Also a timing problem with the way the cheques came, Mr. Speaker. If they're to shield average costs on a monthly basis, when you get two lump sum cheques – and the second one, particularly, after most of the costs have been incurred – I think there's an issue with that. Not for, I don't think, middle-income earners, who have the flexibility within their budgets to absorb those costs, but certainly for lower income people. We heard untold kinds of problems with people having to make serious choices about how they spent their money and not being able to meet the basic needs in some cases or having to delay the payment of other bills and having to pay penalties. So that's a concern.

We see, I think, in the information we have that the average residential consumer was entitled to a nearly $500 rebate in the past year to shield them from the impact of higher gasoline and natural gas prices, but the Alberta energy tax refund proposes to return just $300 on average for Alberta taxpayers. That $300 rebate represents just 61 percent of the money that Albertans are rightfully owed in 2000 because of the impact of higher home-heating fuel costs and gasoline prices.

That's the general outline of the concerns that we had with this bill. We want to put them on the record. Having said that, I believe I'll be supporting this bill, at least in second reading, and we'll see if we get any negative feedback from taxpayers when we get to committee. But it seems to me that while people have reservations, they're quite happy to hold their nose and put their hand out for the cheque, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Given the good progress that we've made since 4:30, I move that we call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene this evening at 8 o'clock, we do so in Committee of Supply.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly agree with the motion proposed by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:22 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 15, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/15

head: Committee of Supply

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. Again we keep the usual rules: only one person standing at a time and speaking. For this evening we're back to the agreement between House leaders that was explained some time ago; that is, a 10-minute, a 60-minute, and a five-minute at the end.

head: Main Estimates 2001-2002

Executive Council

THE CHAIRMAN: For this evening we'll begin with the hon. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Chairman, hon. members, thank you. I am pleased to appear before this committee in my capacity as minister responsible for Executive Council to discuss the 2001-2004 business plan and of course the current budget.

There are two main programs in Executive Council. One of course is the office of the Premier and general administration, which provides support to cabinet and the deputy minister's office as well as the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the protocol office, and the Public Affairs Bureau, which is responsible for providing two-way communications with Albertans about government programs and various government services.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to begin my remarks this evening by making some general remarks about the Executive Council business plan. One of the key responsibilities of Executive Council is to coordinate the government's overall goals and strategies and to ensure that all ministries are working together toward the achievement of those goals. As always, the path set out for government to follow is strongly rooted in the needs and priorities of Albertans. The government's 2001-2004 business plan recognizes that fact, stating that the province's success has been based on the strong values Albertans hold. The job of government is to ensure that those values continue to be reflected in its programs and in its services. Mr. Chairman, Executive Council will ensure that the values behind Alberta's success, values such as independence, innovation, people, and fiscal responsibility, are all reflected in the work government does on behalf of all Albertans.

Ensuring effective communications between Albertans and the government has always been an important part of the process. With that in mind, Mr. Chairman, I'd like now to turn to a brief overview of the 2001-2004 business plan goals and strategies of the Public Affairs Bureau. The Public Affairs Bureau's business plan identifies four main goals.

- Goal 1. Increase communications with Albertans in the areas they identify as top priorities . . .
- Goal 2. Make government information more accessible to Albertans . . .
- Goal 3. Improve the efficiency and coordination of communications across government . . .
- Goal 4. Deliver products and services that allow us to meet or exceed revenue projections and customers' needs . . .

One business plan strategy that will have an important impact on the achievement of those goals is the plan to increase the public's awareness and use of Alberta Connects information resources. Alberta Connects is a program that gives Albertans the opportunity to find out about major government programs and initiatives. It allows them to ask questions and provide feedback through a provincewide toll-free phone line and e-mail site on the government home page. I should point out that efforts to make Albertans more aware of Alberta Connects are already showing marked success.

For example, good progress has been made in incorporating Alberta Connects contact points into the various communications activities and initiatives that take place across government. In fact, Mr. Chairman – and you'll find this interesting – the toll-free line logged more than 160,000 calls in the 2000-2001 fiscal year. Not all of them were complimentary calls; nonetheless, we received 160,000 calls. The total for the previous fiscal year was some 18,000, so that's a remarkable increase.

We're also seeing an increase in the number of Albertans using the Alberta Connects e-mail site on the Internet. By the way, it's a brand-new site. It's been updated to provide even easier access to Albertans who wish to seek information on the various government departments, with the total number of questions and comments received over the year increasing to approximately 10,000 on the Net. That's up from some 5,000 last year: double. Efforts will certainly continue over the coming year to build Alberta Connects into communications programs in order to ensure that Albertans are aware of Alberta Connects as a convenient and effective way to access government information and to ensure that indeed their opinions and their views and their thoughts are heard.

Another key initiative for the bureau this year is the Revised Statutes of Alberta project. This is a project that has been in the works for a number of years, and I'm sure that those members of the committee who are also members of the legal community will agree with me when I say that the project is a welcome one. Under the current business plan it's projected that the Revised Statutes should be completed and on the market by the end of this year.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to conclude my remarks to the committee by giving a brief overview of the projected spending for Executive Council under the 2001-2004 business plan. Projections show nominal increases in the Executive Council budget to accommodate a number of items.

The first item is the transfer of the Alberta order of excellence program from Community Development to Executive Council. Executive Council is both pleased and honoured to assume responsibility for a program that strives to recognize Albertans who have made a difference to their province and to their fellow Albertans. I ask the committee members to note that the structure and process associated with the awards will continue as in the past, with the Alberta Order of Excellence Council overseeing nominations and the hon. Lieutenant Governor serving as chancellor for the awards.

A modest increase has also been budgeted to accommodate increased demands on the protocol office surrounding the World Championships in Athletics, coming to Edmonton this August. Indeed, having had some experience in this area with the 1988 Olympic Winter Games in Calgary, I know that the function of protocol is indeed a very significant one. The Worlds are an exceptional opportunity for the province to be a focus via a projected worldwide television audience of as many as 4 billion people, who will experience the championships through the 2,500 international media and the estimated 3,000 athletes and officials expected to attend, not to mention the thousands and thousands of spectators. The increase in protocol spending will ensure that the proper arrangements are made, particularly as it relates to the attendance of various senior international officials and dignitaries.

I would also like to explain the increase in the budget of the office of the Lieutenant Governor. This increase is to accommodate Her Honour's increased activities and presence throughout the province. Mr. Chairman, we very seldom get an opportunity to talk about our Lieutenant Governor, but I can tell you without hesitation that Albertans are very, very pleased indeed that Her Honour has made such efforts to meet people in all corners of this province. Believe me; she brings distinction to herself and her office wherever she goes.

Another budget item of note is the $1 million in spending for the Revised Statutes of Alberta project. I mentioned that project earlier. This is an item that has been discussed by the committee in the review of previous business plans. As a matter of fact, I think it goes back about two years. As I have mentioned during previous reviews, revenues from the sale of the product through the Queen's Printer bookstore are expected to more than cover expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my introductory remarks on Executive Council's business plan for 2001-2004. I'd be pleased now to listen to the questions that the opposition parties might have.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to review Executive Council this evening as part of the budget review process and certainly would like to thank the Premier for taking time out of his busy schedule to be here and make himself available not only to hear what we have to say but to answer the questions. In addition to that, I'd like to thank the staff for being here. I know you guys do a good job. He gets a lot more media coverage than we do, so obviously you're doing what you're supposed to be doing.

We do have a few comments and concerns about this particular department that I would like to review, and initially I'll start, I think, with the business plan as it's outlined in the 2001-2004 goals and strategies for Executive Council.

Just before I get there, I'd like to echo the comments the Premier made about the Lieutenant Governor. No doubt she's a real asset to this province, and we support the extended budget that she has. Certainly she's making a huge effort to be visible, to promote Alberta, to promote all corners of this province, and we support the direction she has taken the office in and certainly think there is a role for people in this province to understand the significance and the history behind the protocol of that particular office and the functions that it carries out at a variety of levels. So I'd like to thank the Premier for the attention that area is being given, and the additional dollars that are being spent there I think are dollars that are very well spent from a variety of perspectives.

First of all, I'd like to talk about some of the opening comments that the Premier made. The 160,000 calls as compared to the prior year's 18,000 calls gives rise to a few comments, I think, Mr. Chairman. One of the comments that I did make was that we see in the introductory comments in the business plan the office of the Premier, general administration. The statement is that they "will continue to provide responsive support to the Premier, while maintaining open communication between the Office and Albertans." It's been brought to our attention not once but many times that people will often call through to the Premier's office and cannot get through. Part of that explanation is in the volume of calls that the Premier has talked about here, the huge increase. I would expect that the office is making some sort of move towards being able to handle that increased volume of calls. So we would like to know what's happening there.

In good times and in bad it's very important that the office be open and accessible to people. When they get put on hold or when they can't get through at all, people become very frustrated. Those calls trickle down certainly to the constituency offices and for sure to the Official Opposition. While we're happy to call the Premier to account when we think he isn't doing his job, certainly being responsive in terms of just answering the phone is of fundamental importance. We hope to hear what kinds of changes are being made to the system so that the additional volume of calls can be answered.

Then the question comes up: why would there be such a significant increase? You know, that's hugely different in terms of number of calls, so we believe that that primarily would have been Bill 11 calls, people that were not very satisfied. I know a lot of those calls were in areas to do with environment. I think in terms of being open and accountable, it would be excellent if the Premier could provide a yearly tally in terms of when the calls came and what specific areas they related to. It would be good to hear the kind of feedback that the Premier is getting, those for and against. I think that's valuable information not only for the Premier and his office but for all backbenchers, and I include opposition members in that, Mr. Chairman.

So I would like him to entertain the thought that we could get some feedback on what those calls are, both in terms of volume per month and issue related and for and against on specific issues. If we could get information like that, I think that information could be shared with Albertans and made public. There are lots of different avenues to pursue that would be valuable feedback not only for legislators but Albertans in general and would help towards maintaining the open communication that the Premier talks about in his opening comments. So if he could address that for me, I would certainly appreciate it.

When we talk about the core businesses, it's important, we think, that the government put their best foot forward, no doubt, and that they supply professionals, co-ordinated efforts, writing services, editing services, and purchasing of communications support services, including advertising, printing, and graphic design. All of that is quite important in terms of a co-ordinated effort and an overall image that the government is trying to portray.

But the flip side of that is Orwellian control, Mr. Chairman. The communications department, the Public Affairs Bureau, now controls so much of what the ministries do that it begins to become a concern, an area where we start to believe through what we see and what we hear in terms of feedback from people that there is very little ability for our ministries to operate with any kind of arm's-length ability, that things, issues, and ideas have to be vetted through the Public Affairs Bureau. The concern, then, is that that control creeps even beyond ministries into areas that would be normally at arm's length. We saw an example of that this week in question period, when the law courts office called the Justice department for permission and a communications officer is the person who called back, a communications officer who works for the department, all in a very short time period.

Those are concerns in terms of the kinds of tentacles that the Public Affairs Bureau now has throughout the ministries and perhaps reaching even beyond those ministries. So if the Premier could either in his closing comments or in writing at some point in the future talk about that for us and give us some feedback in terms of: where's the dividing line? Where's the autonomy for the ministries? How do they feed into the overarching umbrella coverage that the Public Affairs Bureau gives, and how do they make those calls? It seems to me that we don't want a government that is run through the Public Affairs Bureau. I don't think that that's in the best interests of Albertans, and it seems that's the appearance, that the optics are that that's where that's going. I'd be quite happy to have clarification on that. I'm grounded in fact, Mr. Chairman, but perception is a great deal of politics, and certainly that perception is out there, not just within our caucus but in other areas. So if we could get some feedback on that. That was dealing with core business 1, to “help government ministries communicate with Albertans.”

Now I'd like to talk for a moment about number 2, to “provide Albertans with two-way access to government.” The RITE telephone system is a great system to give Albertans toll-free access to government. Fairly extensive coverage in terms of advertising the fact that that's available. That's good. It still seems like there are a lot of Albertans who aren't aware of that service, so I'm hoping that what you're doing in that area in terms of letting people know how to use this system, how to access it and so on, is going to be ongoing in nature and perhaps given a little more focus.

Managing “the two-way flow of information through the Alberta Government Internet Home Page and Alberta Connects” is great. Nice to see that there's twice the amount of feedback through e-mail as there was in the year prior. Certainly not the increase that there was in phone calls, so that tells me that there are still a lot of Albertans who aren't connected or who don't feel comfortable using that system. I think that's important to keep in mind as decisions are made in other areas, like Supernet. In terms of access and training I think we've got a long way to go in this province. Supernet gets it to the doorway, but the question that we have heard throughout, Mr. Chairman, has been: who gets it over the doorway?

“Manage the province-wide distribution of news releases and provide technical support for major government news conferences and announcements.” Excellent. No doubt. I have a problem when that also includes promoting business interests, which I believe is what we saw happen this week, as an example, with the Minister of Environment in terms of what's happening with additional coal-fired generation here in the city. [interjection] Don't be complaining to me about that. There is no doubt that there is a great deal of what could be deemed to be interference by the government department in promoting business interests. [interjections] Open and accountable when the minister and his staff provide support to businesses?

AN HON. MEMBER: Relevance, Mr. Chairman.

MS CARLSON: Stand up on a point of order if you don't like it.

In fact, if you take a look at . . . [interjection] Well, stand up on a point of order if you don't like it.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, it's not necessary to engage others in lively debate who are not responsible for these estimates.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The point is on . . . Excuse me. I'm going to have to take my chair. I'm losing my voice. I'll be back.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am quite anxious to participate in the debate or the exchange this evening on the estimates of public affairs. Again, I would like to join my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in thanking the Premier for being present in the Assembly. We all realize that the Premier has a very, very busy schedule.

Now, I am always interested in the activities of the Public Affairs Bureau. Certainly, for whatever reason, I feel that as an opposition member I should be entitled to the same services from the Public Affairs Bureau that they provide to the Premier's office and to all different members of Executive Council.

Mr. Chairman, I'm very, very I guess the word would be jealous of the professionals that members of Executive Council have at their fingertips. In fact, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry and I were discussing this afternoon after question period the luxury of having a detailed communications plan. The hon. member was describing to me the researcher and himself sitting down at 8 o'clock in the morning and getting a press release out by 10 o'clock in the forenoon. We were assuming that with the communications staff that the Premier would have at his fingertips, there would be perhaps a three- or four-day window to get together with key messages and discussion points and talking points. The luxury of this – well, I felt jealous of this staff that the Premier and other members of Executive Council would have at their fingertips. [interjection] Yes, but the province is also a democracy.

Computers. In fact, at one point we were having difficulty with amendments to some legislation. Whenever we would propose it to legal counsel, the letters and the words wouldn't come together on the computer. The computer wouldn't print them out. Now, the public service . . . [interjections] How old are these computers? We had one word, “legal,” and the “al” at the end of it would not join the rest of it. Now, I don't know whether that's reflective of the whole province, Mr. Chairman, and I don't want to go there. But we had “leg al.” We worked and we worked and we worked on this. So this is some of the equipment we're working with. There are two researchers to an office. Things are different, but we will manage.

You know, when you look at this Public Affairs Bureau, the work they do, it is amazing just what can be accomplished. We think of public relations. Many people stop me on the street in Edmonton-Gold Bar, and they say to me – Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the Premier, they don't call the Premier the Premier in Safeway. They call him Ralph. They say: what's he like? And I say it's like the television newscasts. The projection, the communication, the image that's communicated is warm and it's fuzzy. And they say: is it really like that? And I say: the strong part of this government is public relations. Everyone is talking me about natural gas prices; they're talking to me about electricity prices. It's strong on public relations and not so strong on consumer relations. This is the discussion in Safeway.

You think of the importance of public relations, particularly in a government. I saw it for myself firsthand, up-close, pretty well on a daily basis. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry and I would go down, and the communications that were displayed by the Premier and staff during the Bill 11 debate is an example. And I'm going to get to this a little later. The resources that were available and the resources that were available to the Friends of Medicare out on the steps – the difference was amazing.

My first question to the Premier this evening would be this: is the entire budget of the Public Affairs Bureau dedicated exclusively, or do other departments chip in? Do they chip in with staff, or are they movable from one department of the government to the other depending upon what issues they may want to work on? Are members of the Public Affairs Bureau full-time equivalents of the government, or do they get contract positions? “Are they contractors or are they government employees?” is the synopsis of that question.

What steps will be taken by the Public Affairs Bureau during the three-year planning period to better respond to Albertans' request for information about health care, education, infrastructure, and fiscal priorities? Again to the Premier: what steps will the Public Affairs Bureau be taking over the next three years to further develop the navigation and design elements of the Alberta government Internet home page to give Albertans improved information access and feedback? Now, I hope the public is going to have a better record of having access to information to the government than I, because I'm really getting disappointed with the FOIP requests that I have initiated and the information that I'm receiving back. I've often thought of FOIPing the Public Affairs Bureau, and I think it's going to be one of my projects over the summer.

MS CARLSON: How much is it going to cost, and who's going to pay?

MR. MacDONALD: I hope it doesn't cost what it's cost me for Alberta Human Resources and Employment; there was a $54,000 figure there. Alberta Environment relating to the Husky truck stop in Hinton: thousands of dollars there. The bid-rigging scandal: that's in Alberta Environment as well. That's in the thousands upon thousands upon thousands of dollars.

This information is vital. It's in the public interest, because with this softwood lumber dispute that's going on between us and the Americans now, I would certainly hope that we were not through lax enforcement of our timber disbursements giving some sort of economic advantage to Canadian timber harvesters that the Americans would like to know. But this is getting further into the forest and away from the Public Affairs Bureau. I think we should get back to the Public Affairs Bureau.

Will the Premier elaborate on the Public Affairs goal of making "government information more accessible to Albertans," to all Albertans, including this member of the Official Opposition? Will the Premier provide additional information on the goal of the Public Affairs Bureau to "improve the efficiency and coordination of communications across government." Now, this is getting back to what I talked about earlier. The Premier can correct me if I'm wrong, but this vision I have is that the Public Affairs Bureau is the nerve centre of the entire government of the province of Alberta. It's like they're always taking the pulse of Albertans. Again, I'm disappointed that they don't share that information with the opposition.

What types of training programs are used to train staff as consultants? Perhaps the Premier will share that information with members of the opposition. What criteria are used by the administration working in conjunction with branch managers to adjust resources to ensure that the communication staffing levels meet the requirements of client departments? How many employment opportunities are expected to be filled in this fiscal year in the Public Affairs Bureau? As I said before, issues of consumer relations, issues of confidence in our health care system, confidence in our public education system: as confidence changes – and I'm sure that's being measured at least on a monthly basis by the bureau – there's probably need for more employees as issues come about.

What actions are now being taken by the Public Affairs Bureau during this fiscal year to increase satisfaction levels in the areas of supervisor feedback and leadership recognition and workload levels? Are the members of the Public Affairs Bureau members of a professional association? Are they salaried? [interjection] I can't imagine that they're members of the AUPE. I don't think so. If they're working overtime, perhaps they have an interest in joining the AUPE. That would be an interesting organization drive.

What type of management and leadership training programs are being established to help managers better meet the needs of their staff? What is the staff turnover rate in the Public Affairs Bureau? I've met a couple of people from that department.

MS CARLSON: Are they on contract or staff?

MR. MacDONALD: I asked the question earlier if they're on contract or whether they're staff.

Again to the Premier: what steps are being taken by the Public Affairs Bureau during 2001-2002 to improve satisfaction with training programs such as technology training? Has a professional certification program for public affairs officers been established, and if so, what are the criteria? What are the strategies behind the development of a human resource plan for the bureau including a plan and initiatives to improve staff training and recognition?

Now communications, which we so admire. Communications services, reference line 2.0.2.

MS CARLSON: Just lend them to us for six months, and let's see what we can do.

MR. MacDONALD: We could have a coup.

What strategies has the Public Affairs Bureau developed to support government communications surrounding the 2005 Alberta centennial celebrations? Earlier in the Premier's opening remarks, Mr. Chairman, there was a discussion around the track and field event which is to occur later on this summer in Edmonton. Again, for the Alberta centennial celebrations, what role will the Public Affairs Bureau play in that?

What strategies have been developed by the Public Affairs Bureau to work with the PAO, the personnel administration office, to build recognition of the Alberta public service as an employer? That would be a strategy that hopefully can be developed. I think that the Alberta public service is going to be actively recruiting personnel to join the public service. There has been a perception in the past: oh, it's the bureaucracy. The easiest for anyone, whether it's consumers or whether it's media personalities or whether it's any frustrated citizen, is to express their frustrations through the public service.

We need a stable public service. We need to attract young people into the public service who are entering the workforce for the first time. One of the main attractions is the stability that they can have perhaps for 30 years and get a pension and retire. But we've seen in the last eight years that confidence in a public service job or taking your profession and applying yourself within the Alberta public service is no longer what it used to be. To restore confidence in that would be a big job, and I would encourage the Premier to have a development of this nature with the Public Affairs Bureau.

Now, what is the process used by areas of the Public Affairs Bureau to develop business plans to ensure that the organization is contributing to the goals of government and client departments? One of those issues that I could think of that would be relevant to that process, again, would be the Department of Energy. We have this ongoing concern about electricity deregulation in this province. It's a problem. We were discussing last night in Energy estimates the problems that have occurred in Montana, our neighbour to the south, which deregulated its electricity generation and distribution system a year before this province introduced Bill 27, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act. Nothing but problems: high costs, shortage of supply, industry shutting down.

How will the Public Affairs Bureau deal with the business plans of the Department of Energy? Is the Department of Energy just simply going to change the business plan? How will this deregulation initiative be communicated to Albertans? They're going to have their work cut out for them on that.

Again to the Premier: what criteria are used by the Public Affairs Bureau to determine which agency is contracted for media buying for client departments? Another question is: how much money would be spent?

Now, again to the Premier: why does public satisfaction with government information continue to be consistently below the target of 75 percent, and how is the 75 percent target for 2001-02 going to be achieved? This is on page 148 of the business plan.

What role is communications services playing in assisting the Ministry of Health and Wellness in communicating the government's policy statement and legislation on the delivery of surgical services to Albertans? Now, that's again, I believe, a public relations discussion. How much of the $5 million budget under communications in 2001-2002 has been allotted to communicate the government's policy statement and legislation on the delivery of surgical services to Albertans?

Again, how much of last year's preliminary of a little over $5 million was used to communicate the government's position on Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act? That was a public relations exercise that I don't think, Mr. Chairman, any province in this country has seen anything like. There was an amazing list of issues to be dealt with in Bill 11, and I'm sure there was daily contact between the Public Affairs Bureau and the Ministry of Health and Wellness. There just had to be. Here again we're back to the warm and fuzzy: the Health Care Protection Act. This is what the people in the Capilano Safeway notice about the enormous communications skill the current Premier displays, but they're not convinced with the Health Care Protection Act. I don't know how much of this $5 million budget was used, but when we think . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hear the minister of health wants me to continue, as he interrupted me before.

MR. MAR: You can always defer to your hon. colleague, you know.

MS CARLSON: Yeah, I know. I have a sore throat, and sometimes it gives out on me. Although I'm sure government members wish that was a permanent condition at least during the duration of budget debate, it isn't.

MR. MAR: I wish you good health; I assure you.

MS CARLSON: Yes. Thank you.

I want to continue with the comments that I had started to make before there was some degree of heckling involved, and that was on core business 2, "provide Albertans with two-way access to government," and specifically "manage the province-wide distribution of news releases and provide technical support for major government news conferences and announcements." I was suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that that should also include providing key support on industry initiatives, because we've seen that happen increasingly, it seems to me although I may just be more aware of it, over the last couple of years.

Like the public meeting that just happened the other night. We see a great deal of stage managing, I would suggest, of some of these public meetings. The question for the Premier on this issue is . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: I didn't see you there, Debby.

MS CARLSON: I wasn't at that particular meeting, but I have been at many that both of you have been involved in where there has been a significant . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Address the chair.

MS CARLSON: I am addressing the chair.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a significant involvement . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Ignore the comments from the side, if you could. Just stay with it.

MS CARLSON: It's very tough, Mr. Chairman. I'm trying to, but they're very persistent.

THE CHAIRMAN: But they're going to be good from now on.

MS CARLSON: I hope they will or else perhaps engage in debate at the end of the hour. That would also be welcome.

So the question I have for the Premier on this issue is: is the role of the Public Affairs Bureau and the government as an enabler in these areas? It could well be seen as the role in promoting economic development or other interests. Is its primary function as an enabler in these situations? Or is the government's role more global in perspective, a monitoring role, more of a grassroots collecting of information and looking over the global kind of public good? If the role of government is the public good in general, then I don't think there's a role for them to be an enabler in terms of organizing public meetings. I think that's in direct conflict. So I would like to hear the Premier's comments. [interjection] Mr. Chairman, I'm being provoked, and I'm going to be responding here in a second.

The question is: should they be enabling in those kinds of instances, or is there a more global role for government? This becomes increasingly an issue as we deal with competing interests in the province and conflicts in a variety of areas. I would like the Premier to address that if he could, because I think it is an important distinction that needs to be made. The government has a long history of supporting business initiatives. [interjections] They do in terms of organizing public meetings, and we have all been there where there have been staff from the Public Affairs Bureau directly involved in the organization of the meetings. My question is: is their role there as an enabler, or is there a more global function? I think that's a legitimate question. I think it's fair for Albertans to have the answer to that question.

I will move on to goal 4 now, where the Premier talks in the business plan about delivering "products and services that allow us to meet or exceed revenue projections and customers' needs." My concern with that statement is the term "customers." I don't think all Albertans are customers, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the context of their relationship with their government. I think they are citizens first and foremost and that citizens deserve to have their basic needs met and sometimes exceeded.

So I would like the Premier to tell us on what basis he uses the term "customers" over "citizens." I think that's a legitimate question to be asking here. There are many people in this province who would not view themselves as customers, and we are not always all customers in all areas in terms of what we expect or need from delivery. Semantics are important when you're talking about these kinds of issues, and I think that definitions are also very important. The kinds of filters that the government uses to make decisions that decide the future of Albertans are very important. These are issues that need to be discussed and need to be debated, and we'd be happy to see private members from the government side participate in this debate if they wish to do so on the record. It would be a nice role for that particular member to participate in for a change. If we could have that kind of feedback, it would be appreciated, Mr. Chairman.

The Premier talked about the review that they're doing of the Statutes of Alberta, and I'd like to thank him for that. I think it's excellent that that review is being undertaken. He doesn't know perhaps that we use those statutes quite often, and to have them revised and updated would definitely be an asset to the kind of work that we do.

I'd like to turn the page and go to page 148 now and talk about some of the public satisfaction surveys that the government does. The first one that I'm looking at in particular is "public satisfaction with government communications in priority areas." We see them starting in the 1999-2000 years and projecting targets into the future. We'd like some information on how those surveys are conducted: who they talk to, how the evaluations are done, whether the feedback on the public surveys is anonymous or whether there are some potential tiebacks to the people. We know that that can skew the information that comes forward and what the targets are. The criteria used to develop them, who they're asking, and what are the questions: that kind of data I think is relevant and is able to help us evaluate the effectiveness of the satisfaction.

Is it global or is it specific in nature? What are the kinds of questions that are being asked there? I think to just put the survey down there and say that 66 percent of the public satisfaction with government communications in priority areas is what was recorded in the '99-2000 year is not very useful if we don't have any of this background information in terms of how the numbers were established or where they came from or who participated in the survey. Those questions relate to all of the surveys that we have in here. So if we could get that kind of background information on each of the five surveys that are listed in these business plans, that would be helpful to us.

I think that's the extent of the first round of questions that I have. I will leave the floor open now for the rest of my colleagues. I've got a secondary round of questions that I hopefully will have a chance to get to a little later in the evening, but for now that's the extent of my questions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, I want to thank the Premier for being here this evening and giving us some insights into the ministry business plans for Executive Council. The goals that are established here on page 169 of the government and lottery funds are certainly lofty goals and certainly are goals that will serve Albertans well if we can achieve them.

In moving along as time is of the essence here and looking at key performance measures, again, I see that the key performance measures here are given in percentages with certainly no explanation as to how these were arrived at, how many people were surveyed, how these results were gathered, and you know, certainly no explanation when we see, for example, that we increased the public satisfaction with government information. From 1999 to 2000 it went from 66 percent to 75 percent as a target. How are we going to be determining whether that target was reached? Again, we'd like some hard-core statistics here, not just straight percentages.

I look down as well to "public satisfaction with RITE and Queen's Printer bookstores," again very, very worthwhile services provided to Albertans, particularly when we look at the RITE line. In my role for the last four years of being the critic for WCB, I saw certainly how well this line is used by Albertans all across this province and how frequently it was used by injured workers to phone and express their dissatisfaction with the progress that was being made in the settlement of their claims. It is certainly a service that I know is well appreciated, and without it many of these people wouldn't have any voice at all in voicing their dissatisfaction.

In moving along here, I notice as well that the operating estimate for program 1, the office of the Premier/general administration is increasing by $250,000 over last year's budget. In looking at line 1.0.1 of the lottery fund estimates, I have a few specific questions here for the Premier. He can certainly respond to these in writing if he wishes.

My first question then: will the Premier provide the projections for gross operating expenses for line 1.0.1, office of the Premier/general administration for 2002-2003 and 2003-2004?

My next question to the Premier: what is the level of full-time equivalents projected for the office of the Premier/general administration for 2002-2003 and 2003-2004?

Again to the Premier: will he provide a breakdown of the gross operating expenses of $4.663 million in 2001-2002 for the office of the Premier as well as for general administration? In other words, how much of the $4.663 million is for the office of the Premier? How much of this amount is being allocated to general administration?

Would the Premier please explain why there is a 4.9 percent, or $218,000, increase in the office of the Premier and general administration budget for 2001-2002 over last year's preliminary actual? Will the Premier also indicate how many of the full-time equivalents under this vote are employed by the office of the Premier and general administration respectively? Will the Premier provide a breakdown of the $4.663 million in gross expenses for 2000-2001 for the office of the Premier and for general administration by object; in other words, a breakdown in salaries, travel expenses, wages, advertising, telephone and communications, contract services including professional, technical, and labour services, data-processing services, hosting, and other purchased services?

Will the Premier indicate what the gross expense was for the Premier's southern office in 2000-2001 and the projected gross expense for the Premier's southern office in 2001-2002 and also for the years 2002-2003 and 2003-2004?

Also, will the Premier indicate what objectives, strategies, and performance measures and benchmarks have been established for 2001-2002 for the office of the Premier and general administration? What types of weekly and monthly reports are prepared by the office of the Premier and general administration in tracking the views of Albertans on such issues as public health care, the government's private clinics and private hospitals policy, public education, and tax reform for those Albertans who correspond with the office of the Premier?

Also, along the same lines, could the Premier indicate what steps are taken by his office to follow up on or respond to concerns expressed by Albertans through these monthly and weekly reports? How much of the $4.663 million in gross expenses of the office of the Premier and general administration in 2001-2002 will be allocated to policy co-ordination and business planning?

Now, as well, I thought the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie covered the office of the Lieutenant Governor very well. I would certainly echo her praises for the great work that the Lieutenant Governor does in featuring this most important office in the province and what a fabulous job she does in getting out and meeting Albertans of all ages. Certainly she is an Albertan that we all can be very, very proud of.

Now, as well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had many questions on the Public Affairs Bureau, and certainly we wish to continue with a few questions that could be covered here with this particular section. What we see here for an operating estimate for the year 2001-2002 is 10 and a quarter million dollars. Now, this is 10 and a quarter million dollars to make the government look good. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar actually said, he's quite jealous that opposition members certainly don't have access to this ministry as well. Perhaps it's a good thing. We might not be on the opposition side if we had access to that department.

We do have a few questions here, though, that we would like to ask. My first question would be under the area of public affairs. Why is the budget for public affairs increasing by 12.6 percent, or $1.144 million, over last year's budget?

Can the Premier provide a more detailed breakdown of the dedicated revenue for 2000-2001? Also, can the Premier explain why dedicated revenue is estimated to increase by 47 percent, or $800,000, over last year? If the Premier could also give us a breakdown of the $10.25 million budget for the Public Affairs Bureau in 2001-2002 by object: salaries and wages, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, data processing services, hosting, and contracts to outside vendors.

Will the Premier provide a breakdown of the gross operating expenses of the Public Affairs Bureau by subprogram for 2002-2003, which I see is $9.946 million, and for 2003-2004, which is pegged at $10.158 million?

Also, if the Premier could give us a breakdown of the 130 full-time equivalents of the Public Affairs Bureau by subprogram. These would be under the headings of administrative services, communications services, communications technologies, Queen's Printer bookstores, publishing services, and the RITE telephone system. Also, what are the projected number of full-time equivalents in the Public Affairs Bureau in 2002-2003 and in 2003-2004?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also asked a number of questions on communications services, and I have just a few more here if the Premier could please answer those for me. What initiatives are planned by communications services in 2001-2002 to improve speech writing services and improve the government's internal communication with employees? How much of the communications services budget in 2001-2002 is allocated to subscriptions to Angus Reid, Environics, and other polling and marketing research? How much of the communications services budget is allocated to focus group research on such issues as health care and education?

