in 1995, what they needed to do in terms of ensuring that there was some security in the marketplace as deregulation moved forward so that producers could in fact know they were in a position where they could bring new production on-line. That didn't happen. As a result, these producers didn't bring new production on-line to meet the anticipated needs to the extent that was required. In fact, I would suggest that it would be very hard for them to have secured financing in the kind of unsettled market they were dealing in.

So what happens is that we get into a real crunch, Mr. Speaker. Not all the fault was the government's, for sure. No doubt world prices had some impact, I would even say perhaps up to two-thirds of the impact, on the instability in the marketplace. But certainly there is some responsibility at the government level.

Interestingly enough, they didn't react very fast. If we remember back over the Christmastime period, there was a great deal of unsettlement in the marketplace and concern by consumers and producers alike, and the government made several comments that caused great concern on both sides and then decided to go forward with some changes. Some of the changes were those that directly follow on this bill and that being the rebates themselves.

The government has already provided the two $150 rebates to every Albertan 16 years of age and over who has filed an income tax return. Interestingly enough, they couldn't even get that right, Mr. Speaker, because we've had some significant problems with people receiving their cheques. So while the legislation is being passed at this stage, we still have some people with outstanding issues. Most of those are being worked through. I certainly know of a few people who haven't received any of the money yet. Primarily those were people who didn't file a tax return in the year because they had no income, but of course that was the requirement for receiving the rebate.

There have been a number of situations where there has been an interesting management of this process by the federal government. I think they were wrong in the way that was handled in most cases. They're correcting the problem, but interestingly enough they're taking their sweet time doing it.

I just talked to someone yesterday, a young man who has been trying to pursue his rebate. Filed the return sometime in November of last year with nil income and didn't get the January rebate and still hasn't got the January rebate. We heard from the minister here that even if they didn't get their January rebate because of some sort of problem, they would get the April rebate on time. Mr. Speaker, guess what? He didn't get that one either. So after repeated phone calls trying to find the appropriate department people to talk to, he called our office. We were able to get hold of the minister's office and get a direct line, so I thank her department for having put in process a number that could resolve these issues in a somewhat speedy fashion.

I say "somewhat" because subsequently what's happened is that he's found out that even though he had never filed a tax return before and the return he filed was with his current address, the cheque was sent to his former address. I'm not quite sure how that works, but that's what happened, and of course he didn't get it. So that was the January cheque, and then the April cheque went to that address too. Subsequent to that, he filed this year's tax return some time at the beginning of April, and they realized that there's been an address change, and that's why the cheques had come back to Revenue Canada. So they were just sitting in his file.

So he filed the first week of April. He called on, I guess it was, Monday, May 28, and was told that – and they already processed his 2000 tax return, Mr. Speaker, and apparently he got the rebate cheque for that. They've said that they will begin the process of reissuing the two $150 cheques now that they've talked to him, even though they had all the information in place, and that he should receive the money some time by the end of June.

Well, that's quite an interesting process, Mr. Speaker, not very timely and not very efficient. I'm wondering in retrospect if the minister wouldn't have preferred to have issued the cheques directly herself from her department to Albertans, that that might have been a better process. It would have eliminated the other problem, and that was people who filed their returns owing some small amount of money and whose cheques were withheld or the amount of tax owing was deducted prior to getting the April 30 rebate. Her opinion on that would be interesting as we pass into the very final discussions of this Bill 1 in third reading. So that's an interesting process that people have had to go through to receive their money here in this province with regard to this particular bill. Not very efficient.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we didn't have an opportunity to ask all the questions we would have liked on Bill 1. I would like to put a couple of them on the record that speak directly to the content of the bill, and I hope the minister, who is acting on the Premier's behalf on this bill – the Premier is the sponsor of the bill – will address some of the issues for us.

We heard lots of concerns about this bill being a blank cheque. It's a very thin bill. It doesn't have very many specifics in it.

Certainly in two separate cases within the bill it talks about all decisions being made by regulation, which of course is of some concern to us, Mr. Speaker. In section 7 it states that through regulation any rebate program can be brought in through orders in council, which bypasses all legislative scrutiny. So we have an issue with that. One, we think that money bills, particularly, should always be brought into the Legislature and debated. This rebate is clearly a money bill and clearly fits that kind of criteria. It's a great deal of assumption the government takes on with the idea that Albertans are quite happy to see money bills, the degree of money and how and when the money will be spent, being passed through orders in council rather than having at least some cursory examination of those issues made here in the Legislative Assembly.

So our question to the Premier and to the minister who is responsible for the enacting of this bill is: why do they want to skirt the legislative process by determining all the details of the rebate program by orders in council rather than through legislative approval? There's got to be some reason why they want to be able to make these decisions behind closed doors. Perhaps it's an issue of timeliness, deciding what the caps are going to be, but I don't buy that argument, Mr. Speaker. We saw the decisions being made and the cheques sent out before it was brought in here for approval, so it can't be timeliness, because they'll just do what they want any time they feel like it anyway.

Why couldn't they bring in the issues of what the dollar amounts were going to be and the other regulations through legislation for debate? It could have been a much more substantive bill, Mr. Speaker. We could have seen the details in this bill. Certainly the government had enough time, and certainly they have enough resources. When they can spend over $19 billion a year, certainly they have the resources to be able to put the meat into a bill like this rather than us opening it up and seeing that it's really just a blank cheque.

Another question for the Premier and the minister is: how can they bring forward such legislation that clearly eviscerates the role and responsibilities of legislators? Where is the accountability, and what is there to hide? You know, as legislators we have a responsibility to scrutinize what happens in legislation, the kinds of rules and regulations and laws that this government wants to pass. That is a part of the democratic process. It is the right of Albertans to hear what is happening, the detail of the kind of legislation the government is passing. It is the right and in fact the responsibility, Mr. Speaker, of the Official Opposition and any other oppositions involved in the Legislative Assembly to scrutinize legislation, to be the watchdog of what government is doing, to report it back to the people, to have enough time to get feedback from the people and to hear what parts of the legislation they support overtly, in great numbers, mildly, or not at all.

Mr. Speaker, if we have a situation where people do not support the legislation, then we have an additional role as the opposition to oppose that legislation and to ensure that through the processes available to us through debate and through amendments, we have an opportunity to either have the government withdraw the piece of legislation or amend it adequately to meet the bare-minimum needs of Albertans. When the government takes that role away from the Legislature, then what they're doing is undermining the responsibilities of legislators.

We don't hear much from private members on the government side on some of these bills, and the question is why. Certainly we heard throughout the campaign in the last election that they said they would be the people's voice in government. Part of their role is to be that voice here in the Legislature. We haven't seen that happen on this particular bill, Mr. Speaker. My question to those folks is why. How do they explain that, or do they just skirt over the issue when they go back into their communities and choose not to address it?

You know, we've heard them talk about how they can have a say in their caucus and how they can talk to the ministers and so on. All good, Mr. Speaker, and we don't disagree that that's an effective way to understand the issues and to find out more information on them, but they have a legislative responsibility to have their voice heard on behalf of their constituents and on behalf of other Albertans here in the Legislature. The floor of this Legislature is where they need to put their comments on record. Even if they're completely in agreement with what their cabinet is doing, then it's important, I think, for their constituents and for Albertans to hear that.

We look forward to in another session, because this one will shortly be over, having more participation by private members in this Legislature on legislation that comes forward, and we would hope those people would take the message back to their government that they also support legislation being debated in full, not blank cheque legislation as we see in this particular bill but comprehensive legislation, so that very little needs to be done behind closed doors and in regulations.

My third question on this bill, Mr. Speaker, is also to the Premier and the minister who's directing this bill through the Legislature. Can they tell us how a government that says it believes in market forces can work to create this kind of blank cheque for interference in the market? We've had some degree of debate about that in this Legislature in second reading and committee, and I'd just like to remind members of this Legislature why it's a problem for us.

When governments directly interfere in marketplaces, you skew the marketplace and create an artificial environment, and in the long run that hurts everybody. It hurts players in the market for a variety of reasons. One, what happens in this case is that when you give the rebates, what you're doing is artificially deflating the cost of energy at the time. What does that do to providers of energy? There's no incentive for them to find efficiencies in their operations. There's no incentive for them to support putting research and development dollars into alternative sources, and there's no incentive for them to incorporate alternative sources into their process. So in the long run what does that do? That puts them at a disadvantage in the global marketplace.

I know that Canada has a long history of protectionism in terms of its industries and regulations and imports and the ability for other companies to move in and be competitive. So on the one hand we have this real protectionist kind of environment that Canada has historically lived in, and on the other hand we have a government here that says it's going to deregulate the market in order to open up the market. Well, those two systems are incompatible. While the government is saying that they're deregulating and that this bill meets that need by temporarily providing a rebate for people, what they're really doing with the rebate is enhancing the protectionist mind-set of the government. We have seen traditionally over the decades that that is precisely what inhibits Canadian businesses from moving forward and being globally competitive. We may be a G-7 country, but in fact on many levels we aren't competitive. We just need to take a look at our labour costs in comparison to other countries', and we can see that there is a problem here. If you look at it historically, that is the reason why.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have to talk about rebates in that perspective. Is it really what we want to do for the benefit of companies in this province, to provide a level of protectionism or a blanket on top of market forces which will inhibit their ability in the long run to compete globally? I don't think it is. The government has decided that it is, but I don't think that is a reasonable place to be going.

The second reason why this is a really bad idea is because it inhibits research and development. We know that gas is a nonrenewable resource. Members of the government and I have had many debates over the years in terms of how nonrenewable it is. I think gas has about a 10-year life in this province. We've seen a real change happen in terms of the kinds of pools of gas they're finding. Instead of large, deep pools, now we're finding a scattering of shallow pools around the province, so that's really the beginning of the end, Mr. Speaker. I know that a former cabinet minister of this government, Steve West, would argue that there are 50 to 75 years of gas left in the province, but I don't think that's true.

The government has also said that gas and other resources are available from the territories and so on. That's true. However, it doesn't help us in terms of long-term sustainability in this province. It certainly doesn't help companies who need to be taking a look at alternative sources or supplementary sources for energy production to have the markets artificially deflated.

I wish I could be back, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately that's all the speaking time I have at third reading.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled at a quarter to 11 this morning to rise and move third reading of Bill 1. For those who have spent many hours in the House in the last day, day and a half now, I say particularly to the members of the opposition party that there is a bright world out there. Just about everybody in Alberta is working. Alberta's business forecast for growth this year is 4.2 percent. It's going to lead the nation. It's not gloomy out there.

As Bill 1 clearly points out, there is a need for a commitment to the protection of natural gas rates in this province. From the time that the member from the opposition speaks about this, Alberta gas exports were about $2 billion. This year there will be over $10 billion in natural gas revenues and crude oil revenues accruing to this government, this province, and to all Albertans.

Not only do Albertans benefit from the royalties of world prices but also from the economic benefits that accrue from having those world prices. In fact, in the time the member speaks about, there was a syndrome or a situation known in the marketplace as a gas-on-gas problem. This gas-on-gas problem did not allow for world market prices to function in Alberta. The Alliance pipeline helped ameliorate that. We're now exporting more gas than ever before. We're exporting enough gas now, Mr. Speaker, that we are the number one importer to the United States, the largest energy-consuming market on the globe. Alberta is responsible for 15 percent of that natural gas. This year Canada replaced Saudi Arabia as the number one crude oil importer to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the oil and gas reserves that we have in this province are of tremendous benefit to all Albertans and to all members. Whether you're from Grande Prairie-Smoky and you're looking at the tremendous oil reserves that are there or you're from Drayton Valley-Calmar and you're looking at the important gas reserves there, you see that there is a market functioning out there that brings in investment, that creates jobs, that creates opportunities and allows Albertans to develop a world-best technological sense of skills and of being able to develop these resources as they are appropriate to the benefit of all Albertans.

Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, simply enables the government to react to situations that accrue quickly. If the member can speak, on the one hand, about being here in the Legislature and looking at the scrutiny of the legislative process and then at the same time be able to keep this group of good government members in action for well over 24 hours, it tells me that they're asking to find another way to move quickly into the marketplace. Bill 1 does exactly that. Bill 1 enables the government to react to gas spikes, a spike that last September was at $3.35 an mcf and then went to as high as $12.20, $12.35 an mcf by Christmastime.

If this member of the opposition speaks to this bill and doesn't realize the importance of setting up in a clear and transparent manner the way in which the government can react quickly to a situation to assist Albertans in an Arctic climate who need relief from high prices during a period of high consumption, then clearly, Mr. Speaker, as the number of representatives here from the past election proved, they just don't get it.

In fact, that's what the bill intends to do, Mr. Speaker, allow people to move quickly, with direction, with transparency, with a series of regulations that indicates the amount of protection that would move forward. Bill 1 simply enables us to move towards the development of this set of regulations. It's done in a very normal legislative fashion. The bill is an enabling bill. The regulations follow it. They're developed after the passage of the bill. Clearly, there's no concern. To see the amount of Legislature time taken up in comments about one particular bill out of 1 million households – we can deal with that on an off-line basis. We can deal with that issue with dispatch and, may I even say, alacrity.

So it's very clear in my mind that any further debate in third reading by the members of the opposition would simply be more of a time stalling, a delay tactic, more evidence that the Liberal opposition party is not here to advance the causes of all Albertans. It's not here to talk about the difficult issues that exist in Edmonton and Calgary and the problems of rural Alberta. They're simply here to try and get the next headline in the newspaper, and they've been eminently unsuccessful in that, and that's why they are actually looking at debating third reading of Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, which is a topic I am very pleased to represent, very pleased to move third reading of. I think there should be no further debate and we should move along.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister has mentioned both earlier on in his talk and now at the end that he cares to move third reading. We thank him for that, but the hon. Minister of Justice moved it earlier in the day and it only needs the one moving.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, I think I'm in my 15th hour here, but I'm glad to have the opportunity to speak in third reading now on Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. The Speaker was very kind in pointing out as we commenced this that in fact third reading is examining the effect of the bill, and I take his wise words to heart. I was also very interested to see that the Minister of Energy did indeed rise and join in the debate. Most commendable of him. I wish I would see more of his colleagues rising and actually participating in debate so that the public got a chance to see how in fact the government is considering this bill and what their thoughts on it are, because it's always a bit of a mystery. We get a bill put out and a press release and silence thenceforth.

One of my issues around the effect of this bill, the way it's been presented and the information that's been provided, is that in fact we don't know what the effect of the bill is. We have tried repeatedly through the debate to get some answers. We brought forward amendments which were attempting to clarify definitions that were included in this bill so that we would have some idea of in fact what the government intended. It is not clear from anything that's in here – almost 100 percent will be decided maybe by the minister and through regulation or decided as an order in council by cabinet. That's what we get out of this bill.

So the Official Opposition and certainly this member have repeatedly asked: what exactly is the government intending here? Are there going to be rebates? If so, what kind of rebate is it going to be? If it's going to be distributed through a vendor, what's the definition of "vendor"? If it's going to be distributed to individuals, how is that distribution going to happen?

The member for Edmonton-Ellerslie told the story of a constituent who repeatedly tried to get the first installment of their $150 rebate, which I think was released at the end of November to most people, a nice little pre-election cookie there. Actually, I'm one of the members who are calling the special 1-877 line looking for information on exactly what's happened to rebates. I will, if the Speaker will allow me, note that the staff are prompt in answering that line and very friendly and do their best to be very helpful, which tells me they've had a lot of practice answering that line, but in fact credit where credit is due on that one.

There's one example of a rebate program that was set up to work in a certain way and in fact a number of stumbles have appeared – a hitch in their git-along is another way of putting that – to get the rebates sent out and to explain to people exactly why they might have had money deducted at source. That was happening in cases of chronic nonpayers for maintenance enforcement, chronic nonpayers of student finance, and in some cases the federal government got a piece of it where they were able to by law collect on arrears owed to the Crown.

We don't know if that's the kind of rebate that's being planned here, because when I look at that section, section 2, "the Lieutenant Governor in Council," which is cabinet, "may authorize a rebate to eligible consumers" – well, we don't know who the eligible consumers are or what the definition is there; there was never any elucidation on that – "under the regulations to assist eligible consumers in the cost of marketable gas." We have not had any of this clarified. We still have a bill that is full of: we'll do this by regulation; we'll define it by regulation.

So for Albertans that are trying to determine the effect of this bill – I am getting tired; I almost used a colloquial expression that would have been expletive deleted there. It started with an S and it had three letters. Okay; I didn't do that. But essentially any Albertan that was trying to determine exactly what the effect of this bill is going to be would have a very difficult time determining that.

Now, we can have people download and look at the bills off the web site www.assembly.ab.ca, which is excellent innovation. But much harder to find are the regulations. It's very difficult to track and be able to discover when a regulation in fact comes out from cabinet and then to follow up and be able to actually get your hands on the regulation and understand how it applies back to the act. This is a reoccurring issue that I have with this government. It reinforces that things are done behind closed doors. It reinforces that there's a secrecy there. It reinforces that the government does not want to communicate this kind of information directly to Albertans. So that is one of the effects of this bill that has been clearly reinforced over and over and over again through all stages of reading of the bill.

The Official Opposition did try and clarify by bringing forward a motion that there be a definition of "vendor" included in the legislation, not merely left to the regulations, and that of course was voted down by the government. We were also looking for an audit, a very good idea. It certainly would assist the government in being transparent and accountable. Again, voted down by the government. Not interested in audits, not interested in accountability, not interested in transparency obviously.

The other issue that was continually raised, the effect of which we cannot determine from this bill, was the section at the end which is talking about making regulations for other kinds of substances, which was meant to cover things like propane. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised a number of times what was happening with propane and more specifically ethane, which in light of what we've just had in the news over the last couple of days about stripping substances out of natural gas as it pipelines its way through Alberta becomes increasingly important to us. One of the effects of this bill is that we cannot tell if as Albertans we are going to be getting the full value of the natural gas that's under our feet or whether it gets into a bullet line and leaves the province without our being able to strip anything out. We already know that the Alliance pipeline is a bullet line through Alberta, and again, we're not able to strip anything out.

So when I look at the effect of this bill, Mr. Speaker, very few questions are answered by this. It's a shadow bill. I'm tired of the cliches that are coming forward about it, but frankly cliches exist because they're true and because people get an instant identification and grab hold of what's going on here. We do have a shell bill, a blank cheque, a shadow bill: all those things are absolutely true about this.

The Minister of Energy had said that the opposition members are spinning doom and gloom. No, not so. We were looking for clarification. We were looking for a piece of legislation as per promises of this government some time ago that it was going to be something that would be written in easy to understand language and that all Albertans could get access to it and understand it. We're still waiting for that to happen.

The minister talked about: it wasn't gloomy; it was creating jobs, and it was creating opportunity. That may well be very short term, but one of the effects I see as I examine Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, in third reading is that we have no sense of the long term with this bill. We have no sense of the sustainability that's built into this. We have no sense of the stability that's built into this act. Lots of talk from this government about family and intergenerational and blah, blah, blah. In fact, we don't get any sense of what's being anticipated here when we look at this bill. It doesn't seem to be long term.

There seems to be a willingness to pull as much gas out of the ground and ship it off to wherever as fast as possible. But again, we can't tell. Nothing is spelled out in this bill about what is being planned. I would like to be more specific, Mr. Speaker, but I can't be specific about something that ain't here. So we don't know long term. It doesn't look like it's sustainable to me, and if we're looking at an intergenerational effect, if we're looking at, you know, whether we can guarantee our kids or our grandkids that there's going to be a natural resource there for them and that we the legislators have in fact been responsible with this, it's not in this bill. The effect is not here.

Now, the minister at the same time was complaining that we were at 24 hours. I think he was indicating that we'd been 24 hours on this bill. For a point of clarification there, in fact since 8 o'clock last night – and it's now 11 o'clock – I'm the only member still here that was on at 8. I'm still standing and haven't slept.

In fact, in a period of nine and a half hours between 8 o'clock last night and 5:30 this morning we covered 12 bills, including one bill that had three amendments. So I don't want to hear about how there's been any stalling here. That's pretty quick business, moving through approximately one bill every 45 minutes. We are still here. That is now five hours later. I'm speaking to points that were raised by the Minister of Energy in debate on this bill. So if it's relevance, it should have been called on the Minister of Energy for raising it in the first place. I'm certainly entitled to debate it now that he's put it on the floor.

Again, since 5:30 this morning to 11 – that's another five and a half hours – we've spent some time on Bill 16, and we're now on Bill 1. So indeed there has been a great deal of progress made, and I felt it necessary to clarify lest anyone misinterpret the remarks of the Minister of Energy that we had spent 24 hours on Bill 1. Not true. We in fact have spent – I don't know – 15 hours or something on 14 or 15 bills. I'm losing count here.

Now, going back to the specifics of this bill, what doesn't this bill do? What is the effect that is not covered here that was looked for? It certainly doesn't make any attempt to promote conservation.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, you're starting into the second reading speech. That's what second reading is: what this bill misses, what it should have done, that kind of thing. Third reading is on the bill itself, what it is and what it does. You don't go into what might have been, could have been. Is that okay?

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. That's fine. Thank you.

Debate Continued

MS BLAKEMAN: There is no effect that would be promoting conservation. Certainly the effect on my constituents in Edmonton-Centre is a continued puzzlement over the discrimination on rebating. There continues to be in this bill a discrimination regarding rebates for people who are living in high-rise condominiums and apartment buildings in that rebates that are forthcoming – not that they're spelled out in this bill. The act has not corrected the discrimination that exists. Therefore, the effect of the bill is that the discrimination continues to exist, and that is a real concern for, I think, every Member of this Legislative Assembly, because we are knowingly allowing discrimination to go on with our constituents, for anyone in what should be considered a residential unit. It's where people live. It's their home.

There is a different history here of treating the way people who live in single-family residences are able to get pricing and get rebates. There is a different pricing level and there is a different rebate system for those who are in a high-rise condominium or apartment building because they are being classed as commercial. When I have asked questions in question period, trying in fact to determine the effect of this bill, as to why there was the choice that these high-rise apartments buildings and condominiums would in fact be classified as commercial and rebated and priced as that, the minister was unable to tell me. I think the effect of this bill is to clarify none of that.

The other issue around the effect of this bill is equitable distribution of the royalties. The bill does not have as an effect a determination of how we value the natural gas under our feet. It doesn't determine or set forth for us whether all Albertans own and share in that natural resource. The effect of this bill, in other words, is that it's difficult to determine if the plan being chosen is an equitable one for all Albertans. Are we going to rebate based on every Albertan having a piece of this, every Albertan getting an equal rebate? That is somewhat what we saw with the rebate that was announced in September. The first $150 cheque came to some people in November and slowly trickled out to the rest of the people. The second $150 rebate cheque came in late April, and that was essentially saying every Albertan over 16 that filed an income tax return, was resident in Alberta on such and such a date, and wasn't in jail. So that attempted to be an equitable distribution. All Albertans shared in that.

We don't know what the effect of this bill is. We don't know whether it's choosing to be across the board, that all Albertans would share in these rebates, or whether in fact it's going to be a rebate that comes out saying: this is a user rebate; those that use it are going to get some kind of rebate back. Well, I think there's an argument there that we have yet another discriminatory effect of this bill, then, because if all Albertans truly share in that natural resource, then why are some people getting it because they're users but other people wouldn't get any of it? I think there's an argument there about discrimination.

We've got discrimination in the way the pricing and the rebates work depending on where people have their residences. We have discrimination there in the way the benefits of the money would be distributed amongst Albertans or amongst users. The effect of this bill is, I think, that we've got a hybrid which doesn't work for anybody.

I think the effect of this bill is confusing. I think it allows the government to do whatever it wants, yet again behind closed doors, without consultations with Albertans. I don't know that that's necessarily a gloomy thing, as the Minister of Energy seems to think, but it certainly is a shady thing, all done in the shade of a closed room behind a closed door. There's a real disconnect between what this government says and what this government does – and I think this bill is a perfect example of that – all this hullabaloo about how we were going to have a rebate bill, but in fact none of us can figure out what the rebate is about because nothing is spelled out in the bill. So once again it underlines more than anything this government's disdain for Albertans, for equity, for respect for our nonrenewable resources.

Thank you.

[The Speaker in the chair]

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Good morning. It is a fine morning. We get to debate Bill 1 in third reading, and I do enjoy the opportunity to speak to Bill 1 in third reading.

Now, when I'm looking at Bill 1 here, Mr. Speaker, I see that it is enabling legislation. It will come into effect when this act is passed and given royal assent. It will come into force on July 1, 2001. Also what Bill 1 will do is that our present method of supplying rebates, the Natural Gas Rebates Act, will be repealed upon this proclamation. So that brings us to the many, many interesting points the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre have brought to our attention here in third reading. I might add, as well, that I enjoyed the Minister of Energy getting up and offering some insights into Bill 1.

One of the things I want to address in third reading of Bill 1 is that this is the flagship bill. This is Bill 1, the first bill on the floor of this Assembly in the 25th Legislature. It was sponsored by the Premier. For a bill of this nature, for a bill of this importance, I would have loved to have heard comments from the Premier in support of the bill he had sponsored. It appears that we are not going to have that opportunity, and that is unfortunate, because this particular bill will certainly have a huge impact on Albertans.

In looking at the bill and speaking to it in third reading, I think we have to look at this whole idea of rebates. Rebates certainly do distort market value. We have all seen that gas prices over the last year have increased dramatically. When we are looking at rebates, we also have to look at whether they are equitable, whether they are available to all. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre certainly raised a number of those issues when she talked about whether Bill 1 was equitable and whether this enormous resource, that makes windfall profits for this province, and the advantages and the benefits that we get from our royalties are in fact being distributed throughout our population equitably or whether some people are not sharing in those profits.

Certainly when we see what has happened in rents across this province and what has happened to the cost of housing across this province, we have to look at both sides, Mr. Speaker. Whereas it is good that we are having construction booms in this province and are having rapid development, certainly people that live in high-rise condominiums or apartments, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, by definitions in this bill presently are not sharing in those benefits. So I think we have some spadework to do on this bill even yet, even though it is in third reading. Those people are not sharing in the benefits. We are putting the rebates in the hands of the owners with the hope that in fact this will be passed on to all the people in the apartments. From the phone calls I've had from constituents in Edmonton-Glengarry, they certainly don't feel they have that opportunity.

The other thing is that when I look at this bill, I have to say: is a permanent rebate a bad thing? Is this a long-term solution? What is the cost of this program? Those are certainly very, very important questions and questions that again we don't have a clear answer to. Particularly when we look at nonrenewable sources such as natural gas and we look at what our reserves are in this particular province, then I think we have to look at what is best for Albertans not only today but in the future. We do have to be cautious as we move forward in this regard. We certainly know the advantages of research and development. We know that for us to have a prosperous and bright future, this segment of our industry must have the benefit of a great amount of research and development and particularly when we look at the reserves of natural gas here in this province.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, we have the majority of the western Canada basin situated in Alberta. Part of it, of course, cuts into the northeast corner of British Columbia and also touches up into the Northwest Territories. So in looking at what has happened in Alberta, I think we have a number of concerns, and certainly one of those concerns is how much gas we really do have in this province.

Now, then, looking at our reserves, there are in the western Canada basin approximately 307 trillion cubic feet of natural gas and 2.8 billion cubic metres of oil. The western Canada basin is the largest on our continent, in North America. It certainly was not by coincidence, I think, that President Bush, when he was mentioning his energy blueprint for the United States, included to work closely with Canada to develop new energy supplies.

Now, I also noticed that when the minister was making his comments on the third reading of Bill 1, he mentioned that we had, I believe it was, a $10 billion industry that we had many royalties from last year. Not only did we get the royalties, but we got an additional number of benefits from the support services to this particular industry. Again, that is reflected to some extent in Bill 1. But my concern with Bill 1 is the speed with which it allows us to move forward with this particular protection act, and as I see it, there isn't a great deal of protection.

Earlier the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar certainly raised the point that even though we have branch lines coming from many parts of the province and those sections that are included in the western Canada basin, presently this gas entering the Alliance pipeline is not being stripped. It is shooting down to Chicago. It is in the United States where we are stripping all the additional things out of that gas and leaving the methane for distribution throughout the north-central and northern parts of the United States. Of course, the Alliance pipeline did provide investment and jobs and opportunity, but it also increased the amount of flow going out of Alberta, and it increased it to a great extent. It also, in doing so, allowed a great amount of our reserves to be shipped out of this province without being stripped.

I also noticed here that when the hon. minister was talking, he said that we have surpassed Saudi Arabia as one of the suppliers to the United States for more oil. Again, that comes at a huge price, because we are finding in this province, Mr. Speaker, that even though we had more wells drilled last year than ever before, we haven't had any increase in production, so it tells us that our supplies are starting to be tested and that they won't be here in the future. As well, the wells that we are drilling continue to be deeper and deeper. Yet when we look at Saudi Arabia and some of the other members of OPEC that do a tremendous amount of drilling, they can drill and hit oil at 150 feet, and they can extract that from the ground much, much cheaper. So my concern with Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, is the fact that we haven't looked long-term, that here we are using up our reserves extremely quickly and yet other nations in the world that have greater reserves than we do are not using their reserves to the same extent.

Again, I think that if we are going to protect what we have here in this province for future generations, we have to have a very, very sensible method in which we allow those reserves to be drilled and a way in which they are distributed not only to Albertans but to other people here in the province.

Now, then, I think Bill 1 was a very, very quick reaction to a situation that certainly people in Alberta did not react well to. I look at, for example, the fact that last winter we had somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4 billion in rebates given to Albertans. I have to say that I certainly enjoyed mine, and I know many people in this province enjoyed theirs. But, Mr. Speaker, where were our legislators, where were our people with an eye on the future that said, "Hey, we know the Alliance pipeline is going to increase the price of natural gas here in this province, because there's going to be such a great amount of demand for it"?

Now, I also noticed when it was announced within the last two weeks that we are going to have a Mackenzie Valley pipeline that is going to be shipping gas down to the States – it has just a huge demand – that our aboriginals who have unsettled land claims in northern Canada certainly were front and centre. They were there to protect their rights. They were there to be a player in negotiations. They were there to protect their people. Without that, this Mackenzie Valley pipeline wouldn't have gone ahead. But where were we when the Alliance pipeline was proposed? Where were we in protecting Albertans with these enormous costs that we have witnessed in the last six months alone?

I look at and refer back to comments made by the Minister of Energy, that we certainly do get as a result of our natural gas industry in this province a great amount of investment. Any number of new jobs have been created because of this and opportunities for our youth to work, and we certainly wish that. It is certainly one of the benefits that a resource of this nature gives us, but as well how long are those benefits going to be here?

I look at our huge petrochemical industry in this province. We have Joffre, Union Carbide, Dow Chemical, and all of them have a huge stake in this province, particularly with the natural gas. What have we done to protect them?

Now, we did hear the Premier speak earlier of how any pipeline that passes through Alberta – they are going to strip that methane and use those products to develop industry here in the province, yet we let an enormous opportunity with our oil and gas flow into the Alliance pipeline. Every bit of it. We did not strip any part of it. So grave concerns here in third reading of Bill 1.

Now, then, in looking at Bill 1 in third reading, I again have grave concerns over regulations. As I glance through this, in section 1(b) we have a reference to regulations; in section 1(b)(ii) we have a reference to regulations. In part (d) we have a reference to regulations. In part 2 we have a reference to regulations.

Again, if we are open, if we are accountable to the people of this province, particularly with a resource that is nonrenewable, then why are Albertans not given the benefit of an open and free discussion in this Legislature? Why do we have to rely on regulation?

Again, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre spoke, she said certainly that in trying to find on the web where all these regulations were, they were very difficult to find. Not only were they very difficult to find; they were difficult to track. When you're trying to compare your regulations back to this particular bill, there is just a huge, huge difficulty. So I do have concerns with Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, in regards to the continued reliance on regulations to let Albertans know just how things are going to be implemented.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I see that my time on Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, is running out. As I said, we still have many, many concerns with Bill 1 and how this enabling legislation is going to be of total benefit to all Albertans, in residences, in businesses, and more importantly how it's going to impact our future generations.

Thank you very much for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 11 in its third reading, rushed as all these debates are.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. member, we're on Bill 1.

DR. PANNU: Bill 1. I'm sorry. I was talking about Bill 1. Okay. All right. All right. I stand corrected, my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, supporting the amendment of Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, in its present form would be reckless, I think. To do so would undermine the Legislative Assembly and its powers and the duties that each of us, as representatives of our constituents, have here. The specific provisions of Bill 1 set out in sections 1 and 2 give way too much discretion to the provincial cabinet in making regulations. These sections of Bill 1 are nothing more than an empty shell. They do nothing more than delegate from the Legislative Assembly to the provincial cabinet as to who is eligible to receive rebates, the amount of these rebates that they will receive, and when they will receive those rebates.

I'm really quite concerned about the fact that the government hasn't sought a more clear direction and authority from the Legislature with respect to these matters. As I said, the bill has very little substance to it. The substance will be determined in the process of drawing up those regulations, so the debate then becomes somewhat meaningless if we can't deal with the substance of these issues. So I can't, obviously, go on to support the bill. I don't think it surprises my colleagues on the opposite side. The bill that we would have been able to support would have required major changes in it for which there was very little opportunity.

I want to make a note here, Mr. Speaker, that there was an understanding, I understand, among the three House leaders with respect to the fact that when Bill 1 is brought back into the House for study in committee, all parties will have an opportunity to propose amendments to it. It was brought in in contravention of that understanding at a time when we couldn't respond to or introduce amendments of our own in the House. So that's regrettable. That breach of trust, I think, is something that will take some effort to restore.

What the government is asking the Assembly, of course, by way of this bill is to give it a blank cheque to the provincial cabinet.

What this bill does is give power to the provincial cabinet to decide, based on considerations – I guess political considerations primarily – when, how much, and to whom the natural gas rebates will be provided. This bill fails the test of good governance, in our judgment. A feature of good governance is that the legislative bodies, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in this case, cannot pass a law that transfers the powers of making laws to other hands. The specific provision of Bill 1 fails to limit the discretionary powers of the provincial cabinet. That, I think, is a serious flaw in this bill. This Assembly should never, never willingly, voluntarily, give away its powers to legislate to the executive branch of this government.

Why do I say that the provisions of Bill 1 fail to meet the test of good governance? Well, Mr. Speaker, section 1(b)(ii) of Bill 1 allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council discretion to decide both who is and who is not an eligible consumer. If rebates are to be given from the public chest, the Legislative Assembly should decide who is eligible. For example, is it the cabinet's intent to only make residential consumers eligible? Will rebates also be provided to farmers, to small businesspersons, to school boards and health authorities, or even to large industrial consumers? Or will the eligible consumers depend on how close we get to the next important political event, be it an election or whatever, or who exerts the most political pressure? Who knows? You sure won't find any answers to these questions in Bill 1.

Section 2, again, raises similar kinds of questions. We are in third reading, but I'm drawing attention to why I don't think this bill represents or meets the criteria for good governance. Section 2 deals with when a rebate might be provided. This section reads:

Where, in the opinion of the Minister of Energy, the Alberta price is or is likely to be greater than the amount prescribed in the regulations, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may authorize a rebate.

Provisions like this are not delegation but rather abdication of our responsibilities as legislators of our powers. Here again, we are faced with a provision that allows the cabinet wide discretion on matters that should properly be put within the bill itself and should receive careful, detailed scrutiny on the floor of this House. That has not happened. That's not likely to happen given the nature of the bill, so I harbor very, very serious reservations about this bill. There's no formula set out whereby there is any indication of what the rebate levels will be or at what price levels they will kick in.

Additionally, the bill is named the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, but a careful reading of section 1(d) and section 4(1) indicates that an elevated price of "other substances" might entitle one to a rebate. However, "other substances" are not clearly defined. Section 1(d) states: "'other substances' [include] propane, heating oil and any other substance used for heating purposes."

Again, "heating purposes" is not defined within the bill. What does this mean: home heating, heating of schools and hospitals, heating of greenhouses, heating for the purposes of generating electricity, or some other industrial purpose? Again, who knows?

So this really is an indication of the highly flawed nature of this bill, a bill that is going to mean fairly sizable expenditures of public money. It's going to mean demands on the public purse, on taxpayers' money in this province, and for the Legislative Assembly to give these powers away without satisfactory answers to the questions that have been raised in this House, including the ones I raised moments ago, I think would be the wrong thing to do.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this bill, Bill 1, is riddled with serious flaws, with gaps and holes, and it would be irresponsible to leave solely to the provincial cabinet the discretion to fill these gaps and plug these holes instead of providing some certainty to Albertans about what kind of protection they can expect to receive from high natural gas prices. This is strictly a political bill, which gives the provincial cabinet a blank cheque to decide who, how much, and when politically motivated rebate cheques can be sent out. Therefore, I will not be able to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today. Actually, I didn't even rise this morning.

I do want to address Bill 1. This bill has absolutely no association whatsoever with straddle plants, ethane-plus stripping, petrochemical feedstock, or any of the myriad of possibilities to do with an international delivery system crossing our province. The bill deals with fair, equitable, and transparent handling of possible future rebates to Alberta consumers. If some people don't understand how it works, ask a consumer who paid a utility bill this past winter and they will undoubtedly say it works very well.

Further, Mr. Speaker, this bill is absolutely unassociated with Alliance. Where were we when the Alliance pipeline was being built? We were there with a billion dollars worth of investment in the province of Alberta in jobs and continuing technology with respect to delivery of natural gas compression equipment and maintenance of the same. The Alliance pipeline also, I would have to point out, was 65 percent plus full of gas before it reached Alberta's boundary. It doesn't predominantly carry Alberta gas; it's B.C. gas.

The price spike that we had over the winter was not due to Alliance but due to a number of factors. We had an increased demand from Alberta's business industry and residential growth, severe climatic conditions in the eastern U.S. and central Canada, and, I might add, a rebound effect in the United States from Kyoto that encouraged some electrical generators to burn natural gas.

Those are some of the points, Mr. Speaker, that have been a bit muddled here with respect to Bill 1. I would encourage every individual in this Assembly to support this very worthwhile piece of legislation that does now and will in the future assist all Albertans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take this opportunity to rise and speak to third reading on Bill 1. Bill 1 is kind of one of these pieces of legislation that you look at from one perspective and say: yes, this has a lot of potential. You look at it from another perspective and say: what's this bill all about? When we look at it, really, it's a bill which says the government – if it wants to, when it wants to, how it wants to – can do something about natural gas prices and the associated prices of fuels that are used as substitutes for natural gas or are component parts of what we normally think about as natural gas.

I guess the end result is that if we were truly trying to reflect to Albertans that this was going to be a true price protection bill, in the debate and the evaluation of how this bill is going to be applied, what we would do is include information that would reflect on how the consumer can develop expectations as to the application of this bill. With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this bill needs to include in it a strong statement about what constitutes a base price that we're going to try and deal with. Does it include a mechanism for providing the support to Alberta consumers when prices get too high?

I agree with the last member that spoke who said that we did get protection last winter. But, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that protection – even though it was necessary, Albertans appreciated it – was given in the wrong way because it didn't send any signal to the consumer. What we should have done was separate those payments from the actual price and bill that the consumer had to pay. When you go out there and talk to Albertans now – and I've done it with a number of people in my constituency and people across the province as I've traveled – they all say: well, gee, you know, my gas bill didn't go up this winter. No, it didn't, because they had $150 support on that bill. What we should have done was send a signal to those consumers that, yes, we're giving them $150 to help them in their high gas price scenario, but here is your gas bill.

In my case, as an example, Mr. Speaker, I got a bill that said $158 when it should have been $308. That would have told me: Ken, look at what you're doing in terms of using natural gas and in terms of how you should be thinking about conservation. Then over here I get $150 that says: we as a government, we as the people of Alberta are looking out for each other; we're trying to protect each other from this spike that occurred because we didn't send the right direction to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board last summer when we should have. So, in essence, it was a whole combination of events that resulted in what we saw last winter, but we're going to help ourselves as a group, as a society to get through it.

Now, that sends two messages. One is that we're a compassionate society, that we need to look out for and help each other. That's what Bill 1 potentially says. But if we make the payment in association with the utility bill, then I look at my $150 bill and say: gee whiz, that's actually $40 less than it was last year. We as a family undertook a lot of effort this winter to reduce our consumption, so our bill wouldn't have gone up in proportion to the rise in the price because we already undertook some activities for conservation.

If we deal with that kind of signal system, we still could have used the utility companies to distribute the bill, to make sure the bill went out in an appropriate way. What we also could have done was say: "All right. You send out your bill, and the next day you send out another envelope with a cheque for $150 in it, and we'll even pay you the 46 cents for the stamp." This separates the situation and basically creates an opportunity for the consumer to recognize that there are two issues they have to look at in the context of what we're doing.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is that as we deal with the implementation of Bill 1, we have to not interrupt what in effect is the market signal system that has to provide for consumer price responsiveness. We don't want to be out there saying that what we're going to do is send a market-distorting signal like we did this winter. It doesn't help when people don't get the message. If the message comes with a separate $150 cheque and a high bill – and in the case of some individuals for a period this winter the $150 was more than their bill. They could actually take some of that money and invest it in conservation measures so that when the rebate program ends, they would then also benefit from their conservation activities. In essence, we would have provided them with both the signal and the means to act to conserve energy. I think those are the kinds of things we should be dealing with as we look at where this is going.

The other signal that I want to make sure we look at as we put this into implementation, Mr. Speaker, is: what do we set as a baseline price? This bill doesn't address that. It doesn't talk about at what level we are going to deal with the protection of Albertans from high gas prices or high heating costs or whatever you want to put into that collective measure that includes all the gases that are going to be looked at under the options that are provided to the minister as they set the regulations and as they apply the regulations.

The thing we want to make sure of, first of all, is that we don't set the price in Alberta too much out of line with the price that we see and that is experienced in adjacent jurisdictions, whether that's the other provinces in western Canada or whether it's the northwestern U.S. We've got to make sure that the price signals we're sending to Albertans fall in line with the price signals that are being received by those other individuals in those jurisdictions so that we can in essence make sure our process deals with the idea that we have to look at that in the context of how Albertans respond.

Now, the other part is that we have to make sure that price level we're going to protect is contingent upon and tied to the price we use in the budgeting process for revenue generation and revenue estimation within the province. If we set the level of protection at or about the level we expect for the price that's associated with natural gas exports, natural gas sales, what we'll do is always be sure that the excess royalties, the royalties we haven't committed to other expenditures in our budget, are available to provide support in terms of the payment that's necessary to deal with the rebate, the price protection value that we're going to pay out to Alberta consumers.

So as we look at how this gets implemented, those are some of the signals that are really important to convey to Albertans to make sure they look at the context of how they appreciate and recognize that Bill 1 is, first of all, a protection bill, but it's also one that's not meant to distort the marketplace in the sense of the price signals that get sent, and it also doesn't create a lot of angst, if I might say, within the context of the legislative process.

If we go ahead and estimate the price of natural gas for our budgeting process at $7, let's just say, and we want to start protecting the price at $5, what we've got is a $2 margin there that we basically either have to put into our budget to debate the dollars that are necessary to cover that difference between what we're expecting out of revenues or else we have to be able to make sure our forecasts are such that, in essence, we've covered the expectation. Otherwise we'll end up running a deficit budget, and in Alberta we don't want to do that.

So the aspect we have to look at here is: how do we make this bill operational without influencing or without disrupting what is a strong commitment to a marketplace economy and a process that effectively gives us a chance to deal with the issues that are important to Albertans and a sense of stability?

Mr. Speaker, I guess the other aspect I want to address as we close out the debate on Bill 1 is the whole process that surrounds where the bill came from and how it was put in place. We've heard on a number of occasions already the fact that within our legislative agenda we already had legislation that would have allowed us to do basically everything that's available here within Bill 1 with possibly just a couple of small regulatory changes. So what we end up with is a situation here where we're debating a bill right now and dealing with sending out signals to Albertans that we're living up to a commitment that was made in the context of an election campaign when energy prices and the cost of energy was a significant part of that debate.

The other option we could have undertaken was the fact that, yes, in the process of the election debate and the heat of discussion there was a commitment made to make sure that under the new legislation there would be a price protection process in place. I guess it would have been just as easy to have stood and said: "You know, we're going to revise the old piece of legislation; we're going to review the regulations; we're going to make sure that it works," in effect saying that all we're going to do is modernize and bring forward a version of legislation that already exists and make sure it's consistent with the intent.

To go ahead and make sure we actually go through the whole process and the whole debate of undertaking a bill that effectively creates a scenario that's already existing in another bill, and we repeal that bill as part of the process – it seems that, in essence, what we've done is send a message out to Albertans that either one of two things occurs when we're doing this. First of all, we didn't know that we already had a price protection bill in place or, two, that what we're dealing with is a situation of just playing to public image. I don't think that either one of those is an appropriate way to deal with constructive legislation and constructive development of the issues that are important to the role we want to play in conveying to Albertans the fact that we think there are situations and there are scenarios where price protection and the ability for us as a province to share with Albertans the ownership of the resource is really quite important.

I guess the other thing I would comment on in terms of the application and the implementation of this bill deals with the idea that as we go through the process of developing the regulations, one of the things, again, that's left up to the minister is the definition of who's actually going to get the payments. In the last round of this, this winter, we made sure that that went out to individuals that were basically consumers of the natural gas or the heating fuels that were necessary to carry them through the winter.

I guess the thing we want to look at here is: what is the intent? From the base title of the bill we're out there to protect consumers from the high costs of natural gas. So, in essence, this is not a royalty rebate program, and we have to make sure that the terms we use are truly reflective of the concepts that are going to convey our intent to Albertans. We shouldn't be talking about royalty rebates in connection with Bill 1. What we should be talking about is what it is, a subsidy to the price of natural gas or natural gas substitutes for consumers in the province. We have to make sure that as we implement this, we end up with a true sense that the consumers and the people who experience the out-of-pocket cost of the gas are the ones that truly receive the dollars that are portrayed here.

This is one of the things that, you know, we've talked about in connection with some of the other activities of the session, this period, in the sense that what we've got is a commitment here that a vendor, in other words an intermediary, must pass on the rebates. If they are the ones who receive it, they must pass it on to the person who actually writes the cheque or digs into their pocket and brings out the cash to pay for the natural gas. I would suggest that that kind of concept, Mr. Speaker, might be appropriately applied in some other areas of our policy as well.

As an example, when we make the acreage payments for farmers, we should pass it on to the appropriate name that we have recognized with a piece of land with the provision that under law they must pass it on to the current farmer of that land. I have received a number of complaints where individuals who were actually farming the land are not the ones that get the money. This bill provides us with a very straightforward mechanism for defining a vendor and consequences of that vendor not passing the money on. That same concept could be applied in some of the other aspects that we deal with in terms of our ability to be up front and to be directive in terms of who we are targeting our support programs to, and that makes it important for us to deal with this.

Mr. Speaker, looking at the clock, I see that my time is just about up. I just want to conclude by saying that . . . Oh, I got a signal that I've got another four minutes yet, so I've got a couple more ideas to deal with in the concept of where to go.

I think the most important thing that we want to look at is how the bill can be put into play and make sure that the signals that are sent out to Albertans are really appropriate. As we pass this bill into law in Alberta, I think it's truly appropriate that we look at the aspect of how to deal with the issues that are important to Albertans and the issues that are important to the concept that we are dealing with in terms of Alberta and the way that these kinds of issues are being brought forward.

I think I catch the signal from the table that I've got a few more minutes than I really was expecting. I guess the Official Opposition leader gets a few more minutes in the normal speaking process.

What we can do is look at how this bill can be brought forward in terms of how to, I guess, satisfy the whole concept of Albertans in terms of our election commitments and our approach to sending the appropriate signals that are necessary for the appropriate time that we can deal with. I guess, looking at the little memo here, I didn't come prepared to speak quite that long, but I'll continue with a few more comments.

The main aspect that we have to look at here is kind of the message that we're sending out to all Albertans in the process of our legislative approach to dealing with the signals that are provided to them. What we want to do, then, is make sure, as we go through this, that the definitions are clear, that a lot of the controversy that was associated with last winter's legislated rebate program actually gets cleared up in terms of how we want it to apply.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, given the situation and that I've covered almost all the issues that I really wanted to raise on this, I will conclude by saying that what we're looking at here is a bill that probably wasn't necessary in the context of our existing legislative agenda. It's a bill that is sending signals to Albertans that as a society we're going to effectively look out for each other. I just hope that as we make sure that this bill gets applied, we don't disrupt the basic belief that we have and that Albertans have that a market economy has to operate and that the signals of that market economy truly get through to everybody, whether they're a buyer or a seller of a product.

We want to make sure that the regulations that are allowed, in the context of the section at the end where "the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations," really reflect that kind of a commitment to Albertans, you know, the ability to deal with how we want to reflect our commitment and our ability to be up front and to create expectations for Albertans, that they can look at it from the perspective of being sure that they're getting the right message, that they're basically going to be involved, with an understanding that the signals that are coming shouldn't be built into kind of their everyday decision-making.

You know, in the context that the bill doesn't delineate on a very definite basis an absolute price that we're going to deal with, I think that's a good part of the bill. But we also have to have within the context of our legislation and our operation as lawmakers an ability to understand when Albertans should be encouraged or not encouraged to ask for this bill to be triggered. I say that in the sense that if we are trying to make sure that Albertans appreciate when this is going to happen or when this bill will kick in, they can say: "Okay, anytime there's a 10 percent increase over last year or anytime there's a 50 percent increase over last year or anytime we get out of line with the other residents in associated jurisdictions, then it can trigger."

I think one of the things that's kind of missing even in terms of the regulations is that what we've got to do is make sure that Albertans understand when this bill can come in, how it can be targeted, and that in the context of how Albertans operate, their decisions, we're not going to be using the section that talks about who can get the rebates and who may not be eligible to get the rebates, that we don't start creating inside and outside conditions, people who are eligible and people who are not eligible, who are, in the context of my comment just now, people meaning consumers. That's one of the important things that we need to start reviewing and dealing with in terms of how these approaches get put in place, because if the bill gets applied with appropriate definitions of who are the recipients and who are not, what we're going to potentially do is create discrepancies in the industrial sector or even in the consumer sector, the residential sector.

We saw a lot of conflict come up this winter with the issues that were there: how do we deal with a residence that happens to also be a condominium, which also happens to be zoned commercial? How do we deal with those in comparison to a single-family dwelling or a condominium that has individualized meters instead of a common meter or a condominium that has a different zoning regulation? What we end up with there is a whole series of discriminatory situations arising that allow for some individuals in the province to have a sense that they're not getting equal access to the dollars. We also have to look at it again in the context of the industrial sector.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that's important, as we go through looking at how the industrial areas will use this rebate process or rebate eligibility, is that we have to watch and make sure that we don't disrupt the comparative advantage of competing firms in the industrial and commercial sectors. As an example, if we start providing, as is provided for in the bill, options that would allow for, say, gas-fired electricity generators to receive a rebate, what we're doing is not sending the appropriate signal to potential new entrants into the electricity generation market that they have to be aware of the fact that there probably will exist in the future in Alberta a much more volatile gas market system than there would be if they were using another energy source such as coal or wind power. What we've got to do is make sure that we don't use this bill, in essence, to create a stability in a market that doesn't send the right signals to the industrial and commercial consumers in that market.

That's why it goes back to what I said earlier. We have to make sure that we deal with the issues that are important in sending the right signals and make sure that the signals don't disrupt the decision-making process. We wouldn't want to use this bill to make sure that individuals or companies that might be interested in coming to Alberta and generating electricity with natural gas have a sense that, "Well, if the price of natural gas gets too high, what in effect I can do is rely on a government rebate," and they build that into their decision-making process. That's not good economic or business relationships with our government.

The government is there to make sure that within our base beliefs of a free market system of commodity exchange, those commodities have to reflect both the absolute price but also the volatility of that price so that the signals get sent that deal with uncertainty and with the issues of how to compensate for that uncertainty. You know, if businesses assume that they will be getting support through this program to deal with their commodity management, their price management, they will not be out into the marketplace hedging the way they should. If they're not out into the marketplace hedging the way they should, they're not sending the signals to the speculators that are there that then get transferred back into the decision-making of all consumers of that industry, because you don't see the appropriate volatility showing up in the pricing system in the way that the system operates so that the total cost of that input is built into their decision-making.

These are important factors that I just wanted to bring out in the context of how we deal with identifying the relevant people or industries or consumers that are going to be given a chance to participate and be included in the recipient groups of the kind of program that gets put out.

Mr. Speaker, also in there under the regulations section we talk about the ability of the Lieutenant Governor in Council to, in essence, put in limits that would control the amount of rebate that an individual could get in the context of any single payment. Recognizing the flexibility of a lot of our business community and the organizational options that exist for them, it seems to me that we have to be very careful when we start putting structural limits on how we deal with the payment that goes out.

In a previous role that I had, I worked extensively with the U.S. government in evaluating some of their farm programs. They always had these maximum amounts of payments that could go out to individuals who owned or operated business ventures. The ingenuity of some of those individuals in terms of how they could take a very large enterprise and operate that enterprise under a number of, if you want to call them, corporate identities was quite interesting. We actually uncovered a case where there was a little two-year-old individual who was the sole owner of a very significant agriculture corporation, but it was operated under an umbrella of another corporation that was controlled by the father.

In essence, what we've got to do is make sure that as we go through the process of putting together these regulations that will deal with how we're going to control the recipients and send a signal that might indicate that there could be a possible maximum amount of dollar payment, we have to make sure that within that framework we don't allow for – we might put it in one way as ingenuity in developing corporate structure. What we want to do then is make sure that if there is an umbrella corporation, that umbrella corporation becomes the identity that has the maximum payment associated with it rather than a set of subsidiary corporations all operating and dealing with the same kind of product output, if you want to call it that. Resource input, I guess, is even a better way of putting it, because we're dealing specifically with the purchase of a resource on input.

I guess the other thing in here that we can also look at is the issue that the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to deal with the timing and the frequency of the rebates. Here what we've got to do is make sure that as we deal with that, we don't in any way, I guess, create natural burdens on one group of consumers as opposed to another in the sense that if we're making them on a quarterly basis or an annual basis, the financing charges end up becoming part of the business cost associated with that activity. We've seen that, Mr. Speaker, in the electricity industry this winter, where with putting in price caps, effectively we've forced into the business decisions of those industries a deficit financing situation.

Well, we could do the same kind of thing with the improper timing of rebates here, where the business or the resident that is buying the natural gas in effect has to finance it from the perspective of making the payment up front and then at a time later getting their payment. This is, you know, an issue that has to be tied very closely as we put them together with the concern that I raised earlier when we talked about the idea that the separation of the utility bill from the rebate or the support payments sends a signal of conservation. But we also want to make sure that that separation is not time sensitive to the point where we can actually create economic hardship for individuals by making them finance the ongoing cost of their utility. For most of us, Mr. Speaker, that's probably an insignificant financing charge, but when we look at individuals on a very fixed income or corporations that are very large consumers of our natural gas or eligible products, then what we end up with is a situation that will reflect the necessity of basically making sure that they don't get themselves into a financial difficulty because of the financing that's associated with having to wait for that support payment and maybe a competitor is getting it because they fall under a different class or a different classification.

An interesting point on section (k) is where you're looking at the administration of those rebates. I guess this is where we're going to look at how pass-through conditions would occur, how pass-through requirements may be enforced or be suggested as they build to working with the relevant recipient of the dollar and how they have to be applied. I think that what we want to make sure here is that if there are administrative charges associated with that rebate, they become part of the rebate program rather than be a charge that gets passed on to the actual recipient of the dollar and it comes out of their pocket. This is, you know, consistent with the comment that I made earlier when I was talking about that separation. We might want to pay even the postage stamp to the company so that they can send out an additional envelope with a cheque in it as opposed to having it go out as a deduction off the bottom of the utility bill.

The issue here also is the fact that they would probably have to run their computer for a specified period of time so that they can make sure that the costs associated with that are reflected, because what we end up with is a situation where the marketers of our eligible products may find that if they're going to participate or if they're going to be expected to participate as the delivery agent for the government, then what we're going to deal with is their aspect of how to make sure that they're not put in a financial difficulty for the operation and the actual application of the program in terms of their participation. So those are some of the issues that we need to talk about.

I guess the final comment that I want to address is the second section of the regulations for the Lieutenant Governor in Council. There's a lot of leeway when you look at the first set there, where effectively the minister under the umbrella of the Lieutenant Governor in Council can make designations of other substances. I wonder if this might be an opportunity for a minister to become innovative in the context of support for new technologies, you know, the fuels that are necessary to run some of our emerging fuel cell technologies, maybe hydrogen-based support.

You know, are we effectively saying to the minister that they can be that flexible, that broad in the context of how they look at "other substances"? I guess we want to make sure that here what we're dealing with is making sure that as we go about this, the true balance of the competitive market and the price signals that get sent are reflected in the way that we as a society want to use it even if that might mean that this kind of program becomes part of a process of providing incentive support to an emerging idea like the concept of using grain alcohol as a substitute for gasoline in terms of some of our fuel-based consumption.

The interesting idea that comes out under this section (2) is the whole idea of looking at other substances, and the process that's associated there is a matter of extending the whole idea of what we're, I guess, normally thinking about in terms of Albertans' perception of what Bill 1 is all about. Bill 1 was kind of presented to them from the perspective that this was going to be a bill that would protect their interest in stability, their interest in a sense of security that the fluctuating prices of natural gas and the gas-associated products wouldn't create a hardship for them.

But this second section of the regulation provision of the act basically provides the minister with a true ability to expand the whole mandate and the premise behind the bill to one of providing economic incentive and becoming effectively an economic development tool for the province. I don't know whether that was the intent of the bill originally as we look through and see what approach and what the implications of the wordings are that are put into the bill, to see whether or not it effectively will deal with the possibility of providing Albertans with that kind of price protection and other aspects.

That's the part that really comes out in terms of the application and the potential uncertainty that surrounds this bill in terms of what was the real intent of the government, first of all, in putting in Bill 1 when they already had a mechanism to protect Albertans specifically from high prices of natural gas. But when we're specifically identifying a whole section of the bill that allows the minister to extend way beyond the price protection of natural gas, how this bill can be used and where it can be applied – and I think we want to look at maybe whether or not some concern should be put on the record that we have to make sure that if we're going to step broadly away from this basic public idea that Bill 1 is a natural gas and associated fuel price protection bill, then we should have provisions in there that would deal with the idea that that application of this bill will have some focus of a public debate before it actually gets out and being used in this way so that it deals with how Albertans perceive it.

The final section there, Mr. Speaker, deals with the aspect of how to make regulations so that the bill can in essence be retroactive. I guess this is kind of a situation where we're looking at a final clause in the bill that basically says: well, the bill is going to come into effect on July 1, 2001, but between the period of the end of the current rebates, at the end of April 2001, and the implementation of the possibilities of this bill, if we really want to and if we really have to, we can use this final section of the bill to actually step out and go back and deal with some of the concepts that are associated with trying to protect either residential consumers or the industrial consumers of natural gas during that interim period. I think that if that is the intent of that section of the bill, then what we've got are a lot of Albertans that will be looking at this and saying: yes, this actually provides us with an alternative.

What it does also, Mr. Speaker, is make sure that we end up in a situation where the process is open to political influence. What we're going to have is a situation of a whole number of people coming out and saying: "You know, we were under the impression that this bill wasn't going to apply in the interim period. Now we in essence have to become political activists to deal with the interim period, between the end of April and the 1st of July."

I don't know whether that's the kind of signal we wanted to send. Wouldn't it have been much more appropriate to basically say that instead of dealing with that, let's make sure that this particular piece of legislation has a starting date that would have been consistent with the ending date of the current rebate program? In effect, what we could do is say: "Look; even though it's now almost the end of May when we're finally giving third reading to this, we're in a position where what we're dealing with is a one-month period."

As I was saying that, Mr. Speaker, I also thought of an opportunity: is there something more here, where we're looking at a possibility that the ability of this section of the bill will be to allow the government to go back and in essence review what happened under the rebate program that's been in place for this winter and use that section of the bill to effectively correct or to redirect or to add to some of the subsidies and some of the support that was provided even prior to or inclusive of that period of support from January to April? I guess that kind of creates a whole open area that we have to look at in the context of how the bill is going to be dealt with and how the bill is going to reflect the true commitment that we're making to a degree of certainty in the process.

Mr. Speaker, as we've gone through the bill, we've had a lot of debate about what the real meaning of the bill is and some of the applications of it. What we have to do is look at the perspective of how we are now going to use this bill in terms of our protection of Albertans from escalating prices. I think the important part of it is that in the not too distant future the regulations be publicly debated, the regulations be publicly discussed so that we send the right signals to Albertans both in terms of their expectations about what conditions might be out there to trigger this bill and what conditions within the bill's framework would identify them as a recipient of this kind of support. I guess I would just encourage the minister to deal with the development of those regulations in a very open way, in a way that is put together to form a consensus-building process around Alberta. One of the ideas, if we see a reasonable stability in our gas prices for the summer, is to tie this possibly to some of the debate of the Future Summit, when we start looking at how Albertans will have input into determining our Alberta over the next five, 10, 15, or 20 years.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I think I'll take my seat and allow the debate to move on with others to participate. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: As we enter our 24th straight hour, let me call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for those encouraging words. I'm pleased to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 1, which is really the bill that started it all, if the truth be known. Maybe a little bit later I'll get a chance to explain to members opposite the key role that this bill and the government's handling of it have played in bringing us to the point we're at this afternoon.

I am pleased to address this bill. This bill has as an objective the establishment of protection for natural gas and other heating substances, price protection for those commodities on behalf of the people of this province, who might otherwise have to pay exorbitant prices for their own natural resources.

So, Mr. Speaker, it brings me to the point of asking why the bill is necessary in the first place. That's a very good question. That's a question that I've thought a lot about. It seems to me that we ought to all have a good understanding of why this bill is necessary in the first place before we give it final approval in the Assembly. One of the main reasons – and the Minister of Energy said it yesterday in some of his responses to questions put in question period. He repeated essentially the same thing that I had said several weeks ago in the Assembly, which brought about a very, very vigorous spate of heckling and unofficial denials across the way. But when the minister said it, in almost exactly the same words, there was an appreciative silence on the part of the government members, and that is that the Alliance pipeline has created a continental energy market for our natural gas.

Mr. Speaker, I think that's an important statement and an important acknowledgment from our Minister of Energy, because that's precisely what the New Democrats have been saying since the by-election in Edmonton-Highlands last June. The reason that Albertans are being asked to pay natural gas prices that are three to four times higher than they were just two or three years ago is because the government has supported the creation of a continental market for our extremely limited resources of natural gas. The result is that all Albertans end up paying prices that you would expect to pay in California or in Chicago for our own natural resource. Of course, the government didn't do anything about that until they were faced with an election. We certainly raised it as a major issue in the Edmonton-Highlands by-election, which is very nearly a year ago now. We certainly trounced our opponents and particularly the government opponent in that riding.

What happened was the government decided to bring about some policies. Now, it was clear that the government's policies were being developed very much on the fly, so to speak, and they were kind of making it up as they went along. It wasn't until we on our side had raised this as a significant public issue that the government glommed onto the fact that they needed to do something about it not only to protect consumers but to protect their hold on power. The government proceeded to introduce a whole series of different rebates for energy.

Of course, they had the same problem, which also was a self-inflicted problem, and that was around the prices of electricity. By messing up a perfectly workable electricity system in favour of radical experimentation, they had created not only high natural gas prices for Albertans . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Edmonton-Highlands, we have a member here rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. MARZ: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Beauchesne 459, relevance. I've been listening for the last five minutes. I've heard very little, if anything, that is relevant to the effects of this bill, and that's what we're discussing in third reading.

MR. MASON: Well, I'm sorry if I've wandered, Mr. Speaker. I was attempting to deal with the reasons behind the need for this legislation, but I'll try and focus more closely on the legislation itself if that's your wish.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Are there others on the point of order?

Seeing that no one else is concerned about this issue, it's encouraging that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was listening so attentively and noted that you strayed perhaps a little bit. So keeping that in mind, to the bill, please.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and of course the point of order will not be deducted from my time, as per the rules.

Debate Continued

MR. MASON: So I guess what I want to do, then, is talk about how the bill deals with it. The bill deals with it in a way that is wide open. In fact, as I said at second reading, I think this isn't so much a piece of legislation as a framework for regulation. It's simply a superstructure put in place to allow the government to do almost anything it wants around rebates. I know that that's pleasing to members opposite, but it disturbs this hon. member and I'm sure many others who have some familiarity with the principles of responsible government.

We heard last night from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview an excellent elucidation on the development of responsible, democratic government in Canada. This flies in the face of it, and this is why we're fundamentally at odds with this piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. The principle that ought to be contained in legislation is the principle that it is the people's elected representatives – the people who are elected here as a whole, not just who is the government but the Assembly itself – that have got to have the responsibility for overseeing the expenditures of the government.

Here we have a situation where the government has recently spent, not just on natural gas rebates, of course, but on rebates of all types to fix the energy mess that they've created, $4 billion – $4 billion – enough to run a small country. They have spent that in order to achieve whatever goals they may have, including possibly the protection of Albertans from high energy prices.

Now, the government has got in this piece of legislation a whole bunch of references to regulation, and I think that it flies in the face of the tradition that the elected members of this Assembly or of any Assembly have a right to oversee expenditures by the government. These expenditures ought to be made by the government in a responsible way, and the rules, the regulations, the restrictions, and all of the other important factors around the expenditure of significant amounts of money ought to be spelled out in the legislation, not left to government regulation.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I would point out that the act mentions "regulations" at least seven times. For example, in section 1(a) the Alberta price is "determined in accordance with the regulations"; in 1(b) "eligible consumer" means, subject to the regulations"; in 1(b)(ii) "with reference to other substances, an eligible consumer as defined in the regulations"; and in 1(d) "other substances" means propane, heating oil and any other substance used for heating purposes as specified in the regulations." So the government can determine what types of fuels or substances can be subsidized without the authority of the Assembly except indirectly.

In section 2 under price protection "regulations" appears a couple of times. It says:

Where, in the opinion of the Minister of Energy, the Alberta price is or is likely to be greater than the amount prescribed in the regulations, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may authorize a rebate to eligible consumers in Alberta under the regulations to assist eligible consumers in the cost of marketable gas.

Then we go down to section 4(2). It says:

A rebate under this Act made to an eligible consumer for marketable gas or other substances consumed or used in Alberta for industrial purposes is subject to the maximum amount of rebate prescribed in the regulations.

Then again in section 7. This is the regulations section, Mr. Speaker. It says that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations" concerning a long list of things. There are, in fact, 16 subjects of regulation in this act. So if you talk about the number of references to regulations in the act, which is seven, and the number of things that are the subject of regulation, which is 16, it comes, according to my arithmetic, to 23 things that are regulated.

I did have a chance to pull out the Natural Gas Rebates Act, under which previous rebates to consumers were made. I found that in that act, which this one is intended to replace, there are far more protections for the principle of responsible government, far more protections for the taxpayer, far more restrictions on the government's arbitrary use of regulations than there are in this bill. So the question I have is: why does the government want to take a piece of legislation that, notwithstanding its serious limitations, at least provides some control over the government expenditure in this area and replace it with a bill that has virtually no restrictions over the government's authority to issue rebates in any way they want, to whoever they want, for virtually whatever they want? As long as, I'm assuming, it can be burned, then it can be provided for under this act.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to just mention, in fact, that it's very unfortunate that this bill is required in the first place, because I think a better approach for the government to follow is to fix the actual problem that we're dealing with, and that's high energy prices for the citizens of Alberta.

I think there are ways that they could go that would render much of this unnecessary. If they in fact wish to provide a cap to the price of natural gas as it affects at least domestic consumers in Alberta, we believe they could do that, and we wouldn't have to have the government making decisions around the cabinet table about when and where they're going to apply taxpayers' money to this. They could provide some permanent protection for Albertans. Alberta New Democrats suggested that on a number of occasions: that it's a better approach, that the government could actually control the prices paid instead of simply coming up with expenditures to offset these high costs, which merely reside temporarily in an individual's chequing account before they are then passed on to the gas company and through the gas company to the natural gas producers.

It could be financed, Mr. Speaker, in a very simple fashion. As we all know, for every additional dollar that the government receives from natural gas revenues, the oil and gas producers receive somewhere between three or four additional dollars, so the natural gas producers are making out very, very well in this particular market. I'm sure that that excites some members opposite no end, but for us it's a concern because a lot of that money is coming out of the pockets of Albertans. So if the government introduces a rebate program as envisaged by this act, they simply take some of that royalty revenue or some general revenues from the government and send it by way of a cheque to people who then put it in their bank account who then write it to the gas company.

So all of these rebates are simply hidden subsidies for energy companies. That's what the government's price protection policy amounts to. It is simply an indirect means of subsidizing energy companies. It does that very simply because the money goes into our pocket, into our account, and from there it gets written as a monthly cheque to the gas companies, who have to buy the gas at higher prices so then they have to write a cheque to the gas producers who are the ultimate winners in all of this subsidy that's taking place. The people of Alberta know this, Mr. Speaker. Even though they're very pleased to get the money – many of them are – to get $150 before the election and then another $150 after the election, it isn't lost on many of them, that this money ultimately ends up in the bank accounts of natural gas producers in our province.

So our approach, on the other hand, would be to see a small increase in royalties. That's not a bad thing. I'd recommend it to the government. Certainly places like Alaska and so on have much more rigorous royalty policies than Alberta, and it hasn't stopped exploration and development in those places. What I would say, Mr. Speaker, is by slightly increasing the royalties, and only slightly, you would be able to provide permanent price protection at the level of two years ago, which is $3 per gigajoule for every Albertan, yet the government has rejected that approach, and I can't understand why the government would reject that kind of approach. I think it's shortsighted for the government not to take a more holistic and systematic approach to dealing with the actual costs instead of using taxpayers' money essentially to subsidize high energy prices and high profits by oil and natural gas producers in this province.

I think it's very unfortunate, but I would just in conclusion say, Mr. Speaker, that this particular bill flies in the face of 800 years of British parliamentary democracy, which has a cardinal principle that it is the Assembly that has control over the expenditures of the government. This is a real play around the authority of the Legislature, giving enormous power to spend money to the government without reference to the Assembly, and that I think, is a serious thing, something that ought not to be dismissed lightly, because it has been a principle of our governments for a very, very long time. In fact, it's the foundation of this place and the reason this place came into being and had a life and a vitality that has served the citizens in our type of political system very well for a very long time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, your time has now expired.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

Bill 2 Cooperatives Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Cooperatives Act updates 53-year-old legislation to keep up with substantial shifts in the co-operative sector and recent changes to legislation in other provinces. It has in fact seen a wide-ranging consultation during the formation of this bill, and frankly I believe the co-operative sector is anxiously awaiting the passing of it.

With that said, I would like to move third reading of Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to participate in third reading of Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act. It comes as a surprise to us that this was the next bill on the agenda. In spite of a history of co-operation in terms of listing what bills will be next up for debate in this House since I have been here, which is since the spring of 1992, we have now been told by the government that it's a surprise package in terms of what comes up next for debate.

It is important to establish what's happening here today, as we're in our 24th hour of debate, nearly twice having seen 1:30 since Monday afternoon in this Legislature.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Speak to the bill.

MS CARLSON: I am quite prepared to speak on whichever bill comes up in third reading this afternoon. I'm quite prepared to deal with a government who refuses completely to be co-operative. It's too bad that that's the process that happens, Mr. Speaker, because it means on Bill 2, a bill which in essence we support, we will have everybody in our caucus speak to it. I'm sure that the other opposition party, the New Democrats, will also be putting that forward.

AN HON. MEMBER: Assumption.

MS CARLSON: Assumptions are allowed in this Legislature, and if you want to respond to it, you have every opportunity to get up and speak.

In terms of Bill 2, the highlights of this bill are . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: You sit down, and I'll speak.

MS CARLSON: We'll see. We'll see when I sit if you do get up and speak.

The highlights of this bill, Mr. Speaker, are that they modernize and replace co-operatives legislation. They are a good idea. I would like to applaud the member who has introduced this, the Member for Calgary-North Hill. He has worked quite diligently in terms of trying to get our co-operation on this particular bill.

It's unfortunate that in a Legislative Assembly where we have seen so many bills, some of them of a very substantial and significant matter, we have had little time to devote to this particular bill, which certainly in terms of outstanding issues is a lower priority. The Member for Calgary-North Hill has lobbied us aggressively and repeatedly in terms of any outstanding questions or issues we have with the bill so that it could see a relatively speedy passage in this Legislature. We appreciate his efforts on that behalf. If we had seen that kind of co-operation from other members who are sponsors of bills, I believe that we would see a much speedier passage of legislation in this Assembly at all times. We perhaps didn't give him due regard in that process because of our small numbers and the large numbers of legislation being passed this spring in a very speedy fashion.

It's amazing to note, Mr. Speaker, that we are now on the 14th or 15th bill that we have debated since 8 last evening. While we have heard many people complain about the length of time that we have been in here, in fact that doesn't even average an hour and a half per bill. What we have seen being forced on a very small minority opposition by a bully government is closure. There are many ways to bring closure into a Legislature, and we see that this is one of them. What we are seeing now is a large number of third readings by a government who is so arrogant that they don't even care to share the order of the bills that will be debated next. Bill 2 is one that comes up to mind.

REV. ABBOTT: Unparliamentary terms.

MS CARLSON: If you don't like it, stand up on a point of order, my friend. Otherwise, be quiet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on a point of order. Citation please.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

REV. ABBOTT: Beauchesne's 489.

THE SPEAKER: Please proceed.

REV. ABBOTT: I believe "arrogant" is an unparliamentary term.

THE SPEAKER: I appreciate that the hon. member has referred himself to Beauchesne, and I suspect that he's done a thorough reading and will continue to do a thorough reading of Beauchesne. In section 489 it says, "since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions," but nowhere on the list is "arrogant." The hon. member might wish to refer himself to section 490. In section 490 it says, "since 1958, it has been ruled parliamentary to use the following expressions," and "arrogant" is one of those words that is acceptable.

No point of order. Please proceed.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am quite happy to withdraw that particular word and replace highhandedness and indifference, if that suits the member better.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: So to continue on with my comments on third reading of Bill 2. I would like to take a look at this bill which in essence we support, certainly the streamlining process, the updating that has gone on here, the providing of a variety of tools which will help these co-ops to compete with business corporations and take a look at an area of co-ops, I think, that is very important for us to understand as legislators and to support, Mr. Speaker, and that's aboriginal co-ops in Canada, their current situation and potential for growth.

In referencing the comments that I'm about to make, I would like to refer to the report on Aboriginal Co-operatives in Canada: Current Situation and Potential for Growth by Dr. Lou Hammond Ketilson, associate professor, management and marketing, College of Commerce and Centre for the Study of Co-operatives, University of Saskatchewan, and Dr. Ian MacPherson, director, British Columbia Institute for Co-operative Studies, University of Victoria, dated March 2001. We see that there are many co-ops in Alberta. If I have read the notes correctly, we have about 400 or so in this particular province. In terms of aboriginal co-ops, there are 133 throughout Canada whose membership is predominantly aboriginal.

Most of these can be found in the northern regions of the country, and they are different from the majority of the co-ops in Alberta, which primarily focus on agriculture. Most of the aboriginal co-ops serve a wide variety of needs, the most common being the provision of food and supplies in remote communities. Also, they've become important as marketers of arts and crafts, wild rice, fish, and shellfish, and some have been acted on in terms of the possibilities for housing in urban communities, which is interesting, because that seems to be where the most participation has been in Alberta at this particular point in time. This is, I think, a critical need, urban housing, and it has a considerable future and potential in this province, particularly when we see the kind of shortage of affordable housing that we have in this province and we see particular needs in the aboriginal community for this kind of housing. It is, I think, important for us to understand that this legislation that we will pass in Bill 2 will move forward to some degree enabling the aboriginal community to work within the framework of a co-op and help to facilitate some of those key needs.

I would hope that the sponsor of this bill will continue to take an ongoing interest in what happens to co-ops and new co-ops coming on-line after the bill is passed, and perhaps he could directly focus his interests on the aboriginal community, because I believe that this is a key issue and that we can find here, in supporting these co-ops, a key answer to identifying and solving some outstanding issues in the community. We see that aboriginal co-ops are very important within the history and the development of the Canadian movement of co-ops but also very important to their own community.

In total, co-ops in Canada have more than $169 billion in assets and more than 15 million memberships in Canada, so that's very interesting to see. Housing co-operatives house some 250,000 people in more than 2,100 co-ops with nearly 90,000 units. Pretty significant, Mr. Speaker, and something we need to take a look at as a reasonable solution to the housing crisis that we have for the low income and working poor in this province.

Aboriginal co-ops are members of both the Canadian Co-operative Association and the French counterpart, and they've done some serious work in this area in terms of solving some issues. The suitability of the co-operative model for what aboriginal leaders say about the kind of economy they wish to encourage is important. The paper that I'm looking at actually drew upon the findings of 11 case studies to make a series of conclusions and recommendations about the potential of growth for co-operatives owned by aboriginal people for their own purpose.

So why is this important in terms of Bill 2, where we've seen some changes in the legislation? It's important because aboriginal people in Canada, as we know, have an unacceptably low standard of living and consequently suffer from a range of complex social problems, all of which I hope the government is serious about addressing. We've heard some indications of that, and we'll see what happens over time on some of these issues. There have been a number of efforts by governments to encourage economic development among aboriginal peoples, but they haven't achieved the desired results.

You know, we see a small number of people who are just having phenomenal success, but we still have vast issues outstanding in the communities, not just in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, but I would suggest that we need to take a look at our neighbours in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, where the issues are perhaps more outstanding than what they are in Alberta. We need to, whenever we can, support our neighbours in helping them to help themselves and find a way out of some of these issues.

We've heard aboriginal leaders expressing a preference, Mr. Speaker, for economic development in a kind of process that takes into account their history and the kind of framework that they naturally work within, which is really a collective kind of framework. I'm quite familiar with the collective framework having worked in the women's movement for many, many years, and it's very much a similar kind of framework as to what aboriginal communities work very well within. That certainly is the kind of framework that co-ops fit in. Co-ops then can be adapted to address the underlying realities of each aboriginal community, which is also important. This approach can conform well with aims and preferred methods for the community development, as we hear from the aboriginal communities themselves, in terms of what they wish to accomplish and how they wish to accomplish it.

So if we take a look at what's happening in terms of conclusions of what aboriginal co-ops are doing so far in Canada, we see that the 133 co-ops, particularly those in the Arctic, are very successful. They make significant and substantial economic contributions to the communities they serve through local businesses and through the wholesales they own, which return surpluses back to them, which is, of course, a bonus, not only to sustain a reasonable standard of living for those people who work within the co-ops and contribute to them but also profits back to them. We see also that co-ops are major employers of aboriginal people, and they have made and are making significant contributions through the training and education they provide their elected leadership and employees. So also a very positive movement. There's no one here in this Assembly, I don't think, who isn't quite dismayed by the high unemployment rates faced by aboriginal communities and look toward solutions to solving that as an issue.

So what can happen in the future, and how can this bill relate to facilitating that, Mr. Speaker? If you think about further success in this regard, you can talk about what is an existing barrier right now. The system we have now, in terms of a very complicated political and policy environment, really is a barrier to economic and community development to many people in the province but particularly disadvantages this community. The barriers help explain, I think, the mixed success rate and low take-up of the co-op model over the past few years. Some of the barriers have been eliminated in this legislation and replaced by some facilitating aims. One of those certainly is the access to better capital financing that we see in this act. Aboriginal communities often don't have direct access to start-up funds, and this will help streamline processes and give some increased flexibility and look at harmonizing legislation, all things that will significantly, I think, facilitate this.

What we don't see particularly addressed in this legislation but that would have helped and that perhaps the sponsor will take a look at are things like more educational development material on co-ops so that people can get a good grounding on them, and then they can take that information and customize it to their own individual realities and to their culture. If we could take this act one step further and build some frameworks and provide some examples of existing aboriginal co-operatives, we would be well on the way to giving a hand up to a community that is really looking to solve conditions for themselves, and I think that would be very positive.

We've seen that most provincial and territorial representatives contacted have suggested that co-operative federations need to do more work in outreach and advocacy. Certainly, that's the next step that could happen in a bill like this, and it really looks like it might be a logical step there. Of course, what can happen is that with our new resources, staff and specialists in aboriginal economics can make links and promote the model to communities. We've seen some excellent pilot projects being conducted by industry players in terms of working with aboriginal communities and providing this kind of assistance to them. The one that always comes to mind immediately for me is Al-Pac. I think they do some outstanding work in that regard, but there is no doubt that the government could easily be a facilitator in this regard.

We need to see aboriginal development corporations play a centre role in controlling decisions over community development and then subsequently a crucial role in the success of co-operative enterprises. Formal links should be encouraged between co-operative federations and aboriginal development corporations. The views and priorities of these corporations with regard to co-operative enterprises should be identified in the next phase of research on aboriginal co-ops. That next phase is the next logical step for this bill to take.

We've seen that they've started to develop co-operatives to meet clearly identified needs and to address pressing needs in the community. This is important not only in terms of solving outstanding issues but in terms of determining future success. If you can provide a framework and a little bit of assistance when people don't know how to carry on with the framework or they fall outside of the mandate and if they can see examples of systems that have worked in the past and if you can link them up with contact people, to successful co-ops, what we end up getting, Mr. Speaker, is a huge phenomenal success, and that's really good and positive for the community.

There are huge contributions, then, that they make in the areas that they're in. They contribute to the physical infrastructure of communities by contributing to better transportation, communication systems, employment, and essential services. Those are all significant and not to be sneezed at. We've seen them contributing substantially to the social capital of communities. They do that by enhancing educational programs. People learn skills, business management skills and employment skills. Community action often falls out of this kind of work. They work with other cultures and communities, so they learn how to negotiate and compromise and find solutions. Those are all important.

But, Mr. Speaker, there still are a number of challenges. Secured funding is still important. This bill goes some direction in talking about that in terms of providing better access, but secured funding is fundamental. So we need to see a greater collaboration of the government on this. We'd like to see some dedicated dollars in one of these upcoming budgets in terms of that issue. We need to see some more research on the issues of co-ops. This is a good start in terms of reforming some of the legislation and updating it, but more research is needed. Education is important in terms of educating potential memberships.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I enjoy the opportunity here this afternoon to rise and speak in third reading to Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act.

I would like to compliment the Member for Calgary-North Hill. Obviously a tremendous amount of work went into this piece of legislation, and he did exhaustive research. He had many, many consultations. Not only that, but he lobbied for any concerns or questions with the bill. As such we do have a very good piece of legislation here.

As I said, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill 2 and to certainly say that I do support Bill 2. It is legislation, Mr. Speaker, that modernizes and replaces co-operative legislation that has been in this province for quite some time. I heard the Member for Calgary-North Hill indicate when he was introducing this legislation that it is 53 years old and that this will modernize it and bring it up to date and not only bring it up to date but provide a clear path for co-operatives in the future. I think it is something that all members appreciate, that all Albertans, particularly those involved in the co-operative movement, welcome.

As well, what this legislation will do, Mr. Speaker, is attract more co-operatives to Alberta. Historically when we look back at the role that co-operatives have played in the development of not only this country but this province, we see the need for the continued growth and the continued development and prosperity of co-operatives.

Now, we see that we have more than 400 co-operatives in Alberta. The majority of these are involved in agriculture, farming, industry, and definitely some in housing. Co-operatives continue to play a very important role in the lives of many Albertans who certainly wouldn't have the financial resources themselves to be involved at this particular level. I see that in Canada there are more than 15 million memberships in co-ops. So that is why I think we do have such a piece of extensive legislation and very good legislation.

Again, when we look at the success of co-operatives in this province, they do have some challenges. They have some challenges in regards to their sustainability. They have challenges in membership. They have challenges in how they pay back profits to their members. So when we look at this particular bill, I'd like to make some comments, and these primarily will deal with membership and how people in this province can join co-operatives and how they can use the services of the co-operative and who is willing and able to accept the responsibilities of and abide by the terms of this membership.

As well, my comments this afternoon will, Mr. Speaker, indicate how people can vote and how each member or delegate can vote. Also I notice in here that no proxies are allowed in voting.

Again, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said, one of the major challenges faced by co-operatives today is investment income. What this legislation does as well is spell out the responsibilities of any member on a loan, and the interest on any loan is "limited to a maximum rate fixed in the articles." It also spells out in this act, Mr. Speaker, that "dividends on any membership share are limited to the maximum rate fixed in the articles," and finally, "to the extent feasible, members provide the capital required by the cooperative." As I said earlier in my comments, this certainly is a major challenge for all co-operatives.

Co-operatives as well provide education on co-operative principles. These are noteworthy, Mr. Speaker, and I think I would like to speak in regards to these as I'm making my closing comments here on Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act. Hopefully this legislation will clear up any problems that the co-operatives are facing.

In looking at the bill and specifically part 2 of the bill, Membership in Cooperatives, what this legislation will do is provide protection for all Albertans who are involved in co-operatives. It spells out accountability; it spells out the responsibility of members. As well, it spells out who can use the services of the co-operative and who is willing and able to accept the responsibility of and abide by the terms of membership.

Now, another very important part of this particular piece of legislation is that we can have a delegate system of voting, and it is provided for in the bylaws of a co-operative. "A member has one vote on all matters to be decided by the members." Again, I think this is a very important part of this legislation.

As well, the legislation goes further as to how we will have a redemption of membership shares and loans. So this, again, is very open. It is spelled out very distinctly so that members know exactly the rules and regulations they are bound by not only when they enter membership but also the responsibilities in regards to shares and loans when they leave.

The legislation has done much in the way of spelling out the termination by directors of any member that they feel for whatever reasons they do not wish to have anymore. As well, what I see is that there is a right of appeal. So the rules of natural justice in regard to co-operatives are certainly open, they are equally applied to all members, and they are transparent, certainly totally different legislation here than we see when we see legislation that we discussed earlier today.

Now, then, the termination of any member does not release debts. So, again, we have this whole idea of sense and fairness and reasonableness not only to the members that are involved in a co-operative but also to the co-operative itself. Mr. Speaker, when we start talking about how loans are repaid and dividends, again it is a very well-balanced approach where the directors can provide a redemption of the shares of payment, and they can do that as long as the financial well-being of the co-operative is not jeopardized. I think that is very key, particularly for co-operatives who, as we said earlier, do not have a huge financial investment, who rely on membership, and as well in many cases have to rely on debt, on the borrowing of money in order to grow.

Again, Mr. Speaker, looking at Bill 2, I think it is a very good piece of legislation. I think it is a piece of legislation that all members in this Assembly should support. I certainly see that with this piece of legislation co-operatives in this province not only have a magnificent past; they have rules that are governing them that are going to give them the direction to continue in a very positive direction in the future.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks and listen to those of other hon. members. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: I call on the hon. Deputy Speaker first.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of nine STEP students who are working in the Legislative Assembly Office this summer. Tiffany Ferguson is with the office of the Clerk, Warren Maynes with the Legislature Library, Catherine Nissen with financial management and administration services, Helen Park with Parliamentary Counsel, Terris Schultz with human resource services, Vincent Tong with security and ceremonial services, along with Kathia Legare, a Quebec/Alberta exchange student, Debra Weibe with information system services, and Brian Storseth, who is assisting in your office, Mr. Speaker. They are seated in your gallery, and again on your behalf I would ask them now to rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly some 23 grade 12 students. Incidentally, they held their graduation last Saturday night, another very good event. Along with their teacher, Mr. Darren Brick, and parent helper Dale Murray they are seated in the members' gallery. Mr. Brick has brought students to this Assembly each year for many years, so we want to thank him for that. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a remarkable 12 year old from the constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs. This young man spends most of his free time making little clay pins which he sells as a fund-raiser for the Cancer Society here in Edmonton. I would ask the young man, Taddes Korris, to rise along with his grandmother, Emilia Karosas, and his mother, Nejolla Korris, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature 33 visitors from Chipman school. They are accompanied today by a teacher and president of VALID, Mr. Allen Dubyk and teacher assistant Mrs. Brenda Lesoway, and by parents Mrs. Janet Effa and Mrs. Karen Schickerowsky, and bus driver and also councillor in the village of Chipman and carpenter extraordinaire Mr. John Stribling. I'd ask the students and the parents and the company to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Would there be additional hon. members who have introductions at this time?

head: Third Reading

Cooperatives Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on third reading of Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act.

I think this act is, quite frankly, a fine piece of legislation. I commend the Member for Calgary-North Hill for his comprehensive approach to this legislation and for his consultative approach. I think I indicated at second reading, Mr. Speaker, that I certainly appreciated being buttonholed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill on three separate occasions outside this Chamber demanding to know if I had any issues, and if there were any real issues that I had, he would fix them. I appreciate it. That's how I think we ought to do business. If we had more consultation like that, I think we would have fewer late sittings. So I really recommend it to all members opposite, including those who are members of Executive Council and ministers responsible for various departments. I think some consultation with those of us on this side would not only improve the legislation, but it would certainly speed the passage of pieces of legislation through the House and allow us all to get on with life.

Now, certainly there is a great deal of comprehensiveness evident in this bill. It begins, of course, in part 1, division 1, with spelling out the steps that need to be undertaken by a group of individuals who wish to form a co-operative. It says who can incorporate a co-operative, how they are to apply for incorporation, what needs to be in the articles of incorporation. It talks about the capital structure that needs to be in place, and it talks about the various conditions for incorporation and the director's decision. Those are really important things, Mr. Speaker.

I have actually been involved at a relatively early stage in the formation of a co-operative. You often have people from very diverse backgrounds with different levels of experience and different expectations, and if they don't have a clear set of rules laid out as to how they're going to go about it, then they can pretty easily get into trouble. If they don't get into trouble, then they certainly run the risk at least of wasting quite a bit of time as they sort these things out. So I find the section that deals with that to be quite comprehensive and quite strong, and I really think it's a good piece.

Now, division 2 of part 1 talks about bylaws and, of course, the ability of the people entering into a co-operative to come to an agreement about how they're going to run it, who's going to be responsible for what. What the accountability is for financial affairs, for membership, for the operation of the organization is critical. It's fundamental to the future success of that co-operative. Also to see in the articles clear language about the adoption of bylaws, about the content of bylaws, how you make or amend the bylaws, when the bylaws come into force – because that's sometimes important. You need to be clear. If you pass a motion to change the bylaws, you need to know when in fact that's going to come into effect. That's an important piece. The need to provide copies of all the bylaws for everybody in a timely fashion, to maintain them in records, including not just bylaws but any unanimous agreements and contracts that might be entered into prior to the incorporation of the co-op.

We all know that sometimes the process of creating a co-op is a lengthy one. People come together and talk for a considerable period of time. They have a number of steps and hurdles that they have to overcome before they can actually become incorporated. In the process of getting to that point, you will find that it's quite clear that they will actually have to enter into contracts and other agreements before they're incorporated. This is a really important piece of the legislation as well, Mr. Speaker, because it recognizes that co-ops just don't spring into being at the will of the members, that there's a long and sometimes a little bit rocky road before they actually become officially a co-op. The fact that this is taken into account in the legislation is another reason why I commend this particular piece of legislation to all members of the Assembly.

Now, of course, names have become increasingly important. Branding is important in the commercial world. Your name is your badge; that's what you're known as. Particularly for co-ops that may be involved in commercial activities and so on it's very, very important that the use of names be clearly regulated and well defined. So we have a section that deals with the names. It talks about the ability of people forming a co-operative or in a co-operative to actually reserve a name and protect their name, and it protects people who have a name for their co-op from people who would otherwise usurp their legitimate name. I think that's very important especially for co-operatives that are involved in commercial activities. It also deals with the names that are prohibited. So, again, we see a systematic approach to the legislation, and that's quite a good thing.

I guess I could talk just a little bit about co-operatives. Some co-operatives are for the simple purpose of providing services to a small group of members; for example, a housing co-op or a food co-op. Some co-operatives exist where they buy food collectively and obtain lower prices for their members by buying in bulk. Those kinds of co-operatives I think are valuable, but a name would be less important to those types of co-operatives than it would be for a co-operative that's engaged in competitive, commercial activity. Some of those take place on quite a large scale, Mr. Speaker.

For example, the Federated Co-op is a very significant force, I know, in many parts of the province. Not so much in Edmonton, but I know it's a major player in the retail grocery business in Calgary. In Calgary, which is considered the heart and soul of the free enterprise ethic in this province, you actually have a very, very successful co-operative organization that is able to compete with and sometimes outcompete very large multinational corporations that provide groceries in our society. I commend the people who have worked over the years to build a strong Federated Co-op movement in Calgary and in other parts of the province. I think that it's really appropriate that they be given some very strong protection for their name and for their brands and so on because they're actually out there competing in the private sector against, in some cases, much larger corporations.

There is a section here, division 4, that deals with the legal capacity of co-operatives. It also deals with a very, very important question, Mr. Speaker, and that is the personal liability of members and shareholders in a co-operative. People want to know, when they participate in some kind of co-operative organization, whether or not they are somehow going to become liable for decisions that they have no role in making. I think it is essential to people freely entering into co-operatives in our province. They need to know that their liability is well protected. I think that's a key thing. I'll just briefly quote section 26:

The members and holders of shares of a cooperative are not liable, by reason only of being members or holders of shares, for any liability, act or default of the cooperative except as provided in this Act.

That's a very, very comforting statement to have enshrined in the legislation. It lets people know that they can join a co-op and can participate in good faith as members of that co-op and receive the benefits of the co-op without incurring liability for decisions that they have nothing to do with. So I again commend the member for the comprehensiveness of this particular piece of legislation.

Division 5, of course, deals with some of the corporate elements, that are very important: the importance of keeping a registered office, keeping good records, how the records need to be kept, lists of memberships and shareholders, and so on, and of course the corporate seal. Those are all important pieces in the type of commercial environment that co-operatives work in.

Now, that brings me to part 2, which is the key, the heart of co-operatives, and that's the members. Without the members co-operatives just don't exist. They don't have any kind of existence at all. They're about members. They exist by and for their members in order to provide some service or financial advantage to their members. So it's really important that the membership section be very strong and very comprehensive. I believe it is, Mr. Speaker. I believe that we have bylaws which govern the membership, how you apply to be a member, your right to vote, which is very important and needs to be specified, because we don't want to take away the right of anybody to vote on anything.

It even provides for members under 18 years of age. I thought that was a really interesting section. It's section 35, and it says: "Subject to the by-laws, an individual under 18 years of age may be a member of a cooperative and may vote at meetings of the cooperative." Then it goes on to say that the bylaws "and any unanimous agreement are binding on a member who is under 18 years of age." I think that's good. I think it's a good thing to recognize that many of our young people become actively involved in organizations in a responsible way before they reach the age of majority, so I think that's a good piece and an important one.

Division 3, of course, deals with the terms in office for the directors. It talks about what happens when a vacancy exists on a board of directors, it deals with the unexpired term of the director's office, it specifies the right of directors to attend meetings, and it talks about their continuation in office. So, again, we see the comprehensive approach of the legislation evident, Mr. Speaker. I think I'm satisfied with the whole way the act deals with membership. Of course, it deals also with the resignation and the termination of directors, talks about when they cease to hold office, how they're removed, what has to be in the statement of resignation, and that notice of changes have to be provided, so I think that that is beneficial as well.

Now, we come to the question of the directors, the quorum, and the meetings of them. It deals with where directors' meetings can take place, what needs to be in the notice, when notice can be waived. It deals with quorum and how a quorum is constituted. It even provides, Mr. Speaker, for an electronic meeting. I think that's a really modern feature of legislation and it's good. It talks about what kinds of actions on behalf of directors are valid and what kind of resolution can be put in place of a director's meeting.

We come back to the question of liability, Mr. Speaker. I think that's an important element, because even though you want to protect the members completely from any liability, you want to make sure that the board acts responsibly and acts within its authority and acts in the interests of its members. So there has to be a section dealing with the liability of the directors. Of course, if the directors perform due diligence and act according to their constituted authority, act in a democratic fashion, and act in the best interests of their members, having followed their duties of due diligence and their other duties, then of course they need to be protected from liability. If they don't, then they can incur liability either individually or collectively, and I think that's a very important thing. Anyone that takes on the responsibility of managing what could be a very large organization and is responsible for handling a great deal of money needs to be aware that they have to perform their duties in a responsible fashion and with due regard to their obligations both under the law and to the membership.

Now, we come to an interesting section here because it relates a little bit to some of the things we were talking about under Bill 7, which is the whole question of people having other interests and how you protect people when there are people sitting on the board who may have an interest that could tend to create a conflict with their responsibility on the board. It requires and quite appropriately so, Mr. Speaker, that the people on the board must disclose those interests. It says when they must disclose their interests. It talks about disclosure of interests by the officers. It provides access to the disclosure so people have a right to know what the interests of members of a board might be and changes to procedural requirements.

It talks about voting on contracts and transactions when there is a conflict. It requires disclosure to be continued, to be provided on an ongoing basis, and it deals with the effects that disclosure could have. It allows the courts to set aside any transaction that they may feel is in violation, and I think that's important. It talks about the appointment of a managing director or a committee. It talks about the deemed consent of directors, the defence of directors, and the remuneration, and that's important. It talks about indemnification, and I think that's important. It talks about unanimous agreements, the rights of members, financial information that needs to be provided when an annual meeting is not required.

Now, it talks about capital. That's important, because one of the weaknesses of co-operatives in our economy is that they have a reduced access to capital as compared to joint stock companies. That's something that needs to be dealt with. If that were effectively dealt with, I think we would see a significant increase in co-operative forms of economic endeavours in our province.

Well, that's my time, Mr. Speaker, and I would just like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for producing a most excellent piece of legislation.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to hear some compliments from the other side, a good exception to the rule, I guess.

At this time of the day on a normal day we would be engaged in holding the government to account. That's what question period is about. We have been deprived of that opportunity today – I just want to make note of that – and Albertans are the poorer for it. The government must provide time for the opposition, for elected members to hold it to account, to ask questions, tough questions, and seek answers, although we never get them, particularly from the Minister of Environment. He always sidetracks and sidesteps the questions.

However, I rise to speak on this very important bill, Bill 2, Cooperatives Act. I also want to compliment the Member for Calgary-North Hill. He and I worked together on an all-party committee which held public hearings on justice across this province, and I certainly enjoyed working with him and several other colleagues from the 24th Legislature of this province on that venture. That showed how we could all work on some common goals in a very co-operative way.

In spite of a bit of an eerie feeling today that we are talking about specific bills at a time when we should be asking questions, a sort of surreal sort of context in which we're talking about it, I want to certainly say that this act in a sense underlines and reaches out for us to remember the long history of co-operation in this part of Canada, particularly in western Canada. The co-operative movement arose very much as part of the history of the settlement of this part of the continent under other difficult climatic and other technological conditions, and co-operative spirit, co-operative values played a very significant role in making us into what we are today. So co-operatives do have a long history and I think a history that we can be proud of.

Similarly, I guess, Mr. Speaker, I should just lay out in context when we are talking about Bill 2 in its third reading – fishing villages along the east coast had similar ventures, co-operatives. Fishing families, communities, fishers used to join their resources together to not only catch fish but also then market and profit from it in the pursuit of their collective interests.

We are living in an era where in a sense competition and market competition have been put on a sort of pedestal. It's been turned into almost a sacred value. In the context of this, it's refreshing to see a fairly comprehensive piece of legislation, the details of which have been referred to and discussed at some length by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands, so I won't go into those. I really want to put myself on record in terms of what in my view co-operatives represent in terms of our collective experience in the past and values that not only were good for us in the past but we need to keep alive and indeed nurture if we're going to remain vibrant, healthy human communities in the long run. So the values of co-operation in which this bill is embedded, the values that have historical roots in this province will benefit from this piece of legislation. Once you have those values incorporated, embodied, in a comprehensive piece of legislation, then each interacting with the other helps to strengthen those values and those activities that make use of those values to do business.

The co-operatives movement, of course, also represents and in a sense is based on a participatory model of decision-making. Members of co-operatives have rights, they have obligations, and the rules are nicely set out here to help them conduct their business and work within that framework. That framework is healthy, and I think it certainly reflects that there is room even in today's world for a participatory model of democracy and decision-making. Certainly my hope is that this bill will strengthen those values and those tendencies in our society.

Co-operatives and public enterprises and institutions, you know, have a sort of common heritage, particularly in a province like ours. You know, public enterprises such as Alberta Government Telephones, Alberta Treasury Branches, ATB – these are two really outstanding examples of how the spirit of co-operation, the ability to work together to put in place services that would otherwise not be available – have resulted from this experience of co-operative movement. The building of co-operatives as business entities allowed us to take some innovative steps in the form of establishing, not shying away, public enterprises simply because it somehow challenged the sacred value of profit and competition.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, again, in my view reinforces those traditions and those commitments that Albertans and western Canadians in particular have to the use of public enterprise, the use of public resources and means in order to achieve our collective goals. The collective interest, the public interest, again, I think is reinforced, emphasized by the traditions of the co-operative movement and the co-operatives themselves through their operating procedures and business activities in Alberta and neighbouring provinces.

The bill itself I think provides a good road map for Albertans when they decide and seek to set up co-operatives, be they nonprofit or profit, be they in the area of agricultural rural communities or in the urban areas, dealing with housing, low-cost, low-income housing. These rules and procedures outlined here in law will provide, I think, a very useful road guide and road map for Albertans to undertake such ventures.

I want to close by saying that I'm supportive of this bill and want to congratulate my colleague from Calgary-North Hill for shepherding it. May I take this opportunity, not to forget of course, to compliment and thank those people who always remain in the background but who are responsible for preparing this very complex piece of legislation: our staff, the LAO, and others. So I thank them for the hard work and effort that they have put into this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act. Maybe what I should have said is that I rise this continuing evening to speak to the Cooperatives Act.

I want to address a couple of issues. I just came back across from the Annex, and for all that have been in here quite a while, it's actually raining outside. It's really beautiful out there. That is probably doing as much for the mood of people in the area as anything. So what we need to do is look at how that mood that gets generated by the nice rain can be conveyed to dealing with the issues here in looking at Bill 2.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that has been developed over, I guess, almost a couple of years of working with members of the community, members of the different co-operatives in Alberta, the associations that have affiliations from across Canada. What we've got to do is basically look at the process it went through. I guess it works out to be quite convenient for all of us here in the Legislature in the sense that the Alberta co-operative association had a little get-together not too long ago. We got a chance to chat with the board members and the executive of a number of the co-ops across Alberta.

I can tell you that one of the things that was common to almost every discussion and every hello that was said there was: how's progress coming on the Cooperatives Act? As legislators, most of us responded with: "Well, it's in the Leg. It's moving. What do you think of it?" It was quite rewarding and a real compliment to the individuals that were involved in developing the act that there were very few if any concerns raised about how the act was going to impact on them or whether or not they found any conflicts in it that wouldn't be consistent with the kind of operation their co-op was actually undertaking or some of the extensions their co-ops wanted to move into. I guess the approach we have to look at as we deal with evaluating whether or not the act accomplishes the objective is to look at it in the context of that kind of response.

One of the interesting things we can look at is all the flexibility that's built into this act in the sense that as we talked to the individuals at that meeting, there were members there from almost all the different kinds of structural co-ops and situational co-ops that you could imagine. In the process of discussions in the last year or so I've talked to individuals in the input and the output and also in the service types of co-ops. All of them felt that the basic idea of what was involved here was very useful to them and very supportive of where they wanted to go with their organizations.

When we look at the structures there, one of the things that came out that I found quite interesting was when we got to the back part of the bill and started talking about specific types of co-ops. One of them was even defined as a kind of new-generation co-op. I'm not so sure if this was really the term the associations were putting to their own structure. Really what it amounts to is that it basically means it's almost like an equity co-op as opposed to the standard partnership, pass-through type of co-op. The share structure and the value of those shares are determined by market tradability and market valuation, where in a normal co-op the value of your participation in the co-op is a function of basically your accumulated retained capital and your equity in terms of unpaid shares.

So the idea that this new-generation co-op actually gets into some type of market valuation and market reflection of where the worth of that co-op is going does create quite an attractive structure. I guess the thing we have to watch here is that what we're seeing a lot of now in terms of some of the co-ops is their trying to convert their organizational structure into the corporate model basically to facilitate the idea of capital financing and capital availability so that they can actually have the capital that's necessary for them to expand and to move forward.

I think what we're seeing here in this bill is a real proposal that is going to give us a structure for co-operatives in the province that will truly reflect almost every possible concept of how a group of people in Alberta would like to get together and organize to achieve their end. We can see within the model structure that is provided here both where we're going from the perspective of the board of directors that control the votes, the memberships, and also the patronage part of it that comes out with the volume of service. This reflects essentially a real flexibility that's going to be there so that the group can put together under this act any kind of joint venture they see as being important to them.

Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to note that in the one section we were looking through, with all the debate that's gone on in other associated areas, division 7, section 80 of the act really goes through and at length defines the structure that has to be implemented to deal with the conflict of interest and the disclosure of possible benefit from an action of the co-op that might come to any of the board of directors from an action. It goes through and defines a number of the cases and situations where disclosure has to be proactive. It also talks about the option that board members in this concept of disclosure don't have to deal with the normal protocol if their perceived benefit is a general benefit available to everyone as a member.

I think this is kind of how we need to start looking at some of these issues in terms of the corporate responsibility, or the co-operative responsibility as we're dealing with in this act. In the general sense of decision-making and administrative responsibility, what we've got to do is look at how we can have a true sense of accountability, transparency, and most of all a sense that when decisions are made, they're made to the benefit and under the umbrella of the collective well-being rather than any concept of a self-directed benefit.

I guess the comment I'd like to make is that in that section 80

there is a very long set of discussions about where the disclosure has to occur, the timing of that disclosure, and essentially the fact that the board has to deal with it. Also, the openness is there in the context of these disclosures in section 83, when "the members and investment shareholders may examine the portions of minutes of meetings of directors, of other documents that contain disclosures under sections 80 to 86." I guess this basically shows that we are putting co-operatives that are formed and operate under this bill on notice that they basically have to be prepared to be accountable to their membership, to their partners in the co-op and deal with it in an open way by having such access provisions in there.

I think it's important that we see both the disclosure aspects and the prohibition from voting when there's a conflict and, as I said, the access to minutes that discuss or relate to the declaration of any kind of possible conflict. We have to kind of look at it from that perspective and see what kind of approach or what kind of implication that has for the overall operation and direction that these kinds of businesses have.

Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of material here that talks about how these kinds of co-ops can be structured, how the different objectives of the co-op have to relate to different structures, different financing, different accountability. But I think the thing we have to look at in the overall context of this bill is that it really has the support of the communities. It brings forward a lot of the credibility that gets into a piece of legislation when the consultation and the joint participation by the affected groups becomes a real integral part.

I guess I go back to the original Water Act, when we started dealing with the process of public discussion and the public development of the legislation, which was so important to get buy-in from the number of possible participants who might eventually have conflicts. I think we should recognize that effort, and I think the two bills I've talked about, that Water Act and this bill now, the Cooperatives Act, should serve as models of the kind of work we do as legislators when we want to put in place significant changes in our legislation and have this kind of consultation with the community groups in an open way, not just dealing with a small group of, you might want to call it, participatory administrators, people at the top of an association. They in essence in some cases don't necessarily represent the community they are part of in the context of developing legislation, so we need to go below that.

I think that was done here, that was done in the Water Act, but we see that in a lot of cases – we discussed previously Bill 16. There seems to be a consensus among the organizations, but when you get down to the participating members, there's very little support for that bill. I think the difference here is who you're doing the consultation with and the level at which you have that consultation out in the public.

Congratulations to all the staff that worked on the bill. Congratulations to the members for bringing it forward. This is a bill that I think will serve the co-operatives industry in Alberta well into the future. We have to remember that these kinds of things are dynamic. As it gets put into practice, if there are issues that come up when individual groups start to or continue to operate under the Cooperatives Act, we should be prepared to listen to them. We should be prepared to recognize that this is done to facilitate them, not to impose on them. So we should always keep this as a living document that responds to their needs and gives them guidance. I'm sure the attitude that was in place when this was developed will carry forward. I would hope that all members of the Legislature do support Bill 2.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before the chair calls on the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to close debate, I wonder if we might agree to a brief introduction of guests.

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 15 international students attending the University of Alberta, Faculty of Extension. These students are enrolled in the English as a Second Language program and have come from two continents, some from Central and South America, from Columbia, Mexico, and Peru, and some from Japan and Korea. They are accompanied by their instructor, Mrs. Penny Deonarain, and they are all seated in the members' gallery. I would now ask the visitors to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: I think, hon. members, that someone had better move this bill.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. minister responsible to move third reading of Bill 8.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 8 today. I did speak to this before and am once more quite happy to speak to it for the final time in third reading. We've got some information that we wish to share with the government on this particular bill.

I have to say that we believe in general that corporate tax rates and the manufacturing and processing rate are competitive with other provinces. The Business Tax Review Committee said: Alberta's general rate of 15.5 percent is lower than all other provinces except Ontario, Quebec, and Newfoundland; Alberta's manufacturing and processing rate compares favourably with most provinces. So that's the good news for this province.

The bad news, Mr. Speaker, is that this particular amendment doesn't help the overall performance of organizations and incorporations in other areas, and that's in terms of user fees and increased electricity costs. I heard a question in the House yesterday that addressed this particular issue, which particularly talked about issues such as the increased costs for businesses to do business and the kinds of job and business losses that we may see as a result of other increasing electricity costs.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Minister of Economic Development was quick to point out that we've seen an increase in migration of businesses to this province, but the fact is that we have to talk about the cost of business not only in terms of businesses that close down but also businesses that don't expand, Mr. Speaker. It's just dandy to lower the income tax rate as long as businesses have profits to tax, but if, due to other increasing costs in their overall organization and expenses of the business, they don't have any profits, then what good is a lower corporate tax rate? So I think that's one of the issues we have to talk about when we talk about this bill.

There's no doubt that we like to have the most competitive rates in the country and have had for some time. This government is very happy in their pursuit of the race to the bottom in this particular area, but there are other factors that need to be brought into consideration. It's important and probably more important I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that the business sector see stabilization in the costs they have so they can do some forward-looking planning and they can legitimately compete in the global marketplace.

Where specifically do they need stabilization, Mr. Speaker? It would be in electricity and natural gas prices in the province so that businesses could operate profitably. With the windfall incomes that the gas and electricity companies have faced in the short term, they're going to benefit significantly by this bill. Decreased tax rates to them will be additional windfall income that they can incorporate into their business planning strategies, but those who pay the increased costs don't have that same benefit. The amount of taxable income they will have available to benefit from this lowering rate will certainly be substantially lower, if it's even existing at this time. I ask what the government has done with regard to that.

So I think that's a very interesting discussion that hasn't been fully debated here. I don't see a lot of members from the government side discussing this. Hopefully we can provoke the minister to enter into debate again as we did earlier today. It's always enlightening to find out how the government seems to be positioning itself when we can talk them into entering into debate. Unfortunately, it doesn't happen all that often, but we would hope we could on this one, which is really a flagship kind of bill for them, in terms of the race to the bottom for tax rates. It would be interesting to see if we can get them involved in debate. Usually they have to be fairly well provoked to go there, Mr. Speaker, and if that's what it takes to get their involvement, no problem. We're happy to go there as well. Let's see what they have to say about that. In the long run certainly the Minister of Energy had something to say about it earlier today.

If we take a look at the alliance of Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters and see what they have to say about this, we have some very grave concerns about the lack of potential profitability in this particular instance and have some concerns about what happens there. The energy program of this government, or the KEP as we have often called it, certainly can lead to a loss of investment just in accordance with what the alliance has to say of about $264 million. That's significant. That's significantly greater than the loss we are seeing in tax revenue by lowering the rate.

So what does the government intend to do about that shortfall, Mr. Speaker? We haven't heard them address that issue throughout this debate primarily because they haven't entered into the debate. They've dictated, as they usually do, and that's as good as it's got in terms of any participation by them. They don't really want to debate; they just want to tell. There's no show part of show-and-tell, just the tell part, and that's too bad.

What we see potentially here as projected by the association is a loss of more than 31,000 jobs. Not only do we lose those jobs with the kinds of increased costs, just direct costs in terms of electricity, but we lose the corporate tax profits, because there aren't any profits to be had, and we lose the potential from those taxpayers in terms of their own personal tax contributions and other user fees that they would be contributing to this government as a result of being spenders within the economy. So what does this mean then? It means a loss of cash of about 12 percent in Alberta's manufacturing sector.

So those are serious issues in terms of our concerns with this lowering of the tax rate. You know, it's a window-dressing kind of bill, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't really address the kinds of serious issues that are outstanding for this government. There was a time when we thought they were going to address them, and that was when the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee was struck. As I recall, the hon. Steve West was the Provincial Treasurer at the time, and we know that he was a key contributor to the race to the bottom, but this sounded like a really good idea.

The reports and recommendations of the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee came back in September of 2000, Mr. Speaker, and we were quite intrigued by what the committee had to say and then subsequently to see how those recommendations were integrated into this piece of legislation, the Corporate Tax Amendment Act, because it was the intent that the outcome of this report and these recommendations ultimately was changes in legislation that would lead to some tax reform in this province. That's how the Provincial Treasurer of the day talked about this program, and this is what he committed to seeing being done.

So in this last stage of being able to read this particular bill, let's just check it against content and see what we had implemented. The report, as we'll see, contains recommendations for changes that this committee under the auspices of the government felt were necessary to strengthen the competitive edge in today's marketplace, which is a high-tech global economy and which needs to be sustainable. Does the lowering tax rate that we see in this bill actually meet that mandate? Is it important in a high-tech world to have a low tax rate?

The high-tech world is a world of great innovation and rapid change, Mr. Speaker, so what's needed there is money up front for research and development, for attracting key performers and very edge-of-the-market kind of people with great technical expertise to them. They need cash up front, so at the first glance it wouldn't seem that a lower tax rate is a huge advantage to a high-tech world. They're happy to pay taxes when they're making profits. What they need is an environment that is conducive to them attracting key staff, people with excellent qualifications.

What is it that provides that kind of environment? No doubt an overall lower tax regime in terms of personal taxes contributes to that. Residential taxes contribute to that. There are corporate taxes. Do they really care about the corporate tax side? No. Unless you're an owner of a business, you don't really care about whether a corporate tax rate is high or low. So in terms of the first-priority interest and need of high-tech industry, this bill doesn't meet that mandate, because it doesn't provide lower personal taxes. It doesn't provide lower municipal taxes. It doesn't look at such issues as user fees or other kinds of areas. So we have to take a look at the other sustainable factors that Alberta provides to meet that.

Does it provide an opportunity to increase research and development dollars? It doesn't seem like it, Mr. Speaker, except in terms of some of the other streamlining we see that goes with the federal amendments, so there could actually be some benefits in that regard. So when we talk about transfer pricing and foreign tax credits and the cost of tax shelter investments, assessments and reassessments, and the legal representations of corporations and penalties, potentially there is a little bit of a window in there or some push room for the corporations to benefit, but definitely have to have legal advice and accounting advice in terms of whether that would be so. So in the big picture, very small benefit, if in fact there's any benefit at all.

Let's ask ourselves: does this lower tax rate as outlined in this particular bill benefit us in terms of the global economy? At first glance, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that it does, because if you take a look at the global economy, what is a good incentive to attract multinational investment or other kinds of investment to Alberta? A lower tax rate certainly contributes to that, but if you take a look at any of the findings or readings or case studies that have been done in the past few years, the past four or five years, on the shift in locations of organizations and businesses in terms of the expansion of the global economy, I think what we will find is that these organizations take a much bigger view of the picture than just corporate tax rate. They're looking for quality-of-life issues, of which a lower corporate tax rate is only one minor piece in the whole pie and really only affects business owners.

Well, now, why would we want to stimulate innovation and new companies and spin-off companies? That really only is a factor for a small percentage of people in this population, not just in Alberta but around the globe, Mr. Speaker. For the most part, people work for somebody else. Not that many proportionately as a percentage basis are self-employed or employ others. So once again we see that there is a minimal kind of effect this bill has.

Let's ask the final question that the Alberta tax review committee had as part of that mandate: is what we are doing sustainable? Is this lower tax rate sustainable? We would have the government argue that, yes, it is. I would say that, yes, it might be, Mr. Speaker, but not necessarily is. What are the factors that we need to talk about when we are determining sustainability? They are factors of what other pressures we have on cash inflows to the province. It isn't really how well the businesses do, because the receipt of corporate tax income at this particular stage in our province is a small percentage of our overall revenue input in the province.

What we need to talk about is: what are the other pressures that can affect the cash flow in the province? Primarily in this province there are three things that we're counting on: oil and gas revenues; perhaps in the future larger coal revenues; gambling revenues, which now make up a high percentage of the income we receive; personal tax revenues; and user fees. In order to keep this corporate tax level as outlined in this bill low or sustained at this particular level, the government has to have some guarantee that oil and gas revenues and potentially coal revenues are at least going to maintain their price levels at this particular point in time or increase, Mr. Speaker. Because as populations increase and as we age and as general prices go up due to inflation or any other aspects that we need to take a look at, what we know is that, generally speaking, there is more pressure on governments to retain more dollars in their coffers. Generally speaking, historically speaking, that has meant that the taxes go up. So if they don't go up on the corporate tax side, they need to go up somewhere else.

This government has been very lucky over the years in terms of their being able to rely on natural resource revenues increasing, so they were able to take their royalties and use that to sustain our economy. It's one of the main reasons why, when those prices bottom out, we find ourselves seeing huge economic difficulty in this province, because this government still is resource dependent in terms of its revenue flow. So in order to be sustainable, it needs to ensure that at the very least prices stay the same and quantities of output stay the same. If not, then we could see pressure on the corporate tax side, and that pressure could cause an increase in prices.

What else? Let's take a look at gambling revenues. We've seen quite a change in the percentage of gambling revenues received by this government since '93. I believe at one point the gambling revenues were substantially under 3 or 4 percent of the total revenue generated by this province.

MR. SMITH: They're still the same.

MS CARLSON: No, they're not the same.

MR. SMITH: Yes, they are. Figure it out.

MS CARLSON: I don't believe they are the same. If the Minister of Energy wishes to participate in this debate, I'd be happy for him to table some information which would clarify this. [interjection]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, you'll have an opportunity to speak and to correct whatever needs to be corrected when it's your turn. Right now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the floor and is entitled to her opinions.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So far I haven't said anything that needs to be corrected, but I'm quite happy to go there.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: You know, I said that in '93 gambling revenues were at or around or potentially less than 3 percent of the total revenue that flowed through to this government in terms of their total revenue mix, and then the Minister of Energy wished to get involved in the debate and told me that they're still the same and that I have to get my facts straight. Well, what I was going to say is that the total dollars collected since '93 have substantially increased, Mr. Speaker, so I believe that we are at a point in time now where it would be very difficult for this government to opt out of having them as a part of their revenue stream.

Now, perhaps that's what the Minister of Energy wished to correct, and I certainly hope that that's the case because that would be very good news for this Assembly and for the people of this province if that were in fact true. Unfortunately, I don't think that's the case, and I'm sure that the Minister of Energy will be prepared to enter into debate when I am done or at the very least have the good grace to table or send to me the information that he is basing his statements on, which is that the total inflow of revenue has stayed the same and that it is not more than 3 percent of the total revenue received by this province. I don't think that's true, Mr. Speaker, but let's wait for the paper to hit the floor of the Assembly, and then I'm sure we can debate sources and so on. It seems to me that it's significantly higher than that, and there comes a point of no return when a government is so reliant on that source of income that they can't look at alternate sources.

So what does increasing gambling revenue mean for corporate taxes in terms of their being sustainable in the long run? At first glance it would look like that would be good news for corporate taxes. If gambling revenue is increasing, then there's more margin even for corporate taxes to be lowered than increased because there's more revenue coming from other sources. That would be true in terms of gross dollars, Mr. Speaker, but the real problem with gambling revenue is that it takes $3 for every dollar of gambling revenue received. . . . [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired]

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak at third reading of Bill 8, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001. As I was preparing to speak, I was looking at the government release on Bill 8, and I think a few things that I find there are relevant to what I want to say here this afternoon in the concluding phase of our debate on Bill 8.

The intention, of course, as stated by the government for bringing Bill 8 forward, is that the changes that it embodies, incorporates, "will help ensure that Alberta businesses remain in a strong position not only nationally, but also on the world stage." These are the words of the Finance minister. It goes on to say:

Making it easier for business to invest and operate in the province helps strengthen our economy, create jobs, and make Alberta attractive to outside investors.

Interesting code language here: "making it easier."

This party has been in power now for well over 30 years. [some applause] Hearing that noise which just came as naturally as sunrise comes after sunset, I'm not surprised that there is that arrogance, but let me return to the substance of it.

Has this government worked all of those 30 years to make doing business in this province hard for businesses? Why is it that today, when the Alberta economy is booming, most businesses are, I presume, doing well because our economy is doing well, yet the government finds it necessary at this particular stage to come to the comfort and relief of businesses, particularly big ones? Small businesses are another matter; because they are starters, we need to provide them with some support. This is really, I think, an argument which one hears from of course corporations themselves, but when it comes from a government who is responsible first and foremost for serving public interests, not private interests, you begin to wonder what the real intentions of this bill are.

Those intentions are precisely what characterizes this bill, Mr. Speaker, so I will take a little time to talk about some of the concerns that I have about this bill and why I would not be able to vote for this bill. This bill of course makes a number of changes to the Corporate Tax Act. Some of these changes are positive, particularly those pertaining to small businesses. Others, in our judgment, in the judgment of the New Democrat caucus, are not.

A change that we support as New Democrats involves a reduction in the tax rate of small businesses and an increase in the threshold at which businesses qualify for the small business tax rate. These changes which are present in this bill I think have our support. The problem is that the bill has to be supported as a totality. I wish I had the opportunity to vote in favour of reductions as proposed for small businesses and vote against the other part of the bill somehow. That opportunity is not going to be available to me, Mr. Speaker, and I regret that.

The first installment of a three-year plan to reduce small business tax rates from 6 to 3 percent ultimately and to double the income threshold qualifying for the small business tax rate from $200,000 to $400,000 is a good one. These changes will be particularly helpful, Mr. Speaker, to smaller, startup businesses. The threshold to qualify for the lower tax had not been increased for many years, so it was overdue, and with this increase that's being set, I think the level now is more reasonable. So I'm happy to lend support to this particular part of the bill.

More questionable and troubling, however, are the two other major corporate tax changes being made through this bill, Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act. The first, Mr. Speaker, involves a reduction over four years in the tax rate charged to larger profitable corporations from the current rate of 15.5 percent to the ultimate low rate of 8 percent, virtually cutting corporate taxes in this province in half. These changes have ramifications for the future revenues of the province. I noticed in the news release here that these tax cuts will mean a total of $286 million worth of tax cuts. Much of this benefit will go, of course, to large corporations.

This reminded me of the priorities of the government. When in fact the economy is good – and Alberta's economy is particularly good – and corporations are doing well, where lies the rationale for such a radical reduction in these tax rates, while at the same time claiming that postsecondary students, who are paying ever increasing tuition fees at a rate on average of 5 to 8 percent every year, don't deserve any relief? I don't see the logic here. Well, the logic is there. It's a question of priorities, and the priorities of the government lie with the interests of big business here, big corporations. That's clearly reflected in the provisions of this bill, which will become a law pretty soon, I'm afraid.

I would like to again raise the question raised earlier, I guess, by my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands as to whether the government has prepared any reports by reputable sources or done any studies about such deep cuts in corporate taxes and their ramifications both for the future health of our economy and certainly the future health of our public revenues. One problem with this continuing thrust to give more tax concessions year after year after year to big corporations is the freeloader problem, the very problem that that side of the House, the government side of the House, associates with people that for all kinds of good reasons have to go on social assistance. Social assistance is seen as bad because it creates this tendency of dependency on the public purse. I would ask the members on the government side to not apply that logic selectively but to apply it also to large corporations.

These corporations benefit enormously from public expenditures that we make on infrastructure. Without those facilities available, it would be very difficult for these corporations to do business. Should they not be paying their fair share of this investment in the infrastructure which directly supports their economic well-being, success, and future expansion in this province?

So the freeloader problem is something that's neglected here. How far do we go before we say that enough is enough? That question is not asked, Mr. Speaker. That's why I raise the question of any reports, any serious, hardheaded questions that might have been asked with respect to how these tax cuts will further deepen the tendency of large business in the province to continue to feed upon the public resources in order to generate profits for their private stockholders.

The other question. Of course, in this era of high demand for natural gas and oil and the high prices that these two commodities in particular enjoy at the moment, in terms of merely saying, "You know, we can afford it, and therefore we should do it," maybe we can afford it this year. But we've been reminded by the government side over and over and over again about the fact that we still have in this province an economy that's subject to very, very serious levels of volatility, unpredictability. We are not able to control that volatility and constrain it all on our own. Therefore, we are at the mercy of international forces and factors which make life rather interesting and exciting at times in this province. So given that volatility, given that unpredictability of the basic resource revenues that we have, how can we justify these cuts, saying that we can afford them this year? The question is: how about next year?

The government has set out a four-year timetable for cutting corporate taxes, but there's no similar timetable for cutting personal income taxes and no timetable at all for either rolling back tuition fees in this province or for cutting or scrapping ultimately such regressive taxes as the health care premiums in this province. I keep asking myself: why is the government being so blind to contradictions in its own tax policies and reduction of tax burdens in a very, very selective manner, providing more relief to corporations which are shareholder owned and no relief to public institutions such as colleges and universities and schools, before this is done?

Now, if they had taken care of all of those other things – tuition fees at postsecondary institutions, providing postsecondary institutions with good resources so that they could keep and retain and attract world-class scholars and scientists and researchers here – and also if they had invested enough money in our education system from K to 12 to make sure that teachers are well paid as well as that classroom sizes are reduced to a size which everyone agrees is a particular size which is most conducive to optimizing the learning of children when they're very young, then I could see some merit in this. But under present conditions all it does is show me the wrongheaded priorities that this government has which seem to drive the contents of this bill.

I am also concerned that if the current high energy prices are not sustained, this province could find itself in the unenviable situation of having to continue with its planned deep cuts in corporate taxes, on the one hand, and to make up the shortfall by increasing personal taxes and/or by cutting spending on important social programs. I deeply feel this and am concerned about it. Corporations, as I said before, benefit immensely from the healthy and well-educated labour workforce that we have in this province and are proud to have in this province as well as from spending on public infrastructure like roads and highways. Asking them to pay their fair share towards sustaining these important programs is only fair and reasonable.

Another concern that I have about Bill 8 involves the changes being made to the Alberta royalty tax credit program. These changes are set out in this bill in a way that raises several questions. The changes to the royalty tax credit program have already been in place for some time, but it's only now that the government is getting around to making the necessary legislative amendments to accommodate the changes that have been in operation for some time.

In 1989 it made sense to provide relief to the oil and gas industries in this province. Now it makes no sense to continue with that handout to these massively expanding, healthy, huge transnational operators. One argument that is given is, of course, to make sure that new capital comes in here, stays here, and that as a result we'll all benefit ultimately from this. This trickle-down model is well known not to deliver benefits evenly and efficiently to all members of our province and in other places.

Alliance Pipeline comes to mind here, Mr. Speaker, as an example of how the government's thinking is flawed in its desperate attempt to chase investor capital in this province. Just yesterday the Premier confessed in his press availability that perhaps we made a mistake in not requiring Alliance Pipeline to have the gas stripped of ethane in this province before it could be shipped all the way to Chicago. That's a confession that he made himself. He said: hindsight is 20/20; I wish I had known this. [interjection]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister is now on my list, and when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has completed his talk at third reading, we'll invite you too.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to the statement or the observation that the Premier made yesterday. He finally acknowledged that the government made a mistake. I'm trying to get to the root of why this mistake was made. It is this desperate attempt to attract investor capital in the province under any circumstances. Alliance Pipeline is a good example of how that kind of policy doesn't serve the interests of Albertans, the interests of the Alberta economy, the interests of particular industries in this province which depend on ethane as a feedstock for continuing their operations, expanding them and thereby providing good-paying jobs.

Now, I don't mean to call the Energy minister on it. I mean, he's certainly welcome to continue to defend his own policies that are indefensible. My job as opposition member and leader of an opposition party is to continue to try and focus his attention so that one day he will see the light. None of us is immune to seeing the light. The Premier yesterday saw the light all of a sudden, in my presence. So my job is to continue to work on making sure that members on the government side, particularly on the front benches, pay attention to what we have to say so that maybe they will make some amends as time goes on.

While the government claims that this bill in fact represents their attempt to implement some of the recommendations of the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee, that's not really accurate when it comes to the royalty tax credit program. The Business Tax Review Committee recommended that . . . [Dr. Pannu's speaking time expired] Time runs out, Mr. Speaker. What can I do? I think I'll let other members take over.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I paused for a moment because I had understood that a couple of others were going to join the debate, but they haven't.

Edmonton-Gold Bar, you have the floor.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise from my chair this afternoon and get an opportunity to speak at third reading on Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001. Before I start, it was delightful to walk across to the Assembly this afternoon in the rain. I certainly hope for the sake of northern Alberta that this rain is right to High Level and Chinchaga and beyond, because it's certainly needed and is welcome relief for the firefighters, who are working on behalf of all members and all communities in this province.

At this time I was listening with interest to the remarks from the hon. leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I, too, share his concerns about the ethane supply. I know that the hon. member spent the majority of his adult professional life as a university professor. There's a university professor, not at the University of Alberta but at the University of Calgary, who has stated in a rather widely distributed and well-known report that a major policy shortcoming of the current government is its lack of a sound ethane policy.

In regards to Bill 8 at this time, Mr. Speaker, there is the notion to implement recommendations for cuts in corporate tax rates that originated with the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee. There are changes to the Alberta royalty tax credit. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford earlier today had an amendment. For the oddest of reasons there seems to be an accumulation of paper on my desk. That has not happened in the Assembly in my time previous. I cannot find the amendment at this time, but I'm certain that the royalty tax credit is still applicable to sections of this bill. If there is guidance from other members of the Assembly in this matter, that would be welcome.

Mr. Speaker, I think all Albertans believe that the general corporate rate and the manufacturing and processing rate of tax are competitive with other provinces. It's not unusual. We need to have, particularly with small business, competitive tax rates. Alberta's general rate is significantly lower than that of a lot of the Canadian provinces. I believe that in B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba it would be significantly lower. Alberta's manufacturing and processing rates compare favourably with most provinces. But it is important that we also think of the employees who are working for those businesses as these tax rates will be reduced.

I thought at one time that the reduction in the small business tax rate from 6 to 4 percent could be implemented and that at the same time there could be perhaps an increase in the minimum wage. I wanted an increase in the minimum wage in conjunction with a tax cut to small business. Now, the minimum wage went up in three stages, and I believe some of the members of this Assembly who at that time were responsible for the increase of the minimum wage are present this afternoon. The minimum wage increased I think in three intervals: 25 cents, 25 cents, and 45 cents.

Now this act reduces the small business tax rate from 6 percent to 5 percent. Although not dealt with in this amendment act, according to government plans, this rate will be further decreased to 4 percent, which was the policy of the Alberta Liberals for a long, long time. In fact, I almost call this the Lennie Kaplan policy, because Mr. Kaplan was very anxious to see that this would be implemented, and I think he would be also anxious to see that it would be reduced to 3 percent in three years.

Now, 3 percent was the original recommendation of the Business Tax Review Committee. I could settle for 4 percent, but if the government wants to go a little better, well then that's fine, but at the same time, we should start reconsidering the minimum wage in this province; $5.90 doesn't go as far now as it did even three years ago. Just take the cost of energy today. It's just not near a living wage. Many of the members of this Assembly are very familiar with their barbers. Certainly $5.50 for a haircut – perhaps a student at NAIT, an apprentice hairstylist, could cut your hair for that price, but it would be difficult to find that, as the hon. member has pointed out. To implement the recommendations of the Business Tax Review Committee is noteworthy.

In February of 2000 Mr. Stockwell Day announced the establishment of the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee to investigate the competitiveness of Alberta's business tax regime and to make recommendations for improving the system.

AN HON. MEMBER: Who?

MR. MacDONALD: Who? Mr. Stockwell Day.

The committee reported its findings and recommendations several months later, in September of 2000. This bill is the initial implementation of six of the Business Tax Review Committee's recommendations: the reduction in the general tax rate; the reduction in the manufacturing and process tax rate, which is something that needs to be done in regards to when you compare operating costs in this province for electricity; the reduction in the small business tax rate, which I discussed earlier; the increase in the small business threshold, which was also an item of great concern to Mr. Kaplan. He spoke about this at length.

The whole outlook for business and small business in this province would be thriving more than ever, with a few exceptions: the high cost of electricity. When you think that we'll squander the heritage of this province by selling ethane. Now, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the Alliance line, 1.3 million cubic feet a day, 42 inches from the Peace River arch down to Edmonton, then it decreases to 36 inches and goes on south of Chicago, there's a lot of gas that can be moved through that. One would have to wonder: why would the Alliance, the 37 or more groups of companies that are involved in this – and it's a very successful alliance. It's one of the more successful alliances that's been attempted, the Alliance pipeline, for sure.

I have no problem with exporting natural gas, but the rich ethane stream in it has to be used here in Alberta for value-added manufacturing. Whenever you look at it from the perspective of Alliance, they will say that instead of building two pipelines, one to transport NGLs, or natural gas liquids, and one to ship dry natural gas, they built one line. Now that this line has been built and we have essentially two process streams in it all the way to Chicago, you have a change. Now the liquid extraction plants will be built at the southern terminus of those pipelines, and this is unfortunate. Will we see further expansion in Lacombe, the Ponoka area, Joffre? It is highly doubtful, and I'm saddened.

I'm really disappointed to read in the National Energy Board report about our ethane supply, the 25-year projections. These projections were available in September, in the late summer of 1999, Mr. Speaker, and these projections suggest that we're going to peak at ethane production, and then we're going to . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Point of Order

Questioning a Member

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is hallucinating again and making some comments that are not accurate relative to the intervention in the Alliance pipeline. I was wondering if the hon. member under Beauchesne 482 would entertain a question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member has been asked if he would entertain a question. You don't have to give your reasons for either yes or no. It's just simply a yes or a no. If it's yes, then the hon. member may ask the question, and if the answer is no, then you continue on. Okay? There isn't a debate on the issue.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for some advice from the chair first, please?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the advice that the chair would give is that you'd be on third reading. The Alliance pipeline: I've been trying to read through here, and I cannot find it in this bill. Third reading, as you know, is on the issues of the bill, not what might be. If it is on related topics, it has to be directly on that. Is that the advice that you were seeking?

MR. MacDONALD: The information, Mr. Speaker, that I'm seeking from the chair is: at the end of my time allotted to speak, can I entertain a question at that time from the hon. minister?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the answer is within the question: at the end of my allotted time. You don't get extra time. Then we would have to go to unanimous consent. But if you stop at two minutes or whatever it might take and then offered it to the hon. member, then you would have the time. If that answers your question, then give us a yes or a no and continue.

MR. MacDONALD: Well, with respect to the minister's diligence and persistence in questioning me over the years, I'm going to again have to say no because I have very little time left.

Debate Continued

MR. MacDONALD: When you consider that the process stream in the refining royalties, the Alberta royalty tax credits specifically – and the minister is dead wrong, because in the Oil and Gas Conservation Act this government has the right to take ethane in exchange and give it to the producers.

AN HON. MEMBER: Relevance.

MR. MacDONALD: I'm sorry. You look at section 26 of this bill, the Alberta royalty tax credit, and this applies, Mr. Speaker. Just the other day in question period we were talking about the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, and the remarks that are given here are relevant.

The Alberta royalty tax credit is a program that refunds a portion of conventional oil and gas royalties back to corporations. If the hon. minister would please read the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, that is one of the processes that the government has to protect the downstream users from a shortage of ethane, because they can receive it in kind.

Between 25 and 75 percent of up to $2 million in eligible royalties may be refunded to a claimant. The price-sensitive refund rate is based on a combined oil and gas price. Now, with the $2 million limit, benefits range from a high of $1.5 million per year to a low of $257,000 per year, Mr. Speaker. This Alberta royalty tax credit refunds royalties but, as I understand it, is also independent. It's independent of Alberta's royalty regime, and as prices go up, the refund rates go down. The decline in the Alberta royalty tax credit rate is .31 percent for every $1 price increase between blended oil and gas prices of between $15 and $22 per barrel and a little over 4 percent for every $1 price increase between blended prices of $22 to $33 per barrel. Although the maximum amount refunded has fluctuated over time, the basic design of the program has not changed in over 25 years, and 25 years takes us back to long before the ethane policies that are outlined in the Oil and Gas Conservation Act.

In 1994 the government proceeded to give industry three years' notice of any intention to make changes to the program. Notice was given to the industry again in December of 1997 when the Minister of Energy announced a review of the program to set out better target objectives for a small program and to address administrative difficulties that industry and the government are experiencing.

In the past the Auditor General pointed out that the government has had no basis for assessing and reporting the effectiveness of the program, and he recommended that the goal of the Alberta royalty tax credit be defined in terms of the results expected and the performance measures identified.

Mr. Speaker, my time on this bill is unfortunately coming to an end. It disappoints me that hon. members of this Assembly and particularly those in Executive Council still have difficulty with our current ethane policy, and I hope to see that changed.

In the time that I have left – regarding Bill 8, the government is decreasing taxes on the corporate side but on the personal side is shifting more of the tax burden onto the middle-income Albertans through their flat tax scheme. They're going to say that it is . . . [interjection] No; it's fair. It's a single-payer user system, and it's fair. I hadn't had the time, but I received from the library downstairs a very interesting study that I plan to read, and it's not from the Parkland Institute either. It has similar concerns to what I've just pointed out.

It is more important to the business sector at this time to stabilize electricity and natural gas prices in the province so that businesses can operate profitably. Now, according to another alliance, another successful alliance, I might add, the Alliance of Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters, the KEP, or the Klein energy plan, could lead to a loss of investment of $264 million, Mr. Speaker, and the loss of over 30,000 jobs and a cash flow loss of 12 percent in Alberta's manufacturing sector. Now, I as well as other members of the Official Opposition and the third party and members of the Alberta public have been given rather smooth assurances that electricity prices are going down, but compared to what they were two years ago, they're very, very, very expensive.

When you compare our electricity prices to those of Manitoba, B.C., those of Saskatchewan, which has a very similar sort of grid to what we have where the majority of the electricity is generated from coal-fired power plants, Saskatchewan has much cheaper electricity. Sometimes I feel it is not fair to lump us in with B.C. and Manitoba because of the hydraulic capacity that those provinces have for generating electricity. However, we have because of ideology squandered a competitiveness for our business sector that we've had through many different periods of the business cycle. In good times and in bad times we had a reliable, economical source of electricity, and that is no longer the case.

At this time I have to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and cede the floor.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Gordon Smith, who's a constituent of Edmonton-Whitemud, who has come down to observe us this afternoon, a resident of the Blackburne area in the lovely constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. I welcome him to the Legislature and ask the members to give him the traditional warm welcome.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 8 today, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001. Of course, the object of Bill 8 is to implement recommendations for cuts in the corporate tax rates made by the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee.

This certainly was quite a review that I was reading over here, and I see that there are some very recognizable names when we look down the list, made up of a group of engineers, some MLAs, some accountants. I notice one, Hugh Bolton, who has had an association with my mother-in-law's second husband for many, many years and is a well-respected member of the community. I also see that we have two former MLAs here, again very well-respected members of this Assembly when they were here. So the credibility of this tax review, the Alberta business tax review, certainly, I think, was very good.

We have to look at Bill 8 in the sense of how the implementation of their recommendations is not only going to help business here in this province but is going to help the average Albertan. We do know, for example, that the impact of Alberta's business taxes on the province's economic and business climate and our international competitiveness is all reliant on the price that we can manufacture and do those other things that are so requisite of good business practices and make us competitive in a world market. Now, then, not only are we looking at a tax structure, Mr. Speaker, that will keep us competitive in this province and in this country, but as well we're looking at sustainability.

It was quite interesting. I was watching very intently as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview spoke to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and myself one day. We were looking at sustainability in our oil and gas divisions in this province, and he drew a graph. It was a very simple graph, but it pointed out the situation that we find ourselves in today and why Bill 8 is so essential at this particular time. What he did was draw a graph of our overall production of oil. This included the sweet crude, which, of course, was flowing so abundantly in the early '70s in this province and which, as I understand it, the majority of the moneys in our Alberta heritage savings trust fund came from and were built upon.

As well, when he was showing us this graph, he also drew another graph which indicated how our supplies of sweet crude in this province and our reserves of sweet crude had diminished. After many years of successful drilling and exporting and using our oil reserves, our sweet crude had definitely pretty well run its course here in the province. It was amazing when he showed that graph and how our reserves had depleted, how the royalties that we were receiving also decreased.

Now, of course, we all know what happened to the world price of crude during the Getty years. It was very tough for anybody to look good with oil at $10 a barrel. Mr. Getty certainly did some wonderful things in regard to bringing spending under control during those years. It is a big ship, and it takes quite awhile to turn around. It was amazing what they did. What happened was we entered the '90s, and of course our production of natural gas started to increase and continued to increase for most of the '90s. At this time it has leveled off, and our royalties for natural gas are quite extensive. As we deplete our known reserves of natural gas, the process of discovering others, of drilling for them at deeper depths, certainly becomes more expensive. So as this process continues, the profits and what makes up what we've so often heard of as the Alberta advantage become harder and harder to sustain.

We are in quite a position right now, Mr. Speaker, in that we want to remain competitive in the world markets, but as well we want to continue the sustainability of the advantages we do have here. Certainly one of those is making the climate for business in this province competitive.

To do that we did introduce Bill 8 and looked at some of the recommendations of the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee. There were a number of areas that they did look at. Certainly one was a reduction of the general tax rate. The second area that the committee made recommendations in was a reduction in the manufacturing and processing tax rate. A third area was reduction in the small business tax rate. Another was an increase in the small business threshold. Another was that the capital tax on financial institutions should be eliminated. So those are some areas where the Alberta tax review committee made some recommendations.

When we look at that we certainly have to be competitive, and we have to be competitive not only in Canada but also in North America and globally as we continue to move to a global economy. The Business Tax Review Committee, Mr. Speaker, had noticed that Alberta's general rate of 15.5 percent was lower than all provinces except for Ontario, Quebec, and Newfoundland. We compared very favourably as well with all other provinces in Canada.

It is also important to note that the business sector at this time wanted to stabilize our rates for electricity and natural gas in this province, and considering our northern latitude, considering the fact we certainly have much different building requirements than, for example, Mexico, then certainly we have a greater dependency in the manufacturing business on electricity and natural gas. So certainly those are two very, very important issues when we look at what it costs to do business here in this province.

I was very happy to see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had brought out how the Alliance of Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters had in their findings indicated that under the Klein energy program with our higher electricity and natural gas rates we could have a loss of investment of $264 million and also the loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 31,000 jobs. This would also look at a 12 percent decrease in Alberta's manufacturing sector. Those were some pretty startling observations, and I think they are well within reason and pretty well on target. We will see in this next year what will happen. We will see, as well, if there are no rebates in the next year, how those prices for electricity and natural gas will impact that.

DR. TAFT: Who pays for those rebates? Who pays for that?

MR. BONNER: It is an interesting point. Who pays for those rebates? Well, we had somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4 billion in rebates put out here late in the year 2000, early 2001, coincidentally just before the election, and we certainly cannot sustain that. I'm sure these people would not agree to that type of spending as well or could see that this type of spending would not be sustainable. So we do have some issues in regards to the sustainability of business when we have high rates for electricity and natural gas.

Now, then, as well, when we decrease the taxes, Mr. Speaker, on the corporate side, we also have to look on the personal side. Somewhere we have to make up the loss of taxes, and with the flat tax that was introduced, this burden is then being shifted onto middle-income Albertans. Again they require moneys in order to keep our economy going too. As we move forward, I look at the recommendations towards small business. For the last seven years we have advocated as a party that we reduce small business tax from 6 percent to 4 percent. I see in Bill 8 that this rate is going to be decreased from 6 percent to 3 percent, and that is certainly a good move.

I have a constituent, a constituent whose judgment and knowledge I certainly admire and respect. This gentleman's name is Samuel Lee, and I'm sure Samuel Lee is known to a number of MLAs in the House. He said to me one day: "You know, Bill, our problem in this province isn't with the creation of wealth. We are one of the most fortunate provinces in Canada. We really have it all, but we have a problem in the distribution of wealth. How do we get that down to the people who really need it?" One of the ways, obviously, is that we can set a standard for minimum wages here in the province. In doing so, we bring that bottom sector up, and if people are gaining on the one hand, then they should be willing to share some of that on the other.

So we do that, and at the same time, Mr. Speaker, we want to realize and we have to realize that we can not handcuff small business in this province. That is the engine that leads to growth, and for that engine to work, they also need people supporting those businesses. For them to do it, they also must have disposable income to use. So we want to be cognizant of that at all times as well.

Mr. Speaker, I see that when it comes to small business taxes, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business – of the 115,926 employers in Alberta during 1998, 74 percent employed less than five people, and a further 19 percent had between five to 19 employees. In 1996 small and medium-sized business enterprises accounted for 62 percent of the total private-sector employment in Alberta. Now, that is quite substantial, and we certainly want to encourage small business.

We have seen over the last few years a prosperity in this province, Mr. Speaker, a huge increase in the influx of people from out of province, from out of country, flocking to Alberta for opportunity. With the implementation of a number of these recommendations that were put forward by the Alberta business tax review, we certainly hope that we can maintain that edge, that when people in this province prosper, hopefully we all do. One of the ways we do that is with a very healthy small business sector and an increasing and growing small business sector, but again one of those that has to be sustainable.

As well, according to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business – they had a survey entitled Our Members' Opinions – 92 and a half percent of Alberta respondents cited the total tax burden as a high priority issue. So in speaking to that, Mr. Speaker, the tax burden is a high priority; it definitely is. We want to spread this corporate success in this province around to all Albertans.

Now, then, when I look at the bill, I also see, Mr. Speaker, that there are provisions within Bill 8 that parallel changes to the Income Tax Act as set out under federal bills C-28 and C-72 with respect to such issues as transfer pricing, the cost of tax shelter investments, assessment and reassessment of penalties. Again, there were some loopholes in the legislation, as I understand it, where companies could transfer assets from province to province and, as a result, ended up not paying tax in either of the provinces. So I did see that this loophole was shut down.

As well, earlier the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had referred to the Lennie Kaplan tax plan, and it certainly had a very, very huge impact in impressing upon the people in the Liberal caucus how important it was that we did have a corporate tax structure in this province that allowed all people in the province to share in the success. He certainly did some outstanding work for us, and we were very, very fortunate to have him as one of our researchers for quite some time.

Mr. Speaker, I know there are many members in this House that wish to speak to Bill 8. It has a huge impact on this province. We really want the opportunity for all Albertans, not only the ones that are presently in the workforce or the members sitting in here, but more importantly we want a structure that is going to carry us forward, carry us into the future and provide those opportunities for our children and for our grandchildren so that they can continue to have the success that so many Albertans have had over the years.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take my seat and say that, overall, I certainly support Bill 8, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to support it.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we proceed through third reading, Bill 8, as some of my colleagues have said and I think all the government members would agree, is an important bill. It's a significant bill that cuts to some of the core issues that are at the centre of the Alberta economy and Alberta society. The Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, which comes out of the work of the Business Tax Review Committee, will have the effect of reducing the general tax rate, reducing the manufacturing and processing tax rates, reducing the small business tax rate, and of course increasing the threshold at which small businesses will pay taxes.

Every politician, of course, loves to cut taxes, and I'm not an exception to that, although I am perhaps more skeptical about the effect of tax cuts after a certain point in helping out our society. If the Business Tax Review Committee is correct – and I have no reason to doubt this particular statement; I've heard many other people make it – Alberta's tax system is already very competitive not just in Canada but in North America. Further reducing the tax rate raises the concern for me that when we come around to tighter times in Alberta, when things such as the price of natural gas decline and royalties are diminishing, we may have a tough time. We may find that our tax rates are simply not enough to sustain a viable, modern infrastructure, education system, health care system, and so on.

So one of my concerns here is that we need to have a sustainable tax system. If we move quickly to cut taxes when times are booming, we may find that we're in the position of raising them again when times are slow. In fact, that's exactly the time when you wouldn't want to raise taxes because you would be draining from a weakened economy. So there are two sides to the tax-cutting issue.

I'm also concerned that while we're reducing the general tax rates under Bill 8, the taxes are sometimes overrated as an influence on business locations. Many of the other things that influence business choices to locate, say, in Alberta versus Manitoba or Ontario or another country go well beyond taxes and include issues of quality of life, issues of public service, issues of education levels, access to land, a well-trained workforce, and so on. So I am concerned that this bill perhaps overestimates – or at least let me say that I don't want any of us here to overestimate – the impact of tax cuts on making Alberta more attractive for business and even more importantly for individuals to live.

One of the commendable effects of Bill 8 – it crosses many sections and is touched on in sections 6, 14, 16, 43, 44, and various subsections within those – has to do with tightening the loophole that was opened up around interprovincial transfers of assets which could be used by corporations to avoid paying provincial taxes. Bill 8 closes this loophole that has allowed corporations to avoid paying provincial taxes by transferring assets to another province before disposing of that property. I'd like to talk about that in a bit of detail, Mr. Speaker, because it is touched on in so many different sections of Bill 8, and it is I think an important aspect of the bill and a commendable one.

This particular loophole was known in some circles as the Quebec shuffle because it entailed shuffling assets on paper to the jurisdiction of Quebec and then using that shuffle as a way to avoid paying taxes in Alberta. Prior to the closing of this tax loophole, corporations were able to enter into interprovincial asset transfers to avoid original taxes on the sale of assets. Of course, when you have a rising asset value base in Alberta, if you can get away from being taxed on that increase in value, it's tempting to do. This tax avoidance was done by transferring the asset to a non arm's-length corporation located in other provinces, typically Quebec, and then selling the asset to the ultimate purchaser.

These avoidance transactions were accomplished, and I suppose until this bill receives royal assent are still being accomplished perhaps, by using the elective provisions of section 85 of the Income Tax Act of Canada. Under these elective provisions corporations can transfer assets on a tax-deferred basis from one province – in this case we'd be particularly concerned about Alberta – to another without necessarily making provisions in both provinces. So, for example, an Alberta resident with appreciated capital property – and many Albertans over the last decade have seen their capital property appreciate – can incorporate a Quebec subsidiary that has its residence and its only permanent establishment there. So you open up a subsidiary in another province.

The property is rolled into that subsidiary for federal purposes by electing at the adjusted cost base. Then no election would be made for Quebec purposes, and the adjusted cost base becomes the fair market value. The property is sold without provincial income tax being paid in Alberta. Clearly unfair since the gain and wealth occurred in Alberta. So it's a loophole that it's a good thing Bill 8 closes.

Then it even became a bit more complicated when corporations in addition did elect to transfer assets for federal or provincial purposes. They could then choose different elected amounts in different provinces, so they could end up actually for various purposes choosing one province over another and having a whole array of choices to avoid paying taxes on the assets that had gained value in Alberta. To the credit of this government, in July of '97 Alberta announced that it was closing this tax loophole, and under Bill 8 Alberta will adopt rules that prevent the reduction or elimination of provincial taxes through the manipulation of the Income Tax Act's section 85 rollover provisions.

Now, these new shall we call them anti-avoidance rules will prevent corporations from increasing the cost of an asset when transferring it to a non arm's-length corporation located in another province on a tax deferred basis. In cases like these, either the proceeds of the corporation's disposition will be adjusted or the cost to the non arm's-length corporation will be adjusted to eliminate any loss of provincial income taxes. So these transfers would have to be recorded and adjusted to reflect the real value in the assets involved.

In Bill 8 Alberta, as I understand it – and I must say that it's obviously a substantial and very complicated and in many respects quite a technical bill – has also enacted changes to the Corporate Tax Act that will adopt the elective rules under the Income Tax Act of Canada, section 85, in a more rigid fashion. So this has the effect of tightening rules, making them clearer, and I hope – and I'm sure it's the intent – protecting the public interest and reducing the sort of manipulation that can occur.

Under Bill 8, where a corporation transfers an asset and makes an election under the Income Tax Act for federal purposes, Alberta will deem the election to have been made for Alberta purposes. When a corporation transfers assets and does not make an election for federal purposes, it will not be allowed to make an election for Alberta purposes. In other words, the opportunities for corporations to manipulate and play one province's tax system against another are tightened up. I think that's to be commended. I think that was good advice from the tax review committee, as I understand it, and it's a good aspect of Bill 8, one of the reasons we are supporting it.

Frankly, this is a big bill for the Minister of Revenue. I'm sure all the administration will come under the minister, so it's going to be very important for his people.

Bill 8 also allows the Minister of Revenue to assess or even, if need be, to reassess a transaction involving the transfer or disposition of a property by a corporation from July 10, 1997, so they can actually go back and do some reassessments if necessary. The reason they chose July '97 is that that's when Alberta announced the closing of this tax loophole. In other words, from the day that announcement was made, which if memory serves correctly was July 10 in '97, right on through till now and into the future that loophole is closed. Bill 8 will bring into force the provisions necessary to formalize that.

When a corporation has filed an election under section 85 of the Income Tax Act on a deferred basis with respect to the proceeds of the disposition of property or an excessive capital cost allowance, the provincial treasurer – and it may now, I suppose, be under the Minister of Revenue – could even reassess the corporation's tax in order to take into account the elected amount. Now, it will be interesting to see how the either the Minister of Revenue or the Minister of Finance is going to implement this and how vigorously they are going to reinforce the provisions of Bill 8 going back the last nearly four years. Are they going to be rigorously enforcing this? Are they going to be going back through their files? Perhaps they've been keeping their files very actively up to date because they have known since before July of '97 that these provisions would be enacted. Maybe they are ready to go on a number of cases that stretch back over the last four years and bring those to action under Bill 8.

Then the question could arise, of course, of whether the corporations involved, who at least presumably will want to resist the effects of Bill 8, might even pursue legal options and argue that this is an action that goes back through time and is therefore not legitimate and reasonable. It's going to be interesting and undoubtedly a delicate act for the two ministers involved to retroactively implement some of the sections of Bill 8, but I would encourage them to be aggressive in doing so. Whatever files they have that may be affected I hope they pursue with full vigour to ensure that the taxpayers of Alberta, whose resources and efforts have added to the wealth of these corporations, enjoy the fruits of that wealth by getting their reasonable tax rates. After all, the tax load they would face compared to most other jurisdictions is reasonable. There's no doubt about it.

There are a few other aspects of Bill 8 that affect the federal Income Tax Act, and we could go into those. I think, however, that I would like to switch to a couple of less strictly technical discussions here.

Shifting from the technicalities to the effects of Bill 8, I am concerned that what we are doing in Bill 8 – and this is one of the aspects of the bill that makes me less than happy – is that we are continuing to shift the tax burden of this province onto the people who already carry the heaviest burden, which are the middle-income earners. Various efforts of this government have trimmed the tax load that's paid by low-income earners, and that's terrific. I'm much less enthusiastic about the efforts that have trimmed the tax loads of the very high-income earners. The effect of all of that in combination with Bill 8 is to shift a larger and larger percentage of the tax burden onto the middle-income earners, the very people who are typically at a stage of raising children and paying off houses and cars and trying to save for retirement and so on and in many ways have less flexibility and less ability to take on even more taxes than they are now.