As well, if we are going to be having a summit this fall, which I understand could be announced any day – and this is about how Albertans would deal with the surplus once the debt is paid off – how many dollars would be allocated from this department to promote or spread the news of this particular summit? As well, how much of the communications services budget for 2001-2002 will be allocated to advertising services?

Just a few more questions here before I cede the floor to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. How much of the advertising budget is allocated to Highwood Communications, Calder Bateman, Hill & Knowlton, and Palmer Jarvis? What types of projects are worked on by such firms during the course of the fiscal year? Will they be working on communication of government policy statements and legislation on surgical services to Albertans?

Finally, my last set of questions to the Premier. Will the Premier provide a status report on the specialized communications training programs for departmental staff in regional offices? Which departments are involved in receiving training for communications, planning, writing and editing print and graphic design, and advertising?

Mr. Chairman, with those questions, I will be ceding the floor here to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I thank you very much for this opportunity.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I don't know what else I can say about any more questions I have for the Premier regarding the Public Affairs Bureau. The only question I can think of currently is: does the Governor of Florida have a public affairs bureau? I'm just curious, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I have some questions for the Premier regarding communications technologies, line 2.0.3. What further initiatives will be undertaken by communications technologies in 2001-2002 to upgrade the Alberta government Internet home page to increase the relevance and timeliness of posted information? Earlier in my remarks I heard an hon. member instruct me to just visit the home page and I could get all the information on the government that I wished. Unfortunately, that's not true. The Internet home page would certainly provide me and the research staff access to government information if it were made available there. Certainly I find the EUB site worthwhile.

What strategies are being developed to provide information technology support to Executive Council as part of the shared services initiative? What cost savings have been achieved through the shared information technology services initiative between Executive Council and central bureau offices? I can see that the hon. Premier and members of his Executive Council are already diligently trying to provide me with information regarding the Internet.

Now the Queen's Printer bookstore. Long before I came to this Assembly, I used to drive up to Kingsway Avenue to seek statutes that were relevant to my workplace. I believe sometimes this information should be provided for free to those who walk in, but I know that's not going to be the way. There are other people who say that all library memberships should be free as well, but this is not the time nor place. What initiatives are planned by the Queen's Printer bookstore in 2001-2002 to improve its inventory system, including printing-on-demand service for clients and computerized operations, for the Calgary and Edmonton bookstores? What strategies have been developed in 2001-02 to expand electronic commerce – QP online, QP CD-ROM, QP source professional Internet – to allow the Queen's Printer bookstore customers to purchase products through the Internet? What additional partnerships with the private sector are planned by the Queen's Printer with respect to the production of new value-added publications? Why is the dedicated revenue of the Queen's Printer bookstores increasing by $800,000, or 47 percent?

The RITE telephone system: in the time I have left I have a few questions about that. What steps are being taken to develop a more user-friendly RITE directory? What are the total number of calls to the RITE system in 2000-2001, and what are the projections for 2001-2002? Are action requests put through from the RITE system to the Public Affairs Bureau to the various departments of government, including the Premier's Office? What initiates the AR, the action request, in the provincial government of Alberta?

I'm very disappointed that our time is up. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd call on the hon. Premier for five minutes.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I'd like to thank members of the opposition for their questions, at least for the reasonable questions that were well posed and can be reasonably answered by the officials who are sitting in the gallery this evening.

I would like to take this time to comment on some of the comments, the questions such as: can you provide a detailed breakdown of the 160,000 telephone calls? I mean, does the opposition think that, you know, we have nothing else to do? We have a government to run. I was flattered, absolutely flattered to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar say he is jealous. Well, he should be jealous. He is outnumbered by more than 10 to 1, and he should be jealous because the people of this province elected us to govern. As they make all of these demands on government for information, I have to remind the opposition time and time again: the opposition is not the government. These people over here and all these people here are the government.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also alluded to Bill 11, and he alluded to the Public Affairs Bureau conducting a public relations campaign. Well, we had to conduct a public relations campaign. We had to. You know, this is old history. I would remind the opposition that the sky hasn't fallen, that really nothing has changed other than that rules and regulations have been put around the contracting out by RHAs to surgical facilities that do minor procedures, rules and regulations that never existed before. I would remind the Official Opposition that the Health Care Protection Act has as its preamble an absolute commitment to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act, something they opposed.

But we had to conduct a public relations campaign, Mr. Chairman, because of the vicious misinformation. The way that bill was being misrepresented was reprehensible. They talk about how much the government spent. You know, they tabled a flimsy amount of money that in no way, shape, or form reflects the amount of money that was spent by the unions, the Friends of Medicare, and everyone else to spread the misinformation about that bill. I would estimate it was in the millions of dollars. So, yes, we had to mount a public relations campaign to get the truth out, because it certainly wasn't coming out of their mouths; I'll tell you that for sure.

But I would like to thank the hon. members for their participation in this evening's meeting to review the 2001 to 2004 business plan for Executive Council, because that's what it's all about. Open discussions such as this are an important part of the government's commitment to remaining open and accountable to Albertans. Indeed, that is reflected in the business plan of the Public Affairs Bureau. One of the cornerstones of this government has been listening to Albertans and reflecting their needs and priorities and the decisions, actions, and priorities of the government. Mr. Chairman, precisely, that is why we are the government and they are not.

Having said that, all feedback is valuable when it's offered up in the best interests of the province and the people we are here to serve. So I would like to thank all members of the committee for the time and thought they put into the process and for their feedback, and we will provide the answers to the reasonably posed questions.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Executive Council, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense	$15,169,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$1,000,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Government Services

THE CHAIRMAN: We'd call on the hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and committee members. Good evening. It's my pleasure to present the business plan and the estimates for Alberta Government Services.

I'd like to introduce some folks in the members' gallery tonight that have helped me put this together. I'm taking them in order, they are our deputy minister, Roger Jackson; Susan Bohachuk, our chief financial officer; Laurie Beveridge, our assistant deputy minister in charge of registries; and Dave Keto, my executive assistant in my office here.

I would like to take this opportunity to provide you with an overview of our business and financial plans and upcoming initiatives. Following my overview I will be pleased to accept questions and respond in written form.

Alberta Government Service's vision quite simply is to provide Albertans with "secure access to government information and services and a fair marketplace." While this past year has been filled with many successes, we are now looking ahead to new opportunities to further improving the services we provide to Albertans.

Our five core businesses are described on page 227 of the estimates, and briefly they include supporting a fair and effective marketplace, which has a twofold mandate. A fair and effective marketplace ensures a thriving entrepreneurial economy, but it also protects consumers from unethical operators. By continuing to promote and enforce Alberta's award winning Fair Trading Act, we will educate and protect consumers and provide a level playing field for all businesses. Key legislation for the upcoming year includes the Internet sales contract regulation and various other regulations pertaining to real estate, debtors' assistance, travel clubs, cemeteries, and personal property.

Consumer complaints will continue to be investigated. Last year over 1,600 investigations were completed, which recovered more than $700,000 for Albertans. Twenty-one percent of our budget, or $10.8 million, is dedicated to this core business.

Our second core business is to provide secure, timely, and high-quality licensing, registration, and information services.

MRS. NELSON: And you do a great job.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you.

These services account for 12 million transactions provided each year through Alberta registries. These services range from registering vehicles, registering land and land-related documents, and licensing businesses to securing loans. A further 6 million transactions support government programs such as maintenance enforcement, farm fuel, and transportation and safety, and over 14 million transactions are conducted for local municipalities and law enforcement agencies, amounting to a total of over 32 million transactions per year. These transactions take up 68 percent of our resources, or $34 million. In return, these services generate revenues in excess of $245 million for the general revenue fund.

The third core business is leading the cross-government, one-window initiative to provide Albertans with easier, faster, and more direct access to government services in a secure environment. In effect, Albertans will be able to access whatever services they require through whatever method they choose, that being telephone, Internet, fax, mail, or in person. Long-term resources have not been identified for this initiative, so as an interim measure we have deployed funds from other programs. These funds represent 4 percent, or $1.9 million, of our budget.

The fourth core business is to co-ordinate Alberta's regulatory review process and administer the governmentwide records management function and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. These services comprise about 7 percent, or $3.5 million, of our budget.

Finally, the fifth core business is to deliver economical and efficient support services to all government departments through the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. ACSC provides transactional services in the areas of finance, human resources, information technology, and administration. Its net budget is $129.6 million, and all costs are recovered by charge-backs to the 24 ministries. As a result, the net expenditure is actually zero, as shown on page 226.

In order to remain effective and efficient, we continued to look for better ways to operate. Our performance measures, shown on page 230, are one tool we use to monitor how well we're doing. Many of the measures relate to client satisfaction, where we have set most of our targets at 85 percent. We far exceeded this target, for example, when it came to Alberta's satisfaction level with registry services. About 94 percent of Albertans who used our registry services indicated that they were satisfied, and maintaining this kind of customer service record has become a significant priority.

Other measures set targets for reducing telemarketing fraud, for competitive fees, and for timely service provisions. In the year 2000 Alberta saw a 47 percent reduction in telemarketing fraud. Fees for licensing and registration transactions continued to be far below the national average. As well, we will be collecting baseline data and setting targets for some new performance measures so that we can continue to provide quality services and maintain our high performance levels.

Changes in expenditures. I would like to give an overview of changes to our budget. You will note on page 219 of the estimates that our operating budget has significantly increased from last year. We account for this increase largely through nearly $130 million that was designated for ACSC, which was recently added to the ministry. These funds will be fully recovered through charges back to various ministries, so for the overall government of Alberta budget these expenditures and charge-backs will net out. Our ministry's share of these charge-backs is $9.1 million, as shown on page 222, shared services. To avoid double counting, this amount is excluded from ACSC's budget, outlined on page 226.

Returning to page 222, the ministry support services budget increased overall because many of the components listed here are consolidated for efficiency rather than including separate program budgets. This explains, for example, the reduced budget for licensing, registry, and consumer services programs on page 223. Also within this program it is noted that the amortization declined as a result of reduced capital expenditures. As well, resources were reallocated to help provide a base level of funding for the one-window program, and we will continue to seek out partnerships from across government to supplement our contribution.

Finally, turning to page 225, the government support services budget shows a decrease due to a small net reduction in staffing in the information management and privacy area.

I'd like to shift gears for just a moment to discuss the revenue side of our budget, as reflected on page 232. Of the $385 million, $129.6 million represents the recovery of ACSC's costs from ministries as dedicated revenue. The remaining $225 million relates to various fees and licences, the bulk of which are for motor vehicle services.

It is in this area that we anticipate most of our revenue increase as the demand for commercial and passenger vehicle registration grows. Forecasting a revenue increase seems unlikely given the estimate of $54 million in savings passed out to Albertans following the registry fee reductions of last year. However, the revenue growth is due to the higher transaction volumes that are linked to a thriving economy, where the demand for services is increasing.

I mentioned earlier that the revenue generated from our service goes into general revenues. As a result, the funds needed to offset the additional costs of keeping up with higher service volumes must instead come out of our base budget. One example of this is that we have reduced our capital funds and diverted them towards operational requirements. Our capital requirements, however, have not been diminished.

One significant challenge for our ministry is the need to redevelop our Legacy systems, which were built in the 1980s and will soon require new technology to continue to deliver these services. Again, we will seek out partnerships from across government to help address this need.

I want to thank everyone for the few moments I had to introduce our budget, and I will now turn the floor over to you, Mr. Chairman, to accept any questions that may come from the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the Minister of Government Services for his overview of his department.

Now, this is again, Mr. Chairman, a major department of the government. It's so important because it has the capability to investigate and enforce consumer protection legislation, use enforcement mechanisms to deter dishonest business practices, license and bond regulated businesses, encourage more consumer awareness and self-reliance, and provide regulatory framework.

Now, recently there have been some higher profile cases in the media of a minister that is willing to enforce, Mr. Chairman, the statutes that are available to protect consumers, and I would encourage the minister to continue this trend and rigorously enforce the legislation. For the longest time, in my view, in this province consumer protection has taken a backseat to public relations, contrary to what other people may think. I look no further than the issue of pine shakes.

I at this time would encourage the minister to look into these complaints that I'm getting, all of them, of course, from Calgary. I don't know why they're phoning Edmonton-Gold Bar, but they are. These are prospective home buyers who are asking me, "What's with these pine shakes?" I would encourage the minister to check this out. They're being told, "Oh, pine shakes don't rot in Calgary, and if they do rot, you only have to replace one or two on the entire roof and the problem is solved." I don't think that is accurate, and I'm astonished at this sort of behaviour.

Now, maybe these phone calls are not coming through on the RITE line, because they're not indicating what phone calls they're getting on the RITE line and what issues are being discussed. Perhaps they don't have the technology to do that. If they had the technology to do that, these phone calls could go right from the RITE line to the Ministry of Government Services.

Now, certainly, to say the least, that is dishonest, because everyone in this Assembly knows that the pine shake rots, and it rots in seven or eight years. This year may be a little drier year. There may not be as much rain, and the fungus won't grow as quickly, but it will. We need to encourage more consumer awareness. That is one of the most important aspects of this department, and again I would encourage the minister to use all members of his department to ensure that consumers are protected.

We look at the whole issue of gas, and I'm certainly hoping, Mr. Chairman, that somewhere in this budget is money to protect natural gas consumers. This whole idea of exit fees: I want the minister to show strong leadership and indicate to all consumers of gas, particularly ATCO customers, that if there are to be any exit fees at all to be charged to a natural gas consumer by a natural gas provider, then the amount of those exit fees if you decide to leave, if you were to have the choice and you were to go to another gas provider – I believe very strongly that in the minister's department regulations exist so that the minister can tell the gas companies to inform the consumers right on the bill that there will be a $40 or a $60 or an $80 exit fee or, if you're an industrial consumer and it's going to be based on the volume of gas used, what that exit fee will be. If we're going to be encouraging consumer choice in this province, the consumers have to have all the information before they make the choice.

As I understand this whole idea of exit fees, ATCO Gas has been given permission by the EUB to charge an exit fee. I think it should be right on the bill so that consumers can have that information so they can make a choice. Again, had consumers had that information in the past, there's not a consumer in this province, if they had known that the pine shake was not thoroughly tested before it was authorized and promoted by the current government, who would have brought that product. No one in the community of Leduc, no one in the community of Cochrane, no one in the community of Edson, no one would have bought that.

Now, we need to have a strong and competitive marketplace in Alberta with confident consumers, but we also need, as I said, adequate information. The legislation under the command of the hon. minister is there, and it is up to the department and the minister to utilize it. There's still much that could be done to inform and protect Alberta consumers and businesses, but I think the hon. minister is off to, as they say in southern Alberta, a real good start.

There's also the issue of plain language, and all legislation should be written and presented in a way that is understandable to all Albertans.

Should all legislation and regulations be tabled and published for public and stakeholder comment to ensure that Albertans are aware of changes prior to passage and enactment into law? [interjection] Now, I just heard the comment from another hon. member that they do that at the federal level. This used to be the occasion in this Assembly, and I'm going back to 1974. When a Progressive Conservative government instituted the Natural Gas Rebates Act, I read in Hansard, Mr. Chairman, that incredibly all the regulations concerning the Natural Gas Rebates Act were circulated to the members of the Assembly – and there was quite a sizable opposition of Social Credit members at that time – so they could have a look at them before they were presented, and I thought: wow.

Earlier this evening we heard the Premier in his remarks concerning Executive Council describe old history. Well, Mr. Chairman, that wasn't even old history, but it's the history of this province. I would encourage regulations to be routinely published for public and stakeholder comment, not set aside in the Legislature Library downstairs.

Now, consumer legislation should be created that includes government services and not just private goods and services.

I'd also like at this time to talk a little bit about registries. Registries, of course, include registrations of birth, marriage, and death, land title transfers, registration of corporations, vehicles, liens, et cetera. The former Member for Calgary-Buffalo was very, very concerned about the protection of personal information, and I certainly hope that the department is vigilant in the protection of personal information, that in these private/government partnerships there isn't a breakdown in the system. There were, as I understand it, over 12 million transactions in the year 2000. There are 220 registry outlets across the province, and for that information to fall into the wrong hands would be very, very disappointing. Applying and enforcing the FOIP Act to private registries and their employees is of great concern to the minister, I'm sure.

There's a Regulatory Review Secretariat, and it's like everything else in this government. Allegedly it's at arm's length, and it's an initiative to reduce, simplify, and eliminate regulations. Well, which regulations are going to be eliminated? Are they safety regulations?

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I need to interrupt you for a moment.

Hon. minister, no exhibits.

Carry on.

MR. MacDONALD: Now, regulations for safety. We've already seen in the last eight years this concept of voluntary compliance with occupational health and safety, and we saw injury rates and accident rates and WCB files opened at a far greater rate than the expansion of the workforce. At that time, it was fashionable for legislators to think that any regulation or legislation was bad, that it was just an impediment to business.

Now, we look at the environmental regulations and we look at consumer protection and safety. I can look at the three of those, Mr. Chairman, and the immediate event that comes to mind is Hub Oil. After all these regulations were downsized or removed, we saw with the issue of public safety, we saw with the issue of environmental protection for the southeast area of Calgary that no attention was paid. Consumer protection would apply in this case as well, because the oil that was left over at Hub Oil was being sold to asphalt plants throughout the province. Once again, I'm glad I wasn't a worker at one of those asphalt plants, and sometimes as I drive up and down the road, I wonder just exactly what is in that asphalt. I would encourage all hon. members of the Assembly to have a close look at the explosion at Hub Oil and the events that led up to it. We need strong regulations, and we need them enforced. We don't need to eliminate them.

We look at the first Bush administration in America, and the Vice-President at the time, Mr. Quayle, chaired a commission that behind closed doors eliminated thousands of regulations that businesses didn't like, including workplace safety, environmental protection, consumer protection. A favourite ideological initiative of conservatives, no matter where you go, is to unshackle business, and revived by the current occupant in the White House, I hope this is not the model that Alberta is going to follow, because there have to be regulations and legislation and the will to enforce them.

I'm pleased that the current Minister of Human Resources and Employment recognizes this. The minister through his actions recognizes that voluntary compliance does not work and has made initiatives to hire more inspectors. Also, the call centre that was initiated hopefully is going to reduce accidents, and people are going to be able to understand the regulations better.

I don't know how the call centre works there, Mr. Chairman, but I would be interested to know if the minister is considering expanding the call centre for consumer protection and also to inform consumers of the Fair Trading Act and their rights under the Fair Trading Act. Is there going to be a better or an increased public awareness or information system regarding the Fair Trading Act? I was present in this Assembly when the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake introduced that legislation, and I can say at this time that I'm pleased that there's at least an attempt to enforce it.

Now, FOIP. The FOIP Act supposedly enhances access to information, and the Premier earlier in remarks regarding Executive Council talked about openness and accountability. But I have to repeat this again, Mr. Chairman: isn't it true that the opposition is entitled to that information as well? Now, there have been month-long delays, in some cases over a calendar year, and high fees have been charged to myself and other members in the Alberta Liberal caucus, over $50,000 in three cases. Fifty thousand dollars: gosh, I could have fund-raisers at a fishing lodge and I couldn't come up with that kind of money.

On a pine shake timber permit request, $624,000 for that alone, and that's still being discussed as we speak. These fees are excessive, and in my view they're just a veiled attempt to keep public information from members of the opposition. I'm sorry; this has gone on and on. I can remember when I was first elected the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo explaining to me in a seminar about FOIP and FOIPing. I must say that the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo was absolutely right, and I'm glad I attended his seminar that day.

Regardless of whether it's information on the Canada/Alberta labour market agreement, whether it's concerning timber permits, whether it's concerning pine shakes – concerning the pine shakes, a week after the election I received 175 documents that mysteriously appeared. They're very interesting documents because they indicate that in 1994 there was – now, there are several cabinet ministers present here tonight and they would know better than I, but whenever there's a ministerial review of an issue, I think that's of high-level status. Now, I don't know whether they have one- through to five-level status ministerial reviews, but there was a ministerial review conducted on the certification of pine shakes. This information didn't come to light until a week after the election. The minister of labour at that time – it used to be the old department of labour – was none other than Mr. Stockwell Day, who has gone onto bigger and better things in the nation's capital.

Now, the one-window initiative under Ministry Challenges on page 177 is described as this, Mr. Chairman: "This implementation represents a significant time and resource commitment from both the government and private sectors." What is the expected expenditure in this in the next five years on the part of government and of the private sector?

Further on in the challenges there's a discussion on technology, information, and application architectures that must be defined and aligned across departments. Again to the minister: what is the expected expenditure in this in the next five years by the department to develop and set standards in order to implement this?

As I understand it, here also there are "significant pressures on our computer systems that support the land titles, motor vehicles, and personal property registries. Re-investment is necessary." Well, I'd encourage the minister to come to our caucus and see the computers that our researchers are working with if they think there are significant pressures in their systems. But, again, Mr. Chairman, how much reinvestment is required and over what time frame?

Now, there is a discussion on the need to explore creative ways to secure resources, Mr. Chairman. To the minister: what is meant by that, and what creative ways are being considered or are already planned?

The Alberta shared . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'll maybe get some time later. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to participate in the second set of estimates this evening, this time talking about Government Services.

Government Services, Mr. Chairman, to my way of thinking, is really the ministry of user fees. When we take a look at the funding that comes in here and where this ministry goes in terms of being a new ministry and the responsibilities that it's assuming, it's really user fees that we're addressing. That is a regressive tax, in our opinion, and something that we don't support.

This is a ministry that in essence we don't support in terms of that kind of a mandate. We supported the manner in which various organizations and areas that this ministry deals with were handled before by government. I thought that they were quite efficient. I'm a strong believer that there are some things that government does better than private industry. I think that in many instances what's covered now in this ministry falls within that purview.

I just want to spend a moment or two adding some comments to those of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar when he talked about some of the issues that are before this ministry. He talked about legislation and regulations that should be tabled and published for public and stakeholder comment to ensure that Albertans are aware of changes prior to passage and enactment in law. This isn't a new idea, Mr. Chairman. I'd certainly like the minister's feedback in this particular area. No doubt this province used to have some version of that in the past. Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about that.

Certainly the federal government still participates in what is really a very open and accountable and I believe progressive system when it comes to regulations. What they do is come forward with their regulations and immediately consult key stakeholder groups. Those would be people directly affected by the regulations, any groups who may be asking for their regulations to be enacted, and all parties in Parliament, Mr. Chairman. I think that that is a progressive way of getting some of the very best regulations in place.

I think that nobody wants more rules, but there are some times when rules need to be updated or conditions change and rules need to be implemented or put forward, particularly in a world where we're seeing such vast changes in technology and the way we deal with global markets. We need to make sure that we're on top of this particular issue. This is a government that doesn't support regulations of any kind. A former minister here, Steve West, was a strong supporter of zero regulations and reducing all. Well, that's fine. We don't want more paperwork where it's unnecessary, but sometimes it is necessary. So how do we get to the process where we ensure that regulations being brought are timely and necessary and useful?

The process that the federal government has with its different layers of review prior to those regulations being published for additional review is good. Sending out to stakeholders, involving all parties in the review is good. Then what happens is the regulations are gazetted, and there's a further opportunity for people to take a look at them and review them. In fact, who are the first keen observers of those gazetted regulations? Well, Mr. Chairman, wouldn't you know? For the most part it's those companies who have registered with the lobby registrations legislation at the federal level, because they are in many cases the eyes and ears of key industry players and stakeholders throughout this country.

So two really good ideas that the federal government has, not that were enacted by a Liberal federal government but have been in place for a long time, supported by the Progressive Conservative government, too, in the past. This is a good process, Mr. Chairman, and we would encourage this minister, who I know is open to good ideas, to review and to report back to the Assembly in terms of progress that we could make in this area.

What we're looking for here is a process that is most accountable to the people. I think that the process they have at the federal level works very well. We would like to see some form of that enacted here and see that as an excellent challenge for this minister to undertake throughout his mandate, to bring forward a system that is going to, I think, better provide for the needs of Albertans and be more inclusive in its implementation.

The next step from that is something that I'm not asking the minister to undertake, because I know it certainly isn't at this stage on the horizon of issues that his party wants to deal with. That would be all-party committees for decision-making. I want to put it on the floor for discussion. I would be interested in hearing what his feedback is on it, but I think it's perhaps a discussion better held with the Government House Leader. It's something we're going to continue to push for during this particular Legislature, the 25th Legislature. I think that it is a progressive way for governments to govern, and it is certainly something that could be tested here in terms of the regulations. Anyway, if the minister would consider that, that would be helpful.

Just one comment on registries before I move on to the Auditor General's report, and that is that I'm beginning to be lobbied by registry owners to increase the fees, Mr. Chairman. I would like some feedback from the minister on that. Is that on the table for discussion? Is his ministry being lobbied in this same regard? What would the process be for a review of that fee structure? When can we expect some sort of public reference to this? I think that that would be good information.

We see from the budget documents that costs have significantly increased in this area. I missed the minister's opening comments on the reasons for that. I don't know if it's because of additional volume or what. So if he could just review that for me again, I would appreciate it. It seemed significant when I took a look at the numbers when I was reviewing this particular ministry. Yes, the gross expenses were 12 and a half million dollars up from $10.8 million, it looks like. So some information on that. It's an increase but not all that significant. Is it just volume that we're talking about there? If you could give me that information on registry services, 2.0.2, that would be helpful.

Okay. Now I want to spend a little bit of time talking about the Auditor General's report with regard to Government Services. The Auditor General did have some comments, and we would like to know what the minister has done in terms of addressing those. He talked about the responsibilities for this ministry and talked about the core businesses being registries and consumer affairs and the financial results, but he had reservations on the financial statements.

I'm always concerned when the Auditor General has reservations on financial statements, because it generally means that there are some significant shortcomings in what's happening here. Even in a new ministry I just don't see that there's room for that kind of an issue. With the kind of support services available to ministries through the executive committee and the public services bureau and the wealth of expertise available in the ministries themselves and the flexibility of the support workers, it's hard to believe that the Auditor General could come up with reservations, but in fact that is what happened here.

The one that he talks about here is that additional work is needed on the key performance measures in terms of applying specific audit procedures. So if the minister could tell us what has happened in that regard and what his reservations were there, how they have specifically been addressed. Will we see a similar reference to that in the next year's report?

The Auditor General goes on to talk about the joint audit of Alberta Registries and that most of the recommendations have been implemented. That's excellent. Happy to see that. But five of the recommendations haven't been implemented; more time was needed for them. Those were in terms of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, applying that "to the motor vehicles registry services or adopting fair information practices equivalent to the FOIP Act." So could we get an update on what's happening there?

The training of private registry agents. Certainly I think that that is an issue, Mr. Chairman. This is the kind of business that's easy for people to enter into with little training. I know there have been investigations in terms of the operations of some registries, and some of that may be in terms of training, and some of it may be in terms of manipulation of information or the potential for manipulation of information. I would like to know how the minister handles complaints and inquiries particularly with regards to registries. Who does the investigations? How are they initiated? At what point would they be turned over to police services? What would the process be for that? How many of those kinds of inquiries were there in the past year? Did any of those result in actual charges being laid? So if we could have some information on that, it would be helpful.

One of the other recommendations was the "elimination of deficiencies in control procedures at the service bureau responsible for the operation of the motor vehicles and driver licensing systems." So what were the deficiencies and have they been addressed?

Another one was that assurance was "needed annually on the control procedures of the service bureau responsible for the registries' computer systems." You know, this questions also the confidentiality of the information recorded in those computer systems. So if we could get some feedback on that.

Then monitoring of the private registry agents. That probably ties into my questions with regard to how those are policed, but if he could comment on that I would appreciate it.

Another discussion the AG had was in terms of the current status of recommendations not implemented. They've developed new standards within the ministry, which is good, to identify who can have access to motor vehicle information and a plan for implementing these standards. Very critical information, Mr. Chairman, in terms of protection of privacy. So we'll be happy to hear the update. We'd like to monitor the status of those in addition to what the Auditor General is doing. Those are my comments with regard to that.

I will go back to questions on the business plans. Maybe I'll pick up where my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar left off. He was about to talk about the ACSC when his time expired. I think he was going to talk about this in terms of it being a new initiative. It's been discussed as being a new initiative that maybe requires several years to reach its full potential. Could we find out? Could we get some feedback from the minister on why it will take several years? The question I think is: how carefully has the government looked at the real costs and real benefits of this new outsourcing scheme? Are we seeing some benefits for it, or is it going to be one of those trial balloons floated that ultimately pops? I think of what happened in tourism as an experiment that didn't work very well, perhaps because of lack of planning or perhaps because of the lack of ability of the people to have the skills to implement it. I'm hoping this won't be the case here.

If we could have some information on what we can see as the real cost savings and benefits of this program. Is it really going to save taxpayers' dollars in the long run? What are the reasons, the justifications the department has for that expectation? Does it expect to reach the target of a 10 percent saving in this budget year and 20 percent in the next? We'd need, I think, more than just token assurances on that. If you have some data to back that information up that you could share with us, that would be excellent.

I'd like to go to the goals and key results for core businesses on page 180 if we can. The key result is the "elimination of unnecessary regulations." Can you define "unnecessary" for us and give us some examples of the regulations that have been eliminated? Who exactly is making those decisions? That would be a question I wouldn't mind being answered.

Another one is that "Alberta businesses are prepared for private sector privacy legislation." Were you referencing federal legislation here? If not, is there similar legislation being prepared in Alberta? That would be an interesting question. If it is, when will it be introduced? If it's not, then if we could find out why it isn't, that would be excellent. So those were under regulatory review on page 180 in The Future book.

Then going to the ACSC, the key result is innovative and economical delivery of all those services defined there. Has the outsourcing commenced? How many positions will be eliminated of the 1,100 employees that have been brought together across the ministries? How many more employees do we expect to be transferred to the ACSC this year? Is there a projection for each of the next five years? That's a question I have there.

Now, when we take a look at the issues management process, there seem to be so many discrepancies between departmental needs and the services provided. This process has to be set up. So my question is: why is the customer buy-in and approval only sought and not obtained prior to implementation? I think that's a legitimate question that needs to be asked here in view of what's been happening. It seems very strange to have the discrepancies between service needs and provision. There should be a better correlation or tie-in with those.

Can we have the information on how many cases proceed where there is a discrepancy, given that only exceptional cases where special or significant discrepancies occur go to the CEO's review or to the department minister's counsel? This looks like it could be a huge mess. If we could have some clarification on that, that would be very helpful. How many exceptional cases have there been? Maybe the question also is: how many cases in total? I think that's a fair question. There just seems to be all kinds of problems with the ACSC, and it doesn't look like it's been proceeding smoothly at all. So we really need to know how this is an improvement over the previous practice.

What measures have been taken to address the negative impact on public service morale? Certainly there's got to be some concern about uncertainty and fear of job loss as a result of this process, and there's got to be, I would expect, general dissatisfaction within the department in terms of what's going on there. Nobody wants to go to work and be involved in messes and in an inability to provide needs for people, to have discrepancies pointed out all the time. I think that could be a huge problem. What's the turnover been with this staff that are supporting this particular initiative? It would seem to me that there are probably some concerns around there.

Those are my questions at this stage. Perhaps I'll have an opportunity to ask a few more. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to make a few comments and a few observations here and ask the minister a few questions and, at the same time, thank him and his department for being here tonight to field our questions on Government Services.

Certainly in looking over the business plan and line items here, it is quite an interesting ministry, certainly one that is changing rapidly and one that does have some great pressures placed on the ministry and on the minister himself in order to stay current in an ever changing and rapidly changing world. I had the opportunity here a few years ago to listen to a futurist by the name of Frank Ogden. Frank was analyzing some of the technological equipment that was available at that time, and he ran a statistic by us that still amazes me today. I would think that perhaps this statistic is no longer current, that things are changing even quicker. He was telling us at that time – and this was only maybe five, six years ago – that any new piece of electronic equipment that arrived on the shelves of stores in Tokyo had a shelf life of 90 days because at that point something new had come on-line that was certainly more advanced and could do the job better.

This seems to be the whole idea in our technological services, whether it happens to be here at the Legislature or whether it happens to be in schools or business or wherever it is. It can be a black hole. It can eat up so much of our budgets, and again, by the time we get it implemented, there's already something better out there. So there has to be some prudent planning. There has to be, certainly, an eye to the future as to what is going to serve our short-term needs in the next three to five years and, as well, what sort of course of action we're going to take over this time to stay current and be able to serve the public and also serve business, because we know that so many of them are keeping up with this.

I was quite impressed here just the other day. My son is heading to Seattle this weekend to watch the Yankees and the Mariners, and he ended up with a couple of extra tickets, so he put them on eBay and certainly sold them to people down in Seattle in a matter of hours. That's something we would have never dreamed of even five years ago. So certainly there are significant challenges when we look at this area of technology.

Now, then, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar certainly did cover this area fairly well on technology, so what I would like to do is keep moving on here. I see that the Alberta Corporate Service Centre is a new initiative that may require several years to reach its full potential. I see here that there are clearly defined and understood service level agreements. These will be the key to success in working through the change process. Again, if the minister could please outline some of the reasons why it will take several years to work through the change process. Are these strictly financial matters? Is it the harmonizing of different levels of technology? Is it trained staff that we require to operate these systems? Just why is it that it will take several years in order to implement this?

Again, what I would also like to ask the minister is: how carefully has the government looked at the real costs and real benefits of this new outsourcing scheme? Will it save taxpayers' dollars in the long run? I think that's really the one question all Albertans would like to know. I certainly know that those people that are looking at technologies and whatever certainly don't only want to be well served by new technologies. They also want them to be cost-effective.

Also to the minister: will the Alberta Corporate Service Centre really reach its target of a 10 percent savings in this budget year and 20 percent the next? Again, that's a very lofty goal and certainly one we sincerely hope he will reach.

Now, then, looking at goals and key results for core businesses on page 180. I'm looking at number 4, the regulatory review. The key result here is the "elimination of unnecessary regulations." Again, this brings to mind many different parts of our population. I guess the first question I would want to ask on this key result is: what is defined as an unnecessary regulation, and who is it unnecessary to? Is it unnecessary to bureaucrats? Is it unnecessary to business? Is it unnecessary to the general population? These are questions that I would like more clarification on. As well, if the minister could even provide some examples of regulations that have been eliminated because they were unnecessary.

As well, a key result under regulatory review is that "Alberta businesses are prepared for private sector privacy legislation." This refers to federal legislation. Is similar legislation being prepared in Alberta? If not, why not? If this is being prepared, when will it be introduced here in the Legislature?

Now, moving right along and looking under goals and key results for core businesses, number 5, for the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. A key result under number 5 is "innovative and economical delivery of financial, administration, human resources and information technology services that are responsive to the needs of departments." According to the Customer Reference Guide published by the ACSC, approximately 1,100 employees have been brought together from across the ministries, and here I'm referring back a few pages. Has outsourcing commenced for this particular ACSC? How many of the 1,100 positions will be eliminated when this particular service centre has been introduced? Another question I would like as well on this key result is: how many more employees will be transferred to the ACSC this year and in each of the next five years?

The issues management process on page 24 of the Customer Reference Guide is what I'm going to refer to next. Apparently, many discrepancies between departmental needs and the services provided have occurred, that this process had to be set up. Why is consumer buy-in and approval only sought and not obtained prior to implementation? How many cases proceed when there is a discrepancy given that only exceptional cases, where special, significant discrepancies occur, are escalated to the ACSC chief executive's office review or to the Deputy Ministers' Council? How many exceptional cases have there been to date? As well, it appears that the ACSC has not been proceeding smoothly at all. How is it an improvement over the previous practice? What measures have been taken to address the negative impact on public service morale of the uncertainty and fear of job loss as a result of this process?

Continuing along under strategies on page 181, I see that there is to be consultation with stakeholders "to review and amend the tenancies legislation." Who are the stakeholders of this legislation, and what is the goal and expected outcome of the review? Which legislation would be co-ordinated with other jurisdictions under the agreement on international trade? Again, I think this is critical when we start looking at international trade, particularly at our ever increasing north/south development of the trade corridor as well as with our huge increases in trading with the United States and particularly Mexico as a new player that's coming on-line.

Now, then, as well under strategies on page 181, one strategy is the "periodic inspections of regulated businesses". If the minister could please provide us with how many inspections were conducted this year. Do they have any sort of target amounts set as to how many they would like last year? If he could also, in looking at these two, provide us with a percentage of the businesses that can be expected to be inspected this year. That's quite a mouthful, particularly at this late hour.

As well, on strategies, under the second point here, does the department have enough resources to conduct sufficient inspections to effectively protect Alberta consumers? Again this is an issue where the speed at which and the variety of ways that consumers in the province have to get products certainly is increasing and becoming more and more complex and certainly harder to track. So again a huge challenge for the ministry.

The provincial investigative strategy to focus on the most serious violations. If the minister could please tell us what violations would be defined as serious and what will they be doing with these violators when they are deemed to be caught. I'd also wonder if the department is restricting its efforts to only the most serious violations. Or does it have sufficient resources to properly protect Albertans?

Now, as well, I see that the department is developing "a framework for exemption requests from foreign controlled corporations for intensive livestock and agri-forestry operations." If the minister could please provide us with: what is the goal of this framework? Is it to facilitate an increased number of ILOs or to restrict or to set regulations? Exactly what is the framework? Certainly this here is a major issue. I know that when the Minister of Municipal Affairs was at the AAMD and C conference, this was a huge issue for all those rural people, particularly the fact that they're very, very concerned about the water quality and the air quality in this province. This was certainly before our latest scare from North Battleford.

As well, when it comes to the intensive livestock operations, certainly the various counties in the province wanted to have some control as to what was being built in their particular counties, yet they also wanted a set of guidelines that would be provincewide. Again the whole question of intensive livestock operations in this province continues to be of great interest and concern to many Albertans.

Now, on page 182 I noticed under strategies that the department is going to "analyze our costs of providing services and ensure our fees are appropriate." This certainly is another one of the pieces of legislation that we did pass in this Legislature, that fees would remain reasonable. What sorts of safeguards do Albertans have that any increase in fees is going to be equal to the cost of the service and certainly isn't going to be just another way to enhance revenue? It's certainly something we want protection for. You know, we want to say often that we are the lowest taxed province in the country, but at the same time they don't want our lower taxes augmented by a great number of user fees. So again a very, very big concern for Albertans.

Now, as well under strategies on page 182, I see that we are going "to develop legislation that will permit the creation of limited liability companies." How would this creation of the new limited liability companies differ from current limited liability corporations governed by the Business Corporations Act? Again, our whole focus here as legislators is to keep away from cumbersome legislation, from the overlapping of various acts that all do the same thing. It's quite interesting at this time, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has pointed out, that really our flagship bill this year, Bill 1, we don't have any need for because of – which act is it?

MR. MacDONALD: The Natural Gas Rebates Act.

MR. BONNER: Yes, the Natural Gas Rebates Act, that we currently have in this province. [interjection] Yes, there are many different acts that already control the distribution and rates of natural gas in this province.

So this again is not a case where we want to see more cumbersome and burdensome legislation that also crosses different ministries. Certainly I know the minister will be taking a very close look at this particular issue.

Now, on page 183, goal 3, I see under Strategies: a one-window gateway. A question here is: what is the expected cost of establishing and operating on an annual basis the program management office for the one-window gateway? Along the same lines, what is the expected model and cost of the proposed public/private partnership service delivery model? Also, what percentage of the cost will be covered by government and the private sector respectively?

With those comments, I think my time is almost up, unfortunately, and I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also has some comments that he would like to make at this time. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: No, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar will not be making comments. That was the time for the whole hour.

We now call upon the Minister of Government Services to make his five-minute concluding remarks.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the members opposite for their interest and their questions. We'll be providing them with written responses in the very near future.

I just wanted to briefly say that this is a system where the infrastructure is handling a tremendous load. You know, the revenue for the fees and the licences, as Edmonton-Ellerslie said: how do you justify that? Increases are based on projections of a good economy rather than population growth. Particularly, motor vehicles, commercial vehicles, and passenger vehicles have increased, and that's again an increase to the economic viability of Alberta. As well, land titles: up $3 million, which is 11 percent. That's due to the growth of our province and escalating property values.

So we're faced with some challenges. We will continue to explore any opportunities to ensure that we deliver the high quality of service that Albertans have come to rely on from Government Services, and I thank you very much for your participation this evening.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Government Services, are you ready for the vote?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:31 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 16, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/16

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Though we as legislators of this great province and its people are taken from the common people and selected by You to be architects of our history, give us wisdom and understanding to do Your will in all we do. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members of the Assembly several members of the Camrose Kodiaks junior hockey team. Obviously most members realize that last weekend they won the Canadian junior hockey championship. They're visiting the Legislature today, and just a few minutes ago they were guests of the Minister of Community Development and myself, and many of my colleagues here in the Legislature were also present, so I want to thank them for that. Many of them have left, of course, for the summer, but many of them decided to come to the Legislature to view what's going on before leaving for the summer. It's my pleasure at this time to introduce them. Of course they're sitting in the Speaker's gallery.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am presenting a petition on behalf of 95 Alberta residents who respectfully request that the attached petition be considered. It's all about the grizzly bear hunt in the spring and orphan grizzly cubs. They would like to suspend the hunting of female grizzlies in the spring.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I have a tabling of a letter from the Chinook's Edge school division, and I have the copies here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to tabled five copies of the Conference Board of Canada report and news release as well as copies of two newspaper articles on the report's finding. The Conference Board reports that "Alberta's growth rate will outpace all other Canadian provinces this year," thanks to a number of positive factors including our tax cuts. The report states that Alberta is in a class of its own, with both the goods and services industries absolutely thriving.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to be able to table seven copies of Making Sure It's Safe. It's a brochure on Alberta's drinking water. In light of Walkerton, North Battleford, and some other instances we feel it's necessary to put this out to the public. Every MLA will receive 100 copies of this in their offices either today or tomorrow. It answers important questions like: "Is it OK for hikers and backpackers to drink water from streams or lakes?" "Is it okay to use hot water for cooking?"

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table for the benefit of all Members of the Legislative Assembly a discussion paper entitled Imports/ Exports – Issues and Options. It's dated May 8, this year, and it is produced by the Power Pool of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table today five copies of the program from the DARE graduation at Our Lady of Victories school last night in Edmonton. It was delightfully done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's the Background, an analysis done by the Alberta Teachers' Association on the provincial budget relative to education. In part it states that "the Alberta government's assertion that Alberta teachers will be the highest paid teachers in Canada does not hold up to even minimal scrutiny."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling. It is a letter from Mrs. Shirley Ramsay, the reeve of Lacombe county, addressed to the Premier, encouraging him and his colleagues to defeat – and I assume hoist is an alternative – Bill 205.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a brochure produced by the Elder Advocates of Alberta entitled What is Elder Abuse?

Thank you very much.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce two good friends. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Don Hyde, a chartered accountant from Calgary and my chief financial officer during the past election. With Don is Peter Graham, a self-proclaimed fresh air inspector from Ottawa, which he says there isn't a lot of there. I would ask Don and Peter to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 35 members of St. Gabriel Cyber school in St. Albert. There are 35 in the group today: two teachers and 15 students, who are accompanied by several of their parents. The teachers are Miss Kara Zutz and Mr. Bernie Hryciw. They are seated in the gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 11 really keen and inquisitive students from the social 10 class at NorQuest College. They are seated in the members' gallery today, and they're accompanied by their instructor, Ms Elaine Nichols. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 46 people who have made the trip up from Duchess, Alberta. There are 30 grade 6ers, accompanied by 13 parents and three teachers. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Sex Offender Programs

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by commending the government for undertaking to establish the sex offender registry. Such a registry not only tracks the aftermath of an offence, where there's already been a victim, but prevention must also be considered. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier also commit to increased funding to preventative programs across the province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we aren't making any commitments yet. I do appreciate, however, the suggestions of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. We will await the report of the Solicitor General, and at that time we'll decide as a government what course of action to take. But I do appreciate the valid and constructive advice of the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier also commit to supporting programs like MarCon Associates in Lethbridge, who used to provide psychological treatment services to offenders but have stopped because of lack of funding?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what is in place right now on a provincial level and what is being done in other correctional institutions, but I will have the hon. minister respond if she has anything further to add.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the hon. member. These are all things that we will be looking at and considering within the next couple of weeks. Again, I acknowledge his support of the program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier also take steps to move beyond tracking offenders and empower programs in Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, and across the province who are helping to educate the public and children on the awareness and identification of potential offenders?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has hit one of the nails squarely on the head. It's important to remember that a pedophile registry is only another police tool. It doesn't guarantee the security of children nor does it replace commonsense safety precautions. Certainly, education relative to the avoidance of the tragedy that occurred in Lethbridge is an important component of the total program.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Water Quality Monitoring

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent tests on Bellshill Lake by Hardisty show that water in this lake is not fit for human or animal consumption. The total coliform count was too numerous to even count. The total dissolved solids were almost double the allowance for cattle consumption and three and a half times the limit for human consumption. This lake feeds into the Battle River. My question is to the minister of agriculture. Does your department identify and monitor agricultural point-source pollution, considering that's the easiest way that we can look at water pollution and identify those points and control it when it gets into our water supply?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we have taken, I think, a very proactive role in this by initiating a groundwater study in southern Alberta where we were concerned about the level of possible leaching into groundwater and consequently also into our streams from livestock operations.

On the issue of the testing of our lakes, I would ask that the hon. Minister of Environment fill you in because we work very closely on the testing of water bodies and the possible contamination from agricultural sites.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Safe drinking water and safe water generally is a very important topic to all Albertans, and we do constantly monitor drinking water sources. We just had meetings in my office this morning about the monitoring of a particular source and how we monitor it. We will continue to improve our monitoring and toughen our standards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment then. He talked about monitoring and dealing with the issue of drinking water sources in Alberta. These are basically open bodies of water where people do frequent. How much monitoring goes on, and what level of public knowledge and information is provided so that they can be aware of the quality of water in these kinds of bodies, which may not necessarily be drinking sources?

DR. TAYLOR: Obviously, public education is a very important issue that we're involved with. The pamphlet I tabled in the House today is one step in public education that indicates what we're doing and where we're going with this. Certainly where there are algae blooms and different things in lakes, we are prepared, as we're aware of these issues, to indicate to the public by notification of no swimming, that you shouldn't swim there, and to put on swimming bans and so on.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we need to do is get out the information on these point sources. How is the minister dealing with that kind of thing when there is actually a documented case above the human consumption safety levels? Are you advertising that? How do you get it out that these places are no longer safe for human consumption?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, certainly I'm personally not aware of the particular case he referred to, but the general procedure is to notify the public of unsafe conditions. We would take an ad in the newspaper perhaps or do some radio advertising. But it's our general practice to notify the public in appropriate ways.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I just wanted to offer a little bit of supplementary information from Agriculture's point of view on the water quality monitoring and inform the hon. member that we are currently monitoring 23 sites in the province that are influenced by agricultural practices. If he would like to have some more information on that program – it is ongoing – I'd be pleased to share it with him.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Conflict of Interest Legislation

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The public trust should be an open trust. In the next two years the Conflicts of Interest Act comes up for review. My first question to the Premier: will the government commit to a full and open examination of the role of third-party expense and income funds for MLAs in its review of the Conflicts of Interest Act?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether that will be looked at relative to the Conflicts of Interest Act. Really it's a party matter. You know, members' disclosure statements that are required by the Ethics Commissioner clearly indicate and are available for all to see. Relative to my disclosure statement it says: the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, leader's expense. Under the statement filed by the former leader of the Liberal Party, Mrs. MacBeth – she filed a disclosure statement as of April 15, 2000 – under leader's expenses it says: Alberta Liberal Party expenses. Exactly as it says in my disclosure statement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then will the government commit to ensuring that the Conflicts of Interest Act is revised to require that details be disclosed on the size of such funds?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is a private fund. It has nothing to do with government. It has absolutely nothing to do with government. We are not asking the Liberals to disclose any details of a Liberal leader's expense, if indeed one exists today. I understand the party is broke and they have no money. It could very well be that this leader does not have a leader's expense, but I can assure you that the former leader did have and disclosed so in her disclosure statement. This is a party matter. Party matters have no place in this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the government commit to ensuring that third-party funds for expenses and third-party funds for income are reported separately?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it is a requirement under the members' disclosure statement rules to disclose income from all sources. Relative to my own disclosure statement and I'm sure relative to the hon. member's disclosure statement, he is disclosing, I would hope, all income from all sources. I don't know if he's still getting an income from the University of Alberta or whether he's drawing a pension, but if he is, I would assume that he is disclosing that, as required by law. There already is a law in place to require all Members of the Legislative Assembly to disclose income from all sources. I have done so, and I assume the hon. member has done so. I hope he has anyway.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has chosen to embark on a path that's a recipe for labour strife with the province's teachers. In so doing, the government has set up an unwanted fight between teachers and school boards by forcing boards to choose between improving teachers' salaries and improving classroom conditions. My question is to the Premier. How can the government justify launching an aggressive public relations campaign which incorrectly claims that Alberta's teachers will be the highest paid in the country when in fact at least four Ontario school boards already have settlements which will see their teachers earn $3,000 to $4,000 more than the projected maximum in Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, we certainly do want to achieve having our teachers be at least amongst the best paid in the country. Relative to where we are and where we might be going, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When we talk about the Alberta teachers being the highest paid in Canada, we are talking about a weighted average. I don't believe that it's fair to cherry-pick four boards from Toronto. Indeed, when you take the average across the country, what you soon find out is that our teachers will be the highest paid with the 6 percent.

The hon. member also made a point about us pitting the teachers against the school boards and having to choose. Mr. Speaker, for the last 60 years or 70 years or perhaps indeed 100 years that there have been school boards in existence in Alberta and that they have been receiving funding from the provincial government, those are the decisions that have been forced to be made by the school boards. They would receive a per student grant, and out of that per student grant they would have to decide: should we give money to teachers for teachers' salaries, or should we put money in the classroom? This has been there for the last 80 or 100 years. This is nothing new.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier again: what's the point of including a budget line for teachers' salaries if not to push them towards provincewide bargaining? Is that what's being intended?

MR. KLEIN: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, that is not being contemplated, at least not at this time, and I don't know if it will be in the future. It's in the budget as a line item simply because we want to give the teachers some assurance that the least they can get is 6 percent. There's also another line in the budget that clearly indicates or implies that school boards will have the flexibility to negotiate higher if they deem that that is the appropriate place for the money to go.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: how can the government's apparent decision to impose provincewide bargaining on teachers be interpreted except as an attempt to provoke teachers into mounting a provincewide response?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the statement is not correct in any way, shape, or form. This government is not contemplating now provincewide bargaining for teachers, and I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

DR. OBERG: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We are not looking at provincewide bargaining. Basically what we're saying is that we value teachers. During the election campaign every member of this Assembly heard a lot about class size issues. What we heard about was class size. We also wanted to ensure that our teachers were fairly compensated and got a minimum raise, and included in this budget is a minimum raise of 6 percent. Each school board has its priorities. They are entitled to negotiate with the teachers, which is why this is not provincial bargaining. They are entitled to negotiate with the teachers on the other 3 and a half percent. I value the school board's authority, I value the school board's flexibility, and I value their ability to determine what the priorities are for their particular school jurisdiction. That is what we have done in this budget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Seniors' Health Care

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people in the province of Alberta are indeed very fortunate to have had the services and dedication of so many productive citizens over the last few decades. Our quality of life today reflects the hard work and unselfish commitment of these people, many of whom are today Alberta's seniors. My question to the Minister of Seniors: why do we appear to discriminate against some seniors by requiring them to pay Alberta health care premiums, given that all of them contributed so much to our success?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First let me explain that the seniors' benefit program was introduced in 1994. It was based on the principle that those who can pay should pay towards the costs of programs and services. The program also provides for a cash benefit for people who are in need.

With respect to the premiums specifically, any single senior with an annual income of $23,000 or less does not pay any health care premiums. There's a partial premium up until they make some $25,700. Above that, they pay the full premium. With respect to senior couples, Mr. Speaker, senior couples that earn $37,100 or less do not pay any health care premium. Between $37,000 and $42,000 they pay a partial premium.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, some 60 percent of the seniors in this province receive some support or total support for health care premiums.

MR. KNIGHT: Mr. Speaker, the second question to the same minister: can the minister reveal the dollar amount that Alberta seniors contribute to health care premiums?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the exact amount, but I believe it's somewhere in the neighbourhood of $60 million plus. That money, I might point out, does not come into the Seniors ministry but goes directly into general revenue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. KNIGHT: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Again to the same minister: will this government consider a program to allow seniors' health care premiums to be optional, allowing those that can afford to pay if they choose?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, we have been doing reviews of all the seniors' programs, and I do thank the member for this current suggestion. With respect to premiums, I've just had one good idea. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Inland Cement Limited

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans were told in this past recent election that if they voted Conservative, they would get representation and have their voices heard. Now the Environment minister is lining up with industry and saying: trust us; burning more coal won't hurt you and your family. That doesn't sound like real representation to me. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. In the Department of Environment's 2001-2004 business plan one of the desired results is for approval services to maintain high client satisfaction. Mr. Minister, who are the clients here: corporate interests or public health?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the clients in Alberta are all Albertans, including the member of the opposition that just asked the question. It includes all Albertans. It includes companies. It includes individual citizens.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Given that the Inland coal conversion project will lead to higher dust and fly ash fallout, how does the minister know that public health won't be impacted if he doesn't do an EIA?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, the assumption in the question is wrong. The project will in all likelihood, as was pointed out by some independent scientists the other night at a meeting, lead to lower dust.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, his assumptions are incorrect. Why won't this minister call a full environmental impact study, get all of the data open and accountable so Albertans can review this particular project? What is he afraid of? Just call an EIA.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, she has a misunderstanding of what an EIA is. An EIA is not a decision-making process. An EIA is an information gathering process, and before any of it starts, we have a screening process that is an information gathering process. After the screening process we can go do an EIA or an environmental review, and an environmental review is also an information gathering process. We will use the appropriate information gathering process to get all the information we need and protect her health and all the public's health.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Cottonwood Campground

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Foster Parent Association is an active and dedicated volunteer-driven group that provides special services for children in care. The activities undertaken include everything from social skill development to recreational gatherings and camping experiences. Recently, however, the AFPA was notified that their lease agreement regarding Cottonwood campground was being terminated. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Can the minister tell us about the agreement that is or was in place for the campground operated by the Alberta Foster Parent Association?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I can. In 1997-98 we did try to find a private facility operator for the Dickson Dam-Cottonwood PRA. Unfortunately, none were forthcoming, so that particular campground and PRA were offered to the county of Red Deer. They were unable to take up the offer, so the Alberta Foster Parent Association stepped up and said that they were looking for a summer campground to operate. We entered into a one-year lease agreement with them in 1999 on the understanding that it would be renewed on an annual basis if possible, and they were well aware of that. Subsequently it was renewed one additional year in the year 2000, and after that the agreement would lapse, within a few weeks in fact. So that's the history of the agreement itself.

MR. OUELLETTE: Can the minister tell us the specifics that resulted in the decision regarding the renewal?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, the area that we're talking about is actually what you might refer to as a potential floodplain, so part of the specifics that were included in that agreement was a cautionary note with respect to that eventuality of possible flooding in the area, which is why we review that lease agreement on an annual basis – at least we have done so in the past – to ensure that the level of the Gleniffer Lake reservoir isn't at a dangerous level. We will continue to put in that proviso. In fact, we will do it under the special permit that we've just issued them to go ahead with their awareness day weekend, which is coming up in a few days.

MR. OUELLETTE: So this situation leaves the Foster Parent Association without a site to provide a very appreciated facility. Will the minister reconsider the needs of the Alberta Foster Parent Association?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, I'm certainly very sensitive to the needs of a wonderful group like the Alberta Foster Parent Association, and I have spoken with the Minister of Children's Services about this matter as well. In fact, just yesterday I spoke with the president and chairman of the Alberta Foster Parent Association, and I assured them that we would not displace their program during this coming year. In fact, we're going to extend that lease for a six-month period beyond June 1 and allow them to provide these important services with special conditions that they will be soon made aware of, because we are concerned about the safety of the children in their care. It's a wonderful program, and I will also commit to the member and to the AFPA to help them find a more permanent solution for the long term.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Environment has spent some time over the past few weeks assuring us that we have safe drinking water in this province, yet we have just heard that Bellshill Lake, which drains into the Battle River, is three and a half times over the limit for human consumption. To the Minister of Environment: how can your department not be aware of this contamination site?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just received this. Somebody from the opposition sent this to me in the House today. I commit that we will look at it and get them the information that they need. The fact that I don't personally know about this example does not mean my department is not aware of it. In fact, I will guarantee you that my department will be aware of this issue. So to suggest that we're not aware of the issue is totally inappropriate.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what assurances does the minister have for those people who live downstream on the Battle River that their water is safe to drink?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, all communities have to have a treatment facility. If it's coming through a treatment facility, they have legislation that they have to meet. They have monitoring they have to meet. We do random inspections. As well, they must have a certified operator running their treatment facility. If they are getting it from wells or dugouts – in my area we get water from dugouts – then we make the availability to individuals like that to have their water tested to see if it's good or to see what kind of condition their water is in.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: does this level of contamination mean that your department's monitoring and reporting policies are not working?

DR. TAYLOR: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. It means obviously either he's misinformed or intentionally misleading, one or the other. For accepted Canadian drinking water standards we are one of two provinces that have more stringent water treatment standards than the Canadian drinking water standards. We have in Alberta the safest water in Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Waterton Lakes National Park Development

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans value great economic development, and also we value the enjoyment of our natural heritage. A constituent of the Calgary-Fort riding, also the vice-chair of the Alberta Conservation Association, has voiced to me his concern about the development of the eastern border of Waterton Lakes national park. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Could the minister explain to us the process of approval for that particular development as it relates to the provincial and municipal authorities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure this House that in fact Cardston county followed the process as per the land use bylaw in accordance with the Municipal Government Act, and in fact they've had public hearings pertaining to this issue. This is truly and solely a municipal responsibility which they are following in accordance with the Municipal Government Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you. My supplemental question, the only one, is to the Minister of Community Development, responsible for parks and recreation. Could the minister update us briefly on the policy to ensure the protection of our natural parklands?

THE SPEAKER: Very briefly, hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, very briefly, Mr. Speaker, this program really had its genesis back in the late '80s and early '90s, when our current Premier was Minister of Environment. A study was undertaken then to begin the process to designate certain parts of the province as special protected areas. I believe 1.3 million hectares or thereabouts have already been designated, including 76 over the last few years, and we've got about five areas left to go that we're still looking at. The program is well under way, and I think the residents of this province will be well pleased when those results flow in sometime I hope later this year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Western Canada Protocol on Education

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The western Canada

protocol is raising serious concerns. Upper grade content is being moved to lower grades, rendering resource collections gathered by schools over many years and at great cost obsolete. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will there be additional funds for schools to provide resources for topics that are being moved from one grade to another?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In talking to the school boards, they have raised this issue, and consistently what the school boards have asked me to do is not to envelope funds for specific areas. So, yes, there is extra money. As the hon. member knows, we increased the budget for school boards this year by $250 million, and there is money available.

The hon. member has actually touched upon a very good question, and that good question is the whole idea of curriculum and how we change curriculum. I will let the hon. member know that we're exploring what is called the evergreening of curriculum, where we will almost consistently be changing it on the computer, on the Internet, and I believe that this will indeed solve a lot of the issues that have been brought forward about teacher supplies, about curriculum-based supplies. That's the direction we're going, and I believe it will solve all the issues.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what steps are being taken to ensure that protocol changes will not repeat the problems that we've had with the high school mathematics program?

DR. OBERG: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked a very good question. Since I've become the minister, over the last two years I've probably heard the issue about mathematics somewhere in excess of a thousand times, indeed many of them actually from my side as well. We are working hard on the mathematics, and we have achieved what we have set out to achieve. It has taught us a lot of very important issues. A lot of very important answers have come from that because we did make mistakes in the institution of the mathematics curriculum.

One of the things, as I've already alluded to, that we're moving toward is the evergreening of the curriculum, where we will be changing small amounts of it continually so that we will keep it up as well as not having the massive change that occurred when we changed the mathematics program. This is something that my department works hard on and, indeed, is planning for the next seven, eight, and nine years on how to change the upcoming curriculum.

Just as a complete aside, Mr. Speaker, the English curriculum in high school has not been changed for – get this – 20 years.

DR. MASSEY: It says something about good literature.

To the same minister: given that the protocol is becoming a patchwork with the withdrawal of British Columbia and Alberta from the high school work, is the project still viable?

DR. OBERG: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I still feel that the project is viable, and indeed I feel the project is laudable. We can't be having people that are moving from Saskatchewan to Alberta, from Manitoba to Alberta – and, yes, there may even be the odd person in Alberta who moves to Saskatchewan – completely unknowing about the curriculum. So I believe that it is certainly a laudable cause, and we will continue to work with our western partners on the western Canada protocol. I will assure you and I will assure the hon. member that the needs and issues of Albertans come first when it comes to curriculum, and we will do what we have to do and what we need to do to change the curriculum in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Conflict of Interest Court Case

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The very long list of unanswered questions on the Jaber affair got a little longer this week. On Monday the Premier said that a deal between the Crown and Mr. Naqvi had been made which resulted in the Crown obtaining his testimony.

MR. NORRIS: What's your question?

MR. MASON: On Tuesday the Premier changed his story and said that it was an arrangement.

MR. NORRIS: Question.

MR. MASON: My question is to the Premier. Mr. Speaker, will you please deal with that unruly member over there?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: There's a synergy that exists between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands and the hon. Minister of Economic Development, who's couched behind the hon. Minister of Government Services. I do not know the history of this great affection between the two hon. members, but it seems to envelop itself in this Assembly on occasion. So let's make a deal. Let's all work together; okay? When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands speaks, hon. Minister of Economic Development, you go shush. When the hon. Minister of Economic Development speaks, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you button it, and then life will be good.

Please proceed.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I accept the deal.

Conflict of Interest Court Case (continued)

MR. MASON: Will the Premier tell the House exactly what he meant when he described this as an arrangement as opposed to a deal which had been made between the Crown and Mr. Naqvi?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, before I answer the question – and I'm really not going to; I'm going to have the Justice minister and Attorney General answer the question. You know, what's so disappointing about this member and the questioning is that it has nothing to do with public policy. You know, we're dealing with a serious issue such as drought. We're dealing with the ongoing issues of education and health. We're dealing right now as best we can with the anguish and pain of a Lethbridge family. We're dealing also with the good news relative to the Conference Board of Canada, the Minister of Finance. These are all big-picture issues that are of absolute importance to Albertans, and all this member can talk about is the Jaber case, which has been investigated, which has been prosecuted and a conviction obtained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: I'm sorry. I thought the Attorney General was going to answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, we've now been four minutes. Please proceed.

MR. MASON: Will the Premier tell the House, Mr. Speaker, the details of this so-called deal or arrangement?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that question I will refer to the Justice minister and Attorney General.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason why we referred to the situation as an arrangement rather than a deal is for exactly the reason this member is bringing it up, for clarity in the public mind. When people in the public hear the term "deal," they assume that there has been some concession granted or some immunity granted. That has not been the case in this situation.

What's happened in this situation as in many, many investigations and certainly investigations of this kind is that they need co-operation from one of the people who knows what went on in order to prosecute the other. In this case a strategic decision was made by the investigators in conjunction, presumably, with the prosecutors that the charges should be pursued against the government official, that that was the serious situation. They obtained as part of the investigation what is called an unwarned statement from the other person involved in this situation.

An unwarned statement is just that. Because the person is not given the usual warnings about how a statement can be used against them in a court of law and the rights that surround it, that statement cannot be used against that person. No concession has been made to anyone with respect to whether charges will be laid or could be laid. If investigations show that there were additional facts or if other facts come forward upon which a charge could be based, facts which if proven would lead to a conviction, then charges could be laid.

No immunity, no deal, but appropriate investigation techniques to get the information where it can be obtained from and used appropriately in a court of law.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then I would ask the Minister of Justice and Attorney General whether or not the statements made by Mr. Naqvi in response to the Crown prosecutor are in accordance with what we just heard from the minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, there is no deal in terms of the process. Normally one understands a deal to be somebody getting something; a usual case of this, immunity from prosecution. No immunity from prosecution has been offered. No deal has been made with the gentleman named. What has happened is that the investigators have taken an unwarned statement from the individual. That unwarned statement and that individual's testimony and co-operation in providing evidence in someone else's trial at law cannot be used against that person as evidence. If charges are to be laid against anyone else, then other evidence will have to be collected.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workplace Safety

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk about a good-news story in Alberta. The good news is that school is out for many of our university and college students, and it will soon be out for many of our high school students, and that means there'll be 150,000 students across Alberta looking for summer jobs. Now, as the chairman of the Council on Workplace Safety I know that workers younger than 25 years old are 17 percent more likely to be injured and workers with less than six months on the job are three times as likely to be injured. Now, that's not a good-news thing. Would the Minister of Human Resources and Employment tell us what his department is doing to ensure the safety of our young workers looking for summer work?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, as you can appreciate, with that number of young people coming into the workforce, it does require a response certainly on behalf of employers, on behalf of fellow employees, and then of course from us in Human Resources and Employment that have a mandate to provide for workplace health and safety.