If you go back through the decades, you will find that the portion of the overall tax take that is carried by the corporate sector in Canada has consistently fallen, and the effect of this bill is simply to increase and continue that trend. I think it's a regrettable trend that threatens the very core of Canadian society in the sense that we are, after all, a middle-class nation. Our values, our commitments, our views of the world are shaped mostly by the middle class, and one of the great things that we've achieved through the development of Canada is as close as I think has so far been achieved in the world to a society in which class distinctions are minimized. One of the concerns I have with Bill 8 is that it continues a trend that has arisen over the last 10 years or so of accelerating and increasing the differences between the rich and the poor, shrinking the size of the middle-income group and adding to the wealth of the corporate sector and the higher income group. So that's one of the aspects of Bill 8 that I am not very enthusiastic about.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take my seat. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to continue debate on Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001. This is an act that basically brings into legislation a lot but not all of the recommendations of the Business Tax Review Committee, that operated in Alberta with its report coming in last year. It was also initially brought in as Bill 22 last year and ended up not being passed to give people a chance to have a look at it, to react to it, and deal with what its implications were for both the province and the business community as a whole.

It's been interesting to follow the government's information distribution on this bill in the sense that they've talked about it in terms of trying to set the province's tax rate at a competitive level in terms of how they define it. If we go back and look at when the Tax Review Commission did their report, they kept talking about the idea behind the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee being to deal with the issue of the competitiveness and sustainability of Alberta's corporate tax structure.

One of the things this kind of focuses on in the sense that we see it being reflected on a number of different of occasions when the government puts together their kind of information that deals with their perception, I guess, of Alberta and what's our advantage and why we want to look on Alberta as a favourable place, is that they've measured it totally in terms of the dollar value that comes out of it.

Mr. Speaker, in my previous life while I was at the University of Lethbridge in the faculty of management, there were a number of articles that came out – I apologize that I don't have the references to them – where surveys were done of corporate Alberta, corporate Canada, corporate America. They were asked to define the issues and the parameters that effectively brought their business to a particular locality. The net effect of these surveys was that the relative level of business tax was not high in their decision-making priority. The idea that what we want to do is make sure that our tax is the lowest in all of Canada basically says that we don't believe there's anything else in Alberta that would attract a business to locate here.

I would suggest that when we look at the parameters that were high in those surveys, it was the community – community facilities, community services – the health care system, but specifically, Mr. Speaker, the education system that they could use as a means to attract quality employees. Employees want to go and settle where they can have a good education system so that it allows them ease of both upgrading their skills and providing opportunity for their own children to get the education that will allow them to advance and participate in the economic world to their best ability. This is one of the things that I guess is missing in this whole thing. The real focus we have is that all we want to deal with is the perspective of whether or not the dollar value is the measure.

It would have been nice to have seen the tax review committee at least make reference to the fact that the criteria for advancement of our business community and the promotion of our business community is attached to and surrounds a whole package of characteristics of Alberta that will attract those businesses. We want to make sure that they're all there, including the recreation and environmental aspects of the province in terms of the environment, the landscape, the recreation facilities in the mountains, the openness of our countryside, and these kinds of attitudes, at least that kind of a reference to the trade-offs that businesses make and deal with when they look at how they focus on dealing with a new location selection process or selection criteria.

The aspect we want to look at in terms of Bill 8 is in terms of reflecting on whether or not it contributes to this. Basically it is designed to make sure that in Alberta we do have a significantly competitive tax structure. The tax review committee made reference to the appropriate reductions that are about the same as what we see in Bill 8, and this will then effectively make the major cities in Alberta, being Calgary and Edmonton, the number 1 and number 2 tax advantage places.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I guess what we see here is that by making that measure, they're also rolling together the accumulation of taxes that businesses pay in the sense that it's measured in terms of both the provincial level taxation on business and the local municipal taxation level on business. What we want to do is make sure here that we're not forgoing provincial level tax revenue from our businesses just in the context of trying to offset high levels of local municipal revenue or taxation for our businesses. I know there have been some changes even in that area in the last little while as we looked at how these kinds of structural changes occur.

The main thing that we want to look at is dealing with how this act will build into and provide for an incentive to deal with the kind of fair treatment of the tax and the tax mix across all of Alberta based on the corresponding benefits that come out of it. When we start going through and looking at that kind of analysis – the Business

Tax Review Committee looked at that aspect – what we need to do is have a whole perspective of who pays and where the burden of paying the tax resides and kind of tie it back to some of the other aspects.

It was really interesting to note in the tax review committee report that they felt that with this kind of level of tax reduction, the economic incentive that would be created in Alberta would in effect over a period of five-plus years promote economic growth in the province in the sense that that growth stimulant of having the lower tax would in essence in that period of time offset the lost revenue for the province in the general revenue fund. So this basically gives us a reflection of what a lot of the growth columnists have been talking about in terms of the tax policy as an economic stimulus or as a development tool. It would be interesting to see the model that they used in making that conclusion, because there are some aspects in terms of how that works.

I would hope that we would look at much more than just our competitive level of taxation. What we need to do is look at how we are as a province in terms of attracting new business relative to other jurisdictions, where we can look and see whether or not those businesses are coming here solely because of our tax or because of all the other aspects that we offer as a province both in terms of service and support for them as a business and also in terms of the activity and the associated lifestyle that's available for their employees. One of the things that we do have in Alberta through the quality and the level of access to our advanced education system is a really high level of workforce. That's kind of what we need to look at also.

I know that on a number of occasions there have been businesses that have approached southern Alberta, and one of the reasons they're coming there and one of the reasons they're interested in establishing there is the ability to keep training programs in place through the college or the university so that their employees can remain current and the business, in essence, gets support in that aspect of upgrading their employees rather than having to move them off to a different centre or having them rely on doing that on their own.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, that what we need to do is look at, you know, the whole bill. I think that, in effect, what we've got is a fairly appropriate and quality recognition of the fact that Bill 8 does incorporate a lot of the aspects of that Tax Review Commission, and it does bring into that debate the focus that we have to work within this whole framework to keep Alberta competitive. So we want to make sure that as we do that, the tax structure for both our corporate taxpayers and for our individual taxpayers does provide us with some degree of – I guess we'd want to call it competitiveness but in a fairness way as well and make sure that what we're going to look at is a true reflection of where we're going.

Mr. Speaker, I think that with those few comments, I will take my seat here. From the note I was just passed, it looks like a new agreement has been reached. So we'll see how far we can make it with this one tonight.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Bill 10 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I would move for third reading Bill 10, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001.

As has been discussed previously at second reading and in committee, it brings in some improvements, some advancements that have resulted throughout the consultation that's happened on the Traffic Safety Act and will assist in being able to move the Traffic Safety Act to its final proclamation at an early date. I'd commend it to the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make some comments about Bill 10 at third reading. Of course, third reading is an opportunity to look back at the principles of the bill and the discussion that we've had in committee with respect to the specific clauses.

One of the underlying principles of Bill 10 is the need for a mechanism to relieve new drivers of their licences if they have been involved in alcohol consumption. A second principle is related to just that, the alcohol consumption, and is a policy for zero tolerance for that consumption. So really those are the two principles that seem to make their way through the bill: the suspension process and the zero alcohol tolerance principle.

Much of the bill is administrative fine-tuning as a result of the changes that were previously considered. In terms of the concerns that we raised, we fully support of course the zero tolerance for alcohol consumption and driving. That's not in question, and I think we've made it very clear throughout the debate that we fully support the notion that people behind the wheel should be there responsibly and that overdrinking and driving are not to be tolerated on the highways of the province. So for us that has not been a question or a concern.

What has been a concern is the issue that has been raised previously when we discussed this bill or a related bill, and that is the ability of the police to hand out 24-hour suspensions for a person refusing to give a breath sample. That continues to be a nagging concern with the bill, Mr. Speaker. It's a change in terms of allowing, virtually, roadside justice. I think that we have tried to make the point before in debate on this bill that that should be done before a judge rather than being done, effectively, on the side of the road with a peace officer. The proposal that we had considered was whether or not the person charged should be given an opportunity within seven days to determine whether or not they should lose their licence. So those concerns are very serious concerns, Mr. Speaker. We are supporting the bill but as long as we're cognizant of the encroachment of the peace officers in having the matter dealt with at the roadside by a peace officer.

The other changes I think we're fully supportive of. The notion that this bill will help deter drinking and driving I think is one that we all support.

I guess if there's sort of a caveat, there was some concern that this kind of administrative cleanup is needed, not just with this bill but with a number of bills before us, and I think it has been as a result of a hasty passage of bills in the House. The result is that we find ourselves back doing the kind of work we're doing on Bill 10 to try to rectify errors and omissions from the previous legislation. I think there's a lesson to be learned that when it's sometimes expedient to get legislation through the House, we pay a price for that in having to come back and revisit the same issue two and three times. We've seen that, as I said, in a number of acts before us at the current time.

The novice licence is something, again, that we supported, and that there would be stringent rules surrounding the use of that licence because of the drivers involved I think is most appropriate.

I think, Mr. Speaker, with those comments I'll conclude. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to add a few comments as well to Bill 10 in third reading, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001, and once again compliment the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for sponsoring this bill and providing a bill with changes which I think will strengthen our Traffic Safety Act and which will also assist in making our roadways much safer for many people.

Now, we are talking to the principles of the bill. In speaking to the principles of Bill 10, one of the changes that occurs in this particular bill is that a 60-day seizure will be triggered when a suspended driver is charged a second time within three years of the first charge. A vehicle seizure where the vehicle was released earlier will not be counted as a first seizure. Of course, this is a very big change, and what it really does is it puts a tremendous amount of responsibility on people to operate vehicles in a manner which is within the law and that they will have to take responsibility for not only themselves but for the vehicle. Certainly when they are given this opportunity, we would expect that they would be much more cognizant of the fact that this is a possibility and that they would not operate their vehicles in a manner that would lead to any possibility of a second charge. So we would certainly hope that this change will have the desired effect of impressing upon those people just how severe we feel it is for them to be driving when they are already suspended.

A second area that we liked in this bill, Bill 10, was the Alberta administrative licence suspension prohibitions. Currently there is no provision in the Criminal Code for a 24-hour suspension, and under the proposal there would be an immediate 24-hour suspension for anyone charged with impaired driving.

Now, then, following this, there would be a 21-day permit period which would apply, and it would be followed by the longer three-month suspension. The permit period of course is, I think, a good situation in that it does balance what is already there and allows these drivers to get their affairs in order.

Now, then, the third change that we are going to see in Bill 10 is to allow better communication between other jurisdictions by providing information to them in regards to violations. What this would do is enable the registrar to forward records relating to convictions, reportable accidents, and on-road inspections relating to commercial vehicles to the jurisdiction where the driver was licensed and/or where the vehicle was registered for the purpose of that jurisdiction's carrier and the driver profile system. So, again, what this ensures is that what is unacceptable in other provinces – and it's also unacceptable in ours – would be shared with other provinces.

Now, as well, we are going to see another change, and this is in regards to graduated licensing. It pertains particularly to novice drivers who could lose their licence for an immediate 24-hour suspension if they provided a breath sample in an approved screening device and there was any indication of alcohol in a novice driver. Of course with this we will be seeing some regulations coming forward by the fall for public viewing. Again, I think it is essential that we impress upon our novice drivers just how important it is that we have zero tolerance for liquor with this particular group and hopefully that this continues forward once they receive a more permanent type of licence.

As well, Mr. Speaker, you know, it is one of those areas where I think our younger generation certainly have done a much, much better job than older generations in this province when it comes to accepting the responsibility of driving and driving without being under the influence. They certainly look out for one another much more. They certainly have their designated drivers. So I think that an immediate 24-hour suspension, followed by a seven-day temporary permit, followed by a one-month suspension is a very, very good idea.

Now, then, another change that we're going to see is the approved screening devices. It is proposed under this bill that the referral to approve screening devices be made under the Criminal Code as well as under the Traffic Safety Act. It is not required presently, it's my understanding, to be listed in the Traffic Safety Act, but this will take place.

As well, we have to look at changes to learners and the accompanying driver, and certainly those supervising the novice driver could not be a probationary driver. Also, this legislation would be expanded to include the supervising driver for a motorcycle learner, and the accompanying driver could be on their own vehicle or could be sitting behind the learner. In this case, Mr. Speaker, the only passenger that would be allowed with a learning motorcycle driver would be the supervising driver of the learner.

There are a couple of other areas that I think are very important in Bill 10. One certainly is suspension for Criminal Code convictions, and under the proposals in Bill 10 the Traffic Safety Act would be amended to impose a disqualification period for a new offence under subsection 249(1) of the Criminal Code for failure to stop a vehicle when being pursued by a peace officer. The proposed disqualification period would be one year, which would be increased to five years if there was an injury or death. This would also become an automatic suspension. I think, again, this is one of those pieces of legislation that is critical, one part of the bill that is critical, because these drivers have to know that if they are involved in a pursuit and do fail to stop, this is a very serious violation. I think we've all seen the horror stories of pursuits that have been filmed by television crews and shown on television as to just how dangerous they are and how in some cases innocent people can be affected dearly and sometimes with the loss of life.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the last area that I want to talk about is the change in legislation here for the failure to stop at the scene of an accident. Under our current bill it is proposed that this increase in penalties will be reflected in the provincial disqualification period, and the proposed operator's licence suspension is one year when there is no injury or death and five years when there is injury or death. Currently this is normally court imposed, but if for any reason a judge neglected, then these suspensions would be automatic.

There are a number of other minor technical amendments to the bill, but certainly the major parts of the bill were the changes that I have outlined. I think it's something that's going to strengthen this particular piece of legislation. It is going to put conditions on drivers where responsibility is placed upon those drivers, and as an end result, I think our highways and streets and roads are going to be much safer. So I think this is a very good piece of legislation. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo certainly did some consultations with others in this regard, and I feel it is a good piece of legislation. I would urge all members of this Assembly to support it.

Thank you very much.

Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move for third reading Bill 11, the Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001.

As we've heard discussed in the House through second reading and through committee, the bill essentially puts into legislation what has been implemented through regulation, and that is the provisions for maternity and parental leave which are now enjoyed by Albertans. The opportunity to have a position with an employer held while a person on parental or maternity leave is drawing employment insurance benefits and other provisions makes Alberta consistent with other jurisdictions across the country. I think, as I've listened to debate, that members from all sides of the House have agreed in debate that this is a good bill whose time has come.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time in third reading I, too, have a few remarks regarding the Employment Standards Amendment Act. First, I would like to say that it's a pleasure to support this bill. I feel that it is good legislation. Again, it is important that the province finally puts its money where its mouth is, and this is in support of families.

We certainly have concerns, and they've been expressed at committee and at second reading, specifically by my colleague for Edmonton-Centre, regarding the different treatment of fathers and adoptive parents. We've also expressed our concern about the legislative process. The regulations were announced in February, before the election, and I feel there was no regard for the Legislative Assembly. This bill is coming back now and getting a rubber stamp of what was already in place. It is good legislation. It supports Alberta families and Alberta children. Business has concerns certainly about this legislation, but they have been discussed at length in the Assembly.

Now, in summation on this bill, certainly it's going to give legislative force to maternity and parental leave regulations passed, as I said earlier, in February. There is an entitlement of up to one year of unpaid, job-protected employment leave to care for a newborn or adopted child. That's a significant increase. Unlike federal and other provincial legislation, distinction is made for fathers and adoptive parents, who are entitled to 37 weeks of leave. Adoptive parent groups are opposed to policies that differentiate them from other parents. This was noted again in committee and at second reading of this bill.

I look forward to further amendments to the Employment Standards Code – I expressed this earlier – specifically to deal with the chronic violators of the Employment Standards Code. I'm sure they're coming from the Human Resources and Employment ministry to ensure that all working Albertans, who look to the Employment Standards Code to regulate their workplace, can have confidence in the Employment Standards Code, that it will be there to protect them and their wages when needed.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I certainly support Bill 11, the Employment Standards Amendment Act. At some point perhaps the government will surprise me. I look for further amendments to the Employment Standards Code in relation to the chronic, repeat violators of the Employment Standards Code in Alberta workplaces.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to make a few closing comments on Bill 11, the Employment Standards Amendment Act. We've heard through all stages of this bill the government soundly congratulating themselves on a job well done, and it is a job well done, six months later than the rest of the world but still a job well done. It's true. That's exactly what happened here. We're playing follow the leader, from a province who likes to be the leader. Why? Because we're dealing with issues that have to do with children and women; that would be my position on this.

What we see are maternity leave and parental leave regulations, that were passed back in February, being put in force, so that's a good thing. We see an entitlement here for up to one year of unpaid, job-protected employment leave to care for a newborn baby or an adopted child. Interestingly enough, a few weeks ago I had an opportunity to talk to a young woman who was just having her first child. She was very, very happy to have the extension to the maternity leave put in place and was very much looking forward to being able to spend the first year at home with her child.

These days it's often an economic necessity for both parents to work, as we well know. We experience that with our own family members and through our constituencies and through the people we meet throughout the province, that many, many people do not have the luxury of being able to afford one person to stay home to be with the children at least during their preschool years. It is a step in the right direction that we give some flexibility, which provides less income than what they would have made had they stayed full-time employed but also less expenses, in essence, Mr. Speaker, when you don't have to talk about day care and travel expenses and whatnot. So people are quite happy to be able to live on a little less income and have a little more time to spend with their kids.

I certainly applaud, as well, the change in terms of including adopted children. I come from a family of eight, Mr. Speaker. Four of those kids were adopted, and they were equally as much work as babies: the same amount of diapering, the same sleepless nights, the same amount of feedings, and the same additional running around for them. So it's nice to see that they have now the same recognition as all babies have and as all young children have. That's a very good thing.

It's nice to see that the distinction is being made for fathers, who are entitled to 37 weeks. That's a step in the right direction. This is legislation that we could have used decades ago, Mr. Speaker, but it is nice to see that this province is finally getting with the program and bringing in some progressive legislation. We would like to see them being leaders in this area, particularly since we hear the talk about putting families first all the time and what our priorities are. Well, we need the government to walk the walk, not just talk the talk, and this is an example of where they're starting to take a step in the right direction.

It will be a great privilege for me to be able to support this legislation. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Bill 12 Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move third reading of Bill 12, Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001.

This act will harmonize our legislation with other provinces thereby facilitating interprovincial trade, an act long awaited. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to make concluding remarks to the bill on farm machinery. Basically what we're looking at here are some situations that the agricultural community has asked for, and in these two companion pieces of legislation what we're doing is bringing forward some of the recommendations and some of the requests that the agricultural community had to establish some control again at the community level in the farm implement industry.

The main thing that we have to look at here is how well we're dealing with putting together the aspects that those communities want in terms of dealing with the potential change in line or change in recall. So we get basically into the situation, a copy of which perspective we're looking at, in terms of how the industry reacts and deals with it in terms of the fairness that is coming from the top down as the big machinery dealers put unwarranted conditions on some of their local machinery dealers, in terms of how they're able to operate and survive within the community.

So I think what we're dealing with here is effectively putting in place legislation that concurs with the structural changes and making sure that the farm dealers are treated properly when there's a transfer of a piece of equipment back to the supplier and also with warranties, that the accountability is put in place for sellers of those kinds of pieces of equipment so that we end up with the idea that if there's a sale agreement, we have in place effectively an accounting of that record of the transaction. I think that as we go through looking at the process, what we'll have here is a true sense that the dealers will be able to keep track of the equipment and make sure that the warranties that are implied as to the strength of that equipment will be true to the dealer's advertisement or implied sales agreement. So, Mr. Speaker, on that basis, as we look at this act, I think that this is going to provide basically a little more security.

I guess the one issue that we raised before and deal with again is the actual reduction from 100 hours to 50 hours in the legislated warranty, but these are the kinds of things that I guess fall into the discussion with the industry.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that as we deal with this, we look at it and let it go out to where there's an industry waiting for it so that they can put it in place. On that, I would hope everybody would support it.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I haven't had an opportunity to get on the record on this particular bill, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, and I would like to have that opportunity to do so before it goes for royal assent.

This is certainly a bill that we are happy to support. I think that it makes some modernization changes that are important for us to see in the legislation. From the information that we have had from the stakeholders that have been consulted, they see this as being more responsive to the distributors' business needs. What we see from looking at this as compared to legislation in other provinces is that this moves us towards harmonization with similar legislation across the prairie provinces.

Looking at it in a sectional analysis, section 6 is different from other provinces. Here we're asking for 90 percent of the current price, where Manitoba has 100 percent. We see that on a large inventory 10 percent could cost a distributor as much as $100,000 on a million dollar inventory.

With those comments, we are happy to support the legislation. We see that as in many other industries, agricultural implements have changed quite a bit since the time the act was first introduced, and we can see the real significance for updating it. What we've seen in this Legislative Assembly over this session is a modernization of a number of pieces of legislation, and we're happy to see this happen now as a companion piece to Bill 13, which we'll be discussing next.

I think it's important for us to highlight what we see as a couple of the most significant areas in this bill, Mr. Speaker. Those would be the buy-back clause in the legislation for equipment and parts should the dealer close down or sell the business. Given the shrinkage that has happened in terms of dealers in this industry, that's an important change, I think. The other highlight is manufacturers now being responsible for transportation costs when the distributor is returning parts. It isn't like those of us in the city walking down to the local Revy to pick up a part or make a change. It's quite a bit more significant when it comes to the agricultural community, and it's important that it be recognized.

So with those few comments I would like to add my support to this particular bill.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The question has been called. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close debate.

MR. HORNER: No further discussion.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Bill 13 Farm Implement Dealerships Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert on behalf.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move for third reading Bill 13, the Farm Implement Dealerships Act, sponsored by my colleague the hon. Member for Dunvegan. This act has been put forward to encourage competition harmonization with other provinces and has long been awaited in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 13, the Farm Implement Dealerships Act, at third reading. I was going to start to say that I rise this afternoon, but I guess in the context of our legislative day it's still last night, and I can feel it. I haven't shaved yet today. So we'll have to deal with some of the issues that come up with that kind of long debate.

Mr. Speaker, the Farm Implement Dealerships Act I think is something that has been talked about in the agricultural community for the past four or five years. I think that's about when I first heard the concerns expressed about the top-down power brokering that was going on by dealerships and the focus we were seeing when the major manufacturers or wholesalers were coming along and telling local dealers how they had to handle their line, how they had to display the line within the context of the showroom, and whether or not they could have a competing line and even not necessarily a directly competing line but a support service line available.

This basically cuts out most small manufacturers from entering into agreements with current distributors who have the infrastructure to deal with the maintenance, the repair, the parts, and all of that. It basically was an easy way for a small manufacturer, a new manufacturer bringing in a new piece of equipment, a new technology, to go out and deal with the current distribution network that was there and make sure that there was a process for good service to the customer through those existing dealerships.

What we wanted to make sure of and what this bill makes sure of is that effectively there is a possibility for the main supplier to a dealer not to become all inclusive. Also, then we end up with the situation where there's some control over how a distributor can either terminate or effectively cancel a local dealership and enter into some of the aspects that are there.

I guess the main thing that we want to watch in this bill, which again the industry and the producers in our province have been seeking, is that some of the indications I've had in talking to people out in the community in the last six or eight months, when they knew that this was coming through, are that they were saying that what we'll be seeing is, effectively, distributor-run dealerships starting to show up, where they in essence are part of the distribution network. Some of this has been occurring now in the U.S., where distributors effectively are buying out dealerships and incorporating them under their management structure. In that way, they don't have the contract agreement or the relationship between the distributor and the dealership that we see and that is implied in the conditions in this bill, where we're talking about effectively two different identities.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the things that we have to kind of watch. It all reflects on the transition that's going on in our agriculture community in terms of where we see the community both in the intermediate and the longer term future. As these businesses get bigger and bigger both in terms of the distributors and the dealerships, we're seeing a lot of the dealerships effectively amalgamating under single management so that they can enter into volume purchases and volume agreements.

The real issue that comes up is that when these growing dealerships enter into a position where there's going to be an intergenerational transfer, because most of these are in some ways family corporations, the size of them and the capital required to deal with them are such that the only buyout option for them would be to sell to a significant, large distributor or other agriculture dealer-type entity. This is kind of the transition that's going on. The focus that we're going to be looking at is in the context of how these relationships then allow for the new manufacturers or the smaller distributors, that are necessary to handle the new lines as they come out, are going to be much more difficult to build into the community and to provide the option for the specialized equipment and the new technology that's going to be necessary as we moved to specialized equipment and create the high-valued agriculture sector.

Just kind of as a conclusion, I was reading an article yesterday, while we still had time to deal with keeping up in our reading, that was talking about the trend in the foreseeable future for agriculture, the agriculture service sector and the agriculture output sector. There was a lot of reference made to the fact that agriculture is going through a transition. The author of this paper, which I don't have a copy of, was Dr. Boehlje from Indiana. He made reference to the fact that in the measurable future he could see 90 percent of the farmers in the U.S. being amalgamated into effectively significantly sized major agriculture corporations to become the producers of food in the commercial entities.

What we need to do is look at these kinds of structural changes and the implications this bill in itself is dealing with. If we look at this bill and its implications, effectively what we're saying is that we're going to put in place limitations on how these industrial food production complexes are emerging. We're trying to put restrictions on how they operate here, and in effect what we're doing is ending up with a situation where maybe in the long run what we're trying to do with Bill 13 is just kind of buck the trend, deal with the issues that are inevitable, in a sense.

As we get more and more of this industrial agricultural food complex emerging, we're going to see the situation where what we've got is a whole change in the structure, and the small manufacturers, the small specialized equipment producers, or the special distribution networks that are necessary won't have an in. What we're going to see, then, is these industrial agriculture complexes become the focus of innovation and also in a degree of market control and market power as they take over and force the market control, market identification onto the agriculture community, like we've seen happen in a significant number of the other what used to be small-scale, intensive operations. What we're going to have, then, is basically a shift back to a few individuals left that will deal with very specialized niche markets, but they'll be very high valued markets as well.

I think what we'll see here in Canada is probably the same kind of transition but also a process where what we'll end up with is this agrifood industrial complex basically developing but developing a little slower than it has in the United States. It's the kind of thing that's inevitable. We'll probably have to focus on what implications this has for rural Alberta and the rural community, that in effect we're trying to protect or trying to maintain the flexibility for, as we see it in Bill 13.

Mr. Speaker, as we look at this, it's a bill that the industry wants. It's a bill that is going to satisfy the needs of the individuals that see themselves as being affected by this. Also, I think it's a bill that as we go through the next 10 to 15 years in the agriculture community we may see in some ways effectively is not operational because these machinery dealerships will be part of this agrifood industrial relationship complex that I talked about. What we'll see is in many ways a lot of the equipment that's necessary for developing, harvesting, planting, and preparing our food will be under the control of these integrated or complex businesses, so this will have to deal with it.

I'm getting a little bit beyond the scope of the bill, but it does tie in in the sense of the complexity we're seeing and the concentration we're starting to see occur. This bill is dealing with one of the issues that is relevant to the individuals right now that want to see a choice and want to see flexibility stay within the industry.

So on that basis, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage everybody to support it. I think it's a good bill, and I would thank the member for bringing it forward.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move for third reading Bill 19, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001.

As the House knows, miscellaneous statutes is a method by which we agree to do basic cleanup, to make small but insubstantial amendments to various acts in a manner in which is efficient and clean, and assists when we're doing the Revised Statutes of Alberta, which we're in the process of doing now. I would commend Bill 19 to the attention of the House.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're happy to support the government in Bill 19 in terms of the cleanup of a couple of minor issues on miscellaneous statutes. It's been the habit of the government to discuss proposals for additions to a miscellaneous statutes bill. It has also been their habit to accept any rejections or concerns we have with bills that have been put into that act and to withdraw them and bring them back in a more substantive stand-alone bill later on in the session. So we are happy to support Bill 19, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act at its final reading.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to, of course, express my support for the bill and agree with the Government House Leader to say that much of what is contained here is of insubstantial status and agreed upon prior to these things going into the bill.

But I just wanted to draw to the attention of the Assembly that although the contents might be insubstantial, one of these is very consequential, and I'm pleased that it's there. I'm referring here to the Legislative Assembly Act provisions that mean a very important transfer of power from the executive back to the Legislature. So I'm very, very pleased that this is happening. I want to certainly commend the Speaker's efforts to make sure that this matter is attended to and is brought forward to the House for approval. So I extend my support of this.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had a wonderful amount of progress and a lot of public business over the last few hours. There have been a few glitches along the way. I'd like to thank all hon. members for the manner in which we've conducted ourselves over the time. There have been some tense moments. There have been some opportunities and opportunities lost, but all in all we've done a lot of good business for Albertans, and I would ask that we adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m. on May 30.

[At 5:18 p.m. on Tuesday the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 30, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/30

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we thank You for hearing our prayers. We thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Svend Nielsen, ambassador for Denmark. This is the ambassador's first official visit to Alberta, and we're pleased to welcome him. He and I shared a delightful lunch together over at Government House. Accompanying him is Mr. Ole Jorgensen, honorary consul general of Denmark stationed here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and Denmark have much in common. We both have northern climates, which is obvious. We both have strong oil and gas and agricultural and food industries, and we both have now eliminated our deficits and are now posting surpluses. Over 46,000 Albertans are of Danish descent, and our province is proud to be home to the prairies' oldest Danish settlement, at Dickson, Alberta, first established in 1903. The beautiful Danish/Canadian natural museum and gardens are located there.

This visit is an excellent opportunity to discuss ways to build and strengthen the Alberta/Denmark friendship and to explore potential areas of co-operation. I thoroughly enjoyed our time together. They're wonderful people, and I would ask that they rise in the gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Worship Mayor Issam Halabi. Mayor Halabi is the mayor of the town of Yanta in the Bekaa province in Lebanon. Mr. Halabi is visiting the Yanta community in Edmonton. The Yanta community, as we all know, is made up of about 2,500 people here in the city of Edmonton, and we certainly appreciate their contribution to the social, economic, and political structure of this province and this country. The mayor is also very busy working on a twinning project between his town, the town of Vienta, and the town of Drayton Valley, Alberta, and we wish him every success in his endeavours.

His Worship is accompanied today by two very well-known personalities, Mr. Joe Hak and Mr. Kamal Salame. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [remarks in Lebanese]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Merci, M. le President. J'aimerais commencer en presentant trois visiteurs importants qui sont ici dans votre galerie. Deux de ces personnes sont des membres de l'executif provincial de l'Association canadienne-francaise de l'Alberta. Il s'agit de Mme Suzanne Dalziel, la presidente de l'association, et M. Denis Lord, le vice-president. La troisieme personne est Mme Therese Conway, la presidente nouvellement reelue de la Federation des Aînes Franco-Albertains.

L'Association canadienne-francaise de l'Alberta celebre sa 75e anniversaire cette annee. L'association a ete fondee ici meme a Edmonton, a l'Hotel MacDonald, en 1926 lors d'une reunion de plus de 400 delegues venus de tous les coins de la province. Depuis son etablissement l'association a toujours respecte et suivi sa mission, qui etait de favoriser le developpement de la communaute Francophone sous tous ses aspects.

Le travail de l'association a contribue a la mise sur pied et au soutien de nombreuses institutions importantes qui ont oeuvre au benefice de la communaute Francophone ainsi que de la population entiere de notre province. Parmi ces institutions on peut mentionner Le Franco, le journal d'expression francaise, qui est publie sur une base hebdomadaire depuis sa fondation en 1928; CHFA, la radio de langue francaise, qui a ete fondee en 1949; la Faculte Saint-Jean, la seule institution post-secondaire de langue francaise a l'ouest de Winnipeg.

De plus, l'association a toujours maintenu un membership imposant qui se chiffre aujourd'hui a plus de 6,000 membres. Aussi, l'association a toujours encourage le developpement d'un reseau de benevoles d'un bout a l'autre de la province, comprenant 10 regionales, un regroupement jeunesse fort et actif, une federation des aînes, une federation de parents, et de nombreuses autres organismes et groupes.

En terminant, j'aimerais feliciter l'Association canadienne-francaise de l'Alberta pour avoir atteint ce point important dans son histoire et lui souhaiter une longue vie remplie de succes.

[Translation] I would like to begin by introducing three important persons that are seated in the gallery. Two are executive members of the French Canadian Association of Alberta. They are the president of the association, Mrs. Suzanne Dalziel, and the vice-president, M. Denis Lord. The third person is the newly re-elected president of the Franco-Albertan Seniors Federation, Mrs. Therese Conway. These three persons are my guests today as a follow-up to the special celebration that was held yesterday in the rotunda to mark the 75th anniversary of the founding of the French Canadian Association of Alberta.

The association was founded at a meeting of over 400 delegates right here in Edmonton at the Hotel MacDonald in 1926. Since its founding the association has been true to its original mission to foster the development of the Alberta Francophone community in all aspects of life. The work of this great association has created a number of important institutions for the benefit of the Francophone community and the population of our entire province. Among those institutions we can mention Le Franco, the French language weekly newspaper; CHFA, the French language television network; Faculte Saint-Jean; and many more.

The association has maintained over the years a strong personal membership that presently stands at 6,000 members. Also, it has encouraged the development of a full network of volunteer organizations throughout the province, including 10 regional offices, a strong and vibrant youth organization, a parents' federation, a seniors' federation, and many more organizations and groups.

To conclude, I would like to congratulate the French Canadian Association of Alberta upon reaching this important milestone and extend my best wishes for a long and prosperous future. [as submitted]

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask our visitors, who are accompanied by M. Denis Tardif, the director of the Francophone Secretariat, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to present a petition to the Legislature of Alberta which states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to include the following question in the forthcoming provincial election: are you in favour of the Alberta Government using your tax dollars to pay for abortions?

Mr. Speaker, 5,115 people signed this petition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by a number of Albertans, and this is in regard to sour gas flaring, Alberta's shame: toxic, noxious, deadly. They are urging the government to "legislate measures to curb pollution from sour gas stack flaring to protect public health and the environment of Alberta."

Thank you.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I submitted on Monday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to end the Policy permitting hazardous wastes to be transported into Alberta from outside Canada and delivered to Swan Hills Waste Treatment Plant.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following private bills proceed: Bill Pr. 1, Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001; Bill Pr. 2, Burns Memorial Trust Act; and Bill Pr. 4, Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, the committee recommends that the following proceed with an amendment: Bill Pr. 3, The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company Act. As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the amendment proposed for this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Would all hon. members in favour of the report please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. Carried.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Bill 211
Citizens' Initiative Act

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 211, being the Citizens' Initiative Act.

The purpose of Bill 211 is to allow eligible voters in Alberta an avenue by which to propose and vote on a request for legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 211 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table five copies of answers to questions raised during Committee of Supply with respect to the estimates of the Department of Justice and Attorney General raised by the Member for Edmonton-Centre and the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table today with the Assembly responses to questions raised during main estimates for Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development, as well as those for the lottery fund pertaining to my portfolio. They are to the MLA for Edmonton-Highlands, to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I understand they've received those in their offices.

I would also like to table the annual report of the Alberta Grain Commission for 2000-2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege today to provide the correct copies for five tablings: in the first instance and on behalf of the current chair, Calgary-Shaw, the Social Care Facilities Review Committee annual report for the period April 1, '99, to March 31, 2000, with a tribute from the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall; the response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods' question dated April 25, 2001; the Committee of Supply responses for Children's Services; the response to Children's Advocate annual report; and the Child and Family Services Authorities Act review.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In the true spirit of openness and democracy I'm pleased to table in response to Written Question 6 from Edmonton-Ellerslie five copies of section 4.2 of the 1996 agreement, as requested in the written question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table two reports in response to an oral question on May 10 from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. One was prepared by the department, and the second one is a pilot investigation of a fatigue management program for the commercial motor vehicle industry, prepared by the Canadian Sleep Institute in Calgary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is five copies of responses to questions posed during the Gaming estimates in Committee of Supply on May 7, 2001.

The second is five copies of responses to questions posed in Committee of Supply during Alberta lottery fund estimates regarding the Ministry of Gaming on May 14, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKEY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a report, an interim update received from the hon. Member for Highwood, who is chairing the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Act Review Committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I beg leave to have two sets of tablings. The first is the requisite number of copies, being five, of the Alberta Dental Hygienists' Association annual report for the year 2000.

The second one is the requisite number of copies, being five, of the Alberta College of Social Workers annual report for the year 2000.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table a document entitled Let's Talk Dialogue. It is the report of the Dialogue Task Force, set up by the Federation of the Francophone and Acadian Communities of Canada. The report was published in February 2001 in a French/English bilingual format. It is of interest for two reasons: one, because our own French Canadian Association of Alberta was involved in the process and, secondly, because the National Federation examined the idea of promotion and development of the Francophone and Acadian communities in the context of an exchange and a dialogue with Anglophones, Quebec Francophones, native peoples, and ethnocultural groups.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, would you kindly do us the satisfaction of removing your exhibit that's in front of your desk. It seems to me that hon. members from Red Deer have a wonderful fascination with exhibits.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Kristine Cassie, the human resources manager of the Lethbridge and District YWCA. She's expressing concerns about the funding formula for Sun Country and the fact that they're facing cutbacks in a lot of their programs that could affect individuals that they provide service to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Mr. David Budzinski. Mr. Budzinski is concerned about dogs being used to kill coyotes.

The second tabling I have today is an e-mail from Mr. Will Gadd. Mr. Gadd wants the government to consider "not allowing further logging, mineral exploration or other damaging uses of K country."

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail from Jeff Perron of Canmore. He is concerned about the exploitation of forests in Kananaskis.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I table the required number of copies of a letter from Mr. David Parker of Edmonton. Mr. Parker is concerned about the lack of regulations for intensive livestock operations.

An additional tabling. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Ms Crilley. Ms Crilley is concerned about the air quality in the Bow Valley corridor.

The last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Ms Laurie Farlinger. Ms Farlinger would like to see the government protect the Bighorn wildland area.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from Ms Leanne Dalderis. Ms Dalderis is concerned about the proposed forest management agreement between the government and Spray Lake Sawmills.

The second tabling today is from Ms Rutland. It's a letter from Ms Kath Rutland of Millarville. Ms Rutland is concerned that "the minister responsible for protecting the environment is proposing to destroy a national Wildlife Area."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter to me from the room 15 class at John A. McDougall school. I met with them around Bill 209, and they have supplied me with their recommendations on that bill.

The second tabling is a letter from Alison Dinwoodie, president of the Stewards of Alberta's Protected Areas Association. She is concerned with the dismantling of the Department of Environment. In particular, her group does not believe that parks and protected places should be under the Minister of Community Development.

My third tabling is a copy of a letter from Dorene Rew of Red Deer. Ms Rew is concerned with the effects of industrial, commercial, and agricultural development on our water supplies.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With great enthusiasm I rise to table two documents. One is a letter from Mr. Dennis Fenske of Sherwood Park. Mr. Fenske is concerned about environmental issues in Beaver county.

The other is the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Bill Weisenburger, who is chairman of the Society of Concerned Citizens of Pine Lake. This group is concerned about how waste and debris are being handled in the Pine Lake area.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of a letter from the chairperson of the board of trustees of Northern Gateway public schools addressed to the Minister of Learning. Ms Judy Muir is requesting the minister to reconsider certain sections of Bill 16, which in its present form is opposed by this school division.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. I'm tabling five copies of a letter addressed to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. This letter is from Ms Darlene Zloklikovits, vice-president, Alberta Injured Workers Society, expressing their strong disappointment with the minister's failure to implement the recommendations of two recent WCB review committees.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to the members of the Assembly I would like to introduce the most important person in our constituency office, and that is my assistant Rhonda LaFrance. Rhonda acquired her BA in sociology at the U of S and also achieved her master's in journalism from Carleton University in Ottawa. Again, it is my honour to work with Rhonda and to introduce you to her. I would ask her to please stand to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

MR. VANDERMEER: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great honour to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Hilda Schenk. Hilda worked tirelessly on my campaign to see to it that I became a member. I'm also pleased to let you know that she is my constituency office manager, and she is working tirelessly there now. Would Hilda please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Amitabh Arora. Mr. Arora works for the consulate of Canada in Mumbai, India. He assists Canadian companies interested in doing business in India. His responsibilities include oil and gas, diamonds, and the agricultural sector. Mr. Arora brought the largest ever, 70 members, Indian oil and gas delegation to Alberta for the National Petroleum Show and the World petroleum show in June 2000. For his outstanding service the Canadian high commissioner in India awarded him with a certificate of merit for the year 2000-2001.

Currently Mr. Arora is on a unique exchange program between Alberta Economic Development and the consulate of Canada in India. This initiative is being tried for the first time. While in Alberta he is responsible to inform Alberta companies of opportunities in the Indian oil and gas sector and assist them in entering the Indian market.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Arora is seated in your gallery, and I request that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great privilege for me to introduce today a home schooler group from my constituency. They're called the Drayton Valley and district home educators. The group leaders, who are also the parents and the teachers, are Roxanne Lachance and Anita Basque. They're here today with their children Jesse, Timothy, Jordan, and Adam Lachance as well as Courtney and Kyle Basque. I'd ask them all to stand in the members' gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Kane Waselenchuk; his parents, Darren and Solitaire Waselenchuk; and his grandmother Joyce Waselenchuk.

Kane is a remarkable and talented 19 year old who has already won seven world titles in racquetball. At 16 he was the youngest player ever chosen to play for Team Canada. At 17 he was the youngest player ever to win the senior national title. He has won the Canadian national championship three times: 1999, 2000, and 2001. Last year Kane was a member of Team Canada when they won gold at the Tournament of Americas and the world championships, a first for Canada. In Vancouver this past weekend Kane became the first player ever to hold both the singles and doubles titles in the Canadian national championships. His doubles partner was Brian Istace of Calgary.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would now ask that the Waselenchuks rise – they are seated in the public gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to make two introductions to you and through you to the members of the Assembly today. We all rely heavily on our constituency office managers, and they're all excellent, I'm sure. Mine is among the very most excellent, and she is in the public gallery. Her name is Jan Baker.

The other person I would like to introduce is a constituent of mine and a STEP student who is doing research with our caucus over the summer. He's a member of the Lemieux clan, a well-known family in Edmonton for their many great achievements.

I would like to ask John and Jan to both rise in the public gallery and receive our warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to introduce two people to the Assembly today. The first one is Carol Guenette. She's been my constituency assistant since 1989. That just proves I'm not very hard to get along with. The second individual is Jill Jespersen, who is a student in bible school, and she's planning on going into nursing at the University of Alberta and becoming a missionary. I would like them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and the Assembly Carolyn Laird, a former resident of Fort Saskatchewan, a former page in this Assembly, and also a political science grad from the U of A. Currently she's a staff assistant for the U.S. Senate Republican Policy Committee. I'd ask her to please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not to be outdone, I would like to introduce to you and through you two people who are very important and key in my life. Terri Douglas is my Leg. assistant and has been with me since day one. The second person, David Hart, is my STEP student, who is on his first visit to the Legislature. Both are the best in Alberta, and I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome from the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly somebody that many of you have met in the past. It's always refreshing to see a world champion sports figure, and within this building in the past and in Edmonton today we've had a world champion master weightlifter. I would ask Wendy Rogers, who's won a couple of world championships, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Amy Zienkiewicz from Cardiff, Wales. Amy is visiting for a three-month period before she starts university to study history and politics. She's sitting in the members' gallery with my trusty and excellent executive assistant. He wrote this. I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud and pleased to introduce to you and every colleague in the Assembly today a very special guest, Mr. Anand Sharma, who is the co-chair of New Democrat Youth of Alberta and presently is a student at the University of Alberta, completing his BA in political science. Anand has shown himself to be a very hardworking and capable organizer, and presently Mr. Sharma is spending most of his spare time this month co-ordinating the New Democrat youth convention to be held June 22 to June 24 at Goldeye in Nordegg, Alberta. He is seated in the public gallery. I would ask Anand to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a dear friend of mine, Mrs. Lynne McArthur. Lynne worked here in the Legislative Assembly as an assistant for myself and my former colleague from Calgary-Currie, and we're really pleased she's here today because we do miss her. Lynne, I'd ask that you rise – she's seated in the members' gallery – and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

2:00
head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

John Graham
Grenville Richert

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with sadness that I inform my colleagues of a terrible accident that occurred last week.

On Friday, May 25, two firefighters for the province lost their lives in a bird-dog plane over Red Earth, Alberta. One of the two people involved in the tragedy was a very well-known and highly respected forest officer. In fact, he was a 35-year veteran of land and forest services. We know that the other person in the plane was a pilot working for Air Spray Ltd., who was also in the flying business for many years.

These two men worked on the front lines, Mr. Speaker. Being from a northern community, I understand and appreciate the role that these unique professionals play in protecting the people of Alberta, the communities, and the province's resources. I have known many of them personally, and I hold a deep and long-standing respect for the members of these crews.

As a veteran of land and forest services our lost member, John Graham, was well known, well liked, and very highly respected. He was very experienced with bird-dog planes and was in the front lines of fires in and around communities like Fort Vermilion, Grande Prairie, and Robb, Alberta. He probably had more than one opportunity to move from the field to a role that would have certainly afforded him more personal safety. Being a firefighter was more than something he did to make a living. As a long-standing member of land and forest services, there were many who looked up to him. They lost a friend, a family man, a husband, a father, and a grandfather. To say that he will be deeply missed cannot possibly do justice to what his family is dealing with right now.

Our fire-fighting teams involve a rare breed of contract pilots who commit their efforts to suppressing fires in Alberta. This accident also marked the loss of a pilot, a young man in his 37th year. Grenville Richert's colleagues at Air Spray Ltd. are, to say the least, devastated by this accident and have lost a valuable member of their team. His loss is being mourned in his home community in Saskatchewan, where he leaves behind his wife and other family members. A seasoned pilot from an aviation family, it was his second year fighting fires for the province and the people of Alberta.

I had the opportunity to speak with some of the crewmates of these two men on the day after the accident. The people who work with bird-dog planes play a very important role in fighting fires. They lead the communications between the ground and air crews. They take the air tankers over the fire and determine where the extinguishing agents need to be dropped. In this way, they are the eyes and the ears of the operations. Year after year after year they return to the fires, to exhausting work and to long hours away from their loved ones. Year after year they return to the camaraderie of their teammates and to the satisfaction of knowing they are protecting the lives and the livelihoods of fellow Albertans.

This tragic accident resulted in a deep loss felt by all who knew these two men. We must never forget all the men and women who have fought fires in the past and those who are out in the lines right now protecting the lives of Albertans. On behalf of the men and women who work closely with these men, on behalf of the Department of Sustainable Resource Development, on behalf of the Alberta government, and on behalf of all Albertans I extend deepest sympathies and prayers to the families and friends of the two men who lost their lives in the service of fighting fires in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a province of great beauty. From the wide-open plains and rolling foothills to towering mountains and rugged northern forests, there are few places as diverse as Alberta. Canadians recognize and cherish this landscape. We have seen many times the destruction caused by forest fires, and we know that fighting these fires is never easy and never without risk. While fighting fires is about saving forests and property, our firefighters must never have to face unwarranted risk. Protecting the lives of those in the path of fire and of the firefighters must always be a priority. Fighting forest fires takes a strong and dedicated team. Every member must be committed. Every member must have passion.

There is no doubt in the minds of Albertans that John Graham and Grenville Richert were committed and passionate about their work. John Graham was a long-serving employee of land and forest services. He had fought many fires. He was the veteran that people looked to for advice and guidance. Grenville Richert was a young pilot from a family of fliers. This was the second year he had come to protect Alberta's forests. These men were working for all Albertans to save our forests. They were working to save our natural heritage. When Albertans are outside enjoying the rugged beauty of our province, they should stop for a moment and think about what it takes to protect our forests and our communities residing within those forests.

We join all Albertans in extending our prayers and sympathies to the families, friends, and colleagues of John Graham and Grenville Richert.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Swan Hills Treatment Centre

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition has repeatedly made requests for information on the Swan Hills waste treatment centre through freedom of information requests and through this Assembly. The Official Opposition believes that Albertans have a right to know what has happened to almost 500 million tax dollars. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. What financial return have Albertans received for investing over $500 million in the Swan Hills waste treatment plant?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province of Alberta has received a great deal from the operation of the plant. True enough, it hasn't been all monetary, but the Swan Hills waste treatment plant has rid Alberta of some very dangerous chemicals like PCBs. Another function that seems to be lost in this whole discussion is simple things like the destruction of drugs. It's amazing when you think of the drug roundup program: 36 tonnes of unused drugs that would go and have been going into the sewer systems in the province, in the cities, and discarded in many other ways. That has been cleaned up.

When you look at the petrochemical industry that is advancing in this province, what would happen to those by-products of the chemical industry if it weren't for the Swan Hills plant? Are you going to start finding them in landfills? Where are they going to be located? So I think to just simply zero in on the dollar number of the cost of having this plant in Alberta is a very, very misleading and misguided way to deal with this facility.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the government offering prospective buyers the same guaranteed profit it gave Bovar for operating the Swan Hills waste treatment facility?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned – I think it was the day before yesterday; actually it was yesterday according to Hansard – the fact is that we are now asking for proposals for qualifications. Basically what that means is that we're trying to scope out what it is that the proposed operators might need. We also want to know their qualifications, what kind of expertise would they bring to the table. This will all play in the call for proposals to actually move the plant out from the provincial government and into the private sector. But we've got to make sure that whatever happens in the future with that plant, it's there to operate for the benefit of Albertans and that it is doing a job that cannot be done by any other mechanism.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question is to the same minister again. You talk about the benefits that we've received from it. Will there be payments made, or if the plant can't operate on a sustainable basis, will it be shut down and the other alternatives that are out there to deal with those wastes investigated?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with the Department of Environment there is always the investigation of other means of handling this very toxic material. The fact is that some of the companies that are showing a lot of interest in this plant have expertise. They've operated these kinds of plants all over the world. I find it very interesting that yesterday the opposition raised somewhat similar questions indicating that in fact there are technologies out there and plants out there that are mobile that could handle these wastes.

It's amazing, Mr. Speaker, when we're dealing with multinational companies coming to look at this plant, the comments we're hearing from them about this plant's ability to handle waste that no other technology can handle. These are companies that are dealing all over the world. So I'm having difficulty understanding how they happen to know of these other companies that have mobile equipment that can do it, yet the multinational companies that are interested in purchasing this plant don't know about them.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure as well. The Bovar annual report says that there is not sufficient hazardous waste flowing into the Swan Hills Treatment Centre to maintain its viable operation. The report also says that the plant was operating on a negative cash flow basis. Is the plant operating at full capacity right now?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the plant currently is not receiving tonnage equal to its capacity. Also, when you talk about the amount of material that's necessary to make that plant operate, one of the things that I learned in talking to some of these people that are interested in operating the plant is that there are many things you can do in the operation. For example, with the diet the plant takes to operate, if you balance the material that produces a lot of heat in the destruction process with the material that doesn't, you can in fact operate at a much lower cost, but you've got to balance that diet. From what we have heard, that has not been the type of operation that has been occurring in the past.

Another thing they always point out to us is that the fee schedule that has been in place does not encourage some material to come to the plant. If you change that fee schedule, in fact it may be economical to destroy some of that material in the plant instead of processing it and concentrating it and then just moving that portion to the plant.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure: in your negotiations with these multinational and international companies are you proposing or are they proposing the importation from the international market to Alberta of wastes that can be destroyed in that plant?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, we are not proposing to change the policy that the Alberta government has currently.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of the negotiations are you also talking about changing the fee schedules, and are you going to be talking to the individuals who are affected by those fee schedule changes when you enter into these agreements with the multinationals?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, of course there is a limit to how far we get into the operation of the plant. When we call for proposals, the companies that will be answering certainly will be doing their due diligence. They will be talking to the producers of this material and talking about the fee schedule and how they may attract more material to the plant.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the Minister of Infrastructure said that they weren't going to get too involved in the business of the Swan Hills waste treatment centre, because in December of 2000 the government took over ownership of that particular centre. To keep the facility operating, the government entered into an agreement with Sensor Environmental Services Ltd. Few details of this arrangement have been made public. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Will the minister confirm that it has already cost taxpayers a minimum of $2.5 million in management fees to Sensor to operate the plant in this year?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, to correct the impression that the hon. member was trying to leave with the Assembly and Albertans that we were heavily involved, the answer to the hon. member's question earlier – he was talking about in the future when a private operator is operating. We will not be heavily involved at that point. That would strictly be an operation by the private sector.

As far as the fee schedule, Mr. Speaker, there is always a cost of doing business, and this is one of those costs.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, will the same minister confirm that on top of the $2.5 million in management fees, it will also cost taxpayers between $4 million and $5 million a year in subsidies to Sensor to keep the plant open, based on current cash-flow projections?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, you know, I really find it quite a contrast when the hon. member that is just now asking the questions is supposed to be the Environment critic, pretends that they want to protect the environment, pretends, I guess, that this material doesn't exist and that we don't need to somehow destroy that material. The fact is that we don't profess to be able to operate that plant as efficiently and to the full capacity of the plant, and that is one of the reasons that as government we are trying to get out of it.

MS CARLSON: To the same minister: will he give this Assembly a breakdown of the $20 million in his ministry budget for the Swan Hills waste treatment facility? What are those tax dollars going to be spent on?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, of course, we just went through the budget process, and I'm surprised that the hon. member didn't show more interest in the $20 million that was in the budget for this year, but certainly once the money has been expended, that will be in the public accounts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Water Quality Standards

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier of Saskatchewan proposed that the Western Premiers' Conference push the federal government to establish a national infrastructure program that will deal with the need to update Canada's aging water infrastructure. Meeting last weekend in Banff, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, representing hundreds of towns and cities in this country, unanimously passed a resolution calling for national standards in water quality. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Will the minister acknowledge that Alberta like many other parts of Canada has a serious problem with ensuring safe drinking water for its citizens?

DR. TAYLOR: No, Mr. Speaker, I will not acknowledge that. We are one of two provinces that has adopted the national drinking water quality standards. One of two. In some cases our standards are even more stringent than that. I will acknowledge that there are some difficulties in smaller centres across the province that we are working on to improve.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister please tell the House about the situation in the hamlet of Walsh in his own constituency, which has had to boil its water for the last three years because it is unsafe?

DR. TAYLOR: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I'm very familiar with that situation. I'm not sure how much time you'll give me, but I could give you quite an explanation of that, but I will try and be brief.

Essentially, Walsh is a very small hamlet just near the Saskatchewan border. It has had a drinking water problem for about three years. The problem is one of turbidity; that is, the particles that are in the water. Walsh basically gets its water from a dugout, which then feeds down to the community. The municipal district has recognized that this has been a problem. Two years ago the municipal district contacted engineers and brought in engineers and spent – I can't remember the exact figure – several hundreds of thousands of dollars putting in a solution to that problem that was recommended by the engineering firm that was consulted.

This solution has worked in many small communities around the province. For some reason it did not work in Walsh, and they are presently looking at it as we speak. The engineers are back there, and they are presently looking at that situation to see, one, why it hasn't worked when it's worked in other situations and, two, what they can do to make it better. The department has already committed to help fund any further things that need to happen in Walsh.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister how long he's been aware of the situation in Walsh in his constituency and what steps he has taken since becoming Minister of Environment to correct the situation.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I've been aware of the situation considerably longer than the member opposite whose researcher just contacted our director yesterday to find out about this situation. I will continue to represent my constituents, and we will continue to work on solving that problem. The problem will be solved in spite of what that member may say.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Forest Fires

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are seeing firsthand the damage that fires can bring to our communities and people in Alberta. Albertans are afraid, afraid for the safety of their communities and for themselves. Just this week a raging fire two and a half miles south of Redwater threatened the Juniper Hills subdivision. Some 30-plus families had to be evacuated, with an uncertainty if their homes would be there when they returned. All my questions today are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The first question is: can the minister give an update on the current provincial forest fire situation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question, and no doubt there's a lot of interest in that particular area. As you are aware, the extreme dry conditions we have in Alberta are something that are not that common. Even the experts that have been involved in forestry, even out of the province that are here helping us right now, have never seen situations as bad as they are right now. Thank God that it rained some the last couple of days and has watered down some of the extreme conditions that are out there.

Presently we do have about seven fires that are still out of control. We have four fires that are being held and 21 that are under control. To date, of course, we've had close to 400 fires already, and about 120,000 hectares have been burned. Fortunately, a lot of it is not in heavily forested areas.

The largest fire we had of course is the Chisholm fire, which is partly in my constituency and partly in the Member for Lesser Slave Lake's constituency. That one burned a total of 80,000 hectares and actually took some merchantable timber, which we have to reassess and try to accommodate the needs of the quota holders and the FMA holders that are involved in that area.

MR. BRODA: Mr. Speaker, to the minister: what resources do we have in place to assist in stopping these wildfires from creating any further damage?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much. In fact, the resources we have were put in place this year a month earlier than we normally do. Most of the initial attack crews and some of the standby crews and some of the equipment that was on standby were recruited on the 1st of March this year rather than the 1st of May or April, so we were ultraprepared, but at this time we have over 1,600 firefighters out there working, and additionally we have another 500 field experts, dozer operators, medical people, and specialists helping to fight the fires. In fact, at Chisholm alone we have over 346 firefighters at that particular fire. In addition to that, we have over 100 helicopters, over 100 dozers working across the province. We have also over 300 employees that are helping us from out of the province, including people from Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, B.C., and Northwest Territories. We are doing everything we can to ensure that we do provide the most important thing out there, and that's human safety.

MR. BRODA: My final question to the minister: does the minister have an estimate on how much has been spent in fighting these forest fires to date?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, of course we are trying to always manage the amount of dollars spent in fire suppression, but in this particular area the first priority is human life and the losses individual families are faced with when a number of homes burn down and families lose all their belongings. So that would be a top priority.

As far as the actual cost, we've spent to date about $25 million, and $4 million of that was specifically targeted at the Chisholm fire, which is, of course, the largest fire.

Again, I'd just like to indicate to Albertans that the individual losses of families and, in fact, the loss of the two employees of the department are the biggest losses we can find. That is the most important part, not the dollars.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Life Lease Properties

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In increasing numbers seniors and others in this province are investing in life lease properties to serve as their primary residence. Nevertheless, there is concern about security of investment in life lease properties. My questions are all to the Minister of Seniors. Does the government not consider it a legislative deficiency that there is no significant protection for owners of life lease properties?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, the member may or may not have a good point; I don't know. But we must remember to keep in mind that a life lease arrangement is similar to any other mortgage arrangement that you have. At this particular juncture I don't think it would be prudent for the minister or the Ministry of Seniors to enter into that field without first of all having a clause, which we do not; secondly, ensuring that these life leases are implemented as they should be; and thirdly, I think it's an issue that if it arises, we will certainly deal with it and deal with it prudently.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. What consideration is the government making to protect life lease investors not only during the construction phase of their property but for the entirety of their ownership?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, again I would indicate that this particular area is one of a contract when you're buying a home, and I would think that at this particular juncture there are likely sufficient protections in it when you enter into a contract. If there are not, then I would appreciate a note from the hon. member. I'll bring it through the proper ministries within the government to ensure that if there is legislation required, we will in fact address it.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Minister. We'll work on it over the summer.

The third question: given that advertising for new life lease housing in Edmonton notes that the development will provide security of tenure, to what extent does current residential tenancy legislation protect security of tenure?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, that particular sector does not come under my ministry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Civil Service Retention

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. British Columbia is going through a major ideological realignment as a result of the overwhelming victory of Mr. Gordon Campbell's government. As B.C. begins putting together its new government, there is speculation that we may lose some of our best civil servants to lucrative offers from B.C. My question is to the minister responsible for the personnel administration office. Mr. Minister, what is your department doing to ensure that Alberta retains our excellent and valued public service employees?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we really do have an excellent Alberta public service. I would indicate to you and to other Albertans that are looking in today that recently our Alberta public service received a national award. It was in recognition of the corporate human resource strategy that we put together sometime ago.

I think it should be viewed almost as a compliment that the media has speculated about potential raids on our service. Again, this is a free country. We pride ourselves in our democracy. Certainly as a representative of the public service today I want to indicate to all of our employees that we intend to remain competitive in a very hot marketplace, but as Albertans we need to be always vigilant about the tremendous, tremendous advantages we have in living in this province, raising our families in this province, and contributing as best we can as a public service to all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess having an excellent public service also requires an excellent minister to head it, so my compliments to him.

THE SPEAKER: Sorry; that's a preamble.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Cataract Surgery Contracts

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cataract surgery in Calgary is controlled by five clinics. In March last year internal correspondence within the CRHA obtained under FOIP and apparently written by an ophthalmologist says: "We have unwittingly created an oligopoly that has greatly benefited the facility owners above the other stakeholders." To the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the same clinics and investors control eye surgery this year as last year, will the minister explain that an oligopoly still exists in cataract surgery in Calgary?

MR. MAR: Well, surely to goodness, Mr. Speaker, an oligopoly among a number of them is better than a monopoly under one system. The test is not whether or not it is an oligopoly or a monopoly providing the service. The test is: is this service being provided to Albertans in a cost-effective and effective and efficient manner?

We review these contracts. We review them scrupulously. I've said on a number of occasions and a number of times in this Assembly and outside of this Assembly in response to the hon. member's questions and in response to questions outside of this Assembly that there is a process by which we review these contracts. It is completely transparent; it is completely in the open. The rationale that is provided for the approval of each of these contracts is available on the department's web site. If he or any other Albertan wishes to evaluate for themselves the rationale that is given for the approval of a contract under the Health Care Protection Act, he and others can look for it themselves. They need not go into this matter by raising the question in the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the purpose of privatizing eye surgery was to bring in market forces and given that all reported prices for cataract surgery in the CRHA are identical among the five clinics, will the minister confirm that market forces are failing among the for-profit clinics in Calgary?

MR. MAR: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, it may demonstrate that they are operating in a very efficient manner. They have reduced their costs as much as possible in order to ensure that the service can be delivered in an appropriate and a safe way, still allowing themselves some profit. I don't think that that's a dirty word at all; I should add that.

The cost of providing those cataract services under those contracts is very similar in cost to the cost under the public system. The great advantage, however, of having these services done outside of hospitals and in private surgical facilities is that it frees up surgical space in hospitals for much more significant types of surgery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that principal shareholders in two of the five clinics are also senior officials in the CRHA, how can the minister deny that conflicts of interest exist?

Thank you.

MR. MAR: I can say that because unlike my friend across the way, my feet are firmly rooted in reality. I am obsessed with reality, unlike him who is obsessed with this type of innuendo.

I have said, again, on a number of occasions – and I'll be happy to repeat it again, Mr. Speaker – that each regional health authority has very significant conflict bylaws. Those bylaws are the same conflict bylaws that apply to members of this Assembly, including the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and it is completely transparent. Those conflict rules, the contracts, the rationale for the approval of contracts are all available on the web site. Members of the regional health authority absent themselves from decisions that are being made when there is a potential conflict, just as we would expect the same type of behaviour on the part of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview should he find himself in a conflict of interest as it relates to the business of this Assembly. It is completely transparent and completely available for any member of the public to examine these for themselves.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Homeless Initiatives

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many Alberta communities, including my home town of Calgary, homelessness is a growing concern. My question is to the Minister of Seniors. What is this government doing to help Alberta's homeless?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: The government recognizes that every community has different housing needs and different circumstances that are best resolved by local planning and decision-making. As a result, my ministry had asked seven major cities to develop community plans to properly address their individual needs. Those plans have now been completed as of December of last year and, as a result, have triggered some $9 million of provincial money as well as federal money into the homeless initiatives.

I'm pleased to say, Mr. Speaker, that Calgary through the Calgary Homeless Foundation is being used as a role model by the federal government for assisting municipalities across the country in developing strategies to address the issue of homelessness. Also, I think it's very important to note that the city of Grande Prairie has been selected by the national Homelessness Secretariat to be used in the province of Quebec as a model for rural communities.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Minister of Seniors. What is the government actually doing now to address the urgent and immediate needs of the homeless?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the first year of funding identified through the homeless policy framework implementation strategy has been used by communities to ensure that the immediate needs of the homeless are met, such as emergency shelter space and so on, for the most people. There are also a number of other ministries within the government that provide a variety of supports for less fortunate members, and I'll just mention a couple of them. Human Resources and Employment has some very significant programs. Children's Services is involved in a whole other series of programs, especially for women's shelters. Health and Wellness, AADAC, and the Alberta Mental Health Board are also in the business of providing support.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the Minister of Seniors. Although meeting the immediate needs of the homeless is essential, can the minister please tell this Assembly what his ministry is doing to develop more long-term solutions to homelessness?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Mr. Speaker, one of the major initiatives we've undertaken is to somehow partner with the federal government to ensure that we can end up getting some degree of co-operation with them, with the private and nonprivate housing sector, the municipalities, and in fact find these sought-after long-term solutions.

The communities that I mentioned, the seven cities, are going to be using some of the homeless funding in order to go the next step and provide some transitional housing and support services to these unfortunate individuals and families. Our priority has to be with those who are most in need and to ensure that they have access to basic shelter and that the homeless in Alberta have the ability to get themselves off the street.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to dealing with the homeless through that particular strategy, we also have a very significant rent supplement program, which is a first step in the transition, and that one has been increased in the budget significantly this year.

Disabled Children's Services

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children with special needs must often depend upon several government departments for service. According to the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities many are being lost in the shuffle. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Why are these children still being caught in the bureaucratic differences among children's services regions and health regions?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, possibly the minister of health would wish to supplement, but we do our very best through the Alberta children and youth initiative to ensure that the ministries liaise both at the provincial level and the departments at the local level through the health authority, through the children's authority, and through other providers like Human Resources and Employment, and we do our best to make sure that no child falls through the cracks.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me an ideal opportunity to advise that in the city of Edmonton with the Minister of Justice last year we partnered with the Zebra Foundation and with others for the launching of the planning process to make Pacific Plaza over here on 109th Street a one-intake process for children so that we don't have the fear of losing children through the cracks.

Mr. Speaker, one additional comment I should make. The Alberta Mental Health Board looks after a number of children who are receiving services, many of whom, no doubt, could have come to Children's Services because of similar problems, but sometimes people are reluctant for whatever reason to approach government for help. They go to other service agencies, nonprofit agencies. So sometimes where we really need the refinement is in our intake process, but we are available with those services for children.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the government considered introducing a benefits card to allow parents of handicapped children to access services from providers?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the member asks a very good question: what are the ways that we can help parents get the service? For example, in Ma'Mowe children's services, with the satellite communities that are a part of this authority, frequently there's difficulty in accessing that nonprofit organization that may receive government funding for certain specific types of service. I will be pleased to review with the department staff and also with Ma'Mowe whether or not such a card, such as the Gateway Association has, would enable families to make things more easily available.

Mr. Speaker, Gateway Association, who does in fact undertake the role of advocacy for many of these children, met with me in the last two months. We will co-sponsor a workshop looking at issues like this and hopefully will come up with some answers. The hon. member may have provided us with yet another idea for this type of approach.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is done to ensure that these children are not denied service due to funding shortfalls in a particular department?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, one might say that we are clearly not denying people today. If anybody ever provides me with a name of someone who's been denied service, I'd like to take a look at that name and follow up and do our due diligence. Never in the history of Alberta have so many children received care from the province. That is not a statistic that we can claim with pride but rather with a great deal of concern, that 15,000 children are part of the child welfare caseload, that we have an increased number of children in handicapped children's services, that we are working increasingly with children who require mental health services throughout the province.

So, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member identifies is I think a problem much more broadly centred than in Children's Services or in any government department. I would suggest that this is a problem for all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Health Services Utilization Commission

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year as part of the public relations blitz around Bill 11, the government set up the Premier's Advisory Council on Health to provide advice on the future sustainability of the health care system. Of course, no one has ever heard from that council since. Meanwhile, this morning the Minister of Health and Wellness announced a separate $7 million study on the sustainability of the health care system. To the minister: given that the Premier's advisory council is already charged with studying the sustainability of the health care system and has at its disposal adequate funds to do the job, why does the Minister of Health and Wellness want a separate commission of his own to study the same problem?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find this to be a very constructive question, and I thank the hon. member for it. The Premier's council continues to do good work in that it continues to meet with many stakeholder groups from throughout the province. The individuals who are on the Premier's council indeed are recognized as being leaders in health care, and I think there will be good work that comes from the Premier's council as it relates to the big-picture strategic directions that our health care system should take.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is still important that while we have our eyes on a big-picture strategic plan, we should also look at the more day-to-day types of operations in terms of who provides what services and how we can provide a service better or at a lower cost than is currently done. So there is the potential for overlap. However, I'm satisfied that given the terms of reference that have been given to and discussed at some length with our chair of the Health Services Utilization Commission, the hon. Bonnie Laing, a former member of this Assembly, the former representative from Calgary-Bow, the potential for that overlap will in fact be eliminated and that both councils will continue to do good work in improving our health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like a wasteful example of overlap to me.

Why is the government reinventing the wheel by spending millions of taxpayers' dollars studying the utilization of health care services when the Canadian Institute for Health Information, which receives some funds from this government, already does much of the same thing?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Canadian Institute for Health Information does good work. However, much of that work is done at a national level. Not all solutions that are found at a national level will be applicable within the province of Alberta.

My expectation has been that just like the Premier's council works in collaboration with other groups doing similar types of examinations across the country, so too will Bonnie Laing's health utilization commission look at the information that is provided from other groups that are doing similar types of work. The ultimate objective is not simply to look at ways of spending more money in new areas. It is looking at ways of spending the existing money that we have in a more effective and efficient way. In doing that, Mr. Speaker, my expectation is that the Health Services Utilization Commission will look at existing work already done and will look at models that are done perhaps in other provinces or perhaps even in other jurisdictions throughout the world and ask the question: can those types of models be brought and successfully introduced and implemented in this province?

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, earlier in the question period I applied the preamble rule against the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall and denied him a subsequent question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has violated that preamble rule, so I'm going to apply consistency and deny you the next question.

Cloud Seeding

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, Alberta has severe dry conditions in almost every part of the province. The rain we are currently experiencing is welcome but not yet provincewide or sustained enough to have much of an impact. These dry conditions, which have led to the devastating fires of the past few days, may herald the potential for a disastrous season for the province's agricultural industry. It has been brought to my attention that insurance companies are taking up the practice of seeding clouds to prevent hail damage to crops. Several constituents of mine are concerned that this practice could also be preventing much-needed rain from falling. My question to the Minister of Environment: is this the case?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. The member is correct that cloud seeding is happening by private insurance companies. However, Mr. Speaker, there's no evidence at all that it prevents rain. The studies quite clearly indicate that when clouds are seeded for hail, in fact they tend to provide more rain than if they are not seeded. We're not sure if it works for hail, but it certainly doesn't prevent rain.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. If my constituents wanted to stop the practice of insurance companies seeding clouds for hail suppression, who would they turned to?

DR. TAYLOR: Environment Canada, Mr. Speaker, has a weather modification act, and if they're concerned about that, I would suggest that they talk to Environment Canada. It's not an area of provincial jurisdiction. Talk to Environment Canada, and perhaps they could do that through the present member plus through their local MP.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the minister of agriculture and rural development. Can the minister tell me whether the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, which offers hail and crop insurance as a provincial agency, is involved in the practice of cloud seeding for hail suppression?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation does not participate in cloud seeding. I could also say that some years ago there was a pilot project done on cloud seeding to see if we could reduce the amount of hail or if the intensity of hail storms could be reduced. That pilot ended some years ago.

However, Mr. Speaker, I can also say that from what we've learned and what we understand from others who are involved in this, it is a very expensive practice and the results are very inconclusive, particularly in the area of hail suppression. I can also say that we have no plans of being involved in this procedure as a provincial government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Workers' Compensation Board

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 22 I tabled a letter dated March 27, 2001, to Mr. Ralph Canham from Mary Cameron, president and CEO of the Workers' Compensation Board, indicating that Mr. Canham would be receiving a replacement wheelchair. On May 25 Mr. Canham received a call from his caseworker's supervisor indicating that the commitment for a replacement wheelchair had been rescinded. This call came after Mr. Canham had been fitted with a new battery-powered chair at the Foothills hospital and told that it needed a few modifications and it would be his. My questions today are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why is the WCB going back on its commitment to help this injured worker?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge in front of me on this specific item. I assume that our department has probably been contacted about this particular issue, and if so, I'll certainly be glad to check on it, and perhaps then the answer is involved in some of the communication.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Mr. Canham has been, in his words, a prisoner in his own home for two months, when will he get the wheelchair he needs, the chair promised by the president and CEO of the WCB?

MR. DUNFORD: Again, Mr. Speaker, we'll have a look at whatever documentation we have, and certainly if there's anything that the hon. member wishes to forward to my office that might help us in that search, we'd be very, very pleased to accept it. This is to my knowledge certainly our first contact with this situation, but I have to confess that I don't see all the mail that comes through our office.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Given that it will take an additional four to six weeks after the approval of his chair, when can Mr. Canham expect to get a speedy resolution to his problem?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we all know that question period appears on television right across the province, and it's very, very important that we as honourable members look competent and experienced with what we do, but I'd say to the hon. member: there's no reason that you have to stick to a script on your questions. You asked one question; you asked a supplementary. I tried to answer as honestly and as truthfully as I possibly can, yet it's as if you're not listening to what I'm saying. I don't mind questions at all. Question period should be a very open type of operation so that people can bring the government of Alberta to task.

I want to point out that what we're dealing with here today is the Workers' Compensation Board, that has the responsibility under a board of directors to provide its day-to-day operation. Now, if this particular gentleman has a real problem, then I think we should be discussing it, and I'm wondering why you didn't call me at 10 o'clock this morning, at 8 o'clock last night, or whenever you became aware of this if you were really honestly wanting to work with me to find a resolution to this. This is just bringing up a person's name – I hope you've cleared with him, because now you've put his name into the public record, and now we'll deal with it as best we can.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Myrna McCann

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to pay tribute to Myrna McCann, a very special Calgarian who passed away this spring. Myrna was a very exceptional woman who was an accomplished wife, mother, daughter, nurse, sister, aunt, and philanthropist who successfully lived her life as an example of one who gave selflessly to all who were fortunate to have been touched by her.

Thirty-eight years ago Myrna married Murray McCann, and together they nurtured a strong, old-fashioned marriage and raised five wonderful children. Grandy witnessed the miracle of 13 beautiful grandchildren, who became the centre of her universe. Myrna always took great pleasure in not only supporting but watching those around her enjoy life, whether children or adults. With the love of her immediate family surrounding her, she was fearless and strong right to the end.

Myrna McCann was truly one of God's special people, and though God has called her home, the precious love felt for her and the respect for her ideals will always live in the hearts of her family and many friends. Bon voyage, dear Myrna.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Darlene Johnson

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize one of my constituency's hardworking teachers. Mrs. Darlene Johnson, a grade 1 teacher at Bertha Kennedy school in St. Albert, was recently awarded a Prime Minister's award for teaching excellence. Mrs. Johnson was chosen from 215 nominations for her leadership, innovative teaching methods, and most importantly for her incredible commitment to children and to teaching. Mrs. Johnson's nomination was made by a group of St. Albert parents and is one of only 10 recipients in all of Alberta and one of only 65 in all of Canada.

The parents of the children of Bertha Kennedy have passed on to me that they are amazed at the enthusiasm and the learning achievements of their children in Mrs. Johnson's classroom, and they are constantly encouraged to become involved in their kids' education throughout the year.

Mrs. Johnson has been teaching for 20 years in Legal, Morinville, and now St. Albert. Mrs. Johnson is also the mother of three, and her husband, Laurent, is also an educator.

My constituents and I congratulate Darlene Johnson on her Prime Minister's award of teaching excellence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Augustana University College 90th Anniversary

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to recognize the 90th anniversary of Augustana University College in Camrose. Augustana University College, originally known as Camrose Lutheran College, was founded in 1910 by Norwegian pioneers who came to this country and settled in the Camrose area. Augustana is a liberal arts and sciences university whose mission is to prepare women and men intellectually, morally, and spiritually for leadership and service in church and society.

On Sunday, May 27, I was proud to bring greetings from the province to Augustana University College's 90th graduation ceremonies. In light of the Norwegian roots of the Augustana University College, the guest speaker for the 2001 graduation ceremony was His Excellency Ingvard Havnen, the Norwegian ambassador to Canada.

Augustana began offering university work in the fall of 1959 as an affiliated college of the University of Alberta and became a university college in 1985, when the first BA degree was granted. Augustana now grants baccalaureate degrees in the arts and the sciences and is expanding its facilities and programs to accommodate an enrollment of approximately 1,000 full-time students.

For dedicated service and educational leadership over 90 years Albertans say thank you and congratulations to Augustana University College.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Senior Citizens' Week

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week, June 3 to 9, is Senior Citizens' Week in Alberta. As the Official Opposition critic for Seniors I'd like to extend on behalf of my colleagues our deep gratitude and sincere thanks for the legacy seniors have given all Albertans.

In my many meetings with seniors across the province I've been told that what seniors want most today is that we recognize both past and future contributions, that the government policy walk the talk. Enough reports and studies, they want to see these plans come to fruition, and they want to be at the table, included in policy-making before it's a done deal. They'd like that the myth of seniors being responsible for high health care costs be dispelled, that the programs for seniors cut in the early '90s be restored, and that home care and housekeeping services be expanded. My thanks to all the seniors I've met and for their advice. I will keep working for them.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Darcy Jones

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'd like to give recognition to the brave and quick actions of a constituent and former student of mine, Darcy Jones of High River.

One evening some days ago Darcy discovered an intruder rummaging through the family van, which was located in the backyard of their family home. Because he'd been the victim of someone taking things from the van a few months before, Darcy demanded to know what the fellow was doing. The thief turned and fled down the alley with Darcy in hot pursuit. Darcy, who is a competitive mountain bike rider, caught up with the individual, who then pulled a knife. However, Darcy was able to subdue and control him until the RCMP arrived.

Thanks to Darcy Jones' quick action the thief has been charged with the murder of little Jessica Koopmans and is now safely behind bars.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Federation of Canadian Municipalities

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend the town of Banff hosted the Federation of Canadian Municipalities' 64th annual convention. By all accounts it was a tremendous success as over 1,600 elected municipal officials representing large and small, rural and urban municipalities from across Canada and several hundred other family members gathered in Banff to participate.

Under the theme A Municipal Odyssey the conference featured an impressive list of keynote speakers, and all who attended enjoyed warm Alberta hospitality among the spectacular beauty of our majestic Canadian Rockies.

Today I am proud to rise and recognize and congratulate the entire staff of the town of Banff, all 70 of them, who generously donated much time and energy in ensuring the success of the four-day convention. I would also like to recognize and thank entertainers Tom Jackson, Susan Aglukark, and Amanda Stott, who donated their time and put on a sensational concert raising money and awareness for affordable housing issues and suicide prevention. It truly was a weekend to be proud to be an Albertan and proud to be a Banff resident.

Please join me in congratulating all involved at the FCM for a job well done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Youth Options Program

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and recognize a wonderful program that operates in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. Youth Options aims to identify the needs of youth at risk of becoming involved in gang activity and then designs alternative programs of value to them.

Youth Options has been operating in Edmonton-Highlands for four years. Two staff members, Colleen Fidler and Lorne Demchuk, who are with us this afternoon, run a variety of programs giving youth in the area alternatives for recreational activity. Two examples of such activities include a summer golf program with professional mentors and an art program.

My commendations to Ms Fidler and Mr. Demchuk for the fine work they are doing in Edmonton-Highlands with Youth Options.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, as this is the last opportunity this week for recognitions, let me also add the following list of activities coming up. From May 28 to June 1 is Dutch Elm Disease Awareness Week. May 28 to June 3 is Safe Kids Week. May 31 is World No-Tobacco Day. June is Dairy Month. June is also Leukemia Awareness Month and Stroke Month. June 1 to 8 is Brain Injury Awareness Week. June 1 to 9 is National Transportation Week. June 3 to 10 is Environment Week. June 3 is also National Cancer Survivors Day. We've already heard that June 3 to 9 is Senior Citizens' Week. June 3 to 11 is Water Safety Week. Zeleni sviata, as observed in the Julian calendar, is also June 3. World Environment Day is June 5, and June 6 is Clean Air Day.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you have a purported point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

MS CARLSON: I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), which states "makes allegations against another member," in reference to an exchange in question period between myself and the Minister of Infrastructure. The minister made comments to me stating that I only pretended to protect the environment. While I don't have the Blues in front of me, that is certainly, I think, an inaccurate statement and an accurate reflection of what he said. It also would be I think appropriate under 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member."

Now, Mr. Speaker, had it been another member in this Assembly, particularly some of the newer members of this Assembly, they might not have paid that close attention this session, but certainly that particular rule doesn't apply to this member. He is the former Environment minister in this province and has been subject to many, many questions by myself, reviews in budget debates. I am on the record repeatedly since having taken the Environment critic portfolio in 1995, on questions in question period, on debates in the Legislature, on estimate debates, on motions that have to do with environmental protection, on points of order on that particular issue, on private members' statements, on recognitions. I think that certainly he stepped out of line today when he made those allegations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure on this point.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad you did not call it a point of order, because certainly this doesn't even come close to that qualification.

I always maintain that one needs to be judged more on their actions as opposed to what they say. While the hon. member is accurate in her summation inasmuch as she has on a number of occasions said things, that's true, but when you think about what she has said – for example, today there were nine questions basically around the cost of the facility at Swan Hills. The cost, Mr. Speaker.

Now, if in fact people are really concerned about the environment, really concerned, deeply concerned, want to protect the environment from harmful chemicals, I find it very strange that you would put a dollar value on it. The fact is that what the waste treatment centre at Swan Hills has done is protect the environment, and you really cannot put a dollar value on it. So to continually bring this up in the context of dollars, I have to question the integrity of the statement that they are anxious to protect the environment. I just find that very strange.

I can go back to another instance. About four years ago I was trying very hard to protect some areas in this province and more specifically the forest land use zones. Currently it's a policy, and the way it stands, you can run a bulldozer in a forest land use zone, but you cannot come in with a quad. To me that seemed very strange. So under a miscellaneous statutes act I wanted to put in a law that would have some teeth through the Forests Act, but the hon. member and her party would not agree to put that in. That was an action on my behalf to protect the environment. With all the verbiage they still did not accept it. So I stand on my first point: action speaks much louder than words.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on this point of order.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the first point that I would make is that the minister's points dealt more with the argument between the members than with the point of order, but I would refer you to section 23 (i). Clearly, in my view, to suggest that the opposition or any member merely pretends to do what they are saying they are doing is imputing "false or unavowed motives to another member."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Do any additional hon. members want to participate in this point of order?

The Blues say the following. When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asks the question, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure responds in this way:

Mr. Speaker, you know, I really find it quite a contrast when the hon. member that is just now asking the questions and is supposed to be the Environment critic pretends that they want to protect the environment . . . pretends I guess that this material doesn't exist and that we don't need to somehow destroy that material. The fact is that we don't profess to be able to operate that plant as efficiently and to the full capacity of the plant, and that is one of the reasons that as government we are trying to get out of it.

Now, the hon. member, assisted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, basically referred to Standing Orders 23(h) and (i).

I was hoping to get through the question period today and stand up at the end of the question period and congratulate all hon. members of the Assembly for the level of decorum and the civility, given the lengthy sittings of the past few days.

I would like to point out that the rules that we're talking about in Standing Orders are articulated in the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 525. "The use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden. Personal attacks, insults and obscene language or words are not in order."

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has certainly clarified her position on this question today, and I might point out that while not a model for the operation of question period, the minister's comments were part of the cut and thrust of the debate, and this is not a point of order.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to move that the written question appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain its place.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Bill 209
Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet)
Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin on Bill 209 today, I'd like to recognize and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly five health care practitioners from the Kidsafe Connection pediatric injury prevention team at the Stollery children's health centre here in Edmonton. They've come this afternoon to listen to the debate on Bill 209. They are Jackie Petruk, Kathy Nykolyshyn, Adele Dorey, Lori Balch, and Melody Cheung. We're pleased that they've joined us today for the debate, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to move Bill 209, the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, 2001.

My intention in putting this bill before the Assembly today is twofold. First, it is to protect children and youth under the age of 18 from head and brain injury while operating or riding a bicycle as a passenger, which in turn saves individuals and their families from needless suffering. Second, it's to save our health care system substantial cost through the prevention of injury, disability, and death due to bike-related accidents involving children and youth under the age of 18 who are riding bicycles without the protection of a helmet.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to express a special thank you to the hon. Minister of Transportation, who, through a number of meetings, guided me with his wisdom and strong support throughout the formation of Bill 209. I am also grateful to the minister's departmental staff for their assistance with the bill's content. I must admit that it has changed considerably since the first draft was written.

I also wish to thank and acknowledge Mrs. Jackie Petruk and staff from Kidsafe Connection and also Dr. Louis Francescutti, who in his many roles is the director of the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research. I'd like to thank them for their influence and inspiration in assisting with the provision of statistics and research for this bill.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to a number of colleagues who expressed an interest and either discussed their concerns, which you may hear about today, or voiced their support for the bill, which we'll hear about as well today. I would like to thank Kelly Nicholls from research and Shannon Dean from Parliamentary Counsel. I'd like to thank them both for their valuable assistance. I see that Kelly Nicholls is here as well to listen to the debate. I saw that she just walked into the Assembly, and I'd ask that she rise as well and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I'm speaking about a public concern for our children's safety. As summer approaches, their risk for injury dramatically increases. Outdoor activities are associated with significant risks because there are so many variables. As a responsible citizen or concerned parent we can take measures to decrease these risks and help prevent injuries. Bill 209 focuses on bicycle-related preventable injury to our children and our teens.

Bicycling is one of the most popular summer activities, and it's an enjoyable exercise for people of all ages. However, as with a number of fun outdoor activities, research has shown that there are risks associated with bicycling. In our province over the period of a year there are approximately 6,500 people who are admitted to emergency with bicycle-related injuries. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we can prevent some of the most serious injuries a cyclist can sustain, and that is those involving the head and the brain. It is commendable that we've worked hard to make our roads and our communities safe and prevent what accidents we can by enforcing measures which reduce preventable injury, but I think it's now time to take another step to assist with prevention.

There are measures available to us that have proved to be effective against traumatic injury suffered from bicycle accidents. Although it can be difficult to heal bones broken by falling off a bicycle, these injuries do eventually heal. A more severe reality lies in accidents which cause damage to the head and brain. These accidents are the most serious because the brain does not set like a broken arm. Traumatic brain and head injury stays with a person for the rest of their life, Mr. Speaker, an injury which might have been prevented if the person were properly wearing a bicycle helmet.

It is for this reason that I've brought forth Bill 209. Studies have shown the results that bicycle safety helmets greatly reduce the risk of preventable head and brain injury in bicycle-related accidents. It is not only my belief but the belief of numerous support groups and the concerned public that legislation is necessary. Studies have shown that by coupling legislation mandating safety helmets with education about their proven effectiveness, we will greatly increase the number of our children who wear their helmets and thereby decrease their potential to suffer such life-threatening injury.

This past long weekend many Albertans were enjoying the outdoors. People put away their ice skates, their skis, their snowboards and took out their bikes. That is because bike riding is fun for everyone in the family. They've changed considerably since you and I had our first bikes. Specialization has led to everything from racing bikes to mountain bikes. Bicycles are now highly technical machines that have a number of gears and added features to enhance the speed and performance of the bicycle and make them far more enjoyable to ride. No longer are bicycles the heavy, slow inventions with just one gear that you and I were lucky if we could ride up a hill. I watch in awe as people race down the street or on bike paths, and they just seem to go faster and faster. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that 90 percent of our young people ride bikes? It is the single most popular recreational sport activity of our children and youth in Alberta.

Because children are the most frequent bike users, it's a fact that children under the age of 18 are hospitalized with the highest incidence of bicycle-related injury. Not only can this be attributed to greater numbers of young riders, but it is a proven fact that the common behaviour of youth is to be just a little bit less cautious. That's because they believe they're more resilient to injury, but we know that every year in Alberta around 6,500 visits are made to emergency departments for bike-related injuries. Approximately 4,500 of those visits were made by children and teens under the age of 20.

Mr. Speaker, 82 percent of children who suffered major trauma were not wearing a helmet. I think that this should concern all of us. Statistics show that 70 percent of our young people between the ages of 13 and 17 do not wear a helmet while riding a bike. It's really quite alarming, that 70 percent. Most of the accidents which occur happen close to home, and very few bicycle-related accidents involve motor vehicles. Most accidents are caused by falling from a bicycle. Statistics show that a fall from just two feet can cause permanent brain damage, and a fall from a bike traveling only 20 kilometres per hour can cause death.

Approximately 75 percent of bicycle-related deaths involve head injuries which might have been prevented if the cyclist were properly wearing a helmet. Bicycle helmets have proven to reduce the risk of brain injury by 88 percent, head injury by 85 percent, and upper- and mid-facial injury by 65 percent. It is not always common knowledge about how effective they are in decreasing head and brain injuries, which is why I believe mandatory helmets for bicycle riders under the age of 18 is so important. By legislating young riders to wear safety helmets, it would create a greater awareness about injury prevention and encourage the compliance of young bicycle riders.

As bicycles are no longer what they used to be, Mr. Speaker, neither are the safety helmets that riders wear to protect their heads. In order for the bike helmet to meet safety requirements, it must go through internationally recognized tests which are approved by the Canadian Standards Association. Helmets are now lightweight, cool, easy for the rider to wear, and they're not expensive. CSA-approved helmets can be bought for $15 to $20.

The brain is the most important organ for us to protect from physical trauma. It is important to note that you do not have to be riding your bike at a high speed or fall from a great height to have a head or brain injury. Traumatic brain injuries can and do occur with biking accidents that to some may have seemed quite minor, and that is because three separate processes work to injure the brain. There's bruising, tearing, and swelling. In an instant your life has been changed forever, and it will never be the same again, ever. This change is difficult, and you know, Mr. Speaker, the simple truth is that no one, absolutely no one, can predict accurately all of the outcomes. This leaves those who've been injured and their families between very high hopes and deep despair.

Every brain-injured case is different, Mr. Speaker. As I said earlier, you cannot repair injured brains like you can a fracture. The effect of each brain injury is very individualized. Sometimes young people with mild brain injuries suffer severe consequences in their daily lives, and more rarely some young people with a severe injury will have a relatively mild impairment, but either way the brain injury is forever. A child or teen with a minor impairment may be able to function at school, volunteer for community activities, have great friendships, and be very articulate. However, virtually every aspect of their life is affected, if even slightly, by the brain injury.

There is also some evidence that the natural aging process and impact on mental abilities are affected. In other words, even a mild impairment gradually worsens over the child's lifetime, and as I said, a brain injury is forever. So riding bikes may be fun, but there's also a great deal of risk involved, especially if your child or teen rides without wearing a helmet. Bike helmets go a long, long way to protecting your head from injury.

Traumatic brain and head injury has gathered the attention of many groups who support legislating bicycle safety helmets to reduce the amount of injuries sustained by riders. There are other jurisdictions in Canada and around the world who have experienced positive effects in both helmet compliance and reduction of brain injury because of legislation. Ontario has had mandatory legislation for riders under the age of 18 since 1995. British Columbia has had universal bicycle helmet legislation since 1996. These provinces were followed with helmet legislation in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Manitoba.

Extensive research and study has also come from Australia, which has had universal mandatory bike helmets for over 10 years. Their experience has proven the positive results of bringing forward this type of legislation. The analysis of injury data from Victoria, Australia, showed a large reduction, up to 51 percent in some regions, in the number of bicyclists killed or admitted to hospital with head injuries within the first 12 months of enforcement. This is a substantial decrease in head injuries from bicycle-related accidents. Injuries also fell even further in the second year, by 70 percent, which was concluded to be due to greater experience and public awareness about how the helmet should fit and how the chin strap is properly worn to truly prevent injury.

Study after study shows that helmets of any type which meet international standards, to which the CSA complies, can prevent head injury from falls and crashes when properly worn. The main barrier, often stated by medical professionals, is the lack of awareness of the potential benefits from helmets. Studies have shown that legislation appears to be the most effective tool in a promotional and educational campaign on helmet awareness and compliance.

Mr. Speaker, in the Capital health region we have a renowned pediatric trauma centre at the Stollery children's health centre. Kidsafe Connection is a pediatric injury prevention program which is supported by the Children's Health Foundation and the Alberta Children's Hospital Foundation. We also have the very distinguished Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research. Both centres have a wide network of community organizations and agencies who've worked collectively for a number of years on creating awareness about the seriousness of bike-related injuries for all age groups. They take pride and care in basing prevention strategies on clear evidence. The result has been that the efforts are focused on strategies which are known to be effective.

One injury prevention strategy with clear evidence for effectiveness is the use of bicycle helmets. Kidsafe sent an information package to all MLAs in this Legislature recently which showed that in a one-year period in Alberta, 6,430 people visited an emergency department for a biking injury and that 4,048 were children or teens, less than the age of 20. Of the overall visits, 442 were due to a brain or a head injury, and of those, 373 were intracranial injuries, 51 were fractures of the face, and 18 were fractures of the skull. Pretty serious, Mr. Speaker. Over the six-month summer season we have approximately 75 head injuries from biking per month.

There are over 40 groups in Alberta who've worked hard over the years on this important legislation. This legislation received an extraordinary response of 77 percent support through a scientific phone survey of Alberta parents. Mr. Speaker, this shows the public is concerned about child safety. They believe that a strong emphasis should be placed on taking the steps necessary to increase risk prevention and decrease the number of injuries.

Only half of all Albertans wear their helmets when they ride a bicycle. Those who don't are suffering 80 percent of the traumatic brain and head-related injuries, and the majority of these injuries occur in our young people. I consider the principle of bike helmets preventing head and brain injury to be useful and practical information for our young people and their families. More and more scientifically documented, solid, up-to-date information to support this principle becomes available every single day.

We must educate our children about health-enhancing behaviour through injury prevention strategies. The challenge is to teach them that they can stay healthy through the very simple practice of wearing a helmet while riding a bike. We need to empower our young people to shift from what is a destructive behaviour to one that is constructive. Good judgment in all areas related to bike riding should be encouraged.

Mr. Speaker, we also learned from the Minister of Health and Wellness that costs are continuing to increase dramatically in health care – a budget of 3 and a half billion dollars in 1995 will increase to $7 billion by 2002 – and it's imperative that we look at ways to increase the sustainability of the system. There's evidence that prevention of three severe head injuries would save the health care system a million dollars. Given that there are approximately 450 head/brain injuries mild to moderate to severe per year, the cost savings could well be in the range of $150 million per year.

I'd like to close by saying that Bill 209 is about the health and wellness of our children. It is about the high value we place on their well-being. It is about a desire and need for the protection of those under the age of 18 from bike-related injury, disability, and death through the use of a properly fitting helmet. Mr. Speaker, I happen to believe this is a step in the right direction, and I would ask all of my colleagues for their support of Bill 209.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 209, the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, 2001, and I would like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Cross for bringing this to the floor of the Legislature and for sponsoring this bill. It is a much-needed bill.

In this Assembly on March 31, 1999, the Minister of Transportation brought forward Bill 24 at that time. I am quoting from Hansard, where he said, "The act will also provide enabling legislation to deal by regulation with issues such as bicycle helmets and riding in the back of pickups." Now, on May 3, 1999, the then Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert brought in a couple of amendments to the bill, and certainly one of those was that people riding bicycles would have to wear helmets. Also, the second amendment was that people riding bicycles or as passengers on bicycles would also have to wear helmets. Unfortunately, both of those amendments, Mr. Speaker, were defeated that day. So here we are two years later still trying to get legislation passed to protect our children. This is a piece of legislation that I hope, in this particular instance, will be passed and we can move on.

Now, then, this is not precedent-setting legislation either, Mr. Speaker. For example, we legislated that people had to use seat belts when they were operating a motor vehicle or as a passenger in a motor vehicle. We legislated that people riding motorcycles or passengers on motorcycles had to wear helmets. We also have had special needs; for example, children under a certain age have to be strapped into their car seats. These all have to be approved types of helmets, car seats, whatever. That type of legislation was passed, and we have moved on. It has all been for the safety of Albertans.

As the hon. member had stated earlier, cycling is the number one activity. It is a very popular activity, particularly when we get co-operation from the weather. Of course, cyclists are exposed to many different risks, and certainly the types of risks have increased with the specialization in the design of bicycles that we have today.

Now, then, I don't know how many people in the Assembly realize that in Canada we have more bicycles than cars and that the number of bike sales has flattened out in this country and in this province. We saw recently where George's Cycle, a longtime establishment in Edmonton that has sold bikes and serviced bikes for many, many years, closed because the business isn't there as it once was. Yet even though the number of sales of bikes in this country has flattened out, the miles traveled by bicycle have increased greatly. Not only that, but we look at the reasons why there is a huge increase in the number of miles traveled by bicycles. We have people that use this mode of transportation not only for transportation but for fitness and certainly a very good form of fitness. As well, we have had a great increase in bicycles being used for communication, particularly in the cores of our major metropolitan areas. It is much easier to get around and quicker than taking a car or walking.

When we look at the causes of bicycle-related injuries, Mr. Speaker, we have to realize that only 2 percent of motor vehicle related deaths are bicyclists. Among the majority of those, the most serious injuries were to the head, so it certainly is important that bicyclists wear helmets.

As well, we look at statistics, and I quote from the Bicycle Helmet Safety Institute:

Young riders most often are responsible for their crashes, and then probable responsibility decreases with age. Older riders more often aren't responsible for their crashes.

When we look at this, certainly with the lack of experience by younger riders and the lack of ability, we would expect more accidents of their own doing in that particular age group.

Now, as well, when we look at bike accidents, Mr. Speaker, many of these include the operator of the bicycle losing control of that bicycle. When they lose control and fall off, they might strike a fixed object, and they can also collide with another cyclist, a pedestrian, a motor vehicle, whatever. So when we are looking at these types of injuries and, again, where people are being thrown off their bicycles, we have to realize that wearing a bike helmet can reduce the risk of head injuries by 85 percent. So it is certainly a major point in the argument for people riding bicycles to wear helmets.

As well, Mr. Speaker, bicycles are considered vehicles on the road, and bicyclists have all the rights and responsibilities that drivers have. When we are looking at bicycle helmets, we are looking at a piece of equipment that certainly is there to protect the head. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross mentioned, there are CSA approved bicycle helmets. We also have other bike helmets that are approved. These are by ANSI and Snell, and of course all of these would have a sticker indicating that these helmets are approved.

Now, then, bike helmets are different helmets from, say, a hockey helmet. They are designed to absorb a single blow from large objects and usually at relatively high speeds. This can be a blow to the head from a car, from a collision with another person that's riding a bike, hitting their head on the pavement or striking their head against a curb. The bicycle helmet generally has an outer shell that is of a harder material, which will prevent the damage when scraping along pavement. All manufacturers of bike helmets certainly have the recommendation that if a cyclist is involved in a rather serious accident and the helmet does receive a heavy blow, that helmet should be discarded and a new one brought in.

It was also quite interesting in my research, Mr. Speaker, that in speaking with people that owned bicycle shops, one of the interesting points brought up was that bicycle helmets are mandatory when racing in the United States and are also mandatory in the Olympics. Those are very, very important instances where bike helmets are mandatory and certainly with some very top athletes. So if it's good enough for them, I think it's certainly good enough for our children.

When I look at this, I also would have liked to have seen Bill 209 be more extensive, that all people who ride bikes would have to wear helmets and that it wouldn't be an age issue at all. Now, then, the reason I say that, Mr. Speaker, is that as parents we have a tremendous responsibility. We have the role of mentor and model, and certainly if children see that we are not wearing helmets, then of course the first argument they're going to raise is: well, you don't wear one, so why should I?

As well, another statistic that I happened to dig out of the Bicycle Helmet Safety Institute is that when we look at deaths with cyclists, deaths of older bicyclists are an increasing problem. Seventy-one percent of 1999 bicycle deaths were riders 16 years and older. This compares with [only] 32 percent of bicycle deaths in 1975.

So we are having certainly an increase in the number of deaths of older riders and, again, a statistic that I think should be taken into consideration and should at some point be made part of this bill.

When we look at the need for bicycle helmets, this has been recognized by many groups in the province. The owner of United Cycle here in Edmonton had indicated to me that there were over 10,000 helmets that have been made available in northern Alberta. These have been made available by the regional health authorities, by the Capital health authority, by the Royal Alexandra hospital Tour de la Sante, and free helmets in this program go out to inner-city children that do participate. As well, in Edmonton we do have Sport Central, an organization that is comprised of volunteers who supply free sporting equipment to underprivileged children here in the city, and this includes bicycles.

Now, as well as supplying bicycles free of charge to underprivileged children, one of the conditions that those children must make when they get a bike from Sport Central is that they will accept a helmet that goes with the bicycle. They go one step further and make the children promise that they will wear those helmets when they're operating their bicycles.

As well from the Bicycle Helmet Safety Institute, they had tracked what happens with the helmet use rates when we do have legislation and when we don't. In 10 instances where people had instituted the mandatory use of helmets, they saw a jump in the usage of helmets in nine of those cases, and in only one of those cases did the use of bicycle helmets decrease.

Certainly, as well, Mr. Speaker, the bicycle industry recognizes the importance of safety equipment. They fully support mandatory use of bike helmets, and they feel it is only one step in the right direction. Again in my discussions with the owner of United Cycle here in Edmonton, he was involved with the Capital health authority and the Royal Alexandra Tour de la Sante, and as part of that program what they did was they went out and they addressed groups of children about the importance of wearing bike helmets. The program had a doctor from the regional health authority talking about the number of instances where he has seen children come into the hospital with many injuries and how many of those injuries were to the head. When the owner of United Cycle got up to speak, they said: well, what are you doing here? He said: I'm here to put that doctor out of business. He said: if you wear the right type of equipment, certainly the incidence of injury is going to be drastically reduced. So I think that is a good model for this bill. We're here to put the doctors out of business when it comes to dealing with bike injuries. Certainly the mandatory use of bike helmets is a step in the right direction.

Now, as well, industry in realizing its role realizes that people are not wanting to go out and purchase one helmet for when they're cycling, one for when they're on their skateboards, or when people are on in-line skates or riding scooters. So, Mr. Speaker, the industry has gone to a great deal of expense to look at a helmet which will be able to be used in many different sporting disciplines. These helmets are now becoming available.

Now, the minimum cost of a helmet is in the range of $10 to $15. Of course, those helmets must be CSA approved in Canada, and there are many, many different brands out there. So access to helmets is certainly not an argument as to why people would not use bike helmets.

Now, then, as well, Mr. Speaker, when we look at research, certainly a lot of research has gone into injuries that have been as a result of bicycle accidents. We do have a far better understanding of head injuries, and especially with the game of hockey these days we have a much better understanding of the long-term effects of concussions. There just is so much more consumer awareness that is available to society today. When we look at this, we look at initiatives that are currently under way by Safety City, by United Cycle, by Sport Central, by the Grey Nuns hospital, by Tim Hortons, by our Capital health authority, and there are so many groups that are promoting and certainly wanting mandatory bike helmets to protect our children.

You know, there is such a growing body of scientific evidence. It has established patterns in injury, and the patterns are highly predictable. There are, Mr. Speaker, somewhere in the neighbourhood of 100 Canadian children who die each year as a result of bicycle accidents, and the majority of these are because of head injuries.

So what I would like to do in closing is once again congratulate the member for bringing Bill 209 forward, for sponsoring that bill here in the Legislature, and I would certainly urge all members of the Assembly to support this legislation. I think it is far overdue.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for this opportunity to speak in favour of Bill 209, the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act.

First of all, I'd like to thank my colleague from Calgary-Cross for caring about our children and for presenting this bill.

I believe that Bill 209 will be an important piece of legislation for Alberta. Laws regarding the use of bicycle helmets are being practised worldwide and in Canada, Mr. Speaker. There are many statistics which clearly show that bicycle helmets help to prevent head injuries and save lives. There is also equally clear evidence that legislation making helmets mandatory makes a difference. Bill 209 will make a difference in this province by preventing head and brain injuries. In many surveys that I have conducted in my constituency of Red Deer-North, it was clear that although no one wants another law in their face, it is more important to protect the children of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, bicycling is a worldwide activity and an important means of transport for millions of people. Worldwide bicycle sales have grown far more rapidly than car sales over the last 20 years, so the number of new bicycles produced is now three times the number of new cars. The same can be said for our province: bicycle sales in Alberta have increased over the last decade, and this has led to an increase in cycling traffic on our provincial roads and highways. Every day people all across this province use their bicycles to get to work, to get in shape, or simply to relax. As the Member for Edmonton-Glenary stated, we have more bicycles than cars.

Mr. Speaker, bicycle riding is not risk free any more than other modes of transport are risk free. Excellent evidence from all over the world consistently shows that bicycle riders who go without head protection are roughly three times more likely to suffer head injuries in a crash than those who wear a helmet. Also, a bicyclist who sustains a head injury is 20 times more likely to die than a rider who suffers other kinds of injuries. Many of my constituents have told me stories about how a helmet saved them from very serious injury.

Mr. Speaker, the notion that pedal cyclists should wear protective helmets was once seen as ridiculous. Helmet use for motorcycle riders was seen as the smart thing to do. Motorbikes were perceived as fast and dangerous machines, and crashing a motorbike carried a clear and undeniable risk of death or injury. Therefore, opposition to helmet use for motorcyclists has always been relatively muted and based on arguments for civil liberty rather than on the effectiveness of helmets.

On the other hand, pedal bikes have long been perceived as relatively slow. Falls and collisions are perceived as mere inconveniences mostly suffered by children. The freedom to have one's hair flying in the wind was seen as much more important than the small risk of head impact. Mr. Speaker, these perceptions have changed as people are recognizing the seriousness of head and brain injuries.

One of the first evaluations of the effectiveness of bicycle helmets was conducted in Adelaide, Australia, in 1984. This study showed a consistent and statistically significant relationship between helmet use and reduced severity of head injury. The authors of this study estimated that the risk of death from head injury was three times higher for an unhelmeted rider than for a rider wearing a helmet of poor protective quality and 10 times higher for an unhelmeted rider compared to one wearing a high-standard helmet. This study provides important support for the moves that were already under way at that time in Australia to increase the use of protective helmets by bicyclists.

Partly based on the findings of this study and others like it, a law requiring that approved safety helmets be worn by all bicyclists came into effect in the Australian state of Victoria in 1990. This was the first such regulation in the world, Mr. Speaker. Several studies were launched in the wake of this Australian legislation to see what kind of effect it had on reducing injuries to cyclists. The research highlighted the fact that two years after the introduction of the helmet-wearing law in Victoria, there were 70 percent fewer cyclist casualties with serious head injuries in collisions compared with 28 percent with other injuries.

Mr. Speaker, researchers concluded that the introduction of the law was accompanied by an immediate and large reduction in the number of bicyclists with head injuries. This appeared to have been achieved through a reduction in the number of bicyclists involved in crashes plus a reduction in the risk of head injuries of bicyclists involved in crashes. Clearly, this law worked for the state of Victoria, and similar legislation can work for the people of Alberta.

In Canada several provinces have introduced bicycle helmet legislation over the last few years in an attempt to make cycling safer. There are many different types of regulations, Mr. Speaker. Some provinces have made the use of a helmet mandatory for all age groups, whereas other provinces have regulated helmet use based on the age of the cyclist. In '96 the province of B.C. became the first North American province or state to require bicycle helmet use by riders of all ages on public roads. B.C. had some serious statistics to contend with. In a 10-year period ending in '95, 137 cyclists died in B.C. In the province about 75 percent of all bicycling fatalities and two-thirds of hospital admissions for bicycling-related injuries involved head trauma. These statistics motivated the legislators in B.C. to take action. With several studies indicating the effect of helmets on lowering head injuries, the province put forward legislation to make them mandatory for all ages when riding on a public roadway. A study conducted three years after the legislation came into force showed that it had a dramatic impact on the number of British Columbians who used helmets when cycling. With more British Columbians wearing helmets, the province has seen a marked decrease in the number of head injuries related to cycling, and the legislation has been considered successful.

The provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have also followed the lead of B.C. and have mandatory helmet laws for all ages. Both of these maritime provinces responded with legislation after completing research similar to the kind done in B.C. that revealed that helmets could save lives and reduce head injuries in their provinces.

Ontario addressed mandatory legislation in a different way. Their government's bicycling helmet law of '97 does not apply to all age groups like in B.C., Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. In Ontario if you are under the age of 18, you are required by law to wear an approved bicycle helmet when traveling on any public road. Cyclists over 18 are encouraged to wear helmets for their own safety but are not required by law as in B.C., Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. Ontario's research showed that helmets can be extremely effective in preventing head injuries.

The only other province that has a mandatory helmet law in Canada is Manitoba. Manitoba's law states that only children under the age of five must wear bicycle helmets when on public roads.

The World Health Organization has also entered into the debate surrounding the use of helmets for cycling. In 1991 the organization launched the World Health Organization helmet initiative. The goal of this organization is to promote the use of bicycling helmets worldwide by publicizing their proven effectiveness to prevent brain injuries when cycling. WHO, the World Health Organization, also works in co-operation with several jurisdictions and groups around the world to promote the use of cycling helmets through various program initiatives and legislation development.

Now, finally, Mr. Speaker, this debate has come to Alberta. Several groups have been key in bringing this debate forward. Health organizations, police services, and many others have been working to add Alberta to the list of provinces and jurisdictions around the world that have helmet legislation. Several of our physicians representing groups like the Sport Medicine Council of Alberta and the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research have also spoken in favour of this needed legislation. They all have noted the benefits of wearing a helmet and are looking to the Assembly for some sort of legislation regarding this issue.

I have made references to many statistics in my presentation so far, Mr. Speaker. I've mentioned various injury statistics and fatality numbers from across Canada and overseas, but Alberta has its own dire statistics to consider. On average, over 6,000 Albertans visit our emergency rooms with cycling injuries every year. In 1999 it was recorded that 461 of these visits were specifically for head injuries. It is time for our province to address this reality and move to make cycling in this province safer. I believe Bill 209 would do this.

A mandatory bicycle helmet law in Alberta for people under 18 would also complement the findings of the health summit of 1999. One of the key recommendations of the various stakeholders of the summit was that our province should put more emphasis on prevention of injury through the promotion of healthy habits. As a wealth of evidence has clearly demonstrated, a healthy and safe choice when cycling is the use of a helmet. Bill 209 would work to advance the findings of the summit and also work to save lives and prevent injuries.

Mr. Speaker, legislation regarding the mandatory use of helmets for minors also happens to be the wish of the people of Alberta. The Alberta children's survey of 1997 showed that 77 percent of parents want this kind of legislation for their children and that 66 percent of all people in our province supported bicycle helmet legislation for all Albertans regardless of age. Undoubtedly you've heard these statistics in this debate already. I'm sure that you will hear them again. The point must be made that Albertans want this sort of legislation, and I believe it is the duty of this Assembly to provide it.

This government has made many laws to make traveling in our province safer. We have rules about how fast you can travel on our highways or how you can pass another vehicle on Alberta roads. We have laws that make it safer for our children to take the bus to school or for them to use crosswalks at intersections. There are regulations regarding baby seats and also seat belt laws. All of these laws and several others help to make getting around in Alberta as safely as possible a little easier to accomplish. Bill 209 is no different from these other laws.

I have one more statistic to offer this Assembly, Mr. Speaker. I think it will help to clarify the urgency of this bill. Albertans under the age of 18 have the highest rate of serious injury and death from bicycle accidents in this province. Making it law to wear a helmet when riding a bike will help to lower the number of deaths and injuries from cycling in this province. This bill will save lives and prevent injury.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should be debating a mandatory cycling helmet law for all Albertans. Yes, it is important to ensure that our youth are wearing helmets to protect them, but we should also ensure that everyone in this province is provided with protection. With that said, I would like to say that I believe Bill 209 is a good start.

There are so many good reasons to support this bill. We certainly have enough statistical information to make an informed judgment on whether or not this bill should become law. The numbers tell it like it is. Helmets save lives and prevent serious injury. We can also point to how similar legislation has been successfully applied in other jurisdictions in Canada and overseas. As lawmakers we always try to be careful to put legislation in place that will work. This sort of legislation has been proven to effectively work. Bill 209 will work for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, there are many mothers and fathers who will appreciate this legislation that will enforce their constant nagging about wearing a helmet – Mom and Dad are not cool, and a helmet would ruin the hairdo. I wish I could have used the authority of the law to help me enforce this safety issue with my children when they were teenagers.

I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have to admit that in speaking in second reading of Bill 209, I take a certain perverse delight in seeing a government member bringing forward a bill that in fact reflects exactly an amendment that was brought forward by a Liberal member several years earlier, although I have to admit that when the previous Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert did bring forward that amendment, the government defeated it on a voice vote. But I notice from a standing vote taken later in the same afternoon that the proposing member was in fact in the House, so I'm hoping that at the time her colleagues were defeating our amendment, she in fact was supporting it, seeing as she now brought forward a bill that's exactly the same. As I said, a perverse delight.

Speaking to Bill 209, I've actually had a really interesting time with this bill. I went to visit one of my schools last Friday. We got into discussing how a law is created, and I brought forward the proposition that's contained in Bill 209. We had quite a rigorous discussion in the class. This is with room 15 in John A. McDougall school. This is a mixed 5 and 6 class. It turned into a great discussion, and we attracted other people from the school who came in to participate or at least to observe what we were doing as we worked our way through what we believed would be the best proposal to have in the legislation. In fact, earlier today I did table a follow-up letter that the class sent me in which they were detailing the decisions that we had come to last Friday.

When we first looked at the issue, it was a question of: is having a bicycle helmet for people 18 and under a good idea? Yes, indeed, there was very quick consent and support for that being a good idea, and the kids were more than willing to accept it. That was instantaneous. Well, why? They agreed that it wouldn't prevent accidents, but it would mean that people wouldn't get hurt as badly when they had an accident on their bicycle.

Almost immediately the class was questioning: well, if it's good for people under 18 to be wearing a bicycle helmet, then why wouldn't it be equally good for people over 18 to be wearing a bicycle helmet? Good point, said I. They came to the conclusion that there should be additional legislation or an amendment to this bill that bicycle helmets be mandatory for adults as well. Actually, they go further than that and say that everybody should have to wear a helmet, so that would be under 18 and over 18 and everybody else. Maybe that means politicians as another group.

Now, John A. McDougall school is a school that's in the centre of Edmonton, and we do face some financial challenges there. Certainly the issue came up very quickly about where the students could get helmets. Would it be possible that every time you bought a bike, a helmet came with it for free? This is an issue for students attending this school and certainly some of the other young people that are in Edmonton-Centre. We talked about it a bit, and there was an understanding that, well, no, it wasn't likely that there would be free helmets. Although there are different places that may assist with the purchase or make reasonably priced ones available, still, 20 to 40 bucks is a significant expenditure for many of the students in the class, and they were very aware of that. They were conscious that if in fact a law were passed that bike helmet usage was mandatory, they would then be in a position that they'd be breaking the law if they rode their bikes without a helmet, and they didn't want to be in that position and were actually a little concerned about supporting a law that would then turn them into lawbreakers, in effect.

I think that that is an area that needs to be looked into. It's not the mandate of those of us sitting in the Assembly today to be addressing that issue, but I think it's something we certainly need to be doing as leaders in our community: to be looking for those connections, to be encouraging the private sector and other agencies that may be able to help in this area.

The kids are suggesting that if you can't afford a helmet, then a store could be set up where you could buy a used helmet or trade for one. The trading for one is kind of interesting, where you could sort of trade a skateboard for a bicycle helmet or something like that. So they had some really innovative ideas, and you can sense how exciting the discussion got as we really started to work with what was possible here. There are some good suggestions, I think.

Then we got into what would be reasonable punishment for someone who didn't obey a mandatory helmet law. In the beginning there were suggestions of some pretty stiff fines. These students took this very seriously. If there was to be a mandatory helmet law, then to not wear a helmet, you'd be breaking the law, and they felt there should be a significant punishment involved. We started out talking of fines that were in the $500 to $600 range. Given that earlier I had commented that a $20 helmet could be difficult to secure, with a $500 to $600 fine, put in that context, you can see the importance that the students placed on following this law.

We tried a couple of different combinations of what was possible and what was truly a deterrent, and at one point one of the students suggested that their bike be taken away, that they wouldn't be able to use their bike for a period of time. Instantaneous response from the rest of the class. They were horrified that someone would not allow them to use their bikes for a period of time, and we recognized, all of us, that that was probably a pretty good deterrent if it had such a strong reaction from the students.

In fact, when the students wrote back to me, they said that if you don't wear a helmet, then you should have your bike taken away for seven days. So they would lose the use of their bikes for seven days if they weren't wearing their helmets. If there was a second time that there was a violation, you would have to pay a fine of $20 to $50, which is a pretty significant amount of money. The class asked me to bring this forward on their behalf, which I've been very pleased to do, and to support Bill 209, which I'm also very pleased to do.

So I'd like to thank the member who proposed the bill for giving me the opportunity to work a really interesting democracy lesson into the classroom. It was really a great experience for all of us. They've taken it very seriously, and I hope the member will take very seriously the suggestions the class has made.

We here in Alberta – you gotta love us – struggle with laws that try and put any kind of mandatory restraint on us. Certainly many of us are old enough to remember the battle around the seat belt laws, motorcycle helmet laws, a number of other times where there's been an attempt to say: for your own good you should do such-and-such. There's the countering argument that adults have a right to be stupid if they want to. Yes, they do. And, no, we don't want to mandate every single activity in human existence. But as the years have gone on, we have now amassed enough data that we can look and go: yeah, you have the right to be stupid on your own, but you don't have the right to be stupid on your own when it's going to cost everybody else a bunch of money, particularly when it's entirely preventable.

We have been collecting quite a bit of information and opinions that were sent in to us. I was pleased to have some response from my constituents coming through a question on my web site, I think. This is from Calvin and Erin Daling, who wrote to me asking that I support this private member's bill. The two of them, in fact, would "support a law requiring all Albertans to wear a bike helmet." They felt, particularly in the teen population, that due to peer pressure kids don't wear helmets, and they felt that this was a very important safety issue and suggested that Alberta "follow B.C.'s example in enforcing helmet use."

They raised the issue that they didn't feel that their health care dollars should be going to pay to repair the injuries of people who didn't do anything to help themselves. They also raised the issue of insurance rates, which globally affect everybody when you've got a high insurance premium based on the actuarials because people are getting into accidents and costing the health care system a lot and costing the insurance industry a lot. Eventually that filters down to everyone, and everyone is paying higher insurance rates. So I appreciate the interest that my constituents took, and there's one example of the kind of e-mails that I was getting.

I think we also all received the Stollery children's health centre pediatric intensive care unit letter on bicycle injuries in children being preventable and signed by a number of doctors. The Member for Calgary-Cross had also mentioned the Kidsafe Connection and also a program through Capital health, the child health program. Again, I think we all received that. Lots of good information. We dug up some information through the Bicycle Helmet Safety Institute; also lots of information there supportive of bicycle helmet usage and stacks of statistics on how it has reduced injury rates and lowered hospital visits, et cetera. The Member for Red Deer-North has already gone through a number of those statistics.

I also received some information from groups and individuals who are not in favour of mandatory helmet usage. Their argument with making helmet use mandatory is that people just can't be bothered, and therefore they don't ride their bikes at all and they miss out on the health benefits of cycling. One person in particular, Jeremy Clayton, is quite adamant and sent me a number of different web site downloads from other groups that were putting forward this same argument and other statistics that had been gathered.

We had the Victoria, Australia, example raised earlier showing a reduction in serious injuries with helmet usage. In fact, some of the information that Mr. Clayton brings forward was talking about the same studies exactly: yes, but there are fewer people now that use their bicycles down there because people won't wear a helmet. There were a number of examples: women wouldn't wear a helmet because it mussed up their hair, some things like that. I appreciate that they are investigating people's actual reaction to this and saying that these were the reasons why people said they wouldn't wear helmets and therefore under a mandatory regime they wouldn't ride their bicycles.

I think the issue for us here is not so much that we won't have a mandatory helmet law because, gosh, people won't put a helmet over their hair, and therefore they won't ride bikes. I think the point for us to be working with here is about addressing those issues where people won't use their helmets. We should have a mandatory helmet usage law here. In fact, it should include those over 18, even politicians. Then we talked about working with the other issues that seem to cause people some hesitation in supporting such a law.

The other factor, as I stated earlier, around mandatory helmet usage is the cost and some people seeing the cost of the helmets as a barrier to them. We do have programs in Edmonton like Sport Central, which is a nonprofit organization which collects and repairs and spruces up used sporting equipment which is then given away to those that are in need of it. Actually, CBC Radio right now has been running about a two-week program to encourage people to bring used sporting goods in to them. I think it's possible to work with groups like that and to encourage them to be providing helmets along with the bikes.

There's also a group that does the Tour de la Sante out of the Royal Alex hospital, which was started by a doctor that, in fact, is no longer practising there. Some of the students that I met with at John A. McDougall school in fact participate in that Tour de la Sante, and they are given helmets when they go to participate in that, which is very helpful to those kids. So they do get access to a helmet that way.

The other group that I got information from that was not supportive of mandatory helmet laws was Le Monde a Bicyclette, Citizens on Cycles. They have essentially the same argument. They are lobbying for better bike paths and being able to put your bike on the metro or on the buses and transport it that way. They've got some very thorough suggestions on increasing bicycle usage. They have the same argument as Mr. Clayton had assembled from other sources, that helmets preclude people actually cycling. Their aim was to get more people cycling. Therefore, they didn't want to see mandatory helmet legislation. As I say, I think that with a bit of creativity and some will power and elbow grease, we can address those issues.

I have gone over the suggestions from my class, and I did send a copy of the letter over to the Member for Calgary-Cross. I have gone over much of the in-favour-of literature that I received, and some of the information that was not in favour of it, but I think those objections are surmountable.

I appreciate that the member did in fact provide a legacy for my colleague the previous Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert by following through on the amendment she had proposed that would have included mandatory helmet usage in the Traffic Safety Act, Bill 24 in 1999. I appreciate that, and I'll be sure to be sending her the Hansard so that she knows she's been immortalized that way.

I thank the member for following through on this issue. She feels very strongly on it. As well, I'd like to recognize the staff members who worked on this and others who assisted her. I think it's a worthy idea and one that we should all be supporting and following through on.

With that, I thank you very much for the opportunity to speak.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of Bill 209, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Speaker, on May 11 the Capital health authority and the Kidsafe Connection released a study that found that only half of Alberta bicyclists wear a helmet. It also found that adults wear helmets only 29 percent of the time when biking. This statistic is why I'm standing to speak in favour of Bill 209.

AN HON. MEMBER: Do you wear a helmet?

MR. AMERY: No, I don't have one on right now.

Bicycle riding is not a dangerous activity overall, but there are many dangers in areas where children ride bicycles. Mr. Speaker, we regulate a host of other things like seat belts, driving limits, motorcycle helmets, and many others. Why not bicycle helmets?

Mr. Speaker, children are the most vulnerable when it comes to head injuries. Even a simple tumble to the ground off a bicycle can critically injure a child when they knock their unprotected heads. Young children are especially at risk because of their stage of development not only skeletally but also cognitively. This limits their understanding and therefore influences how they behave in traffic situations. For instance, children may not understand stopping distances, believing that a car can stop as fast as a person. They typically do not develop a sense of danger until the age of eight and may not understand the threats that cars pose.

Mr. Speaker, bicycle helmets are critical safety equipment. A child need only fall from a height of two feet and hit his head to suffer traumatic brain injury. A cyclist riding at only 20 miles per hour, an average speed for a young cyclist, can be killed by hitting his or her head on a hard surface. With this in mind, it is in the best interests of all Albertans to wear a helmet when biking, and Bill 209 is in the best interests of all Alberta children.

Mr. Speaker, here in Canada head injuries account for 75 percent of all deaths from bicycle injuries, and wearing a bicycle helmet reduces the risk of head injury by 85 percent and brain injury by 88 percent. Over 100 Canadians die each year from bicycle injuries, and children aged 5 to 14 account for one-third of these deaths. Cycling mishaps are the leading cause of hospital admissions for head injuries in children.

Whether children will voluntarily keep on wearing bicycle helmets has a lot to do with how insistent their parents are. Parents sometimes look the other way because they didn't have to wear helmets when they were kids, but there is more traffic and fewer sidewalks in many communities nowadays than when we were young. Today there are far more traffic dangers for children. Bill 209 is for those children whose parents need some backup in enforcing bicycle helmet usage.

Mr. Speaker, if adults choose not to wear helmets, so be it. When an adult suffers head injury because they did not wear a helmet, it is a tragedy, but it is one of their own making. When a child suffers a head injury because they did not wear a helmet, we can't say that they should have known better. They are children. The onus is always on the adults to ensure that children are protected.

Mr. Speaker, while it has been well documented that helmets save lives and prevent serious head injuries, what has not been emphasized as much is that bicycle helmet legislation helps prevent injuries by ensuring that helmets are worn. Information from a study in the United States concluded that from 1984 to 1988 more than 40 percent of all deaths from bicycle-related head injuries were among persons less than 15 years of age. During the same years more than 75 percent of persons treated in emergency departments for bicycle-related head injuries were less than 15 years of age. It has been shown that the majority of Albertans support mandatory helmet use, and many, many Albertans support Bill 209.

There are vigorous campaigns to educate Albertans to wear helmets when biking, but still, Mr. Speaker, it does not ensure that helmets are on the heads of every Alberta child. Bill 209 will ensure that the children have no choice but to protect their heads. Information from the United States study I cited previously found that legislation mandating the use of bicycle helmets effectively increased helmet use, particularly when combined with an educational campaign. Education often facilitates behavioural change. However, education alone is only so effective. Laws mandating helmet use supplement and reinforce the message of an educational campaign, requiring people to act on their knowledge.

Mr. Speaker, many members may be asking if legislation can really reduce the number of bicycle head injuries. I would answer an emphatic yes. Let us look at a simple example. When motorcycle helmets were universally enforced as law, the death rate from motorcycle accidents in Canada fell from 15 per 10,000 in the 1960s to 6 per 10,000. We now look back at the debate with thoughts of: what were we arguing about? It is now considered common sense to wear a motorcycle helmet, and I am sure that in the future we will look back and remember so profoundly as to bike riding without a helmet and shudder at our recklessness.

Mr. Speaker, biking is a fun sport that children of all ages enjoy doing. Here in Canada our biking season is not as long as some would like and some would want, but we enjoy it while it lasts. As the traffic increases and the dangers multiply, it is time that we ensure and encourage that young Albertans always ride with protected heads.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all hon. members to support Bill 209. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a few comments on Bill 209 this afternoon. It's certainly a legislative initiative that is worth supporting. Bill 209, of course, would make it mandatory for all persons under 18, whether riding or a passenger on a bicycle, to wear an approved helmet.

This bill is certainly copycat legislation of the amendment that the Conservative government rejected from a previous member of this caucus. There was, of course, an amendment proposed, as was discussed earlier this afternoon, to the Traffic Safety Act, Bill 24, going back two years to 1999. Now, I was driving down the road with my seat belt on, and I was listening to CHED radio. The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross was discussing the bill on the public affairs program on CHED radio. I was listening with a great deal of interest. The first question that came to my mind was: how did that hon. member vote on that amendment that was before the Assembly in regards to Bill 24? How did other hon. members of this Assembly vote?

It's sort of curious that this is before the Assembly again. It's certainly an issue of public safety. We look at the statistics that have been provided by Kidsafe Connection – it was mentioned by other speakers previously – and the Children's Health Foundation of Northern Alberta. I'm grateful for this information because it's certainly been useful for this member, Mr. Speaker. In the two years since this government saw fit to defeat that amendment, a lot has happened. These are one year's statistics, so we can think that for two years there would be at least 12,000, perhaps 13,000 people visiting an emergency department as a result of a biking injury. Now, in the same two-year period since this government saw fit to defeat the amendment, there would have been at least 4,500 people hospitalized for biking injuries.

I guess I'm pleased that this legislation has come forward at this time, but where the government has been, where the private members have been who are not directly involved in Executive Council in regards to this issue, that remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker. Certainly the hon. Member for Calgary-East referenced statistics, and the hon. member is absolutely correct. I certainly appreciate the comments of the hon. member. Now, Capital health, the Stollery children's health centre, has issued an opinion on this to all members of the Assembly. The Canadian chair of the International Playground Association has also expressed an opinion on this. There is even a letter to the editor from a couple from Sherwood Park, and they express their opinion on the whole issue of mandatory bike safety.

It's a bill that we have to pass. I encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to support the initiative as presented today by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross. Now, also, I heard in the remarks that were expressed by Calgary-Cross to members of this Assembly earlier this afternoon the name Dr. Louis Francescutti, who is an individual who sees the importance of this legislation and how it will reduce our incidence of injury. The same doctor was referred to in Hansard two years ago and had the same opinion, but it was for whatever reason ignored. Hopefully, this was inadvertent, because if the amendment to this bill that was proposed in 1999 and now is coming forward as private member's Bill 209 was done on partisan issues, then I say shame. I say shame, because there have been a lot of people, whether they're adults or children, injured in this province as a result of bike injuries, and some of them, there's no doubt, would have been prevented with the use of bicycle helmets.

Now, realizing that this is for citizens of Alberta who are 18 and younger, perhaps this is only one step, and at some time legislation will come forward for the rest of the population.

At this time, in summing up, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members of the Assembly to promote healthy, active lives for all Albertans by supporting this private member's bill as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to rise and say a few words with respect to Bill 209, the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, 2001.

I think this Bill that's before us today is a very sensitive Bill. There are a lot of varying views out in the public. I think it's a serious Bill when we bring forward legislation that legislates a person against himself. I can see legislation being brought into this House that legislates to protect the public or an individual against the action of an individual, but this Bill actually goes in an area that is personal responsibility, when you as a lawmaker decide that the government knows better than you yourself know. So it's a very, very serious move that we're considering here today and it shouldn't be taken lightly.

Those are not my words. Those are the words from a debate which occurred in this Assembly on April 13, 1987, and the matter that was before the Assembly at that time was mandatory seat belt legislation that was brought in pursuant to Bill 9, the Highway Traffic Amendment Act, 1987.

The reason that I went back to this is that it seemed to me that the debate here with respect to Bill 209 sounded very similar to the debate that occurred at that time. In fact, I would encourage members to review Hansard, because the nature of the debate around this is indeed very, very similar, although I must say, in listening to hon. members here today, that the state of science has come a long way and that those who are proponents of Bill 209 have very good information indeed on which to base their support.

The other reason that I went back to 1987 to see what went on at that time was because I've had some personal experience with respect to seat belts and the mandatory use of seat belts. In my particular family over the last two years we've had three accidents, and in each case the vehicle involved was a total loss. In two of the accidents, in my estimation, either death or serious injury could have been the result and, in the other, serious injury. None of those particular consequences came to pass, and seat belts were the reason in each and every case.

One can ask the question whether or not seat belts are worn because it's the law or because occupants are educated. I think it's always a matter of education, but there are people in our society who are law-abiding and therefore do what the law asks them to do. I think it's very important that we as a Legislature recognize that fact, because ultimately the laws that we pass dictate whether or not we walk the talk.

I support this particular bill for three reasons, and those reasons are based on what I consider to be the sound criteria for a private member's bill. The first criterion is that the bill must propose something that is intended to improve public good without adversely imposing significant burden on individuals. Secondly, the bill must have the potential to fulfill its intent, and the bill must outline specific guidelines that will result in the intention of the bill being fulfilled. The third crucial characteristic is that it should, to a reasonable extent, reflect the values and beliefs of constituents and stakeholders. In my estimation, Mr. Speaker, this particular bill, Bill 209, matches and meets each of the three criteria.

Bill 209 will save lives and prevent injury. Specifically, it will protect Alberta's children, our most vulnerable group and our most valuable asset. It will help keep our kids safe and ensure that the lives of families across the province aren't needlessly touched by tragedy.

In addition, mandatory bicycle helmets for minors would reduce the 75 emergency room visits owing to head injuries that occur on average over the summer months in Alberta, representing a cost saving to Albertans at many levels. Implicit in the objective of saving lives is the goal of saving needlessly spent health care dollars. We are continually attempting to ensure that our dollars are spent wisely and that they go further, and in my estimation this particular bill will assist in that goal. Treating head injuries from bicycle accidents has a price tag, and it's a very large one. Head injuries demand the use of specialized medical technology and the specialized skills of doctors, nurses, and paramedics. It's estimated that the lifetime health care costs for a child with head injuries, including intensive care and long-term care, is somewhere between $1 million and $1.5 million. That is taxpayer money and is money that could be better spent, particularly if we can avoid those particular injuries occurring at all.

Others have gone into some detail on the statistics with respect to bicycle helmets in other jurisdictions and the benefits of them. I think it suffices to say that I share the statistical evidence that has been put forward, and I would encourage members to support this bill.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to enter the debate on Bill 209 as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Cross. I support this bill on the grounds that I believe it'll save the health and the lives of many of Alberta's children. Too many children go to the hospital with brain injuries sustained during a bicycle accident. Passing this bill I believe will reduce the number of children who go to our hospitals and will keep them out on their bicycles having fun, where they belong.

It's no secret that people should wear bicycle helmets if they are to be safest when riding a bicycle. Accidents happen to even the most experienced and controlled riders. The unexpected happens all the time, and in a split second a rider could find himself or herself flat on his back on the sidewalk with his head lying open. When such accidents occur, having a helmet on significantly reduces the chances of brain injury. The statistics are quite clear on this, Mr. Speaker. Wouldn't it therefore be better if all of us had a helmet on when accidents like that happen?

Let's look at some of the statistics for one moment. Bicyclists without bike helmets hospitalized with head injuries are 20 times more likely to die. In 1999, 461 people went to Alberta's hospitals with cycling-related brain injuries. In the United States, where now 15 states and many communities have enacted bike laws, 98 percent of cyclists who were killed in bicycle accidents were not wearing helmets. The death rates of those in U.S. bicycle accidents are highest in the 13- to 16-year-old age bracket, Mr. Speaker. Children aged 14 and under are five times more likely to be injured in a bicycle-related crash than older riders. Among children 14 and under, more than 80 percent of bicycle-related fatalities are credited to the behaviour of the cyclist. The statistics show and are for the most part unequivocal that while kids like to ride bikes, they are by no means professionals and should be protected by the law. Most professional cyclists, by the way, wouldn't dream of hopping on their cycles without a helmet.

For those who think it is acceptable to let their children ride their bicycles without helmets on the neighbourhood streets in front of their house, consider this statistic: 59 percent of bicycle deaths among children under the age of 13 occur on minor roads.

Bicycle helmets reduce head and brain injuries by more than 85 percent, meaning that if an accident were to occur and the rider has a bike helmet on, he or she will be less likely to suffer an injury.

It is recorded that in the United States alone universal use of bicycle helmets by children aged four to 15 could prevent between 135 and 155 deaths as well as up to 45,000 head injuries and as many as 55,000 scalp and facial injuries.

The conclusion, Mr. Speaker, is obvious. Bicycle helmets prevent harm and save lives. Yet when we consider all of these statistics, it is saddening to note that more than 40 percent of all riders have never worn a helmet. When looking at these statistics, I have to respectfully disagree with those who argue that it should be the choice of the rider to wear or not wear a bicycle helmet. While there are many issues concerning the freedom of people to choose how they would like to act – and of course legislators have to always be cognizant of these arguments – in the name of good governance we have a duty to make legislation when an issue of significant public interest is at stake. A bicycle helmet law is justifiable, in my opinion, because it will prevent Alberta's children from accidental harm.

This is similar to the seat belt laws which the Minister of Gaming has just referred to. For example, consider that in Alberta we require drivers to obtain a licence before they can operate an automobile. We do this not only in the name of public interest but also in the personal interest of the individual driver. They would be endangering themselves by being on the road unprepared. Mr. Speaker, in my submission a bike helmet serves the same purpose. Just as we don't like to see people endangering themselves on the road, we shouldn't like to see it being done on bicycles either. Further, we've always had laws that oversee the actions of our children. These laws are designed not to control children but rather to teach them to become responsible citizens that are respectful of themselves, as they are of others.

Bill 209 should be seen in this light. As a comparison, again consider seat belt laws in Alberta and across Canada. Everyone in this House would agree that by and large seat belts save lives. Before the laws were enacted, it was not considered essential to wear seat belts. Now, after the implementation of the seat belt laws, people don't think twice about putting their seat belt on. It's become second nature, a part of the process of driving that most of us don't even think about; we just do it.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the same effect would happen with bicycle helmets. If you look at other jurisdictions, we see that once laws are brought in, compliance with the actions prescribed by the law shoots up in comparison to before the law was introduced. In the state of Maryland, for example, the use of bicycle helmets went up a whopping 45 percent only eight months after their state government implemented a helmet law. Not only does this 45 percent represent a decrease in the likelihood of brain injuries to cyclists in that state, but it also lays the foundation for a lifelong adherence to safety while cycling. In the long run, this foundation will result in more saved lives, and if just one life is saved, then a helmet law will have done something great.

As well, we have to remember that this law is not intended to restrict the actions of adults. Only children will be affected. We have to remember that heads of small children are much more fragile, as they are still growing. By implementing a helmet law, Mr. Speaker, we're attempting to limit the amount of brain and head injuries that children will suffer. The statistics that I mentioned earlier only serve to reinforce the need for a helmet law. Also, it just doesn't seem to be the case that those fighting for cyclists' freedom are ultimately concerned with the freedom of their children to wear or not wear a bike helmet. In fact, most parents just want their kids to grow up smart, healthy, and safely.

Mr. Speaker, when we think about it, we know that many of these people concerned with cyclists' freedom have children, and I'm willing to bet that they don't let their own kids do whatever they like. Little Joe isn't allowed to have a beer whenever he'd like one, and little Sally isn't allowed to drop out of school just because she wants to. Part of parenting is teaching kids right from wrong and promoting their health, safety, and future well-being. Legislation aimed at promoting certain types of activities by children is no different.

For example, Mr. Speaker, consider smoking laws in Canada. The federal Tobacco Act states in section 8.(1) that "no person shall furnish a tobacco product to a young person in a public place or in a place to which the public reasonably has access." The purpose of this section is to protect young persons and others from inducements to the use of tobacco products and the consequential dependence on them. Right there we have a law designed to protect the health of children and to foster a healthy lifestyle. While some may argue that the Tobacco Act is an intrusion on a child's right to decide how he lives his or her life, I'm sure that most parents, many of whom are smokers, would disagree with those arguments. We should not view bike helmets any differently than the laws that prohibit children from purchasing cigarettes. Both promote a healthy lifestyle, and both will save children and parents a lot of needless worry and health problems down the road.

As a side point, Mr. Speaker, we all know that both the reduction of smoking and the reduction of brain injury free up substantial amounts of dollars in our health care system that could be better put elsewhere. Putting on a bicycle helmet has the dual effect of saving the rider's life and freeing up money in our health care budgets to help save the lives of others.

Now, those who are concerned with the personal liberty of children may disagree and may say that regardless of the potential personal and public costs, children should have the choice to decide whether or not to don a helmet. I have no problem standing here today to assert that we should not give into these arguments of a few dissenters. We're talking about laws that pertain to children, not adults. Personal choice arguments are fine among adults, but we should not stand behind them when creating legislation in the name of the safety of our children. We should also be mindful of the fact that 77 percent of Alberta parents agree that there should be bike helmet legislation for all children. The polls are on the side of Bill 209, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that we should follow what Albertans are telling us.

Finally, why don't we ask ourselves which is a greater freedom, the freedom to ride a bicycle without a helmet or the freedom to live after sustaining a bicycle-related head injury? Freedom is a tricky thing, Mr. Speaker. It is in many ways the principal concern of all governments. However, the one thing that we are sure of is that after somebody dies in a bicycle accident, they do not have any more freedom. They are no longer around to enjoy freedom. As well, the parents of children who die while on their bikes do not have the freedom to enjoy watching their children grow up, make decisions, graduate from high school, and start an adult life. All of that could be taken away in the blink of an eye, or it could be saved by the minimal imposition of a bicycle helmet on the heads of our children. I would suggest that asking kids to wear a bike helmet is about as minimal an imposition on anybody's freedom that we can impose. I hope that I have shown even more strongly that putting bicycle helmets on the heads of our children actually enhances their freedom.

In light of all of these arguments, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to pass Bill 209. The safety of many of our children will depend on it, and our children are counting on the members to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very excited to join the debate on Bill 209, the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, 2001. I know the importance of helmet safety for young people, and with no hesitation I can say that Bill 209 is a great idea. I think this bill and the discussion it has garnered justifies and legitimizes the importance of helmets for safety.

Bill 209 will not single-handedly place a helmet on every young rider in Alberta, and it doesn't have to, because this legislation doesn't act on its own. The magic of implementing this bill will come from combining education, public support, availability, and legitimacy of helmets. This bill will go a long way to convince young people to strap on a helmet, just like they buckle their seat belt or look both ways before crossing a street. I have amassed years of experience related to traffic safety through my previous career and as a member of the Calgary regional health authority. In my experience, there has always been a great deal of concern for bicycle safety initiatives, especially helmet safety.

I think one of the biggest reasons why helmet safety continues to be an issue is because the consequences of riding unprotected are so preventable. I remember the work done between the traffic section of the Calgary Police Service and the Calgary regional health authority to find ways to make Calgary streets safer through programs promoting the safety of drivers and pedestrians. I have found that most people underestimate the speed that bicycles can reach if they are not slowed down by other traffic. At one point the RHA and the traffic section wanted to implement a maximum speed limit to protect riders on Calgary's Bow Valley trail, which is approximately 200 kilometres in length throughout the city.

As simplistic as it should be, time and time again people underestimate the speed and overestimate the maneuverability of bicycles. The reasoning for the speed limit was to reduce the risk that riders cause to themselves and to others on the trail. My home constituency of Calgary-Buffalo has a significant piece of the city's Bow Valley trail running through it. The strip of trail is often very busy, with pedestrian traffic of all kinds including roller bladers, joggers, and parents walking with their children. Although this is often an ideal setting for recreation, it is also prime time for bicycle accidents. With so much traffic traveling at different levels of speed, the probability of accidents increases. However, the number of people on the trail could be an excellent opportunity to make Bill 209 more effective, because the high level of congestion is a great way to reach those riders that insist on riding without a helmet. Police can easily spot these riders on the trail, stop them, and inform them that riding unprotected is against the law.

I can personally think of several bicycle-related accidents that were completely preventable if the rider had been wearing a helmet. It's difficult to describe the frustration of seeing many young people injured and sometimes seriously hurt from bicycle/vehicle collisions.

Mr. Speaker, after the collision the fact that these injuries are so preventable goes through everyone's mind. I remember numerous times when parents, witnesses, and sometimes even the victim would realize that they should have been wearing a helmet. Bill 209 reminds these riders of the consequences before the accident occurs. We think of grisly collisions occurring between a bike and a large truck, resulting in serious injury or a fatality, or we think fatal accidents happen because of blatant rider error. However, I can think of several accidents that were normal wipeouts, having nothing to do with a motor vehicle.

One accident occurred in Lake Bonavista a few years ago. Police were called to the scene where a bike rider was killed from falling off his bicycle and landing hard on the street. The important part of this accident is that no other vehicle was involved. The adult individual died from hitting his head on the curb. He wasn't traveling very fast, but because concrete has very little resilience, a simple wipeout resulted in tragedy. Although we are quick to call this a freak accident, it should not have been that surprising to us. If the individual had been wearing a helmet, he would have got up, brushed himself off, and rode home. Although this type of accident doesn't occur every day, it's more likely to happen to people riding without helmets. We must make helmet use mandatory to stop these preventable accidents from happening to our children.

I agree that the onus must be placed on the parents or legal guardians to ensure that young riders are as safe as possible. I also think that most riders realize the importance of helmet safety. It's just that many young people need more convincing, and that's where Bill 209 comes into effect.

The point of this bill is not to prosecute young riders but, rather, to add legitimacy and authority to existing bicycle safety initiatives. Everyone learns about helmet safety through different communication channels, from safety demonstrations in schools to parents insisting their children wear helmets. Bill 209 promotes more education by raising awareness for helmet safety and includes the police to add incentive for young people to wear helmets. I think it is crucial that Bill 209 focuses attention on young people and especially children, as they may not necessarily know the benefits of helmets, nor do they have a grasp of the consequences of riding without one. As a former police officer that has dealt with this issue directly I cannot stress the importance of adding the mere mention of the law as an influential tool.

Albertans are able to use several education programs that promote bicycle safety with a great deal of success. As a result of these programs, I believe that the messages promoting bicycle safety have been driven home. Parents know children need protection and that helmets are the most effective way to prevent injuries. Bill 209 will continue to convince more children to listen to safety messages from government, bicycle safety advocates, and parents. More young people will be convinced to wear a helmet because they are breaking the law by riding unprotected.

I don't think policing agencies across the province will have to write numerous tickets to effectively get a message across to young riders. I have learned through my experience that the police can be an extremely effective conduit for communicating safety to the public. Seat belt safety and jaywalking have been reduced by giving people a warning rather than a ticket. I found that the occasional warning could be effective as a friendly reminder about traffic safety. People feel lucky to get away with a warning, and they still get the message.

Some bike riders adamantly believe that they are also a vehicle on the road and should receive a level of respect and enough room equal to other vehicles to ride safely, but they should consider the difference in power, size, and manoeuvrability between bicycles and motor vehicles. Unfortunately the people that know this the least or forget this point the most are young riders. Through my experience I have noticed that young riders tend to have an invincibility complex when it comes to riding on the street. Young riders do not know the consequences and nuances of traffic to the extent of adults. They lack the experience and education that would prepare them for riding on the street. I'd like to talk about this for a moment because it concerns the justification for this bill.

Cyclists do not have to take a mandatory course to be on the road like other vehicles nor do they have to complete formal training or an examination. I appreciate the fact that there are several classes available for riders that teach proper riding skills and rules of the road. These classes can be an effective tool to keep young riders out of dangerous situations thereby reducing the number of injuries and fatalities due to vehicle/bicycle collisions. The classes help, but we have to acknowledge that we put our children on the road on bicycles in traffic with much faster vehicles. We let our children ride in dangerous situations, situations which we cannot prevent. So we put children on busy streets not fully preparing them or educating them about the dangers of riding in traffic.

Bill 209 will help promote the importance of safety. We all know how safe helmets are. We always have. Furthermore, we all know as parents that children should wear helmets. A helmet may not protect children from a broken arm or a knee injury, but helmets dramatically reduce the chance of brain injuries, skull fractures, and other severe head trauma injuries that can lead to death. Broken bones, scrapes, and bruises do heal, but I have seen the severity of head injuries caused by bicycle accidents, and I know that head injuries cannot heal as easily as other wounds. The head is much too delicate to leave unprotected.

Some might say that Bill 209 attempts to legislate common sense and infringes on personal freedom, but this bill is not violating personal freedoms. It's putting our minds at rest. The helmet gives our children padding to help protect them from dangers on the road. The bill will also give parents another tool to help ensure that children wear their helmets. I believe that most young people recognize and respect authority. This bill will allow parents to say: wear your helmet, or you'll answer to the police. Bill 209 offers deterrents that will go a long way to reaffirm the importance of bike helmets.

I believe that bike riders that don't wear a helmet are not as safe as riders with a helmet. I think this happens for a number of reasons. First of all, courtesy and safety are not virtues of helmetless riders that dart in and out of traffic without signaling properly. In my experience those reckless cyclists are the ones that most often don't wear helmets. I think one of the biggest reasons for this is the basic disregard for the safety of themselves and others in traffic. If these people don't have enough sense to wear an inexpensive piece of plastic that will save their lives, then how will this attitude translate to other traffic laws? I've seen these riders neglect their own safety while I was a police officer, and as an RHA board member I've shared stories with my peers regarding these riders' disregard for their own well-being and the disastrous consequences that often resulted.

Mr. Speaker, think of the evolution of bicycle safety like traveling from Edmonton to Calgary. Realizing that bicycles are dangerous and that children need protection is the beginning of the journey that would take us from here to Leduc. Implementing education programs and making helmets safer and more accessible takes us farther down the road to Red Deer. However, by passing Bill 209, the journey towards sound bicycle safety will continue past Airdrie and on to Calgary.

This bill does not have to be a be-all, fix-all piece of legislation. Rather, it is part of the bigger picture and will give concerned groups, including police, the opportunity to keep our young people safe on whatever road they choose to travel.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the great privilege of speaking in support of Bill 209. Rather than reiterate a number of the points that have been made by colleagues on both sides of the House, I would like to recount personal experience.

Just over 30 years ago the brightest and most beautiful of my cousins was killed on a bicycle. He was exiting a highway from a place near to his home in Orillia, Ontario. No doubt there would be many things that could be analyzed to see whether or not he would have been saved had he worn a helmet. It was a double tragedy, because not only was he killed, but he was killed by a hit-and-run driver, and the young man who came to assist him from across the road was also killed. It was a tragic day for our family, and ever since it has been hard for me to speak on the helmet issue because I can't help but remember a young man who had so much to live for and who had so much to give that was wasted that day.

But I'd like to bring more in focus a recent letter that was referenced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, which perhaps identifies better than I could why we should pass this bill today. The woman, Kathy Hall, and her husband, Craig, write an appreciative letter in the This Week Friday, May 11, newspaper. Predominantly they cite their feelings about coming home after work and finding a broken helmet at the back door and wondering what had happened to their son.

In the story and body of the letter it states that the outcome was very positive because, Devin, the son, was found at the hospital and had been well taken care of. For the record I'm going to conclude with a couple of the remarks that she made.

And for you, young invincible people who do not wear helmets, I would like to show you my son's broken helmet. The large crack in it would have been in my son's skull. The helmet was the only reason I was able to bring Devin home that day.

Thank you to a very caring community.

Mr. Speaker, we can look at statistics and we can talk about the opportunity to make things safer for young people. The bottom line is that we on all sides of the House should ask ourselves this question: if we could do one thing to save a child, to save our neighbour's child, our own child, or a grandchild in future, would it not be to provide them every opportunity to feel safe and in actual fact be safer? The very wearing of a helmet reminds the young person that they are not invincible, that they have to wear protection and have to obey certain rules in order to have the privilege of riding a bicycle. It would appear to me that it's important to do this for the safety of children.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 8(5)(a) we have five minutes now for the sponsor of the private member's public bill to close the debate.

I now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross to close debate on Bill 209.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to close debate today on Bill 209. I'd like to begin by saying that I sincerely appreciate the supportive debate of my colleagues in the Legislature today, and that is because there is no question that the prevention strategy of Bill 209 will assist with decreasing head and brain injuries through the use of properly wearing a helmet and will thereby assist with the sustainability of our health care system.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that creating health through prevention requires making a paradigm shift to a new way of thinking. It is realizing that each of us, including our children and teens, has conscious input into our state of health through choosing safe practices when engaging in a high-risk activity. I believe our legislation and policies must reflect our vision as legislators and that our health and wellness goal of injury prevention can be achieved.

I ask all of my colleagues for their support of Bill 209, and I call for the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:14 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

For the motion:

Totals: For – 38 Against – 10

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene tonight at 8 o'clock, we do so in Committee of the Whole.

THE SPEAKER: On the motion put forward by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, would all hon. members in favour please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 30, 2001

8:00 p.m.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: We'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those in the gallery, this is the informal part of the Legislative Assembly, and members are allowed to have a coffee or juice at their desks. They're in fact allowed to move, so if you're busy looking at your road map of where members are, catch them quickly because they are allowed to change and go around. We try and stick to the convention of only one hon. member standing and talking at a time, but this is, as I say, the informal part called committee, in this case Committee of the Whole.

Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to be able to address the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001, Bill 14, at committee.

We've had some discussion about this bill in second, and I'll just recap for our audience. The main object of Bill 14 is to define eligibility requirements for the implementation of the Alberta energy tax refund program, which was announced by this government on September 6 of 2000. By establishing these requirements for the program, Mr. Chairman, the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency was able to use their list of tax filers for the province of Alberta to send out a $300 onetime rebate in two separate installments to some 2.3 million Albertans 16 years of age and older. If members recall, those who still have their memories from the 21-hour session that we completed yesterday, we passed Bill 1, which put into legislation the ability for the government to have those cheques made even though the cheques had already been sent and the regulations had already been made. So it was sort of shutting the barn door after the horses had left or dotting the i's after the sentence was already constructed, but that's what happened.

This Alberta energy tax refund program was announced in the fall. The rebate came in two installments to those who filed a 1999 income tax return even if they had no income. We heard some discussion last night about some of the problems that surrounded that processing and that are still in the process of being fixed. We've been told by Revenue Canada at this stage that all of the corrections to the cheques that were incorrectly issued or not issued at all or went to the wrong addresses will have been corrected, they expect, by the end of June. So quite a long wait for people who were expecting the money in order to actually reduce their costs at the time that they were high.

I would hope that the government would take note of those outstanding issues and the issues as we went along with this particular program and correct them for next year, because to truly be a rebate program, as they are suggesting, they need to match the money coming back to the people with the expenses that the people incur that are high or extraordinary at the time they occur, not six months hence or some other very inconvenient time. They need to get their act together on that, and if that means doing it independently of the federal government, you won't hear any complaints from this side of the House on that, Mr. Chairman. So we hope they'll address those issues.

There were a couple of things that we wanted to just remind people about. The $300 refund was not taxable, so Albertans don't have to claim it when they're filing. That's important, I believe. The total cost of the refund package was $690 million, with $345 million being allocated from Alberta's economic surplus, and it's projected that the energy tax refund for natural gas and gasoline will cost taxpayers at least $2.4 million to administer, based on the number of qualifying Albertans.

So there were some options here, Mr. Chairman. They could have just reduced the cost of natural gas in general and not had the administration costs. Therefore, there would have been another $2.4 million available to distribute back to us. You know, it's our gas. It's our revenue that's being generated off the gas that's being pumped out of the province, yet we have to pay for administration fees to get any of it back. It doesn't seem completely logical, but that's the way they did it.

I was happy to hear when this first happened, and am still happy to support, that individuals who have debts in arrears with the provincial maintenance enforcement program were not receiving the refund. It gets paid to the director of maintenance enforcement and credited first to arrears and then next to the current periodic payment of the debtors in arrears and last to any other payable and outstanding of the debtor in arrears. So I think that was a good point.

We thought this program, this rebate was helpful to Alberta consumers as a temporary onetime measure, Mr. Chairman, but it was still crisis-based reaction by the government to the impact of higher energy prices. Albertans need really a realistic plan to shield them from the sustained impact of energy prices over the medium term. This is designed to shield people from what we say is the mismanagement of electricity deregulation in the very short instance, not that all those costs were applicable, but certainly some of them were. That's really the essence of the argument here.

Here what was happening was that the bill defined the eligibility requirements for the implementation of the tax refund program. You have to do that. The money is already spent, but still there have to be some rules and regulations on that, Mr. Chairman. We're happy to see that, with some glitches, it is traveling along in the way that it was supposed to. We had a problem with this, though, in that this government showed a real lack of respect for the legislative process when they introduced the bill to authorize a plan which they announced over eight months ago and have already finished implementing, and here we are, you know, starting this now.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are my comments with respect to this bill. I look forward to any participation by the government at this stage. Perhaps, depending on what they say, this being committee, I will be persuaded to re-engage in the debate, but at this point that's the end of my comments.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any further comments on Bill 14, which is what we have in front of us?

[The clauses of Bill 14 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall this bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Would the committee agree to a brief introduction of guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure this evening to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some very special guests. We are blessed here with many very important and special guests, but these people are really important because they are newspaper publishers here in Alberta. I would like to introduce from the Alberta Weekly Newspapers Association – I would I ask them to stand; they're in the public gallery – Mary Jane Harper, editor of the Olds Gazette; Roger Holmes, publisher of the Wainwright Star-Chronicle; Steve Dills, publisher of the Vegreville Observer; and Rob Rondeau, publisher of Hardisty World. I would ask the Assembly to give them a very warm traditional greeting.