As it relates to young workers, there are three areas that we're currently quite involved in. The first one that I would mention is that along with Alberta Learning we have what we call a job safety skills curriculum – of course, this is going into the high schools – and we're dealing there with grades 7 to 12, working on personal safety, on workplace safety, and of course safety systems management. By way of statistics and to give us some benchmarking on this, Mr. Speaker, in 1995 we were working with four schools and 19 students. Today in this particular program we're working with 450 schools, and I'm briefed that there are now 10,600 students that are involved. So we understand that this isn't a quick fix necessarily, but it's certainly getting them off to a good start.

The second program is one that we are collaborating on with the Workers' Compensation Board, and it's called Heads Up. Really it's directed at young and inexperienced workers, and the idea there is to get them concerned about their safety and then asking questions.

Of course the third one, our Youth Connections program, which I've mentioned many times here, does have information on workplace rights, responsibilities, safe work practices.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have many oil field companies in my riding, and they look forward to hiring these summer students. I'm just wondering: will these employers now need permits for young workers?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, again, in terms of permits it depends on age. If we have situations where the young person is actually an adolescent – and this means that they would be aged 12, 13, or 14 – then they do require a permit, and they have to make application to employment standards to satisfy us that the environment in the workplace that the young worker would be going into would not be injurious to the life, health, education, or as a matter of fact the welfare of the adolescent. In many cases, in fact I would say most, we'd also require the written permission of the parent.

Now, just so we don't start getting lots of calls on this, I might add that we can employ adolescents without permits if they're involved in what we call small ware delivery: if it is newspaper or flyer delivery, office clerks, or retail clerks. But if they're involved in any sort of construction area, it's unlikely that we would support a permit to a person less than age 15.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. My second supplemental to the same minister. So, then, how can workers or employers find out a little more detail about the programs for young workers?

MR. DUNFORD: We're very proud, Mr. Speaker, of a couple of services that we have put in place. We're using taxpayer funds to do this, but we think it's a responsible way that we try to balance taxpayer funding against the needs and the wishes of the workplace. We have a safety call centre number – and if I could read that into the record, it's 1-866-415-8690 – or they could visit the workplace health and safety web site, which is www.whs.gov.ab.ca.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Hub Oil Company Ltd.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In early August of 1999 Hub Oil exploded in Calgary, tragically killing two workers. My first question this afternoon is for the Minister of Environment. What studies are currently being conducted by the department to ensure that there is public safety and that soil requirements are being measured? What tests are currently being done by the Department of Environment on the Hub Oil site?

Thank you.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, as the member knows, the Hub Oil case is right now in front of the court system, and I cannot comment as Minister of Environment on that court case or what's happening surrounding that court case.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: is the minister's department currently conducting long-term studies on the plant site and in the residential neighbourhoods regarding emissions that are toxic to the citizens of southeast Calgary?

Thank you.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the regional health authority in the city of Calgary was involved in some follow-up work that was done. Also, during my time as Minister of Environment my recollection was that soil studies were conducted at the time of the emissions at Hub Oil and at the time of the fire. To the best of my recollection, those tests which were conducted demonstrated that the soil was safe at the time and that the proper remediation was done on the soil and all the residences in the area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question this afternoon is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is the Department of Municipal Affairs through the Safety Codes Council conducting any studies or any tests regarding the explosion that occurred at Hub Oil?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure this House that clearly the council is working very closely with stakeholders and many groups pertaining to this important issue. I can assure the member that much of the review that is going on is intended to be, again, in the best interests of all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Minimum Wage Workers

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned that some of my constituents are having difficulty making ends meet, what with higher rental and living costs. Can the Minister of Human Resources and Employment tell us how many low-income families are living on the province's minimum wage?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we won't have exact numbers, but I think we can probably provide the hon. member with at least a feel for the kind of numbers that we'd be talking about. Currently there are 1.6 million people working here in the province of Alberta. Of course, due to the fiscal management of this government this is the highest number there ever has been in terms of gainful employment, and of that we're very, very proud. Of those Albertans that are working, it's our estimation, as near as we can be, that 98 percent of those are working at more than minimum wage, leaving 2 percent of that number at that level.

Minimum wage workers tend to be between the ages of 15 and 24, and most of them are working part-time. Mr. Speaker, I can say that here in Alberta and with the economic fiscal policy of this government we're setting the stage for minimum wage workers of course to move up within those organizations where they're currently employed. A strong economy, a low unemployment rate, and the kinds of training programs and family supports that we have help all working Albertans. It is important in Alberta to be working.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that most minimum wage earners are young people, as you mentioned, what are you doing to ensure that they have a promise of a better career in the future?

MR. DUNFORD: One of the best ways that we're working in this area is our Youth Connections program. I would invite any member here in the Legislature to visit one of our sites around the province, and you'll see there that when young people come in, we can really help get them career oriented. Certainly we have web sites providing information. We are normally recognized in Human Resources and Employment for the tremendous printed material that we can offer people for their education and information.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What supports does your department offer for low-income families who may be working for minimum wage?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, this government has provided the Alberta family employment tax credit, which puts cash into people's pockets. Through the national child benefit program we've provided for children's health services such as prescription drugs, optical, and diabetic supplies. We have housing programs. Here in Alberta it is important to get into the workplace, even if it's at the minimum wage. We do have support programs for them to get them in that transition of course from the minimum wage, but as they gain experience, they move up not only the experience ladder, but they move up the wage ladder as well.

National Physiotherapy Month

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize National Physiotherapy Month, which runs from April 22 to May 21. National Physiotherapy Month provides an ideal opportunity for physiotherapists in Alberta to showcase their expertise and accomplishments and welcome community members to their facilities. The Canadian Physiotherapy Association has chosen to develop a campaign for National Physiotherapy Month called Spring into Action as a way to celebrate. The goal is to promote healthy gardening and help gardeners stay pain free this spring.

Physiotherapists have a detailed understanding of how the body works. They are university educated and trained to assess and improve movement and function and relieve pain. They promote good health by encouraging their patients to improve and increase their independence. Physiotherapy in Alberta plays an integral role in continued efforts to provide care and assistance, co-ordinate activities, and disseminate information to promote fitness, good health, and injury prevention.

I think it would be appropriate for all members to recognize the work that physiotherapists do in Alberta. You never know; you might need one one day.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Edmonton Heritage Fair

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Saturday I had the pleasure of bringing greetings to the sixth Edmonton regional heritage fair, held in the Legislature pedway system. I also had a lot of fun participating as one of the judges. The heritage fair is based on a science fair model but asks students to create a project about Canadian heritage, history, culture, or geography. Students in grades 4 to 9 are involved, and it was really satisfying to see students making good use of our libraries, our museums, and our archives. I think that's thanks to great advice and assistance from their teachers. I was pleased to see these students using these resources for their projects rather than just the Internet, which is so tempting today.

The pedway system was filled. There were 229 projects displayed and prepared by 350 students and judged by 100 members of the community. The same fair was held in four other Alberta communities: Peace River, Lethbridge, Calgary, and Red Deer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Leaders of Tomorrow Volunteer Citizens of the Year

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year the St. Albert Community Information & Volunteer Centre organizes a tribute to be paid to the leaders of tomorrow and to the volunteer citizens of the year. On May 5 my colleague the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and I had the opportunity to congratulate these winners, and I would like to acknowledge them in the Assembly today.

Of the leaders of tomorrow, the elementary division award went to Jeremy Goodall, the junior high division to Venessa Carlson, the senior high division to Jeff Beaton, and the postsecondary division to Matthew Heyworth.

The volunteer citizens of the year were chosen because it is the International Year of Volunteers. All three nominees were acknowledged: Dieter Knobloch, Bernie and Alfreda Melik, and Dr. Craig Roxburgh.

These are indeed extraordinary citizens of St. Albert. I would ask the members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating these fine young leaders and citizens.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton Public School Board

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The editor of The School Administrator, an international magazine for school leaders, notes: we rarely turn over the majority of any one issue to spotlight a single school district, but we are making an exception this month. That exception is for the Edmonton public school board, whose Centre for Education is situated in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton public schools have embraced site-based decision-making and made it work. During the past five years Edmonton has essentially re-created itself as a system of choice for its 81,000 students. The district offers a highly imaginative array of about 30 programs from traditional back-to-basics to schools with strict dress codes to programs for hockey or artistic students or tailored to home schoolers or those with elements of the Christian faith and schools for those looking for international baccalaureate programs.

I join Editor Goldman and add my appreciation to Superintendent Dosedall, the Edmonton public school board, and the thousands of teachers and support staff for their service to children and for their expansive vision of public education.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Alberta Teachers

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize collectively the teachers of this province, the educators of our children. They are the women and men who have a profound impact on our children's lives and their future by providing them with a solid foundation, that being quality education. These hardworking and dedicated professionals give generously of their knowledge, their compassion, and their caring day after day. They help to inspire in children a love of learning and inculcate values of fair play, equality, and hard work, all of which will serve these children as they grow throughout their lives.

I know that all members of this House will join me in applauding and thanking all of our teachers for dedicating their lives to making a difference in the lives of the children of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

National Youth Bowling Championships

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the 2001 national youth bowling championships, organized by the Youth Bowling Council of Canada. The event took place last week in Calgary with the participation of teams from all our provinces and territories. They proudly represented the best of their zone, totaling over 300 selected youth bowlers. With them were hundreds of coaches and parents.

Thirty-six years ago the program named Youth Bowling Council was organized for youth bowlers. The national YBC each year enlists the aid of over 6,000 parents and adults to voluntarily coach, supervise, and instruct them. The fact that bowling teaches coordination and good fellowship and may be played alone, with a friend, by a family, or in competition with others makes it the number one participation sport in Canada. The fact that bowling is a sport that everyone can take part in makes bowling the number one social recreation in Canada.

I would like to congratulate the organizers, sponsors, youth bowlers, and parents for making it a successful national event in Calgary.

Portuguese Musical Society

MR. YANKOWSKY: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and recognize the 25th anniversary of the Portuguese Musical Society of Edmonton. A large celebration was held on Saturday, May 5, 2001, at Our Lady of Fatima church with the Edmonton and Calgary bands in attendance. The day began with a sod-turning ceremony on the site of the new home for the music society. The land has been purchased, and construction is slated to begin soon.

The Edmonton chapter president, Manuel Mota, and the secretary and conductor, Sandy Duarte, are overjoyed that the music society will soon have a permanent home. The marching band is composed of members of all ages, with youth always eager to learn to play a musical instrument and join the band.

Congratulations and best wishes, Portuguese Musical Society, in all your future endeavours. God bless.

Lloydminster Biprovincial Upgrader

Q3. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.

What are the yearly projections for upside interest accruing to the province from the operations of the Lloydminster biprovincial upgrader for the period 1999-2014 as specified under the upside interest agreement of February 7, 1995, between the government and CIC (Crown Investments Corporation) Industrial Interests Inc.?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. On behalf of the Minister of Energy, who is not here today, Mr. Speaker, and in the spirit of open government I'm pleased to respond to this question. I would like just to make a couple of points first before they respond.

Alberta oil sands are presently attracting significant investment. Currently there's about $53 billion spoken for, $53 billion that could be invested by 2010, which is a significant investment. As the owner of the resource, Mr. Speaker, Alberta not only benefits from the royalties, but Alberta also sees and takes part of the risk.

Currently, bitumen prices are depressed, and when those prices are depressed, of course the royalties aren't at such a significant level. Now, the goal would be to have this resource upgraded in Alberta, of course, and that's certainly what we are working towards.

So given the variability and uncertainty attached to forecasts, especially longer term, the government does not forecast to 2014. We recommend, therefore, that this written question be rejected.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

MR. BONNER: No further comments at this time, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Written Question 3 lost]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, I hereby move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

Bill 206

Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act

[Debate adjourned May 15: Ms Blakeman speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to enter into this debate and speak against Bill 206, the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act. The bill, that has been proposed by the Member for Lethbridge-East, seeks to set down rules and regulations regarding conflict of interest for regional health authorities. This is an admirable idea, but I must speak against Bill 206 as I feel it would overly complicate our existing system.

Mr. Speaker, in 1994 17 regional health authorities were created to take over from 150 individual hospital and health unit boards. The regional health authorities were to ensure that the health issues of each region were dealt with in a timely and cost-effective manner. Since 1994 regional health authority members have been appointed by the Minister of Health and Wellness. Very soon there will be a system in place where two-thirds of members will be elected and the remaining one-third will be appointed by the minister.

The regional health authorities were given the responsibility of governing ethically from their inception. A regional health authority sets the direction for the health delivery system in the region, develops a business plan for the region, sets policies to guide programs and services, makes budget decisions, and consults with a wide range of community members.

Mr. Speaker, each regional health authority must develop conflict of interest bylaws and policies and have them approved by the Department of Health and Wellness. The Minister of Health and Wellness is ultimately responsible for the actions of health authorities. The minister is governed by the Conflicts of Interest Act and expects a similar level of ethical conduct from the RHA boards.

The regional health authorities report to the minister, and he will work to ensure that there are no conflicts of interest through the selection criteria of regional health authority members as well as requiring adherence to codes of conduct and bylaws. The selection criteria used for RHA appointments and the elections is outlined in the Local Authorities Election Act and the Regional Health Authorities Act.

Mr. Speaker, when members of the regional health authority are chosen to be part of the board, a number of items are considered to ensure that there will not be a conflict of interest. As a result, people with direct or indirect connections to the health system are judged to be ineligible. If you are a nurse employed by the region or a doctor or a physiotherapist working in the region, you are not eligible to be a member of the regional health authority. People who are directly or indirectly involved in certain contacts with the regional health authority are also not eligible to serve as members. It is also the minister's prerogative to dismiss any and all members of the authority if the authority is not properly exercising its powers or carrying out its duties under the Regional Health Authorities Act or if for some other reason the minister considers it in the public interest to dismiss the members.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health and Wellness is responsible to the voters, and soon so will be the majority of regional health authority board members, making all board members more accountable. Additional to the open forums, elected board members of each regional health authority under the guidance of our elected minister of health develop a code of ethics. The code of ethics is an extensive list of standards that must be followed. It also covers areas of conflicts of interest that may not be covered by the bylaws of the Regional Health Authorities Act. Each regional health authority develops its own bylaws and policies and codes of ethics because the regions have different needs and concerns. The bylaws are similar but unique and enable the boards to deal with regional issues in a timely and effective manner.

Mr. Speaker, I will give an example of a region that has an extensive code of ethics and has complete conflicts of interest guidelines. The Chinook regional health authority has a very extensive bylaw dealing with conflicts of interest which includes defining conflicts of interest, measures for disclosure, and mechanisms for resolution of all such conflicts in a public forum. Under the current RHA members' report they report to the minister in matters of conflicts of interest. Under Bill 206 they would report to the Ethics Commissioner.

The office of the Ethics Commissioner, Mr. Speaker, is exclusive to the Members of the Legislative Assembly and to senior government officials. To include regional health authority board members as an additional responsibility would reduce the availability of the office to the Members of the Legislative Assembly and senior government officials. The Ethics Commissioner would surely become less effective overall if he had to deal with all the regional health authority board members in addition to his current responsibilities. The resource that the office of the Ethics Commissioner provides to government is of extreme importance, and we must protect his ability to function effectively to protect the interests of Albertans as they pertain to Members of the Legislative Assembly and senior government officials.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 removes autonomy from the regional health authorities, which currently resolve their own conflicts of interest situations. These issues are resolved in a public forum, open and accessible to every region and every community. The background of each member of the RHA board is scrutinized before their appointment, and when there is even a slight potential for a conflict, bylaws and codes of ethics prevail in eliminating bias in the decision-making process of the RHA.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, all decisions made by the RHA come to the minister in the form of a business plan or a health proposal, which is also heavily scrutinized. Contracts, labour agreements, and issues of supply and waste disposal are all decided in a cost-benefit analysis, and any individual that may benefit from these agreements is excluded from the decision-making process.

Mr. Speaker, as I have outlined, the system of preventing conflicts of interest has multiple monitoring systems, and every decision is closely scrutinized to prevent any individual from exploiting the health care system to their own advantage or benefit. Our RHA boards have spent years developing codes of conduct, ethics, and bylaws which acknowledge the importance of having a system that is immune to corruption. It is unnecessary to extend the office of the Ethics Commissioner to watch over RHAs as they are comprised of members who are very capable of monitoring their own membership. Also, if this system does fail, the supervision of the minister of health will prevail in ensuring that RHAs operate in the public interest.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to a bill that was put forward by the hon. Member from Lethbridge-East, and it is Bill 206, the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act. Certainly it is one of those acts that we do need, and we need it very desperately in this province, particularly when we look at all the reasons for having such legislation. Without a doubt, when we look at Bill 206 and the type of legislation it will provide to Albertans, it is dealing with one of the more sensitive departments that we have in government. It is dealing with, beyond a doubt, one of the most expensive departments we have in government, and it is dealing with some of the most sensitive material, that Albertans cherish and wish to be private. So when the hon. member proposed this bill, he certainly did it by providing the absolute best legislation that we can provide to Albertans. [interjections]

Now, we hear some oohs and aahs from members on the opposite side. Mr. Speaker, they tried to tell us that this is too much legislation, yet we have on the floor of this Assembly a bill called Bill 1. It is the flagship bill of the Premier for this First Session of the 25th Legislature. Now, this bill is also a bill that duplicates other bills that are currently in place. This is a bill that was not in place when billions of dollars of rebates were given out earlier this year, yet there seems to be a need for this type of legislation. Here we have Bill 206, which is there to protect Albertans, there to protect Albertans with their most sensitive information, and we have people from the opposite side saying that this is not required. Why the double standard? So, yes, I will speak to this, and I will say that there's every bit a need for this bill as they perceive that there is for Bill 1.

Now, currently in Alberta there are 17 regional health authorities, and they write and implement their own conflicts of interest bylaws applicable to all staff of that regional health authority. When we are designing any public policy, there are some critical questions that must be asked, and certainly what we have to do when we examine public policy is assume first of all that there are various positions in the policy that are correct. So we assume when we see conflict of interest laws being written by each particular regional health authority that each of the regional health authorities will have legislation that will be the very best, that will be consistent so that people, no matter where they are in this province, as residents of Alberta can be certain that the utmost and best legislation is there and that there is consistency.

We certainly have that when we look at the Canada Health Act and we look at the five principles that apply to all Canadians. So in the delivery of those services by the regional health authorities, why should we not expect conflict of interest legislation to be consistent, to be the same for each of the 17 regional health authorities?

Now, then, another reason why we do need this legislation is that – all of us in this Assembly agree – the traditional form of delivering health care in this province has changed drastically and has changed drastically over the last decade. So we do have in the province now an increasing dependence on private, for-profit health care. We do have people that are sitting on regional health authority boards that are also owners of private, for-profit facilities. So do we not need stringent legislation in order to protect Albertans? We would assume that that legislation would be in place. We would assume that people cannot, in the same position, wear a hat when they're dealing with public health care and put on a different hat for private, for-profit health care. We have seen any number of these conflicts arise in this province, particularly when we look at the Calgary regional health authority.

So what will this piece of legislation, Bill 206, do to firm up the conflicts of interest? How, by not having it, does a public health care system get undermined? Now, then, Bill 206 will certainly restore public confidence in the public health care system and also with our regional health authority boards. There always is in any elected or appointed position a perception, whether it's real or imagined, that people in that position do have an opportunity to gain. It is often said to every member of this Assembly when they are out on the street about our pensions that we supposedly are perceived to have and the great influence that we can certainly deliver as members of this Assembly. So here, then, we certainly have to have some type of legislation which is consistent and which is beyond reproach when dealing with perceived or real conflicts of interest.

As well, when we look at Bill 206, does what happens correspond with accepted practices in the private sector or in parts of the public sector? Again, as I mentioned earlier when I was discussing the Calgary regional health authority, we do have numerous instances where we have people sitting on both sides of the fence, and it does undermine public confidence in our health care system. I would think, as well, when we look at health care, whether it be private or public, that it is the most important service that government provides in this province and in this country. It is certainly one of those services provided that is the envy of every other country in the world, and it is worth our taking every possible step to protect it and to certainly make certain that we do not have conflicts of interest.

Albertans want to know beyond a doubt that conflicting interests play no part in their health care delivery today, and they also want this assurance that it will not in the future. As well, when we look at Bill 206, one of the great advantages is that it will put in uniform legislation applicable to all regional health authorities, and it will increase our ability to monitor and to deal with conflicts, potential or otherwise.

Now, then, Bill 206 is the first bill being brought forward by the Official Opposition. This legislation would apply comprehensive and uniform conflict of interest rules to all regional health authority board members and employees as well as to all contractors and independent health service providers that have a contractual relationship with the regional health authority.

This legislation is modeled after the Alberta public service code of conduct and ethics. Bill 206 applies disclosure and conflict of interest principles similar to those applied in industry and government, and if those standards are good enough for industry and government, then certainly they should be good enough for the regional health authorities.

Now, certainly a positive step this year – it's going to occur in this fall's municipal elections – is that we are also going to be voting on two-thirds of the regional health authorities' boards of directors. It is certainly a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, but again this new change doesn't go far enough. We have 83 members in this Assembly that are voted on by the public at large to handle a budget that I believe is in the neighbourhood of $21 billion. We have been given that responsibility. Now we are asking people in this province to have one-third of a regional health authority appointed.

The people of Alberta trust us with the responsibility of over $20 billion, yet we take one of the larger departments of that and we do not have that entire board elected. Certainly I think this would be a step in the right direction. If people knew that their position on that board was due to them being elected by the public, then certainly this would be another incentive for people, and we would not require as stringent rules for conflicts of interest. But we do require these rules. As long as there are appointments, there are no guarantees that people would be dismissed from these boards for conflicts of interest.

Now, then, this piece of legislation, Bill 206, has legislative importance in three dimensions. First, Bill 206 addresses current and future conflicts of interest outlined by providing a conflict of interest definition and a mechanism by which conflicts of interest can be investigated. The bill also requires that recurring or ongoing conflicts must result in either the termination of the relationship with the regional health authority or the divestiture of the asset causing the conflict. Again, this would certainly address some of the concerns that we have heard regarding the Calgary regional health authority, where we do have people sitting on the board that have interests both on the public side and on the private, for-profit side of health care delivery in the Calgary region.

Secondly, Bill 206 applies a uniform standard of legislative conflict of interest rules to all regional health authorities. Current conflict of interest rules governing regional health authorities are neither uniform nor legislated; that is, no one said that conflict of interest rules apply to all regional health authorities. Each regional health authority will be developing its own conflict rules, and the conflict rules are mere bylaws, not statutory legislation.

Finally, Bill 206 is designed to restore public confidence in Alberta's health care system. Conflicts between private and public interests, whether perceived or real, are damaging to the public's estimation of and confidence in public officials. This is particularly true when the conflict deals with a service as personal as health.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, this is good legislation. It is legislation that is required. It is legislation that Albertans want. Regional health authorities have a public duty to uphold the highest ethical standards so that public confidence in the health care system is preserved. It is the responsibility of regional health authorities to safeguard public finances and to ensure that personnel they engage do not have private interests that can benefit either directly or indirectly from the regional health authority's activities.

It is also the responsibility of the regional health authorities to adopt, apply, and enforce conflict of interest rules that are at least as rigorous as those applying to us as MLAs and to government employees and contractors engaged in public service under the Public Service Act. Albertans have a right, Mr. Speaker, to regional health authority services provided with impartiality and integrity.

Now, then, this bill, Mr. Speaker, covers situations that should be covered by public record. What the information makes apparent is that there is good reason for Albertans to be concerned that regional health authorities have permitted personnel it engages in its own business to be involved in actions which give rise to real, potential, or apparent conflicts of interest. There is widespread public concern that commonly accepted standards for the conduct of public business in relation to conflicts of interest have not been adopted – and the example I've been using is the Calgary regional health authority – in a timely fashion or that these sets of rules and guidelines have not been enforced. These certainly do warrant an investigation by the Ethics Commissioner.

As well, Mr. Speaker, in my closing remarks here I would certainly want to say that Bill 206 is a very, very important piece of legislation. It is one that I would urge all members of this Assembly to support. It will put in place rules and regulations that are equally as stringent as what we as members of this Assembly uphold and follow.

With those comments, I would like to take my seat and cede the floor to other members. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to enter the debate on Bill 206, the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act. I really share and value the principle of protecting the Alberta public against conflicts of interest. However, it is without any reservation that I rise to speak against Bill 206, as proposed by the Member for Lethbridge-East.

It is my position that Bill 206 is redundant because all of the concerns it raises have already been addressed by the new regional health authority election and appointment regulations. Bill 206 in effect is questioning a new system of regional health authority elections and appointments as outlined under the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001. Essentially it alleges that our system is open to all sorts of conflict of interest situations, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, this is just not the case.

Let me start out by saying that the debate that occurs in this Assembly is essentially so members across the way can help us to see where we must improve to better serve Alberta if the points raised are worth while. However, I intend to show today, Mr. Speaker, that the basic assumptions underscoring Bill 206 are flawed, and therefore the bill itself should not pass.

[Mr. Amery in the chair]

Without doubt, the sponsor has the best interests of Albertans at heart. Health care is vital to Albertans, and as such it is the responsibility of everyone in this Assembly to find innovative ways, effective ways to deliver the best health care possible to Albertans. This is a task that all of us should take very seriously, and this is exactly why the regional health authorities were created and why we are moving to a system of elections that decide two-thirds of each board. This new system will provide Albertans with the most efficient and best possible health care governance. Further, Mr. Speaker, the makeup of the boards will ensure that all Albertans will be represented fairly.

However, according to Bill 206 our regional health authority system is susceptible to a number of conflict of interest situations. Bill 206 states that all potential candidates must disclose any conflict of interest they may have with regard to their private interests and the ways they may further those private interests as members of the RHA board. Well, truth be told, I'm speaking here today to assure the sponsor that this government already has a system in place to ensure that all of those who are appointed or elected to a regional health authority do have the public interest at heart and not their own pocketbooks.

Mr. Speaker, if we take a look at the rules established for the regional health authority elections and appointments, we see firm regulations that ensure that no conflicts of interest or improprieties take place. Just as a reminder here is a list of some of the ineligible persons for election or appointment to a regional health authority board: first, regional health authority employees, Health and Wellness employees, independent health service providers that get funding from either a regional health authority or the government, the directors, officers, and employees of health service organizations receiving 50 percent or more of their funding from Health and Wellness, a regional health authority, or both. As well, spouses of any of the above-mentioned groups are ineligible for election. Any elected government official in Canada or any person nominated to hold office is ineligible, and judges are also ineligible.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the government has mandated that if any of these ineligible candidates do run or stand for an appointment to a regional health authority, they remove themselves from any conflict of interest within 30 days of their election or appointment. As well, the employees of a regional health authority or the Health and Wellness department are required to take a leave of absence to run for a regional health authority position.

It seems to me that what Bill 206 is asking is that all persons who run or stand for a position on a regional health authority must disclose any conflict of interest, and if a conflict of interest is declared, they must take appropriate measures to remove themselves from it. Mr. Speaker, I would ask: isn't this already stipulated by the regulations concerning the election and appointment to regional health authorities? After all, we don't have conflict of interest regulations and an ineligibility list just for show. We have them to make sure that the people on the regional health authorities are people who speak for the best interests of Albertans.

Our regional health authority boards will be made up of reliable, impartial community stakeholders, people representing all of the citizens of Alberta's communities, people making sure that the health care in this province will be as good as it can be both now and in the future, not people out to make a buck or two from the health care system. The list of eligible and ineligible persons makes sure that the process is open, accountable, and, above all, clean.

This government has made it clear that any conflict of interest is unacceptable, and those rules will be enforced. I therefore wonder why we would need Bill 206. It doesn't propose to do anything that this government hasn't already endeavoured to do. We could wrap the regional health authorities up in red tape many times over if we liked, but why bother, Mr. Speaker, when the system works as it stands? Alberta is poised to lead this country into the future as a first-rate example of the best way to operate and to govern the great health care system for Albertans.

With the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act we are giving Albertans the regional health authority boards they have asked for, and we have made sure these boards will be composed of impartial and accountable Albertans who are governed by strict conflict of interest regulations. We've covered these bases.

In closing, I repeat that I cannot support Bill 206. I leave this forum for my colleagues to join me in the debate, and I thank you, thank you, and thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the comments from all the members, and that's the spirit of the Legislature.

I'll start with some general comments on Bill 206. The integrity of Alberta's public service is of profound importance to the people of this province. Alberta and indeed Canada have over a very long period developed a tradition in their public service that is in many ways the envy of the world for its impartiality. I use the term "public servants" in the broadest sense of the term to include elected, appointed, employed, and contracted officials of the public service. Citizens in Canada are confident that they can approach public servants knowing that their interest as a citizen should and normally will come first. This is a matter of ethical duty, and it cuts to the heart of democracy.

Many of my thoughts today have been stimulated by a book entitled Honest Politics, which I think should be standard reading for every MLA. What are the fundamental principles of public service ethics? Well, there are several, including impartiality, fiduciary trust, accountability, and responsibility.

Impartiality can be understood as a lack of bias in public decision-making. Public officials have a duty to be impartial as they exercise their duties, and if they are in positions that seriously reduce that impartiality, they may no longer be able to appropriately fulfill their duties.

Fiduciary trust rests on the shoulders of public officials because they are acting on behalf of the public. They are trustees of the public interest. This means that public officials have a responsibility to protect and promote the public's best interest. The public interest without exception must always prevail over private interest.

Accountability means that public officials must be able to demonstrate in a credible manner that the expectations of public officials are being met.

Mr. Speaker, because human beings are what they are, we cannot always rely on good intentions and unwritten conventions to ensure that our public servants behave ethically, so society has encoded these expectations in regulations and in laws, as we are discussing today. In Alberta there's the Conflicts of Interest Act, which applies to us as MLAs here today. There is the Public Service Act, which applies to public servants, and under this act there is a code, a well-delineated, well-written, and well-thought-out code of conduct and ethics. At the moment neither of these acts apply to regional health authorities, although RHAs receive billions of taxpayer dollars and are creatures of the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker, it's the intention of Bill 206 to ensure that Alberta's regional health authorities are held to the highest standards of ethics, standards which we believe all Albertans would support. There exist in Alberta a number of situations which raise the gravest concerns about conflicts of interest in Alberta's regional health authorities. For example, there are a number of senior officials in the Calgary regional health authority who are or who have been in untenable positions for being on the public payroll. These situations have been brought to the attention of the CRHA board but have been allowed to continue. My comments today are not directed at individuals. They are directed at a system, a system in which the RHAs should require that apparent, potential, and real conflicts of interests are discontinued. Instead, the system today allows apparent, potential, and real conflicts of interest to continue without resolution.

I will provide one example that has been the subject of some question periods. The chief medical officer of the Calgary regional authority, who is paid in the range of a quarter million dollars a year to oversee the delivery of medical services in the region, has immediate family members who are major shareholders in a surgical company that contracts to the Calgary regional health authority. In other words, this individual is ultimately responsible for a contract that channels large sums of public money to his immediate family members.

There are a number of other such cases in the Calgary regional health authority involving eye surgery and other areas of medicine. Material I have tabled in this Assembly provides details, including the names and positions of individuals and the names of various companies, including numbered companies, whose cases raise serious questions about conflicts of interest.

Bill 206 would bring the regional health authorities into line with conflict of interest legislation and codes that are common in other aspects of public life. At present each RHA is allowed to develop its own conflict of interest guidelines. This is simply not working. The codes that have been developed, such as the ones at the Calgary regional health authority, do little that is effective. They merely ask the person who is in conflict to declare their conflict and remove themselves from immediate decisions. This over the long term becomes meaningless action, a kind of charade of propriety. In fact, it appears that people who may be in conflicts of interest might have even participated in developing the CRHA's conflict of interest policy. Little wonder that nothing much has been done.

Conflicts of interest that have gone on for years are allowed to continue, to expand, and indeed to work their way into the culture of the organization. An organizational culture of conflict becomes ingrained so that standards of public-sector conduct that are normal in other institutions, including, as far as I know, every other aspect of the Alberta government, may no longer apply in these situations. In fact, Mr. Speaker, not only are these expectations required in almost every area of the Alberta government; a great number of private corporations have the same standards. A great number of private corporations would not tolerate and do not tolerate the kinds of apparent and real conflicts of interest that we are seeing in some RHAs. I've made various inquiries of major businesses and have found that generally they are quite ruthless in ending conflicts of interest among staff.