Mr. Chairman, it's also my great pleasure to introduce some more very important and special guests. I don't need to introduce them to you because they are from your constituency of Highwood, but through you to the members of this Assembly we have with us tonight very special guests who are also in the public gallery, a counselor from the town of Okotoks and his charming wife, Mr. and Mrs. Laurie Hodson. I would ask if they would rise and also receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

Bill 15 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to participate in the debate at committee on Bill 15, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act. This could be called a companion piece of legislation to Bill 14, the bill that we just debated. One of my colleagues said that Bill 14 was the how to win the election act. Well, this is how to win the election act, part 2; there's no doubt about it.

What this particular bill talks about, Mr. Chairman, is the implementation of the government's promise to reduce the flat tax rate from 10.5 to 10 percent. It also implements the reduction in the railway fuel tax from 3 cents per litre to 1.5 cents, and it exempts many of the tax statutes from the provisions of the Limitations Act. Also, we see it increasing the value of some of the tax credits.

The flat tax reduction, Mr. Chairman, is the second reduction in the rate since the flat tax was introduced. It was originally 11 percent, then 10.5 percent, and now changed to 10 percent in response to cuts in federal taxes. Part of the problem with this kind of a reduction and a race to the bottom is that you're always playing catch-up. That can be good if in fact we see all income levels fairly benefiting from a tax like this, but that's not the case here. All calculations that we've done and nothing that the government has been able to present to us in the interim has convinced us otherwise. All indications we have are that this particular flat tax is unfair to middle-income Albertans.

What we see happening here is that for every dollar the middle-income earner receives in savings from the Klein flat tax, a high-income earner, who is in the top 2 percent of tax filers, receives anywhere from $1.80 to $4.55 in savings, providing that the government's flat tax scheme merely shifts the tax burden onto the middle class. It's what happens. Middle-class tax filers earning between $25,000 and $75,000 represent nearly 38 percent of tax filers in Alberta. Those of us who aren't cabinet ministers fall into that particular bracket. We receive just 39 percent of the tax savings under the 10 percent flat tax, and meanwhile the top 2 percent of tax filers, which would include the Premier, earning $100,000 and over, receive 26 percent of the tax savings under the 10 percent flat tax. [interjection]

Well, not everybody saves, as a member in the Assembly is saying. Certainly if you take a look at it on a proportional basis, middle-income tax earners pay more. So I think that that is unfair. [interjection] The comment is that they pay less than they paid before, but let's talk about this reasonably in terms of the total tax burden that tax filers are absorbing because of the directives of this government.

You have to add the increase in user fees into that scenario. You have to add the other costs like the additional fees that we pay for mismanagement of deregulation. There are a lot of hidden costs in this province, Mr. Chairman, that make our take-home pay less than it is in terms of any kind of disposable income. I don't think there's a person in this Assembly who can say that dollar for dollar they get the same value out of their money as they did five years ago, seven years ago, 10 years ago, 15 years ago. For the same dollar your after-tax disposable income buys less, even when you adjust for inflation.

So when you give the appearances of reducing taxes but for the bulk of the people who are taxpayers it doesn't really happen, there's something wrong with that picture. I would suggest that particularly some of the new members of the Assembly actually study it and just don't take cabinet ministers' word for the fact that it must be the greatest thing since sliced bread, because there've been a few things brought into this Assembly by them that they championed that were found out to be wrong after the fact. I would suggest that this is one of those instances.

We talk about railway diesel fuel tax. This was part of the proceedings of the recent Alberta Business Tax Review Committee during their deliberations. Representatives of the railway industry indicated that there was fierce competition in the railway industry and pointed to the fact that Canadian railways pay higher overall taxes than the U.S. railroads, other Canadian industries, and the north American trucking industry. Submissions to the committee suggested that Alberta's tax on railway fuel should be eliminated or reduced to the U.S. level of 1.7 cents a litre. However, the Business Tax Review Committee rejected the recommendation. They felt that Alberta's fuel tax for railways was competitive with other provinces and jurisdictions. So certainly I think that that's something up for discussion.

There's no doubt that I have heard the arguments on behalf of the railways over the years and have some degree of sympathy for them for the costs that they are carrying. We have vast lands and few people to support them, Mr. Chairman, so that certainly becomes a huge transportation issue when we try to accommodate and work with other jurisdictions.

The Limitations Act is referred to in here. Through Bill 15 the government has exempted the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, the Alberta Income Tax Act, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, the Hotel Room Tax Act, the Fuel Tax Act, and the Tobacco Tax Act from the Limitations Act. What this act introduces is limitation periods on claims, and under the act all claims are governed by two limitation periods. The discovery period would be two years from the date that the claimant either discovered or ought to have discovered specific knowledge about the claim, and the ultimate period in which a claim must be brought is 10 years. This bill endeavours to ensure that the Crown, when dealing with Alberta tax legislation, is not subject to these time limits. So one set of rules for the government and another set of rules for everybody else.

Mr. Chairman, our position is that we're always supportive of tax measures that will help reduce the tax burden on Alberta families. However, the reduction in the flat tax that is made possible through this act raises the issue again of whether or not a flat tax is truly fair to Albertans. I think we've had lots of discussion on this. We see this as a scheme that simply moves the tax burden onto the shoulders of middle-income earners while trying to make them feel good. It's not a fair tax system in our opinion. We have proposed what we believe is a fair tax system that would see greater savings for the majority of Albertans and for middle-income earners. We would like the government to consider that as a plan that would give tax relief to all Albertans, so that would be very interesting to see them move forward.

We also have a question that still hasn't been answered throughout the phases of this debate, Mr. Chairman, and that would be: why has the government introduced legislation that will cut the railway fuel tax in half when that was a recommendation that was rejected by the Business Tax Review Committee, and why weren't any of the good recommendations that were in that committee report acted on? This one that was rejected was. So here we have a government who talks ad nauseam about consultation with Albertans, yet when they do consult and they do get feedback and it is well-thought-out, well-rounded, and I would say well-researched feedback, the government rejects it. So I think that's an issue.

We're certainly pleased to see that many of the tax credit increases that this bill introduces are coming forward. They would be increases such as people providing home care for relatives, a very good thing; people providing care for children with physical and mental infirmity, also a very good thing; increases in the education credits, a big deal particularly when tuition fees seem to be spiraling higher and higher every year; and increases in the amounts deductible for people over 65 years old.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that essentially concludes my remarks in committee on this particular bill. We look forward to any comments that the government may have on this.

Thank you.

8:20

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time in committee I have a few brief comments about Bill 15. Certainly this flat tax reduction from 10.5 to 10 percent – I feel one must always be supportive of tax measures that will help reduce the tax burden on Alberta families. However, the reduction in the flat tax that is made possible through this act again raises the issue of whether or not the entire flat tax is truly fair to Albertans. The flat tax scheme simply moves, in my view, the tax burden again onto the shoulders of middle-income earners of this province. This, as a result, is not a fair tax system.

Now, the Alberta Liberals certainly have a proposed tax system that would see greater savings for the majority of Albertans, particularly for the middle-income earners. Should there be an increase in the basic personal exemption, the amount that individual Albertans can earn tax free, from a little over $7,000 to in excess of $13,500? Yes. Our plan, the so-called 0, 10, 12 plan, would provide

I'm not going to go into this in a great deal of detail, but I do notice that the railway diesel fuel tax is cut in half, lowering it from 3 cents per litre to 1.5 cents per litre. I would certainly again take this opportunity to briefly remind all hon. members of this Assembly of the 6.5 cents a litre tax on propane fuel for motor vehicles, for trucks. Last year in the budget there was $14 million, Mr. Chairman, realized in revenue. In this year's budget it is down to $9 million. That tells this member that there is a reduced consumption of propane as a motor fuel in this province because of this tax.

Certainly the cost has gone up at the retail pump. In my view, it has not been justified; it cannot be justified. I feel very strongly that propane in Edmonton, in Calgary, in Spruce Grove, in Grande Prairie, in Sylvan Lake should be much cheaper than it is in Toronto, and it's not. I would urge the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to advocate that the 6.5 cents a litre propane fuel tax be eliminated in this province, be completely eliminated. We're going to get $9 million again in revenue on this tax, and I think the tax should be removed. I'm quite confident that there would be an increase in the number of conversions, particularly with trucks.

For that reason I'm again speaking on this issue of elimination of the propane tax. We can do without the $9 million. We can cut down on fancy cars for cabinet. We can cut down on payment of legal bills for the leader of the federal Canadian Alliance. Perhaps members of government can take buses and cars instead of taking airplanes. It would be very easy to realize savings of $9 million in this budget.

So with those views expressed, Mr. Chairman, I shall take my seat and cede the floor to another member of the Assembly. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The New Democrat caucus is not going to be supporting Bill 15 this evening. We don't believe that this legislation is equitable. We don't believe that it distributes the tax burden in the way in which it ought to be distributed.

If approved by the Assembly, Bill 15 continues the massive shift of the tax load from high-income Albertans to middle-income Albertans. By maintaining a so-called single tax rate and reducing it from 10 and a half to 10 percent, Bill 15 continues the attack on middle-class Albertans begun last year with the implementation of the flat tax on personal incomes.

Now, this particular approach has brought criticism from every tax accountant and economist who has independently crunched the numbers on the Tory's flat tax, and they've all reached the same conclusion, Mr. Chairman. The main beneficiary of this flat tax will be those with incomes above $100,000 per year. Middle-class Albertans with incomes from $30,000 to $100,000 are already paying a disproportionately higher share of the tax load, and Bill 15 will only make that situation worse. For instance, a University of Alberta economics professor, Mel McMillan, had this to say about the government's flat tax proposal:

This would really shift the tax burden to the middle class . . . Big winners . . . are those in brackets beyond $150,000 and especially those in the $250,000 plus income bracket.

We crunched a few numbers of our own, and this is based on the 10 percent, Mr. Chairman. We identified that the primary people who will realize the benefit from this approach are in fact some of the wealthiest people in this province. The president and CEO of Canadian Pacific, for example, will save approximately $78,569 under the flat tax at the 10 and a half percent rate. The chairman and CEO of ATCO will save $71,340, the president and CEO of Talisman Energy could save approximately $44,995, and Mr. Jim Dinning, the executive vice-president of TransAlta, would save over $11,000. On the other hand, a bus driver is going to save about $166. So we can see who this government is really working for.

The main reason, of course, that there are any savings whatsoever for middle- and lower-income people is because of the dramatic increase in the personal tax exemption, which is a measure we support, but it clearly masks the shift of the tax burden that's going on with this bill.

In addition to not passing the test of fairness, Bill 15 also fails the test of honesty. The provincial Conservatives know that reducing tax rates for high-income earners will result in a massive transfer of the tax load onto middle-income Albertans. That's why they have hidden that by combining it with an overall income tax of $1.5 billion at 23 percent.

Despite the deep cut in personal income tax revenue, however, middle-income earners will end up paying only slightly less compared to the situation before the flat tax was introduced. New Democrats have calculated that an Albertan making $30,000 a year saves only $185 from the reduction in the flat tax from 10.5 to 10 percent compared to what they paid in 1999. That's less than 10 percent on their total tax bill compared to '99. Meanwhile, a person making $500,000 a year saves almost $20,000 more on their tax bill. That's a tax saving of 29 percent, almost three times as high a percentage than for lower income people. So, Mr. Chairman, it's clearly not an equitable bill and not an equitable approach.

The government's flat tax has failed to deliver the promised simplicity of their income tax system. Bill 15 is a good example of this. In addition to changing the underlying tax rates, Bill 15 makes numerous changes to exemptions, deductions, credits, and other loopholes encountered in calculating one's taxable income. The only way to simplify the tax system is to remove the complexities in calculating one's taxable income. Not only does Bill 15 fail to do this, through section (5) it codifies these complexities into provincial law. Bill 15 shows that the flat tax didn't get rid of a single loophole. All of the existing tax credits and deductions remain.

Your tax return hasn't shrunk a bit. In fact, the tax form could actually become more complicated. Instead of having to do calculations on one set of numbers, Alberta taxpayers are required now to do two. For example, taxpayers currently need to do only one calculation to determine their nonrefundable tax credits. Under the flat tax plan they would need to do two: one to calculate their federal tax credits and a second to calculate their provincial tax credits.

Now, there are those who argue that there are too many tax brackets. The Mulroney government tax reform of 1987 already significantly flattened the Canadian tax system. There are only three tax brackets. Before 1988 there were 10 different tax brackets, ranging from 6 percent to 34 percent. Going back even further, in 1970 there were 17 tax brackets.

The United States, believe it or not, has a more progressive income tax system than Canada does, especially for those with high incomes. At the federal level the U.S. has five tax brackets, ranging from a low of 15 percent to a high of 39.6 percent. By comparison, Canada has only three tax brackets, and the top federal tax rate is only 30.9 percent. Some American states have as many as 10 tax brackets. Only six states have implemented a flat tax.

Another argument made by those advocates such as our Provincial Treasurer for flat taxes is that marginal tax rates are too high and are a disincentive to work harder. Marginal tax rates refer to what is paid on the last dollar of income earned by a taxpayer. Effective tax rates refer to the average rate paid on every dollar of income earned. Marginal tax rates will and should be higher than effective tax rates in a progressive income tax system. It is misleading to focus on marginal tax rates to measure the fairness of the income tax system. Effective tax rates are a much better indicator because they measure the rate of tax paid on every dollar of income earned, not just the last dollar. Effective tax rates tend to be significantly lower than marginal tax rates even for those with high income because they, like low-income people, are able to benefit from the lower rates applied to their first dollars of income.

Higher income earners are also able to reduce their tax liability by taking advantage of things like tax credits and deductions. Unlike middle-income earners, those with higher incomes are able to afford to maximize their RRSP contributions, to set up family trusts, and to take advantage of capital gains exemptions. Under the current system Alberta has by far the lowest marginal tax rate of any Canadian province. In 2001 Alberta's top marginal provincial tax rate is a flat 10 percent. The next lowest province, Saskatchewan, has a top marginal rate of 16 percent, which is 60 percent higher. The province of Ontario has a top marginal rate on provincial income tax of 17.41 percent. It's one thing for this government to make Alberta into some sort of tax haven for the wealthy. It's another thing to do this entirely at the expense of middle-class Albertans, and that is something which Bill 15 continues to do.

It's not even true that higher income earners have the highest marginal tax rates. When calculations of marginal tax rates include the impact of refundable tax credits, middle-income earners, not high-income earners, are already paying the highest marginal tax rates. The personal income tax system contains a number of refundable credits including the child tax benefit, the goods and services tax credit, the seniors' credit, as well as provincial credits like the seniors' benefit and the Alberta employment tax credit. These credits are recovered by being taxed back as income rises. If calculations of marginal tax rates include the impact of refundable tax credits, middle-income earners, not high-income earners, are already paying the highest marginal tax rates.

Robert D. Brown, the past chairman of PricewaterhouseCoopers, calculates that a single-earner family with three children making between $30,000 to $40,000 a year faces a top marginal tax rate of over 60 percent. By contrast, the marginal tax rate of a similar family making $110,000 is just over 50 percent. The source of that, in case anyone wants to look it up, is the Canadian Tax Journal, 1999, issue number 2, and it's on page 192.

This is because a family making $30,000 gets to keep less than 40 cents of every additional dollar earned as a result of the combined increase in tax payable and reduction in refundable tax credit payments. By contrast, a family making $110,000 a year gets to keep almost 50 cents of every additional dollar earned. If anyone has a disincentive to work as a result of these arrangements, it's middle-income earners, not high-income earners. Imposition of a flat tax will make this inequity even worse by raising the marginal tax rate for middle-income earners while lowering it for high-income earners.

Proponents of a flat tax, like our former Treasurer, now the leader of the Alliance Party or at least the significant portion of it, says that a flat tax will end bracket creep. When the Mulroney government got itself into financial difficulty a decade ago, they stopped full indexation of tax brackets and exemptions to inflation. Now adjustments are only made for inflation above 3 percent. As a result, until this year's federal budget there has been no increase in the income thresholds for the three federal tax brackets for a number of years. The basic and spousal exemptions were increased starting in the 1999 federal budget after a number of years of no increases. The Alberta government, as much as any government in Canada, has benefited from tax bracket creep. Surely the answer to this phenomenon is not to get rid of tax brackets altogether, thereby undermining equity, but to restore full indexation of both tax brackets and basic spousal exemptions.

If it wanted to, the government could cut taxes or user fees without bringing in a regressive flat tax. Moreover, with the size of the budget surplus in recent years, the Alberta government clearly has the fiscal capacity to cut taxes, increase spending in priority areas, and keep retiring debt. The question is not whether Albertans should have a tax cut but what kind of tax cut it should be. Tax cuts directed at low-income and middle-income earners will generate more economic activity than tax cuts directed at the wealthy. That's because the wealthy will likely invest their tax savings in investments – for example, in GICs, mutual funds, including ones with lots of foreign content – while low-income and middle-income earners are likely to spend their savings on things that more directly lead to local job creation, like buying goods and services from our local businesses.

Are there alternatives to the Tory flat tax plan that are fairer to low-income and middle-income Albertans? Absolutely, Mr. Chairman. The New Democrats advocate phasing out health care premiums as an alternative to the flat tax plan set out in Bill 18. While delivering a comparable amount of tax relief, the New Democrat approach could give each Alberta family an $816 break and a single person a $408 break regardless of their income. There are many sound reasons why the New Democrat approach is preferable.

AHC premiums are the worst kind of regressive tax. A family earning $20,000 pays exactly the same, $816 per year, as a family earning $2 million a year. The income levels at which Albertans receive premium subsidies are ridiculously low. For example, to receive a full premium subsidy, families must earn less than $7,500 a year and singles less than $5,000 a year. Unlike premiums paid to private health insurers, AHC premiums paid by individuals are not tax deductible. Middle-income seniors and those working in jobs without benefits are particularly hurt by this. Those working in better jobs are also hurt because any proportion of Alberta health care premiums paid by employers is fully taxable at the employee's top marginal tax rate.

Alberta Health wastes enormous time and resources to collect premiums and track down those in arrears. In 1996-97 the department spent $11 million on premiums collection, more than is spent on administering the health care insurance plan itself. About half of the $11 million is paid to external collection agencies to track down those with premium arrears. Despite this, the government still wrote off $29 million in uncollectible premiums in 1998-99 alone.

We believe that Alberta health care premiums are a drain on jobs and the economy. As a payroll tax, employers face substantial compliance costs in deducting and remitting health care premiums to the government. The New Democrats would ensure that the savings resulting from the phasing out of premiums are added to the remuneration of employees, not pocketed by employers.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, Bill 15 does not deserve the support of this Assembly. It is regressive legislation that benefits only the wealthy at the expense of the middle class. It is the brainchild of a Treasurer who is no longer in this Assembly to defend it. We all know where he is and what he's doing. Instead of blindly moving forward with this legislation, that is fundamentally unfair and deeply flawed, I urge the government to withdraw Bill 15 and replace it with legislation that provides progressivity for the personal income tax system.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've heard a great heap of statistics and figures this evening. However, there's one statistic that has not been put on the record - and I think we need to put it on the record - and that is that under this single rate of 10 percent 200,000 low-income Albertans will pay no tax at all.

Thank you.

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 17 Insurance Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to Bill 17? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, at this time in committee on Bill 17, I've had an opportunity to speak on this already. I would like to note the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre - and I encourage all hon. members of the Assembly to read them in the previous edition of Hansard - her cautions and reservations about how equitable these amendments would be when you compare them to small insurance companies and larger insurance companies, particularly for mandatory continuing education.

Now, there is no provision in the Insurance Act for mandatory continuing education. Many of the stakeholders - and I believe they've been consulted, Mr. Chairman; I certainly hope they have - believe that the needs of consumers demand knowledgeable, dedicated, and competent financial advisers to provide a required and certainly a necessary level of service. Whenever one considers the increasing diversity and complexity of financial services, practitioners should be current in their knowledge and skills and I believe must continually upgrade their knowledge and skills to remain current. I don't know if that will happen. I certainly hope it will happen. This is exactly what's happening with this legislation. It removes the requirement that adjusters who are employees of insurance companies need to be licensed. Then how are consumers and members of the public to know that the adjusters have had a continuing education program by their employer?

All Canadian jurisdictions with Insurance Canada, I note, either mandate continuing education requirements or plan to implement them. B.C. requires continuing education. Saskatchewan required continuing education as of January 1, 1999. Manitoba introduced mandatory continuing education in mid-1999, as I understand it. That's already been done. Ontario now requires continuing education. Quebec has already accomplished that. Nova Scotia appears prepared to adopt that requirement. Some 48 U.S. states have continuing education programs.

Now, the Alberta Insurance Council is opposed to mandatory continuing education. The Alberta Insurance Council believes that suspension, revocation, or requalification can be used in cases where incompetence is demonstrated.

The cost of mandatory continuing education will be borne by consumers, again, and by agents, and access to courses would be difficult for rural agents. I would like the opinion of the hon. members of this Assembly who represent rural areas in this regard. I certainly would be eager to hear from them in the course of the debate this evening. The consumers get caught in this province quite often, and I would encourage the current government to take more of an active interest in consumer protection. I'm not going to go into that in detail at this time, Mr. Chairman, but history has a tendency to repeat itself, and consumers have been left holding the bag, so to speak, quite often.

I don't know if it's the intention of the government to force insurance agents to keep up to date with new products and practices. I question if that is acceptable, but certainly it is my view that they believe that insurance agents should be required to meet tougher preclicensing requirements.

When we think of the insurance industry, the first thing that comes to this member's mind is stability. I certainly hope that that continues, because these issues were raised before, Mr. Chairman. The majority of these issues were raised during the consultation process on Bill 25, the new Insurance Act in 1999. I did some work on that, but Bill 17 was introduced, as I understand it, because of concerns heard from government members, from industry stakeholders.

I've heard concerns, also, regarding the revamping of the Insurance Act, and I have yet to hear back from many of the individuals I contacted in regards to these amendments, Mr. Chairman. I hope that before this session recesses for the summer, I have that opportunity. I'm reluctant at this stage in committee to give my full support for this legislation until I hear from those stakeholders, but in saying that, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who is bringing forward this legislation, had an extensive consultation process before with the original Bill 25, so I'm confident that as time progresses, the individuals that I have contacted will in turn respond with their opinions, if any, in regards to these amendments.

Now, we should consider certainly the changes that are going to occur. There are gradual changes, because the insurance industry under the new act will permit the minister to issue restricted insurance agents certificates of authority. These will go to businesses. The business, of course, will be a deposit-taking institution. It could be a transportation company, a travel agency, an automobile dealership, or another prescribed enterprise. This is where the concerns of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre come into play, naturally, because of the size of the businesses and the training budgets that would be available, particularly in this case for adjusters.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, certainly this bill makes clear that insurers are held responsible for the actions of the adjusters who are their employees. That's quite clear. It also gives the minister or an appeal body the power to call witnesses to give evidence at hearings and appeals under this act. Hopefully, that would never be needed, but it certainly will be there, as I say, if this bill becomes law, and I'm certain that that will eventually take place.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, at this time I shall take my seat and await the opinions or the comments of other hon. members. Thank you.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. MARZ: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: 14, 15, and 17.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 14
Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance that I move third reading of Bill 14.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have one final kick at the cat to speak to this bill. It's tough to vote for a bill that is bringing in legislation after all of the decisions have been made and all of the money has been spent. However, many people in this province are very supportive of the rebate program that the government brought in, so that is a considering factor for us as well. So this is one of those bills where I guess I'm prepared to hold my nose and vote for the bill and support the government.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

Bill 15
Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

MR. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 15, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a companion piece to Bill 14 this bill, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, that brings in the flat tax is a little worse piece of legislation than Bill 14, and I have a great deal more trouble supporting this one because I simply do not think that a flat tax is progressive.

MRS. FORSYTH: Hold your nose.

MS CARLSON: I can't hold my nose on this one; I'm sorry. It's not possible.

You get a no vote from me on this one because it isn't progressive in terms of lowering tax rates for people. You already wrecked it once and had to readjust because of changes made in federal legislation. Even though there's a little tiny window that I think is good – that's the exemptions of the tax statutes from the provisions of the Limitations Act and increasing the value of some of the tax credits, although they're minor in nature – Mr. Speaker, so sorry; I can't support this one.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 17
Insurance Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, briefly, Bill 17 at third reading. The main purpose is to amend the new Insurance Act, which is set to take place in September of this year. This is removing the requirement that adjusters who are employees of insurance companies need to be licensed. In its place adjusters working for an insurer no longer need to be certified, but the insurer is held responsible for the actions of adjusters who are their employees.

As I said a few moments ago, certainly there have been reservations brought to the attention of the Member for Edmonton-Centre by a small business owner in central Edmonton, and there are certainly other cautions that I would like to express about this legislation. With respect to those cautions however – again, I said earlier to all hon. members of this Assembly that it's time that the work of the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed is recognized. A strong consumer voice is instrumental for a strong and responsive insurance industry in this province.

Now, recognizing that the new insurance act takes important steps to deal with such issues as tied selling and the perception of lack of disclosure, the Consumers' Association, for one, has noted a number of other issues that are in need of attention: the claims process for credit and travel insurance products, extended warranties, the entire issue of the renewal process, limitations on claims, the respect for the privacy of information, and effective dispute resolution mechanisms. Everyone is hopeful that these consumer issues will be brought to the table as part of the phase 2 review of the Insurance Act.

I would at this time, in third reading, encourage the government to ensure that the consumer or the public is at the table. With all respect to the Consumers' Association, I deal and I'm sure other hon. members of this Assembly deal on a regular basis – if not, they will in the future – with constituents who are frustrated with the increase in their insurance premiums from one six-month period to another. I'm sure constituents will at some point willingly visit constituency offices and express their frustration in regards to the high cost of insurance.

Now, earlier in this session the hon. Member for St. Albert brought a bill forward, and many members of this Assembly expressed an opinion on that specific legislation. It dealt in a great deal of detail with the insurance industry. But it must be acknowledged that the insurance industry has also taken positive steps to respond to some of the interests of consumers. There has been a production of policy handbooks, for example.

The Consumers' Association makes a number of other useful recommendations: more information on fault charts and their impact on premiums, renewals, and claims; inclusion of information that provides a step-by-step claims process and mechanisms for dispute resolution; insurance companies' interpretation of pre-existing conditions; statistics on claims refusals and justifications for claims refusals; statistics on renewal refusals and the reason why; establishment of an arm's-length board, one-half industry and regulators and one-half representatives from consumer groups, to conduct research on specific issues in the area of insurance.

The consultation process and consumer awareness in my view would be enhanced if all insurance policies and legislation concerning insurance were stated in plain language. There was certainly talk in this Assembly in the past regarding plain language legislation, and sometimes I wonder, as I review and read specific pieces of legislation, if that hasn't been forgotten. I'm sure it hasn't been and it is just myself. But this is an issue that Albertans in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar have expressed an opinion on, regarding this whole issue of plain language, Mr. Speaker. With respect to insurance policies I think consumers would be much more comfortable if policies were stated in plain language.

It has been suggested that the definition of plain language could be or should be extended to include clear, understandable insurance mathematics. I heard a definition of mathematics in this Assembly the other evening, but with insurance mathematics the public would be informed of the effects of various factors on current rates and the effects on future rates. In automobile insurance policies, for example, Mr. Speaker, the policy could state what effect the accumulation of driver demerit points on a driver's licence will have on renewals. That would be, I think, welcome. That, again, would be welcomed by the consumers of this province.

In regards to this legislation, this amendment act hopefully is the last piece in what has been an exhaustive and thorough consultation process dating back I think seven years. If this is the only amendment that is to come forward – and there are certainly indications that tough new insurance laws will be introduced later this year. Now, I hope they are tough.

I said earlier about consumers and how I feel that they are neglected, but this new act, when it comes into force in September, will see a dramatic increase in fines for wayward insurers. Insurance companies and agents will face a maximum fine of $200,000, and that's a large, large increase from the existing legislation for violating the act. The old fine, I would like to remind hon. members of this Assembly, was $200.

I'm assured that this new act will add further protection for consumers while offering the insurance industry a blueprint for the future. I certainly hope this is the case, but for the amendments here – and this is why I would express a caution at this time in third reading, Mr. Speaker. The individuals or the groups that were consulted for Bill 17 were the Consumers' Association of Alberta, the Insurance Bureau of Canada, and the Independent Insurance Brokers Association: three parties. Two years ago with Bill 25, with all respect to the time, the Consumers' Association of Canada was consulted; the Canadian Bankers Association; the Canadian Institute of Actuaries; the Alberta Treasury Branches; the Canadian Independent Adjusters' Association; the Independent Insurance Brokers Association, the Alberta branch; the Insurance Bureau of Canada, the Alberta branch; the Canadian Life & Health Insurance Association; and the Canadian Association of Insurance & Financial Advisors. Now, that's not the entire list, but there was a more extensive consultation process, certainly, than for the amendment.

That is why I'm cautious about offering my wholehearted support or endorsement at this time for this bill. I'm still waiting to hear back from stakeholders that I have contacted in the insurance industry regarding this bill. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am going to reserve my support on this legislation at this time. With respect to the work that has been done in the past, which has been significant, it is better to be cautious than sorry. I would be very disappointed to support this legislation at this time and then receive a fax or a phone call in the next couple of days from individuals who were making their living in the insurance industry saying: I wanted to bring this to your attention regarding the Insurance Amendment Act. It's unfortunate that this bill couldn't have been introduced earlier in the session. It would have given all hon. opposition members a chance to have a good, thorough consultation with affected parties in regards to this legislation.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I shall take my seat. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

Bill 7

Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I move third reading of Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 7 represents this government's effort at fulfilling its long-standing promise to hold elections for regional health authorities, that I think goes back, in fact, to the very first months of this government's mandate; the promise does. The RHAs were created, if my memory is correct, in 1994. Since that time there has been the hope held out of elections for regional health authorities, and they should be elected.

The principles behind electing the regional health authorities and the principles put forward by the government at the time were principles about democracy, local control, responsiveness to the local variations within the province and the differences between smaller centres, big cities, and rural areas and north and south. But I think beyond all of that, the commitment was to the principle of local control and local democracy.

When Bill 7 was brought forward, we looked at it with some eagerness, and our initial intention was in fact to support Bill 7. I even went as far as to send a note to the minister on it when I first saw the idea in the press releases. As I studied Bill 7 and gave it even a brief bit of thought, I became increasingly concerned, and I think all the caucus became increasingly concerned that there were real problems in the way the RHA elections were being implemented. I know that I for one have heard directly from constituents expressing concerns. The more we thought about it, the more we listened, the more we read and studied, the more uneasy we became.

Our uneasiness stems from a handful of fundamental points. One of the concerns we have is that the bill provides for only two-thirds of the members of the authorities to be elected. We just feel strongly that a two-thirds commitment to democracy is inadequate. In some ways, in fact, it's better – it may well be better; it's certainly arguable – to have no elections or all elections rather than partial elections. Partial elections confuse the issues of accountability and responsibility. If all the board members are appointed by the minister, then it's clear that the minister is responsible. If all of them are elected, it's clear that the electorate is responsible. But when you have two-thirds who are elected and one-third who are appointed, including the chairman and the vice-chairman – they are appointed by the minister after the election – then it really confuses the lines of accountability and responsibility.

We also are concerned that the appointments are, well, presumably a reflection of a feeling from the minister and the government that they need to keep control as much as they reasonably can over the regional health authorities. They do this at the same time that they use the regional health authorities as a buffer when difficult decisions are being made. At the local level you can point the finger at the regional health authority. Yet in the long term, the regional health authorities are under the control of the minister and substantially will remain so with Bill 7.

This reflects, I think, an increasing centralization of power and authority in the cabinet, a trend that is of real concern not just in the health care system but throughout government. We have seen the power of school boards reduced substantially. They've lost their ability to tax. We've seen that even the appointments of superintendents of school boards are reviewed by the minister before they're approved. We're seeing that kind of centralization of control in the cabinet, and that worries us. When we see that continued through Bill 7, it's very difficult for us to support the bill.

Indeed, the former system before the RHAs were even established had in many ways more success at representing the diversity of Alberta. In those days many municipalities appointed members to local hospital boards. The provincial government appointed members. You would sometimes have church organizations appoint members. You had a diversity of accountability and a diversity of views on the boards at that time, that has been lost now in the last eight or nine years when all appointments have been made by the minister. Now Bill 7 will allow for a substantial increase of diversity, and it's almost got enough there in Bill 7 for us to support it in that regard but not quite enough.

Some of the remnants of the old system still survive, and it's worth reflecting on those. An example is the Lamont hospital. The Lamont hospital has existed since the early days of the previous century. It was built by the United Church and supported by the United Church. When regionalization was created, the United Church argued successfully that under that RHA the United Church should have its own board for the Lamont hospital, and the government allowed that to remain. One of the values of having that separate voice came out about 15 months ago during the debates on

Bill 11. The Lamont hospital board decided to calculate the cost of cataract surgery in the Lamont hospital. They folded in staff time, utilities and equipment, cleanup and preparation, and so on, and came up with a cost per eye of just over $200. I don't have the figure right here.

AN HON. MEMBER: Including the surgeon?

DR. TAFT: Not including the surgeon. Surgeon fees are completely separate.

Those were reviewed, and they came up for some public debate. It was felt that maybe if absolutely everything were included, they might get up to $300 per eye, not including the surgeon's fees. That information was made public by a board that still has a remnant of independence, and I think that contributed to the debate on cataract surgery. I think that we might see more of that sort of thing happen under the elections under Bill 7 even if they're only good for two-thirds of the members. So there is something to be said for Bill 7; it's a partial step forward.

A further concern under Bill 7 is the creation of a separate bureaucracy for the elections. As we understand it, rather than simply leaving the electoral process under the Local Authorities Election Act, it transfers authority for those elections to the Minister of Health and Wellness. It gives him control over creating the wards and control over appointing the electoral officials, and we have some concern that it's an unnecessary duplication of the electoral machinery. It would have been, I think, feasible to simply use the existing municipal election mechanisms to implement the elections for Bill 7. But that's not a fatal flaw for the bill.

I think, however, the next issue has failed to be sorted out in Bill 7 – and I think it is a fatal flaw – and that's the failure of Bill 7 to adequately address the potential for conflicts of interest in the elections. Among the first people to bring this aspect of this bill to my attention were some of my constituents, who raised the alarm over provisions in the bill that allow people to run for and sit on RHA boards who own up to 50 percent of businesses that get income from or contract with the RHAs. So we are faced with a situation in which people who are benefiting substantially from contracts with the regional health authorities may also end up sitting on the boards of those health authorities, and unless I am misunderstanding the situation, that's simply unacceptable.

The Minister of Health and Wellness and I have debated this in question period to some extent. As far as I can tell, the Minister of Health and Wellness doesn't have his facts correct when he says things such as that the same bylaws for conflict of interest that apply to MLAs apply to the RHAs. He said just a couple of days ago, and I quote from Hansard: "The regional health authorities do have the same conflict of interest bylaws that apply to MLAs that sit in this Assembly." That's from the afternoon of Monday, May 28. I'm prepared to admit that I'm mistaken if that can be demonstrated to me, but to my knowledge the Conflicts of Interest Act does not apply to members of the regional health authorities. So I am troubled by, shall we say, some of the debate that's occurred in this Assembly.

Let's imagine for a moment that the minister is right, that everything is hunky-dory. Would we want a system that allowed the kinds of situations that are common in the Calgary regional health authority to exist throughout the government? Would we want a system in which the spouse of the Minister of Transportation could also be a major shareholder in a road-building company that contracted with that same department? I think there would be a lot of concern. Would we want a system in which the Minister of Energy was simultaneously a principle shareholder in an electric utility that was getting windfall profits from electricity deregulation?

I think very serious questions would be raised, and I think they would be raised legitimately. I think the government would probably act fairly quickly to end those conflicts of interest.

If we compare what's going on and what will be allowed under Bill 7 to major corporations, we'll find quite a contrast. I've tabled in this Assembly the conflict of interest policies for TransAlta, and they are unequivocal. They are very clear. Real, potential, and perceived conflicts of interest are to be avoided, period. Those policies of TransAlta are consistent with policies at many other major corporations. They are in fact typical.

So I think we have a great potential under Bill 7 for very, very serious problems, and I have to wonder how long the public will tolerate these kinds of situations. The elections that will be occurring in October will be one vehicle through which these issues are given more attention, and I think we will find increasing concern in the public. I think these situations in fact are allowed to continue at the peril of the government in the long term.

Because of our concerns we've fought hard to amend this bill. We were here through the middle of the night the other day presenting and arguing for amendments. We fought hard not only because of Bill 7 and concerns with the health care system but because the concerns that we are seeing in Bill 7 go beyond the health care system. It seems to us that Bill 7 weakens two of the principles that are fundamental to democracy. The first of those is full and open elections to local authorities, not the kind of halfhearted effort at the local autonomy and local elections that this bill provides. As I said earlier, it might well be better and clearer to have no elections to RHAs than the partial ones that will occur under this bill.

The second fundamental principle of democracy that we are concerned about with Bill 7 concerns the commitment to a public service that unequivocally respects fiduciary responsibilities and is never in a situation where that respect may be cast in doubt and the commitment to a public service that is genuinely responsible and accountable for the public interest first and foremost, without question, above the private interest.

So because Bill 7 is a step back for both of these principles, because we feel it inadequately addresses the need for fully elected regional health authorities, we will be voting against it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was listening to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview speak in third reading on Bill 7 just moments ago, I was asking myself what has changed in the bill from the time that it was introduced in the House to today, when we are in the very final stages of completing third reading of it. The answer is: not much.

Many serious flaws in the bill were drawn to the attention of the Assembly very early in the debate in second reading. Several members of this House spoke seriously, eloquently about those flaws, and I did my part. Not seeing any heed paid to those serious comments and analyses and observations is a disappointment.

It has been pointed out again and again that while the Bill takes some halting steps toward restoring democracy at the local level by moving towards electing members of the RHA, it stops short of what was expected, what Albertans expected. That is that every member of every RHA should be an elected member.

We have been down this path over the last seven, eight years. We have had a long enough time to experiment with all kinds of things, and they discovered along the way that that system didn't work. The government acknowledged that much by having to dismiss its handpicked RHA boards in at least two cases. Yet we find that this reluctant embracing of the democratic principle still allows the government to put democracy on a leash. That's the only way I can describe it. The government seems to be unable to trust . . .

MR. MacDONALD: Is it a short leash?

DR. PANNU: It's a very short leash, a very short leash.

MR. MASON: Two-thirds of the normal length.

DR. PANNU: That's right.

Democracy on a leash is really a vote of no confidence in democracy, Mr. Speaker. So I must put myself on record as opposing that attempt on the part of this government to continue to act as a jealous manager of the business of citizens in the way it has introduced this bill.

It's not right. It does not enjoy the support of my caucus, the New Democrat caucus, and I'm glad to acknowledge that the other opposition party is also opposed to it. Albertans need to know this, and I think that they appreciate that the opposition is doing its job in keeping the government's attention at least drawn to those issues where we think the government is failing in the form of the bills that it brings to the House. It fails in terms of respecting fully the principle of democracy, democratic elections and local autonomy, buttressed by full espousal and embracing of the principle of democratic elections.

The conflict of interest issue has also been spoken to, I think, at some length. I was looking at the eligibility criteria, Mr. Speaker, that will be used. I find that the eligibility criteria do not address the issue of conflict of interest as well as they should have. The eligibility criteria outlined here by the minister will allow many of the people who work in high administrative, management positions for the RHAs, while they at the same time hold major interests or own private surgical facilities which do business with the RHAs, to get elected, while employees, even if they are not leaders or officials of the unions representing them, are being disenfranchised.

So this enfranchisement, empowerment of those who in fact have serious potential for running into a conflict of interest problem with the RHAs is being allowed if they hold shares in a company or derive less than 50 percent of their total income from the RHAs. This set of criteria allows them to be candidates but doesn't allow ordinary employees, even when they hold no official position in their unions, to offer themselves for election unless there are two things. First, they have to seek a leave of absence to run, and secondly, if they get elected, then they will have to step down from their paid position within 30 days or remove, as it's called, the conditions of ineligibility in order to serve on RHAs.

This in effect is a test based on means. Ordinary employees who make $20,000, $30,000, $40,000, $50,000 a year working for the RHAs will have to give up their means of living in order to serve on RHAs. This is going back to the hoary days of early democratic experiment, when only people with wealth, people with property had the rights of voting or getting elected, and the rest were barred from that. This harks back to those not very good days of the democratic experiment.

So I'm unhappy that the eligibility criteria will disenfranchise a very large number of Albertans from getting elected to regional health authorities, which in turn will manage one of most important institutions and social programs that Albertans and Canadians give their highest priority to and hold extremely dear to their heart because it serves their interests. To disenfranchise a large number of Albertans from having the opportunity to be able to be elected and to serve on those authorities is a serious flaw in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, a couple of other points perhaps. The appointment process for one-third of the members: the minister obviously keeps tightly in his control as to who will be appointed, who will be the one-third appointed to each RHA. People who get elected won't know beforehand and the electors won't know until after they have cast their votes who the minister chooses to put on the RHAs in order to perhaps cancel the intentions in many cases of the voters who may choose certain kinds of people to be on the boards. So their effort to elect a certain kind of people will be to some degree neutralized by the minister if the minister chooses to use that power.

Given the record of this government on the issue of health care, including its headlong rush to pass Bill 11 against the very, very powerful opposition to it from ordinary Albertans, gives me no confidence that this power will not be abused by a minister who has the opportunity to exercise it in the name of this government. So the cherry-picking of appointees after the minister knows who the elected members are is another serious problem with this bill.

This problem is compounded further, of course, by the fact that the minister will also be able to gerrymander the boundaries of RHA regions to suit his and his government's purposes and intentions with respect to who should be elected and who should represent Albertans in each of the RHAs and then have the responsibility for manning and running and making important decisions with respect to the operations of our health care system and its future.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those comments I want to conclude and simply say to you that I and my caucus will not be able to support this bill. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Bill 9

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in third reading of Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001. The legislation we're discussing here tonight is a good example of how we're going to approach challenges in the future. This bill, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001, will streamline award processes and focus resources on innocent victims of crime in Alberta.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity at third reading to support Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001. Third reading is an opportunity to revisit the principles underlying the act, and I think that it's worth looking at those principles at this time and reminding us exactly what the act is based upon.

Of course, the most fundamental principle is that victims should promptly receive financial benefits for injuries that they may have suffered, and that's an important principle. I think that "promptly" is an important part of that principle, and that's in part what the act attempts to address.

Another principle is that victims should be treated with courtesy and compassion, their privacy should be respected, and they should suffer a minimum of inconvenience from their involvement with the criminal justice system as a result of crime. A third principle is that information must be available to victims about their participation in criminal proceedings and the scheduling process and ultimately what happens to the case.

A fourth principle that . . . [interjection] The Member for Calgary-Montrose is calling question. That's the first thing I've heard him say all session.

Where appropriate the views and concerns of victims should be considered and appropriate assistance provided throughout the criminal process. So the victims have to be supported in a world that for many of them will be new and uncomfortable. That's a good principle, Mr. Speaker.

A further principle is that when the personal interests of victims are affected, the views or concerns of the victims should be brought to the attention of the court. This again is something that in many cases has been lacking in the past. We now have the interests of victims being given more and more weight, and it's a principle that is part of this bill. An important principle, too, is that measures have to be taken to ensure that victims and their families are protected from any sort of intimidation or retaliation. I think for victims it removes a source of fear that they may have.

I guess the last principle and part of the guiding base for this act is that they should be made aware of relevant services, again something that's badly needed for victims, many who will not be acquainted with the kinds of services and support that's available to them.

So it's a good bill. A number of housekeeping concerns have been cleaned up. It allows for the appointment of more board members, and it creates additional panels. The appointment process I think can be questioned, but that's true of many of the government boards. This one is no exception.

So with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, we're pleased to support Bill 9. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Bill 20
Appropriation Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to offer with respect to Bill 20? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm finding that the time available for debate is very short, and I have not received answers back from the Department of Community Development. In reviewing my notes, I had some other questions that I wanted to ask as part of this debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2001.

Two areas I wanted to concentrate on. One was under the Community Development budget, the funding available for libraries, and thus under the Appropriations Act. I am looking under Community Development operating expense and capital investment of $591,160,000, somewhere in there. I note in going back over the department's plans that it does mention under corporate initiatives: "Improve public access to information through a strong public library network and library systems by increasing funding." When I look at the highlights, it says, "Funding to the province's 245 library boards and seven regional library systems to $14.9 million in recognition of the province's increasing population".

Given the way the budget is set up, in fact one cannot find a breakout that is specific to libraries. The only line item is under the Alberta library network, and that's when it had an injection of funds of $2.4 million in '99-2000. There's nothing else mentioned in there, so it's rolled up inside of something else. I don't know what. So I appreciate that the amount has increased to $14.9 million, but I don't know what it was before and can't find that from what's in the documents here. For all I know, this could have increased from $14.8 million, which would not be a significant increase, considering what's happening with our libraries.

I am aware that the Alberta Library Trustees met with one of the standing policy committees in the last year to lobby for increased funding. Particularly at that time it was around population-based funding, and they were still being funded at the 1997 population numbers. Being as we're now four years past that, it just wasn't keeping up.

In particular what had sparked this coming to the forefront for a number of different areas was that the Banff public library board had voted to eliminate their user fees. As a result, their usage of the library had increased substantially. It was quite noticeable. Many other libraries were heard to be saying at the same time: yes, we would very much like to do that as well. So seeing as I don't have the answers back, I'd appreciate getting the answers from the Minister of Community Development as to exactly what the breakout is. At this point I'll ask for some specifics as well so that we know what the increase was for each library board.

I think it's important that I spend some time on this. As a province that wants to move into the future in a leadership position, certainly literacy is a primary component of doing that. Access to information in the library is a major pillar that upholds that. One of the basic missions of public libraries is to keep information available, affordable, and accessible to the entire public. I know that librarians have worked very hard and that libraries have worked very hard to provide information through the Internet and computer usage. Every library now has Internet access so that the public can get access to that immense cosmic world of information that is through the Internet.

Also, in my discussions with individual librarians there's a real consciousness in attempting to catalogue and make other kinds of information available by digitalizing and getting that into an electronic form, which can then be carried forward, and people can get access to even more kinds of information. So librarians move from being librarians of the books that are in their stacks and being helpful in a reference way, where you go to them and say: "I'm looking for information on such and such. Where would I find that?" or "Help me." Indeed, librarians can help you focus and narrow down that entire library full of volumes to the three or four that are going to help you.

They're doing the same thing with that cosmic world of information that's available out there in the Internet and again helping people to be able to focus down and sort through what is valuable information for them. I know that there's a philosophical stand that libraries take where they don't want to be charging user fees. They need to be getting enough funding and be valued enough by the government that their service is more accessible to people.

What we're finding is that – well, for example, when you charge for a service, you're suggesting that it's not necessary to all users. I think there's something to that. We do have people that are deprived of library services because they can't afford to pay. I know some would say: "Oh, pshaw. Come on; it's only 10 bucks or 15 bucks or 40 bucks. Anybody can afford that." Well, I suppose in a different world, but when you're living in a world like we have where everything is 10 bucks or 15 bucks or 40 bucks, eventually you have no more money left. I think library usage is one of those areas that people just can't find the additional money for, and that's a problem, because those are the folks that most need to access the library.

But more than that, we have the numbers to show us that since 1994 the number of registered borrowers has decreased by 16 percent and overall circulation has decreased 4 percent even in Edmonton with the addition of three new branches since 1996, but visits to the library are steadily increasing by an average of 12 percent per year. So fewer people are becoming members and borrowing material, but more people are using the library. I think as a demonstration of our fundamental value for libraries, we need to be giving consistent, stable, predictable funding and not making libraries come to us and beg because they're pegged to an antiquated funding system.

Certainly in the Edmonton system elimination of membership fees will remove a major barrier that's currently limiting access to information for some segments of the population. In the documents I've looked at, the libraries are advocating for the removal of library card fees, and they have to look to the province to make up the $3 million in lost revenues.

When Banff public library eliminated its membership fee in 2000, it saw membership rise by 40 percent. Forty percent.

MR. MacDONALD: That's a lot of readers.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, yeah. And circulation of library materials reached the highest level ever.

MS CARLSON: And the Minister of Community Development really supported that when he was a Liberal.

MS BLAKEMAN: That's true. The Minister of Community Development really did support that when he was a Liberal. So I'm sure that he will find his way to supporting it now that he's a minister. Certainly the pressure is on from over here.

You know, I keep repeating that it's a fundamental value, but it is, and we need to see the support there, the money where the mouth is. I think it's more than that. It's about a free flow of information to everyone who wants it regardless of income or any other factor. It's, I think, vital to the functioning of a free society.

So we had a per capita rate of $4.29, which was reduced in 1994 cuts to $4.03. [interjections] I have other members rooting along with me in this particular discussion, so a number of us feel passionately about it.

MS CARLSON: Would those be government members?

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, they are government members.

It really hasn't increased. Population figures on which the per capita grants were based were frozen at 1991 population figures for six years, and they're now based on 1997 figures. That hurts. I mean, in those six years there was a lot of cost cutting, reduction in purchase of new materials, some maintenance that had to be set aside, some programs that weren't able to be expanded based on a population increase. There were a lot of sacrifices that were made to keep the doors open during those years. Then they had an increase bringing them up to '97, and they've been stuck at that '97 rate now for 5 years.

We have to remember that the cost of living for libraries continued to increase even if their grants didn't, which is an issue that I often bring up in context with funding for the arts groups. They can't go out and buy material to build sets or paint sets or have costumes or mount a visual art display and say: "Well, I'm only being funded," in the case of the arts, "in 1988 dollars, so can I pay in 1988 dollars?" No. They have to be paid in 2001 dollars. It's exactly the same thing with libraries.

Now, this is a specific point brought forward around Edmonton. By not adjusting the per capita grant to yearly changes in population, the provincial government has shortchanged Edmonton Public Library by approximately $323,000. That doesn't sound like a lot of money. It isn't a lot of money, but it sure makes a difference in a library system. There are over 32,000 Edmontonians for whom no provincial library dollars are made available. That starts to count when in a city the size of Edmonton, if we look at it that way, there are 32,000 people we can't service at all. You can use those figures for anywhere you want to pick out: Calgary, Grande Prairie, Stettler, Camrose, Banff, Vermilion, Lloydminster. Anywhere you want to look, that same thing is going to hold true.

The funding package currently before the provincial government for their consideration includes a per capita increase from $4.03 to $5. Now, it may well be that that's, in fact, what happened, but given the way the government sets up its estimates book, we are able to get less and less information. Things are rolled up so much as to what you see on the page here. Well, I'm assuming the libraries are under this, but it's under Alberta Foundation for the Arts' statement of operations: assisting arts promotion; film development; arts participation; arts support; artist development; collection, preservation, and display of provincial artworks; and administration.

Somewhere in there is libraries, but we don't know where, and we don't know what it was increased from to bring us to the $14.9 million that was mentioned in the business plan. So I have great concern about that, but more than that, I'm looking for a commitment from the government that I won't have to be standing here every year begging for the money to be increased to libraries. It needs to be reliable, predictable, long-term, sustainable funding for libraries. [interjections] I hope not. I have some colleagues who are more cynical than I. I'm the angel of optimism here. I'm hoping that it's going to happen and that I won't have to keep getting up here and talking about this.

A special note needs to be made about funding for urban libraries. I will state that I am concerned about all libraries in the province, but obviously I'm an Edmonton MLA and use the Edmonton libraries and am most concerned about the libraries in my riding, which includes the central library. There has been a lot of support recently for creating a quality of access for Albertans living in rural areas, but urban libraries need to be able to address their unique demands as well. Mostly what's included in that is both a growing but also a very diverse population, where you have multilingual, multibackground, multi-economic backgrounds. There's just such a diversity of people that we are trying to address. New branches have to be built, and certainly technology support increases many times over. As I said, the needs of cultural groups need to be addressed. I think there's a need to provide targeted funding to the larger urban centres to maintain a level playing field and to allow public libraries to address the needs of the large urban centres in the provincewide library partnership.

The Alberta public library electronic network: it goes by APLEN. We had put a fair amount of money into that to have a network capability be established that created an electronic model for Albertans to access libraries' resources across the province, and I'm delighted that that was of benefit to libraries outside of what they would call the main corridor. As of March 31 the initial phase of this project ended, as I noted before. That line item is not turning up in the budget anymore. Ongoing support is needed to maintain this network. There's no point in us having created the money to get it up and then have no funding to maintain it and train the library staff or even pay for the basic Internet connections and continue to purchase the databases and the linkages with universities and colleges. This is an excellent project. We did put money into it to start with. I'd like to make sure that the money is there to sustain it.

We also have the Supernet, that was announced by the government in one of its many one-time-only funding announcements in the last year, whereby they would run high-speed Internet to the outside of every municipal building in every town. A nice idea, but that's bringing it to the outside of the building. Somehow libraries that are already stretched for resources, as I've now talked about for some 18 minutes, are expected to bring the Internet connection into the building, wire it up through the building, and make sure that they have the hardware systems to run this.

I mean, that makes me apoplectic. If I was a library manager in some town, where am I supposed to score the extra money to bring that Internet connection up through the walls? The construction costs alone to just physically get the wires up through the wall and to wherever my computer is – no matter how you cut that, you're into some money. You know, that's not part of what the library was planning to spend, so it's like being given a gift. It's a bit like, "You've won a free trip to Barbados if you can just pay the $600 insurance fee for it to claim your prize." Well, trying to come up with the $600 is beyond most people's means, so forget about that trip.

Well, we have exactly the same situation here. We have a wonderful opportunity brought to the outside of the building, but trying to come up with the money to get it into the building and have the hardware and the training for the staff and everything else that's needed I'm sure for some libraries is just simply beyond their means. So we have a great idea that just doesn't have follow-through here. I did ask a question about it, and I was told that no additional funding was going to be made available to any of those municipal buildings, and in particular the libraries, to actually make it usable.

So I have spent all of my time here talking about libraries. Just very quickly one other thing. As a member of the Public Accounts Committee, which is an all-party legislative committee, I'm putting forward the notation that the budget for that committee needs to be increased. Now, it is approved by Members' Services, I think, but we're in a situation where we now have 24 ministries to scrutinize, and the government is in session for such a little time – we've been in about six weeks this time and maybe three weeks in the fall – we're looking at seven ministries out of 24. We need to be able to meet outside of session.

Thank you very much for this opportunity.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am going to stand and support what the hon. member has just said. I am very, very concerned about how we view libraries. I go back to 1993-94 when library funding was cut, and it hasn't been reinstated. Then along the way we're using 1997 census figures. The hon. member talked about the Edmonton situation, but the situation is the same everywhere, particularly in all of those communities that have grown. It concerns me a great deal. Over the last several months I have had a number of librarians, library staff, library trustees from many, many places talk to me.

I think that it is very important that we address this. I hope that it is something that my colleagues that are responsible, the Minister of Revenue for instance – I hope that it is something that is on the agenda at the Future Summit. We talk about the financial side of things and having the lowest taxes in Canada and the best province for many, many things. We could excel and have the best library system in all of Canada, and it wouldn't take too much to do that, but we have to be committed to it.

For many, many years I served municipally. On a regular basis a number of groups, of course, come and approach you, and a number of those groups are sports groups. I have nothing against sports groups. I think it's important in communities that we have arenas and swimming pools and soccer fields and baseball and so forth, but it's also important to have a library that's funded, that's accessible to everyone in the community. It's important that these dollars are in today's dollars, not 1993 dollars. The price of a book has gone up 33 and a third percent since 1994.

AN HON. MEMBER: Go to Chapters.

MRS. GORDON: It doesn't matter whether it's Chapters or who it is. The price of a book has gone up. It's costing our libraries more money to access those books, regardless of whether they're involved with the regional library system. It is something that I have expressed often in question period in this Assembly, and I feel very, very strongly that we must take a hard look at this.

I know in the communities that I represent, the community I live in, our library is an important, important part of that community. Not only do we have the function of books. I mean, it is just wonderful that someone can go into a library today and with the technology, if your home library doesn't have that book, they can bring that book in for you, often within two or three days. I can access this library here and drop my book off in Lacombe, Alberta. Now, what better service than that? I don't want to lose that. I think it's taken us a long time to get this to where it's at, and we need to ensure that it stays, if not increases, and that we do have the best library system.

Our library in my hometown has a number of children's programs: not only the library itself and reading and the book end of it but a number of play things and toddler time. As well, they provide a wonderful service to seniors and shut-ins. They have volunteers, Friends of the Library, that will take and give of their own time to ensure that people that are in the hospital have access to books. For people that are in the nursing homes or senior citizens' lodges or those that are just in their own homes from inclement weather or have a cold or the flu, they will deliver books to them. So I think it is very, very important.

My challenge that I put out there: please, please, can this be part of the discussion at the Future Summit? I think we will find this is something that Albertans very much want.

Now, one thing I do have to say too, though I'm no longer involved, is that the community lottery board program in most communities was very, very receptive to helping libraries. In helping libraries, it wasn't helping them with books but often with shelving or other things that were needed in the library. I know that a lot of librarians, when I was involved with the community lottery board program, would write or phone me and thank me for that program because they were able to access dollars for things that were needed.

I hope that I have put the challenge out there. I'm very proud of what has happened in Alberta and for a number of things where we can stand up and say: yes, we are the best in Canada. But I would be very, very proud if I could stand up and say that we have the best library system in all of Canada and that we are a province that recognizes the necessity for our young people to have access to a well-stocked library that's open and accessible when they can use it. I think it would be marvelous if we could say that we don't want our libraries to charge membership fees, that that service is available to anyone who comes through that door, that they can pick up a book anywhere and it can be dropped off anywhere, and any author or title can be accessed by them very, very quickly.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to address the government's Appropriation Act, Bill 20. I'm just going to go through very, very generally some of the concerns that we have with respect to the expenditures and revenues which the government has requested for this year. I've addressed a little bit already in my previous comments the flat tax, which we have a serious concern with, something which I'm not going to repeat.

We also have very serious reservations about the shifting of revenue sources for the government as a whole. There are a number of things that are occurring or not occurring that are moving around the burden on Albertans, and we have quite a concern about that.

The cut to corporate taxes is something that causes us quite a bit of concern. We do support reduction in the small business tax that the government has brought forward. We think that that's something that's sustainable, that's something that can be afforded, and we think that it's an area where if you do have adequate sources of revenue in other areas, it's appropriate. The results, quite frankly, of cutting taxes for small business on employment and on the business sector itself are much greater in our view if you put your emphasis on small business as opposed to big corporations.

Conversely, Mr. Chairman, we are very much opposed to the drastic reduction in corporate income tax that this government is proposing. I think another member in previous debate stated that it's far too simplistic to equate low corporate income tax with business growth or growth in the economy or employment or any of those factors. If it were the case that low corporate taxes were a guarantee of prosperity and full employment, you wouldn't see such poverty in places like Haiti, as I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview referred to, or many other very, very poor Third World countries that have extremely low corporate tax rates. So it's far too simplistic to believe that simply cutting corporate income tax is what is attracting investment to this province and will continue to do so in the future.

I think it's very, very dangerous, as we get into a more globalized economy, that different jurisdictions are competing with each other to cut taxes for corporations. In fact, I would say that it's quite clear that big transnational corporations are playing off political jurisdictions one against the other in order to drive down their tax rates around the world. They promise many, many things for that, but I think the evidence is far from conclusive that it is necessary in order to ensure prosperity. I liken it, rather, to a form of blackmail. I think that the resulting revenue position of many, many governments is going to result in further cuts to the standard of living of average people, low-income people, and the programs that they depend upon.

We do support the increase in the personal exemption. One of the hon. members on the government side from Grande Prairie made a point about how many, many low-income people are going to cease having to pay income tax, but he connected that with the flat tax. It has nothing to do with the flat tax at all. They're two separate issues, two separate measures that are both being brought in at the same time. The increase in the personal exemption is entirely responsible for the elimination of the people with very low income from the tax rolls altogether. It has nothing to do with the flat tax. The reduction in the personal exemption simply masks the maldistributive effect of the flat tax on income classes in this province.

We think it's high time that the government eliminated the royalty tax credit, which I think has cost this province around $200 million a year. I think it's totally without foundation. I don't know what the policy basis is for it. What does the province get as a result? Certainly it's a tax holiday for corporations, but I'm not sure what the policy benefit is. I would appreciate it if someone opposite would stand up and enlighten me on that point.

We continue, Mr. Chairman, to collect far less for our resources than we ought to, and we collect far less than many other jurisdictions do. The government is very proud of saying and even going down to Washington to say that the oil and gas in the ground in Alberta belongs to the people of Alberta, yet we sell it for a song. We let companies come in and take it out of the ground, make enormous profits out of it, and we don't have enough respect for our own ownership of those resources to insist on a fair price for those resources from the companies that come here, many of them not even from Canada, to extract our oil and gas. I think it's shameful that the government continues to take a fraction of the royalties that it ought to. Just because of the enormous amount and the current price of gas and oil that's being taken out of the ground, the government's revenue picture is very rich. So it may not be readily apparent to people that we could be getting even more, vastly more amounts of revenues from our oil and gas if we insisted on a fair price from the companies.

One of the aspects of this act that I find most troubling is the fact that from gambling revenue we're taking approximately a billion dollars of revenue. If members can just think how much that is and how much is being extracted from people who can ill afford to support government operations and the problems that are being caused by that, I think they will realize that it's an obscene amount of money to be taking from ordinary citizens through gambling. We don't take anywhere near that kind of money from people buying food or housing or other necessities of life, but for something as unnecessary as gambling it's an enormous amount of money. I think it's high time the government began treatment for its addiction to gambling revenue. I would recommend any number of 12-step programs.

We need to begin also dealing with the codependence that the government has created, and that is the community groups. The pushers have convinced them: "Just try a little bit. You'll like it." Now they need more and more and more. So instead of getting revenue from the people who should be providing it, the people that can afford it, they've involved themselves in a very, very addictive style of revenue, getting many community groups hooked on it as well. I think that's been a deliberate policy of the government. They've been very crafty about it, and I think that the whole situation is extremely dysfunctional and needs treatment.

I would like to talk a little bit about some of the things that the government could have done from a financial point of view, starting with health care premiums. I also spoke to that a little bit. My colleague, the leader of our party, addressed the question of health care premiums, which I think is a very contradictory position for the government to continue collecting health care premiums from every family, regardless of their ability to pay, when they're hell bent on eliminating taxes of every description, of course mostly for the wealthy and the corporations. Their avowed aim is to cut taxes wherever they can. Here is a very, very regressive tax, that stands out like a sore thumb, yet they are blind to this tax.

The other point that I'd like to make, Mr. Chairman, is the question of tuition fees, which in Alberta are among the highest in the land. We have prided ourselves on our education system and our commitment to education, yet student debt has become a very significant barrier to many young people getting an education, particularly those from modest-income backgrounds. So why has the government cut taxes? Why has the government cut all sorts of charges to the citizens as they are awash in oil and gas revenue and awash in gambling revenue? They could afford to do that, but again they've turned a blind eye to the question of tuition fees. I think that it's high time that they acted to bring down tuition fees. In fact, I would go so far as to suggest that they should be slashed. They should be returned to the level that they existed at just a few years ago, and that is a very, very much lower level than they're at now. That's for sure, Mr. Chairman.

Since the government is awash in cash at the moment, I have to ask why they haven't worked to extend the medicare system in our province and why they haven't considered bringing in coverage for prescription drugs for Albertans. I think that that would be an excellent program. It's a very, very high cost of health care. Of course, one of the uncompleted or unfulfilled aspects of the medicare system is in fact the drug component. Since medicare was brought into this country, first in Saskatchewan under the NDP government of Tommy Douglas and then adopted by the federal government as a national program, the proportion of drugs as a component of the entire health care cost has grown dramatically. So it's time that we work to evolve medicare and take it to the next stage.

I think a prescription drug plan that is universal would be a very good step in that regard to ensure that we do have universal health care for everyone who needs it. Also, I think we would be able to significantly lower medical costs as a whole, because we would be able to promote the use of generic drugs. There would be bulk buying of drugs and so on. All of those would work to bring down the cost of medication in our health care system. So I see this as also a way of controlling costs in our health care system.

I want to touch briefly on the need for more municipal grants in our province. I've talked a little bit in this Assembly about police grants, the need to support community policing among our police forces, the need for more funding for transportation and particularly a capital program to support LRT extension in both Edmonton and in Calgary.

Going back briefly to police grants, I want to reiterate a point that I also made earlier in the Assembly that an increase in police grants for RCMP for smaller communities is most welcome, but it needs to be matched with a provision of some grants for police in other centres that have their own police service.

I want to talk a little bit about libraries as well. Both the Member for Edmonton-Centre and the Member for Lacombe-Stettler have spoken eloquently about that, and I also would like to join my voice with theirs. I served for a number of years on the library board here in the public library system in Edmonton, and I can tell you firsthand what a fabulous job they do with very, very limited resources. In Edmonton, for example, we have the highest utilization rate of any place in Canada, and at the same time we have virtually the lowest per capita funding of any library in Canada.

Edmontonians and Albertans use their libraries and use them very, very extensively. The fact that we've been able to maintain virtually a free borrowing policy and good quality in the collections and so on is due more to the hard work of our librarians, our public library boards, and municipalities that have compensated for reductions in provincial funding. I think this is something that the government ought to pay attention to.

I can assure them that support for libraries runs right across the economic spectrum in our society. It runs right across the political spectrum. It's not just Socialists or Liberals that read books and visit the libraries. I can assure members opposite that Tories do it just as much and benefit just as much. In fact, there is actually a book here in the House, so we have literacy in the House, and I'm very pleased to see that. I would like to support my two hon. colleagues in their call for more funding for libraries.

It's hard for us in our party sometimes to dig through the government budget and say that you should cut here or you should cut there and so on, but we do have some comments about waste in government. One of the things that is of great concern is the multiplication of government departments. This flies in the face of all of the rhetoric and campaigns of previous Conservative regimes about streamlining, simplifying government, reducing the number of departments, and so on. Now we have four new departments that weren't necessary one year ago, but now all of a sudden they are necessary. We've addressed during the debate on the estimates specific costs of duplication in terms of ministers' salaries, deputy ministers' salaries, assistant deputy ministers' salaries, and so on. We think that there are significant costs that are completely unnecessary.

Mr. Chairman, I want to qualify that. We certainly are supportive of the establishment of the Ministry of Seniors, and we think that that's a progressive step. Hopefully the government will again begin to address the needs of seniors, many of whose programs were dramatically slashed in the early and mid-1990s. I look forward to some good things from that department.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we think that the government's revenue sources are distorted and not placing the burden of government expenditures on those who can most afford to pay, taking advantage of the weak in our society, to a degree, through their dependence on gambling. They have not eliminated many of the costs to Albertans that would benefit everybody, particularly the low- and middle-income people, such as health care premiums, tuition, and so on. There are many areas of government expenditure that are still too low, and there are areas where the government is wasting money on unnecessary governing. We think that those things ought to be corrected.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will now take my seat. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My biggest comments relating to Bill 20 have to do with the long-term sustainability of the fiscal situation of the Alberta government and indeed the wealth of Albertans. I'm concerned that we need to be paying attention to benefiting all Albertans, not just all Albertans today but all Albertans into the future.

MS BLAKEMAN: You mean an Alberta advantage for all, not just the privileged few?

DR. TAFT: An Alberta advantage for all. And not just for all today but for, as I say, future generations.

I think that if we're to do that, the future has to be approached with an eye to the lessons of the past, especially the lessons of the past 30 years, which I think certainly mark the period in which the current party has been ruling. They also mark the time in which petroleum prices have jumped to unprecedented levels. We're all aware that Alberta has the most volatile economy in North America. We go through big booms, then we seem to go through rather dramatic busts, and then we're back into booms again. We've come to adapt to that, we live with that, and we can cope, but we do pay a heavy price for that. I think we need to work towards stability over the long term.

Alberta's is a petroleum-driven economy. The biggest thing by far that differentiates Alberta's economy from, let's say, Manitoba's is our petroleum. I think if we are to maintain the kind of advantage and benefits we have over other provinces, we have to become better stewards of our wealth than we have been in the past.

We can illustrate the kind of wealth we enjoy here by looking at a few numbers and comparing what happens in Alberta with what happens in other provinces. The government of Alberta receives in natural resource revenues about twice the amount that all other Canadian provinces receive combined. I think that's worth repeating for all of those who are listening to me. The government of Alberta receives in natural resource revenues about twice the amount that all other Canadian provinces combined receive. We have a level of wealth flowing through our treasury that is unparalleled in the rest of the country, and that wealth flows not from our own cleverness or our own factories or our own education, but it flows from the fact that we stand on huge petroleum reserves.

Now, when I went through and looked at the budget, the single most striking figure in all of that was the revenue figure for conventional oil, which was budgeted at $881 million for this year. The actual the year before was $1.4 billion, and I imagine the actual this year will be a bit higher than what has been budgeted. But $881 million, while it's a lot of money, is probably a 75 to 80 percent drop in the revenue provided by conventional oil income 15 years ago in Alberta. In other words, although oil prices are good today, we are earning only a small fraction of what we once earned, because conventional oil production has dropped so dramatically. Our conventional oil reserves are well under 50 percent of what they were at their peak, and our conventional oil production has also dropped dramatically.

The oil age is over in Alberta, and the current boom is being driven largely by natural gas. The pattern is being repeated with natural gas that we experienced with conventional oil. Natural gas reserves are dropping in Alberta. The size of gas reserves found in Alberta in the past 15 years is less than one-quarter the size of pre-1980 discoveries. So just as we went through a 20-year boom and then declined in our conventional oil reserves, let's say from the 1970s to the 1990s, we are going through the same process with natural gas now.

Now, admittedly, heavy oil reserves are immense, but they do not provide the royalties that conventional petroleum does. We also have to remember the lessons of other Alberta towns and areas, the lessons of places like Drumheller and Nordegg and the Crowsnest. In many cases all those areas were boomtowns driven by coal at one time. Coal production from the 1920s until the 1950s was tremendous. I believe that in 1950 there were well over a hundred active coal mines in the Red Deer River Valley and the Drumheller area, yet a mere 10 years later 90 percent of those mines were closed, not because the coal was gone but because technology had made those coal mines obsolete. The railroads had replaced steam engines with petroleum-driven engines, and the demand for coal simply vanished.

Certainly there are technologies under development today that are aimed specifically at making oil and gas obsolete, and in 10 or 20 or 30 years those technologies will probably come to fruition. It won't matter that we have hundreds of billions of barrels of oil in the oil sands, because people simply won't want it.

So I am looking in Bill 20 and in the budgets of today and the future from this government for an emphasis on sustainability. This has implications for things such as the heritage trust fund. The heritage trust fund, I think, needs to be attended to. It needs to be grown. We need to be looking at ways of increasing the income to the heritage trust fund or some similar vehicle so that when petroleum revenues decline, as they inevitably will, we have something to fall back on.

This also has implications for our tax policies. I am concerned that the fad of rushing toward the lowest level of taxes that are possible in the short term in Alberta will cost us very seriously in the long term. Those kinds of fads are simply not sustainable. We do need to face up to the fact that in a modern civilized society taxes are a price we pay. Whether we want schools or health care or roads or safe food or social justice, we need to pay taxes. I think we need to face up to that and accept that as a fact of life and not get caught up in the rush towards the lowest possible taxes, or in the long run we will also have the lowest possible quality of life for the most number of Albertans.

Other implications of the swings in Alberta have to do with the direct delivery of public services here. The swings that we've seen in health care funding, education funding, municipality funding, funding for roads and infrastructure, where during the boom times we pour money into those areas and during the slower times we pull money out, those patterns cause great disruptions. We find that we are laying off thousands of people and then struggling just a few years later to rehire them. We are closing facilities or even destroying them and then moving just a few years later to replace them. We are letting the infrastructure, both human and physical, run down and deteriorate, and then we are faced with higher costs than ever to bring it back up to standards.

So we need a long-term fiscal approach in this province led by this government that works toward stability and sustainability. Increasing government spending dramatically when the economy is hot and then cutting back on government spending when the economy has stalled is the opposite of good economic policy. We should be looking at ways to invest while the economy is slow and to dampen the booms when they are occurring. So one of the big general themes I'm concerned about with Bill 20 is the need for a sustainable and stable fiscal policy.

A second area and the only other area I will comment on this evening has to do with health care spending. Health care spending does consume a substantial portion of the provincial budget, and certainly there are indications that health care spending is rising. If it continues to rise in the way it has in this year, it's not going to be sustainable, but I don't think we need to be bankrupting ourselves to have an outstanding health care system that meets the needs of all Albertans.

I think some of the ideas that could keep the health care system sustainable are already floating about, are well regarded, well developed, and have been mentioned by some of my colleagues on this side of the Assembly. One of those is a pharmacare program. A public pharmacare program would counteract the wildly soaring costs of drugs in Canada. In fact, it's an indicator of how market forces fail in health care that one of the areas where market forces dominate and things have been left to the private-sector, pharmaceuticals, is where costs are rising most dramatically, yet there is experience from other jurisdictions that a public pharmacare program can provide equal or better service while containing costs and in fact lowering costs. So I would encourage this government to look very seriously at a public pharmacare program.

The same thing applies to home care. When they are ill or as elderly Albertans become frail, most Albertans would much prefer to stay in their homes. We can look at developing a public home care program, funded, administered, staffed, and operated publicly, that becomes the backbone of our health care system in the same way that institutions have traditionally been the backbone of that health care system. By shifting resources more and more to home care and keeping institutional costs contained, I think we can go a long way to preserving the functioning of our medicare system and a long way to stabilizing the historically unstable patterns of public spending in Alberta.

We must also keep medicare public, and that includes the provision of many more active treatment services such as surgeries. As we move, as I'm afraid we are moving, towards private, for-profit delivery of these services, we are bringing into the system forces that will press costs up. We are seeing that played out once again in the United States, which has the largest private-sector health care system in the world. A recent article in the New York Times talks about the unprecedented surge in the last year in health care costs in the United States that's being driven by for-profit corporations trying to compensate for lower profit margins in other areas of the economy and trying to compete with returns on high-tech or high-profit investments in other areas of the economy.

Frankly, what's occurring in many parts of the United States now is the rise of private, for-profit monopolies in health care, and these monopolies are able to dictate to insurers and health care providers what prices will be paid. We must not go in that direction. We must keep medicare public in Alberta. Bringing private, for-profit corporations into the health care system, as I said, will simply increase the forces that drive up our costs.

As I review Bill 20 and as I look forward to future versions of Bill 20 and future budgets, I'm looking to a government that is intent on building a base for permanent prosperity in Alberta. I'm not convinced yet that we're at that point. I hope we get there soon.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a couple of comments that I didn't have an opportunity to ask the Minister of Environment about earlier, and I would like him to address these questions at some point in the near future.

Specifically what I want to ask him about, Mr. Chairman, in terms of planning for the next year and the years to come on electricity policy from the environmental side are ideas that came out of the Pembina institute paper A Smart Electricity Policy for Alberta. Could the minister tell us what he plans to do in terms of their policy proposal that talks about establishing and funding a new, nonprofit Alberta energy efficiency office that would help overcome various energy inefficiencies?

They could act as a central co-ordinating body for energy efficiency with an emphasis on education, information, and coordination of zero-interest energy efficiency loans to consumers, targeted efficiency rebates, and the development of technical standards. The principal objective of this would be to work with retail electricity companies to help them implement their energy efficiency portfolio standards, and existing electrical retailers could be the main facilitative and delivery agents for this. If he could comment on that, I would appreciate it.

Also, their other policy proposal of establishing an Alberta energy efficiency revolving fund. This fund, which could be created through a onetime Alberta government contribution of $100 million, would act as an endowment for energy efficiency for the province. The primary function would be to provide zero-interest loans to end-use consumers to implement energy efficiency measures, and these loans could be co-ordinated by the energy efficiency office. The fund would be replenished through loan payments.

One of the most significant barriers to cost-efficient, effective energy efficiency in Alberta is the lack of access to capital to implement appropriate measures. We think that this would be a really good idea. They could look to the city of Toronto, which has had something similar to this happen.

So if the Minister of Energy could answer those questions for me, Mr. Chairman, then I conclude my remarks on this bill.

[The clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 20.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:56 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 31, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/31

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure and honour to present this Assembly with a petition signed by some 1,800 constituents from Edmonton-Castle Downs and surrounding area petitioning this government to build a high school and/or high schools in Edmonton-Castle Downs or surrounding area.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: May I have my petition read at this time, Mr. Speaker?

THE CLERK ASSISTANT:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to include the following question in the forthcoming provincial election: are you in favour of the Alberta Government using your tax dollars to pay for abortions?

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Matrimonial Property Amendment Act, 2001

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce a bill being the Matrimonial Property Amendment Act, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, this act would amend the Matrimonial Property Act to ensure that the surviving spouse of a marriage terminated by death should have equivalent rights on the division of matrimonial property to a spouse in a marriage terminated by divorce.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 212 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to correct a statement I made in question period yesterday when asked about a Mr. Ralph Canham out of Calgary. I had indicated that I did not know the person. On checking of our records, we find, as a matter of fact, that on February 20 of this year I had written to Mr. Canham regarding his situation with the Workers' Compensation Board, and I'd like to file the appropriate number of copies of that letter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of three letters which are being sent to my colleagues across the way with respect to my responses to their excellent questions that surfaced during Alberta Community Development's Committee of Supply debate a couple of weeks ago. The first is to the leader of the third official party, the second is to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and the third is to the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. This comprises 29 pages of answers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with great pride on a beautiful Alberta day to table information about routine questions that have been asked of me in this House regarding electricity prices and certain jurisdictions that are certainly charging more than Alberta. It's a delight for me to present these to the House, and I have five copies.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to be able to table five copies of the annual reports from the Regulatory Review Secretariat. These are for the year 1999 as well as the year 2000, up until March 15.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd table five copies of proposed amendments to Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, 2001, put forward by the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta. This puts on the public record their amendments, as was done with the amendments for the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association during debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Mr. Carson Trueman of Drayton Valley. He's concerned that there is too much development happening in the Bighorn wildland park and that this area should be protected and preserved.

The second tabling I have today is a copy of a petition signed by more than 1,000 people from throughout the province. The original went to the Minister of Environment. We're expecting him to table it. It petitions "to stop the transfer of the Kananaskis, Ghost/Waiparous and Burnt Timber Forests to an FMA."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter written by the Alberta Wilderness Association to the Minister of Environment requesting him to stop any further negotiations on the forest management agreement that's relative to the Kananaskis region.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of a proposal for a prefeasibility study of the Meridian water management project in southeast Alberta and southwest Saskatchewan. This UMA Engineering Ltd. proposal is dated June 1997.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to table with the Assembly today copies of the 14th Annual Mayor's Luncheon for Business & the Arts saluting all the excellent artwork that is done in Edmonton and area as co-ordinated by the Professional Arts Coalition of Edmonton Society.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker and Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very special individuals who are seated in your gallery. Visiting today from Winchester, England, are Brian and Delphine Wilson. I'm very proud to have had a long personal association with Brian and Delphine, and it may interest you to know that Brian served as my best man some 40 years ago when I married my bride. It is my pleasure to have the opportunity to host them during their first visit to Alberta in 40 years. I would ask Brian and Delphine Wilson to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a rare day in the Assembly today, and it's a real pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly some folks from the fine community of Glenwood. It's always a pleasure to introduce folks that have come such a long way. These folks are from the home of the first irrigation system in Alberta and the famous Glenwood cheese. Representing the Glenwood school we have 11 students as well as four adults, Mr and Mrs. Doug and Vicki Smith and Mr. and Mrs. Kevin and Debra Johnson. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 28 bright and energetic students from the Parkdale elementary school in Wetaskiwin. They're visiting the Legislature here this morning and this afternoon. They're accompanied by teacher Mr. Richard Svrcek and parents Leslie Cameron, Dorothy Tost, and Mike Waller. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and be recognized by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is a great honour for me to introduce some students that come from a long way. In fact, they've been traveling seven and a half hours to get here. That's only a third of the way of my constituency. They are from Cadotte Lake. They're joined by their teachers Sonya Clarke, Trudy Chambers, and Kelly Fuller as well as parent helpers Edna Auger, Mike Boucher, Stacy Laboucan, Marilyn Bates, George Merrier, Connie Sawan, Bella Cardinal, and Georgina Whitehead. Cadotte Lake is really a long way from here, and I'm so proud that they've made it here. I'd like to have all my colleagues welcome them, please.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two very special ladies. I actually lived with these ladies for about 18 years, and that's before I was married. The reason is because they are my sisters. I would ask Chris Leinweber and Robin Howley to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you.

AN HON. MEMBER: How do you follow that one?

MR. DUNFORD: Follow that one, they say.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a real pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a very distinguished Lethbridge resident. I'm referring to Bill Cade. He is the president of the University of Lethbridge. I'd like to share this introduction with my colleague from Lethbridge-East. Dr. Cade actually lives in the constituency of Lethbridge-East but, of course, spends his working day – and believe me, it's a long working day that he puts in for us – at the University of Lethbridge, which is in my constituency, so I'll be the one that'll welcome him today. He's a fine, fine addition to our community, and we really have learned to respect him and just love the job that he's doing. So I would ask Bill Cade to rise, and let's extend a warm welcome to him.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see another person in the members' gallery that I should take the opportunity to introduce while we are here today, and he's visiting the Legislature for his first time. He's from the breathtaking community of the Crowsnest Pass. He works for the land and forest service and keeps that Blairmore office humming. I'd like to introduce Darryl Johnson from the Crowsnest Pass. Darryl, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This beautiful Alberta day is about to get more beautiful. A rare thing has happened. I have some friends from Edmonton-McClung visiting me here today. [interjections] Oh, yes. I have a few of them. There are a few.

Mr. Speaker, it's an absolute delight for me to introduce through you and to the House a group of students visiting us, 17 of the best and brightest Edmonton-McClung has to offer. They're here with their teachers Ms Marjorie Helder and Ms Mary Jane Helder. They're from Parkland Immanuel school. I'd like to thank them for visiting and showing that I do have some friends. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Supports for Independence Review

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the start of this session I committed to using our time in this Legislature to deal with issues raised by Albertans. While we've lived up to that commitment to ask the questions, the government has left many questions unanswered. In the spirit of serving Albertans, I want to give the government a second chance to answer some of the questions that were an integral part of this process. My questions first are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Does the minister have any information on the timing and scope of his department's review of the SFI rates?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It provides me an opportunity to perhaps update, then, the hon. member but also the rest of the hon. members here today. We have put a committee together, and I'm proud to announce that the chair of that committee will be our good friend from Edmonton-Castle Downs, and he'll work with four other hon. members from the government side. We plan to be making the announcement within the next few days. We are just currently trying to get the final draft on a discussion paper that would be circulated. So, again, thank you for the question, and the SFI review should be under way early in June.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the minister commit to allowing the public to participate in this review, given that an internal review would only be attended by administrators and social workers bound by the current legislation?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, I can make that assurance. Certainly the chair of the committee will have a great deal of responsibility as to how the review is to be undertaken. I have asked them to make sure that we have input from community agencies and that he, in fact, along with his committee make sure they travel out from under the dome and make sure that they offer the opportunity, then, for Albertans to make representation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will this include recipients of SFI in the reviews that take place? After all, the Premier on April 26 said, "I'd be surprised if they weren't part of the review." Are they on the committee?

MR. DUNFORD: Not on the committee, but certainly there'll be an opportunity for them to provide input, I'm sure, because as the hon. member has pointed out, when my boss expresses an interest in something, I'm as excited as can be to make sure it happens.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Sustainable Management of Livestock Industry

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next set of questions is to the minister of agriculture. Will we soon have provincewide environmental standards consistent with the Klapstein report?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members are aware that there has been an intensive amount of work done in this area and very important work. First was a study that was presented to the minister of agriculture last year, which talked about and recommended regulations and codes of practice which have already been put into place. Codes of practice, I believe, were sent out last fall.

The second part of this whole process is an important part, and that's the part we're reviewing right now. The study that deals with process has been presented to the minister. I've made a commitment to the industry that we would review that study very carefully, take it through the necessary steps that we have to ensure it has a good vetting, and at the conclusion of that release the study with the government's recommendations. Both the Premier and I have said publicly that we expect that that process will be concluded and the report and the government's recommendation to that report will be made public in June.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following up, to the same minister: will this recommendation provide municipalities with an enhanced authority to control their land use planning if they give up part of the environmental control that they lose when we go to provincewide standards?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is clever in his question because, of course, in answering that question, I would have to state what the government's recommendations are in that area. I recognize that the hon. member has asked the question because of a genuine interest in this subject. I will only say this. The committee, which is comprised of five individuals, three from the Legislature and two from outside the Legislature, has reviewed this extensively. They held six public meetings across the province. They had input I believe from over 104 presentations made to that committee. Municipalities participated and talked about their role. The difficulty in concluding this discussion is that there is a role for policing, for appeals, for land use, and it will take a little bit more time to conclude our review of this and then make the municipalities and all interested Albertans aware of what that process and final decision will be.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can you tell us: will there be legislation this fall to put into law the recommendations of the report released in June?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, what I can tell the hon. member is that as we conclude the process and make recommendations, if there are legislative changes required to carry out the recommendations that this government will provide, then it will be done as expeditiously as possible, which could be this fall.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Underground Tank Remediation

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have asked several questions this session that have not been answered. To the minister of Municipal Affairs: will the minister make public a copy of the proposal and program designed for tank remediation that was submitted by the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, this question, of course, has been asked, and I want to say and to assure all Albertans: we have a program unlike any other program in Canada in dealing with tank remediation. Eighty million dollars have been committed by this government, and I suggest that the hon. member recognize the good work that is taking place in that remediation process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do recognize the great work that you've done for this program, but will the minister please share the proposal and the program designed for tank remediation that was submitted by the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say that approximately 357 municipal and retail sites were eligible for the assessments. Of that, 155 are in that remediation process as we speak. Ladies and gentlemen and members of this Assembly, there is good work being done on this remediation program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: where is the information on underground tank remediation that on May 9 you said that you would deliver to this House?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the member should fully elaborate on what was said in this House. What was said in this House was that the work that is being done – we have worked with many stakeholder groups. We have worked with the AUMA. We have worked with the AAMD and C. We have worked with Albertans from every corner of this province, and we're going to continue to do exactly that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Sex Education Curriculum

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week parents of some Calgary public high school students expressed deep concern about the fact that the Calgary Pregnancy Care Centre, a fundamentalist antiabortion group, is now allowed to go into classrooms to lecture students about sex education. According to the Calgary regional health authority, this group so bungled parts of Alberta's sexual education curriculum that the lessons had to be retaught. My questions are to the Deputy Premier. What criteria does the government require an outside group to meet before it can go into a school to teach a part of the official curriculum?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the specific curriculum that the hon. member is referring to, it is my understanding – and I will ensure that this is correct – that it is the individual school jurisdictions that make the decision as to who or how or if that course is taught in their jurisdiction and in their school.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary: why isn't the government taking a more direct hand in ensuring that whoever teaches the subject matter covers a full range of choices?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, this government perhaps has somewhat a different attitude to some of these things than some other parties. We believe that locally elected school board members have a role in their jurisdiction of their schools. We believe that parents have jurisdiction and have the opportunity for choice, and as I understand it, the way this program works now, a parent has the right or a student has the right to opt out of this course, if that's their desire, or participate. But again – I repeat – we elect school board members locally. The parents of the students, the taxpayers, elect these people to make good decisions. If there is a concern, that would be the first appropriate body to take that concern to. If they feel their concerns have not been addressed, I am sure that the Minister of Learning would want to hear from them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the Deputy Premier: will the government at least commit to taking another look at the policies of school boards to ensure that the Alberta sex education curriculum is being taught only by those organizations that describe a full range of choices and are directly accountable to elected school boards?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I have to reiterate that we do believe there are responsibilities for these types of courses locally. We do believe in and have a great deal of respect for the people that are elected to represent their school jurisdictions and, therefore, the students in those schools. I must say that we believe that when it's an option, the parents should have a voice, and the student has the option to opt out. So if there is a concern with the course material, the appropriate place to discuss this is with the locally elected school board.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to address these questions to the Minister of Revenue. During the past few years, before he was the minister, I had many discussions with him about tax reductions and similar paybacks to the citizens of this province once the debt is paid off. Now that he has the authority to do something about it, I wonder if the minister would advise us what is being planned for postdebt rewards to Alberta citizens.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Peace River. One of the greatest rewards that we could ever contemplate in this province is that there will be no more debt. We will no longer have interest payments coming up to $1.75 billion annually at its peak. We will no longer have principal payments that accumulated as much as $23 billion. But because of the leadership of our Premier and this government, we're the only jurisdiction in this country that can actually plan for a debt-free future. Albertans have said in the It's Your Money questionnaire that their priorities are to continue to see, once there are surplus revenues, that that money be returned to them, be it in tax reductions, in tax rebates, or maybe save some of that money. Furthermore, we will consult, as announced, with all Albertans, and they'll have that opportunity this fall in the Future Summit.

MR. FRIEDEL: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: is there any initiative in place to encourage people to continue on in an attitude of frugal, responsible government rather than a spend-it-all attitude once the debt is paid off?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's critical that we don't forget the lessons of the past, that we don't get back into the era of high government spending and high government taxation. It is precisely that that led to the problems in the first place. We have fallen behind other jurisdictions. We must have the vigilance. One of the things is that the Ministry of Revenue, in taking over the revenue framework, has to see that there's a balance to bring commitment and priorities of the government to reduce taxation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Specifically on the issue of reduced taxes, I wonder if the minister is sufficiently committed to the idea of reduced taxes, that one day his title might be changed from Minister of Revenue to minister of significantly reduced revenue?

MR. MELCHIN: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The work is not yet complete.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Electricity Pricing

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On three occasions now our new Minister of Economic Development has failed to provide answers to questions regarding a report from the chief economist of the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters on electricity prices. The documentation he tabled today refers to residential rates, and we asked about small industrial rates. This is a very sad performance. Will the minister tell us and all Albertans why Nova Scotia business rates are 8.35 cents a kilowatt-hour, New Brunswick rates are 9.35 cents a kilowatt-hour on the first 5,000 and then reduce to 5.87 cents a kilowatt-hour, when small businesses in Alberta have to pay 11 cents a kilowatt-hour?

MR. NORRIS: Well, you know, since I've entered this new realm, I've been called many things including a rookie, weak link, cuddly, a bear, an upstart, particularly unspectacular, and now I'm being called a failure. That's only in two months. What do I get in the next four years? I would ask the hon. members opposite to respect the people of Edmonton-McClung who chose me over someone else, and please, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask them to stop calling me names.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this report that I talked about in my preamble comes from the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters, presumably an organization he will be very interested in, has the minister read the report or reviewed it or even looked at the cover yet?

MR. NORRIS: In actual fact, Mr. Speaker, I have. In my logics class at university there's a series of understandings that one must undertake to get to a conclusion, and when you draw a premise from a hypothetical question, there is no possible conclusion that can be accurate. This is a conclusion that's reached by an organization that we respect, but we may not agree with their findings.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, could this same minister then tell us specifically what he is going to do to address that report, and will he support further government intervention in the electricity marketplace to leverage the development of vigorous competition in electrical retailing? If he doesn't understand that, we can certainly talk about it.

MR. NORRIS: Well, once again on this beautiful Alberta day, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to say that electricity is one small part of the Alberta advantage. Let me take a moment to explain the other parts of the Alberta advantage.

In the year 2000 net international migration to Alberta was 8,170, up from 6,417 the previous year. Our interprovincial net migration to Alberta was 21,000. This is up 13,000 from the previous year, Mr. Speaker. And in the first quarter of 2001, new businesses, who are affected by electricity prices and have chosen to come to Alberta, are up by 542, or 11 percent. The evidence is overwhelming. Electricity is certainly a concern and we're building more supply, but Alberta continues to be the envy of the free world.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Crop Insurance Review

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The widespread drought conditions that exist throughout many parts of this province have caused great concern amongst rural residents . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member has the floor.

MR. MARZ: Thank you. This is on a more serious note, so I would appreciate the attention of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the widespread drought conditions that exist throughout many parts of this province have caused great concern amongst rural residents because of the economic impact not only on farmers but also on rural businesses. Farmers are particularly concerned with the current crop insurance program, which they feel is inadequate to meet the current crisis out there. My questions today are to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Could the minister provide an update on the current crop insurance review which has been ongoing for some time?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, just a bit of background. The committee, which was led by a gentleman named Charlie Mayer, undertook an extensive consultation process over the last year and gathered input from all aspects, actually, to put together a report with recommendations which he presented to the minister last fall. Some of those initial recommendations were implemented: changes to the index calculation, creation of insurance for different crops, reintroduction of harvesting allowance, and the introduction of a pilot program for pasture insurance.

Mr. Speaker, there were other areas that the committee felt needed further review, and that review has been ongoing over this past winter. In fact, the final report from that committee was just given to me very recently. I can tell the hon. member that we are now evaluating that report and determining the feasibility of those recommendations. With the recommendations that can be acted on, it would be our intention to try to include those in the crop insurance program for the next year. But I remind the hon. member that crop insurance is a tripartite program. It is a shared agreement between the producers, the provincial government, and the federal government, so we need to have those discussions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister assure us that pastureland will be included in any future crop insurance program?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we've had some discussions on the pasture insurance program in the past in this House. I believe I indicated to members at that time that we have a pilot program that is utilizing some new technology. The reason that it's a pilot project is that with the difficulties we had with the old program in the need for clipping, for measuring, for weighing, for measuring rainfall, and all of those things, we're hoping this new technology will eliminate the need for all of those. We would like to ensure that this program will work before we include it. But I will say to the hon. member that we will evaluate our information from the program this year, and if it shows and clearly demonstrates that it can be a program that will assist producers, is responsive to producers' needs, we'll make every effort to include it in the next year's crop insurance program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. minister for that response. My last question to the same minister: when will the new crop insurance program come into effect?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the process for this is that any changes that we envision to the program must be negotiated over the next months. Those negotiations pretty much have to be included this fall or very, very early winter as, if there are changes to the program, new application forms have to be made available, new staff training for the new aspects of the program has to be carried out. Of course, we request producers to apply no later than April 10 for crop insurance and for pasture insurance. In fact, the date in the past has been earlier. So it will be our intention to have that concluded this fall.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like my colleagues I, too, will take this time to ask questions that were not clearly answered before. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. On April 11 the minister promised to resolve within four weeks the 32 cases of Albertans charged for private MRIs brought to him late last summer. Six weeks have passed. When will these cases be resolved?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can say that all 32 cases and, in addition to that, a number of other cases have been brought forward to my attention, and each of those individuals has been contacted and was asked to fill out the requisite information and the appropriate releases of information from their files. All 32 cases have individuals who have been given that information, including a number of others. Some of them have not yet been returned, but all 32 cases have been dealt with appropriately and the individuals contacted.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the repeated delays in this investigation and given that ordinary Albertans are out of pocket hundreds of dollars each since last summer because of government policy, why won't the minister commit to paying interest to Albertans who qualify for a refund?

MR. MAR: Well, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition said, he believes in second chances. I believe in second chances too, so I'll provide the same answer that I did before, Mr. Speaker. That is that policy changes occur from time to time. The amount of interest on this would be fairly minimal, but it has taken some time to go through the particular issue of our policy on MRIs. It has been a very challenging issue.

I have said in this House that I have been sorry that it has taken so long. However, Mr. Speaker, like an onion, in peeling back the layers of the onion there was a great deal more to it than it would superficially suggest. So it has taken a while to get through the completion of this issue, but I have assured this Assembly and the hon. member that all appropriate actions have been taken in a reasonably speedy manner, and the individuals have been contacted and we are proceeding with the process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain whether this investigation may set a policy precedent leading to refunds on other medically necessary services for which patients were charged, such as cataract surgery?

MR. MAR: No suggestion to that effect has been made, Mr. Speaker, at all.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Service Dogs

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are all familiar with seeing-eye dogs that accompany those who are blind. These dogs, due to the essential service that they provide for the blind or visually impaired, are recognized and permitted in restaurants, public institutions, on buses, and in other places where ordinarily dogs are not permitted. There are many other people who are chronically ill or disabled who also benefit from the assistance of highly trained service dogs. My question is for the Minister of Community Development. Will the government introduce legislation that recognizes the importance of all service dogs to allow them to have the same access to public places as seeing-eye guide dogs now have?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's an excellent question from the member, and I should say that protection is already in place. It's enshrined in the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, wherein it states that individuals with a physical disability who have a reliance on an assistive animal cannot be prevented from receiving public services or entry into public facilities.

MRS. JABLONSKI: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how soon can people with service dogs expect to be able to take them out to public places without being refused entry?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Section 3 of the act that I just cited certainly elaborates on what the exact protection is that would prevent the denial of services which are normally available to the public or which would prevent access to facilities that are available to the public. That is in section 3, as I recall. There is also a further description, Mr. Speaker, of what is meant by a physical disability, and that includes reliance on an assistive animal. So I think that while the legislation in place already covers this, it may well be the case that we could do more to be more assertive in that regard, and I'm certainly prepared to look at that in the coming months.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is there other legislation to protect the rights of people requiring service animals for their health and safety?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Yes, Mr. Speaker. There is the Blind Persons' Rights Act, and that is something which the member and all members of the House, I'm sure, would be happy to know is currently under review by myself and my department. I would sincerely hope that we'll be able to make the necessary progress to further enshrine the types of protections that people with disabilities are looking for. That particular act will come up for review I hope in the fall session, and we'll be taking a look at things, for example, like the different category types. We know that seeing-eye dogs, as they are frequently referred to, are not the only type of assistance that individuals with disabilities require. There are individuals who require other assistive animal services such as protection from episodes of epilepsy or, in some cases, even diabetic seizures. So we're doing our very best to review that as quickly as possible, and I hope to come forward with some good changes to solidify that as early as this fall.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Golf Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Hub Oil Company Ltd.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many unanswered questions regarding the explosion at Hub Oil. An object originally designed and fabricated as a pressure vessel which Alberta Boilers Safety Association records show as not in pressure service was apparently being used by Hub Oil in a nonpressure service. Unfortunately, this vessel appears to have exploded at a point in time immediately before or during the fire. My first question is to the minister in charge of the Safety Codes Act. Have safety codes officers verified that its installation was such that it did not operate as a pressure vessel?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member across the way has asked similar questions earlier in this session. As we all are aware today, Hub Oil has been charged under the Occupational Health and Safety Act with failure to maintain equipment. Of course, this is in front of the court today, but I can say that our officials are working very closely with the stakeholders and all involved in protecting the interests of all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: at what pressure are vessels and associated piping and pumps not considered pressure equipment under the Safety Codes Act and therefore not subject to an Alberta Boilers Safety Association inspection regime?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity of meeting with the Safety Council and the member in charge, the chairman, just last week. Volunteers in fact make up that council. I have been assured, in asking the exact questions the hon. member has asked, that the inspection that takes place is for the protection of all Albertans. I want to assure this House and all Albertans that that protection will continue in the best interests of protecting every single citizen of this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the pressure, for the information of all members of this Assembly, is 15 pounds per square inch, how does the minister explain this drawing that I received through freedom of information? This drawing, submitted by Hub Oil to Alberta Environment, indicates a discharge pressure of up to 50 pounds per square inch from the hot oil pump over to the furnace. Is that what caused the explosion?

Thank you.

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member extend the courtesy and perhaps send that drawing to our office for review.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Meridian Dam

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I tabled a copy of a June 1997 proposal to conduct a prefeasibility study into the Meridian dam prepared by UMA Engineering Ltd. The proposal was prepared at the behest of a group of Meridian dam components calling themselves the Meridian Water Management Association. The document I tabled indicates that in April 1997 the dam proponents met with local MLAs and the then environment minister to discuss their study. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why did the government decide four years ago not to proceed with the prefeasibility study of the Meridian dam, and why has the present minister revived it within two months of being appointed to his position?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all we have to look at water management as the issue. We have one specific example that the hon. member is talking about of a specific water management issue, but I want to assure this House that water management is a much broader issue than simply one specific instance. We are going to be over a period of time in Alberta short of water for not only the agriculture industry but drinking water as well. So any water management strategy has to include both agriculture, drinking, industrial use, and recreational uses of water and other uses such as power generation. We need to develop a long-term plan for water management strategy. That's one of the things we're going forward with. The example the member is talking about is one specific instance that may be part of a larger strategy.

Now, the question was: why did the government at that time in 1998, I believe, or 1997 not begin the feasibility study? Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue was one of when we were asking Saskatchewan "Was Saskatchewan interested in participating in this study?" because this study would benefit Saskatchewan as well, at that time Saskatchewan said, for whatever reason, that they were not interested in participating in the study. At the present day Saskatchewan is interested in being part of the present study because of potential benefits to Saskatchewan. We have to look at the whole, total picture, not just Alberta but Saskatchewan as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the findings of the prefeasibility study may have a dramatic impact on whether or not we proceed to the next stage with this project and given that UMA Engineering has in the past been closely associated with the dam proponents, should UMA Engineering Ltd. be allowed to bid on the prefeasibility study?

DR. TAYLOR: Quite frankly it's an open process, Mr. Speaker. We've put out an RFP, or request for proposal, for any company, any individual to can come back and say to us: we would like to do that study. We've put out a very detailed outline of what we expect in that study. Any company that is prepared to make a proposal to us, whether it's UMA or UGA or whoever it is, is certainly welcome in an open bidding process to present a proposal.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that UMA Engineering has a past association with the citizens' group who are promoting the dam, could this not give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias on the part of the company, and will the minister exclude them from bidding on the RFP?

DR. TAYLOR: No, I will not, Mr. Speaker. Once again, we've put out very clearly what we expect in the study. In fact, if you look at the prefeasibility study that UMA proposed to the Meridian dam association, it was going to look at things like environmental impact. It was going to look at things like ecological impacts on the Suffield range, which is part of the federal government ecological area there. It was going to look at economic benefits. It was going to look at power generation. It was going to look at a whole range of issues surrounding the Meridian dam, not just those which would favour the proponents of the Meridian dam. It was a broad study that would look at every aspect. What we've requested is even broader in terms of our expectations, and I think for any company that does this study, there will be no chance of bias in the process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Municipal Funding

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. This past weekend at the Federation of Canadian Municipalities conference hosted in Alberta many of the municipalities raised concerns about funding, suggesting they were teetering on the brink of a crisis. My question is: what is this province doing to support our municipalities?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, funding is a concern to municipalities not only within Alberta but of course across this nation. Let me give you some specific examples. Just in the last year we've announced about $1.5 billion in the electricity auction to rebate Alberta municipalities and help over the next 12 months. I could ask the Minister of Energy to supplement, but he has far too much detail at this time for the Assembly. As well, though, I think it's important to recognize that this province has assumed responsibility for primary and secondary highways. Let me be specific. When I talk about assumed responsibility: 100 percent responsibility.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given that the FCM conference came on the heels of the federal government announcing a Task Force on Urban Issues to address federal funding for municipalities, what is the province doing to improve and maintain the quality of life in urban regions, and what about rural regions?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, if I could for a moment. Let me first of all restate the fact that it is for secondary highways, and as the hon. member in his constituency is aware, this is very important in the rural communities. We have assumed 100 percent responsibility for those secondary highways. As well, we've been able to provide funding in terms of trade corridors in the bigger cities. This is very important. As well, I should say that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties indicated that those kind of partnerships they value, and they want to see more of them within this province, which I'm committed to work with in this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for those comments. Again to the same minister. Given that the federal government was very active at the FCM conference and there was even talk of amending the constitution, will the provincial government examine this constitutional reform?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, as I look around this Assembly, I see so many members of this Assembly that have been involved in local government as councillors, as mayors, as reeves, as school trustees. I believe that our government's action reflects the awareness that municipalities face each and every day. I also draw to the attention of the member the Premier's infrastructure working committee, that was established in association with the AUMA and AAMD and C. That was an important initiative that I believe is working well. Let me just say this: it's a very positive model that we're working on because we don't believe things as this, we believe them as this; we are all orders of government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Day Care Workers

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the greatest responsibilities the government undertakes is to ensure that caregivers provide nurturing and safe environments for our children. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Are Alberta day care workers still the lowest paid in Canada?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I was wondering when my turn would come today. The suspense was killing me.

I think that the very reason the hon. member has cited, that the nurturing environment is important and that the day care workers themselves and the staff retention are important, has been exactly the constraint that I have faced in becoming a quick-fix expert on the services we provide for children in day cares and in family day homes. We've done extensive reviews and consultations with parents, with the KPMG study that has been referenced and that has yet to be completed. We have done more than that. We have taken a look at some of the other options in other jurisdictions to see how they are wrestling with the problem. One of the circumstances we're looking at is the variance between rural and urban settings: just exactly what our circumstances are where we have had some rural settings with day cares closed because there haven't been the numbers to keep the day cares viable and in urban circumstances, where the costs of developing a framework, a program, and the rental and infrastructure costs are so formidable that they have quite a different set of circumstances.

So, Mr. Speaker, when I respond to the hon. member, I would just say simply that this has been a very complex issue. We are working our way through this issue. I would expect that as soon as I have more to report, it would behoove me to not only share it with the hon. member but with all hon. members because I know many here have raised similar concerns.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Are Alberta day care workers still the lowest paid in Canada?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly we have to be very careful to compare day care workers in the proper circumstances. We're very well aware that in the Maritimes there are day care workers that are earning considerably less on average than they are in Alberta, but that's not the important criterion. The most important thing is this: are we getting the right person in front of the child and working in the best interests of the child? Many of the regulations that have been passed by this ministry assure a certain level of qualification, consider very carefully the best interests of children who need additional programming for their developmental needs, and look very carefully at assessments for children who may be experiencing difficulty.

Mr. Speaker, we have a very shining light in the work that's being done in Beaumont, where they're not only looking at the socioeconomic range of the families and the amount of money that's available for the day care worker, but they are doing consultations and parenting support by the municipality, with some funding from family and community support services, with the overall supervision of the Ma'Möwe day care. I believe that partnership is netting a very positive result.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. My question is to the same minister. Are Alberta day care workers still the lowest paid in Canada?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, no. Quite simply, no.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Nurses

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Some nurses I have spoken to recently tell me that the cause of our nurses shortage is lack of training facilities, saying that the crisis would indeed end if nursing schools connected to our hospitals were reopened. Has the minister given any consideration to reopening nursing schools connected to some of our hospitals?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it's true that in this province certain hospitals had nursing schools. These were changed over in the mid-1990s as they became part of collaborative nursing programs with the colleges and universities of Alberta. So these hospital-based nursing schools closed in the 1990s. The seats were transferred over to the colleges and universities, and the number of seats were increased in the postsecondary system.

It was strongly viewed by many, Mr. Speaker, that the level and complexity of training required for nursing had gone up dramatically, and it's clear to any observer that what nurses did in the 1950s, '60s, and '70s is dramatically different from what's done by nurses today. It was felt very strongly that university and college education and training was a requirement, a necessity, for the effective training of nurses, so now the colleges and universities have the infrastructure in place to provide the appropriate programs. It does not seem to me to make sense that we would go back to hospital training of nurses.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nurses have also brought to my attention the supposedly large numbers of nurses who graduate here in Alberta and then leave to work in the United States. What is the government doing to address the number of nurses leaving our province to go and work in the United States?

MR. MAR: The most important fact to know on this point, Mr. Speaker, is that the province of Alberta is a net importer of nurses and that for every nurse that leaves the province, there are four that enter the province and begin. It's correct that nurses at one time used to leave for jobs in the United States because of the fact that there were no vacant full-time positions available here in the province. However, more regional health authorities are ensuring that there are full-time positions that are available for our graduates. Certainly the new agreement with the United Nurses of Alberta, which gives RNs at least a 17 percent raise over the next two years, will make Alberta a province of choice for nurses to come. That, in combination with the increases of nursing seats in our postsecondaries, will dramatically improve the situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Overtime for our nurses is becoming a very serious issue. In fact, some are saying that they don't answer their telephones any longer. What is the government doing to address the working conditions of Alberta nurses?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I should at the outset acknowledge that the issue of working conditions certainly is a legitimate concern raised by nurses and that we are listening very carefully to those concerns being expressed. I should say also, though, that there is a great deal of good news on the radar screen. Since nurses ratified their agreement, health authorities are getting more and more calls from nurses wanting to return to work or to take a refresher course that will allow them to update their skills and return. In the short term this should help alleviate the need for regular staff to work overtime.

In the longer term, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my response to the hon. member's first supplementary question, we are increasing the training spaces for nurses. In 1999 there were some 750 training spaces in Alberta's nursing programs. By the year 2001-02 that number will go from 750 to over 1,100. So we are increasing the number of nurses. We are improving work conditions. Employers and the union are working together to improve working conditions and workloads for Alberta's nurses.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the first of four hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today, I would like to receive your approval to make a statement to you.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Legislative Assembly Pages

THE SPEAKER: Ten of our pages will be leaving us. The 10 that will be leaving us are Myles Chykerda, Laura Gill, Ryan Zupan, James Hamilton, Baldip Sihota, in addition to five that are with us this afternoon on duty: Grace Do, Tim Jolly, Jeremy Glick, Cheryl Pereira, and Sarah Hobbs. Now, they sent me a letter dated May 30, 2001, and although the letter is addressed to me, I know it is addressed to all Members of this Legislative Assembly. In my humble opinion it's one of the most articulate pieces of correspondence that I've ever received. I want to read it to you. This is a message to you.

It is said that no one is taller than when he or she stoops to help a child. There may be many people who do not believe this to be true. But there are at least ten men and women who know it to be so. It is we ten, the pages who are leaving the Assembly this session, who write to you now.

Even as we write this, we know there are no words we can choose to convey the gratitude we feel to you and to all the members of the Assembly. In giving us the opportunity to be pages, you have given us much more than you know, far more than a simple, part-time job. Look around yourself the next time you are in the Assembly. Try to see things through our eyes. We see people on all sides of the House trying the best they know how to make the world a better place, one province at a time. These men and women are people of integrity. They have strong values and ideas by which they stand. They are not afraid to voice their beliefs, or to fight for what they know to be true. In a world of constant change, where the backyard is getting bigger and it feels like we are getting smaller, our time as pages at the Legislature has reminded us that we too can make a difference. Day by day, we have learned new skills, faced new challenges, and confronted new opportunities to grow. We have become a little more confident in ourselves, and a little more secure in what we believe. We have seen cooperation between people of different ideologies as we watched the democratic process in action. For a time, we became part of something greater than ourselves, and in so doing, we realized our value as individuals.

This all may be difficult to believe. We know it too often goes unsaid. Most of you are probably unaware of the way that you have inspired us. Whether we later go into politics or not, the lessons we have learned here have shaped who we are, and will always be a part of us. We came to you as young, unsure people, and we will not be leaving with any more assurance of the specific challenges that the future holds for us. But now, we will leave with the certainty that no matter what does lie in store for us, we are more than capable of handling it. We are more ready than ever to tackle our lives, maybe even the world, and all this is because of our time with you. We are better people for having been here, and for that we thank you. From the bottom of our hearts, we thank you. The opportunity you have given us to be pages is one for which we will always be grateful, and one any young person would be lucky to share. Thank you again. Wherever we go, and whatever we do, we will remember you, and this place where we learned so very much.

We remain forever in your debt.

It's signed by the 10 who are leaving. [applause]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the pages. On behalf of all the members of the Assembly I have a parting gift that I'd like to give to each and every one of you that are here today, and we have the same gifts for those who are unable to be with us today. I'd like to start off with the longest serving page if I could – Tim Jolly has been with us longer than any of the others in the group – then Grace, Jeremy, Sarah, and Cheryl.

THE SPEAKER: The five who are not present today – Myles Chykerda, Laura Gill, James Hamilton, Baldip Sihota, and Ryan Zupan – will receive their presentations from the Deputy Speaker on behalf of all of us as well.

These are marvelous young people, ladies and gentlemen.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Happy birthday to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed as I recognize you for your member's statement. You now may proceed with your statement, hon. member.

Alberta Research Council

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the newly appointed chair of the Alberta Research Council, I rise this afternoon to speak about the important role and the excellent work of the ARC, which officially celebrated its 80th anniversary on January 6, 2001.

The ARC has made many contributions to Alberta's economy and quality of life. The ARC was instrumental in the discovery of the hot water extraction process on which our current $5 billion oil sands industry was built. It also contributed the first geological map of Alberta, which promoted the resource development of the province, and it has helped to develop a thriving oriented strand-board industry, which takes advantage of Alberta's abundant aspen forests.

Established in 1921, the ARC has evolved to be a truly unique organization in North America. No other province has an organization of its size and scope dedicated to performing applied research and development to meet provincial science and technology strategies and goals. ARC, combined with our universities of Alberta and Calgary, two of Canada's best research-intensive institutions, provide Alberta with a real competitive research advantage.

The ARC's foray into technology commercialization has proved to be a very successful initiative. Over the past five years the ARC has increased its commercialization revenues sevenfold, from $500,000 to an amazing $3.6 million to date. Over the years, Mr. Speaker, there have been many changes in the focus of the Research Council, but throughout the changes, the ARC still remains true to its original mandate and still counts research for the public good as a priority for those longer term, higher risk projects which are critical to provincial science and technology advancement. A growing emphasis has been placed, however, on operating as a performance-driven technology development and commercialization business which puts technology into the marketplace sooner rather than later.

I'm honoured to be a part of the Alberta Research Council, and I'd like to congratulate all associated with it for the past successful 80 years. Thank you.

Parliamentary Privilege

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about parliamentary privilege. The most widely held definition of the concept is stated in Erskine May.

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively . . . and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

I'm speaking about parliamentary privilege because each one of us in this House is charged with protecting these peculiar rights from encroachment, especially encroachment from the executive branch of government. Imagine if the executive branch could become directly involved in setting the salaries and benefits of the judiciary. If such a situation arose, the judicial system would lack credibility because the executive would be able to selectively reward good judges while punishing unfriendly judges.

By logical extension, then, the executive branch must refrain from setting the funds and the benefits of members of this hon. House. If the executive were able to interfere in the internal affairs of this Assembly, democracy would be undermined because members friendly to the government would receive benefits while those unfriendly to it would be punished. By preserving our rights and immunities, this House maintains the concept of good government as intended under the Canadian parliamentary model.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you as well as all other hon. members of this House on both sides to zealously guard parliamentary privilege.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Wayne Hampton

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand before the Assembly today to recognize a gentleman who has long been on the cutting edge of educational leadership. I would like to congratulate sincerely Mr. Wayne Hampton, longtime principal of the Lacombe upper elementary school, in Lacombe, Alberta, on being selected as the Council on School Administration's choice as the winner of the regional and provincial principal of the year award for 2001.

For the past 14 years Wayne's contributions to the Lacombe upper elementary school have been uniquely generous and effective, and it's good to see him acknowledged with such a high honour. Wayne has demonstrated time and time again in so many, many ways his commitment to his students, their parents, and his staff, fostering always a learning environment that encourages all to achieve to the maximum of their potential.

One of Wayne's adages is that he practises fearlessness. He is never afraid to question how things are done, but in doing so, he will always provide a suggestion. Such was the case when in 1995 he questioned the then minister of education, Halvar Jonson, regarding the need for changes to the teacher evaluation process. Submitting his ideas as suggested revisions, he was pleased when in fact his strategy was subsequently incorporated by the province into the new Alberta teaching standards.

Mr. Hampton will now be the Alberta nominee for the Canadian Association of Principals' principal/vice-principal of the year award in 2002.

Thank you, Wayne, for the difference you have made to education, for education. I look forward in future to congratulating you as the national winner. For today, please join me in congratulating this year's winner, an outstanding Albertan, an educator, Mr. Wayne Hampton.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Ralph Canham

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I received a call from Mr. Ralph Canham. The excitement and enthusiasm in his voice was immediately noticeable compared to the voice I heard in numerous conversations before. Ralph was elated over a phone call he'd received from the WCB this morning informing him that he would be receiving a new electric wheelchair.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Canham and I both realize this swift reaction to his situation would not have been possible without the intervention of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. I'd like to thank him for his immediate response after this issue was raised in question period yesterday.

Ralph's problems began on February 16, 1999, when he was involved in an accident with his old electric wheelchair. The visible damage to the chair was repaired at that time, and Mr. Canham continued to use it. Closer inspection on October 6, 2000, revealed that the chair had sustained severe structural damage in the accident and was no longer fit for use. Since that time Mr. Canham has been forced to rely on a manual chair. He feels that his rapidly deteriorating back and right hip problems can be attributed to not having a properly fitted chair since that accident in February of '99.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Canham has taught me a lesson in determination and perseverance. When he could not get satisfactory resolution to his claim from the WCB, he did not quit. In a letter to Mr. Canham dated February 20, 2001, tabled by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, the minister refers to e-mail sent to the Premier from Mr. Canham on February 4 and February 13, 2001. He was not prepared to let this issue rest. He went to the top.

Mr. Canham informed me this morning how he looks forward to receiving his new chair. It will give him back his freedom. One of the activities he has missed greatly is grocery shopping. His persistence and determination is a great example for us all. Ralph, I wish you many enjoyable years with your new chair.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Deputy Government House Leader share the projected government business for the week of June 4.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, ordinarily we would project some government business at this stage. However, since no government business is expected to be conducted next week, there is none to project because we are anticipating concluding the spring session this afternoon.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to introduce to you and through you to our Assembly a group of young people that for the most part just all joined us following the election on March 12. There are two people up there who are senior members, who have been there for maybe eight months or 10 months, but under the incredible leadership of my caucus director, Dave Michalchuk, and Carla White, our acting head of research, we have managed to do all of the things that have been asked of us by our incredibly diverse caucus. It's a great honour for me to be able to introduce to you these people. I would like them to stand as I call their names and then receive the warm welcome of the Assembly at the end of my introduction: Carla White, Darcy Dupas, Glenn Shepherd, Matt Steppan, Kelly Nicholls, Ryan Hoskins, Greg McFarlane, Mike Simpson, Jeff Haley, and Jeremy Herbert.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very competent young women who work in our cafeteria. They are Dana McDermott and Corissa Hogan. They are currently seated in the public gallery. They are the two young women who assist in preparing the delicious meals provided to us and who give us such excellent service. So I would ask the two women to stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Speaker's Ruling Exhibits

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, I'll just make a comment as a follow-up to the introduction of the hon. Member for St. Albert and in light, as I suggest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, that he violated Beauchesne 501 with his exhibit today when I called out of order an exhibit from the hon. Member for Red Deer-North yesterday with respect to it.

There was an occasion once in this House when an hon. minister set up during tablings and tabled a hamburger because he thought that the food in the Legislature cafeteria was so terrible. The purpose of the tabling of the hamburger was to bring it to everybody's attention. Now, where this hamburger has been filed is unknown to me, but I just make that off-the-cuff statement because there has been a dramatic improvement in the quality of food in the Legislature cafeteria.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Private Bills
Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1
Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer
Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to respond. The Official Opposition will be supporting bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, Pr. 3, and Pr. 4 at all stages in reading this afternoon. We appreciate the opportunity to have participated in the all-party committee that reviewed these bills.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert to close the debate.

MRS. O'NEILL: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I wish to close debate and to call the question, please.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 2
Burns Memorial Trust Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, Burns Memorial Trust Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate as well?

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For those members who are unfamiliar with this bill, the primary intent and purpose is merely to make a few amendments modernizing the current act and to allow for the introduction of prudent investor guidelines into the management of the fund.

With that I would ask for the support of members of this Assembly for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 3
The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company
and National Trust Company Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill Pr. 3, The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member to close the debate as well?

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the debate be closed.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 4
Western Union Insurance Company
Amendment Act, 2001

MR. HLADY: Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill Pr. 4, Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: I'd invite the hon. member to close the debate as well.

MR. HLADY: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a second time]

head: Private Bills
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole has under consideration four bills.

Bill Pr. 1
Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer
Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I move that the question be put.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 2
Burns Memorial Trust Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Seeing no debate, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that we call the question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

3:00

Bill Pr. 3
The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company
and National Trust Company Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Chairman, I move that The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company Act be amended as follows: section 7(2) is amended by striking out "may contain a recital" and substituting "shall contain a recital."

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would note that this has been approved by Parliamentary Counsel and is known as amendment A1 to Bill Pr. 3. Any further comments?

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 3 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 4
Western Union Insurance Company
Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall this bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the House for their co-operation and move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, and Pr. 4. The committee reports Bill Pr. 3 with some amendments. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

head: Private Bills

Third Reading

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 73(1) to allow for third reading on the same day as second reading for Bill Pr. 1.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill Pr. 1
Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer
Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill Pr. 1, Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a third time]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 73(1) to allow for third reading on the same day as second reading for Bill Pr. 2.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill Pr. 2
Burns Memorial Trust Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move third reading of Bill Pr. 2, the Burns Memorial Trust Act.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a third time]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 73(1) to allow for third reading on the same day as second reading for Bill Pr. 3.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill Pr. 3
The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company

MR. HLADY: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill Pr. 4, Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 20
Appropriation Act, 2001

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move Bill 20, Appropriation Act, 2001, for third reading.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will only take a very few minutes. I am concerned about the impact on Bill 20 of electricity deregulation. I know it's been a subject of debate in the Assembly throughout this session, and unquestionably it's going to come up in the future.

Just to put things in perspective, I would like to table at this moment the appropriate number of copies of a power bill from a small manufacturing concern in Edmonton who exports finished products to the United States and faces an energy charge of 11 cents per kilowatt-hour for her business. Now, just so that it's clearly on the record, I'm comparing that rate to other provinces for a similar service in the most expensive parts of the country, in Atlantic Canada. The rates in Nova Scotia are 9 and a half cents, and then after 12,000 kilowatt-hours they drop to 8.3 cents. In New Brunswick they're just over 9 cents for the first 5,000 kilowatt-hours, and then they drop to 5.87 cents. In Newfoundland the maximum rate is 7 cents compared to 11 here, and in Prince Edward Island they range from a high of 10.75 cents to 6.75 cents.

To keep our power rates in Alberta under deregulation at 11 cents a kilowatt-hour, the provincial government has had to implement price caps. Otherwise the price would be higher. They have also expended some $2.3 billion for electricity rebates, $2.3 billion that was earned through the auctioning off of the rights to the power system. Virtually all of that money is now committed, and I am concerned that in the future, either later in this fiscal year or certainly in the next fiscal year, there will be direct pressure placed on the provincial government's fiscal resources to begin putting money from general revenues into rebates for electricity.

When we face that situation plus we face the end of the price caps on power, I think we could see a very serious impact not only on the budget and the financial resources of Alberta but on the industrial sector and the manufacturing sector of Alberta. That's why we have persistently raised this issue and will persistently raise the issue.

The Minister of Energy has talked about the system margin price declining over the last few months, and he's correct on that. It now seems to be sitting more or less stably at $95 a megawatt-hour, but we have to remember that that's the floor for electricity prices, not the ceiling. The ceiling is whatever the market will bear, and we won't know what that is until the price caps are lifted.

It's also worth commenting that probably two years ago or so the prices for electricity were in the range of $20 to $30, the actual prices charged. The cost of production for most power in Alberta probably remains today under $15 a megawatt-hour. I make these comments for the record at this moment, Mr. Speaker, because I am profoundly concerned, we all are profoundly concerned that Bill 20 and future equivalents of Bill 20 are going to be, shall I say, significantly compromised by the problems we face now and will face in the future with electricity deregulation.

With those comments, I will cede the floor. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make some concluding comments on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2001, to summarize the reasons why we won't be supporting it.

Throughout the debate in the House and the presentations, there have been at least three themes that have come through. The first theme is that the government has rendered the presentation of expenses – that is, operating expenses, capital investments, nonbudgetary disbursements, and lottery fund payments – under the Appropriation Act quite meaningless since they now have the ability to transfer money between programs and within ministries as well. They've also recently decided to combine the operating expenses and capital investment under a single vote so they can avoid getting the approval of the Legislative Assembly in supplementary estimates when they transfer money between those two accounts. This reduces the transparency, and it's not the kind of fiscal responsibility that Albertans expect of the government. So that's the first theme.

The second theme is that the government has an extremely dubious record when it comes to expenditure management. Over the past five years the government has made expenditure volatility a reality in Alberta by its inability to manage the level of program spending during the course of a fiscal year.

The third theme, Mr. Speaker, deals with the ministry business plans and the need to promote the effectiveness of program delivery. A government that is committed to measuring performance should be taking those business plans to heart rather than having them gather dust or be set aside as irrelevant. This government has missed 264 performance targets in their business plans over the past four years. As an opposition we've long advocated tying inputs to outcomes by including performance measures in the Appropriation Act. This is what's done elsewhere, particularly in the state of Texas, and it allows the citizens there to evaluate the success of programs and services and whether stated goals and objectives and targets are being met.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my remarks on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act. As I indicated, we won't be supporting the bill.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The New Democrat caucus will not be able to support Bill 20. Rather than restating those reasons and keeping Her Honour waiting, I'll just refer members to my comments at second reading last night.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:20 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

head: Royal Assent

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

[The Deputy Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I've had the privilege of being in this Assembly and observing it going back to 1974. I've seen the class of 1971, the class of 1975, the class of 1979, the class of 1982, the class of 1986, the class of 1989, the class of 1993, the class of 1997, and the class of 2001. I want to say without any reservation or hesitation in my mind that the class that joined us in 2001 ranks up there with the highest quality group of MLAs ever.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

THE SPEAKER: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, and the Deputy Premier entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

HER HONOUR: Please be seated.

THE SPEAKER: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has at its present sitting passed certain bills to which and in the name of the Legislative Assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

THE CLERK: Your Honour, the following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed.

- 1 Natural Gas Price Protection Act
- 2 Cooperatives Act
- 3 Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001
- 4 Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001
- 5 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001
- 6 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001
- 7 Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001
- 8 Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001
- 9 Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001

- 17 Insurance Amendment Act, 2001
- 19 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001
- 20 Appropriation Act, 2001
- Pr. 1 Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001
- Pr. 2 Burns Memorial Trust Act
- Pr. 3 The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company Act
- Pr. 4 Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001

[Her Honour indicated Her assent]

THE CLERK: In Her Majesty's name Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Lieutenant Governor and the Deputy Premier left the Chamber]

[The Mace was uncovered]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Hon. members, while we await the return of the Deputy Premier and before I call on the Deputy Government House Leader, might I just say a couple of comments with respect to one activity that all hon. members in this Assembly are part of. We all come here as elected politicians, but once we are here, we're also parliamentarians. One of the associations that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta belongs to is the international body known as the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. We belong to more than just simply the international body known as the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. We've also had exchanges in organizations with other bodies throughout the world that encourage the development of the whole concept of being a parliamentarian and a legislator.

Throughout the year members are invited to participate in these exchanges from a professional development point of view. All of these matters are discussed and determined by the Members' Services Committee, and when the Members' Services Committee, prior to April 1, 2001, met and allocated the budget for this year, dollars were set aside for a number of activities that will occur, not only in the province of Alberta but nationally or outside of Alberta. This is all public information, and I'd just like to advise hon. members in terms of some of the activities that members will be attending.

In Quebec City, from July 8 to July 15, representatives of this Assembly will attend and participate in the international Assemblée Parlementaire de la Francophonie and the regional Assemblée Parlementaire de la Francophonie.

In July here in Edmonton, Alberta, this Legislative Assembly will host the 40th Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Canadian Regional Conference, which will be held in this Assembly from July 17 to July 22. The opening ceremonies will occur late in the afternoon of Tuesday, July 17. All members will be invited to participate, but we will have an official delegation. Hon. members will recall that about a month ago I conveyed a message to all hon. members pointing all of this out and inviting hon. members to indicate their interest to me. A number of you have, and within a matter of days we'll be providing a formal invitation to those members to participate. Our hope would be that we would have here in Edmonton approximately 150 parliamentarians from throughout Canada and a number of international representatives. Again, we will begin on Tuesday afternoon, July 17. All sessions will be in this Legislative Assembly. Each of the delegations will have a minimum of six representatives, and I'll be inviting between eight and 10 members of this Assembly to participate with us in our official delegation.

I've also asked members to advise me of their interest in attending probably the world's largest parliamentary conference, the National Conference of State Legislatures, which is held in the United States. Upwards of 5,000 parliamentarians from around the world gather at that event. This year it's being held in San Antonio, Texas, from August 11 to 15. Some of you have indicated an interest with respect to that.

In September the Parliamentarianism of the 21st century will be held in Quebec City from September 11 to 14. Several individuals have indicated their interest in that as well.

The Canadian Parliamentary Association regional seminar for Canada will be held in Regina, Saskatchewan, from October 18 to 21. I would invite members to indicate an interest with respect to that as well.

Also in September will be the international conference, the CPA general conference, which will be held in Australia. No individual members have indicated their interest in attending that one yet.

The presiding officers conference will be held in January of 2002 in Newfoundland, and that will be for the presiding officers.

Now, from time to time there are other events that members will attend as designated, organized by the Legislative Offices Committee or other committees of the Legislative Assembly. These are professional development opportunities provided to all Members of the Legislative Assembly by the Legislative Assembly. These are not government participatory activities. These are Legislative Assembly participatory professional development activities. As an example, we will host the CPA here in Edmonton in the year 2001. Next year, in 2002, the 41st Canadian Regional Conference will be held in New Brunswick. The 42nd, in the summer of 2003, will be held in British Columbia, and in the summer of 2004 the 43rd Canadian Regional Conference will be held in Newfoundland.

These are opportunities – and it's again all determined by the Members' Services Committee, which is an all-party committee that will determine these things.

There was one other event, one other conference that we will not be proceeding with that we did set aside dollars for: participation in a Partnership of Parliaments activity. That's an organization that was developed after 1945 between the 17 provinces in Germany and the 50 American states to create a better relationship between Germany and the United States. Four years ago Alberta was asked to participate in that, and we've participated on three occasions. This year Alberta was to lead the mission to Germany on behalf of five other provinces in Canada, including Alberta, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Quebec, and Newfoundland. But recently I declined leadership of that mission, and I've decided not to have Alberta representatives go in light of the current situation and the concerns that we have in the province of Alberta with respect to foot-and-mouth disease.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a momentous day, a momentous week, and a momentous couple of months since the election of March 12. In recent weeks we've given members of our respective teams an opportunity to perform their representative duties, many of them for the first time and some of us for many times. We passed significant legislation of concern and interest to all Albertans. We also set an admirable standard of poise and decorum for the honoured tradition of this fine House.

This opening session of the 25th Legislature is now a matter of permanent record in and for the province of Alberta. It commenced on a high note, and so it will remain.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we call it 5:30 p.m. and that pursuant to the spring adjournment motion, Government Motion 16, agreed to on April 24, the Assembly now stand adjourned.

THE SPEAKER: To all of you a very safe, relaxing, yet intensive and hardworking number of months before we meet again.

[Pursuant to Government Motion 16 the Assembly adjourned at 3:45 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 13, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/11/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome back. Would all hon. members please remain standing after the prayer and after the singing of our national anthem for the tribute to former members.

On this day, as our work in this Legislature resumes, let each of us pray for those who have been taken and those who have suffered as innocent victims of violent tragedy. We resolve to comfort the families, friends, and communities who have keenly felt the loss of loved ones through acts of violence and the disregard for the sanctity of that which is most precious: life itself. Amen.

I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join us in the language of your choice.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: As is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day of the continuation of session to former members of this Assembly who have passed on since the House last met. On this day we remember Galen Norris, who passed away on August 10, 2001; Donald Fleming, who passed away on September 12, 2001; and Elizabeth Jane "Bettie" Hewes, who passed away on November 6, 2001.

Mr. Galen Norris November 7, 1915, to August 10, 2001

THE SPEAKER: Mr. Norris was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in the general election of November 15, 1956, and served until August 20, 1971. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Stettler for the governing Social Credit Party.

During his years in the Legislature Mr. Norris served on the following committees: the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration and Education; the Select Standing Committee on Municipal Law; the Select Standing Committee on Public Affairs; the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; and the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Donald Fleming March 23, 1913, to September 12, 2001

THE SPEAKER: Mr. Donald Fleming was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in the general election of June 18, 1959, and served until May 23, 1967. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Calgary-West for the governing Social Credit Party.

During his years in the Legislature Mr. Fleming served on the following committees: the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration and Education; the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Telephones and Irrigation; the Select Standing Committee on Public Affairs; the Select Standing Committee on Private Bills; the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mrs. Bettie Hewes March 12, 1924, to November 6, 2001

THE SPEAKER: Mrs. Bettie Hewes was first elected in the general election held on May 8, 1986, and served as MLA until March 11, 1997. During her years of service she represented the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar for the Liberal Party and also served as interim Liberal leader, Deputy House Leader, and party whip.

During her years in the Legislature Mrs. Hewes served on the following committees: the Select Standing Committee on Law and Regulations; the Select Standing Committee on Private Bills; the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; the Select Standing Committee on Public Affairs. She also served on the Select Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform.

We are honoured by the presence of Bettie Hewes' family in the Speaker's gallery today.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of their families who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember Galen Norris, Don Fleming, and Bettie Hewes as you have known them.

Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

Please be seated.

The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly for each of the three leaders to make a brief statement regarding September 11, 2001.

Statements by the Leaders September 11, 2001, Terrorist Attacks

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 11 horrific acts of violence in the United States changed the world. Today we take pause from our normal business to remember the thousands of victims who died in those violent acts and to reflect on the challenge facing humanity in the wake of September 11.

Those who died in New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania were innocent people. They were accountants, secretaries, public servants, firefighters, police officers, businesspeople, tradespeople, couriers, and retail clerks. Some of them were visitors from other countries, and some were from Canada. Each of those victims, I suspect, had plans for September 11. Maybe it was lunch with friends. Maybe it was taking the kids to a movie that evening. They also had plans for the rest of their lives, plans that perhaps included a new house or a new baby or a new grandchild.

Those plans, those lives were extinguished suddenly and violently in one of the most catastrophic acts of pointless terror ever witnessed on this planet. It will perhaps take years for civilized people to truly absorb the magnitude of this tragedy. We will search for its meaning, we will strive to understand the motives of its perpetrators, and we will endeavour to help those family members left behind to patch together new and dramatically changed lives. But as we search and strive and help, we will above all remember the faces of innocents that were murdered on September 11, and we will forever mourn their loss.

Since September 11 countries around the world have joined with the United States in the grim task of eradicating terrorism from the Earth. As American President George Bush said so eloquently: this is a war we did not seek, but it is a war we will win. As this war is waged and with the stakes so high, I urge all Albertans to remember that the attacks of September 11 were not perpetrated by a culture or a faith. They were perpetrated by individuals of murderous intent. As the world comes together to eliminate terrorism, let's work together at home to ensure that no culture, no faith in this province is singled out for discrimination or reprisal.

I have been very proud of Albertans in the way they have responded to the events arising from September 11. The province's reputation for tolerance and harmony was challenged, and it responded to that challenge with great, great dignity.

Mr. Speaker, all members of the government caucus and I are also very proud of the Canadian men and women of the armed forces who are serving in support of this noble cause. Canada's troops are respected worldwide because of their courage and their dedication to achieving peace. Nowhere is this respect more widespread and evident than it is right here in Alberta, and not since the great conflicts of the 20th century has that respect been so deserved. Two days ago Albertans remembered the lost and fallen of earlier conflicts. Today I know that all Albertans join with me in wishing Canadian troops well as they serve abroad. Our prayers are with them, and we wish them a speedy and safe return to their loved ones at home.

September 11 was a sad and tragic day in human history. History shows us, however, that the resilience of the human spirit and the creativity of the human mind can overcome the greatest of tragedies. The people of the United States and their friends around the world will overcome this tragedy in just the same manner. But overcoming does not mean forgetting. I know that I for one will never forget the horror of September 11 and the thousands of bright, radiant lights that were extinguished by the darkness of hatred. I will remember and I will mourn, as I'm sure all of us will.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just over two months ago everyone throughout the world was reminded of the fragility of life, of plans, and of the freedoms that we have. In the period of a single morning the security that we have taken for granted was shattered by vengeful acts of terrorism. In the immediate aftermath of the destruction of the World Trade Center, the attack on the Pentagon, and the crash of an airliner in Pennsylvania, many of us struggled to come to terms with what had happened, just how far the threat would spread, and the implications for our community and our freedoms and our friends.

As we contemplate the shape of a very different world, the families and friends of those killed mourn the loss of their loved ones. For these people their lives have been indelibly scarred. The tragedy we now know as September 11 has had a very real impact on the thousands of families that have lost a son, a daughter, a mother, a father, an aunt, an uncle, or even for those that have lost friends. Their loss is profound, and I join with my caucus in extending our deepest sympathy to all affected by this senseless act of terrorism.

As most of the world watched in horror as the events of September 11 unfolded, thousands of men and women sprang into action to lend whatever assistance they could to the victims of this disaster. They are the true heroes of September 11. Many, in fact, lost their lives while trying to render help to the victims and to their fellow workers. This good citizenship and concern for fellow citizens is the foundation of a free society that will overcome any terrorist plot.

Mr. Speaker, we continue to live under a veil of uncertainty because of September 11 and the subsequent actions. It is ever more important in this circumstance to be vigilant in protecting the freedoms and values that are our way of life. Unjustified acts of terrorism will not destroy the spirit of people. Albertans and Canadians will stand strong in defense of our values and of our way of life. We will continue to support our multicultural activities, and we will not allow anyone to be singled out.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would again like to express my condolences and those of my caucus to the families and friends of the people killed in that unjustified act of terrorism on September 11, and to the people who so willingly have worked to dampen the pain and assist in the recovery of the victims, I commend your service to your neighbours.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank this House and the Premier for this opportunity to reflect on the horrific events of September 11. On behalf of the Alberta New Democrat opposition and along with the other leaders, who have just spoken, I offer my sincere condolences to the families and friends of the thousands of innocent people who perished in New York, in Washington, and in Pennsylvania. We salute the dedication and courage of those engaged in the ongoing rescue efforts at the World Trade Center.

I also want to take this opportunity to pass along my sincere condolences to those affected by yesterday's tragic crash of the American Airlines flight in Brooklyn. It has indeed been a few rough and difficult months for the residents of New York City, and our hearts go out to them.

No cause or grievance can justify the horrific terrorist attacks of September 11, Mr. Speaker. These attacks must be condemned in the strongest possible terms, yet we must ensure that a response to these tragic events is rooted in the need for justice and the respect for the rule of law, not the lust for vengeance. In order to avert future similar tragedies, our response must be in keeping with international law and serve to strengthen the role of multilateral bodies like the United Nations and the International Criminal Court.

These events test many aspects of our shared humanity. They are a test of our tolerance and respect for fellow Albertans of Arab descent and for those who follow the Islamic faith. Because Albertans of Arab descent look visibly different, since September 11 they have been subjected by some to increased ridicule and abuse. As elected politicians we must set a positive example of tolerance and respect, especially for Albertans who are from minority communities. The media, as well, has a responsibility for equitable reporting, recognizing that no one is exempt from getting caught up in racial stereotyping in the rush to judgment.

Before September 11 it was fashionable in some circles to belittle the role of governments and their ability to act for the public good. The events of September 11 remind us of the important role governments play in ensuring our common well-being and safeguarding our public security. They remind us of the contributions of emergency response personnel like firefighters, police officers, and paramedics. September 11 reminds us of the important obligations that governments have in fully respecting and safeguarding our civil liberties, including the rights of freedom of association, freedom of expression, and peaceful dissent. Our response to terrorism must not be allowed to undermine these civil liberties. Bill C-36 as currently proposed in my judgment does just that.

September 11 reminds us of the pressing need to build strong bonds of citizenship among us all. These events raise profound questions about how to build a more tolerant and inclusive society within our own province. They remind us of the value of an inclusive public school system, reflecting the religious, ethnic, and racial diversity of Alberta society. The inclusive and integrating function of Alberta's education system is gradually being eroded ostensibly in response to demands from parents and some community groups. I submit that we must re-examine the policy allowing this, especially its potential for unintended consequences, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that the lessons we draw from September 11 include how to build a more inclusive Alberta. This should be an Alberta where children are taught to value each other's beliefs and backgrounds, not taught to believe that only one world view is the right one. This should be an Alberta where differences are celebrated and respected and not used to promote social division.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask Albertans to mourn with those who suffered such a catastrophic loss on September 11. The events of September 11 challenge us in many ways. May the lessons we learn from this tragedy strengthen our resolve to build a more secure, peaceful, and just world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce six very special young women, who are seated in the members' gallery today as special visitors. These girls, like so many other people across Alberta, were deeply touched by the events of September 11 in the U.S. and decided to reach out to their neighbours south of the border. These young ladies came up with a simple and heartfelt idea to make red, white, and blue ribbons, which are being worn by all members in the House today. The girls intended to sell those ribbons at the St. Albert farmers' market in the hopes of raising $50 for the relief efforts in the U.S.

Well, Mr. Speaker, these young ladies' ribbons and their cause were so popular, they ended up making 5,000 ribbons and raising an astounding $21,000. That project earned them a lot of local media coverage and even a congratulations call from President George Bush's White House secretary.

I know that these young Albertans didn't undertake this project for praise or publicity. They took on this job out of a sense of duty and a sense of caring. In this regard they represent the very best of the human spirit, and we are all very proud of them.

They were not alone in their work. They received tremendous help and encouragement from their parents, their families, their teachers, and their neighbours, and I thank those people as well. Across Alberta others have done similar work in order to help our American neighbours. We are fortunate to have these six St. Albert teens with us today, but we acknowledge with thanks the efforts of the many Albertans who have contributed to the relief effort.

Earlier today I had the pleasure of joining Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, the Member for St. Albert, and the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert in presenting certificates of accomplishment to these girls. Now I have the honour of introducing them to you and through you to all members of this Assembly. The St. Albert girls are here today with their parents; with Mr. Buccini, the vice-principal of the school they attend, which is William D. Cuts junior high school; and one of their teachers, Melissa Brown. I would ask Nicole Attwell, Allison Edwards, Kayla Fyffe, Holly Gray, Danelle Hancock, and Tara Joshi to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon it gives me great pleasure to introduce the family of Bettie Hewes. I would like to extend sincere condolences to the family on behalf of everyone in the Legislature. Members of Bettie Hewes' family are with us today, and I would like to introduce to you her husband, Henk VanDroffelaar, from Brockville, Ontario; her children, Larry Hewes from Hawaii, Jane Hewes and her husband, Michael Henry, and their children, Ella, Jamie, and Micah Henry; Rob Hewes, his wife, Lorraine, and their children, Erin Mooney and Robin Hewes and his wife, Amanda; Sally Nikolaj and her husband, Wilf, and their children, Elise and Evan; and three members of Bettie's extended family, including June Birch, Fabian Henry, and Karen Henry. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to present a petition signed by over 400 individuals from Edmonton and area who are very concerned and looking for the government to condemn the Chinese government's crackdown on Falun Gong and Alberta's sister province, Heilongjiang, government's dealings with the Falun Gong practitioners.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do also stand and retain their places.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand now to give notice that after Oral Question Period I will be introducing a motion under Standing Order 40.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 22

Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 22, Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001.

The proposed legislation will extend the time for the filing of liens from 45 days to 90 days for sectors specifically relating to oil and gas drilling and services.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 22, the Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 27
Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2001

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 27, the Provincial Court Amendment Act.

The bill provides a mechanism through which judges in the Provincial Court who are of retirement age and with long-term and proven track records may be eligible for reappointment for one-year terms up to the age of 75. The act also makes other minor amendments to clarify existing wording as it relates to civil proceedings in our Provincial Court.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Bill 28
Agricultural Operation Practices
Amendment Act, 2001

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 28, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill establishes science-based technical standards and procedures to approve, monitor, enforce, and site all new and expanding confined feeding operations through amendments to the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. The legislation will also establish standards for the management of manure.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 28 be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table with the Clerk the appropriate number of copies in response to questions asked in this House on May 9 and in keeping with the principles of open, honest, transparent government. This is dealing with underground petroleum storage tank remediation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon as chair of the Alberta Research Council I'm very pleased to table five copies of the document entitled Accelerating Innovation. This is the annual report for 2001 of the Alberta Research Council, which is this year celebrating its 80th anniversary, and I believe all members have previously received this report. Of course, the report shows how the Alberta Research Council is advancing the economy and well-being of Alberta through technology and innovation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a document produced by Edmonton Working Women and released in September of 2001 entitled Women Working: A Survey of Edmonton Women's Experiences in the Workplace, Home and Community.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for all Members of the Legislative Assembly this afternoon the official program from the province of Saskatchewan on Monday, June 18, 2001, for the unveiling of the busts of the hon. Walter Scott, the first Premier of Saskatchewan; the hon. T.C. Douglas, the Premier of Saskatchewan between 1944 and 1961; and the restored bust of the Rt. Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. They are located in the rotunda of the Saskatchewan Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to make two tablings today. The first is to table five copies of an e-mail from Barry and Lana Love on behalf of the County of Flagstaff Family Farm Promotional Society. They would like the siting of intensive livestock operations left at the municipal level and urge the government to talk to more people other than ILO owners and operators.

For my second tabling, Mr. Speaker, I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Gail Horner, chair of the board of trustees, Sturgeon school division, in which they feel proposed government amendments to Bill 16 would substantially change that bill, and they urge the government to leave the amendments in the committee stage for at least 10 days before completing consideration of the bill.

Thank you.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I have four different tablings. The first tabling is a letter, from hundreds of letters that my office has received over the summer, addressed to the Premier from an Edmonton teacher, Carolyn Benedik, urging the Premier to listen to Alberta teachers' concerns regarding their unsatisfactory working conditions and low wages. That's the first one.

Mr. Speaker, the other tablings that I have all deal with the position that the government took during the debate on Bill 11 with respect to its determination to respect the Canada Health Act. The second tabling is some press clippings again restating the government's commitment to the Canada Health Act during the election. The third one is quotes from the Premier with respect to his determination to respect the spirit and letter of the Canada Health Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, a letter addressed to the Premier from a teacher, Mark Samuel, concerning the continuing devaluation of teachers' professional status and their contributions to society.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have a number of tablings today. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort requesting that Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act, be given early consideration for debate in Committee of the Whole.

I also have the appropriate number of copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross requesting that Bill 209, the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, be given early consideration for debate in Committee of the Whole.

Pursuant to section 36(1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly a list of the registered candidates of the general election of the 25th Legislative Assembly, March 12, 2001, together with their chief financial officers who failed to file a candidate's campaign financial statement with the office of the Chief Electoral Officer on or before July 12, 2001. This is required by section 35(1)(1.1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

As well, the following Members' Services Committee orders: 1/01, the constituency services amendment order (No. 8); 2/01, the transportation amendment order (No. 4). [interjection] Hon. Minister of Energy, I could recognize you if you want to participate.

MR. SMITH: No, thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Order 3/01, the members' allowances amendment order (No. 6); 4/01, the members' committee allowances amendment order (No. 3); 5/01, the members' allowances amendment order (No. 7); and 6/01 the members' allowances amendment order (No. 8).

Pursuant to section 44(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, chapter C-22.1 of the 1991 Statutes of Alberta, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner. This report covers the period April 1, 2000, to March 31, 2001.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very accomplished young lady who is with us today in the members' gallery. Shawna Wallace is an 18-year-old University of Lethbridge student and is this year's recipient of the 4-H Premier's award, the highest honour the 4-H program bestows. She received this honour in recognition of her outstanding efforts and achievements during her eight-year membership in the Byemoor 4-H beef club. She has proven abilities in leadership and effective communications as well as a strong record of accomplishment in school and her community.

During her year as the 4-H Premier's award recipient Shawna will travel the province extensively, serving as a 4-H ambassador and promoting the 4-H program. Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta has the largest 4-H membership in Canada.

Accompanying Shawna today are her father, Lorne, her mother, Marlene, and her brother Jeff, all of Endiang. I now invite Shawna and her family to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have a long list, so please be patient.

The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask Laurie Hawley, the president of Parkland local 10 of the Alberta Teachers' Association to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to all members of the House it is my pleasure to introduce Patricia Clancy-Novosel, the president of the Edmonton local of the separate school teachers' association, a person very, very committed to our next generation and to teaching and education in general. I would ask her to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions to make. First I'd like to introduce Aaron Roth. Aaron worked for two summers as my summer student at the Lethbridge-East constituency, and in the winter in between while he was attending the University of Lethbridge, he worked part-time in my office. He is now a political science master's student at the University of Alberta. Aaron, would you please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce Bruna Genereux and Kieran Leblanc, who worked for us in our party office. Please stand and receive our welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 14 students, a teacher, and a parent from the Suzuki school, the charter school in Ottewell in the Gold Bar neighbourhood. Mr. Ian Gray has been teaching in this school for seven continuous years, and he's doing a very good job. Mrs. Carolyn Readman is volunteering her time this afternoon to accompany the group, and they're in the public gallery. I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome from all members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of the Assembly a great group of 52 students from the Bertha Kennedy Catholic community school of St. Albert. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Debra Kaplar, Ms Fiona McManus, and volunteer parent helpers Mrs. Kathy Zubick, Mrs. Kelly Emmerton, and Mr. Irwin Forsythe. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you 35 students from H.A. Kostash school out of Smoky Lake. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Harris; parent teacher helpers Sharon Boychuk, Curtis Boychuk, Ed Zenko, and Leanna Schoepgens. I believe they're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Kevin Hubick, who is a teacher at the Sturgeon composite high school and also the ATA rep for Sturgeon comp. He's seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Ronnie Miller, president and chief executive officer of Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. Hoffmann-La Roche is one of Canada's leading research-based pharmaceutical companies, and the company has a vitamins and fine chemicals facility in High River. He is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests to introduce today. It gives me great pleasure to welcome Mrs. Karen Beaton, president of the Edmonton public teachers local, a longtime friend and constituent of the hon. Member for Sherwood Park and a longtime teacher, principal, and colleague of mine. By the way, this is her third term as president of the Edmonton local.

I'm also pleased to introduce 64 people from Aldergrove elementary school: 52 students and six adults including their principal, Mr. Duxbury; Mrs. Down, teacher; Mrs. Colquhoun, teacher; and three parents, Mrs. McCaskill, Ms Tweddle, and Mr. Weber. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly, along with Mrs. Beaton.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly six individuals studying at Grant MacEwan College, which is in my riding of Edmonton-Centre. They are accompanied today by their instructor, Celest Nygaard, and I would ask that they please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a special constituent and a proud mother. Mrs. Marie Gordon is the mother of Maya Gordon, who is one of the new pages that has started this session. She was also an enthusiastic member of your Youth Parliament this spring. I would ask Mrs. Marie Gordon to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two teachers from St. Albert. One is Mr. Patrick Collins, the president of the local ATA for St. Albert protestant schools, and Ms Viviane Pezer, who is the president of the local ATA for the greater St. Albert school division No. 29. They are seated, I believe, in both galleries, and I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you today two very special constituents of mine from Calgary-West seated in the members' gallery. He was first an educator, but he's now a speaker, filmmaker, and writer and for excellent reason: he is the only Canadian to summit Mount Everest twice, in May '99 and in May '01. She is his wife and strong supporter. I would ask Dave and Jennifer Rodney to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members here a constituent of mine, Mr. Harold Neth. He's a very effective advocate for teachers, for teacher- and student-related issues, and frequently provides me with very insightful and helpful information that I can share with members of my caucus. He teaches at Holy Trinity Catholic school and is an effective zone representative for that area. I would ask everyone to please welcome Mr. Neth as he rises to receive this applause.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly four of my constituents from Millet including Mayor Laurie Linaker; community services co-ordinator, Arlene Swedberg; and Communities in Bloom co-chairpersons, Carrie Jepsen and Carol Sadoroszney. Later I will be giving a members' statement on Millet's success in the Communities in Bloom program. The guests are seated in the visitors' gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three members of the Alberta Snowmobile Association. Today we have with us the president, Mr. Trent Law; the executive director, Louise Sherren; and member Jerry Bidulock, who's also the president of the Riverland Recreational Trail Society. If I could ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to reintroduce to you and to members of the Assembly a former friend and colleague of ours from the only Calgary constituency that has an elevator. His name is Mr. Jon Havelock, former minister, former MLA for Calgary-Shaw, and a good friend. Would you please rise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on this glorious Alberta day to introduce to you and through you a former page of ours and a constituent of mine, Mr. Tim Jolly. Tim is in the gallery today. Would everybody please join me in welcoming Tim. Thank you for returning to us, Tim, and for being in Edmonton-McClung. We appreciate it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the House two very hardworking young Albertans, Tracey Biehn and Tanya Woodruff, both of whom are seated in the public gallery. Tracey and Tanya are carrying out the practicum portion of their social work program at Grant MacEwan College by taking on casework in my constituency office of Edmonton-Strathcona. I take this opportunity to thank them for their hard work and wish them well in their studies. I will now ask Tanya and Tracey to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature another ex-colleague of ours in the Legislature, Peter Sekulic, who sat in the Liberal benches here for many years. I'd ask him to stand and receive the warm applause of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very special young people who are seated in the public gallery. Ms Cynthia Tupper is a student with the social work program at Grant MacEwan Community College and as part of her practicum is working in my office assisting with the casework taken on by my constituency office of Edmonton-Highlands. I thank her for her hard work and ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second guest is my son Alex Mason. He's from Highlands junior high school, in grade 9, and we got a postponement of several days of the Take Our Kids to Work Day so that he could be with us today for the opening of the fall session. I'm very proud of him, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Innovation

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is constantly discussing major changes to the public health care system. They've talked about user fees, increased health care premiums, medical savings accounts, tax credits for health expenses, and also delisting of services. My question is to the Premier. Why are you not considering cost efficiency in health care delivery innovation to save tax dollars rather than just working with the revenue side of the health care system?

MR. KLEIN: It goes without saying that certainly we want to challenge the various regional health authorities and all people connected with the delivery of health care services to bring about new and better ways of doing things to achieve efficiencies, to become effective. Mr. Speaker, that goes without saying. Publicly I've stated generally to the regional health authorities and all people involved in the delivery of health care: before we even look at frontline services, examine the administration of the system and see what we can achieve there.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Premier says that that goes without saying. Why isn't he talking to the regional health authorities, telling them about innovative systems like the Capital Health Link to make it available across the province, like the proposal for long-term care in the Chinook health region to make that available all over the province? Why is it that we never hear of those kinds of innovative things from this Premier?

MR. KLEIN: There are many innovative things going on throughout the province, and indeed, Mr. Speaker, many of those innovative measures are being undertaken by some of the so-called smaller regional health districts. The majority of the problem, I think, is commensurate with the population of this province. One-third of the population is in Calgary. One-third of the population is in Edmonton. The other third is scattered around the province. So two-thirds of the problem in this province can justifiably be related to the two major regional health authorities. We are and have been bringing and plan to continue to bring the CEOs and the chairs of those two major health authorities into Treasury Board to discuss precisely what the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition wants us to discuss. That discussion centres around achieving efficiencies, finding new and better and more effective ways of doing things.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Premier still didn't answer the question. Why isn't he in his public statements making those kinds of recommendations to the health authorities so that the other health authorities are aware of those innovative things? All he's talking about is: we've got to penalize the consumers; we've got to penalize Albertans.

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. Relative to the mechanism for sharing information – and basically the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness will respond to this – there is a mechanism set up, and indeed there is tremendous encouragement for all health districts, all health authorities to share information on better ways of delivering services.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. MAR: Well, I note that the Leader of the Opposition himself has cited as being innovative ideas programs like the Crowfoot centre in Calgary, the Northeast health clinic here in Edmonton. He's talked about the Health Link line. I should note that recently the Mistahia health region linked up with the Capital regional health authority. Mr. Speaker, those types of innovations, while new, are being shared in venues throughout this province. There is a sharing of best practices among and between regional health authorities. They do have, of course, a Council of Chairs of regional health authorities that meets on a regular basis. We recently had an orientation session for both newly appointed and newly elected and also reappointed regional health authority members.