The other day I was able to obtain TransAlta's policy on conflict of interest, and it was unequivocal. TransAlta simply states point-blank that perceived, potential, or real conflicts of interest are to be avoided. There is no room for people being in prolonged situations where there are questions of whose interests they may be serving.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 would ensure that all Albertans will benefit from the same high standards of ethical behaviour from their RHAs, when it comes to conflicts of interest, that are expected in the corporate sector and the rest of the public sector. Among Bill 206's most important provisions is section 8(2). Under section 8(2) there are requirements that ongoing conflicts of interest must be ended. It simply isn't enough for a person to excuse himself from a decision. If the conflict is ongoing, it must be terminated. The way the bill proposes ending the conflict is by requiring the person in question to either dispose of their private interest that places him or her in conflict or to end his position on the public payroll.

Mr. Speaker, many of the concerns that Bill 206 is intended to address arise around chiefs of medical departments. Chiefs of medical departments sit undoubtedly in a difficult position, a position in which conflict of interest easily raises itself and must be dealt with.

Chiefs of medical departments in regional health authorities are under contract to the regional health authority and as such are servants of the public interest. They are frequently paid, by most people's standards, very well. The chief of a medical department in a sizable RHA may well be paid $100,000 a year for the part-time position. A chief medical officer for an entire RHA may be paid a quarter of a million dollars a year of taxpayers' money to look after the public interest. These are not just token public appointments. These are serious, contractual, well-paid public appointments under which people occupying them must first serve, without exception, the public interest.

It's also worth pointing out, Mr. Speaker, a particular point that was made in this Assembly the other day which I believe to be erroneous, to be a misinterpretation of the facts. The fact of the matter is that the controls on MLAs and the legislation that covers MLAs' conflicts of interest do not apply to regional health authorities. The same standard, the same legislation that applies to us does not extend to regional health authorities. I wish that it would, and if it were the case that it did, Bill 206 would in fact be unnecessary.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at considerable length here. [some applause] And I guess the other members would like me to. But I think that for now I will rest. I look forward to the opportunity to debate this bill at greater length in committee.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to stand and debate Bill 206, presented by the Member for Lethbridge-East, Bill 206 being the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act.

As I've been listening to the debate itself, we do have 17 regional health authorities that already have in place their own conflict of interest bylaws or regulations that fit well in their own jurisdictions. I heard the member opposite saying that he has reviewed TransAlta's standards that they have for conflicts of interest. I would like to know whether possibly EPCOR or anybody else has the same ones which are being proposed under Bill 206. I think, again, each corporation in this case has their own set that fits them well.

When we look at conflict of interest, again we have to look at every regional health authority having written up their own set of regulations. Also, the Minister of Health and Wellness continues to take the ultimate responsibility for whatever actions are taken by the authorities. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we need Bill 206, because it would duplicate what's already in place.

Also, Mr. Speaker, when we look at this fall, we're going to have election of two-thirds of board members. That is why the government has tabled Bill 7 in this session. With Bill 7 this government has considered the new challenges that will be posed by the elected health authorities and has extended and tightened up conflict of interest regulations in this area for potential flaws at the time.

Mr. Speaker, going back to Bill 206, although the intentions are noble – I believe there's some good stuff in here, but it's already in place right now. So, again, I'd say that it's redundant; it's being duplicated. I think we have some very good people that hopefully will be running in the election, and there are going to be people that are going to be cognizant of their responsibilities as members on a regional health authority, and there are conflicts of interest rules that they have to abide by.

I think that when we look at this, Mr. Speaker, mention was made that we have to have the RHAs held to the highest of standards. I believe the 17 RHAs that are out there are already held to a high standard. I believe they're working toward the good, the betterment of our health system for the residents of Alberta. As I indicated earlier, we do already have conflict of interest guidelines that have been put in place by regional health authorities.

I'm not going to dwell much further on this, Mr. Speaker, but I believe Bill 206, as indicated, is a noble gesture by the member opposite for Lethbridge-East, but again I would urge my colleagues and everybody in this House to not vote for Bill 206. I believe we have good mechanisms in place. I can reiterate, go over what I've said again, but I don't think we can do that. Again, the disclosure of conflicts of interest is already there. I think that whoever is going to be on the regional health authorities, whether elected or appointed, has to recognize that any potential conflict of interest by their family members has to be recognized, and I think they already know that.

Again, as we know here in the House, we ourselves are bound by conflict of interest bylaws, or at least I do personally on my own. I certainly would not want to be in a conflict that would affect this government or Albertans here in this province. I think everybody has a conscience of their own. I think the good people that are running in the election and the one-third that will be appointed will all be aware that they have a conflict of interest regulation to look at.

We have an Ethics Commissioner that we have to also speak to, and of course he's going to say that you have to disclose what your interests may or may not be. If you have interests that would be affecting you because of a regional health authority appointment or election, you should disclose them or discharge them, if that's the case, so that you can run.

I think we do have some pretty good laws in place right now. So to have Bill 206 accepted would not be the right thing to do. Although, as I indicated, there are some pretty good things in here, they are already being done, Mr. Speaker.

With that I sit down and allow some other member of the House to address Bill 206, and urge all my colleagues and members of this House to reject Bill 206. Thank you.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak in support of Bill 206 and to respond, if I might, to some of the comments that have been made by members opposite during the debate that we have been undergoing.

I think it's important to start with what is actually in the bill, and, Mr. Speaker, the definition of conflict of interest appears on page 1. . . . means a conflict between the public and private interests of a board member, independent health service provider, employee or contractor that occurs when they use their position to gain personal benefits or benefits for their relatives that are not available to the general public.

So we aren't talking exclusively about health board members. The act is intended to apply to a wide range of individuals that are employed by or associated with regional health authorities.

The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs made some rather interesting arguments. I found the one argument, if I am interpreting him correctly, that somehow the minister of health was going to look after things to be spurious, I guess is what I would call the argument. It seems to me that it's asking a great deal that the minister of health be held responsible for the ethical behaviour of the hundreds of people that are involved in the regional health authorities and that would come under the aegis of this act. I found it an interesting but, I think, irrelevant argument that somehow or other that minister could hold that responsibility.

The notion that each region has a code of ethics has been mentioned by a number of members opposite, and it's interesting. I think the point was made before that those codes have actually been made up by some of those regional health authorities that they apply to. It's a little like the fox guarding the henhouse to expect that the standard that Albertans would expect is going to be reflected in each and every one of those codes of ethics. It seems the rationale for not having one code of ethics that applies to all of the authorities, just as the code of ethics here applies to all of us – it's hard to understand why someone would argue against that position.

There was another comment I think made that the Ethics Commissioner couldn't handle the job, and I found that an interesting sort of argument given that it was this government that added to the Ethics Commissioner the work of the privacy officer and freedom of information. So it's, again, an argument that was made but I don't think carries much validity when you look at what's happened and when you look at the ethics officer for the federal government and the number of employees that officer is responsible for. The argument that the job is just too big for one Ethics Commissioner I don't think holds much water.

The notion that this bill would take away the autonomy of health boards is really an interesting one. Just how autonomous are they when a third of the members are appointed by the provincial government? It's hardly an autonomous board if those appointments are made from outside. So the argument of autonomy, again, is one that I think is rather weak.

The notion that RHAs have spent years developing codes of ethics: unfortunately, when it comes to codes of ethics, time in doesn't mean quality out. They may have spent a great deal of time developing codes, but I don't think that that assures us they are of the rigour and comprehensiveness that the application of Bill 206 would be.

The comments from a couple of the members that the system works well seem to be – and I find it quite incredible coming from a member from Calgary: the notion that the system works well. When you look at the Calgary regional health authority and the conflict of interest, Mr. Speaker, three of the private, for-profit surgical facilities that have current contracts with the Calgary regional health authority are owned or partly owned by senior medical officers of the Calgary regional health authority.

You know, the largest contract for the provision of surgical services was awarded to a private, for-profit clinic owned by a Calgary regional health authority medical officer and his business partners. Two of the five private, for-profit surgical clinics that provide virtually all the eye surgery in Calgary are owned or partly owned by CRHA medical officers. The list goes on. The private, for-profit eye surgery clinics in Calgary appear to co-operate with one another in regards to the facility fees they charged to the CRHA rather than compete with one another. Two of the private, for-profit surgical facilities that have contracts with the CRHA are located in former public hospitals once owned or operated by CRHA.

So to claim that the system works well is to stretch matters, Mr. Speaker, and I think that the members opposite have not really taken seriously the provisions of Bill 206, because I think it is a well-crafted bill that would serve the province well, and I would urge its passage.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The leader of the ND Party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 206, the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act. It's generally accepted in modern democratic societies that people elected or appointed to serve the public in government or government agencies must put their duty to the public above their private interests. They cannot and are not expected to use the knowledge, experience, and contacts gained while working in the public sector to financially benefit themselves or close family and associates in a way that would not be available to ordinary citizens. We expect public officials, whether they are permanent or contracted public servants, elected representatives – Members of Parliament, Senators, MLAs – to serve the public interest. Where there is a conflict between the public interest and the private or the perceived problem of this kind of conflict between private, family, or party interests, the public interest should always prevail.

So, I guess, when we debate this bill, these are in a sense some of the principles that we should pay attention to. Since it's dealing with a situation that's been created by the actions and the statutes of this government over the last several years – the latest of those actions being Bill 11 – I think the bill is a timely step to address the potential for conflicts of interest to arise in our health care system, given the organization and the functioning of our regional health authorities.

I have been listening to at least a part of the debate, and it's been argued that given the unique conditions under which each RHA has to function and deliver the services required by residents of the region covered, we have to make to special order the conflict of interest rules as well. I have difficulty figuring that out. The minister has the responsibility to make sure that there are certain uniform standards that prevail across the province, so much so that he has retained within the law the power to dismiss any regional health authority that in his or her judgment doesn't measure up to a sort of uniform observance of and compliance with these expectations which he or she holds the government has.

So there is, on the one hand, an expectation and a clearer statement of it in the statutes of the province that the minister is responsible for seeking and establishing and making sure that such province-wide standards are observed. Yet, on the other hand, this same minister turns around and sees no reason to expect some uniformity, some standardization of the conflict of interest requirements across the province, across the boundaries of the 17 regional health authorities. Just because there are 17 regional health authorities in itself is no argument to have 17 different sets of conflicts of interest regulations. It makes absolutely no sense.

Logically, it has certainly no purchase anywhere. You know, if you think through it, it makes no sense, whether it's the regional health authority in Calgary or the Capital regional health authority or whether it's some other regional health authority that's contracting out services, which in fact is at the root of the problem. The potential that has been created for conflicts of interests is, of course, the very decision that this government made and put in law: that regional health authorities will be encouraged to and legally certainly authorized to contract out services. That creates the potential for conflict of interest insofar as the very people who work for the regional health authority make decisions and have inside knowledge of what decisions are to be made, how they're made, what is the overall set of considerations that lead to the making of a decision. This is the kind of inside information that's not available to those providers on the outside who don't have either the shareholders or members working inside the authority. So that creates the potential for conflict and the real instances of conflict.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods cited already the results of a carefully done study in the Calgary regional health authority by a former journalist who worked for the Calgary Herald, Gillian Steward. Gillian Steward, in her study which is called Public Bodies, Private Parts: Surgical Contracts and Conflicts of Interest at the Calgary Regional Health Authority, demonstrates clearly and concludes the instances of conflicts of interest that arise and remain in place in the Calgary regional health authority.

Now, what this bill tries to do is put in law some arrangements which will ensure that across the province every regional health authority will comply with certain rules when it comes to ensuring that the potential that's been created by the very acts and policies of this government for conflict of interest to arise doesn't become a reality. And if it does become a reality, then there are ways in which to deal with it.

So, as you may have already inferred from what I'm saying, I'm speaking in favour of the bill. I am certainly hoping that the members on the government side will allow this bill to proceed to the next stage. If they have specific objections to certain clauses or sections of the act, then surely they will have their chance to bring forward amendments to improve the act, as I think this Assembly is entitled to do with any act that comes before it. We can certainly try to make changes in it, and in the end if the amendments that may be proposed don't get voted in, then surely we have a chance to vote a bill down. But to vote a bill down at the second reading would seem to be not a good thing for a Legislature to do.

I think it's a bill that addresses serious problems, serious concerns that Albertans have, serious issues that pertain to whether the present arrangements that are in place to deal with conflict of interest work properly or not. I think it's a bill that needs serious consideration, needs fuller debate in the House.

In the end, certainly, the will of the majority will prevail. So I will ask the House as a whole, on all sides of the Legislature, to vote for this bill at second reading so that it will see a clause-by-clause study and debate in the House. At the end of that process, using our wisdom, individual and collective, we'll say yes or no to it.

It looks like my time has run out.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. leader of the ND Party, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close debate on second reading of Bill 206.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to stand and close debate on Bill 206. This is a bill that looks at one of the issues that comes up in the discussion about how we portray to Albertans our commitment to open and accountable processes as we deliver services that the public has asked us as their government to implement. We look at it from the perspective of how do we make sure that individuals out there across Alberta reflect on our deeds and our actions and say: they're thinking about our best interests, the best interests of Albertans. We want to make sure that we end up conveying to them the kind of message that effectively we are trying to instill in them a confidence that our delivery systems are serving their needs.

Bill 206 looks at the issue of the conflicts of interest legislation under which the public service operates and basically takes that same set of standards and that same measuring stick and applies it to the health authorities that we've created around the province to effectively replace what would have been the public service under a previous structure of government. Essentially, then, what we should be doing is extending to that new level of government because it's part of our delivering of that service – we're basically going to extend to that entity or that agency the same expectation that we would have had they still been under the umbrella of the public service in delivering services for Albertans.

We have to look at it from the perspective of the fact that within the Regional Health Authorities Act, yes, there are clauses and requirements that each health authority have its own defined conflict of interest guidelines, but what we've got here is effectively the creation of a patchwork. I know they consult with each other, they look at each other, but in the end each regional health authority has a different set of conflict of interest guidelines that they operate under. What we have, then, is a situation where Albertans in one part of the province judge what's going on in their area, but when they hear about something that goes on in a different area, they don't see a consistency. Mr. Speaker, we have to start looking at that and making sure that that kind of perception of all Albertans is based on a common set of guidelines. We should look at that in the context of: how do we deal with it?

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake mentioned that we also have overarching here, conflict of interest guidelines that are set up by the relevant participating professional organizations, but that basically deals with the individual and the patient or the recipient of the health service, not the relationship between the decision-making and the openness of that decision-making. So to say that we've got that in place and we don't need Bill 206 doesn't work very well.

As we come to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I guess I want to use the same analogy that we heard from the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar when he talked about the sheep that were wandering and we had to have a shepherd for each flock. Well, I would suggest that under modern agriculture, where consistency of product and the need to have a homogeneous type of product and a consistent definition of product – what we would be doing if we were agricultural operators now is bringing each of those flocks in under a common set of nutrition requirements, a common set of management requirements. So we would in effect be bringing the flocks together under a common shepherd, and that's what we're doing with Bill 206. We're bringing all of the regional health authorities under the Ethics Commissioner, where we can have the consistency the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar asked for when he was talking about having these little flocks looked after in a common way, reflecting the kind of new approach that we would be dealing with in tending those sheep that the member was talking about.

We also need to look at the efficiencies that can be created by dealing with it that way.

Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 207 with the large number of members assembled here this afternoon. It was very nice of them to attend and hear the speeches this afternoon.

This Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, is an act that seeks to help offset the high prices of tools for tradespeople and journeymen. This bill came about after my discussions with many people. I can't remember the first time I ever would have heard about a mechanic, for example, not being able to deduct the cost of his tools as an employee. The first conversation where I would have heard of this would have been a long, long time ago, I'm sure, but as recently as during the election campaign when going around and speaking with people, many times apprentices or journeymen would make the comment that they thought it was unfair that they were unable to deduct from income tax the cost of their tools.

A couple of days ago I was speaking with a recent university graduate, just a recent graduate, and he had worked for several years in his own little construction company. He was asking me what kinds of things I was involved in currently. I said: well, one of the things that's keeping me busy right now is just kind of getting ready for this private member's bill. He said: well, what's the bill? I explained that we sought to bring forward a bill that would enable journeymen and apprentices to deduct the cost of their tools from income tax. He looked at me – and this is an educated person, just received his bachelor's degree – and said: "Well, I've been doing that all along. Was that illegal?"

The difference, Mr. Speaker, is pretty simple. He was self-employed. He wasn't a journeyman. He, in fact, had started his business out of high school and had learned the business with his father and was a good businessperson, but he decided to go to university and get a degree to become a teacher. But he had been deducting the cost of his tools all along, and he looked at me really quite surprised that tradespersons working for some employer were unable to do just that. So he's one of many people out there that just would assume that this is a normal course of affairs, except for those tradespeople that are caught in that position of being purchasers of very expensive tools and yet unable to deduct the cost of those tools from their income tax. It wasn't my initiative particularly. It was a great many people out there making me aware of those concerns and that they would like to see that corrected and addressed somehow.

I noted with interest, when I started doing some research on this bill and when some people started helping me with it, that federally the same initiative has been introduced. In fact, just before the recent federal election there was a federal bill called C-205 which sought to do almost exactly the same as this particular bill that we are discussing today, Bill 207. It sought to do exactly the same kind of thing at the federal level. The people who were involved in it indicated in some articles that were written that there was a great deal of hope that this would come through federally as well, but there's no guarantee of that. In spite of the fact that the bill was put forward and likely would die on the Order Paper with the federal election, the comment made by the people involved was: we should keep pushing for it as tradespeople. We should keep pushing for it as legislators that can address this issue on behalf of those people paying these high costs of tools. If we are able to implement that, as we are capable of doing here in Alberta, perhaps then that would provide some initiative as well for the federal scene to be addressing those concerns.

What are the specifics, then, of Bill 207? Bill 207 would amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act to allow any of those journeymen or apprentices in those 50 registered trades that we have here in Alberta, those 50 trades that have apprentices and have journeymen that are registered in the province – those people would be able to receive a nonrefundable tax credit for any amount of money over $500 spent on the purchase or the rental or the replacement or the maintenance or the insurance of those tools that they purchased for work during that tax year. The tradespeople would have to provide receipts for any of those tools purchased within that tax year in order to receive the credit. We know that doesn't differ from all sorts of businesspeople that must keep their receipts as well. In order to get that tax credit, they'd have to have these receipts. They'd also have to have a certificate from their employers stating that those tools purchased were in fact necessary and to be utilized on the jobsite.

Mr. Speaker, when the Alberta Tax Review Committee handed in its 1998 report on the state of income tax in Alberta, it recommended that there would be no new tax credits introduced, and that wisdom prevailed through the introduction and the amendment of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. That certainly parallels the federal experience that I just spoke about with Bill C-205. There was opportunity to initiate the changes, but they were not taken up, and it had been left to a private member's bill or, subsequent to that, some initiative by the government themselves to do so. The intentions of the committee can be understood, but in the case of the journeymen, Alberta's registered journeymen, and the apprentices there's more that we can do. The high cost of the tools which they must have in order to work puts them at an unfair disadvantage when compared with other Albertans.

Let's consider an example of the high costs of these tools and look at the Canadian Auto Repair & Service council's 1999 report. It was entitled Bridging the Gaps. In that report the council noted that a little bit under 40 percent of all automotive technicians and apprentices in Canada pay somewhere between $1,000 and $2,500 for tools every year, and in fact about a quarter of the technicians pay over $2,500 every year. If we put those figures together with another statistic, that over 50 percent of all automotive technicians would pay more than $20,000 for tools they have to have in order to do their jobs, that's a staggering number, but even more obvious that this is an important bill to consider is that about 10 percent of those technicians would pay in a lifetime over $50,000 for tools.

Most registered journeymen in any trade – and it doesn't matter which one of those 50 trades we speak of – would have about $10,000 worth of tools at a minimum in order to do the job that they are asked to do by their employer. If we consider, though, that the average income for these workers is around the $35,000 per year mark, we see that this is a considerable expense for these employees when compared to the salaries earned. Much of their income has to be put directly back into creating that income.

If we consider also the Automotive Industries Association of Canada report to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance in Ottawa, we see in that report that the AIA has noted that entry level apprentices typically need a starter set of tools before they'll even be offered a position. The AIA reports that this set of tools will generally cost around $4,000. So when those apprentices go out on their first job, their first bill is for a huge set of tools requiring at least $4,000 on average. I think everyone understands, Mr. Speaker, that $4,000 is quite a lot to any young person about to start out in a trade let alone a set of starter tools that he or she might need just to get going in that job.

The high cost of tools deters young people from entering the trades. If we do not provide support through a tools tax credit or some other mechanism, we would risk losing potential workers, workers that are necessary for our continued prosperity. When we read articles almost daily but certainly weekly in our local papers, we know about the need here in Alberta to acquire more tradespersons. We need people to work in our resource sector, to help build our infrastructure, to help build our homes, our communities. Without them and their contribution to our province our economic momentum will stall, because their skills are sorely needed as we move towards the expansion of our industries.

With the cost of their tools running so high, it's clear that tradespeople need our help. It's a problem that we can remedy, and we should do so. Mr. Speaker, the creation of a tax credit for the benefit of trades journeymen would recognize the continued growth in trade heavy employment sectors; for example, goods production, the forestry industry, logging, the oil and gas industry, in construction and also in manufacturing.

Some members might argue against the bill, Mr. Speaker. They might say that it'll be difficult to administer a tax credit because administration costs might be high or perhaps because workers would have to go through all the hassle of keeping those receipts. Getting certificates from their employers might be a little bit of a problem as well. But really would it be all that difficult, and how many people keep those receipts for income tax purposes already because they have a business and are able to make those deductions? Would it be any more difficult than administering the education tax credit for example? I wouldn't think so. It might be a little trouble getting used to doing it, but that would be about all.

If it's really that difficult to administer, then the argument would hold for almost any other kind of tax credit. Those tax credits are justified and therefore they exist, and taxpayers appreciate that they have the opportunity to be recognized for those costs. While the tax credits depend upon eligible tradespeople keeping their receipts, I think any reasonable person would understand that if they're able to have the tax credit, they will keep those receipts and they will make use of them when they do their income taxes. If this bill were to pass and they had the opportunity to deduct those costs of tools, we would see a much more formal bookkeeping system being initiated immediately, and probably all those folks already keep track of their costs just for their own personal purposes.

Now, if we consider that the beneficiaries will most likely be those young men and women who are attempting to build that career, to enter through the apprenticeship process and start off on a career in the trades – or perhaps it may even be an older person who is supporting their family, their spouses and their children – we realized that a tax credit will be a real benefit to them. It would be a relief to them for those high costs of tools, and Bill 207 is a mechanism whereby we can do that.

Mr. Speaker, I think then when we consider those facts, we understand that Bill 207 is a viable bill, a mechanism that we would encourage to be promoted and to be sponsored by this Assembly. These benefits ensure that more Alberta families will be able to enjoy our Alberta advantage. They will not have to stretch their budgets, because those work-related costs do so to those journeymen and apprentices. It would also make sure that our young people would recognize that their trades are appreciated and recognized through the income tax system so that even their costs would be deductible from their income tax.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members to vote in favour of this bill. I know that many members assembled wish to speak to the bill and contribute their personal experiences and their thoughts, some that are journeymen themselves, some that have family members involved in trades, and others that have heard from their constituents that this would be an appropriate way to go. I know that many of these people wish to speak to the bill, and at this time I'd take my seat and allow them to do so.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to compliment the hon. member for bringing forward Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act. In speaking to this bill, we are looking at a bill that we would normally see under federal legislation, not provincial legislation. It certainly is a bill that does have some merit, not only in the area of tradespeople but I think in many other different areas. People would like deductions for workplace expenses and do require them. We had an hon. member earlier this week bring up the fact that teachers on the average spend in the neighbourhood of $600, I believe the figure was, out of their own pockets in providing materials for the classroom. Certainly that would be an honourable tax deduction as well, for the moneys they paid to assist in their classroom.

Now, the member also made some very good observations here that this would certainly enable various young people to enter the trades, a system with very heavy expenses at the front end of their training and, as well, on the front end when they do become journeymen. It certainly is an issue that bears merit from the fact that particularly in these boom times here in Alberta we are experiencing a severe shortage of skilled workers, of tradespeople, and this in itself leads to many situations that this bill would help address. Of course, with the shortage of skilled labour and tradespeople all construction costs in this province are driven up. As well, with the training that we've had over the past number of years for tradespeople and the demand being quite small, young people have chosen not to go into this particular field, and I'm sure the costs have a bearing on that.

As a result, the average age of tradespeople in this province is somewhere close to 50 I would believe. We as legislators have to look forward and see that very soon in this province we're going to have a tremendous shortage of tradespeople, and certainly anything that would help attract these people into studying to become a tradesperson or entering an apprenticeship program is laudable and is something that we should look into.

What I wish I could have seen in the bill or heard from the member is specifically what stakeholder groups he spoke to before drafting this bill and presenting it here on the floor of the Legislature. I don't see any indication of that, and certainly I know that this is an issue. There must be many, many groups out there that would be more than willing to assist in drafting this legislation and perhaps would bring in some intricacies that we haven't thought of. So I would definitely want to see more input by stakeholder groups. I notice also that none of the people from the building trades seem to have put forth any submissions to the hon. member. So I do have some reservations when I see this.

As well, what I don't see here is any type of an impact study on what would happen if indeed we introduced this legislation and how it would affect the administration, as he pointed out. As well, I would have liked to have seen, because it is a provincial bill, how this would affect provincial taxes for this particular group and to see what the overall costs would be. So those are two reservations I certainly have about Bill 207.

Then, as well, I look here and I see that section 2 of this amendment act would be the only real amendment to the Personal Income Tax Act, and it would simply add section 10.1 after the existing section 10 of the act. It defines tools as "portable equipment used in the performance of a tradesperson's occupation."

So I think this bill certainly does warrant a second look. I certainly think it would help address the situation that we are currently facing in this province, where there is a severe shortage of tradespeople. Also, it would provide us with a steady supply of tradespeople in the future, because we know we're going to have a huge turnover in the number of tradespeople because their average age is so high.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I think what this bill would provide is what all of us in here want for our youth, and that is opportunity. If this is a bill that will assist in more young people in Alberta getting trained here, living here, staying here, and providing their services to the community, then I certainly would support it.

Those are my comments and observations at this point on Bill 207. Thank you.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take the opportunity to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. Some very valid comments, and I'm sure that they can be dealt with. I want to also mention the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

It's a long overdue bill, Mr. Speaker, and I was very happy to hear that this bill was being brought forward as a private member's bill. Not only in the campaign but in my previous business experiences I've had occasion to deal with many, many journeymen from the different vocations. It is a very large problem, very much more so for some of the mechanical areas than maybe for the large chunk of the 50.

But that said, I think I'd like to approach this more with kind of the W5 approach: who we are affecting, why, what, and wherefore. And I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry that this should be a federal bill. Obviously, all apprenticeships and tradespeople across the country are faced with this issue, but I really don't think we'd do any good by dragging our feet and hoping someone else brings forward a bill. As was stated before, it got to the Order Paper, so there's definitely merit in it. I think if we can proceed with this bill and maybe work out the kinks and make it presentable, our provincial colleagues and our federal cousins may come forward and say that it's a bill whose time has arrived, so let's look at it that way.

I think Alberta should maintain its leadership role in programs like this, so let's go with that.

Now, what are we going to accomplish with this bill? What we're going to do is put people to work. We try so hard in this country to create jobs and to provide incentives. Here we've got people that are ready to go to work, and maybe the only thing holding them back is the amount of money it takes to outfit their particular occupation. You know, we seem to consider education an investment in the future, which it is, Mr. Speaker. Well, these people are investing in their education right now, and we don't have to wait two or three or four or five years for them to get a job. Their education is part of their job, and they need the tools to complete that.

So we're accommodating people that are already in the workforce, and who are these people? We probably all know some. We could probably list many, many apprenticeships. I've got two or three nephews that are in the 19- to 23-year-old age group that are in apprenticeship programs, and I know many other young people from our community as well as many middle-aged or older people that have just decided it's time for a change. The graduation ceremonies at Lakeland College that we attended here this spring showed how diverse the age group and the population were in the apprenticeship programs. It's not specific to one age group, but by and large it's young people picking an occupation.

Now, the one thing I've seemed to notice in our community – and I'm sure it's much the same around the province – is that these aren't the wealthy people. These are kids that have an idea that they want to be something, and they want to go to school and get out and make a living. Often it's a time of their life when they're wanting to start a family, maybe, or set up a home with someone, and already they're behind the eight ball. "Can we maybe put a down payment on a house, or do I have to buy tools?" It's a very small amount of money, maybe, to someone who's established in business to spend $3,000 or $4,000 on wrenches, but to someone just starting with an idea, it's a lot of money. So I really think if we can accommodate that and give them a chance, then we're doing a good thing.

Now, the "when" of this. When should have been 20 years ago when we set it up. We didn't do that. When should be now. So let's go forward with this, and let's be very constructive in notifying our neighbour provinces and the other provinces of Canada and the federal government, through our government departments, that we feel this should be a national program. I think it should fall under a straight tax deduction. I know that a tax credit may be all we can do, but to make it simpler, that's really what it should be.

We want to talk a little bit about how else it will affect people. The hon. member mentioned before about some of the prices. Well, I've checked with not only the college in Vermilion but many of the businesses in my constituency to see just how much it really is and how much it is a part of their educational communication with their instructors while they're attending college. Mr. Speaker, in our community the average start-up set for the automotive mechanics was between $4,000 and $7,000. Now, they had to have that before any of the businesses in town would take them in and enroll them in the apprenticeship program. Still, with $4,000 or $5,000 they had to spend early in their careers as high as $4,000 a month, and even the most seasoned tradespeople were spending an average of $2,100 a year on their tools. So it never seems to quit. I think that many of these tools grow legs and leave the jobsite by themselves. That's what they tell me. I know it happens. I've tried to keep tools in my garage. The average value of all of the mechanics' tools in the automotive industry there was $16,500, but if you just considered the top journeymen, it was around $30,000.

Now, the start-up set for the heavy-duty mechanics is a little more. It's around $7,000 to $10,000. That's a good chunk of change when you've just been in school or when you've just started a job. It's a good chunk of change any time. They also had to spend considerably more per year on either the purchase of new tools as equipment designs changed, or maybe their expertise became more involved from engines to transmissions or such, and they spent on average between $2,500 and $4,000. Their tool sets ended up at around the $30,000 to $40,000 range.

Those are the most visible, the mechanics. But there are other types of mechanics that require very specialized tools, too – and we're very lucky in Alberta to have such programs in our colleges and universities and technical schools – particularly motorcycle maintenance, not a very common thing, but the tools are very expensive. Outboard marine courses.

MR. CENAIKO: Motorcycles break down.

MR. SNELGROVE: They sure do.

There are many other mechanically inclined vocations that do have a huge requirement for tools, so it's important we cover the whole spectrum and keep the emphasis on the connection to the apprenticeship program and tradesman certification. Just for an example, let's talk about electricians. Many people would say: well, all they have is a tool belt. For many electricians that might be all they have. It may only take them $500 to purchase their tool belt and get a set of tools and go on their job. But out where we are, Mr. Speaker, sometimes the electrician has to be a little more independent, and depending on his tools, whether it be meters or drills or a saws-all, stuff that they would use in their daily work and that small electrical contractors may have one of but not two, it brings them a lot more job security or a lot more hirability if they have extra tools that they bring with them to the job. When you start to add some of these tools to their inventory, you can get into $2,000 or $3,000 or $4,000 just like that.

The other thing that an inventory gives a young person with a genuine interest in it is portability. If you're working at a site where they own the tools, where they have everything there, where you may take them and do the job but they all go back, you're kind of indentured to them I guess would be the term. So by allowing them to start to build their own tool base, we may be actually encouraging many more independent small contractors to come out of the apprenticeship system and contribute to our economy. You know, it's a long-term thing to build a good, balanced small business base in any province.

The other thing we have to keep track of – it's not just tools. The safety aspect of our industries has changed dramatically in the last few years. I know that in our business, Mr. Speaker, to do any work on oil sites or refineries or such, you have to have these special coveralls. You've got to have the glasses and the boots. These coveralls can only be used so long. Once they've been washed or once the inspector feels they're a little tarnished, it's out the window, and they're several hundred dollars a set.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: How much?

MR. SNELGROVE: Several hundred dollars a set.

So we have to keep in mind that some of these tradespeople that work in those environments have costs that are exclusive, that are not inclusive to anyone else in Alberta.

The other thing that can happen in some of the businesses are the special tools dealing with high voltage. You don't buy the $2.99 pliers from the discount store; you buy the $35 or $40 pliers that'll keep you alive. So there are a lot of things that make the expense and change it.

The other thing that I certainly don't really know is: what happens in the technical system? As we look around the room, we've got most of the people on laptops. I'm not sure what kind of meters and what kind of testers it's going to take in the future to see if the computers are all working properly or what it takes to fix them, what it takes to check the instrumentation at a water treatment plant, things like that. I don't know, Mr. Speaker, but I wouldn't want that price to be a hindrance to a journeyman or to a tradesperson going down that road towards that. I'd like to think that we have an open mind here in Alberta about pushing people towards independence and allowing them to do their jobs properly.