Mr. Speaker, you know, these types of programs like Capital health's Health Link line have demonstrably reduced the demand upon the acute care system. In an appropriate way people are getting the right service at the right time by the right person, and I can assure you that there is no shortage of people with the Capital health authority here that are willing to brag about that. It's an excellent program, and it gets the accolades that it deserves, and the information is shared throughout the province.

Of course, we have to look at both aspects of it. There is no one fix to our health care system, Mr. Speaker. We have to look at ways of delivering our service better, cheaper, more effectively, more efficiently, and we also have to look at the financing side of it.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Delivery

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. When you talk about the health care sector and health care delivery, we basically have three systems in Alberta: the insurance system, the wallet system, and the public system. When you cut back on the public system, does this not just transfer the health care delivery costs of Albertans from the public system to the insurance system or their wallets? And some of them can't afford it.

MR. KLEIN: I really don't know what the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is talking about when he talks about cutbacks. There are no cutbacks. Mr. Speaker, we are very concerned about a doubling of health care costs since 1994-1995. That can hardly be construed as a cutback. That is a doubling of the spending on health care, and if this hon. member thinks that's the way to go, then his values are a lot different than mine.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, as these cutbacks and changes in the delivery system are put in place, what will happen to Albertans who can't afford insurance or don't have the cash? Will they be left out of health care?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. Nobody will be left out of health care. What we are trying to do and what every Premier and what every minister of health, including the federal Minister of Health and the Prime Minister, is trying to do is to achieve sustainability in the health care system and find those new and effective and better ways of delivering services and, at the same time, to make sure that those who are truly sick or are injured in society get the medical help that they need and require without losing their livelihoods and without losing their dignity. That's what health care is all about.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier. Mr. Premier, when you deal with changes to access to health care, if someone can no longer get a service through the public system, they have to get it somewhere else. Is that not effectively changing the delivery of the system or access to the system for those Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would strongly advise the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition to wait until Mr. Mazankowski and his group of experts, top physicians from around the world and health care economists, bring their report together. Certainly there is the preliminary report, which outlines some fundamental and basic recommendations without putting the flesh on the bones. The final report I think should be out around November 16, at which time it will be reviewed by government, and in the fullness of time, of course, and when we're satisfied with the recommendations we can accept and/or reject, then we will make that public, and we'll get on with the job of leading this country in reforming health care.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. According to a workbook for delegates at the provincial Tory conference this past weekend, quote, the health care system could soon consume Alberta's entire budget. On the other hand, the TD Bank's report on Canadian government finances last month projected that Alberta's health care spending would be 33 to 35 percent of the provincial budget five years from now. Does the Premier take as a serious policy idea the notion that health care spending could soon consume Alberta's entire budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no one ever assumed that health care would consume the province's entire budget, but if spending continues the way it is, it could consume 50 percent of this budget to the detriment of other services. Here are the facts. According to an October study by the Canadian Institute of Health Information, health spending in Canada has risen by 40 percent over the last four years. When inflation is factored in, the net increase has been 28 percent over the last four years. Those are factual figures, unlike the figures quoted by the hon. member in the newspaper yesterday. Those figures clearly did come out of the sky. They couldn't have come out of his head, because he's purported to be an educated and intelligent person.

The same study, Mr. Speaker, shows that across Canada health spending has gone from being 29 percent of total government spending in 1981 to 37 percent of total government spending today. In constant 1992 dollars health spending in Canada has grown from about $1,700 per person in 1992 to about $2,200 per person today, and that's roughly a 30 percent increase in constant dollars.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Premier, we look forward to receiving a tabling of such a document.

The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting when we look at the information from the Canadian Institute of Health Information. Will the Premier acknowledge, using information from CIHI, that health care spending per person in Alberta, adjusting for inflation, is at about the same level today as it was eight, 10, 12, or even 15 years ago?

THE SPEAKER: Well, let's not have multiple questions. It's either one or the other. It's not eight, 10, 12, 14. Let's just specifically go to the question. This is not a point for debate.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member doesn't seem to or doesn't want to or doesn't have the ability to comprehend what I am saying, perhaps the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness can put it more succinctly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, to the point.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that a person who reads nothing is better educated than a person who only reads Liberal policy documents. The fact of the matter is that health care costs have increased dramatically, and this is not an issue unique to the province of Alberta. It is an issue that exists across Canada. Every minister of health across this country, every minister of finance across this country, and the Prime Minister himself is concerned about the issue of costs in health care.

We understand some of the drivers of health care costs, Mr. Speaker. It is matters relating to our aging population, technology, pharmaceuticals, and we are all looking at various efforts across this country and around the world as to how we can deal with ensuring that our health care system, which must be focused on patients, is sustainable. Sustainability is the ability for us to look after our needs today without impairing the ability of future generations of Albertans to do the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, it has been well acknowledged by the federal government and provinces across this country that, in the words of a federal Liberal Senator, tinkering is not enough. We do have to look at fundamental changes to how we deliver and finance our health care system.

DR. TAFT: While speaking of sustainability, would the Premier admit that his government's spending on health care last year as a percent of the province's GDP is almost exactly the average it has been for the past 15 years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I allude to the relevance of that question, to which, I suggest, there is no relevance.

The simple fact is that health care spending has doubled – he should understand that: doubled – from a little over $3 billion to something over $6 billion in five years. That is relevant. Mr. Speaker, the population of this province over that same period of time has not doubled, the number of sick and injured people in this province has not doubled, but health care costs have doubled. Even the hon. member should be able to understand that.

Mr. Speaker, while I'm on my feet, I would like to table the sufficient number of copies of the study to which I alluded earlier. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care Reform

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the last provincial election and even during it the Premier said nothing – absolutely nothing – about delisting services, challenging the Canada Health Act, or introducing user fees. Instead he said things like, and I quote: without hesitation we fully commit ourselves to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. The Premier has no mandate from the people to attack public health care now. My question to the Premier: why did the Premier conceal from the public his plans to deinsure health care services, increase health care premiums, and introduce user fees during the last Assembly, before the election?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did not have in hand even the essence of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, chaired by Mr. Mazankowski. We do have the preliminary recommendations, and they allude not to specifically the way the hon. leader of the third party makes out, but they allude to some fairly dramatic reforms, reforms that, if adopted by this government, could and probably will – I will make that more definite: will – represent a challenge not to the Canada Health Act itself but the interpretation. I alluded to this publicly, and I'll allude to it in this House: the interpretation of comprehensiveness. What does comprehensive mean? Now, to me it's very subjective. To the hon. leader it could mean – and maybe he'll answer this. Does it mean all things for all people at all times and for all causes? If that is his interpretation of comprehensiveness, then let him stand up and say. It may not and it probably will not be the interpretation of this government.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please. There's a lot of speculating going on here in the question period today. The purpose of question period is to deal with government policy. There seems to be speculation leading to debate, and that's not the purpose of question period.

The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the Premier: did the government say nothing about introducing user fees or delisting services in its throne speech of February 12, 2001, the very day the election was called, because the government hadn't done its homework over the previous eight years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, certainly as the election was called and as it unfolded, there was widespread knowledge that the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, headed by Mr. Mazankowski, was indeed at that time doing its work. It was only in the last few weeks that we received the preliminary recommendations. The final recommendations will come down later this month, and they will be given due and very careful and very sincere consideration by this government. But we alluded during the election many, many times that we are looking forward with great anticipation to the recommendations of the Mazankowski report so that indeed we could once again become leaders in effecting and bringing about health care reform.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the Premier: given that his government has no mandate whatsoever from the people of Alberta to introduce user fees or deinsure services, will the Premier do the honourable thing and call an election before proceeding with his agenda?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we just had an election, and you know what? They dwindled to two, we've got 74, and they've got seven. And he talks about a mandate? I would remind the hon. leader of the third party that throughout the election campaign it was well known to the hon. member, it was well known to the Liberals, certainly it was well known to every member of the Conservative caucus that a report was under way, a report from a committee that was commissioned by this government to study health care reform. Now they're coming across as if it's a big surprise, you know, as if it's new. Has he had his head in the sand all this time? Will he stand up now and admit – you know, is he saying that he didn't know that Mr. Mazankowski was reviewing health care reform? Is that what he's trying to say, that he didn't know? If he didn't know, then I would respectfully suggest that he is not a very good representative for his people.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister tell the House what the province is doing to protect Alberta's softwood lumber industry against the recent countervail and antidumping actions taken by the U.S. Department of Commerce?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as members of the Assembly may recall, this is not a new issue facing the lumber industry or the timber industry in this province and the provincial government. We have established an overall reputation of working with industry and with the federal government to defend against these allegations, and on previous occasions we've been successful in that defence. However, at this particular time there has been a preliminary determination by the United States Department of Commerce, and currently work is going on in conjunction with the federal government and the other provinces on providing every possible legal and other help that we can to the industry in defending their part of the case, which deals with dumping allegations that have been decided upon by the Department of Commerce. We are working as governments to defend against the countervail findings that have been made by the U.S. Department of Commerce. Those activities are going on currently. We are also communicating with and in touch with the industry with respect to developments in this whole area.

MR. GRAYDON: My supplementary is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister update the House on recent developments on this issue?

MR. JONSON: As I've indicated, Mr. Speaker, there has been the preliminary determination by the Department of Commerce, and currently we are working on putting our case before that particular body. I regret to indicate that it will probably be a matter that will continue on, perhaps into May of next year, before final determinations are made.

In the meantime we are working with industry in terms of their having to deal with the bonding requirements that they have to put in place because of this preliminary ruling. We are also working with the industry to look at the whole possibility of there being some mediated or negotiated settlement that would be of mutual benefit to all parties. As it has been shown in at least two previous incidents, we do feel that there is a strong case to be made on behalf of our industry, and we'll continue to pursue that line of representation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you. To the same minister, my second supplementary: can the minister tell us how the government is keeping our industry involved in this process?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, along with the Department of Sustainable Resource Development we have worked with the industry and its various parts to form an Alberta forestry council. We have been meeting regularly with them through our officials. We're trying to advise them on developments on a regular basis so they know what is occurring with respect to these negotiations and these legal matters. In addition, we are discussing on an ongoing basis with them the possible measures that might be taken to resolve this overall matter on a long-term basis.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Foster Children

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year at least 439 children in government care were abused or neglected. Recently one youth in care, a 16 year old, was charged with killing a man. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. What action did the minister take after being warned by memo that the boy exhibited unpredictable and aggressive behaviour?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in response to the question I would advise that there's an investigation going on. There are issues that cannot be discussed. Every time a child in care dies or a child in care moves to commit some violent and unfortunate act, we are concerned. We are sadly affected, but the hon. member is asking about a particular issue which I'm not at liberty to divulge any further.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the boy had been placed in 25 foster or group homes, how many more of the 400-plus abused children have similar unacceptable placement records?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I am assuming that the hon. member is referring to some children that have been referenced in the advocate's report released August 30. If I may, we have asked for a complete investigation into all of the substantiated and suggested acts. In fact, we have gone so far as to ask which of those particular circumstances had been acts of violence or acts of indiscretion or acts of violation against children while they were in the care of our government, specifically by people who were assigned to do due diligence on behalf of the child. So we're doing a complete investigation on all of the issues that have been cited in that advocate's report. We take very seriously any allegation of lack of care or concern related to children that are in our jurisdiction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how will cutting counseling, limiting case conferences, failing to support foster parents, and placing families on wait lists due to government budget cuts not lead to more incidents like this with these fragile children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the discussion about budget cuts I'll take right on right now. There was a 1 percent cut that every minister at this table agreed would help us fit the cloth of our cost containment. Since that time, Treasury Board has agreed to add to our base budget a line of $4 million, knowing that we get that money right back from the federal government as it relates to care of aboriginal children in those areas which have been served by our government.

We have added resources, Mr. Speaker, on the front lines. In this past year almost 475 staff or staff positions have been part of what is going on in Children's Services, and of those we have filled as many as we could up until the hiring freeze. We have worked very hard to make sure that the reductions do not happen on the level of dealing with the child. If there are changes in the administrative functions, they are happening administratively, not where the child in need actually sits.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned as well about those allegations of reductions that might occur where the child is, but our foster parents as of May of this year had an increase in moneys across the board. I'm puzzled somewhat that there are allegations coming from the hon. member opposite that we have not done our due diligence to children's services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Coyote Hunting

MR. McFARLAND: Mr. Speaker, following our Remembrance Day service in Champion this past Sunday, which celebrated our freedoms, I had three constituents convey to me their disappointment and disapproval with the new government regulation which they feel was created after negative feedback from one TV documentary and which they feel severely restricts their freedoms to protect their private land and their assets. My question today is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why did the minister's department come out with the regulation to prohibit coyote hunting with dogs in rural Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question. Of course, we are concerned when the use of dogs for recreational hunting is happening in Alberta. Albertans have told us that they do not support and do not accept the use of dogs for recreational hunting. Both my department, Sustainable Resource Development, and Agriculture, Food and Rural Development have amended regulations to strictly limit – it's not prevent but limit – the use of dogs to hunt coyotes. Livestock producers will be able to continue using dogs. All they have to do is prove to us that the coyotes are doing damage to their livestock, and what we will do is then assess the situation and provide them actually with a 30-day permit to be able to deal with that particular issue. I believe we are doing the right thing. We believe the new permit system will satisfy generally all Albertans out there.

MR. McFARLAND: Mr. Speaker, if I could, I'd like to ask my first supplemental question, then, to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why should a farmer or a rancher have to demonstrate that they've tried all other means of coyote predation control before even getting a permit to have coyotes hunted on their own land?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that that in fact is not the case. Livestock producers do not have to prove that they have exhausted every means. In fact, Alberta Agriculture has given the responsibility for the giving out of permits to agricultural fieldmen to make it as convenient to the producer as possible, to make sure that the decisions are made in the region where the problem is so that those people in those regions are well aware of whether coyote predation is a serious issue, and if it is, the producer will go to the ag fieldman and request a temporary permit, which they will get, I am sure, if this is an issue.

I want to make it clear. I've heard the same thing, that this was going to be an onerous process, that we were going to cause livestock producers grave losses in sheep and calves and so on because they would have to go through some onerous process to get a permit. To protect their livestock from coyote predators, they can obtain a permit in their own region from an agricultural fieldman who will be well aware of the issue of coyote numbers causing havoc with livestock. So along with other methods of prevention that we certainly encourage, this is there for the producer if they need to use it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you. It sounds to me like coyotes are worth more than livestock.

Mr. Speaker, my final question: because the animal rights activists seem to have had a great influence, I'd like to know if the farmers and ranchers who've lost livestock or family pets were consulted on this regulatory change.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, yes, we've had a lot of input from livestock producers, certainly from producers who have need to use this type of control to protect their livestock. In some cases it is just by using guard dogs, but in other cases where it is difficult to hunt coyotes, perhaps with a gun or other methods, and if using dogs is the only answer, we've talked to those folks. Actually discussing it with them was a key factor in us continuing to allow this practice.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure the hon. member heard my first answer, because it is not the case . . .

THE SPEAKER: Please. We've now spent five minutes on this question. If the hon. member has not heard the complete first answer, he will have the privilege of reading the answer in Hansard, which will be published shortly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rent Subsidy Program

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been struggling over the past couple of years with 30 to 40 percent rent increases and vacancy rates that have dropped to 1 percent. For low-income households that pay 45 percent of their income for rent, this struggle has been very hard. My question is to the Minister of Seniors. Why did the government choose to put thousands of at-risk people onto the street by freezing the rent subsidy program available under the private landlord rent supplement program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, this government hasn't, nor will it, put people out on the street. I'd like to point out very clearly that our rent subsidy, social housing support, and senior housing support cover some 40,000 units – I repeat that, 40,000 units – 28,000 of which are owned by the province. When private landlords increase the rent, we are stuck into it. Nobody is put out on the street.

I'd like to also further state very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that one of the problems we're having with an active economy is that with what once was social housing in terms of units being made available by the private sector, many of these are being condominiumized, making it difficult for us to find new units.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Given that the units the minister speaks about are not available to these people who have been cut off this list, where exactly did the minister contemplate these people were going to go? Another MAP program?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, again I must emphasize that we are doing everything possible, everything reasonable to work with these folks. We've also embarked in co-operation with another level of government, so both levels, local and federal, in dealing with the whole area of affordable housing in Edmonton, Calgary, Fort McMurray, you name it. There are a lot of spots around this province where due to the strong economic activity, yes, we are facing housing problems, and we are dealing with them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the people on the waiting list for the housing subsidies have been blindsided by this announcement, can't the department do better than to delay until six weeks after the change to inform these Albertans affected and to give the workers administering these programs an opportunity to plan? Six weeks later they were told.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know from where she gets her information, because we haven't announced any freezes on anything; we haven't frozen anything. I'd like to also point out that our housing support program works very, very well in that we have some 48 percent of clients who are people who are on other forms of government assistance. This is additional assistance to them. Also, fully 70 percent of the other half of the people are not on the program for more than three years, which means they're able to get off and find alternate forms of housing which are within their realm.

I'd also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we've made some other changes recently, which are not being brought up by the hon. member, in that we don't immediately increase their rents with their income – that is frozen for a full year to give them the opportunity to better themselves and hopefully move off – and a lot of other improvements to the regulations which have come about through consultation with the very people who live in these units. I would suggest that the member get her facts a little bit more clear.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Travel Default Insurance

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Albertans were shocked and surprised by the unfortunate news that yet another of Canada's international airlines, Canada 3000, had ceased operations. Now, this announcement has left many Albertans who had purchased tickets from Canada 3000 uncertain of whether or not they will be able to take the vacations they had purchased. Although airlines are a federally regulated industry, from a consumer protection standpoint can the Minister of Government Services update the House on Canada 3000's current situation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and it is a very good question from the hon. member. The current situation is changing minute by minute. We found that Canada 3000 was in bankruptcy on Sunday, and they are in court today. I understand that one potential buyer for approximately one-third of the airline has come forward, and that's the former owner, Royal Airlines. I think the hon. member will have a comfort level that other carriers and other charter organizations have pitched in to get their travelers home here to Alberta, but the bottom line is that we'll know more about these events following the court case today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what protection specifically is available for Alberta travelers who booked Canada 3000 flights through travel agencies such as the ones in my constituency?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, the government has worked with the travel industry to encourage travel agents to offer travel default insurance to all consumers. As a result, the Association of Canadian Travel Agents (Alberta) has made it mandatory for their members to offer this kind of insurance. For Albertans who have purchased tickets with a credit card, refunds should be made available through Visa, American Express, and MasterCard. Alberta legislation also protects consumers who may have purchased travel arrangements over the Internet, and that can be done through our new Internet sales regulations. Albertans can contact Government Services consumer information line for information on this and can access our tip sheet on that particular subject on the Internet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. My last supplemental to the same minister: has Alberta considered employing an assurance fund similar to those in other provinces?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that that possibility was considered, but there would be costs to taxpayers, to consumers, and to businesses to fund and administer such a plan. These costs have to be looked at seriously, especially given all the other compensation options offered in the marketplace.

In the three provinces that offer such funds, travelers must have booked through a travel agent to be covered under that fund, and individuals who book directly through the airlines are not protected. However, in light of the recent events we may need to take another look at travel compensation funds for the future, unlike what I'm hearing from the opposition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Intensive Livestock Operations

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What changes are being made to the Municipal Government Act in support of the government's decision to restrict municipal control over local land planning issues and intensive livestock operations, or confined feeding operations, as you now prefer to call them?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the question being posed falls under our Deputy Premier and minister of agriculture, but I am prepared to say that we're working very closely with the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. In fact, this week we'll be attending their convention. So I will say that I will supplement to the hon. minister responsible for the question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister:

why is your department supporting the removal of an important local land use planning issue from municipal authorities, where it belongs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the question being posed is to the minister of agriculture, but the short answer to the question is that we are not.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I am a bit surprised at the hon. member's line of questioning because I know that we had a fairly extensive discussion with the leader of that party to talk about how we would handle this. This is a very important matter to both the livestock industry and the citizens of this province because it deals with the protection of soil, water, and air. But the thing that really surprised me – and I just want to mention to the hon. member that there was a news release released by their caucus in 1997. It said:

The Minister of Environmental Protection should work with the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to ensure that the current Code of Practice for the operation of intensive livestock operations is administered by the province and is enforceable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we're talking about. To suggest that the municipalities have lost their opportunity to zone land or to designate its use is wrong, because the municipalities have been asked to voluntarily forward to the NRCB, which will be the body that looks after this, not Alberta Agriculture, the land use plans for their municipalities and to identify areas where intensive livestock operations, or confined feeding operations, a more appropriate term, will not be permitted and the reasons for that. The NRCB would have that information and would factor it into their deliberations. In fact, the first thing that the NRCB would do with an application is send it to the municipality for their input.

So, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this gentleman has been, but it certainly hasn't been in the discussion of the report that came in to us that we accepted the recommendations of.

MR. BONNER: Back to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. Speaker. When is your department going to establish a new partnership with municipal councils based on clear rules and responsibilities rather than the whim of that government?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you very much. In fact, to the hon. member, I was very pleased, Mr. Speaker, just two weeks ago to speak at the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. In speaking with them, it was interesting how the province of Alberta under Alberta's Municipal Government Act is viewed as a leader in every province of this country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Teachers' Salaries

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last April the Premier told this province's teachers that they could expect wage settlements that were on a par with those provided to doctors and nurses, yet here we are more than six months later and this promise has not been kept. My question is then to the minister. When will the minister step in and ensure that school boards are given the necessary financial resources to provide fair wage settlements to Alberta teachers?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In Budget 2001 there was a 4 percent amount put in for teachers' salaries, a minimum of 4 percent, and 2 percent further in the year 2002. The rationale behind that 6 percent is that it made our teachers on average the best paid across the provinces in the country of Canada, and we felt that that was an important starting point for the negotiations. The school boards had their per student grant, which they have been negotiating teachers' salaries with for the last 50 or 60 years, and they now have the ability to sit down to negotiate an end to the discussion about salaries with teachers.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, if the minister says that the 4 percent and the 2 percent offered by the government was a starting point for negotiation, will he then commit the government to supplement the resources of school boards so that they can offer a fair deal to Alberta's teachers?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, there are actually a couple of questions there. First of all, when it comes to the 4 and 2 percent as being fair, what we said is that we wanted our teachers to be the highest paid in the country, which they will be. The 4 and 2 percent would assure them of that. It is then up to the school boards and the teachers, the ATA, to sit down and negotiate a settlement as to what they think is the fair amount.

There are dollars available. We increased the budget to the school boards this year – this year – 8.4 percent, Mr. Speaker. That's in addition to 9.8 percent last year. That's around 17 or 18 percent that it has increased in the last two years. We've increased funding to education close to 40 percent since 1995, so this government is making a huge commitment to education.

We presently spend about $4.8 billion in the Department of Learning, Mr. Speaker. For every student who is in the province of Alberta, the government of Alberta spends $7,500.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, is the minister and this government attempting to provoke job action by Alberta's teachers in order to take away their right to strike?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, this minister and this government want anything but. We want our teachers to be in the classroom. We want our students to be learning. We want our students to be in the classroom. I don't think anyone in this House, I don't think anyone in Alberta feels that paying teachers 15 percent higher than any other provincial rate is the right way to go. We do not want a strike. We want our teachers to be where they should be, which is in the classroom in front of students, teaching kids.

Helen Hart

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, November 10, 2001, I was extremely privileged to attend the very wonderful memorial service held in honour of Helen Hart, a truly amazing woman who for 53 years was wife and constant companion to wrestler Stu Hart. Emotionally charged tributes were delivered by brother-in-law Jock Osler, children Bruce, Bret, Ross, and Georgia, and close friends Premier Ralph Klein, Ed Whalen, and Alderman Craig Burrows, all in loving memory of Helen, the remarkable matriarch of the legendary Hart wrestling family of Calgary, Alberta.

By now thousands of Calgarians, Albertans, and Canadians will have come to know of Helen Hart, who was indeed the rock at the centre of a large, exuberant family of 12 children. To know Helen's story, of the strikingly beautiful and intelligent young lady raised in Long Island, New York, who was the oldest of five daughters of an international track star and who chose to marry the handsome wrestler from rural Alberta, enables one to begin to understand the qualities and dynamics of the large family Helen and Stu Hart created. Son Bruce referred to the opposites attract theory and his mother's humorous quote: we got married in a blizzard, and I've been snowed under ever since.

Helen Hart represented many strengths and values throughout her life, which enabled her to endure the tragic deaths of sons Dean and Owen and grandson Matthew. Helen always held her head high, exercised unwavering integrity, was totally devoted to her family, and was so proud of their accomplishments. She was the voice of reason, tolerance, and compassion, and said Brett: she had the most perfect hug.

Our Premier quoted an old Jewish proverb: God cannot be everywhere, so he made mothers. Why is it that only upon death one receives full acknowledgment of one's specialness and worth? Helen Hart's very special memorial service told so well her story of a much loved, remarkable wife, mother, grandmother, and great-grandmother and of her family's pain and devastation in their loss. My wish for Stu and their family is to honour Helen's memory by always remembering her strength of character, courage, dignity, acceptance, and love.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bettie Hewes

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to pay tribute to our former interim leader and the Member of the Legislative Assembly for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Bettie Hewes. Bettie was an outstanding wife, mother, grandmother, sister, friend, community advocate, and colleague. As a politician she has no equal. Our Great White Granny took the task of educating Prime Ministers, Premiers, ministers, private members, and private citizens on issues close to her heart with a determination that was formidable. Her issues were people issues. How did decision-making impact people? How were we helping those who didn't have a voice? Most particularly, how did we help, protect, and best serve the needs of children.

As a result of her focus she was able to shift political debate and decision-making in this province and in this country to include a human focus that has often been missing. Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions many of us that came into the Legislature as new MLAs were seen to be consulting, seeking advice, and getting Bettie's opinion on how to make sure our legislation reflected the human aspect.

One of her great political regrets was that the province did not fully ratify the UN convention on the rights of the child. This was an issue she brought forward as a bill in 1993 and continued to ask for throughout her term as an MLA. We have no doubt that this government will wish to leave a legacy for Bettie Hewes as an outstanding contributor to the history of this province. Would it not be great if we could leave her the legacy she repeatedly asked for, if a full, unconditional ratification of the UN convention on the rights of the child could happen?

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Communities in Bloom Town of Millet

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1995 a nonprofit Canadian organization, Communities in Bloom, began a program committed to fostering civic pride, environmental responsibility and beautification through community participation and friendly national competition. Communities are challenged to improve the appearance of their streets, neighbourhoods, and parks through their imaginative use of flowers, plants, and trees with emphasis upon environmental awareness and preservation of heritage and culture.

Interest in this program has been growing, particularly in Alberta, which has more municipalities involved than any other province. Communities in Bloom has had particular appeal in the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency, where almost all communities have entered the competition at one level or another with noticeable results in appearance, community involvement, tourist attraction, and a heightened sense of civic pride and quality of life.

One community in my constituency, the town of Millet, has especially embraced the Communities in Bloom challenge under the leadership of Bernice Knight, who is locally known as Millet's flower lady. Millet first entered this competition in 1996, when it was judged best in Alberta in its population category of 1,000 to 3,000. Since then, Millet's dedicated Communities in Bloom committees have guided the town to numerous awards. In 1997 Millet was again judged best in Alberta. In 1998 it won the award in the best floral category in all of Canada. In 1999 it was judged to have the best landscaped areas in all of Canada, and in international competition in 2000 it was judged to have the best landscaping with historical artifacts. This year Millet was awarded the best in the area of heritage conservation and overall best in Canada in its population category. It's no wonder Millet is known by many as the prettiest little town in Alberta.

To all of the communities in Alberta that have beautified our province this summer through the Communities in Bloom program, I say thanks and congratulations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bettie Hewes

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. Bettie Hewes, former MLA for Edmonton-Gold Bar, served in this legislative Chamber for 11 years. While I did not know Bettie well, I admired her for many reasons. Mrs. Hewes and I shared the same birth province, Ontario, and the same alma mater, the University of Toronto.

I wish now to share my admiration for the life of Bettie Hewes, a woman who was tirelessly involved in activities that improved life in the communities of Edmonton and the province. Over the years, Mrs. Hewes was recognized with many honours. Today I wish to highlight a few. Among them, in 1980 Bettie Hewes received the province of Alberta's achievement award for community service. In 1987 she was deservedly honoured with the YWCA's tribute to women award for public affairs and communication. In 1990 the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation recognized Mrs. Hewes' effective efforts to improve the quality of life in Edmonton with their outstanding service award.

Bettie Hewes was an intelligent and compassionate woman who through her numerous contributions to public life and with the strength of her personality has contributed significantly to the richly textured and strongly woven social fabric of our province.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on a Standing Order 40 application.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Nicol: Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need for public debate and consultation to counteract the speculation that surrounds reform of the health care system in Alberta.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to the urgency of the motion, I think it's obvious that this is our first day of the session, so we couldn't bring it forward before. So we'll start with that as the premise of creating the urgency.

One of the things that has been brought to my attention very much in the last week or 10 days is the fact that there are a lot of, quote, suggestions being made about the direction our health care may take in the future. These suggestions are leading people to basically question what is happening, how much weight they should put on those musings, and whether or not those musings are really preambles or buildups to new legislation. So they're basically asking for clarification. Given that this is, again as I said, our first day, it's a good time for us to clarify that, especially in the context that possibly over the next month, two months, three months we may see a series of public reports being completed and distributed in the public domain, those being the report by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health from Mr. Mazankowski and the report being done federally by Mr. Romanow, and also as we lead up to next spring's budget, dealing with the province's interpretation and application of the public health care system.

So it's my sense today that what we need to do is talk about how all of these things fit together so that as we go into the next few weeks, few months and people start to hear about those reports, start to hear about potential budget changes, they'll be able to interpret them in the context of how those kinds of reports and budgeting activities fit together. So if we don't have that kind of overarching view today, then we won't be able to fully communicate to the constituents the kinds of priorities that are being put on it, the kinds of boundaries that were being put on these kinds of committees that have to deal with providing us with input.

The other issue I'd like to address, Mr. Speaker, is that we have opportunity to question the government in the context of question period, but it doesn't give us the chance to encourage the interactive debate that's necessary for Albertans to fully understand the potential and the impact of the kind of changes that are being rumoured in connection with the health care system. During question period today you constantly reminded us that question period is a time when we question the government on government policy; we don't get into interactive debate.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask now that you find that this is a time when we should set aside a period for some urgent debate on how Albertans can expect to fall together and to bring into perspective all of the things they'll be hearing about in the coming weeks in connection with possible changes in the public health care system and the overall health care system of Alberta in terms of how they relate to each other, how the public system fits with the insured system and the cash system as well.

So those are the reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I truly believe, that I would hope you'd find right now that this is a time when urgency does prevail and a debate on the whole aspect of the future of our health care system would fit in.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: This is a Standing Order 40 application. It has nothing to do with the Speaker. It requires unanimous consent of the Assembly to proceed, so I'll now address the question.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Second Reading

Bill 210

Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise and begin debate on Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001. This bill will help thousands of Albertans continue to maintain their independence, make decisions about their own lives, and have choices in where and how they live. Bill 210 will amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act to allow for a greater tax exemption for individuals who are caring for dependent adults or relatives in their homes.

Specifically, the bill would allow for nonrefundable tax credits equal to the spousal credit of $12,900 for individuals that have dependent adults or relatives living with them. This is a substantial jump in tax credits but necessary to reward and encourage home care. Bill 210's tax credit rewards people who currently care for dependent adults and adds incentive for more people to consider home care as an option in the future.

This bill is another proactive step forward for the short- and long-term benefit of all Albertans. Before the spring 2000 session of this Legislature the maximum level of tax credits was $2,386. However, Bill 18 raised both the caregiver and the dependent tax credit to $3,500. Bill 210 proposes to prepare for the future and offer an even bigger tax credit level for taxpayers considering or already caring for dependent adults. This bill involves not only the Department of Finance, by amending the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, but also the Department of Health and Wellness' goals and visions for Alberta's larger aging population.

There are two excellent reports that touch on the reasons why we need to encourage and reward home care. The reports, Strategic Directions and Future Actions and Healthy Aging: New Directions for Care, share many of the same objectives as Bill 210. This government must ensure that aging Albertans are treated with respect and dignity and create a setting where dependent adults can achieve quality living supported by relatives, friends, and community networks. Bill 210 will lift the pressure off Health and Wellness' initiatives while at the same time keeping communities strong and dynamic. Our constituents will appreciate Bill 210 as the increased tax credits will have a direct, positive effect on home care providers.

Thankfully the fact that our province is rapidly aging is not lost on this government. We have been thinking ahead, analyzing the aging trend, and developing plans to smother the smoldering fires that could be caused from this emerging problem. According to the report Alberta for All Ages: Directions for the Future, by the year 2016 the number of seniors in Alberta will equal half of the population of Calgary. The tricky part of this aging trend is that although these people will not be fully independent, they will continue to be community leaders, volunteers, and essential to the family unit.

One large example of seniors' importance to society is their accomplishments as dedicated volunteers. In 1997 23 percent of seniors were formal volunteers and 64 percent were involved in informal volunteer work. This vital group will grow as the number of seniors increases. I know that everyone in this Assembly can think of several times during the election when seniors worked diligently to help us all get there.

THE SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the speaking time allocated for this particular order of business today has now left us.

3:30

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

507. Mr. Cao moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to ensure that assured income for the severely handicapped recipients transferring to a nonexempt income such as the Canadian pension plan disability program retain medical benefits until similar income limits are reached that disqualify medical benefits to partially exempt income earners under the assured income for the severely handicapped program.

[Debate adjourned May 22: Mr. Cao speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What this motion means is that such an action would generally improve the care of the disabled in Alberta. AISH clients will not seek alternate income streams that would cause them to lose medical benefits. Annual costs for equivalent medical benefits through Alberta Blue Cross and Alberta health care are about $1,170. Individuals earning more than the current AISH nonexempt income threshold of $10,800 receive no subsidy for their health care costs. Given this, individuals would have to be compensated by at least $100 per month to leave the AISH program for other income streams. However, if this motion is passed, the government can expect some AISH clients to leave the AISH income stream for other nonexempt income alternatives outside the provincial government. Additionally, there would be cost savings on the administration and billing by Alberta health care and Alberta Blue Cross, not to mention the probable savings through avoiding the forfeiture of the Alberta health care premium.

The AISH recipients are typically low-income individuals. As this Assembly is aware, many low-income Albertans find it difficult to cover the cost of their health care premiums and must forfeit them anyway. The amount of the premiums forfeited by the government is around $408 per year for every person who does not receive medical benefits and cannot pay for them on their own.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not saying that this change would be costless, but there are many very real possibilities of recouping at least a portion of the expenses. Ultimately, this is a matter of priorities. Are we willing to allow those afflicted with severe disabilities to go without essential medical services? It is important to recognize that for some Albertans extended medical coverage is an urgent concern. For example, individuals who are brittle diabetics or severe epileptics could very well not survive without emergency ambulance service. Although these services would not be deprived based upon the inability to pay, is it fair that we ask them to? Can we honestly expect disadvantaged individuals to be able to pay for those ambulance services from their own pockets, considering the frequency that the service would be required by them?

The target income amount, just over $20,900, for individuals to cover their own medical costs is far more reasonable than the current $10,800 for the nonexempt income earners. By passing Motion 507, we would provide severely disabled Albertans with peace of mind and the recognition that they have a right to extended medical services, for their very survival depends on it.

I strongly urge the members of this Assembly to put the health of severely handicapped Albertans first in supporting Motion 507. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to respond to this motion that's been brought forward. Certainly I believe that this is the kind of motion that we can support in this Assembly. All of us who have done constituency work, a short period for those newly elected and the many years that some of us have been around, understand the problems that occur with people on limited incomes trying to access medical services if their plans that they're on change or if they try to integrate into other available plans such as this member talked about, being the Canada pension plan. A small amount of increase in revenue puts them over the limit for the AISH limits for receiving medical treatment, and clearly they can't access medical treatment.

Now, anyone who thinks reasonably that someone who's living on $855 a month has got the resources to be able to access a private medical insurance plan is dreaming in technicolour, because they don't have the cash flow. They also don't have the cash flow to pay up front for the prescription drugs or the services that they need and get reimbursed later on. The money is just not there. By the time they cover their basic costs of housing and food, lots of months there isn't even enough money left over for bus passes, never mind medical care. So what happens is that they end up going without needed medical care or medicine.

I believe that depriving those people of that ability to access proper medical care truly is a human rights issue and is something that this government needs to be aware of. We have asked repeatedly for this to happen, so we're happy to see this motion come forward. We would hope that at some point the government will take the advice from this private member and incorporate this into a bill that will come forward in the Legislature so that we can see this particular issue addressed.

Particularly, this is going to become increasingly important as we see a tightening up of the fiscal regime in the province. There's going to be less money available for all the people who would want to access such kinds of programs. We may eventually see more delisting of services. We may see user fees come in a health care model in this province in the future. If that's the case, then these people on limited incomes are going to be even more significantly affected, and this government needs to think proactively and in the long term in terms of the kind of impact their decisions are going to have on people on limited incomes. So we would hope that they would consider this.

As the government turns to what we hope will be a wellness model in the future, where people are encouraged to take good care of their health now rather than waiting for problems to occur, and we talk about prevention models being put in place, it's going to be even more important for people on AISH to have access to medical care and to other kinds of services that will help move them into a wellness mode. So, again, now is the time for the government to be considering this kind of a motion.

While they're considering it for AISH, we would like them to consider it for other kinds of models in this province, Mr. Speaker. Repeatedly we have seen problems occur for families or individuals who are on social assistance and who are trying to move back into the workforce. There's a transition period there where they have absolutely zero dollars and resources as they're moving back into the workforce, yet immediately when they get a job, their health care services are cut off. So if the kids get sick or they get sick or they need prescriptions, ambulance services, whatever, suddenly they have no resources to pay for this. It makes the transition back into the workforce even harder for these people, and it is very discouraging for them to do so.

So while the government takes a look at this kind of a proposal from a private member, we would hope that they would expand the view that they're taking here and take a look at some of the other problems that we see occurring on a regular basis, and that would be transition time for those on social assistance moving back into the workforce.

I think that some of the points that this member has made during his debates, now and previously, before we recessed for the summer, are good points, not perhaps entirely the way that we would like to see the model brought forward. One thing that he didn't talk about that we would have wanted to see addressed in debate and perhaps it will be by other members is the exact amount or costs of medical benefits. Is it going to be on a sliding scale? Are we just going to look at 100 percent transition? What kind of a model are they looking at there? So the details haven't really been fleshed out, but being that this is a motion, where we just bring the idea forward for discussion hoping that the government will take advantage of it and will help take care of these vulnerable citizens, we're happy to support it and certainly hope that we see some of the ministers from the government standing up and supporting this, particularly the minister of health. I believe that this is where a great deal of discussion would have to happen around the cabinet table to see this particular idea brought forward and put into legislation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat, leaving lots of room for members of the government to address this particular motion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege, and I'm very happy to speak in favour of Motion 507, put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. It's a great and very timely motion. It speaks to the kinds of motions that we should be considering here in the House. It deals directly with one of the most vital duties of this elected Legislature, and that is to find equitable and compassionate solutions for the challenges facing our most vulnerable citizens. You know, I've often heard it said that you measure the worth of a society not by how the most favourite among us are treated but by how the most disfavoured among us are treated. Really, that's how we should be measuring the worth of our society, in which by any world standard we are all quite privileged.

Mr. Speaker, current policies regarding the assured income for the severely handicapped place unnecessary financial and emotional stress on AISH clients. This stress is being felt by a group of people who already confront extraordinarily difficult challenges on a daily basis relative to other Albertans.

Before I go into detail about why this motion should be supported, it is appropriate to explain exactly what this motion would do. I know that the Member for Calgary-Fort explained it, but because this particular presentation of mine I think will be read by people in my constituency independent of what other people may have said, I'd like to reiterate it just once again.

Now, to be considered severely handicapped in Alberta, a person must be in a physical state that permanently – and that's the key word: permanently – prohibits that person from being able to earn enough to cover even minimal living expenses. Eligible persons apply for funding from both provincial and federal sources. The main source of funding from the federal government is the Canadian pension plan disability section. The main source of funding from the provincial government is the assured income for the severely handicapped, or AISH. So that means that eligible persons are able to apply to the federal government through the Canada pension plan disability provision and to the provincial government through AISH.

Both of the programs have similar standards, but there is a very, very important difference between the two programs. The federal CPP program does not have medical disability, the medical payment component. One big difference in addition to the level of financial assistance provided by the two programs: AISH provides $850 per month for a person with no spouse or dependants who receive no other form of income; the Canada pension plan has a maximum financial assistance level of $932.12 per month. So the Canada pension plan pays $85 or so more per month. So there's an incentive for people to go to the Canada pension plan for their disability benefits, but if they get the Canada pension plan disability benefits, they're not eligible for the medical benefits from Alberta, a catch-22 position if ever there was one.

The support level from the Canada pension plan depends on a variety of factors, including how much one contributed over their working life to the Canada pension plan, if anything. Now, an applicant to AISH must apply for Canada pension plan disability benefits before they can apply for AISH financial benefits and receive nothing at all or receive less than the maximum $850 per month AISH benefit payment. To be clear, if you apply to the Canada pension plan and get less than $850, you would be eligible to get the Alberta medical benefits, but if you applied to the Canada pension plan and got more than $850, if you got $851, you would not be eligible to get the Alberta medical benefits for dental care, for ambulance, the extended medical package.

Another crucial difference is that for people who receive any level of AISH financial benefits, they are also eligible for AISH medical benefits. So that means that if you get AISH benefits at all, if you get one dollar of AISH benefits, you're also eligible for the complete Alberta medical benefit, and that's a very important consideration. These benefits, the Alberta medical benefits, provide payment for medical expenses not already covered by Alberta health care such as prescription drugs, eyeglasses, dental work, and ambulance services. The average AISH benefit recipient uses about $240 per month of these additional benefits. For terminally ill patients, such as some clients with HIV/AIDS, these medical benefits can far exceed the AISH financial benefit, to an amount perhaps as much as $3,000 a month.

The AISH medical benefits are an incredibly important item to those eligible recipients. AISH has been designed with some flexibility so that former AISH recipients may continue to receive medical benefits even if they earn too much money to be eligible for AISH financial benefits. If an AISH recipient receives up to $21,000, they are still eligible for the very important medical coverage. However, if the income is from Canada pension plan disability, they don't get it, and this just doesn't make sense.

Now, to be clear, for every dollar received from the Canada pension plan disability benefits, an AISH client receives $1 less in AISH financial benefits. If a person on AISH receives $849 a month in Canada pension plan payments or if they receive $1 of AISH financial benefits, they are eligible to receive all of the AISH medical benefits. However, if the same person receives just $2 more, or $851, from Canada pension plan, they get zero, none, nada benefits of the medical coverage, which is prescription health, prescription eyeglasses, ambulance, and dental. It just doesn't make sense. So what this motion seeks to do, Mr. Speaker, is to treat all income the same for AISH medical benefit eligibility. Therefore, an eligible AISH recipient will still be eligible to receive medical benefits even though they are not receiving AISH financial benefits.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie alluded to this question: how much is all this going to cost? How many people are involved? As the member said, this being a motion, this is not part of this particular debate at this time. Today there are about 27,000 Albertans who are disabled to the degree that they cannot earn a living wage and are eligible for AISH and Canada pension plan disability benefits. So, Mr. Speaker, imagine how these people feel when they have to deal with the current complications with AISH and CPP benefits. Those that have qualified for either of these programs clearly need the financial support it provides, especially the medical benefits of AISH. Now, imagine those who by some government policy quirk received $851 in Canada pension disability payments and all of a sudden their AISH medical benefits are gone. They're on their own to cover whatever prescription drug costs or ambulance services or dental or anything else that's covered that may arise.

Supporting this motion will cost substantially less than it may first seem. Yes, there will be increased costs because this government would be providing extended medical coverage for many hundreds of severely handicapped people that previously did not receive it. For some clients these will be considerable expenses, especially those terminally ill patients needing large amounts of prescription medications. But consider this: currently there is an incentive for people to stop receiving Canada pension plan disability payments and instead replace them with AISH financial benefits. So, you know, think about it. If the first source of payment is the Canada pension plan payments, but when you hit $851, you're cut off your medical benefits, doesn't it make more sense to go to AISH, the Alberta plan, and get it all and then get the medical payments as well? That way they will continue to receive a similar amount of financial benefit, but they'll also receive the AISH medical benefit.

CPP disability payments are funded by the federal government while AISH financial payments are funded by the Alberta government. People are encouraged to accept money from the Alberta government when they just as easily qualify for income support from the federal government and should get it from the federal government because that is the order of government whose prime and first responsibility is to make those payments. You can see that the province would have an opportunity to save an immense amount of money if clients received more in CPP disability payments, which everyone who has paid into Canada pension plan disability over the years has paid into and should receive, and less AISH financial assistance, and clients would be encouraged to stay with the Canada pension plan disability payment plan if this motion were passed.

Surely the AISH program was not designed to punish those who happen to receive Canada pension plan disability payments. Surely our government and this province can be flexible enough to correct this imbalance, to make the small adjustment necessary so that Alberta's severely handicapped receive the dignity and respect they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister of human resources.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and speak to Motion 507 as it relates to some of the benefits that we provide for some of our Albertans that have experienced difficulties that many of us here in the House today have no experience with, and of course we thank God that we don't have to, but at the same time we have to understand that here in Alberta and as the government of Alberta we do have a responsibility that we will certainly meet in terms of assistance to those Albertans who truly need our assistance.

Now, the earlier speakers have discussed at some length, I think, the issue that we find ourselves in as it relates to any kind of a program when a line is drawn, and of course if people are below that particular line, in this case in terms of income, there are benefits, then, that apply. Of course, whether it's $1, $5, or even 5 cents over that line, then there are some consequences to that. So I think that it's important that motions like this come forward so that they can be discussed in the House and thus, then, provide information to the government as we move forward.

The motion, of course, being debated this afternoon is very timely, Mr. Speaker, because as all Albertans know, we have recently had a group of government MLAs that have gone throughout the province of Alberta listening to the concerns of Albertans as it relates to assistance to Albertans who receive low income. I think that it's only proper that I go on record as the minister responsible that certainly with an AISH payment of $855 a month these AISH people would be classed in the low-income area. So part of the review, then, was to determine what, if anything, should be done in these particular areas.

Now, the motion of course has singled out a particular group, and we have been doing that in Alberta for quite a period of time. We might want to discuss at some point – but it would have to be under other topics, I would guess – this constant pattern that we have of labeling people. So we have assured income for the severely handicapped. I understand and I realize that the so-called AISH program is a program that's supported very well not only around this province but is seen as a leader across Canada. Again, just for the purposes of the discussion this afternoon, you know, we label some people as severely handicapped, and because of that particular label we don't worry, then, so much about the need, but as soon as we apply that particular label, then we start moving benefits into place that provide, then, for that particular grouping.

There are other labels that we use. We have, you know, people who are expected to work, people who are not expected to work. We have assured support for people, and we continue throughout our mandate, as we look at legislation that we're responsible for, and keep coming up with these groups that are labeled. Why can't we just, for at least a second, start to think in terms of Albertans, that we all are citizens of this great province, that we all have needs and we all have wants, and that there's really only a difference in magnitude of those needs and wants, depending, then, on our particular position, whether we've gained a particular position through education that we have in our background, whether we've been very fortunate in terms of our birth, or whether we're just lucky and got dealt a hand by whoever it is that deals out these hands in life that was easier to manage than what some other people have had to deal with? Wouldn't it be nice to be able to just think in terms of all of us as Albertans and recognize that, yes, there are Albertans that will have a specific need and then start to move toward trying to develop a response to that particular need and have them recognized by their name rather than as severely handicapped?

I don't want to take away from the motivation of the Member for Calgary-Fort, who has brought forward this motion. He has shown to me and other ministers his concern for his constituents, his concern for Albertans that are in need. So he is here today with a motion urging the government to ensure, to consider, and to evaluate as to how we might deal with this line in the sand that we've talked about and, when a person goes beyond it, how their medical benefits can be impacted. I encourage that kind of motivation and I encourage that kind of debate, because I think that as we have entered into this new century, maybe it's just time for some new thinking.

Now, I've seen preliminary reports from the low-income review task force, and of course we are waiting for the final submissions from that group both in terms of what it was that they heard and then, coming from that of course, the recommendations that would follow from that. Then it'll be our responsibility as a government to then make a determination as to our response.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the motion is a worthy motion. I would encourage all members in the House to support this motion, as I will be. Again, I want to just add the caveat, if I can, that in supporting it and in urging the government to ensure this kind of a relationship, we take this as one more suggestion that we're receiving inside all of those huge suggestions that Albertans have presented to us in the low-income review and that when it is time to respond, we respond in a cohesive and a coherent manner based on the need of an individual Albertan instead of a collective need of some labeled group.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to speak to Motion 507, which urges our government to continue to extend medical benefits to clients of assured income for the severely handicapped if they have transferred to Canadian pension plan disability or other nonexempt income programs. I firmly believe that assured income for the severely handicapped recipients in our province who choose to transfer to other income support programs should still receive extended medical benefits. I feel it should be considered that these people receive medical benefits until they reach the limit that would disqualify medical benefits under guidelines set out for partially exempt income recipients of AISH, which is what Motion 507 is proposing.

I believe that the AISH program has helped many Albertans continue to be vibrant participants in our families and communities in our province. The program was designed to protect and support the people who need it most, those who are unable to work to support themselves due to a severe disability.

I support Motion 507 because I believe it would make an already great program better. AISH benefits many vulnerable Albertans. The level of benefits a recipient receives is dependent on his or her income. The support program allows these people to gain greater independence in our communities and provides medical coverage for recipients and their families. The benefits that are covered are for prescription drugs, glasses, eye exams, dental work, ambulance services, and diabetic supplies.

Currently there are about 27,000 Albertans who receive AISH support, and of these recipients about 27 percent have a mental illness, 18 percent have developmental disabilities, 7 percent have arthritis, and 2 percent have sensory deprivation. The remainder have severe conditions like cardiovascular disease, diabetes, respiratory ailments, and traumatic brain injury.

For people to qualify for the AISH program, they must match their situation to every necessary requirement. The list is very detailed and requires the recipient to have a disability that is so severe that it substantially limits their ability to earn a living. This disability must be permanent and impossible to remedy through any kind of treatment.

There are several work-related criteria that must be fulfilled in order to qualify for AISH. The disability of the recipient must be the main reason he is out of work, not age, lack of education, or even the lack of available jobs. In order to ensure their unemployability, the recipient must not have refused to take or look for reasonable employment for a reasonable wage.

There are qualifications to ensure that AISH is not given to those who have quit work they were capable of doing, refused or neglected help through training, or would not take rehabilitation and medical treatment to help them attain work.

The present situation also doesn't allow the income of their spouse to exceed the limits defined within the program. To ensure that they are utilizing all the opportunities available to their situations, they must have applied for other income benefits they qualified for, including CPP for disabilities benefits.

By outlining the different requirements of AISH in order to qualify under its targeted program, it was my intention to show that the program is not merely unemployment insurance. The people who are being supported by this program are unable to work because they are permanently and severely disabled. AISH provides income and extended medical benefits to these people. It is for this reason I support Motion 507. I feel it is important to continue to provide medical benefits to these people, regardless of the source of their incomes, because I believe these medical benefits could very well be saving their lives.

AISH recipients must have a condition so severe they are unable to provide for themselves or their families. AISH is not a temporary support system, as programs like workers' compensation and employment insurance are. Mr. Speaker, the people who receive these benefits will have their conditions for the rest of their lives. I feel that it is for this reason they are the ones who need medical assistance the most to overcome discomfort and in many cases to continue to live. Alberta developed the AISH program to assist these people and help them create lives that are more self-sufficient and to provide medical care for their needs. The vast majority of nonexempt income programs, like Canada pension plan disability, do not provide medical benefits.

Mr. Speaker, there are Albertans who no longer receive medical benefits for no reason other than a transfer from one income support program to another. If a person transfers to the CPP disability program, as an example, they will lose not only their AISH income support but the vital medical support they rely on. The current situation leaves this small percentage of transferred clients without medical coverage.

It is my concern there are people who live in our province who are not getting the care they need. Mr. Speaker, I believe we must strive to protect these people because they will be forever dependent upon varying degrees of medical attention in order to continue with their daily lives. Those who leave AISH and are utilizing the options that are available to them and required of them under the AISH program end up being unfairly penalized. Motion 507 would allow previous recipients of AISH who have transferred to CPP disability or employment insurance or workers' compensation or some such program to continue to receive medical benefits from the AISH program.

The AISH program is one of the best and most generous programs of its kind in Canada. I am proud to be a resident of a province who cares for its people and finds it important to improve the lives of all of its residents. I support the AISH program in our province because of how imperative it is to over 25,000 vulnerable Albertans. I am aware that the budget for AISH is projected to increase 18 percent over the next three years, growing from $303.5 million to an estimated $357.1 million. The number of Albertans receiving AISH is expected to increase over 30,000 in the same period. I believe support given by AISH is providing the eligible recipients with fundamental assistance so they can continue to live as part of our communities, not outside or left behind. This income provides people with a tool to remain viable parts of our families. The medical benefits allow some of these people to remain capable of dignified and comfortable lives.

We are fortunate as a province to be able to provide a system of support which truly helps our residents. We have many programs which assist those who need help, and what Motion 507 is suggesting is that we look at adding one further measure to the AISH program. The maximum amount of money a recipient would receive under CPP disability is not substantially different from the maximum received under AISH, though once disqualified dollar for dollar by a nonexempt income program, the recipient no longer qualifies for their medical benefits. Motion 507 suggests that these people should still qualify for medical benefits, regardless of their source of income, until they reach given maximums.

Mr. Speaker, I believe what Motion 507 is urging the government to do is very reasonable. It would continue to provide medical benefits to those who need them the most. No matter who pays their rent, these people still have the same medical conditions and still need to have access to medical treatment which is not provided under nonexempt income programs. I support this motion and urge all my colleagues to do the same because it would allow us to capture those who are disqualified from medical benefits because they have transferred to programs like workers' compensation. I feel it is important to continue to give them the care they need so they can remain vibrant members of our families and communities.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor in the one minute remaining.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just in the minute that's remaining, I would also like to rise and speak in favour of this motion. I think it's an excellent motion, and I was very glad to hear our hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment also speaking in favour of it. I think it's one of these examples of where we have an excellent program in place, but a program can always be fine-tuned and improved, so this is a motion that's certainly urging the government to do that. I've been very pleased with some of the debate that's been going on today, and I would just like to throw my support behind this motion as well.

One of the things that I like about this motion is that it really levels the playing field. Also, it encourages people to look for other sources of extra income. I know that's a big issue right now in my constituency, where we have a lot of small businesses looking for people who can work maybe part-time, and certainly some people who are on AISH have that ability. I just see this as an excellent way to help those who are handicapped to maybe earn a little bit of extra income or perhaps in some way to enhance their quality of life without losing their medical benefits.

So this is a great motion. I was glad to hear my colleague speak in favour of it, and hopefully when the time comes for us to vote on this very shortly, we will be able to pass this motion.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Ready for the question? We might have a few seconds left.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 carried unanimously] 4:10

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully request unanimous consent of the House to deal with Motion 505 at this time.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont has moved that Motion 505 be debated at this time. May we have unanimous consent for this motion?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Just a minute; I haven't said my little piece. Anyway, we only need one person to say no and it's not unanimous, and I think I distinctly heard that.

Delivery of Provincewide Health Services

508. Mrs. Gordon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to prioritize restructuring of the parameters for delivering provincewide services such as renal dialysis and multiple sclerosis special therapy programs to focus more on patient need and outcome with emphasis given to service delivery closer to the patient's principal residence.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good afternoon, fellow members of the Legislature. On this our first afternoon of resumed sitting, it is indeed an honour for me to be here on this very fine fall day and to stand humbly before you to speak passionately to you on an issue that is near and dear to my own heart and of great importance to several of my constituents, constituents who have, unfortunately, severe health problems that require very specialized medical treatment, treatment that is not available in their own respective communities and must be accessed by what I consider unreasonable distances. Please allow me to explain.

As stated, I have cited two examples of services currently administered under what is known as the provincewide services program through the auspices of the Capital regional health authority for northern Alberta and the Calgary regional health authority for southern Alberta. As you can see, these two health authorities have been given broader mandates than their counterparts in the other 15 regional health authorities. Why, you ask. Me too. However, these are the reasons given: to maintain consistency, effectiveness, and cost efficiency. I'm sorry, but I have many users in my constituency who would disagree and want us to reconsider our mandates, the mandates we gave these two regional health authorities, and the criteria their decisions are based upon.

One of my objectives today, if you will join me by voting yes, is to urge the government to redo and rethink this delivery model, to focus the needed changes on patient care and patient wellness outcome to ensure that treatment can be accessed without undue hardship on the patient or his family. Further, as is the case with renal dialysis, the present criteria through the northern Alberta renal program of allowing up to one or one and a half hours traveling time one way should be scrapped, allowing delivery much closer to the patient's principal residence or home community.

This doesn't necessarily mean the need for more dollars. Instead, it could be a reallocation of dollars. It could be as simple as being innovative, doing something differently, thinking outside the box, allowing all our RHAs who need to address these treatments to do so.

Needs will vary from area to area. The Stettler area in east-central Alberta has a high incidence of diabetes, kidney failure, and those that need renal dialysis. Please allow me to tell you about my constituents from the Stettler area, clients of East Central regional health authority. These individuals require on a continual, ongoing basis renal dialysis, or hemodialysis, and are forced by medical need to sometimes travel great distances to where space is available for treatment. Often because needs change, outreach rural satellite units operate at full capacity and have lengthy wait lists. These wait lists often mean years of long-distance commutes for others that can't access them, and due consideration is often given by them and their families to relocating to residences outside of their region so these services can be accessed easier. It's sad, very sad, often sick elderly people having to spend so much of their time, so much of their energy accessing a much-needed medical treatment.

These individuals need our help. I do not want them to have to leave the region, having to move to an unfamiliar, larger urban centre for this lifesaving treatment. I do not think that in today's world we need to ask elderly people to drive up to three hours a day three times a week. Worth mentioning, often these individuals are hooked up to dialysis for up to four hours at a time.

Please allow me to read portions of two letters, one from a concerned dialysis patient and the other from a son of one. Now, unfortunately, this man is deceased. This letter is from Mr. Raymond Schissler, and I've been working with Mr. Schissler for a long time.

You cannot make the politicians or Capital Health believe these treatments don't wipe you out. What is worse is when you have to get into a vehicle afterwards and drive another one to one and a half hours to get home. Traveling is a patient's worst enemy. By the time you get home, you are completely wiped out. Sometimes it takes 24 hours just to get straightened up, and then it is time to get ready for another go-round. I was told that when the cutbacks occurred, no one had to travel over 60 kilometres. Since then, this has changed continuously. Now it's up to one and a half hours one way. Another thing is the number of patients needed to bring a unit to the Stettler area. It started out at four, and now it's five or more.

From Mr. Wayne Heronemus's letter.

I have had discussions with numerous people in Stettler and the surrounding area that need renal dialysis and would very much prefer to have dialysis in Stettler rather than continue to endure one to one and a half hours travel time one way to Hanna and Red Deer. Those currently traveling three times a week to Red Deer and Hanna for dialysis find the drive extremely exhausting and are already compromised due to their medical condition. The day following dialysis these people report they rest in preparation for the next day of marathon travel and dialysis again. There is very little quality of life for these people in what is considered an innovative and progressive health care system.

After lengthy discussions and research I have discovered that the Stettler health centre had a dialysis unit in place until it was closed in 1997. The plumbing required for this unit still remains in place. Over the last little while I have had several discussions with the involvement of physicians and East Central health representatives. I have discovered that there are a number of people in this area who either have to travel to Red Deer or Hanna for dialysis or have completely chosen not to be treated at all because of the inconvenience, which bothers me greatly.

In addition, my father's specialist, Dr. Jim Kym of Red Deer, reports that the need for renal dialysis is increasing by 8 to 9 percent annually because of an aging population and increased episodes of diabetes.

So there are portions of just two of several, several letters I have received from constituents. I have spent considerable time and energy working on this problem, and I have promised many that I would bring their concerns forward in some such manner.

There is a solution for the Stettler area, one that is endorsed and supported by the East Central regional health authority. However, they do not have the mandate to address it. This is what needs to change. Those closest to the problem should be the ones working through the solutions, not a group of individuals from Edmonton, people who do not know the individuals involved nor the severity of their medical conditions. However, I will not find fault with the Capital health region. I have spent considerable time on the telephone and sitting down discussing this with them, and I thank them for their co-operation. We do, though, need to address this for many areas outside of Edmonton and Calgary.

According to the East Central regional health authority, re-establishment of the dialysis unit as a satellite unit is possible at the Stettler health centre. It would be a relatively simple process since the space is already dedicated and the appropriate water system is easily accessed. They have all of the requirements for a unit, such as space, emergency backup, lab services on site, and could provide for basics such as food and parking. They tell me that all the other services required for such a unit would be available as well. There is the nursing care that is needed. The registered night nurse, the licensed practical nurse, would be available, and at this time there are definitely a number of patients from the Stettler area, some from Coronation, Castor, Donalda, and Kelsey that would utilize the treatment.

It is my understanding that one of the requirements for a satellite unit, besides the need for funding, is a minimum number of four patients. I do know that of course this varies from time to time, but it certainly is my understanding that the need is there in Stettler and surrounding areas.

Something that has come to my attention recently – and this is when I talk about being innovative and thinking outside the box. The community of Stettler has a health foundation, and a great deal of money has been bequeathed or donated over time to this health foundation. The community has said that if in fact they can have a renal dialysis unit in Stettler, they will ensure that several, several thousand dollars from that health foundation would go to the full-time operation of this unit. So this is what I'm saying, Members of the Legislative Assembly. It is now time to think beyond the box, to look at some of these problems and come to terms with some innovative solutions. The community wants this to happen, and as their MLA I'm asking you by means of this motion to support me as I support them.

Another thing that I'm pleased to report is that Dr. Jim Kym, who is a specialist currently practising in Red Deer, has agreed to offer full consulting services to all the patients that would access such a unit. He would travel to Stettler on a regular basis to oversee the function of this dialysis program.

If Stettler is not chosen as a site, possibly a location that would be more central to this region could be considered, and as such I'm saying that I believe that the decision for this should rest with the health authority that is closest to the area and not under the auspices of the Capital regional health authority. East Central regional health authority, as other health authorities in the province, knows the local needs of the local people. Because a renal dialysis unit might be needed in this part of Alberta doesn't necessarily mean it would be needed in other areas.

So I'm asking that we consider this. Region 7, the people of region 7, the members on the East Central regional health board are asking us to rethink this, to look at what is needed within their region. They want to be reasonable about it. They will look for innovative ways to fund this unit. They will ask the community for help. The community has said that they will give it.

In speaking to the multiple sclerosis special therapy program, right now in Alberta, several things. If you have MS, you must access, again, the services through the provincewide services program. Part of the province must go to Edmonton, the other part to Calgary. This can be very hard to access in a timely manner. As we are all aware, in Alberta MS is more prevalent in some areas than others, and I do think this is something that I would like to see and others would like to see: where MS programs can be looked at by the various regional health authorities to do with their clientele and the need in their area.

Right now when you go to a neurologist and he decides that he will put you on one of these new interferon drugs, you must make an appointment with an MS nurse. This has to be done either through Edmonton, at the University of Alberta under Dr. Warren's office, or Calgary, at the Foothills hospital. When you start these drugs, they are in needle form, and often for someone that isn't used to this type of medication or administering it, there are a number of questions, and certainly some help is usually welcomed. It is too far a distance for someone from central Alberta to make the trek to Edmonton or to walk and get information in a timely manner. My neurologist in Red Deer, Dr. Scott Wilson, who is a tremendous doctor, is advocating very strongly for a multiple sclerosis special therapy program to be part of the David Thompson regional health authority. I'm with him on this, and again I ask for your indulgence and your support.

Certainly I recognize that the bigger centres, Calgary and Edmonton through the Capital regional health authority, do have a mandate to provide many, many things that the rest of Alberta could not supply and could not look after with the dollars in a cost-effective manner. However, some of these other programs, with the help of community, with the help of individuals who need these programs delivered closer to them, I think can be done efficiently and certainly with cost-effectiveness. I have talked to many of these individuals from the Stettler area after they have spent a week traveling back and forth and spent the time on the dialysis machine, and I think: are we really helping these people, or are we hindering them?

They tell me that the incidence of diabetes . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 21
Electronic Transactions Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure this afternoon to move second reading and to begin debate on Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act.

Mr. Speaker, years ago when Alberta's laws were developed, the idea of communicating electronically had never really crossed our minds. Consequently, we have hundreds of statutes in Alberta that make no allowance for electronic communications. New opportunities for communication are rapidly increasing throughout the world, and our legislation must adapt to reflect these changes. As a government we recognize these opportunities. Therefore, over the last few years we have focused on creating an environment where the information and communications technology industry can thrive in our province. The Electronic Transactions Act is one more step in that direction.

In today's world of high-speed access to the Internet and electronic business, allowing only paper-based transactions is no longer practical. As a result, the objective of the Electronic Transactions Act is to give electronic communications the same legal status as their paper counterparts with one key principle, and that is, both parties must consent to handling their business transactions electronically.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, for us to understand that this legislation does not force people to use electronic communications nor does it eliminate paper transactions. It simply provides businesses, the government, and Albertans with the opportunity to communicate electronically, and it will still allow for current methods of interaction with government, public organizations, or the business sector.

The evolution of electronic commerce legislation dates back to 1996, when the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law developed a model law on electronic commerce. Based on this model law, the Uniform Law Conference of Canada then approved the Uniform Electronic Commerce Act. Mr. Speaker, the Uniform Law Conference of Canada is an organization that encourages harmonization of Canadian laws through preparation of uniform statutes. Once the statutes have been approved, they are then recommended to provinces, territories, and in some cases to the federal government for enactment. In Alberta we have based the legislation before this House on the Uniform Electronic Commerce Act. While Bill 21 was being developed, we also reviewed similar legislation passed by other jurisdictions. In Canada all jurisdictions – with the exception of Newfoundland, Northwest Territories, Nunavut, and Alberta – have passed legislation based on this model law.

At the federal level, Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada passed the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act in April 2000. Part 2 of the federal statute deals with electronic transactions at the federal level. It sets out requirements to allow the use of electronic technology where under federal law the use of paper has been required in the past to ensure legal status. The difference between the federal legislation and Alberta's Bill 21 is that Bill 21 affects provincial laws that require information to be signed or in writing to be legally valid, and the federal legislation applies specifically to federal laws with the same requirements.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other issue that I would like to address before I begin talking about some of the more specific aspects of Bill 21, and that is the matter of consumer protection. The Electronic Transactions Act does not deal directly with issues surrounding consumer protection. In Alberta these matters are addressed in the Fair Trading Act, which is under the responsibility of the Ministry of Government Services. Under the Fair Trading Act a regulation has been developed by Government Services called the Internet sales contract regulation, which came into force just this past October. Bill 21 and the Internet sales contract regulation complement each other. The Electronic Transactions Act will provide the legal validity for electronic transactions, and the new regulation deals with protecting consumers when they make transactions over the Internet.

I've talked about the objectives of Bill 21 and some important principles such as the consent provision and the legal validity that would be applied to electronic transactions with the passing of Bill 21. I would now like to talk about a number of particular features of Bill 21. The first feature is that the legislation will apply to both the public and private sectors. There are, however, specific provisions that apply only to the public sector. The reason for these specific provisions is that permission to use electronic communications may expose government to an overwhelming number of requests from the public to use a variety of formats. Therefore, the consent provision allows the government to expressly agree to interact electronically only when prepared to do so. The public sector will also be able to retain and use information in electronic form provided that consent is obtained from the parties involved. However, the public sector will be required by law to follow specific requirements regarding the retention of such records. The same applies to the private sector with the exception being that their records retention requirements are and will continue to be based on the guidelines established by the industry. In either case, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to reiterate that a person's consent is required before information can be exchanged electronically.

Another feature of Bill 21 worth noting, Mr. Speaker, is that it requires the Minister of Finance to specify the electronic form of both incoming and outgoing payments for departments and branches or offices of the government of Alberta. The usual rules about authority and record-keeping will continue to apply to such payments.

Bill 21 also specifies that the public sector will determine the information technology standards that they will accept for electronic communications. Toward that end, Mr. Speaker, the office of the chief information officer is leading a cross-government initiative to implement corporate IT standards for government departments.

Given these steps, one can see that the legislation before us today reflects a corporate approach to government IT standard setting rather than individual departments setting their own standards. It is recognized that government agencies, boards, and commissions have close relationships with government departments. Therefore, the chief information officer for the government of Alberta, at the request of the minister responsible for this act, will set the IT standards for these organizations. Local public bodies such as municipalities, learning and health jurisdictions will have the ability to designate their own IT standards based on the fact that they operate at an arm's-length relationship from government. However, we expect all standards to complement one another and ensure that both public- and private-sector organizations can interact effectively in the electronic environment.

Another feature of Bill 21, Mr. Speaker, is a section that deals with exceptions to the act. The reason for this is that some records and transactions will require more detailed rules than this legislation will provide. If at some time in the future it is feasible and acceptable to handle transactions such as wills and personal directives in an electronic form, specific legislative requirements can be developed and implemented at that time, but as it currently stands, these types of transactions cannot be done electronically.

Mr. Speaker, another important provision of this bill is that it does not supercede the operation of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the Health Information Act, or any other law that is intended to protect the confidentiality of information or the privacy of individuals.

Bill 21 also allows contracts to be formed electronically, giving them the same legal status as paper contracts. In addition, the Electronic Transactions Act states that where there is a legal requirement for a record to be signed, that requirement is satisfied by an electronic signature. The bill does not attempt to determine what a signature is and is neutral on that point. It does, however, allow the chief information officer to designate the electronic signature standards to be used by government departments, agencies, boards, and commissions.

Part of the process in determining the standards for signatures will be recognizing that certain types of transactions may require higher degrees of reliability. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this requirement for different levels of security and reliability exists in our paper world too. As an example, in some cases we may simply send a letter through the mail, but there may be other occasions where we must send a letter by registered mail because we require the recipient to sign for the letter, acknowledging receipt of the correspondence. As a result, security and reliability requirements will also be considered when dealing with the setting of standards for electronic signatures.

Mr. Speaker, carriage of goods is another area that is addressed in this legislation. Goods frequently cross international boundaries; thus harmonization of the law across borders is encouraged. As a result, Bill 21 provides for an electronic equivalent to paper for certain shipping documents, such as a bill of lading.

Mr. Speaker, one of the last sections of the bill includes companion amendments to the Alberta Evidence Act. These amendments are included within this legislation to allow for acceptance of electronic evidence in a court of law.

There's one more subject that I'd like to touch on before I conclude my remarks. Members of this House may recall that when Bill 21 was introduced in May of this year, I indicated that a discussion paper was being circulated to Albertans to obtain their feedback on this legislation. The discussion paper was sent out to approximately 800 individuals and organizations by regular mail and, of course, electronic mail. It was also made available on the Alberta Innovation and Science web site. Stakeholders who received a copy of the paper ranged from the construction, banking, agricultural, and coal industries to municipalities and aboriginal organizations. The comments were supportive of the principles of Bill 21, and they encouraged us to proceed with passage of this legislation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we received no negative feedback.

I do want to recognize in this House today that the consultation process was beneficial to us in developing the legislation. It gave us an opportunity to hear from Albertans and to answer questions they had about the legislation. Mr. Speaker, I believe we have recognized that electronic commerce is changing the way we do our business and the way we get our work done. We are recognizing that our laws need to evolve to reflect the growing use of electronic transactions in many aspects of both public- and private-sector businesses. In fact, over the course of the past year we have received numerous letters from organizations from around this province and from various industries encouraging the Alberta government to enact legislation such as the bill before us today. Many of the responses to the discussion paper echoed these sentiments.

The government of Alberta is committed to enhancing electronic transactions and the growth of Alberta's information and communications technology industry. The Electronic Transactions Act will help promote people's confidence in e-business. People need to have confidence in the validity of their electronic transactions. If passed, Mr. Speaker, the Electronic Transactions Act will make it clear that electronic contracts, records, and signatures can have the same legal force and effect as contracts, records, and signatures on paper. I think it is important to recognize that when some people think about doing business on-line, they may have a concern about the security of the information they are sharing. Because of this concern it is very important for the public and private sectors to always ensure that the appropriate security measures are in place before proceeding into the realm of electronic communication.

I do think that at this relatively early stage of electronic communication, regardless of the security measures taken, there will be people who may still be uncomfortable conducting their business electronically, and that is why I want to stress again, Mr. Speaker, that this bill does not force people to communicate electronically. It simply offers those using electronic transactions the assurance that the transactions are legally binding.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is really about ensuring that Alberta can continue to conduct electronic business on a level playing field with the rest of Canada. It is not intended to take away services that people are comfortable with. Instead, it will provide an alternative to receiving information and doing business. It is one of the components that will help us build the foundation to provide electronic services to Albertans. There are many more steps for us to take, but with this legislation we are making a very good start.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I encourage members of this Assembly to provide their support for Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to speak to Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act. This is a bill that we can support. We would expect to see speedy passage through the Legislature, and the gallery is very happy with that. Certainly this is a bill that's probably overdue in terms of seeing it come through the Legislature. [interjections] It's true. It is overdue. How many people in this Assembly and throughout the province have renewed their insurance or their mortgages through an electronic signature either by fax or by e-mail? How many things have we bought by clicking on the button on the computer? So it's good that the government brings in the legislation that will bring them up to date with what happens to be current business practices for many organizations.

I think this is also an example of where the government's consultation process really did work. They listened – they actually listened – and adjusted and rephrased some of the information that they had put forward given the kind of feedback they had from the people they talked to. If they could take that model and apply it to all of the other consultation processes they have, I think that would be excellent. So good work to the sponsor of this bill in terms of that.

We hope to see the model working a little more effectively in some other areas. Maybe education and health care would be great places to start. [interjection] It's true. You have the consultations. You bring in all the information, and what comes out the other end often doesn't look like what went in at the beginning. Am I wrong? But in this case, it did, and it worked very effectively. I think there's something to be learned from these new guys, Mr. Minister. So I'm happy to see that this process went so smoothly and that we saw it in the Legislature and that it's moving forward.

I think the member who sponsored the bill made very good arguments in terms of the reasons why this legislation is needed. I certainly agree with what he said. I would like to point out a couple of areas that I have some questions on, and I hope that when we get to committee, we can see them being addressed.

The first one is in section 8, where it talks about how consent must be given by a person to provide or accept information in electronic form. No problem with that. It's the next part that I have a problem with. Consent "may be inferred from a person's conduct if there are reasonable grounds to believe that the consent is genuine." That leaves a lot open to interpretation. Not only am I faxing off my signature apparently, but there may be other ways that consent is implied. So if we could just get some further definitions on that as we get further in the debate on this bill, I think that would make me and many other people happy. I'm sure there's got to be a broader definition of exactly what that means and entails that we're going to hear about, and I certainly look forward to that.

My other area of concern is on section 29, where it talks about an electronic transaction having no legal effect if a material error is made and the electronic agent gives no opportunity for correction. Two potential problems there. One is the material error: exactly what does that mean, and how open to interpretation is it going to be? Are we going to have to make use of lawyers if we believe there is a material error? So some parameters, some kind of a framework that we're working within there would be helpful. If the member could explain just what the intent was there. The electronic agent gives no opportunity for correction: once again we need a more detailed definition of exactly what that entails. I didn't hear one in his opening comments, so I would expect that we can see that at some time in the near future as this bill moves through the Legislature.

I'm happy to see the exceptions, Mr. Speaker, that they have outlined in this bill. I think it is very reasonable to expect that there are some original legal documents that won't be subject to this kind of an electronic transfer, because there's such a great potential for misunderstanding or misinformation when you talk about wills or trusts or powers of attorney or documents that transfer interests in lands and registrations, even original mortgages. I think if you're renewing, there's reasonable expectation that an electronic transfer could adequately meet the needs of all parties, but an original document, I still believe, should be a face-to-face kind of transaction.

So with those few questions I think that essentially limits all we have to say on this particular bill at this time. If someone from the government could get up in the next stage of the reading, Mr. Speaker, and address this, then I think we'll be happy to pass this through the readings quite quickly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert to close debate.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have nothing further.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 18 Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001, which is before us today for second reading. This act amends the Health Professions Act, which received royal assent in 1999.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Now, it does seem unusual to amend an act that has not yet been proclaimed, but the Health Professions Act is an unusual piece of legislation in that it comes into force for each of the 30 professions it covers as we put regulations in place. While we worked on developing regulations, the professional colleges identified areas for further clarification. We discussed the solutions with the professions involved, circulated the proposed amendments for their review, and the result of that consultation is the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001.

As a result of some questions from professions over the summer, I've chosen to bring House amendments to this bill to the Legislature. This legislation will further protect the confidentiality of competency information. It clarifies options the director can use to deal with complaints and provides detail on what costs may be recovered from disciplinary hearings. It clarifies how professional colleges approve education programs for the purposes of registration and further defines the process for canceling registration and practice permits, and it clarifies wording on how students may identify themselves. This act also grants the Alberta Dental Association and college the authority to accredit dental surgical facilities. Alberta's dentists welcome this support of their profession's autonomy. Currently the College of Physicians and Surgeons accredits dental surgery facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the Health Professions Act gives Alberta's health professions the tools that they need to respond to changing needs in a transparent way. The amendment act clarifies some of the details to support the intention of that legislation, and I ask members of the Assembly for their support in second reading.

Thank you.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will keep my comments, as always, brief. Our position on this is that we will also support this bill. We did take the time – and we appreciated the time that was allowed by holding up this bill – to consult with a number of stakeholders including the AARN, the Health Sciences Association, the United Nurses, the College of Licensed Practical Nurses, and the federation of health professions. We did hear some concern that there may not be enough resources in the system available for all disciplinary hearings, but in the end, in my judgment, it wasn't a vociferous enough concern to stand in the way of this legislation, so we will be supporting it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to close the debate.

MR. MAR: I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview for his constructive comments and thank him for his support as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the manner in which we've conducted business this afternoon and given that we had indicated earlier that we'd be moving to committee on Bill 16 this evening and there may be people who want to hold to that, I would ask that we call it 5:30.

THE SPEAKER: Would I take it as well, Mr. Government House Leader, that you're including in the motion that when the Assembly reconvenes at 8 o'clock, it is in committee?

MR. HANCOCK: Yes.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:53 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 13, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/11/13

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 16 School Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments or questions to be offered? The last time we dealt with this issue, we were dealing with amendment A1. The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We've had extensive discussion on amendment A1. As a matter of fact, we've had 84 minutes on second reading and 255 minutes in committee on amendment A1. I would like to suggest to the Assembly that we go ahead and vote on this amendment as there will be another amendment that will come forward immediately afterwards. It will be circulated to the respective members, and I can comment on that amendment as soon as the first one is voted on. I understand that we cannot put another amendment on the floor until this one is voted on.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would propose government amendment 2, which I understand is being circulated to everyone now.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We shall refer to this as amendment A2. The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to move amendment A2, that is before you, and if I may go through it section by section here now, the first section is something that has been agreed to by all of the bishops as well as the Francophone school boards as well as the Catholic school boards. Quite briefly, it adds section 2 to the preamble, which says that "such that the principles of Francophone educational governance are distinct from, not transferable to nor a precedent for, the English educational system," adding that after "in the Region" in the preamble. This is something that has been agreed to by the aforementioned parties over the summer.

The section B that you have here is what has been labeled the so-called choice amendments, and these have been struck out. Mr. Chairman, it was questionable, in all fairness, as to whether or not these were constitutionally correct. The Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, pending the nonpassing of this bill in the spring, has stated that they would not agree to it, and given the questionable constitutionality of these, they have been struck out.

Mr. Chairman, the next section is section C, which adds, "In this Division, 'Region' means a Separate School Region," and a separate school region will be an area of land that has been agreed to by the Catholic school boards in a way that they can expand their boundaries.

Mr. Chairman, section C(b) adds: "provide for services by a separate school board in a Separate School Region." What this means is that when a separate school region is so proclaimed, the separate school board that is within that separate school region shall provide the services.

The next one, which is section 208.03, basically states that the minister may make regulations regarding "the consultation process that must be followed in respect of the establishment of a new separate school district."

The following one is section 208.03(b), which allows for a dispute resolution mechanism.

Mr. Chairman, the changes that have been made on the 4 by 4s that were added to this act have been quite literally put down to a regulation-making power on the consultation process, and I will mention that very briefly. I know that we cannot have any regulations until the bill is passed, but the draft regulations that we have proposed state that a consultation process must occur if a 4 by 4 process is going forward. The other thing that the consultation process must show is that there is consultation with both the public electorate as well as the Catholic electorate, and this is something completely new. I feel that it will solve a lot of the issues that have occurred with 4 by 4 formations in the past.

Also included in the regulations, which have been circulated to the opposition as well as to the numerous parties that have been involved, is the idea that if a public school board and a separate school board agree on the extension of the boundaries – and I will repeat that: if they agree on the extension of the boundaries – then under section 210 of the act the minister has the ability to expand the Catholic separate school boundaries. If the public school board does not agree, then it will fall back to the 4 by 4 process that is existing already. What I have also given the indication of is that we can roll up the 4 by 4s, which is within the existing act, to ensure that there is one vote, in essence, all at once. So there are two ways that the Catholic boards can be expanded.

Section D is section 30, which has been struck out.

Section E basically states that "a separate school elector who has a child enrolled in a public school in the Greater Southern Francophone Region No. 4 may vote for a candidate who is standing for election as a public school member," basically giving the ability to an elector who has a child enrolled in the Francophone school system to vote for that candidate.

Section F is simply that 38(2) is struck out.

Mr. Chairman, from what I understand in talking to the various players that are involved in this, the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association is strongly behind this. As late as today I have heard that the Public School Boards' Association is behind this as well, seeing that it has been explained to them. I have not received that in a formal written way from the public school board, but in our conversations that were held this morning and subsequent conversations that were held with the Government House Leader later on this afternoon, I understand that they are in favour.

Although this is a change from the original bill, I believe that it potentially gives a solution to the 4 by 4 issue. Many members here who have had 4 by 4s occur in their constituencies know the vast amount of problems that can involve, and many of you have come to me and asked for a solution. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, in my own constituency Brooks and Strathmore have both had 4 by 4 votes, and they have been very difficult to handle from a community point of view. I truly believe that this will lead to a better resolution of these issues and will lead to a resolution of these issues that will not result in the devastating rifts that are occurring in our communities.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other thing that really must be said here, and that is: what happens if nothing is done tonight? Quite frankly, what will happen is that the existing 4 by 4 process will continue. We can put our heads in the sand and say that the community down the road will not have a 4 by 4 process put on, but as many of you have seen in the letters that I've sent you, we are now up to roughly 170 4 by 4 processes, 4 by 4 formation votes that have occurred in the last three years. These formation votes are hugely disruptive to communities, and anything that we can do to solve this will certainly be seen as advantageous to our communities.

We have the choice tonight. We can put our heads in the sand and hope that these things don't occur, hope that there will not be any 4 by 4 votes in the Forestburgs of the world, in the Heislars of the world, and in the Dayslands of the world, but that could happen tomorrow. Those that are public school supporters, those that are public members and non-Catholics within these small communities will have absolutely no choice. They will have absolutely no consultation. Indeed they may wake up the next morning and find that there has been a Catholic school district formed in their small community. Is this a reality? The answer is yes; this is a distinct reality. As I said, there have been close to 170 of these occur in the last three years. Many of these are by votes of 4 to 0, 5 to 0, 10 to 0, 11 to 0, and it causes a great amount of rift within the communities.

Is this the absolute perfect way to solve a potentially bad issue? The answer is probably not, but this is a way that we have negotiated, that we have talked about over the last three or four months, and I feel that it is a successful way to solve this issue. The one thing that we absolutely cannot do is put our heads in the sand and say that this issue will go away, because it will not go away. It will come back to haunt us. It will come back to cause divisive problems in our communities, and the answer will not be there. This does give an answer.

Is it the answer we want? Potentially we could get a better answer, but I do feel that this is the best way to go, and with the agreement of the boards involved, it is a very viable option to put forward and will indeed help those formation votes, help the communities that otherwise would have huge rifts in them, as we have seen in the community of Brooks, as we have seen in the community of Innisfail, as we have seen in the communities of Strathmore and Canmore as well.

So, Mr. Chairman, I've said my piece on this. I feel that this amendment is extremely important and must go ahead. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly visitors in the public gallery: M. Pierre Desroches and his daughter, I believe – M. Desroches is the chairperson of the north-central Francophone board – and also trustee Irene Harvey and her husband, Ron Harvey. Mrs. Harvey is a trustee in the St. Albert Protestant school division. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you three individuals that are in the public gallery. One is Gail Horner. She is the chair of Sturgeon school division. Terese Gervais, a board member and also past chair of the Sturgeon school division, is with her husband, Dave Gervais. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted with what I heard from the minister, and I would seek some clarification from him and from the Government House Leader, who, I understand from what the minister said, have been in consultation with the Public School Boards' Association over the amendments. Are the objections to these amendments that the public school board members have put forward no longer considered valid by that group, and do they in fact concur with the amendments that we see in front of us? Could I have that reconfirmed and ask the Government House Leader if that's his understanding too, that those objections have been withdrawn?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. What has happened today is that my deputy minister had a discussion with the Public School Boards' Association, and subsequently the Government House Leader had a conversation with the executive director of the Public School Boards' Association. I would seek the assurance from the hon. member across the way that with these new events, and I do say these are new events – I would be more than willing to discuss this tomorrow after the hon. member has had a chance to confirm this, and we could talk about the bill again tomorrow.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has asked for my concurrence with what the minister has said. I have to say that it might be a little strong to suggest that the Public School Boards' Association has endorsed the amendments. What I had referenced to the minister was that I had a very positive telephone conversation with the executive director and that he'd indicated to me that the meeting he'd had with the deputy minister this morning was very positive and that he felt there were two further amendments that might be useful to have and was talking to members of his association with respect to that but that generally he believed that this was going in the right direction and would solve the problem. So it might be a little strong to say that he was endorsing the amendments. I couldn't put that in his mouth.

What I'd related to the minister was a very positive conversation about the direction that was happening and an agreement that with perhaps one more amendment, which he was discussing and hoped to raise with the ACSTA, he thought we were perhaps going in the right direction. I hope that clarifies.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister and to the Government House Leader. Nothing would make the opposition happier than having an agreement that the amendments before the House are fully endorsed by all of the interest groups, in particular the ACSTA and the Public School Boards' Association, who make up the vast majority of boards in the province. It has been something that the ASBA has struggled with and has been unable to do. If it is indeed true that we are very close to the agreement of both of those groups, then I think there's no doubt that the government will have the enthusiastic support of the opposition.

I would take the minister up on his offer then. As I understand the offer, the amendments would not be passed this evening. They would be brought back again tomorrow. That would give us an opportunity to discuss them this evening and to hear further in terms of any projected amendments tomorrow. Could I have that confirmed?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That's exactly what I will confirm tonight. I understand that both the opposition leader and the hon. critic for Learning will be meeting with the ACSTA tomorrow, so I believe it would be advisable to continue this discussion tomorrow after these meetings have taken place, and I look forward to hopefully the passing of this bill tomorrow.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Chairman, I'm very pleased to hear what I've heard from the minister and from the Government House Leader. I am indeed meeting with the ACSTA representatives tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. I have also received a request to meet with some representatives of the Public School Boards' Association. That meeting is scheduled for the day after tomorrow. What I'll do is look into the possibility of following up my meeting with the ACSTA with a meeting with the public school board people tomorrow, if I can, to make sure that there's no unnecessary delay in getting this House to conclude the debate on the issues under discussion. So I'm pleased, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has taken this initiative and that he has sought to bridge the gap between various parties, that had lots at stake, I understand, with the proposed amendments. So I'll look forward to the meeting tomorrow, and then we'll come back to it.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister's willingness to wait until we've had a chance to consult with those groups. It's a courtesy that I really do appreciate.

I do have some questions about the consultation process and how it proceeded. The fact that one of the groups seems to have been deeply involved in the forming of the amendments, or privy to the amendments, and other groups were left out: I'm not quite sure that I understand why that happened. I know that there has been some animosity and some objections to the amendments from the Public School Boards' Association, but I think the kinds of concerns that were being raised were not raised exclusively by that association.

One of the very difficult things that the government faced in trying to come up with amendments was balancing the Catholic boards' desire, an understandable desire, to promote and to expand and to make available to separate school supporters a Catholic education, to expand that across the province. That had to be balanced against a concern particularly in rural communities that many of their schools would no longer be viable if those schools were split, and it's not clear to me how the amendments are going to do anything to relieve that. In some rural settings, if the very small schools that already exist there are further split, then the school is no longer going to be viable. Some of those communities have argued very strongly that if they lose the school, they lose their community. So I'm not sure how the amendments will deal with those objections and prevent that from happening. Of course, it was one of the difficulties with Bill 16. I think that's a really important point and one that we would like to have clarified before we proceed.

The whole business of choice seems to have been such a strongly endorsed principle by the government. I think that they have rightly backed the number of school districts who have made available wide choices for parents and students and have encouraged that. They've encouraged choice by the open boundary policies that they've endorsed. I think that that's a good, sound way for the government to proceed, and I endorse that. What it seems that the amendments are going to do is that they are going to strike out at least for Catholic residents that whole notion of choice. I understand from the minister that the Catholic trustees association endorses the amendments, so obviously they've come to grips with that problem, but I would for my own part like some further explanation. What does it mean in terms of the government's endorsement of the principle of choice?

I would like to make a couple of other comments, if I might, Mr. Chairman, about the legislation. One of the difficulties that we've run into in terms of trying to get feedback about the legislation is the way it's been drafted and proposed. We originally started with the School Act. Following the School Act, we had Bill 16 introduced, which amended the School Act. Then in May we had amendments to Bill 16. Now in November we again have amendments to the bill that affect the act. What's happening, it seems to me, is that we are making the legislation very, very obscure to the general public and interested ratepayers. It's getting very, very difficult, I think, for someone who is generally interested in the changes to the School Act to follow the changes and what those changes mean to them and to the interests that they represent. I guess if I have any concern about haste, it's that this is becoming very complex in terms of reading and understanding.

It takes me back to one of the promises made by this government. I'm not sure if it was the Premier, but I know that the government, campaigning in the 1992-1993 time period, made strong arguments at that time for plain-language legislation. I think it might be a good time for the government to come back and look at that principle and the notion of making sure that an act, an important act like the School Act, and amendments to it are accessible to everyone without a legal background.

I was looking at some of the advocates for plain-language legislation. One of the authors described a legal writing as four centuries of inflation and obscurity. I think this may be reflected in what we have before us. It's often overblown, it's often swaddled in obscurity I think were the words used to describe a legal writing. The author was even more critical and went on to say that it was the largest body of poorly written literature ever created by the human race. I would hate to think that in our province we're making a contribution to that body of poorly written literature through this kind of legislation.

I know it's not going to be possible with these amendments, given where we are, but I would make a plea in future changes for the notion of trying to make it more public, more easily understood to individuals. I think of the newly elected trustees in the province who are just taking their places on school boards picking up the act, Bill 16, and the amendments and the further amendments to the act and trying to work their way through it. Some of them must wonder exactly what they got themselves elected to do, because I don't think it's an easy task. But that, Mr. Chairman, is an aside.

I think that's all I'll say for now. I have some further comments about waiting for the regulations. I know that the minister is caught. You have to have the legislation before you can put out the regulations that are going to flow from that legislation, but in this case the regulations are going to be so very, very, important to the interested parties that I think there can be some argument made that if you can't put out the regulations, you might at least put out a draft copy of the regulations so the people can understand really what's going to happen.

I think it's particularly important how disputes between school jurisdictions are going to be mediated and the kind of process that the minister and the department will follow when such disputes arise. I think that without a pretty firm indication of how those disputes are going to be resolved, it's going to be hard to fully endorse the legislation. That may be a premature judgment, Mr. Chairman. If there's going to be another amendment introduced tomorrow, that may cover some of it, but right at this particular point I'm nervous about the promise that the regulations will cover a lot of what the legislation has in mind. It's not that I don't have great faith in the current minister of education to do as he's said, but as we know, there will be subsequent ministers of education and there will be subsequent school boards and subsequent people involved in the associations who have been privy to the negotiations on these amendments, and their understanding may not always be what we have today. So I would really strongly urge some form of the regulations being offered by the government for those of us that are involved in the amendments, that those regulations be made public.

I have a few other things to say, Mr. Chairman, but I'll reserve them for later. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will respond to some of the questions that just have been raised.

First of all, I will echo what the hon. member has said about plain language legislation, but I will add that when you're involved with legal counsel and the legalities of some of the legislation, it is extremely difficult to put it in plain language. I will certainly take that criticism and agree with it when it comes to plain language legislation.

The second thing I wanted to comment on was the regulations. Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, I cannot put forward regulations until the bill has been passed. I will, however, make available tomorrow morning to both the hon. leader of the third party and the hon. member the draft regulations that will go with this legislation. They will be sent to your office tomorrow morning.

The next thing was about the various amendments to Bill 16. Mr. Chairman, anytime you attempt to change something that has been in the Constitution for very close to a hundred years – I believe it was the Alberta Act, so it may have even been before the Constitution – there can be certain things that have problems. What we found is that over the summer some positions of some of the affected parties had changed. Subsequently we had to change the legislation, and that is the reason why we have brought forward something that I do not like bringing forward. I do not like bringing amendments to amendments, but unfortunately that has occurred, and it is there before you.

The next thing I just wanted to mention was the issue of choice, and I believe the hon. member has missed a little bit, the comment that I made about choice. What choice has to do with is whether or not a Catholic elects to stay a Catholic or whether or not they can become a public school supporter. The initial issue that was in Bill 16 was that on the taxation form a person could say that they were either a separate school supporter or they were not. It did not ask anyone to deny their religion. Subsequently that was taken out of there as the ACSTA did not agree with that.

That brings me to probably the most important point of the evening, and that is about the small communities. One of the main issues we have when we have small communities is that, as we all know, in a community of 700 or a community of a thousand you cannot have two school systems. You cannot have two schools. It is just not economically viable to have 10 students in this school and 20 students in this school or 50 and 50. It just does not make a lot of common sense to you and I.

Mr. Chairman, what happens today, what happens at this moment is that if the Catholic minority within that small 4 by 4 or that small community says they want to have a Catholic school district come in and give them Catholic education, they then take a census to determine that they are a minority religion. They subsequently follow up with a vote, and as I stated before, many of these votes are 5 to nothing, 10 to nothing. The interesting point, though, is there is absolutely no need for the Catholic electorate to comment or even talk to the public school electorate that would be affected by this. Under these regulations what we have is a mandatory consultation.

So we are not changing, we are not taking away the ability for that Catholic electorate to form a Catholic school district within that 4 by 4. What we are saying is that everyone – everyone – has to be told. If you take the critical mass of a school of 150 and split it, say, to 80-70, it does affect everyone. In this democratic society if people are knowledgeable about the issues, then I respect that they will make the right decision. Because this is constitutionally valid, it is important that that ability continue, but by making the consultation mandatory, by ensuring that people must talk about what is happening, I feel and I have utter confidence that in these small communities the right decision will be made.

I also have utter confidence in the ACSTA and the Catholic school boards that they will make the right decision, that they will not go in when there is a situation where there are 30 or 40 students and it is not economically viable. I fully respect that they, too, will find a way to deliver Catholic education to these students, whether it's by distance education, whether it's by various other ways. I believe that by the Catholic school boards and the public school boards sitting down together and actually talking about solutions, we will find the right solutions to these problems.

Mr. Chairman, what I have just said is what is included in the amendments to Bill 16. I believe these are good amendments. I believe they should go forward. I believe they will answer a lot of the questions that have been put forward.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few comments here in regards to the amendments this evening.

As previous speakers have said, it is difficult to follow the changes. Certainly one of those changes was outlined in a letter that I tabled today from the Sturgeon school division. This letter was dated November 12. As of yesterday they received from a third party information about draft amendments to Bill 16 that the government intends to introduce in the Legislature next week. Now,

I am not certain if they are the only public school board that did not see these amendments or did see them, but one of their suggestions in this letter I tabled today, Mr. Chairman – and I quote from the letter – was that if our information about Government House amendments is reliable, we call on the Government [to] leave the amendments in committee stage for at least ten days before completing consideration of the Bill.

I think that until such time as we have assurances from all public school boards that they have had the advantage of reviewing these amendments and to see how they are impacted and, as well, to have the necessary consultation, that suggestion is an excellent suggestion. I would urge the minister that before we proceed any further with the amendments to Bill 16, we do have the assurances from each individual public school board that they indeed have seen the amendments and have had an opportunity to see how those amendments would impact their school boards.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To respond to that, what I will say is that in the legislation there is but one thing that is added, and that one thing is that there is mandatory consultation, that there's regulation-making power on the consultation process leading up to a formation of new or expanded Catholic school boundaries. So I would put it to you, hon. member, that in this legislation everything else has been removed and that it should not take 10 days for them to take a look at it. I will say – and again I apologize, but this is thirdhand – that my deputy minister did meet with the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta today. Tentatively – again, I apologize; this is thirdhand – it was a good meeting.

The other thing I will say – and I believe that this is very important to say – is that if the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association did nothing, if they did nothing on this, then the 4 by 4 votes would continue, and over the next three years I would have another 170 of them. So this very much affects the Catholic School Trustees' Association. They have felt that there is a problem, and I commend them for doing that. They have stated that they support the idea of mandatory consultation, talking to everyone in the community, talking to their public school boards about the formation within a community. That is something that the public school boards do not have the authority to change. This is something that is constitutionally a right of the Alberta Catholic school boards in Alberta, and the public school boards constitutionally do not have this right.

I will say one thing, and I apologize for this for the member sitting in the gallery. It is a separate school right, and the reason I say that is because we do have a public separate school board. We have one public separate school board in my province. I do apologize for that.

Mr. Chairman, it is something that they have the ability to expand today. It is something that these school boards have the right to do. I commend the separate school boards for realizing that there's a problem, for proposing a solution, and again I'll reiterate that if nothing is done today, if nothing is done on this legislation, the 4 by 4 process will continue. There will continue to be expansion of the Catholic school boundaries. There will continue to be rifts within the communities, which all the separate boards and the public boards recognize do no one any good. All of this will continue for the next hundred years or until the province of Alberta is covered. What we have here today is a solution to this issue that will allow for cooler heads to prevail, for people to sit down and have a logical discussion about what is going to happen to the education of the students in both the separate schools and the public schools of this province.

I do believe that this is the right way to go. I commend everyone who has been involved in this. I commend the separate school boards for putting these positions forward even though they did not have to. They did not have to say that they will talk to anyone, because it's their constitutional right not to, but they have said that we do not want to have these continual rifts in the communities over formation. I commend everyone involved, but I would remind the hon. member that that is the issue.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for the back and forth, the debate we've had this evening. It's important.

I guess I would leave with just one question to the minister. Given all that we have before us and the changes in terms of choice, how does he see the amendments impacting a Catholic parent who is right now sending their child to a public school system? What will be the impact?

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. The Catholic parent will still have the ability as to where they send their child. One of the issues will be on taxes, as to where they send their taxes, but I must remind the hon. member that probably five or six years ago taxes were all essentially pooled. Albeit you can direct your taxes as to where you want them to go, the ultimate effect is that they all come up to the central location and then are divvied out. That ability will still continue.

There still will be the ability for a Catholic parent to send their child to whatever school they see fit. As the hon. member knows, being a former school trustee, many students within the public school system are Catholic and many students within the Catholic school system are non-Catholic. That is something that will not change as a result of this legislation.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I move that we adjourn debate.

THE CHAIRMAN: I think that's an interesting motion that should have with it additional thought. Anyway, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has moved that we adjourn debate at committee stage on Bill 16.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, we could move on, then, to Bill 21. I assume, as part of the previous one, that I'll move that when we rise and report from committee, we report progress on Bill 16.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that when the committee rises and reports, we report progress on Bill 16.

Now, if I heard the hon. gentleman correctly, we would be moving to Bill 21.

Bill 21
Electronic Transactions Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Chairman, thank you so much for the opportunity to speak briefly to Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act. I just want to commend my colleague from Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who has carried this legislation on behalf of the Ministry of Innovation and Science, for doing such an outstanding job and for working through the consultation process this summer to make sure we had the proper outline, the proper approach to this particular act.

I would just refer the members of the Assembly to kind of where this fits into the whole Innovation and Science business plan, which under our goal 5 says that "the Government of Alberta will be a model user in the application of information, knowledge and technology." Mr. Chairman, that just underscores the importance we see in today's world of high-speed access to the Internet in electronic business in allowing that only paper-based transactions are no longer practical. As a result, the objective of the Electronic Transactions Act is to give electronic communications the same legal status as their paper counterparts with one key principle, and that is that both parties must consent to handling their business transactions electronically.

Mr. Chairman, as was referenced this afternoon by the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, we based the legislation before the House on the Uniform Electronic Commerce Act and reviewed that while we were developing our own legislation. He also noted that in Canada all jurisdictions with the exception of Newfoundland, the Northwest Territories, Nunavut, and Alberta have passed legislation based on this model law.

Mr. Chairman, there are no amendments that we propose to bring forward on the bill at committee. I think, with the support we heard earlier from the members of the opposition, that they are in fact in agreement with the bill as presented, and we look forward to the early passage of this bill.

Thank you.

8:50

THE CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Chairman. We're not ready for the question yet.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay.

MR. HANCOCK: So I might spend just a moment to indicate to the House that the critic for the opposition is just having a review of some final comments that he might want to make, and I'm sure he'll want to come and make them.

In the meantime, if there's an indication that someone else might want to speak to the act . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: I'll speak.

MR. HANCOCK: You have to be in your own chair.

I would commend to the House the act because it does help us to regularize what is in practice in business today in this province and in our country in the fact that we use electronic transactions on a daily basis. Many of us believe that they're quite legal in effect now because of the fact that you really don't need to actually have an ink signature on a document in order to make it a legal document. However, it does make it easier to prove that the document was actually signed by the parties that intended it to be a legal document. So the Electronic Transactions Act just takes that one step further and makes it clearer in the public mind that those documents that are done through electronic means and where they have the consent of both parties are in fact legal documents in this province. I think that's a very important step forward in this electronic age.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I think. The opposition I think has been in support of the Electronic Transactions Act, and for good reason. I think many of us who use the Internet and who would like to use it even more in terms of purchases and business dealings are still somewhat nervous over the whole process. I know that I'm still very, very reluctant to give out credit information over the Internet, and I'm sure I'm not alone. Anything that can help consumers feel more confident that those transactions are valid and that they won't be party to transactions that can be questioned I think is a move in the right direction, so I'm supportive of the legislation.

I think, as previous speakers have indicated, there's probably a lot more that could be done in terms of protecting consumers and making sure the transactions they undertake don't lead them into any difficulties. But it's all a very new area for all of us, and it's one that's evolving. The legislation and the kinds of regulations that govern it are gradually evolving, hopefully to make sure that consumers and the providers of goods and services can use this very powerful medium to carry on their transactions and to do it safely and with confidence that the transactions will be the ones they think they're undertaking.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 21 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Bill 18
Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to rise and move an amendment to Bill 18 on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness. I believe that you have the appropriate copies of the amendment, and I would wait for them to be circulated to members.

THE CHAIRMAN: These amendments will be passed around, and in a moment we will deal further with them. They will be called amendment A1. We'll just wait a moment.

I believe everyone has a copy now of amendment A1 as moved by the hon. Government House Leader. The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Essentially the amendments that are being brought forward, as I understand it, are as a result of the opportunity that members of the professions have had over the course of time in which we were in recess to look at the bill and to bring forward some questions and concerns they had.

In essence, section A, with respect to section 12, is being proposed to the House to be inserted into the bill in order to assure persons who are participating in the continuing competence program that results of that would not be used to their detriment in inappropriate circumstances. Obviously it's important to ensure in professions regulated by the bill that members of those professions are encouraged to engage in continuing competence programs, and it would be very discouraging if one were to participate in such a program and then as a result of not having been as successful as they had wished to be perhaps in passing a test or in dealing with some evaluation of that program, having to have that on their record, so to speak, for future employers' reference or other people's reference, where it may be inappropriate to do so. In order to be clear and clarify the concept of the continuing competence programs and to ensure that voluntary participation is not discouraged, the amendment makes it clear that information coming out of that program would not be able to be used to that individual's detriment. So that's section A.

Section B relates to matters with respect to the Ombudsman Act. Again, it deals with the question of utilization of information obtained in the continuing competence programs against an individual member. Again, the same comments would prevail with respect to that particular section, that the intention is to encourage people to participate in such a program, not to use that process against them.

Section C essentially inserts, as I understand it, the word "liquid" into the section: "under pressure, liquid, air or gas." Here we're talking about insertions into the ear. There were concerns by professionals practising in that area that the insertion of a liquid into the ear should also be covered by that particular section of the act, and thus it's been inserted there.

Sections D and E and the remaining sections of the proposed amendment I believe deal particularly with the concept of students in various professions and making it clear that registering of a student does not register them under this particular act. So it just clarifies that the students are not registered members under the act. All of those sections deal with the various professions and the issue of students as relating to those professions.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the House to consider the amendments being proposed. I understand that members of the opposition have only seen them tonight and therefore may not wish to deal completely with these amendments and the bill in committee tonight, but they may wish to have some comments. It would appear that they don't, and therefore I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 18.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. HANCOCK: I would move that the committee rise and report and, in doing so, that it report progress on bills 18 and 16 and that it report Bill 21.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill 21. The committee reports progress on the following: bills 16 and 18. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:04 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. NORRIS: [remarks in German]

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Mr. Christian Pauls, ambassador of Germany. Accompanying him is Mr. Fritz Koenig, honorary consul general stationed in Edmonton. Would they please rise. I would like to welcome His Excellency to Alberta on his first official visit since his appointment this year.

More than half a million Albertans are of German descent, Mr. Speaker, and there are about 60 active German-Canadian organizations across Alberta. From junior high schools to universities, German is taught in over 54 schools. Early next year Alberta expects to open a new international office in Munich to enhance our already outstanding trade opportunities with Germany. Trade with Germany is an important part of Alberta's economy, with two-way trade totaling over $358 million, and there is great potential to expand. We trust that this will serve to enhance our already existing excellent relations between Alberta and Germany.

I would ask that our honoured guests please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here from 3,814 individuals that would like to encourage the Minister of Learning and this government to support libraries and librarians in this great province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday regarding discrimination against Falun Gong be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to make recommendation to the Federal government to condemn the Chinese government's crackdown on Falun Gong and the Heilongjiang Government's mass killing of Falun Gong practitioners.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 25

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act for first reading. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act is a bill which will establish a process through which property and profits gained from unlawful acts will be used to repair the harm caused to the victims of those crimes. It will also make it easier for Albertans to regain their property or obtain court-ordered restitution for losses suffered as a result of illegal activities.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Trustee Amendment Act, 2001

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also beg leave to introduce Bill 26, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill will legislate the prudent investor rule that will allow trustees to diversify investments, control risk, and improve financial returns to a trust fund.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of tablings. I'm pleased to table today with the Assembly the following annual reports for the year 2000-2001: the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation; the Alberta Opportunity Company; the Livestock Identification Services Ltd. manager's report, which includes the Brand Act, the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act, the Livestock and Livestock Products Act, and the Stray Animals Act. I am also filing the Farmers' Advocate annual report for the year 2000. Copies of all these reports are available in my office.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to file copies of the program from the October 18, 2001, investiture ceremony for this year's recipients of the Alberta Order of Excellence; namely, Louis Armand Desrochers of Edmonton and Colonel (Retired) Donald Stewart Ethell of Calgary. Worthy gentlemen both.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table five copies of a letter addressed to Mr. Ashok Sharma, president, Council of India Societies, extending sincere best wishes on behalf of all of us to those tens of thousands of members of our East Indian community in our province who today begin the very special celebration of Diwali, which, as we all know, is the festival of light.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Though from time to time we seem to dwell on negative news in this Assembly, I would like to table today the Ervin & Associates gas price survey for all of Canada, which shows the capital city of Alberta, Edmonton, having the lowest gas prices in all of Canada.

Continuing on the side of good news, I am also tabling today a press release from Suncor Energy that talks about its Voyageur project, Mr. Speaker, that is part of the $32 billion U.S. investment in oil sands in this great province, which moves production up to 550,000 barrels per day over the next 10 years.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table a letter from Grande Yellowhead regional division No. 35 on the aspects of Bill 16.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the outline of the Good Neighbour fund. They held their Poor Boy luncheon today at noon. This is a fund that generates moneys to help individuals who are without other sources of support in the community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I have two tablings: one, notes on cost containment strategies and, the second, expenditure forecasts for the second quarter of 2001-2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I at this time would like to table for all members of the Assembly a letter that I received from Lee and Maria Kruszewski from Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are concerned about the large number of students in kindergarten through grade 3 classes at St. Gabriel school.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from a constituent, Margaret Hislop. The letter is addressed to the Premier and is CCed to me. She was very concerned in outlining her concerns with the difference in government promises before the election compared to the tighten your belts scenarios that are being heard after the election.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter written by Ms Audrey Mancini of Red Deer addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness in which she is asking why important drugs like Remicide and others are not covered under the Alberta drug plan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a report by the Alberta Wilderness Association, Albertans for a Wild Chinchaga, the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, Edmonton chapter, and the Federation of Alberta Naturalists entitled Structural Impediments to FSC Certification in Alberta: Overcoming Barriers to Well-Managed Forests.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 61(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. It covers his activities to the period to March 31, 2001.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week commemorates the anniversary of the death of Louis Riel, and it is a time when Metis people honour his memory and celebrate their heritage. Today we have a very special guest with us, and it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms Audrey Poitras, who is president of the Metis Nation of Alberta Association. Audrey is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that she please rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce some special guests who are also here with us as part of Metis Week in Alberta. In your gallery today are Rick Blyan, the president of the Metis Settlements General Council, executive members Gerald Cunningham, vice-president; Donna Lakey, secretary; Marcel Desjarlais, treasurer; and Dale LeClair, executive director. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to be able to introduce to you and through you to Members of this Legislative Assembly a friend, a colleague, and a columnist with the Calgary Herald, her first appearance in the Chamber of the Alberta Legislature. I'd ask that Danielle Smith rise and receive the warm applause of this congregation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have two introductions. First of all, I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly seven people who do an incredible job on a daily basis working in victims' assistance programs throughout the capital region and who are representative of the many people who work throughout our province assisting victims on a daily basis. They are joining us today to see the introduction of Bill 25, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, which was just approved for first reading in the Assembly. With us today are Sergeant Bob Pagee and Shelley Juchli of the Edmonton Police victim services unit, Terry Krahn of the Edmonton John Howard victims assistance program, Kim Goodwin of the Leduc and District Victim Assistance Society, Shirley DenBraber of the Fort Saskatchewan victim service unit, and Marlene Morris and Lynne Fowler of the victim service unit that serves Stony Plain, Spruce Grove, and district. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd like them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly and our thanks as representatives of the victims services people all over the province.

Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I had two introductions. It's also my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly an enthusiastic and fantastic group of 105 grade 6 students from St. Mary's school in my constituency. Teachers and student teachers accompanying the students are Miss Liz Esposito, Mr. Brad Ostopowich, Mrs. Lillian Turner, Mrs. Denise D'Agostini, Miss Krista Murray, Miss Dayna Heuver, Mr. Don Henderson, Mrs. Michelle Armstrong and parent volunteers Mrs. Judy Brotto, Mrs. Mary Sikora, Mr. Sam Amelio, Mrs. Teresa Stewart, Mrs. Mary Healy, Mrs. Virginia Harris, Mrs. Christina Harrison, Mrs. Janet Clanachan, Mrs. Cathy Jabusch, Mrs. Flavia Anger, Mrs. Virginia Tracy-Roth, Mrs. Colleen Smith, Mrs. Eva Powers, Mr. Dwain May, Ms Diane Dagleish, Ms Silva McCann, Ms Jeannie Vaage. As I indicated, 105 wonderful students from the Edmonton-Whitemud constituency. I hope that they will be able to watch question period and see the questions and answers that go on today, because with so many of them I wasn't able to answer all their questions at the time we had pictures taken. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you the members of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, a group of hardworking individuals who help to protect one of our most valuable resources in this province, the children. I'd like to welcome recently appointed and reappointed members to the committee: Jean Wilkinson, vice-chair; Lori Brooks; Nancy Donnelly; Dawne Fowler; Del James; Mickey McMaster; Yvonne Slemko; and Edith Zawadiuk. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Miss Shannon Knack. Shannon volunteers and also does the janitorial work at my constituency office. Shannon is seated in the members' gallery, and I would like her to rise at this time and receive the warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce members from Fort McMurray who belong to local municipal government. Let me just say that many members of this Assembly have belonged to local municipal government. It is an important fraternity. In fact, today commences the 98th annual convention of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, which they are attending. So it's my pleasure today to introduce His Worship Mayor Doug Faulkner from the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo as well as Councillor Mickey Madden and Councillor Tom Weber. I would ask them all to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this House in keeping with the spirit that nous aons l'energie.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Gary Mize, president and chief executive officer of ConAgra Malt, as well as Mr. Don Grambsch, senior vice-president, global risk management and procurement for ConAgra Malt, and Mr. Andrew Raphael, ConAgra Malt's Canadian government relations representative.

ConAgra is an international company which owns Canada Malting in Calgary. They're the largest grain processor in Alberta, processing high-quality Alberta barley into malt. The Calgary facility is their largest and most modern and produces about 250,000 metric tonnes of malt per year. Our guests are in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you today to the members of this Assembly a very special person to Red Deer-North and indeed to all of Canada. She's well known to the members of this Assembly, and we're very glad to have her here today. Oh, another special person has just arrived. We're all quite familiar with him, and we're very pleased to have them both here: Mr. and Mrs. Stockwell Day. Will you please stand.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: I really don't know what to say because the hon. Member for Red Deer-North stole my thunder. For such an eloquent guest I think that we should have a slightly longer introduction.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce through you to all members of the Legislature a very familiar face to most of us, Stockwell Day. As you know, Stockwell is the leader of the Canadian Alliance and Leader of the Official Opposition in Ottawa, and before going federal, Stockwell was a longtime member of this Assembly, representing the constituency of Red Deer-North. He also served in several cabinet portfolios, most notably as Provincial Treasurer. Above all, Stockwell is a true friend of Alberta, and I'm delighted that he is here with us today. I get to do an additional introduction because Stockwell is joined by his delightful and amazing wife, Valorie; Valorie's sister, Jude Hanson; and Stockwell's executive assistant, Shane Bourke. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Metis Week

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a Metis I rise proudly in the House today to acknowledge that this is Metis Week in the province of Alberta. In fact, I'm pleased to have our special guests from the Metis Nation of Alberta and the Metis Settlements General Council with us today, who have donated the lapel pins on your desks.

Metis Week began on November 12 with the proclamation of Metis Week and the flag-raising ceremony by the Metis Nation of Alberta. My colleague from Edmonton-Calder represented the government extremely well at this important event, and I thank him for that. Commencing with the flag-raising ceremony, Metis Week will be honoured with a presentation of many important events through the entire week. I urge my colleagues to consider attending one of the many of these events.

On November 16 the Metis Nation of Alberta will hold its annual commemoration in honour of Louis Riel here at the Legislature at 11 a.m. The Metis Nation of Alberta has played and continues to play an important and integral role in our society, working hard on behalf of the Metis people of this great province. I commend their remembrance of a great symbol of independence and struggle for equality and recognition. Louis Riel has been denounced as a traitor and extolled as a hero, someone who helped shape the destiny of the west as a place built on fresh ideas and strong convictions. One hundred and sixteen years have passed since his death, and much of what he wanted for Metis people flourishes.

Metis leaders have a history of working with the Alberta government to make life better. Together we are moving Alberta Metis closer to self-reliance, self-determination, and self-management. The land base of our eight Metis settlements and its uniqueness in Canada is something to be proud of. Off-settlement Metis have a strong partnership with the Alberta government through the Metis Nation of Alberta Association.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is committed to its partnership with Metis people in this province. We share a mutual goal, to improve socioeconomic opportunities, and we are continuing to move forward in our efforts with the Metis Nation of Alberta and the Metis Settlements General Council. Through our aboriginal policy framework and aboriginal policy initiative Alberta is also continuing to work with other governments, the private sector, and stakeholders to make sure that social and economic issues are properly addressed.

Today, for example, I had the pleasure of attending the grand opening of the Infinity Business Training Centre, a centre of excellence for entrepreneurship. The centre is a new initiative of the Metis Business Development Corporation, a relatively new division of the Metis Nation of Alberta Association. The Infinity Business Training Centre was established to provide training to Metis people who have a business idea, develop a business plan, and provide support to those individuals as they start their businesses. The timing of the grand opening of this important facility is ideal as we celebrate Metis Week.

Metis Albertans are leaders in business, government, and the nonprofit sector and contribute as wonderful performers, entertainers, people with a variety of artistic abilities. On behalf of this Assembly I offer my best wishes to all Metis people living in Alberta. May they always stand proud of their heritage and the important role that their ancestors and our ancestors played in the making of the west.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My compliments to the minister for a very moving statement. I am pleased to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition to the minister's statement.

Metis Week is an opportunity to reflect upon the many contributions of the Metis people to Alberta. It is vitally important to continue to work to ensure more growth in Metis independence, equality, and self-sufficiency. I'm glad to hear the minister speak of government partnership with Metis people because I was concerned that recent government cuts forced the Ma'Mōwe child and family services authority to layoff four aboriginal managers. As the aboriginal pillar was the fourth pillar upon which our current children's authorities were based, I find this a surprising move, especially considering that Metis youth are overrepresented in the case files of children's authorities.

So while we honour this week the Metis culture, it is important not to forget that the government has vital responsibilities to the next generation of Metis youth. Strengthening the next generation of Metis is an undertaking that I think Louis Riel would himself most surely have championed.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the weekend the Premier speculated in the media about changes to Alberta's health care system. However, yesterday he refused to answer questions, and he strongly advised everyone to wait for Mr. Mazankowski and his group of experts to bring their report together. My question is to the Premier. Why is it okay for the Premier to speculate about changes to the health care system and it's not for us to ask you questions in the House?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, he can ask all the questions he wants, and I will answer them to the best of my ability. The word "speculation" is a misuse of that particular word. There's no speculation whatsoever. I was alluding quite specifically to the interim report that was tabled with me by Mr. Mazankowski, the very preliminary report. I explained to the media yesterday – and I'm sure that either the hon. member was in attendance or one of his representatives was; they usually are at the daily scrum – and I indicated the procedure from here, that on November 16 Mr. Mazankowski will sit down with me to give me an overview of the report, and on or about the 26th of November the final report will be tabled. It will be introduced to the government caucus. It will go through the normal process of cabinet, the standing policy committee, and caucus. Government members will have an opportunity to examine it, and shortly thereafter it will be released publicly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following up on all of that process, will you commit to having an open debate on the results of that report here in this Legislature?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, that question was asked. We don't know what components of that report, if any, will require legislative changes or regulation changes or what can be adopted simply as policy. So it is too early to say, but certainly if there are any components that require legislative changes, it will naturally be debated in this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier also commit to making sure that average Albertans, the citizens who receive health care from this province, will be included in that debate process?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the extent to which a lengthy public debate will take place is something that certainly will have to be considered by this caucus. I can inform the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that Mr. Mazankowski and his committee went through a public process. As a matter of fact, there were opportunities for people to fax their input. I believe there was a 1-800 number. They solicited openly and very aggressively, to my knowledge, input from the public.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the findings of the Mazankowski report, some of which might be adopted, probably will be adopted by this government, will also be fed to the Romanow commission. Mr. Romanow has made it quite public that he will hold across this country a very aggressive round of public hearings relative to health care reform, and that's needed.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Delisting of Health Services

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that the Premier has speculated about has been delisting of services. How will this improve the public health care system if you delist and take away from Albertans some of the health care they now receive?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, the Mazankowski report alludes – alludes – to the delisting of some services. He talks in his report, in the preliminary report, about the whole issue of comprehensiveness and how the expectations of Canadians and of Albertans in particular, because this relates specifically to Alberta, must be tempered somewhat, that the health care system is not there for all people for all time, for all causes. In other words, the expectation that it's there to cover absolutely everything is one, just one, of the factors that are driving up costs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier says that that's just alluded to in that report, then why is it that you have singled out delisting as the item that you are talking about on a regular basis?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is not true. That is simply not true, and I wish the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition would quit telling fibs. That is not true. I have not been talking about delisting. As a matter of fact, the point that I've been stressing is the whole point of perhaps a challenge to the interpretation of the Canada Health Act as it affects the whole issue of comprehensiveness.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: Mr. Premier, when you talk about delisting, taking away from Albertans services that are included in the public health care system, isn't this moving from the public health care system to an insurance health care system or to a wallet health care system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the only one talking about delisting anything is the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition. Will this hon. member stand up in this Legislative Assembly today and tell this House, this Legislative Assembly, specifically what I have mentioned in terms of delisting? He can't, because I haven't mentioned anything.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Spending

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said that spending on health care had risen, in his words, roughly 30 percent over 10 years. He has also spoken about health care spending being out of control. Is it this government's policy that a spending increase of 30 percent over 10 years is out of control?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I did allude to the fact that health care spending over the past five years has doubled – and even this member should be able to understand that – from just over $3 billion to just over $6 billion. Figure the math. Do the math. You're a professor. You're an educated person. Can you figure that out? Doubled.

DR. TAFT: I was just quoting his own figures.

Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: if the Alberta government's spending on health care is out of control, is that not the fault of the Alberta government?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have never said that it is out of control. I have alluded to the fact that if spending remains at the same level or increases year after year after year, we will be facing a crisis in health care, and I'm not the only one saying that. His Liberal counterparts in various provincial jurisdictions are saying the same thing. His Liberal cousins in Ottawa are saying the same thing. That's why the Prime Minister appointed Mr. Romanow, a member of the NDs, so we can come to grip as a nation with the spiraling costs of health care and arrive at a solution that will make health care spending sustainable and make sure that we have for future generations of Canadians a sustainable and quality health care system. That's what it's all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given his great interest in saving money, will the Premier make the commitment that no contracting out of clinical services will be done in Alberta unless it can be publicly shown to save money?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have in place an act in this province; it's called the Health Care Protection Act, formerly Bill 11. You know, I'm sure that the Liberals went out and they thought that they were going to make political hay on Bill 11. Well, guess what happened? Their numbers dwindled to seven, and our numbers increased to 74.

Mr. Speaker, the Health Care Protection Act lays out very strict and very definite guidelines relative to the ability of regional health authorities to contract out certain minor surgery procedures.

MR. MAR: By way of supplement, Mr. Speaker, I should add that in reviewing the 36-some contracts that have been approved under the Health Care Protection Act, the total budget amount in aggregate is roughly $10 million out of a $6 billion-plus budget. It is some one-fifth of 1 percent of the total budget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is a politician who used to pride himself on keeping his promises. Not anymore. Before the election he said that "no one . . . will be denied needed health care in this province because of an inability to pay." You'll recall he waved his health care card and he said: "If you have your health care card, it will be there for you." If the Premier succeeds in delisting services or introducing user fees, Albertans will need their credit cards, not their health care cards, to pay for their basic health care. My question is to the Premier. Why is the Premier threatening to delist health care services and introduce user fees when he said on April 10 last year right here in this House that sick and injured

Albertans will only need their Alberta health care card to access public health care?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm bewildered. First of all, no one in this Legislative Assembly – no one – has introduced user fees. User fees violate one of the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. It's enshrined in our law, the Health Care Protection Act, that we will abide by the fundamental principles. That doesn't preclude us from challenging the interpretation of certain components of the act. The only persons who've talked about deinsuring or user fees are the members of the Liberals and the NDs. No one has talked about that.

Mr. Speaker, there will be a process that will be followed relative to the release of the Mazankowski report. At that time there will be some certainty as to where we are headed as a government to bring about meaningful health care reform and still provide a service for those who are sick and injured in society under a publicly funded health care system.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Premier and his government putting the comprehensiveness principle in question by threatening to delist health care services when the then minister of health said on April 6 last year that "we have absolutely no plans to delist coverage for necessary medical services"?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that goes to the essence of what we will probably have to consider relative to comprehensiveness. What is "comprehensive"? Perhaps the hon. leader of the third party could stand up and give us his definition. I was asked yesterday for my definition of comprehensive. My definition might be different than the definition of any member of this Legislature. I would like to know what the hon. member means by comprehensive. Does he mean to say that health care is there for all people at all times for every single cause no matter how minor? Is that what he is saying?

AN HON. MEMBER: That's not the definition.

MR. KLEIN: Well, is that what he is saying? I would like to hear from the leader of the third party what his definition of comprehensiveness is.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

2:10

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What Albertans would really like to know is: why did the Premier mislead Albertans over and over again about the government's true health care agenda? Was it to win the election?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

THE SPEAKER: Well, you know, words are used in context, and the word "mislead" has a connotation that may not really be appropriate. I would suspect that the hon. member has used the word in such a way that it is not in the context that the majority of people would understand it to be.

The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: I'm not sure what the question was. I know what the allegation was, that I misled Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I've never misled Albertans.

You know, the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself and other members of this caucus have always said that we have to bring about meaningful reform to health care to make it sustainable for future generations, and I believe with all my heart that the leader of the third party believes that as well, that we have to find a way to ensure that health care is sustainable for future generations. That's what the national exercise is all about; that's what the Romanow commission is all about. That's what Don Mazankowski's advisory council on health is all about. That's why other Premiers and other ministers of health in virtually every other jurisdiction in this country are trying to find meaningful and significant ways of bringing about health care reforms, to make sure it is sustainable and at the same time to ensure that those who are truly sick and injured and hurting in society are looked after. That's what it's all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

North/South Trade Corridor

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's public revenue is down due to the downturn of our world economy and that our responsive government reduces our public spending accordingly, reflecting my constituents' concern about our Calgary transportation infrastructure, my questions are to the Minister of Transportation. What highway links through Calgary are under the responsibility of the provincial government, and how will they be affected by the corrective measure to keep the budget balanced this year?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The department and the government have assumed full responsibility for all major trade corridors through cities in the province. In the city of Calgary it's the Deerfoot, which is part of highway 2 and which is the north/south trade corridor. By assuming full responsibility, we're committed to maintaining that road that goes through the city of Calgary. By that, I mean snow removal, line painting, illumination of the road, and also crack sealing and all of the other things that come with maintenance. We also assumed full responsibility for the construction of a number of interchanges along that trade route as well. Due to some of the corrective actions that we've had to take, we've deferred the interchange development. But with respect to the maintenance portion, that relieved the city of about $4 million to $5 million a year in costs which we've assumed responsibility for, that and also the full cost of the construction. Now, the corrective action was a 15 percent reduction in municipal grants, which is a bit of a reduction in the 70 percent increase that they've received over the last three years.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the same minister. In the October 18 announcement the Department of Transportation indicated that it is still planning to open the Deerfoot extension by 2002. Is this still achievable?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the plan has hit a bit of a glitch, only because the city of Calgary has been unable to obtain the land that's necessary to complete the extension north of the Bow. We probably will be missing the construction season, you know, to grade the road and then pave in conjunction with part of the north/south trade corridor grading that has been completed from the Bow River south. So we probably will lose one construction season not because of a fiscal issue but because of the fact that we can't obtain the land in time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary to the same minister: what can the minister commit to that will ensure that the Deerfoot Trail will be able to handle the demands of traffic growth in our city of Calgary?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, that portion of the north/south trade corridor, highway 2, the Deerfoot, is a very important link of the Canamex highway. Given that our trade with the Americans is about a billion and a half a day and trade with Mexico is increasing on a daily basis, all sorts of manufacturing sectors, especially agriculture as well, we are committed to completing the north/south trade corridor and making all of the necessary improvements so that we can gain efficiencies in moving goods and services north and south.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Intensive Livestock Operations

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the minister of agriculture. While the NRCB will be responsible for approving individual applications for confined feeding operations, who will monitor the cumulative impact of all of the CFOs on the soil, air, and water quality across this province?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the Natural Resources Conservation Board will be responsible, as the member indicated, for the siting, the auditing, the monitoring, and the compliance of confined feeding operations in this province. Those will be the functions of the NRCB.

I should mention to the hon. member that because this government recognized some dozen years ago that there could be a problem in a cumulative manner of the effects of intensive agriculture, not just livestock, on groundwater and the soil, we instituted a groundwater study in southern Alberta, where a great deal of intensive farming operations, including confined feeding operations, occur, and over that 10-year period monitored the effects on groundwater and did some soil monitoring as well. That information was very valuable to us, and we continue to monitor today 23 sites to ensure that, in fact, we are not impacting negatively groundwater and soil in those intensive areas.

The NRCB will have that authority. There will of course be the interaction with Environment if there is a breach and a necessity for environmental protection to come in and assist with remediation of the problem.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, this addresses the issues of groundwater and soil, but what about air?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, when we announced that the Natural Resources Conservation Board would be responsible for this legislation, we made it very clear that their authority would be to monitor the quality of the air, soil, and water in this province, and that will be a major part of their mandate.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why does she not support the Official Opposition position that there should be consistent and enforceable provincial regulations to protect soil, water, air quality, and municipal autonomy in deciding the final siting for CFOs?

MRS. McCLELLAN: I mentioned yesterday and I find it interesting yet – in fact, I believe it was this very member who was the critic for environmental protection when a news release was put out. There are a couple of things that are in it. I'll paraphrase what I quoted yesterday, and I'd be happy to table this, Mr. Speaker, as is the practice: it was important that this government ensure that there is consistency. A couple of things I want to just point out, and these are statements from that: "Most municipalities not only lack the expertise to determine or regulate the impacts of intensive hog operations or feedlots, they lack the specialist staff to ensure compliance." Speaking of the minister of agriculture, "He should ensure that the siting and operation of intensive livestock operations prevents any environmental contamination." It goes on to say that one municipality may be more lenient than the other.

If the hon. member reads the bill that was introduced in this House yesterday, she will see very clearly that that legislation is enabling legislation that will ensure that the codes of practice that are set out are indeed complied with. I'm sure her comeback would be, and rightfully so: well, most of this is in the regulations. Well, let me assure the hon. member that the regulations in draft form, because of course that's the only way they could be – you can't have regulations until you have legislation passed – to show and demonstrate to all, not just to this Legislature but to the people who will operate under this act, will be in place for their review and people's review before this act is passed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Corrections Facilities Riots

MR. CENAICO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans were shocked this week about news of riots at the Edmonton Institution and the prison in Drumheller. These riots, that resulted in injuries to several inmates and one death, raise a number of concerns. My questions are to the Solicitor General. I understand that the prisons in Edmonton and Drumheller, where these incidents took place, are federal institutions, but can the Solicitor General advise what role, if any, her department has in investigating these riots?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. Where the riots took place are both federal institutions. My department has no direct involvement in the investigation into these incidents. However, under the provincial Police Act the RCMP and the Edmonton Police Service will investigate the incidents within their jurisdiction and will recommend charges if they deem them appropriate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAICO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary question is also to the Solicitor General. What plans are in place in Alberta correctional centres to prevent or deal with incidents such as those at the Edmonton and Drumheller federal institutions?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta correctional officers in this province are very well trained, and they're all very professional. I've had the opportunity to travel the province in the last couple of months and meet these officers in the institutions and have been very, very impressed. In addition, we have specially trained tactical teams to deal with a riot in our Alberta correctional centres. I'd like to say that due to security reasons I can't elaborate, but I can tell you that we have professional, well-trained correctional officers in our facilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Foster Children

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Children's Services told the House, "We have worked very hard to make sure that the reductions do not happen on the level of dealing with the child." My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that the West Yellowhead must cut $147,000 to support and train foster parents, does the minister still stand by her claim that children won't be affected?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do say that we are making cuts furthest away from the child. I don't know the specific reference from West Yellowhead, but let me assure the members here that beyond the cuts, let's talk about what we're doing that's positive, and let's remember that in Alberta we spend . . . [interjections] Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. We spend $647 million on children in this province through Children's Services, one of the largest budgets in Canada. This year and over the next year we will have a 15 percent increase in basic maintenance fees for foster families. This will look after the needs for foster families. I met with representatives of 3,500 foster families just last week, and they are very pleased that since April this year we have been putting in additional supports, including supports for respite and additional training for foster families.

I'd like to go one step further. Mr. Speaker, with foster families requiring training and respite, we are working to reconfigure the way that contracts administer services through foster families. We've had authority foster families and agency foster families, and much of the work that the CEOs are doing is trying to make sure that the contracts themselves don't have built in layers of administration and valuation that could be better spent up front with the child.

So, Mr. Speaker, I stand by my claim that the administrative cuts and the teamwork that we're bringing in to work with foster families will do a lot to improve the system and that we are not directly taking away from those services that interface directly with the child.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that West Yellowhead projects a $1 million deficit in child welfare services alone, how will the reduction in administration be enough to avoid direct services to children being cut?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, every single authority is working on their plan. Since we had the business plans approved earlier this year, they are going back and looking at cost containment strategies, but more than that they are working on some very specific new initiatives.

I'll give you an example from the hon. Member for Red Deer-

North. She visited Neegan Awas'sak up in Slave Lake. They are working to have their social workers become permanency planners, working with the family, working with the child, and working with the extended family to make sure that children aren't necessarily taken into the child welfare system and become so-called statistics in child welfare but working right in the home to ensure that we can do better things to enable that family to overcome their problems and the child to grow up in a loving family.

One more thing, Mr. Speaker. Some of the initiatives for home visitation and early childhood development that are in place in this province will net and yield very strong dividends in the future as we bring in prevention strategies in the early years that will avoid some of the problems that we have with children who have extensive history in child welfare.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of the close to 500 frontline staff the minister promised to hire at budget time, how many are actually on the job today helping children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, today child welfare services has 2,655 employees. Of the 475 that were in the budget at the first of this year, 75, as I indicated at one time previously in this House, were transfers to accommodate the Children's Advocate and some of the other departmental transfers. We have about 300 new social workers in the system. We are still missing some outreach workers in some of the remote areas, but the teams themselves are working to overcome that.

If I might just add one more point, not all child welfare is delivered by staff that are members of our government department. It is delivered by agency supports through at least 10,000 people and several agencies throughout Alberta: Boys and Girls Clubs, Catholic Social Services. Our configuration and mix of child delivery services extends far beyond the staff in the department.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had questions pertaining to funding for foster children and foster parents and also with respect to direct funding for children's services, and the questions have been asked and answered appropriately by the minister.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Drivers' Licences

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The only thing slower than the motor vehicles registry system in this province is the government's response to fixing it. My first question this afternoon is for the Solicitor General. Which law enforcement agencies have approached the hon. minister's department requesting better security features in the card stock to reduce the cases of counterfeiting and fraud with the Alberta drivers' licence?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the hon. member, and I am going to give it to the Minister of Government Services.

2:30

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, let me reassure the hon. member and all Albertans that even though there are people out there who have the technology today to counterfeit money, to do forgery on any document or any piece of paper – let me advise this House that our driver's licence process is constantly being looked at and constantly being upgraded. Yes, we do have to do some individual improvements on our equipment to keep up with the technology that's available today, but let me reassure you that drivers' licences are safe in Alberta today.

Thank you.

MR. MacDONALD: To the Minister of Government Services: can the hon. minister please explain the memo dated July 17 of this year from the deputy minister's office that was found fluttering on the lawn of the Legislative Assembly? Talk about a security issue. This memo states that law enforcement agencies have also requested better security features on the card stock to reduce the incidence of counterfeit or fraudulent licences. Who was right here, the law enforcement agencies or the minister?

Thank you.

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, that particular document has made its way from the Edmonton Journal into the hands of the hon. member opposite. That particular document is the very first draft of some consultations that we have had with the stakeholders that we have responsibility to work with in registries and in the Department of Government Services. That is a first draft, and we will continue to work with our stakeholders to get their input into upgrading our present equipment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Government Services: given that this year's Government Services annual report states that capital initiatives were deferred to fund operational costs, how does the minister plan to fund the $5 cost per driver's licence to provide all Alberta drivers with a new, safe, tamperproof, fraudulent-proof licence? Where's the $5 going to come from?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is a first draft of a document that was going to be used for our business planning process that we were going through this fall and this winter. Make no mistake; I will constantly be working with this government and with our department to make sure that we have the dollars available when needed.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Industrial Disturbance in Forests

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today a report was released by four respected environmental organizations. The report concluded that the biggest threat to Alberta's forests is surprisingly not from the forest industry but from the province's oil and gas industry. The report says that the oil and gas industry cuts down almost as many trees in Alberta each year as the forest industry does. More than 57,000 kilometres of seismic lines are cut through Alberta's forests every year, greater than the circumference of the entire globe. To the Minister of Energy: how can the minister justify not addressing a situation where the oil and gas industry is responsible for cutting and destroying almost as much Alberta forest each year as the entire forest industry?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, it's a real delight to be able to rise in this House and bring the member out of the dark ages, out of the years of 50 to 100 years ago, and talk about some of the dramatic new impacts that are happening in the oil and gas industry today. Those events of zero impact seismic were through the use of global positioning systems. You can go in, take a seismic shot, cut down one tree. Today industry works with the forest industry to have a minimal industrial disturbance footprint in these areas. This industry, through the use of horizontal drilling techniques, where you put a pad and you drill sideways in many different directions, allows again a minimal disturbance, a minimal imprint. There are many technologies that Alberta service companies have taken the lead in and, in fact, are world-best practitioners at.

I can remember being in a meeting with the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. It was in the Dominion Forest cabin, a cabin secluded in the wilds. It was built by a robust forestry department in the early '30s, and there, Mr. Speaker, the oil patch came together with the logging industry and said: "How do we find better solutions? How do we minimize the industrial impact? How do we maximize the benefit of this resource for all Albertans?" The oil patch is doing it today. They're doing it competently, and they'll continue to do it competently in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why has the government failed to put measures in place requiring the energy industry to do a proper job of reforesting the tens of thousands of hectares that are clear-cut each year, including on an ongoing basis, despite what the minister has to say to us, for seismic lines, well sites, pipelines, and access roads?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I know that my colleagues and the Minister of Environment and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development are waiting to leap to their feet to talk about the work that has been done with the government and the private sector, the ability to have the Energy and Utilities Board work diligently in the broad public interest for us to be able to continue to develop this important, important resource for all Albertans and, at the same time, recognizing we have an extremely valuable forestry resource as well. It's the ability of Albertans to work in partnership with government, the private sector, and different industrial sectors in order to develop this resource and to employ people and in fact to employ unionized people in the forestry industry. I don't know if he wants to damage the job opportunities that unions have in Alberta, but if he does, he's doing a good job of it.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, aside from the charming story about the meeting in the quaint log cabin, can the minister demonstrate with documentation actual agreements between the forestry industry and the oil and gas industry that protect Alberta's forests?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the member is asking for access to private commercial agreements that exist in industry today. In fact, I know that through his union connections he can probably go to any party that he wishes to talk to and say: show me these agreements; show me these industrial private-sector agreements. I'm sure the private sector would be pleased to respond to his request.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Personal Identification

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of the same genre as that of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – which stands on the testament that sometimes, but only sometimes, they can identify questions of relevance – is to the hon. Minister of Government Services. Following the tragic events of September 11 there have been some discussions relevant to the adequacy of the security of Alberta drivers' licences and perhaps the need for universal ID. Is this government at this time considering a universal ID?

MR. COUTTS: Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, and this House that there is no plan for mandatory identification of any type. There is no proposal on the table for mandatory identification. What we are looking at doing is upgrading our present driver's licence as well as our voluntary identification card so that it is secure for Albertans. With rapidly advancing technology today it's important that as Minister of Government Services in charge of registries we do take a look at the possibilities of how we can make our cards more secure. It has always been our job to make sure that we investigate and look at all the options that are available. It's very prevalent at this particular time, given the recent tragedies in the United States, that we do remind ourselves of the need to be vigilant in terms of making sure that we do upgrade our identification cards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the department currently investigating such options as DNA security or perhaps even face recognition?

MR. COUTTS: We're not looking at DNA. The reason we're not looking at DNA is because DNA is at the very high end of the technological scale, and there's a broad spectrum of possibilities out there between what DNA is and what we presently have in place. So DNA may be the best technology to use, but it may not be the right thing for Albertans today. What we need is an answer that is not only secure and affordable for Albertans but, at the same time, Mr. Speaker, an answer that is acceptable also to the privacy needs of Albertans.

MR. LUKASZUK: My last supplemental, Mr. Speaker: when does the minister expect to have recommendations tabled, and when can Albertans expect some of those new innovations to take place?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're very early in the process of dealing with the security task force that is being led by the Hon. Halvar Jonson, Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs. What I've been asked to do is to simply take a look, to assist with an overall strategy regarding the security of Alberta's drivers' licences to ensure that when Albertans go and cross that border or when they get on an airline, the identification that they are using and that they produce is viewed as being trustworthy and authentic. I strongly believe, not to mention our neighbours, that Albertans deserve no less.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Library Funding

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. October 14 to 20 was Library Week here in Alberta, and the minister talked about funding to reflect population growth, despite the fact that the per capita grant continues to be based on 1997 population figures. If the Minister of Community Development is going to talk about access, new technologies, and services available at libraries for all Albertans, could the minister please share with Albertans the funding plan he has in place to provide these services in a sustainable manner?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the question from the hon. member, because libraries are, indeed, a very important and a very integral aspect of all of our communities where they exist right across this province. It is true that this year, in the budget released in April, we did increase overall library funding, which I'm sure the member is aware of. As I recall, that increase was over $700,000, which took us up over the $14 million mark, somewhere close to $15 million. We also indicated that we would be spending just under $2 million hooking up with the APLEN project. So those are a couple of the positive things.

I do acknowledge, however, that the per capita rate that was reduced several years ago does need some serious review, and as soon as those budget dollars come available, I have indicated I will take a look at that as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. To the same minister: could the minister please tell us, then, how many libraries in Alberta have the funding base to take the APLEN wiring from the outside of their buildings inside and provide the hardware and trained personnel to use it? How many?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I don't have a figure just off the top of my head, but I'd be happy to have a look and see how those accommodations are going along.

What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that as we have the APLEN project traveling down this highway and we have the Supernet traveling down that highway, at some point we're going to need to try and merge the two, and there will be an expense that many of the libraries will be hard pressed to meet. So we're going to have to work out a strategy when the dollars come available to help those libraries become better equipped in order to facilitate that process, which I think is ultimately where the member may be going with her question.

In short, if there is a number out there that accommodates her specific question, I'll be happy to try and find it for her.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. Given that the minister is going ahead with these two different streams around libraries yet doesn't have the government funding to back it up, what does he have in mind so that libraries can provide these services to Albertans, given that there's an absence of additional government support, without the libraries raising fees? Is this magic money?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear. We have probably the most wired province anywhere in all of Canada. We've invested a great deal of money in that infrastructure; we will continue to invest. What we have in the library community is one type of need. What we have in the business community may well be a different type of need and so on in the medical areas and in our public buildings and so on. At some point we would like to have those mergers occur, but first we have to make sure that we've got our own particular projects well in hand, and that's what we're attempting to do with the APLEN hookup. It's gone over very well, as the member knows. When I had the great pleasure of attending the librarians' meeting in Jasper, we spent a lot of time discussing this issue, and I expect we'll discuss it more.

As soon as the dollars become available, Mr. Speaker, we will take a look at how we can help improve services to our libraries so that they have the necessary funds to make those particular mergers more affordable to them.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Wilfred and Ann Vandermeer

MR. VANDERMEER: Thank you. Today, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of publicly recognizing two very special people: my parents, Wilfred and Ann Vandermeer. They left their native land, Leeuwarden in the Netherlands, in 1952 and settled in a faraway place, Edmonton. They sought a better life, and they found it here. As time went by, the family grew to include six children, of which I am the fourth. A week ago today, on November 7, they celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary, no small feat in these times. To me they are an example of what true love is all about: commitment, respect, affection. They have certainly set an example for my brother, my sisters, and myself to follow. Mom and Dad, congratulations. May God bless you with many more years in health and happiness.

Harry Buddle

MRS. O'NEILL: This evening Mr. Harry Buddle, the CEO of Capital City Savings & Credit Union, will be presented with the University of Alberta-based 2001 Canadian Institute of Retailing and Services Henry Singer award in broad recognition of his leadership, vision, and commitment to the community and in specific recognition of his successful merging of eight struggling credit union outlets into a single organization, that is now the fourth largest credit union in Canada. Harry and his business team tell the amazing story of survival and success behind Capital City Savings. Harry and his family tell the edifying story of involvement and enrichment behind many community initiatives and programs. Congratulations, Mr. Harry Buddle.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Jasper Municipal Council

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to offer congratulations to all Albertans who were elected to local office in the recent municipal elections, and it is with hometown pride that I recognize and congratulate Mayor Richard Ireland and councillors Joe Couture, Mike Day, Gloria Konsrud, Ross Pugh, Andy Walker, and Brenda Zinck, the first council for Alberta's newest municipality, Jasper. I grew up in Jasper and am very familiar with the many years of discussions regarding self-governance for this great mountain resort. The move from improvement district to specialized municipality recognizes the importance of local autonomy in community decisions. The residents of Jasper worked long and hard to obtain their new status, and I wish the council all the best over the next three years.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Canadian Finals Rodeo

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and invite recognition from this Assembly of two constituents from the Grande Prairie-Smoky region, recent successful participants in the Canadian Finals Rodeo. A young gentleman, Rod Warren of Valleyview, won the Canadian saddle bronc title with a score of 155.5. He was also declared repeatedly the all-round champion cowboy in Canada. Another young gentleman, Dusty LaValley of Bezanson, was a winner of the novice bareback championship with 280 points.

I recognize their achievements, Mr. Speaker, and invite the House to do so as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Canadian Diabetes Association

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to recognize the Canadian Diabetes Association on World Diabetes Day. The Canadian Diabetes Association is a charitable organization that was established almost 50 years ago, and it's grown to include more than 150 locations across the country. It's the largest nongovernmental supporter of diabetes research, education, service, and advocacy. Together with its sections and councils, its employees and volunteers, the Canadian Diabetes Association plays an invaluable role in the everyday lives of over 2 million Canadians. The Canadian Diabetes Association provides a vital service in terms of education, especially to individuals when they are first diagnosed, when they often require help and support to adjust to the new reality of their lives.

I'd like to commend the employees and volunteers of the Canadian Diabetes Association for the very meaningful and important work that is accomplished on a daily basis to improve the lives of all persons with diabetes.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Kiwanis Club of Red Deer

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I recognize the Kiwanis Club of Red Deer, which is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year. The Kiwanis Club of Red Deer was chartered in 1951 with Mr. Fred Horn as its first president. Mr. Horn along with Dr. Stu Fleming and Dr. Harold Spencer have been members for 50 years and still counsel present-day members in Red Deer.

The Kiwanis Club is an outstanding organization in our community. For the past 50 years they have raised funds and supported such worthwhile programs as Camp Sherbino, a Girl Guides camp; the Golden Circle, a seniors' organization; Safety City; the PARTY program; the elementary school breakfast programs; the Central Alberta Science Fair; and too many more projects to mention.

Congratulations to all members of the Kiwanis Club, their president, Keith Walker, and their president-elect, Michael Donlevy, for a job well done. Red Deer is truly grateful for all that you have done over the past 50 years and all that you continue to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to move that the written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise again pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 210

Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001

[Debate adjourned November 13: Mr. Cenaiko speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the coming years families and, specifically, taxpayers will have to choose to travel down one of two roads to help decide the future of their loved ones: one leading to in-home care and one toward a provincial group home facility. Families will have to make the decision to either find new living arrangements in a group facility or change their own lifestyles to accommodate taking relatives into their homes.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I'm happy to acknowledge that Alberta's housing facilities continue to provide essential services to assist everyday living for their clients. Alberta offers many different programs and services that provide different levels of care for dependent adults. I'm confident that all of the government-funded facilities provide their clients with the highest level of care and safety possible, but sometimes people don't want to move into these facilities. They feel that some of their freedom is taken away, and they're right. Living in a facility often includes living by a common set of rules and guidelines for the whole group. Group facilities tend to not be as individual specific as other alternatives, including in-home care. I also appreciate the fact that some people may have no choice but to move into group facilities. But I wonder: if healthy, independent seniors were given the choice, would they want to live in a group facility, or would they prefer in-home care? I believe that most people wish to be with their family, in their community, under their own roof.

Mr. Speaker, seniors today are much different than they were in the last century. They're living longer and enjoying better physical and mental condition than previous generations. I have noticed that all signs point to the fact that seniors will enjoy a healthier economic situation. Some people will only require basic service, not justifying the cost of living in public facilities or the cost to our health care system. In light of these situations families choose to come together and agree that the best place for dependent adults is at home as part of the family unit. This is a big decision that will be made many more times in the future.

However, there are important advantages and drawbacks. One key advantage includes keeping families together so everyone can share the love and support that cannot be found in a group facility. Staying at home lets people enjoy the highest and safest level of independence possible. The dependent adults can set most of their own living standards, which would go a long way to help people keep their self-respect.

Let's also remember the importance of having more adults at home. Two-income households, for example, could benefit from someone else completing light duties. Most dependent adults would be more than willing and able to help out around the house as this will give them dignity, value, and inclusion with the family. The fact that our population is aging doesn't mean that they cannot be vital members of society, their community, and their family. They can still be role models and can be another caring adult for young people to listen to and to seek advice from.

Another advantage of bringing other members into the home is that it alleviates stress off the health care system. In 1998 there were approximately 7,000 people who utilized the in-home care and dependant tax credits for dependent adults. As our population ages, Alberta will need this number to grow. We need more people to take care of others to prevent the province from being collectively loaded down by this large aging demographic.

One of the major drawbacks of in-home care is burnout related to taking care of another dependant. More and more families are two-income homes, and adding care for another person adds pressure to an already stressful lifestyle, but I think that the combination of medical breakthroughs and better living habits mean that in the future dependent adults will require less care, which will make in-home care more of an option. I predict that as our population ages, the number of families extending their arm to dependent relatives will grow if we encourage them to do so.

By raising the level of the current tax credits, this bill will encourage and reward families for looking after their own. This bill will benefit the health care system by preventing an overload of dependent adults on the existing care facilities. According to Stats Canada, by the year 2016 14 and a half percent of Alberta's population will be over the age of 65. In the next couple of decades this province will experience a sharp spike in age as a large number of Albertans move into the senior demographic. Bill 210 encourages family members to share the responsibility of caring for aging and dependent adults and relatives.

Mr. Speaker, we must remember the number of services needed to take care of someone who can't take care of themselves. Each person will require different levels of care. However, if more families help out, they'll be able to provide more individual-specific care.

Right now there is an unprecedented level of family caregiving, and I don't believe that our health care system could endure the large number of dependent adults without it. Furthermore, their importance will increase as Alberta's population ages. We will need more home care providers. The days of sending parents to a retirement home are quickly becoming a thing of the past. Home care is expensive but crucial to the future wealth of Alberta. We need to think of solutions to keep people in their community while providing them with a safe level of independence. This bill is an inexpensive alternative to provincial facilities.

Seniors are not the only group of dependent adults covered by these tax credits. According to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, a dependent adult is anyone over the age of 18 who "is dependent on the individual because of that . . . person's mental or physical infirmity." This opens the door for people to care for adults with physical afflictions including Down's syndrome and multiple sclerosis. The importance of the tax credit is to help with costs associated with taking care of these people. For example, if the dependent adult must use a wheelchair, then the caregiver may need to complete renovations to their home to make it more wheelchair accessible.

By alleviating pressure on the health care system, the promotion of in-home care will save affordable and subsidized housing for other people who need it. This bill supports families taking the initiative to keep their family together and assist dependent adults as their needs change. I believe that families would not trust strangers to offer the best care possible, but they would seize the opportunity to protect and provide the best level of safety and care for their loved ones. All of these points support the idea of keeping people out of the system and with their families. The risks of living with alternative care are not as dramatic as they used to be.

Mr. Speaker, think for a moment about the numerous costs involved in expanding the number of facilities to prepare for the stress on the health care system. It would cost this province millions just to construct more group care facilities, and then we should look at the additional costs of staffing and maintenance of the expansive system. Think of this bill like balancing a scale. One side of the scale includes the group home facilities, our aging population, and a longer life expectancy for seniors now and in the future. This side of the scale is quickly getting heavier and heavier with issues relating to our large aging population. However, the other side of the scale is the dependent adults who want to maintain a level of independence by living in their community in the home of a loved one. This side of the scale also includes people who currently care for dependent adults. The people on this side need more encouragement to continue their commitment to their family, because, as stated before, I don't think our health care system could survive without them. If we want to balance care for dependent adults in Alberta, then we must shift some of the weight off the health care system and slowly and safely place it on the family's desire to care for dependent adults.

Right now there's an unprecedented number of home care providers. This bill will encourage and reward more people to do the same and balance the scale for caring for dependent Albertans. This bill seeks to increase nonrefundable tax credits and not hand out money in return for caring for dependent adults or relatives. Every year a home care provider will be able to ease their financial burden from expenses associated with caring for another adult.

Some might say that Bill 210 is paying people for something they should be doing in the first place. Why should we entice people to care for loved ones? Why can't they do this on their own? It's important to remember that Bill 210 is not paying people to take care of dependent adults. Just as in-home care alleviates pressures on the health care system, these tax credits offset some of the costs of having to care for someone who cannot fully care for themselves. This tax credit increase will help encourage in-home care and increase the level of independence for vulnerable adults. We are not paying Albertans for family obligations. Bill 210 simply sweetens the pot rather than shuffling loved ones onto the state.

These tax credits are in place right now and have been utilized by Albertans for years. If we didn't have in-home care or incentives encouraging alternatives to group care, there would be an unbearable stress on Alberta's health care system. However, Bill 210 will continue to help the health care system. Although there are many existing programs and services available to seniors and dependent adults, I believe that this government still needs to plan for an aging population. Let's acknowledge and encourage in-home care and prepare for the future. Boosting the level of the in-home and dependent tax credits proposed in Bill 210 will help us do that.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I notice that we have been joined by a good friend of mine, a good friend of our caucus and certainly our party. He and his family are proof that Red Deer and central Alberta is a thriving hotbed of Liberal support, and we appreciate all the good work he does there. I would ask my good friend David Pimm to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to participate in the debate on Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001. Before I go any further with my remarks, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this bill forward and for his thoughtful remarks. This is, in my view, overdue legislation. There are many, many ways, I think, that this Assembly can provide better care for Alberta's seniors. This may be a pleasant start. There has been much discussion in the past about the whole idea of providing home care for seniors. An incentive such as this amendment to the Personal Income Tax Act is noteworthy. It certainly is a change of direction in this province and, I believe, in this country.

As we progress with the debate in the Assembly regarding this bill, I will be interested to note and keen to listen to see if there are any comparisons made between what is currently being done, as my research indicates, in Italy, where there is a similar program or tax incentives to look after family members who are in the category of being seniors. As far as I know, it is working well. I would be interested to know from the hon. member if he has had a discussion, Mr. Speaker, with anyone regarding what the Japanese are doing. The nation of Japan has a very high number of seniors, and they're working through that in some innovative ways. I think – and I've said this before – that it would be prudent use of tax dollars in this province if there was to be a committee struck to study how the Japanese and their government are working to care properly for their senior population.

Now, the hon. member spoke and I believe he said, Mr. Speaker, that in the year 2016 14 percent of the population of this province would be over the age of 65, and that is absolutely true. Currently the population in this province that is over 65 is about 10 percent, and we are the youngest province in Canada. It amazes me the alarm that the current government uses whenever they say that the costs of health care are skyrocketing because we have an aging crisis. We do not have an aging crisis in this province.

Currently B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba all have populations of seniors. Those are people over age 65. Their current percentage is 14 percent, and they're managing very, very well. They're not talking about dismantling their public health care system because there are too many seniors: we can't cope; we don't have the dollars. There is no discussion of that. So we have to be very, very careful whenever we use the figure of 14 percent. Other jurisdictions – there was laughter over across the way – also have populations that are greater than 14 percent, and one would be the state of Florida.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when you have support programs such as this, as the hon. member has suggested, how is this credit to be administered? Obviously the hon. member has put a lot of thought into this. My question – and again, hopefully in the process of this debate my questions will be answered – would be: can I receive some form of home care at the same time as I receive this tax credit if this bill were to become the law? How many dependants or relatives can one household look after? Is there going to be a limit on that? These are questions that need to be answered.

When we look at home care, we need to look not only at tax incentives. With due respect to the hon. Member for Highwood, there has to be more than the persons in care act. In my view that's a good start, but we need stronger legislation. How could Bill 210 provide assurances that seniors who are living with relatives are being looked after? There is the potential here for abuse. Again, the question has to be addressed in this Assembly, and I'm sure the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has a thoughtful response on this, because in the drafting of the legislation I'm sure that's one of the questions that they thought about.

Now, while I personally am supportive of tax credits for people taking care of relatives or other dependants over the age of 18 unable to care for themselves, there are issues, again, surrounding the care of seniors and people with disabilities that need to be addressed beyond just a tax credit for caregivers. There are many, many issues. We're going to amend two sections of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, which deals with a tax credit for in-home care of a relative. We're also going to deal with a tax credit for caring for someone over age 18 who is unable to care for themselves.

I have some questions – and I believe we'll deal with this at committee, Mr. Speaker – and that's on how this tax credit will affect income support programs. Whether it's the Alberta seniors' benefit or it's a support program that's administered by the federal government, we have to address this issue. But first I think we need to take some time. Certainly there are going to be people who are perhaps eligible for or clients of the AISH program. Now, when we are talking about taking care of people who are unable to take care of themselves, generally everyone, I believe, would be supportive of greater tax credits for those people. However, there are issues there, again, that need to be addressed.

Now, the question comes to my mind: instead of an increase in the tax credit, what about an increase in the amount of support that dependent people receive from AISH? AISH benefits, as all hon. members know, are for people who are unable to support themselves because they have a physical or mental condition that is permanent and there is no remedial therapy that will change that condition. For those people who are living with relatives or perhaps with parents, then Bill 210 is going to have a significant impact on their lives.

The AISH benefit, depending upon who you talk to, is set at about $850 per month, and this is by government regulation. Give or take – it depends on who you talk to, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre points out – there are 25,000 Albertans receiving AISH. [interjection] I can see that the hon. Member for St. Albert is very anxious to participate in this debate, and I will welcome her comments.

In the spring of 1999 – and the hon. Member for St. Albert surely remembers this – the disabled community heavily lobbied the government for changes to the AISH regulations. Now, I'm sure that this bill, Bill 210, is not a response to that lobby. There were significant changes as a result proposed in the fall of 1999, October to be exact. However, changes to the level of AISH funding are long overdue. People on AISH have been left behind as inflation has eroded their income over the years. In fact, in the last decade the consumer price index has increased by 20 percent, and certainly there has not been a corresponding increase in AISH benefits in that period of time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm curious, again to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, if groups such as the Alberta Association for Community Living have had any discussions with that member regarding his legislative proposal. I would also be curious to see if any of the Calgary group home care providers and the regional health authorities had any input into this legislation. Certainly there could be a reduction in costs. Again I think of the CHOICE program, which I'm certain is also being provided by the Calgary regional health authority. It's a successful program in the Capital region for the health authority. This program allows people who are living independently in their own homes to be transported by DATS up to five days a week under physician's care to a location where they receive therapy, they receive a noon meal, their medication is monitored, and they can have a nap in the afternoon. They can do this up to five days a week under physician's care. If one of my constituents was involved in that program and they were living with their son, hypothetically, and daughter-in-law and this bill was law, how would that affect the eligibility of citizens who were being provided with day programs, or in this case the family members, for this tax credit? That is another question that I have in regards to this bill.

Bill 210 overall, when we think of home care and what the author is attempting to do, I think is notable, and I think it is worthy of study and is also worthy of support.

Now, we all know what seniors have done in this province. They built this province, and many of them feel that their government has forgotten them. Our seniors raised families, they worked the land, they built our cities, and they expanded our economy and kept our communities strong. Alberta is strong and independent today because of their work, and we cannot forget them. This initiative, this legislative initiative as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I think is a recognition of their hard work and their commitment. It is not a recognition of the need to improve our legislation to ensure that there is a level playing field for all home care providers in this province, but perhaps that will be the next step because certainly we need to ensure that if a senior enters any form of care, whether it's in the home, whether it's home and then going to a program such as CHOICE, or whether it is in a lodge, there have to be minimum standards. There have to be, and everyone must abide by those standards. It's up to the government to do that, to provide that and to regulate it, not only regulate it but be willing to regulate it, and if there are violations, let the courts deal with it.

This legislation as proposed by this hon. member is a recognition of the respect that our seniors deserve, and it is an alternative that has to be looked at closely. In closing, I would encourage all hon. members to have a good look at this legislation, and I believe that it is worthy of support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and speak in support of Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, sponsored by my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo. At the outset I think we all need to be mindful of the fact that this is not a government bill. Bill 210 is a private member's public bill, not a government bill. Bill 210 will amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act to allow for a greater tax exemption for individuals who are caring for dependent or adult relatives in their home. This bill will ensure that there is equality between the spousal dependent credit and the in-home care of relatives credit. This will allow families to more easily be able to become caregivers, as they are the ones who usually take the responsibility and bear the subsequent financial burden.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, there is a large disparity between two tax credits. The spousal credit is to a maximum of $12,900, while the in-home care of a relative credit is to a maximum of only $3,500. By raising the in-home care credit, the possible financial burdens of an adult who doesn't bring substantial resources into the household will thereby be alleviated.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's elderly population grows. An increasing number of elderly people will be looking to family and friends for care. It is traditional in our society that the caregivers for the elderly are primarily their children, but because the average family size has been decreasing since the baby boom years, elderly people will have fewer children on whom they can depend for care. This means that the children will have less choice and support in caregiving. The family size has declined over recent years because it is more common that a family needs two wage earners to make ends meet. This trend toward a dual wage earning family probably will not be reversed and now is about 70 percent.

A single provider can no longer seem to earn a wage sufficient to support the number of financial dependants as generations did before. It is said that seven out of 10 couples raising children today now rely on two wages to make ends meet. This being the case, it raises concerns about the ability of the family to support and care for an elderly dependant. It also raises concerns about the availability of family caregivers both now and in the future.

By raising the in-home care of a relative or dependent adult tax credit, it will alleviate somewhat the financial burden that is met by the informal caregivers, which in turn could alleviate the problem of availability of homes. The elderly we are referring to here today are not being cared for because they are unable to do it themselves. No. We are talking about an elderly parent who moves in with one of their children after the spouse has died or because they are lonely. The elderly relative is still somewhat independent and may choose to live with a child or near relative for convenience, companionship, and comfort.

Bill 210 reduces the financial burden that a dependent adult might give or place on a caregiver. The current amount of $3,500 that can be claimed does not seem to be nearly enough. Costs incurred are most likely much more than that in any given year, and the deduction should reflect this. It is natural for certain costs to be incurred, and by raising the maximum that can be claimed, we could allow for more people to bring in a loved one with less financial worry than they would have had under the current tax provisions; for instance, where the dependent adult is terminally ill and strongly desires to stay at home. Therefore, it must be recognized that the economic burden of caregiving is significant. This burden includes direct out-of-pocket expenses and sometimes lost wages when time is taken off work. Bill 210 will give some caregivers the chance to recoup some of these costs and thereby recognize their contribution to the individual and to our society.

Informal caregivers are vital to enable elderly parents or relatives who wish to remain at home to stay at home. The informal caregiver will be the primary person taking care of the elderly person. When it becomes too much of a financial burden for a family to take in an elderly relative, our hospitals, nursing homes, lodges may become overloaded with residents, patients before the seniors actually require acute care. Home care is increasingly needed as the overall population of Alberta ages. Statistics Canada predicts that by the end of 2025 18 percent of the population will be over the age of 65. That's nearly double what it is today. These numbers show that the percentage of elderly in Alberta will continue to rise. Most of the elderly will want to have a choice in whether or not they can have access to home care in their home or in the home of a relative.

The in-home care of a relative tax credit has been around for a number of years. Having the tax credit encourages people to care for an aging relative. As mentioned, caring for a relative can be very difficult. It depends on the status of the dependent adult. If it is too costly to take in family members, seniors will then be trying to get into places like seniors' homes, lodges, and long-term care facilities. This will put an extreme amount of pressure on these institutions, and the demand will be so great that society will have difficulty helping everyone in need.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that cannot be left to the last minute. In the next 10 to 15 years we will have a large increase in the number of elderly people as the baby boomers become seniors and demand that they have access to seniors' homes. We need to make it as attractive as possible for people to take these elderly relatives in. The Impact of Aging Albertans study that was completed in 1999 showed that seniors are in higher percentages in rural communities. As we age, this statistic will no doubt increase. So Camrose, Stettler, Hanna, to name but a few communities, boast senior populations of almost 20 percent, which is twice the provincial average. Calgary and Edmonton have 11 percent and 8.9 percent respectively. With the percentage of seniors rising and becoming more concentrated in the rural communities, home care must be strongly emphasized to the families in these regions. This is because there are not enough seniors' homes for the elderly to go to when the demand increases.

Bill 210 is important not only to the families who are the caregivers but also to the seniors who will want to stay out of places like nursing homes because they can feel personally more comfortable living with their family or a family. Seniors will not necessarily want to move out of their small communities to larger centres because in a sense there's no room at the inn in their community. They live in smaller communities because it's a slower pace for them and it's where they want to be. They want to stay because this is where the family lives. By passing Bill 210, we give families more incentive to be able to care for a loved one in their own home, keeping them as close as possible to be part of the family. Having seniors remain with family and friends for as long as possible allows the seniors' homes to be left for the elderly who do not have any family or friends to be with or who require a level of care that cannot easily be provided in a home. The tax credit will indirectly allow for pressure to be relieved from these institutions that are built to accommodate seniors. It will then be more affordable for the family to care for a loved one.

A report such as the Broda report on the impact of aging makes recommendations to do things similar to what this private member's public bill, Bill 210, is proposing. To wit, recommendation 44 of the Broda report advises that there will be support for informal caregivers. Bill 210 is a step in that direction. Increasing the tax credit ensures that the caregiver has the monetary support to accommodate a senior adult. By passing Bill 210, we will be addressing the concerns of the informal caregivers who feel that the expenses are too great to take care of a loved one.

Mr. Speaker, there are countless stories about the nonmonetary benefits that may be gained by caring for a loved one. To start with, an elder being asked and deciding to live with one of their children or a near relative after a spouse has passed away: during this time, the elder can spend more time with the children of the family who, in turn, will learn much from the older family member about other family members, be it a grandparent or a great-grandparent. Bill 210 promotes this arrangement.

By increasing the tax credit, more people will be able to lessen their costs of caring for a loved one and gain advantages from having them live within the family. For the elderly the gain of having a loving family and familiar surroundings with the added benefits of being part of raising young children has untold rewards of the heart. Years ago it was commonplace for the elderly to live with their children when they were not comfortable living by themselves. The family was much closer, and I believe it can be fostered today. This proposed tax credit takes the steps to give families a chance to get back to the closeness that was once very common in our society.

I urge all hon. members to support Bill 210, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001. I think this is quite a reasonable proposal put forward, because as the previous speaker has outlined, we certainly are coming to better understand the needs and respect that are due to an aging population. But more than that, I think that when you are talking about dependants, you can be talking about anyone who is over 18 and is dependent on others for their care. So this is more than just an issue around care for aging parents. This could be, in fact, care for adult children.

My experience has been that those families who can through their circumstances look after family members at home will do so, but the break point for them is not so much resources, as the previous speaker said, but the amount of support that's available to them. That's including things like respite care and housekeeping services and counseling services, et cetera.

We also have to recognize that there are families in this day and age who can't care for dependent adults in their home. For example, those of us who are in here have been elected by our constituencies to come here every day and do a certain job, and it would be very difficult for us to turn around and say: sorry; can't do this for the next couple of years; I have to take care of a dependent parent or a dependent child. So we have to recognize that we need both kinds of care in the home, both the home care offered by the government through the regional health authorities and the home care that's offered by family members themselves.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think there certainly need to be more resources available to people if we are going to have family members caring for them. I have one constituent who is almost at their wit's end because they are looking after a dependent adult. A great deal of care and monitoring needs to be paid to this person, and therefore the caregiver, in this case the family member, hasn't been able to hold down a full-time job. This person was willing to do that, was willing to give up their employment to care for their family member, but at this point they're looking to the future and saying: well, I really need to retrain now into a different job market; I can't go back into the one I was in. They're trying to go to university and upgrade their skills and qualifications and are really struggling to get the support to do that.

So here is someone who's sacrificed a great deal, I think, certainly in my terms and I'm sure in many other people's terms, to offer home care to a dependent adult, but then when they reach out and ask for help and say, "Okay; I can't do it by myself anymore; I do need some assistance here," there seems to be a real struggle to get it. So while moving an income tax credit from a $3,500 range to a $12,900 range is certainly significant and I'm sure would be very helpful to many people, that doesn't cover the lack of other resources that are not there for people.

I think we need to expand upon the idea that's been put forward by the member sponsoring this bill. We certainly understand from all of the statistics that are available that caring for someone in their home in an aging-in-place scenario is much more cost-effective to society as a whole. It's less disruptive to the individual that's involved because as they feel less well, they're not being constantly moved to a different place.

Certainly I look at what happened to my grandmother. As she got older and frailer, she kept getting moved, upgraded or downgraded, depending on how you look at it, to a different facility. So as she was less able to cope with those changes around her, that's when she got moved more often. I think that in the end does a lot of people in. They just can't cope with the changes. Nothing is where they think it is. The people that they knew are not around them anymore. The staff are different. The hours and the decor and everything is different for them. It's very difficult.

So right now we have a system that is double sided, if you like. We have a system that's offering home care through the Capital health authority, and we have this system that we've been talking about under Bill 210, which is a family member caring for a dependent adult and as a result being eligible to receive an income tax credit.

Perhaps the member can answer a question. Is it automatic that they would receive the full amount of the credit, or is there a possibility that this is on some kind of sliding scale? Is there room for someone to have discretion in how much the credit is? If so, who is the person who has discretion? If those questions could be answered by one of the following speakers under the advisement of the sponsor of the bill, that would be helpful.

I also want to note the changes in institutional care, because I think it affects the care that we're talking about here, which is the care by a family member in their own home. Right now we have a system which I think is under stress. The deal was that we were going to restructure the health care system but that all of these other community resources would be pumped up to pick up the slack, so to speak. Certainly there was an increase in home care dollars but nowhere near the level that was needed to adequately support these programs given the additional pressure that's been put on them.

We have a situation – this has been brought to my attention a couple of times in the last few months – where people who are qualifying for government home care or Capital health authority home care are being told that there's an automatic four-week wait, and I've been told that this is now a six-week wait before they will actually receive care. I think to myself: well, how are they supposed to get the care for those intervening four or six weeks? If they were in a position where they needed the home care through the Capital health authority, then I'm venturing to say that there isn't a family member about that's able to help them. That's why they qualified for home care under the government.

I think that this is serious. Is it an attempt to shift more of the onus onto the families by making it that much more difficult to get the institutionalized home care or the government-sponsored home care? Somebody is going to have to be picking up the workload for those people qualifying for that home care but not able to get it for six weeks. That's a long time for somebody that's having difficulty walking or having difficulty dressing or getting confused about taking their medication. Six weeks is an awfully long time, so of course someone has to fill in the gap. If family members are not available – and often they're not – then we've got neighbours and, well, in some cases aged friends or other friends that themselves similarly have other mobility problems, and we're leaning on them to do it.

You know, I spend time in my seniors' residences every fall talking about the legislation that was introduced in the spring and what's going to come forward in the fall, and this was brought up to me by some of the people there. They were having to sub in and help some of the other people that were living in this residence. So I hope I'm not seeing a move from government to push people off the home care available through government funding and into more of this family care, because frankly I don't think we can depend on it. You can't assume that that family member is always available. In pushing them into any family care, I think we run the risk of putting people at risk, and we need to be careful of that.

This has been an interesting proposal brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo and I think a good one. Certainly it will help those people that already have enough money and enough resources and enough support systems around them to be able to care for a dependent adult in their own home. I don't know how many people that's going to affect. How many people can afford to have someone stay home or maybe have the only working person in fact not work and stay home to care for a dependent adult? I'm wondering if the sponsoring member did any research on that to find out how many people were likely to be using this tax credit.

Interestingly, I'm wondering if there has been any follow-through in establishing a performance measurement. This is forgone revenue. As soon as you say that it's a tax credit, it's forgone revenue. That's money the government doesn't get to collect. In every other instance where we're talking about expenditure of government money, there are to be performance measurements and targets put in place. The government appears to do that, although I'll argue with their performance measurements, but that's another time.

Here's an instance where what's being recommended is an $8,000 difference in lost revenue that's not going to be coming to the government. How many people is this going to be affecting? More to the point, what is the expected outcome? What are we expecting to save? What is the target for all of this? By what measurement do we know that this was a successful program? It's one thing to stand here and go: gee, that sounds like a great idea, a warm fuzzy feeling; let's go for it. But this is 2001. Where is the responsible look at how the program actually performs? What kinds of measurements have been put in place to decide that it was a good deal, that the people of Alberta got good value for money by forgoing this revenue? I'm not seeing any indication of that going along with this nor in the comments that I've heard prior to this. So I'm interested in what the government and government members and other private members have to say about the forgone revenue and what they actually expect to achieve by putting this tax credit into place.

You know, we are talking about money. When the bill was introduced, there were comments made about how the Lieutenant Governor had been notified, as is appropriate when we're talking about a money bill. I think people forget that when you're talking about a tax credit or a rebate or a refund, you in fact are talking about revenue the government doesn't take in. [interjection] Well, there's an awfully long list of forgone revenues that this government is involved in, and none of them seem to have any kind of performance measurement.

So here's where you could start out. You could look at this bill and come up with what you expect the performance measurements to be. What kind of output do you expect from this? What do you expect to achieve by putting this program in place? What does that $8,000 per person get us? I think it's appropriate to say that it gets us a better society. You know, get your performance measurements in place and then measure them. Then you can come back to us and tell us whether this in fact worked. But I think there's too much, "Well, it sounds like a good idea." What do you guys call it? Blue skying. You like to blue sky stuff a lot, and this looks a bit blue sky to me too. So what's behind this? Let's see the financial responsibility that goes along with this. [interjections] Oh, I'm getting members of the backbench here all excited. They're going to leap to their feet and debate this bill right after me. I will be an old woman before that ever happens. [interjections] Yeah. Always nice to see government backbenchers not debating bills.

So those are the comments that I wanted to bring forward around this bill. It is about examining whether we, in putting this in place or using it as an incentive to people, are putting the right program into place to assist those people that are trying to provide in-home care for dependent adults. Is this the right way to do it? We also have to balance that, I think, by looking at the home care provisions that are funded by the government now and whether there's a possibility that it's perhaps a deliberate move by the government – many of their social programs are hidden behind economic agendas, so perhaps that's what's going on here; I don't know – to move people off regional health authority funded home care and into having family members care for dependent adults.

Lastly, a look at what performance measurements are expected. How do we tell that this bill or this idea in fact was successful? What performance measurements are in place to tell us what our $8,000 got us with this program?

So I'm looking forward to hearing the sponsor of the bill or perhaps some of his colleagues. He can pass his notes and answers on to one of them, and they can stand up and answer the questions that I've brought forward.

I do appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 210 in second reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It never ceases to amaze me that with a perfectly good idea and a wonderful opportunity to encourage and enhance the quality of care, the opposition takes the opportunity to surround it with cynical negativism.

I want to rise and join the debate and speak today on Bill 210. It's a very important bill to Albertans. It will provide improvements to the quality of life of seniors, dependent adults, and their families. The focus of this particular bill is on the strength and encouragement that it is going to give to those who are middle members of the sandwich generation. By providing nonrefundable tax credits to Albertans for the care of dependent adults, we would be accomplishing two goals. The first is to reduce Alberta's tax burden, but the second is to provide equity to families who take on the responsibility of caring for the elderly or infirm in their family.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has shown its commitment to lifting the tax burden off families, and we have done so in a very fair and equitable manner for all Albertans. The flat tax along with the increase of the basic personal and spousal exemptions have removed more than 200,000 Albertans from the tax rolls altogether. The taxes in Alberta for all income levels are by far the lowest of all Canadian provinces and even undercut those of many of the American states. So taxes are far more than a method for government to collect revenue. Taxes or the absence of taxes provide incentives and, more often, disincentives for any variety of behaviour. It is just as important that we target our tax structure to reflect priorities as our spending decisions. We have to make judgments about which taxes are fair and where there should be tax breaks in our society, and Bill 210 does that specifically.

I believe that providing tax breaks to individuals who take care of our elderly and dependent adults is a good solution to many of the challenges facing Alberta today. I think that the benefits would far outweigh any losses in revenue, and quite frankly I ask the question not rhetorically but specifically: how can you measure the quality of life and the familial setting that individuals would experience should they be able to have their income recognized by a tax break as they care for their elderly?

Providing a nonrefundable tax credit to families that take on the responsibility of caring for the elderly and dependent adults will propel Alberta in a direction of family-oriented and community-oriented housing. Families will be better equipped to pool their resources and face the challenges of providing for their extended family. Additionally, the elderly and dependent adults would have advocates living with them, caring for them, and being attentive to their needs as members of a family. The opportunities to improve the lives of our seniors as well as the families that help them find their necessities for living are substantial. Just as families will help their dependants, so too will seniors give back by contributing the wisdom of their years and their substantial skills.

Granted, this credit targets families that have taken on individuals who may not be as capable as most Albertans, but they can nevertheless contribute meaningfully to family life. Having the presence of seniors in our lives gives family a sense of timelessness and hearkens us all to imagine the times of a distant experience that we cannot fathom. It is truly a great thing to encourage this kind of interaction between seniors and their adult children and, of course, their grandchildren.

Imagine the benefits of being in the financial position to spend every day with grandchildren. This is the kind of opportunity that Bill 210 gives to Alberta seniors. And let us not forget the benefits to our children. They are just as plentiful. Youth will learn from their seniors and hear of their history and know where they come from. Having the day-to-day mentoring and the guidance of family so rich in experience and understanding can only benefit our youth.

Mr. Speaker, this is a viable alternative to care for seniors and dependent adults that would save some money too, but most of all – and I would like to emphasize this – it is an investment in the quality of intergenerational opportunity for community and familial living that we all so wish and desire.

For the better part of Alberta's history there has been some role played by government funds in the care and housing of the elderly and dependent adults, and that is as it should be. Bill 210 presents the opportunity to involve families in the care of their own elderly relatives and to an even greater degree than so many are already involved. This presents a number of positive economic trade-offs that cannot be ignored. This bill would widen the financial options for families that may be considering taking on the care of a dependent adult in their own home. The bill then can achieve the goal of providing good quality housing to more Albertans while simultaneously alleviating costs on some – and I say some – of the social housing system. This is not meant to replace our responsibility for providing independent housing for those who need care, but it is to enhance and encourage families to provide direct, immediate, and daily care for those whom they know and love within the family.

For providing shelter and services to the elderly and including them as an integral part of their families, wage earners deserve a tax break. I believe this response to be not only fair but also efficient. Bill 210 proposes that families who care for their elderly or disabled dependants be allowed to deduct $12,900 instead of the current deduction of $3,500. This shift would have an effect on the decision-making process of many Albertans in a beneficial direction. Providing a tax break for the inclusion of the elderly and dependent adults in the family unit will affect the lifestyle decisions of Albertans in a number of ways.

First, when Alberta families are encouraged to stay together, the nonmonetary but nevertheless valuable contributions of the elderly, such as child supervision, assistance with cooking, or helping around the house, would be realized to a greater degree. Therefore, this tax break will provide a venue for the elderly to maintain a productive role in our communities. Secondly, this tax structure would encourage Albertans to enjoy the company of their elderly and dependent relatives on a daily basis and to realize the intangible contributions these individuals can bring to family life.

All of these effects add up to the larger vision of rewarding Albertans for valuing seniors and their dependants. By providing the tax incentives for families to take good care of their elderly on a daily basis, we would relieve pressure on our somewhat strained in certain circumstances seniors housing market. For every family that decides that it is a good and possible, right and just thing to do to take care of their dependants and in consideration of the substantial contributions of the dependent adult, with the encouragement of a tax break all Alberta will be richer for it.

Mr. Speaker, it's an oddity of human behaviour that we sometimes are willing to spend a dime to save a nickel, especially if we are spending that dime on something we believe in. This phenomenon can be seen when observing tax deductions for charity. There is substantial evidence to suggest that a $1 tax rebate will cause a greater than $1 increase in charitable donations. This would apply to families that want to take care of their elderly and dependent relatives as well. It is because of this beautiful aspect of human nature that we can expect that the care for seniors and dependants would be of equal or greater value to the tax dollars the province would forsake.

This is one of the greatest aspects of Bill 210. It not only contributes directly to the well-being of our seniors and dependent adults, but it also encourages families to respond directly to the challenges of these individuals. Also, this tax credit will give Alberta families the freedom to make more of the decisions about how to care for their elderly in their own homes, and many of these decisions would be guided by the seniors themselves.

With the implementation of this bill, more families would provide a familial kind of care. Families are often best equipped to know, understand, and probably share many of the likes, dislikes, habits, and activities of their own blood. An elderly father or mother would be able to share their experiences of life. Familiar domestic surroundings are often critical to the health of all of us.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 210 would foster choices among Albertans that encourage the respect and fair treatment of elders and dependent adults. Primary income earners would be assisted for taking on the responsibility of caring for their parents and relatives. These hardworking, responsible breadwinners deserve such a tax break as much as any single group of taxpayers. These are the sons and daughters who have turned around and said to their parents: thank you for being there for me; it's my turn to be there for you. These Albertans are a fine example of everything that is right about our province. We should encourage these types of living arrangements, not exclusively but as a matter of choice, and we should reward those who take the care of the elderly upon their shoulders. Indeed, the inclusion of the elderly in our community, on our streets, and in our homes would promote a lifestyle for all intergenerational concerns more focused on family. It would demonstrate values to our youth. Alberta would demonstrate that we value families, and this would be modeled far more frequently to our youth.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I think that each and every one of us in this Assembly . . . No, I can't. I'm assured that many of you can recount how an elderly family member shaped your development for the better. Some of us did not know our grandparents; some of us did not have our parents live to be elderly, so we don't have this experience. I can only imagine that for most of us this would be, indeed, a rich opportunity. This bill will provide the means to bring seniors close to the youth of this province and closer to the families they helped build.

I would genuinely like to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing forth this bill. It can accomplish so much for Alberta families by fostering a win/win relationship between the elderly and their children and their children's children. I encourage all members of this Assembly to cast aside any negative thoughts about negative implications of the implementation of this bill and instead to embrace it and vote for it, because the member from Calgary who brought this forward is cognizant of the fact that we need to provide choice for so many of our taxpayers and give them a tax break in order to let it happen for an extended, intergenerational family circumstance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to Bill 210, the home care and dependant tax credit act. I am in full agreement with the intent of this bill. I believe that the way in which a government acts towards its elderly and dependent citizens, the most vulnerable members of our society, measures the quality of that government. This bill seeks to improve the well-being of Alberta's elderly and dependent people by allowing them to live in the comfort of loved ones' homes. Although we hardly need studies to prove it, there has been a tremendous amount of research demonstrating the many benefits of allowing elderly and dependent relatives to stay with families. It is a living arrangement that this government should attempt to encourage and accommodate to the greatest extent possible.

After saying this, Mr. Speaker, as much as I agree with the intent of the bill, I find myself concerned with some of its implied method. There are two major concerns I wish to address this afternoon. First, I am not fully convinced that tax incentive is the most responsible way to provide families who keep their relatives and dependants at home with income relief. For several reasons I believe it could be better to provide this type of relief directly to the family through a grant rather than through the tax system.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I am worried that the bill attempts to address very real needs with somewhat arbitrary remedies. Proposing that nonrefundable tax deductions be set at the same level for family dependants as for spouses certainly promotes some degree of equality, but I am not sure it is necessarily the right monetary figure for dependants. There has to be some relationship to the nondiscretionary costs that the credit is intended to alleviate.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to expand for a minute on why I agree with the fundamental intent of this bill. Over the past few generations in North America and indeed much of the western world there has been a trend towards involving elderly family members less and less within the family. Community care centres and senior citizens' homes, where our aged are somewhat more isolated from their homes and families, have become increasingly common. This is not necessarily a bad thing. Group homes do offer a camaraderie for people of similar age and interests that is not easy to obtain from being at individual homes with younger families, but the benefits for elderly and family dependants of being taken care of at a home with family members are enormous.

Living at home, elderly people can interact on a regular basis with people of the younger generation. They are surrounded by youth and activity. They are encouraged and inspired to fulfill the potential of their minds and bodies, a potential that even the elderly people themselves sometimes considerably underestimate. Just talking with people of a different age, seeing their smile, and feeling their genuine compassion can improve quality of life substantially for the elderly or dependent person. Having elderly or dependent relatives at home can also improve the lives of other members of the home. It relieves the emotional burden of having someone you care for go to institutional care.

It provides an opportunity to learn a considerable amount about life that might otherwise be missed. Our elderly are unmatched fountains of knowledge. They can offer us insight gained from years of experience in developing our set of values and in understanding our history. They give us a better sense of where they came from and who we are. The better we come to know and understand our elderly, the stronger our entire community becomes. By encouraging the elderly to be taken care of at home, we are encouraging more intimate bonds to be developed with parents and grandparents, allowing for this passage of knowledge from generation to generation to flourish.

Encouraging home-based care also makes financial sense, as many of my colleagues have pointed out this afternoon. Certainly, providing a financial incentive for families to keep elderly and dependent family members at home will cost Alberta, but the gains will likely be made back many times over by the savings from reduced volumes of patients at extended care centres. In addition to sometimes offering better health delivery, home-based health care is often significantly less expensive.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a few statistics here this afternoon that suggest that some form of financial support would indeed be necessary to encourage family members to provide home-based care for elderly and dependent family members. A comprehensive study done in the United States by the Bureau of National Affairs found that 77 percent of employed women who provide care for aging parents reported a conflict between caregiving and work demands. This is no wonder, since a report from the same source found that 80 percent of caregiving families provide caregiving between four and six hours a day seven days a week. Surely if this burden were somewhat recognized with some form of financial assistance, families would be more able to provide home care for their elderly relatives and dependants.

Given these many good reasons for promoting home-based health delivery, it is little wonder, then, that the Long-term Care Review Policy Advisory Committee's final report, referred to by many this afternoon as the Broda report, made as its first recommendation that support for home care services be increased so more people can receive the care they need at home rather than at facilities.

Mr. Speaker, you can see that I am fully in support of the intent of this bill. Alleviating the financial strain of caregiving families who seek to keep elderly and dependent relatives at home provides immense therapeutic benefits to the elderly and allows for the younger caregiving generation to gain a better grasp of tradition and values. Encouraging home-based health delivery might also save the province money in the long run.

But once again I do have to mention that I have some serious reservations about some of the details suggested in Bill 210. First, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that this bill seeks to deliver financial assistance to caregiving families in the form of a nonrefundable tax credit. I believe it would be simpler and more fair to provide this assistance directly. Essentially, providing a tax credit is exactly the same as providing direct financial assistance to caregivers in terms of the dollars spent by the Alberta government. Whether the gain to home caregivers shows up as a tax credit or as some form of monthly support, the cost will be the same to the provincial government. By delivering the support as direct cash payments, however, there are many advantages to home caregivers and to the province as a whole. With Alberta's new flat tax system many families that earn below $27,000 pay no provincial tax at all. Thus caregiving families that earn below this value of income would not be eligible for the nonrefundable tax credit. If, on the other hand, families were provided with cash assistance, this barrier would not prevent families earning less than $27,000 some form of compensation.

As well, providing a cash incentive is more transparent than a tax credit. This means that spending can be better contained and there would be better discretion and flexibility. The government would have better accountability of how much money it is spending, and recipients of financial assistance would have a better grasp of how much they are receiving. This improves the efficiency of the program for everyone.

My second objection, Mr. Speaker, is that it is unclear that there has been analysis done to arrive at a figure of $12,900 as an appropriate level of support for caregiving families. It seems that the only reason this figure was chosen is because it matches the level of nonrefundable tax credits currently provided for spouses. The level of support for spouses was decided upon after an evaluation of the financial burden of a non income-earning spouse. It takes into account issues such as food and housing costs. Granted the value of $12,900 is by no means entirely accurate, as in different areas of the province the cost of living is sure to fluctuate, even though the value of the tax credit does not. But the value has been researched to be at least proportional to the cost of living, and it fluctuates with this cost. For instance, the value of the spousal tax credit only became $12,900 on January 1 of this year, 2001, following a decision that the cost of living had substantially increased.

My concern is that the cost of providing care at home for dependent relatives and the elderly may be quite a different level than the spousal credit limit provides for. The elderly and dependants probably require more capital expenditures than middle-aged spouses. Inevitably with age comes increased risk to health concerns. Wheelchairs and the infrastructure to accommodate wheelchairs, products to ease mobility within the home, uncovered health care expenditures like some prescription medicines and special diets are all some very real expenditures that might be expected for the elderly or dependants. This is, of course, in addition to the many hours devoted family members commit to the person through feeding them, clothing them, and giving them appropriate levels of love and affection. These are hours forfeited from income-generating work. As mentioned, these hours can accumulate to become quite a large cost. The support that is given to caregiving families must reflect the cost of providing that care. Without appropriate research to make an accurate estimate, potential caregiving families may be provided with substantially less or potentially more than might be necessary to make home care a realistic option. This would undermine the very worthy intent of this bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will reiterate that I am strongly in support of the intent of this bill. This province and indeed this country could and should do much more to encourage elderly and related dependants to stay with relatives. The benefits are enormous in terms of building stronger families and communities and in saving health care costs. I am afraid, however, that I believe this bill needs to undergo some revision before it should be passed by this Assembly.

I believe we should investigate the possible alternatives in lieu of tax credit because it would be simpler and more fair. As well, I believe the value of whatever form of compensation is provided should be looked at more closely. Rather than merely imitating the spousal tax credit, it should be researched independently to reflect the true cost of providing home care for elderly and dependent relatives and the impact this credit will have on provincial revenues.

Bill 210 brings forward a quality idea. I believe, however, it would be most appropriate if the concerns that I raised are further investigated, and this could be brought forward with changes in the future, enabling it to fulfill its intent more equitably and more efficiently.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to respond to Bill 210. I came into the Assembly this afternoon thinking that I had conditional support for this bill, but after listening to a number of private members who sit to the right of me speaking on this bill, I've nearly changed my mind. I think that there are . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Everybody sits to the right.

MS CARLSON: No. There are a few on my left side.

Mr. Speaker, it's a start, you know, when they start talking about at least recognizing that there need to be some changes for people who provide care to dependent adults or relatives in their home, but the problem with the private members on my right side is that they always think the answer lies in changing the tax system. Really, that seems to miss a couple of the key issues.

I think the key issue we need to take a look at in a situation like this is: does this address the outstanding problems with caring for dependent adults in homes? The answer to that clearly is no. What changes to the tax system do is give people money at the end of the year, and it mostly isn't even money that they need. It's support. What they need when dependent adults come into the home, be they close relatives or good friends or whomever, is some help. The term is dependent adults. That means not only do they not have taxable income over a very minimum level, but they're most often dependent in other categories. They need assistance in their daily living.

So the problem for most families is that there isn't enough support in that daily living assistance. Home care we have, but it's very, very minimal in nature. It often doesn't address the key areas of need for the family. There is never enough time given to the families. We have a real problem, particularly in my constituency, of home care providers who cannot speak the language of the person they are caring for, so that creates another level of problems within the system. There isn't adequate respite care and certainly not adequate respite caregivers who speak the language of the person who needs to be cared for.

Yes, of course we want families to take care of family members. It's the first choice of dependent adults to go and stay with family members. They have a loving environment to be in. They're provided with the same kind of food that they normally would eat. Everybody speaks the same language. Extended families are always nice to have around. But the issues are that families often need help in caring for people immediately, not down the road when they file their tax return but today and tomorrow and tonight and over the weekend, because caring for dependent adults is a 24/7 job. It doesn't stop. There's very little assistance given, and there are no breaks. So does this address those outstanding issues? No. It gives them money at the end of the road.

You could say that, well, they could save that money and then pay for additional help for the family, but most families are not in that kind of a financial situation. Most families live from paycheque to paycheque, and it's a stretch. If you've got to pay up front, you've got to cut back on something else. When you're adding a person to the home who is dependent, that means financially dependent as well, and there are additional costs, not fewer costs, so it creates a great deal of stress and often hardship for the families.

I have often gone to bat for families in my community who wish to keep a loved one at home but who are just absolutely physically and mentally stretched. They'll find the money for extra food, they'll find the money for their medical needs – they can find that – but what they can't cope with is the daily pressures of having to take care of the person without ever getting a break. This bill would have been more properly brought in as assistance for these families for additional home care services. That would have really, really touched the need that's out there, Mr. Speaker.

I believe I'm going to support this bill because it is a recognition by the member who brought it forward and a partial recognition by some of those people who have spoken to the bill this afternoon of the kind of need that's out there. Perhaps this is one of those cases where we get to move two steps forward and only one back. So on that basis I will be supporting the bill, Mr. Speaker, but I would hope that this member, if this bill gets passed or even if it doesn't, will next year bring back another bill that touches on the real issues that are out there for families caring for dependent adults.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak in support of Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing forward this bill, which addresses an issue that will impact our province sooner than we realize.

Bill 210 would amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act so that those Albertans who are taking on the role of care provider for people in their lives who can no longer care for themselves will be adequately recognized and compensated under Alberta's tax structure. Currently Albertans who make career and lifestyle sacrifices to provide care for their loved ones – and this would be a very important value, I'm sure, to many of us here today – are eligible to receive one of two possible tax credits. Both of these credits are of an equal amount and in conjunction are designed to cover the spectrum of potential home care providers.

The first existing credit that I'll speak about is the in-home care of a relative credit. In the year 2000 this would provide for a tax credit of $2,386. It was subsequently increased to $3,500 in January of this year by way of Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. The increase in this credit is evidence that this government does acknowledge the important role of informal caregivers in this province, and it also shows that we as a government are willing to address this issue.

The second tax credit available for home care providers is called the dependent adult credit. As I have already mentioned, it allows for a $3,500 claim, as the in-home care credit does, and it similarly was increased to its current level by the amendment to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act in January 2001. The low level of the home care tax credits currently in place just does not seem consistent with the importance of the service these Albertans provide and will be providing to our most valuable citizens. The two credits alleviate the financial burden brought on by reduced capacity to work when individuals provide care for loved ones who can no longer care for themselves. As it stands, the two tax credit programs do not sufficiently compensate the men and women of this province who make personal sacrifices to care for the frail and elderly, and in particular I would refer to a parent or a spouse or a child even.

Bill 210 seeks to better recognize the contribution that these caring Albertans make to our province and to their loved ones. The bill proposes an increase in the tax exemption for individuals who are caring for dependent adults or relatives in their homes from its current level of $3,500 to $12,900. This increase in the home care provision tax credit will create a reduced financial burden for those Albertans who undertake the role of care provider when they are called upon by their families and friends. The increase in this credit would make the home care provider credit equal to the spousal tax credit. I think this comparison is something that can be considered as very fair.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, this government has made a great effort to communicate with Albertans about where long-term care in Alberta is at and where it should be going. We have commissioned studies concerning the effects of aging and the implications of the aging population and how as a province we would like to age. I must say that the level of response from our citizens during consultations and beyond has been very impressive. Aging is something that Albertans increasingly share concern over and care deeply about, and why not? It is always in the forefront to some degree in newspapers in Canada and around the world. Albertans are remarkably clear and uniform in their approach to aging, which we have found makes our job of representing Albertans' views much easier. Studies have shown that 90 percent of Canadians want to face the end of their lives in the comfortable surroundings of their own homes. Albertans do not deviate from the rest of Canada with respect to this matter, I can assure you. We have asked them, and they have responded with this answer that I have just described.

Currently 9.8 percent of the Alberta population is 65 and over. By the year 2016 14.5 percent of our population will be comprised of senior citizens; that's 65 and over. In this year alone 20,000 Albertans will reach retirement age. The trend is plain to see, Mr. Speaker, that as longevity becomes more prominent in this province, our government will have to respond to the needs and demands of an older population. Now – and I would have to stress this again: now – is the time to take proactive measures in this regard. We will do this province a great disservice if we wait until it is too late to implement programs and strategies to deal with the increase of seniors that we are facing in the very near future. The Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act certainly is one such way to approach this pressing matter. It will work to promote home care as an alternative to institutional care, and that is in tune with the directions, as I've said, that Albertans want to take in this province.

The volume of seniors' care that will be demanded is growing and will continue to grow in the foreseeable future. Statistics reveal that Calgary is among the top five cities in the world in terms of average longevity, so not only are there more of us getting older, but we are living longer. Now is the time to begin seriously exploring our options with regards to long-term health care and home care, before it is too late. It will be of great benefit to Albertans if there is a working plan in place when the baby boomers have retired, when they have reached retirement age. I would say that the first baby boomers will be reaching that age as early as 2001. Personally, I believe that if we put off planning for this time in this term, then we only have one short term following and then 2011 will be here.

We as a government understand that growing old is of keen interest to Albertans, and we have struck committees, as I've said, and drafted reports and strategies in response to the concerns of Albertans. For example, the aging population study which I chaired – actually the vice-chair was the Member for Leduc here today; you know, Mr. Versatile. Also, we have the Broda report. These are only two of the initiatives undertaken to understand and promote aging.

This government's aging-in-place strategy was crafted in response to the desires of Albertans to progress to the end of their lives in their homes and as functioning members of their communities for as long as possible. This plan was warmly embraced by the key stakeholders as well. With a provincial long-term care focus that moves away from institutionalization and to integration into the community, which also means towards home-based care and home-based palliative care, it's imperative that there be meaningful recognition for those who are making personal sacrifices in providing this care. Bill 210 would ensure that the acknowledgment that informal care providers deserve is most definitely afforded to them.

The Broda report, that was chaired by the hon. Member for Redwater, consists of a listing of 50 recommendations that were gathered and compiled by the long-term care review committee. The report's first recommendation states that "additional funding should be provided to address the pressing needs in continuing care," but more specifically it cites its first priority as the need to "increase support for home care services so that more [Albertans] can receive the care they need at home rather than in facilities." Bill 210 proposes a viable approach to address this need. Those who provide home care, the informal caregivers, will be left with a bit more in their pockets if Bill 210 is implemented. This will help to balance the personal sacrifice that they have made in terms of their income in order to care for someone they dearly love. Bill 210 certainly follows the spirit of the Broda report.

Bill 210 falls within the framework of the holistic approach that Albertans have asked for with regards to long-term care. The aging population is a phenomenon that will affect us all in some way, shape, or form, and fortunately as a young province we do have the time to be proactive and implant the values that a healthy, aging Alberta will need to prosper in the years to come.

Albertans have told us that they want to remain in their communities as they grow old. From this it is definitely implied that families have the greatest responsibility for their own health and longevity. The Alberta government understands that it must facilitate a combination of care and housing to create barrier-free environments and enable seniors to remain at home longer. Providing a tax incentive to the caregiver, as Bill 210 does, is one way to achieve this goal.

I stress again that now is the time to discover in concrete terms what programs and strategies will work for Albertans to achieve the goal of healthy living and a workable continuum of care in this province. I'm not saying that it will be simple or easy; there will be hills and valleys to be navigated. However, the only way to learn what works is to plan and then to implement, and what better time to discover what is viable and what is not than right now.

In closing, I would like to urge my colleagues here in the House today to support the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act. The caring people of this province that make sacrifices to provide care for those who cannot care for themselves and to comfort those who are near the end of their lives need to receive recognition for their efforts from this government. If Albertans want home care and we as a government want the people of this province to embrace the benefits of home care, there should be adequate compensation offered to those who provide it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak to Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001, as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I support the aims of Bill 210 and commend the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for raising an important issue in this Assembly.

All of the recent studies show that Alberta's population is becoming older. Swift action must be taken to develop more options to deal with the pressures that an aging population places on programs and services. We all know that the proper care of the infirm and the elderly is going to be one of the key future challenges of our government. As Alberta's population continues to age, we have to understand that the way health care has been provided in the past is not going to cut it in the future. As more and more seniors are living with their families at older ages, we need to develop policy options to address the revitalization of home care for our aging adults. As many of my colleagues have said here today, it is desirable that we keep our elderly in their own homes for as long as possible before moving them to personal care facilities, should that become inevitable. This not only helps our seniors population retain a greater feeling of independence into their later years but also reduces the cost of caring for the elderly to our health care system.

Many of my colleagues have also noted that Bill 210 provides an incentive for families to keep their older members at home. By raising the nonrefundable tax credit given to those who care for dependent adults and relatives to $12,900 from $3,500, we reduce the cost of caring for an elderly member that a family would have to absorb. Also, by implementing this tax credit, we make it easier for families to live together, especially when the intensive care of dependent members is at stake.

As people age and become more dependent upon the aid of others, it is especially important that they are surrounded by loved ones. I believe that this is a very worthy aim. When families have the opportunity to remain together, the sense of tradition, community, and responsibility shared by that family becomes stronger. The bonds between family members become tighter, and they become more aware of the appreciation they have for one another. It is unfortunate that in today's society the desire to retain a tight family bond often conflicts with the need to earn a certain amount of income in order to care for dependent members. However, this is the reality that many Alberta families do face.

I for one believe that the best way to counter this growing tension is through amending the tax system. If we lessen the burden of taxes on families that care for dependent members, then we make the option of living at home viable for both the person providing care and the person receiving care. In this regard Bill 210 can be seen as an innovative measure for a pressing social problem.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do have some reservations about Bill 210. First, it is unclear what impact this credit will have on the overall revenue of the province. Because a detailed cost-benefit analysis has yet to be done on this proposal, passing Bill 210 at this time could lead us down an uncharted fiscal road, one we may not want to travel. While restating my support for the aims of Bill 210, I would like to see some of these studies conducted so that we may see the actual effects that Bill 210 would have on both the finances of the province and the way that care services are delivered to our aging and dependent population.

Further, I think we should always raise caution flags whenever we see individual amendments to comprehensive legislation. The Alberta Personal Income Tax Act is not a body of statutes that can be changed in little pieces. It is an act in which the various sections and subsections work in harmony to provide the best system of tax relief in the country. Thus when we make changes to the Personal Income Tax Act, we should avoid making small touch-ups. Rather, we should remember where we see problems and look to remedy them in a wholesale revision of the act, which would include public consultation and substantial departmental review. When we change things by looking at the problem inside the scope of the big picture, we can see the effects that the change will have and we can see what other changes may need to be made in order to have the act work harmoniously.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that there is another big picture that we ought to consider when debating Bill 210. That big picture is the whole field of home care and the care of dependants. When we get down to providing comprehensive and wide-ranging policy solutions to the problems posed by the care of the elderly, we have to consider and possibly implement something more substantial than the legislation proposed by Bill 210. There are so many different ways of providing care to dependent Albertans, and we need to remember them all should we amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. In that regard we need to consider in a more in-depth fashion the possible effects that this legislation could have on health care providers in the province. In what ways will keeping more people at home change the jobs of current health care providers? In what ways will providing a tax credit advantage or disadvantage health care workers? How would the overall health care system be different, especially our acute care facilities, if more elderly Albertans remain at home?

There are a lot of questions that I believe need to be answered before we can give a larger tax credit to those Albertans who care for dependants in their own homes. If we were to pass Bill 210 without studying it further, it would be hard to tell how this legislation could affect the health care system and its employees. However, I am confident that if we took our time with the issue, we would be able to come up with a formula that considers all of the factors listed above. By bringing the whole scope of the care of dependent Albertans under consideration when reviewing the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, we can make more comprehensive and complete legislation that takes every important aspect into consideration. Even more so, by not acting in a piecemeal fashion but rather by changing the act in a more cohesive initiative, this government has the ability to extend its scope beyond issues that solely surround the care of dependants and learn how tax relief for caregivers can directly and indirectly affect revenues for the province, the health care system, and even the quality of care these vulnerable Albertans can expect. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while I support the aims of the bill, I can't recommend its passage at this time.

Although I've raised these concerns, I strongly urge the ministers of Finance and Revenue to take a serious look at the issues raised by Bill 210 and to consider including its intent in the next review of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. I do believe that the bill tackles some serious concerns. If we could incorporate its purpose into legislation that focused on the larger picture, I believe that we could provide real benefits to Albertans caring for their elderly families. I do hope that in a review of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, the ministers of Finance and Revenue do take into account the very proactive measures proposed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Once again, in light of the concerns that I have raised in the Assembly today and the understanding that Bill 210 could have rippling impacts far beyond its original intent that require further study so that we can determine possible results on our provincial coffers and our health system and providers, I propose hoisting Bill 210.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 210, Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SMITH: Legislative chicanery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the amendment.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the amendment. I think we heard from the minister that legislative chicanery was happening here.

MR. SMITH: Who said that?

MS CARLSON: That would be you, Minister of Energy, and I happen to agree with that, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt that there are few ways to oppose a bill at second reading, but a hoist amendment, or an amendment that is a delaying amendment, is the best known tactic in this particular Assembly.

I would like to ask the question why the private members and the government members don't want to just vote on this particular bill. If it's not supported by a majority, then it will be defeated in its own right, but they don't have to fall into bold legislative tactics and tricks in order to do that, Mr. Speaker. We're quite happy to vote it down or support it in a majority vote on the floor. As my colleague said, what are they afraid of? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake made most of my arguments in his debate. So just stand up and vote for it rightly or wrongly in second, and if it's defeated, it doesn't carry on. We don't have to have a hoist. They have no intentions of bringing this bill back six months hence. [interjections] I have an opportunity to speak to the amendment, and I shall do so. If you don't like it, you can respond as well.

There's no reason why we have to see this bill disappear forever. It's never going to come back here at any future time in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. We all know that. It's simply a tactic to get rid of the bill. I would be greatly offended if it was my own colleagues who did that to me on a bill that I brought forward as a private member.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will be opposing this amendment. We will be standing in opposition on this amendment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This amendment that was brought forward was brought forward in good faith by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, we're sure. We've listened carefully to the opposition talk about some chicanery that may be taking place, but it seems inappropriate that such aspersions would be cast on any of the members' intent here. To have this amendment move forward and be debated civilly here in the Legislature seems appropriate. We have listened carefully to the member's discussion that he brought forward prior to making this notice of amendment that he has put forward here. In fact, he's just asking that it not now be read a second time. We've had fully 117 minutes of debate on this bill, and he's asking that at this point in time we just set it aside and that six months hence we do review it.

So, Mr. Speaker, in light of the debate and the discussion that we've had up to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake bringing forward this notice of amendment, some good points have been made. We heard the Member for Calgary-West talking about the seniors' issues and issues that certainly concern her a great deal. We had in fact many other speakers that could have risen and spoken to this bill. However, at this point in time the motion by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake stands, and he has the privilege to bring that forward. In fact, we will be able to vote on it. In spite of the opposition members' accusations that maybe he has no support on this – and he may not be supported; we won't know until after the vote – we will have that vote, and we will have the opportunity to see whether in fact his notice of amendment is supported among his colleagues in this Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:50 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the Assembly has before it an amendment to Bill 210 which reads:

Bill 210, Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

This is often referred to as a hoist amendment. All members should realize that if this is carried, then this is the end of the matter and the bill disappears from the Order Paper. If the question is defeated, then the question is immediately put in the motion for second reading.

For the motion:

Ady	Graydon	Lund
Amery	Haley	Magnus

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Government Services, you wanted to do an introduction?

MR. COUTTS: Yes. I'm wondering if I could have unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three members of the Livingstone-Macleod constituency. They hail from the wonderful town of Pincher Creek. Mayor Art Bonertz – Art, would you please stand – and Councillor Lou Burnham and Councillor Don Anderberg from Pincher Creek are here for the AUMA conference. Please give them a warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On that note I think it would be an appropriate time to move that we call it 5:30 and that we reconvene at 8 this evening in committee.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:06 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 14, 2001 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 01/11/14
 [Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Committee of the Whole

Bill 18 Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We have amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you very much. I'm happy to have the opportunity to speak to this bill this evening. As my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview stated yesterday when speaking to this bill in second reading, we don't have a whole lot of concerns about it. It did go out for consultation to a number of groups.

MR. MacDONALD: Like who?

MS CARLSON: Well, the groups that we sent it out to were a large number: the AARN, the Health Sciences Association, the United Nurses, the College of Licensed Practical Nurses, and the federation of health professions. We did have a couple of comments of concern come back, which I think one of my colleagues will be speaking to in a few minutes, so I won't take away her thunder on that one.

The general concerns that we heard about this, Mr. Chairman, were that there weren't enough resources in the system available for all disciplinary hearings, and we know that's been an ongoing problem within the system. They still are concerned that there aren't going to be enough resources for those kinds of actions, so we would expect the government to be coming forward with some kind of a plan that would address that. Perhaps the best way to address it would be to work with these groups who have been consulted by both yourselves and ourselves and come up with some reasonable solutions that don't spend a whole lot of money but do address the concerns that are outstanding. So that is the major concern. It is relatively minor in nature, and as a result of that, we're not going to hold this bill up. In fact, we would expect to see it passed through committee tonight and, undoubtedly, third reading as well.

We know that the government thinks that the framework that was brought in in Bill 11 would be adequate to address the concerns that were outlined by organizations, and we're not sure if that will happen or not. We look forward to seeing some of those regulations coming forward at some point in time. That's part of the problem with not seeing regulations at the same time that we're debating the bill: people have to trust that the government is going to always be correct. It is very risky business, Mr. Chairman. We have seen time and time again that this government is far from perfect.

MS BLAKEMAN: They just don't trust them.

MS CARLSON: As my colleague says: some just don't trust you. But I will state that you're just far from perfect.

Certainly there's always benefit from healthy discussions and hearty discussions from people directly affected or people like us who sometimes, once in a while do come up with some good ideas that we've seen you incorporate into legislation that makes it stronger. So I think that's once again something that could happen here.

Some of the clarification that comes into the bill is an improvement, I think, over what we had before. So, in general, not a bad bill, Mr. Chairman. Those are all of the comments I have at this particular stage of this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 18 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
 The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 18.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports the following with some amendments: Bill 18. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Second Reading

Bill 22 Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 22, the Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001.

For some years now we have been hearing from members of the oil and gas industry that the Builders' Lien Act is not working well for them in certain situations. The Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors and the Petroleum Services Association of Canada have told us that typically payments for certain work in the oil and gas sector are not made within 45 days from the completion date. As a result, legal remedies against nonpayments that are now provided by the Builders' Lien Act are not in practice available to this industry sector. The industry has requested that we extend the present 45-day filing period for liens to 90 days. The bill you see before you, Mr. Speaker, is the government's response to this request.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Along with the necessary consequential changes Bill 22 extends the filing period for liens to 90 days effective April 1, 2002. However, it also specifies that this extension only applies to contractors that drill oil and gas wells or service oil and gas well sites as they are the only ones that are affected by the unique industry payment practices that I have just described.

The major proponents of Bill 22 are the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors and the Petroleum Services Association of Canada. I'm very pleased to note that these two associations worked very hard with the producer organizations – that is, the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers – to reach a consensus. All four of these stakeholders have been consulted on the amendment and have recently written letters supporting this bill. Alberta Energy also supports this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank all of our stakeholders for their important input during the development of the bill. They have also undertaken to notify their members of the amendments, and they will provide further information and explanations on the application of the changes to the industry members that are affected. Bill 22 is important to the oil and gas industry, that plays such a significant part in our province's economy, Mr. Speaker, and I urge all members of this Legislature to give this important bill their full support.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to respond to Bill 22. This is an excellent example of an industry that had an issue they wanted to be addressed and very effectively lobbied all three parties – the government, the Official Opposition, and the other opposition party – in terms of sharing the information on what it was they wanted and needed and the reasons why they were requesting the change from a 45-day filing period to 90 days and did a very effective job of doing that. After talking to their representative and posing some questions and getting what we felt were very good answers, we were quite happy as a caucus to support this change. We would never obstruct the ability of any organization or group of companies to earn income and to get paid for services once they have provided those services, and this certainly seems to be a streamlining kind of process for what is really a small piece of the oil and gas industry in this province.

They don't have some of the same options as larger organizations have, which would be interim billing or any kind of prorated payment structure. These folks need to wait till the very end of their project to get their money, and if for some reason the money isn't forthcoming, then they have a real tough time securing those dollars at a later date. So to give them a little extra time to put a lien in place if necessary, Mr. Speaker, certainly is a small request for them to make of this Assembly. We would have been happy to have seen it in miscellaneous statutes, I believe, after having had all of the information explained to us. So certainly this is a case where we are happy to work co-operatively with the industry and with the government on a bill, and we certainly expect that we'll see a speedy passage of this bill through the Legislature, which is the commitment we gave to the organizations and which we are happy to comply with.

It's a very good process that they've undertaken. They went to all the directly affected and indirectly affected user groups for comments on the changes in this legislation. They had originally asked for a longer extension – I believe it was to 120 days – and had one group that objected to that length of an extension, feeling that it would handicap them in the reverse way by having too short of a filing period. So based on that one objection, they decreased the days to 90 from the original request. There was great deal of compliance within their organization and co-operation with other organizations, so we certainly applaud their efforts and their very effective lobbying of people who will make the decisions on the law, which is those of us here this evening.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that, we're very happy to support this bill in principle at this reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I feel compelled to rise and thank the Official Opposition for their desire to co-operate on this bill, which moves the lien period out to a reasonable amount of time that is really acceptable industry practice.

From my experience in the oil industry and I know from others in this room and also from those in the service sector, Mr. Speaker, it's the service sector that really is the job generator of this industry. It's the service sector that provides the many opportunities for employment for individuals, whether they be from Paddle Prairie or from Manyberries. It's this government's ability to create the environment that allows those service companies to thrive in an energy industry that today exports more oil to the United States than Saudi Arabia and that I think indicates an expression of an ability for everybody to work together towards a common cause in a circumstance where all Albertans will benefit.

I think that congratulations should go to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who brought the bill forward and has done a good job in getting it through. Secondly, to the industry who – I don't think I'd use the term "lobby," but I would certainly use the term "expression of concern," expression of interest in an explanatory fashion as to how all would benefit from this, how people can charge either less or more now that they have more protection in collecting their bills. I think it is a bill that will without any cost to this government help promote employment, opportunity, and development of this great industry in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am supporting the previous speakers in their comments on Bill 22, the Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001. I think we're all willing to support this bill.

A couple of things struck me when I was thinking about this bill and casting my mind back over the presentations that were made to us by those requesting the changes. I think one of the things that I remember the most is that in many cases we're dealing with small or smaller providers or operators here, and I know that it can be difficult to try and keep up on the administration and the follow-up in a smaller business. You really just want to get out there and do the work that you're doing, and the paperwork can sort of follow along behind. So giving them an extension in the amount of time that they've got, from 45 days to 90 days, does allow for those small businesspeople to catch up on the paperwork and make sure that everything is going well for them and, if it's not, to make use of that extra time to file the lien. I think that's a question of fairness.

The Minister of Energy spoke about the opportunities for employment and activity in the oil and gas sector that this bill could be enabling. I think that's fair enough. One of the concerns we see in this day and age is that I don't think you can count anymore on the larger companies that we might work for – and I think you can look at this in almost any sector – that we used to think of as reliable and rock solid and for sure going to be there to pay their bills. It's a bit of a surprise to these operators in this oil and gas business when they submit a bill to a huge company and they're not getting payment in a reasonable amount of time. I think the days when we could depend on those large organizations staying there forever are long gone. It's not hard to think of a few names of companies that we thought would be here forever and are not anymore. Woodward's is gone; Canadian Airlines, gone; Massey-Ferguson, gone. Those were names that we thought would have lived forever in Canada, and that's simply not the case anymore.

So we have to allow for small business operators to be able to make sure that they get paid, frankly, and to give them time to take advantage of court proceedings that are open to them to chase that money down. I think it is a question of fairness. Certainly we know that larger companies will have a staff of lawyers on high alert ready to do the bidding of these huge corporations and multinational corporations, but that just isn't the case with the sector that provides most of the employment and most of the economic activity in Canada, and that is the small and medium-size business. So I'm pleased to see this small change that is going to make their lives and their business a little easier.

Now, I know that my colleague also had some specific comments that he wanted to make on this bill, and I don't want to unduly delay passage of this, so I do appreciate the opportunity to make those few comments. I think it's a good bill, and certainly when we're looking at the principle of the bill, I'm more than willing to support it in second reading.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am anxious to say a few words on the Builders' Lien Amendment Act, Bill 22. I think that this amendment will be beneficial for the oil and gas sector in this province because it will better reflect and enhance the oil and gas industry payment practices, where payment is typically not made in full, as I understand it, within the 45-day period.

Now, there has been extensive consultation between the industry – I'm sure it was mentioned in this Assembly – and various ministers of the Crown. It is an amendment that while other people may consider it just a matter of a routine, we need to recognize and understand the importance of the oil and gas well drilling industry and the fact that this drilling and service industry is seasonal in this province, Mr. Speaker. As well, it has its ups and downs, which are reflected in the international prices of both oil and gas. Of course, we are entering, as freeze-up occurs – and it may be a little later this year. Its highest activity is in the winter, and it is also reliant on public resource development policy. Every now and then it would be, I believe, prudent of this House to study the current practices, the current incentives and perhaps change them as a reflection of commodity or royalty prices.

However, Mr. Speaker, over the last 25 years we've seen two periods of high activity. That of course was 1978 to 1980 and 1994 to '97. At the same time we have experienced activity levels that have been very poor. We look at what occurred between 1981 and '92 and '98-99. When activity levels are low, operators want to stretch out these payments. The payment terms are often 90 or 100 days, and in some instances, unfortunately, no payment is received. The sharp reduction in activity that occurred three years ago saw the failure of a number of significant public companies. Some contractors who had supplied services for years had financial difficulty.

Now, if we look at the time period before 1967, there was a lien filing period in this province of 120 days, but we changed that in 1967. The Buchanan commission report reduced the lien filing period to 45 days. This was done as a matter of consistency, and here we are changing it again. I support these changes. All hon. members of this Assembly recognize the economic contribution of the oil and gas sector to the economy.

In closing, I would like to say that as the industry shifts focus from southeastern Alberta over to the foothills front and up to the Peace River arch as the weather gets cold, I wish all Albertans who are involved in this industry a prosperous winter – not only a prosperous winter, Mr. Speaker, but a healthy drilling season in that hopefully no young Albertans will have an injury that prevents them from working further or perhaps even a death on the job.

With those comments, I'm pleased to say that I hope this bill has speedy passage through the Assembly. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close the debate.

MR. DUCHARME: Question.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay; we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 16

School Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We have before us amendment A2. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments and ask some questions about the amendment that we have before us. Last night we were fairly confident that the issues surrounding Bill 16 and the subsequent amendments had been pretty well resolved. I think we left fairly pleased that the minister had been able to accomplish that goal. Like all things to do with schools and religion, they can sometimes be not quite as smooth in trying to solve problems as we would like it.

Late this afternoon we had a communication, that I think has been shared with a number of MLAs in the House, from the Public School Boards' Association. They have commented in their memo that they're very pleased with the developments that have occurred thus far in Bill 16, but they have raised a number of issues that still need to be addressed. Some of those issues concern the bill itself and the amendments, and others are in the draft regulations that the minister was good enough to share with us. Sharing those draft regulations was important to us. We thank him and appreciate what he has done to make sure that we all understand, when the bill is passed, where the regulations are going, knowing full well that they are draft regulations and subject to change.

If I could, Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise the concerns that the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta has shared with us if the minister would be kind enough to maybe respond to them. The very first is what the Public School Boards' Association labels as a fatal flaw. If I could read their objection to it: at this point the bill does not ensure that members of the minority faith can vote for or against establishment of a separate school education without going through a divisive organizational meeting. Now, I have to admit, Mr. Chairman, that I've never been to one of those meetings, and it's only secondhand that I hear the kinds of problems that arise at those meetings for voters. I notice that in the School Act it calls for votes at those meetings to be done by secret ballot. Nevertheless, the Public School Boards' Association has suggested that section 202 of the School Act be amended to provide for a plebiscite among members of the minority faith as an alternative to the organizational meeting. I would be interested in the minister's comment to that kind of proposal and how practical it is and whether it would be any less divisive than the process that's already in place. So that's the first issue that has been raised.

The second issue is concern with the proposition – this again is in the draft regulations, so I really feel a little uneasy addressing them in this forum, Mr. Chairman, but the issues have been raised, so I would like them on the record – that the minister can order a separate school board to provide services outside its jurisdiction. They go on to say that it's one thing to say that school boards sometimes may provide services at their own discretion, but the comment was made that it's quite another thing to allow the minister to make such an order. It's that provision of services outside their jurisdiction that has the association concerned.

There are a number of questions – and we've had these before us before – in terms of Francophone education. We've had this discussion in the Legislature, and I understand that the minister on previous occasions has commented on this. But I think it might be appropriate because the issue has been raised again this evening or this afternoon: that the constitutionality of the provisions for Francophone education would be questioned should Bill 16 be passed. It's based on the fact that Protestant trustees are excluded from decision-making for most Francophone schools, while Catholic trustees are included in the decision-making process for non-Catholic schools. That's really I think the crux of the matter. I think the minister has done some work in the area, has commented on it before, and I would appreciate the minister again addressing that issue if he might.

I guess the last item the Public School Boards' Association raised with us is that given there has been good progress, that association would like an opportunity to meet with the ACSTA. They've asked for four to six days for that kind of meeting to take place. I would ask of the minister that should the bill be dealt with this evening, which I think has been the intent of the government, to pass it through committee and third reading, that should that happen, would the minister consider convening a meeting of representatives from the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association and the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta to look at the issues that are raised about the regulations as they appear in the draft regulations and hopefully to work together to make a set of regulations that are satisfactory to both sides? I met earlier today with representatives of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. They had not at that time had an opportunity to carefully examine the draft regulations, so obviously I can't speak for them, but I'm sure that an opportunity to discuss them would be something they would be open to.

Those are the issues that were raised by the Public School Boards'

Association of Alberta, Mr. Chairman, and I would appreciate if the minister would comment on them. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will comment on the issues as they have been raised.

The issue of a plebiscite as opposed to an organizational meeting. I will comment on it from a couple of points of view. First of all, this is a thing that is dealt with by the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. It is their process. It is in the Constitution and is their process. They have stated that they are fully content with the existing process.

When it comes to the plebiscite, as well, at the actual vote it is a secret ballot. It is not a public meeting. It is not putting up your hands and being identified. Where the issue actually comes is after the organizational meeting and before the vote, where there is a lot of lobbying going on. I do not feel that a plebiscite would change that at all.

The second issue, in talking to our Legislative Counsel, is that because this is an element that has not been dealt with by the existing amendments or the existing changes to the bill, this would have to have unanimous consent to go back to second reading and subsequently on.

The third thing is that I do not feel, as I mentioned previously, that the plebiscite will change the divisiveness that occurs within a community when there are these votes. I feel that a plebiscite is very similar to a vote.

The second point that was raised, about the separate school boards outside of their jurisdiction being able to provide services. That is not true. Under this act the separate school boards will provide jurisdiction when their regions are expanded. They will not have the ability to provide services outside of their jurisdiction.

The next thing is the Francophone education. I will say on the Francophone side of things that through the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and a lot of the work that has been done, all of the Francophone school boards, including the bishops from Alberta, have signed off on these changes. Is there a potential for a constitutional challenge? There may be, Mr. Chairman; there may be. But I guess the importance of this Legislature is that we do what the people want, and the Francophone school boards want this. I feel it is in the best interest of kids. Sometimes we have to remember why we're here, which is for the best interest of kids, the best interest of adults, the best interest of parents, not necessarily the best interests of the Constitution. That is what the Francophone component does.

With regards to the last issue, I'd be more than happy to sit down with the ACSTA and representatives of the PSBA to go over their draft regulations.

I believe that that has answered the questions the hon. member has put forward to me tonight. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At the outset I want to thank the minister for fully sharing the information that he brought to the House. Then he offered both the Liberal opposition and us more information related to that, and I want to thank him for it.

I also want the House to be very cautious. All of us need to be. It's a sensitive issue; it can lead to tensions. Divisiveness was associated with debates on this for a very long time. It's a historical legacy of the way this country was put together, and we have learned to live with it. It's a constitutionally mandated arrangement, so we all agree that we must respect the framework, then, of the Constitution, of the historical legacy, and try as amicably as possible to deal with evolving situations that must be addressed. It's in that spirit that I think the minister has operated, and it's in that spirit that I'm going to be making my comments.

I had the opportunity this morning to meet with the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. They're obviously anxious that we proceed with this as soon as possible. I've also been contacted by the Public School Boards' Association, and they urge me and us to give them a little more time so that they can have some further negotiation over the next week or so to see if at least on some of the issues they can develop a consensus and a common position. Certainly this plea was made in the name of coming to some sort of agreement on issues between the Public School Boards' Association and the Catholic School Trustees' Association, and the desire to come to some sort of common position through negotiation is a laudable one.

I know the minister feels that he has a timetable he wants to respect, but I do want to ask him to consider the possibility of allowing a week. I think there are several school board association meetings taking place over the weekend. Starting tomorrow, I guess, one association meeting, and the day after tomorrow another one starts. Then on Sunday I understand it's the Alberta School Boards Association that meets. It is during this third annual Alberta School Boards Association meeting that the Public School Boards' Association suggests they will have the opportunity to meet their counterparts in the ACSTA, so they're asking for some time. I want the minister certainly to consider this.

Moving from there to some other observations to the amendments proposed. I went through the bill as thoroughly as I could with these things in my hand, and the regulations the minister's office provided this morning around 11 o'clock were also studied very closely by me. One thing I noticed is that only one part of the bill is being amended. I recall the debate during the spring session, and there were all kinds of issues there. I'm a little bit concerned that the area of the bill where the minister had agreed to bring forward amendments deals with the concerns of one party, one set of stakeholders to the whole issue of the education act and changes to it. So I am a bit concerned about it. He has obviously responded fully, I guess, to the ACSTA concerns as well as he can. But the concerns on the other side, which I tried to put on the record I guess during the spring debate, seem still alive, and in the minds of some spokespersons on the public school board side they're still waiting to be addressed.

I have a letter here that came to my desk only today, but I'm sure the minister has received it before. It is from Gail Horner, chair of the board of trustees of Sturgeon school division, I think. There are several points that she makes there on issues related to choice, issues related to inclusiveness and the open boundaries policy. The last one that I think she raises has to do with the minister's ability to expand the school division. Then she closes her letter by saying that the amended bill, if it were to be approved, would provide yet another avenue for the expansion of what she calls Catholic schools or Catholic education. I'm quoting this simply because she had urged me this morning on the title page of her fax to me to table this letter in the House, that it is urgent, and I failed to do this. I didn't get it in time to bring it to the House, so I want to make sure I put this thing on record and apologize to Ms Horner for failing to table the letter earlier this afternoon.

The issue of choice, Mr. Chairman. Particularly the ability of a nonminority group of students and their families to be able to attend and to be admitted to separate schools is I think an important one, because the public school board side does allow everyone on, I guess, request or demand to be admitted. I have always defined a school system as a good school system which in essence is guided by the principle of inclusiveness. Schools are more than just places where we learn to do math and science. These are places where we learn to be human beings, to be citizens, to be members of a broader community we call the national community.

So in that sense, I guess, the more inclusive we can make every dimension of our public school system – and we have two dimensions in our two streams, if you wish. They are partners in educating our children, giving them the very best education, both in citizenship and of course in other areas. We should try to strengthen that partnership and try to make exchanges across these borders as easy as possible, including the movement of students. So the issue of choice is something that I think perhaps needs to be addressed.

I have a few other questions. I'm pleased the minister believes that some of the concerns that have been expressed by the public school board representatives perhaps can be addressed at the level of regulations, and I would certainly encourage the minister to take this matter seriously and see if he can bring the parties together at the level of developing regulations which might address some of these concerns.

The last thing I want to say, in this round that is, is that the bill includes several other things. It has some provisions with respect to tightening up some regulations for the approval of charter schools. The bill also includes a section which leads to the elimination of that board. These two matters haven't received the attention, in my view, that they deserve, because we got very much involved with the sections that dealt with this historic sort of divide and feature of our public school system. We haven't either in this sitting, certainly up to this point – and I'm as much at fault as anyone else, I guess – or even in the spring session paid enough attention to all the different parts of the bill. After all, it's the School Amendment Act. It deals with various aspects of the existing act, but we have focused in our debate, I think, on matters that relate to the minority rights to education as historically entrenched in the Constitution.

As part of this very last remark that I made on minority rights, I am pleased that the Francophone rights to education in their own language, as are now, I think, guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of our country, are being accommodated here. I learned from the minister that there has been some problem in the southern part of the province with the school boards, so he has decided to grandfather those two, the public and the private or the Protestant and the Catholic boards, for the Francophone community.

The only concern I have here is that although at the moment other Francophone communities that are affected in the north, whatever, may not have the problem of some Protestant minority within the Francophone community seeking the right to establish their own schools, it would happen in the future. I wonder if the minister has something to say about it, if the provisions of this amended act will allow for that or not.

So with that I'll close.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

8:50

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to touch on a couple of points. There is ability within the act that when the number of Protestant Francophone students reaches 500, they can establish their own districts. That is in there.

The other comment I will make, Mr. Chairman – and I'll keep this extremely brief – is that I did talk to the person last night. I apologize for speaking about someone who is not in the Legislature. I did sit down with her after session last night for about a half hour or three-quarters of an hour and explained it to her. She seemed relatively content. I also asked her, if she had any questions, to call me today, and she did not call. So I can only assume that she was content with that. She seemed reasonably content up to this point.

Mr. Chairman, all of the comments have been extremely good on this bill. I would suggest that in the commitments I have made to the hon. member about having the ACSTA and the PSBA sit down with myself to discuss regulations later on next week, I think we have a very good bill here. I think it's something that we should go ahead and vote on.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Just a few remarks. One, to first of all thank the minister for agreeing to expediting a meeting between the two associations so that the regulations can be examined and the interests of both the groups can be brought to the table. I think that's a good move on the part of the minister, and I thank him very much for doing that.

I suspect we could be here for a number of sessions trying to straighten out the School Act. As I said last evening, I'm having difficulty following the paper trail from the act to the bill to the amendments to the amendments, and then today we had the draft regulations. So it's becoming an interesting exercise in wordsmithing.

With that, I am pleased the minister has agreed to convene that meeting. I think it goes some way in meeting the concerns of the Public School Boards' Association that there be an opportunity for them to have a voice and to meet with the Catholic trustees to try to work out any kinds of disagreements on the regulations. I think there were a couple of concerns that were raised vis-a-vis the regulations, but as I said before, Mr. Chairman, I think it's inappropriate for us to be debating those regulations when they are in draft form, and the two associations will have an opportunity to address them in the near future, I assume.

So I think that concludes my comments, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 16.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports the following with some amendments: Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 16
School Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to move third reading of Bill 16.

I will limit my comments at this moment and save them for the closure of the bill so that I could answer some of the questions, if there are any further questions, as well as to sum up what this bill is all about and what this bill will do.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just about 10 minutes ago, when I was speaking, I did express support for a request that has come from the Public School Boards' Association that it would be advisable, indeed it will be helpful to not proceed to the conclusion of the third reading this evening. I would certainly be happy to see the minister agree with me on this.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I think there is merit to this proposal that the two sides be given an opportunity to meet. One can always argue that these sides had three months to do this, but I think the attention doesn't get focused unless people see the amendments, see exactly the actions the minister is willing to take to accommodate lobbying done by each side. So although technically they had three months, they are saying that they didn't have the information you shared with us last night. I don't know when you shared it with them, but they didn't have this over the three months. For that reason alone I would think it makes sense to give serious consideration to the request and in fact accede to it. If I had the powers to do it, I would do that. A week in the life of a Legislature, in the life of a province, in the life of a society is not all that much if it can bring agreement, if it can bring people together. So that would be my position on that one.

There are some other parts of the bill that I will comment on briefly. The section dealing with charter schools in the bill. I notice that the act tries to tighten some of the conditions for approval, and to the extent to which the minister has gone in that direction, I welcome that effort. However, in my judgment the charter school experiment was undertaken in good faith, but it hasn't shown the results. On the other hand, we have seen that the alternative programs which it is now possible to offer within our public school system allow, more or less, for us to pursue the objectives that charter schools were initially designed for.

So even now I would have hesitation to vote yes to the bill, because I think we should simply stop chartering schools. I have given some reasons why that should happen on some other grounds too. In the light of some recent events I think what we need to do is to make our school system more inclusive, try to reduce and ultimately, hopefully, eliminate potential segregation of students into different segments of the school system. That can only serve all of us well in the long run. So the charter school portion, in my judgment, should be repealed. It's a failed experiment. There's no point in simply tightening up the requirements.

There are charter schools in existence. What do we do about those? I think we could certainly do the same thing with them that we've done with the Francophone, Protestant, and Catholic schools. We could grandfather them. So I have serious reservations about that part of this bill, that it hasn't really done the job.

On the abolishment of the board that dealt with capital grants and school buildings. In some ways it seems a neater arrangement whereby a committee, a board that represented the bureaucracy, if you wish, of the government is no longer responsible for making those decisions; rather, those decisions would be made through the active collaboration between the two ministries. The serious concern that I have there is that it opens the process to political influence, to be blunt, from within the caucus of the ministers, that it's subject to more of a political influence in the making of these decisions. That's why I said, when we were discussing the bill, that we didn't pay enough attention to the other segments of the bill, because the one very important part of the bill that we have dealt with consumed most of our concern and attention. So that's another major concern that I have.

I simply then conclude by asking the minister to consider not taking the third reading tonight, taking the bill to its final conclusion. If he can at all do this, give the School Boards' Association time to negotiate over the weekend, by Tuesday I think this should be over and we can return to this either Tuesday night or Wednesday.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to speak briefly about Bill 16. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's remarks. I always have reservations about the charter school system in Alberta, and that is obviously reflected in the most recent report from the Auditor General. The flags that have been raised probably have been noted by all members of this Assembly, but again what sorts of guidelines are in place to confirm the performance measures of these schools?

For instance, we had a charter school from the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar in here yesterday, and there were 14 students in that class. Meanwhile, in the separate system over at St. Gabriel school there are 34 children plus two with special needs, so there is an inequity here. The system does not seem to be in balance. The minister, to his credit, obviously has the interests of all Alberta schoolchildren whenever he or the department makes these decisions, but this issue of the charter schools is certainly not going away.

Now, we look at the dissolution of the School Buildings Board. People always talk about the creation of a new school. The education critic for the Official Opposition put it so well. It was stated by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods that so many politicians are anxious to appear and are fighting with one another over the silver shovel whenever there's a groundbreaking ceremony for a new school, yet they do not, Mr. Speaker, show up to drive the bulldozer for the wrecking of an inner-city school whenever these schools are closed. They're certainly not anxious to participate in those ceremonies. I see the dissolution of the School Buildings Board as taking this issue and placing it in the hands of the minister's office. We are making this political. I do not think that is right.

Now, at this time last year we had a school in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's constituency, Rutherford school. Another board wanted that school. I was present at the public meeting. There was a letter, apparently, from a minister of the Crown: here's a million dollars to the Edmonton public board; if you give us this school, you can take the million dollars and refurbish a school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Idylwyde elementary school. Of course, the parents were opposed to this. The meeting was, to say the least, noisy. What did we find out at the end of the school year? At the end of the school year Idylwyde school is to be closed, transferred to another board, and everybody is suddenly going to be bused over to Rutherford school free of charge for a year. This was a political decision, and that's why I'm afraid things are going to even get worse with this.

I'm disappointed in Bill 16. I certainly hope for the sake of our children that I am wrong. To think that a decision will be made on how people vote or do not vote in an election on what sort of system and what sorts of school facilities they're going to have I think is wrong for the children of this province, and that's why I have a great deal of difficulty with this Bill 16.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments about Bill 16 and the amendments at this stage. It's an important bill. It covers a lot of ground, and I don't think any of us pretend that it's the final word. I'm sure that we are going to be back here if not in the spring then sometime in this Legislature making more amendments, some that will arise out of the things that we do this evening. As the School Act has been for a long time, it's a work in progress. Hopefully, that progress is making things better for youngsters in this province.

The provisions in the bill are important ones: the creation of new Francophone regional authorities and the clarification in terms of bringing employment action against teachers in all of the schools of the province: the public, the separate, and the private. I think the creation of separate school regions is certainly different from anything that's been done in the province before. I applauded the provisions that were put in place for the establishment of a charter school, asking first that they seek recognition as an alternative program under one of the two public systems. Again, as I said when we debated the bill at previous stages, I think that's a good provision.

Dissolving the School Buildings Board: I have questions about that, getting rid of the School Buildings Board and putting that directly under the minister. Certainly it may not be this minister, but the opportunities for political interference in the school building program I think arise when it comes under the purview of a minister. Now, having said that, I recognize that the School Buildings Board was certainly under the department and under a minister's direction and that their actions could be influenced by the minister, but at least it gave the view of an independent body acting on school buildings, although I was one of the first to criticize some of the decisions that they made when I was a school trustee.

All in all, there are some important provisions in the bill. At the end of the day we've seen they aren't all agreed to by all parties, but it's been a very, very difficult task trying to reach agreement on some aspects of the bill. I think that's shown in the fact that the Alberta School Boards Association was unable to take a position on many parts of the bill and, in fact, I think had actually left and walked away from taking a position on some aspects of the bill. That's testimony to how difficult the issues that are dealt with in Bill 16 are.

With those comments I'd like to conclude, but I would again like to thank the minister. He hasn't agreed with the public school boards' request for four to six days, but he has agreed to bring the two groups together and work on the regulations. I think that's a good move and one that I thank him for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning to close the debate.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I thought I would do today is just go over a little bit about what the bill is about. As has been very graciously mentioned by the two previous speakers, there's a clause that deals with the charter schools. In essence, what it does is it allows for the formation of charter schools, but first they have to go through and ask the school boards for an alternative program.

The School Buildings Board. There have been some comments about that, and I would just leave it to the Assembly that the best reason as to why we are getting rid of the School Buildings Board is Amiskwaciy Academy, which was not allowed to go ahead because it did not meet the School Buildings Board's regulations. Subsequently I was forced to do that out of my own budget and go around the School Buildings Board. It's a perfect example of the excellent learning opportunities that we had the ability to tap into, but because it didn't meet all the regulations, it was not approved.

We have also tightened up the regulations for teachers who lose their licences or teachers who have problems so that things are communicated across the country, which again is very important.

Francophone governance is in here. This is something that has been agreed to by all parties involved.

Lastly is the so-called 4 by 4 proposal, allowing for expansion of the Catholic boundaries. I believe it's a very good process that we have brought in.

Very quickly, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to say thank you. First of all, thank you to the ASBA, Alberta School Boards Association, for the work that they did on these proposals – I realize that at the last moment they could not arrive at a conclusion, but they certainly brought it forward – the ACSTA for the work that they did, and the PSBA for coming on board toward the end of the process. I'd also especially like to thank the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who very graciously agreed to step into something that I don't think he entirely realized how big a job it would be on the Francophone governance side. He and his colleague Pierre Desroches and a couple of other colleagues did an extremely important job and an excellent job in bringing the Francophone school population together and in bringing forward some very important amendments.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the two opposition parties for their co-operation over the last two days. I realize that as with every bill there is give and take, and I think that this was a very good example of how the Legislature can actually work when we sit down and talk with each other.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that the question be put before the floor.

Bill 27

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before introducing Bill 27 for second reading, might we revert to the introduction of guests?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, I've recognized you; you have the floor.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then without the permission of the House I would like to move for second reading Bill 27, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2001.

But quite apart from that, while on my feet I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a former member of this House who's been sitting in the members' gallery watching the debate on Bill 16. As I know most members know, David King has had a lot to say to us over the years on many, many subjects and particularly on Bill 16.

I think it's always in order to recognize people who have served the province of Alberta and to recognize friends when they do attend in the Assembly. I'd like David King to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of asking that he be appointed to the provincial bench. However, Bill 27, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, I would commend to the House because it is, I think, a very important piece of legislation. There are some minor items in the bill dealing with the operation of the court, but the significance of the bill really has to do with being able to retain judges who have attained the normal retirement age of 70, which is the retirement age under our current Provincial Court Judges Act, but who still are able and willing to make a strong contribution to justice in this province and to the courts of our province.

There are many members of the practising bar in this province who do not wish to leave practice early to seek appointment to the bench but who could be encouraged to apply for appointment to the bench and give of their wisdom if they had the opportunity of staying and doing that for a period of time. So many practitioners who reach the age of 65 or even their early 60s are not willing to now apply for the bench because of the retirement age of 70. There are also many judges serving on the bench who are very, very capable, who do a great deal of good work, and who could continue to serve this province and would be willing to continue to serve this province in that capacity if they had the opportunity to do so.

The provisions of Bill 27, in short, allow for the appointment of judges past the normal age of retirement for additional one-year terms until they reach the age of 75. The criteria for appointment would be spelled out by the Chief Judge of the province. So it would be a totally independent process from government. The recommendation of the Chief Judge for the reappointment would be the triggering factor. Of course, the Chief Judge, in setting up his criteria, would probably take some advice from the way that it is done in other jurisdictions. In Ontario, for example, there are criteria set out and an opportunity for a thorough medical examination to ensure that the person who is being proposed for an additional term of office is physically fit and able to carry out the job.

I don't want to go on too much at length with respect to the bill other than to say that the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court has requested that we make this amendment to the Provincial Court Act. It helps in some way to align the Provincial Court Act with the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal, where the retirement age is 75. However, this does not take it directly to a retirement age of 75 but rather allows for the continuation on one-year renewable terms up until the age of 75 and will allow us in that way to keep some of the very good experience. It will allow the Chief Judge the opportunity to keep judges who might otherwise serve in a supernumerary capacity but in that capacity not be full-time judges, not be required to keep up on judicial education, and not be required to participate in the court in a full manner. So it's a small change but I think a fairly significant change which will allow the Chief Judge and the Provincial Court to continue to do the good work that they do for the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Despite the urging from the Minister of Energy I'm not going to speak against this bill. In principle I think there's a good suggestion here. This bill was introduced for first reading yesterday, so I have had a bit of time to have a look at it in addition to the information that was provided to me by the minister previous to this. So there are some sections in the bill which are essentially housekeeping and clarification sections, which I think will just make the operation of the Provincial Court run smoother.

As the minister pointed out, the primary change that is put forward in this bill is allowing judges to be reappointed to remain in office past the age of 70, up to the age of 75. I think this is an important change and a timely change in light of the current situation that we have in justice in Alberta, and I think that issue is around timely access to justice. That has been impaired. We know that we have a problem with not enough Crown prosecutors. We're having problems with courtroom space, and currently I think there are still 10 vacancies for Provincial Court judges. So this is pretty serious because what the effect of this can be is that people do not get their cases heard in court in a timely enough manner. Constitutionally they are guaranteed that right, and although it's not an arbitrary date, it does become clear at a certain point that cases are going to be dropped or dismissed because the people charged did not have timely access to justice.

There are a number of things working against this, as I just outlined, right now. I think that imposing a 1 percent cut on the Department of Justice, as was done recently as part of the overall government cutbacks, has put additional strain on the justice system to be able to perform. That 1 percent cut is coming at a very bad time. Nonetheless, there have been a few things that the minister has attempted to do, and I will continue to encourage him to do better because I think that there's lots of room for improvement in this system.

Certainly he has tried to address the shortage of Crown prosecutors and the poor pay, which was having them literally run – not walk but run – across the street to other places for an increase in salary. He has provided funds for a slight improvement in their salaries and an additional 15 Crown prosecutors. They're working under a workload right now of 500 cases, compared to a national average of 342. So that's not reducing the caseload by that much.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Relevance.

MS BLAKEMAN: It's about access to justice.

MS CARLSON: Go back to sleep, you guys.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, back to sleep.

Certainly looking at allowing trained, experienced judges to sit for longer will take some of the pressure off the system in trying to fill those 10 vacancies for Provincial Court judges. I don't think that that allows for the minister or the government to back away from appointing those 10 judges. I think that still needs to be done, and certainly I will continue to pressure the minister to do that, but this might give us enough breathing room that the province wouldn't find itself in a position where cases are being dismissed because of being unable to provide access to justice in a timely manner.

The minister has also tried to look at doing away with preliminary trials, and I think there are additional problems involved in that. Right now in the courtrooms there's a certain assumption of collapsing, that a lawyer goes in there and finds out that several of his cases or preliminary trials that day have been canceled, and that gives them a bit of breathing room. What we'll have now is that every trial they've got scheduled is going to go, which takes away some of their ability to catch up on their work, and I think that's a problem as well.

I did consult with the legal profession as much as I could, which wasn't very much, on this bill to see if there was any sort of violent reaction against this, and there hasn't been. The only comment that was negative that came back to me was just a comment – and this is the opinion of a lawyer being expressed – that if they weren't very good judges, at least they were gone by 70, and now they'd be around possibly until they're 75. I think the answer to that is to look into the legislation to see if there are safeguards built into the legislation. Indeed, the opportunity for those safeguards is there in that the legislation does talk about: "the Chief Judge or the Judicial Council" would determine that the reappointment would enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the "administration of the Court" and that there will be "criteria established by the Chief Judge and approved by the Judicial Council."

Now, I'm always concerned when I see something that's sort of given a shell in legislation, but we don't actually get to see the specifics of it. It's appropriate that the courts are kept separate here and that they have a right to develop their own criteria – and they should; they're the ones that are experts there – and there should be that separation between government and the judiciary. So we will believe in them and uphold them and trust that those criteria will be developed that will be able to screen out any judges where it's inappropriate for them to be serving longer or to have additional reappointments past the age of 70. I think there are always other places to look, and the minister himself mentioned criteria that are being used in Ontario that involve a medical exam. All of that sounds quite reasonable to me.

Interestingly, aside from this being a rather necessary measure for justice in Alberta to be upheld, it's also recognizing an aging and healthier population. Certainly when we used to think of my grandparents' generation, somebody who was 75 was really old and probably not feeling very well. That is just not the case now; it's just not. People well into their 80s are living on their own, managing their own affairs. Some of them are still working or running their own businesses. Certainly with the availability of medical technology and pharmaceuticals any chronic diseases can be dealt with. So there shouldn't be an assumption now that someone that is past the age of 65 is somehow in ill health or unable to perform a job adequately, and I think we will likely see more and more positions that are opened up past the age of 65.

Now, in the case of Provincial Court judges we've gone till age 70. The higher courts have gone to age 75 for some time. So it's perfectly appropriate and I think applaudable that we are looking at capturing that wisdom and experience that's available through those judges that have already served. I think there is a double check or a level of appeal built into this legislation around that development of criteria, and that should give the courts lots of room to develop the best criteria for themselves.

There are some changes in here that clarify existing legislation, modernizing the language as much as anything. I noticed somewhere in here they're using the word "furnish" and that's being clarified to say "sending," so that's an updating of an archaic use of language which, I think, is more than acceptable. I think we need to make our legislation more understandable to the average person. And clarifications about use of mail.

A section that is obviously a clarification is that if a judge retires at the end of a case that he's in but the judgment hasn't been rendered yet, it allows the judge to render that decision, which again I think is a cost saving to the system. If we had to run the whole trial again just because the judge couldn't give the final rendering, that's a huge waste of time of a lot of people. So good clarification there.

At this point I am willing to support this bill in principle at second reading, and I look forward to any other debate that will be brought forward by members of the Assembly. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am happy to support Bill 27, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2001, at second reading. I think it is a small move towards solving what is becoming an increasingly serious problem in this province, and that's the backlog in the courts, and also maybe saving some dollars for the province at the same time. That is one of the questions I had that I hope the minister will answer once we get to the committee stage: what is the expected dollar saving he anticipates from this move? If he no longer has to retire these judges, pay them their pension, and then hire them back on a contract basis, clearly there must be some kind of dollar saving there, and it would be interesting to know what they project that to be over the next year and coming years. So if he could answer that question for me, that would be helpful.

As I understand it, one of the provisions I particularly like in this bill is that because these judges won't be retired and then hired back, there still will be all the ongoing professional requirements for their profession in terms of upgrading and training and information sharing, and I think that's a real benefit, Mr. Speaker. The last thing we want is judges on the bench who haven't kept up with current events and changes within their profession.

It seems to me that that in itself has got to be worth the changes we're seeing here to keep these people current and up to date on what's occurring in their field. Once again, I think that's a very good idea.

This is, though, merely tinkering with some of the outstanding issues. I expect that come the spring, we're going to see some significant changes – I hope at least that we're going to see some significant changes – in how the court system is run in this province, because there is no doubt that we are running into increasing problems with people within the system. There's a huge backlog for people, a huge problem with a lack of prosecutors, wage issues, people's right to a speedy trial, the problems that occur and the huge dollar settlements that occur when people are incarcerated for lengthy time periods and in fact then don't ever end up in court for whatever reason: lack of evidence, perhaps wrongly accused, whatever those situations may be. We end up spending taxpayer dollars on settlements with these people, which would be smaller at least, if not gone completely, if the system was sped up. So it will be good to see that this at least addresses this in part.

It seems to me also that there's another good reason for having this go forward, and that has to do with the anticipated changes that we're going to see in our own Standing Orders here in the Legislature. It looks like there will be some changes to the sub judge rule. Some of those changes we're not very happy with, and we'll have quite a bit to say at the time they hit the floor of the Assembly for debate. Nevertheless, this government has a huge majority and will certainly pass those changes. Part of the sub judge changes will talk about when we can talk about cases that are not before the court but are pending in terms of potential appeals. That's going to have some impact on how this House proceeds. We're hoping that at the very least these changes to sub judge will only apply to criminal matters. We'll see how the debate goes when we have it here in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, but at the very least what it's going to do is block us from at least some time periods of talking about issues that are important to the people of the province and asking questions on those issues. So if the time period between when cases are decided and when the appeal time period expires can be shortened because we are keeping judges on the bench longer, then that's a good move forward. So there's another reasonable reason, I think, for supporting this bill certainly in principle.

I think those are all the concerns and points I would like to make at this time. I look forward to seeing some of those cost analyses from the minister and any other kind of factual data that he could share with us when this bill is in committee.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to speak on second reading of Bill 27 to some of the features of this bill. The quick reading of the bill draws my attention to the very first substantive amendment there to section 21.21. That's obviously a very much-needed change, that a judge who retires right in the middle of a case that he or she has fully heard but hasn't had the time to write the judgment should be able to write the judgment three months after ceasing to hold the office. I wonder how we had done without this kind of provision in the past. It is clearly a much-needed amendment, but I don't know what kinds of arrangements were made where in fact something like this happened in the past and we were yet able to have the judgments written and delivered. But it's a good housekeeping amendment. I find no reason to find any fault with it.

Dealing with the reappointment of judges, I just want to remind the House that if anyone should speak in favour of it, it should be someone in my position. I just got reappointed, at the age of 68, some eight months ago to this position, and I think that 70 years of age these days, particularly in professions such as judges and others, is perhaps too early an age for retirement. People in these positions do represent extremely valuable experience, sound judgment, and continuing high levels of energy and intellectual vigour.

The manner of reappointment is outlined here. I find that in the case of Chief Judge or the Deputy Chief Judge or the Assistant Chief Judge, the appointment will be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council but on the recommendation of the Judicial Council. In the case of other judges the recommendation will come to the Lieutenant Governor in Council from the Chief Judge. Unless the Judicial Council is likely to be unduly burdened with making recommendations for other judges as well as the Chief Judge, I think it might be best if all reappointments become the responsibility, in terms of making recommendations to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, of the Judicial Council, in the case of judges who are not Chief Judge, Deputy Chief Judge, or Assistant Chief Judge, and that that be the responsibility solely of one person, called the Chief Judge. I think the recommendations will have a sounder basis if Judicial Council makes these judgments regardless of the rank of the judge, of the position of the particular judge who is being recommended for the appointment. The evaluation I think would be more thorough. The collective judgment of the council would, I assume, be superior to the judgment of one person, albeit that person would be the Chief Judge. So that's one little issue. I would like to see if the minister sees any merit in this suggestion that I'm making for his consideration.

My understanding is that the bill is proposing that the reappointment at any time will be made only for one year at a time and that every year additional will come up for reconsideration at the end of the year for which the appointment was made. That's good. I think I'm supportive of that.

I guess, with the little time I've had to look at it, the rest is mostly housekeeping and cleaning up the existing legislation and bringing it in line with the proposed changes in the Provincial Court Amendment Act. I haven't been able to read it closely, so I will simply close my remarks at this point. I just wanted to talk about the reappointment of the judges and the arrangement that's being proposed for a retiring judge to be able to write a judgment within three months of retirement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close the debate.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been some interesting comments and questions raised, but rather than attempt to address them tonight, I will review Hansard and bring more comprehensive comments back at the committee stage.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we do adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:46 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 15, 2001 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 01/11/15
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province and, in that work, give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure today. As I mentioned in this Assembly yesterday, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association is in fact hosting their 95th annual convention here in the city of Edmonton, and its president, Lorne Olsvik, is here today in the Speaker's gallery. Of course, he also is a member of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities as a director. Also here today we have the president of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, Jack Hayden. In fact, Jack's convention for the AAMDC is going to be hosted here in Edmonton next week. Now, they both represent over a million and a half Albertans. As we know, the Premier of Alberta represents over 3 million people in this province, so these gentlemen are representing over half.

We also have here today the newly elected mayor of the city of Calgary, His Worship Mayor Dave Bronconnier, and as we know, the city of Calgary represents over 1 million citizens. Finally, we have here today an alderman from the city of Calgary who is the first vice-president of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and will soon lead the national assembly all across Canada, John Schmal.

I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bill 23 Regulated Accounting Profession Amendment Act, 2001

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to request leave to introduce a bill being the Regulated Accounting Profession Amendment Act, 2001.

The Assembly will be pleased to know that the three bodies regulating the accounting profession in Alberta – the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta, the society of Certified Management Accountants, and the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta – all support the proposed changes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 23 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Bill 24 Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, 2001

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to request leave to introduce Bill 24, being the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, 2001.

I'm also pleased to advise the House that the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association and the Alberta Forest Technologists Association support the proposed changes. I wish other companies would do the same.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 24 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Bill 29 Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2001

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce Bill 29, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill would allow regional airport authorities to become shareholders in Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, thereby giving them the ability to apply for financing at AMFC rates.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 29 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, with your approval I wish to file with the Legislative Assembly the appropriate number of copies of two documents. The first is a copy of a letter I sent earlier today to Lieutenant Colonel Stogran, who commands the 3rd Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry Battle Group. This group of men and women based right here in Edmonton are preparing to head to Afghanistan to perform humanitarian duties. They are expected to leave shortly. My letter extends the profound thanks of all Albertans to these brave Canadians for their willingness to serve the cause of freedom. It also expresses our hope for their safe and speedy return to their families and loved ones.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of a letter I sent this morning to Prime Minister Jean Chretien. The letter outlines my concerns and the concerns of this government with the health dispute resolution mechanism proposed earlier this week by the federal Health minister. It also acknowledges Alberta's appreciation that work to establish this mechanism has at least begun, hopefully in earnest.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to table a news release outlining the Power Pool prices for today. The previous day average, from November 14, is 2.6 cents per kilowatt hour; the 30-day average, 4.4 cents per kilowatt hour. We think it's important to deliver a fair, transparent, accessible price for any commodity, particularly electricity, as the Power Pool has worked in effecting a market that works and reflects power prices in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is a news story in the Calgary Sun of last Sunday and the headline: Klein will contest health act.

The second one is a news story from the Globe and Mail from Monday last week: Klein considering user fees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is a memorandum of agreement between the government of Alberta, Alberta Infrastructure, and the city of Edmonton for the city transportation trust fund.

The second tabling is an Alberta government news release regarding the city of Calgary and the province signing a trust agreement for infrastructure funding based on 5 cents per litre of on-road fuel sold in that city.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Albert Opstad, a senior from Edmonton who is very concerned over maintaining Alberta's first-class health care system, and he has a suggestion on how to pay for it.

The second tabling that I have is a report that I requested from Darrell Pidner with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and it's pointing out the work of their 250 members and the local benefit derived from their $3 million payroll.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd table five copies of a speech by Edmonton philanthropist Robert Stollery entitled: In Alberta, It's Time to Reassess Our Priorities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your approval I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two documents: a report from the TD Economics group of October 12, 2001, indicating that their prediction for health spending in Alberta in 2006 is that it will be no more than 35 percent of our budget, and a document based on an analysis of Canadian Institute for Health Information figures showing that Alberta's percentage of health care spending has been stable as a portion of GDP for the last 15 years.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission today I have the appropriate number of copies of three tablings. They are handwritten letters from teachers in my constituency who very eloquently outline their concerns about the lack of funding in education. They are from Raymond Rouleau, Lynn Koss, and Sheila Pierson.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter dated November 2 from my office to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment requesting the overdue WCB Appeals Commission annual report.

The second document is a handwritten letter from Mr. Jim Munsey, a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, to the Premier and CCed to the hon. Minister of Learning, and this letter states Mr. Munsey's loss to understand why there is obvious animosity towards the teaching profession in Alberta from the government.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you the wife of one of our most committed members in our government caucus. She's in the Speaker's gallery today: Pat Klapstein, wife of our hon. Member for Leduc. Would Pat rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems the AUMA convention brought a few more members than the previously introduced distinguished guests. I have some very distinguished guests from the town of Olds that I would like to introduce to this Assembly through you. Mayor Norma Duncan and her husband, Kyle, are seated in the members' gallery just above me; Councillor Terry Peterman and his wife, Sandy; Councillor Harvey Walsh and Councillor Warren Smith, who were newly elected on October 15, as was Councillor Scott Dundas, and he's accompanied by his lovely wife, Lori, and re-elected Councillor Kris Bojda and newly elected Councillor Ben Coates. We'd like to welcome you here and would ask you to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful group of kids from a beautiful part of my constituency from the Fox Run school in Sylvan Lake, also their teachers John Fielder, Donald Teplyske, Michelle Doz, Karen Adair, and Robin Irvine, also parents and helpers Mrs. Girard, Mrs. Garson, Mr. Garson, Mrs. Magas, Miss Cunningham, Mrs. Badley, Mr. and Mrs. Machulski, Mrs. Gunnlaugson, Mrs. Knights, Mrs. Herder, Mrs. Weibe, Ms Becker, Mrs. Fitzgerald, Mrs. Meloche, Mr. Leshchshyn, and Ms Handley.

There are 155 in total in this group, and they're spread out in both galleries. I'd like them to stand and get the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't beat that. It's my distinct pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a dedicated and long-serving member of the Grande Prairie and district Catholic school board. I would ask Mrs. Morag Mochan, seated behind me in the members' gallery, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce these people that worked so diligently on the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, 2001. The first group I'd like to introduce – and I'd like them to stand after I introduce them all – is from the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association, Dieter Kuhnke, Robert Stokes, and Douglas Krystofiak; from the Alberta Forest Technologists Association, Don Podlubny and Frankie Kerr; and then from Alberta Human Resources and Employment, Brenda Johnson and Adrian Pritchard. Please would they stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise again today in order to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly a very special guest who is here today to see the first reading of the amendments being proposed for the accounting profession. He's really a fellow you can count on, and I would ask that he rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly, Mr. Drew Thomson from the society of Certified Management Accountants of Alberta.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care System

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been many specific hints given about the direction of coming changes in our health care system. Albertans are rightly concerned that all this musing may result in a shifting of responsibility from the government to a three-tiered health care system with more and more services being paid for through the private insurance industry or through Albertans' wallets. My questions are to the Premier. Can you explain to Albertans the difference between delisting and your term: changing comprehensiveness of the health care system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what I will explain to the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is that we want to achieve sustainability and affordability in the publicly funded health care system so it is there for his children and his grandchildren and my children and my grandchildren and their children for years and years to come. That's what it's all about and making sure that we have the ability to treat the sick and injured in society.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier explain to Albertans, then, how delisting or changing comprehensiveness, whatever term he wants to use, will actually lower total health care costs for all Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I refuse to become embroiled in a debate that is solely and absolutely based on nitpicking, assumptions, speculation. I have explained in this Legislative Assembly that Mr. Mazankowski, who heads the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, will be discussing his report with me on November 16. Shortly thereafter he will table his report, which I assume will have a number of major recommendations, certainly recommendations that have been alluded to in his preliminary report. At that time, the report will go to the agenda and priorities committee of this government, then it will be sent to the standing policy committee of this government, then it will be sent to the cabinet of this government, and we will then have a decision on the course of action that this government wants to take relative to bringing about meaningful and necessary reform to the health care system.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier explain to all Albertans how changing comprehensiveness will improve their overall health care system and their access?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. leader of the Liberal Party would read the letter that I tabled in the Legislature a few moments ago, addressed to the Prime Minister, it clearly called for a dispute resolution mechanism in accordance with the social union framework agreement, which says that such a mechanism should be set up to resolve issues relevant to the interpretation of the Canada Health Act. It could be and likely will be that the issue of comprehensiveness will be one of those issues that will be challenged relative to the interpretation of the term comprehensive.

THE SPEAKER: Back to the Official Opposition main question, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier provide any evidence at all that medical savings accounts will improve services or health care access for Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, I am not going to become involved in hypothetical situations, speculation. Again, I urge the hon. leader of the Liberal Party to wait for the Mazankowski report and to be helpful and provide this government with constructive ideas and constructive criticism, because I'm sure that, as all Albertans want to achieve, he also wants to achieve sustainability in the health care system, that he wants to bring about meaningful reforms that are not going to dismantle the health care system as we know it today but make it better, and to ensure that it's going to be there for decades and decades to come. That's what we want to do, and I would hope that he would want to do the same thing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the Premier provide any evidence that a new tax such as user fees will improve services for Albertans and reduce the cost?

MR. KLEIN: You know, I find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the only mention of user fees other than a headline that I didn't write – and I can assure you of that, because I'm not in the newspaper business. The only people who are alluding to user fees are the Liberal opposition and the ND opposition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: what is the government's priority? Appearing to change the revenue sources for providing health care or providing the best possible health care services to Albertans at the lowest possible cost?

MR. KLEIN: Absolutely. Now, finally, Mr. Speaker, we get an intelligent question, to which I can provide an intelligent answer. It was an intelligent question, and the answer is that that is precisely what we're trying to do. We are trying to provide the best possible service at the least cost and at the same time make sure that it's there for future generations of people of this province and indeed this country.

THE SPEAKER: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Spending

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. Since this Legislature approved the health budget a mere five and a half months ago, health spending has been increased, then RHA deficits were announced, and then spending was cut. How can the Premier make any credible predictions about future health care spending when his own government can't figure out what it's spending today?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the hon. member is so consumed by reading his own press releases and his own musings and his own writings that he doesn't read the newspapers. I would ask him to read the newspaper today and check the price of oil. It's below $20. The revenue situation today, as opposed to what is was even six months ago, is vastly different, and we have to make the appropriate adjustments.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the TD Bank recently predicted that Alberta will be spending no more than 35 percent of its total budget on health in the next five years, can the Premier back up his claim that it will soon consume 50 percent of the total budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think that if you do the math and you see the way that health care costs have gone up over the past five years, one could logically come to the conclusion that indeed it will consume up to 50 percent of the budget if we don't get things under control. I would remind the hon. member that in some provinces it is edging close to the 50 percent mark already.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier agree that Alberta's percentage of GDP going to health care is at about the same level today as it has been for the past 15 years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will give the same answer that I gave yesterday or the day before: it's entirely irrelevant. The fact is that even the amount of the GDP that we're paying for health care is steadily increasing. The simple fact is that over the past five years health care costs have doubled – doubled – from a little over $3 billion, albeit Canadian, as I say, but significant nonetheless, to over $6 billion a year. You don't have to be an academic to understand this. The simple fact is that health care costs have doubled, the population over that same period of time has not doubled, has nowhere near doubled, and the number of sick and injured people in this province certainly hasn't doubled. So we have to find solutions and find ways of making health care sustainable.

THE SPEAKER: The leader of the third party.

Health Care System

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's flip-flopping on health care in the last two days pales in comparison to his flip-flopping before and after the election. Just yesterday he said right here in this House: "I have not been talking about delisting [services]." Today I'm happy to correct the Premier and set the record straight. My first question to the Premier: how can the Premier say he is not talking about delisting services when he openly admitted to the media on November 10 that medicare coverage for abortions will be revisited?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm alluding again to a statement that was contained in the preliminary report of Mr. Mazankowski, and that statement alludes to the fact: are there expectations – or there is an expectation; I think it was more definitive – that health care is there for all people, for all causes, at all times, and for all things, something to that effect. I might be paraphrasing it. That speaks to the whole issue of comprehensiveness and the interpretation of comprehensiveness. How we deal with that particular issue, that will be through the process that I outlined a few moments ago. That is the process of taking it to agenda and priorities, through to the standing policy committee, through to cabinet, through to caucus, and deciding as a government what we do to bring about reform based on Mr. Mazankowski's recommendations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the Premier: how can the Premier say he is not considering user fees when the headline in the Globe and Mail of November 12 says quite clearly, "Klein considering user fees"?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will allude to remarks that are often given to me by reporters. When I complain to them about a headline, they say: don't blame me; I don't write the headline. Well, I don't write the headlines. I can tell you that for sure. I'm even many, many, many steps removed from the headline writer.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I would draw your attention and all hon. members' attention to Beauchesne 428(e). A question must not "inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are true."

The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier won't call an election to seek a new, honest mandate, will he at least say "I'm sorry" to this House for his misrepresenting government intentions?

MR. KLEIN: Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a headline for you. Six months following the last election here's the headline: NDs call for provincial election. Now, there's a headline for you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Forest Industry

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the pleasure of talking with many members of the province's forest industry after the forest industry conference in Edmonton. This is a sector that is key to the economy in my constituency and many others throughout the province. In fact, forestry is the third largest industry in the province. Considering this, there was a fair bit of discussion yesterday around the need for better promotion of this sector. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the province doing to raise the profile of this important sector in Alberta?

MR. CARDINAL: To start off, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. Forestry is very healthy in Alberta. Today we just completed a publication, actually jointly with the Alberta Forest Products Association and my department, which shows a very, very good story and a healthy industry in Alberta. In fact, it's an over $8 billion industry. Over 54,000 people are employed in that industry, and close to 50 communities across Alberta depend on that particular area as their primary industry and income source.

Mr. Speaker, we have some of the best mills in the country, the best pulp mills and the best sawmills, and the most efficient and productive. So the forest industry is very healthy and continues to play an important part in our overall economic diversification plan in Alberta, which includes the oil and gas industry, agriculture, forestry, tourism, and science and technology. In fact, we are now moving to the next step, and that's the value adding in all those areas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Can you tell the Assembly what other items were discussed that were important at this convention?

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, that convention is very important to our whole forest industry and to all Albertans, and I'd like to commend the organizers and the conference participants: the industry, the major players, and also some various department staff who attended. It was a very, very productive conference. It's an opportunity to share ideas and to dialogue not only with industries in Alberta but also industries from outside of Alberta, including B.C. and Saskatchewan.

What we heard was that there are new technologies being applied in that industry – again, the sawmills are more efficient – and concerns they may have, including tenure in some cases, in that particular area, Mr. Speaker.

The other one that was very important was the aboriginal participation. As we move forward in harvesting our resources, especially in the north half of the province, there are a lot of aboriginal communities impacted. The industries are working very closely, in fact, with the Hon. Pearl Calahasen, minister of aboriginal affairs, who did a presentation yesterday, a very good presentation, very well received by the industry, and no doubt will go a long way in involving some of our northern neighbours in this most important area.

The industry does face some challenges, Mr. Speaker. That's the low commodity prices right now, the softwood lumber agreement, and the general slowdown in the economy south of us that impacts lumber prices.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. With the softwood lumber discussion taking place in Washington this week, there were also industry concerns regarding the level of the Alberta delegation. Can the minister tell us why Alberta isn't sending a more senior level delegation to these important talks?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, thank you. That's a very good question. That did come up yesterday in our conference. We are working, of course, very closely with the Hon. Halvar Jonson, who is responsible for trade negotiations, as a lead minister on all issues. Of course, we will continue vigorously defending Halvar's stand in relation to the practices we have in Alberta in relation to forestry. We are of course participating in discussions on a potential long-term solution for that industry, because I believe that is what our industry wants. It has a major impact to some sectors of the industry. Probably, you know, 70 percent of the wood that's sold across the border from Canada comes from Alberta, and it's equivalent to about 1.1 billion board feet, or a $500 million to $600 million project. As we move forward, as the discussions get more serious and get more specific, we will of course be increasing our delegation and calibre of delegation in that particular process to make sure that the issues are addressed. One of the things we support is what industry wants, and that's free trade. It's very simple. The industry wants free trade, and we support that fully in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, yesterday in the House an hon. member of Executive Council mentioned by name another member of the House, and today this has happened again. That's inappropriate, so I'll ask the government whip to take the appropriate steps.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Municipal Funding

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to hear that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has listened to local governments and the Official Opposition and realized that it is time for a new provincial/municipal partnership. However, before getting excited about the future, we need some answers about recent cutbacks. What services does the minister suggest that the residents of Edmonton cut back on to make up for the almost $10 million that was pulled from municipal coffers with the recent cuts to the fuel tax grant?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises a good question, but let me frame that, first and foremost, in this way. In light of the events that have taken place since September 11, there is no question, as the hon. Minister of Energy mentioned earlier today, that the price of oil today is at $17. What is very important, though, is this. I am quite certain that the citizens of Edmonton and its mayor do not want to run a deficit, no different than what the taxpayers of Alberta are telling their provincial government. I'm sure the hon. member will agree with that.

But what we are doing – in fact, this afternoon the Minister of Transportation and myself are meeting with the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary, talking about where the provincial government is at and how we work together, because at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, we are all in this together as Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Calgary is already struggling to keep up with demands on its roads. How do you suggest they deal with the almost $13 million that was taken away from their municipal budget?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we need to add some clarity to this issue, and we're going to be discussing this again with the mayors. What has not been reported, pertaining to the 5 cents per litre that the cities of Edmonton and Calgary do get, is that it's important to note that this program is the only one of its kind in Canada in terms of how a province treats an urban city like Calgary or Edmonton. What's more important is that over $255 million has been advanced to the city of Calgary relative to this 5 cents per litre, and many people are not aware of that fact. So that money is in the bank in the city of Calgary as we speak.

What's important, though, to the hon. member's good question, is that it is my hope that the economy will improve and the reconciliation relative to the consumption of the 5 cents per litre tax versus what could go to the city of Calgary. Fortunately, to the year 2004, $255 million is in the city of Calgary's coffers. I'm very pleased to say that we've advanced them that portion of the money.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is the government undermining municipalities' long-term plans by introducing programs that cannot be sustained?

MR. BOUTILIER: I think that if I were to interpret the question by an analogy, it would be this way: it appears that everything is broken, and everything isn't broken. In fact, let me give you an example. Even when a clock is broken, it gets it right twice a day. With that, I can say that we are not broken. We're working very closely in partnership, as to the question that the hon. member has raised.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Tourism Marketing

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since September 11 the tourism industry has been significantly impacted. Shortly after the acts of terrorism there were reports of major resorts with greatly reduced occupancy rates. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. What is being done to address the situation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for the question. Obviously, our hearts go out to our American cousins after September 11. That was indeed a terrible situation, and unfortunately our tourism industry in Alberta was dramatically affected. We estimate that they may lose up to $100 million because of that event.

So in answer to the hon. member's question, what I did was traveled around Alberta and talked to industry stakeholders, saw the evidence of what was happening, Mr. Speaker, and advised my department to reallocate money within our existing budgets to have a made-in-Alberta campaign extolling the virtues and values of what's available in Alberta to Albertans and that rather than travel outside of the country to stay inside Alberta this winter and see all the beauty and value we have to offer.

MS DeLONG: Where is the campaign being run, what is its focus, and what do you see as the government's long-term role in this industry?

MR. NORRIS: Well, three questions would be more than two ND members. Anyways, Mr. Speaker, the focus of this campaign quite simply is to talk about value, talk about the kind of beautiful nature and environment we have in Alberta, and to get people interested in coming back to Alberta to look at it. Where we are focusing in Canada is the rubber tire traffic, as it's called in the industry: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario. Our long-term vision for this is that once people come back to Alberta, they will see exactly what kinds of values there are, how beautiful the facilities are, and they will not leave and will continue to spend their money in Alberta, where it should be spent in the first place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Children's Services

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Children's Services told the House that "we are not directly taking away from those services that interface directly with the child." My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. How does cutting the hot lunch program for children in the elementary school in Cold Lake not directly affect children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, many of the programs that are being provided at the local level are a result of partnerships formed by the authority, the child and family service authority. In this case, that particular authority is working with partners in the community. Those authorities throughout Alberta have the opportunity to designate priorities as they see fit. Many times they tell us that the priorities of some of the programs could be altered so that they put the emphasis where it's more readily needed.

I have not been personally advised of any cut to that particular program, but it is within the purview of those local appointed officials with their CEO to define programs that most clearly affect the child in need. In this case, if there is a program that's cut that relates to a hot lunch program, then it has been because that board has determined that that isn't the number one priority. Those programs are, again, as a result of their articulation with other providers in the community.

DR. MASSEY: The second question to the same minister: how does cutting seven outreach workers in Cold Lake schools not directly affect children?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has, obviously, information which I have not been given. Cutting seven outreach workers is not something that has reached my desk, so I compliment him on his reconnaissance. But if I may again point out, if that is correct, those are choices that have been made in that community in consultation with the school community, no doubt with the parents in that community, and because that's what was determined as the most important thing.

Let's be clear. Children's Services is about child protection. I think it's regrettable in this province that we have more children in child protection than ever before. Why is that? It is because, no doubt, there are struggles in families that have nothing to do with programs that the hon. member is referencing. It has to do with the kinds of conflicts where more children today witness family violence and violence in the home than they do sexual abuse, all things that we struggle with in a society that is trying to make corrections. So if I have choices about where we place the funds, it will be for child protection for those children that are hurting the most, and where we have alternatives to provide other programs in schools and in community facilities, let that community help us pay for them.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, the minister is absolutely right, so how does cutting West Yellowhead's caseworkers' travel budget so they can no longer drive family members to the food bank or to counseling sessions not affect children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there are challenges, no doubt, in every community, but let me remind the hon. member that this is one of the few budgets in government that has accelerated over $186 million in the last two years to improve services for children. There may be service adjustments and priorities that those local decision-makers will re-evaluate and reconfigure in some way, but in fact I will ask for a detailed explanation.

In this instance, I again advise that local officials are determining where the greatest priorities are. I will not subtract from those priorities where the child is most in need of protection, and perhaps – and I say “perhaps” understanding that this is at this point to me unsubstantiated evidence – there are other ways to get those children or those families in need to those services that they need.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Supports for Independence

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rules for how cash benefits are calculated in the SFI program, supports for independence, were adjusted yesterday, starting in the month of December. My question is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. I understand that these changes will allow families to earn more money before their maximum calculated SFI benefits are reduced. Why is the minister giving more earning exemption capacity to families on welfare?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government firmly believes that it's better to be at work than on assistance, and we try to translate this philosophical view that we hold into some practical ways in which we can resolve, then, the situations that happen in many families. So what we're announcing is the fact that from now on if we have a family that is low income and is receiving some supports for independence assistance in terms of income from us, we'll allow them to go out and earn more income before we start to reduce our SFI payments. We believe this is a way, then, that will allow them, once they've entered the workforce, to be able to stay in the workforce, and we believe that this is the best alternative they have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: where does the funding for these changes come from?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, with the federal government national child benefit program we have an excellent example, in my view, of flexible federalism. What we have is the federal government providing income to families, and this allows, then, a provincial government to take a look at the income levels, to look at some of the other needs that are required around a family, and then of course move money into those particular areas. So in this particular case we have a situation where some $6 million was freed up because of the federal government involvement in income support. We are using $4 million of it to fund the aforementioned program, but we're also going to contribute to a person's employment needs that they might have. If they find a job, they might need work boots or a bus pass, something like that.

We're also, which I think is a very credible approach – at one time we included earnings from the children of a family in terms of the total family income and then started to reduce our SFI income support. Well, what we're announcing today is the fact that we will exempt 100 percent now of all children's earnings as long as that child is in school. We're not wanting to encourage any children over the age of 15 to leave school in order to participate in this program, but we feel that if the person has a paper route, gets a job at a local retail store, those kinds of earnings should benefit the family as a whole, so that's a part of the contribution again.

We'll be using $4 million directly to support these programs. Two million dollars has been moved to Children's Services so that they in their way can support day care for, again, these same families.

MRS. ADY: Finally, to the same minister: how do these changes relate to the low-income program review that the MLA committee conducted this summer?

MR. DUNFORD: Early on we had some indications of where the low-income review would be going as far as recommendations, so we actually looked at how we were going to reinvest the money, and we started to listen, then, to some of the signals that we were getting from Albertans through the low-income review committee as to the primary concerns that people would have. So it was because of that influence that we then directed our $4 million in this particular case to those exact programs that I tried to outline earlier.

I might add now for all members' benefit that I have in fact received the report of the low-income review committee. I want to congratulate all of them for the fine work that they've done, but, Mr. Speaker, they've given me a very, very complete and, might I say, comprehensive report. It's going to take a while for us to get through that very fine report and then come back to this room with some of the recommendations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Forest Stewardship Council Certification

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The world market for forest products is changing rapidly as major purchasers and consumers indicate their preference for wood products that can be independently certified as coming from well-managed forests. Forest Stewardship Council certification is currently the only demonstrably independent system that has broad international support from indigenous people and other forest users, industry retailers, and conservation groups. Seven percent of the world's industrial wood consumption is now FSC certified. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why has the minister's department not removed the legislative impediments that make it impossible for Alberta forest companies to participate in this new global market?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question and a very timely question. I said earlier that forestry is a very important industry to a lot of Albertans, and one thing I want to clarify is that the certification is not part of the quality of the lumber that we produce in Alberta. That is a different process that is still in place and works very well. This certification ties in with the forest management and the environmental management that the forestry operations do as they harvest our resources.

The regional standards in Alberta have not been developed yet, and once they are, we will of course move forward to look at how we can make changes that are necessary to be able to accommodate the private industries getting proper certification. I don't believe there is a problem with a major industry getting certification now. The problem will be the small operators. There are a lot out there. Like I said earlier, close to 50 communities depend on sawmill operations and other wood-related operations. The smaller operators may have difficulty in affording the certification process. It's a very sensitive area. We have to keep a good balance to ensure that all industries, it doesn't matter at what level, can be certified in Alberta so they can market their products.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, why has the minister not supported a scientifically defensible protected area network in Alberta that would help companies get this certification? In fact, it's one of the major requirements for this certification.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, this certification process is something that commenced not too long ago. Alberta has been part of the process, and when the time is right, as we move forward and once the regional standards are in place, of course we will make the necessary adjustments that would accommodate the process for private industry to become certified. But it's not as simple as that. Again I say that the larger companies will not have a problem getting certification, because we have one of the best managed forest industries in North America. So that's not a problem at all. The area where we will have some difficulty is the small operators, and there are a lot of them throughout Alberta that may be impacted in a negative way unless Alberta can come to some aid to assist them to get certified.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, is the minister then saying that he is willing to meet the second major criterion for getting this certification, which would be his department supporting reforming oil and gas tenure and planning regulations to ensure that the petroleum and forest industries can collaborate to achieve long-term forest planning and sustainability, not possible right now under current standards?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, that is not truly correct. There are a lot of industries already into joint planning with forest companies. One example is in my constituency. In fact, the Alberta Pacific project in the Fort McMurray area worked jointly with the heavy oil sands developer and actually reduced the impact as far as disturbance to the area by 50 percent. So already the companies are working, and of course as we move forward, we will ensure that part of the process will be to do joint planning in the future. It only makes sense.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Municipal Funding

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before the last election the Conservative government signed three-year legal agreements with the cities of Edmonton and Calgary to provide those cities with transportation infrastructure funding based on a portion of the fuel tax. Three years of funding was provided in advance to those cities in order to allow orderly transportation planning in Edmonton and Calgary. Last month the government announced its intention to tear up these agreements and asked for 15 percent of its money back, $20 million in the case of the city of Edmonton alone. To the Premier: how can the government tear up a legal agreement with Alberta's two largest cities and demand its money back?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have asked them to share in the restraint program, and certainly if things turn around, that 15 percent, the difference between 5 cents and 4 and one-quarter, will be restored.

Right now the city has the money, is earning the interest. I think the cities have the money. I don't know about Edmonton, but I know that Calgary has the money. I would have to check for sure.

We're asking municipalities, as we are regional health authorities, as we are school boards, as we are all departments of government, to work with us and help us through these somewhat difficult times, times that have become dramatically worse since the horrific events of September 11.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: how can the government expect Alberta municipalities to accept the government's offer of partnership if it can tear up legal agreements after only one year?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs pointed out, we want to work with municipalities on a collaborative and a co-operative basis. I'm sure that municipal leaders, like all of us, read the newspapers to see that the price of oil is not only below $20 a barrel today but indeed at noon was at about $17.45 a barrel and going down. We have to deal with these situations, and we seek the co-operation of all Albertans.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, how can the Premier justify what is simply another example of saying one thing before an election and doing another afterwards?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that the program even at 4.25 cents is far more generous than the per capita grant program that was in place before the fuel tax program was introduced. I would remind the hon. member that it was brought about through a collaborative effort involving various departments of government, representatives of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, representatives of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and the mayors of the two major cities. It was always understood that as the result of that process, the result of bringing that committee together, we would continue to work in the spirit of co-operation and collaboration on these particular matters.

Mr. Speaker, we saw representatives of those organizations in your gallery this afternoon. They know full well what is happening. They know the tremendous pressures that are facing the province of Alberta, and they know that we're dealing with these problems as responsibly and as effectively as we possibly can under the circumstances.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Smallpox Vaccine

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. It's obvious to all Albertans that the horrific destruction of September 11 has deeply affected us in many ways. Many concerns that would never have entered our minds prior to that day now disturb our daily thoughts. There now exists the possibility that terrorists could obtain and use smallpox as a biological weapon. Can the minister say what the Alberta government has done to protect Albertans from the threat of smallpox from terrorist action?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the outset I'd like to point out that the risk of contracting smallpox from any source, including bioterrorism, is a very remote possibility in the province of Alberta. That's not to say that we shouldn't take precautions, and we have. Notably we have worked with our regional health authorities to advise physicians who work in our emergency rooms in hospitals throughout the province to report immediately any changes in numbers or symptoms so that we can identify patterns as quickly as possible and help us to take quick action.

The department has also been in contact with its counterparts and I have been in contact with my counterpart federally, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that we can deal effectively with any outbreak. That includes discussions on the availability of smallpox vaccine. I'd just reiterate that the risk of contracting smallpox in Alberta is considered to be low. The last reported case of smallpox in Alberta was in 1947.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, also to the Minister of Health and Wellness: what has the minister done to ensure Alberta has enough vaccine to prevent any problem with terrorists using smallpox?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, as it relates to the obtaining of smallpox vaccine in response to a bioterrorism attack, that is a responsibility that falls within the purview of the federal government. It is the federal government that is responsible for obtaining, stockpiling, and distributing vaccines for diseases that could be used for bioterrorism. I've been in contact with my federal counterpart, and our department officials have been in contact with their counterparts in Ottawa. They have assured us that Alberta would receive the vaccine that the federal government has obtained if it was needed.

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that if there is an occurrence of smallpox in the province, the vaccine does work after the person has contracted it, so it need not be used prior to contracting the disease. It can in fact be used after it's been identified.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, my final question is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister reassure Albertans that they will be vaccinated to prevent any risk of infection only if terrorists use smallpox in our province?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the federal government, as I said, is responsible for obtaining and distributing vaccines for diseases such as smallpox, and they have assured us that we will have such vaccines if there is an outbreak.

It is notable that the World Health Organization has recommended against mass vaccinations for smallpox if there's no real risk of exposure. The reason for that is that there can be very serious side effects associated with getting the vaccination, and the side effects are at this time considered to be a much greater threat than any risk from actually contracting the disease. It's for this reason that the province of Alberta stopped providing smallpox vaccinations back in the 1970s. Because of the risk of side effects from the vaccine, we would meet any outbreak of smallpox in the province with the currently accepted medical practice, and that would mean that we would vaccinate only those people who have the disease and anybody that they had come in contact with.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I will simply state that the risk of contracting smallpox from any source is very small in this province.

Alex Young

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to recognize one of my constituents, Alex Young, a 13-year-old grade 8 student at R.A. Reynolds school in Cold Lake. Alex was the first-place winner of the 2000-2001 intermediate poem competition sponsored by the Alberta-Northwest Territories Royal Canadian Legion. His award-winning poem, entitled On the Eleventh, also received second place in the 2000-2001 intermediate dominion poem contest.

On November 8 at a Remembrance Day ceremony here at the Alberta Legislature, hosted by yourself, Mr. Speaker, Alex shared his poem with a recitation to those present. This young man composed a very compelling and moving poem which belies his 13 years of age. His level of maturity and understanding of events during the last two World Wars and the Korean War shines through in every verse.

Prior to the Remembrance Day service at the Legislature, a copy of On the Eleventh was given to all MLAs. I have received many complimentary remarks on Alex's poem, and I know that it was used in several constituencies during their November 11 services.

To Alex I say that we are proud of you and your accomplishment, and we thank you and your family for the gift you have given to all Albertans and Canadians. Thank you.

I would now like to read into the record Alex Young's On the Eleventh.

On the eleventh hour
Of the eleventh day
Of the eleventh month
I shall pray,

For all the soldiers
Who went and fought

To win our freedom
Which they brought,

For all the men
Who went and died
And the teens who went
Because they lied,

For all the soldiers
Who lost their lives
Also lost families
And their wives,

For every minute that I pray
In my mind
I shall say,

Thank you for fighting
To make us free
Thank you from everybody
Not just from me,

For every poppy
That I see worn
I shall remember the hearts
That were torn.

So many dreams
And lives were lost
When those soldiers died
At a very great cost.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:40 Independence of Legislative Branch

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each and every member who has a seat in this Chamber is part of the legislative branch within our Westminster system of government. This branch is independent of both the executive and the judicial branches. Although parliamentary independence has never been doubted, it was enshrined in the English Bill of Rights of 1689, which explicitly prevented the Crown from reaching into the realms of the legislative branch.

In addition, all Legislative Assemblies in Canada, at both the federal and the provincial levels, look favourably upon the Supreme Court of Canada's ruling in the Donahoe case, which reinforced the legislative branch's independence after the repatriation of the Constitution in 1982. We can also point to the recent decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Speaker of the Legislative Assembly versus Ontario Human Rights Commission, where the court agreed that no board, commission, department, or other such body of the executive branch can interfere with the legislative branch's parliamentary privileges and procedures. Mr. Speaker, in Alberta the codification of the powers, privileges, and immunities of the Legislative Assembly resulted in the Legislative Assembly Act, which has undoubted constitutional pre-eminence over all other legislation in the province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members in this House to take note of the legislative branch's entitlement to be and to be seen as being independent of the other two branches of government.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The events of September 11 have left an impression on all Albertans as we deal with the emotional, economic, and political consequences of the tragedy. No doubt, among the most affected by the events have been the men and women who proudly serve in Canada's armed services. The call has been made for these citizens to prepare for the duty they trained for, to defend against the global threat to the values of peace and compassion that so finely define Canada.

It is a privilege and an honour this afternoon to recognize the members of Canada's armed forces stationed in Edmonton who have been called upon to contribute to this effort, the 3rd Battalion of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry from the Canadian forces base in Edmonton. Members of this battalion currently compose part of Canada's immediate reaction force to the situation in Afghanistan. Approximately 800 soldiers are on a 48-hour notice that could see them departing across the globe in days or weeks ahead. With the continually changing situation in Afghanistan, the exact duty of these soldiers has not yet been fully confirmed. It will likely involve the protection of humanitarian missions urgently needed to secure a stable supply of food and resources to the impoverished population as the winter approaches.

The Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry has a storied tradition, Mr. Speaker, in the Canadian armed services. It has served during some of Canada's most urgent times of need, from Ypres in World War I to the invasion of Sicily in World War II to service in the Korean War. In preparing to go overseas again, these soldiers honour this brave and defiant history. Canadians and Albertans salute the commitment to duty that these soldiers are displaying today. Our thoughts and prayers are with you and your families in these anxious days. Our hope will be for a safe and peaceful return. Thank you for your commitment to securing a better future for Canadians and those in need across the globe.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Election Campaign

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. General elections are the cornerstone of democracy. During the weeks of an election campaign we politicians cease being decision-makers and have to apply for our jobs all over again. The single most important task of each office-seeker is to honestly and accurately represent their view of what must be done, changes that must be made, and their vision of the future. Doing so allows voters to exercise their own independent judgment. It allows them to choose between competing visions and policies. In order for the citizens to make an informed and meaningful choice, they must have all the information about the candidates and their party's positions and intentions.

Now, over and over again before the last election the Premier assured Albertans that he was committed to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. On February 15 he said, and I quote: without hesitation we will fully commit ourselves to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. This statement is just one of many made by the Premier and his ministers.

With the election over and a majority safely under his belt the Premier now feels free to break every commitment he made. He wants to challenge the Canada Health Act, he wants to introduce user fees, he wants to delist services. Everything that he said he wouldn't do before the election he plans to do after the election. Whether it's a flip-flop or a genuine change of heart on the Premier's part, it is incumbent on him to seek a fresh mandate from Albertans on his so-called health care reforms before he implements them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The Official Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the government share the projected business for next week with us at this time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to provide the projected government business for the week of November 19 to 22 inclusive. On Monday, November 19, in the afternoon there'll be second reading of bills 25, 26, 23, and 24. That evening, commencing at 8, there'll be second reading of bills 29 and 28, and there'll be Committee of the Whole on bills 27 and 22 and as per afternoon progress.

On Tuesday, November 20, commencing at 4:30 in the afternoon, there will be Government Motions and second reading of bills 28 and 25. That evening, commencing at 8, there will be second reading of bills 28 and 25, Committee of the Whole on bills 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, November 21, commencing at 8 p.m., there will be messages, supplementary supply, and second reading and/or Committee of the Whole on bills 29 and 28, Government Motions, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, November 22, in the afternoon there will be Committee of Supply, day 1 of one, supplementary supply estimates, there will be the introduction of the supplementary appropriation act, and as per the Order Paper.

Bill 21 Electronic Transactions Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act. I would like to address a couple of questions that were raised during second reading. The first question was in reference to section 8 of Bill 21 regarding the meaning of inferred consent. Mr. Speaker, the concept of inferred consent is found in all of the legislation dealing with electronic transactions in Canada. To provide a picture of what this means, I'd like to offer the following example. If a person places an order with a company through their web site, this can be deemed to have provided inferred consent to conduct the business transaction on-line with the company. Another example of inferred consent could be a client handing out a business card with his e-mail address on it to a private company. The company may take this as inferred consent to conduct business with this client electronically. The key words are: "if there are reasonable grounds to believe that the consent is genuine and relevant to the information or record." In both of these cases there is a tie-in to the use of electronic means because of a person's conduct.

The second question that was raised related to section 29 and what is meant by a material error. The definition of a material error, Mr. Speaker, will depend on each case. However, the general application of this section is as follows. The law has rules about the effects of mistakes. Not all mistakes in law are enough to make a contract invalid. It is only when they are material or go to the heart of the contract that they become important enough to invalidate the contract. However, in the electronic realm it could happen that a key is hit in error when typing or a person might click the mouse in the wrong spot on the screen and, by doing so, send a command with more significant consequences. As an example, if a person types in 1,000 chairs but means really to only buy 10 chairs, that would be a material error.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this explanation has answered the questions raised in the House, and with that I would like to move third reading of Bill 21. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 21 and to thank the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert for sponsoring this bill. Certainly I would like to add my support for the bill, especially considering that there was consultation with the stakeholders to develop this necessary legislation. As well, one of the strengths I do like about this bill is that it still allows consumers the choice as to whether they are going to use electronic transactions or paper transactions in the course of their business. I know it is certainly the future. I doubt that there is anybody in this Legislature who hasn't at some point given their credit card number over the phone for purchases or whatever. Again, it is a direction that we're moving in, and one that we do look forward to supporting.

I also support the idea that electronic transactions will be given the same legal status as paper transactions with this bill. It is certainly a bill that is required. It will speed up our transactions in business, and I think it also helps to address some of the skepticism about our giving permission for electronic transactions. Certainly this will help to alleviate consumer concerns, and I think that we have to address those concerns, the concerns of confidentiality and legality of electronic information. As well, Mr. Speaker, I think this is also a piece of legislation that will certainly bring us up to par with certain other provinces in the country. I certainly urge all members of the Assembly to support this piece of legislation.

Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak to this legislation today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been anxious to speak about Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act. As the critic for consumer affairs, or Government Services, as it's now called, I think that this is noteworthy legislation and it's certainly worth supporting.

Now, as I understand the research that has been conducted by our side of the House, this measure brings us forward along the same lines as the British Columbia legislation. It certainly is going to be an increasing means of having transactions. I have looked at the recent budget update that was released by the hon. Minister of Finance, or the Provincial Treasurer, and in those documents it was indicating that 61 percent of Albertans have access to the Internet. Obviously, whenever we have a bill that its intent is to legally recognize electronic information – this bill does not require any person to transact or consent to agreement through strict electronic methods unless the person agrees to it.

Now, I heard an hon. member talk about the Supernet. Just this very weekend I was looking at the New York Times, and they were advertising an electronic version of that newspaper and how you could be billed for that newspaper. I was scanning through this paper – it's a very good read; it's a pleasant way to spend part of a Sunday – and I saw in there "An Oklahoman From Up North," and this caught my eye. Here it was, one member of this Assembly, the Minister of Energy, quoted in the New York Times. All hon. members could look at this in the electronic version, and they could sign up to receive the electronic version on their legislative laptop if they so wished. Their signature, after this bill becomes law, would be valid, as I understand it, on that bill. The hon. Minister of Energy said, "We're the new Oklahoma." He declares in the New York Times Sunday, November 11, edition that Alberta is the new Oklahoma, and I thought this was very, very interesting. It was quite a proclamation. I don't know if John Steinbeck would like Alberta to be called the new Oklahoma, but certainly the Minister of Energy did.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in light of the Electronic Transactions Act, we have to note that the definition of "public body" used by this act does not include:

the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly or the office of a Member of the Legislative Assembly . . . the Court of Appeal of Alberta, the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta or The Provincial Court of Alberta, and a "legal requirement" is a reference to any law "that imposes consequences" if proper records are not used, signed, or retained. When consumers consider the use of this information, the first two things that consumers think about are privacy and security. I have concerns about the security of all e-mail. So whenever these electronic transactions are going on, whenever people have these concerns, I think they're very valid. I'm sure there's not a member of this Assembly who would like any electronic transactions that they may make or that they're through the process of deciding whether they will make – that's their business, and it should remain their private business.

When we look at the security of on-line payments and how it is a key consumer concern, many experts have suggested that making on-line payments through a secure site with state-of-the-art encryption is safer than handing a credit card to a stranger in a restaurant or a gas station. However, few consumers understand encryption and must take on faith a merchant's assurances of payment security. Now, I don't know where we're going to wind up with all these electronic transactions, but any on-line payment system, whether your signature, or your so-called John Henry, goes on, that system must be secure, it must be reliable, accurate, and lastly, accessible.

Purchasers, or in this case consumers, need to be assured that their payment will not be intercepted by thieves and that any financial information goes only to the intended merchant. Individuals are going to have little control over that signature, in my opinion, in an on-line transaction or, specifically, a purchase. Each transaction leaves a data trail that anyone can compile in a profile of preferences, spending patterns, demographic particulars, and financial status. Merchants can collect valuable marketing information this way.

Now, hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert – I finally got that right. When we think of the enormous commercial potential, I don't know if we are taking enough thought, but that will be determined. Perhaps that can be addressed through regulation if there is a need for that. But the use of that signature should be for what it's intended.

As more and more personal information becomes digitalized and transmitted through networks, the risk of misuse increases, and when we think of misuse, what do we think of? Well, perhaps these days we're thinking of national security organizations, whether it's the FBI or whether it's CSIS. They are following patterns of electronic exchanges between terrorist organizations or individual members within that organization. There's no doubt in my mind that it can be done, but there has to be control.

We also have to consider with electronic transactions children, children who are home and children who are vulnerable to slick marketers. We saw reference to this recently on an evening newscast about the slick marketers and seniors in this province, and any system can be exploited.

Those are a few of the cautions that I would have regarding this bill, but I certainly think it is a step forward, and we will see how it works. This bill legally, again, recognizes information that is in electronic form, and on any document that legally requires a signature, an electronic signature can or will fulfill the requirement. It sets the guidelines for electronic transactions, including payments. As I said before, we will see if this is enough. There is always a need for improvement.

I think in closing, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a long overdue recognition of the importance of electronic information to businesses and to government. Guidelines are needed for electronic transactions in order to give reassurances to the clients and providers of the confidentiality and legality of electronic information. Again, I would like to say that I appreciate the work that the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert has put into this bill. I certainly hope that if there are any deficiencies as the marketplace progresses with electronic transactions, they can be dealt with forthwith and that consumers are not burnt like the consumers that are faced with large bills after the unfortunate collapse of Canada 3000. But that is another issue, and it's an issue that I'm sure the hon. Minister of Government Services is going to deal with forthwith.

I hear a whisper behind me about pine shakes, and that's another consumer transaction that is still unfolding. It's before the courts, and the courts certainly will deal with that, I am quite confident.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to make some comments about Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act, at third reading. It's the practice, of course, that at third reading we will revisit the principles of the bill.

I believe that the bill, as far as it goes, embodies principles that are reflected certainly in electronic transaction elsewhere, and certainly the similar legislation that's been enacted in British Columbia and the California and Pennsylvania acts which we looked at are much more comprehensive than what we have before us today.

The whole business of electronic transactions is not, of course, confined to the Internet. We've been involved in electronic transactions for a number of years. My first sort of scrape with an electronic transaction that went awry was with my credit card. I had used the credit card at an establishment – it was at a hockey game – to pay for a meal. Lo and behold, the next month I received a bill, an entry on my credit card statement, for $1,000 from a florist shop. I reported to the credit card company that I hadn't made any such purchase and heard nothing. The next month another statement with another entry for a flower shop for $800; these were for roses. I was subsequently visited by a detective for the credit card company, who informed me that my credit card number was being phoned in to a flower shop in Edmonton by an inmate at the Grande Cache jail who was ordering flowers for his friends and selling the flowers to them at half price and charging the orders by telephone to my account. So it was sort of an early lesson in the kinds of difficulties that electronic transactions, primitive as it was on the telephone, can get you into. I think I've been suspicious ever since, and I'm still very careful in terms of Internet transactions and haven't quite brought myself to take full advantage of that medium in terms of making purchases and paying for services.

One of the items that the bill touches on, of course, is the question of signatures. Signatures have been central to much of the legislation that has been enacted elsewhere. The questions surrounding signatures are three. First of all, is it signed? Secondly, what is signed? Third, who signed it? Those three concerns have been central certainly to disputes and certainly to fraud cases, and they are dealt with in the bill but only tangentially in terms of those concerns. This is of course more of a concern with faxed materials than it is, actually, with material on the Internet.

But "is it signed?" is a question that is really a very, very difficult one to answer, and unless there are arrangements that have been made by the purchaser or the client and the supplier of a service or a product in terms of how that signature is going to be verified, then it can possibly lead to a great deal of difficulty. In trying to determine that signature, a number of jurisdictions have gone to some lengths to try to make a rigorous test of if it is signed so there's confidence that the signature that appears on the paper is actually the person they think it is. Again, I think this legislation doesn't address that in the kind of detail that it has been addressed elsewhere.

The second question: what is signed? The question usually surrounds whether a signature that is actually on the record is the signature of the person who has made an order or has asked for a service. It gets involved, particularly if there are attachments to an electronic document. If there are attachments, it becomes much more difficult to determine exactly what is signed unless there is provision for the signature to be generalized to those attachments or some method used to verify that that is the actual case. A number of law cases have centred around the challenge that someone makes claiming that they did not in fact sign a document that a supplier of services holds.

Again, with "who signed it?" it's the need to authenticate that the person whose signature appears on a document is really the person who actually signed it and that it wasn't someone else. Of course, with faxed materials and other such materials then it becomes harder to verify actually who has signed the material. Given the difficulties, particularly in fraud cases, that there have been elsewhere, this has become a greater issue and threatens to be a larger issue in the future.

In the act before us I think one of the highlights is that it legally recognizes information in electronic form. It's the growth of Internet business in particular, I think, that has been the impetus for legislation like this and legislation elsewhere, and it's going to be an increasingly important aspect of our lives. It will be surprising to me if we're not back with amendments to this bill in the spring session or certainly within the life of this Legislature as the kinds of problems that arise from conducting business electronically emerge and require solutions.

So it's a good bill in that it's our initial bill and recognizes the importance of information in the electronic form. Also, the bill recognizes that electronic signatures are legitimate and that it's legally acceptable to do business through electronic means using electronic signatures. Again, it doesn't address some of the questions I raised earlier about the nature of that signature, but I think that will come. It will be interesting to see the kinds of regulations that fall after this bill is passed in the Assembly. It also sets forward the guidelines for electronic transactions, including payments. Again, those are much needed by those people who engage in electronic commerce.

I guess the final and important part of the bill is the part that deals with the Alberta Evidence Act and the use of electronic evidence and the acceptance of electronic evidence by the court system. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we have indicated that we are supportive of the bill. I think that there are other things that need to be developed following the bill and that there are going to be, as I said, new situations arising that will cause amendments back with the bill. I think a number of speakers have addressed the problems of privacy, a concern that all of us have and that, again, is becoming a larger problem as electronic commerce increases.

So with those comments I'd like to conclude. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's well known that electronic transactions are multiplying very, very rapidly. What started out as just a way to order books or music or a way to auction off your goods has become a fundamental part of the business transactions and many other types of transactions of a legal nature that occur within the economy and within society as a whole. So I think that this is a case of the legislative function catching up with the commercial and legal reality of today's world. Even after the collapse of the dot com bubble about a year ago, electronic transactions have continued to become a more and more significant part of the commerce and the interaction of organizations and individuals right around the world. I think it's timely that an act should be established to try and recognize and control the legitimacy of electronic transactions in our society.

I think that this act may be just a first small step in that regard. One of the things that has struck me since I've increasingly been making use of the Internet, including occasionally to purchase things, is the enormous capacity of computer technology to deceive, to trick, and to ensnare people. I think that people need and deserve adequate protection. In that respect, I think that the bill is not going to go far enough in providing those protections, but its focus is really much more on just legitimizing transactions.

I'm concerned, though, that parts of the bill do not provide enough clarity. It indicates: if there's "reliable assurance as to the integrity of the information. . ." It generally doesn't provide clear and strong definitions of some of those things. I suppose those things will remain to be determined by courts, by common law. I don't know. Perhaps on third reading the mover of the legislation could speak further to that. My view is that electronic transactions have become a fact of life, but it's going to be an extremely difficult and onerous task to ensure that the rights of individuals, organizations, companies, and so on are actually protected in the legislation.

I just want to get back a little bit, Mr. Speaker, to some of the things that I've seen. One thing that I've seen on the Internet is deceptive advertisements that may commit somebody to actually entering into a contract, but what actually appears on the button that you press when you put your cursor over it and click on the mouse is not exactly what it appears to be. The difficulty of proving those things, I think, is something that we should be taking into account when we look at this particular piece of legislation.

There are, I think, many definitions that could be added to this particular piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. For example, it says that consent must be given by a person to "provide or accept information . . . in electronic form." Consent may be "inferred from a person's conduct if there are reasonable grounds to believe that the consent is genuine." The difficulty of proving some of those things is what the rub is. Everything on the Internet is so transitory, and what appears there one day when you click your mouse is not necessarily what's going to appear there the next day. So I believe that there should be stronger protections for people. It's great and it's fine and it's necessary to recognize electronic transactions, but policing electronic transactions is a much more difficult thing.

I think we also need to go further, Mr. Speaker, and talk about the uses of electronic information that is collected. One of the things that I've noticed is that almost every chain store now when you make a purchase asks for your address, asks for an e-mail, asks for phone numbers, asks for all sorts of information which you're not required to provide to them, and they don't tell you what it's going to be used for. What it's used for primarily is for marketing. So there are types of electronic transactions you may enter into yet not even realize that your information has gone into a computer. The technical development of computer systems and the Internet provide a real challenge for regulation and provide a real challenge to protect consumers and ensure that transactions are, in fact, as enforceable as they may be on paper.

I think the act is a good first step towards that, Mr. Speaker, but it is only a first step and not to be seen, I think, by anyone as the final answer with respect to electronic transactions, which are going to continue to multiply and multiply. I would predict that within 10 years the majority of transactions in the entire society will be conducted electronically, and this act will have to grow and change in order to accommodate those developments.

There are many unforeseen challenges ahead, and I hope that the hon. member will continue to endeavour to stay on top of these emerging issues and provide us with bill after bill, perhaps in electronic form, Mr. Speaker. Maybe one day we'll be voting and amending from home and writing our speeches so that everyone can read them or not, as they choose.

With those short comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and indicate that we are prepared to support this bill.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As usual, it's a privilege to speak to legislation in this Chamber. Our position, as has been made clear, is that we will be supporting this bill. The effect of the bill ultimately is that it recognizes an electronic signature as sufficient to fulfill any legal requirements for signature in a formal way, and as we've all said, that certainly goes with the changes in times in commerce and, indeed, in all kinds of transactions in society, commercial or otherwise.

We've probably all had experiences which raise concerns for us, however, about security with credit cards or, indeed, with other electronic transactions. I know that if I'm in an airport, for example, and make two or three phone calls using a credit card, a phone call is almost immediately made to my house to confirm that I'm actually on the road, because of the prevalence of abuse of electronic commerce.

I actually would concur with the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands that this is probably only a beginning in terms of legislation for electronic transactions, that we really do need to take further steps, and undoubtedly this bill in other forms will be coming back. I wonder, for example, about issues of national security, and while those are certainly beyond the scope of this Legislature, if we are implementing a bill, a law that formally recognizes electronic transactions in this way, has there been any consideration of how this will play into issues of transactions of funds from Alberta to other countries, especially if they are illegal transactions?

I wonder about this because when I look at the definition of an electronic signature here, the meaning seems to be vague, and I'm not at all sure how it is that we are going to avoid or even identify fraud that's occurred. The definition of electronic signature under Bill 21 is: electronic signature "means electronic information that a person creates or adopts in order to sign a record and that is in, attached to or associated with the record." My concern is that this is simply going to allow an undefined number of things to qualify as an electronic signature, and there's no way of verifying the legitimacy or validity of those signatures. I think, for example, of the ability to identify a handwritten signature, and I compare that to the ability of identifying an electronic signature. I don't see any comparable security there. So I am concerned that this bill doesn't go far enough, in effect, in providing security.

This is a case where society has run way ahead of our ability and our speed as legislators, and we are needing to catch up, so it is a reasonable first step. We are seeing that legislation almost identical to this is already in existence in other provinces, like B.C., so certainly we'll support this, and undoubtedly before the next three years are over, we will be back to extend it. In fact, it wouldn't surprise me if that happened sooner rather than later given global developments with electronic commerce and concerns over international security.

Nonetheless, I am pleased to stand and throw my weight behind this. So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close the debate.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to refer the hon. members to my comments of November 13 in Hansard which do address a lot of the privacy, security, and other issues that were raised here this afternoon and some good issues. The issue of federal law has also been dealt with in my comments which are in Hansard and with regard to the federal act that was passed.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to close debate and ask the support of all members of this House for the passage of Bill 21.

Bill 28
Agricultural Operation Practices
Amendment Act, 2001

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to move second reading of Bill 28, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001.

These amendments will give the province responsibility for approving, monitoring, and enforcing standards for new and expanding confined feeding operations. These amendments will also increase the province's ability to deal with nuisance complaints such as odour and dust associated with agricultural operations. These are important issues to many Albertans and to many of our agricultural producers.

I should mention, before we go further, that confined feeding operations previously have been referred to as intensive livestock operations. This new term, CFO, is a description that more closely reflects the nature of these livestock operations. CFOs are fenced or enclosed areas where livestock are confined for the purpose of feeding. They do not include grazing or seasonal feeding and bedding sites.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments were not conceived yesterday. They are the result of more than three years of extensive consultation with the livestock industry, the public, municipalities, and other organizations representing stakeholders across the province. You will recall reports prepared by the Livestock Regulations Stakeholder Advisory Group in May of 2000, which proposed a regulatory framework for livestock operations. In addition, a committee that I had the pleasure of chairing recently prepared a report titled Sustainable Management of the Livestock Industry in Alberta, which dealt with the issue of roles in an approval process.

Through three years of work that included countless hours of presentations and thousands of pages of submissions, there were several clear, common threads. We heard the need for consistent, transparent, science-based decisions that would guide the development of new and expanding CFOs. We heard the need for improved monitoring and enforcement of these livestock operations. We heard the need for a system that would ensure the sustainability of our multi million dollar livestock industry while ensuring the protection of our air, water, and soil. The amendments that we are debating today meet those needs. Firstly, by broadening the mandate of the Natural Resources Conservation Board to include the approval, monitoring, and enforcement of new and expanding CFOs, we will provide a one-window approach for the livestock industry and the public. Secondly, we will achieve consistency and transparency, because the NRCB will be the single agency that will approve applications for new and expanding CFOs rather than a myriad of municipal councils. Finally, we will achieve our goal of science-based decisions rather than, as we have sometimes seen, emotion and political expediency.

Municipalities will continue to play an important role in this process. We encourage municipalities to develop land use plans that identify where CFOs would not be compatible with new or future developments. Each municipality will automatically be notified and its input will be sought when an application is received for a CFO within its municipal boundaries.

Mr. Speaker, the NRCB is an excellent choice for administering this provincial responsibility. It has the basic infrastructure in place so that we can add to its responsibilities. The NRCB is an agency that does not report to Agriculture, Environment, or Municipal Affairs. Its neutrality through a reporting structure to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development will be critical for its credibility in locating, monitoring, and enforcing new or expanding CFOs. As well, the NRCB will ensure that existing CFOs continue to comply with the municipal conditions under which they were approved. These existing operations as well as seasonal feeding and bedding operations will all be required to comply with new manure management regulations within three years.

It is quite true that not all municipalities support our decision to assume provincial responsibility for CFOs, but not all municipalities have the same level of technical expertise to approve and monitor this ever changing industry, nor do all municipalities have the will to make decisions that are often charged with emotion and conflict. This is precisely why we are assuming provincial responsibility for new and expanding CFOs.