When I discuss with the teachers at Lakeland College about: "What are students saying to you? Are the tools the drawback?" many of them are saying, "Yes, I can complete the schooling, but there is no way I can get $3,000 worth of tools." So maybe if ma or pa can get a receipt, it'll help him out.

There are other tradespeople, like welders – in many, many cases welders have formed their own businesses or companies. They've got their truck and their welder and they're on the road. But I think we should make it fair for those that don't want to go through the expense of incorporation and allow them to deduct. A welding truck could easily set you back $50,000 or $60,000, Mr. Speaker.

DR. TAYLOR: That's just for the truck.

MR. SNELGROVE: More if you want a welder, I guess.

It's that these vocations do become very expensive, Mr. Speaker. I would hate to think that just because of bureaucracy we have to force them into a corporation or a company to get the deductions to do exactly the same job as they're going to do. It's just a cost we put back on ourselves.

Some of the other industries in the apprenticeship board have said that it could get very expensive to do specific jobs. The flooring industry: people that do tile. As you've seen out in our lobby, some of the carpet-laying equipment can be very expensive to purchase. It's fine if you work with a big company that provides that, but if you're one that wants to work out of your truck or even work as a contractor, not a company, for a supplier, you need all those tools yourself.

I would only say this, Mr. Speaker. The presenter of the bill made a case that could stand on its own. I don't think that we need to rehash much of what he said. It's a very timely bill. It was very much supported by the industry and by the teachers in the industry. I think my point today is: let's move this forward. Let's make it a very presentable bill to the rest of Canada, but more importantly, let's make sure that Albertans trying to work have every benefit that we can give them as a provincial body.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close, thanking you for the time and encouraging the rest of the people to join me in supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to Bill 207. I believe that this is an important bill which will spur greater economic growth in this province by introducing another mechanism of tax relief to the hardworking Albertans who must regularly purchase, repair, and replace expensive tools. The creation of a tax credit for the benefit of trade journeymen would recognize the continued growth of our trade-heavy employment sector. It is for this reason that I will support Bill 207.

No matter how capable or educated, tradespeople in this province often cannot find employment unless they have their own set of tools. I know that while I was campaigning, I did stop at quite a number of places such as service stations and other industries in my constituency. That was something that some of the apprentices, especially the mechanics, came out and said: you know, it would be nice to have some relief on the cost of the tools. Because technology changes daily, they're finding that they're having to buy, especially right now – when you look at some point in time, I was able to repair my own car. Now, unless you have electronic computer gadgets, because that's what your car is built with right now, it's physically impossible for everybody to have that piece of equipment. Certainly, right now the mechanics that are the journeymen that have gone through NAIT are finding that they have to have these tools if they're going to be working. Certainly a lot of the service stations, the dealerships do provide that type of equipment, the larger type of equipment, but the smaller, handheld equipment that are electronic can run in the thousands of dollars, and they are essential for what the mechanics are doing.

Each year it is estimated that the average tradesperson spends over $500 for new tools. Bill 207 will help relieve some of this burden on trade journeymen and apprentices, who are so very important to the continued success of Alberta's economy. As I have said, tools are expensive, and it is difficult for those who are new workers and are finishing an apprenticeship to obtain a job without having a personal set of tools. I have a concern that this initial cost for tools is such a barrier that it could deter new generations of workers from the trades. I believe Bill 207 would provide just the incentive we need for a new generation to choose a trade as a career.

I was listening to CBC radio last week.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: What?

MR. BRODA: Yes. You should listen to it sometime.

They were discussing the need for trade workers in Alberta. Their main topic was on our current growth and development compared to other provinces. A major concern that was raised and a concern that I share is that there are not enough people learning trades right now to fill the positions being created. There has been an overall increase in enrollment in schools like NAIT and SAIT over the past decade; there is still a shortage of skilled tradespeople. The experts who were commenting on this problem were particularly worried that they would not be able to attract new people fast enough, and even then they would have to wait for them to finish their apprenticeship. Apprenticeship levels have been increasing over the last decade but are still not where we need them to be.

The chances for placement are substantially increased for those who have acquired tools of their own. This is often an unattainable expectation for a new apprentice and worker but is becoming more the norm in the trade industry. As trades specialize more and more and technology increases, there is a greater need for each employee to have their own tools and the equipment necessary to do their job.

Employers are increasingly placing the responsibility on the employees to purchase a personal set of tools because it alleviates their burden of purchasing, replacing, and repairing expensive tools. Not only that, but I think the individual, the apprentice or the journeyman, once they have their own tools, they look after them a lot better. The employer is saying: if I provide the tools, a lot of times they're being lost. The apprentice or the journeyman would say: those are my tools; I will look after them.

Mr. Speaker, I fear that because employers necessitate that those who work with them purchase their own tools, the growth potential for new generations of trade workers in our province could be weakened. Bill 207 would help our province's chance to stop the widening shortage of workers in this sector. The value of stimulating new generations of tradespeople in our province cannot be overlooked. I believe that Bill 207 is an investment in the growth in the future of apprenticeship trade workers in this province, and I would encourage everyone in this Assembly to support Bill 207.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:00

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 207, presented by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. The bill is called the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, and I believe that this bill is a positive step towards greater development of the trade industries in our province. Much of our revenue, everyone knows, is derived from trade-heavy employment sectors. Our province could only benefit if we support this bill because we would be supporting the trade sector in so many ways.

Our province has benefited by efforts to keep personal taxes as low as possible for Albertans. We have made every effort to do that, and it's certainly – as in the news and from reports that came across in the papers today – indeed an attractive place to be and certainly an attractive place to live and work. So by this bill we want to extend that tax advantage, if you will, to those who are working in the trades or to those who are training to work in the trades. The money that these tradesmen, journeymen, and indeed students of the trades would be able to keep in their pockets or spend with their families or in the improvement of their quality of life or indeed of their workplace would improve the quality of life that they enjoy, that we all enjoy. It would certainly generate more spending within our economy, and that's always good news indeed.

I also support Bill 207 because I believe that it is important for our province to support the development and the continued growth of the trades-heavy economy of our province. It is usually the responsibility, as was pointed out earlier, of the employee to purchase the tools that are necessary for their work. Often the apprentice or journeymen tradesmen cannot find employment unless they have their own personal set of tools. By having their own tools, they are investing not only in themselves to become better and more capable trade workers, but they are giving employers alternatives in an essential sector of our economy.

I would like to digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to mention that this is something that I highlighted when I brought forth my sponsored bill, Bill 202. The origin of that bill, the genesis of it, came from a young high school graduate who wanted to go into the trades, who had registered in an apprenticeship program, had to pay for his instruction fees – his tuition, if you will – and he also had to buy a car that would take him to his place of employment. He also had to pay in large sum for his own tools, and that was a great outlay of money. I might add that he also was expected to pay a very high insurance rate premium for the car that was to take him to his place of work. However, that's another topic that we have discussed, not thoroughly though, in this Assembly.

Why I reference it, Mr. Speaker, is simply because I believe that if we as a province are looking to make it a worker-friendly, a tradesperson-friendly circumstance and environment to encourage young people to work in the trades that we so desperately need their expertise in, then we should be looking to the likes of Bill 207. We should be voting in favour of it in order for us to give them one more opportunity, one more occasion, to say to them that we respect the costs and the outlay that they must put towards their work and that we appreciate the work that they do on behalf of all of the industries that involve the trades.

I would like also, especially at this moment, to mention the oil and gas sector, which is dependent upon skilled tradespeople to provide the expertise necessary to extract and utilize our natural resources. I feel that it is important to provide easier access for young apprentices in these trade sectors to ensure that these industries are getting the skilled support they need.

The trades, as I said, are so important to our Alberta economy. Not only are they important to our economy, but they're very important to our own domestic circumstances, because for all of us who are domestic engineers, we do know that we need the skills of tradespeople who come to our homes to assist us in those areas that we need. So even if we take it out of the heavy equipment industry sector and put it into our own respective homesites, we realize the importance of tradespeople.

We want to increase the future enrollment in trades schools and those seeking apprenticeship positions. As a province which is so dependent on the work of skilled tradespeople, we must continually look for new ways to attract the number of workers we need and to keep their skills in our province. I believe, should we pass Bill 207, which I'm hoping everyone will agree to do, we should in effect create again an environment and an attractive aspect of our work environment in this province that would see young people – and older people, too, who wish to seek anew the learning and the development of their skills in these trades – seeking to come to our province, and certainly then it would respond to the needs that we have in our various sectors.

The tools and equipment that tradespeople require to work are expensive. I shan't repeat the numbers that have been identified by my colleagues, who have spoken with those who are instructors and those who are practitioners in the trades. They have identified quite ably the cost and the expensiveness of tools to be used in the trades. But we also know something further, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the equipment or the tools that we use and the equipment that they are working on often need to be replaced or repaired in order to create a level not only of efficiency but appropriateness and currency and certainly to be able to respond to the mechanisms that we have in our communities and in our workplaces. So with this constant renewal or, as they say when we speak of the technology industry, the evergreening of the trades sector and the equipment that they use, that does require some additional and some new tools, and they are a constant expense to those who are working in the trade.

In order for our province to continue to attract a new generation of people into the trades, we need to remove the barriers that the young Albertans face. I feel that this would be an attractive element, should we pass this Bill 207, because it would be another occasion on which people would be able to not just speak of but experience the Alberta advantage. In other words, it would say to our young people and to our tradespeople what we know and we believe, and that is that we value their skills. We appreciate their attention to and their contribution to our economy, and we are willing to do something about it so that through a rather fair and more equitable and appropriate way the expenses that they do incur in order to provide their services at the workplace can be recognized.

I believe that Bill 207 is an important step in helping generate new interest within the trades sector. As technology improves the goods-producing industries – forestry, oil and gas – in our province, we need to ensure that there will be enough new people coming into the trades to support these industries and certainly to support our fast-growing leadership economy in this province and, I might say, in this country and indeed across the continent.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again encourage everyone in this Assembly to support Bill 207. It speaks to our young people. It would make it more attractive, I think, and more viable and possible financially for them to enter into a trade. It would endorse in a very concrete way our appreciation and our recognition of the important role that tradespersons play in our economy, and it would acknowledge in a more equitable fashion the way in which we choose to encourage and to endorse those working in the trades within our province. Again, I can't say often enough: I hope everyone here will support the bill brought forth by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. He is aware of it. I hope you are aware of it, too, and that we can all support this endeavour as we look to the tradespeople of Alberta.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and speak in support of Bill 207. It's been my career prior to this career to be involved extensively in an industry and a business where tradespeople were our lifeblood. I started in 1965 in the trades, and of course, as you would realize, at that point in time there wasn't much support for these types of initiatives.

MR. LUKASZUK: I wasn't around then.

MR. KNIGHT: No. You probably weren't here.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that, we started a business in 1971 and employed over the years as many as 50 tradespeople at a time. Probably in that 30-year stretch we have seen in the neighbourhood of a hundred young people come through our doors, start out as apprentices, and continue through the trade training process, all to become very productive members of the province of Alberta's success story.

I would say that it could have been a lot easier for them to continue and to get their training if they'd had an opportunity to be able to have legislation such as this in place supporting them with respect to their taxes paid on their tools, taxes to be returned to them or credited to them. The purpose of the bill, of course, is to give these tradespeople relief from the expense they incur when they buy tools to start and continue their career in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 would amend division 3, section 10, of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, and the credit would be available on money spent over a $500 threshold and would be classified as a nonrefundable tax credit. Bill 207 allows the province, which has already extensively reduced taxes as a means of spurring economic growth, to introduce another mechanism of tax relief to Alberta workers who must regularly purchase and repair or replace expensive tools. There have been many positive changes to the tax system in Alberta, and this proposed amendment to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act would ensure that Albertans continue to benefit from these changes.

Mr. Speaker, tradespeople are often required to purchase, upgrade, and update tools and diagnostic equipment every year to continue their chosen trades. As already stated by my colleagues, practising technicians and apprentices can pay thousands of dollars in tool costs each year. Bill 207 would give relief to the people in the industry who must buy tools to start, support, and continue their careers.

Since many apprentices and tradespeople must have their own tools and equipment to begin working, an initial barrier exists for Albertans who do not have the money to invest in tools. Contractors and businesses require that employees supply this expensive equipment for a variety of reasons related to costs and commitment. This tax credit could assist employees, investing in their future and the productivity of Alberta.

The added benefit this credit has is that it is especially important to the low- to middle-income earners. These are the people in Alberta who most need the relief. They are the ones who experience the most severe negative impact related to the cost of tools.

Mr. Speaker, industry groups are in favour of the introduction of a tool tax credit. Industry leaders see the absence of a tool tax deduction as a factor that places several trades at a disadvantage when competing for the next generation of trainees and employees.

Here in Alberta tradespeople have played an essential role in economic growth. It would be a distinct disadvantage to experience a labour shortage in these industries. By introducing a tax credit for tradespeople, the government has the opportunity to attract new workers from inside the province along with skilled workers from outside the province and across North America.

In the Economic Development business plan for 2000-2003 the mission of the department was "to promote Alberta's continuing prosperity." An excellent way for the government of Alberta to follow up on and continue with the promotion of Alberta's prosperity is to give a tax credit to hardworking tradespeople in this province.

Mr. Speaker, as technology advances and there are more and more technological aspects to our daily lives, the diagnostic equipment that's required for tradespeople and technicians to work with gets much, much more expensive. As our demographics change, the situation with tradespeople is very similar to that of teachers, nurses, and other professionals where there are more people retiring and moving out of the field than we have moving in to replace them.

It has been stated in this House today, Mr. Speaker, that $53 billion of capital investment can be expected in the province of Alberta over the next 10 years. We are already short of tradespeople and people to get involved with that capital expenditure, and this is one way that we could help relieve that shortage.

Mr. Speaker, as has already been pointed out – but I think it's important to re-emphasize – there was a movement at the federal level to give just such a tax credit to tradespeople, specifically to mechanics. The deduction was to encompass maintenance, rental, and insurance costs, the full cost of tools under $250 or such inflation adjusted limit as is set by regulation, or the capital cost allowance of tools over $250 as set by regulation.

Unfortunately, the bill died on the Order Paper, but it has been recommended for years to the federal Minister of Finance that changes be made to the federal Income Tax Act to provide for tax credits for mechanics' tools. Alberta can take a step where the federal government appears reluctant. We can help the workers of the trade industries by having a tax credit on the tools that they need to keep their businesses and careers going.

Mr. Speaker, I have not much more to add. I would just like to say that I think this bill deserves our attention and our support. I would say that it's a very well-drafted piece of legislation, the evidence of which is it only took a page and a half of paper with respect to getting it out to us. So I think that was a plus in itself.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I would like to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been an extremely productive afternoon with much co-operation and some very excellent debate. In view of all of that, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and that we adjourn and that when we do reconvene this evening, we do so in Committee of Supply.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly agree with the motion proposed by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:21 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 16, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/16

head: Committee of Supply

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. A reminder to all hon. members that, as is the usual custom, only one member stands and speaks at a time. For the benefit of those in the gallery, this is the less formal part of the Assembly, as you may be able to determine. If you're looking over your maps of where people are, they may or may not be there because in the committee stage members are allowed to move about quietly and to sit and talk to other people as they want. If you want to speak, you must speak in your place.

Tonight we have a couple of estimates, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and then the Community Development department, but before we commence the evening's deliberations, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my privilege and distinct pleasure to introduce to you and to all of my colleagues in the Assembly a very special group of Edmontonians today. They're all seated up there in the public gallery. They're all distinguished in their own fields, have a quite enviable record of achievements and a record of contributions to Alberta and Edmonton. They are part of a group called the Free Spirits. They've been in existence for at least a half dozen years, and my wife is part of this group. Let me introduce all of them first and then ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Maybe they can start rising as I name them. They are Barbara Belch, Carol Berman, Paula Brindley, Marguerite Gendall, Pat George, Jackie Hildreth, Shashi Kalia, Cath Lopaschuk, Cathie Lylock, Lynne Morgenson, Swinder Pannu, my companion of the last 44 years, Razia Sachedina, and Saroj Singhmar. Please give them all a warm welcome.

head: Main Estimates 2001-02

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

THE CHAIRMAN: We'll call upon the hon. minister and Deputy Premier to begin this evening with her comments.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will start by introducing a couple of guests in the gallery: our deputy minister of agriculture, Brian Manning – and Mike and Faye are with him – and Maureen from my office, who I think everyone knows.

I'm going to give a very, very brief overview of our budget and business plan so that we have lots of time for questions. I'll start with some general comments, and I don't think these are comments that anyone would be surprised to hear.

Our agricultural community is faced with some very serious difficulties related to input costs and world prices for products and the potential for weather problems, and that's a subject that we could probably spend the whole next hour just discussing. Hence, highlighted in this budget is assistance for the agricultural industry.

This budget contains programs to assist the industry with rising input costs and other items. Funding in this budget we hope will help us deal with the immediate concerns so that we can go on and concentrate on solutions for sustainability in the industry.

The budget for program expense for 2001-2002 is $883.3 million. That's an increase of $255.5 million when compared to the last year's budget. Of course, the largest budget increase appears in the farm income support allocation and is for the assistance for the $10.29 cultivated acreage payment that was announced on April 27. I can say from the comments I've had from my colleagues in the Legislature and from farmers that have called me that this was very welcome.

When we announced this program, we said that this is to support producers in a time of difficulties, difficulties that are caused through no fault of theirs, and that this would help with a transition period. We certainly have to find long-term solutions for the issues that are facing farmers, and that is what we hope this assistance will do. We are going to be dealing with some of those issues through the ag summit process. We expect the Agrivantage teams to have some recommendations to us over the period of the next month and that we will address most of these issues by the end of December.

Additional funding of $17 million has also been included in that program, and of course you would know that that is to extend the winter natural gas rebate program over the summer months for the province's irrigation farmers, greenhouses, and alfalfa processors. I think all members understand that it was entirely up to the producers, the greenhouse owners, or the alfalfa dehydrators to choose the four months that they would apply this, because they don't get it twice. I think they know that.

Crop insurance, shown on page 43 of the estimates, shows an increase of $12.2 million, up to $201.7 million. Of course, this is based on a rolling average loss to premium ratio for the past 20 years.

The next significant budget change is for sustainable agriculture, which shows $2.3 million. We recognize the importance of food safety on the viability of the industry and the need for vigilance for the health of Albertans. Therefore we've included in the budget a $2 million increase for food safety programs.

A final comment just on numbers. The budget shows $61.7 million for quota exchange and restricted expense. That is an increase of $2.4 million over last year. However, that expense, before the Finance minister gets excited, is offset by a corresponding amount of revenue that's included in other revenue. In other words, these items that are termed restrictive have no effect on the ministry or the government's net operating results, the bottom line.

The restricted revenues and expenses, for those who are not familiar with that term, relate to the price equalization pool operated by the Dairy Control Board, which is part of our ministry.

Those are the most significant funding changes in the ministerial financial plan for this year. However, I should point out that this plan is based on the assumption that, one, commodity prices will not decline further, that interest rates will be reasonably stable, and that we will not experience a disastrous year of claims on the farm income disaster and crop insurance programs. These assumptions mean that achievement of the plan is subject to some major risks, including widespread crop losses due to bad weather, conditions such as drought, which we seem to be experiencing right now, further declines in global commodity prices, especially for crops, and changes in economic conditions such as higher interest rates or the strengthening of the Canadian dollar. These three items have the potential to affect farm income dramatically and, in turn, indemnities paid out under crop insurance and the farm income disaster program. The financial plan is obviously not designed to deal with a disastrous year of claims under these two programs.

The business plan I'll only touch on very briefly. This plan is a bridge to the longer term solutions that we're working on with industry to develop through the Ag Summit 2000 process. I know that if we work in these areas, we can assist the industry to remain one of the cornerstones of our economy. Many of the initiatives that were recommended by summit participants are addressed in the plan that you have in front of you. I know that many of you in this Assembly attended a number of the summit meetings, so I will just highlight a few strategies and major initiatives.

Under goal 1, "improved industry competitiveness," we will "advocate policy, legislation, regulation and institutional reforms that assist industry to respond to growth opportunities," including negotiating with the federal government for marketing choice in Alberta for wheat and barley.

Under goal 2, "increased amount of value added to industry commodities, products and services," we will "encourage new and expanded investment in value-added processing." We are seeing that occur almost daily in this province. I would recommend to all members that they take advantage of the offer, especially for the capital region, of some information that shows how many businesses in this actual capital region process agricultural food and ship the value-added product to over 100 countries in the world.

Under goal 3, "increased diversity of commodities, products and services," we will support the agriculture industry in its efforts to "take advantage of emerging life sciences opportunities." In that, we speak of things like nutraceuticals, a great opportunity in that area, especially with the marvelous research capability we have in this province. I believe there are some 37 researchers at the University of Alberta that do research in agriculture, plus many other areas of research opportunities through the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute and others.

Environmental stewardship: very important to us. We will "provide guidelines, standards, regulations and legislation for environmental performance requirements to sustain the quality of Alberta's soil, water, air and agriculture land resources."

Finally, under goal 6, "continued excellence in food safety," we will "develop and maintain targeted food safety surveillance systems that validate the safety of Alberta's agriculture and food products." We have performance measures in the document. I think they are quite self-explanatory, but I would welcome any comments from hon. members where they feel that those performance measures can be strengthened.

We remain very confident that the food and beverage industry will continue to grow during the period of 2001 to 2004. I want to remind hon. members that $16.5 billion is the extent to which this industry impacts us on a cash basis. We are targeting that shipments of value-added product will increase by 9.5 percent by 2004, and that target is $9.2 billion. This is an ambitious target, but I do believe that with the quality product that we have, with the entrepreneurial people that we have in this province, with the stable fiscal regime we have in this province, we can meet that goal.

That is a summary. It's a very quick one, but I will look forward to your comments and respond appropriately. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. It's a real privilege tonight to stand and comment on the budget and the departmental allocations of the minister responsible for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Mr. Chairman, as you know, this is an area of special interest to me.

This is where I've spent my life working: in agriculture, agriculture policy, and the kind of issues that are important to appropriate rural development and directed rural development. I've really enjoyed the last nine years, and I hope that as I move on in this position here, I still don't lose my touch with the agriculture ministry, because it's a really important area for me.

To the budget tonight, Mr. Chairman. I guess I'll start with and go through some of the issues that came up with specific numbers that I've noted, and then I want to spend a little bit of time on some of the issues that come up in the context of the business plan and some of the comments and suggestions from the community that we heard through the ag summit process and on questioning where those have gone and how they're being implemented.

The minister began tonight by talking about how we have to accept the fact that there's a lot of risk associated with this budget, and I think this year everybody in the agriculture community recognizes that. We have to basically be willing to look at this in the context of a document in progress as we see whether or not it rains in the next month and whether or not we see any kind of significant improvement in world prices.

Some of the things that basically come up in the context of the overall budget – I'll just kind of start with a very brief overall comment on how it's structured here. For the last six or eight months we've had a lot of discussion about the reorganization that's going on within Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development in terms of their different focuses and how they're putting together kind of a structural team approach that crosses a lot of the other program outlines that we used to have within Alberta Agriculture. Yet as we look at this budget, there's no attempt to try and build that new structure into the reporting system that we have here so that we don't see any kind of a change to this focus, you know, the complete flow-through in terms of what constitutes the rural community, the product, the export market development, the value added, all in the context of these value chain concepts that get talked about very directly and very often in the agriculture community.

In many ways the restructuring was supposed to reflect some of those issues, yet in this budget we see the same old traditional types of breakdowns in terms of the judgments. From that perspective, the question that I would put to the minister directly is: basically, the accountability that we need to deal with in the context of the budget, how soon can we see those kinds of budget numbers so that we can trace it back to the actual activities and performance of Alberta Agriculture as it undertakes this structural transition?

I'll just go through the programs here to start with. The thing that comes up in terms of the second program, where we'd looked at the planning and competitiveness part of it is that there's a real kind of out-of-line number that shows up on the table on page 31. We started off with a budget last year of $67 million. That was in comparison to $219 million the year before and a projected actual expenditure of $310 million this year, and then they're putting in for the current budget $351 million.

The question that comes up there is: is it a typo? Is it a reporting error that we've got a number that's so far out of line in the context of what was in the 2000-2001 budget, what was actually spent in 2000-2001, and what has been budgeted in both the year previous to that and this year's budget? Why was it that one year, particularly last year, the budget was so low, yet the expenditures were basically in line with the two budgets that bracket that component part? It's kind of hard to look on page 33 and pick it out because we don't have the historic trend that shows up on page 31 of the budget.

The other thing that I've targeted here is the recognition that we now end up with the farm income support programs showing up in two different places in the budget: under program 2 in terms of the farm income support component – this is on page 33 – and then when we go to the Ag Financial Services component, there's another sector in there for the farm income disaster and the crop insurance. If we're going to look at how we provide support and direction to the individuals who are involved in the support programs of agriculture, it would have been probably a lot easier to look at it and deal with it in the context of having these all in one place. I recognize fully that the administration of the farm income assistance program was not done through Ag Financial Services, that it was done in a different way, but if we could see these things combined together so that we could look at them.

Another thing that's quite interesting here is that when we look at the revenue table, which is further along in the book, it shows about $244 million being received as a federal government transfer in support of agriculture. Most of that was directed to the respective farm income support programs, yet when we look at the crop insurance, the farm income disaster program, and the farm income assistance program, we don't see a revenue component there that shows that these were revenues received from an outside agent and dedicated to that specific line item.

I guess it would be easier for us to be able to look at the relationship between provincial and federal funding on these programs if we could see that dedicated revenue, because you know, those dollars do come from the federal government specifically for the farm income assistance or the crop insurance programs. Maybe I'm putting too broad a definition associated with dedicated revenue, where this would be a revenue that is specifically associated with an activity of that line item departmental structure. I think that for understanding ease, so that we can see where these dollars are going, it would be really quite helpful to be able to show that there are some federal dollars in there.

You know, I guess this kind of goes to the discussion that we had a year ago, when the first acreage payments were being discussed, talked about. We questioned the former ag minister, and he talked about how the money that was kind of moved around in the departmental budget was done in a way that the dollars that were all being moved into that initial acreage payment program were already matched dollars, so they in essence had a federal component in it. So for both us looking at it as opposition and also Albertans looking at it in terms of how programs are funded and how we track the dollars, having maybe even an asterisked dedicated revenue there would help us quite significantly.

The other component that I wanted to look at and ask the minister about. I assume from some of the previous conversations we've had that the farm safety education programs and that are in program 2.3, somewhere in there. The one thing that I want to do is just make sure that the minister recognizes how much the agriculture community appreciates the work that her department is doing in these areas right now, because farm safety is really important to people in the rural community.

We had an incident in southern Alberta just recently where city friends of ours took their children out to a farm to experience rural life and experience some of the things that we who live in rural Alberta take for granted. Unfortunately, a farm accident occurred, and they lost a son. You know, as we look at our programs and look at the way that we deal with making our mark and committing to people, that farm safety program, Madam Minister, is something that really plays an important role and is really appreciated by the people in rural Alberta. I've noticed even in the last year or so that there is the odd ad that shows up on the regular TV channels. Maybe this someday might have helped this young boy who didn't understand the risks he was undertaking when he went out to a rural community. So I would just encourage you, let you know that that's a program that as I travel the whole province, I hear a lot of good things about.

As we go through, you know, especially in program 3, industry development, I know that this is where a lot of that restructuring is taking place in the context of the value chain components in the constituency, or that makeup, and it would be really, I think, interesting if by next year we could see some restructuring of the budget that would give us a sense of how those kinds of activities are being put together.

A comment there in that section, program 3.5 on page 35, where you've got all the regional breakouts. One of the things I got in terms of feedback from a lot of people in Alberta Agriculture when they were talking about the excitement they're feeling with this team concept, the whole concept from one end to the other, right to the export market, is that this regional breakout doesn't really necessarily matter so much, because people all over the province are part of these teams. They've got the communications systems in place through their computer links so that where they're actually located isn't really that much of a deal to them. They can be part of these teams and be very active. So I guess I would say that some day we need to look at having that kind of reporting.

I think an issue that's come up in a lot of the other programs and subprograms that we see here – you know, there are some little changes in dollars here and little changes in dollars there that are not really that important. There was just one other one that I was going to comment on, but I'll probably get to that as I come back again at a later date.

As we go through this, the relationship that we look at, then, I guess is how these particular items move and go into the goals of the department and also the performance indicators.

I found the one I was looking for, so I'll deal with it now while I can. In program 6 the question comes up in the context of the budget allocated for farm income disaster. In 2000-2001 it was $163 million, yet when we ended up the actual preliminary data for 2000-2001, it was only $21 million actually distributed through the program. We're talking about a possibility of $59 million this year, yet we're talking also about how the sector is facing a real risk this year in the context of continued downward pressure from international prices, drought: some of the factors that are there.

When we're looking at the claims that were made in the 2000-2001 budget year, how is it that they were so far off from the $163 million that was projected there? What happened to the difference? Were those excess dollars, then, transferred over into the farm income assistance program? Wouldn't it be appropriate for us to see that kind of line transfer between the budget that was approved in the Legislature last year and the estimate of the actual expenditures that are being reported this year so that we can track how the dollars were moved within the minister's appropriate jurisdiction given the new Financial Administration and Government Accountability acts in the context of the ministers?

You know, we set aside $163 million last year. We're setting aside approximately $60 million this. Obviously what's happened is that the other payments that are going out affect that, especially when we look at the 2001-2002 estimate of $60 million. When farmers file this year for last year's farm income disaster claims, the acreage payments that were paid out last year will kind of boost their income a little bit, and I guess it seems that if we look at that in the context of last year's $21 million actual expected payout, what we're going to say is: you know, with these other payments that were made last year, the $4 and the $6 at the two different periods, why are we expecting to have to pay out so much under FIDP, the farm income disaster program, given that so much went out under the farm income assistance?

You know, this also leads us to the question of how effective and what kind of a review is in place for the farm income disaster program, because obviously with this kind of budget and then actual delivery of dollars, it's not working in the way farmers are expecting it to. It's not protecting them. We recognize that that program probably would work very well for one-year or possibly two-year sudden downturns in revenue, but when you get a long-term cyclical program in place, the program basically cancels itself out and doesn't provide for very much of an opportunity to really be a functional program. What we need to do is look at how this can be combined or revamped to really give us a program where farmers can participate and ensure in some way their production costs so that they can actually have a degree of stability to how they basically manage their risk.

That's what these programs are all about, Mr. Chairman, basically trying to give the farmers an opportunity with public help to be in there and manage the risk that's so associated with farming in a province where our climate is becoming much more variable and also where we're in a position where we as a producing area, even as a producing country, have less ability to deal with or control the international aspects that get kind of imposed on us as participants in the agriculture sector. So we have to look at: is it appropriate for us to be dealing with the current structure and the current combination of programs so that we can actually have a safety net for income that serves the purpose and that in effect becomes part of the decision-making process for farmers in the sense that they see it as a risk management tool, not as an income supplement or as a political type of issue?

Mr. Chairman, I see on my watch that I'm down to less than 30 seconds, so what I'll do is take my seat, let somebody else have a shot, and then I can guarantee I'll be back to ask some more questions as time permits.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

I've got two members standing. Is there agreement? Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to speak on agriculture. I have lived my whole life in the city, but I do have many family members who farm, and I enjoy helping out during the harvest and at various times of the year, branding, et cetera.

I'm going to address a range of topics here today. One of them concerns the action to "advocate for the elimination of subsidies that distort trade and production," which I'm sure we would all agree is in theory something to strive towards but in practice is probably going to be exceedingly difficult to achieve. It undoubtedly overlaps with the Minister of International Trade.

Some of the questions I'm wondering about here. How will the ministry advocate for the elimination of subsidies that distort trade and production? How are they going to proceed given the international scale of that, the number of countries involved, the entrenched international interests in the various subsidies? So the fundamental question there is: how is the minister going to advocate for the elimination of subsidies in other countries?

If and as they succeed at that, I'm wondering which segments of Alberta's agriculture industry will be most affected, or if they don't succeed, what compensatory mechanisms will we be looking at ourselves? Are we going to end up having to develop a subsidy system parallel to what the Americans or the Europeans have to ensure that our farm sector survives? I would be quite interested in more information on the questions of agricultural subsidies and trade and so on.

I'm also very interested and very aware about the need to support rural communities, the social infrastructure requirement of rural areas, farm communities, small towns and villages throughout the province. I know in the rural development area of this department it's undoubtedly of very, very great interest. Certainly my view has always been that a rural community is far more than just the economy of the farm sector. It has to do with the availability of services, the quality and availability of schools, the quality and availability of health services and of cultural amenities and of parks and lakes for fishing and so on, all things that I know many, many people in rural Alberta cherish and value and things that help them to continue to live and thrive in the rural areas.