The livestock industry is a critical part of our Alberta economy. Last year it contributed $4.4 billion, and this year livestock receipts are expected to grow to a record $5 billion dollars. It is the strength of the livestock industry that is supporting our agricultural industry during times of adverse weather conditions and low commodity prices. In order for our livestock industry to grow, we need to eliminate uncertainty and inconsistency. We cannot continue to see livestock operations leave Alberta in favour of neighbouring provinces or the United States because of a lack of clear and consistent regulation. But our livestock industry will not grow at any cost in Alberta. Equally important is the protection of our environment. That is why it is so important for us as a province to assume responsibility for new and expanding CFOs. We need consistent regulations and standards that ensure the protection of our environment and the stewardship of our air, water, and soil.

Via the expanded role of the NRCB we will be able to show Albertans that the livestock industry is responsible. Through the work of municipal land use planning we'll be able to identify areas where the development of CFOs would not be compatible with current or future land uses, and through a consistent process across Alberta we'll be able to ensure the successful development and expansion of the livestock industry in our province, an industry that can produce world-class product while creating economic activity and jobs.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by complimenting all of the people who have worked on developing this set of recommendations and all the work that's been put in by members of the livestock industry and the Member for Leduc. It's been yeoman's work indeed in terms of trying to get a consensus. Well, in fact, I don't really think it is a consensus yet at this point, but it's at least a good majority of the stakeholders in the industry and in the communities outside with the kind of changes that are being proposed.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

We look back, Mr. Speaker, and I think everyone has to accept and recognize the benefits that will come to Alberta if we move to the provincial level environmental approval as proposed in this act and through the approval process of the NRCB. The thing that is important is that when we were dealing with approvals before, in a lot of cases conflicting information was provided, and the local municipalities in the context of their decision-making didn't have on staff the expertise. In some cases the cost of providing or bringing in experts became prohibitive, and what we saw was basically a lot of discussion without the ability to truly evaluate the information being presented as to whether or not it was really a threat to the environment and the community.

Mr. Speaker, there were also a lot of allegations that some local governments were using the environment and environmental standards as either means to prohibit or to encourage future development and more development. In the areas where they were trying to encourage that development, you were ending up with lower standards, and that basically affected the environment for all of Alberta, not just, you know, that one particular operation. So we had to look at what was needed, and the process that the committee went through in trying to come up with a set of processes I think has given us kind of a starting point here where we're going to be able to see whether or not it works.

There are some real issues that come up in terms of, I guess, the recommendations, the changes that are being put into place in this act. I think I'll start with kind of the lighter side of it that I see in the sense that, you know, we're changing the name again of the operations we're dealing with, just at a point when the public begins to understand what an intensive livestock operation is and what impact that may have on their community. I know that now carries a reasonably negative connotation, but when you look at the new name, a confined feeding operation, you look at it from the point of view of: I've got a neighbour that's got a few little goats that are totally confined, and there's only about 10 of them. Most people would say: "Well, they're confined. That's a feeding operation because he carries the food out to them every day." I think the idea of an intensive livestock operation, that title in itself, notwithstanding the potential negative connotation that's out there in the community, reflected the issue much better than a confined feeding operation title, because its density really has the potential environmental threat, the potential community nuisance effect. It's not whether or not they're confined in an area. It's the level of density that is really significant.

You know, I don't see the change in name really helping all that much. In fact, to me it really creates another interpretation problem that we're going to have, and the definitions that show up in the act don't really help a lot, other than the fact it excludes grazing activities. So if I've got a little pen the size of this Legislature and put 50 animals in it and go out every day and plant a piece of grass, I can say that my animals are grazing, that I'm not really feeding them. How do we get around these kinds of definitions? We have to start talking about process as much as we do about definition.

I guess the real issues that come up, Mr. Speaker, are how we go about dealing with both the approval process and the impact that we see coming out into the community. One of the things that I think has always been important in terms of how we define and how we put together the legislation under which our communities act has been: what is the point of control? I guess when I look through Bill 28 now, I come out and I say: okay; what options are available for a local community to in effect determine their character, who they are, what they want as a community? I come back and I say: well, you know, we've really taken away from those local communities the chance to determine who they are, what they are, the kind of economic activity that goes on in that community with respect to livestock production.

The act goes through – and we've heard the minister on numerous occasions stand up and say: well, you know, the local community will be able to have input because they're going to have a land use plan. Well, I was hoping, Mr. Speaker, to be able to look into this bill and see this bill provide flexibility for the local communities in determining their land use plan, because right now basically the local community can define land as agricultural, as pasture, or as irrigation under the Municipal Government Act. We end up with land that's classified as agriculture then having two options: the first being permitted uses on that land and discretionary uses. Well, if we go through, the options that are now available in that land use plan are to take this agriculture area and either designate it as livestock permitted or livestock discretionary. So in effect what we've done is given the community a chance to say: yeah, over here we're not going to argue if there's an intensive livestock operation; it's okay to put it over there.

I'll use the county of Lethbridge as an example. You know, Feedlot Alley gets lots of good publicity and some not so good publicity, but the idea is that the county of Lethbridge, just by default almost more than by plan, has divided by the river. On the north side of the river we see a lot of our large-scale livestock operations. On the south side of the river we see more acreage developments. We see the McCain potato processing plant coming in there. The livestock activity that's there is what you would call small to medium size as opposed to what I call intensive livestock but I'm going to have to now call confined feeding operations. What we end up with is that that community in a way made a choice that over here, in the aggregate, intensive livestock is a permitted use.

When you start talking to the individuals who are affected by one of those operations, they don't see it as a permitted use; they still see it as discretionary. Even if the county were to say: okay; in this area we want to have permitted use; over here intensive livestock is discretionary – that's the only options they've got under the Municipal Government Act.

Now, if someone wants to put a confined feeding operation over here where it's discretionary, they make application to the NRCB, the NRCB looks at it, and from what I read out of this so far – you know, we don't have the regulations yet, so we can't really understand how this is going to be applied. What I see here is that, essentially, if this is a permitted use by the local municipality in their land use plan, the local municipality has very little if any input into a decision by the NRCB. If it's a discretionary designation, the local municipality can come in and say, "Okay; we've got these concerns," or "No; let it go ahead." Now, the trouble is that if they say, "We've got these concerns," and the NRCB says environmentally, because it's only environmentally that they can make a judgment – you know, if it fits all of the criteria that are outlined in the guidelines and the regulations, the NRCB basically can't say no. So what happens is that we've got a discretionary parcel, the NRCB is confined by the regulations as to what they can consider, and if it meets all of those, they basically have to approve it. So the local community had essentially no say in whether or not that operation went ahead or was stopped.

Mr. Speaker, I guess what I was hoping to see in this piece of legislation was some absolutes at the local level. Why shouldn't we take this act and also amend the Municipal Government Act and say, "Let's give the local municipality not only the agriculture discretionary/nondiscretionary options within their land use plan, but let's give them an option of, say, as a minimum, three levels of agriculture development"? One would be kind of minimal livestock and cropland-type agriculture land, the other one would be small-scale or medium-scale livestock, and then the other one would be intensive livestock, or confined feeding operation, compatible. This way the local community in effect can say no. Under this bill the local community cannot say no.

What we also can do in this context that I've just described is put in a set of guidelines or requirements or even a law that says: you can't effectively exclude confined feeding operations from all of your land; there must be some land in your jurisdiction where intensive livestock, or confined feeding operations, are a permitted use. This would in effect take away the option that we saw come up, Mr. Speaker, when the Taiwan Sugar application was going in in the county of Forty Mile. There was a lot of discussion about the fact that one of their five barns was going to be in a place that the community felt was too close to a recreation park. Well, what we could do, then, is under that kind of an activity, if the local community wanted to say: okay, around that recreation park, for the dust or for the odour reasons, which we don't really have good scientific evidence to talk about minimum distances on, let's talk about, say, giving them an extra mile or giving them an extra two miles' distance separation. The local community can say: that's what we want. Taiwan Sugar then could have just moved their one out of the five barns two or three miles away, found another place where it fit the environmental standards, and it would have fit. To me this is the kind of flexibility in determining the local community that we should be encouraging for our rural municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, if we're an urban municipality – a city, a town, a village – we get a whole range of classifications for the commercial and industrial development of our land base. How many within the city of Edmonton or within the city of Calgary? I know in the city of Lethbridge we have a whole series of levels of industrial land classification. We have a whole series of levels of commercial land classification, never mind residential. But what we've got there is that basically the community can say: we want heavy industry over there, light industry here, medium industry here, high-density commercial. They get a choice. Why is it that we're not willing to give that same choice of defining the community to our rural municipalities? We're basically saying: if you don't want this confined feeding operation, as long as it meets the environmental standards, too bad.

Well, I think that that is not being responsible as government. We as a government are elected to basically make sure that our communities that we represent have a chance to have a degree of self-determination, of self-definition, and I think it's very important that we reconsider this aspect of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in the end I'm going to vote for this bill because this bill does essentially create provincial level environmental standards, which are an absolute must for this industry. But if we're going to do that, what we also should do is remember the communities we come from. We've got to make sure that these communities have a sense that they are part of the process.

Mr. Speaker, I live two miles south of what is going to be called a confined feeding operation. I live a mile and a half east of what will be called a confined feeding operation. Now, I enjoy my community. I don't think there's been more than maybe one day in the 13 years I've lived there that I've felt: boy, I don't like living here because of those two feeding activities. When we have responsible operators, we can have enjoyable communities. The interesting part is that I live in the county of Lethbridge, but I got a letter last spring from the city of Lethbridge, a questionnaire talking about what should happen in the fringe area around the city. The city boundary is two miles away from me. They're talking about controlling what we do two miles into the county, yet we're not going to allow a local community any say in how they define what goes on in their area. If the city of Lethbridge gets their way, my land is now going to be subject to development approval by the city of Lethbridge. I live in the county, yet the county is going to have no say over what I do with my land. Kind of a little bit of a discrepancy here.

I think we've got to start looking at: how do we deal with the sense that the communities should have some input? As I've said already, I truly believe that we have to also make sure that a county doesn't have the option to say: zero; no confined feeding operation. There has to be a blend, where we can give those counties a choice.

I was involved in another one of these appeals this summer. I went and I sat through it and I listened to it. In this particular case, Mr. Speaker, the appellants won the appeal. The confined feeding operation was not allowed. You know what? The very next day I got a call from one of the individuals who was leading the opposition to that feeding operation saying: "Ken, do you think it's okay if we go talk to this farmer? We want to help him because we know where we can put that. We know where we'll support him putting that. We just didn't want it in the area he wanted it." Now, that's community control. That's communities working together, Mr. Speaker.

This does nothing to promote that kind of working together. If we don't give them a chance to develop a reasonable level of community location, definition, community character, all we're going to do is continue to create a situation that leads to more and more of us versus them in a rural community. Mr. Speaker, I get along well with my neighbours. I don't want a situation where it's us versus them. If we've got options, if we've got a planning process that is inclusive but not in any way exclusive to the point that we can eliminate an option, that's what creates community, because we work together to define that kind of community. That's what's important. That's what's missing in this act.

The environmental approval process that the NRCB is going to be given, Mr. Speaker, is great. I commend the committee for doing this. There are a couple of issues that we need to talk about in that area in terms of how they create standards. We talk about nuisances associated with dust and odour. How do we define those standards? The study that was done in southern Alberta at one point in the last couple of years showed that there were levels of chemicals in the air that were at levels deemed harmful to human health. How do we control those? How do we measure those, and how do we deal with it? Mr. Speaker, if I remember right – you know, I've been up here for four days now – once in a while the wind blows in southern Alberta. Maybe it's going to blow it this way today, and it's going to blow it that way tomorrow. If it doesn't blow, that's when we really get concentration problems, because normally the winds move it out into eastern Alberta and Saskatchewan before we get a chance to smell it. You know, those are the kinds of things that we have to look at: how do we deal with appropriate levels of measurement?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

One of the big concerns that I've heard from a lot of the landowners in connection with some of the manure application guidelines has dealt with: how do we deal with issues that have not yet been fully quantified? The material that I saw presented by the committee when they traveled the province doing their consultation was excellent when it came to showing the impact of livestock waste application and nitrates and nitrogen and the ability of crops to take up that nitrogen as a nutrient in the subsequent growing year. There was really good information there. There was a lot of information about how if we start using that land base as a nitrate sink, where we're actually putting on more than the crop can take up, then we're basically creating a potential water quality threat. I know, because it was talked about at length during the process of dealing with these consultations, that manure applications will be limited now to the uptake ability of the crop in the subsequent year. Great. This is the kind of rule we need.

What do we do with phosphates? There is very little information that talks about what is a harmful level to plants in the soil. Many of our soils in Alberta have exceedingly high levels of some chemicals and still grow crops well; others don't. So we need to make sure that that kind of scientific information is available, and it's through an agency like the NRCB that we'll have the co-ordinated effect and possibilities to basically bring together that kind of information. A local community would never be able to do it one community at a time.

I guess what we have to also look at is some of the impacts of the heavy metals or the metal compounds that are being applied with these livestock wastes. We're seeing now some areas and some lands in Alberta where very high levels of livestock wastes have been applied over a period of years. The content of some chemicals could be harmful both to the plant or to animals grazing on it in the future. You know, I'm talking here about some of the heavy metals, copper, some of these that basically can create toxicity levels if they're there in too heavy a concentration. The question then comes as: at what point will we be asking farmers to do soil tests, and what standards will we be using to effectively make sure that these concentrations don't end up being in our land at a level that becomes either detrimental to future crop growth or detrimental to livestock if they're subsequently grazed on it or even potentially a danger to humans if they're associated or in any way use that land in a future activity?

I guess those are kind of the questions that come up in the context of the planning process that's allowed by this act. I would really encourage the government to look at the option of changing the classifications within the Municipal Government Act as opposed to just allowing for this land use plan where you have the agriculture discretionary/nondiscretionary option, because it doesn't provide sufficient control or sufficient input by the local community.

The other issue that I wanted to address kind of briefly is that it doesn't show in wording in the bill, but in some of the background information that was put out with the government's announcement, there is an indication that the Farmers' Advocate will be involved in this process when there's a complaint being raised. Mr. Speaker, I see the Farmers' Advocate sitting in the gallery, and I welcome him here to join us in this debate. Maybe we should all just give him a round of applause, because he does a lot of good work for rural Alberta out there.

The issue that comes up, Mr. Speaker, is that historically I've always perceived the Farmers' Advocate office as basically an office that works as its name describes. It's an advocate for farmers when issues of disagreement arise between them and the community, between them and other business activities, or between them and the government. What we're possibly seeing here, if I put what's in the act together with the news release that came out where it specifically named the Farmers' Advocate as the minister's representative, is a possible crossing of the line by the Farmers' Advocate office in the sense that where the Farmers' Advocate has always been there for the farmers, now all of a sudden if an acreage owner or a business in the community or someone else in that community decides they don't like a confined feeding operation, what they'll do is they'll be directed to the Farmers' Advocate office for first contact resolution, if you want to call it that. It's the first chance to hear that complaint.

So what you've now all of a sudden done is you've put the Farmers' Advocate office over here advocating against an agricultural operation. You know, I know that the intent here is to come up with a mutual solution, but you also have to remember that perception is a big part of how we deal with the issues of confidence that work with our public agencies. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that on a number of occasions when attending these hearings about intensive livestock operations in the past three or four years, there was always the question raised about: well, where does Alberta Agriculture stand? At the last meeting they were over here with the appellants complaining about an agriculture operation because they were being subpoenaed or being used to support opposition to this agriculture operation. The next day you go to a different meeting and here they are over on the side with the farmer, promoting the intensive livestock operation. So everybody was saying: "How can we trust Alberta Agriculture? One day they're over here fighting against agriculture. The next hearing they're over here fighting for agriculture."

Mr. Speaker, the Farmers' Advocate office does great work for the agriculture industry of this province, and I really express concern that we're going to reduce or in some way influence the public's perception of where that Farmers' Advocate's office has its responsibilities. To me it should be out there advocating for the agriculture community, not supporting individuals or being a voice for individuals who are arguing against the agriculture community of this province. I haven't had a lot of chance to address that issue in terms of getting the Farmers' Advocate's true perspective of how his position will be fixed by that because we've only had the bill in this form for a couple of days and we just haven't been able to schedule that. But this is my interpretation of it. I would hope that the minister and the Member for Leduc sit down with the Farmers' Advocate office and fully discuss what are the implications of that office being designated as the nuisance contact.

Mr. Speaker, given the way our government is set up and the role of some of the other functions, I think it might be more appropriate in this context for these nuisance complaints to be handled through an agency something like the Ombudsman office rather than an office whose specific mandate is to deal on behalf of the agriculture community in this province. That's an issue that comes up, about how public opinion and public acceptance of this bill are going to work out, so I don't want to see us being in any kind of a situation where we end up with any kind of a lessening of the farmers' confidence in that office.

The other issue that I wanted to deal with was associated with the process a little bit, and maybe I should delay this to the committee stage. But when we're starting to look at the process that's gone through when an application comes out, what we're seeing in here is that with the notification requirements for individuals in the area around an application for a CFO, section 19 of this act makes that notification conditional. In other words, they don't have to notify the affected parties. Mr. Speaker, when you go back to the definition, the affected parties will be defined by a set of conditions given to us in regulations, but I've always assumed that affected parties would be, say, people – landowners, landholders, other businesses, whatever – who are within the potential area of impact as defined by the environmental setbacks that are going to be necessary. Now all of a sudden we've got a law which says, well, maybe we don't have to notify everybody in that area.

I don't think that notification should be conditional. The word "may" should not be in that part of the act; it should be "must." If we are going to be open in this process with the people of the community, especially the affected parties, and if we have proper regulations, we'll be able to clearly determine who is and who is not an affected party. It's not like we have a lot of debate right now about, you know, whether or not I'm an affected party when I'm 50 miles away from it just because I don't happen to have a particular liking for that kind of an operation. Well, I don't think that is reasonable in terms of an affected party, but when we're dealing with specifically notifying individuals who by regulation have been designated as an affected party, I personally and I'm sure most Albertans would not accept a conditional notification as part of this process. I would like to encourage the government to really consider the possibility of making that notification mandatory. Change "may" to "must" in section 19.

Mr. Speaker, I guess part of what we have to do here in this process is build confidence in this new process, this new approval which is going to be done, in a lot of people's minds, a long ways away from their community. We should make sure that they feel confident about it, and by having "may" in there, it's conceivable that at some point in the future someone may just make a choice and say, "Well, this seems to be quite simple; we won't," and no notification goes out. Yet when it gets to the community level, all of a sudden we have a reaction, and then the confidence in the credibility of this process will be questioned. I don't think we want to have that just for the sheer lack of sending out a couple of letters. I think that the cost of those few letters going out to those people in the community is well worth the effort because it will sustain and will build confidence that this process works, that this process is in the best interest of all Albertans, and that this process will surely create a better Alberta, where agriculture has a chance to flourish and where the debate and the community divisions that we've seen over the last few years associated with this process can become a thing of the past.

Again, Mr. Speaker, in concluding I want to say thank you very much to the Member for Leduc, and I want him to make sure he expresses that thanks to all the members who served on his committee, to all the people in the communities who had input to it. This is a great start. There are a few fine-tuning things to it that would even make it a better piece of legislation. I think I've addressed a few of those, and as I get a chance, maybe over the weekend, to look at some of the particular clauses in it, I may have some more comments when we get to committee debate. But at this point I would encourage everybody to support this. It's better by far than what we've got right now, but it could be a lot better. It could be a lot more sensitive to the communities, and it could create a really great Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak as well to Bill 28 and also would express appreciation for the work of the people who worked with the hon. Member for Leduc on this, but I can't stand here like the Leader of the Official Opposition and say that I'm prepared to support the bill.

There are a number of reasons for that, and first and foremost I think one has to look at the underlying motivation for the bill. This bill arose out of some disputes that occurred in different parts of the province over the siting of, in some cases, some very large hog feed operations in which local authorities used their jurisdiction in order to prevent the siting of these plants. We heard the Premier yesterday at his scrum talking about the capacity of Alberta to increase hog operations and that there was room in the province, according to the Premier, for an additional 10 million hogs. We in the New Democrat opposition have to conclude that whatever other positive benefits in terms of uniformity this bill may bring, the underlying motivation for it is to ensure that local authorities cannot hold up the development of large-scale livestock operations, particularly with respect to pig operations.

So we looked quite carefully at the bill and what it contains, and we think that it's a serious matter. If the Premier is sincere about wanting to increase hog production to the point that we have 10 million more hogs, which is I think a three- or four-fold increase in the number we now have, then that could have very serious ramifications not only for the environment of the province but for the quality of life of people in rural areas and in many towns and, indeed, cities around the province.

One of the biggest threats – and I quoted this when we debated the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler's motion last time. We drew attention in the House to the numerous examples of contamination of groundwater by these large-scale farms, not all of them, in the United States. There were many examples cited in the report that I referred to in my comments at that time.

Groundwater in this province is probably our most threatened natural resource. When we're touring the province, we run into stories from people from all walks of life, but quite often from people who are involved in farming, about contamination of groundwater, depletion of groundwater by drought, contamination through the activities of the oil and gas industry, and also contamination due to unregulated agricultural activities. We happen to believe that as an environmental threat, the threat to Alberta's groundwater is probably one of the most profound problems that will be facing this province in the next 10 years, particularly if we see a continuation of drought conditions in the southern part of the province.

So we're concerned when the Premier says that he wants to introduce up to 10 million additional hogs into the agricultural industry of this province. We think that this act is designed first and foremost in order to facilitate that occurring.

Now, I want to talk a little bit about local jurisdiction, because it's interesting in the Klapstein report, which I have here, that when people were asked about the approval process, they favoured for the siting of these operations, ILOs – now they're CFOs, CIAs, KGBs. I don't know what they are. They're not NDPs; we know that. Thirty-eight of the respondents surveyed supported local permitting of these operations with provincial standards in place, and only seven of those responding to the committee supported provincial approval as being the most desirable way to handle applications to introduce these.

So we see a strong role for the provincial government in regulating environmental standards for these livestock operations, and that is not incompatible with local control over permitting and maintaining local independence when it comes to land use planning. I'll come back to that a little bit later, because I think that that independence is not taken away explicitly but is curtailed by implication in this act. So local permitting is not something that I think most people object to.

What's got to happen, in our view, is that there need to be very strong environmental regulations and requirements that have to be met and that the information must be provided and that the province needs to make sure that standardized information is provided to local authorities in order for them to make their judgment. If you can provide a high level of information and standardized information, you will go a long way towards helping local authorities make more or less uniform decisions which still reflect the rights of citizens in their community to say no to an intensive livestock operation if they believe that it will compromise their local environment or the quality of their life.

I don't believe that bureaucrats in Ottawa . . . Ottawa? This is Edmonton. I don't believe that bureaucrats here any more than in Ottawa . . . [interjections] I'm just trying to use your arguments, I guess. I don't believe that bureaucrats here in Edmonton are in the best position to determine for people in different parts of Alberta, whether it's southern Alberta or eastern Alberta or northern Alberta, whether or not the kind of large-scale industrial operation that is now becoming more common is right for them. That is something that we believe very strongly belongs to the locally elected people and locally responsible people in their community to make the decision on what's good for them. It shouldn't be up to bureaucrats from whatever board or whatever department to make those kinds of judgments for the local people. There's nothing incompatible, Mr. Speaker, between having strong provincial regulations, strong provincial standards, strong provincial protection of the environment and maintaining local control over the final decision on whether or not a particular operation should be sited.

Now, I want to come to land use. The act retains the ability of local municipalities to do their own land use planning, and that's as it should be. But there's a clear implication that there's a negative option here that's implied in the legislation, and that is that the municipality must define places where these operations will not be allowed, and clearly they'll not be allowed to make that on a blanket basis. So instead of saying, "We're going to plan for intensive livestock operations in this particular part of our county, and we think that this is an appropriate place to deal with them," they have to say, "These are the places they can't go," and then anybody that wants to put one in is allowed to go anywhere else in the county that's not specifically designated as off-limits. Clearly, there's an implied suggestion here that any county that tries to put too many areas off-limits will run afoul of the provincial government, and they won't be allowed to make use of that to protect themselves from this.

There are some specific things that I want to deal with. I appreciated that the Deputy Premier and minister of agriculture yesterday indicated to the Assembly that we would be allowed to see the draft regulations, because as is all too common, much of the devil is in the details, and the details are in the regulations. So we appreciate that fact, but I would argue strongly, Mr. Speaker, that we need to see those draft regulations before we get to committee stage on this bill. How else will we be able to judge which amendments might be appropriate for the act if we don't see what's going to be in the regulations? There may be things in the regulations that we strongly disagree with and therefore would like to see enshrined actually in the act itself and not left to the regulations. We can't make that judgment here until we have the draft regulations. So I would urge the government and urge the Deputy Premier and minister of agriculture to bring forward those draft regulations before the bill leaves the committee stage.

I've received a letter from some farmers in Hughenden, and they have some interesting comments about the current state of protection for the environment and the community with respect to large-scale operations. They're talking about the codes of practice, and I'll just quote here.

Although lip service is given in the text to the possibility of considering phosphorus as a limiting nutrient in manure, the land base tables continued to be based, not only on nitrogen, but on crop available nitrogen only. This is the nitrogen available to crops in the first year only from the breakdown of manure and represents about 1/3 of total nitrogen in manure for beef cattle and 1/2 in liquid hog manure. Thus the land base needs to be 2 to 3 times greater for sustainable nitrogen application only. When one considers phosphorus utilization (and countries who are more advanced in ILO development have eventually chosen this as their standard), the land base needs to be 6 to 7 [times] greater than the Code's tables for sustainable manure application.

Another point that they make which I think is really important is that "there is no consideration given to the cumulative effects of ILO developments." Another point which I think is very interesting:

The engineering standards for earthen manure storage are completely inadequate . . . these structures can hold millions of gallons of untreated manure – lagoons for treated human waste require a 1" thick engineering protocol, Design and Construction of Liners for Municipal Wastewater Stabilization Ponds, prepared by Alberta Environment.

What we have is a situation of very, very, very large lagoons of untreated liquid hog manure that don't even have the same design standards as those required for municipalities for treated human waste.

So, clearly, we have a long way to go in ensuring the protection of our environment from the hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of tonnes of manure that are going to be produced in this province if the government's policy proceeds as proposed. Mr. Speaker, I think there's a long way to go and many things that have to be done before we in our place here will be satisfied with the government's policy with respect to intensive livestock operations and satisfied with the bill that's before us.

There are a couple of other points I'd like to just make, Mr. Speaker. I think that the definition of an affected person needs to be defined in the legislation. Someone who's affected may not actually be entitled to have standing before the board in an appeal, so we think that that's a very, very important definition that needs to be set out in the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, just to conclude my comments, I believe there are some positive elements to this bill. I think the establishment of some uniformity across the province is a desirable thing, but it does not have to come at the expense of local autonomy. It's entirely possible for very strong and very uniform standards to be established by the provincial government, yet the permitting can remain in the control of the local people, who are most affected by those decisions. That's the fundamental flaw with the bill. It's not the fundamental flaw with the government's policy of encouraging very large-scale developments and very large increases in the hog population of Alberta, which is going to have impacts that I think the government doesn't yet foresee, but there is no reason, in our view, to take away that local autonomy over permitting or, indeed, to require local authorities in their land use planning to essentially use negative option zoning for the siting of these plants.

I just make a comment that the last few times I have driven down to Calgary – and I don't know if other members have had the same experience – just north of Red Deer there is a very, very bad smell. It's on highway 2, and I made some inquiries about it, Mr. Speaker. I've been traveling between Calgary and Edmonton my entire life by car, and I almost went into the ditch, as a matter of fact, the first time I smelled it. It was terrible. It was pretty bad. [interjections] You know, the members might find it humorous, but the fact of the matter is that if you live there, it's pretty bad.

What happens when the government policy takes its final effect and we have this massive increase in intensive hog operations in the province? There'll be large parts of the province that will smell like that, and I can tell you that the people will recognize that the smell goes far beyond just the livestock operations, that it extends as well to a government that puts the hog industry ahead of the quality of life of the people of Alberta throughout the province, Mr. Speaker. So you can take it as lightheartedly as you want, but it in fact is going to be a very, very serious problem for all of the members of this Assembly to deal with over the coming years as these operations multiply and as the provincial government does away with local autonomy in order to facilitate their development. The people will know where the smell is coming from.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 28, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001. I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on this particular subject, and I would like to start by thanking the Member for Leduc, who did do extensive consultations and extensive work in bringing this particular amendment act to the Agricultural Operation Practices Act forward. I have been most impressed by all speakers this afternoon and what they see in the act as strengths and some of the shortcomings of the act. I would have to say that I certainly would in the end be supporting this. I think it's going to take us to a position that we require in this province.

I also have had the opportunity on numerous occasions to listen to the Leader of the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, who I think, when it comes to agriculture, is considered one of the leading people not only in this province but in the entire country. So we've certainly benefited as a caucus from his wise counsel, and that is certainly one of the benefits that we have had and I do enjoy.

When we are dealing with these confined feeding operations, there are some things, and one of the concerns brought up was how this will impact our municipalities and how the control for allowing these in municipalities is going to be taken away from the municipalities. This certainly seems to fly in the opposite direction of comments made in this House by the Minister of Municipal Affairs when he announced that he is looking at a new format, a future where there will be stronger partnerships between provincial and municipal governments. So to take that control away from our municipalities and place it under provincial jurisdiction certainly is something that I think we have to address in this act, particularly when you think, Mr. Speaker, that this act could come into effect in 47 days, on January 1, 2002.

Now, there are certain conditions that do support intensive livestock operations, or confined feeding operations, as we now are calling them. I had the opportunity approximately a year ago to tour Feedlot Alley in southern Alberta. As part of that tour I had the opportunity to discuss these operations with a number of owners, and these are owners, Mr. Speaker, that I would certainly call responsible. They were owners that certainly realized the impact of their decisions. What impressed me most about their decisions was that if they didn't adhere to strong environmental conditions, then the effects of those decisions would shut down their operation.

One of the other things that impressed me on that tour is why that particular location has so many intensive livestock operations in it. Of course, one reason is the type of soil that we have down in that particular region. What we have there is a clay base, a clay base that is quite thick, and we all know that clay, certainly because of the very fine texture of it, is a soil that will compact. The more it compacts, the less permeable it is to water. What it does is it allows these intensive livestock operations to actually sculpture the land so that they can control any runoff that occurs on that property, so they are able to collect all the waste. As well, it gives them the opportunity, for example, if it is a cattle operation, to keep those pens extremely clean. So from that perspective I'm not concerned.

A second perspective that I was very impressed with in these operations is the amount of research they have done in order to test different types of food, different types of feed that these animals will use, and in doing that, they also looked at the amount of manure that would be produced and not only the amount of manure that could be produced but the different quantities of land that they would require in order to be able to spread this manure to grow their feed and whatever. So certainly a tremendous, tremendous responsible operation.

We have to remember that some of these have an extremely huge impact on the particular neighbourhood that they're in. We toured one particular lot, and this person had three lots which were capable of holding 25,000 head of cattle. If we think that each one of those animals is worth somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1,000, we are looking at an operation of $25 million worth of stock in those particular pens. It is a huge impact and particularly a huge impact if it is not governed properly. So what we have here with the responsible owners was a system where certainly the manure waste was reused as fertilizer to grow their feed, and this production was very, very responsible.

Now, then, the other thing that I like about this particular bill is that for once we are getting standard regulations throughout the province, and there has been a great need for these since the 1980s. As well, when we look at the need for these, it was outlined very, very specifically, Mr. Speaker, with a letter that I tabled in the House two days ago. It was from Barry and Lana Love, and they reside in the county of Flagstaff. What they wrote in their letter was that they felt "the need to strongly urge you not to take the ILO siting out of the hands of local Municipalities and Counties." Again, when I look at this bill, I certainly see this as one of the weaknesses and one of the few weaknesses of this bill in the fact that the decisions that impact these people are not going to be made at a local level and not by people who are familiar with that particular region.

As well, we heard the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East talk earlier of how even though he is outside the city of Lethbridge – he's two miles away – they wish to make regulations which will affect people outside of the county on intensive livestock operations. So again certainly a concern.

I see in the bill, when we look in here at section 5(1)(b), that we'll appoint 3 persons as an agricultural practice review committee to consider the application or referral, 2 of whom must have experience in the type of farming operation to which the application or referral relates.

It is the Farmers' Advocate who will establish the agricultural practice review committee. Again, there is no guarantee that this person will be familiar with what is happening in that particular municipality. Certainly I think that over time the concern is, as well, that as this process gets entrenched, there will be less and less monitoring of local conditions.

Now, then, as well, when I look into this particular bill, it certainly does recognize the need that across this province we do have to have standards. It does recognize that need. However, Mr. Speaker, the standards that need to be developed by the province should not only be based on scientifically sound research that assesses the unique environmental characteristics of Alberta, but they must be applied and evaluated by staff with technical and professional expertise, enabling sound, objective planning decisions at the local level. Certainly in the feedlots that I visited, some of this was taking place. In fact, in all of them it was taking place. These people were very, very concerned about water quality, and they did have processes set up so they could test their water quality and to make sure that there hadn't been leakage into the water table. Again, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has indicated, our water in this province is a great resource, one of our greatest, and certainly one, if conditions as they have been in recent years continue, that is going to become more and more valuable. Certainly the last thing we would want to do there is to pollute that.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Now, as well, another issue that was raised here today was certainly the density of ILOs. Again, these confined feeding operations, as we said, can hold a tremendous number of animals in a very, very small space. Certainly people in municipalities should have some control over the number of those that would occur in any given area. As I have read through this – and I have to be quite honest; I have not had the opportunity to delve into this in great detail – that certainly is an issue that I think I would like to see addressed, if not in the bill then certainly in the regulations. I look forward to looking at the draft regulations when they are available.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think that pretty well completes my comments on this particular bill at this time. I do look forward to the comments that other hon. members have in relation to this bill. It not only has a tremendous impact on our communities but on the economics of this province and certainly has a great potential to develop the agriculture industry in this province even more. So with those comments I will cede the floor to other members.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just make a few remarks about Bill 28. First, I want to compliment our member who has worked so hard to try and put together a bill that would be a balance, if you like, or a reasonable way of deciding whether or not intensive or confined feeding operations should go ahead. This has not been easy. We have had committees in the past for a number of years now going across the province planning and making recommendations, and of course it certainly is tough to arrive at the proper balance.

I wanted to say that the constituents in the Wainwright constituency are certainly looking forward to this bill, and we have had in the past some very bitter disputes over confined feeding operations. If you ever get into the middle and see what happens to the people and to the towns and the hard feelings that come out of it, it's a lifetime of disagreement between families, sometimes between neighbours, and it does do a lot of harm to the communities.

We do look forward to it for a number of reasons, but one of them is that there's got to be a higher comfort level that we are protecting our environment. I truly believe that we've done a good job in this province in the past, and I know that we work hard at protecting our water and have been successful at it. We need to be able to portray that comfort to the people that are going to have these livestock operations somewhere in their constituency, and this bill is going to help give that comfort level that is needed.

I wanted to say a couple of things about local autonomy. I know that's always a bone of contention, whether you give it to the local folks or you give it to the conservation board. I have my reservations about this particular one myself, but after going through some of the disputes and after seeing what happens, what's written down on paper doesn't always happen out there in the real world. The fact remains that if we're not prepared to give and take and have some balance so someone else can make a living, you're going to have lots of disputes. I've seen that when you get a lot more acreage owners in a county or an MD, then the vote is certainly not to have any.

Now, that really impacts some poor person that might be 25 miles from no one, but he's in that county. It restricts his farming practices altogether. We have to address that, and I believe that by having the local autonomy taken away – and when we say “taken away,” they have an opportunity, the public has an opportunity for input, and the municipal governments have another level of opportunity to get in there and get their say-so in. I have to say that between the two of them there's got to be pretty heavy influence on the decision-makers.

Probably the biggest benefit – and it might be a future benefit. The opportunity is there now for the municipal governments to get busy and do a development plan and do their zoning and properly identify which lands they would like to have with farming practices and which ones they want for residential. I think this will force a lot more of that, and when you say that local autonomy is taken away, that whole thing is full autonomy for the local people to do that. I see that coming along as a big benefit. I know that's very hard to do, because when you first begin, it has got to be a gradual thing, because as soon as you start declaring some lands as good for agriculture, you could impact somebody that doesn't believe that. Yes, if you zone a residential area in an agricultural area, you're going to interfere with somebody's business, but the reality is that the long term has to be planned better, and then some of these problems will go away.

So I just want to thank again our Member for Leduc for bringing it forward, and I look forward to it. The sooner the better. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments at second reading on Bill 28, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001. There are, I suspect, a lot of Albertans affected by this act. We have a summer cottage west of the city, and it is only in the last couple of summers that odours from a confined livestock feeding operation have started to impact the enjoyment of that property. It came as a bit of a surprise, because we're fairly isolated. So it's a bill that I think a number of people, both urban and rural, will be interested in.

It's a difficult task because of the kinds of competing interests that it seeks to compromise and to bring together, with the interests of the operators and the interests of neighbours and environmental concerns. They are groups and individuals who have strong feelings about the operations and strong interests. A lot of those interests are financial interests that are affected by those operations.

It seems to me that the bill is based on some fairly sound principles, and the first of those, I guess, is that aggrieved owners have recourse to a process where they can have grievances, if it's a disturbance that they're concerned about, dealt with in a systematic and fair way. It's usually letters about those disturbances that we receive, people concerned about noise or odours or other impacts from operations. So the principle that there has to be a process in place is one that underlines part of the act and, I think, is dealt with in a way that should make people feel that they have recourse should they have a complaint.

The second principle that the act tries to deal with – and it's the most contentious in the act – is the need for affected people to be informed and to be part of the decision-making. Here's where the bill gets into the to and fro between local control and provincial control, and there's a legitimate argument on both sides. You can argue strongly that local authorities should be the ones making the decisions about operations that are going to take place in their jurisdiction. But I think you can also argue – and this is the side the government has come down on in this piece of legislation – that there is a broader interest, that what goes on in a particular area has the potential of affecting the entire province, so there's a strong provincial interest that goes on, and the crafters of the legislation, the government, has come down on the side of provincial interests.

I know that that's a source of contention, and there is a great deal of heat being generated around that whole issue, and rightfully so, because I think that in the end it'll lead to a better understanding and will lead to some action on the part of some jurisdictions, as the previous speaker has indicated, in terms of development plans and making sure that those plans are completed and in place.

I think a third principle that sits behind the legislation is that there has to be a process that will help resolve conflicts between urban and rural, nonfarmers and producers. I went to the government web site. The purpose of the bill, according to the government web site, is to provide an institutional framework for the resolving of conflicts between agriculture producers and urban/rural nonfarmers. In fact, I thought I might find more on the web site than what's there right now, Mr. Speaker, and I assume that it will be updated. I note that the mover of the bill had an interview that is not yet on the web site and accessible, and I hope that that might be included by the government. A major part and a major principle underneath the bill is that there has to be a process to resolve those conflicts, and that's closely related to the first principle that I had outlined.

Again, I go back to the difficulty. The crafters of the legislation have had a difficult time, and there have been a number of reviews. As was mentioned, since the mid-80s there's been concern in the province, and there have been a number of reports that have been considered. This is the culmination of those reports. It has been difficult, and it's not going to make everyone happy. That's a given when you have the strong feelings that surround this issue.

I look forward to moving to the committee stage of legislation when we'll have an opportunity to debate the individual sections of the report. With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to conclude.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] It's going to be short. Save it for next time.

It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have this opportunity to speak to this bill. First of all, I want to thank all of the committees that worked over the last two to three years on this very important issue. As you know, a committee traveled the province, and then there was another committee that traveled the province and reported back with very, very useful information. Actually, quite a good report, but it was a little short in a couple of areas, and that was the whole issue about the approval process and what to do about the existing operations that some people were having some discomfort with. So the hon. Member for Leduc chaired a committee made up of other MLAs who once again went out and took input on those issues and came back with a very fine report, so we've been able to come forward, then, with this legislation. I want to take the opportunity to thank all those people that participated, particularly the most recent committee, who did a very, very fine job of bringing this to the point where we can now talk about a bill.

It's very encouraging when we hear the Official Opposition speaking in favour of the bill. I think that they will be able to add some value to it. It is discouraging, though, to hear the third party speak against the bill, and of course it would be one of my objectives, speaking to the bill, to help convince them that, yeah, this is a good bill and that they should support it. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, they are not within hearing distance of me today.

I would at this point, then, adjourn debate. Hopefully we'll be able to carry on later.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 18

Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have taken the opportunity to review Hansard and noted the comments made by individuals. I thank hon. members for their comments to this bill and its speedy passage and hereby move third reading of this bill.

DR. TAFT: I will keep my comments brief, Mr. Speaker. I have to do something for applause here. We will be, as I've indicated throughout, supporting this bill. I just want to get on the record that, of course, as I suppose with all legislation, there are voices of concern. There are people who are concerned about the implementation of some aspects of the bill, and there are concerns about providing and ensuring that there are sufficient resources available to the various professional organizations to ensure that disciplinary procedures can be handled in an expeditious and fair manner. Those kinds of concerns I'm sure the minister will turn his attention to in due course and resolve. We have no desire to hold this up, so with those comments I'll take my seat.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday, November 19, 2001, at 1:30 in the afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:04 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, November 19, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/11/19

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: At the conclusion of the prayer would you all remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask You, Father, to renew and strengthen in us the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of this Legislature. We ask You also in Your divine providence to bless and protect the Assembly and the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Now we'll call on Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very privileged to introduce a former Member of the Legislative Assembly. He is a personal friend of mine, and he has chosen to continue his career in the elected forum by being elected as chair of Chinook's Edge school division No. 73. Seated with Mr. Roy Brassard is Mr. Jim Gibbons, superintendent of Chinook's Edge school division, and Mr. Ian Taylor, vice-chairman of Chinook's Edge school division. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the warm blessing of this Assembly.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, with your permission I wish to file with the Assembly copies of two letters I sent earlier today. The first letter is to the Calgary Stampeders' coach and general manager, Wally Buono, and the entire Stampeders organization. The letter of course congratulates the Stamps for winning yesterday's western final and wishes them the best of luck in next Sunday's Grey Cup game in Montreal.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is to Manitoba Premier Gary Doer. The letter challenges Premier Doer to a bet. If the Blue Bombers win the Grey Cup, I will agree to wear a Bombers jersey for one day in this Assembly, with your permission, and make a $100 donation to the Manitoba charity of Mr. Doer's choice. If the Stampeders win, which I'm sure you'll agree is a more likely scenario, Mr. Doer will be obliged to wear a Stampeders jersey in the Manitoba Legislature and make a $100 donation to the Alberta charity of my choice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 2000 annual report of the Alberta Workers' Compensation Board.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table eight copies of each of the responses to the questions posed in estimates to this member, to Alberta Revenue, on May 23. Although these responses were generated, we were in recess at the time. The responses were provided to the members in hard copy in a timely fashion, but we thought we'd now table them in the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta Boilers Safety Association's annual report for the year 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table five copies of the following reports: the Law Society of Alberta annual report, 2000, and the 28th annual report of the Alberta Law Foundation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to file a report with the House. This report was done by Mr. Allan Jobson, a constituent of mine, regarding the WCB recommendations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative offices I'd like to table five copies of the following reports: the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, 2000-2001, and the report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the 2000 provincial confirmation process and the Monday, March 12, 2001, provincial general election of the 25th Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Both reports, hon. member, have already been tabled in this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table the required number of copies of a letter from Dorothy Ackerman, who is deaf and is in need of interpreting services and is looking forward to when the government comes through with their promised $400,000 for interpreting services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is on behalf of Ms Eleanor Ifody, a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This is a letter that the Premier's office has sent to her. It is regarding compensation for retired teachers.

The second tabling is a letter also regarding teachers and the calculation of benefits under the teachers' pension plan. This one is from the office of the hon. Minister of Learning.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies today of a letter from Ms Sandra Badun of Edmonton. The letter also has 29 other signatures. These residents of Alberta are in support of Bill 209, the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the submission made by SALT, the Seniors' Action and Liaison Team. This submission was made to the Romanow commission on health care in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have two tablings today. First of all, I'm pleased to file with the Assembly copies of a letter that is being sent today to Celebrate the Season participants indicating that Christmas caroling is back on in the Alberta Legislature Building rotunda. Choirs are being scheduled to participate daily between December 3 to December 22 during the hours of noon to 1 p.m. and from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. As always our first priority is for the safety of our children and all visitors to these precincts. On a personal note, the chair for one could not be happier.

Hon. members, I table in the House today five copies of a letter of resignation received from Mr. Peter Valentine, Auditor General of the province of Alberta.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a distinct privilege today to introduce two groups. The first group, seated in the members' gallery front row, consists of the president of the Rotary Club of Sherwood Park. He is also well known as president of Petersen Pontiac, a car dealership in our community. He is accompanied by a wonderful young man from Switzerland who is a Rotary exchange student. His parents are both educators. He's a 17 year old, and he is enjoying Canada very much. Please join me in warm applause for our guests, Marc Suter and his accompanying host, Al Petersen, in the members' gallery, if they would stand.

The second introduction. Eighty wonderful and boisterous students from Pine Street school have joined us along with their teachers and parent helpers, and may I congratulate all of them. Alex Newhart, Cheryl Hawryluk, Peggy Brown, Heather Wright, Val Danard, and parent helper Nancy McKay accompany all of these students from Pine Street, who are in both galleries, I believe. Please join me in applauding them as they rise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you some constituents of mine from grade 6 at Lymburn elementary school. They are here with their teacher, Ms Susan Galloway, and parent helpers Ms Trautman and Mrs. Bayn. The children are participating in School at the Legislature this week, and although they are probably as disappointed with the Eskimos as I am, would you please join me in giving them the warm welcome of the House today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly five students and their teacher from the adult upgrading class at Augustana University College's centre for community education. They are here as part of their social studies course. They're studying government, I understand. Included in the group is the teacher, Kathryn Elford, and students Kirby Colter, Lena Morningchild-Baker, Tessa Pearce, Victoria Steiner, and Erika Steiner. I believe they're sitting in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive our warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you Mr. Sid Saraya and Perry Duquette, who in conjunction with an artist from Castle Downs, Ms Gracie Jane Genereux, have presented the city of New York mayor, Mr. Guiliani, with a print depicting the Twin Towers, which is now being sold and destined to earn in excess of $2.5 million American. This print is being displayed right now in the New York city hall and in the NYPD headquarters. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 24 social 10 and legal studies students from NorQuest College. They are accompanied today by their instructor, Ms Elaine Nichols. I believe they're sitting in the public gallery. If I could get them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. It's an honour for me to introduce this first group of world travelers that have joined us. Dr. Sarah Jennings; her husband, Rob Nicholl; and their two delightful daughters, Rosie and Alice, are here with us in the Assembly today. Sarah is a PhD from the U of A teaching at the University of Tasmania in Hobart, and Rob is an MA in economics graduate of the U of A now working in the equivalent position of an ADM with the government of Tasmania. They have taken a three-month leave to show their daughters the world and are renewing old friendships during their stay in Edmonton. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second set of introductions are longtime friends and well known to many people in this Assembly. They are the family members of a former member, Peter Sekulic. We are joined today by Angela Sekulic and their children, Brennan, Olivia, and Jared. Brennan is eight years old and a grade 3 student, and he is a keen political observer and a real history buff and certainly knows more about the history of this Legislative Assembly than I'm quite sure all of us put together. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you six representatives of the Council of Alberta University Students. These university students are here all week as part of their political action committee to meet with members of the Legislature, and I would ask that everyone open their doors to these six individuals. Oliver Bladek is the chair of CAUS and vice-president, external, University of Calgary Students' Union; Barb Wright is the president of the University of Calgary Students' Union; Matt McHugh is the president of the University of Lethbridge Students' Union; Kory Zwack is vice-president, external, University of Alberta Students' Union, and vice-chair of CAUS; Toby White is the CAUS administrator; and Terri Jackson is the vice-president, academic, University of Lethbridge Students' Union. I would ask these individuals to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier indicated that Albertans can expect to see more cuts, or what the Premier refers to as adjustments, if the oil price does not recover. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us whether any further adjustments will be made to the budgets of the people programs such as health care, education, and children's services?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Finance supplement my answer, but quite simply the minister has directed all departments to achieve a 1 percent savings in expenditures this year, and all ministers responsible for capital projects have been asked to defer or to stage as many of those projects as we possibly can.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On October 18 we announced an economic update to Albertans to keep them abreast of some of the volatility that certainly existed within the marketplace as it pertained to our revenue base. At that point we also announced that we were able to take corrective actions to reflect that volatility and pull our spending back by $1.26 billion. That was done, as the Premier has alluded to, by ministries coming forward with a 1 percent reduction and freezing hiring and holding off on discretionary spending.

It's no secret to Albertans that the marketplace for oil and gas is very volatile. It has been going down, particularly on the oil side, these last few days. We are monitoring that very, very closely. I will say, though, that on the gas side those revenues are firming up and have gone up. So the market has been shifting somewhat. We will monitor it, and if necessary we will make further corrections. We have a commitment to Albertans to balance our books. It's the law in this province, and we will uphold that commitment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how much of the onetime spending that was in the budget this year has not yet been contracted or signed and could possibly be still delayed?

MR. KLEIN: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I don't have those figures at my fingertips. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance can shed some more light on this matter.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, on the capital side we asked for a staging and deferral of some $700 million of capital projects by the departments of Transportation and Infrastructure, and they were able to do that. That's included in the $1.26 billion that we are holding back.

Now, I've stressed the words "staging" and "deferral" because those projects will have to go forward at some time, and it will have to be dependent upon the revenue base that comes in next year's budget and the year after. They have not been removed from the table, but they will not proceed until we have the money in the bank. In other words, we won't spend money that we don't have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. Mr. Premier, can you commit to Albertans that if any further cuts are necessary, they'll come out of those onetime expenditures rather than the people programs that are so important to Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Well, onetime, Mr. Speaker, means precisely that – or at least it's supposed to – that is, onetime spending. As far as I know, that has all been committed. The two ministers who can talk to this more specifically would be the Minister of Infrastructure and the Minister of Transportation, because that's where most of the capital works projects lie. If you wish to hear their supplementary relative to the specific question, I'll ask them to respond.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, in the Department of Infrastructure we had a number of projects that were approved, and they will eventually go ahead, but even though it was allocated to a project, some of the onetime spending hadn't been given to the health authority or the college or the postsecondary institution or the school board. Where those occurred, we did not send out the money for the year 2001-2002. However, in many cases the money is out there, and it will be staged. Where we have to add to those funds, the budget shows that we will be able to do that over time.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Infrastructure Funding

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals have recommended using a five-year moving average for projecting oil and natural gas prices. If the government had followed our advice, revenue projections for this year's budget would have been $19.2 billion, about $3 billion less than the government's projected spending in the budget. My question is to the Premier. Why did the government not use the concept of an infrastructure enhancement fund and earmark the $2.3 billion of onetime infrastructure expenditures for next year so that they could be done out of revenues that had already been received rather than out of expected revenues in a budget when we have such volatile revenues?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that the Liberal policies are interesting, but we as a government decided to adopt a different policy and different priorities. Our priority was clearly that of debt reduction. I would have to remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that there was a $5 billion plus contribution to reducing the debt, which in turn freed up hundreds of millions of dollars in interest payments. The priority of this government is to not raise taxes, to keep a very competitive tax regime. The policy is to have the most competitive, in fact, tax regime in Canada and, at the same time, dedicate funds as we can to priority projects. There were indeed very significant contributions to onetime infrastructure projects.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If these onetime infrastructure programs that the Premier is speaking about were so important this year, why were they not included in the regular Infrastructure budget rather than put in as onetime?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, indeed they were. There's only so much that we can do. We try to do as much as we can with the money that we have. If you think that we're in a peachy position right now, I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure outline for the hon. leader of the Liberal Party just how serious the Infrastructure deficit is, notwithstanding the fact that we have committed very significant amounts of dollars to infrastructure projects.

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition's proposal is quite interesting, but the fact is that when we had the extra funds, we did send them out to the postsecondary institutions and the school boards. There is a lot of money sitting out there currently that will be used over the next three years. So it is feathered out. It's not as though the money was all spent in the year it was received.

Mr. Speaker, the onetime spending did not pick up the deficit that we do have currently in what we would call the preservation end of the structures that we have a responsibility for. As a matter of fact, as we go through the whole system, it looks like that deficit could be in excess of $3 billion. Really what the industry is saying is that we should be spending about 1.5 percent of the book value of the asset annually to preserve it. We haven't been coming to that level. We've been at about 0.3 percent. So, in fact, the onetime spending has gone a long way to address some of those issues.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, now they're calling it back.

My final question is to the Premier. If you now have such a deficit in the infrastructure in this province, is that not a result of not properly funding infrastructure over the past 10 years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that there are many contributing factors to funding infrastructure and the rising costs of infrastructure. One, of course, is related to growth. We try to achieve in this province a balance, a balance of funds to operate what the hon. leader refers to as the people programs, a balance of funds to maintain as best as we possibly can the infrastructure, which includes not only buildings but certainly roads, a balance to achieve an orderly or an accelerated pay-down, if we can, of the debt, and a balance to maintain a very competitive and unobtrusive tax regime in this province.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Pricing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a legacy of high-profile boondoggles: Gainers at $207 million, Swan Hills at $470 million, and the up-to-now champion NovAtel at $646 million. My questions are to the Premier. Will the current champion be replaced by electricity deregulation deferral costs of $700 million, which were hidden from the voters of this province last winter, the true costs of electricity?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank God for this government. I'm talking about this government and this administration, because while Gainers and NovAtel – well, we still have to deal with Swan Hills, and I'll speak to that, because I totally disagree with the assertions of the hon. member relative to Swan Hills. Relative to those, this government got in there, acted and acted quickly, and resolved those issues, cleaned those issues up.

Relative to the Swan Hills situation, I've tried to explain. I'll explain once again. There is a cost to garbage. This hon. member in the city of Edmonton pays through his municipal taxes – and I don't know if he pays a user fee on top of that – to have his garbage cleaned up. In the case of Alberta we've tried to find ways through the private sector, but ultimately we have a responsibility to society to make sure that this province is clean and free of toxic, poisonous waste. It's garbage. It's garbage, and there is a cost to garbage.

MR. MacDONALD: Given that this province is not clear of high electricity bills, will the Premier please explain what he thought was hypothetical last spring, the deferral accounts on electricity in light of third-quarter results from EPCOR, Enmax, and other electricity providers? The deferral accounts now owed are $700 million. Your boondoggle is electricity deregulation now, Mr. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: There wasn't a boondoggle in electricity deregulation. As a matter of fact, there has been a tremendous correction in the market, Mr. Speaker, and we no longer hear complaints. The only people complaining are the Liberals. Relative to the deferral account situation, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier says: thank God for this government. I'd say: thank Ralph Klein for this government.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to table today's power pool prices, which indicate that the price today is some $33.50 a megawatt hour, which is a far cry from the $100-plus. I also think, to help answer the member's question, that we may want to table the covering page of Enmax's third-quarter earnings. Enmax's third-quarter earnings reflect declining energy prices. In fact, the profit has dropped from $95 million in the second quarter to $35 million, reflecting lower energy costs.

Also, the proceeds from the auctions were returned to customers in terms of $40 rebates last year, and the deferral accounts which were agreed to with the utility companies, Mr. Speaker, will be collected from consumers over a three-year period. We are waiting for the appropriate calculation and the Energy and Utilities Board to reflect on next year's RRO filings made by the utilities. This is money that will be collected from consumers to the utility companies. It does not – does not – impact the bottom financial line of this government in any way, shape, or form.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: since neither Enmax, EPCOR, nor the public know how deferral rates will be collected, the $700 million, will the hon. Premier please tell us how this new tax, the Klein electricity tax, will be collected on the individual power bills in this province? Where is it going to be?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: I don't know if the hon. member was listening or not, but I think the hon. minister outlined it quite clearly as to how it is to be collected, Mr. Speaker. But just in case the hon. member wasn't listening, I'll have the hon. minister explain it again.

MR. SMITH: We have already concluded in the previous answer that this does not impact the bottom line of this government that is not going into a deficit today, will not go into a deficit tomorrow. So, Mr. Speaker, the deferral accounts, which are a reflection of last year's rate riders, will go onto the utility company accounts in a way that they're clearly marked, very transparent, and easily understandable by every consumer in Alberta so that they know exactly how much they owe the utility company.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, may I repeat my admonition of the other day when I indicated to please not use personal names in the Assembly. That's to both the Minister of Energy and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Abortion Funding

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canadian women have fought long and hard for access to safe and legal abortions within the publicly funded health care system. The medical profession is clear that it's a medical procedure which can be critical to women's physical and emotional health. However, the Premier has indicated as recently as November 11 that ending medicare coverage for abortions would be part of the review of health care whether he, i.e. the Premier, likes it or not. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the government floated the suggestion, why has the Premier floated the suggestion that medicare coverage for abortion may be eliminated?

MR. KLEIN: You know, Mr. Speaker, there ought to be a law. There is a rule in this Legislature about calling a person a liar. There should be a rule against telling lies. The assertions of the hon. leader of the third party are not true in any way, shape, or form. My position – and it's a personal position, because I don't believe there'll ever be a political resolution to this very sensitive, very delicate question – is that this is a matter that's between a woman, her doctor, and God. What's more, it's covered under the Canada Health Act, and we have vowed through our own legislation, the Health Care Protection Act, which he opposed, to abide by the principles of the Canada Health Act.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you stood up. Are you rising on a point of something?

MR. MASON: I was, Mr. Speaker, but I was under the understanding that points of order in question period were taken at the end.

THE SPEAKER: Yes, but were you rising to advise me you wanted to rise on a point of order?

MR. MASON: Yes, I was, sir.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's inflammatory words aside, let me ask him the second question. Does he and his government believe that Alberta women have the right to abortions irrespective – irrespective – of their financial circumstances?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question. I will remind the hon. member once again that abortion is deemed a medically necessary procedure under the Canada Health Act, and this government, by virtue of passing the Health Care Protection Act, has agreed, as the preamble to that act, to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act.

DR. PANNU: Will the Premier show this House, Mr. Speaker, that his so-called review of the comprehensiveness principle will not touch the right of Canadian women to abortion under the public health care system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the whole issue of comprehensiveness doesn't go to the issue of that principle in the act. It goes to the issue of the interpretation of that principle. That is going to have to be a question that this government, through the due process procedure, will have to resolve and have to deal with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mazankowski Report on Health

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Last Friday you met in Calgary with the Premier, meeting with Don Mazankowski with respect to his report on health care. Could you please tell us in this Assembly when the final, complete report will be publicly available?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the Premier met with Mr. Mazankowski as well as the Premier's Advisory Council on Health on Friday at McDougall Centre. It was a very productive meeting where Mr. Mazankowski and his committee outlined a number of principles that they were operating under, including solutions to ensuring that our health care system is sustainable into the future. I should note that none of the solutions that they brought forward would result in a necessary change to the Canada Health Act. Clearly, their mandate was to work within the principles and the spirit of the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mazankowski indicated a legitimate need for more time to prepare the written text of his report. I can advise the hon. member that his report should be prepared by the end of this month or perhaps the beginning of December. We expect the report to be delivered to the Premier at that time, and the report will be released publicly some time after that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. My supplemental question to the same minister: with respect to the report, can you give us any idea of the flavour of any of the topics or any of the details in general that you might have discussed on Friday?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, we're talking now a several-hour answer. If you can put it into 30 seconds, please proceed.

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, there may be a number of different solutions put forward, but if I can categorize them, there would be a category of solutions that can be dealt with within the province of Alberta that do not at all infringe upon the Canada Health Act. There may be a second category of solutions that may require a challenge to the interpretation of terms of the Canada Health Act, as the Premier noted earlier. The third category might be solutions that would require change to the Canada Health Act, but as I indicated, there are no solutions being put forward by Mr. Mazankowski that fall within that third category.

I can say also that some of the ideas put forward by his committee are things that can be dealt with in the short term. Others will require perhaps legislative change here in the province of Alberta and would require more discussion and a longer term for implementation.

I should also note finally, Mr. Speaker, that it is the Premier's intention that he will take this report to the Premiers' Conference which will take place in British Columbia at the end of January of 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: in terms of process for here in Alberta, what does the government plan to do with the report itself?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mazankowski's report will go through the normal review process before we make any decisions, and that will include but is not limited to a review by the agenda and priorities committee, the standing policy committee on health and community living chaired by the hon. member, and also cabinet and caucus. We have been open and transparent about what comes next. We will move quickly where the recommendations fall within provincial jurisdiction, and this report, I must emphasize, will not sit on a shelf to gather dust. It will be a living document that will help us chart a new plan for health care in this province that will be high quality, accessible, fair, and sustainable.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Regional Health Authority Deficits

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. This year the Calgary and Capital regional health authorities were projecting combined deficits of well over $70 million even before this government's recent round of cuts. Can the minister tell the Assembly if the regional health authorities are expected to borrow to cover these deficits?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to meet with the chairs and all members of the 17 regional health authorities and two provincial health authorities in the province of Alberta. I indicated to the Capital regional health authority as well as the Calgary health region that we expect them to be tabling business plans that will accommodate the projected overexpenditures that they have. Indeed, as quickly as this afternoon the Minister of Finance and myself will be meeting with them to re-emphasize that message not only to the two major regional health authorities but to the remaining 15 RHAs as well.

Mr. Speaker, there are legitimate concerns expressed by regional health authorities with respect to how they will deal with these overexpenditures, and each one is coming up with different solutions, whether it be timing differences, out of working capital, or changes in the delivery of service that they make. They are coming up with different ways to be able to pay for those deficits in addition to meeting new budget targets that will be required as a result of the October 18 announcement by the Provincial Treasurer on reducing overall expenditures in all departments by 1 percent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister or his department had any communication of any kind with the regional health authorities about borrowing money to cover their deficits?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, a number of solutions have been brought forward by regional health authorities in order to deal with their respective deficits. I should note that there are a number of regional health authorities in this province that, notwithstanding the change in targets they may face, will still be able to post surpluses. But of the number of different options put forward which have been considered for dealing with deficits, borrowing has not been one of them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister then rule out the possibility that he may allow regional health authorities to borrow from financial institutions such as Alberta Treasury Branches or banks to cover their deficits?

MR. MAR: I will rule that out, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

National Institute for Nanotechnology

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few days ago the Minister of Innovation and Science signed a memorandum of understanding with the federal government, the National Research Council, and the University of Alberta to establish the National Institute for Nanotechnology right here in the city of Edmonton. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Since nanotechnology is not exactly a household word for most of us, could you briefly tell us what it is and what this institute is expected to do for the province?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, let me first say how pleased I was on behalf of the provincial government to sign the memorandum of understanding that created the National Institute for Nanotechnology. The question asks for a definition or description of what nanotechnology is. There are many experts and researchers and scientists that are much better qualified to give that description, but I'll try.

Nanotechnology is the science and engineering of materials, devices, machines, and systems carried out in the size scale of atoms and molecules. In other words, it involves controlling matter at the molecular and even the atomic level. Mr. Speaker, to put this in a word picture, to help the imagery, at the nanoscale dust particles become boulders, so . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, thank you very much. I would like to advise all members in the Assembly that we do have dictionaries available here.

The hon. member.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is it usual for a province to help pay to establish a national research council? I understand that Alberta is one of two provinces that don't already have a national research council.

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is important that the public understand what nanotechnology is. When we were presented with this opportunity from, in particular, the National Research Council, I sat down with my advisory body, which is the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority, and the University of Alberta, and I said: what impact will this have in the province of Alberta? This council of independent Albertans, who understand the science and technology, told me that this was platform technology, which is the base for the research strategies that we're undertaking in this province in energy, in ICT, and in life sciences.

Mr. Speaker, the model we have set up, which is unlike other provinces, is a collaborative effort between the province, the National Research Council, and the University of Alberta. It's a collaborative approach which allows the cross-pollination of scientists and researchers from both the university and the national research centre and allows us to draw on their expertise both ways. It also has impact for the graduate and undergraduate students at the University of Alberta and allows them to gain further experience and further education in that field.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this is a tremendous opportunity for this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HERARD: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: do we expect to be competitive with other regions of the world who have also established nanotechnology centres?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, there are other nanotechnology initiatives that are happening throughout the world. We expect and have geared this national nanotechnology centre to be among the top five to ten in the world. To be competitive in this environment, to produce the economic benefit that's going to flow from it, we have to have the critical research mass for that to happen. So we are very excited about this institute and are looking forward to the potential it has for Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Teacher Remuneration

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier this afternoon. Last evening, in speaking to the Alberta School Boards Association, the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association characterized education in the province as being in crisis. He was referring, of course, to the 52 school boards that have yet to renew teacher contracts. My questions are to the Premier. What action has the government taken to avoid this situation worsening?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the action we have taken has been very significant, and that was to put an unprecedented 6 percent guaranteed wage increase as a line item in this year's budget – I can't recall any other time that a salary increase has been guaranteed at all, never mind of that magnitude; so that is a good first step – plus to give the school boards the flexibility to provide additional dollars in salaries if indeed the school boards deem that that money can be spent best in that particular area.

Mr. Speaker, I might have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement my answers. I don't know what more he can add, but that's the long and the short of it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was just going to add that, yes, the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association did quantify the education system as being in a crisis state, but the very interesting point came when the Edwin Parr winners were announced last night, the six first-year teachers from around the province. Each one of these teachers gave very heartwarming stories, and I will quote, about how they loved their boards, how they loved their administration, how they loved their jobs.

AN HON. MEMBER: How they loved their minister.

DR. OBERG: They didn't say that.

I will quote from the gentleman from Lethbridge who said: I love my job so much; they wouldn't even have to pay me, and I'd still come.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that school boards can only increase their offers to teachers by increasing class sizes, has the government not placed school boards in a lose/lose situation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that assertion is entirely subjective. You know, no two school districts are the same. Different school districts have different approaches to the use of their money. Yes, they are all required to abide by the fundamental curriculum set down by the Department of Learning, but beyond that they have the ability to negotiate with their teachers with a starting point of a 6 percent increase, which I would remind the hon. member is unprecedented, and to make the decision as to where they want their resources to go and where those resources can be spent in the best possible way to meet the requirements of not only the board but the teachers, the parents, and the students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: will the Premier agree to convene a meeting between school boards and teachers to avoid the situation worsening?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to intervention by this government where it is ostensibly a matter between the teachers and the various school districts, I will have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to negotiations between the Alberta Teachers' Association locals and the school boards for their contract, it is exactly that. The school boards sit down with local ATA representatives, and they determine their contract. The central ATA then has the ability to ratify it or not. From what I understand, as early as today we have an offer on the table in one of our school boards that the local Alberta Teachers' Association potentially will accept. The local school board, from what I understand, has already agreed to it. So we could see something happen as early as today, and I very much look forward to having all the contracts ratified, to having all the contracts accepted so that the teachers can go back to where they belong and can continue where they belong, which is in front of the kids, teaching in classrooms.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

English as a Second Language Programs

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Learning. Given that the immigration into Canada has stayed at mostly the same level in the last few years – in fact, a smaller number of people immigrated to Canada last year than the years before – why, Mr. Minister, do we have the issue of increased demand in English as a Second Language at schools in Calgary and Edmonton?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think what it is is purely a value of economics. What we're seeing is roughly the same amount of immigrants coming into Canada, roughly the same amount of people who are immigrating to Canada that cannot speak English. What we are however seeing, though, is that once they're in Canada, the majority of them are coming to Alberta. Indeed, we have seen unprecedented increases in the number of English as a Second Language students in Calgary specifically but also in Edmonton. I really feel that probably the primary driver behind this is the economic activity that is happening in Alberta today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that ESL is a recognized publicly funded program in Alberta schools, could the minister tell us what the proven benefits are and how it is funded?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, the obvious proven benefit is that we have a group of our new Canadian population, who are the immigrants who have come here, that are learning to speak and to work in English. What this does is make them much more viable members of our community, of our working community, and they will be able to go out and find jobs anywhere in Alberta.

We spend 14 and a half million dollars per year on English as a Second Language programs, and if I say so myself, Mr. Speaker, I think it's money well spent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you. My last supplemental is to the same minister. Given that immigration is a federal jurisdiction, could the minister explain any funding from the federal government for the settlement of immigrants in Alberta, and does it include ESL?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to adult settlement in Alberta, the federal government is responsible for the ESL funding. Indeed, there are many programs in all of our communities that are funded by the federal government. We do fund a portion, roughly 20 percent of this money, as well for English as a Second Language. I feel that it is a good partnership between the federal government and the province of Alberta, and hopefully it's something that we can expand on with such things as our provincial nominee program.

Mr. Speaker, immigrants are extremely important to Alberta. We need them, and we will continue to ensure that they know English.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Provincial Parks

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development. How does the minister explain the decrease in the number of visitors to Alberta's park areas in the year 2000-2001?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I'm not sure I heard the question quite correctly. Is the question: how do we explain the number of visitors to our parks?

MS CARLSON: The decrease in visitors.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have one of the most fantastic systems of provincial parks, protected areas, campgrounds anywhere in the world. From time to time there are peaks and valleys in the number of visitors who come and visit these parks, but I suspect that the member is trying to link this to something more deeply, that will come out in her supplemental. So I will simply allow her to go ahead and do that. I do want to say very clearly that we are very proud of these parks. We do put significant dollars into them every year, and we are working on the parks reinvestment strategy to bring about necessary improvements where possible.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, as this minister should know, the number of visitors has been steadily decreasing over the years as this government has not maintained infrastructure. What is he doing to ensure that sufficient dollars will be committed to infrastructure, which is the major contributing reason for decreased visitors?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do recognize that the provincial parks system, the campgrounds, the playgrounds, and all that stuff have a tremendous impact on our bottom-line revenue picture from the standpoint of tourism. We also are making as many of these spaces available across the province for everyone to enjoy. We're trying to keep prices affordable, but costs do go up, and from time to time in our lease agreements, through some of the operators who help us in these operations, they do increase those fees, and that might contribute to a little bit of a slowdown in certain areas. But I can tell you that in other areas, such as throughout Kananaskis Country, for example, numbers are usually up every year.

Now having said that, I will just reiterate that we are looking at all of the provincial parks right now. We are looking at reinvestment strategy to help improve these excellent places and make them even more attractive. Once dollars come available after we're through this economic downturn, then we'll engage in that discussion of how we can go about providing those necessary dollars to ensure that we continue to have the very best and the most accessible parks anywhere in Canada and perhaps even around the world.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, will the minister make public any studies or reports about the effects of user fees in the park system and the effect of not having adequate washroom and playground facilities and campground facilities in these parks?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, we do have adequate facilities in all of these parks places. Some of them are a little more of the Cadillac variety perhaps than some of the others; nonetheless, we do have a very good system in place that looks after that.

I should also add that we monitor these parks and the campgrounds and the playgrounds and so on on a very regular basis. We do have qualified inspectors who go out and get into these matters, and they do provide information back to the ministry with respect to what needs to be done where. Obviously, we are very concerned with some of the places in terms of some of the safety features that exist, and we're working through that process right now as well, but I can assure the House that everything possible is being done within the dollars available to make and maintain these spaces to the best of our ability.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Public Affairs Bureau

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government prides itself on cutting costs. [some applause] Yes, I know you'll all applaud. Okay. Just ask Alberta teachers looking for a new contract. This government prides itself on reducing bureaucracy. Just ask thousands of laid-off government employees. But the Premier has a real blind spot when it comes to one area of big government. To the Premier: why has the number of government communication directors and officers nearly tripled, from 47 when he first became Premier to 133 today?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker . . . [interjection] I'm going to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker. Before I answer the question, in regard to my responses to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and in anticipation of the point of order raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, in the event that I have offended the House, I wish to withdraw my insinuation that the hon. member was telling lies and apologize. I don't know where the hon. member obtained the quote he attributed to me, but I believe I have made my position very clear today, as I have on previous occasions, and I hope that that is accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands says is true. Yes, there has been some expansion commensurate with the growth of the province and with our responsibilities to disseminate factual information, and that may have contributed to some of the growth in the Public Affairs Bureau, but I would have to get the factual information relative to the growth in the PAB and where that growth has actually occurred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier. We will provide him with the research which we have done to demonstrate this.

Given that during the same period the civil service as a whole was reduced by 10,000 people, how can the Premier justify nearly tripling the number of spin doctors working for his government?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, they are not spin doctors. I think that if I had the opportunity to go through my estimates, which of course I will in the spring, the hon. member will see – and I'd be glad to share the information that I shared with the Assembly last time around – exactly where those dollars are spent and for what reasons.

Mr. Speaker, there are numerous functions within the Public Affairs Bureau, not the least of which is to get out in the spirit of accountability and openness as much factual information as we possibly can about the departments of government and about the activities that take place within the government of Alberta. It is immense, you know, the number of services we offer, the number of programs that exist, and it's a huge job. In the spirit of accountability and in the spirit of openness we want to get as much factual information out there as we possibly can.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the Premier's sense of humour, will he assure all Albertans that this bloated PR bureaucracy will be downsized in order to save the taxpayers money?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have a very competent director of the Public Affairs Bureau. I'm sure that she, like the directors of other departments, will abide by the hon. Minister of Finance's directive to achieve at least a 1 percent savings and more if she possibly can. Again, I would remind the hon. member that we do have an obligation. As a matter of fact, we have an obligation to fulfill the mandate of this government, and part of the mandate of this government is to be open, honest, accessible, and accountable, and to do that, we need a mechanism to disseminate factual information.

THE SPEAKER: I apologize to the six hon. members who because of my inability to marshal question and answer period were not recognized today.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

National Addictions Awareness Week

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chairman of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission I am pleased to inform the hon. members that this week, November 18 through 24, is National Addictions Awareness Week. This week is a designated opportunity for individuals and communities to increase their awareness of alcohol and other drug and gambling problems and their solutions.

National Addictions Awareness Week promotes positive action by Albertans toward the prevention of substance and gambling abuse. Activities taking place during NAA Week help to strengthen personal independence and empower individuals to make informed lifestyle decisions. AADAC, through its involvement in NAA Week, helps to create healthier families and communities and demonstrates the government's commitment to sustaining the health of Albertans. By continuing to work together toward an addiction-free future, we can make a difference in people's lives to help ensure the future prosperity of our province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

National Addictions Awareness Week

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to recognize National Addictions Awareness Week from November 18 to 24, 2001. In particular, I wish to recognize and thank the many individuals and agencies who work so hard to combat addictions and to help those who have succumbed. In particular, those working with gambling addictions need to be applauded, especially after the government's recent announcement of increases to gaming activity in Alberta.

Although the government continues to increase its revenue from gaming, there is no corresponding increase in money to combat addictions. Over a billion dollars a year goes into government coffers, but the amounts available to counter gambling and other addictions are not tied in any way to the revenue. So even though the government makes more, the groups dealing with the negative effects do not get more to deal with increased problems. Groups like the Nechi institute, Gamblers Anonymous, the Canadian Foundation of Compulsive Gambling (Alberta), and our own AADAC deserve our attention this week and our gratitude for waging an uphill battle.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Inskip Spencer

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to recognize the Westmount Community League volunteer of the year 2001 award recipient, Inskip Spencer. For those members who don't know, Westmount Community League falls in the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Spencer's contributions to the community include organizing the Westmount summer sprint and family fair, the seniors' tea and variety show, the annual volunteer appreciation dinner and the unsung hero award, the holiday gathering potluck and dance, and the fall aboriginal round dance. He is a well-deserving individual, and it's most appropriate this year, as this is the International Year of the Volunteer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. David Schindler

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to recognize Dr. David Schindler, a great Albertan and a leading environmental scientist and pioneer in the study of freshwater lake systems. Dr. Schindler is the Killam Memorial professor of ecology at the University of Alberta and teaches limnology, public policy, and environmental decision-making.

Dr. Schindler is indeed a leading scientific mind and a highly respected strategic thinker. He's a recipient of the prestigious Stockholm water prize. More recently he won the 2001 Gerhard Herzberg Canada gold medal for science and engineering. This award includes $1 million in research funding and is considered the highest honour for Canadian researchers. Having worked on key national and international bodies, a five-star scientific expert and authority, Dr. Schindler is committed to solving real-world problems and is a role model for every budding scientist.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Schindler is, I think, seated in the public gallery. I'd ask Dr. Schindler to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order. Citation, please.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I cite Standing Order 23(h), where a member may be called to order when he "makes allegations against another member." I also cite Beauchesne's 489, unparliamentary use of the expressions "lie" and "lies," which is on page 146 of Beauchesne's.

Now, I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the apology from the hon. the Premier, but I would also point out that the hon. minister of health – and it was clearly heard on our side – called the leader of the New Democrat opposition a liar. I believe that ought to be ruled unparliamentary and should be withdrawn.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate when a member of this House does the honourable thing, stands up and withdraws the use of language where it's appropriate to do so, and then members of the opposition do not have the good grace to accept that apology when it's made. In fact, I was sitting right here and did not hear anybody call anybody a liar in the House but did hear a reference to information which was being brought forward to the House which was lies. When it was pointed out that the word "lies" might be inappropriate in the House, the Premier had the good grace to stand up and withdraw it on a very timely basis. I think it could be taken from that context that he withdrew the use of that language on behalf of anybody who might have used it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that I appreciate very much what the Premier said in response to what he realized was wrong, and I thank him for it. The point of order is not with respect to what the Premier said. It was what preceded what the Premier said, and what preceded was the utterance from the minister of health. That's what the point of order is about.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, it only goes to point out that if all hon. members followed the rules of question period about the way the questions should go and the way the answers should go, we wouldn't have these little things happening. But let's just talk about what really did happen. Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona issued a question, and it had in it certain views addressed to the Premier of the province of Alberta, who obviously took quite some degree of exception to these views in the preamble to the question. So the hon. leader of the government says:

You know, Mr. Speaker, there ought to be a law. There is a rule in this Legislature about calling a person a liar. Mr. Speaker, there should be a rule against telling lies. The assertions of the hon. leader of the third party are not true in any way, shape, or form.

Now, at the same time that that was happening, then, the point being made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness – and that's the correct title. The assertion is that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness called someone a liar. Well, unfortunately the Blues do not pick any of that up. However, the chair heard it, and what the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness said was, "That is a lie." If the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness accused someone of being a liar, there would have been an immediate response, a pretty quick response. So one of the things that we have to do is we have to listen very attentively, but we also have to be very careful about what is said in here. Look; the mood today was incredible. I mean, there was none of the normal kind of raucous behaviour, but on the other hand there were continuous violations of questions, and they were not restricted to one caucus.

Without any doubt, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, if I read Beauchesne 428(a), which reads that a question must not "be ironical, rhetorical, offensive, or contain epithet, innuendo, satire, or ridicule," it strikes me that one of your questions might have been ruled out of order.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, if I read Beauchesne 428(f), it says that the question must not "contain an expression of opinion.” I could clearly have ruled out of order a couple of yours.

To the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. If I would read 428(j) in Beauchesne, a question must not “be framed so as to suggest its own answer.” I would most definitely have ruled out one of yours.

Well, I can go on with additional examples, because it does not apply to just one caucus or one representative of the various caucuses. These rules are actually not that difficult to read. Just a little time and a little attempt at it might help us all, and then we don't have to have this kind of an exercise. So, I think, caution in the utilization of words. Everybody in here is honourable. There are honourable people in here, really good people. The English language is actually a very, very nice language.

Bill 25

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move Bill 25, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, for second reading.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 25 is an important new bill that will allow the courts to use wrongfully obtained profits and property to repair harm done to victims of crime and other illegal acts. It will do this by making it easier for Albertans to regain their property or obtain court-ordered restitution for losses suffered as a result of illegal activities. The bill will also allow the court to order an interim restraint order to prevent the property from being sold or disposed of prior to legal proceedings. The bill also includes provisions for penalties for failure to comply with restitution or civil forfeiture, assistance orders, and for the appeal and review of decisions made by the court. I'd like to use the time I have today to provide you and all members of the Assembly with a brief overview of the bill and to highlight what we expect it to achieve.

Let's consider part 1, the legal action regarding property acquired by illegal means. Where a peace officer reasonably believes that property in Alberta was acquired by an illegal act, a crime, or other specified federal or provincial offence, the Crown may apply for a property disposal order for the purpose of taking that property away from the person responsible for the illegal act and returning it to the victim. This action can take place whether or not the person responsible for an illegal act has been charged or convicted. The application is made entirely at the discretion and direction of the Minister of Justice. Where a court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the property was acquired by an illegal act, the court may issue a restraint order to preserve the property and prevent its disappearance pending the property disposal hearing.

Where a police officer becomes aware that property was acquired by an illegal act and there is a risk that the person in possession will dispose of the property before a restraint order can be obtained, the police officer can direct that the property be restrained for a short period until a restraint order can be obtained from the court. If the Crown proves in court on a balance of probabilities that the property was acquired by an illegal act, the court may grant a property disposal order and rule that the property be taken away from the person responsible for the illegal act and returned to the person lawfully entitled to the property. A summary procedure with civil rules of evidence and procedures will be used for this purpose.

Where no victim or person entitled to the property can be found, the court must order that the restrained property be sold and the proceeds of the sale be paid, in accordance with a ministerial order, to an agency or program devoted to addressing the social harm caused by the illegal act, failing which the moneys are to be paid to the victims of crime fund.

There are existing provisions in the Criminal Code allowing for the forfeiture of proceeds of crime and the return of these proceeds to the victim. However, these provisions require the Crown to lay a criminal charge and prove a case beyond a reasonable doubt in a criminal court. Because of the constitutional protections afforded to the accused in criminal cases, it's sometimes difficult to obtain a conviction. Under this act a legal action can be commenced to return the illegally obtained property to the victim even if there is no criminal charge or conviction, because the focus of the act is the civil compensation of victims, a provincial purpose, not the criminal punishment of offenders, a federal purpose.

Mr. Speaker, part 2 of the act focuses on restitution and compensation orders and the conviction requirement. Where a person has been convicted of committing an illegal act and the court orders restitution paid to a victim pursuant to some other act, most often the Criminal Code, the court can order under this act that any assets owned by the offender be transferred to the victim up to the value of the restitution order. In order to put the court in a better position to make a restitution payment order, the court can order the person convicted to disclose financial information; that is, to tell the court what income and assets they own. Where a person has been convicted of committing an illegal act and the court that convicted the offender has made a determination as to the amount of the gain made or the value of property acquired by the offender by virtue of carrying out the illegal act and there is no victim to be found and thus no restitution order, the court may order that the offender pay that amount, in accordance with a ministerial order, to an agency or program devoted to addressing the social harm caused by the illegal act, failing which the money is to be paid into the victims of crime fund.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Where a compensation order has been made by a court, a court may make another payment order to ensure the offender complies with the compensation order by paying money, transferring property, et cetera. Whereas the compensation order says that this is what you must do to help victims, the payment order essentially says: this is how you will do it. In order to put the court in a better position to make a compensation order, the court can order the person convicted to disclose financial information.

In summary, Bill 25, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, will make it easier for Albertans to regain their property or to obtain court-ordered restitution for losses suffered as a result of illegal activities. In the past victims had to use a civil lawsuit to have their property returned. Bill 25 streamlines the process through which victims can regain their property or obtain restitution without the time and the financial costs of a normal civil lawsuit. In other words, Mr. Speaker, this is a manner by which we can ensure that victims are not revictimized over and over again by the process.

I would encourage all members of the Assembly to provide their support for Bill 25. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I was going to move adjournment of debate, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 26
Trustee Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Assembly for allowing me this privilege to get both of these acts on the floor of the Assembly this afternoon.

Bill 26, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2001, I'm very pleased to move for second reading.

It's not a large act, but it's a very significant act, Mr. Speaker. One of the principal tasks of most trustees is to invest trust assets for trust beneficiaries. For example, if a parent leaves a sum of money to an underage child in his or her will, the parent may decide to appoint a trustee to look after the investment of that money until the child reaches the age of majority. Frequently a trust specifically instructs the trustee on how money in the account can be invested. Occasionally, however, no instructions are given to the trustee, and this is the circumstance of the provisions where the Trustee Act comes into play. If a trustee has no instructions as to how to invest, the act says that the trustee may only invest in certain approved investments. This list of approved investments is known as the legal list.

The present legal list restricts a trustee to very conservative categories of investment such as debt instruments issued by certain governments or regulated financial institutions. The idea is that the Legislature can and should prevent trustees from exposing trusts to undue risk by restricting them to investing in safe assets or at least severely limiting the ability to invest in risky assets. However, the downside to this approach is that trustees' investment options have become unnecessarily limited and inflexible. In practice, as the Law Reform Institute has told us, legal lists tend to be long and convoluted, and it is doubtful that a typical, unsophisticated trustee would take much comfort from or derive much guidance from the list.

The objective of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to replace the legal list approach with a more flexible approach to investing. The Alberta Law Reform Institute has recommended that the legal list in the Trustee Act be replaced with the prudent investor rule. All other Canadian provinces except British Columbia and Quebec recognize the prudent investor rule. Similar rules are recognized in the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia, and in many if not most American jurisdictions. While the legal list approach attempts to limit risk by prohibiting trustees from investing in something that has been deemed to be too risky, the prudent investor rule focuses on diversification as a key strategy for managing risk. The prudent investor rule is a variation on the old saying: don't put all of your eggs in one basket. This approach allows a trustee to diversify investments to control risk and improve financial returns to a trust fund. The trustee can use his or her own best judgment when investing funds. The Trustee Amendment Act legislates the prudent investor rule, which requires a trustee to make investment decisions based on obtaining reasonable returns while avoiding undue risk.

The proposed amendments will eliminate the list of approved investments and instead ask each trustee to consider the circumstances of the particular trust. Trustees will need to look at a number of factors including the purposes and probable duration of the trust, the needs and circumstances of the beneficiaries, the need to maintain the real value of the capital or income of the trust, the need to maintain a balance between risk and return, and the importance of appropriate diversification of investments.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also emphasizes the importance of establishing an investment strategy, considering such questions as what risk level is appropriate to the particular trust, what kinds of returns are most appropriate, and how the trustee can best invest to reflect the purposes and the circumstances of the trust. A trustee will be required to review the investment portfolio at reasonable intervals to ensure that it is still appropriate to the circumstances of the beneficiaries. This new approach does not mean that a trustee will be held liable because in hindsight a different investment strategy would have produced higher returns. Rather, as long as a trustee invests in a manner that is prudent, the manner in which a prudent investor could have invested, the trustee is not likely to be liable for his choices. As is the case with the legal list approach, the prudent investor rule will not apply when the will or other trust instrument outlines specific investment options for the trust.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to point out that we have not eliminated the legal list entirely from the act. It will be maintained as a schedule to the act. In this way those Alberta acts and instruments that refer specifically to the legal list can continue to make use of it. At the same time, however, the Trustee Amendment Act empowers those enactments that currently use the list to adopt the prudent investor rule if and when they are ready to do so at some point in the future.

On another note, the Trustee Amendment Act will allow a trustee to invest in mutual funds. The present act does not allow this.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the bill allows trustees to tailor their investments to best suit the needs of their beneficiaries by diversifying the portfolio after considering the particular circumstances of the trust. The amendments reflect a course of action adopted by many other jurisdictions around the world and is the approach recommended by Alberta's Law Reform Institute. The prudent investor rule is a practical approach. It emphasizes the importance of intelligent diversification as a means of controlling risk.

In conclusion, I would encourage members of the Assembly to support Bill 26 and the updating of our trustee investor legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in second reading to the newly proposed Bill 26, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2001. I'm going to have to disagree with the minister right off the top, because although he calls it a minor change, it's a fairly hefty bill. It does get into a good deal of legal detail of what's accepted and what isn't accepted. So while I'm likely to be supporting what's being put forward here in principle, I have some hesitation in that I need to run a feedback loop of the information that's in here through the community to find out any hesitations that they have. However, it speaks well to me that the Law Reform Institute would be recommending that this is the way to go.

I'm remembering when I had my will done, which was this spring, and in reading through it, I had asked specifically about a section that was written into the will. It was the equivalent of what this legislation would now do in that it set out very clearly what a trustee could do. I spoke with my lawyer for some time about it while she sort of set out why it was reasonable and what the expectations were and the prudent investor rule. I think, in fact, that she may have referred to that in the will. So she was writing in essentially this legislation. That says to me that if lawyers are doing this on a regular basis to make sure that it's included in documents that they're drawing up for people because they can't rely on the legislation that's in existence, then we probably do need to look at updating.

As with any change, I always want to know, you know, is there a current problem that needs to be addressed, does this bill address it, and does it cause any problems in itself? Does it cause additional problems that it didn't set out to do?

There are a few things that come to mind. I've already briefly discussed that there are indications to me that there is a need for this bill to allow the trustees under the legislation to go ahead and invest prudently those moneys that are entrusted to them. Therefore, even if you didn't put it in your will, those rules would apply to you once this legislation is enacted. So is there a need for it? Certainly it's useful. I don't know that there's a great crushing, special, urgent need for it, but obviously it's something that the legal community has been considering for some time.

Does this legislation address the problem? It likely does. There's a good deal of legal detail in here, and although I think there's been an attempt here to try and get the language into layperson's terms, it's still a fairly hefty legal document. It's not the kind of thing that most people would pick up for a little light reading on the bus to Calgary. As always, I urge the government to try and make any new legislation or regulations as readable as possible for people. If we want more Albertans to be taking an interest in what we're doing and the laws of the land, they've got to be able to read it. This is pretty detailed and gets into a lot of legal components of what's involved here.

Essentially it's setting out that a prudent investor rule would apply, which has not been the case previously. As I said, as it stands now, if the trustee's investment duties and powers are not specified, then it's not possible to do. This legislation would make it possible that there is enacting legislation that can be referred to if it's not spelled out in somebody's will.

The tricky part of this is always that if a trustee has acted in good faith and with reasonableness, they would not be held liable for any loss. On the one hand, you say: "Okay, that's fair. They can't determine the price of a barrel of oil or whether the mutual funds are going to tank or how the stock market is going to go." I mean, two years ago who would have imagined that all the dot com companies would take a fiery plunge. So, no, I don't think it is reasonable to expect that people can understand that market and be right on top of it. They need to be understanding that they're dealing with somebody else's money. They have been put in a position of stewardship, in a position of trust to look after someone else's money, and often in a trustee situation it's a young person's money. It's a child's money. It's important that we have people who are looking after this money with the best interests of the child at heart.

So that provision always makes me cautious. I do, as I said, think it's reasonable that if the trustee as investor has taken every possible precaution, they would not be held liable if things go wrong. On the other hand, they really have to exercise every possible opportunity for prudence.

There are a few examples that I wonder about. The act does allow for trustees to delegate investment authority to an agent or an adviser. They can be initially instructed by the trustee, but from then on the adviser is doing the work. Now, one assumes that the adviser is in fact a professional who deals in investments all the time, and that's why a trustee would have in fact hired them probably. I think that's where it always gets interesting. I don't deal in the stock market, but anybody that has ever talked to me that did – your stockbroker is taking a cut of every investment that they make: every buy, every sell. They get a little bit of money for doing that. That takes away from the trust fund, so that's a very important and delicate relationship between the trustee and an adviser or an agent to make sure that we don't just end up with a situation where a professional gets paid a lot of money for doing something, and at the end of the day there's no trust left and the funds in fact have not been held secure for people. So the agents really do have to be carefully selected, instructed as to what the trustee feels is acceptable, and I think there has to be a monitoring and an evaluation process involved in that.

We have the need for the bill. We are looking at whether in fact the bill does address the issues that have been brought up. Yes, in fact I think it does.

So to continue on in looking at some of the things that bring a caution to me or that perhaps could have been done better or perhaps there's an opportunity to amend them as we get into Committee of the Whole, what we had originally was this statutory list of allowable investments, and that was pretty safe. I mean, just look at the old version: securities of the government of Canada or other provincial or municipal corporations. That's pretty safe stuff there. Securities of which the principal and the interest are guaranteed or covered by the Bank of Canada: again, a pretty secure investment.

- (c) debentures issued by a school division . . . drainage district, hospital district or health region . . . that are secured by or payable out of rates or taxes;
- (d) bonds, debentures or other evidences of indebtedness of a corporation that are secured by the assignment of a trustee of payments that the Government of Canada . . . has agreed to make, if the payments are sufficient.

The old list is very carefully laid out to be narrowly focused on what a trustee could do with the funds. Given the changes that we've seen in the stock market, in what's available there, and the percentage that people are allowed to hold that are out-of-country stocks or mutual funds – there have been a lot of changes in that area in the last 10 or 20 years. I think it's reasonable that the legislation recommends that the trustee is given more latitude with how to invest things, because this list is pretty narrow and would miss out a lot of what's available today. If you are trying to either maintain or grow a trust on behalf of someone else, I think a reasonable person would be wanting to take advantage of that, and you wouldn't have been able to under the old rules.

I already spoke about a trustee that hires an agent or an adviser who then takes a commission on trades that are executed, and I don't think that's addressed in this bill, but perhaps when the minister speaks to it again, he can answer that question for me. I think it is possible for the situation I've described to in fact happen, because it hasn't been specifically addressed in the act, although there are a number of cautions about prudence and the honour of advisers and that sort of thing. It's certainly clear that the trustee cannot profit from the trust, although in a lot of cases a will or a trust may say that the trustee can take expense money, but that's different from making money on every trade that would happen if the moneys from the trust were put into the stock market, a different deal there. I don't think that has been particularly covered here.

I'm wondering – perhaps it's in this bill and I'm not reading it – if there is more monitoring of an agent that's operating for a trustee. If things go wrong, is there a method for the government or an agent of the government to monitor or step in to stop things before they got too far out of hand? So could they, for example, revoke a delegation of trustee powers that had been delegated to an agent or an adviser? Is an agent of the government still able to be involved in ordering the return of profits to the trust if it had been whittled away?

I'm not keen here on a lot of government oversight. I think that makes the process cumbersome. What I'm concerned about is when I look at other areas that exist in legislation that people are pretty much – it's set out in legislation and then you go off and do it. I'll give you an example that I've worked with quite a bit, and that's under the Societies Act. Once a nonprofit society is registered, there's really nothing in the legislation that sets up monitoring and enforcement if things go wrong. I'm questioning whether that is incorporated in the proposed legislation we see in front of us.

What happens in the Societies Act is that once a year the board of directors is supposed to submit their new list of directors and their previous year's financial statement. The problem is that nothing in the act says: if you don't do it, the following punishments will apply. Increasingly we have more activity in the nonprofit sector here, but there's now nothing in that act that allows any agent of the government or even an agent of the public to insist that there is monitoring and enforcement if things go wrong there. That's my concern with this legislation. We could be talking someone's livelihood or someone's safety and security if they are the recipient of the trust. What's the involvement here to monitor that things are going as they should? What ability is delegated through this legislation for an agent of the government or someone else to step forward and go "This isn't working the way it should be."? So who is monitoring it, and who has an ability to enforce that it's going the way it is meant to be?

As we give a freedom or as we open the doors for things to be less regulated, I think at the same time that has to be balanced by some sort of monitoring. I think we get into trouble and this Assembly is not serving Albertans well if we don't follow through on that kind of thing and we leave Albertans out on a limb. I think as stewards and as legislators one of the areas that we often fall down on here is that we don't follow that through and make sure it's in our legislation that we will have monitoring and enforcement of it.

I think what's important here is that both the trustee and an agent or adviser, if that's who becomes involved, have to operate reasonably and we've got the prudent investor rule. It's quite clearly laid out that they should operate under court supervision and they should avoid conflicts of interest.

I will continue to look at this legislation. As I said, I was a bit surprised in that it was a considerably denser piece of legislation than I was led to expect based on my earlier conversations with the minister, so I don't feel that I've had enough time to go thoroughly through all the sections that are being proposed here so that I feel everything is being addressed. It's incumbent upon me to do that, and I will, certainly in second reading when we're discussing the principle of the bill. I can certainly support the principle of what's being put forward here. I'm a little concerned that the specifics of the legislation need to be quite clear when we are allowing someone control over a third party's money. That's my concern, and that's what I'll be spending more time looking at. When we come to this again in Committee of the Whole, I hope that I can go through those clauses one at a time and make sure that all of that is in fact covered.

I believe I have some colleagues who wish to speak to this. I will clear the way to allow them to do that, but thanks for the opportunity to speak in second reading on Bill 26. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to make some comments about Bill 26, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2001. At second reading, of course, we're concerned with the principles that the act has been based upon, and it seems to me that a number of the principles here are sound. I first ran into the whole notion of the prudent investment rule when the Standing Committee on Private Bills was looking at a submission by a couple of trusts who wanted the legal list that by law they had to abide by in their charter changed to the prudent investment rule. I remember that when I first heard it, I was somewhat alarmed, because moneys held in trust like this I believe have to be handled very, very carefully. My initial reaction was that opening up and allowing more flexibility would open the door for people relying on trusts to lose and to be vulnerable to some bad decision-making.

But as the discussion proceeded and the groups that were administering trusts made their presentations and the experts that were brought along to support their position for the change made their cases, I became more and more convinced that it made sense. So I think the amendment of the Trustee Act and the big shift in it that allows the trustees to diversify portfolios by using the prudent investor rule is a good move and one that will ultimately benefit those people who depend on others to administer their financial affairs. As has been stated by the minister, this most commonly involves young children who have not yet reached the age of majority, so it's important that those trusts that are held for them are well managed.

As the preceding speaker indicated, the trustees are at the current time extremely limited in terms of the kinds of financial instruments they can place money in by current legislation, and being restricted works in many cases against the interests of the people they're holding money in trust for. So increasing that kind of flexibility for trustees I think is a wise move and one that will benefit those who have money held in trust.

There are a number of questions and a number of qualifications. Some of those qualifications surround the selection of an adviser. A trustee now under this legislation is able to delegate authority or some of the authority to an adviser, to a financial adviser. Although there are constraints in terms of that adviser and in the selection of that adviser, the trustee ultimately continues to be responsible for decisions that are made. One could foresee difficulties if an adviser is selected who is less than competent and would provide advice that would ultimately hurt the investment that is being handled on the part of the trustee.

Some of the constraints I think are open to interpretation. The whole notion of reasonableness, that a trustee has to take into account the reasonableness of the advice that he or she receives from an adviser, I think does open the door to a very, very wide interpretation if anyone were to question the actions of a trustee. What is reasonable to one may seem quite unreasonable to someone else, particularly when it's in the area of investments and those that are involved in the stock market. You don't have to read many books on advice to investors to see the kinds of wide range of opinions that you can get from so-called experts on any one investment decision, so there is some danger in allowing a trustee to delegate some of her or his powers.

The introduction of commissions that were not previously there is something that again may work against the interests of someone who has a trustee handling their investments. Although there were commissions paid before, I think it's quite different when you have someone handling an entire portfolio. I think standard rates for handling an entire portfolio would run in the order of 2 percent a year on the sums invested. That can start to amount to considerable sums of money, and I think that introduces a whole new area in terms of what is done with investments by trustees.

The adviser is in quite a different position from the trustee, and the responsibilities are really quite different one from the other, so it's a concern and I think a concern that we'll probably hear more about when the bill enters the committee stage. I think it can be argued that there are some provisions that safeguard the beneficiary, but whether those safeguards are wide enough or do the job is a question that we'll be looking at rather carefully as the bill moves through the Assembly. There are, as I said, some safeguards now. The court can remove or appoint an adviser. The court may revoke a delegation of trustee powers to an adviser. An adviser must disclose all the remuneration and benefits that he or she might receive from a transaction. The adviser must operate under the same conflict of interest guidelines as a trustee. The court can order an adviser to return the profits to the trust. The trustee remains liable for the adviser.

So there are built in some constraints, some checks and some balances. Whether they are adequate, as I said, we'll be taking a closer look at as the bill enters the committee stage. But I think the underlying principles – and there seem to be at least four major ones: first of all, that the legal list restricts the actions of trustees; secondly, that the prudent investor rule would allow trustees to diversify portfolios in the interests of those who they hold money in trust for. The third principle, that trustees can delegate some investment authority, I think is the essence of the act. I think the important principle in the legislation is that trustees cannot be held liable for investment decisions, and that may be a principle that we want to come back and re-examine in terms of its soundness.

One of the overriding comments that I think can be made is that the act does bring legislation in our province into line with legislation elsewhere. I think that that kind of consistency is appropriate.

Those are my comments at second reading, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to the bill moving to committee stage. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Bill 25

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Hancock]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is my special day: two bills in one day. I'm speaking now in second reading to Bill 25, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. This, in fact, is a new bill, which you don't see that often in this Legislature. Most of the proposed bills we deal with are in fact acts amending existing legislation. So this is brand new.

Again I'm looking at whether there is a need for the bill, whether this bill addresses that need, and whether there are any real concerns raised by the way the bill is worded. I'm not sure if this is true – it may well be just my imagination – but I rather fancy that the need for this bill comes out of the whole drug culture and how it has changed North American society, because I know that that culture brought us just enormous amounts of money and also enormous profits, enormous property purchased – and there are all kinds of terms that I'm just not up on here – illegally gained or wrongfully gained. That's how it is. I think that's what's underlying this bill: how do we set it up so property that has come into existence as a result of a crime or a wrongful act can either be returned to the person it was taken from or somehow used to benefit society at large?

Secondly, if there is something out there – cars, the example that's usually used – that we know is being used in a crime, but the car itself is not the crime, how do we get at taking that vehicle away? It is facilitating crime, but it isn't the crime itself. If it's sitting outside of a school, it's not doing anything wrong. It's just parked there. But if drugs are being sold out of the trunk – you know, the car's not being driven; it's not being parked illegally. Still, if there was no trunk to put the drugs in, they wouldn't be sold outside of the school. So how is it possible for the police to get at some of these vessels – maybe I'll call them that – that are used, especially in the drug culture?

I think the other thing that is also addressed in this new bill is that the victims, before, had to go to court at their own cost to try and recoup any property, and what this bill is setting up is that the minister can go to civil court on behalf of the victim or on behalf of other victims at large. If there wasn't a specific victim in a crime, they can do it on behalf of a set of victims that aren't specifically involved in what was happening here.

So is the bill necessary? Well, probably. Could we have gotten along without it? Yes, I think we probably could have. I mean, there are other ways to get at this. As I mentioned, the victims right now go to civil court on their own. They can certainly continue to do that. What this is doing is empowering the minister to go to court on their behalf.

DR. TAYLOR: That's exactly what we want.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, the Minister of Environment is very eager to join in the discussion, and I'm sure he'll be jumping to his feet right away to speak as soon as I'm finished and not while I'm speaking. I'm looking forward to that. [interjection] I still have the floor.

So this is trying to work on wrongfully obtained . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, I just wanted to reiterate, in a sense, what you're saying and remind hon. members that the custom is that only one person speaks at a time. The hon. minister will have ample opportunity in the time this afternoon or in the weeks to come to get in on Bill 25, but right now Edmonton-Centre is the only member who has been recognized.

Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was just reviewing what was actually being covered in the legislation: the wrongfully obtained, the victim's restitution, and taking the onus off the victim to recover. So this is really allowing the Crown to commence an action to take property away.

One of my concerns is always that when you start giving the police more powers, more laws to enforce as we write more laws, how much is that impacting on an average person, and what are the chances if a mistake is made that it can be rectified quickly? Certainly mistakes get made. They get made all the time. They get made by computers; they get made by people. They get made in all kinds of different areas. We have to be really careful when we're playing around with the ability to lock people up or take away individual freedoms or take away property that we have lots of checks and balances in place.

I need to go through this legislation more carefully, but I noticed a few things in here. There is a section that notes that when a court is commencing a property disposal hearing, it will happen "not later than 45 days from the day of the granting of the restraint order." Well, that's six weeks. Six weeks is a fairly long time. I think that's why the legislation also allows that the police can put literally a restraining order to stop the property from being disposed of. There's a long list in the legislation about under what circumstances. If a police officer believes that the property is going to melt or disintegrate or lose its value in some way, this allows the police to take control of it and to sell it or somehow hang onto the value of it.

We have to be so careful here when we enact legislation that empowers the police to be doing that.

One of the things that came out to me very quickly is that we're not talking about people who have been charged and convicted. We are talking about people who've simply been charged and in some cases, as far as I can tell, not even that. It's about the property, not the individual who has committed the crime. So we can easily end up in a situation where property is taken from someone who hasn't even been to court yet and hasn't been convicted and may never be convicted, but their property has already been taken and – who knows? – disposed of. At that point you've created another victim down the line.

One of the other areas that I'd like the minister to respond to is: how much consideration is given to creating other victims further down the line? I'll give you an example. If we have someone whose vehicle is taken for whatever reason under this legislation and that person drives for a living or has to have a car to make a living, whatever that is, they can no longer earn money. But they have a maintenance order against them, and that maintenance order, of course, is in support of children. We've now created a second victim in this scenario. How is that balanced by what's available in this legislation? If the police can be taking away a car because they believe that it was wrongfully obtained but that takes away someone's ability to earn an income and to pay a maintenance order, we've now got a child further down the line that isn't getting the maintenance money that they are entitled to and that a court has ordered for them. This legislation has then created a victim. How does that victim have recourse then?

So what are the checks and balances that the minister is willing to uphold with this legislation to make sure (a) that we don't create additional victims further down the road and (b) that we're darn sure that we are not unreasonably seizing people's property without having a pretty good reason why we're doing it? I have noted that there's a long list of things that a police officer is supposed to be looking at before they seize something or before they give a restraining order on something. Those lists always look really good, but it's time proving further down the road what should have been an obvious loophole to us.

So that's why I get concerned with new legislation, and I'd be interested in hearing from the minister what the process was in developing this. Whom did he consult with? Where did this idea come from? How many times has it sort of been through a feedback loop? I've sent it out to my advisers, but it's not a thin document. I mean, this thing isn't two pages long; it's a good 40 pages and filled with legal beagle stuff. How did this come into being, and what safeguards has the minister put in place? Or was this somebody's idea who was just sick of looking at that drug car being parked in front of the school and wanted a way to get rid of it? What have we done to make sure that we are not imposing something on the public, on Albertans, that puts them in a position of being more likely to have police interference in their life or with their property? I think that if legislation like this works well, great, but it has to be balanced with not having additional police presence in people's lives or additional legal or court presence in their lives. I'll move off that topic, but the minister can certainly see where I'm trying to get with that. It's to make sure that we don't put Albertans in a worse case than before we actually passed the legislation.

The Crown has to prove on a balance of probabilities that the property is the proceeds of an illegal act, and then a civil action will be used to institute a property disposal order. Property could be returned to the lawful owner. That's probably the most direct part of this legislation, the most obvious part: if someone had property stolen from them and the police are able to identify it, then it can be got back to them. That's very straightforward. But life is not usually straightforward, and certainly what the criminal mind is capable of is never straightforward, especially when you've got drugs involved, because then it gets really kooky.

One of the things that I did like in the legislation was an understanding that sometimes – and I don't like this term, but I'll use it because everyone understands it now – there are victimless crimes, or there are crimes where you can't identify one specific individual or group of individuals as the victims of the crime. In that case, under this legislation the minister can be going to court to dispose of these assets, whatever they're allowed to do here, and the proceeds from that can go into a victims' crime compensation fund. We do have one that is set up in Alberta, and the money from those funds is available in response to an application from groups who provide services for victims or for Albertans. So, for example, the battered women's shelters have been able to access money there for special programs. John Howard, Elizabeth Fry, the Sally Ann, or a number of agencies that are offering those programs can apply for this money. I like to see that the minister in proposing this legislation has thought of that and has incorporated it into the proposed bill.

I listened carefully to the way the minister was describing this act. He actually went through it very quickly. I am looking forward to his responses to the issues and questions I've brought up so far. For most of what appears to be in the legislation, there is no current provision. There's no way to do this. So this is truly enabling legislation.

Those are the questions that I'd like to raise and hear back from the minister on. It's a unique piece of legislation. That's one of the other questions I had. Does anybody else have legislation like this? That's one of the things I was listening for from the minister. He did mention it in connection with the other bill that the minister has up before the Assembly today but not in connection with Bill 25, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. So I'm interested in where else this exists and where else it's working and what lessons we can learn from that. Where have the loopholes developed? Has this legislation addressed those loopholes in the way we know it can go wrong or be misinterpreted?

Those are the remarks I'd like to bring forward in second reading. In principle I think I am in favour of this bill, but I'd like to get some of those questions answered and get a lot more information around this before I can give it full support. I appreciate the opportunity to bring forward the questions that I do have.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 25, the new bill, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, in its second reading. At the outset I want to acknowledge that the minister, last week I guess, invited the two opposition parties to a briefing in his office on the bill as it was being drafted and redrafted. I want to thank him for taking this step. It certainly helps in understanding the reasons behind the minister's decision to initiate such legislative action.

Having acknowledged that, I want to come to the general observations on the bill. Victims' restitution and compensation payment is an important issue. I and my caucus fully support the idea that the victims who suffer from acts of crime by people who commit them are entitled to restitution and compensation for the losses that they suffer and that criminals, people who commit criminal acts, should not be permitted to enjoy the proceeds of crime, benefit from the proceeds of crime. So in general, insofar as it is this principle, this set of considerations that is embodied in the bill and that drives its details, we are in support of the bill to a degree, but there are obviously questions.

It's a fairly far-reaching bill because it does deal with issues of private property and the rights to private property. It does deal with the distinction between criminal conviction and the ability that this bill will give to law enforcement agencies and the minister to proceed with action against individuals who may not be convicted under the Criminal Code yet may be taken to the civil courts. As a consequence and conclusion of the civil court proceedings, the individual who is criminally not held to be guilty may be held guilty using the different judicial and procedural conventions of the civil courts.

So there's a bit of a tension, a difficulty here that I would want to draw the attention of the House to. We need to address it and address it very carefully so that in our zeal to help the victims, we don't violate, at least in spirit, some other fundamental principles that we also are committed to; that is, not to be treated as guilty unless proven to be so. You know, that's an important principle in our system of justice. It's a fine line that will have to be treaded if this bill becomes law. So when we have an opportunity to study the bill in detail, we will certainly be asking those questions as we go clause by clause and section by section in the bill and see to what extent the provisions of the bill measure up to some of these fundamental principles that all of us want respected and want ourselves to recognize and make part of our decisions and practice.

Since this is a complex piece of legislation and bears careful scrutiny, one of the questions that has come to my mind is the relationship between the provisions of this bill and the federal proceeds of crime act. Where are the overlaps? Where might there be some territorial issues that need to be sorted out? On the whole question of seizure of property, which I think is also provided for in the federal act, who has the first claim to the proceeds from the property that may be seized and disposed of, given the fact that there already is in place federal legislation dealing, at least in part, with what this bill purports to deal with? There is the question of to what extent the provincial act steers clear of any potential contradictions and conflicts between the two pieces of legislation. We need to pay attention to that question, and I hope the minister will have more to say on it. Given the resources at his disposal, he is surely in a position to address some of these questions and have them addressed in his department through the legal expertise available to him. I would like to hear him on this. How do we ensure that both the federal government and the provincial government are not chasing the same proceeds of crime? That's a delicate matter, and we need to address it.

Another question that comes to mind is that it certainly will increase the work of the courts. The legislation will allow the Minister of Justice to go to the Court of Queen's Bench to do several things: to keep someone from disposing of the proceeds of crime and to conduct property disposal hearings. This certainly adds to the work that courts will be faced with. What we know about the workload in the courts and the delays and the waiting times already is a reality as a result of the shortage of resources in the court system and the justice system. So I have some questions about this. What does the minister plan to do with this? How much more work does he anticipate his bill will create? In a sense, that also speaks to: how significant is it for us to pass this bill? How big is the problem? If the problem is big, if it's going to generate lots of new and additional work for the courts, then how does he propose to address the problem that will result from the passage of this bill and its enforcement, that will follow?

The civil courts, obviously, will also have additional demand on their time, and similar questions therefore arise there. The magnitude of the problem, the amount of resources that will fall into the hands of the government or go back to the victims, I think needs to be known. What's the amount? What kind of amounts are we talking about? Why should we answer that question? Why should we have asked this question? Because we have to weigh that against the cost to government of proceeding with this bill and then implementing it. Will the costs of making the changes that are being proposed here weigh favorably with the benefits that may be derived from them? I need some sort of assessment from the minister about the situation out there and what kind of revenues he thinks will flow from it that will compensate both the treasury, in terms of the additional costs it will incur, and generating funds for actually compensating the victims of crime.

Another question which has already been touched on: is there something that we learn from other places, other jurisdictions that may have already had some experience with similar legislation? The questions that I just posed perhaps can, to some degree at least, be answered if such an experience is available elsewhere. Has the minister done this kind of work to see to what degree such a law has achieved the objectives that certainly justify bringing in this piece of proposed legislation to the Legislature? Are some of the other provinces already in a situation where they may have tried similar measures and therefore have some experience that we can learn from? Is he looking across the border in some U.S. states? What's their experience? Does it also help reduce the probabilities of the commission of crime in addition to increasing the probabilities of compensating the victims of crime? These are questions that need to be addressed and addressed seriously.

What happens if a wrongful conviction results from the civil courts? Courts, as we all know, are not infallible. We've seen that in the case of criminal courts. We have seen it in the case of people who get convicted for murder, and then years down the line we find that they were innocent. What happens if mistakes are made? What happens if property is disposed of under Bill 25 – if it becomes law, you know, tomorrow – and it's subsequently found that it had no link to a criminal action? Would the Crown be liable to compensate someone whose property had been inappropriately disposed of? These are important questions. We all agree that courts make judgments on limited information, information that's put before them, and the information that's put before them, we know with the benefit of hindsight, can sometimes be so limited as to not provide the basis for a sound and appropriate judgment.

Again, another question. The minister is seeking, I think, fairly wide-ranging powers from the Legislature, a balance between the executive's ability to undertake certain actions and the ability of the Legislature to keep control for such vital matters as the rights to private property, as the ability to compensate victims, as the ability to fund organizations which do work which helps victims and all that.

Division 2 of the bill, Payment of Compensation. I was looking at page 32 and particularly the sections on grants, the victims of crime fund. The minister is seeking fairly wide and broad powers from the Legislature so that he can on his own make these decisions, which in my view are fairly important decisions. To what degree should the legislative say in those decisions be maintained? I will be able to say more on it as I look more closely at this, but in reading through it, the questions that came to mind had to do with the appropriate balance between the legislative power and the executive power. The minister, in my view, is seeking very, very wide-ranging powers here that deserve and merit very careful scrutiny by this Legislature.

I understand that this bill will also be exempt from the provisions of the Regulations Act. We won't have an ability to tell the minister that some of these regulations that are drafted either don't express the spirit of the act or go beyond it or give him too much power. So there'll be really no compensatory opportunity for the Legislature to go back to the minister and say: "Look; this is not what the bill was about. This is what you have usurped as power, which is not really in our judgment indicative of the intentions of the act itself." So there are these issues.

I know that the minister is well-meaning. I know that the minister was careful in listening to some of the exchanges that we had with him during the briefing, and he conceded that there was a need perhaps to tighten the role of the courts in the whole process of seizing property and disposing of it to compensate victims. So he sees some risks, some dangers. They may be potential, but they're here. I think the Legislature would be well advised to ask some of those tough questions at this stage to help the minister and the Legislature to improve the bill. While it does give strong assurance to the victims of crime that they will be compensated and certainly sends out a strong message to criminals who commit criminal acts that they will not be able to benefit from the proceeds of crime, at the same time we want to make sure that the due process of law and the conventions of our justice system are fully respected and, in fact, reinforced by the provisions of the act by the time it becomes a final piece of legislation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll close my remarks on second reading.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 25, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, in second reading, where we're looking at the principles of the bill.

I'd like to preface my remarks, Mr. Speaker, with some observations that I made about the School Act when Bill 16 was under consideration last week, and that is the plea for plain language legislation. It seems to me that there are some acts that so directly involve the public that they cry to be written in plain language. The School Act, I think, is one of those acts because of the interest that the general public has in it, the number of people that have to read that legislation. It seems to me that this bill is another one that demands plain English.

I know that we aren't supposed to consider the specific sections of the bill at second reading, but there are some classics in this bill in terms of obscure legal writing. I think they do a disservice to the drafters of the bill and to the government's intentions when that kind of language is such a major part of legislation like this, legislation that's read by people who have been victimized and are seeking some redress and their friends and those who are possibly offering them advice. So if ever there was an act that should have been written in very understandable plain English, I think this is one of those acts, and I think I'll have some more to say about that when it reaches committee stage.

Nevertheless, the bill rests on a number of principles and important principles, Mr. Speaker, that arise, I think, out of a growing intolerance on the part of Albertans and the public for criminals and the kind of injustices that have existed when criminals were allowed to undertake their activity and those that they victimized were left to suffer the losses. So it's arising, I think, out of that general public sentiment that there was an unfairness and that that unfairness needed to be addressed. The basic principle is that the loss of the victims should be compensated by those individuals responsible for the loss. That just seems to make good common sense and I think serves as a warning to people who would take advantage of others that they are going to be called upon to make retribution.

A second principle is that a person's right to pursue other remedies shouldn't be limited. The act makes it very explicit that if a victim moves under this legislation, that in no way restricts his or her ability to seek redress in using other avenues, and I think it's an important principle and one that needs to be maintained.

Another principle that seems to play some importance in the act is that the minister should play a central role in compensation and restitution. I'm not sure that that's a good thing. I think that if you go through the act and look at the number of times the minister is called to take action, you can't help but feel that there's an overinvolvement of the minister in the whole process, and I wonder if it's appropriate for the minister to play that role.

Another principle that has been mentioned and that I'm sure is going to be a matter of public discussion before the bill has passed is that of actions being taken before charges are actually laid. We can recall that we had a similar discussion in the last meeting of this Legislature when police were given authority to take roadside actions without reference to the courts. I recall that at that time there was a great deal of concern expressed by various groups in the province at that being allowed to happen, and the same can occur with this legislation, that the peace officers are allowed to take property and are allowed to take action before an individual is actually charged. Now, there are some good reasons in the bill for that to happen, but again I think it's something that we shouldn't undertake as legislators without very, very careful consideration and assurance that safeguards have been built in to protect those people who haven't been charged and may not ultimately be charged with a crime.

Another principle is that it seems that it should be made far easier for victims to regain their property or to obtain restitution, and that's a good principle, Mr. Speaker. For far too long I think many victims have felt that it was just too much work, that it was just too difficult many times to go after restitution or to get their property returned, that the system was too complex, that it just involved too much time and energy, at least for some of the minor cases, for them to get involved. This legislation is intended to make it much easier.

There are some other principles and sort of subprinciples that we could look at; first of all, that property shouldn't be disposed of prior to a case being heard. I think it's going to be important for that to be upheld, that people being charged will not have property taken away before the case is heard.

There are a number of other comments that can be made, but I think the length of the bill – it's 37 pages of rather detailed explanation in terms of how the process is to proceed – demands the kind of detailed look that committee allows us to take. So I'll wait until that opportunity arises to pursue that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

Bill 23
Regulated Accounting Profession
Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. [some applause]

MR. LORD: Well, thank you, everyone. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 23, the Regulated Accounting Profession Amendment Act, 2001.

Now, before I start, I would like to acknowledge the contribution of the three accounting organizations to the development of these amendments. Representatives from the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta, the Society of Certified Management Accountants of Alberta, and the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta worked closely with staff from Alberta Human Resources and Employment to identify these amendments to improve the Regulated Accounting Profession Act. All three accounting organizations strongly support the amendments proposed by this bill. My colleague the Hon. Greg Melchin sponsored the Regulated Accounting Profession Act in 1999, and you can always count on him.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Since then, supporting regulations developed in collaboration with the three accounting organizations underwent extensive stakeholder consultation, and it received royal assent in December of 1999. During this time, the accounting organizations also developed or revised bylaws, resolutions, rules of professional conduct, and related policies. The Regulated Accounting Profession Act came into force on September 13, 2001. The Regulated Accounting Profession Act brought the legislation for the three accounting organizations under one statute and replaced the Chartered Accountants Act, the Certified Management Accountants Act, and the Certified General Accountants Act.

The new act provides for a common regulatory framework for registration, complaint investigation, discipline, appeal hearings, and professional governance. There are separate schedules in the act, one for each of the three accounting organizations. These schedules address profession-specific requirements such as protected titles and transitional needs.

Six key principles are incorporated into the new act. The paramount principle is to ensure the public is adequately protected when seeking services from the accounting profession. Secondly, the profession's competency, credibility, and integrity are maintained. Thirdly, professional regulation should be flexible enough to permit businesses in capital markets to operate effectively without unnecessarily constraining the ongoing work of commerce. Fourthly, complaint and appeal processes should be transparent to the public, and information on the professional status of members should be credible and easily available to all Albertans. Fifthly, the regulatory processes should be fair and the principle of natural justice observed throughout, and decision-makers should be held accountable for the decisions that they make. Finally, the professional regulatory system should support the efficient and effective delivery of accounting services.

While staff at Alberta Human Resources and Employment were working with the accounting profession to bring the new act into force, a few amendments were identified to fine-tune the legislation by clarifying wording and policy intent and by correcting or updating provisions and references.

The proposed amendments for the Regulated Accounting Profession Amendment Act have 12 sections. Section 1 provides authority to amend the act. Section 2 amends definitions to reflect the current titles used by the Society of Management Accountants of Alberta and to correct the reference in the definition of practice review. Sections 3 and 7 extend regulation-making authority to include retaining information about applicants for registration, including the need for complete registration applications. Sections

4, 5, and 9 clarify bylaw and regulation authority respecting practice standards and the definition of professional services and provide for consistent use of the term "specialty." Section 6 clarifies the conditions to approve an applicant's registration. Section 8 clarifies that the exemption from registration by public accounting firms and professional service providers applies only to specified services. Section 10 clarifies the definition of employer. Sections 11 and 12 correct and update the protected titles used by the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta and the Society of Management Accountants of Alberta.

That concludes my remarks, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to get on the record a few comments regarding Bill 23, the Regulated Accounting Profession Amendment Act, as presented to the Assembly by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Now, certainly this is amending existing legislation and providing a consistency with other similar statutes. However, it's not long since this act was developed, but I would urge all members of the Assembly to support these amendments, as certainly the Regulated Accounting Profession Amendment Act, which originally was passed, was perhaps done in haste. When I say that, we see these corrections – some would call them simply housekeeping – and we have to be very careful, Mr. Speaker, in scrutiny of all legislation as it comes before the Assembly. [interjection] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre states that one must always remain vigilant, and she's absolutely correct with that assessment.

This act does, effectively, provide simplified legislation for Alberta's three self-regulating accounting agencies, which were mentioned by the previous speaker. These changes, I've been assured, will ensure that the act is interpreted correctly.

Now, there has been quite an extensive consultation process. Sometimes there is a perception, Mr. Speaker, that employees of the Crown or civil servants are not doing their jobs or they're not working diligently. Well, this certainly is not the case when one looks at the correspondence that has come from the Chartered Accountants of Alberta, the Certified Management Accountants of Alberta, or the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta regarding this issue. All these pieces of correspondence are addressed to one specific individual, in this case the manager of professions and occupations, Adrian Pritchard. This gentleman is obviously doing his work so that there is a better Alberta for all, whether one is an accountant or one is a client of an accountant or their office.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I support these amendments as proposed. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to see that this bill seems to have met the expectations of the stakeholders in the industry as well, apparently, as those of the opposition and hopefully of this Assembly. So I'm very pleased to hear those comments and certainly can assure everyone that any questions and concerns that do come forward will be directed to the stakeholders involved in the drafting of this act.

As to our actions today, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members to support second reading of the act before us as it covers a number of relatively minor housekeeping-type issues and assures that the membership that is being governed by this act feels comfortable that they're able to do so in complete compliance, that all the i's are dotted and the t's are crossed, so to speak, with the precision that is a hallmark of their profession.

I would again just reiterate that the major goals and principles that this act is proposing to foster within the accounting profession are centred around protection of the public when seeking professional services from accountants and, furthermore, to not just maintain but indeed to foster even more competency, credibility, and integrity than already exists now in the accounting profession. I think it's an admirable goal.

With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I close debate and ask for the Assembly's support for second reading of this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Bill 24
Regulated Forestry Profession
Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 24, the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act.

I would like to acknowledge the significant contribution of the foresters and forest technologists to the development of these proposed amendments. Representatives from both the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association and the Alberta Forest Technologists Association worked closely with the staff of Alberta Human Resources and Employment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development to identify these amendments that improve the Regulated Forestry Profession Act. Both professional forest associations supported the amendments proposed by this bill.

I had the honour of sponsoring the Regulated Forestry Profession Act in 1999. Since then, the proposed regulations have been developed in collaboration with two forest organizations. Recently the two associations jointly sponsored a series of community meetings to review the proposed regulations with their membership. During this time the forest organizations have also been developing and revisiting supporting bylaws, standards of practice, a code of ethics, and policies required to bring the new act into force. External consultations are also under way with organizations in the industry and other professional organizations to meet the requirement of the agreement on internal trade.

The new Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act will replace the Regulated Forestry Profession Act and consolidate the regulations of two professional forest organizations under one statute. The new act was developed to improve the quality of forestry service in Alberta by improving the regulations of foresters and forest technologists. By continuing to ensure the quality of our forest professionals, the act contributes to protecting Alberta's sustainable forest resource.

The Regulated Forestry Profession Act is a statute modeled on the Health Professions Act. It has two sections: a common section establishing registration, professional conduct, continuing compliance, and appeal processes and governance and accountability requirements; and two schedules, one for each forest profession, which protect forest-specific titles and provides for transmission requirements. We're working with the forest professionals to develop the regulations that will bring the new act into force, several amendments that will improve the legislation by clarifying words and policy intent, and by correcting or updating provisions and references where identified.

To ensure consistency with current government policies for professional legislation, we are considering relative amendments to the Health Professions Act introduced by the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000, and proposed by Bill 18, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001.

The proposals for the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act have 26 sections. Section 1 provides authority to amend the act. Sections 2 and 25 clarify the authority of the regulatory body to approve education programs for registration and require consultation with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and with the Minister of Learning for changes to education program approvals.

Section 3 clarifies eligibility requirements for public members. Sections 4 and 8 clarify information required for registration and practice permits and enable the regulatory body to recognize professions from other jurisdictions for registration. Section 5 clarifies the conditions for the approval to register a complaint.

Section 6 changes the plural to singular for consistency and adds a requirement to identify time restrictions on a member's practice in the professional register. Section 7 provides for superceding or canceling a practice permit if a renewal application is not received. Section 9 removes unnecessary cross-referencing. Sections 10 and 11 clarify that the registration or practice merits or both may be canceled, reinstated, or reissued and provide authorization for names of deceased members to be removed from the register. Section 12 clarifies that regulation is mandatory for a member teaching students, members, or both.

Section 13 clarifies the authorization of a council to establish continuing competence programs. Sections 14 and 22 clarify when the continuing competence committee may make referrals to a complaints director and protect the confidentiality of information collected on members through the continuing competence program. Section 15 provides authority for the complaints director to attempt to resolve a complaint. Section 16 permits the complaint director to act on a referral from the complaints committee. Section 17 permits the identification of parties in the alternative complaint resolution process to be revealed only if permitted by a ratified settlement agreement.

Section 18 clarifies that an investigation person may be required to pay the expenses of the investigation or hearing or both. Section 19 clarifies the reference to court to mean the Court of Appeal. Section 20 clarifies the rules of access to information about regulated members and notification requirements, updates the definition of employer, and corrects a cross-reference. Section 21 clarifies that the complete registration applications must be retained for at least 10 years.

Section 23 clarifies the regulation-making authority for the evaluation, registration, and practice permit applications, reissuing practice permits, reinstating registration, and information requirements for registration applications. Section 24 clarifies the bylaw-making authority concerning reinstatement and provides authorization for the regulatory body to recoup the cost of accreditation. Section 26 clarifies the standards of practice and not a type of code of ethics.

In conclusion, the amendments to the Regulated Forestry Profession Act establish clear, accountable requirements and provide the authority of self-regulated professions to respond to the public expectations through more transparent and consistent registration compliance and professional conduct requirements. The degree of collaboration between the forest industry, the professional foresters, the professional forest technologists, and the government in developing both the new act and the proposed amendments has been extraordinary. In the future I would hope to see more examples of this level of industry and professional participation in other sectors.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 24, the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, this afternoon. I have had a series of consultations with people on the RITE line from all across the province on this initiative. Certainly, I appreciate the meeting that was organized this morning by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead along with, I believe, eight other individuals and myself and a member of the Liberal research staff. We had quite a discussion on this bill.

I entered the room with the hon. member, and I saw a large painting on the wall. I don't know whether it was a Percheron or a Clydesdale, but it was a workhorse. Immediately I thought of the experiment that occurred in the forest out by Hinton. I couldn't decide whether it would be a technologist or a forester with a university degree from Alberta who would be overseeing the experiment. It was an experiment to see if we could keep the forest intact as we selectively log. I suspect that that painting was in recognition of that experiment. I haven't heard any of the details of that experiment: whether it was economically viable, what happened, whether it occurs in the winter, or whether it is occurring all the time. That is just one example of what individuals involved with the forestry profession do in this province.

We have seen a remarkable growth in the forest industry in this province. In the mid-80s there was a significant effort to diversify the Alberta economy. We saw a large number of projects go ahead, and there are others on the drawing board. One would have to assess what role the foresters will have, whether they have a degree and they're registered with the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association or they're technologists and they're with the Alberta Forest Technologists Association, whether they are the ones that are going to be conducting the accurate forecast of the per cubic metre of timber harvest that will be available in this province.

We have to ensure that there is a sustainability to the timber harvest, and I'm not convinced that the studies that have been done to date have been accurate. Now, individuals in these professional associations certainly are going to have a say in those discussions as to just precisely, regardless of the forest region, how many cubic metres of wood there are. Heaven forbid if there is not the supply of harvestable timber that we originally thought. One has to be careful but, at the same time, recognize the importance of these professional groups and the members within them.

Certainly with this amendment act, Bill 24, we will amend existing legislation for consistency with other similar legislation, including the Health Professions Act. The group this morning was helpful in addressing not only my concerns and to a certain degree the concerns of the people on the RITE line but also the concerns of Mr. Smolak, the researcher. Matthew Smolak has been keeping his eye on this legislation and doing a very, very good job of it.

The hon. member earlier spoke about addressing issues of registration, professional conduct, and governance requirements for both associations. In essence, if I'm to understand correctly, it gives the two associations and their members equal status under the act. Forestry technologists, as I understand it, may work independently or under the supervision of foresters. There are a lot of general activities, Mr. Speaker, that they can be involved in, whether it's reforestation, surveying, measuring, and mapping forest areas. That is of the utmost importance if we are going to continue to have a viable forestry industry in this province. They can keep records on the amount and the condition of each load of logs. They can supervise road locations and the construction of access roads. They can inspect trees and collect samples of plants, seeds, foliage, bark, and roots to record insect and disease damage. They can assist in laboratory field experiments of plants, animals, insects, diseases, et cetera, supervise timber harvesting in primary processing operations, also do log scaling, or measuring the volumes of a cubic metre of, I guess, in this case the trucks that would be hauling the logs from the forest to the mill.

The forest technologists are sometimes called forest officers. Maybe that's not the case anymore, as the hon. member has stated, but I'm led to believe that they're still called forest officers. There are many other things that these forest officers can do. They can manage forest-protection activities including fire control, fire crew training, and co-ordinating fire detection and public education programs. They can issue fire permits, timber permits, and other forest use licences. They can even supervise land use activities such as livestock grazing and recreational activities like snowmobiling to ensure compliance with regulations, supervise pipeline, seismic, and mining operations and/or oil and gas drilling sites in relation to forest disturbances. So there is a lot of work for those individuals to do. We must understand that some of the conditions under which these individuals will be working will not be, to say the least, the most luxurious.

Now, what are the educational requirements for these individuals? What can they exactly expect to make once they get their qualifications? Forestry technologists are graduates of a two-year or three-year forest technology program. It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that forest technologists and forest technicians may be used somewhat differently by specific employers in postsecondary institutions. This is information that I have received from the occupational profile put out by Alberta Human Resources and Employment. It's quite interesting when we consider Bill 24, because the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology in Edmonton offers a two-year forest technology program. Now, there are many ways that one, as I understand it, can enter this occupation or profession. This can be used as a stepping-stone to get one's degree. This is one of the questions that was put to me: why should I take the time and expense to achieve university accreditation when there is supposedly going to be equal status given to a forester with a university degree and a technologist with two years at NAIT? There's a two-year difference here, and there's a lot of money involved.

The first year of training in this program would include going to the Kidney Lake field training camp in Swan Hills in the autumn. The second year of training is offered at the Environmental Training Centre in Hinton. The entrance requirement is a general high school diploma or equivalent with English 30 or 33, math 30 or 33, biology, and chemistry, with preference given to applicants who have a 30-level science course. Now, a CPR health-saver certificate and St. John's Ambulance courses are also required. An Alberta class 4 driver's licence is highly recommended. There's no mention in here, fortunately, of an Alberta ID. This is a quota program with competitive admission.

Now, what's the pay after one graduates? According to this document, the starting salary for a 1998 diploma program graduate is anywhere in the range from $26,500 to $31,000 a year. According to the 1999 Alberta wage and salary survey, most Albertans in the forestry technologist and technician occupational group earned – and there's a wide range here, Mr. Speaker – from $23,600 to $54,000 per year. Unfortunately, at this time I don't know what one would get with a university degree. That's the problem with a lot of consultations that take place on bills in the mornings and then you find yourself debating them in the afternoon: you just don't have the time to get a lot of adequate or necessary research done. I would hate to see in all of this individuals with degrees and the information and the knowledge and the skill that they have acquired put aside. I've been assured that this is certainly not the case, but at the same time one has to recognize that there are market forces involved, as it was explained to me, and if an individual has the option or the choice perhaps of hiring an entry-level person with a technologist's certificate at, say, $24,000 a year or someone with a university degree starting at $35,000 a year – well, we cannot as a result of this allow our university system and the people that come out from that program to be shortchanged. I've been assured that this is not going to happen, but it's certainly one thing that I would like to bring to the attention of this Assembly.

We think to ourselves: well, there's a job for everyone in Alberta. Last week with great fanfare there was an announcement made about a program to allow guest workers, as they were described, into the province, but at the same time I read in the paper this morning – and I'm sure that the hon. Minister of Economic Development shares my concern with this – that there's a steel fabricator laying off individuals because there's no work. The steel fabricator said that this work is going offshore. So we have to be very careful about these things. We just can't replace one group of workers simply with another by de-skilling.

I certainly hope that the people that have contacted me, the Albertans who are involved in the forest industry who have contacted me on the RITE line regarding this issue can be assured by this legislation that there's going to be a place for every member of the professions in this province, that the industry is going to accommodate both groups. They're just not going to look at the bottom line; they're going to look at the skills that each group can provide so that the industry not only will benefit but will also grow and make for a better Alberta.

In conclusion, at this time, Mr. Speaker, at second reading I would cede the floor to any hon. member of this Assembly who has a view that they would like to express on Bill 24, the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, and I look forward to committee.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments and questions that I had on this Bill 24, Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, 2001. Now, I note that the sponsoring member did a very thorough job in walking us through, reading out from his script what the different sections of the bill meant. I'm sure that's helpful to people reading the Hansard.

A couple of things have occurred to me. One, right off the bat, I notice is that this is amending a statute from 1999, and in fact I think this Regulated Forestry Profession Act was never proclaimed. We've seen a couple of those bills here today, so I guess I'm wondering what is . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Are we going too fast for you?

MS BLAKEMAN: No. I think it's more about a hitch in the government's process here, with all these committees that they pass these bills through.

MR. MacDONALD: We can't sit on them, and these mistakes pass.

MS BLAKEMAN: I think so. I think that because these are behind-closed-doors committees, there are obviously mistakes being made. The bills come forward to the Assembly, we ask questions about them, and the questions aren't usually answered before the vote is called. Here we have at least two acts back this afternoon from 1999. There might have even been three. They're back on the floor here in 2001. I notice that this one didn't even get proclaimed, so there's something going wrong here in this process.

4:50

What this is looking to do is to give consistency to the two different types of foresters that we have. The major difference seems to be that one is a two-year diploma from a technical institute and the other is a four-year degree from a university. There's an attempt by the two colleges or associations representing these people to bring together the registration, the professional conduct, and the governance for these two associations.

It's interesting how often the Health Professions Act is being referred to here, because I think that's another act that's also – it has; it was Bill 18 – been brought back here just recently to have things fixed in it. So while there's a great temptation for me to stand here today and go: "Yup. Fine. Look's great to me. Let's go" . . .

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

MS BLAKEMAN: And I can see the eagerness of the government members to in fact do that. I think we need to be cautious in that we've already seen that mistakes were made before in moving it through too quickly and frankly I think from not paying attention to what's actually being proposed. So let's take a deep breath and make sure that we're doing this right this time so that we don't see this same act back here in front of us in another year and still not proclaimed, which isn't doing any favours to the two organizations that are trying to exist under this legislation. It's sloppy work, and it's not helping those organizations that are trying to get their registration and their requirements and professional conduct in place and to operate under that.

The other similarity that I keep hearing with the Health Professions Act is the desire of this government to delegate authority to associations over their respective professions. On the one hand, I can see why that makes perfect sense. These are professional organizations. They know better than others what kinds of requirements are going to keep them at the top of their profession. There's a certain amount of pride in doing very well and in keeping the bar high. On the other hand, the government in this case is operating in a consumer protection function. If this is the legislation that various professions have to adhere to, then once they've passed that bar that this legislation sets out, the government is in effect saying to consumers in Alberta: these people are the top in their profession, and they will do all the things they're supposed to do. So we have to make sure that when we set this legislation out, it is in fact setting the bar high, because the rest of the people in Alberta look to the government and go: "Okay. If the government has put its Good Housekeeping seal of approval on it, great; we'll believe them."

We've seen other examples of this government doing that. The one that comes to mind most quickly is the pine shakes scandal, where the government put its seal of approval on something and, in fact, it shouldn't have, and it cost a lot Albertans a lot of money. Albertans believed the government was performing a consumer protection function there. So I'm cautious about why there is such pressure to be following the same mold as the Health Professions Act and having everything delegated over to the professions.

The bill is not addressing labour issues such as wages, but the regulations do have clarification for registration requirement, degree graduates, and diploma graduates. Right. That's the other thing that comes up with this, and I think we see this in a couple of other professional areas, but it's pretty evident in this one. Essentially, this legislation is now setting up both the forestry technicians and the foresters – that is, the ones with a certificate or a diploma from an institute of technology versus someone with a university degree – as equivalent in this act, and it does raise the question: if you can get the same things essentially, why, in fact, would anyone go and get a university degree in three or four years and rack up a debt of at least $20,000 now when you could just do two years at an institute of technology or a college and reap the benefits of essentially the same thing, which is what the legislation is setting out? [interjections]

I see that I have managed to engage some members of the frat boys over here, and I know he'll be leaping to his feet to . . . [interjections] Yeah. I'm glad I could entertain them, but I'm looking forward to his contribution to the discussion, aside from playing with his fart pillow. That would be much more interesting. [interjections] Well, they're frat boys; they play little frat games.

I think that that is the question that hasn't been addressed clearly in the presentation that we heard from the sponsoring member, why this is being set up as an equivalency. In fact, they're quite different. What is the justification behind that, and what is being anticipated in the future from it if, in fact, we have people that are no longer interested in achieving a university degree? I suppose if I had to guess, part of the answer might be that the BA doesn't do you much good. You'd really want to go on and get a master's or a doctorate, and then you could be leading the research or the research team. I think that hasn't been addressed, and it does need to be clarified.

I did look through the information that was provided and the consultation sessions input summary that was done just recently actually, in late October, with the professional foresters and professional forest technologists. They seem fine with this and even seem eager to get onboard. I would like to just make sure that we're not rushing through something again and leaving another loophole that will put us back here in another six months or a year trying to fix this yet again to make sure that we've done it right this time. So I'll be consulting with people that I know in the community to make sure that, in fact, it is reasonable.

In speaking in principle in second reading, I don't see a problem with the bill other than those problems that I've already outlined, so I'll be looking forward to addressing this in Committee of the Whole. I thank the Speaker for the opportunity to address it in second reading. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close the debate.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I have to thank the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association and the Alberta Forest Technologists Association for their due diligence on this as well as Alberta Human Resources and Employment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. I think this is a good example of how different industry levels and professionals can work together in sectors to make our province accountable in these sectors.

At this time it gives me great pleasure to move second reading of Bill 24, the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, 2001.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that such excellent and outstanding progress has been made in the House today with many good comments from several colleagues who have risen to their feet to do so, I would move that we call it 5:30 and reconvene tonight at 8 in Committee of the Whole.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, November 19, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/11/19

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order.

Before I recognize the next speaker, could we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure tonight to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly a considerable delegation from the neighbourhood of Ottewell. These are the 120th Ottewell Cubs. There are 14 children, and there are 10 adults, five leaders and five parents. The group leaders of the Ottewell Cubs this evening are Mr. Lee White, Mr. Mike Maidens, Mr. George Wharry, Mrs. Beverley White, and Mr. Blair Himmelrich. The devoted parents in this group this evening are Mr. Dean Rosychuk, Mr. Brian St. Pierre, Mr. Rick Woodward, Mrs. Damaris Crawford, and Mrs. Gale Hanasyk. I would now ask them to rise – they're in the public gallery – and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Bill 22 Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: For the benefit of the guests seated in the galleries, this is the committee stage of the Legislature. It's a little more informal than the normal procedure. You will see people moving around, being able to take off their jackets. That doesn't happen normally in the regular proceedings. It only happens during committee stage.

On Bill 22, Builders' Lien Amendment Act, 2001, are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time for the record I would like to indicate in committee as the spokesperson for the opposition that we certainly agree with and support this amendment. There has been a consultation process, as was said earlier, and I look forward to any comments from other members of the Assembly regarding this amendment to the Builders' Lien Act.

Certainly the Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors seems anxious for this increase in the 45-day period to a 90-day period. We need to ensure that there is a system in place where people, if they need to, can register in due time a lien as it would arise in the normal process of doing business. Now, the extension was required so that the holdback period will again correspond with the lien registration period. I think that everyone will be well suited by this amendment. I'm not going to go into any details. If the members want to refer to second reading, they certainly may.

In conclusion, I would like to remind all hon. members just how important the oil well drilling contracting business is to the economy of this province. As I said before, we need to ensure that there are processes where people can receive the money that is owed them.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd also like to speak briefly tonight in regards to Bill 22, the Builders' Lien Amendment Act. Certainly, in looking at this piece of legislation, it is one that is dearly needed by contractors in this province. We do know that wells are drilled in the province on a day-work basis, and it is a contractual arrangement which finds service companies essentially renting their equipment and personnel to the operator for a specific procedure and time period. The operator independently purchases any materials required and functions as the prime contractor directing the work program. Now, particularly in the province and with the volatility of this particular industry, when oil prices are high, we do get a tremendous amount of drilling activity, and in periods of downturn, which we are experiencing presently, then what happens is that some of these people can go out of business. It doesn't leave these people that drill these wells much opportunity to recover their costs. They're also in a very delicate position in that they cannot go after some of these oil companies because at that point they are virtually ensuring that they would not get any more contracts. So the amendment here to increase the lien period from 45 to 90 days is a good amendment. It will certainly help these people, give them more of an opportunity to collect their money, and certainly make the whole industry much more stable.

So with those few comments I will cede the floor to some other members who may wish to add something to this debate. Thank you very much.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 23 Regulated Accounting Profession Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. Bill 23, which was discussed at second reading, was introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Again, we need to have a look at this section by section. It certainly is legislation that, as I said before, is going to bring existing legislation into a consistent format with other similar pieces of legislation.

Now, perhaps the sponsor of the bill can update all members of the Assembly on how this corresponds to the Health Professions Act. Specifically, this amendment addresses registration, practice reviews, and information on protected titles. Also, we are going to be addressing the structures for the three self-regulating accounting agencies: the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta, the Society of Management Accountants of Alberta, and the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta.

Now, some may feel that all of these changes are very much about housekeeping, but if we have a look at the act in a section analysis, section 2(a) and (b) represents corrections in the titles of these positions and groups, and (c) is amended to acknowledge that the practice areas are specific through bylaws, not regulations. Section 3, for all hon. members, includes "applicants for registration" to registrants and former registrants as those covered by regulations on maintaining information files. Section 4 includes regulations as items which a governing body may make bylaws in response to. The section 7 provision requires accounting organizations to "maintain complete applications for registration."

Now, finally, Mr. Chairman, section 10 replaces 96(2)(b)(v) with a new clause (v), that clarifies and expands supervision to provide information on employers in the interests of the public when an employee is being investigated. This is to include both paid and unpaid employees, consultants, contractors, and volunteers. As I understand it, sections 12 and 13 are corrections in titles and abbreviations.

I think there has been a very good consultation process. Our office has received calls, Mr. Chairman, and the Liberal research staff has received calls of reassurance from various groups that the Member for Calgary-Currie is certainly on the right track with this legislation. Again, I'm not going to go into detail like I did this afternoon with the groups that are endorsing this, but it's certainly legislation that we are delighted to say that we support.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 24
Regulated Forestry Profession
Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This legislation is, again, similar to the legislation that was presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. I listened with interest this afternoon to the remarks from the hon. Member for West Yellowhead at second reading on this bill.

Again, at this stage, in committee, I think we need to consider the extensive consultation process. There were 200 individuals consulted from various places in the province. I believe the meeting in High Level was held in the Stardust hotel. It's an establishment that I'm not familiar with, but it certainly has a noteworthy name. Now, if the hon. Member for West Yellowhead was there, I would like to hear the description from that hon. member about the meeting that was held in High Level and that 25 people were attending. One of the questions I had, Mr. Chairman – and I would like to share this with all members – is that in the consultation process that was developed, there were many groups represented. As I understand it, there was industry, there was the forestry technologists professional association, as well as the professional association of the foresters. In light of that, one can only assume that the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association is satisfied with this initiative and that the Alberta Forest Technologists Association, or the AFTA, is also satisfied with the amendments proposed by the hon. member.

Now, when we consider the consultation process, we have to ensure that everyone has confidence in the system. Earlier today I expressed my opinion that whenever people are using the RITE line to phone opposition members when they have concerns about legislation like this and this specific piece, they're not comfortable talking to government members, and it is odd. It's sort of a reflection on a democracy that perhaps is not as healthy as we would like to think, Mr. Chairman, whenever individuals are just not comfortable coming forward with their opinions because they feel there may be some retribution, whether it be in the employment field or not. I don't know, but certainly what was expressed to me on the RITE line is, "No, I don't feel comfortable with that consultation process because I would like my opinions to remain confidential." That is noteworthy. I feel that at this time, after the meeting we held this morning, this should be a matter of public record: that there are some people outside the 200 that did attend the consultation process that was arranged who are just not comfortable with that process. For whatever reason, they feel intimidated. I don't know what it is, but maybe other hon. members of this Assembly can provide me with an answer.

With that, Mr. Chairman, unless I hear back in the next day or two from those individuals, I will have to support this bill, the Regulated Forestry Profession Amendment Act, 2001, in committee but with the reluctance that I expressed at second reading this afternoon.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Bill 26
Trustee Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Are you ready for the question? Is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rising to speak?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I have one question, and I would like to put this question on the record at committee on Bill 26, Trustee Amendment Act, 2001.

This afternoon during second reading the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was speaking, and I noted with interest her remarks and what was said earlier in the afternoon during question period. Perhaps hon. members on the other side of the House can clarify this for me. The Trustee Amendment Act, section 5, authorizes trustee investments.

8:20

Now, section 5(c) says:

debentures issued by a school division, school district, drainage district, hospital district or health region under the Regional Health Authorities Act in Alberta that are secured by or payable out of rates or taxes.

I was led to believe in question period that this would never occur with a regional health authority, that there was going to be no form of deficit financing in this manner. I wonder if at this time a member opposite could explain the rationale of even having the regional health authority mentioned in there. Perhaps in the flow of question period and the excessive noise from the members of the third party I didn't hear that exchange correctly. Maybe I did not, but I thought I heard specifically that regional health authorities would not be running a deficit in that way, and I'm obligated at this time in committee to point that out.

Specifically what this would mean – another point, Mr. Chairman, would be clients on AISH. A couple of years ago we had a significant debate in this Assembly on setting a ceiling on the value of the assets of individuals who are . . .

MR. BONNER: It was $100,000.

MR. MacDONALD: It was $100,000, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry reminds me, the ceiling that was set for clients of AISH. Now, how will this be handled with the new Bill 26, the Trustee Amendment Act, Mr. Chairman? Will there be a list somewhere that will conveniently be available to individuals in Alberta Human Resources and Employment as a means of cross-referencing to ensure that this ceiling is correct or is not above it?

Now, there are issues here that I think we need to talk about, and one is the issue specifically of that list. What information is there? Who would use it? Would they use it or could they use it? That is also an issue of concern, as well as the regional health authorities. Earlier this afternoon when the hon. member was speaking, that was one of the concerns that I also had.

This existing trustee act lists authorized trustee investments. I don't know whether section 5 is that attached list or not.

In conclusion, I would like some answers in due time regarding my question on clients of AISH who perhaps have a trust fund set up that is $100,000. I assume not, but I think it is worth while to investigate, if there was a list of individuals such as this, if it could be used, perhaps, against them to deny or to reduce benefits.

With those comments on the record, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this House regarding Bill 26, the Trustee Amendment Act.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 25

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are two sides to the issues that are being addressed by this particular act. I feel like I can offer it support but not without some concerns and doubts. At least there are some issues that need to be thought through perhaps more than has been done so far so that we don't have this bill coming back for amendments and corrections and adjustments next year, which seems to happen with bills from time to time.

In particular, we've heard concern raised in this House that the court system, the civil court system and the provincial courts, are already overloaded, bogged down, and moving very, very slowly. One of the risks or spin-off effects of this Bill 25 could easily be a surge in the number of civil actions in provincial courts, and that would only add to the burden that we are already experiencing here. I would be interested to know if there has been any prediction or any analysis done on the impact of this bill on the workload of the provincial courts and on delays and staffing levels and costs required to meet the parameters of the bill.

I'm also concerned about the liability of peace officers who may be acting in good faith under this bill but may nonetheless be making an error. If property is seized under the act on the peace officer's advice and then it turns out that a mistake has been made, we need to ensure that the peace officers will not be held liable, assuming that they are operating in good faith. So there is a concern here for the well-being of our police and other peace officers.

One other point I will make is that this bill focuses very much simply on property crimes and not on victims of violent crime. So while it's of course commendable to address the rights of victims of property crimes, we also need to be looking at ways of addressing the rights of victims of violent crime: sexual crime, assault, and so on. I think it's a gap in the concept behind this bill and a gap in the bill itself that the rights and the concerns of victims of violent crime are not addressed, as I understand it. I think we need to take steps to ensure that victims of violent crime enjoy the same protections and the same possibilities of restitution and compensation that victims of property crime get. Victims of violent crime will have lost wages, medical costs, and of course the costs associated with the stress or distress of the crime itself.

So there are some concerns with this bill. All of that said, I think we will be offering it our qualified support. So I will make those comments my last.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, very much, Mr. Chairman. I listened with interest also earlier today to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview discussing Bill 25, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. Certainly the goal of this is encouraging if this legislation is to direct initiatives that will make it easier to regain property or obtain court order restitution for losses suffered as a result of an illegal act. Well, fine, but there are a few cautions, one, of course, which was just discussed. One of the objectives is that the action or any other proceedings under the act can proceed under this whether or not the person responsible for the illegal act has been charged or convicted.

Now, we are also allowing the minister to direct the Crown to commence a legal action for the purpose of taking property away from a person if a peace officer reasonably believes that a person has acquired the property from an illegal act, and that is noteworthy. There doesn't seem to be anyone across the province with any issues with this. Certainly I haven't heard of any. When you think that there has to be a balance – and we have to recognize this, Mr. Chairman, that there is a balance between the rights of victims and alleged criminals, and we have to emphasize “alleged” – where should the scales tip? It's hard to say. But I would remind members that the powers outlined in this legislation are already available to victims in the Court of Queen's Bench, and the shift is that the Crown can now pursue the remedies in our Provincial Court system, and the victim can pursue, as I understand this, the same remedies in Queen's Bench.

Now, the Minister of Justice should take into account the wishes of the victim in exercising his discretion or in future times maybe her discretion – his or her discretion – under the act. For example, if the victim is seeking remedy in the Court of Queen's Bench, then the minister should not do anything incompatible or counterproductive to the victim's efforts.

It has been noted by other speakers that the legislation deals only with property and does not deal with victims of violent crime. A sexual assault victim has no ability to obtain a judgment for lost wages or medical costs or anything like that from the criminal in criminal court. The victim can only obtain remedies again in Queen's Bench. However, the power to freeze assets or issue restraining orders in criminal court could really help victims of crime, Mr. Chairman.

The question outstanding is: what resources is the hon. minister making available to enforce orders and collect on orders given that police, prosecutors, and civil lawyers at Alberta Justice are already overwhelmed? This issue was discussed by previous speakers as well. What accounting and recording mechanisms does the minister have in place to adequately manage the collection on orders and distribution of settlements to the victims of crime fund or to victims?

Now, this also would make me think of what Mr. Valentine from the Auditor General's office had to say on the mechanism and the procedures in place to collect outstanding traffic fines from individuals who were in violation in this province but who live in another province. All these matters would seem related, because in my view a crime is a crime, Mr. Chairman.

With those remarks on the record for Bill 25, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, I will cede the floor to another hon. member.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make just a few comments here as well on Bill 25, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, 2001. In reading over the bill and looking at some of the objectives of the bill, it reminded me very much of the powers that are currently held by Canada Customs in that when people are trying to cross the border from the United States into Canada or if they arrive on international flights and they have contraband or whatever, then the powers of Canada Customs are quite extensive, and it can be seized. In that regard, I see some strengths in this particular bill in that when a crime has been committed and we do have victims of that crime, then the court can issue a restraining order to prevent the disposal of any assets. Now, I think this is a very strong piece here in this legislation and certainly will ensure that victims of property crimes will have an opportunity to have some restitution for the crime that was perpetrated against them.

Now, also with this legislation, Mr. Chairman, a peace officer can direct that property to be held until a restraint order can be issued. Again, this is a strong recommendation and part of the act since it will ensure that assets cannot be disposed of while the courts get involved. As well, if the Crown proves on the balance of probabilities that the property is the proceeds of an illegal act, then civil action will be used to institute a property disposal order. The property will be returned to the lawful owner, and certainly we see examples of that now. When the police do uncover large amounts of property they feel is stolen, they make every effort they can to return that, but in this particular case I think it will strengthen what we currently do have in there.

Now, another area that I think this bill addresses is restitution. Under restitution in this bill, Mr. Chairman, the court can order that the property of a person convicted of an illegal act be transferred to a victim, so we do have the restitution aspect of this bill as well. When we look at compensation in the case of where there is no lawful owner, property will be sold and the proceeds directed to an agency or a program devoted to remedying the social harm caused by the illegal act. As well, compensation payment orders can be issued to ensure that the offender does pay.

Now, then, under administration in regards to this particular bill, Mr. Chairman, provisions are made for disclosure to the courts of financial information from the offender, again a very good recommendation. As well, the act does contain penalties for contempt. Those, as I see it, are very strong points with this particular act.

As well, I must note, as did the members for Edmonton-Riverview and Edmonton-Gold Bar, that this legislation deals only with property. It does not deal with victims of violent crimes. I think that when we look at this bill, we certainly should be looking at how it could be strengthened to involve all victims, whether they be victims of a sexual assault and particularly where those people have no ability to obtain a judgment for lost wages, medical costs, or whatever from the criminal in criminal court.

As well, Mr. Chairman, the victim can obtain remedies in Queen's Bench. However, we do know that when we do get involved in the court system, this is a very lengthy, a very cumbersome system, and while I do have confidence in the system that the proper outcome will occur, we still must look at the impact on victims who are left in a rather compromising position because they are left without any assets or with assets. Until that restitution can be made, then they certainly are put in a position of jeopardy.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my chair and certainly look to comments from other hon. members of the Assembly. Thank you very much.

[The clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I would move that committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 22, 23, 24, 26, 25.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I would move that the Assembly now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 8:44 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 20, 2001 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 01/11/20
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.
 Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a good friend, a former Member of the Legislative Assembly, and a gentleman who has made many significant contributions to this province. George Ho Lem Sr. will be recognized further in this Assembly a bit later on this afternoon, but I would like to say that Mr. Ho Lem has done much for sports, business, community service, and politics in Alberta. Mr. Ho Lem was a Calgary alderman and an MLA for the Social Credit Party. His community service ranges from work with the Stampeder Football Club and the Calgary Stampede to the Calgary auxiliary hospital and many organizations in the Chinese community.

Mr. Speaker, George Ho Lem Sr. is seated in your gallery today with his wife, Edie; daughter Cherie Ho Lem; son George Ho Lem Jr.; daughter-in-law Ursula Ho Lem; grandson Stephen and granddaughter Stephanie; nephew Gerald Yuen and his wife, Sharon; nephew Ronald Ho Lem and his wife, Dianne; nephew-in-law Ray Lee; Greg Ho Lem; Marilyn Ho Lem; Kevin Ho Lem; and Candice Ho Lem. I would ask Mr. Ho Lem Sr. and his family to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Alberta's Ombudsman, Mr. Scott Sutton. He is accompanied by his executive assistant, Ms Dixie Watson. They are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members a great Albertan, a constituent, a good friend, and recently honoured with the Order of Canada. In addition, this gentleman is the spouse of the hon. Member for St. Albert. Mr. Jack O'Neill is seated in your gallery, and I would ask that he rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and present a petition signed by 500 Albertans. With your permission I'd like to read the text of the petition.

We the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to provide health care coverage for medical supplies for diabetic children under the Alberta Health Care Plan and provide financial assistance to parents to enable them to meet their children's necessary dietary requirements and cover costs incurred in travelling to Diabetes Education and Treatment Centres outside their own communities in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader and Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 5.

I'm also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 14, 15, 16, and 17.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Bill 214

Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 214, being the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will allow for the value-added agricultural industry to prosper in Alberta.

[Motion carried; Bill 214 read a first time]

Bill 215

Health Insurance Premiums Act Repeal Act

MR. VANDERMEER: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 215, being the Health Insurance Premiums Act Repeal Act.

This bill proposes to eliminate health care premiums altogether.

[Motion carried; Bill 215 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 218

School (Class Size Targets) Amendment Act, 2001

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely pleased today to request leave to introduce Bill 218, School (Class Size Targets) Amendment Act, 2001.

I believe that this plain language bill will place Alberta first among Canadian provinces to set class sizes, and with it we will join a number of enlightened American states that have taken steps to ensure that children enjoy classroom conditions that maximize their success.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 218 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table with the Assembly today a memo from Ms Fay Orr, managing director of the Public Affairs Bureau, to myself which shows that, in response to a question asked yesterday by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, in 1992-93 the number of full-time employees in the Public Affairs Bureau was 213, compared to 130 today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today questions and answers from the Committee of Supply meeting of May 9, 2001.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, an agency of the government of Alberta reporting to the Minister of Health and Wellness, contributes in a major way to the health of individuals, families, and communities in the province. Today it's my pleasure to table AADAC's 2000-2001 annual report. This report presents the significant work of the commission in providing alcohol and other drug and gambling problem prevention, treatment, and information services to the people of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table with the Assembly a number of letters that I have received from constituents in support of Bill 207.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

1:40

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate copies of a document from the Edmonton Coalition on Homelessness regarding their Edmonton housing strategy events taking place on Thursday, November 22, 2001.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table the required number of copies of 26 requests from Albertans who urge the government to vote in support of the class size targets bill to "end the need for parents to fundraise for classroom basics" and "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers for our children."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of the 2001 Sustainable Calgary State of Our City Report, done by the Sustainable Calgary group, which has some great ideas in it.

My second set of tablings is the appropriate number of copies of 11 requests from Albertans who want the government to vote in support of our class size targets bill to "end the need for parents to fundraise for classroom basics" and "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers for [all of] our children."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is the required number of copies of 26 requests from Albertans who want the government to vote in support of the Liberal opposition's class size targets bill so that "classrooms will no longer be overcrowded," to "end the need for parents to fundraise for classroom basics," and "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers for our children."

The second tabling this afternoon is a chart indicating between 1976 and the year 2000 the remaining established reserves of crude oil in the province of Alberta. This comes from the EUB Statistical Series 2001.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the required number of copies of 26 requests from Albertans who want the government to vote in support of the Liberal opposition's class size target bill so that "classrooms will no longer be overcrowded," to "end the need for parents to fundraise for classroom basics," and "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers for our children."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table 26 requests from Albertans who want the government to vote in support of Bill 218 so that "classrooms will no longer be overcrowded."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the required number of copies of 26 requests from Albertans who want the government to vote in support of our education bill on class size targets so that "classrooms will no longer be overcrowded," to "end the need for parents to fundraise for . . . basics," and "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from a constituent, Carmela Travale, who is pointing out the difficulties of living on assistance of $615 per month and asking the provincial government to make social services programs more humane.

For my second tabling I join my colleagues in tabling 37 requests from Albertans who also support the class size targets bill, ending parent fund-raising, and the need to attract and keep teachers in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 27(1) of the Ombudsman Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 34th annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for the period April 1, 2000, to March 31, 2001, and the financial statements of the office of the Ombudsman as at March 31, 2001.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: Mr. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly another group of young people who have given their time and efforts to raise money for the relief efforts in the United States. Four young students from Warburg school started a campaign called Pennies for Peace. The nine-year-old girls have been collecting pennies since September 11. To date they have raised almost $5,000 and, incredibly, most of that in pennies. That's an incredible amount of pennies and an awful lot of counting and rolling.

The four young students who spearheaded this effort are with us today along with a fellow student who designed a Pennies for Peace graphic T-shirt. They are accompanied by their very proud parents and grade 4 teacher, Sharon Martin. I would ask Taylor Gidosh, Lauren Sarvas, Jody Wilson, Jaylynn West, and Conor Hess to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't often have visitors from my constituency, but today I've been doubly blessed. I had a group in from George MacDougall high school this morning, and this afternoon I have a member of the Rocky View school division board in attendance from my riding, and I'm just absolutely delighted. He's a good friend. He's on my board of directors as well, so he keeps me in line and informed as to what's going on in the school division. I'd like John Murray to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly visitors in the members' gallery, 27 students and six adults from the Neerlandia school, located in the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce today a group of grade 6 students from Fultonvale elementary school. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Karin Bittner, and Mrs. Doreen Langdon. They're in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My guests have not arrived yet but will be here at 2 o'clock. I would like to recognize and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 26 grade 6 students from the Thorhild school. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Mike Popowicz, and parents Mrs. Stacey Kirk, Mrs. Suzanne Turchanski, Mrs. Linda Ewaskow, Mrs. Tammy Rosenberger, Mrs. Mary Toronchuk, Mr. Don Fleury, and Mr. Ed Turner. They will be seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that we give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly an Edmonton-Glenora constituent, Mr. Bill Daly. Mr. Daly is a very, very strong advocate for a disease that we males don't like to talk too much about, and that is prostate cancer. I'm honoured today to introduce him because over 400 Albertans will lose their life to this disease this year. Mr. Daly is a strong advocate for awareness and early detection, early detection, early detection. I'd ask Mr. Daly to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 12 students from NorQuest College. I believe that they're seated in the members' gallery; I'm not sure where they are. They are accompanied today by their instructor Mrs. Elaine McPhee. Whichever gallery they're in, I would invite them to please stand and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the House two Alberta mothers, Ms Jette Badre and Ms Coleen Taylor. These two individuals are the parents of diabetic children and are concerned with the quality of life of over 1,500 children in Alberta who are suffering from the same illness. They are the founding members of an organization called Parents of Kids Experiencing Diabetes, and the acronym for that is POKED. Ms Jette Badre and Ms Coleen Taylor are seated in the public gallery. I would now request that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the Alberta School Boards Association is having their working convention this week, and my colleague the Minister of Learning spoke to them this morning. I'm very pleased to introduce a Fort McMurray public school board trustee whom I had the privilege of teaching during my days as a teacher. He's here with us today, and I'd like to ask Jeff Thompson to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House. He endured my teaching practices.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you some guests who'll be joining us at approximately 2 o'clock. They are the grade 6 students of Callingwood elementary school, which is in my constituency. If and when they get here, would you please give them a warm Assembly welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Heather Rempel. Heather Rempel is a hardworking member of the Edmonton Mill Woods Liberal Constituency Association. In addition, she's the women's commission president, serving both provincial and federal women. She's in the public gallery, and with your permission I would ask her to stand and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Stony Plain I'd like to introduce 11 guests that are here today from the Stony Creek school. The parent helpers are Lisa Hansen, Charlotte Smith, Judi Lucas, and Nancy Romano, and with them are students Jake Romano, Casey Hansen, Garrett Berube, Josh Smith, Jordan Hamilton, Rylan Lucas, and Joel Outten. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget Process

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each spring we go through a public debate on the legislative process of developing a budget for the province. This fall the government changed that budget. The questions are to the Premier. Why did you not go through the same kind of public debate to facilitate the establishment of that obligation to Albertans before you made the cuts this fall as we did in the spring before we established the budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that we have a very unique procedure relative to budgeting in this country whereby we report to Albertans on a quarterly basis. Because of our prudent financial planning we are able to shift and change our budget requirements to meet the flow of revenues.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Premier didn't get to the point on that. Mr. Premier, why is it that you do not have public consultations on those changes before you actually implement them? The fact that you do change is a given.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition can advise me as to what public consultation takes place when the price of oil plummets. There's no public consultation. We have to be in a position to react to changing circumstances.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the obligation of this Legislature is to provide a budget for Albertans. Do you not have a sense that we have an obligation to discuss with Albertans when we make changes in the commitments we make to them in the spring?

MR. KLEIN: I think Albertans have been well aware, certainly since 1993, that this is a government that is reactive to changes, and we do react. We have to react, Mr. Speaker, because we have made it against the law in this province to go into a deficit situation.

Now, if the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition would like us to change that law and run deficits, then we wouldn't have to change our budgets at all. All we would do is simply go out and use our credit card and borrow and borrow and borrow and spend and spend and spend, which of course is the Liberal way.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: is it not true that the agencies that deliver services to Albertans are also under law to deliver those services such as health care, care for our children, education?

MR. KLEIN: They will do it, and they will do it based on realistic estimates relative to expenditures and to revenues, Mr. Speaker. All of the agencies that depend on government for finances, including the departments of government, are well aware that if revenues go down, we have to find ways to offset the expenditures.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Premier, so you're expecting them to break contracts with their suppliers, with their teachers, with the people who are obligated to provide those services. They have legal obligations as well.

MR. KLEIN: No, sir. We are challenging school boards, we are challenging regional health authorities, and we are challenging all departments of government to find efficiencies within their departments, Mr. Speaker. I allude here to a news release put out today by the Calgary health region. The headline on this press release reads, "Region lowers spending by $30M; no reductions in frontline services." Where do they plan to get those savings?

Non-clinical spending reductions include Support Services, Corporate Services, Human Resources, offices of the Chief Executive Officer, Chief Medical Officer, Chief Nursing Officer, Capital Development and Communications; in other words, out of the administration or the bureaucracy. System efficiency: they think that they can achieve savings by targeting "planned closure of operating rooms for non-urgent surgery over the holiday and Easter periods," by bringing about a number of other operating procedures, by curbing discretionary spending, by not filling FTEs that do not need to be filled at this particular time, and by reducing overtime by 5 percent. These are the kinds of efficiencies we have challenged the authorities, boards, and commissions to achieve, and the Calgary regional health authority has to be commended for doing a darned good job.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Premier. So you're telling us that your ministers were not diligent when they submitted their business plans to this House in the spring, when they had so much leeway in them.

MR. KLEIN: They were diligent. They were diligent at that particular time. I don't think that anyone – anyone – could have foreseen the horrific events of September 11 and the impact that that would have on the revenue stream. What this government is doing is what governments indeed throughout the world are doing, what businesses are doing. They are making necessary and major adjustments to reduce expenditures to meet a reduced revenue flow. It's as simple as that.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

It would be helpful if the document quoted from would be tabled with the Assembly as well.

2:00

Teacher Remuneration

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the inclusion of 4 percent and 2 percent budget line items for teachers' salaries, the government trashed local bargaining. Now, for the first time in 60 years, the central ATA has refused to ratify the Medicine Hat agreement because moneys will be taken out of the classroom. We are into provincial bargaining. My questions are to the Premier. How are local boards going to reach agreements now that you have moved the system to provincial bargaining?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. We have not moved the system to provincial bargaining in any way, shape, or form. This is something now that will have to be worked out between the particular local – and I don't know what the local number is of the ATA in Medicine Hat – and the central body.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: how successful can local bargaining be when it's clear that the decisions are being made by the government in Edmonton?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement my answer, but the only involvement we have had in teachers' salaries is to take the unprecedented step of including a guaranteed 6 percent increase over two years as a line item in the budget.

Relative to bargaining procedures I'll have the hon. minister respond.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will say at the outset that it is a bit of a surprise to me that the hon. member is saying that the central Alberta Teachers' Association is not going to ratify something that their local of the Alberta Teachers' Association has voted on and agreed to and, from what I understand, that the local school board has agreed to. This is what local bargaining is all about. It is not us as a provincial government that is moving away from local bargaining. If what the hon. member across the way says is true, I think that's a true slap in the face for the local ATA.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are again to the Premier. How ethical is it for the government to place school boards in the position of providing better wages at the expense of larger classes?

MR. KLEIN: Again, that statement is not true. School boards have the option of spending their money in areas that they consider to be priority areas. If indeed more money for teachers is deemed to be a priority area for a particular school district, then they have the flexibility to spend those dollars in that particular area. If reducing class sizes is a priority, then school boards have the flexibility to address the problem in that particular way. So there's a tremendous amount of flexibility, and that speaks to the issue that is so important, Mr. Speaker, and that is the issue of local autonomy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just add to that that with this particular school board, following the elections in October I went down to Medicine Hat and sat with them, as they had some other issues as to what had occurred during the election. So this school board was extremely cognizant. They knew how much money they had, they knew what they wanted to do, and they went and put it on the table. It was an extremely informed decision that this school board made when they made the offer to the teachers. I want everyone in this Assembly to understand that: that they put forward an offer that they felt they could afford, that they felt the teachers would accept, and that they felt they could deal with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Children's Services

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands there's a young man who I will call Jim. He is an aboriginal youth suffering from severe depression and suicidal thoughts. With the help of a program at Ben Calf Robe school he is now doing well. Now that program is being cut. My question is to the Finance minister. In the $23 billion budget of the province of Alberta why can't you find the money to help Jim and thousands of other kids just like him?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, we have put forward a budget that we believe meets the priorities of Albertans and at the same time shares the benefits of being in a very fortunate province. How the individual allocations are determined is based on the priorities set within ministries.

I would ask the Minister of Children's Services to respond directly to the question.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in MáMōwe over 93 agencies are funded, and these agencies provide everything from foster care to care of children with special needs. These are agencies that work as part of the team. Of these agencies, 20 were asked to take some reduction, and that is because in the envelope of our service there are millions of dollars provided for early intervention programs. Those ones that are deemed to be closest to the child that would become most at risk if they were not given a program, who may in fact become part of our child welfare caseloads, are being protected.

Now, there are other programs that are provided in agencies for children where they've been reduced, and if anybody provides me with the name of someone who they believe to be truly at risk to be a part of this growing caseload phenomenon that we've got Canada-wide, then we will be pleased to make sure that this person, this child, gets the services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are 10 programs that have been completely wiped out, to the Finance minister, why are preventative children's programs, like the one helping Jim, the first to be cut by this government?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly this question should go to the Minister of Children's Services, but let's make it abundantly clear again. As the Minister of Children's Services has indicated, if there are people who are in need who are not fitting into the programs, the names should come forward so they can be dealt with directly. This budget is, again, about meeting the priorities of Albertans' needs and sharing benefits, and we believe that we have dealt with the issues that Albertans have put forward in a very responsible way.

Again I'd ask the Minister of Children's Services to supplement my answer, but clearly I think she has explained this.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I think it's important for me to tell this Assembly that as Minister of Children's Services I have a huge concern when in one authority 31 percent of the children coming into child welfare this year are 11 years of age and over, which says that because of parent/teen conflict some children are becoming part of this child welfare caseload when it could be better addressed by extended family members, the family and community offering support.

Mr. Speaker, again, we will look after any young person at risk brought to us, but we have to make choices, especially when in this particular area of MáMōwe there was a projected $17 million deficit because of so many of the children coming forward needing programs. So we have to cut where those cuts are furthest from the child that needs care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would appreciate it if this question is not deferred to the minister of preventative social services. Will the Finance minister come with me to my constituency and meet Jim and the thousands of other kids just like him?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. HUTTON: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Children's Services. The minister has told us that she's cut a number of nongovernment agencies that provide services to children, yet she is hiring more government staff. Could the minister please explain this in a little more detail?

Thank you.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in the budget this year and cumulative of last year's additions, 75 staff were added from Human Resources and Employment and other staff that had been part of delivering child services in Alberta. So the advocate's position and other payroll and other support staff were moved from Human Resources and Employment to Children's Services. No additions; just a change of department. The 300 staff that were added on the front lines deliver services directly to children based on the workload standards of the AUPE agreement that we have, and based on the numbers of caseloads, we have had an increase in delivery staff. Now, since the hiring freeze we have not increased staff, and these reductions that I have spoken of on contracts are, again, done to be prudent with our expenditure lines.

2:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is my final question, and it's very close to home because a number of these people work in my constituency. The Mennonite society Welcome Home has been cut. I'm curious why we would cut nongovernment partners at a time when these valuable services are needed.

Thank you.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the reason for 18 child and family service authorities is to in fact get local people involved in establishing priorities, setting the goals and objectives, and targeting the funding where it's most needed. Where funds have been reduced to some agencies, my conclusion is that their selection has been to protect funding in other areas that, again, deliver most closely services for children at highest risk. We are looking at all of the funding reductions across the province, and I'm satisfied that to the largest extent possible all of the authorities are doing the best they can with the dollars they have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Electricity Pricing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under this Conservative government electricity deregulation has turned into a $700 million don't-pay-a-cent-event sale until after the election. The government delayed on purpose the electricity companies' ability to use rate riders to collect energy costs incurred but not covered in existing rates. This year the price cap is 11 cents per kilowatt. However, the Minister of Energy told Albertans in September that they should not expect the province's electricity subsidies to continue beyond December. My first question is to the Premier. What, if any, is the price cap going to be next year?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will legitimately defer to the Minister of Energy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's quite a bit of information in the member's preamble, some of it good, some of it reasonable, and some of it not so good. But let's just talk about the prescribed rate regulation. This government is going through a series of decisions with respect to electricity on deferral accounts, prescribed rate, pool price deficiency regulation, export principles, PPA arrangements, Clover Bar bidding arrangements, and all the factors that put together an integrated and composite plan which we'll be coming forward with and discussing with Albertans in a transparent, open fashion.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why delay announcing next year's price cap when residential consumers need this information before they purchase long-term contracts, whether they're for one, three, or five years?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can provide a very short answer, and then have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement. It's anticipated that electricity rates will be comparatively low.

Perhaps the hon. minister can shed more light on it, so to speak.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, absolutely correct. It's not shocking news to know that electricity prices are lower, but as the member of the opposition has clearly pointed out, there is the issue of deferral accounts that are owed by consumers to the utility companies and approved by the process through the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board that will go forward in the next year. In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talks about: why not put a cap now? He is assuming that there will in fact be a prescribed regulated rate option for next year, and that final decision has not yet been made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: when will consumers know how they are to pay back the $700 million boondoggle that this Conservative government has created through electricity deregulation? The $700 million, how are they going to have to pay that back? Explain that.

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there was no boondoggle. The move to deregulate had been in motion since 1995. It's working out well. A number of factors came together, unfortunately, at the beginning of 2001, I believe it was, that boosted prices, but since then those prices have stabilized. There's tremendous competition now in the marketplace. We see more power projects being announced and coming onstream.

Relative to the specific question as it relates to rates, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the . . . [interjection] I'm sorry; I didn't hear the call. I'm sorry, but that island voice rings loud in the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Coal-fired Electricity Plants Emissions Standards

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, my question today is regarding emission standards for new coal-fired electricity plants. I understand that Alberta's standards have been of some discussion at the recent Energy and Utilities Board meeting on EPCOR's Genesee 3 and TransAlta's Keephills expansion. My question is for the Minister of Environment. Is Alberta somehow lagging behind with its standards?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can state most emphatically that Alberta is not lagging behind. In fact, our June update of standards gives us the most stringent standards in Canada, significantly more stringent than the federal standards. The federal government is not even talking about bringing in new standards until at least 2003. I will say as well that this is only a first step in the updating of our standards. In the near future I will be asking the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, which is a nongovernmental organization made up of both environmental groups and industry, to develop new standards for the province of Alberta.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, my second question is for the same minister. I understand that the U.S. EPA standards for new coal-fired plants are more stringent than ours. Can I ask why?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of areas that you measure when you measure emissions, and I will say that our particulate matter is about the same as in the U.S. In nitrous oxides and sulphur dioxides the U.S. is somewhat more stringent, but they have a different problem. They have a problem with smog that is caused by these two chemicals. We do not yet have that problem in Alberta. As we update our standards, I expect that in the areas of sulphur dioxide and nitrous oxides these new standards will take those U.S. standards into account.

One further comment that I would make is that the ambient air quality standards that we have in Alberta – that's the air you breathe – are much stricter, Mr. Speaker, than in the U.S.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the same minister. Recently federal Environment Minister Anderson was quoted as saying that the federal government would be coming up with new standards soon. He also expressed some concern with allowing Genesee 3 and Keephills expansion to move forward based on the fact that they do not utilize best available emission reduction technology. Will the minister care to comment on whether Alberta will adapt these standards and whether the federal minister's comments about best available technology are legitimate?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've indicated, the feds are talking about new standards, but we don't expect to see anything until 2003. I would assume that the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, who I'm going to ask to look at our standards, will take into account these possible new federal standards as they go forward.

In regards to the best available technology, Mr. Speaker, we set standards. We're technology neutral as a government. What we ask the companies to do is choose the technology from their business case that will meet the standards we have. We will not choose one company's technology over another company's. Standards are important.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Teacher Remuneration

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the beginning of this year the Premier promised teachers that they would be rewarded for taking a 5 percent cut but then in the budget gave school boards only 4 percent for salaries. Four percent won't be enough for school boards to cover the salary grid costs and the costs of inflation for teachers and certainly won't come close to matching the settlements awarded to nurses and doctors. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why has the government singled out teachers for punitive treatment?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'll go back to what has been said in Hansard for the last four or five months. First of all, in the last budget there was 4 percent and 2 percent that was put in exclusively for teachers' salaries, which meant that the school boards could not touch that. It had to be for teachers' salaries. This was a minimum. They also had 3 and a half percent on their general grant rate that they can negotiate with the teachers, and that's exactly what they're doing. That's exactly what they're doing, for example, in Medicine Hat, where the school board and the ATA both voted to accept their contract. I may not have said that already.

The other point that I'll make is that the rationale behind the 4 percent and the 2 percent made them the highest paid teachers on average across the provinces in Canada. Mr. Speaker, let's take a minute and take a look at what's happening in the rest of Canada. In British Columbia they just announced that there would be a spending freeze on education for the next three years. In Quebec they're talking about lowering the wages from $60,000 a year maximum to $53,000 a year. All of these things are happening across Canada right now. Our teachers will be the highest paid on average in the provinces across Canada. We have to remember that.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, how can the minister claim that the 4 percent and the 2 percent raise will make teachers the highest paid in Canada when his arguments are based on a faulty comparison of salaries in other provinces as they stand now and in Alberta as they will be in two years?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, a lot of these school boards across the country, a lot of the provinces across the country have already settled their contracts for the next two years. Obviously, when we made that announcement, it was at that time, but to date no other province in Canada has surpassed the salary commitments that this government has given to our teachers.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, when will this minister tell Albertans that teaching salaries have not even kept pace with inflation, which in real terms means that salaries have gone down?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, a couple of things. First of all, since around 1995 teachers' salaries have gone up an average of around 17 percent in this province. I have already said it, but I'll say it again: it does make the teachers the highest paid in Canada, the 4 and the 2 percent.

There is another interesting component. The hon. member has talked about nurses' salaries. Mr. Speaker, we could quite easily take the nurses' grid, superimpose it on the teachers' grid, and it would be quite acceptable. What it would simply mean is that the people at the lower end of the scale would increase their wage; the people at the higher end of the scale would decrease their wage. Those two scales are superimposable.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Provincial Achievement Tests

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In September Alberta Learning released the results from the grades 3, 6, and 9 provincial achievement tests. Although we are cautioned every year not to rank the quality of education within individual classrooms based on these exams, parents and some of the teachers that I've spoken to in my constituency are concerned that teachers may be focusing on preparing students to write achievement tests instead of focusing on the curriculum. My questions are for the Minister of Learning. Given that there are some concerns about the potential of teachers focusing too much on these tests, has there been any consideration given to discontinuing the provincial achievement tests?

DR. OBERG: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Minister of Learning. Given the concerns of the parents, what is the value of the provincial achievement tests?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, what the provincial achievement tests allow us to do is give a general measure of what is happening with our curriculum in the province. It helps us show how many kids are learning to read, how many kids are learning numeracy skills, what exactly they're learning. Is our curriculum getting old? Is it getting dated? Should we be changing our curriculum? All of these questions are answered by the provincial achievement test.

More importantly, though, Mr. Speaker, what we are now able to do is give individual jurisdictions their results and allow them to take a look at the trends that have been occurring over the last four or five years. These trends are extremely important, because all around the province the trends are very different. What we need to know is: what are the ones that are experiencing very positive trends doing that's different from the ones that are experiencing negative trends? This is a very powerful tool. It's a very powerful tool for the betterment of education in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Learning. What is the minister's response to organizations that attempt to rank the schools or school jurisdictions based solely on these achievement tests?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll try to be generous in here. The response that I tell these people is something that usually can't be said in here. The bottom line is that I completely wholeheartedly disagree with this ranking of school systems that goes on. Everyone in this Assembly realizes and knows that every kid is different, that every classroom is different, the conditions are different, and I think it's a very simpleminded person that puts together these comparisons of schools.

Mr. Speaker, these tests are incredibly important to us from a curriculum point of view. They're incredibly important for those of us who want to better the school system, better the educational environment, and the people that put it forward as a tool to create dissent, as a tool to create controversy, as I say, they're just simple minded.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Children's Services

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I note in a report tabled today a one-year 37 percent increase in the salary of the AADAC CEO. I'd also like to note that in 1995 the Mennonite churches accepted a long-term funding commitment from the provincial government and started Welcome Home Community, a program for families at risk. Now the government is breaking faith with the Mennonite church and the families they serve. To the Minister of children's Services: why has the government again broken a promise to this church?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in my response previously in the House this afternoon I identified that there are 93 agencies or supportive groups that have contractual relationships with Mámöwe child and family services. We have selected the 20 agencies that were beyond the direct interface for children most considered at risk.

Mr. Speaker, what I am identifying for the hon. member is that the real tragedy here in Alberta is the rapid increase of child welfare children, children who need the protection of the House, people who need very definite work on assessments because of exposure to family violence, being victims of family violence, being victims of physical or emotional or social abuse.

Clearly, many of these preventive programs that do good work we would certainly like to retain, and we would like to have an opportunity to do that in the new calendar year. In the case of this particular program the costs were rising and many of the programs that we're administering today are being evaluated on their effectiveness both from a dollar point of view and the effect on how well the children are achieving in overcoming their particular problems because of the delivery of the service.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then I'm wondering, given the soaring rates of child welfare cases, how these will ever come down if the minister is cutting funding for prevention.

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very grateful for the hon. member's question. Quite honestly, across Canada we're looking at a new response model so that those children that are assessed to be the least at risk can have their needs addressed by Boys and Girls Clubs, other community agencies. Then we can structure those that are most at risk on the other end of the spectrum to be those that are removed for adoption, kinship care, and other very focused programs.

Mr. Speaker, my fear today in the child welfare caseload review, the statistics we have so far, is that we are doing more by taking the child out of the home than we should be. We should be working on a home improvement model. We should be working on a community improvement model. We should be working as a community to overcome in Canada, Canada-wide, the embarrassment of growing caseloads in a country that has so much.

DR. TAFT: Again, Mr. Speaker, how are we going to achieve those laudable ends if we continue to cut preventive social services?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, much of it will deal with family case conferencing. The local Edmonton police are opening a one-stop intake centre where we can put professionals together with the child and the family. We can deal with an expanded family case conference, and we can help our social workers understand the transformation model of working together with community agencies to support those children outside the case management system, inside the family, and with other supportive agencies. It's going to take a lot of work. It's going to take the goodwill of the professionals, and it's going to take the work from other agencies in support of what government is attempting to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton Meadowlark.

Crossroads Program

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past several years, under the leadership of the member who is now the provincial Solicitor General, this government made protecting children involved in prostitution a major policy priority. A safe house for street children, run by the Crossroads outreach program in Edmonton, is a key component of that strategy. Now the shocking news. Yesterday Crossroads were notified out of the blue that funding for this safe house will be terminated in 90 days. My first question is to the Deputy Premier. Will this government make a commitment today to find money to ensure that the Crossroads safe house for children involved in prostitution will remain open?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I will make a commitment to this House that this government will fund priority programs, that this government will carry out the mandate that the people of this province gave it in March of this year, I would say in a significant way, that we will provide sound fiscal management, priority programs for our people, and carry those out in the best way that we can. That's what this government has committed to do, and that's what this government will continue to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me ask the second question to the Treasurer. Why are important frontline services that help vulnerable children and families such as the Crossroads outreach program and many other important programs that assist the aboriginal community in particular being sacrificed in the government's frenzied rollback in its budget commitments?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, when you're charged with the responsibility of dealing with the fiscal situation of the province, striking the right balance is always difficult. Reality does come into play. We have made a commitment not only on the fiscal side of the equation but in dealing with the needs of people. Quite clearly, I think our Minister of Children's Services has enunciated that if there are those in need, she needs to be made aware of them, that she has a number of programs that are there to deal with some of the pressure points for children. I would ask her once again to get up and explain in this House today the programs that she has.

THE SPEAKER: No. We've spent a lot of time on this series.

The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Solicitor General, who I'm sure has a stake in this issue. Can the Solicitor General tell the Assembly how many more children will be prostituting themselves on street corners as a result of this government's reckless cuts to the Crossroads outreach safe house and the cuts to other frontline services for children in Edmonton and elsewhere?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the question. I can tell you that since we developed the PCHIP legislation and the PCHIP legislation was enacted, child prostitution is going down in this province and will eventually be eradicated. I appreciate his concerns in regards to Crossroads. Crossroads is a very effective agency, but we also have Catholic Social Services, that can deliver the program. We also have the Edmonton police, that deliver and pick up these children. So our children in this province who are involved in prostitution will be taken care of.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Beer Bottle Recycling

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend two of the Alberta-based beer companies announced that they're being forced to increase the price of a case of beer by 20 cents because they are being forced into the province's public recycling system. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Is the government directly responsible for this price increase?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment. [interjections] Hon. minister, we await.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for calming the House on this very contentious matter. I want to say that I do understand that one brewery in the province sent out a letter to all liquor stores that they feel they had no choice but to increase the price of beer and that the government is at fault. I want to state quite clearly that this is a business decision. We did not encourage or force any beer company to raise their price for beer. I think it's really unfortunate that they are blaming the government, but what is even more unfortunate is that they are very unhappy about being forced into a public recycling system, which ensures that all consumers get their full refunds. That's what this is about, giving all consumers the full refunds on their bottles, in spite of what a beer company might say.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will Albertans still be eligible to receive their full refund if they were to return empty beer bottles and cans to the retail outlet where they bought them rather than to the bottle depot?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is important here is that in fact they will return a full deposit charge at the public depots. In fact, this puts back into the pockets of Albertans about $4 million a year in deposits through the public depot system, that they were not getting in the past.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Electronic Racing Terminals

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Casino operators that purchased electronic racing terminals from the provincial government signed a contract requiring quarterly reviews and adjustments of compensation rate clauses in the contract. My questions are all to the Minister of Gaming. Mr. Minister, why haven't these quarterly reviews been done since the contracts were signed in 1996-97?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that particular provision. I will do an inquiry and provide an answer to the hon. member when it's available to me.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, given that the casino operators have recouped their cost years ago, why is the minister allowing 70 percent of the revenue from these machines, an estimated $21 million, to go to these casino owners rather than to the charities that need the money?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, this particular product was brought into the province as a result of the initiative of the casino owners. An arrangement was made at that time pursuant to contract, and we have honoured that obligation. The Auditor General in investigating this particular contract pointed out that it was necessary to alter it. The AGLC, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, has done that. We have said to the operators that they have choices, and the choices will ensure that the matter is brought into compliance by December 31, 2003.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this minister also had a choice, why has the minister chosen to allow those casino operators to continue to receive this money when the money should be going to the charities that need it?

MR. STEVENS: I think it's fair to say, with respect to these machines, that each and every casino operator has developed a business plan which is based upon certain expected revenues. What we have said to the casino operators is that we are going to give them a reasonable period of time to make their decisions, and our judgment is that that reasonable period of time is until December 31, 2003.

So, Mr. Speaker, what we have done is we have addressed the issue. We are continuing to receive revenue in the Alberta lottery fund as a result of the operation of those machines. The casino operators will have a decision to make as to how they wish to deal with those machines, either sell them back to the government or take the other option. Once again, that will be done by December 31, 2003.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Noise Suppression Equipment

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our cities and towns are becoming progressively noisier places to live in mainly from vehicle noise. Power station coal haulers, which are far from anyone's bedroom, have spent large amounts of money to make their trucks whisper quiet. A picture of a large power station with some geese in the foreground is titled Only the Geese are Heard. Yet we continue to allow the sale and installation of very loud vehicle mufflers, which are polluting our cities with noise and also disturbing the engine emissions. My questions are all to the Minister of Transportation. Could the minister elaborate on Alberta's existing laws, if any, which address the retrofitting of vehicles with other than manufacturers' noise suppression equipment?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Highway Traffic Act prohibits anyone from retrofitting an exhaust system that's provided by the car manufacturer to increase the noise level of the muffler for expulsion of gases. The exhaust muffler is designed in such a way as to cool the gases before they're expelled and to ensure that most of the gases are of course combusted before they're expelled into the atmosphere.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why are vehicle noise laws not being enforced?

MR. STELMACH: The very same act also prohibits an individual from operating a vehicle that has an exhaust system that has been tampered with – opened, widened, or retrofitted – which increases the noise level. Whether it be through municipal bylaw or perhaps through the very same act, the Highway Traffic Act, there are provisions there to ensure that individuals driving these cars are prohibited from doing so and are fined. It's just part of the overall enforcement. Along with many other things that our enforcement agencies have to do, this is one area also that they have to pay attention to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can Albertans look forward to quieter towns and cities through tougher, enforceable vehicular noise laws in the future?

MR. STELMACH: Another component of the new highway Traffic Safety Act is a provision allowing local municipalities to set their own bylaws. Of course, those bylaws will have to be enforced by that particular municipality, but it does restrict retrofitting, again, the exhaust systems of cars and motorbikes. As you know, many times on a nice, warm Sunday afternoon, when you want to enjoy a barbecue, there are individuals ripping up and down the street, destroying the peace of the afternoon. The good thing about this is that the local municipality will now be able to not only write their own bylaws but also enforce them.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

George Ho Lem

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To follow the introduction by our Premier this afternoon, I would like to speak about our guest of distinction. Mr. George Ho Lem Sr. was born in Calgary in 1918 to Mr. and Mrs. Ho Lem. George's mother, Mary, was the first woman of Chinese descent to move to Calgary. George is one of Alberta's outstanding examples of success and civic duty. He has had a distinguished career in business and politics as well as an exemplary record of community service.

He founded a cleaning business with his family members in the 1950s and later expanded his business to restaurants as well as to a true western business, horse breeding. He won two Alberta Derbies and has been declared thoroughbred breeder of the year. In politics he was the first visible-minority politician elected in Canada, serving three terms as Calgary city alderman in 1959 as well as a term in this Assembly as a member of the Social Credit Party in 1972.

His commitment to the community is outstanding, having been a member of the Calgary Stampeder Football Booster Club, an 18-year director and also a lifetime honorary director of the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede Board, president of the Calgary Junior Chamber of Commerce, the chairman of the board for 16 years of the Calgary auxiliary hospital, the founding director of the Metropolitan Calgary Foundation, as well as the co-chair of the 1978 Commonwealth Games. He was the personal host to Prince Philip during his stay in Calgary. He served as president, chairman, and founding member of many community charity organizations such as the Sien Lok Society, the Oi Kwan Society, the Calgary Chinatown Development Foundation, the Calgary multicultural society, and many more.

He also worked tirelessly on his own assisting many immigrants in becoming Canadians. The Ho Lem family has set an outstanding model for immigrants and their descendants in integrating and contributing to Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, may I take the liberty of representing our Premier and all members of the House to say to Mr. George Ho Lem Sr. and his wife, Edie, a traditional Chinese wish. [remarks in Chinese] Or in my westernized paraphrasing: longevity lasting as the Rocky Mountains; blessings coming as waves of the Pacific Ocean.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Jack O'Neill

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and recognize my constituent Jack O'Neill, husband of the hon. Member for St. Albert, and to honour him for his nomination as a member of the Order of Canada. Jack O'Neill has been a passionate advocate of human rights in this province, working towards a personal dream to help Albertans and Canadians understand the importance of believing in the dignity of every human being.

Jack served as a special assistant to former Premier Peter Lougheed, deputy minister of culture, chief commissioner of the Alberta Human Rights Commission, and after retiring as chief commissioner, he co-chaired the human rights conference here in Edmonton, which brought 743 participants from around the world. The conference was in 1998. Currently Jack serves on the boards of the Youville Home in St. Albert, the St. Albert arts and heritage fund, St. Albert Economic Development & Tourism, and the board of the John Humphries Centre in Edmonton for the development of peace and human rights. He coedited a book called Peace, Justice and Freedom with professor Gerry Gall and citizenship court judge Gurcharan Bhatia.

Jack O'Neill was notified he had been nominated as a member of the Order of Canada back in June of this year. He will be traveling to Ottawa to receive the distinguished award on December 4. Congratulations to Jack from all of the Assembly, and thank you for a lifetime of public service.

Sustainable Calgary State of Our City Project

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, the Sustainable Calgary State of Our City project was initiated in 1996 by a group of citizens interested in ensuring that their legacy will be one they can be proud of. They came together as a project team – community researchers, indicator think-tank members, and resource people – to examine, through sustainability indicators reporting, how to define progress, quality of life, and sustainability. The 2001 State of Our City Report, which I tabled earlier, documents 36 sustainability indicators. This is the work of almost 2,000 people volunteering over 10,000 hours. Their analysis reveals that even though tentative steps are being taken to address resource consumption, there are signs of wear in the fabric of community life. Education and health systems are showing signs of stress, there are growing inequities in the city, and the ecological footprint indicates that people are consuming 30 percent more of the Earth's natural capital than is regenerated.

The report indicates that Calgary cannot be considered sustainable. They propose four priority actions that they believe can make a real difference to their sustainability: create a sense of community assessment tool, and this is a decision-making tool that assesses how social, economic, or community planning proposals impact sense of community; reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 50 percent over 30 years through reduced energy consumption and a shift to renewable resources; integrate a green tax system, the genuine progress indicator, and ecological footprint analysis into municipal decision-making; support and promote a culture of simplicity.

Mr. Speaker, the Sustainable Calgary group should be congratulated on the very progressive work they have done. I sincerely hope that they become the role models for this level of scrutiny and development of sustainability models for all communities and all levels of government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Fox Run and Mother Teresa School

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pleasure that I rise today to speak about the Sylvan Lake multifacility school that recently won a prestigious international design award. The Council of Educational Facility Planners presented the award over the weekend. The honour recognizes the Fox Run school, which is run by Chinook's Edge, and Mother Teresa school, run by the Red Deer Catholic school division. I would also like to note that this award was the only one given in Canada and one of only three in North America.

The school opened its doors last year and is the first of its kind in Alberta. The school not only provides a state-of-the-art learning centre but also is a true community centre. The key to the school's success is due to the design process and collaboration of the partners involved. Officials from Chinook's Edge and Red Deer Catholic school divisions along with representatives from the town of Sylvan Lake worked closely together to create a facility that unites a community of learners, respecting that each participant has specified needs and unique circumstances. The partnership approach taken on this facility is certain to establish a precedent for future joint ventures between school divisions. Everyone involved is to be congratulated for their creativity and co-operation in combining resources to enhance student learning. Our government supports lifelong learning, and co-operative projects like this one promote that belief.

Thank you very much.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We will call the committee to order.

Bill 207
Alberta Personal Income Tax
(Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for allowing us to bring Bill 207 forward to committee this afternoon. When the bill went through second reading, I was pleased to see that there's so much support for it. I look forward to passage of the bill at this stage as well. Many people across the province have sent faxes telling me of their support for this bill, and I expect that many of you have also received those faxes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has received support because it makes sense. It aims to put money back in the pockets of hardworking and deserving Albertans. Currently they have to purchase tools with after-tax dollars in order to do their jobs. In a moment I'm going to speak on several aspects of this bill, and I'd like to ask the Assembly to keep those Albertans in the back of their minds in our discussion this afternoon.

Some of the specific aspects of Bill 207 I'd like to focus on include the benefits of the new targeted tax credit for tradespeople, namely journeymen or apprentices, the benefits this tax credit will have for them and their families, and finally the way that Bill 207 will highlight the role of tradespeople in the province. Bill 207, especially section 2(2), puts money back in the pockets of Albertans. Our government has shown it believes that the reduction of taxes is a means to spur economic growth and a better life for all Albertans. Bill 207 is another stage in the fulfillment of that vision. Lower taxes will spur investment and growth and promote personal independence and freedom. These are some of the reasons this government brought the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act forward a year or so ago.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 207 gives tax relief to registered journeymen and apprentices working in Alberta trades who spend over $500 on the purchase of their tools. During second reading we heard about the high price of tools for journeymen and tradespeople, including the apprentices. All of us in the Assembly have become aware that the price of tools makes it difficult for tradespeople to enjoy Alberta's tax relief initiatives in the same way that other Albertans do. That realization and concern for fairness for our workers caused many of us to stand in this House in support of Bill 207. Passing Bill 207 would give our workers the opportunity to perform much-needed and appreciated jobs in Alberta and enjoy the Alberta advantage.

Section 2(2) of the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act reinforces the notion that tax reduction is always a positive goal, and especially in this case it is directed towards helping a hardworking and sometimes overlooked segment of our society. Mr. Chairman, the introduction of a tools tax credit for journeymen and apprentices is well overdue, and I think that this Assembly would again show itself to be forward thinking in passing this bill.

Next I'd like to speak of the way that Bill 207 grants tax relief to these middle-class, blue-collar Albertans. It's a tax credit that will favourably affect many families. For example, consider the statistics of just one group of tradesmen, auto mechanics. The average income of an auto mechanic in Canada is about $35,000. Tradespeople have families to support, and $35,000 isn't a huge amount when there are children to be taken care of. Bill 207 won't give our workers in these fields a huge amount of money, but it will give them an opportunity to purchase many of those things that all families require. Some may argue that all families have these costs, but consider a tradesperson who has to put a sizable portion of income into the purchase of tools necessary to complete the work. Registered journeymen in any trade have to have tools probably more than $10,000 in value in order to do their job. That money comes from their pockets, paid for with after-tax dollars. There is a difference, Mr. Chairman, and we seek to address that difference.

Next, Mr. Chairman, I'd also like to remind members in this Assembly of the figure that was brought up earlier during second reading. A starter set of tools for apprentices is, at minimum, about $4,000. Each young apprentice would have to put that forward before beginning work in his trade. The government of Alberta has introduced the 10 percent income tax rate as a means of putting more money back into the wallets of individual Albertans. Bill 207 indicates that more can be done and should be done, and this specific circumstance that journeymen and apprentices find themselves in shows the need for this targeted tax relief. By allowing young apprentices to receive a nonrefundable tax credit through section 2(2) on costs related to tool purchases, maintenance, insurance, or repair, we can in a manner in keeping with this government's desire to keep taxes as low as possible alleviate the costs of working in a trade.

Specifically what 2(2) does is allow a registered journeyman or apprentice working in one of Alberta's trades the ability to deduct an amount related to tool purchases, maintenance, and repair not exceeding his or her income for the tax year. The deduction is determined by the following formula. The total expenditure for the purchase, rental, or insurance of tools used on the job is multiplied by the specified percentage of tax credits given that year.

Section 2(3) of Bill 207 requires that the worker applying for the tools credit must give proof that he or she is a journeyman or apprentice in Alberta trades, and the tools have to have been purchased for work-related purposes.

First, by setting the threshold at $500 in section 2(2), the bill acknowledges that every job has expenses that need to be borne by employees. At the same time, it recognizes that tradespeople and journeymen must in many cases spend several times the amount that others have to spend. By setting a $500 threshold, we say to people that, yes, very often there are acceptable expenses related to employment, but at some point in time they do deserve a break.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we considered the role that skilled tradespeople play as the population of this province booms. To support this growth, we've needed to develop new land, build new homes, buildings, highways, and other infrastructure. The creation of a tax credit for the benefit of trade journeymen would go a long way towards recognizing the growth in trade-heavy employment sectors. These sectors include goods production, forestry, logging, oil and gas, manufacturing. Bill 207 recognizes the contribution of these and other workers to our economy.

Before I conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to acknowledge the support of many members in this Assembly in bringing the bill forward to this stage in committee. I look forward to their continued support and so do the journeymen and apprentices of our great province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I find this bill really interesting, and I'm quite supportive of what it's proposing, but a couple of things have occurred to me. Being as we're now in Committee of the Whole, this is the time to discuss those issues and parts of the bill in a bit more detail.

I think it's a good idea to be doing whatever we can to encourage people working in the trades and in the skilled trades right now. Certainly we're aware in this province that if we want to be a smart province, if we want to keep moving into the future and staying ahead of the pack, we need to have skilled and educated workers. It's difficult to attract people to that if all they can see are obstacles in front of them. So I think what's being offered here may not remove an obstacle, because the cost of paying for tools and specialized equipment, safety equipment, specialized clothing for the job, can still be an obstacle even with what's being proposed here, but it does move us some way down the path to making this more attractive.

I certainly see the need for more skilled workers and tradespeople in this province. Somebody was talking to me the other day on the phone and was concerned about a clerical job disappearing, and I said, "Well, the clerical job may well disappear, but it will be replaced by a job for a skilled technician, and that person or those people will in fact get paid more than the clerical position, so overall I think we're ahead of the game."

I come from a family of tradespeople. My father was in the trades; both my brothers are ironworkers. I can certainly look at how many tools they have, what kinds of tools they have, and how important those tools are to their safety, to the safety of the other workers on the site, and ultimately to the safety of the public, because if they're not using very good tools and they make a mistake – and they wouldn't; they're very conscientious. That could either injure someone else on their work site or even down the road if a building they helped to put up isn't done as well as it should have been and – who knows? – a piece of siding could fall off and hit a member of the public. I mean, all of these things have to be taken into consideration.

Where I was struggling with this bill was whether in fact it was putting one group of people in Alberta far ahead of others in advantages through taxes and through tax credits here and was that creating an inequity between people? The second thing I was wondering about was forgone revenue and what had been done around forgone revenue. So I can perhaps prevail upon the proposer of the bill to be answering that question when he wraps up or to answer it even sooner than that.

Has the mover of the bill looked at whether this is creating a special category of workers in the province? I've been sort of asking around and talking to people, and it seems like academics, for example, can claim some small expenses, nothing nearly as large as what's being anticipated in this bill, but there's also an expectation that any academic institution would in fact be paying for anything else that an academic wanted, magazine subscriptions and that sort of thing.

So then I looked at self-employed people. Certainly in the arts community that I come from everyone is self-employed, and in fact their specialized tools and equipment and apparel are deductible as necessary to getting and keeping a job. So okay. I kept looking. Well, what about other self-employed people: consultants, businesspeople, accountants, small businesspeople, that sort of thing? They can either have the tools and equipment paid through their company, or as self-employed they probably are able to get some sort of tax credit for having expended that money.

So as far as I'm able to tell, there is an equity in this bill, but I still put it forward to the mover of it to ensure that this has been looked at. Has it been anticipated that it could be creating an underclass, some group of workers in the province who are now being left behind and who will want to be coming forward to get their share of this as well? So with this bill would we be creating yet another group of people that would be wanting to come forward to claim some sort of benefit similar to this?

The second issue that I'm increasingly interested in is forgone revenues, because anytime the government doesn't collect money through whatever scheme, whether it's through a tax credit, a refundable credit, any scheme that exists whereby you are not paying tax on a certain amount of money, that is money that the government doesn't get to collect. We are very careful – I can see the Treasurer smiling at me. Yes, she knows what I'm talking about. Any expenditure that we look at in this Assembly, we expect there to be a performance measurement with it, a target. You know, what is this money to be used for? How is it to be used? What is the expected outcome? How are we going to measure this? How are we going to evaluate it? Was the money well spent? Did we get good value for our dollar? But we are not doing that when we look at forgone revenue.

What's being proposed in this bill is another form of forgone revenue. It's money that the government will not take in once people have been able to apply for this revenue. Perhaps Madam Treasurer has worked with the proposer of the bill to actually work this all out. If so, I'd be delighted to hear her contribution to this. What has been worked out by way of what the government expects to gain, or what is the expected outcome of this forgone revenue? If they're not collecting income tax on $500 from every tradesperson or apprentice in the province, that adds up to a lot of money. What are we expecting to get from that? We're expecting to get more people working in the province. Well, then, how many? What's the performance measurement? What's the measurement to know that we've been successful with this scheme?

Well, okay. I just mentioned more people working. Are we expecting to have less accidents on the job? If people are able to afford a better quality of safety equipment because they will now get a tax deduction, is there some measurement by which we are saying: okay; we expect there to be fewer accidents on the job in Alberta? We have a shocking number of accidents on the job, particularly, it's been pointed out, because we're working with so many young workers and especially in the oil field.

So I'm asking: what can I expect? What can I go back and tell my constituents is the anticipated benefit to the government, the benefit to all Albertans from giving these individuals this tax credit? If we are willing to scrutinize expenses that this government wants to expend on behalf of Albertans, why are we not examining the money that we're not bringing in, which is what's happening here? I will leave that for the mover of the bill and the Treasurer to respond to. I think it's a valid point, and I think it's important that we do balance these things when we are looking at programs like this.

That's what I was interested in asking while we are in Committee of the Whole. I do think it's an interesting idea. I would like to see it followed through, but I wouldn't be doing my job as a legislator if I wasn't asking: how are we evaluating the success or failure of this program? What monitoring mechanism is in place? What evaluation mechanism is in place? How do we know if it worked or not? Over what period of time? So I'll put that question, that challenge forward to my hon. colleagues across the floor and hope that I will get an answer back.

Thank you very much for allowing me to speak.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the hon. member for some very valid comments towards the bill.

It's indeed my pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001. I, like the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, am pleased to see Bill 207 in Committee of the Whole. This bill is a good step for Albertans. It provides us with the opportunity to use our new unhooked tax system to provide added incentives for Albertans to enter the trades and to reward blue-collar Albertans who must spend thousands of dollars on tools each year just to do their jobs.

However, while I like the intent and spirit of the bill, I do believe we can refine it here today to make it even better, and I propose a few amendments, Mr. Chairman. I would like the amendments to be dealt with as a single amendment and voted on as such.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The chair has a copy of the proposed amendment, and we shall refer to this as amendment A1.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Just give us a minute so that they can be distributed to all the members.

Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, you may proceed.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First, I would like to change the title of the bill from the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, to the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Credit) Amendment Act, 2001. Second, I would like to make several changes to section 2 of Bill 207. The most important of these is to add an upper limit to the amount of money spent on tools that is eligible for a credit.

First, Mr. Chairman, those members gathered here today may ask why the title needs to be changed; it seems straightforward enough. Well, I assure you that I'm not just nitpicking here. First, we notice that Bill 207 would amend section 10 of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act and, if passed, would actually slide in as section 10.1. This puts it square in the middle of the tax credit section of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. In fact, it is structured much the same as other mechanisms that we refer to as tax credits. [interjection] I'll get back to you.

So, first off, this leads to a question: why would we refer to Bill 207 as a deduction when the rest of the section refers to these mechanisms as credits? Doing so may cause the average Albertan to scratch his head in confusion when doing his taxes, and I for one will say this much: I'm already annoyed when I do my taxes; the last thing I need is to be confused.

Second, this is a technical point. What Bill 207 offers is a tax credit, not a deduction. To recap, Bill 207 allows tradespeople and apprentices the opportunity to lessen their tax burden by showing that they spent money on tools to be used on the jobsite. These workers are then credited a specific amount of money dependent upon the tax rate of the province. The money is not paid directly to them but is instead taken off their taxes. Essentially what is going on here is this. If a tradesperson or apprentice spends X amount of dollars on tools, then he does not have to pay taxes on that amount. In essence, he is being credited a certain amount of money that he does not have to pay taxes on. Thus, we should be calling this bill a tax credit and not a straightforward deduction.

Next, I'd like to propose the following amendment to Bill 207. Clearly put, I would like there to be an upper limit on the amount of money that an individual can be credited. As it stands, there is an upper limit. This upper limit is the worker's employment income for the tax year. This is fine, but it seems to leave a lot of room for abuse. For example, we've heard it said that an average auto mechanic makes $35,000 a year. Now, as much as we know that tradespeople have to spend a lot of money on tools per year, we also know that the average tradesperson doesn't have to spend that much money on tools. On the average we're looking at a ballpark of around $3,000 per year.

This leads to an interesting point, however, that needs to be explored. If the average tradesperson spends $3,000 on tools but can be credited right up to his full salary, then are we not opening up the tax system to abuse by those less honest in society? I would argue very strongly from experience that the Alberta tradespeople I've met are by and large hardworking, honest people who want nothing more than the ability to take care of their families, live comfortably, and help see our province prosper. We also know that one bad apple can spoil the whole bunch. What would happen if a few of the less honest people in our province decided to take advantage of the extra room by buying tools on behalf of their friends or neighbours, getting the money back from those people, and having their bosses or supervisors sign off on the receipts? The way the bill is set up now, they could do this right up to the point where they spend an amount equivalent to their income on tools. If they were to do so, they would put themselves in a position of having to pay no provincial tax whatsoever, Mr. Chairman. Why would we open up the province and the people of Alberta to that abuse when we can nip it right in the bud right here by adding a maximum limit to the amount of money tradespeople and apprentices can be credited?

Mr. Chairman, I propose that we amend section 2 of Bill 207 by adding an upper limit of $5,000. In brief, with the lower limit of $500 and the upper limit of $5,000 we are making available $4,500 that tradespeople and apprentices can receive a tax credit upon. Under the current scheme this frees up a maximum of $450 off their taxes per year. I think this number is fair. It is slightly above the average amount of money that is spent on tools per year by tradespeople and apprentices and therefore takes into account what most tradespeople and apprentices would use.

Well, some will no doubt say that we are not providing enough relief to those who spend upwards of $5,000. I can only say that no government can appease everybody. These workers would still receive a sizable credit but would not be eligible for a credit above the upper limit. This is a fair price to pay, getting a tax credit and making sure that the tax credit can be equally distributed amongst tradespeople and apprentices without being open to abuse.

Mr. Chairman, I therefore would like to refer all of the members here today to the motion for amendment form that has been distributed and call upon them to accept these amendments.

In closing, I'd like to reiterate my support for Bill 207. It's about time that our tradespeople and apprentices were recognized for the hard work that they do. I would also like to once again applaud the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for raising this issue in the Assembly. I call upon all the members of the Assembly to help him support our workers and support Bill 207.

Thank you.

3:20

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, on the amendment.

I'd like to first note that I support this bill in principle and also am excited to see that it has got the rest of the Assembly thinking about ways to improve the bill. In that spirit I'd like to give my support to the amendments proposed by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. The amendments proposed by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster are both sensible and fair.

I say that they are sensible because they protect all Albertans from the possibility, even the slightest possibility, of tax abuse. I say that these amendments are fair for two reasons. First, they give all tradespeople an equal opportunity to enjoy the benefits of tax relief. Second, these amendments are fair because they help to fine-tune Bill 207 to keep it in line with its original spirit to improve the lives and relative equality of all Albertans.

In order for our economy to thrive, we need tradespeople. If we do not have enough tradespeople, we have holes in our workforce, and our economy suffers. When our economy suffers, the lives of Albertans suffer. This was one of the rationales behind Bill 207: to help all of Alberta, we would give a tax credit to some Albertans. But we obviously wouldn't be helping all of Alberta if we made it possible for some Albertans to abuse our tax system, so as a means of preserving the best of both worlds, fairness for workers and fairness for Albertans, the amendments to Bill 207 are excellent suggestions. These amendments make even better a bill that is already commendable and one that received considerable support from this Assembly in second reading.

Today, in addition to my earlier comments on the proposed amendments, I'd like to speak about how this bill helps preserve the Alberta advantage, especially in these global hard economic times. Alberta continually leads the country in economic growth. We do this by maintaining and growing our Alberta advantage. The Alberta advantage creates a healthy economy, which contributes to a growing workforce and boosts wages.

Alberta had the strongest employment growth in Canada between 1994 and 2000, and more new jobs are being created every day. The tremendous growth in new jobs coupled with low unemployment levels suggests that we are heading towards a skill shortage in certain industries. Mr. Chairman, recent reports have indicated that nearly half of all occupational groups, including construction trades and various manufacturing workers, have unemployment rates of less than 3 percent. It is no secret that in a booming economy with numerous megaprojects under way or scheduled to begin, tradespeople are in great demand. Many local corporations have resorted to putting up help wanted billboards in an effort to attract specialized tradespeople.

Mr. Chairman, we need to ensure that these industries have enough skilled labour to meet their needs and keep our economy growing. We cannot afford to have our economic growth constrained by a shortage of skilled labour. Attracting tradespeople from other provinces has become standard practice in easing the growing shortages of tradespeople here in Alberta. While attracting new employees to Alberta is good for the province, we should also provide local Albertans with real incentives to enter the trades. Bill 207 does just that.

As stated in section 2(2) of the act, tools used in the performance of a tradesperson's occupation above a $500 threshold can be deducted from the employee's employment income. This means that employees who are required to purchase tools in order to perform their jobs are credited the purchase cost of their tools for any amount over the $500 threshold. This is money that they do not have to pay taxes on when tax season comes around. This provision is especially important for the young people of this province who are looking to begin their career in the trades or in a trade-related industry. Oftentimes these industries require employees to purchase their own tools in order to perform their jobs. These costs can be significant and therefore unaffordable to young people who are just starting out. Given the tremendous opportunities available in these industries, we should endeavour to make it easier for young Albertans to enter these fields.

Mr. Chairman, on April 1, 2001, the first stage of the province's four-year plan to cut corporate taxes kicked in. When our finances improve and this plan is fully implemented, large and small businesses will pay about half the tax that they do today. Alberta businesses enjoy the lowest taxes in Canada, and it's only going to get better. This is great news, and it speaks volumes about the Alberta advantage.

It is my belief that tradespeople are very similar to small businesses. Oftentimes these people work independently using their own tools and equipment. In fact, if they were to incorporate themselves as small businesses, they would be able to claim their tools as a business expense. In most cases, however, the incorporation process is impractical and expensive for a single employee. Bill 207 offers a simple and effective solution.

It provides tradespeople with a nonrefundable tax credit for tool purchases over $500. This provision grants tradespeople some of the same advantages bestowed on small business operators, and in doing so, Bill 207 will encourage more people to enter the trades by sheltering them from the potentially significant tool expenses associated with entering or re-entering trade-related industries. In order to maintain and increase our Alberta advantage, Mr. Chairman, we need to ensure that these people are treated fairly. These people work hard for Alberta, and they contribute to our province through the work they do and the taxes they pay. This bill will increase incentives for people young and old to enter or re-enter the trades profession by providing a nonrefundable tax credit for any amount over the $500 threshold.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 207 is a positive step towards ensuring that Alberta has a strong and continued source of labour in the trade-related industries. It is for these reasons that I support Bill 207.

Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment and would like to see us vote on it now. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The committee has to rise and report by 3:30.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It being imminently close to 3:30 p.m., I'd move that we rise and report progress on Bill 207.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 207. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Delivery of Provincewide Health Services

508. Mrs. Gordon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to prioritize restructuring of the parameters for delivering provincewide services such as renal dialysis and multiple sclerosis special therapy programs to focus more on patient need and outcome with emphasis given to service delivery closer to the patient's principal residence.

[Debate adjourned November 13: Mrs. Gordon speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To briefly recap, by allowing outlying regional health authorities to offer and administer some provincewide services such as renal dialysis, patients could and will receive treatment closer to home more comfortably and more conveniently. This motion would put the decision-making process for administering and offering these services in the hands of the regional health authorities actually delivering them.

The development initially of regional health authorities emphasized a shift towards community-based care. This motion further emphasizes the importance of allowing people to remain in their communities. I ask this Assembly to please vote for this motion. Help me help those people that need these services delivered in their communities.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I address this motion, I try to look at all sides. I've consulted with a number of experts in the field and ended up with a range of thoughts and suggestions. My first concern when I read the motion, frankly, was with the wording of the motion. When I read a sentence that urges "the government to prioritize restructuring of the parameters for delivering . . . services" – I think I know the gist behind it from the hon. member's comments, but "restructuring the parameters for delivering services" is a remarkably vague statement. I would be more comfortable with the motion if it were to say specifically what kind of restructuring, what sorts of parameters we're talking about, and whether we want the priority raised or lowered. Obviously from the sponsoring member's comments, we want the priority raised. The vagueness, frankly, of the text of the motion was a concern for me.

In inquiring into the nature of the provincewide services and into how they're delivered, what makes them feasible, what makes them economical to deliver, and what keeps them safe, a number of things came to the surface. Clearly, a fundamental concern and one of the reasons that these are organized as provincewide services as opposed to local services is the need for a critical mass of patients requiring the service. In other words, a dialysis unit that only has one or two patients is not going to be economically feasible nor is it going to be optimally safe, simply because the staff working the system, working in the unit just won't have the necessary volume of patients to fully develop their skills.

One of the concerns with moving these services into smaller and smaller communities is that the critical mass of patients will not be there, and if we get into a smaller centre, there may only be a need for one or two patients to have kidney dialysis, for example, and then the cost of serving these patients becomes enormous and their safety really does become a concern. There are various evaluations, very good studies done on the safety performance on kidney dialysis, and there's no question that the way in which cases are managed and the way that the programs are administered has a direct impact not just on patient well-being but actually on the life or death of a patient. So moving these services into small communities is something that we should also be very concerned about.

I would also raise concerns about staffing and financing these kinds of facilities. If we have a very, very small unit in a small town, how do we staff it? How do we get the specialized technicians, the technical staff in the community? If it's a community of 1,000 or 2,000 or 3,000 people, there's not likely to be a kidney dialysis expert there. So then we need to look at incentives and ways of getting those staff to move and live in those communities, so the costs become high. In addition, if the person is practising in isolation, they may not be able to keep up their professional skills, so the quality diminishes. The entire feasibility of this from both equality of patient care and the cost to the taxpayer is something we really need to keep in mind.

On the other hand, I am drawn to support this motion because I know the spirit that's behind it is one of compassion for patients, for families, for friends of people who need these often lifesaving medical services. It is a genuinely heavy burden for people to bear if they're living in a small community and need to travel a long distance every few days for kidney dialysis or for proper assessment and treatment of conditions such as multiple sclerosis.

There may well be ways in which we can resolve the problems that arise from moving these facilities into smaller communities, and certainly we'll never know if we don't try. So on the basis of compassion I would in the end come down on the side of supporting this motion, albeit on the understanding that there are very serious concerns about costs and quality. Certainly before any actual steps are taken to implement the motion, to extend these services into smaller communities, I could only support the actual steps being taken if I were convinced that a full evaluation of the cost-effectiveness and the quality of the service was done and the outcome of that evaluation was successful.

I support the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler. I think the spirit behind this is well intended, so I'm pleased to say: yes, I for one will be supporting this.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Motion 508 for the simple reason that this motion encourages the Legislature to encourage the government, of course, to strengthen the ties with the home community in the provision of health care.

I'd like to focus most specially on the multiple sclerosis special therapy programs that are mentioned in the motion. I do have a number of constituents who do suffer from the condition, and I do know that they receive treatment in our close neighbouring community of Edmonton and certainly service through the Capital health authority. However, I am aware through my colleague from Lacombe-Stettler that there are a number of individual citizens around this province who could very well benefit greatly for their greater comfort and strength and accommodation and also by all the broad range of services that are attendant upon the service being provided in their local community.

So I applaud the two major health authorities that do provide through provincewide services those renal dialysis clinics as well as the multiple sclerosis special therapy programs. They are doing a very good job. But this motion suggests that the local health authorities, the regional health authorities, would be able to determine the cost-effectiveness, whether there is the critical mass of users of these programs, and whether they would be able to provide in their overall plan this provision of health care as they acknowledge the boundaries of their revenues and the programs that they wish to offer.

The sheer strength of this motion is the fact that there are individuals receiving both of these treatments or programs who are in many cases to a degree debilitated in their swiftness of being able to travel and by the discomfort that comes to them as a result of seeking this service a distance from their own homes. If the regional health authorities were urged through this motion of this Legislature to look at their ability to provide both of these programs so that the recipients did not have to increase their discomfort by traveling far to receive the services, indeed I think it would be an opportunity for the regional health authorities to deliver close-to-home services to people who could benefit greatly from them being delivered close to home.

So I would again, as I say, encourage this Assembly to support this motion. It does provide the opportunity also for those who are specialists in the provision of both of these cares, who don't all reside in the two major urban centres of this province, to be able to work in that area in the provision of care.

I happened a couple of years ago to chair the Seniors' Service Awards Committee, and one of the nominees there was a woman who did a variety of good deeds and was engaged in a number of volunteer efforts in her community. One of them that stood out most specifically was the fact that she drove many of the members of her community to a renal dialysis centre, but she also asked that they all be brought together and that they then have the ability to experience the efficiencies of numbers in one location. The testimonies, letters that were written appreciative of this woman's efforts were wonderful, but the common thread through all of them was that she recognized neighbours in her community who had a need, and she responded by making their lives much more comfortable and certainly making much better use of their time than spending such a long time traveling to get these services.

So I want to commend the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing this forward. I know it is something that she is very well acquainted with, but I also know that there are a number of other citizens across this province who would benefit greatly by virtue of time, by virtue of less exhaustion and discomfort to their own lives by being able to access these programs and this service closer to home.

So I urge this Assembly to urge the provincial health authorities to have the opportunity to provide these services close to home to those who need it most. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today in the Assembly as well to speak to Motion 508, and I'm doing so knowing that my colleague from Lacombe-Stettler – truly we've seen it in the Assembly in the past – has a very deep understanding and what I believe is a strong sense of what is needed for change in the rural community, especially when it comes to creating optimal health and well-being for the residents, which is why I know I have confidence in Motion 508 and why I'm hoping that members of the Assembly will be supporting the motion. [interjection]

I know, too – and the hon. member would be interested in this – that my colleague has really researched this thoroughly, and as we heard earlier, it demonstrates the importance of delivering local health services to the community. Quite frankly, that simply makes good sense.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it deals with one of the most important challenges that we've heard that faces our government today, and that is the equitable delivery of quality health care services in the province as whole. We also know that with our aging population and the accelerated introduction of increasingly advanced health care technology, the challenge is only going to grow in the future, and it's really crucial to deal with concerns we have about health care delivery and to deal with them now. Certainly we've heard in the Assembly, as well, about the Mazankowski report that's going to be coming forward. I know that that, too, may deal with equitable delivery and delivery of services on a more local basis. But the problem continues to grow, and I think it's becoming more expensive and it's becoming a problem that's very complicated to solve. I know that our hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler has tried to address this previously. Hopefully, as I said, the government will be urged to look at it more seriously in the future, based on this motion.

There are three key points in this motion, Mr. Speaker, that I'd like to make on health care delivery to areas that are outside of the large municipalities where acute, high-risk care is practised. It seems, from what I've heard from my hon. colleague from Lacombe-Stettler, that the delivery of provincewide services to many rural areas is done in a manner which is not always in the best interests of the patient. Although guidelines have been put in place in an attempt to try and make it an equitable process, functionally it simply hasn't been so. Guidelines need to be rewritten, and that's not a bad thing. They can be rewritten and they can be rewritten in a very practical, simple manner which would allow better access by rural communities to services. The previous speaker mentioned about multiple sclerosis, but specifically I'm thinking in the area of renal dialysis, which is very much a part of the motion.

Yes, as one of the hon. colleagues mentioned earlier, the motion could have been rewritten or written in a different way, but I think that that's simply semantics. I believe that it's well crafted, and I'm pleased to hear that she did mention that you agree with the spirit and the intent of the motion and will be voting for it, because I don't believe that changing the guidelines is actually going to be a very costly thing to do. It's a very simple thing to do. Many reports have been written for our government that we've had before us in the Assembly in the past, and they've suggested that local health care close to home, in the community, is exactly what we need, Mr. Speaker.

Also, I wanted to talk a bit to the tremendous relief that access to local treatment can provide for patients that are sick with complications. When I think of complications, as we talk about renal dialysis, we know that renal failure is very chronic. It's a process that can be very time consuming, and over the course of time it can also become quite painful for patients. It really becomes essential to the patients' daily schedule and essential to their care. It can even, Mr. Speaker, be an emotional and financial burden to patients and their families.

So if we really are going to deliver true quality health care in our province, I agree with my hon. colleague proposing the motion that an even greater focus on local delivery of provincewide services is necessary for Alberta's rural areas. I'm not a rural MLA, Mr. Speaker, which is why, as I said earlier, I have confidence in the member who brought forward the motion, who understands the rural areas and the rural needs, but I do know a bit about the current regulations that are at work and the certain specialized health services that are delivered, and they're outside services.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, is that delivering specialized health services in rural areas may be more efficient than was previously considered. There are so many reports to our government in recent years that have emphasized that the local delivery of health care often saves money, human resources, and infrastructure, but the gains are made by allowing an increased role by the family and community members in caring for the sick. Mr. Speaker, the March 2000 report Building Better Bridges discussed the care in Alberta for people with developmental disabilities. It emphasized in its recommendations a focus on the benefits of community living. I was just talking earlier here in the Assembly to my colleague who happened to chair the writing of that report, my hon. colleague from Redwater. The report is Healthy Aging: New Directions for Care, and it actually became known as the Broda report. It was a fine, outstanding report, and we took great interest in that report as an Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

We have to realize, too, that the number one suggestion – and my colleague just reminded me of that, as I said earlier – is that a long-term policy should be to encourage patients to receive care that they need at home rather than at facilities. We say it so often as MLAs, and really it's something that we should be putting into practice in a far more forthright way than we do. That's why it's so critical that this motion be passed, because it emphasizes once again the benefits and goes back to that of making health care delivery local.

I'm not suggesting that making provincewide services more frequently available on a local basis would inherently save costs, but I definitely believe that there is the potential. It's an idea that needs to be evaluated. In fact, if it does become more costly, even that has to be balanced with the real benefits of what my colleague has put forward here. At the very least it cannot be assumed that promoting local delivery of services will increase costs, but it seems to be the justification of our current regulations, which cause many patients outside of large municipalities great inconvenience and expense. Mr. Speaker, localizing health service delivery will certainly improve the quality of life for patients and their families as a whole, as we mentioned earlier.

Now, renal dialysis. I don't know if members here understand the importance of why that service is delivered on a daily basis, but having renal dialysis as a local-based service will create comfort, as we said earlier, to the patient and the family, because it's a process that introduces tremendous physical and emotional complications for the patient. The service places immense strain on friends and loved ones, but understandably the burden tends to be alleviated when the process is done closer to home and in a familiar setting. If patients do not have to confront the challenges of new people in a new city when they are in times of vulnerability, their health care experience is that much better. For the sake of patient-centred quality health care delivery, if the option of local delivery exists, it should be strongly encouraged. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the current regulations for determining the location of provincewide services such as renal dialysis should be changed.

Our colleague mentioned earlier, as well, that the Capital and Calgary regional health authorities seem to have too much influence in determining the priorities of the rural health authorities. That's because they're essential decision-makers when it regards the type of delivery of services offered and where. Part of having equal access to health care involves having equal access to localized health services. Hopefully, the regional health authorities do read the debates in Hansard. Perhaps the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler will be sending the debate from Hansard and they'll see really why you brought forward this motion, hon. member. Perhaps they'll include even the RHAs that are rural based in some of that decision-making.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, local health care delivery allows patients to confront challenges of health concerns, and this would allow for a patient-centred approach to health care. In my opinion, this is an admirable goal for health care in the province, and I commend my colleague for bringing it forward, because it will ensure a level of care delivery in Alberta that we can all be proud of.

Hon. member, I wish you well with this motion. As I said, I hope that you do take it out to the community and out to the regional health authorities, and good for you for bringing it forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and privilege to be able to speak to this motion today. The hon. member that has brought this motion forward has certainly brought it forward for all the right reasons. Being a rural MLA, she sees what happens in rural Alberta. For those of you who haven't seen a dialysis patient, when they have to come every two or three days into the city and that city is two or three hours away and the patient is a chronically debilitated patient, I think there is a significant amount of problems.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, as the previous speaker has said, that there needs to be much more of a focus on bringing the service to the community, bringing the service to the client's own home. We see, for example, with the renal unit at the University of Alberta and at the Foothills hospital in Calgary, that we have such technology now as having dialysis units in motor homes. So the technology is certainly there, but what we have to do is find a better way to bring this technology to the patient's home, whether it's a hometown or home itself. I don't think there's any doubt that patients do better when they're at home with people they love, in surroundings they're familiar with. Mr. Speaker, I believe that dialysis is certainly a critical component of this.

I think that the second part of the motion is extremely important as well and in many ways may even be more important. With multiple sclerosis we're seeing an incredible number of people that have this disease. There are more and more that are being diagnosed each and every day. We have to find a cure for this disease, and the only way that we're going to find a cure is to catch people early. You cannot expect a young, healthy, active person who has some episodes of multiple sclerosis to take time off from their schedule once, twice, three times a week to go into the city and have this treatment when they're actually living in the country. So, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member is saying, quite simply, is that there should be a way that these programs can be outreach programs to these individuals. These individuals are not debilitated. However, they do need to be involved in the treatment so that they do not become debilitated down the road. I think it's extremely unfair to expect these individuals to drive to the large urban cities when it causes them all sorts of problems.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd just really like to commend the hon. member for bringing this motion forward, for addressing an issue that, albeit the numbers may not be incredibly high in the rural areas purely from the demographics of it, is a very difficult issue. It's a very important issue. We have to remember that a third of our population lives outside Edmonton and Calgary. These people, as it has already been said, deserve access to this type of health care as well.

Again, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member, thank you for bringing this motion forward. I would certainly urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support this. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand today to speak to Motion 508. This motion seeks "to prioritize restructuring of the parameters for delivering provincewide services such as renal dialysis." The motion also seeks to change the focus of these programs to reflect patient need and outcome, with the emphasis on service delivery provided "closer to the patient's principal residence." As I know, when you have a sick member of your family, you appreciate it, sir. Motion 508 would encourage looking at ways to provide outlying regional health authorities the ability to administer and offer these programs outside of the direct influence of the Capital and Calgary regional health authorities. The restructuring would effectively put the decision-making back into the hands of the individual regional authorities, who are ultimately responsible for the care and services delivered to the patients in their regions.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In 1994 the Regional Health Authorities Act established 17 RHAs to replace the more than 200 separate health wards and administrations. The establishment of RHAs greatly reduced administration costs and allowed more money to be directed to the provision of services for Albertans. The restructuring allowed for a more complete integration when delivering a broad spectrum of health services. Mr. Speaker, under this system the Capital regional health authority and the Calgary regional health authority do have broader mandates than the other 15 RHAs. In order to provide the expertise and facilities necessary to offer more specialized, capital-intensive programs, this was a practical and necessary consequence. The Capital and Calgary RHAs are responsible for a number of province-wide programs such as transplant procedures and other sophisticated surgical procedures. Having these procedures offered in two major urban locations ensures that these services maintain continuity, effectiveness, and cost-efficiencies. In fact, recent studies have illustrated that the move to specialized centres of excellence for specific health care services enables patients to receive an even higher quality of specialized care.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Regional Health Authorities Act also emphasizes a shift from institutional to community-based care. Having decisions made at the community level about care and services that are provided to local residents is seen as a core benefit of this system. The caregivers in each region can best determine the services that their region requires. Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 is a reaffirmation of this stated goal.

Each RHA should be able to provide comparable levels of service to patients in their region and have the services available as close as possible to the patient's principal residence provided there's a level of demonstrated need which justifies the provision of these services. Because it's often not possible for smaller communities to have an adequate number of staple patients, the provincewide service program was created for certain costly specialized procedures administered strictly by the Capital and Calgary RHAs. The existing range of facilities, infrastructure, and expertise needed to provide these high cost services is readily available in these two centres.

Certain provincewide services such as renal dialysis are offered through a system of satellite service programs throughout the province. Yet even though these services are offered outside the Capital and Calgary regional areas, the Capital and Calgary RHAs still administer the programs and make the final decisions, not our local RHAs. In order to set up a satellite program, an area must meet the criteria developed specifically for that program by the two main health authorities. Based on these criteria, the Capital and Calgary RHAs decide where and how these services should be offered in the other 15 RHAs throughout the province. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the decision-making process for the development of a satellite operation is the sole responsibility of the Capital health region for the north of the province and the Calgary health authority for the south of the province.

Motion 508 will urge the government to allow provincewide services such as renal dialysis to be directly administered by individual RHAs providing strict program requirements can be met. By restructuring the current system for delivering provincewide services, programs such as renal dialysis and even multiple sclerosis therapy can be more focused on patient need.

Regional health authorities were created to administer and deliver health care services to the people in their regions. It is my belief that we should allow individual regional health authorities to determine their client needs and requirements as they are best positioned to serve the people of their region. Our ultimate goal should be to provide efficient, effective, and high-quality health care to each and every Albertan. The best way to accomplish this is by enabling the individual RHAs to determine if there is sufficient need to justify delivering certain services.

Motion 508 is not advocating the provision of all services in each and every community or region. The geographical expanse of the province makes this very difficult, and the requirement of specialized skills and facilities makes this prohibitively expensive and inefficient. However, Mr. Speaker, each local region should not be required to access these services through the Capital and Calgary health authorities. For services such as renal dialysis it may be more effective to remove this additional administrative layer and enable the other 15 RHAs to administer and provide these services themselves. We should at least investigate this possibility.

As is currently the case, the Minister of Health and Wellness will ultimately retain the final say as to whether the application makes sense from an economic and program provision standpoint. This ensures that service duplication and effectiveness do not creep into the system. The motion will, however, move the decision-making and administration into the hands of the individual RHA.

Intuitively there are numerous benefits to having care decisions made in local communities. Empowering the local caregivers provides the decision-making authority to those who best understand the situation. Additionally, having services provided in the local community allows people to remain in or near their hometowns while receiving care.

Albertans in all corners of this province receive and require professional health care services. We should endeavour to provide all people with care and services in their local communities whenever it is practical and feasible as the benefits of receiving care in a local community setting are numerous. Financially it is less of a burden on the individual if you are able to receive care near your own home. Travel costs and time costs are much less when long, extended trips are avoided. Physically the ability to receive care in the local community lessens the travel strain that accompanies long journeys. Mentally and emotionally we are all more relaxed and comfortable in our own homes and communities, and the stress associated with spending extended periods away from home cannot be ignored.

Mr. Speaker, the benefit of receiving health and medical care in the community is not simply an abstract idea. This fact was borne out by numerous studies, and community care provisions are often included in recommendations in health reports. Alberta Health and Wellness has developed a document entitled Strategic Directions and Future Actions: Healthy Aging and Continuing Care in Alberta, which is based on the results of a stakeholder analysis, public response, and departmental analysis. These strategic directions are designed to shift the provision of health care services towards a new vision for continuing care.

The strategic directions outlined in the report reflect the implementation of the recommendations of the Broda report. The visions and principles section of this report outlines a society where all Albertans have choices in the care they receive and where they receive it. People will age in place and age in their own community. Communities and services will be designed in a way to make this vision a reality. Motion 508 speaks to this vision by making it easier for rural RHAs to directly administer satellite services such as renal dialysis. Patients are more comfortable in or near their homes, and transportation difficulties are reduced when care is provided in the local or a nearby community. Having care facilities near the patient's principal dwelling reduces the mental and physical stress on people who do not need further complications.

Once again, let me reiterate: this motion is not advocating the provision of all services in all locations. What it is advocating is investigating methods to allow all RHAs the opportunity to determine which services are required in their communities. Once these services have been identified, the individual RHA can make arguments directly . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(4) I must now say the following: on the motion as proposed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, will all those in favour of the motion please say aye.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:07 p.m.]

Private Health Care Contracts

509. Dr. Taft moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to require regional health authorities to collect and publicly release information on private health care providers whom they contract with, including details regarding services provided, public funding received, and charges to individuals.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The background to this motion is such that the Health Care Protection Act, better known as Bill 11, allows for increased contracting out by regional health authorities to profit-driven health care providers. While the act and regulations make some accommodation for information on the operations of the profit-driven providers and require that some information be made public, they don't go nearly far enough.

The health care protection regulations do specify that the profit-driven health care operator provide a report to the regional health authority on a monthly basis regarding inpatient and outpatient information. The regulations also require that the profit-driven health care provider must provide information on ownership of the surgical facility to the minister. The minister is also required by regulation to publish this information. However, how it is published and where is up to the minister, plus the minister is also allowed to omit certain details if releasing the information could be considered a threat to the safety of a person.

Anyone who has gone to the web sites of the regional health authorities or who has otherwise examined the information released by the regional health authorities on their contracts with for-profit providers will soon realize how frustrating it is to get any meaning from these particular documents or from this information. They all say virtually the same thing and the same phrases. Aside from a few useful bits of information such as the value of the contract, they give very little information for the public to assess the value of the contracts or to judge whether or not the public funds are being well expended.

I'd like to move directly to some reasons and some examples of why we believe more information is required to be released to the public. I'm going to quote various pieces of correspondence, some within the Calgary health region and some otherwise. The first one is actually written by the regional clinical department head of the CRHA to the CEO of the CRHA, and in it, among other things, he raises concerns that "patients are unfairly taken advantage of through enhanced service charges." In all credit to the government this precedes the legislation known as Bill 11, but it does raise for us and for the public the concern that we all need to have more information on the contracts with these for-profit facilities.

He actually goes on to give great detail that raised concerns. He talks about "2 well documented cases" of ophthalmologists charging patients for medically indicated cataracts by bumping them up the list if they want to pay $2,400.00 per eye and have the procedure called a refractive lensectomy as opposed to a cataract removal.

He goes on to express his concerns that this is "unethical, immoral" and "against the Canada Health Act." Without full public ability to examine the nature of the relationships between the for-profit providers of services and the RHAs, concerns such as this will arise unless we think that the concerns will automatically be dealt with through standard procedures.

I will also go on to quote the same senior physician, who says, "Regulatory bodies such as the Alberta College [of Physicians and Surgeons], AMA and the CHRA have so far failed to protect the patient from entrepreneurial capitalism." That's one example of the sort of issue that arises when these contracts are not fully open to public examination.

Within the current system in the Calgary health region there are five different for-profit clinics that provide eye surgery. They are the same five clinics that have provided eye surgery for the last several years, and all of them – no new ones, just those same five – have had their contracts renewed for another two or three years. The total value of the contracts – and this is available publicly – in this current year is just over $5 million. But, again, public access to information is crucial. There is a concern that these five groups, these five private clinics, are operating as an oligopoly, controlling the eye surgery service in Calgary. There is virtually no opportunity in Calgary to have eye surgery done in the public system.

Again, I'm going to refer to correspondence that was written by an ophthalmologist to the minister of health last year. He compares the efficiencies in the public system with the efficiencies and the costs in the for-profit system: "Currently the Active Treatment Center Operating Theatre at the Royal Alexandra Hospital outperforms efficiency at any private center in the Nation." Then he goes on to raise issues about how public funds are being spent. This is a quote from an ophthalmologist:

The current cost allotment of $515 per cataract to private facilities allows significant profit taking by parties with vested private interest. Through the Regional Eye Care Centre the average running cost per case is approximately $150 . . . for instrumentation and equipment plus $200 [for the lens implant].

In other words, he is providing information that suggests that we are paying significantly more for these eye surgeries to be done in the for-profit clinics in Calgary than we'd need to pay if they were done in the public system. How is the public ever going to be able to fully examine that issue and compare the efficiencies of one system to the other without more extensive disclosure of information?

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. member. I hate to interrupt, but the time limit for consideration of this business has now left us for today.

Bill 29

Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and speak to Bill 29, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act. I'm pleased to support this amendment because it makes sense. It's a simple change that will benefit Albertans.

The AMFC Act is legislation that oversees the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, or AMFC. The mission of AMFC is to provide local authorities within the province with funding for capital projects at the lowest possible cost consistent with the viability of the AMFC. AMFC is a nonprofit Crown organization which has both elected board members and provincially appointed board members. Like all good legislation, this amendment is prudent and realistic. It makes a modest change that allows regional airport authorities to become shareholders in AMFC thereby giving them access to financing for capital projects at competitive rates.

Three corporations have been incorporated under the Alberta Regional Airports Authorities Act: the Edmonton Regional Airports Authority, the Calgary Airport Authority, and the Red Deer Airport Authority. The Calgary Airport Authority has requested that it be allowed to become a shareholder of AMFC thereby allowing it to borrow from AMFC. It is not a big stretch for AMFC. As I mentioned earlier, airport authorities are very similar in nature to the current shareholders. Organizations such as villages, municipalities, water commissions are not for profit, and they all serve the interests of Albertans.

It's important to point out that both Calgary and Edmonton airport authorities are in full support of this amendment. They see this as an initiative that will help them provide better, cheaper service to Albertans, and I encourage my colleagues in this Assembly to support this proposed legislation. It is an opportunity that we in government have to make legislation that is truly win/win. Albertans win through improved airport service, and the airport authorities win because they can finance their projects more cheaply, all of this at minimal risk to the province.

By that I mean that the airport authorities, like all other AMFC shareholders, will have to apply and qualify for AMFC financing. If they have a solid plan and have demonstrated their ability to pay, they will be given access to this financing. This will be of great benefit to the airport authorities. Accessing financing through AMFC will significantly reduce their ongoing interest costs as well as related administrative expenses.

Earlier I mentioned that there is little or no risk to the province. Borrowing money through AMFC does not affect Alberta's bottom line. AMFC's interest costs are offset by interest revenue received from the borrowers. In terms of the province's credit rating I'm told that loaning money through AMFC does not have an impact on those ratings that we are so proud of these days. When the rating agencies decide on our provincial credit rating, they factor in total taxpayer-supported debt.

Regional airport authorities will have to present a solid long-term business plan in order to access the financing, and being an AMFC shareholder does not mean easy access to cash. It's like any other major financial transaction. There are checks and balances built into the process, and the process is transparent. Risk to taxpayers is minimal. Consider the $140 million in equity that AMFC currently possesses, and AMFC has a solid balance sheet that helps to minimize risk to taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I ask members of this Assembly to join me in supporting this amendment for very simple reasons. I ask that they consider the mission of AMFC, which is to provide local authorities within the province with funding for capital projects at the least possible cost consistent with the viability of AMFC. Airport authorities like municipalities, water commissions, school boards, and health authorities fit in with the mission. This amendment will help airport authorities continue with aggressive plans to expand or upgrade. Improved airport infrastructure does enhance the Alberta economy, and granting bodies incorporated under the Regional Airports Authorities Act the right to become shareholders in AMFC poses little risk to Alberta taxpayers.

This is a prudent and reasonable amendment and one that I think all members of this Assembly should support, and I will move second reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to put my comments on the record on Bill 29, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2001. In principle we're quite happy to support including regional airport authorities in the groups that can borrow and hold shares in the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation. Initially we thought there may be some concerns about this bill coming forward from Calgary, who is looking for some money soon, and thought perhaps that might give an unfair advantage over some of the other authorities who have just recently undertaken expansions and had to access dollars at higher interest rates.

In our review with those municipalities who won't be in line to access these cheaper dollars in the short term, nobody had any concerns with it at all. In fact, all the airport authorities that we talked to were very supportive of this particular amendment and felt that even though they weren't able to access the dollars immediately, certainly there would be long-term benefits to them, and they were very happy to be involved with the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation.

We agree with the Member for Calgary-North Hill, who talks about regional airports being an important part of Alberta's infrastructure. Certainly they are. They are a part of the Alberta advantage. It's particularly incumbent upon us, I think, to ensure that we have access to all major centres in this province and that that access is up to date and meets the needs of people and users of the system whenever possible. We would agree that it is prudent management to be able to have these different authorities access these dollars, so we're happy to support this.

I have to say that it is our practice when we get these bills or hear about these bills to send them out to a variety of stakeholder groups, consult with them, get their feedback, and so on. Interestingly enough, when we did that with this particular bill – we sent the bill out to the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation and asked for feedback from them. What we were told was that they were unable to give us any comments on the bill unless we first gave our questions to the office of the Minister of Finance. I'm wondering if the Minister of Finance could address the reason why we would have to access her, put any questions through her office before they could talk to us.

You know, most of the time we support government bills in this Assembly, and inquiries made out to organizations are for the purposes of sound and reasonable consultation. We're happy to support bills when stakeholder groups support them. We're happy to bring forward suggestions or amendments or promote debate when there are issues that stakeholder groups don't always agree with the government on. But we're not very happy when we consult with stakeholder groups and they tell us that we have to talk to particular ministers' offices before they will talk to us. I'm sure that that's not the intent of that particular minister in this case, but if it is, we would like to put the reasons for that on the record, Mr. Speaker. It seems like an unusual way to do business in this province. I think that we have shown that we are respectful of the process, and we believe that people should be free and available to talk to opposition members. Whether they want to talk to us on an embargo basis or on the record is their business, and we respect that, but we don't want to have to go through ministers' offices in order to get feedback from particular groups.

We will be supporting this particular bill. I'm hoping the minister will respond to my comments. We expect to see quite speedy passage of this bill through this Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, just for clarification as the hon. member opposite has raised a concern, if she would speak to me afterwards as to where that information came from, I can guarantee her that I will rectify it immediately. I expect that there is open access to these agencies. Questions that are asked by any members, no matter which side of the House they're on, should be answered. They don't have to come through my office; that's for sure. So I'd just like to clarify that on the record.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to close the debate.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The debate is closed.

I would just like to point out that somebody said, "Can we all borrow money from AMFC?" I said, "You have to be nonprofit," and he said, "I've never made a nickel in my life." So he thinks he can borrow from them. Just as an aside.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a special visitor from the state of California, a former Albertan who has lived in California for a number of years, a land developer looking to do some further business in the province of Alberta. Seated in the members' gallery is Mr. Ken Mariash, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Bill 28
Agricultural Operation Practices
Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate November 15: Mr. Lund]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to address Bill 28, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001. It's nice to see this bill in the Legislature. Many of us have been looking for this legislation to come forward for at least the last five years, as long as I can remember. This is one of those bills that crosses the boundaries of several ministries. Certainly I've had a keen interest in it from an environmental perspective for a number of years. It has an economic development perspective to it and certainly agriculture.

For the few years that we've been talking about this issue back and forth in this Legislature, we had some concerns originally that the bill wouldn't come forward with all the environmental issues identified if Agriculture was in charge of the process. I'd have to say that I don't think that that turned out to be true, Mr. Speaker. The government often doesn't go far enough in the areas that we would like them to go, but it certainly seems to me that the concerns that were brought forward from people in the environmental community and people at large who have environmental concerns on this issue were fairly dealt with, that there was a great deal of discussion around those issues, and that they got incorporated into the debate and the outcomes in a fair and reasonable fashion. So I would like to applaud the minister and her department on how it was handled and those associated ministries who worked in collaboration on this issue, an issue that can be intensely volatile in this province as people bring forward the kinds of issues that they have.

It doesn't mean that I like all of the outcomes that we see in this particular bill, and over the course of time both here at second reading, when I talk to it in terms of the principles of the bill, and then in committee, when we get down to some of the details, I'll be outlining the kinds of concerns that I have with regard to the legislation and with regard to outstanding issues around intensive livestock operations in the province as a whole, Mr. Speaker. Certainly the process seemed to work reasonably well, better than most of those that I have been associated with in my years in this Assembly. Perhaps with the exception of the climate change work that was done, this has been one of the best processes for collaboration and consultation that I've seen.

So in terms of the bill, what does it talk about? It talks about regulations for siting approval, authorization, and registration of confined feeding operations and for the manure management of seasonal feeding and breeding operations. It talks about the NRCB now administering the registration, authorization, and approvals and being responsible for compliance. It talks about the NRCB rulings being final and paramount to the land use planning of the municipality. It talks about the grievance applications as written submissions to the complaint, who may rule on the appropriateness of the complaint, or refer the complaint to a three-member practice review committee appointed by the minister. So a fairly comprehensive review of the changes to this particular legislation.

The question that needs to be asked, Mr. Speaker, before we talk about bills on intensive livestock and before we talk about changing the name of what we call intensive livestock operations in this province is whether or not this is really an industry that we want to go forward with with what many people would say is reckless abandon. Intensive livestock is an industry that does bring money to the province. It provides some jobs. It gives us certainly export potential. But it comes at quite a high cost. It wasn't part of the process to talk about whether or not this industry should be expanded in this province as it stands. It's too bad that it wasn't, Mr. Speaker, because I would have liked to have seen that kind of a discussion happen.

We currently have some very good operators in this province on the intensive livestock side, but there is nothing that you can really do to minimize the amount of manure and the subsequent side effects of having that degree of manure in the province. So before we talked about changes to the regulations, I would have liked to have seen some debate on whether or not we want to increase this kind of industry in our province.

I fully understand how important this kind of industry can be to some regions in the province, rural regions who are facing increased kinds of pressures on them. I know that at the AAMDC conference last week I sat with some old friends from Coronation, and I asked them what they thought about this bill. What they had to say was that they wished they had the water in order to be able to be concerned about having intensive livestock operations in their region. The question was: why? Certainly because of the money that flows through the community and the increased number of jobs. Now, we know that there really are relatively few actual jobs created in an operation, but there's a great flow-through of dollars not only in terms of adding an economic development resource there in the community but the trucking and the other associated spin-off economic results that come with an operation like that. They would have liked to have had that up for consideration.

I asked them then what they thought the resulting issues were in terms of environmental concerns, and their concerns were very local in nature. Siting, they said, wouldn't be a problem because it's a sparsely populated area. They didn't think that anybody would have an issue with the air quality, which is the smell, which is the biggest concern that neighbours have about this issue. They felt that the manure could be used, as it is in many regions, for a variety of uses, and properly handled, there wouldn't be any problems.

Groundwater contamination didn't hit their radar screen at all. They simply didn't think it would be an issue and were surprised that it might be. We know, Mr. Speaker, that it is an issue, that particularly in relation to heavy metal issues we're looking at some long-term, outstanding, potential problems that could be significant in nature on this.

From a cumulative impact perspective they didn't have any concerns, which exactly pinpoints one of the key problems that we've had with this piece of legislation, and that is that the issues become very regional in nature and that we don't really have anybody taking a look at the wider umbrella issues that come with an operation like this which are on the cumulative impact side. I know we had some discussion about this in question period earlier in this session, and I'll go into more detail about that when we get into committee.

Certainly somebody needs to take responsibility. If we're going to increase the number of operations in this province – I expect it is the intent of the government and the ministry to promote and open up the boundaries for these kinds of operations – then we need to know clearly who it is that's going to be in charge of monitoring cumulative impacts on our communities, on our province, and on our neighbouring provinces on these issues. The minister referred briefly in her response to a question about what's being done on the soil and water side. I don't think that was a comprehensive answer. I would expect more detail from her either in debate on this bill or at some point in writing as we move forward on it. She really didn't have an answer for the air issues.

It's more than just smell, Mr. Speaker. There are noxious gases associated with this and long-term kinds of problems associated with this. Cumulative impact is going to be a very important and very deciding factor when we talk about where this bill goes in the long run. So we expect, in fact we demand that this government address those outstanding issues. I would expect that the Minister of Environment would have the responsibility for this and that he will be taking a leadership role as we move forward on this bill. Those are some of the global kinds of issues I have in terms of the principle of this.

We have a starting point here that addresses some of the outstanding issues that we've been talking about, but one that we hadn't anticipated prior to this bill being brought to the floor of the Legislature was that they would change the name of intensive livestock operations. We now see this new jargon coming forward calling these operations confined feeding operations. Mr. Speaker, I have a real problem with that because I don't think that accurately describes what it is this bill promotes and supports. We're talking about intensive operations where you have many animals in a very small, yes, confined space, a very small space. Intensive, I think, is a proper descriptor of what happens in those locations. It gives some credibility to the magnitude of the operations. It is a descriptor in terms of feeding, accessing, and monitoring these operations that we don't get with confined feeding operations.

You know, my grandmother had a chicken coop. That was a confined feeding operation. You don't have anything like the kinds of issues resulting from the backyard chicken coop in the farmyard as you do for intensive livestock operations. It's to me a completely different ball game. Intensive livestock operations are an industry that is more like a manufacturing plant than it is a farming operation. So I think that that kind of distinction needs to be made, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask the minister why it is that they wanted to change this terminology.

We just got people really well aware of what intensive livestock operations meant, and people understand that concept. They can identify with what the parameters of an intensive livestock operation are, either for or against, whatever, but they understand. There's a complete understanding of what that is. To go to confined feeding operations, which is a much more general term, I think does not adequately describe what it is we are talking about. Perhaps that's where the ministry was going with this. They didn't want communities to grasp immediately what the ramifications of this kind of an operation could be. I hope that wasn't the intent. I hope that a very good, reasonable, and logical explanation for the name change can be given to us.

There is at this stage, in urban areas particularly, a negative connotation to intensive livestock operations, and maybe that's what they were trying to get away from from a marketing perspective. But a confined feeding operation really doesn't speak to density issues, which are the issues that cause the problems with these operations. So that really is the significant difference here, and I would expect the minister to be able to address that for us and give us some explanation.

We've been looking for a long time for a change in the approval process, Mr. Speaker, because as we traveled around the province and talked to different operators in different municipalities, there were a significant number of issues that came forward. Municipalities often were ill prepared to be able to handle the issues that arise out of intensive livestock operations: zoning issues, regulation issues, the kind of money and time that gets spent in the public hearing process. There were all kinds of problems throughout the province on this. One, they didn't have the expertise in many cases to be able to properly address the issues. They didn't have the infrastructure in place to be able to properly address the issues. They didn't like the fact that they had to deal with neighbours hating neighbours on this issue and the subsequent results for them from a political fashion of them having to make decisions, some of which often felt arbitrary to both people who were concerned about the operations and those who were interested in expanding or moving into a region with a new operation.

From the operators' perspective, what they were looking for was a level playing field across the province. They didn't care what the rules were going to be particularly. They just wanted to know that the rules were going to be consistent for every operator so that if one region required a million or half a million dollars in infrastructure to be built on their location, it was the same for everyone in the province. Somebody down the road couldn't set up an operation for a small investment of $50,000 or $100,000, because if it isn't a level playing field, then those who have to find additional resources have a much longer payoff time before they can start making a profit. They didn't care if it was a huge investment at the front end as long as it would be the same for all the operators in the province, and that gave them an equal opportunity to make some money. It would be determined, then, by them being good operators, which is how we like to see the economics of all business investments play out in Alberta, not where one region has any kind of an advantage over another, that most things being equal, we're going to be taking a look at the same kinds of rules and regulations and enforcement issues and the same kind of infrastructure dollars.

So that's what operators were asking for. They wanted the rules to be consistent, the rules to be put in place and not be subject to change at what they felt sometimes were the whims of municipalities or lobby groups of people who didn't want them in the region, some consistency in the application of the rules.

I know that the minister and the committee undertook those concerns and worked on them in terms of coming up with some solutions. So we see now the NRCB being the umbrella group who will administer the registration, authorization, and approval processes. We haven't seen the proposed regulations yet. I think we are going to see those before this is passed. [interjection] Yeah. The minister is saying yes. We're happy to see those in a draft fashion. We know they can't be passed until the legislation is passed, but we're very happy to see those in a draft fashion, hopefully in time for us to make some comments about them in committee or in third reading. That'll be excellent. The minister is saying yes, so I look forward to that opportunity.

So in general terms, having the NRCB do the overview of these registrations and authorizations is good. Of course, every time you change the rules, there's going to be a downside to those rules as well, and there are some pitfalls with having the NRCB be the organization that actually administers this. We will go into some detail about what those pitfalls are, and hopefully the minister will be able to point out to us how they expect to remedy those kinds of concerns. So I'm looking forward to speaking about that kind of detail.

Some local communities didn't have the ability to actually come forward with regulations and their concerns to deal with those. What local communities do need in this kind of bill, Mr. Speaker, is a huge say in siting concerns. We think there has to be a process that can be put into place on this bill where local municipalities will have a heavily weighted say in the kinds of zoning concerns that they have for these regulations. The current rules as they stand with the NRCB do not address this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are half a dozen or so significant points I'd like to raise at this stage of the debate. This is, as we all appreciate, a difficult bill. It's a difficult issue. I've been going out of my way to speak to farmers whom I know to get their opinions, and their opinions are as divided as I suppose all of ours will be on this. There is a sense in which the current situation we all understand is not sustainable. We do need a better way to handle these kinds of developments, but whether or not this particular bill addresses those is certainly open for debate, and it's a debate we will hammer away on here.

The first concern I had – and there's been mention of it here already, and I think all of us can see this concern. Certainly it comes through to me from people I've spoken to. At some point these operations are no longer agricultural operations. At some point these livestock operations become industrial operations, and they have more to do with a factory than with a farm. You know, I think of grain farmers selling their barley to a brewery if it's a good crop. It's much more what we're up against here with grain farmers selling their barley to an intensive livestock operation. The ILO is much more like a brewery than it is like a farm.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

There's a basic principle, then, that has to be sorted out here. At what point are we not talking about agriculture anymore and are talking about industry? It's a difficult line to establish, but there's definitely a difference here. Then the implications of sorting that out play out through, for example, zoning, tax systems, and so on. My sense is that this bill should be establishing a threshold at which these operations are no longer agricultural, at which they are industrial and should be treated in that regard.

It also raises the question about our long-term trends with agriculture in Alberta and across Canada and throughout the world, but we'll stick to Alberta since that keeps us plenty busy. The nature of the family farm is something we're concerned about. The future of the family farm is something we're concerned about. Given that these are industrial operations often owned by major corporations that aren't even based in Canada, it takes the direction of family farming and shifts it substantially.

Is this a long-term trend we want to encourage in agriculture? Maybe it is, because these facilities do provide a very good market in some cases for our grain growers. The demand for barley, for example, in southern Alberta is excellent. The price paid for barley by intensive livestock operations in southern Alberta is very high. So if we're looking at it from that perspective, maybe this is the way to go. On the other hand, there is a threat here to the whole operation of the family farm, the local cattle producer, the local hog producer. Certainly there's evidence from some jurisdictions such as Manitoba that as these big hog operations get established, the number of local smaller hog operations actually diminishes. So there are principles here around the balance between agriculture and industry and the nature of how we should sort that out and whether this bill is actually really about an industrial operation.

A second area of concern actually simply has to do with the titling of the bill and the shifting of the designation of these operations. Just when the term "intensive livestock operation" comes to be reasonably well known by people in the province, we shift to "confined feeding operation," which is a much vaguer term and one that's going to take years for the public to understand. It's going to cause no end of confusion. There's a principle there, I think, about integrity of language in legislation.

MS BLAKEMAN: Is it meant to confuse?

DR. TAFT: It does make you wonder whether or not it is actually meant to confuse. I've wondered if we might end up with something like a non hospital livestock operation or something like that.

Another principle that is of profound importance to all of us here, I think, is the question of local control. It's a good idea in this bill to have provincewide standards implemented and enforced by a provincewide agency that will have sufficient resources to look after them. I don't think any of us will dispute that, but my understanding of the legislation is that it at the same time diminishes the opportunities for local control. I know that's a real concern for people I've spoken to in rural areas, including farmers.

There are environmental concerns that we need to be probing here, and certainly as the debate goes along, we will be. When we're talking about millions of hogs in Alberta – 5 million, 6 million, 8 million, 10 million, or even potentially 12 million hogs – again, there's a scale of development that takes us into a whole different category than what exists now and raises concerns over environmental issues – water, air, and soil – and health not just of the animals in question but of the humans who are consuming that product. So we are needing to bring forward a different set of principles and a different set of considerations when we get into this scale of operation.

Questions come up around the use of antibiotics, for example, in feed. The application, of course, of manure on soil, all kinds of . . .

MR. DUNFORD: Nutrients.

DR. TAFT: Well, one person's manure is another person's nutrients, I guess. I don't know.

I mean, in some ways we're talking here about an environmental impact that's the equivalent of a major new city. If we're talking about 10 million or 12 million hogs in Alberta in the next decade, we're talking about the equivalent perhaps of a major urban city, far larger than either Edmonton or Calgary. Are we really ready to cross that threshold? Are we wanting our province to go in that direction?

So those are some of my opening comments. As the debate on this bill proceeds, I will be developing and exploring those further, bringing more evidence to the table. It's a genuine dilemma that we're in here. As much effort as has gone into it by the hon. Member for Leduc and undoubtedly many other people here, I am concerned that we are entering into a new era, a new level, a new quantum of operation in our agricultural industry in Alberta that we may not be wise to enter into.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:10

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know there has been debate during second reading, that's been going on for some time. There's been good debate. I think the debate draws attention to some of the positive things about the bill and some serious negatives that need to be seriously addressed. Can they be addressed if we rush this bill through the Legislature is a real question. All these questions have just been raised, and a day or so ago my caucus colleague, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, raised some very substantial and important questions. Some others have been raised right here. I've been listening to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, in particular, his reservations and concerns. I think those reservations and concerns are shared by a very large number of Albertans and merit serious attention by us.

I would caution the House against fast-tracking this bill given the fact that there are so many concerns that are not confined just to a few of us in the Legislature but have been expressed to us through a large number of letters, e-mails, phone calls from Albertans all over the place. Certainly, as I said, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview eloquently put some of these before us just a few minutes ago.

The positives about the bill are the provincial standards that have been brought in with respect to some of the environmental matters. I think those are very positive steps, but the negative side outweighs, in my view, the positive features of the bill. The most negative part is the removal from local authorities, municipal and county authorities, the power to approve and permit the siting of these farms. There's no reason why we can't have both provincial standards that are enforceable and let the democracy at the local level work and leave this power with the people who'll be most directly affected by these operations.

A second point I think needs to be reiterated here. This has to do with the industrial nature of these operations. The title of the bill, Bill 28, Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001, frankly I think is quite inappropriate if not misleading. These operations really cross the line of agricultural activity and practice to industrialization of some agricultural products here; in this case, hogs and other animals. When you look at the size that's being proposed – the Premier the other day during his scrum referred to the fact that the experts have told the government that there's room in this province for raising as many as 12 million hogs, and we're only talking about hogs at this point. When you think about the amount of waste that would be produced by these, I think according to some estimates it could be the equivalent of 30 million people producing the waste. That's the other side of the story.

The whole question of the disposal of that waste, the whole question of production of the waste in the first place, is not appropriately addressed here in my view. The kind of arrangements, infrastructure, the processing of that waste and its disposal, these are matters that require serious attention.

There are questions, of course, raised by the AAMDC, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. I have a resolution before me that's proposed. I don't know if it's been passed or not, but I want to just read this resolution which indicates the kind of concerns that the AAMDC has.

Therefore be it resolved that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties urge the Government of Alberta to fully compensate municipal governments for any costs incurred by affected municipalities when providing assistance to the NRCB in relation to Intensive Livestock Operations.

Regardless of what the status of that motion is at this moment in time, the point made here in the motion is what I want to draw the attention of the House to, that there are financial implications for those very local counties and municipal authorities from which we are taking away the power to issue permits and have a say on the siting of these.

The other concerns. The industrial nature of these operations also raises the question of taxation. The taxation formula that's used is used for ordinary agricultural land, and if these operations are industrial operations, which is indeed the case, then that matter must be addressed and is not addressed in the bill. A related point: industrial operations come under the labour standards code.

I'm not against pursuing economic development in rural areas so long as it meets certain standards, so long as local say and democracy in voice as well as environmental standards are met. Economic development is necessary, but I just want to remind the House that a single-minded pursuit of economic development at the cost of some other places is a dangerous pursuit. I don't need to talk about some historical incidents in other places and other times. The worst case scenario is, of course, in the former so-called eastern bloc, where the exclusive, single-minded pursuit of economic development led to environmental disasters completely. We need to be careful. We want to have economic development, we want to have wealth, we want to have revenues generated from these activities but not at a risk, not at a cost, not without asking those tough questions that we must ask. Those questions are not asked in this bill; they're not certainly addressed in this bill.

One other point, Mr. Speaker. I just came across a study which is a joint study done by the government of Canada and the government of Alberta. It was published in 1998. It's called Agricultural Impacts on Water Quality in Alberta: An Initial Assessment. There were 14 members of this working group, nine of which came from the government of Alberta, representing three different departments: the department of agriculture, the department of environmental protection, and the Department of Health and Wellness. Three different departments were represented on this working group in the joint study with the federal government. I just want to quote from the key study findings. Let me just read from this document. Again, let me repeat the title of it: Agricultural Impacts on Water Quality in Alberta: An Initial Assessment. It's a joint federal/Alberta study. It says:

Although nutrients and bacteria occur naturally in the environment, their concentrations in shallow groundwater and in surface waters in agricultural areas tended to be high, often exceeding water quality guidelines. Pesticides were detected frequently, sometimes in concentrations which exceeded guidelines.

Only rarely were agricultural contaminants found in any of the 448 deep groundwater wells monitored throughout the province. Where detections occurred, poor well design and poor maintenance were considered the major [sources], not primary agricultural activity.

But the punch line, I guess, is the next paragraph, and it's printed in bold letters. It says:

The risk of water quality degradation by agriculture is highest in those areas of the province which use greater amounts of fertilizer and herbicides, and have greater livestock densities.

Greater livestock densities. And that's the whole question. These are operations that are intensive livestock operations. This will put in one place, in confined places, huge numbers of animals, thereby creating precisely the kinds of conditions under which contamination takes place, and this is a study done by this government itself. I think that's a matter that needs attention, and therefore this bill, in my view, should not be rushed through, Mr. Speaker.

Should this bill be approved, intensive livestock operations will join a very short list of developments that are exempt from the requirement to obtain a municipal development permit. The only other developments that are currently exempt from the requirement to obtain a municipal development permit are roads and highways, oil and gas wells, and pipelines. The fact that oil and gas drilling and pipelines have been exempt from municipal permitting has contributed to their virtually uncontrolled proliferation throughout the province. With no municipal permits required for intensive livestock operations, will the same things happen with the ILOs? That's a question that I think was raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview as well. The vast majority of the groups and individuals who made submissions to the Klapstein committee wanted local approval for ILOs. The vast majority of letters, phone calls, and e-mails that the New Democrats have received from the public also want local control.

There are other matters not addressed in Bill 28. I mentioned the issue of finances there, and I would just not add to it.

Fast-tracking this bill through this Legislature, that will unilaterally take away significant decision-making authority from municipal governments, is not the right way to go. The AAMDC has really made this point quite clear. Imagine if the shoe were on the other foot. Imagine the outrage that would erupt on the government benches if the federal government unilaterally took away the power and authority from this provincial government, yet the provincial government is doing exactly this to municipalities through Bill 28. For example, we still don't know what kind of size threshold will kick in with the rules set in Bill 28. All of these vital details will be left to the regulations.

There are other policy details not addressed in Bill 28 that should have been. For example, the ILOs, that have generated virtually all of the controversy in rural Alberta, have been megafedlots and mega hog factories. These corporate-style operations should also be required to meet, as I said, the employment standards, labour standards, and should be taxed as industrial operations. That's why, Mr. Speaker, I'm putting forward the following motion for the House. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 28, Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 28, Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Mr. Speaker, it took us three years to get to this point, and now the government thinks all of the . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, has the motion been circulated to our colleagues? [interjection] Okay; we should allow a minute or so for members to receive the motion.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you may proceed.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, it took us three years to get to this point, and now the government thinks all of the details can be worked out and legislation approved by the Legislature and proclaimed by the cabinet in short order, in a few days. Many groups and individuals have asked for more time to fully consider the consequences of Bill 28. The government has provided no evidence that there is broad support within rural Alberta for making these changes. A six-month delay would allow the government to bring this bill back in the spring session. I therefore urge all members to support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment lost]

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 8 o'clock p.m., at which time we return in Committee of the Whole.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:26 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 20, 2001 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 01/11/20
 [Mr. Tannas in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Committee of the Whole

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

The committee is reminded that we will employ the same rules that we have had for a long time; that is to say, only one member standing and talking at a time, that being the member that's recognized.

Bill 27 Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: We want to know whether there are any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do want to just open with a few preliminary comments, because there were some comments made at second reading that I felt I probably should respond to.

One of the issues that was raised at second reading was with respect to the question of the collapse rate. It wasn't directly on point, but I think it's important to point out that allowing judges to continue to sit will not affect the collapse rate of trials or preliminary hearings. One of the reasons I wanted to mention that point was not to point out that it wasn't relevant to the bill we're talking about but rather to indicate that improving the collapse rate doesn't really improve the quality of life of the prosecutors, because they prepare now in Edmonton courts for triple bookings, so collapse rates let them prepare for three trials and go ahead with one. So what we're trying to do is to get more on a real-time basis, and that's been a very difficult program. We're working with more early case resolution programs and the first appearance centre and those types of programs to assist with that. I appreciate, Mr. Chairman that that's not what Bill 27 is about, but I think it's an important point and worth discussing and worth clarifying.

Edmonton-Ellerslie asked about an expected dollar savings. I wanted to also point out that this bill is . . .

MS CARLSON: Liberals are fiscally responsible.

MR. HANCOCK: I've been left speechless. I heard a member opposite say that Liberals are fiscally responsible, and that would drive one's thoughts out of one's head. Let the record show that there was chuckling about that as well.

I should hasten to point out that this bill is not primarily aimed at saving money. It really is aimed at saving talent, keeping the good, capable judges available to the system. That does save us resources in the long run because it saves on training time. It gives us available people who are more effective just simply from the perspective that they know the routine, those sorts of issues. But we can't expect huge savings in terms of dollars with respect to the pension side. There will be, in fact, global saving to government over the longer term, and it will depend on how many judges and how long they serve.

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona asked whether there was any merit in the suggestion that recommendations for reappointment come from the Judicial Council. As you may recall in the bill itself, recommendations for reappointment of judges come from the Chief Judge, and recommendations for the Chief and the Assistant Chief Judge come from the Judicial Council. I think it's important to keep that distinction. Obviously, we couldn't allow the Chief Judge to recommend his own reappointment. Therefore it's necessary to go to some other group, and the Judicial Council is the logical group to make that recommendation. But the operation of the court is in the hands of the Chief Judge and must be in the hands of the Chief Judge. Therefore, it's quite appropriate that the recommendation for reappointment for the puisne judges, so to speak, is and should be in the hands of the Chief Judge, so we wouldn't propose to make a change to that.

Those would be, I think, all the questions that were raised in second reading. If I've missed any, I'm sure they'll be brought to my attention.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I did want to take the opportunity in Committee of the Whole to briefly review the sections that are available to us. I'll start by saying that overall, listening to the comments just now from the Minister of Justice, I think the purpose of this bill really seems to be taking the current pressure off the system. As I discussed in second reading, there are quite a few pressures on the justice system right now: the small number of Crown prosecutors in comparison to the cases they're trying to handle, the lack of courtroom space, and the 10 Provincial Court judge vacancies. We have a constitutional obligation to provide access to justice, so I think this bill appears to be one way of trying to address in a small way some of the pressure on the system.

When I look more closely at the first couple of sections, they really are clarification sections or minor changes to make things easier to understand. Some of it's about archaic language, I think, where we're talking about furnishing something as compared to sending it or mailing it, and addressing a judge that retires before the judgment is rendered being able to actually render the judgment, rather than have everyone go through a whole other trial.

The meat of this bill is really in section 4 and following from section 4 in the amending bill here, Bill 27, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2001. That is about allowing the retirement end date, which has been 70 up until this point, to be extended to 75. Then what follows is a series of methods and a process to reappoint and who does reappoint and how that's done. I'm pleased to see that there are criteria that will be established by the Chief Judge and approved by the Judicial Council that are used when a request is looked at to extend for another year the term of a judge that is up for reappointment.

This is a very straightforward bill. The minister did share the content with me prior to actually seeing the bill, although I have to state that the sort of three-column thing or the two-column briefer that one gets really doesn't give you the nitty-gritty of the language. Even those people in the legal community and lawyers that I consulted still want to see the actual bill to make sure that they haven't made a mistake, and I have to agree with that. I appreciate the briefing, and I still appreciate getting the bill with as much time before I have to speak on it as possible.

I don't have a problem supporting this bill. I said that in second; I'll say it in Committee of the Whole. I think we can proceed along with it. The Liberals have always said that they don't hold up legislation unnecessarily, and I'm going to stand behind that.

Thanks very much.

Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to speak to this bill in committee after having spoken to it this afternoon in second reading. This is a good example, in terms of a bill, of speedy progress through the House for legislation that we don't oppose. We're happy to support that kind of a process, but it also speaks a little bit to the lack of depth in some of the legislation that we've seen come forward in this fall sitting, which is a little disappointing to us, because it is very thin and there haven't been very many substantive bills. This is one, a great bill, one that we're happy to support, one that the stakeholders have expressed satisfaction with, with the exception of the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, who wouldn't talk to us. We had a discussion about that. The Minister of Finance responded this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, and I'm happy to tell her that I will find the names of the people who told us specifically that they couldn't talk to us without going through her department. No one has fessed up so far, but certainly we will get some more information and follow that up. I'm happy to hear her say that that is not her way of doing business on legislation and was not what we would expect.

So I'm happy to support this. I'm happy to see speedy process through the House, not quite so happy about the lack of depth of legislation, but we don't control that agenda, Mr. Chairman. The government does. We look forward to seeing better things from them in the near future.

[Adjourned debate November 15: Mr. Lund]

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Leduc. No? I've got two hon. members . . .

MRS. NELSON: Ladies first.

THE CHAIRMAN: Ladies first; okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Minister of Finance. I'm happy to stand up again today on this bill. We just finished second reading this afternoon, a little sooner than we expected because of the hoist that failed on the floor of the Legislature. We had a few people who would have liked to have had a few more comments on this bill in second reading, but they'll save their remarks for committee, so we can look forward to some fairly protracted debate on this one, I think, at this particular stage.

When I spoke to the bill this afternoon, I talked primarily in generalities, in terms of this bill missing the essential question on intensive livestock operations, which was: should we even have them in our province? That's never been debated. It won't be now with this bill. That was the first issue.

Secondly, of course, if we're going to have them, what kind of regulations are we going to put in place that are going to meet the needs of the people of the province? As usual with this government, there is some good news and some bad news, Mr. Chairman. What we see here is not mostly good I'm afraid. I can't decide if it's two steps forward and one step back or half a step forward and three-quarters of a step back. Anyway, it's some progress.

DR. TAYLOR: That's the Texas two-step.

MS CARLSON: Well, that's what this government does, Texas two-steps around every contentious issue, and this certainly is one of those kinds of issues. We see them passing off responsibility to the NRCB on this particular bill in some areas that are contentious, to say the least, and that certainly need some review and perhaps some cleanup. So I think I'll address those to begin with, some of the concerns that we have in terms of the NRCB.

What happens now is that the NRCB gets the responsibility for setting the regulations and approving and authorizing the registration of the newly named intensive livestock operations. The problem with that, in part, is part of the mandate of the NRCB. We have some concerns from local municipalities that they will have limited input in terms of the siting of intensive livestock operations in the future. I'm on record as having spoken in the past – and I stand by the comments I made – in terms of having more comprehensive decision-making criteria for siting. Certainly we knew that some of the municipalities didn't have the kinds of background they needed for the regulations, and we wanted a level playing field. So we stated that there needs to be a provincial code of practice and provincial standards that are enforceable, and that's right. We do need that. Well, they put that in place in part with the NRCB rulings, but the problem with that is that it doesn't give municipalities enough flexibility in terms of siting criteria.

So the application goes to the NRCB, and the NRCB looks at it. From what I've read so far and what I see here, if there is a permitted use by the local municipality in their land use plan, the local municipality has very little if any input into the decision by the NRCB. The NRCB will say environmentally, takes the decision-making criteria for that and decides yes or no based on those facts only, because it's only environmentally that they can make a judgment. So if this fits in all the criteria that we're going to see outlined in the guidelines and the regulations, then the NRCB can't say no, even if the municipality says: we don't want a siting here. That is a major, major flaw with this legislation.

I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I'm having a hard time deciding whether I can support this. If it means we're two steps ahead and only one back, then that's progress, but if it's half a step forward and three-quarters of a step back, then that isn't progress. So we'll see how this plays out in debate and the kind of feedback we get from people in the communities. If the NRCB is going to be restricted to just making decisions based on environmental criteria, while to me that is very important and to Albertans that's very important, it isn't enough in this case. Municipalities have to have some rights of refusal and a more expanded role in terms of what the regulations are going to be around discretionary uses. Right now we see it's just that they're in or they're out in terms of intensive livestock. That doesn't give them enough discretionary or nondiscretionary options within their land use plans.

What we need to see is what our leader talked about in his comments last Thursday when he talked about, as a minimum, three levels of agricultural development in terms of land use, a whole range of classifications for the commercial and industrial development of the land base, very similar to what we have in urban areas. We have to remember that intensive livestock operations are not farms. They're factories, so they should meet the same kind of criteria as we see when it comes to land use zoning. Municipalities need to have that flexibility within their planning structure when they make their applications to the NRCB. So if we see these regulations and siting decisions being made just based on environmental issues, it isn't enough. It's only half of the pie, Mr. Chairman, and it doesn't meet the needs of this community in the province. We definitely need the provincial level environmental standards, and I applaud that part of the bill. It doesn't just meet our needs; it exceeds them. I think that we will have some excellent standards, and they're an absolute must for this industry, but it's only one little piece of the puzzle. Still no focus on cumulative impact, no focus on what happens with general siting concerns.

What are we going to see in the regulations? The minister says that we're going to see them. I hope what's included in those are a couple of the issues that come up on a regular basis, and those are around how the standards are created. There are lots of nuisance issues around these intensive livestock operations, primarily around dust and odour. Now, in many parts of the province dust isn't a huge issue, depending on weather conditions and the amount of rain they get, but in others it is. Odour is a problem particularly when you're talking about hog operations and particularly when you're talking about the amount of manure that is produced by these. The kinds of piggy poo levels that we're going to see in intensive hog operations far exceed any expectations of any member in this Legislature. We could be buried under the stuff if it isn't properly handled, and that brings up several issues, not the least of which are manure application guidelines.

We are finding in this province as time progresses that the heavy metals in this manure are toxic for agricultural uses. If you take a look at some of the applications that have been used in the past, we see some interesting developments in terms of land use. Where the manure is injected into the soil, we see the toxic chemicals and heavy metals actually killing everything along the path of injection, and while the plants grow very well on either side of the injection line, there's a real issue with the injection line. So this is a big deal, and this government needs to be prepared to handle the heavy metals and metal compounds that are going to become increasingly a problem.

I haven't seen anything so far around soil testing. What are the expectations going to be there? I hope we see them in the regulations. Will the farmers be asked to do the soil tests, and what standards are they going to be using to effectively make sure that the concentrations on the land don't rise to a level that becomes detrimental to crops or to livestock in the future? Are those applying the manure going to be the ones doing the soil testing? Is there going to be an overall branch of some department doing that? I doubt that. This government is not big on the enforcement issues. They like to see organizations self-police. So let's see how that's going to fall out in the regulations. I certainly hope that's addressed. Those are big deals.

What I haven't heard anybody talk about is something that is of keen interest to me in terms of handling quite a few of the issues, I think all of the issues except for the heavy metal ones, and that's the composting of these huge, vast amounts of manure that we're going to see as an output of increasing intensive livestock operations and is a management issue now in those areas that have intensive livestock operators. In Europe there are a few places that now take a look at in-vessel composting for manure, and it's a benefit in many ways. What happens is that the manure gets composted, so the output is readily sellable and usable. Because the gases separate from the manure within the in-vessel component of the composting unit itself, there is no smell. Particularly if you have an enclosed barn, the manure falls through the bottom of the pens and onto the top of or through the side of the composting unit and gets stirred or mixed within the composting unit. Then the gases rise and are captured. They're vented out into an enclosed area where they can take the methane or whatever else it is and use it for other purposes, and the dry output is manure. It's a good, practical solution, and it's value-added. No doubt about it. It takes care of the smell issue. It takes care of the transportation issue, spraying issues. You have a much more valuable product for spreading in cases where it needs to be. It's now a product that urban centres can use. So there's some real value to that.

Of course, there are some pretty heavy costs up front to put this kind of a system in place, but I think this is the kind of forward-looking strategic planning this government should be doing on this kind of an issue if they think that this is an industry they want to promote and support here in the province.

AN HON. MEMBER: You get what you pay for.

MS CARLSON: Well, that's right. You do get what you pay for.

It is becoming a standard in some European countries where there are extensive intensive livestock operations, and it's something that we certainly need to be taking a look at here. So I hope that the government is addressing this. I haven't heard them talk at all about how they're going to manage all this excess manure we have. Anybody who has read the papers in the last five to 10 years knows that this is an increasingly big concern in North America. What we hear particularly is that it has become a huge issue in Manitoba, where they've looked for diversification and found this style of diversification happening.

Some intensive livestock operators are composting now in an open-ground kind of system; that is, an anaerobic kind of system. That doesn't get rid of the smell, Mr. Chairman. It's not bad as an intermediate kind of phase in getting it out of the holding ponds or the lagoons and drying it out to get rid of the odour or the excess capacity in the lagoons. It's not a bad intermediary phase, but it isn't the answer at the end of the day. We need something that captures these gases, that gives us an output that is salable on a wider kind of stream. That still doesn't address the heavy metal issue, Mr. Chairman. I'm hoping that the government is supporting research in this area so that we find some answers to that in the long run and, of course, on the soil testing, like I said.

You know, we've had quite a bit of feedback from people who don't like this kind of an operation and some overall concerns particularly on groundwater. I think that one of the issues that we need to talk about there is the conditions that must be met for water contamination to occur, and intensive livestock operations do present those kinds of conditions. We do see periodically that there have been fines meted out by Alberta Environment on these feedlots when, due to excessive rainfall or insufficient handling of the manure on lots, it's gotten into and contaminated the water system. There are certainly a number of places in central Alberta every year that we hear from where they have sloughs that are now so badly contaminated that nobody can use them, not even the critters. So those are issues that need to be talked about.

That the water table is at risk in feedlots is one statement made recently by David Schindler, who won the equivalent of the Nobel prize in the area of water science for his work in 1991. He's come out very recently, November 20, and stated that he wants to issue a warning that the provincial government's plan to expand hog feedlots could contaminate the water table. He says that if the province follows the idea of increasing the number of hogs produced in the kinds of quantities that they've been talking about, it would produce enough manure to jeopardize the water quality. I haven't heard the minister address this. He talks about how every place that they've had this kind of intensive expansion has ended up with water quality problems. Definitely he's right when he says that what we can expect from this are higher nutrients and lower oxygen in the water. He goes on to say that we could have more Walkertons. It certainly is possible. I know that this government has tried to take pretty good measures in terms of monitoring water quality, but it certainly is not impossible that that could happen, water quality issues.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Much more possible.

MS CARLSON: Well, the minister says: much more possible today. There's some truth to that based on current numbers of hogs and cattle in the province. These regulations are really good, I think, in terms of the environmental issues that are outstanding, and that's the part of the bill that I do really support. If we were to go from 2 million hogs to 12 million, is the same case still to be made?

We know that you can have all the rules you want in terms of environmental quality, but if we have water issues – extensive rainfall, a holding pond where the bank breaks – for whatever reason some kind of problem that occurs on the location, we know that every time we increase the number of animals we're handling we increase the potential for problems. So you can have all the great rules you want. When you're dealing with animals and people, with an exact science mistakes get made. When you're dealing with the weather, you're not dealing with an exact science. Mistakes can happen there in terms of anticipated outcomes. That is what happened in Walkerton. So we have to be very diligent that this couldn't happen here in the future.

I agree with the minister when she says: a better chance now than then, based on the same number of animals. But when we increase the number of animals, we have an increasing chance of there being problems down the road. I know the minister's on the record as saying that the new technology increases the safety of manure from feedlots, but it doesn't eliminate the risk, and it shouldn't eliminate this government from the responsibility of ensuring that they have got all of those requirements in place, that they have an action plan that in a crisis they can deal with it very quickly and that they have municipalities participate in that process. So I think those are some of the concerns we have here that need to be addressed.

The minister said that this has just been going on for three years, but it's been a recognized need in this province for decades, Mr. Chairman. One of the reasons why I wasn't prepared to support a hoist amendment is because at least this puts this issue on the floor of the Legislature, talking about it in a manner that will start to more concretely raise the issues and move the process forward, I hope, and we need to do this. It's been a huge issue in this province since I've been the Environment critic, and that's for at least five years. So progress, yes, but still real problems mostly around the municipalities, that they'll still only be able to designate discretionary and accepted-use provisions for intensive livestock operations on agricultural land. This, Mr. Chairman, is because the NRCB is now the final authority on approval of ILOs. There's no appeal process with that authority, and that's a big, big issue.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it's probably appropriate to do a little bit of a review as to how we got to where we are today, if it will help to put some things in perspective. The three-year time frame is one that I think needs to be recognized. There was a Livestock Regulations Stakeholder Advisory Group which had participation from a number of producer groups but also had participation from the two municipal associations, the Environmental Law Centre, and the provincial health authorities. This committee had the benefit of an expert committee which developed with them the standards document which will accompany this legislation. Just so there's an understanding as to how wide ranging . . . Pardon me, Mr. Chairman?

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I think we might be able to hear you better if you took off that machine or whatever it is that's covering the microphone. Thank you.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Okay. I had my binder flipped up against it. Okay? Good.

Anyway, I was just saying that there was a stakeholder advisory group made up of municipal associations, producer associations, as well as the Environmental Law Centre and the public health authorities. This stakeholder group had the benefit of an expert committee working with them to develop a standards document, which is part of this legislation. That expert committee included the Alberta Chicken Producers, the University of Alberta hydrology and applied soil physics department of renewable resources, Keystone Environmental Ltd., regional director of Chinook health authority, University of Alberta environmental risk assessment, University of Alberta department of biological sciences, University of Calgary microbiology and infectious diseases, University of Alberta agriculture, soil fertility management, University of Calgary department of geology and geophysics, Sunterra Farms, Thiessen Farms, and the chief administrative officer of Willow Creek MD. I'm mentioning that so you understand that the standards that accompany this legislation were done by an expert committee which included a wide range of interest groups. So it's not something somebody just picked out of a hat.

There has been a concern expressed about why there is movement of the decision-making in the absolute sense from municipalities to the NRCB when it comes to siting an operation. Well, up until 1994 the municipalities didn't have the final say. The Alberta Planning Board did. So it's only since 1994 that they've had natural person powers, and our experience, when this has been dealt with by municipalities, hasn't been the greatest. To be fair about it, I don't know if it's reasonable to expect locally elected councillors, when they are dealing with their friends and neighbours and relatives, to make impartial and objective decisions.

When we looked at putting the decision-making process within the department of agriculture, then the environmental interests were really concerned that the department of agriculture was in conflict. They are the promoters and advocates of agriculture, so how could they be unbiased? If you move it over to environment, then the concern of the industry is that the environmental concerns will be met but that they do not understand the needs of the industry.

I have to point out to you that four of the five members of the committee that made this recommendation to government have municipal experience. I spent 15 years at it myself, and the past president of the AAMDC was on that committee. We unanimously recommended that there be an independent, quasi-judicial, arm's-length body that would deal with this issue and make these decisions so that it could be done on an impartial, objective basis. Now, that's the rationale behind it.

Mention has been made that, you know, we should allow municipalities to have a number of different categories for agriculture within their general municipal land use bylaw. Well, they've always had that opportunity. There's no restriction on how many categories a municipality can put into their land use bylaw. If they had wanted to do that, they could have done it. In the end municipalities wanted the government to be responsible for establishing the standards, doing the monitoring, and doing the compliance enforcement.

So what's left? Just siting it. We decided that it was better to have a one-window approach, where an applicant would go to one place and get an answer. Recognizing the role of municipalities, we gave municipalities status in the decision-making process, which they do not have in the AEUB or other processes. So the NRCB, when considering an application, has to take into account the municipality – the municipality automatically has input into that process – and they have to consider the general municipal plan, the land use bylaw of the municipality.

What is true is that in the end, when push comes to shove, the NRCB can decide and can in fact overrule a municipality's position if they see fit, but they have to consider the municipality, and they will take into account – and this is a very significant change for the industry too – that the voluntary code of practice and all the regulations that this expert committee brought into being will become law, and they'll have to live by it. It will be enforceable in ways that municipalities have not, could not enforce them. So I think it's a very positive step to move it into this NRCB quasi-judicial, arm's-length body. I look forward to having a better decision-making process that will be based on science and on fact rather than having emotion and political expediency get into the mix of making the decision.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just maybe address a few comments in connection with the comments made by the previous speaker. You know, I find it surprising, quite frankly, that a former head of a municipal government in this province would question the competence of local municipalities to make decisions around these sorts of things.

I guess maybe they'd like to get my amendment distributed first, so I'll do that, but just some general comments.

Local municipal government in this province and across Canada has always been responsible for land use and has discharged that responsibility, in my view, competently in the vast majority of cases. Certainly I think they've done as well in that jurisdiction as provincial governments or the federal government have done in many of their jurisdictions. So I don't think we should be dismissive or patronizing towards the people that work in municipal government.

Municipal governments' control deals with many things, not just agricultural operations. They deal with industrial operations. They decide where large-scale petrochemical plants are going to go. They decide where great big shopping centres are going to go. They deal with rendering plants. They deal with all kinds of land uses that may or may not be compatible with adjacent land uses. That in fact is probably one of their best areas of competence. So it's not, in our view, right to say that their friends and neighbours may get in the way of an objective decision. It is precisely the local people that are affected by an offensive land use who need to be represented in that land use decision, and it is precisely the local jurisdiction that is set up to do that. The friends and neighbours and their quality of life and their wishes for their home and for the place where they may farm are critical to the decision. To say that some quasi-judicial body in Edmonton at a provincial level is going to take those kinds of things into account is absurd, in my view. They won't. Quite frankly, in our view that's exactly the objective of the bill here: to make sure that local people do not have the capacity to stop an obnoxious and offensive use immediately adjacent to their property which may affect their enjoyment of their property and may in fact affect their health.

I was just looking on the Internet, Mr. Chairman, and there are a number of sites where studies have been cited with respect to the impact on people's health of hog operations where there is a great deal of manure produced. The studies have shown that while cattle intensive feedlot operations do not particularly affect the health or the enjoyment of people's property, swine operations do, particularly those on a large scale, and there is an increased incidence of respiratory infection and a number of other indicators of poor health as a result of people living near large-scale hog operations, where there is a considerable amount of manure that might be present. So to say that local jurisdictions are not the appropriate people to deal with this I think is really an insult to the many, many thousands of fine Albertans that take their responsibilities in this respect very, very seriously.

I happened to have a conversation the other day with the president of the AAMDC, and I wouldn't want their position on this matter to be misrepresented either, because they're clearly opposed to the loss of jurisdiction by rural municipalities over these kinds of operations. They are, however, fully in agreement, as we are in the New Democrat opposition, that there needs to be strong and uniform regulation by the province of these kinds of operations. That does not mean the loss of local jurisdiction over permitting and the introduction of negative-option zoning authority with respect to these kinds of operations. I just wanted to make it clear that this bill does not apparently have the support of Alberta's rural municipalities or at least of their association. So I think that's a difficult thing.

Now, I've been quite interested in the Premier's comments that we need to increase the number of hogs in the province. I happened to be actually personally present this time at the news conference in which he indicated that there was a strong feeling that the capacity of Alberta to produce hogs was underutilized and that we could in fact accommodate up to 10 million additional hogs in this province.

AN HON. MEMBER: Ten million?

MR. MASON: Yes, 10 million additional hogs. I think we're somewhere between 2 million and 3 million at the present time, so you have an enormous increase in hog production for which this bill is the foundation. This bill clears the way for this enormous increase in hog production, which evidently is in the back of the minds of some people in the government. It's interesting, Mr. Chairman, just how much manure 12 million hogs can actually produce.

DR. TAYLOR: About as much as one NDP member.

MR. MASON: Well, I wouldn't flatter myself, hon. member, to think that I could come anywhere near your capacity.

We've done a little bit of calculation here, and according to the best information that we've been able to do – and admittedly this is our own calculation. We're not quoting anyone, so you may feel free to completely dismiss it. Even if it were in a learned study, I'm sure some members opposite would do the same thing. We calculate that 12 million pigs can produce 32.3 billion litres of pig poop per year. Say that three times really fast. That, Mr. Chairman, is enough to put the entire province ankle deep in the stuff. So we have a very, very serious problem. It's not only unpleasant; it is a proven hazard to the health of human beings – and there's plenty of evidence to show that – if not properly disposed of and treated. Obviously, the more that's produced, the more difficult it is to treat adequately. It has also been proven repeatedly to be a serious threat to groundwater and in runoff can actually kill fish and aquatic plants in streams and rivers. It is in fact a very, very serious problem.

Now, I said the other night that I appreciated the Deputy Premier and minister of agriculture's commitment to bring forward the regulations, but we haven't seen them yet. I had really hoped that we would have an opportunity to look at the draft regulations, recognizing that they need to be draft regulations, in the committee stage so that if we felt there were serious inadequacies in what the government had in mind, we might be in a position to propose amendments to the bill to cover that off, since we cannot of course amend regulations, or at least to make suggestions in this stage for the government in terms of what changes they might want to make in their regulations. So I regret that we have not yet seen those, but I can certainly say that as it now stands, the environmental protection afforded by any regulations with respect to agricultural manure are far, far less stringent than any regulations that apply to the disposal of treated human sewage, which is imposed on urban municipalities in their sewage treatment plants.

So I am very, very concerned that not only are we going to have an enormous increase in the nuisance factor, an enormous increase in the volume of manure, a threat to human health, a threat to the environment, a threat to fish and to plant life in lakes and streams, but we don't have the proper rules around the treatment, containment, and disposal of the up to 32.3 billion litres of pig manure that could potentially be produced in this province if the government plan proceeds as it's presently set out.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to now propose an amendment to the bill, and that is that Bill 28, Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001, be amended by striking out section 8. Section 8 states that it is an amendment to the Municipal Government Act, and it adds the following in section 618 of the Municipal Government Act:

This Part and the regulations and bylaws under this Part respecting development permits do not apply to a confined feeding operation or manure storage facility within the meaning of the Agricultural Operation Practices Act if the confined feeding operation or manure storage facility is the subject of an approval, registration or authorization under Part 2 of the Agricultural Operation Practices Act.

What this does in effect, Mr. Chairman, is strip from municipalities the authority to provide permits for the use of these confined livestock operations. Right now the things that the MGA does not apply to currently – in other words, the things that can be imposed on a municipality – are a highway or road, a well or battery within the meaning of the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, or a pipeline or an installation or structure incidental to the operation of a pipeline. So in other words, we are elevating these confined livestock operations to the same level in legislation as pipelines. Pipelines and roads are virtually the only things that the municipal government does not have control over in terms of land use planning and permitting. This amendment would delete the addition of confined livestock operations to this portion of the Municipal Government Act. So in other words, what section 8 of the act does is add to the activities which are exempted from local jurisdiction. It adds ILOs or CFOs, and what we're saying is we're going to take it back out again. We think this is the critical piece of the act.

There are a number of good things about the act. Certainly standardized provincial regulations are important and are widely supported not only by the agricultural industry and farmers but also by municipalities, and certainly I think every party in this House has indicated that they support strong and uniform provincial regulations with respect to this matter.

MS CARLSON: Which section 8 are you amending?

MR. MASON: The question is which section 8 I am amending. It is towards the end of Bill 28, which is on page 26 of the act. Are you with me now, Mr. Chairman?

THE CHAIRMAN: I think maybe for greater clarification we need to identify that the section 8 you're talking about is the part that refers to "Municipal Government Act is amended."

MR. MASON: Yes.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay, that's in part 3.

MR. MASON: Yes, it is. On page 26 of Bill 28.

THE CHAIRMAN: So that we're all on the same thing, this is amendment A1 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. The section 8 that he is talking about is in the back part of the bill, the part which amends the Municipal Government Act.

MR. MASON: Yes.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. We're with you.

MR. MASON: As I understand it, section 8 of this act before us would basically add confined livestock operations to the list of things over which local municipalities do not have control. Our amendment is to take this out of this bill so that the Municipal Government Act is not changed, and the net effect of that is to retain control by municipal governments over the siting of confined livestock operations. I'm sorry if it's a bit convoluted, but we were looking for the key section of the act that stripped municipal governments of their authority over confined livestock operations, and this is it. So we want this part taken out of the bill. That's what the amendment is about, and if the amendment were to pass, we believe municipal governments, rural municipalities in particular, would retain control over permitting of confined livestock operations, as they should be, in our view.

All the rest of this is just fine, Mr. Chairman, but I don't think it's right or proper that we should be taking away this authority from municipal governments. The government ministers go to AAMD and C or to AUMA and make speeches about partnership with municipalities. I was able to attend the speech at AUMA by the Minister of Municipal Affairs last week in which he proposed a partnership with municipalities, but it really seems that whenever municipalities exercise the limited jurisdiction they do have in a way that doesn't please the government, the government will step in in a paternalistic way and take away that authority from local authorities. That's no partnership, and it ought not to form part of this legislation.

Local authorities, if they're given the right resources and particularly if there are strong requirements for preparing environmental, health, and land use compatibility information on the part of the applicants – and this is supported and checked with research by the provincial government and provided to those local decision-makers – can make uniform, I believe, and competent decisions about these matters. But the problem is that nobody wants to live beside one, and is the government then going to force Albertans throughout rural Alberta to live next door to these hog operations, which destroy their quality of life? That's the question that needs to be decided in this Legislature, Mr. Chairman, and our party is coming down very clearly – and unfortunately it seems to be the only party that's coming down very clearly – in favour of the people in rural Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

9:00

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just make a few comments and to encourage the House not to support the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has proposed. To do that, I think we have to talk just a little bit about what we have now, why we need this legislation, and why it's important that the responsibility for siting, monitoring, auditing, and compliance rests where we believe this bill places it.

First of all, this is a very valuable industry to the province. There is no question. I don't think there's any argument. There may be some debate on the numbers the Premier laid out, because he might suggest that this was reported a little bit differently. But the fact is that this industry will grow, can grow, and should grow. Agriculture contributes on the value-added side $9.2 billion to this province's economy in agriculture and food. Food and beverage processing: about 4 and a half billion dollars of that today is in the livestock industry. We're not talking about some little operation that has no potential or no contribution. So it should, could, and will grow, but it must grow in an environment that protects the soil, water, and air in this province.

How are you going to do that? Well, we've done a number of things. One, this government, as I indicated a few days ago in this House, initiated a groundwater study on intensive farming in this province some dozen years ago in southern Alberta. Why? People said: "Why are you doing this? This is kind of a risky thing to do." No, it isn't; it's the right thing to do. You monitor your water levels in your soil and your groundwater before you have a problem, not after. That way, you can identify if there is an emerging problem and you can deal with it. We know that in parts of this province we have intensive farming. You have irrigation, you have applications of herbicides and pesticides, and you have application of waste. We don't call it waste anymore; it's manure. It's a very valuable commodity; it's no longer waste. So you should know what's happening, and we do. Today we continue to monitor about 23 sites to ensure that there is not an impact on our groundwater. That's important. That's why we should do this.

Well, if it were working so well today, we would not have Bill 28 in this Legislature. If you accept the amendment the hon. member put forward, you have to some extent what we have today except that we're going to take it a step further rather than having a voluntary code of practice, which we put out a year ago and which some municipalities accepted, put in place, some went further in their regulations, and some ignored totally. Now, I don't think that is a good, responsible way for this government to accept the protection of our air, water, and soil.

What's wrong with the picture we have today? We have one body responsible for siting. Then what happens? I talked to the municipalities and said, "Would you consider taking the responsibility for auditing, monitoring, and compliance?" They didn't feel that was possible, and I didn't disagree with them. They don't have the expertise or the resources to do that. So what you have today is one body that sites, and when something goes wrong, another body is expected to come in. I get phone calls today from municipalities saying, "Minister, you've got to do something about this operation." I said: "I didn't site it. Go to the municipality." "Well, we did." I say, "Well, go back." They say, "Well, we did." I'm still getting the phone calls, folks, and we didn't site it. Yet we're in there today using resources of the province to try and correct an issue.

Now, maybe the municipality that sited that operation isn't the recipient of the problem. It could be the town that's a few miles down the road that wasn't really consulted on the siting. Under this legislation today anyone who is directly affected or could be will be involved before a permit is given. Before. This process, if you examine it carefully, is very broad at the bottom and narrow at the top. Today what we have is something that's very narrow at the bottom.

Believe me, I live in rural Alberta, and in fact I live one and a half, one and a quarter miles upwind of a hog barn, a very large one. I can tell you that you can do it quite successfully if manure management occurs. So you can do it. But if you don't have somebody with authority to deal with these, you have the potential for all of the bad things that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was talking about and you come in after the fact and start trying to remediate them.

We had a conversation with the Leader of the Official Opposition on a remediation, and I think he understood quite clearly after that that the difficulty was that we could offer technical advice, but until something went awry and Environment would step in and try and remediate it, we didn't have the authority. We have a responsibility as legislators, I believe, to protect the air, soil, and water quality of this province. I believe we're prepared to take on that responsibility, but to do that, you have got to have the authority.

Now, to suggest that the municipal governments are not involved in a meaningful way I think is wrong. We have clearly asked municipalities to forward their agricultural land use plans, which they told me they had, and to designate in those plans areas where they would say that confined feeding operations should not occur and the reasons for that. It could be future residential development. It could be another type of industrial development. It could be because they want a park or there's one close, or there's a lake or a stream or something that they don't think should be impacted.

The NRCB will look at that when they have an application come in. The next thing the NRCB will do is send the application to the municipality for their comment immediately. That is very meaningful. But somebody has to make the final decision. If you live in a rural area and you've been at one of these meetings where there are a thousand people – neighbours, friends, and family members – discussing one of these, it can be very unpleasant.

What we would prefer to do is to hear from the people who have concerns before the permit is given, address the issues they raise, eliminate as many of those as possible, and then come to an approval. If at the approval process the decision is made for approval, there is still an avenue of appeal. If it's the nuisance factor, which it sometimes is, as has been indicated – and I may disagree on which odour is the worst: a cattle feedlot or a hog barn – we'll ask the Farmers' Advocate, with a panel, to deal with that because the Farmers' Advocate has proven over the years to be a very good vehicle for dialogue between industry, producers, and community and has had very great success in resolving those issues.

Agriculture is a viable business in this province. It is considered a very important industry. We have land in this province that's considered for agriculture use. But when you ask a municipality if an agricultural activity is a permitted or a discretionary use and if you ask them if a country residence is a permitted or a discretionary use and you find out that in an agricultural community an agricultural activity is discretionary and a country residence is permitted, it is no wonder that the issue of land use and the use of agricultural land was one of the main topics at every ag summit meeting that was held in this province. Every one. So somebody needs to step up to the plate and take responsibility, and I think that in the interests of protection of the environment, of the soil, of the water, and of the air quality in this province, this process will do it.

The NRCB has the ability, with the expertise they will have in their cadre of people, to make sound, scientific decisions, and I think that is critical to this process. They are not Agriculture. They are not Environment. They are under sustainable development, Mr. Chairman, where I believe this fits very well, so you could look at it as a neutral body.

The one thing I totally agree with in a couple of comments, at least, from the Liberal opposition is that this is a matter of concern to the public, and rightfully so. It's a matter of concern to this government. I don't think we want to wait until we do have a wreck before we take an initiative and a responsibility. This is not something that we entered into lightly. It took several years of consultation and study. We had environmental groups working with us. We had industry groups working with us. We had people from the AAMDC and AUMA.

I fully understand and accept the concerns the AAMDC have over the loss of autonomy, but I believe that as we work through this system, they will see that indeed they are very much involved. We've had a discussion with them – I've had many – and they've talked to me about liability, if they could provide us input. I would suggest that they carry a huge liability today on potential problems on siting. So I don't think that's an issue that we should take lightly, but we should use as a reason not to go this route and to use their very valuable input.

I guess I have to come back to my first comment, Mr. Chairman, and I say, "What's wrong with this picture?" You have one group that sites. Who audits? That's a question today. Who is responsible for compliance? Somebody else? I don't think there are very many areas that you would say, "Well, you go ahead and you choose the place, but when something goes wrong, we'll come in and straighten it out." I think your chances of not having an incident are better if those decisions are made with sound science, good information, and the best technology we have and if the flow-through is continuous.

The desire of this government in this issue is to protect the air, soil, and water quality in this province for all its citizens. Anyone who thinks that anybody who has one of these practices would intentionally pollute the soil or groundwater should go and live out there for a while and realize that they drink that water; they don't have an urban water system with water treatment plants. They drink that water and they make their living on that soil, so it's in their best interests to protect it as well.

Mr. Chairman, to ensure that we do the right thing, I urge members to reject this amendment. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on amendment A1.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As much on the minister's comments as on amendment A1.

I guess the issue that we really have to deal with here – and the minister has talked about it but hasn't really answered it in the sense that she talks about the issues of siting, monitoring, and compliance. I don't think there's anybody in Alberta right now that would not recognize that this bill does create a process that facilitates that in terms of the environment and the environmental issues of intensive livestock operations. Pardon me; confined feeding operations. I have to get this term. I just can't understand confined feeding. Intensive livestock means a lot more to me.

What we end up with here, the issue that comes up, is the idea that within a particular local municipality the municipality is supposed to submit land use plans and designate what they want to see or do not want to see. My major contention in connection with reading this bill – and we have not seen the regulations yet, even though a few days ago the minister promised they would be here before this bill was in committee stage. [interjection] This is getting to be a dialogue, Mr. Chairman, but it helps to make the discussion complete.

When we're talking about how to make this bill functional, if we don't know what the regulations are, it either limits or expands the opportunity that we need to have to make amendments to the bill. It would be much better to have the regulations so that we can see how they work together with the operational parts of this bill, so that we can make it work without having to amend the bill if the regulations handle it. Without the regulations we may be amending the bill in areas that would be dealt with.

The whole issue comes down to: how do we make sure that the flexibility is there for the local municipality to say, "We don't want an intensive livestock operation at this point"? Under the current rules, where all they have is the option to deal with agricultural land either as a permitted or as a discretionary use of that agricultural land, what we're going to see them doing is going through and under the discretionary part defining intensive livestock out of certain areas. Mr. Chairman, I made a suggestion the other day: give them broader land use classification under the Municipal Government Act so that they can do it in terms of their land use classification, just the way urban areas do when they develop different industrial levels. This would be creating equality among our municipalities, because in the end the practice or the experience, the track record of land classification by intensity of use, whether it's industrial or commercial, has been proven to work very effectively in zoning. We should give the local rural municipalities that same kind of opportunity here under this act rather than deal with some new process where we don't yet know how it's going to work.

The other issue that I wanted to address is in the context of how the minister was explaining the working of this. She talked about the base of consultation. She talked about it coming together up here with a good decision. I guess the concern that I've heard from a lot of the rural municipalities and rural residents is: how broad is that base? This comes to defining what constitutes an affected person or an affected body. That's where the regulations at this point would truly help us understand the degree to which the community would be brought in. The example the minister gave when she started talking was about the town that was three or four miles away. Under the current definition of an affected party, that town would have no say. Is she telling us that under the new regulations a town three or four miles away will have a say, that they would be an affected party? Can they count on that, that if they are three or four miles away from one of these, they will have input in the process of dealing with the NRCB approval? What about a farm family three or four miles away? Are they going to have that same say?

So, in essence, if we're going to talk about how functional this bill is as we pass it, we need to know that kind of thing so that we can make the comments, go out and talk to people. When I have to answer my phone calls at this point in time, I can't tell anybody. Under our current practice, affected persons or affected bodies are only those who fall within the minimum distance requirements. Is that what I tell someone? I guess what I'm saying is that we want to make this work, because it's got to work for the safety, the environmental protection, and for the livability of our rural communities. If the current situation continues, chaos will rule, and we can't have that. We've got to have a comfort level in those rural communities that will, in effect, give those communities a sense that we've got to have a plan they can feel part of.

So with those comments, just in direct response to the things the minister said in connection with the amendment, this is, I guess, one way we can look at making sure that local communities still have a chance to have a say by not taking the decision-making away from them, but if that decision-making is going to compromise our environment, we've got to have provincewide environmental standards, Mr. Chairman. We've got to have a process built into this that will allow for compliance, for monitoring, and, in the occasional case when it effectively doesn't work, some kind of penalty.

We have to support this bill, and I hope we don't pass the amendment. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A1.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to, in closing, respond to some of the comments made by the hon. Deputy Premier and minister of agriculture. I think one of her major points was dealing with the difference between the power of siting such an operation and then the authority to set regulations for environmental quality for health and agricultural purposes and the enforcement of those regulations. I think the history of government in Canada and this province is replete with examples of these types of jurisdictions being divided and shared between different orders of government. Certainly for environmental regulation with respect to urban land uses, which I guess I know a little better than I know about agricultural land uses, those powers to regulate are in the jurisdiction of the provincial government and the enforcement thereof is with the provincial government, but certainly the land use and the permitting of industrial operations lies with the city, and these are not incompatible. They work just fine. As long as you have a strong and effective protection on the environment side and it's enforced, the city is competent to make decisions about which land uses are compatible.

Now, I know the province has struggled with some of these operations that have not been well sited, but who is in the best position to make sure that one of these things is not sited in a way that creates a nuisance or a hazard even for surrounding residents? Is it in fact the bureaucrats in Edmonton, or is it best left with local people, who are responsible and accountable to their neighbours and their friends?

The hon. Deputy Premier also talked about the unpleasant public meetings that sometimes occur when these things are to be sited. Well, that's part of the democratic process that those of us who have served at the local level know very well. I've also had to face those kinds of meetings for the siting of shopping centres. The women's prison comes to mind and a number of other very, very hot and very large public meetings in my old ward, ward 3 in northeast Edmonton. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that in northeast Edmonton people take their politics very seriously. They don't take any prisoners. They let you know exactly where they stand on issues, and that's the way it should be. That is exactly what local municipal democracy is all about. If the people don't want it, who is going to say that they're wrong and they should be overruled? I think that seems to be what's being suggested here.