So if we're looking at the ministry's agenda to encourage economic and social infrastructure and transportation and other services, again, what mechanisms will the ministry use to encourage these kinds of things, to encourage the necessary economic infrastructure and to encourage the development of social infrastructure? Does this department have or intend to have considerable co-ordination with, say, the Department of Health and Wellness or the Department of Learning to ensure that those threads of the social fabric of rural Alberta are strong and even being strengthened rather than the trend of the last few years, which is weakened?

I'm also aware of a real concern over transportation issues for farmers in rural areas with the whole shift of the transportation infrastructure away from the railway and the elevators to the highway and to the huge grain terminals and the concern that over the longer term this is going to add very significantly to the costs to farmers. Rather than being able to truck their grain six or eight or 10 miles to a nearby elevator where it then gets loaded and handled by the railways, they're looking at having to haul grain 40 or 50 miles to these superterminals. That I believe in the long run – and I know many farmers believe this as well – is much more to serve the needs of the big grain and transportation and rail companies rather than to serve the needs of the farmers. As the cost of fuel climbs and as the cost of the added equipment such as huge trucks climbs, we're facing real issues around the viability of farms and their ability to get their crops to market. So I'm wondering exactly where the ministry is headed in terms of encouraging rural transportation and systems for getting grain to market.

Another particular area that caught my eye with this department was the specific focus on elk ranching. I think this is an area in which we have considerable controversy and some questions that still remain. If the department is planning to partner with the Alberta Elk Association and the U of A to develop an Elk Centre of Excellence, lots of questions have come up. When is this going to be operational? Who are the industry partners? What do they bring to the table, both in terms of perhaps good things and in terms of vested interests that may cause questions to be raised about the whole operation of an Elk Centre of Excellence? Finally, of course I'd like to know: what is the department's financial contribution to this program? I'm not sure that many Albertans are aware that elk farming is as extensive as it now is in Alberta, having doubled, I think, in the last five years. I've certainly heard reports that there are more elk now in Alberta on farms than there are in the wild. That raises, of course, all kinds of questions around disease and hunting and so on.

One other area – and I will make this my last area of comment here – concerns the Farmers' Advocate. I notice that the Farmers'

Advocate expenditures are expected to drop. The Farmers' Advocate I know from direct personal experience provides a very useful role for farmers in a range of activities including in particular I think the concerns that farmers have and the challenges they face in negotiating with oil and gas drilling companies, companies that want access to their property and potentially want to take control and assemble the mineral rights under a farmer's land. Given the increased drilling activity in Alberta, the phenomenal rise in oil and gas drilling, I'm curious at least, if not a little bit concerned, that spending on the Farmers' Advocate is down a bit. Certainly I don't want to see farmers and the interests of farmers weakened by a shrinking of the ability of the Farmers' Advocate to fulfill its role of advocating for farmers.

I would also note one other line here under support for 4-H clubs, an incredibly important organization for rural Albertans. It brings people together; it teaches rural children wonderful lessons and skills and life attitudes. I notice that at a time when there is tremendous prosperity in Alberta, our support for the 4-H organization is dropping a bit. I would certainly be concerned if that's any kind of long-term trend. It does relate back to questions of strengthening the rural social infrastructure. It's exactly organizations like 4-H that help keep our rural communities strong and vibrant and help to keep the next generation of farmers interested in their lifelong commitment to the land.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman and Madam Minister, I will take my seat. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to speak to the estimates of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Like my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, I'm not exactly a country born and bred kind of guy, but I've taken quite an interest in farm issues since being elected to the Legislature and have actually had an opportunity to tour a number of areas of the province and familiarize myself with at least some of the really basic elements of agriculture. I'd like to address a number of issues tonight, but I want to focus on the changes that are taking place in the agricultural sector and the effect that the government's and the department's policies in this budget have on that direction.

Agriculture has been perhaps the last holdout of local ownership in our economy, but having said that, Mr. Chairman, it's clearly besieged, and the result is that there's an ongoing threat to the family farm and in fact to local towns and villages throughout this province. We've seen particularly the movement of large and vertically integrated corporations into the area of hog production in particular, where they take on not just the production of hogs and the processing of hogs but the production of feed. Virtually every element of the industry is coming under the control of single corporations operating in areas.

Of course, before they can get a foothold, they require the construction of very large-scale operations for the raising and production of hogs. I don't believe that the trends we're seeing are inevitable. They are not strictly the result of economic forces over which we have no control. They require the collaboration of governments and elected officials in order to make these changes come about. So I view with some concern some of the statements in the ministry business plan which although they are not explicit about supporting the development of massive operations in this industry clearly imply that it is the government's policy to facilitate this change in the agricultural sector.

There's good evidence, Mr. Chairman, that these kinds of large-scale agricultural operations have a tendency to push down prices for the products that farmers receive, to move purchasing of input supplies and so on away from local communities and into large cities or even, in fact, sometimes outside the province altogether, and they produce significantly less jobs than the family farm. There are studies we've looked at done by universities in the United States that show that the family farm operations produce up to three times the number of jobs as the large-scale corporate farms that are now moving into Alberta on a massive scale.

There are a number of things that can be done about this, because we feel that it is a very serious challenge facing agriculture in Alberta. A return to single-desk selling would rebalance the opportunity for small- and medium-sized producers to be able to sell their products on a competitive basis with the large-scale operations.

The other point I'd like to make with respect to this, Mr. Chairman, is the need for environmental stewardship, and I'm very pleased to see in the business plan of the department that they in fact put an emphasis in goal 5 on "improved environmental stewardship." But the question is how that's going to be done and, in fact, if it can be done if we have massive scale hog plants in this province.

For example, a hog operation with 150,000 hogs produces as much waste product as a small city, and not only that, it can't be readily distributed. It has to be liquefied and then the containment and the restraint of that manure becomes a very serious problem. It poses a real threat to groundwater, since it's usually not properly contained. It spreads flies, produces nuisance odours in the vicinity far and wide, and generally is a major threat to probably our most precious resource and our most endangered resource in this province, and that is our groundwater. So movement of the province to deal with the groundwater issue is compromised by the government's agricultural policy of promoting and facilitating these kinds of hog operations.

MR. STELMACH: Where?

MR. MASON: There are lots of examples which I can refer the minister to. These operations, Mr. Chairman, have been much more widespread, of course, in the United States. They've only taken root in Alberta since the mid-1990s. So most of the examples of this are in the United States.

In April 1999 Murphy Family Farms, which is now the Smithfield facility, in North Carolina spilled more than 1.5 million gallons of manure into a swamp adjoining a tributary of the northeast Cape Fear River. Investigators believed tree roots punctured a lagoon wall. In October of 1999 employees at a Seaboard Farms facility in Oklahoma overapplied manure to farmland until it ran off, and they had to recover 102,000 gallons of manure. In December Caroll's Foods, a hog lagoon in North Carolina, spilled 200,000 . . . [interjections]

Well, Mr. Chairman, they did ask the question. Maybe they didn't expect that I would actually have some answers, but there's a whole list of things here. For example, in 1999 large-scale livestock producers spilled or dumped manure over 100 times in the 10 states surveyed, for a total of 4 and half million gallons. The report concluded that lagoons and other so-called technologies used at factory farms are not working and threaten public health, wildlife, and the quality of our rivers, lakes, and coastal waters. So there's very, very strong evidence in the United States, where this development is far more advanced, that it actually poses a serious threat. [interjection]

You know, this is the only time, Mr. Chairman, in all of the debates of the estimates that I've actually been heckled by the minister to whom I'm supposed to be speaking. I hope the minister will forgive my newness to this field, but I do feel I have some comments I'd like her to hear.

So environmental stewardship is important, and I recognize that is identified in the government's business plan for this department. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, it is incompatible with the direction the government is going on these large-scale operations.

The last point I would like to make is about the control of land use in the province. I and I know some other members, even opposite, were serving on regional planning commissions at the time that the minister at the time, Dr. West, abolished them. We warned at that time that there was going to be a lot of difficulty around this kind of development, because the division of urban and rural use was going to become blurred and we were going to have urban developments spilling into rural areas and incompatibilities of land use taking place. The kinds of plans, the joint planning between adjacent municipalities, that were touted as the answer have in fact not worked as was predicted by many, many people from many, many political perspectives at that time. So now we see more and more acreages and those types of developments intruding into rural areas, and you see rural areas competing for large-scale retail and commercial operations as opposed to their traditional location in cities.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North told me that there are in fact bylaws in some municipalities that won't allow combining after 10 o'clock at night. Well, Mr. Chairman, even a city boy can see that that's ridiculous. But it's coming as a direct result of the overlap of urban and rural land uses into the same area. So you have conflicts between rural residents and acreage owners and the farmers that are supposed to be producing the food and have to go all night.

The government also needs to address this and not just in this department. It needs to reimpose the kinds of limitations and restrictions on urban use in rural areas in order that agriculture can continue to operate according to the way it needs to in order to be effective, and the government has contributed to this problem by eliminating the regional planning commissions, whose job it was to protect agricultural land and to define the boundary between rural and urban land use. So, Mr. Chairman, those are my comments with respect to that.

I have a question or two for the minister if she's listening. On page 36 of the estimates the infrastructure for irrigation is being increased from $17 million to $24 million, and we would like to know if that is a capital investment or an operating expense. It appears to be an operating expense, but it seems to be listed as a capital investment.

I would like the minister to please, if she could, on page 36 under votes 4.4.4 and 4.4.5, elaborate relative to livestock operations and what these expenditures are for. I'd like as much detail as the minister is able to provide.

I'd just like to mention in closing, Mr. Chairman, another issue for which the government is not necessarily responsible, rail line abandonment. It's more related to federal policy. I want to put on record the concern about the closure of country elevators in many parts of Alberta and whether or not the government is going to try and do anything about that.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I hope that some of the members will be able to hear what I've said when they read Hansard tomorrow. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real privilege to get up again and bring up some more issues that I wanted to talk about.

We pretty well covered the actual number parts of the budget as it's presented in my first chance to address the Assembly.

The one question I would ask that I don't find in this budget document in terms of the assets that are managed by Ag Financial Services in the context of the capital value of them – it would be interesting to have a report on the total value there: what potentially might be their land holdings through, say, foreclosures, recaptured land values, but also some of the loans that are outstanding so we can track a little bit of the direction they're going in terms of the support for new farmers and get an idea of what level of asset they're actually managing from year to year. We'll be able to track it, then, in terms of the upturns and the downturns in the ag sector as it looks for, you know, the viability of farms.

Mr. Chairman, more specifically right now I'd like to turn to some of the departmental mission statements, the goals, and the performance indicators. I want to raise the issue here that I've raised in some of the other departments that I've had a chance to speak to in the last couple of years. I think what we need to have is not just this particular minister but a lot of the ministers deal with some kind of a descriptive relationship between what their goals are in the performance indicators. You know, Agriculture here basically reports performance indicators for their activities being Alberta farm cash receipts, net cash income, the value of shipments of food and beverages. We get into value of agriculture and food international exports, the contribution to Alberta's gross domestic product, the employment and output equivalency in terms of the land productivity. These basically are macrolevel indicators until we get into the last couple in terms of employment and the land productivity index.

If we're going to be able to evaluate the real effectiveness of some of these specific programs, we've got to have performance indicators that relate directly to that kind of program. As an example, the farm income support programs in their collection, you know, the three or four different ones that we provide dollars for, a report that reflected, say, farm sales or new farms, kind of the sustainability, because basically we're providing support programs to farmers to give them help through a transition in a down cycle or through a natural disaster. If we don't see any change in the trends of farm sales, number of farmers, then it's hard to relate what we're doing to any kind of positive benefit.

I know the argument is always there: well, it would have been worse if we hadn't had them. You know, we have to have some of those kinds of measures. For an example, we keep talking now about the new structure that's coming in Alberta agriculture. Well, this is going to be focused on development and promotion of these valued chain systems. So let's look at measures that talk about how new products are brought into the community, how they're moved from the innovator stage right through to the viable industry stage and see how that kind of tracking can go on. I know that these are going to be crude to start with in the context of not being really accurate, but if we don't start trying to develop these kinds of performance indicators that specifically relate back to the activities that we're undertaking, then we're not going to be able to judge over time whether or not the changes that we've put a lot of manpower effort into, a lot of thought effort into, and a lot of community involvement into, actually give us a payback. Those are some of the things that we need to look at.

One of the things I was also looking at as we talk about the diversity of commodities and the value-added industries. I noticed on the web site of Alberta Agriculture they had a page there that lists a whole series of investments in agriculture value added in the last 10 or 12 years. I think that's how far they went back. I looked at the list, and in many cases there were some very exciting new ones, like the potato plants in southern Alberta, some of the new additions, the Cargill plant. I guess I don't see it as a real great investment in Alberta agriculture when, say, Iowa Beef comes in and buys out Lakeside Feeders. All this is is a transfer of ownership; it's not really a significant investment that increases the capacity of our sector. The things that are really important are the investments that come in here that bring in new money and create new capacity rather than just buying out capacity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would probably be the first to admit that a buyout like that a lot of times leads to greater access to capital or greater access to management, but in the context of the volume and the capacity of our sector to make quantum jumps in its growth, what we're looking for are the new plants like the Lamb-Western and McCain's potato plants that came in: some of these. Then we can see where those investments in the sector are truly going to contribute to further processing and also the encouragement for the farmers to switch to a higher valued crop or product. So I guess that's one of the things that I would like to see show up a little bit in terms of what we're doing.

As we look through the goals of the ministry, some questions have come up with goal 2, "increased amount of value added to industry." Mr. Chairman, I've already talked a lot about the value chain linkages that are going on, and this concept was talked about a lot during the ag summit process. I guess one of the performance indicators that we could start to show now, because I know some of these value chains are starting to show up, is a performance indicator that talks about the number of these that have actually developed or how groups have gotten together to develop even a short value chain. A lot of the things that we do start with one little step at a time, and a value chain has to start with two different groups working together to increase their product value. That's one of the responses that we can provide to the minister in terms of her question at the start asking for suggestions on how to deal better with the performance indicators.

When we go to goal 3 here, the ag summit action teams are mentioned. One of the things that I hear about quite frequently as I travel around rural Alberta and talk to farmers is: what's the status of these teams? Where are they going? I would just encourage the minister to do, possibly on an occasional basis, a news release or something, talking about where they are in the progress. I think everybody in the sector appreciated the one that came out talking about who were the Albertans that were assigned to this, because a lot of people were wondering if they'd been fully staffed. So I've used that news release quite frequently, talking about, you know, if you want to know about this area, these are the people that are dealing with it. But still people are asking: how far along are they? So some kind of a progress indicator there would be appreciated by the sector.

I guess one important thing that comes up is at the top of page 40. We're talking here about managing risk. What we're dealing with is the administration of crop insurance, hail insurance. I guess what we need to do is, again, as I brought up a little earlier, clarify the role of Ag Financial Services in the context of some of the farm income disaster programs. The crop insurance is basically administered through that, yet the administration of the farm income assistance program was done through the ministry, you know, when you look at the budget structure here. So to kind of give a common point of entry for these kind of things, we need to deal with that.

Next, goal 5. We talk about "environmental stewardship." I would encourage the minister to as quickly as possible get the intensive livestock waste management issue settled. You know, the guidelines are out there. They now are part of a lot of the municipality land use plans and zoning approval processes, but Albertans still want to see a strong commitment to some level of provincewide involvement in those kinds of environmental issues. Even the farmers I talk to say: let's just find out where we're going to go so that we can work with it. As far as being on one side or the other, right now they just want to know what they're going to have to deal with.

I think that as we go into this issue of the environmental stewardship, some of the performance indicators that we might want to look at because of the public's concern as much as our legislative initiatives are issues of water quality, not necessarily water quality at the drinking water tap but water quality in the public water bodies that we have in the province – you know, the lakes, the rivers, the streams: that kind of thing – so that people can understand and appreciate their ability to go out there and use these as recreational facilities.

One of the other things that we want to look at may be land subject to erosion. I think a good performance indicator here would be – we don't see reports anymore about the acres summer fallowed in the province. There was probably an unusually high amount of actual wind-caused soil erosion this year. I think we saw it this winter quite a bit. So these kind of things would give us a chance to look at how we're doing there.

Maybe something that would look at pesticide or even antibiotic claims in the livestock industry. You know, how many times are cases reported? Just so we have an idea of the safety and pureness of our food system. We've had a couple of unfortunate cases in the last while of recalled agriculture products; they've been sent out, and they've had to be recalled from the retailer or in some cases even from homeowners. I think that one of the things that we should be really proud of is that even though these things occur, in the context of our overall production capacity they're a very small volume. So in that context we do have an unbelievably high, and very proudly high, quality of food that's produced in our province.

When we talk about food safety and that, I would like to ask the minister to explain where we are now in this common food inspection that we were trying to work out with the federal government. My understanding is that we're getting more and more now to one level of food inspection in Canada. I think that in the long run it's a good goal, as long as we don't compromise the quality and the reputation that we have in Alberta. If we have one standard, it will work, especially if we can get into looking at some of the issues of how to deal with some of the ISO 9000 type of certification programs.

As kind of a wrap-up comment, Mr. Chairman, I just want to make some comments that the ministry has always been very supportive of requests I've made, and I find them very easy to work with in the context of getting the support information that I need. So as I conclude, I just want to really express my thanks to the various ministers that I've worked with but also to the staff of Alberta Agriculture. They've been very, very co-operative, and I hope in the process I haven't broken any of their trusts.

So thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I hope we can continue this at a later time.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to respond.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank all members who participated in the discussion of this I think very important part of our provincial economy certainly but, more importantly, a provider of safe, quality food products to everyone in this province plus a very significant provider of quality, safe products that are known throughout the world. As I've said, we export to over a hundred countries, and we do have an excellent reputation.

For that reason, I'm a bit concerned about one hon. member's comments with the new buzzword, factory farms. That is not the case in Alberta. I don't think there's a hog barn that has over 20,000 hogs in it. I could stand to be corrected for 500 or 1,000 hogs. To use examples that are U.S. and not Alberta I think is unfair to our industry. No similar activities have occurred in this province, and certainly we've gone through a very extensive process on intensive livestock, looking at good guidelines and rules that they will operate under. As I indicated in my opening comments, we've put an awful lot of extra effort and money into environmental stewardship and sustainability. One thing that all hon. members should keep in mind is that it is of no benefit to any agricultural producer to degrade the land or mistreat animals, because that is their livelihood.

We're as concerned about water quality. We drink it. We don't have expensive purification systems. I asked the hon. member where the city of Edmonton puts their sewage now. Why I'm raising that is that we all have a responsibility, because the North Saskatchewan River doesn't end here, and there are a lot of people downstream that reap the benefits or the effects of that. So it's up to all of us. It's not a rural or an urban issue to maintain the quality of our land and of our water. We're committed in our department to doing that.

The industry has been on a roller-coaster ride – there's no question – and it requires all of our support and understanding. So I only encourage all hon. members. Most of the comments we had tonight were very productive, only aimed at making our industry stronger and better. It is a sustainable industry, and the opportunities for this industry and its ability to affect in a very positive way the quality of life in this province are absolutely unlimited. It is a sustainable resource. It can be for long into the future.

I remind everyone that agriculture is the industry that built this province, and it will be the industry that sustains this province long into the future, when many of these other activities are gone and forgotten. There will never be a time when we do not need a high-quality, safe food supply, and I can tell you that the producers in this province will deliver that, the value-added processors will deliver that, and they will continue to make Alberta a proud name in all countries in the world where we export our great products.

Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment                      $610,031,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Community Development

THE CHAIRMAN: For the opening comments we call upon the hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed my great pleasure to rise before you and all colleagues tonight to present for the Assembly's approval the new three-year business plan and the budget estimates for the 2001-2002 years for Alberta Community Development.

Among our many priorities, Mr. Chairman, are persons with developmental disabilities, persons with other disabilities, sport and recreation, arts and culture and multiculturalism, libraries, volunteer development, historic sites, museums and cultural facilities, parks and protected areas, film classification, planning for our centennial, human rights, citizenship and the status of women, and many other important areas.

Helping me out in all of this, Mr. Chairman, are numerous individuals, some of whom are here with us tonight that I'd like to just quickly introduce to you. In our gallery are Dr. Bill Byrne, our deputy minister, and his assistant, Mr. Chris Robinson, Mr. Rai Batra, Ms Darlene Andruchuk, Mr. Hugh Tadman, Mr. David Steeves, Mr. John Kristensen, Mr. Mark Rasmussen, Ms Kathy Telfer, and from the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board Garry Donald and Jim Menzies, as well as my own executive assistant, Pam Boutilier. They should all rise and take a quick bow because they've worked very hard over the last while.

Thank you.

[Mr. Fischer in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, I want to basically accomplish two things this evening: first, to review the three-year business plan and, secondly, to discuss the 2001-2002 budget estimates. But before I do that, I also want to thank some colleagues who are integral to this entire process and who chair various committees within our department: the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, the Member for Calgary-Currie, the Member for Calgary-Montrose, the Member for Little Bow, and others who are very involved with us.

Our business plan outlines the actions that will support our vision statement, which is this: "A vibrant province where Albertans experience fair opportunity and the quality of life to which they aspire." Our mission statement articulates the process, and it reads:

To advance the quality of life for Albertans by providing leadership, support and opportunity so they may participate in the social, cultural and economic life of the province.

Our core businesses have been amended to reflect the ministry's new responsibility, and they are as follows:

1. promoting community development;
2. protecting human rights and promoting fairness and access;
3. ensuring inclusion and participation for Albertans with disabilities;
4. preserving, protecting and presenting Alberta's history and culture; and
5. preserving, protecting and presenting Alberta's provincial parks and protected areas.

Community Development helps to support and enhance our province's quality of life in so many ways, and I'd like to just highlight a few of them for you now. We contribute to the health and viability of our communities and our community-based volunteer organizations. We help to ensure that all Albertans have equitable access and opportunity to participate in society. We preserve and interpret our natural and historical resources for the benefit of current and future generations. We provide very necessary supports to nurture our young artists and our young athletes as leaders for tomorrow. We encourage Albertans to appreciate and experience a very wide range of opportunities in the arts, culture, and multicultural areas. We assist persons with disabilities by providing many supports and also by encouraging society to see ability where they may have seen limitation before. We support lifelong learning by increasing access to information. Mr. Chairman, this is by no means an exhaustive list, but it does provide you with at least a glimpse of what it is that we're all about.

Now, with respect to the 2001 through 2004 business plan we are taking a different approach than in previous years, and it is built around success factors, that help us determine success in achieving our vision. To put these factors into action, we've developed what we call stretch targets, targets that we plan to achieve by 2004, and five critical success factors, that are listed on page 89 in the plan. I know all members will rush there immediately. You will see that we are linking the program areas in a very logical manner. As well, instead of identifying a list of actions that relate to each goal, we have taken a much broader approach and identified corporate initiatives that cut across our core businesses and will help us arrive at where we want to be by 2004. You will see these corporate initiatives listed on pages 91 to 94. I also would like to take you through a few examples to illustrate this new approach.

For example, under the success factor titled Focus on Those We Serve, the stretch target is to make all ministry activities "needs-driven and evidence-based" by 2004. One of the corporate initiatives linked to this success factor is to "implement directions from the Building Better Bridges - Final Report in co-operation with Persons with Developmental Disabilities Boards and other ministries." This report resulted from extensive consultations which I had the privilege to personally undertake with the assistance of others. In order to focus on those we serve, I should also add that we have increased the budget for PDD to reflect our increased caseloads and to address increased operating costs. We've also allocated new funding for the brain injury initiative to begin building much-needed programs and services in that area.

For another success factor, Create Beneficial Opportunities, the stretch target is to make ministry programs and services "readily accessible, effective and beneficial." This will be accomplished by corporate initiatives such as maintaining "care for heritage collections by acquiring, preserving and making accessible the material culture, natural history and documentary heritage of the province" and by maintaining "care of our natural heritage by managing provincial parks and protected areas to sustain their ecological integrity." Our parks and our protected areas and our cultural facilities and historic resources have much in common, Mr. Chairman, preserving, protecting, and presenting our heritage whether it is cultural, historical, or natural.

Now, under the success factor Nurture Effective Alliances the stretch target is to establish "appropriate working relationships with all entities having similar corporate objectives." An example to illustrate this is the aboriginal policy initiative, and Community Development will support the Alberta aboriginal policy initiative in several ways including but not limited to funding support for the 2002 North American Indigenous Games, implementation of a provincial policy concerning traditional ceremonial materials, and planning for the establishment of the First Nations Development Fund.

Mr. Chairman, a change in business plan also means a change in how we measure our success. I would like to turn briefly to the performance measures section of our business plan. While we have retained the link between measures and performance assessment in each core business, we have now grouped the ministry's measures under four essential, overall categories: participation, satisfaction, quality of life, and economic impact. We wanted our performance measures to be more meaningful to our stakeholders and to our partners as well and to specifically address what we have heard from Albertans.

Turning now to my ministry's budget estimates, I want to focus briefly on how the ministry proposes to meet existing and new commitments. I want to begin with libraries. In Budget 2001 we have allocated an additional $715,000 to Alberta's public libraries to recognize Alberta's growing population. This brings the funding to $14.9 million. As well, we are allocating an additional $1.75 million beginning in 2001-2002 to assist with the costs of sustaining the Alberta public library electronic network, which of course is a project between the government of Alberta and the Alberta Library.

The 2001-2002 budget provides $126 million for the Alberta 2005 centennial program. This program celebrates the province of Alberta's 100th anniversary by supporting legacy projects for the benefit of future generations. In this year's budget we've allocated approximately $40 million to very worthy provincial legacy projects such as main street revitalization efforts, an official history of Alberta, aboriginal and youth initiatives, and to the centennial legacies grant program, which is for community projects.

I should also point out that my ministry has transferred $85.4 million of the aforementioned $126 million to Alberta Infrastructure to manage on behalf of Community Development the construction or renovation of several government-owned facilities. We're talking about major projects here.

The persons with developmental disabilities budget for 2001-02 is $378.6 million, which includes a $53.4 million increase from last year's budget.

In support of the cross-ministry economic development strategy, we are providing a $1.78 million increase for parks and protected areas, including funding for costs associated with public safety, evaluating interpretation, environmental education programs, and work associated with the special places program.

In an effort to make our activities more needs driven and evidence based, another of our stretch targets, the 2001-02 budget for the human rights and citizenship branch has been increased by $200,000 to enable the review and consultation on the Blind Persons' Rights Act and to improve the existing legislation for people with disabilities who rely upon the assistance of an animal.

Alberta's vibrant arts and culture sector plays an important role in sustaining the high quality of life that we enjoy. The Alberta film development program in its first year of operation demonstrated great success in rejuvenating Alberta's film industry. In fact, in 1999-2000 an investment of $2.9 million attracted productions valued at $33.2 million, $19.2 million of which was spent right here in Alberta. I want to sincerely thank the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View and the Member for Drumheller-Chinook, who is now our Deputy Premier, for the important work they did in that regard. We've extended that Alberta film development program, Mr. Chairman, by $5 million per year in 2002-03 and 2003-04.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry, Mr. Minister. Your time is up.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I'll come back and finish this when time permits. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I would like to call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I'm pleased to be able to rise and participate in the debate on the budget for Community Development, and I appreciate the minister's speed-reading there in trying to get all of his information in. Of course, I appreciate the very hard work of the staff members of Community Development. I know that they're working very hard to try and provide all of the services, doing, as always, as much as they can with very limited resources.

This portfolio is a bit of a moving target. This is my fifth budget debate on this portfolio, and it has been different every single year. There have been different entities covered under the umbrella of Community Development. As the minister pointed out, we lose housing and seniors this year and gain persons with disabilities, parks and protected areas, and also First Nations development into the portfolio. As a result, I find it very difficult to track the portfolio, and certainly that's been some of the feedback that I've had from member agencies that receive their funding through the department as well. The bottom line always manages to look a little better every year, but that's mostly a result of having large programs transferred in. It's not affecting the core services that remain consistent in the department.

Those core areas include things that I think are really vital to making Alberta a special place. That's about the people components of the department: human rights, women's issues, multiculturalism, youth, volunteers. It's about our activities like arts and culture, historical sites, heritage, sports and recreation, fairs and festivals, and of course the places, which include the 18 really wonderful historical sites that we have which are much involved in tourism in this province.

I note the large sum of money that came into the department this year came in under promoting community development, which is essentially now housing the persons with abilities section. I'm wondering what happened to the old community development, which used to be about helping organizations in the community develop their potential. Alberta at one point had a reputation that was unmatched for services that were offered by the expertise developed in the department around board development and seminars and that sort of activity. I don't know where it falls anymore.

So looking at this department from year to year becomes increasingly difficult. When you first look at the budget, it appears to have six or seven areas, and each year less and less is explained about what indeed falls underneath the department, because there's no subvote breakdown on it. I would certainly appreciate seeing those subvote breakdowns again. The last time they were around was about 1995. So for people trying to look at these budgets and figure out exactly where they fall and what's happening to them, it's a loss. You know, are they under Community Development? Well, no, not anymore. That's not what it means. Everything else is rolled up so high into a one- or two-line explanation that people don't really know what's going on anymore.

I find this department particularly not open and transparent compared to some of the other departments that I have debated. I would encourage the minister to look at expanding, in fact, what's covered under here. It is a huge department. There's a lot of different sectors to it, but let's not hide them. Let's not hide their light under a bushel. Let's get it out there and celebrate what's in this department.

Now, performance measurements are a particular interest of mine. When I look at the performance measurements, some of them are the same as what we had in the previous year and some of them have sort of changed and their numbers have changed, which is always interesting to me.

I'm just going to stop here and respond to the minister's description of where the department is trying to go with these new corporate values, which I'll reserve judgment on at this point. But I do find it a little odd that we're talking about corporate values when most of the agencies that are housed under this department or in fact receive funding from this department are not corporate; they're nonprofit agencies. So this whole movement that we have seen in this department towards a corporate mentality is dismaying to me. And the stretch targets I'll come back to, because I have some questions on that.

When we look at the key performance measurements under the "Participation" section, we're still having the level of community volunteerism, but the numbers are slightly different from what were appearing in the comparison budgets from the previous year. Perhaps the minister can comment on that.

When I look at the percentage of adult Albertans participating in sports and recreation, that looks fine. We've got adults using public library services. That's great. But "percentage of adult Albertans participating in arts and cultural activities": this measure keeps floating, keeps changing. In five years I think I've seen just about five different measurements on this one. I'm exaggerating slightly but not too much. This year we're seeing that there are no comparative results because they've changed it yet again, so there's nothing to compare to from '98-99. The figures being given for results in '99-2000 are 89.6 percent, and the target between 2001-2004 is 90 percent. I'm wondering why it's only 90 percent. You're only looking to increase your target by .4 percent in four years. You must have higher expectations than that.

Again, we have a problem with new measurements and changing measurements under adult Albertans visiting museums, historic sites, or interpretive centres.

In particular, I noticed that the "visitation at provincial parks and provincial recreation areas," which is a new measurement in this department because it came in with the new section when the ministries changed, is in fact dropping. We're going in '98-99 from 8.6 million to '99-2000, where we've got 8.5 million, and our target in 2001-2004 is less again, at 8 million. I'm curious as to why the department would be targeting for less, but I'm sure that will be explained.

When we look at the measure under "Satisfaction," the "customer satisfaction with community development assistance provided", what we're getting here for the results is "methodology revised", "methodology revised", and for the target, "to be established." But in the previous year's budget it in fact does give us some targets, so what's happened here? Are we having trouble translating from the previous book to this book?

I also always question satisfaction. Surveying people as to how they're satisfied with a given activity I question in every department in this government. I don't think it's a useful management tool. Yes, you want to know that people like what you're presenting, but frankly that isn't always the best measurement of whether you're being successful. It's an easy performance measurement to use. It's too easy. It's too easy an out, and I strongly recommend we revisit that.

Now, when I look at the measure for "Quality of Life," there's nothing to compare to for '98-99. Results in '99-2000 are exceptionally high, ranging from 87 percent up to 98.9 percent, and then targets again slightly above that, fractions above that, for 2001-2004. So what are you trying to tell us here?

Percentage of adult Albertans who consider the following as important in contributing to their quality of life:

- Arts and culture
- Sport and recreational activities
- Public libraries
- Volunteer activities
- Environment free of discrimination

These very high performance measurement results, and then a tiny, tiny increase for the entire target years of the three-year business plan.

I note and I applaud the government for continuing to support the Alberta film development program. Very important for this province. We have a long way to go to recapture where we were at before this government so mistakenly and shortsightedly cut the support to film and left it floundering for a period of time there. We're back up to $40 million, or that's the target, but we came down from well over $100 million on this, so we've got a long way to go to recapture that. I encourage the minister to continue to work with the community, which is very astute in what it needs to do well at this. I hope we'll be able to recapture where we were at.

Now, I'm going to jump around here because, as you know, there's so much in this department that it's impossible to cover it in one hour. I'm aware that I will disappoint some groups in that I won't be able to raise their issue.