In terms of incompatible land uses between jurisdictions, I know that the hon. Member for Leduc and I originally served on the Edmonton regional planning commission. These planning commissions existed throughout the province and were very effective, Mr. Chairman, in harmonizing land use between municipalities and making sure that urban uses took place in urban areas and agriculture and rural uses took place in rural areas. It was the then minister of Municipal Affairs, Dr. West, who abolished these bodies and has created a real dog's breakfast when it comes to incompatibilities of land use as between jurisdictions. The system that was put in place subsequently has failed miserably, in our view, to ensure that harmonization of land uses between jurisdictions takes place and that we have good neighbours in place.

I don't think there's anything the hon. Deputy Premier has said to change our view that local municipal democracy and jurisdiction need to be respected by this government. You either believe in it or you don't.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I am glad to get the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 28, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001. I was trying to speak in second this afternoon, and after the hoist proposal of course it got voted on and I wasn't able to speak. I've listened carefully to the speakers tonight, and I've read through some of the other speakers that came before me in second, and it strikes me that this debate is really about: is the glass half full or half empty? Is a compromise acceptable?

In this case we're talking about: does the province taking control of this intensive livestock process and offering environmental controls trump the fact that this legislation will take away a municipal government's ability to decide what their community looks like and what's in their community? That's why I'm struggling with this legislation. It's, you know, an A plus and a D minus. Is it acceptable that that averages out to sort of a B, or do I say no because I just can't accept that it's too flawed and you need more work on it? In my experience with legislation it's not a good idea to pass something that's really flawed, because it takes a long time to get it back up on the boards again, and in the meantime you've condemned a whole bunch of people to probably 10 years of living with pretty flawed legislation.

Now, I'm back to the beginning of the argument again. I think that the environmental controls offered in this legislation are really important. It is a good solution to the problems we've been experiencing around intensive livestock operations, and that's important to me. It's really important to the people I represent in Edmonton-Centre. Environmental issues consistently come in at number 3 anytime they've been asked what their top three priorities are. Environment comes a consistent third no matter what. They're very environmentally aware in Edmonton-Centre. My second largest e-mailing list to people who have indicated that they want to receive information from me is the environment list that I've got, and they're all constituents. They pay attention, they read a lot, they think about things, and they're right on top of it. So when I'm standing in here representing them and scrutinizing this bill, I have to take very seriously the environmental solutions that are being offered by the government in this bill, and it carries a lot of weight. At the same time, I am really distressed by the loss of authority, the loss of control, the loss of sovereignty, if you want to put it that way, of municipalities to control the community around them, and I don't know that I'm willing to sacrifice one for the other here. [interjection] I did. You weren't paying attention. [interjection] Thank you.

So let me go back and look at this. We're in Committee of the Whole, so when we look at a sectional analysis, in section 2 we've got the definitions happening. You know, right away there are words that start to jump off the page at me, and it brings back many other discussions about legislation in this Assembly and, frankly, bad memories, because once again we've got that things will be decided by regulations. Regulations, regulations, regulations. This act is filled with: it'll all be decided by regulation. Frankly, I don't believe this government anymore, and I don't trust this government anymore, because nothing's been done here to make me believe that you're going to follow through on this. You can shake your heads sadly to me. I'm shaking my head sadly at you. I don't believe you. I don't trust you.

You know, the regulations that we were supposed to get for Bill 11 – just pick any bill that we've debated in here; we don't get the regulations. You refuse to send the regulations through to be reviewed by the Law and Regulations Committee even though we keep asking for it, and that would be a good way to review things. The regulations are not available to the public easily and sometimes not at all, whereas you can get legislation on-line now. Excellent idea; good transparent government. That's what I really mean by transparent government, but you can't get the regulations. My colleague the Member for Lethbridge-East has mentioned a number of times – I mean, how can we make decisions on this bill when we don't know what these regulations look like? Now, evidently there's been some discussion here or some agreement – and I hope I'm not putting words in people's mouths – from ministers on the other side to provide these regulations. Well, we're in Committee of the Whole. How much longer do we debate this bill without seeing the regulations?

AN HON. MEMBER: Third reading. That's their answer.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, if we get them by third reading. No, that's not soon enough for me, and my experience in five years in here has been to not give the benefit of the doubt, because it is not the best thing for the people in my riding and, frankly, I don't think it's often in the best interests of the people in Alberta.

Sectional analysis. That was the very first section, and I went off on a . . . The regulations in here – and the government keeps doing this. You know, the proposal is – now, this has got more substance to it than many of the other bills – “trust us; we'll do it all in regulations.” Well, I don't trust you.

Okay; moving on. When we look at what's available in those first couple of sections, in section 2 one of the things I think we need to note is that municipalities with a population of less than 3,500 are not required to have land use plans. There are other kinds of settlements, summer villages and stuff, that are also too small to have them. They fall below the cutoff for a land use plan, so some of the stuff that's in here that's supposed to protect doesn't apply. I think that there are a fair number of communities that are of that size in Alberta and need to be considered in this.

I find section (b.8) contradictory, frankly. What the heck is this? I'm still in section 2(c)(b.8). “‘Generally accepted agricultural practice’ means a practice that is conducted” and then it goes on to say “accepted customs and standards as established” and then jumps forward to saying “without restricting the generality of the foregoing includes the use of innovative technology used with advanced management practices.” Huh? Sorry; that contradicts itself, that we're supposed to go on age-old agricultural practices except we're gonna mix technology in with it. That doesn't give us anything.

Now, moving on. Oh, the nuisance provision in section 4. This is interesting. It provides limits to liability for the agricultural operator if the land use bylaws are not contravened and where the NRCB process approves them and generally accepted agricultural practices are followed. So as long as what the NRCB is saying is followed or their processes are followed, then nobody can complain about what the operator has decided to do or the agricultural operator is not liable, if I'm going to use the correct language there. So when the NRCB gives approval, then the NRCB prevails over the land use bylaw. Well, we were just looking at the land use bylaw and where it takes precedence, and here is the NRCB taking precedence again.

I've got in my notes here that the original press release said that the Farmers' Advocate would have the authority to establish the agricultural practice review committees, and I'm wondering what happened to that, because I don't think I've seen it in anything recent, and I haven't heard it talked about tonight. It looks like the minister is keeping control of that grievance process. That strikes me as curious.

This legislation does seem to be a struggle between authority of levels of government, and you've got the larger or the higher level of authority overriding with concerns about the greater good for the greater number. Then you have a lower or a local level of government, a smaller level of government, which is allowing for people to make decisions about their own life and what's around them.

Now, I think it's not too hard to look at the parallels between what happens between the federal government and the province and in this case the province and the municipalities. I note that this government acts in an absolutely contradictory manner. They believe, when they're in the argument and they're the smaller one, that everything should go their way, but then when they are on the higher level compared to the municipalities, they again think it should go their way. Maybe they're being entirely consistent. They just want their way all the time.

I think what's also contained in the discussions around this legislation – and there's been a lot of discussion about it. This has been out there for nine or 10 years and has come around a couple of times on the committee circuit, with a number of people being involved in that. I think there are larger issues there that we've never really had the opportunity to discuss, issues like: what kind of a province do we want, are we willing to do anything for development, and are we willing to sacrifice anything for development and to make money? That's certainly where this government seems to come from many times, yet in this legislation there are some pretty good environmental controls being put into place.

In Alberta we've moved from being a rural agrarian society to being an urban society. Two-thirds of Alberta's population now lives in Edmonton or Calgary, so populationwise we're certainly the greater number. Does that give us the right to be dictating what's happening in the rural areas? I think that's a good point to be argued. I'd be interested in hearing what others have to say about it.

Then we get into some fairness factors. If we're willing to say, "No; we want rural Alberta exactly as it was; we want to protect the family farm," then we're into a lot of subsidies and insurance schemes and a lot of other ways to keep the family farm operating, because it's not terribly viable right now. The changes, what's happening with our rural centres as well, and how much money the urban dwellers really want to invest in rural Alberta: I think this would be an interesting discussion to have, because I think there's a lot of sympathy for people living in the rural areas and in rural centres and a lot of strong feelings about supporting a family farm as compared to moving to a corporate farm. This is what we're talking about in this legislation, corporate farming, in essence.

How much and how far are we willing to go with foreign ownership or ownership from outside of Alberta? As soon as we get into corporate farming, we've got shareholders or owners who could easily come from other places, and it's not easy for us to detect that or track it down. Do we have any laws about that? We don't. You know, all of Alberta could belong to somebody else and we wouldn't necessarily be paying attention or know. I think that, again, is part of that larger discussion about: what do we want Alberta to look like? What are our priorities? What's our criteria ranking to make decisions about what's happening in our province?

Now, when I look at the environmental controls, I think especially around water there are two issues that are paramount for me. One is safety and the other is quality. If we don't have safe drinking water, then we have failed miserably, and we certainly have to protect safe drinking water above all else. We need water to live. We don't have a choice about that.

Certainly when I look at pre-eminent scientists like Dr. Schindler, who just recently was in the paper, he has concerns about what's being proposed in this bill because he thinks that water quality could be impacted when we start talking about going from 2 million hogs to 12 million hogs. The size of that alone, to contemplate how much that is going to affect our province – how much manure can be produced, and how much can be safely composted or integrated or used in some other way? What's the likelihood that our water system could get tainted by that amount of manure being generated in the province or being generated in a small area in the province? That carries a lot of weight with me.

I'm back to the original argument: do you go for the environmental controls that are being offered, balanced against the loss of the autonomy or the sovereignty of the municipal areas? I was uneasy about that to begin with. When I start looking at respected scientists and scientists that have spent a lot of time in this area and, frankly, have won some honking big awards for their expertise in this area and they have questions about what's being proposed in this bill, I hesitate even further.

This bill is just not good enough. It's not covering enough bases. It could be better. I look back to my constituents and their expectations of what I will do on their behalf and how I will carry their wishes forward. Environmental concerns are really important to them. For all of the sympathy and interest that's been expressed about overall Alberta and protecting our non-urban lands, the environmental concerns come first. In this case I think that what's being proposed is not good enough. For me the glass is half empty on this one.

It's been very interesting in this debate that in fact we've had two members, the Member for Leduc who's sponsoring the bill and the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, get up and actually give information and debate in a way that I don't see very often here. It wasn't delivered to be cute. It was genuinely supporting their argument and their side of the argument with good information and valid arguments, I think. I'm struggling to remember, but I don't think I've ever seen that happen in here before. So this bill must be something pretty special, and I hope that everybody's paying attention to it because I think its impact or its potential impact is huge.

My time is up. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Given the hour, I'd move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 28 and report bills 27 and 29.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 27 and 29. The committee reports progress on Bill 28. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:50 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 21, 2001 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 01/11/21
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Her Excellency Ambassador Garcia de Madero, ambassador of Mexico, and her husband, Mr. Manuel de Madero. This is the ambassador's first visit to Alberta since her recent appointment, and we are looking forward to a fruitful and beneficial working relationship with her. I also want to extend a special welcome to the Mexican consul general, who is accompanying the ambassador.

Mexico, Mr. Speaker, is a growing trade and investment partner for Alberta. Since NAFTA was introduced, the province's exports to Mexico have increased tenfold, and two-way trade totaled over $750 million last year. Alberta and Mexico work together in many areas, including energy, agriculture, tourism, education, housing, and technology. This visit is a good opportunity to discuss ways to expand Alberta's relationship with Mexico, particularly given recent discussions about continental energy markets and forging stronger ties between Canada and Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that our honoured guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recognition of national Family Violence Prevention Month I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a former MLA, Ms Pamela Paul, who is seated in your gallery. I'd ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour and my very esteemed pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special guests who are seated in your gallery. They are, of course, members of and workers for the world-renowned Ukrainian Shumka Dancers of Edmonton.

Shumka has been described as a shining jewel in the crown of Canada, a cultural icon of Alberta, and a great cultural ambassador for our city of Edmonton. I've had the great pleasure of being associated with this outstanding troupe in many different capacities for over 38 consecutive years. While the entire group now numbers over 40, I am so pleased that at least 10 representatives are here today in conjunction with their announcement a few days ago to establish a professional touring component as they embark on an even greater and wider world stage to benefit their group, our province, and our country in this their greatest effort ever. My colleague from Redwater will comment further on Shumka later this afternoon.

I would ask each of them to rise individually as I introduce and announce them to you: Andrea Stelmach, president, current dancer, and niece of the Minister of Transportation and MLA for Vegreville-Viking; Mr. Michael Sulyma, producer and former dancer; Mr. Dave Ganert, associate artistic director and current dancer. Another list of current dancers: David Hayduk, Larissa Opyr, Corinna Crockett, Tara Wood, Douglas Howell, Murray Howell, Mykola Gauk. Their artistic director is Mr. Gordon Gordey, who unfortunately had another commitment and could not join us.

I know that you are a great fan of theirs, Mr. Speaker, and I know that you and other members will want to join me in giving them the very traditional, very warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to present a petition signed by over 50 Albertans urging the government to allocate additional funding to schools to allow teachers to better serve students and to allow an increase in teachers' salaries.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition urging the Legislative Assembly to in turn urge the Government of Alberta to provide health care coverage for medical supplies for diabetic children under the Alberta Health Care Plan and provide financial assistance to parents to enable them to meet their children's necessary dietary requirements and cover costs incurred in travelling to Diabetes Education and Treatment Centres outside their own communities in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this brings the total signatures to this petition to 1,000 today. Thank you.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petition I presented yesterday be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to provide health care coverage for medical supplies for diabetic children under the Alberta Health Care Plan and provide financial assistance to parents to enable them to meet their children's necessary dietary requirements and cover costs incurred in travelling to Diabetes Education and Treatment Centres outside their own communities in Alberta.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Bill 219

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001 (No. 2)

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001 (No. 2).

This bill would enable the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development to ensure that the province's fisheries resources are promoted through the active management of habitat, the control of pests, and through rationalization of fishing licences. Bill 219 will establish guiding principles for the natural sustainability of Alberta's fisheries.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 219 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three tablings. The first is five copies of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund 2001-2002 second-quarter report, also the tabling of the first-quarter report for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and the annual report of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund for the 2001 year-end. The heritage savings trust fund is a $12 billion fund. It has served Albertans well over the past 25-year history, and I'm pleased to table these reports today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of the environmental protection security fund's annual report. The purpose of the fund is to hold security deposits as a means to ensure land reclamations on sites such as mines and oil development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In keeping with this government's openness and accountability, I wish to table the proper number of copies of the answer to Written Question 1.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association annual report. I'm pleased to say that the Minister of Energy, in fact, was on many of those amusement rides between April 1 and March 31, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. leader of the third party suggested that we were closing our beds for children who were in need of care from prostitution. We have in fact not closed any beds. The beds are identified here as having been transferred to another facility, and the adults that were primarily occupying the facility known as Crossroads have been assigned to beds in 62 other places.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual reports for the following authorized radiation health administration organizations: the Alberta Dental Association, the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, College of Chiropractors of Alberta, and the annual report from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to table today five copies of the 2000-2001 Year in Review of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. It's a review of activities of the council and their consultations with Alberta's seniors.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I provided the government's 2001-2002 quarterly budget report for the second quarter to all MLAs. We have also made this report public, as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. I am now tabling this quarterly budget report as the amended consolidated fiscal plan. This revised plan is required by section 8 of the same act whenever a second set of estimates is tabled during the fiscal year.

I am also tabling the second-quarter activity report for the year 2001-2002. This document describes the major achievements of our government during the recent period.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today including the Health Disciplines Board annual reports for the years 1998 and 1999, the Public Health Appeal Board annual report for the year 2000, the 2000 Mental Health Patient Advocate office annual report, and for the mastication exercises of members of the Assembly, the College of Dietitians of Alberta annual report for the year 2000-2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today from constituents. The first tabling is a letter from Jean Thorburn, who points out that her rent has increased 36 percent in a little over four years and is asking for rent controls.

The second letter is from James Cribben, who also has concerns on the deregulation of electricity and its effect on renters and points out that he's experienced rent increases of $100 or more per month.

My third tabling is a copy of a petition, which was not in order to be presented, from a number of people who are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta "to put in a system of rent control."

The final letter is from a constituent who signs himself as Bernard, who's pointing out that his rent has increased from $567 to $695 in one year.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from Ed and Sherry Horvath of Warburg to the minister of agriculture. Mr. and Mrs. Horvath would like to add their names to the list of people who see great danger to our environment, health, and rural farm sustainability if the government decides to allow numerous ILOs to establish themselves in Alberta.

My second tabling is the required number of copies of 45 requests from Albertans who want the government to support the class size targets bill to "end the need for parents to fundraise for classroom basics" and "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers for our children."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd like to table requests from citizens in Dunvegan, Livingstone-Macleod, West Yellowhead, and Calgary-West urging the government to vote in support of the class size targets bill to "end the need for parents to fundraise for classroom basics" and "ensure that Albertans can attract and keep the best teachers for our children."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter that I received from the Minister of Energy on November 13 of this year assuring me "that announcements about the Regulated Rate Option for 2002 are imminent."

I'd also like to table the required number of copies of 20 requests from Albertans who want the government to vote in support of the Liberal opposition's class size targets bill "so that classrooms will no longer be overcrowded," to "end the need for parents to fundraise for classroom basics," and to "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers for our children."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the required number of copies of 19 requests from Albertans who want the government to vote in support of the Liberal opposition's class size targets bill "so that classrooms will no longer be overcrowded," so that parents will no longer need to fund-raise for classroom basics, and "ensure that Alberta can attract and keep the best teachers."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of an internal memo dated November 16, 2001, from a senior manager of the Ma'Möwe Capital region children's services authority. The memo lists 21 children's services delivery agencies whose contracts are being terminated and another five whose contracts will suffer contract reductions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a budget 2001 document that sets out the government's four-year plan to cut corporate taxes by $1 billion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. I'm sorry, but I didn't notice you before.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of requests from Albertans mostly from across southern Alberta who are asking for support for Bill 218, which gives appropriate funding for the education system of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. McFARLAND: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly today a lady that has run the constituency office in Little Bow since I first became elected. It's with pleasure that I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. She's always greeted every constituent with kindness, understanding, and in a really personable way. Mrs. Lois McLeod, please rise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, would you please join me in congratulating Mr. Speaker today as he celebrates his 22nd year as a Member of the Legislative Assembly for the constituency of Barrhead-Westlock. Mr. Speaker was first elected to his seat in 1979. Well done, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: That's right. I forgot about that.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Congratulations, Mr. Speaker.

I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a young man I have known since he was born, our godson Brenden Mallette. Brenden is from St. Catharines, Ontario, and is a project co-ordinator with a marketing company from Ontario. Brenden was the co-ordinator for two very exciting projects in the past year. In February of this year Hockey Day in Canada held the longest game of outdoor shinny on the Bower ponds in Red Deer, Alberta, with Don Cherry and Ron McLean. Two central Alberta teams braved the cold and the snow to play for more than 19 hours to set a new official record for the Guinness Book of Records. Brenden co-ordinated this project. Brenden also had the very unique and once-in-a-lifetime experience of escorting the Stanley Cup on a national tour across Canada. Brendan is presently in Edmonton working on another marketing project. He's seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce today to you and to the Assembly two classes from Fort Saskatchewan's James Mowat school. They're accompanied by their teachers, Ted Fellows and Mr. George Sebest, as well as parents Sandie Thomson, Wanda Brett, Michele Regush, Betty Adam, Charlene Folkinga, Cheryl Babichuk, Linda Morin, and Heidi Shannon. They're seated in both galleries. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four elected members and the CAO of the municipal district of Greenview No. 16: three new councillors, Roxanne Perron, Tom Burton, and Ed Tollefson; the reeve, Mr. Tony Yelenik, who entered politics directly from primary school; and Mr. Gordon Frank, the premiere municipal CAO in Alberta. I would ask them to rise in the members' gallery to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a sister board member, a new member, a trustee of the Catholic school board in Fort McMurray, Lisa Daviduck. She's here today, and I'd ask her to rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you. Today I'm very pleased to rise and introduce to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly a really interesting delegation from my constituency. They've just been newly elected or acclaimed to the municipal district of Big Lakes. Present with us are Craig Bissell from Enilda, Randy Ehman from Gilwood south and Sunset House, Veronica Adruchiw from Jossard, Joyce Dvornek from Gilwood north and Triangle, as well as Will Marx from High Prairie. They're seated in the members' gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly students from Mount Royal school in my constituency. There are four adults – Mr. Woelfle, Mr. Newby, Miss Osetsky, and Miss Chris – as well as 19 students. Mount Royal is only one of two schools in Canada offering a micro-society program. The program provides students with an opportunity to run their own society, including government, law enforcement, and business ventures. I would call on the Assembly to give them the warm traditional welcome if they've arrived in the gallery at this point.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My Sedgewick school group is to arrive a little bit later, and I would like to ask if I could introduce them later.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you the lady who manages my office in Taber, Alberta, Mrs. Angela Wolgen. Angela does a great job of helping and assisting me. Certainly I'm appreciative very much of her efforts, and I would like to tell my colleagues that the people in our constituency also appreciate her greatly. So I would ask her today to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. She's seated in the public gallery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to make two introductions. The first I make to you and through you to the members of the Assembly on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry is a group of 75 visitors from Bishop Greschuk school, and I would ask them to rise now. Their teachers are Mr. Esch, Mr. Tarulli, and Mrs. Madron, and the parent helpers are Mrs. Wilke, Mrs. Henriksen, and Mrs. Bennett. Would all members of the Assembly join me in giving them a warm welcome.

My second introduction is one that gives me great pleasure to bring to you and through you to all members of the Assembly: Mr. Tim Shantz, who I believe is somewhere in one of the galleries today. Can you please rise, Mr. Shantz. Tim has a master of music from the University of Alberta and is a rapidly rising star in Canada's choral community as both a singer and a conductor. Tim has toured nationally and internationally. He's a regular soloist with Pro Coro Canada and Ensemble de la Rue in Edmonton and has been a soloist with Spiritus Chamber Choir and VoiceScapes in Calgary. He will be a feature guest with the Alberta Baroque Ensemble at their concert in early December. As well, this year he's conducting the Richard Eaton Singers, one of the country's foremost large choirs. Please join me in extending him a warm welcome.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government released its second-quarter fiscal update. While this update projected a balanced budget for the government, it did not give any indication of the size and scope of the deficit that this government has downloaded onto the RHAs, the school boards, and children's authorities. My questions are to the Premier. How can the Premier claim that his budget is balanced when groups like RHAs, children's authorities, and school boards are running deficits?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the simple fact of the matter is that it is against the law in this province to incur or to run a deficit. If the hon. leader of the Liberal Party wants us to break that law and to borrow and borrow – I mean, we can spend as much money as the world demands. It's simple to borrow, and it's simple to raise taxes. All of those things are simple. What is hard and what is difficult is to challenge the boards, authorities, commissions, agencies, and government departments to find new and better and more effective and more efficient ways of doing things to curb expenditures. That's what's challenging.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: if you want to challenge these boards to make sure that they do what the law requires, why don't you do what the Auditor General has asked and include their budgets in your budget so that Albertans get a total picture of the position we stand in as a province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of accountability, that's why we have quarterly reports and we report to the Alberta public on a quarterly basis.

I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance report again publicly in this Legislature, as she did this morning, so that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition gets a clear picture and all Albertans get a clear picture of what our finances are all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning when I released the second-quarter update, it was very important to assure Albertans that the situation in this province is still very, very positive. We will have the highest growth in our economy of any place in Canada, two times the national average. We have the highest consumer confidence of any place in this country, and we have the lowest unemployment rate of any place in this country.

All that being said, our government has a responsibility under the Fiscal Responsibility Act to meet the commitment we made to Albertans to have a balanced budget. That is exactly what we presented. In fact, the situation here is that because of the corrective action that was taken in October as a result of our caucus and cabinet retreats, we are able to manage the global economic slowdown. In fact, I daresay we're the only jurisdiction in Canada that is able to go through this economic slowdown in a managed process. So we have struck the right balance, I believe.

In fact, when the hon. Leader of the Opposition referenced that we were going after areas such as health care, I would refer him to page 5 of the second-quarter update. Clearly, the budget for Health and Wellness, when we first entered the budget in April of this year, was for $6,271,000,000. At the second-quarter reporting that budget had increased to $6,390,000,000, so I'd ask him to read the reports before he sends out the wrong messages to Albertans. We clearly have, I believe, captured the priorities of Albertans. In this fiscal plan we're maintaining that balance and we're working under a prudent fiscal regime.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

2:00

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again. You talk about a clear picture. Would it not be a clear picture if you included all of these other agencies in your fiscal plan and in your fiscal reports so that they can see exactly where we stand as a province instead of just picking on your budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we're doing precisely that, and that is totally consistent with our policy of being open and accountable.

Relative to the picture itself, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm a little perplexed by the hon. leader's question. We couldn't be more open and accountable if we tried. We've already filed these reports. We had a press conference this morning, which he attended. We filed them in the Assembly. We report on a quarterly basis. Just a month ago I went and made an interim update to Albertans to let them know what the situation was within the province to alleviate unnecessary fears that may be in their minds that our economy was not going to be positioned to be able to deal with the global situation.

In this province – let's go over it once again – we are probably the best suited in this whole country, in fact possibly in North America, to deal with a global economic slowdown. Why? Because of prudent management and a good fiscal regime that allows us to take corrective action throughout the year through the quarterly updates. That's exactly what we do. That's the contract we have with Albertans, and we're sticking with it, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the Provincial Treasurer: can you show me where in that second-quarter update the budgets are that show the balances for the health authorities, for the school boards, for the children's authorities? Where in that report do those things show?

MRS. NELSON: I think, Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the House yesterday that the minister of health and I met the night before with the new chairs of all of the regional health authorities that have recently been appointed and/or elected in the last civic election to go over the fiscal situation. We work as a team. The Health and Wellness minister and the Finance minister met with the regional health authority chairs and said: we are a team together to deal with some of the pressure points that will be there in the frontline delivery of service. We also put out a message to them and said: when you're looking at some sort of a tightening within your system, please be sure to focus on non frontline delivery. Yesterday I believe the Premier filed in the House one of the first press releases to come forward, from the Calgary regional health authority, where they were able to identify $30 million that could be saved from non frontline services; in other words, from administration.

We were encouraged – and I think this is important – by the new chairs and that they were prepared to work co-operatively with the Minister of Health and Wellness and with myself, and we will be there to help assist them. They are very positive that we are staying the course and dealing with the contract with Albertans to have a balanced budget and not put this province ever again into financial jeopardy.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, again to the Provincial Treasurer: where in that report does it show the balanced budget for Albertans when they're now having to wait longer to get medical services, when their health care system is not delivering, when their education system has been shortchanged? Where is that balance in that report?

MRS. NELSON: You know, Mr. Speaker, sometimes my son says to me: hello? Well, hello, Mr. Leader of the Opposition. This is not rocket science. I just indicated to you that there was a news release that was filed yesterday by the Calgary regional health authority, which they didn't have to do, and it clearly identified that they effectively were able to save $30 million in administration without negatively affecting any of the frontline delivery of services. They are committed to doing that, and we believe them to be responsible people to run those health systems for the benefit of all Albertans.

Insofar as the other deliveries, you heard at great length yesterday from the Minister of Children's Services showing that the co-operation with the regional authorities is delivering to those in need, and they will be taken care of. Now, if the Leader of the Opposition can't accept that, that's just too bad.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Premier on this one. Mr. Premier, will you commit that if the next quarterly updates show any kind of shortfall in revenues, you will transfer money out of the money that's waiting for debt repayment to sustain programs for this year and make the adjustments next year to replenish those dollars?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is having so much fun with this that I'll ask her to respond.

MRS. NELSON: Okay. Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. What the leader of the Liberal opposition is asking this government to do, in plain language, is to take the money that was allocated to debt retirement last year, pull it back – so effectively increasing the debt of the province – spend more, and put us into a deficit position. This is his idea of being fiscally responsible. It's the most irresponsible suggestion that I've ever heard come from that side. The answer is no.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Teacher Remuneration

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night Edmonton public teachers voted over 99 percent in favour of job action. They hold this government, not the local school board, accountable for the current impasse. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier made a deal with the AUPE president that kept everyone happy, why won't the hon. Premier take any responsibility for making a deal with the teachers? Why don't you say, "Hello, Larry Booi"?"

MR. KLEIN: Well, I will say hello. I'll say hello in this fashion, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the hon. member that this government took the unprecedented step of putting in as a line item in the budget a guaranteed 6 percent raise for teachers, a guaranteed minimum with the ability to negotiate with the individual school jurisdictions higher amounts if indeed those jurisdictions deemed it the right place to spend those extra dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that while the Edmonton schoolteachers voted to seek a strike vote, by a proportionate amount in terms of percentage the Medicine Hat teachers voted exactly the opposite way.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. In the second-quarter fiscal update that came out this morning, there is a line item that the Department of Learning spending has been reduced by $42 million. Why can't all or part of that money be used to settle this dispute now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to what we have put into education in this province, I will have the hon. Minister of Learning respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know and as everyone in this Assembly knows, there was a request come to balance our budget by putting in 1 percent. What the Department of Learning did was arrive at the $42 million without touching any school board programs, without touching any university programs. What we did is we touched administration. We looked at what we were doing. We decided to cut back. We withdrew from some initiatives that we had, and we found the $42 million without cutting programs.

I think we need to put this into perspective. The hon. member here is assuming that the $42 million would solve the problems that are out there with the teachers. Each 1 percent of an increase for teachers' salaries is worth $23 million. Mr. Speaker, there's about 1 and a half or 1 and three-quarters percent there.

2:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that teachers' salaries have increased by 12 percent since 1995, which is less than the rate of inflation, why did the minister claim yesterday that their salaries have increased by 17 percent?

DR. OBERG: Because they have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Children's Services Funding

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 1, just one and a half months after the serious cuts are scheduled to take place to children's services, the next installment of this government's corporate tax cutting program will take effect and cost the Provincial Treasury $275 million. My question is to the Minister of Finance.

AN HON. MEMBER: Are you sure you want to go there?

MR. MASON: I know she's on a roll today. Why does the Minister of Finance believe that frontline services to children are less important than cuts to corporations' taxes?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I don't.

MR. MASON: Then, Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance find the money from corporate tax or anywhere else in her budget to restore the cuts to children's services?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Children's Services indicated in the House yesterday and on talk shows this morning that the frontline delivery for children in need is being met.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, a second supplementary question: will the Minister of Finance admit that important social services are not properly supported by Alberta's tax base and have become dependent on up-and-down cycles in oil and gas prices?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, what we do when we build a budget is we build a plan that has balance. We create a framework that tries to deal with all of the elements that have a part in a fiscal plan or picture for this province. Some of them deal with delivery of frontline social programs, others deal with taxation programs, and others deal with financing programs. The balance is there within this fiscal plan. I think it's quite clear. Insofar as this particular situation as it deals with the Children's Services budget, I'd ask the Minister of Children's Services to supplement my answer.

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite simply, Children's Services is facing a serious social problem because families are abandoning children: a 13,000 caseload last year, 15,000 this year. It doesn't take much thinking to understand that it's not this government that's leaving children in difficulty; it's the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I have already identified that 31 percent in one region are 11 years of age and over, parent/teen conflict. Does that sound like we're abandoning children? We are taking those children on in government because people out there aren't doing their job. Let's pull together and get it done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Long-term Care Accommodation Rates

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government announced an increase in the daily accommodation fees for those residents in long-term care facilities. My question, though, is to the Minister of Seniors. Can you assure this Assembly and indeed all Albertans that no senior who cannot pay the increased daily fee will be turned out of a long-term care facility?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to point out that the long-term care accommodation charges in Alberta are the lowest at the maximum end of any province in the country. Our current maximum is some $860. One of the higher ones is in the $4,700 range, in Nova Scotia. We also have an income-testing mechanism via the income tax for providing seniors' benefits, and that's not asset testing, I want to point out.

Getting right to the crux of the matter, these accommodation charges are roughly one-third of the total cost of being in these long-term care facilities, which are health driven. So the answer to the member's question – would any person, senior or otherwise, be denied accommodation to a long-term care centre based on their need? – is no. They will be accommodated regardless.

With respect to seniors specifically, which make up the vast majority – some 12,000 seniors are in there – we have made provision within our seniors' benefit plan to increase the support level to the seniors to minimize the impact of the increase on the accommodation charges.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member of Calgary-West.

Aboriginal Children's Services

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is living paycheque to paycheque. Yesterday the Minister of Children's Services indicated that she was cutting preventive social services for children even while the number of children requiring protection is, in her words, soaring. This month alone 21 agencies serving children in and around Edmonton have had their provincial contracts terminated. Most of these agencies serve native and Metis children. To the Premier: how can this Premier, who portrays himself as a defender of aboriginal interests, stand aside while his government pursues a policy that terminates so many services to aboriginal children?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that question is so unfair. [interjections] It is. My wife is totally committed as is the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development as is the Minister of Children's Services.

Relative to the specific question and what we're doing for Metis people and aboriginal people and children at risk generally, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Premier. I have the list of reductions and the list of terminations of programs. Let's be clear that almost 40 percent of the children that are served by our department are aboriginal children, but there was no implied targeting of children at risk that were aboriginal children. Quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker, and I would take exception to anybody that would suggest there was a targeting of aboriginal children.

MS CALAHASEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, anytime that we have aboriginal programs or projects that are on the chopping block, it's a concern. However, we have to also look at the fiscal picture in terms of what we're doing and making sure that everyone in this government has to deal with the fiscal situation. My recommendation to the Minister of Children's Services, who has responded, is that she will be able to make sure that when the fiscal picture changes, we will continue to do the work that we've been doing in terms of aboriginal children and the needs that they have requested, which is very important.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is to the Premier. Has this government done any assessment of the long-term cost increases to the education, justice, and health care systems that will result from the cuts to preventive social services?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, numerous studies and programs have been brought into effect relative to this specific issue, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Children's Services respond.

MS CALAHASEN: First of all, if you look at The Future: Meeting Priorities, Sharing Benefits, this fiscal update, as well as the second-quarter activity update, there are many projects and areas that we've been dealing with relative to making sure that the First Nations and the Metis people are going to be taken care of. Mr. Speaker, just to read a few. On page 2, Listening to Albertans, we participated in a First Nations Cultural Camp to increase their awareness of aboriginal traditions, spirituality and communities, and to promote culturally sensitive prosecutions. The camp was in direct response to a recommendation from the Justice Summit, "Increase sensitivity and cultural awareness."

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other areas that we've looked at. In fact, we've "consulted with the Grand Chiefs of Treaty 6, 7 and 8, and Alberta Assembly of First Nations Vice-Chiefs to address the Aboriginal Policy Framework and related activities." Also, Strengthening the Alberta Economy: we "led an initiative to create a coherent government approach to address Aboriginal participation in the Alberta economy." We've got quite a list here. As well, we've "promoted a northern Alberta-based pilot project related to career options through apprenticeship training."

Mr. Speaker, as we go through this list, you will see that throughout the whole government we have been dealing with issues that will address the concerns that have been brought forward by First Nations and Metis people, and we will continue to do that no matter what happens.

THE SPEAKER: I gather, hon. minister, that that document has already been tabled in the House.

MS CALAHASEN: Yes, it has.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: how does the minister defend a government whose policies place an accelerated paydown of the debt above the interests of aboriginal children?

MS CALAHASEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, hello? Again. If any government in this country has done anything to be able to deal with First Nations and Metis people, it is this province through the leadership of our Premier. Also, this is the first province that has an Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development ministry specifically allocated to make sure that we address the issues of First Nations and Metis people. It's those concerns that we have to bring to the table, and as minister it's my duty to be able to bring them to the table so my colleagues understand the concerns that have been expressed by First Nations and Metis people.

We've done some wonderful things, Mr. Speaker. On the aboriginal policy framework we've got some wonderful partnerships that have been working for the economic benefit of aboriginal people, mostly to be able to address the poverty issue that has come forward as a result of some of the needs that have been expressed. Those are the areas we have to deal with. If we don't have an economic base for First Nations and Metis people, we don't deal with the social concerns. So it's through the aboriginal policy framework as well as a number of the concerns that I've brought to my colleagues that we've been dealing with. I'd like to commend my colleagues on the work that they've been doing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Cost of Living Indices

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Economic Development has received many requests from businesses and municipalities for information that would help them make cost-of-living and wage adjustments for employees. As a result, the department recently released a price comparison survey for 10 Alberta communities that measures price differences on 266 specific goods and services regularly purchased by Alberta consumers living in cities and small- and medium-sized towns. Edmonton's costs were set at 100 with the indices for all other centres set relative to that measure. The shelter index, for example, ranges from a low of 90.7 in Lethbridge to a high of 152 in Fort McMurray.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, preambles are meant to be precise. Question.

MS KRYCZKA: My main question to the Minister of Economic Development: what other uses or applications do you see for the indices in this survey?

MR. NORRIS: I'll attempt to be a little more brief in my answer than in the preamble, Mr. Speaker, but I want to thank the member for the question. The surveys we do are at the behest of the business community and other business agencies to look at what kind of activity is going on in Alberta. This was one of those reports. We use them as a marketing and development tool to sell the message of how under this government Alberta has become the absolute best place in Canada to do business. We see the use of this . . . [interjections] When it's such a good climate . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, thank you very much, but there is a reason why I'm here. If we talk through the chair, we don't have those interruptions.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Okay. My supplementary is to the Minister of Seniors. Acknowledging that the cost of basic goods and services such as shelter definitely varies throughout the province, what plans do you have to review the Alberta seniors' benefit program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated, we've looked at support to needy seniors through something called the seniors' benefits program, which was geared to the income tax that they pay.

Secondly, with respect to housing, the facilities that we manage are restricted to 30 percent of their gross income, which would equalize the housing wherever they are in the province. Yes, we are taking a careful look at the market-basket approach to determine cost of living across the province to see where we might be able to bring that into play without driving the cost of administration out of sight.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes. Thank you. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Have other provinces adopted the market-basket of goods and services approach, and have you considered implementing it for low-income Albertans?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, the market-basket measurement is currently under review and development by Statistics Canada. All jurisdictions in Canada, including the federal government, are planning to use it once it is ready. I believe the kickoff date is likely to be the fall of '02, but preliminary calculations are being made available to provinces as we speak.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Children's Services

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For days the Minister of Children's Services has been telling the House that cuts will not be made to programs that directly affect children. Yesterday the minister seemed to backtrack, indicating that her responsibility was primarily child protection and other community agencies could now help to pay for other services. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that most early prevention programs do not deal with child protection, will those programs now be cut permanently?

MS EVANS: Well, no, Mr. Speaker, they will not be cut permanently. Some are deferred. Let us again be clear about what we've got in our budget: $647 million. I was asked to take a 1 percent reduction. Since that time, Treasury has added $4 million back in for aboriginal programs that we get a refund for from the feds, and our Treasury has also recommended $2 million from the national children's benefit.

Where we have family growth and caseloads in Alberta communities, we have squeezes on intervention programs. Deferral, delay, new partnerships, new strategies, administrative reductions: all of these are strategies so that we can in fact, number one, protect those children most in need and, number two, look after those children who have less risk at a different rate.

Mr. Speaker, we have had in some communities, such as region 15, no need at all to cut some of those programs because they are turning the corner on child welfare caseloads. They are doing family case conferencing with native communities. They're spending time with the extended community to make sure that the children are looked after. That's the very thing, the very transformation we need throughout Alberta: a genuine interest in communities, not in bashing each other for what we are or are not doing but in fact working together to get those children looked after in the streets where they live.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the same minister: is it fair to children to change the scope of the department's work three-quarters of the way through the fiscal year?

MS EVANS: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's the same thing when we use an adjective to describe children as poor. No child is poor. Children live in poor circumstances. Children have needs. We look after those with the greatest needs.

I gave a response today to the media that I will give in this House. If there are people that can illustrate that there are children who are seriously at risk because of any program that has been cut, then bring their names to me, because I will follow up on behalf of this government and make sure that no child is placed in a risk that would compromise their future safety and well-being.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alberta Supernet

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has undertaken a number of important initiatives designed to promote a knowledge-based economy, one of the most important being the Supernet project. This high-speed, high-bandwidth project, bringing transfer rates of up to 5,500 pages per second on a regional network compared to maybe three pages per second on individual dial-up now, will create economic expansion through teleworking opportunities, for example, as well as bringing enhancements in a number of other quality of life issues such as telelearning, telehealth, and so on right across Alberta. However, there are a few questions that have arisen. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. Now, considering that a large number of Alberta libraries are already using the Alberta public libraries electronic network, or APLEN for short, to interconnect their data resources, how will the Supernet project impact on APLEN?

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. First of all, to be clear, we already have about 280 or 290 public libraries connected with the APLEN system. Basically, APLEN, which is the Alberta public library electronic network, is a system to connect these public libraries through the Internet. In doing so, our public libraries across the province will have the ability to communicate better and faster with each other. They will be able to share resources, do interlibrary loans on a more expedient basis. They'll be able to be provided with access to the worldwide web, and so on.

Now, specifically with respect to provincial libraries, the intention of the Alberta Supernet is actually to enhance what's already there, the APLEN system, and this will be provided as an option for those libraries who wish to participate. When all is said and done, Mr. Speaker, the libraries that are connected through the Supernet will be able to access more information. That information will be of a higher quality, and critically to them, they'll be able to access it in a much more speedy fashion. So that's where we're going, and that's what we're looking at.

MR. LORD: My first supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What is your department doing with regards to Supernet to specifically address rural Alberta libraries' needs?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, just today I noticed three news releases, each announcing different web sites: one on workplace information, one on learning information with schools and universities, and another one with a LearnAlberta web site. Access to this information is important to all Albertans, and the Alberta Supernet will provide high-speed access to every library in our province. What better place in a community for people who need access to information to come, to plug into the network, and to find that information for themselves. That is what Supernet brings. It brings opportunity to every Albertan to access this kind of information.

MR. LORD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Innovation and Science: could you give us a very brief update on the progress of the overall project?

MR. DOERKSEN: I am happy to do that. This is a three-year initiative which involves over 10,000 kilometres of fibre optics and 2,000 kilometres with wireless connectivity solutions. We are close to finalizing the build schedule. We've been negotiating with various players in this whole concept, Mr. Speaker, and we're moving ahead to make sure that this happens.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Commercial Fisheries

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Does the minister support the Alberta Commercial Fishermen's Association's request for financial compensation for those who voluntarily leave the industry?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very appropriate question, with Bill 219 being introduced today. It is a very good question because it is a very important issue, I believe, to all Albertans. As you are aware, there is a lot of pressure on our lakes as far as fisheries because Alberta, for example, only has a thousand fish-bearing lakes. When you look at Saskatchewan at 94,000 and Ontario at 250,000 and our populations has grown by 35 percent in the past, you can see where the pressure is at. We are definitely seriously looking at the proposal submitted by the Commercial Fishermen's Association. What we need to do is develop a policy, which I will be taking forward through the process in the very near future, to look at how we may rationalize the commercial fishing industry. The demand is high, especially for walleye and pike, and the population is growing. There are over 800 commercial fishermen in Alberta, and the plan from the commercial fisheries is to ask us to try and reduce that to about 200, or a manageable level, with some form of compensation program in order to reduce that industry.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Minister of Finance. Does this minister support compensation for people voluntarily leaving an industry that may no longer be economically viable?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the purpose of question period is to ascertain government policy, not to seek opinions. Now, if this question can deal with government policy, go ahead, hon. minister, but simply an opinion, one is forbidden.

The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll ask the Minister of Finance again. Does this minister support this minister's policy on providing compensation for fishermen who are leaving a commercially viable industry?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may come as a surprise to the opposition, but we have a process in our government called standing policy committees where policies are vetted, debated around the table as a group, as a team that ran under the leadership of Premier Klein, and when we make a decision . . . [interjection] I'm sorry. The Premier. Our Premier. [interjections] Well, it was called Ralph's Team. I'm sorry; I can't help it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government made a terrible miscalculation last year when it gave away billions of dollars of province of Alberta revenues by cutting corporate taxes in half over four years and reducing tax rates for the top 1 percent of taxpayers by over 40 percent. But corporations and the wealthy are not the ones paying the price for the government's miscalculation. Those paying the price are vulnerable children, including those who are victims of sexual exploitation. My first question is to the hon. Premier. How can the same Premier who a few years ago sponsored a flagship bill to protect children from being sexually exploited through prostitution turn around today and justify unilaterally axing 80 percent of the funding for the Crossroads outreach safe house in Edmonton? How can he?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, certainly I'll have the hon. Minister of Children's Services respond, because the question posed by the hon. leader of the third party is not quite truthful. It's inaccurate to say the least. The Minister of Children's Services has become very innovative in her approach to this particular situation to protect the interests of the child and at the same time rationalize the delivery of service.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, as I identified in the tabling earlier, there are five beds at Crossroads. Most of those beds were being occupied by adults whose needs will currently be addressed by our Minister of Human Resources and Employment if they are of a social services nature. The one bed that was for treatment of children who had been affected by sexual exploitation has been assumed for use at Catholic Social Services' protective safe house. About a month ago, with the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, we toured that safe house. There was plenty of capacity there at that time, and I am sure that throughout Alberta we have a keen interest in adding capacity. The capacity at Crossroads for children exploited by prostitution is not necessary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the minister of aboriginal affairs. Given that our own government's fiscal decisions have allowed the axe to fall disproportionately on frontline programs in the Ma'Mōwe Capital health region that are delivered by aboriginal agencies for the benefit of aboriginal children, how can we help the minister to fight more successfully to defend those programs within her own government?

MS CALAHASEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, we are always concerned when we deal with the issue of programs or projects that would be on the chopping block. We are however hopeful that with the fiscal situation improving, we will be able to get those programs back in place.

The other issue is that I think there are many other projects and programs that are available through the federal government as well as some of the people in the communities. There has been some capacity-building that has been occurring in the communities. It certainly would be very helpful to those projects to be able to talk to those people as well as to the foundations that are available for any help that's possible. In fact, anything that we can do to make sure that these programs and projects are going to be helpful for the students – we'd like to be aware of those to see what can be done to help them through the process. As was indicated, we have that possibility.

2:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the Minister of Learning. How can the Minister of Learning defend a fiscal plan that's so patently unfair that over 99 percent of over 3,000 teachers who teach for the Edmonton public school board voted last night in favour of holding a strike vote? Are all of these teachers. . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader, there has to be some continuity and symmetry with the questions involved.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Crop Insurance Review

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There have been many challenges in the agriculture industry in the immediate past and present. Farmers are having to cope with low prices, drought, and higher input costs. The crop insurance that is presently in place does not seem to reflect the security necessary to adequately insure crops against the elements. I understand that there is a review in place examining the effectiveness of crop insurance. My question today is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can you tell me the progress of this review?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, certainly there is no question, I'm sure, in anyone's mind in this Legislature how important the agriculture industry is to our province at $16.8 billion. Quite a high amount of the processing sector comes from the crop sector, food and beverage processing. So indeed it's important that we work with the industry to have an insurance program that protects them from the risk that is there, primarily weather risk but also commodity price risk.

We've had a review that has been ongoing in different stages for about three years in this province, Mr. Speaker. Recognizing the importance of the industry and the need to move quickly, some changes were made this year, in this 2001 claim year. That was in areas of the index calculation, the creation of insurance for some different crops, which wasn't there, and a reintroduction of a harvesting allowance, which was important. One more important but maybe somewhat controversial program this year was the introduction of a pilot pasture insurance component.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Who was involved in the present review?

Was there industry input, and will there be any costs to the government on these crop insurance changes?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the review was headed by Mr. Charlie Mayer. It included Mr. Eugene Dextrase, who is from the Alberta Grain Commission; Pat Durnin of Kathyrn, also from the Grain Commission; and Dan Cutforth of Barons. Further to that and very importantly, consultations were held with producers through focus groups and general meetings throughout the province to ensure that we looked at the broad needs of the producers wherever they are in this province. We've recently completed focus groups again with producers in the various regions of the province, and we've said to producers: "This is our idea of how we could improve this program to more properly reflect the input costs that you incur to produce this crop. If you applied this program to your farm, would it indeed do the job?" This is somewhat novel, rather than doing it after the fact, and it's worked quite well.

MR. DANYLUK: My final question, Mr. Speaker: when does the minister expect the recommendations to be implemented?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there are three critical factors that deal with how quickly you can deal with this. One, it's a tripartite program, which means that it is partnered a tripartite way between the federal government, the provincial government, and the producer. That negotiation has to occur on agreed upon changes, so that timing of getting the changes agreed upon.

The other complexity to this is, of course, cost. The member asked in his previous question about cost. Mr. Speaker, the costs of implementing the few changes we did this year in addition to the program cost was about $9 million. I would suggest that if we were to implement the other changes that have been discussed with the focus groups, it would be considerably more than that. Because the federal government is a funder in this program – the province and the federal government produce over 60 percent of the premium in this program and the producer about 38 percent – it is critical that we have agreement from the federal government to ensure that this program can go ahead.

Shumka Dancers

MR. BRODA: Mr. Speaker, the award-winning Ukrainian Shumka Dancers have excelled in the preservation, promotion, and presentation of Ukrainian folk dance for 42 consecutive years. As Canada's oldest Ukrainian dance group they have thrilled audiences around the world and brought much acclaim to our province.

Mr. Speaker, one of our colleagues, the Minister of Community Development and MLA for Edmonton-Mill Creek, was a Shumka dancer for six years, a former president, and also the group music director for nearly 30 years. Last Saturday I joined him at a special gala fund-raiser for Shumka, where I also watched my niece's husband, Evan Zukiwsky, perform in their presentation of Cinderella. This fund-raiser officially launched Shumka on a new and exciting path. In response to public demand they announced the creation of a professional touring component from within their ranks. Volunteerism will remain an important part of their future direction, but a professional touring arm will result in this Alberta treasure being shared with even more international audiences.

We wish them every success as they embark on this exciting new direction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Capital Regional Health Authority

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today to recognize – and it's appropriate today after the Minister of Finance's comment: hello? – the Capital health region for receiving the highest accreditation status possible from the Canadian Council on Health Services. This accreditation is a credit to all health care professionals who work in our region. It clearly shows that Capital health is not only meeting the national standards for excellence in delivery of health care services but in many areas is helping to establish those standards for all Canadians through the new services, new ways of working together across the system.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge Mr. Neil Wilkinson, chairman of the regional health authority board, and Mrs. Sheila Weatherill, CEO of Capital health, for their leadership and commitment to health care in this region.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Pembina Institute

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the excellent research being done by the Pembina Institute. In particular, I would like to acknowledge the work being done by Mary Griffiths and Tom Marr-Laing on the detrimental environmental effects of coal-generated electricity.

The Pembina Institute has legitimate concerns backed by solid research about the damaging effects to Alberta's air and water quality that will come from the expansion of so-called cheap coal technology. By their calculations even if the province's economy remains strong and electricity demands continue to grow at 3 percent per year, there will be enough electricity from less polluting sources for at least a decade without adding the 2,200 megawatts of new coal plants being proposed. They believe that with emerging technology new methods of generating power will be economically viable in the very near future.

I agree that it is important to look for the best available technology. When we consider what makes one technology better than others, corporate profit and industrial expansion must not be the leading factors. Government standards must be set to protect humans, not dollars. If we are not careful, we will be dealing with long-term health and environmental impacts long after the money has all been spent.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

2:50 Shereen Ziegler, Miss Rodeo Canada 2002

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to recognize Miss Rodeo Canada 2002, Shereen Ziegler of Wainwright. For those members who don't follow the great sport of rodeo, she was crowned at this year's Canadian Finals Rodeo on November 9, having been chosen from a very strong field of candidates. Besides being a community volunteer and an excellent horse trainer, Shereen is a 4-H alumnus and a graduate of the agricultural production and business management program of Olds College.

Her responsibilities have already started. She represented Canada at the Regina Agribition, and she will represent our nation at the National Finals Rodeo in Las Vegas on December 5. Coming from a rural background Miss Ziegler will be an excellent spokesman not only for the great sport of rodeo but also for rural Alberta. She is a most deserving winner.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Pamela Paul Endowment Fund for the Prevention of Family Violence

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated earlier, November is national Family Violence Prevention Month. Today I am pleased to recognize Pamela Paul, former member of this Legislature and a member of my constituency and a survivor of family violence. Pamela has spoken publicly nationally and internationally to draw attention to family violence. I would also add that as a further measure of her courage and strength Ms Paul is a survivor of a brain tumour.

Undaunted in her efforts to educate communities about family violence, Pamela has established the Pamela Paul endowment fund for the prevention of family violence under the auspices of the Edmonton Community Foundation. In the fund's early stages interest from donations will defray the expenses of groups or organizations that deliver presentations to schools on family violence issues.

I wish to congratulate Pam for her courageous survival roles and trust her endowment fund will grow and prosper to the detriment and elimination of violence within the family.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Teachers

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was National Child Day. This is a time for us to remember the commitments we have to the next generation of Albertans. The commitment of teachers to our children is stronger than ever. Today I would like to recognize the dedication of teachers across the province. Without their enormous efforts children everywhere would lose out.

Teachers are currently working in some of the toughest conditions seen in a long time. Classrooms are overcrowded. Many teachers pay for resources out of their own pockets. I would like to commend all the teachers who continue to make children their number one priority. Teachers across Alberta show their devotion to children every single day. They continue working long after the students have gone home. They come in on weekends to work. Sometimes they aren't finished marking papers and exams until late at night. A lot of teachers take time out of their summer to update their professional skills.

Teachers give students all the energy they've got. We cannot calculate or put into money the value of this gift to our province's youth.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mai Ponath

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am truly honoured to recognize Mai Ponath, a truly amazing and upbeat Scottish Calgarian who succumbed to complications from open heart surgery on September 26, 2001. There is consolation in believing that Mai is now joined with Wee Jimmy, her dear friend and companion, who passed away in 1990.

Even at 79 Mai pursued her love for tai chi and swimming, especially in the ocean in Barbados, and I think that just maybe she still swam across Lake Windermere in early morning hours this summer. Mai was always a tireless volunteer. She loved her Beta Sigma Phi sorority, was a lifetime director of the Calgary-Elbow PC

Association, and recently volunteered in my Calgary-West provincial campaign.

Mai lived each day to the fullest, upbeat, with independence and with dignity. With her indomitable spirit she was always an inspiration to her beloved family and friends. The heavens can only be a brighter and happier place with Mai and her great big smile.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, did you rise on a point of order?

MR. MASON: No, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 5.

[Motion carried]

Health Care Premiums

Q5. Mr. Mason moved that the following question be accepted. Of the $690 million the government receives annually for health care premiums, what portion is paid by government and government-funded agencies such as school boards, universities, colleges and technical institutes, regional health authorities, regional children's authorities, and other government boards and agencies on behalf of their employees?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We accept Written Question 5.

[Written Question 5 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 14, 15, 16, and 17.

[Motion carried]

Alberta Treasury Branches

M14. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the April 30, 1997, document entitled Advice to the Provincial Treasurer re Alberta Treasury Branches as prepared by Alberta Treasury.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, sometimes you just get into deja vu all over again with the members opposite. This information was requested in December of 1997. In fact, it was requested through a freedom of information request, and the then Treasury Department disclosed 55 out of 102 pages and partially or entirely withheld the rest on the basis, among other reasons, that the disclosure would be harmful to economic interests of the government and Alberta Treasury Branches.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, the Information and Privacy Commissioner upheld Treasury's decision, and through order 98-019 on January 4, 1999, he stated:

After carefully reviewing the records, I find the disclosure of the information could reasonably be expected to harm the economic interest of the Government of Alberta or the ATB, and in particular, could reasonably be expected to result in financial loss under section 24(1)(c)(i) or prejudice their competitive position under section 24(1)(c)(ii).

The document requested in this motion is held properly under the Treasury and under the direction of the privacy commissioner. The members opposite know this, and I therefore would reject this motion and ask them to please refer back to their documents from the previous session so as not to ask the same questions again. So this would be rejected by the government.

[Motion for a Return 14 lost]

Alberta Treasury Branches

M15. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the nine-page document sent by the president and CEO (chief executive officer) of the Alberta Treasury Branches to the Provincial Treasurer on December 23, 1997, relating to a change in status and/or privatization of the Alberta Treasury Branches.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is part of the same type of request that we talked about in Motion for a Return 14, and the document has been properly withheld under the 1997 FOIP request, as was confirmed again by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. I'd ask that the hon. members opposite please review their documents from the previous session, because we are obligated to follow that act and not put ourselves and other interests in jeopardy based on our own privacy act within this Legislature. So we would be negligent if we did indeed release those documents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, I'm disappointed in the rigidity of the Treasurer opposite. Certainly we would be negligent if we didn't continue to pursue this information, and being as this is a request that's now four years old, it is perfectly reasonable that we request the information again. The minister keeps talking about a year ago. I'm pretty sure that 1999 was in fact two years ago and going on three years ago, so it's perfectly reasonable that we do request this information again, and we'll continue to request it. There's information there that the people of Alberta need to see. I'm disappointed that the Provincial Treasurer has turned down our request for this information.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 15 lost]

Alberta Treasury Branches

M16. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the memorandum and supporting documents entitled ATB (Alberta Treasury Branches) Options sent by the Deputy Provincial Treasurer to the president and CEO (chief executive officer) of the Alberta Treasury Branches on December 16, 1997.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, once again the difficulty I have – and I refer back to when the hon. member on the previous motion talked about the disappointment of my office not releasing this data. We have a commissioner, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, who reviews requests for freedom of information and protection of privacy. It would be very difficult and negligent if this office ignored the ruling that came out of that position, because he is acting based on a piece of legislation that was put in place by this very Legislature and then became the law. Surely she is not suggesting that we ignore the very law that was passed in this House that resulted from an all-party committee coming forward with recommendations on freedom of information and privacy.

I will then again state the commissioner's instructions.

After carefully reviewing the records, I find the disclosure of the information could reasonably be expected to harm the economic interests of the Government of Alberta or the [Alberta Treasury Branches], and in particular, could reasonably be expected to result in financial loss under section 24(1)(c)(i) or prejudice their competitive position under 24(1)(c)(ii).

Surely this hon. member would not ask the government to place the province of Alberta or the Treasury Branches in that untenable position. I hope that she's thinking this through a lot clearer than that.

So, once again, Mr. Speaker, the government must reject this motion for a return.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I will make a correction to the Provincial Treasurer in that I'm disappointed in her rigidity, not as she previously quoted me for.

I think it's perfectly reasonable that we continue to ask for this information. Obviously it's of some concern to the government if they continue to be vexed by financial information that is four years old and counting. I think it's perfectly reasonable that we continue to ask for the information, and one of these days the government will be far enough away from it that they won't be afraid to let it out.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 16 lost]

Alberta Treasury Branches

M17. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the document entitled Alberta Treasury Branches: Alternative Business Outcomes prepared by Alberta Treasury on December 22, 1997.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to have clarification whether the hon. member meant my rigidity or frigidity. We weren't quite sure.

MR. SMITH: Perhaps it was virginity.

MRS. NELSON: No, not virginity. Frigidity. The Minister of Energy asked for further clarification, Mr. Speaker.

I want to assure the hon. member. I don't think we're getting across to her that there is a law in this province. The government cannot break the law. The law should not even be in question in this House, particularly by members opposite, as it was their members that sat on the committee that came forward with the recommendations to create the law. Now when they don't get what they want, they all of a sudden want it changed. If you're anxious to change that, then you would have to bring forward amendments to amend the law. We have a law in this province that we must follow. We all agreed to put an independent body in place to review those requests. We accept the answer that comes back from the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Sometimes you don't like the answer. Well, that's unfortunate, but that's the way the law is written. It's there for the purpose of making sure that there is not any interference in the rulings that come forward, that we have to abide by his or her ruling.

Again, on this motion for a return, it pertains to the same package of information that was reviewed under the FOIP request. I've already read his answer twice, Mr. Speaker. It's obviously not sinking in. Therefore we must again reject this motion for a return.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. The Treasurer has given me far more information about her personal life than I know what to do with. I would never, ever claim to say . . .

THE SPEAKER: Please, hon. member. Let's deal with the issue. But the chair would have to agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre that perhaps the House received more information than it really required.

Please proceed.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important and I acknowledge and recognize that the government asked for protection from the freedom of information and protection of privacy minister and received it in this instance, but we must all remember that classified information that's classified at one point is not classified forever. That is information that will eventually be released. There's nothing in that FOIP Act and there's nothing in the ruling from the freedom of information and protection of privacy commissioner that says that information will be so forever. So thank you very much for reading the document three times. I heard you the first time. We're going to keep asking.

Thank you.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 207
Alberta Personal Income Tax
(Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001

THE CHAIRMAN: We have an amendment, amendment A1, that we're on at this moment. Are there any further comments to be made with regard to amendment A1? The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Chairman, just for clarification. I'm presuming that on the notice of amendment there's an A and a B. Are we dealing with just the A first or A and B together?

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair does not recollect what was proposed at the time. It's my understanding of the document that they were together, so we would be speaking to and voting on A and B of amendment A1.

MRS. NELSON: Okay. Thank you very much for the clarification, Mr. Chairman.

I'm very pleased to rise in the House and speak to Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001, as proposed by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I'd like to congratulate the member for bringing this proposal forward and for continuing to represent his constituents with dedication and commitment. I'd also like to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for proposing amendments that improve the bill and enable us to consider its merits.

All that being said, Mr. Chairman, I can't support the amendment or the bill at this time, and I can't offer my support to the amendment and the bill for several reasons that I would like to outline very briefly. Before I go into that, I'd again like to comment on the thoughts expressed by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan in committee yesterday. I firmly agree with him that tradespeople are indeed an important part of our growing economy, and I support the spirit and the intent of this bill in that it aims to benefit the hardworking people of our province, the same people that are playing an important role in building our future. I have no fault with that aim at all. In fact, the member rather eloquently expressed appreciation for tradespeople in the province, and I certainly share that sentiment with him. This bill also reflects a philosophy that I hold near and dear, and that is that keeping taxes lower and lowering them if possible is an important goal, a goal that this government remains committed to. That being said, there are some distinct reasons why I can't support the bill or the amendment.

First off, Alberta follows a broad-based low-rate approach to taxes. This means low taxes for everyone rather than incentives for certain tax filers. This is an approach that Alberta supports, and I am reluctant to really deviate from that. Put simply, tax credits for some taxpayers mean higher tax rates for others. In fact, the Alberta Tax Review Committee examined the question of special tax credits in depth. They recommended to our government against adding new tax credits to Alberta's personal income tax system. Once we start targeting certain groups with credits, we have to make up that shortfall elsewhere, so even with the amendment, this would be the case, Mr. Chairman. That means we would be picking winners in a sense, and that is something that our government does not do. This proposed credit is really a grant, a grant delivered through the tax system. That is the reality, and Albertans are firmly opposed to grants.

Mr. Chairman, I've looked across the country to see what has been happening. If we pass this bill even with this amendment, we would likely encourage interest groups to bring forward other targeted tax credits, credits that benefit a narrow group of taxpayers and even erode the principle of broad-based low tax rates further. Each time a concession is made to a particular sector, it becomes harder to say no to another sector.

Ontario is an example of a province that has followed a path of targeted incentives. The province has introduced a number of tax credits including an innovation credit, a book publishing tax credit, a computer animation tax credit, a television and film tax credit, an interactive digital media tax credit, a sound recording tax credit, a co-operative education tax credit, a workplace accessibility tax credit, an equity and education tax credit, a property and sales tax credit. The problem is that these are one-off systems.

In the province of Quebec I think they have the all-time record for one-off tax credit systems. They have, of course, the tax credit for child care expenses, which the federal government already has. They have another one. They have a tax credit for adoption expenses, which the federal government has. They have another one. They have a tax credit for on-the-job training periods, a tax credit for job creation in the clothing and footwear industry, a tax credit for contributions to labour-sponsored funds, a tax credit for scientific and research experimental development, a tax credit for the taxi business, a tax holiday for foreign researchers, a tax holiday for the Quebec seamen, a tax exemption for employees with the International Financial Centre, a tax holiday for foreign specialists working in information technology development centres, tax exemptions for certain foreign specialists working in Montreal foreign trade zones at Mirabel, tax exemptions concerning the Montreal foreign trade zone at Mirabel for corporations, tax exemptions regarding income earned from the administration and management of new investment funds, research and development tax credits, tax credits for technology adaptation services, tax credits for design, tax credits for Quebec film and television production, tax credit for Quebec film and television production services, tax credit for shipbuilding or conversion, tax credit for railway companies, and on and on it goes.

The difficulty, Mr. Chairman, is that once you start the one-off, where does it end? So when we bring in this amendment, albeit it is narrowing the focus of the bill, the difficulty is that it doesn't deal with the issue of: how do you stay focused on having an overall lowest tax system that all Albertans can enjoy within this province?

Today in the province of Ontario, with this grouping of tax credits their finance minister is having to go back and all of a sudden realize, "We can't afford this." So once he put the tax credits in place, he now has to go back and pick which ones are no longer going to be able to continue. You start off by focusing on, "Let's give a special credit here and one there," and now you have to go back and say, "Well, we're going to pick that one to pull back and not that one," because they're going into the same fiscal situation in reality that we're faced with in the province of Alberta.

Now, in the province of Quebec their problem is even tenfold what Ontario's is. They aren't in the same sort of fiscal responsibility mode as Ontario and the province of Alberta are, so they're just borrowing from their savings plans at this point to try and keep this litany of tax credits in place. But the day comes, when you're running a debt that's $110 billion and growing, when something has to give. So they'll have to go back and identify which of these one-off tax credit programs won't be able to exist. Fiscal reality eventually sets in. Choices have to be made between delivering core programs and one-off programs, even with this amendment that has been put forward, Mr. Chairman.

So while I think it would be great to have lower taxes and I'm a major promoter of that, I would hope that not only would we not accept the amendment but that we would not accept this bill. I'd rather see us review it in an overall tax policy as opposed to one-off. So, Mr. Chairman, I can't support the amendment, and I really would encourage the House not to support the bill. I'd rather have us go back and review this in a broader scheme of tax so that we can put credits that go back right across the province to all Albertans, instead of focusing on one group.

Those are my comments. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments of the minister. I listened quite attentively and did not find a great deal of reference to the amendment, which we are currently on. I thought for sure you would have intervened but didn't see it happen.

At any rate, Mr. Chairman, these amendments were carefully considered with the help of the department in charge of such things. The suggestion was made that this amendment would help to strengthen the bill and would help to prevent any sort of opportunity for somebody who wished to defraud the government, to not pay their taxes, to illegally beat the system, to get around the whole intent of the bill and somehow maximize their deductions by defrauding the government and not paying their fair share. So on the advice of the department I suggested that we would be glad to accept this amendment and that we would move it forward and help to strengthen the bill and protect it, because as I understand it, there is in the tax system some difficulty with trying to keep track of these kinds of things in the section that it falls into.

By introducing this limit to the amount of deduction, we'll be able to capture all of the individuals that are currently journeymen and most of the individuals who are apprentices, who in some cases perhaps even pay $10,000 in their first year or two for the different tools required in their trade. Unfortunately, we can't broaden it beyond that; $5,000 seems to be an appropriate limit. It will, as I say, capture virtually all the tradesmen, and it will also capture most of the apprentices.

Perhaps later in the debate we can talk further about the special credits that Ontario or perhaps Quebec have and the difficulties there. Suffice it to say, Mr. Chairman, that the tax credits that were mentioned are really interesting, mostly going to corporations that set up some kind of project of some sort, whereas this particular bill speaks more to the individual. The individual has to buy some kinds of tools in order to carry out his trade. In fact, if the person worked in his garage in the back alley, he could fully deduct all those tools, but if he goes to work for some garage downtown and he has to buy his own tools, he's unable to make that deduction.

This is a simple kind of approach. When somebody expends dollars to earn an income and he's required to do so to earn that money, then it seems appropriate to allow those deductions to occur, just like any businessperson is able to do. Perhaps later on we'll have members speaking to the inability of these mechanics to incorporate themselves and set themselves up as a little company, like they might be able to do if they were a dentist or a lawyer or a doctor or something along those lines.

That would conclude my comments, Mr. Chairman, but I would urge the Assembly to accept the amendment.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to stand and speak to the Committee of the Whole today in favour of Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, as proposed by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is important to support this bill as it is an incentive for people, especially our younger generation, to join the trades industry. As we all know, the province is experiencing a shortage of workers in the trades. There have been reports that we may have to look to workers from other provinces to try to find people to fill our booming industry. Bill 207 will be another added incentive for workers to come to our province or for young Albertans to step into it.

Statistics have shown that demand for employees in the trades industry is monstrous. In June the unemployment rate for the industry, which was stipulated as trades, transport, and equipment operating and related occupations, was only 3.8 percent. This rate was far below the overall unemployment rate of 5.7 percent. This low rate is a telltale sign of how busy this industry is and how we must take steps to ensure it stays that way.

Section 2(2) of Bill 207 lays out a formula by which a tradesperson would be eligible for a tax credit on the very expensive tools necessary to work in their industry. I believe this tax credit will attract many more people to the industry as well as being an attractive benefit for the workers already contributing to our vast infrastructure by building our highways and ensuring that our homes and commercial buildings have the heat and plumbing they require.

Mr. Chairman, in 1998 the Alberta Tax Review Committee provided recommendations which sought to enhance Alberta's control over its tax system. In the government's move to remove the burden that was faced by Alberta taxpayers, many changes were made to increase the Alberta advantage. However, a tax credit for tools was not included. Bill 207 now introduces this important amendment. We know how important the tradesperson is to our province, and Bill 207 will ensure they know that they are appreciated and recognized.

Bill 207 allows the province, which already has extensively reduced taxes as a means of spurring economic growth, to introduce another mechanism of tax relief to Alberta workers who must regularly purchase, repair, and replace expensive tools. This government does not need to be reminded about the benefits of lower taxes. We have been promoting lower taxes for many years. We know that they put money back into the pockets of those who have worked to earn it. We know that lower taxes provide incentive for investment and growth. Albertans know how they want to spend their own money, and they do not need the government telling them how. This tax credit will ensure that there is money put back into the wallets of tradespeople in Alberta. We know the benefits, so let us now act on that knowledge.

Mr. Chairman, many apprentices and new tradespeople must have their own set of tools to begin working. This creates an initial barrier for new workers who do not have the money to invest in tools. Business owners often ask workers to buy expensive tools because it is very difficult to keep track of what workers need and what they don't need and who is using what. The amendment to the act will help these employers and their employees by providing some assistance with the high cost of tools. The burden of purchasing tools can be very, very large. Providing a nonrefundable tax credit for the benefit of tradespeople would remove that substantial initial barrier to entering this important and exciting career field.

There are approximately 50 accredited trades in Alberta. Electricians, mechanics, forestry workers, and oil field technicians are some of the tradespeople who are required to purchase a starter set of tools and then constantly upgrade them to remain competitive. For instance, if I was working in the oil industry as a battery operator for oil well sites and I had to buy my own tools, the cost would be astronomical. Some of the preliminary tools I would need are wrench sets – and those are both metric and fractional – hex-key sets, socket sets, bolt cutters, screwdrivers, pipe wrenches, and pairs of steel-toed boots. All of these tools would cost me in excess of $700. The pipe wrenches alone may cost up to $350.

People who are starting out in this industry need this tax credit, Mr. Chairman. I only gave the example of a battery operator, but imagine what the costs are for mechanics, when a good socket set alone could run over $200. This is only one of the many tools that are required. With initial costs like this, is it any wonder we are having difficulties attracting young Albertans to a career in the trades? We need Bill 207 to lend a helping hand to those just starting out.

Another example is one of a plumber. This is, again, another incredibly expensive trade. The number of different tools that you need is immense. The price of these tools could be up in the thousands and thousands of dollars, and this makes it extremely difficult for those who are trying to start out in the business. Bill 207 would be an immense help for those in this industry.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 207 also ensures that the government of Alberta will not be taken advantage of by dishonest people. With the new cap of $5,000 as outlined in the amendment to section 2, skilled workers who are using this tax credit will only be allowed to claim the capped amount. This will guard against people claiming tools purchased for other people that aren't actually used for work purposes. With Bill 207 we will attract skilled workers from across Canada, and we will be encouraging young Albertans to enter a booming industry that could very well face a worker shortage if action is not taken.

I want to emphasize that we are not alone in this crusade. As I have already mentioned, the federal government is spearheading an initiative to help the trade worker in Canada. We can now show our support for this industry by encouraging Bill 207. I encourage the committee to support Bill 207.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to be speaking today on Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001. I feel that implementing this tax credit lifts pressure off tradespeople who will in turn create efficient workers. I would like to briefly revisit some important advantages of Bill 207. If we follow the logic behind this bill, we'll be able to gauge the effectiveness of this tax credit for trade tools.

First of all, this Assembly needs no lecture about the benefits of general lower tax rates. We know that lower taxes put money back in the hands of those who have worked hard to earn it. We know that we can trust Albertans with their own money and that they don't need government to tell them how to spend it. We know that lower taxes provide a positive incentive for strong investment and growth. That is why over the past few years this government has brought in policies such as the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, which will give Albertans the most competitive income tax regime in the country. However, there are a growing number of Albertans that need incentive and opportunity to advance in their profession.

The trades professions, Mr. Chairman, are important careers that have a rare amount of independence and responsibility. This bill recognizes the importance of tradespeople, and it provides a means to improve the efficiencies of these occupations. Trades careers have a large amount of individual decision-making compared to other service careers. Tradespeople will determine how they will attack their assigned projects and to some extent what types and how much material will be used. Most importantly, tradespeople very often determine what tools they are going to use at their tasks.

Employers are increasingly placing the responsibility on the employees to purchase a personal set of tools because it alleviates their burden of purchasing, replacing, and repairing expensive tools. With trades increasing with technology, it is easier and more economical for the employer not to have responsibility for many sets of expensive tools that would be best cared for in the hands of the person who personally owns them.

In most cases tools are first acquired during the process of training in whatever specific trade someone might be pursuing, be it construction, plumbing, or welding. Especially in large shops tools are often owned by the worker for two reasons. First of all, personal ownership automatically encourages workers to look after tools to the best of their abilities. If they don't look after their tools, then the quality of the finished product suffers. The other important reason why tools are often owned by the worker is the difficulty for an employer to loan out tools to workers and have them returned as employees move from one task to the next. Availability is an issue, as is time.

In a sense all tradespeople, whether they own their own businesses or not, are entrepreneurs. Their skills and their tools are what they own and bring to the market. They are given a task and use self-direction and initiative to get the job done. It makes sense, then, that this government should recognize tradespeople as entrepreneurs and encourage them to fulfill their potential with self-initiative. The nonrefundable tax credit on tool ownership does just that. Like in other small businesses tax credits recognize the importance of having the best resources possible and the high cost of industry-specific tools.

Bill 207 would treat tools bought by tradespeople the same way it treats new tires purchased by a trucking company for its fleet. Just as with the owner of the new tires, the tradesperson, the owner of new tools for work, would now be eligible for a work-related tax credit. This credit would serve as an incentive to do more work and to do it better.

Alberta continually leads the country in economic growth, and new jobs are being created every day. Many of these new jobs are in construction and numerous trade-related industries. These industries are expanding, and a staggering number of projects are being developed all across Alberta. As a result, demand for skilled labour is increasing at an alarming rate. Alberta needs to ensure that there are enough skilled tradespeople to meet the demands of our growing economy. In order to meet this increasing demand, we need to provide incentives for people to enter these industries. This is what Bill 207 seeks to accomplish.

Mr. Chairman, providing a nonrefundable tax credit for the benefit of trade journeymen and apprentices would remove a sizable barrier that many people face when considering the possibility of entering trades. From electricians to heavy-duty mechanics to employees in forestry and the natural resource industries, these people are required to have a basic set of tools when they enter the industry and to continue to upgrade them as they progress in their craft. These tools are expensive but are required to do these jobs on a daily basis. Many of these industries are pillars of Alberta business, and we cannot afford to ignore the issues faced by their employees. The economic prosperity of our province relies upon the strength of these companies and the employees that make them successful.

This bill is necessary because of the often excessive price of tools for most journeyman tradespeople and apprentices. We are all aware that the prices of these tools make it difficult for tradespeople who buy their own to enjoy Alberta's tax relief initiatives like other Albertans do. Passing Bill 207 would give them the opportunity to perform much-needed and appreciated jobs.

Mr. Chairman, I am reminded of the fact that when I proposed my bill earlier in this session, it was in response to young persons who wanted to go into the trades as apprentices and who found that it was very difficult for them to finance not only the insurance on their cars or their trucks, which were sometimes old clunkers, but also to finance their tools and their tuition and their living circumstances. That's why Bill 207 is so important.

I believe that this is an important bill which will spur greater economic growth in this province by introducing another mechanism of tax relief to hardworking Albertans who must regularly purchase, repair, and replace expensive tools. The creation of a tax credit for the benefit of trade journeymen would recognize the continued growth in our trade-heavy employment sector. However, various trade sectors continue to grow, which will require more workers. I have a concern that this initial cost for tools is such a barrier that it would deter new generations of workers into trades. I believe Bill 207 would provide just the incentive we need for a new generation to choose a trade as a career.

I'm somewhat relieved to hear that apprenticeship levels have been increasing over the last decade, specifically in the early training. We heard that last evening when I had the opportunity to speak with those who administer and teach at the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, but I think there is still work to be done to increase these levels.

The chances for placement are substantially increased for those who have acquired tools of their own. This is often an unattainable expectation to have for new apprentices and workers but is becoming more the norm in the trade industry. As trades specialize more and more and as technology increases, there is a greater need for each employee to have their own tools and equipment necessary to do their respective job. Mr. Chairman, I fear that because employers have required those who work for them to purchase their own tools, the growth potential for new generations of trades workers in our province could be weakened. Bill 207 would help Alberta's chances to stop the widening shortage of workers in this sector.

I'd also like to say that I believe we have a responsibility here in this Legislature to enable our young Albertans and Albertans in many industries, including the various trades, to facilitate their advancement in their particular trade and not to put up barriers.

Mr. Chairman, the value of stimulating new generations of tradespeople in our province cannot be overlooked. I believe that Bill 207 is an investment in the growth of future apprenticeship trade workers in this province. I know, because I have heard from several young people in the trades and in apprenticeship programs in my constituency.

To wrap up the importance of the tax credit reward proposed in Bill 207, I would like to compare the importance of this bill to building a home. In order to build a home that will last for a long time, it must rest on a stable foundation. The basement cannot be made from cheap Turkish cement and a fine sand or the walls will chip and crumble under the pressure from the house above. The concrete for the foundation must be heavy in order to withstand years of pressure. The tar and thick sealant necessary to prevent moisture from seeping in from the ground around the basement cannot be worn and dry or it will further weaken the foundation. The two-by-fours and two-by-sixes used to frame the house must not be rotten and twisted but rather fresh and straight in order to hold up the walls. The windows must also have a tight seal to keep Alberta's biting winter air from blowing in. In other words, the hardware and supplies used to build the home must be of a high level of quality in order to do the job right and ensure that the home lasts for a long time.

Tools for Alberta's various trade industries work the same way. In order to do an effective job to the best of their abilities, tradespeople must have quality tools to work with. Furthermore, just as better supplies make a better home, better tools help tradespeople do a better job.

As the cornerstones of Alberta's business expand, we must give Alberta's hardworking, dedicated trade industries the opportunity to do their very best. Let's carry out Bill 207.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to join in the debate on Bill 207 and pleased to say that I agree with my dear friend the Provincial Treasurer on her concerns with the bill. I agree with you.

There are several issues that I would like to raise with the bill. The first has to do, actually, with apprentice training and the impact of this bill potentially on demand for apprentice training or the training for trades. Certainly a great number of people work in trades who are not designated as journeymen. They may be accomplished carpenters or other workers, but they carry out their work without a formal designation as a tradesperson. Clearly, this particular bill would give a great incentive to people to achieve that designation, which in itself is not a bad thing, but I'm wondering about the impact on training for trades especially when apprentice training funding is basically frozen at current levels and technical institutions are not opening up their training opportunities for new apprentices, to expand the number of apprentices. So I'm concerned that we might see a surge of people seeking to complete their formal training as journeymen and actually jamming up the training system for new students.

I'm also concerned, as the Treasurer raised, with the precedent that this sets. It's certainly the continuation of a trend that this sets. I know there are a great number of tax credits both with the federal system and with the provincial system, and they apply to all kinds of people, so if we just add one more tax credit, it could be argued: well, it's no big deal. On the other hand, I think we need to ask ourselves: where does this lead; is it, in fact, a slippery slope? And certainly it is one more step in that direction. Are we going to allow teachers to begin to deduct the costs of pencils or paper or computers? Are we going to allow nurses to deduct the costs of their uniforms and so on. The logic accumulates and each one of those is a complexity to the tax system and a cost to the tax base. If this were a tax break to assist people who are raising children, that would be a different kind of issue. I could certainly see that. But as a tax break or tax credit for tools I'm less enthusiastic.

I'm also concerned about the complexity this adds to the tax system, the need for more paperwork. All of us struggle, I think, to figure out the tax system at the end of the year, and I think there are full marks for moving the tax system to a simpler rather than a more difficult process.

I also wonder, as somebody that tries to keep an eye on the economic situation, if there's any – in fact, I'm sure there is a risk of an inflationary effect from this particular tax credit. We will almost immediately see the price of higher quality tools used by tradespeople rise because the retailers will fully realize that there's an incentive for tradespeople to consume more. I think there will then be an inflationary effect as a result of this bill that is at least worth considering.

Beyond that – and I'm sure this is where the Treasurer and I would see eye to eye – there is a cost to the tax base. This is in effect a tax expenditure, and at a time when government revenues appear to be tight, I don't think there's room for having an additional tax expenditure. I'm wondering how we can afford this kind of a tax expenditure when we're cutting elsewhere. You know, is a tax deduction for tools a higher priority than children's services, for example? Is it a higher priority than hospitals? That's what this amounts to. The money that will be forgone through this bill will have to be taken directly out of somewhere else. It seems that common targets these days are things like health care, children, and education.

Given that, there's just no moral way in which I can support providing a tax expenditure and eating into the provincial revenues at the time when we are actually cutting services elsewhere. So I will be opposing this bill on that basis.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Chairman, thank you. Unlike the previous speaker, the member of the Liberal opposition, I can't speak against Bill 207, as I must support the working people of my constituency.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta's economy has been growing at an astounding pace in recent years. Our industrial capacity is greater than ever because of innovation, hard work, and one of the best environments for business in the world. Low taxes have attracted extraordinary investment into the province, and Alberta companies are creating jobs faster than they ever have before. We need to explore new strategies to attract even more skilled workers into the province, and I believe that this bill could aid us in reaching that goal.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to take a moment to speak to the amendment, which I fully support in making a good bill an even better bill. It's important to establish an upper limit, I believe. Although I can say without reservation that tradespeople deserve tax credits for their enormous expenditure on tools of their trade, it is equally important that this bill not open a loophole in the tax law that someone could drive a truck through. Although I trust the tradespeople of Alberta . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the amendment has already been passed, so you can reflect briefly on it but hopefully not talk upon it. It's already been decided by the committee. That's all.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Chairman, that was clearly the intention, but I appreciate your comments.

Low taxes are what make Alberta a far more functional, versatile, and resilient economy than most of the world. High taxes, on the other hand, would force an economy into inefficient rigidity. The higher the tax the greater the incentive for cheating, the higher the tax the less incentive there is for growth and innovation, and the higher the tax the less businesses are able to survive the occasional and inevitable downturn in the business cycle.

One particular aspect of low taxes, that of having a functional economy that operates fairly and aboveboard, is a particular Alberta advantage. It is unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, but true that high taxes force a great deal of the economy underground, including construction and other trades. If half of the profit from a job goes to taxes, it presents an opportunity for two individuals to agree to not report the contract to tax collecting agencies and split the difference in costs savings between them. Incidents of this type of underground market transactions have increased proportionally to the taxes that are levied against legitimate activity.

If we provide an incentive such as the tax credit proposed through section 2 of Bill 207, a greater amount of reported income will result. After all, if a tradesperson wishes to claim the tax credit, they must demonstrate at least as much income as the value of the tools they wish to deduct. This tax would stimulate two objectives: it would offset the high startup costs associated with the trades and also get new tradespeople into the habit of working in the mainstream economy as compared to the underground economy.

Mr. Chairman, the unreported transaction of tradespersons is by its nature very difficult to calculate. However, it has been well established that there are two ways to reduce the incidence of underground trading in the economy. One method is to increase penalties and enforcement for the, quote, unquote, for-cash transaction, and the other method is to reduce the cost of doing business in the regular economy through a tax cut. The first method requires bigger government. The other requires smaller mechanisms to calculate tax breaks but will then provide an income to government through the greater amount of reported economic activity. It has been borne out in countless countries and provinces that if taxes are low, more income is reported. The aphorism "you can catch more flies with honey than vinegar" seems to apply, and Bill 207 would sweeten the pot for tradespeople substantially.

When we examine the trade-off of costs and benefits in providing a tax credit for tradespeople in Alberta, I would say that the benefits are great and the costs are small. In fact, I would estimate that a great deal of cost would be offset by the economic growth that this strategy could produce.

Mr. Chairman, by helping tradespeople we help all Albertans. Tradespeople are the real producers in our economy. Without tradespeople in Alberta there would be no buildings for lawyers, professors, or accountants to work in, and no electric lights in hospitals for our doctors to operate under. The well-laid plans of an engineer or an architect would never get off the ground without the help of tradespeople. The trades are the key to accomplishing anything anywhere. [some applause] Mr. Chairman, I am glad to excite that many members with those statements.

The sweat of the trades has been the lubricant of a great economy, and we need to recognize that these individuals provide an essential role. Just imagine our world without skilled contributors such as tradespeople. There is no doubt that these workers contribute far more than just their tax dollars to the well-being of Albertans. Their accomplishments stand the test of time, serving society after they have retired. The building in which we stand is unmistakably an example of that.

Anything that we can do to bring more highly skilled workers into our province should be considered very seriously. We are competing in an increasingly large market for skilled labour, and if Alberta is to maintain its advantage, we must develop the potential of our skilled workers to their fullest. This tax credit, Mr. Chairman, could result in there being a greater number of skilled tradespeople in Alberta than other provinces. I see nothing wrong with that. The trades are the backbone of the economy, and their contributions are not only valuable but integral to the continued growth and the prosperity of all sectors of Alberta's economy.

Mr. Chairman, as our friends in the opposition would I'm sure agree, we already recognize doctors, nurses, and teachers as the backbone of our society and provide them with more after-tax income than any other province. We also know that to recruit and retain skilled workers we have to provide financial incentives above and beyond other provinces. Bill 207 would make a statement that Alberta values our carpenters, electricians, mechanics, stonemasons, steelworkers, welders, and countless other professionals that would benefit from this tax credit above other professionals. This is because trades create real wealth, immeasurable by each and every member of our society.

Economic spin-offs from a highly trained workforce benefit all of society, and therefore there should be some recognition of this in our tax structure to encourage training in these trades. Real wealth, Mr. Chairman, is something you can touch and use, something that improves your quality of life just by being there. Tradespeople optimize what it means to create real wealth in society. Their labour can be seen for years, even decades after they have left the jobsite and goes on contributing to our lives at a value far beyond what can be turned off with a light switch or as large as the Legislature, but each represents assets that allow the rest of the society to function.

A tax credit for carpenters could result in us all having a greater number of buildings in which we could work or live, while a tax credit for electricians provides light switches so that we all may see better. A tax credit for mechanics would keep our cars running, while a tax credit for welders would help resource companies build pipelines to ship their products to the markets. Having more tradespeople operating in this province would provide greater productivity and productive capacity to create tangible wealth, and the whole society would prosper from the abundance of working capital that the tradespeople provide. All we have to do is formulate a strategy to bring them to the Alberta advantage to a greater degree, and Bill 207 accomplishes that.

Mr. Chairman, the Alberta advantage has become very clear in recent months. While economies are discussing how to manage an economic downturn, Alberta is in the enviable position of having to manage its amazing growth. Even with the downturn in oil and gas prices we have maintained a strong economic performance and can say without boast or undue optimism that the Alberta advantage will outperform the majority of other world economies by a comfortable margin and all other economies in Canada. We are recognized as an economy that thrives on innovation and diversification, supporting a high quality of life and opportunity to excel in countless sectors.

However, we must give serious consideration to how to best manage our growth and how to ensure that we have the skilled labour resources to build homes for new Albertans and construct workshops and factories for expanding industry.

Ultimately I support Bill 207 because it helps out the little guy, the hardworking tradesperson who is just starting out as an employee. This bill could provide the right kind of incentive for young Albertans to choose a career in the trades and to grow with Alberta's industry. Everyone wants a high-paying job, but if the start-up costs are prohibitive, what then? Bill 207 provides a step in the right direction to offsetting some of the high start-up costs for employee tradespeople and might even attract a greater number of young men and women seeking to start a career in the trades. This bill provides us with an opportunity to strike a new balance and a competitiveness in the labour market by attracting the right kind of workers to an economy that aims to create real wealth for all Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all of my colleagues to support this strategy for growth and a higher level of competitiveness for the entire economy of Alberta. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my honour to speak in favour of Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act. There have been a lot of speakers on this today, and it reminds me a little bit of Elizabeth Taylor's fifth husband: he knew what he was there for, but he knew there was a high risk of repetition.

The tools deduction amendment act could be very, very important to rural Alberta. I do know that we have people in this province that have worked hard and done a lot of things right. We've had a friendly tax environment. We have an expanded economy, and it has benefited us all. But there is one thing that I believe we have been lacking with this Alberta advantage that we have built, and this is in the area of rural Alberta. Many of our small communities have been lacking skilled workers in all of our trades. Mr. Chairman, I want to give a few examples.

Certainly when a farmer or anyone in the agriculture service industry that's out fighting against the weather and trying to get their work done breaks down and has to hire a technician or a service agent that's got to travel for 150 kilometres or more to come and get them going again, it is very, very frustrating. I do believe that this tax credit proposal of Bill 207 could help alleviate some of those problems. Now, when we think of all of the machines and the machinery that need repairing and need service, we have to have highly professional technicians that do this, especially now with all the electrical and computerized components that are on the machinery. So I would like very much to support this bill in that regard.

I do believe that the $5,000 may not be high enough, because I do know that when my young fellow went to NAIT to take diesel mechanics, he had $2,500 spent one morning before I even got up, and I get up at 5:30 in the morning. It is very, very costly for that, and of course employers do not provide tools for a lot of professions.

Mr. Chairman, what I'd like to say is that I'd like to support this bill. I do think that we could not proclaim it for a while, until the financial situation got turned around, and then it would be a great asset to our industries.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Might we have unanimous consent to introduce guests that are in the Assembly today?

THE CHAIRMAN: May we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to introduce to the Assembly staff that are here from the Stollery children's hospital. They are here today to see if the debate on Bill 209, which is the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, comes forward, because they've actually had a lot of participation in the bill. We're pleased to see you with us here today, and I would ask that Mrs. Jackie Petruk, the executive director; Kathy Nykolyshyn; Lori Balch; and Laurie McCaffery rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It indeed gives me pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 207. I think what happens is we don't put enough emphasis and enough importance on the trades, and I would also like to suggest that to support the trades in the province is very important to all of us. We have to also understand the burdens that are faced by these young individuals who are coming into the trades. The high cost of equipment – the purchase, the rental, the maintenance, and the insurance of portable tools – is one avenue where there is an opportunity for a deduction. This opportunity for a deduction is not for individuals who go to a job that don't need, if you want to call it, extra expense or extra equipment to be able to perform their jobs. In most of the jobs that are performed by trades, they all do need their own tools.

I would also suggest that this is not a gift that is given, that there is a lot of credibility behind this bill. The individuals that would be able to have some opportunity to be involved in the opportunities of this bill need receipts, and they need a certificate from their employer stating where the tools were purchased, also ensuring that it's going to be used on the jobsite. I think that that adds a lot of credibility that this is not just a gift to some individual group.

I would also say that with the discussion of a $5,000 cap in that amount to the tradesman is also accountability so that you don't end up in a situation where you can earn X amount of money and claim it all in tools in the first year, that you do have basically a cap.

I would also like to say that I do believe that it encourages young people to be able to get into the trades. When you are a young tradesman or, first of all, let's say, a high school student coming out of high school and looking for a vocation and knowing that there is some opportunity to be able to have deductions on some of the equipment that you may purchase, it may be a turning point in your decision. I stress again that we really do need the tradesmen. I mean, when was the last time one of you had the opportunity to look under the hood of your car and try to figure out what's happening?

MRS. NELSON: On Saturday.

MR. DANYLUK: On Saturday? And how was it? We're not supposed to discuss. I'm sorry, sir. I will carry on.

All we have to do, Mr. Chairman, is look around these halls and look at the work that tradesmen have done and we have been enjoying for many years.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that in Alberta the tradespersons play an important role in Alberta's economy, and it would be disastrous to experience a tradesperson labour shortage, as we presently are. If this bill helps in any way to encourage young Albertans to enter the trades and fuel the economy and if it assists with the current shortage of tradesmen and encourages youngsters to enter the trades, then I believe this bill has a very positive advantage.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity today to rise and speak to Bill 207. It is always an honour for me to speak in the Assembly to the business before hon. members, but today it is even more of an honour to speak to a bill that will see taxes lowered for hardworking Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin today by focusing my comments on section 2(2) of the bill, which outlines the formula by which the tools deduction will be calculated for tradespeople. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for developing a formula that is both fair and simple. One of the guiding principles of the 1998 Alberta Tax Review Committee's report entitled Future Direction for Personal Income Taxes in Alberta is the idea of simplicity and transparency. In fact, the report indicated that the need for simplicity was a primary consideration for the committee. Submissions to the committee repeatedly stressed the need to keep the tax system simple. Too many Canadians and Albertans are confused by the complexity of the current system, and too few understand how their taxes are determined.

Well, the formula developed by the hon. member conforms to the spirit of the recommendations made by this committee and the new tax policy as adopted by the government through the Alberta Income Tax Act. It is simple, easy to understand, and easy to calculate. Some individuals have argued that this bill would increase administrative costs associated with the collection of taxes, that somehow this new deduction would be difficult to monitor. Mr. Chairman, that is simply not the case. I would like to point out that administrative costs are already being incurred in ensuring that filings with the government are accurate and honest. This new deduction would not unnecessarily add to the work of officials within the Department of Finance.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, tradespeople, like all Albertans who make deduction claims, keep receipts. This is neither cumbersome nor an outrageous expectation. It is done on a daily basis by tax-conscious Albertans, who must do these sorts of things when paying taxes to our Liberal friends in Ottawa.

Other opponents of this tax deduction also point out that this law fails to recognize other occupations, that somehow by recognizing the tradespeople of this province in this manner, we would be ignoring the plight of other sectors of the Alberta workforce. Again, Mr. Chairman, this is not the case. This bill will benefit not an industry but rather an entire sector of our economy: plumbers, welders, carpenters, electricians, mechanics, journeymen tradespeo-

ple. Basically, anyone who uses tools on a daily basis will benefit from this bill, and I wish to point out that most other occupations do not require at least $500 in materials to facilitate work.

Finally, Bill 207 is important for Alberta because it will help us to address the growing gap between the success of our economy and our ability to supply qualified workers and tradesmen to fuel that success. One only need look through the paper to find the documented success of our markets. I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that we are in the midst of difficult times these days, but Alberta more than any other province is well positioned to ride out the cycle. According to the Centre for Spatial Economics, Alberta's economy will not fall victim to an oil field bust in the next decade. Investment in our oil and gas sector will be strong with approximately $42 billion being invested in the Wood Buffalo-Cold Lake region over the next 10 years. Alberta's gross domestic product will grow an average of 3 percent from 2001 to 2006 with employment up 2 percent a year and population growth up 1 percent in each of those years. Unemployment will remain at 5 percent or less. Mr. Chairman, the potential is here for tremendous growth, especially when you consider that the projects planned in the Wood Buffalo-Cold Lake region were planned to proceed based on oil being sold at $17 or $18 per barrel.

We don't need to look 10 years down the road to see the impact of growth on our economy. Alberta Finance reports that in August building permits were up 8.3 percent in Alberta. Who, Mr. Chairman, will fill these requests? The point of all this is that Alberta will need a skilled workforce to make these projects happen. Not only that, but we need a skilled workforce of tradesmen and apprentices who will be able to fuel Alberta's economy well into the future. We have seen over the last decade how specialized labour shortages can affect our province. For years now it seems as though with such a robust economy we have had to constantly play catch-up, trying to find skilled tradesmen and journeymen to facilitate growth.

Bill 207 will help our current workforce and encourage our young people to seriously consider entering the trades. The price of tools can be burdensome to a young person thinking about entering the trades. We talk a good game about encouraging our youth to consider other options than universities. Now is the time for us to back that talk with action. I appreciate that now is not one of the best times to be amending Alberta's tax code, but it's the proper time to seize the initiative to ensure that Alberta's workforce is where it needs to be. Tax relief is an achievement for all Albertans that want government tax policy to be fair and not penalize them for making good choices, good choices such as going into the trades as apprentices and journeymen. This province, Mr. Chairman, is no stranger to the benefits of tax relief.

We have an opportunity to encourage young Albertans to seriously look at the trades. We have an opportunity for adults to go back to classes and update their skills. We have an opportunity to provide the necessary support to current journeymen and workers across the province who fuel the engine of Alberta's good times. Bill 207 is not only responsible but is also reasonable with sections such as 2(2) and the basic level needed for tax relief.

Mr. Chairman, I encourage members of the Assembly to support Bill 207 and provide the tradespeople of this province with the support necessary to move this province ahead. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to speak in support of Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001. I am the representative for the citizens of Edmonton-Glenora. I grew up in the west end of the riding when it was the town of Jasper Place. My father was a mechanic. My next-door neighbour was an electrician. The people across the street: there was a heavy-duty mechanic and a sheet metal worker. When I went door-knocking in January and February, I met with the people of the west end of my riding. These people are the next generation of the hardworking Albertans that we call the Alberta advantage.

When we examine the trade-offs and the costs and benefits in providing a tax credit to tradespeople in Alberta, I would say that the benefits are great and the costs are small. In fact, I would estimate that a great deal of the costs would be offset by the economic growth and strategy that it would produce.

I was at NAIT last night, Mr. Chairman, and I toured the facility, seeing the expansion of people that were moving into the trades in this province. We are seeing an incredible increase not only in our economy with the GDP, but we're seeing people going into the trades that are working 24 hours seven days a week, 365 days a year for the people of Alberta. Those are the blue-collar, severely normal Albertans that are out there, and they need assistance, that little bit of a leg up starting out in the apprenticeship program. I know that the tools my father had to purchase when he was working in his trade were not supplied by his employer. He had to set aside some moneys to buy a large number of tools that he required to work on cars and trucks at the dealership that he worked at for 25 years before his death.

The citizens of Glenora, whom I represent, would see this as a great bill for this government to pass, and I wholeheartedly support Bill 207, Mr. Chairman. By helping tradespeople, we help Albertans. Tradespeople are the real producers in our economy. Without tradespeople in Alberta there would be no buildings for lawyers, professors, or accountants to work in, and no electric lights in hospitals for our doctors to operate under, no Legislature lights.

MR. LUKASZUK: Or in the Annex for the Liberals.

MR. HUTTON: Or in the Annex for the Liberals, for that matter.

What we are looking at, Mr. Chairman, is the Alberta advantage. This fits in the tax policies of this government. This encourages young Albertans to enter the trades and fuel this economy. The engine of growth for this economy is the small operators, and that includes the blue-collar tradespeople.

I support Bill 207 for the constituents in my riding and the lower middle-income people that reside there. I hope that my colleagues in the House today that have stood up before me will continue to champion Bill 207 and that we will see this passed so that the citizens of Alberta that are moving into the apprenticeship programs can buy the proper tools so that they can do the jobs that will help this province's growth in the next decade or several decades.

I thank you for your time, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's nice to see how many people are so enthusiastic about the passage of this bill and how many people are so eager to speak on it. I'm certainly one that fits into the group that's eager to support this bill, and I commend the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing forth a bill that I feel has been long overdue.

I spent about 17 years as a quasi-employer, as a county councillor that employed a number of mechanics. I became acutely aware of how expensive tools can be and how quickly they have to be replaced due to a number of factors such as wear-out, surprisingly enough, loss, and actually adding to your tool collection to adapt to new types of equipment that is out there that you have to work on. So there are a lot of new tools that have to be purchased, and your collection can become in the thousands of dollars after a short period of time.

I also believe that this bill as amended provides the adequate limits to prevent any abuse of the system. The $5,000 cap instituted through the amendment would keep it to a limit that wouldn't allow people to purchase tools and pass them on through the black market, if that's a concern, and buy tools for someone else.

I believe it's ironic that the employers of the same tradespeople that Bill 207 refers to can deduct the cost of the tools that they provide to service their customers. The employers provide a certain amount of tools, say, in a garage or service station, but the mechanics that they hire have to provide the rest themselves. The employers can not only deduct the cost of those tools that they provide, but they also deduct the cost of the employment of the tradespeople themselves. So it seems to be an unlevel playing field.

I appreciate the comments of the Provincial Treasurer. It is a difficult time to introduce new tax deductions due to the downturn in our economy, but as I said before, I believe this is long overdue. We've got a labour shortage in this province. The minister of human resources has referred to this several times in the course of this sitting and over the past couple of years. We're on the move in this province, and the trades is one area where there is a shortage. Not passing this bill just creates a disincentive to young people entering the trades. I believe Bill 207 to some degree reduces that disincentive, providing a little bit of tax relief for the purchase of those tools.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated at the outset, I believe that this bill is long overdue. I'm encouraged by the number of people that have spoken to it. To speak any longer would become repetitious of things that have already been said, but I'd also add my encouragement to all members of this Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise just to ask an open question to the sponsor of the bill or anyone else. Has there been a cost analysis done for this bill?

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, and I'll answer the question for the hon. member. No, there hasn't been.

I thank the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for taking the bold initiative to introduce this bill to recognize the extraordinary expenses that Alberta tradespeople have. Just briefly, Mr. Chairman, I do want to congratulate the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for making the amendment. That reflects accurately the intention of this bill, and that is to provide a tool credit.

I'm a licensed tradesman and proud of it. I think there's only one other member in this Assembly. Many of my past co-workers and now my constituents have encouraged me to support and speak to this bill. Both owners and employees at our thousands of shops and jobsites across this province will finally get the recognition for their contribution to the growth of our vibrant province. The absence of the tool credit places many trades at a disadvantage when competing for the future work in our bubbling economy. I believe, colleagues, that by supporting this bill, we can again strengthen the Alberta advantage, as we've heard many others talk about earlier. It fits with the low-tax philosophy of our government while leaving more cash in the pockets of Albertans. This tool credit may even encourage young Albertans to enter the trades and further fuel our economy. I'd thought that this credit coupled with further encouragement might even have some retired tradespeople put their coveralls back on. I thought maybe even the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky might consider that with this credit.

This province is very short of good tradespeople, and anything to keep and encourage a healthy, vibrant source of trained Albertans should be supported. I am proud to stand in this Assembly to support Bill 207.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In accordance with my responsibility to represent my constituents, I am pleased to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 207. As some members may be aware, I have a background in the trades apprenticeship program in the province of Alberta. I received trade qualification in this program in the mid-1970s, and for 25 years I have indentured many young, productive Albertans as apprentices. These Albertans have gone forward in many cases as successful business owners themselves employing and indenturing apprentices to raise the number of qualified tradespersons in our province.

The technological advances in many trades have made it necessary for those involved to purchase expensive tools and test equipment on an ongoing basis to keep pace with requirements of their trade. A young lady, a constituent of mine, has expressed her concern in the following letter.

As per correspondence below, could you please provide any information as to the progress of Bill 207. Is there yet a chance of the bill going to third reading and being brought into law? For what it's worth, you have my support, and that of my boyfriend, in pushing to finally get some relief from the price of these tools. He is apprenticing as a heavy-duty mechanic and absolutely loves it; he is intent on being successful, and we will therefore deal with the cost as best we can regardless of the political outcome. We are not extravagant people – he is making do with a number of borrowed tools, and most of the new ones have been purchased either from Sears or Canadian Tire. Eventually he will need more specialized tools, some of which are apparently eight or nine-hundred dollars each. And if you cheap out on the toolbox . . . you can expect it to break within 6 months. A quality toolbox that will bear up under the weight is at least $3,000.

Your success would take an enormous amount of financial stress (and therefore household stress) from us. Please accept our encouragement in continuing to push for Bill 207. Thanks very much for your time.

So, Mr. Chairman, you can see that we do have support in our communities and that constituents are interested in this endeavour. In addition to this, I have also tabled in this House an additional number of letters in support of this legislation.

On another point, it's been suggested that individuals could incorporate as business entities and get relief with respect to tax exemptions for capital costs. This, Mr. Chairman, is not an option for persons working as employees or contractors of a company. Revenue Canada requires such businesses to have more than one source of revenue. Single-source revenue businesses may be deemed to be avoidance schemes.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 207 has support from a broad range of tradespeople and is a credible means to put much-needed resources back in the hands of young individuals and families who will continue to strengthen the Alberta advantage. This bill will encourage Albertans to join or in many cases to stay in the trades and is anticipated to benefit Alberta over the long haul.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

4:50

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Our time is close to running out here. I just would like to make a final comment and first of all to express my appreciation on behalf of the constituents of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and also other Albertans who are interested in this particular bill to those who have voiced support for it.

Mr. Chairman, when I have been campaigning and have been out in the community, anytime I come across a person who wishes to talk about taxes and things like that, I often mention to them that this bill is before the Legislature. Other members have expressed the same, that when they are talking with their constituents and they talk about this bill, there's one thing – it's never failed that I have the same reaction from all people, and that is that this bill just makes sense. It makes sense because they understand that businesspeople can deduct expenses to produce revenue, and as employees they are unable to incorporate, as has been mentioned by one of the speakers, and are unable to have many of the kinds of tax advantage schemes that all sorts of other people are able to take advantage of. In order to contribute to the economy of Alberta, in order to move ahead in their trades and have the best tools to work with that they can possibly afford, it's only appropriate that they don't pay for that with after-tax dollars.

This bill, Mr. Chairman and fellow Members of the Legislative Assembly, will help to do that, and I urge your support for Bill 207. Thank you.

Bill 208 Alberta Official Song Act

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First, I would like to thank the hon. colleagues in the House for having passed the bill at second reading. Secondly, my appreciation goes to a large number of Albertans across our province who have shown support for the idea and sent in their works on the Alberta theme song. For example, 93-year-old Emily Waggot of Edmonton came to my office the other day and gave me her lyrics. Her attending family member told me later that the Alberta song idea has kept this senior lady energized and lively like never before. Her lyrics go like this:

Alberta has lots of sunshine,
A friendly welcome there,
With lots of cities, that are so pretty,
Also has plenty of rivers, lakes, streams,
There're strong mountains, forests, hills and plains.
A delight to see.
Animals, people, birds, fish, wild flowers grow,
Trees of fruit that one can eat,
Mean so much to me.
We're proud of our Alberta,
Would like the world to see.

So that is from a 93-year-old lady.

Mr. Chairman, the recent horrific events of terror and their repercussions are now constantly on our mind. Sometimes it seems there is little room for respite from these events. However, there are still many good things going on in our lives. We have our families. We have our Alberta communities. We have a province of hard-working and innovative citizens. We have nurses and doctors, engineers and scientists, law enforcement officers, firemen, artists, teachers, and legislators too, among the best in the world helping to shape the future of our province. We have beautiful mountains, lakes, prairies, and wildlife. In fact, some good things may have been catalyzed by this event. I believe we have a renewed sense of community. I believe we have a greater impetus to give and to be with our families and loved ones. We have a new and bold perspective with which to seek to build our futures. This is something that should be recognized and celebrated to help us to move on with our lives.

That is why I believe that introducing an official song in our province, showing our proud community and the many great opportunities in our province, is more timely than ever. Now is the time to remind ourselves of our proud past and the great potential of the future. Now is the time to rejuvenate our confidence. Now is the time to celebrate, and now is the time for Alberta to sing.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to address three major points today about the Alberta official song. First, I want to expand on how the bill proposes to seek out and adopt an official song for our province. Secondly, I want to talk about the value of music, how it can help develop the sense of identity and how it can motivate and inspire. I want to emphasize the qualities of music that make having an official song such a good idea. Finally, I wish to address the concerns that members of this Assembly may have that adopting this official song will seal Alberta's regionalism sentiment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill would establish a nonpartisan committee of this Legislature to solicit submissions of songs that could be adopted as an official song for our province. The bill is specific in citing that the membership of this committee should come from all political parties. This detail is included to reaffirm the objective of the bill: an effort to unite Alberta, an effort to find commonality that links all Albertans no matter what their background. Also on this committee will be members of Alberta's music community, hopefully including a wide variety of academic music experts, music industry specialists, and experienced musicians. These members will compose the majority of the committee and will back up the MLAs in whatever musical expertise they may not have.

This Alberta official song committee will seek submissions for songs and lyrics in any way it chooses. It may be performance; there may be subcommittees traveling across the province. The only certain rule is that the submissions must be open to all Albertans, giving everyone a chance to let the Alberta pride shine. When the committee has ultimately agreed on one selection, this song will be brought forward to the Legislature to be adopted as Alberta's official song.

I think it is important to note that the Alberta official song committee will not necessarily seek a new song. Already several well-known tunes exist relating to Alberta. Many less well-known songs that have already been written may surface in the selection process. The point of the committee will not necessarily be to seek the original work but to seek the work that could appropriately be deemed Alberta's official song. So, Mr. Chairman, that is how the bill works, plain and simple: no frills, no whistles, just a clear, open process to selecting an official song for our province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to elaborate on the value of music and why Alberta needs an official song. Billy Joel, an American rock and roller who has inspired generations of fans from the 1970s to today, once said: I think music in itself is feeling; it's an explosive expression of humanity; it's something we are all touched by, and no matter what culture we're from, everyone loves music.

You don't need to be a rock fan to understand what he meant. The power of music is enormous. When we hear music, it resonates inside us. I don't think any of us could explain quite how, but it evokes emotion. It helps us understand things in a way different than talking about something or seeing something. When a group of friends sing a song together, it is a symbol, a confirmation of action, that these friends have something in common, that they are truly bound by something greater than themselves. A song is a rallying point for people of a state, a province, or a sports club. Songs stir the dormant passion inside all of us, lighting up our sense of pride. This is why we ought to have a song for this province, so that at moments when we desire most to be united and inspired, we will have something to help fill this need. At sporting events and formal functions we will be uplifted by a mighty, invisible power, the power of music. I think ordinary Albertans understand this power of an official song. That is why they have responded so enthusiastically to the idea of this bill.

Since last spring when Bill 208 went through its second reading, I know our offices have been flooded with the interest of Albertans living across the province. Schools and choirs have called to see if they can submit a song as a group. Chat groups have been set up on the Internet to look for possibilities. Recommendations for songs from a wide variety of musical tastes have been pouring in, from country and western to reggae. People have sent lyrics, CDs, and tapes, beaming with pride about what they have written, in the hope it will be considered to become a permanent symbol of Alberta. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, the response to even the idea of the song has been enormous. It has been overwhelmingly positive. For me it just proves why Bill 208 ought to be passed by this Legislature. The notion of a song has sparked the interest and enthusiasm of Albertans. Their spirit has been uplifted, and that is the main objective of this bill.

Alberta will not be the only province with a song if we adopt one in 2005. In fact, Newfoundland has had an official tune since 1979 as well. Almost all states of the U.S.A. proudly boast of having an official song. Some even have two or three. Rather than contributing to regionalism, these songs have promoted their identity within a nation. The same would be the case for Alberta. Moreover, by having the song adopted during Alberta's 2005 centennial anniversary, as Bill 208 stipulates, we are emphasizing the very innocent and celebratory nature of the song. In my opinion, in fact, I would like to see all provinces eventually adopt a provincial song. Perhaps Canada as a country is too young to have felt its provinces deserved a song, or perhaps Canadian provinces have traditionally been more shy than our friends in the south to sing out loud about how good it is to be here. In either case, these are not reasons why all Canadian provinces and Alberta in particular should not adopt songs now.

At 100 years of age Alberta is definitely mature enough to have had many important achievements, people, passions, and dreams to sing about. Well, yes, boasting is a bad thing to do, just like our mothers always said, but in the form of boasting like this, it is good fun. Hopefully in adopting a song, Alberta will be setting the trend, like we usually do, for the other provinces to follow. The decision to co-ordinate the adoption of the official song with the 2005 centennial serves to emphasize the celebratory nature of the song. Alberta is reaching a century of achievements, of extraordinary growth and development. Albertans have worked hard over that century to build a strong and dynamic province, to build a strong and dynamic country. This is something to be proud of, something truly worth celebrating.

Over the next three years the government will be encouraging and supporting Albertans as they plan to develop projects and events celebrating the centennial. The centennial legacy will provide funding for communities to build and renovate facilities to celebrate in. The centennial celebration program also provides support for rodeos, parades, and other events. In addition to this legacy and celebration project, the province will be involved in putting on a number of provincewide events and mementos. This might include the production of coins and flags in special edition. In this context, Mr. Chairman, you can see that adopting an official song will be as good as or better than a lot of other celebrations. The celebration of 2005 as our anniversary would stir pride in Alberta, but this pride would be in the context of a greater Canadian pride, which Albertans hold dear to their hearts. In selecting the song in the centennial, the uplifting, celebratory nature of the song would be rightfully emphasized, limiting room for misinterpretation. If we are going to choose an official song for Alberta, 2005 is the year to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I have outlined to you and my colleagues today that Bill 208 proposes to solicit and adopt an official song for our province. I have spoken about the tremendous potential the song has to help stir Albertans and how Albertans have already responded to this opportunity.

Before I conclude, I would like to share with you and the members here some of the musical lyrics from many Albertans received by my office. Our Premier's office and many of our colleagues' constituency offices have received and passed on to me a large number of Albertans' work on the Alberta song theme.

For example, Pat McIntyre of Spruce Grove wrote: "My parents and I have lived in Alberta all our lives. My Alberta song reflects how we feel about Alberta." The sample of her lyrics goes as follows:

Land that stretches out far as the eye can see,
No other place in the world I'd rather be.
Majestic mountains, gently rolling hills,
The call of the loon in a lake so still,
Patchwork of farmers' fields displayed for all to see.
Making me feel at home, making me free.
Alberta is where I want to be.
It's a great place to raise a family.
The pioneering spirit is still alive.
With each other's help we can all thrive.

Jack Sanderson of Peace River wrote, "My dad and his parents came here in 1906 from England, first settled in Stettler." His lyrics go:

Alberta, Alberta, the land of the rose,
Where from under the ground,
Our black oil flows.
With cattle and grain our fields abound.
Alberta, Alberta, we'll make you great.
Alberta, Alberta, you'll become first rate.
You'll be the envy of Canada to see.
Alberta, Alberta, for you and for me.

As the last but not the least example, I received from 97-year-old John Peets of Edmonton via the Hon. Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole, and our Premier's office:

Alberta! You are where it's at
With mountains high, and prairies flat
With valleys deep, and lakes and streams
So beautiful, their luster gleams . . .
Alberta! You are where it's at:
It's where I like to hang my hat.
It is the place that's home to me
And fills my soul with ecstasy
Alberta's mine, I love you so
From the top of head to tip of toe
Your name enralls me mightily
It's where I always want to be
It throbs with life, and I like best
To sing its praises with great zest.

Mr. Chairman, having an official song is an excellent idea for Alberta, and it's something Albertans support. After passing through second reading, the idea of an Alberta song is known across Alberta.

Hon. colleagues of the House, passing Bill 208 will give our 25th Legislature a landmark for the Alberta song for our centennial. Your passing of Bill 208 and its song selection will give Albertans of all ages, of all walks of life, from all corners a celebrating spirit for a bright future. Now is the time for Alberta to search for an official song.

My hon. colleagues of the House, many Albertans and I are looking forward to your support passing Bill 208. For that, I thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Given the hour, I would move that the committee rise and report . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Report progress on Bill 208?

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you. I would move that we report our business when the committee rises.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill 207 with some amendments. The committee reports progress on Bill

208. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:26 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 21, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/11/21

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Transmittal of Estimates

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

THE SPEAKER: The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the 2001-02 supplementary estimates. These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to the office of the Ethics Commissioner and five departments of government. When passed, these estimates will authorize a $355,113,000 increase in voted operating expense and capital investment plus an $80 million increase in nonbudgetary disbursements. The increase in government spending will be more than offset by the corrective fiscal actions announced on October 18, 2001. Also, $2,797,000 will be transferred from the office of the Chief Electoral Officer to the support of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that the government table a new and amended consolidated fiscal plan when there is another set of estimates. This afternoon I tabled an amended fiscal plan 2001-2002 quarterly budget report for the second quarter in this Legislative Assembly.

head: Government Motions

Referral of Supplementary Supply Estimates

18. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2001-02 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 18 carried]

19. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(6) the number of days that the Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2001-02 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

[Government Motion 19 carried]

Auditor General and Information and Privacy Commissioner Search Committee

20. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that

(1) A Select Special Auditor General and Information and Privacy Commissioner Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be appointed consisting of the following members, namely Mrs. Tarchuk, chairman; Mr. Ducharme, deputy chairman; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Friedel; Ms Graham; Mrs. O'Neill; Dr. Pannu; Dr. Taft; and Mr. Tannas for the purpose of inviting applications for the positions of Auditor General and Information and Privacy Commissioner and to recommend to the Assembly the applicants it considers most suitable for appointment to those positions.

- (2) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most current Members' Services Committee allowances order.
- (3) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.
- (4) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Assembly.
- (5) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (6) When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is then sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

[Government Motion 20 carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

Amendments to Standing Orders

21. Mr. Stevens moved:

Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended as follows:

1. Standing Order 4 is struck out and the following is substituted:
  - 4(1) If at 5:30 p.m. on Monday, the business of the Assembly is not concluded, the Speaker leaves the Chair until 8 p.m.
  - (2) If at 5:15 p.m. on Monday, the Assembly is in Committee of the Whole and the business of the committee is not concluded, the committee shall rise and report immediately.
  - (3) If at 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday or Wednesday, the business of the Assembly is not concluded, the Speaker leaves the Chair until 8 p.m. unless, on a motion of the Government House Leader made before 5:30 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned until the next sitting day.
  - (4) If at 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday or Wednesday, the Assembly is in Committee of the Whole and the business of the committee is not concluded, the Chairman leaves the Chair until 8:00 p.m. unless, on a motion of the Government House Leader made before 5:30 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the next sitting day.
  - (5) At 5:30 p.m. on Thursday the Speaker adjourns the Assembly, without question put, until Monday.

2. Standing Order 5 is amended by adding the following after suborder (1):
  - (1.1) If, during a sitting of the Assembly, a question of quorum arises, the division bells shall be sounded for one minute and if a quorum is then not present, the Speaker may declare a recess or adjourn the Assembly until the next sitting day.
3. Standing Order 7 is amended by striking out suborder (1) and substituting the following:

7(1) The ordinary daily routine business in the Assembly shall be as follows:

  - O Canada* (First sitting day of each week)
  - Introduction of Visitors
  - Introduction of Guests
  - Ministerial Statements
  - Oral Question Period, not exceeding 50 minutes
  - Recognitions (Monday and Wednesday)
  - Members' Statements (Tuesday and Thursday)
  - Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees
  - Presenting Petitions
  - Notices of Motions
  - Introduction of Bills
  - Tabling Returns and Reports
  - Projected Government Business (Thursday)
4. Standing Order 8 is amended
  - (a) by striking out suborders (1) to (3) and substituting the following:
    - 8(1) On Monday afternoon, after the daily routine, the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:
      - Written Questions
      - Motions for Returns
      - Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders
    - (2) On Monday evening, from 8 p.m. until 9 p.m., the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:
      - Motions other than Government Motions
    - (3) On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, on Monday evening commencing at 9 p.m. and on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:
      - Government Motions
      - Government Bills and Orders
      - Private Bills
  - (b) in suborder (4) by striking out "55 minutes of debate" and substituting "60 minutes of debate and 5 minutes for the mover of the motion to close debate".
  - (c) by adding the following after suborder (4):
    - (4.1) Before the mover closes debate on a motion under suborder (4), a member may move a motion, not subject to debate or amendment, that provides for the motion under consideration to be moved to the bottom of that item of business on the Order Paper.
  - (d) by striking out suborder (6) and substituting the following:
    - (6) Before the mover of a motion for second or third reading of a Public Bill other than a Government Bill closes debate, or the time limit is reached for consideration at Committee of the Whole under suborder (5)(a)(ii), a member may move a motion, not subject to debate or amendment, that the votes necessary to conclude consideration at that stage be postponed for 10 sitting days or the first opportunity after that for the consideration of the Bill, unless there are other Bills awaiting consideration at that stage in which case the Bill will be called after the Bills at that stage have been considered.
5. Standing Order 18 is amended
  - (a) in suborder 1(h) by adding " , except as provided under Standing Order 49" after "committee";
  - (b) by adding the following after suborder (2):
    - (3) In this Standing Order, "adjournment motion" includes daily adjournment motions and any motion to adjourn the proceedings of the Assembly for a specified or unspecified period.
6. Standing Order 20 is amended by striking out suborder (1) and substituting the following:

20(1) In a debate on a motion, if a member moves an amendment, that member may only speak to the amendment and the main question in one speech.
7. Standing Order 21 is struck out and the following is substituted:

21(1) A member of the Executive Council may, on at least one day's notice, propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of hours for consideration and disposal of proceedings on a Government motion or a Government Bill and the motion shall not be subject to debate or amendment except as provided in suborder (3).

  - (2) A motion under suborder (1)
    - (a) that applies to a Government Bill shall only refer to one stage of consideration for the Bill;
    - (b) shall only apply when the Bill or motion that is the subject of the time allocation motion has already been debated in the Assembly or been considered in Committee of the Whole.
  - (3) A member of the Executive Council may outline the reasons for the motion under suborder (1) and a member of the Official Opposition may respond but neither speech may exceed 5 minutes.
8. Standing Order 23 is amended by striking out clause (g) and substituting the following:
  - (g) refers to any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination
    - (i) of a criminal nature from the time charges have been laid until passing of sentence, including any appeals and the expiry of appeal periods from the time of judgment, or
    - (ii) of a civil nature that has been set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding, until judgment or from the date of filing a notice of appeal until judgment by an appellate court, where there is probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate;
9. Standing Order 29 is struck out and the following is substituted:

29(1) Time limits on speaking in debate in the Assembly on Government motions, Government Bills and orders and private Bills shall be as follows:

  - (a)(i) the Premier,
  - (ii) the Leader of the Official Opposition, and
  - (iii) the mover on the occasion of the Budget Address shall be limited to 90 minutes' speaking time;

- (b) the mover in debate on a resolution or on a Bill shall be limited to 20 minutes' speaking time in opening debate and 15 minutes in closing debate;
- (c) the member who speaks immediately following the mover in debate on a resolution or on a Bill shall be limited to 20 minutes;
- (d) except as provided in clauses (a) to (c), no member shall speak for longer than 15 minutes in debate.
- (2) (a) Subject to clause (b), following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each member's questions and comments;
- (b) the 5 minute question and comment period referred to in clause (a) is not available following the speech from
- (i) the mover of the resolution or the Bill in opening or closing debate, and
  - (ii) the member who speaks immediately after the mover.
- (3) Time limits on speaking in debate on motions other than Government motions, public Bills and orders other than Government Bills and orders, written questions and motions for returns shall be as follows:
- (a) the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition shall be limited to 20 minutes' speaking time;
  - (b) the mover in debate of a resolution or a Bill shall be limited to 10 minutes' speaking time and 5 minutes to close debate;
  - (c) all other members shall be limited to 10 minutes' speaking time in debate.
10. Standing Order 30(4) is amended in clause (a) by adding "the debate proceeds and" before "the Speaker".
11. Standing Order 32 is amended by adding the following after suborder (2):
- (2.1) When a division is called in Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply, a member may request unanimous consent to waive suborder (2) to shorten the 10 minute interval between division bells.
12. Standing Order 34 is amended by adding the following after suborder (2):
- (2.1) Amendments to written questions and motions for returns must
- (a) be approved by Parliamentary Counsel on the sitting day preceding the day the amendment is moved, and
  - (b) be provided to the mover of the written question or motion for a return no later than 11 a.m. on the day the amendment is to be moved.
13. Standing Order 37 is amended by adding the following after suborder (3):
- (4) For the purposes of this Standing Order and Standing Order 37.1, a tabling must be in paper form.
14. The following is added after Standing Order 37:
- 37.1(1) Documents may be tabled by providing the required number of copies to the Clerk before 11 a.m. any day the Assembly sits.
- (2) When the Clerk receives a tabling under suborder (1) that is in order, the Clerk shall read the title of the tabling when Tabling Returns and Reports is called in the daily routine.
15. Standing Order 39.1 is amended by renumbering it as Standing Order 39.2 and adding the following before Standing Order 39.2:
- 39.1(1) The sequence of motions other than Government motions shall be determined by a random draw of names of members who have submitted written notice to the Clerk no later than 3 days prior to the date of the draw.
- (2) The draw referred to in suborder (1) shall be held on a date set by the Speaker in the July preceding the session that the motions are expected to be moved.
- (3) Prior to a motion other than a Government motion being moved, members may switch the positions in accordance with the guidelines prescribed by the Speaker.
- (4) A member who has a motion other than a Government motion on the Order Paper may, upon providing 4 sitting days' notice, withdraw the motion before it is to be moved in the Assembly.
- (5) When a motion is withdrawn under suborder (4), the Order Paper shall indicate "withdrawn" next to the motion number.
16. Standing Order 48 is amended by renumbering it as Standing Order 48(1) and by adding the following after suborder (1):
- (2) Dissolution has the effect of nullifying an order or address of the Assembly for returns or papers.
17. The following is added after Standing Order 48:
- 48.1 A member of the Executive Council may, on one day's notice, move a motion to reinstate a Government Bill from a previous session of the current Legislature to the same stage that the Bill stood at the time of prorogation and the motion shall not be subject to debate or amendment.
18. Standing Order 49 is struck out and the following is substituted:
- 49(1) At the commencement of each session, standing committees of the Assembly must be established for the following purposes:
- (a) Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing, consisting of 21 members,
  - (b) Public Accounts, consisting of 17 members,
  - (c) Private Bills, consisting of 21 members,
  - (d) Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, consisting of 9 members,
  - (e) Legislative Offices, consisting of 11 members.
- (2) At the commencement of the first session of each Legislature, the Assembly must establish the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services consisting of 11 members.
- (3) The Assembly must determine the membership of the committees established under this Standing Order by resolution which shall not be subject to debate or amendment.
- (4) The composition of the membership of the committees established under this Standing Order must be proportionate to the number of seats held by each party in the Assembly.
- (5) The proportionate membership of committees as prescribed under suborder (4) may be varied by an agreement among all House Leaders.
- (6) The Clerk of the Assembly shall post in the Legislature Building lists of members of the several standing and special committees appointed during each session.

19. Standing Order 52 is struck out and the following is substituted:
52 The Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund shall report to the Assembly on the Fund as prescribed in the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act.
20. Standing Order 56 is amended by striking out suborders (2) to (8).
21. Standing Order 57 is amended by striking out suborders (1) to (6).
22. Standing Order 58 is struck out and the following is substituted:
58(1) In this Standing Order, "sitting day" means any afternoon or evening that the Committee of Supply considers estimates for not less than 2 hours unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the 2 hours.
(2) The number of sitting days that the Committee of Supply is called to consider the main estimates shall equal the number of members of the Executive Council with portfolio.
(3) The Committee of Supply shall consider estimates in the following manner:
(a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, and members of the opposition may speak during the first hour, and
(b) any member may speak thereafter.
(4) Subject to suborder (5), the vote on an estimate before the Committee of Supply shall be called after it has received not less than 2 hours of consideration unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the 2 hours.
(5) On Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday afternoon, during the consideration of the main estimates, the Committee of Supply shall be called immediately after Orders of the Day are called and shall rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m.
(6) The Leader of the Official Opposition may, by giving written notice to the Clerk and the Government House Leader prior to noon on the day following the Budget Address, designate which department's estimates are to be considered by the Committee of Supply on any Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday afternoon during the period in which the main estimates are to be considered by Committee of Supply.
(7) When the Leader of the Official Opposition fails to provide notice in accordance with suborder (5), the Government House Leader shall designate the department for consideration by Committee of Supply for that afternoon.
(8) The estimates of the Legislative Assembly, as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, and the estimates of the Officers of the Legislature shall be the first item called in the Committee of Supply's consideration of the main estimates and the Chairman shall put the question to approve the estimates forthwith which shall be decided without debate or amendment.
(9) In respect of the supplementary estimates and interim supply estimates, a member of the Executive Council may, with at least one day's notice, make a motion to determine the number of days that the Committee of Supply may be called, and the question shall be decided without debate or amendment.
23. Standing Order 59 is amended
(a) in suborder (1)
(i) by striking out "Monday," and
(ii) by striking out "midnight" and substituting "11 p.m.";
(b) by striking out suborder (2).
24. Standing Order 60 is struck out and the following is substituted:
60 Committees of the whole Assembly shall rise and report prior to the time of adjournment.
25. The following is added after Standing Order 68:
68.1(1) The sequence of Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders shall be determined by a random draw of the names of members who have submitted written notice to Parliamentary Counsel no later than 3 days prior to the date of the draw.
(2) The draw referred to in suborder (1) shall be held on a date set by the Speaker in the July preceding the session that the Bills are expected to be introduced.
(3) Members may switch their positions in accordance with guidelines prescribed by the Speaker.
26. Standing Order 83 is amended
(a) in suborder (2) by striking out "received, shall be read by the Clerk if the member so requests" and substituting "presented during the daily routine";
(b) by adding the following after suborder (2):
(3) Petitions must be submitted for approval by Parliamentary Counsel at least one sitting day prior to the petition being presented in the Assembly.
27. Standing Order 83.1 is amended
(a) in suborders (1) and (2) by striking out "read and received" and substituting "presented";
(b) by striking out suborder (3).
28. Standing Order 102 is amended by renumbering it as Standing Order 102(1) and adding the following after suborder (1):
(2) The Clerk shall be responsible for the printing of the Votes and Proceedings and the Journals of the Assembly.
29. Standing Order 109 is struck out and the following is substituted:
109 The Speaker shall, after the end of the fiscal year, prepare an annual report on the Legislative Assembly Office and lay the report before the Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.
30. Standing Order 114 is amended by striking out suborder (2).
31. This motion supersedes the House Leader agreement for the 25th Legislature dated April 10, 2001.
32. This motion comes into force on the first day of the Second Session of the 25th Legislature.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 21 is of particular significance to our House in that it deals with amendments to the Standing Orders of our Assembly. As you will be well aware, having been one of the authors of the last major revision of the Standing Orders of our Assembly, amending Standing Orders is a very important process, one that has significance to how we carry out our duty and our business in the House, and therefore is of importance to every single member of the House.

The Standing Orders are the orders which allow us to carry out our business in an appropriate manner and protect the rights of each individual member in the House, ensure that each individual member has the opportunity to be heard on issues and that rules of order appropriate to the doing of our business apply. So I'm pleased tonight to commend to the House the proposed changes in the Standing Orders which have been put forward in Motion 21.

There are a number of changes, many of which are for clarification of the Standing Orders in some cases. Therefore, I will not dwell on each and every one of the changes being put forward. But there are some changes of considerable significance and import to the House and to the members of the House.

One of the first changes pursuant to these Standing Orders is with respect to the business done under private members' bills and motions. Currently, as you are well aware, we have private members' bills and motions conducted over two afternoons in the Assembly, Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday afternoon. For the period of time after the calling of Orders of the Day on Tuesday until 3:30, private members' bills are considered, and then we break and have an hour to consider private members' motions from 3:30 to 4:30, and then an hour for government business from 4:30 to 5:30. On Wednesday afternoon, after dealing with written questions and motions for returns, we deal with private members' bills for the balance of the afternoon.

This has been the subject of a great deal of discussion over the years that I've been here, a short number of years compared with the 22 years that you've served as of today, Mr. Speaker, but during the period of time that I've been here, that I've been House Leader, I've heard a number of concerns raised and comments about the disjointedness of having the two days for private members' bills, the short period of time and the effectiveness of the ability of private members to effectively use the short period of time on Tuesday afternoon. Those sorts of concerns have been raised.

The second concern that's been raised by members during the period of time that I've had the privilege of being Government House Leader is the number of people who do not get the opportunity to address bills before they have to vote on them. As you know, under the private members' bills procedure we have in fact closure on private members' bills. We have, I believe, a one-hour time period on second reading, a two-hour limit in committee, and one hour approximately in third reading. After that period of time the bills automatically come to a vote, which in essence is what closure is. It puts a definitive end to the time for the discussion of a bill.

In many cases, as I say, during the period that I've been here, there have been bills that have had some degree of controversy to them, as private members' bills are wont to have, and members have wanted to be able to speak to a bill, but because of the 20-minute speaking time and the one-hour speaking period, there's been a very limited opportunity for members to do so. It doesn't happen on every bill, but there are certain bills that come forward that people want to be on the record for before they vote because they feel that voting without being on the record can be problematic. Members want to be passionate about the bills that they bring forward.

Now, private members' bills are significantly different than government bills in that with government bills members at least on the government side of the House have had many opportunities to debate the issues. The issues have gone out for public consultation, they've come back, they've been raised through a standing policy committee, they've gone to cabinet, they've gone to caucus, and then they come to the Legislature. So often we see in the Legislature that it's primarily the opposition that is raising debate in the House on government bills. This makes some sense, because government members have had an opportunity to debate the bills, to effect the changes that they wanted in the bills, to effect compromises if compromises were necessary, and to deal with the issues that were raised. So when they come to the floor of the House, it's the opposition members who are seeing the bill in its bill form for the first time and then have to go out and get input from their various stakeholder groups, the people that they consult with, and then bring that information to the floor of the Assembly. So it's not uncommon to see most of the debate on government bills in the Legislature coming from the opposition side. It's very understandable. I sometimes wish that I had more of an opportunity to explain to constituents why that process is as it is.

On private members' bills we don't have that same opportunity. Members have not had the opportunity to go out and consult. They're not assured that the department has gone out and consulted. The issues can sometimes be fairly narrow issues, but they can be fairly significant issues. I would raise, for example, the issue of putting kindergarten into the School Act. Regardless of which side you were on the issue, it was important to explain, because the bill itself may not exactly do what you wanted it to do. Because of the process it is necessary to be able to stand up in the House and distinguish why you're voting for or against a bill.

So all of that is to say, Mr. Speaker, that it's necessary to have the opportunity to afford more members the opportunity to speak on private members' bills. One of the changes being proposed for the Standing Orders is to move the speaking time from 20 minutes to 10 minutes so that more members will have the opportunity to speak, also, as I indicated, to reduce the fragmentation of dealing with private members' bills, to consolidate all of it on Monday afternoon, to have the full Monday afternoon for private members' bills, and then at 8 p.m. on Monday deal with private members' motions for an hour. By doing that, we reduce the fragmentation, we make it easier for members to develop a strategy to bring their bills forward, to talk to their colleagues and try to ensure passage. Essentially, we also reduce the amount of non-usable or noneffective time in the House. Sometimes we find that Tuesday afternoons from 4:30 to 5:30 is not really an effective time for government business because of the very short time that's available.

One of the first proposals being brought forward in the Standing Orders motion is to make those changes with respect to private members' business. It also will have the effect of increasing the time on private members' motions from 55 to 60 minutes. An additional five minutes may not appear to be significant, but when you only have an hour to deal with a motion like that and, again, sometimes on some fairly important questions that people want to raise which have not previously been vetted through a policy development process of government, it's important to have that time.

On the order of business in the House it's being proposed that we change the order of business under Standing Order 7. The rationale for that change really is to make it more certain for people watching the business of the House – and we hope that many people do – to know when question period is going to start. Currently, as we enter the House at 1:30, we have a Routine which provides quite appropriately for O Canada, if it's the first day that we're sitting in the week, Introduction of Visitors, and then Presenting Petitions, Reading and Receiving Petitions, tablings, and all sorts of other business of the House, which can be very short or can be quite lengthy. So visitors coming in, particularly school children, don't necessarily have a good predictable way of knowing when the question period is going to start and when it's going to end. People who are watching who aren't particularly interested in the preambles to question period really want to get on with watching question period. Sometimes, in discussions I've had with people, they get quite bored with the process before question period actually comes on.

So those are the things that we can accomplish by amending Standing Order 7 to reorder the process so that we start the day, again, with O Canada, if it's the first day of the week, then do Introduction of Visitors and proceed to Introduction of Guests, Ministerial Statements, which I'm sure you'll agree, from at least my past experience in the House, do not come up very often, and then right into Oral Question Period. Immediately start the day with the issue that everybody is looking for, with the topics that everybody is looking for, get on with it, get that 50 minutes of holding the government accountable right on the table right off the bat and deal with it. Then after question period we can deal with the other issues, which are important but which do not command as much public attention. We'd do Recognitions, Members' Statements, presenting of reports, presenting of petitions, Notices of Motions, Introduction of Bills, Tabling Returns and Reports, and Projected Government Business if it's a Thursday.

It's proposed to do the reordering in that manner essentially to make it more certain. It won't make it completely certain because, of course, introductions of visitors and introductions of guests do take some flexibility, but it makes it more certain as to when question period will start and, therefore, more certain as to when it will end and doesn't preclude us from doing all of the other business which is necessary.

One of the things that members might notice in the proposed reordering of Standing Order 7 is that the reading and receiving of petitions no longer appears in that process. We have currently in our Standing Orders a process whereby members come forward with a petition and then come forward another day for reading and receiving of the petition, and the period of time in between would appear to be historically to allow the table to determine whether the petition is in fact in order to be read and received. In my humble submission, Mr. Speaker, there's a redundancy there which is not necessary and again takes up the time of the House without any useful purpose. There's nothing wrong with taking up the time of the House if we're accomplishing something, but in that case it doesn't have a useful purpose. So the revised Standing Orders, if approved, will provide that petitions should be determined to be in order through the Clerk's office prior to being presented in the House, and if in order then they're presented in the House, and there's no need for the redundancy of both the presenting and the reading and receiving.

When I was mentioning private members' bills, there's one item that I neglected to mention that is very important, and that is the provision of an opportunity for a member to make a motion before the mover closes debate that would provide for the motion under consideration to be moved to the bottom of that item of business on the Order Paper or a similar one for private members' bills to propose that the consideration of the bill be postponed for 10 days.

Again, these two amendments to the Standing Orders are being proposed in response to the submissions of many members to myself over my time as Government House Leader but also to the various rules committees that I've sat on and now the rules committee that was struck to look at these from the government caucus. The purpose of that, again, is to provide an opportunity when members are not ready to vote: not ready to vote because they haven't been able to canvass their constituents, not ready to vote because they haven't had an opportunity to speak to the issue, not ready to vote because it's an issue of some controversy that needs to be canvassed more, not ready to vote because they don't believe that the bill is in appropriate order. The concept of the bill is good, but the format of the bill perhaps might not be acceptable. For any one of those reasons, when a person does not wish to vote against a bill or for a bill but doesn't want to be forced to do that because of any one of those very good reasons, then they might move a motion which would move the bill off the Order Paper or down to another position on the Order Paper without having to take a position on the bill because they might not be in a position to do so.

There are two very significant changes to the bills which I think will enhance the business of the House, and one of them has to do with the time and the process of speaking to a bill. Essentially the amendment which is being suggested in the Standing Order changes before us tonight is that instead of having a speaking time of 20 minutes allotted to a member on any given piece of business that the speaking time, except for the mover and the person speaking immediately after the mover, be shortened to 15 minutes, but the remaining five minutes, Mr. Speaker, is not being taken away. It's not proposed that we reduce the amount of time available for people to speak in the House but, rather, that the last five minutes be utilized in the same manner as is utilized in the House of Commons of Canada for questions and comments.

Very often we see in the House – and I'm sure as Speaker you will concur – situations where people are moved by a speech to shout a comment across the floor . . .

MRS. NELSON: No.

MR. HANCOCK: It happens.

. . . to participate in debate in perhaps an unruly way. Sometimes people cannot hold themselves back from participating, and an evocative response from a speaker's comments is quite appropriate, but it would be more appropriate if those evocative comments could be put on the record at an appropriate time and in an appropriate manner. The five minutes at the end of a member's speech would allow other members in the House to ask appropriate questions in an appropriate way, to hold a speaker accountable for their remarks perhaps, to question remarks, to provide comments on those remarks. So they can talk in the time which would otherwise have been used probably inappropriately – or ineffectively would be better language – ineffectively not inappropriately, at the end of a member's 20-minute speech. As we all know or as we all should know, you can't speak for more than five minutes very effectively and continue to hold attention. In fact, I've heard it said – I can't attest to this personally – that after 10 minutes you lose your audience entirely, and after 15 minutes they start dreaming about inappropriate things, and I won't take that comment any further.

So what I'm trying to suggest to the House is that by reducing the length of speeches to 15 minutes – and I'm sure very shortly people will understand the reason for that – and then allowing a time for short, sharp questions and comments at the end of the speech, while it's still relevant to the comments that were made by the speaker, is a very effective use of House time and a very effective debate technique. In fact, if any of us have had the opportunity to observe modern debate through debate societies, what's happening in our high schools, you'll see that that's exactly what they've put in place with respect to the rules of debate in high schools. I've watched and I've judged some of those debates. It's a very effective technique.

That's one of the major changes and I suggest a very effective change for the business of this House which will encourage more members to get involved in the discussions in this House, adding to the debate in the House by encouraging more members to be involved and using that time, which, as I said before, is not very effectively used now anyway.

Now, there was another important change that's being made, but the comments that have been tossed at me have . . . There is a change being made to the sub judice rule. Although some have suggested that that's a difficult change, it's really only a change which closes the gap, Mr. Speaker. Currently the sub judice rule provides for a rule against discussing matters which are before the courts, after a charge has been laid and before conviction if it's a criminal charge, and then after an appeal has been filed. There is a very short period of time between a conviction and the time for filing an appeal, and the sub judice rule as it's written now would not apply to that period, and it should apply to that period. So the change to the rule is very simply to close that gap, because it would be inappropriate to have comments made about a matter which was still before the courts but not technically before the courts, because the appeal hadn't been filed.

MR. MacDONALD: I've got two years to launch an appeal.

MR. HANCOCK: You have no appeal at all. [interjection] It's 35 days usually, 35 or 45 days depending on the case.

Now, the other major change which I'd like to address before my time is up . . .

MRS. NELSON: It is up.

MR. HANCOCK: Is it up? Unanimous consent to continue, Mr. Speaker?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader has asked for unanimous consent to continue his remarks.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Point of order.

THE SPEAKER: I'm recognizing you to participate. On a point of order?

MS CARLSON: On a point of order.

Point of Order Dividing a Motion

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in regard to Beauchesne 557(1) and page 478 of Marleau and Montpetit.

Beauchesne 557(1) says:

A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately. The Speaker has a discretionary power to decide whether a motion should be divided.

Mr. Speaker, we are asking for this particular motion to be divided because, in fact, it has many distinct propositions, 32 significant changes to our Standing Orders, and we believe they are more properly dealt with in this Assembly if we deal with them separately.

Marleau and Montpetit on page 478 say:

When a complicated motion comes before the House (for example, a motion containing two or more parts each capable of standing on its own) . . .

We have 32 parts capable of standing on their own in this case. . . . the Speaker has the authority to modify it and thereby facilitate decision-making for the House. When any Member objects to a motion that contains two or more distinct propositions, he or she may request that the motion be divided and that each proposition be debated and voted on separately.

The final decision on this, Mr. Speaker, lies with you, and I am certain that you will find that Motion 21 before us is complicated and contains many distinct propositions.

Furthermore, you will find that there is a precedent for this in this House. Page 204 of Hansard from February 27, 1995, contains an example of such a request being made by the Member for Red Deer-North at the time, and the Speaker then ruled in favour of dividing the motion in two parts.

While this decision does rest with you, Mr. Speaker, we would like to recommend a process for dividing the motion up. There are some natural divisions within this motion that would speed up and facilitate debate. I would ask you to consider grouping sections 1, 3, 4, 26, and 27 together. These all deal with interrelated matters concerning the daily routine and order of business. I would ask you to consider grouping sections 20, 21, 22, and 23 together, which all deal in some way with the budget process. We would ask that the rest of the parts of the motion be dealt with individually.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would have to speak against the point of order and request that you do not divide the motion. I think the Standing Orders stand as a book. They are interrelated for the most part. Most of the issues that we're talking about impact on each other, and the Standing Orders are not complicated at all nor are the amendments being put forward to the Standing Orders. All parties have had access to the amendments for a considerable period of time and have had a chance to look at them. The committees have met with the House leaders from the opposition parties to make sure that they were aware of what was coming forward. Everybody's had a chance to look at them, so I would suggest to you that these are neither complex nor in need of separation, because in fact they deal with one purpose, and that is the order of business of this House and how we conduct that order of business.

THE SPEAKER: Any other members on this point of order?

The point of order raised by the Opposition House Leader is one that does come up from time to time, and it certainly does come up with respect to dividing a motion.

In anticipation of all possible points of order that might be raised during this particular debate, the table officers undertook some research with respect to this. So while this is unusual, to have this type of point of order, at the same time it is not unusual. The hon. Opposition House Leader has correctly pointed out some text with respect to this. We're guided, essentially, by the customs and traditions and actions of this House, plus of course learned practices found elsewhere. The Opposition House Leader has correctly quoted from page 478 of a pretty definitive document, the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. I'll quote what it reads from pages 478 on to 479:

When a complicated motion comes before the House (for example, a motion containing two or more parts each capable of standing on its own), the Speaker has the authority to modify it and thereby facilitate decision-making for the House. When any Member objects to a motion that contains two or more distinct propositions, he or she may request that the motion be divided and that each proposition be debated and voted on separately. The final decision, however, rests with the Chair.

[In the Canadian House of Commons] in 1964, a complicated government notice of motion was divided and restated when the Speaker found that the motion contained two propositions which many Members objected to considering together. In 1966, faced with a similar request, the Speaker ruled against taking such action . . . In 1991, in response to a request to divide a motion dealing with proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, the Speaker undertook discussions with the leadership of the three parties in the House, subsequently ruling that, for voting purposes, the motion would be divided into three groupings, in addition to the paragraphs relating to the coming into force of the motion.

So, in essence, in the case of three events in the Canadian House of Commons, on one occasion the Speaker ruled in favour of the division of the motion, in the other case the Speaker ruled against the division of the motion, and in the third case the Speaker undertook discussion and consultations with the House leaders and then came back with a ruling at a subsequent time. This really helps the Chair this evening. It makes it very, very clear.

Beauchesne, sixth edition, page 172, clearly states in 557:

A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately. The Speaker has a discretionary power to decide whether a motion should be divided.

The hon. member has done her homework as well because, without any doubt, in the history of the Assembly in this province not too many years ago a former Government House Leader rose on a point of order requesting that an opposition motion be divided into two parts. On February 27, 1995, on page 204 the then Government House Leader basically quoted what I've already quoted and asked that a motion being put forward by the then hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo in fact be divided into two sections and each one dealt with separately. Quite a few members of this Assembly were here to observe that particular procedure at that particular time. There are options, and there are opportunities.

Okay. What we have before us tonight is a really significant adjustment to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly in the province of Alberta. In 1982 there was considerable debate in the session when there were major changes made to the Standing Orders. A certain procedure was taken. There was considerable procedural debate before anything happened, and then certain things took place.

In 1993 very significant changes were made to the Standing Orders. There was a minimal amount of debate in the Assembly because there was unanimous consent of all members of the Assembly for these very significant changes. The chair has no way of knowing what it will entail in the ensuing minutes as the Assembly chooses to deal with this particular motion. But the Government House Leader has helped me with respect to, I believe, the decision I'm going to come to.

The Government House Leader said in his opening remarks that these are "changes of considerable significance and import." Then he further said, "very significant changes . . . which . . . will enhance the [progress] of the House." Now, when one looks at the Standing Orders proposed changes before us tonight here in the Assembly, it would strike me that to expedite progress with respect to the resolution of this particular motion, it would be very much in order for debate to ensue on all of the clauses of the motion at the same time. Let there be a debate, and when an hon. member stands up, the hon. member basically will talk about and can talk about all 32 sections of the particular motion in the one discussion. It would seem to me that that would enhance the progress of the House.

The second point, the point of order raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to basically look at a division of votes. The hon. member has helped us with respect to this as well by basically saying that in a grouping of a certain number of them, they essentially dealt with the routine of the House; other groupings of them dealt with the budget. Then the member said that, well, then they wanted all the other ones dealt with individually. Well, if there are 32 of them and the Speaker extrapolates nine, that would mean there would be 23 other votes. That would be 25 votes in all. It would strike one that that wouldn't really ensure the progress of the House to the degree that one would hope to in the first part.

The chair would have no difficulty whatsoever perhaps suggesting that there be three separate votes: 1, 3, 4, 26, and 27 might be in one; vote 2 being 20, 21, 22, 23; and the third vote, all of the other three together. That would allow a bit of focus with respect to voting, but it would also ensure that the focus of the debate on this particular motion be on the whole 32 clauses at the one time, that there are not 32 separate debates, that there's one debate on the motion.

The chair, to ensure the maximum amount of progress, would rule that the point of order is a valid one and, with the help of the Government House Leader's fine determination and definition of the significant changes, would rule that there be three votes along the order so requested.

The hon. Opposition House Leader on the debate now on the motion.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as a point of clarification as I start my debate time on this motion, we will all be speaking for a 20-minute period to the entire motion, and at the end we will have three distinct votes. Yes. Thank you very much.

So, Mr. Speaker, with regard to this motion we in the Official Opposition are very unhappy with several pieces of the motion, but particularly we are extremely unhappy with the process by which this particular change to the Legislature was brought forward. I remember in my first years here, in 1993, Mr. Speaker, when you were the Government House Leader and when you in conjunction with our House leader set about to revise the Standing Orders in a very significant fashion and in a fashion that facilitated the procedures within the House in a very commendable manner. Your approach was quite different than the approach we see now. Your approach was to get together with the Opposition House Leader and sit at a table and negotiate and, inasmuch as you could for the various issues, find a basis of consensus that wasn't: oh, well, I guess we have to put up with that to get this. It was a serious consensus agreement that was negotiated between the two of you. I remember that you and our House leader spent a great deal of time on this, and our House leader would come back at various stages to our caucus and state progress.

The manner in which that negotiation was conducted was that, first of all, we came up with a list of suggestions we had. You had your list. The two of you sat down together, dropped off the table those issues that there was absolutely no seeing eye to eye on, leaving on many actually relatively contentious issues where you felt there was some middle ground that you could find. Some really good work was done, some serious time was put in, but at the end of the day we got changes in the form of a House leaders' agreement and some changes to Standing Orders that were significant and were accepted by both sides of the House.

After the election in 1997 we entered into that process again with the then Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader. While the changes weren't so significant in nature, there was an excellent House leaders' agreement that was brought forward based on consensus, based on each caucus bringing their issues to the table, where the two House leaders discussed what they could find some middle ground on, took it back to their respective caucuses, talked that process through, came back again, and worked until they had some settlement. That was a fair and reasonable, democratic kind of way to handle changes to House procedures. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is not what this government chose to do after this most recent election.

The Government House Leader and both opposition House leaders had some discussion during the spring session that the government was quite interested in seeing some major revisions to Standing Orders and that we would be contacted at some point in time to start the negotiation process, that they would be striking a committee within their caucus and the matter would go forward. We thought that the matter would be dealt with, and I seriously was led to believe and to this day understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Government House Leader was going to proceed in a similar fashion, where we would bring our issues to the table with the three of us and see where there was some progress and where there wasn't and negotiate in that fashion.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not what happened this time. The Government House Leader repeatedly asked us for a list of the changes we wanted that he could discuss with his caucus. There was no give-and-take. There was no sitting down and finding out what was reasonable. Well, it is not the habit of the Official Opposition of any province to submit their ideas to a government caucus for approval prior to them hitting any kind of House leaders' agreement or Standing Order changes. This was to be a negotiated process, and repeatedly the Government House Leader or his representative, the Deputy Government House Leader, asked for that kind of submission, so that we could in essence give our ideas to the government caucus, they could yea or nay them within their caucus, bring forward their ideas, and it would be rammed through the House. Well, that's not a negotiated process. That isn't consensus-building. That is the heavy foot of a large majority government coming down and trying to stifle the voice of any opposition in this province. We do not think that serves democracy in any fashion and would not participate at that level.

What happened then was that the Deputy Government House Leader called a meeting to discuss the changes. If I remember correctly, both the other opposition House leader and I were under the understanding that this was where we were to bring our ideas, and we would start the process. Not so, Mr. Speaker. We sat down at the table in that room and were told in no uncertain terms that these were the Standing Order changes that were going to go through, that that member did not have the authority from his caucus to negotiate, that there might be some minor pieces of flexibility within the agreement but his direction was to ram these Standing Orders through. He wasn't interested in listening to what we had to say at that time. That was the most undemocratic meeting I have been in in all my years in this Legislature. It was deeply offending for a parliamentary and democratic process, and it won't soon be forgotten that the Deputy Government House Leader was smirking, no less, at his ability to use his majority government to ram through exactly what changes they wanted.

In subsequent meetings we did bring forward some suggestions that we had in terms of strengthening Standing Orders. We made some suggestions for changes in their position. Very few of the suggestions we made to their changes in Standing Orders were accepted. They were barely even countenanced in the meetings. In essence, none of ours were accepted, Mr. Speaker, and the deputy House leader didn't care. He stated that former meetings had not resulted in the kind of substantive changes that this government wished to see to Standing Orders, that they didn't have the tolerance to continue in that fashion, and that they were going to make the decisions as they saw fit. So here we see ourselves this evening with this motion before the House.

Both opposition House leaders suggested that some more time be taken on this to see if there weren't some areas where consensus could be found, where we could bring in a reasonable House leaders' agreement, but government wasn't prepared to do that. They wanted this motion before the House in this fall session and continue to proceed in that fashion.

Mr. Speaker, we have some real problems with some of the motions that we see here before us, not the least of which is the change to the speaking times. We see a huge majority government, 74 seats out of a total of 83, who wish to further stifle debate by the opposition parties in this province by reducing debate time from 20 minutes to 15 minutes. They state in their position that the five minutes of questions and answers at the end of the 15 minutes will encourage their members to speak and to ask questions, perhaps, I would say, to pay attention in debate. But what happens is that we don't actually have the ability to ask questions of those people who have the most information about the matters up for debate.

Mr. Speaker, when we heard from the deputy House leader that there was absolutely no room to move on the issue of the 15-minute speaking time, then we suggested a change in terms of the mover of the bill and the critic of the bill or the first person to speak to it in debate also having the ability to be asked questions after their 20 minutes of speaking time, because in fact they are the people most knowledgeable about the bill under discussion. Legitimately there are often questions to be asked of the mover of the bill or the critic of the bill that could strengthen and enhance the debate and sometimes, I am sure, diminish the amount of debate time overall on the bill as clarifications were made up front and early in the debate time. It has been customary in this House for the mover of a bill not to come back and answer questions on the floor of the Assembly. Occasionally there have been briefings or discussions by movers of the bill with critics after the bill has been introduced but not often. All members are not privy to those conversations, so there are some problems around that. We had asked at least for that kind of an amendment to be made, but the Deputy Government House Leader wouldn't move at all on that issue. It was 20 minutes and that was it. No questions for the mover or the first person to speak, just those subsequently.