I'm questioning what the $54,000 in capital investment is under program 3, human rights and citizenship. There is a capital investment of $54,000. I'm wondering what that is.

I'm also wondering what the $2,829,000 is for program 6, parks and protected areas, again under capital investment.

When I look at the minister's office and deputy minister's office, there's a $300,000 increase in here. I'm wondering why. If he can please give me a very specific breakdown of exactly what is being done with this money.

Community services. As I said, most of these are going down slightly, and in a few cases a minuscule increase for those core services.

When I look at things like the Provincial Museum, Royal Tyrrell Museum, historic sites and cultural facilities, Provincial Archives, all of these have gone down slightly from the previous year. I'm wondering why they've been reduced. I think all of these organizations have been very clear that they need continued support. What did they do to deserve being cut?

One of my concerns – and I met with the previous minister and did a fair bit of lobbying on this – was that the money that was assigned to the 2001 World Championships in Athletics did not ensure an arts component. Seeing as this money came from Community Development, which also includes an arts component, I question why there were no strings attached as far as this went, because frankly, as a result, I don't think we have a very strong arts component in this. I think that's a failing of the provincial government's commitment to upholding that. Certainly we've had the organizers trying to come up with additional money to support the arts component, and they have not been successful. Considering the amazing community that we have here in Edmonton and in Alberta, what a mistake. What a loss to not be promoting that.

We have a number of new highlights that are being noted. In "funding for the establishment of the First Nations Development Fund," a number of new initiatives in there.

The minister had mentioned that there was additional money in the budget to support a review of the Blind Persons' Rights Act for persons who are using an animal. Again I have met with the previous minister on this one, and I strongly encourage whatever consultations take place to please be open to having this included and expanded to work with service dogs. Once we've got that act open, let's get into the 21st century here, because certainly there are service dogs that are assisting people with seizures, service dogs for people with things like CP, multiple sclerosis. There are all kinds of possibilities. We have some very fine examples across the world of how to certify these animals, how to check them, and how to identify them that we can be following up on.

I'm hoping that the province is giving serious consideration to working with the city of Edmonton on two different projects for the Legacy program. We are in desperate need of a new art gallery. I understand that there are already talks going on about a combined museum with the Provincial Museum and staff at the University of Alberta, which sounds like an excellent program. Really exciting possibilities there. The province provided Edmonton and Calgary with the Jubilee auditoria for the 50th anniversary, and I'm hoping we can be looking at something similar.

I have been tabling in this Assembly a number of examples of possibilities for what to do with the Rosedale power plant. There was an excellent opportunity to be putting a museum or an art gallery right in the centre of downtown, a real showpiece that everyone entering the city would see. The department staff and recommendations through to the EUB about the use of the Rosedale site: I'm hoping that the minister will still do the right thing and not allow the destroying of part or all of the Maxwell Dewar Building. In fact, I'm sure the staff are aware that in allowing destruction of part of it, we've basically signed the death warrant for all of it, because there are certainly plans for stage 2 and stage 3. So two more huge turbines that EPCOR has finally admitted they wish to put in that place.

That's the end of that building. Let's not kid ourselves that we can take down one wall and let one turbine in there. Once we get into this project, we're destroying the whole darn thing. So I'm still looking to the minister to be brave and do the right thing there. He can, in fact, save that power plant for use by all Albertans and make it a magnificent entrance to the city with tourism possibilities. And there you have a beautiful site to be considered for your museum or for an art gallery.

Some other issues I'd like to try and get through. I will impose upon my colleagues and try to get additional time later in this very short one hour that we have to debate this very multifaceted budget.

Women have absolutely disappeared. The word is never mentioned, and I have read all the way through the business plans and the actual budget. I think that's shortsighted. I'd like to know, as I ask every year: exactly what is this program doing and where does it exist? Exactly what is the funding that is allocated to status of women in this budget? I'm bringing up the concerns about the cuts to women's shelters across the province. Although they are housed and funded under Children's Services, I still expect status of women to be cognizant of what's happening in this area. I notice that there was funding to do an aboriginal lens in looking at government programs. I've been asking for years for a gender lens. If the ministry can understand doing that for aboriginal issues, I'm sure they could find their way to doing that for women's issues, and we do still need that.

One of the issues that keeps coming up again and again in what's left of the women's community is assistance for networking. I'm looking for the minister to be seriously considering that. It's very difficult for people that are working all day long and volunteering all night to still try and get together in whatever volunteer time they've got left. There could be support there for networking coming from the government. Also, support for immigrant women's programs. There's an excellent agency, Changing Together, which does not get any specific programming money through this government, and there's a good way for it to be done. Additionally, for status of women to be looking at women's health issues. So women are turning up in all the different departments, but nowhere is there any ownership or any concern being expressed and an overview being done.

I'm aware I'm coming up to the end of my first 20 minutes. Cross-department initiatives, again on women's issues. This can be done, and this is the only portfolio under which it can be done. I'm looking again for leadership to be taken here. Five years. I keep trying. It's possible to do, folks.

All right. Thank you very much, and I shall return later for the rest of my notes.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to spend the next 20 or so minutes making some observations on this department's budget, Community Development. I want to start by noting that this is the first time the minister has a department under his direct control. He's solely responsible for it, so I wish him good luck in his first full-fledged portfolio responsibility.

I was listening to the minister, and the minister certainly touched on various priorities of his department as he was trying to set in motion programs and policies and activities that will help him reach the goals in the next three years, but as he was talking about this, he did talk about the status of women.

I started looking at this part of the budget yesterday afternoon sometime. I was looking for something on the status of women – and my colleague from Edmonton-Centre has already mentioned this – and I couldn't find any specific mention anywhere in the budget document on that specific item or issue. Mr. Minister, in making your introductory remarks, you did single that out as one of the initiatives you're paying attention to, yet here in the budget any mention of this is totally, totally absent. So I would like you in your response at the end of the debate to pay some attention to it. Show me where the resources are. Where are you hiding all these programs related to issues related to the women of Alberta, immigrant women and other women and women in general?

I will be making a few observations on some of the programs this ministry is responsible for in a moment, but in terms of general observations the department keeps changing, as has been noted before. New programs are brought in, and new services have been brought in, so one wonders when you look at the overall budget: how do you make a judgment about whether or not the overall budget of the department has indeed increased, given the fact that its responsibilities have also expanded? It was difficult in the absence of any detailed information provided here to make that kind of assessment. I think it's important for the department to keep these things in mind so as to assist everyone who is looking at the budget, including MLAs in this House, to be able to make accurate judgments about what the state of the budget is and whether or not there are real increases in there. The overall figure certainly is up by 16 or 17 percent, but so are the responsibilities of the department.

I would briefly like to talk about support for the arts, cultural and recreational programs, human rights and citizenship, services for persons with disabilities, museums and historical sites, and last is parks and recreational areas.

Let me start with the item on libraries. Libraries are clearly a vital resource for enriching our lives and our communities across this province. As a result of declining provincial support over the years, one wonders if public libraries are really public in nature. They have begun charging user fees and/or annual membership fees that pose a financial hardship to many Albertans, many users, particularly those citizens who most need their services. Over the past decade operating grants to support Alberta's 245 library boards have not kept pace with either population growth or inflation. This year the government is planning to spend I think only about 3 percent more than last year. Alberta library boards have been asking for additional resources so they can eliminate fees as well as add, if you wish, new books, replace aging stocks, and add other resources. Exactly what action is the minister planning to take to allow Alberta libraries to better serve Albertans?

I have one question on page 95. I was trying to again see what that statement exactly means. It's under highlights for the year 2001-2002. There is some reference made here to increase the operational funding to the province's libraries to $14.9 million. From what figure? You know, that's missing there. You say that it's going up to $14.9 million, but from what? That should be there. It's difficult to look around when you're going through. Everything's laid out, yet when you read these lines information is missing. I think it's easy to provide this information for the ease of discussion and examination. I couldn't figure that out easily.

On the issue of arts funding, virtually all provincial funding of the arts is channeled through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. When one factors out the film development program introduced by this government three years ago, having recognized they'd made a very serious blunder in eliminating that program to start with, arts funding has remained virtually frozen over the past 10 years. So there again under the highlights on page 95 I think you do draw attention to some increases here, but the film industry is a vital arts activity in the province. It certainly has huge potential financial dividends for the provincial economy. I think it needs to be paid more attention. By even the most generous calculation the government spends about $22.4 million supporting the arts sector, a sector that contributes hundreds of millions of dollars to the economy each year.

My Tory opponent in the recent election at one of the forums on arts and culture proposed spending 1 percent of the provincial budget on the arts. That would have been more than $200 million a year. In fact, he did mention that figure. He said: elect me and you'll get $200 million invested in arts on an annual basis. I want to tell you, Mr. Minister, that I'll settle for a fifth of that, about $40 million a year, if you'll give me that. I'd certainly go back to my constituency where lots of artists live and give them the good news. So I was just waiting for your word. I'm not asking for $200 million.

My next question deals with program 3, human rights and citizenship. I appreciate the fact that some additional resources are being applied in this area. However, I'm not sure the increase is as good as it appears. Is the $1.062 million in vote 3.0.2 new money, or is it simply an accounting item? I went to page 107 to get some answers to this, but the information there seems to lead me, at least, to the conclusion that it's not new money. Could you clarify that?

Finally, could the minister clarify exactly how much money is being provided to the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission and how much of a budget increase they will be receiving? My quick look at that item indicated that the increase is very, very, very minimal. In fact, to me it seems that the operational budget for human rights is nearly frozen over the last few years at a level which has been low as is.

My next question is on centennial projects. I refer to page 95 of the estimates books again which indicates that $126 million will be provided to this program this year. I agree that Alberta's centennial is a significant event in the history of the province. However, I wonder about spending this amount of money on a centennial that is still four years away. Also, what kind of governance structure is in place for these funds? How will we be able to make sure these funds are spent wisely and on the right priorities? Will this become just another program where government MLAs hand out cheques even in the ridings of opposition members?

I'll give you an example. Last September when the first grants were announced, one of the grants was for renovation of the Arts Barns in my constituency, known as Edmonton-Strathcona. I was perhaps the only person who was not informed or invited to the event, the big celebration to hand out the cheque. I wonder if the minister will continue with the policy to not invite the MLAs for the areas for which these funds may be announced at a certain time. I was not made aware of the grant. I wasn't invited to the function. I hope, Mr. Minister, as a former opposition member that you will make sure this kind of thing doesn't happen under your charge.

My next question relates to persons with developmental disabilities. I note that this responsibility followed the current minister from his previous portfolio as Associate Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the close fit between health care services and services to persons with developmental disabilities, I want to ask what the rationale was for this transfer. Secondly, how will the minister make sure that service gaps don't develop because the PDD boards and the health authority boards report to different ministers? What are the co-ordinating mechanisms there to make sure such gaps do not develop? I'm certainly not questioning your commitment to these services, and I recognize that significant additional resources are being applied.

One question there on page 109. I may as well ask it right now. It stood out. It caught my eye very quickly. It's under Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board, Statement of Operations, under Expense, board operations. The budget for the board operations jumps by more than 100 percent from last year to this one, if you notice, from $7.6 million to some 18 million dollars. I wonder if this can be justified or if you will in fact make some comments on it for us to understand why this increase, such a large increase, for the board.

Also, some concerns about the decision to transfer responsibility for provincial parks and protected areas to the Ministry of Community Development from the Ministry of Environment. Why was this change made? What actions will the minister take to make sure that completing Alberta's network of protected areas becomes a top priority? Will the minister take action to prevent his colleague the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development from compromising the possibility of establishing new protected areas in the Kananaskis area as a result of establishing huge new forest management agreements which seem to be under way?

In my constituency office I get from my constituency assistant every week a log of the various calls and e-mails that we get. I've got dozens and dozens of calls over the last two weeks from people expressing a great deal of concern about the forest management area in that region that's in negotiation right now with the Spray Lakes company or whoever they are. So there are some serious questions, some serious concerns that Albertans are communicating to us. Again, under your charge, in your good hands, I wonder: what will be the fate of these areas, and how will you address these impending threats to the continuation of the protected areas programs?

Another question for you. I notice on page 96 under your highlights for this current fiscal year, at the top of the page, the first line there: "Work with Alberta Infrastructure to renovate a facility to accommodate a new home for the Provincial Archives of Alberta." You're familiar with it. I'm familiar with it. There had been an attempt made to move the archives from where they had been in the Provincial Museum to a site somewhere near Stony Plain a couple of years ago. That certainly is not there. Has a new site in the city now been identified? If so, I hope you will answer the questions: where is that site, and which building will be renovated in order to accommodate this very, very precious historical information resource for the use of Albertans and Canadians from across the country?

So these are some of my questions and observations. I will now let some other colleagues take over. If I have another chance, I may have a few other questions later on.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I welcome this opportunity to participate in Community Development estimates this evening, and I thank the minister and any members of his department that are here tonight. We are a little short of time, so I won't spend too much time. I will be putting forth a number of questions, and perhaps he can supply answers in writing if he doesn't have the opportunity this evening.

Now, then, I notice that here in 2001-2002 $10 million has been set aside for the World Championships in Athletics, and by the end of this fiscal year that will total $40 million which has been provided for this event. So my questions are: what specifically has the money been marked for, or is it left to the discretion of the 2001 World Championships in Athletics committee to use this money as they see fit?

Along the same lines, can the minister provide a detailed list including costs and types of projects his ministry is involved in as part of preparations for housing the 2001 world track and field championships in Edmonton? I guess what we're looking more for here is if you can provide us with: how much of this $40 million has gone into facilities, how much of it will go into transportation, into salaries, into entertainment or hosting costs, and how much have we committed to hosting international committee members when they arrive in our province? So if the minister could do that, please.

The Premier has also expressed concerns about how money is being spent on the championships. What I would like to know is: has the department taken any steps to ensure that money transferred or given to the committee is being well spent? In other words, what are the checks and balances here? What are their obligations as this committee to report back to the minister on where the dollars have been spent? What measures is the department using to determine the value of the money we have given to the championships committee?

Again, I notice here that particularly with major championships throughout the world there has always been an arts segment of the games. I see that there doesn't appear to be any money that is designated for the arts, and I'm wondering if I have missed this or if there are dollars here. As well, I notice, particularly with the Calgary Olympics, which are so close to us, that there were a number of residual benefits. Of course, one of those was in the tourism industry, where even a year or two after the Olympic Games were held in Calgary, we continued to have a great interest in that city and surrounding areas from visitors around the world. I would like to know if the department has worked in partnership with other departments to ensure that we get maximum benefit out of the great advertising we're going to be seeing with having these games here in Edmonton? How will that be perpetuated over the next few years?

As well, if the minister could please provide a copy of the criteria used by his department to assess which projects would receive funding during the 2001 world track and field championships.

I would like to move along now to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation, certainly a area of this ministry that is near and dear to myself, having been involved extensively in recreation and sport in this province for the majority of my adult life. I notice here as well that this is one of those areas where we have continually increased demands, not only because we have more people participating in recreational activities and sport, but also we've had a tremendous strain put on a number of our facilities in this province just by the sheer number of people moving to Alberta. Yet with all this demand and the increased emphasis that we want to place on sports and recreation, really since this foundation was cut back in '93 or '94, their funding has never really been increased. It really has been flat for quite some time. So I would like to know when these dollars can be restored to this particular foundation?

Now, then, I see that there is a marginal increase here of 1.3 percent, of $231,000. If the minister could please outline where this money is earmarked? Will the department provide a specific breakdown of the source of the total estimated revenues for 2001-2002 of $18.2 million, including how this was generated? Again, I don't expect great detail, but if we can get a sketch as to where these revenues came from.

Also, I see that when we look at campgrounds and parks in this province, we have some 530 sites in the province. Now, what I would like to know from the minister is: are all of these sites run by the province, or are a number of them leased? If they are leased, one of the big concerns in regards to parks and campgrounds that was brought out at the AAMDC was that there appear to be two different sets of rules. If you have a private campground and right beside it a former provincial campground that is now leased, there are two different methods by which those people pay taxes, and there was great concern over this.

As well, certainly at one time, when parks were a much bigger and more detailed section of the ministry, we decided that we were going to change the focus and allow a lot of people to lease these parks. Certainly the province has spent literally hundreds of millions of dollars in infrastructure to develop these parks and these campgrounds. What I would like to know is: what checks are there in place to assure Albertans that the tax dollars they put into these facilities are being protected by the leaseholders? This is certainly a very good question because we do have a tremendous amount of money out there.

As well, how many of these sites have been allowed to more or less return to their natural state due to the fact that nobody has chosen to lease these sites because they're just not economically viable? Rather than the province maintaining them, nobody is taking care of them, so they've been allowed to return to their natural state. We see grass in these campgrounds up to and above the picnic table benches and whatever. So if we could have a count as to how many of these sites have been abandoned.

Now, then, as well there was a $768,000 drop, or 6.6 percent, in the program expense for provincial programs, and this is in the estimates on page 105. If the minister could please provide to us who exactly will be affected by this cut.

Meanwhile, in the same part of the budget, Alberta and inter-provincial games will receive a 23 percent increase, from $1.830 million to $2.251 million. What will this additional funding be expected to achieve? Is this because we have more games and more events out of the province, or do we have more competitions within the province or more events? Or is it just the fact that we are looking at more competitors? So if we could have a breakdown as to how this increase is going to be taken care of.

Now, another line that I would like to question here before I do turn this over to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is the 13.5 percent cut in the funding to the Percy Page Centre. This is such a unique centre that I think we are the envy of many provinces in Canada for having a centre of this nature. It's a centre that coordinates so many provincial programs, and certainly a decrease of 13.5 percent will have a huge impact on the Percy Page Centre. So if the minister could please let us know why there are these cuts to the Percy Page Centre.

Now, if time does permit, I would like to return and ask a few more questions, but at this time I'll turn it over to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Yes, it is indeed very tight timing to try and get through all the things that are in this department. What I wanted to do in the 10 minutes that we've got left – a number of agencies had contacted me in response to my notification that tonight was the debate on Community Development, many of them arts organizations, and I know that the minister, having come from this sector and having been involved with semiprofessional arts organizations for many years, would be interested in hearing some of these stories.

I think the major point that's trying to be put across here is that the funding for arts and culture has been stagnant. It's worse than stagnant, because it was essentially $1.6 million in 1988, and it's $1.6 million today. These groups can't go out and buy supplies in 1988 dollars. They have to pay 2001 prices. So they have suffered an extraordinary decrease in what their money can buy for them.

The results are fewer shows, fewer artists hired, fewer opportunities, fewer programs, and particularly less risk taking. There comes after a certain point a self-censoring of projects that they choose to do because they're under such pressure to generate this revenue, which is the new formula by which they will qualify for their own grants, that they feel forced to take the safe road and not do some of the riskier projects. Those are the ones really that in the end put us on the map. That development of our stories, that arts development is what is most critical and has few champions, but we're losing that. We're losing new play development, we're losing multimedia, we're losing literary opportunities, and that's really the crime here. When we look back on what we're so proud of from the development of the ministry of culture under the hon. minister at the time, that's what was really extraordinary, and both the minister and I were working in the sector at that time, and we know what it was like.

So I'm going to go through some of the points that have been raised to me in the letters and e-mails that I received. Here's one: "It will mean hiring less artists, and doing less in the way of presenting, programs." This group received 20 percent less in their AFA festival grant, and the cost of providing the same service to the community (renting tents, paying service bills, etc.) is costing between 12% and 15% more for the same stuff. It's so demoralizing, trying to put on a great event that the community wants/needs and having inadequate money to do it. Sponsorship dollars are also becoming more scarce as every not-for-profit is going to the same well!

She sent me an article from Canadian Culture magazine about how other provinces are investing in festivals and reaping enormous impact from it. Quebec did a study in which they showed that they were realizing $35-$40 [million] in provincial tax revenues, 83 per cent increased revenues between 1993-1998 and increased tourist attendance . . . [and particularly] noted that proper funding of program activities is key to the development and renewal of major events.

Amazing things happening in Ontario as well, again with the study identifying all kinds of things. Ontario spends $1.6 million, the same amount that's going to arts in Alberta, to assist "in marketing selected tourism festivals and events to strengthen the brand image." I mean, wow. That doesn't make us look very good, stacking up against that. That's what they spent to promote this stuff. We're spending that amount of money for every arts and cultural group in the province. Also some interesting stuff out of Nova Scotia, and I'll send this across to the minister so he can have a look at it.

There's been a real issue around PASOs, provincial arts service organizations. I'm sure the minister has heard me speak in this Assembly many times about that. This was the downloading of programs from the government onto the sector. They accepted those programs because they didn't want to see them lost. Then we ended up with the designation of these PASOs. But I noted before and I'll note again that what they got was the exact line item to run the program. They didn't get administrative dollars. Increasingly these organizations are coming back and saying: we can't afford to do this PASO stuff; it's sucking away our main reason for being here. There's pressure on them from the AFA and from the department to do more with less, and it's costing them to do this. I think there's a real problem there.

Based on what I've seen, I think the minister may well be looking to the point where some organizations just go: "Forget it. We don't want to do this anymore. Back to you." Then we're either going to lose the programs, or they're going to end up back in the minister's lap, so it's worth his while to be giving some more support here.

The Arts Touring Alliance of Alberta got their grant cut by 6.3 percent and with no warning. At this time PASOs are being told to get out there and provide service and connect with the rural community. Well, for that one, you know, they're having to cut the very stuff that accomplishes that connection. The other issue is that PASOs are denied charitable status and casinos, so while they're supposed to be funding all of this stuff from somewhere, they're not being able to get access to casinos for some definition. Perhaps the minister can have a discussion with his colleague from Gaming and with his federal colleague at Revenue Canada about that one.

Here's another one. The Alberta Craft Council has sent me a very long e-mail detailing all kinds of cuts that they've had and things that they can't do because of the one-grant rule. I admit that to some the previous way of doing things where an organization would get an operating grant and they'd apply for special project grants or perhaps for a touring series or a community series might have seemed like double-dipping, but the truth is that those extra grants came into being to supplement that operating grant. That's why they were all there. To turn around now and say, "Okay; only one grant," is resulting in significant cuts to these organizations. They're cut back on their operating, and they've now lost access to all of these other grants that were supplementing them by $6,000 or $10,000 or $12,000 and sometimes more than that.

So the Alberta Craft Council notes that they lost a $10,000 grant for traveling exhibitions. The entire $25,000 for Series, the adult summer school in Red Deer, is going to be cut over the next two years. The council itself has lost $5,000. They note that their PASO activity accounts for about half of their work, yet really they're only being funded at about 26 percent. So they're in essence subsidizing this stuff by another 24 percent. Really the Alberta Craft Council is the fourth or fifth largest in Canada and in some cases exceeds others for the number of exhibitions that they've got – there are over 20 – and do much of the public work.

They note that they're one of the few craft councils in Canada that are paying commercial lease rates when others are in heritage buildings or get much more of a subsidy. The one in B.C. at Granville Island is paying $350 a month. They're paying $3,000. Saskatchewan Craft Council receives nearly five times what the Alberta one does. In Alberta there's no money in Tourism, Economic Development, Learning, et cetera, available for arts projects; we're having to fund it all.

Now, he also comes through and says: "Look; the AFA is what we wanted. It's doing a good job. The staff are certainly motivated. The big problem here is money." This sector has been choked off for a long, long time, and I expected this minister to do better. We'll see what happens in next year's budget, but I am sorely disappointed by his lack of support for this area in this budget. Certainly, you know, we've got everything there: the infrastructure, the AFA, the policies. They're just being choked off by money.

When I look at things like the media arts council, they're cut significantly. I think they were cut the most, 18 percent for the media arts council. This is the area that's expanding the most, and they were hoping to be able to hire a staff person and open an office. They can't do that. They're servicing over 900 Alberta media artists. Nothing is going to happen for them there.

The Banff Centre. I mean, what a gem, and that's been consistently reduced in funding and support from this government, the emphasis all going to the business faculty and the business side of it. This is where it all started, and we had an international reputation both for our artists going out and other artists coming in here. Certainly it has all of my support. It's a great resource not only to Alberta but to all of Canada. It's just quietly withering away there with, I think, a deliberate plan from this government to make it wither away. I would look to restoring this to the dynamism that it used to have.

I heard from things like the Heritage Festival and Afrikadey, both of them pointing out what popular festivals they are, how many people like to come, what it does for promotion of multiculturalism and understanding and tolerance. They're being cut. You know, Afrikadey is saying: we may not be able to keep going. [interjections] Oh, I'd be very disappointed to hear these members heckling on that one. Please, do you really want it out there in the community that you're not supporting festivals like this, especially ones promoting racial tolerance?

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the people were not heckling you. I think they were just groaning that unfortunately the time is up.

We'd call on the hon. Minister of Community Development to make his concluding remarks.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I took copious notes, and I'm sure my staff did. I stopped counting after about the 100th question, so I will provide written responses. I know how large the department is, believe me, and I applaud the opposition members for trying to get through it, as I did earlier. We will work through those questions, and I will undertake to provide the responses.

I do just want to conclude with a couple of comments, though, in a broad general sense that I didn't get in under the first few minutes, and that is to just re-emphasize that we do recognize the economic impact and the importance of nurturing our Alberta talent in the area of Alberta film development, which is why we extended that program for another two years beyond this current year to the tune of $5 million per year.

Sport is also an important aspect. Therefore, an amount of $400,000 has been allocated in 2001-02 to honour Alberta's commitment to the 2004 Arctic Winter Games. We also committed $40 million from lottery funding to host the 2001 World Championships in Athletics in Edmonton. This funding and support for other games will help us achieve our corporate initiative that is listed on page 92, which includes references that some of the members made to the Alberta Games, the Alberta Seniors Games, Western Canada Summer Games, Canada Games, Arctic Winter Games, the 2005 Goodwill Games, and of course the 2001 World Championships in Athletics. Support for these events is very critical in our overall support development plan.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that my ministry has many entities that report to it, and of course the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation is one of them. It receives about $15 million in lottery funding, and it goes a long way to help out in that area. The Alberta Historical Resources Foundation receives about $6.6 million, and that goes a long way to helping out in that area. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts, which received $16.1 million in lottery funding, also is responsible for the Alberta film development program.

M. le Président, il me donne beaucoup de plaisir aussi d'annoncer que j'ai la responsabilité pour le Secrétariat Francophone. Je suis très fier de ça parce que ce secrétariat veut consulter les Franco-Albertains et les Franco-Albertaines pour développer, à partir des besoins exprimés, un plan d'action qui servira de base pour la négociation d'une entente fédérale et provinciale pour appuyer le développement de la communauté Francophone. C'est très important pour beaucoup de nos Albertains.

In any case, we also have to remember that it's the International Year of Volunteers, an occasion to celebrate our province's real heroes, and the Wild Rose Foundation will be allocating all of its $6.6 million in lottery funding to help community service organizations, beginning with the first round of grants that has now gone out. I would just give an additional reminder to people who do read Hansard that the Wild Rose Foundation is undertaking the very important Vitalize conference coming up on June 7, 8 and 9 in Edmonton. It's a wonderful opportunity for our community volunteers to come out and receive some additional training, learn something about what other communities are doing, and share in a marvelous experience.

Mr. Chairman, I'll just close by saying that this ministry can and does make a very significant contribution to the quality of life in this province. [some applause] I appreciate the applause. I'll have to say that all again now. Unanimous consent to extend my time, please?

HON. MEMBERS: No. No.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I want to say that Community Development impacts the quality of life of every single Albertan in this Chamber and outside this Chamber. It's our job to ensure that with this ministry, which has a fine tradition under previous ministers to demonstrate flexibility in meeting and serving the needs of Albertans, that fine tradition is continued. I'm confident that these high levels of service and performance will continue.

I will undertake to provide the written comments to the members who've asked for them. I'm grateful for their input. I know they care deeply about this department, as do I.

I want to again thank my staff who are here tonight and those who are out in the field for their tremendous support.

We look forward to great things in this wonderful year when we're balancing economic and fiscal and quality-of-life issues in the Future Summit, and I'm happy to play a leadership role in that regard.

Thank you all.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Community Development, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$591,160,000
--	---------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's been a very productive evening, and as I mentioned, I've got at least 100 questions to respond to. I want to get at them right away, so I would move that we adjourn for the evening and reconvene tomorrow. Oh, I'm sorry. We're rising and reporting first. I'm so anxious to get to the questions to answer them.

I would move that we rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following to be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following departments.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: operating expense and capital investment, $610,031,000.

Community Development: operating expense and capital investment, $591,160,000.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur with this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1 Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: We have for our deliberations right now amendment A2 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of her colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Do you have any further comments or questions with respect to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. In light of the hour I'll be very brief. Whenever you see something you don't agree with, the best thing to do is to work hard and try to improve it. This is certainly the purpose of amendment A2, to deal with auditing.

Now, when we look at the Natural Gas Price Protection Act as it exists, there is the capacity here, Mr. Chairman, for billions and billions of dollars to be disbursed. I'm not against consumer protection from rising natural gas prices, but I'm certainly against this bill. The amendment would provide an auditing feature, and I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to accept this amendment because there has to be an auditing feature to ensure that if it's billions of dollars that are going to be spent, that money is going where it is directed and where it is proposed.

That is why I took the time and decided that an auditing feature incorporated into this legislation would be a sound idea. I'm confident at this time that hon. members of the Assembly will accept this amendment. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Myself and the research staff have had another look at this bill and have detected another flaw. It's simply a slogan bill, and I can hear the hon. member's sloganeering. That is a simple description of this bill. It's quickly taken from the Calgary Herald editorial pages from 1974. If we're going to be recognizing the strong majority the government has, we're going to have to again try to improve this.

I see in here in section 3 that there is talk of rebates to vendors. Section 3 currently reads, "A rebate under this Act may be made directly to eligible consumers or to a vendor."

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister is having difficulty with his desk? Hopefully it is now rectified and won't need fixing again. Sorry for the interruption.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: That's fine, Mr. Chairman.

There's no definition of a vendor in this bill. When you consider that "a rebate under this Act may be made directly to eligible consumers or to a vendor for the benefit of eligible consumers" and in particular that this could turn into a bill that subsidizes generation of electric power from natural gas as a fuel or a feedstock, I think it is very important that there be a specific definition of vendor in this bill.

I'm proposing an amendment, and at this time I would like to present the amendments to the chair. Perhaps they could be distributed, please.

THE CHAIRMAN: I wonder if the page could pick up the amendments. Thank you.

MR. MacDONALD: May I continue, Mr. Chairman, or shall I wait? [interjections]

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, we are just pausing for the moment. It's not an invitation for disorder.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to explain amendment A3.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, I think it is very important that there be a specific definition of a vendor. This bill in its present form again could get totally out of hand. In previous legislation which deals with this issue and unfortunately is going to be repealed, the Natural Gas Rebates Act – the existing rebates act has a specific definition of a vendor. Why when we see the fact, for instance, that location-based credits are being initiated to have natural gas fired generating stations located in different areas of the province where there are transmission constraints in our electric system – again, this rebates act could get totally out of hand without a definition of vendor. We're talking here about rebates to vendors, and what harm – what harm – would there be to having a specific definition of exactly what a vendor is going to be? This indicates to me that this bill was drafted in haste. It is simply again a slogan bill, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I'm not going to go at this time into the details of this, but in order that there will be no huge subsidies and this will not be used as a vehicle to subsidize electrical power generation by natural gas generators, we need to be careful about this. That is why we need this definition, and I think this definition is suitable, and it will meet that purpose, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

MR. MacDONALD: I am very disappointed, but at this time, Mr. Chairman, I can only say, in summing up my remarks in committee, that this legislation is simply a bill that could possibly cause financial turmoil down the road for Albertans. There is existing legislation in place. We all heard the arguments that we had to get out from underneath the dome and not burden Albertans with excessive legislation, and this is excessive legislation. This is a repeat, because the bill is already in place that will provide rebates. The rebates in the existing legislation also can be provided by . . . [interjection]

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. Minister of Environment, thank you. If you wish to be on the speaking list, stand up and speak when it's your turn. Right now it's Edmonton-Gold Bar's.

MR. MacDONALD: I would remind all hon. members of the Assembly that this bill is before the Legislative Assembly. It's not before the courts. I would encourage all hon. members, if they have something to say about it, to please stand up, because I would be eager to listen to their comments.

This bill in this form is simply a slogan bill. It is not necessary. That is all at the moment that I have to say. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 17, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature two delegations in your gallery today. First a delegation of three members from West Africa, who are here to learn about Alberta, including our justice system. They are members of a Rotary professional exchange. The delegation is led by Ali Badara Tall, a justice of the first level court in the capital of Burkina Faso. He's joined by Adama Soro, lead partner in an Ivory Coast law firm, and Fatouma Kone, a legal adviser to the government in Mali. They are accompanied by Chris Gowers, president of the Riverview Rotary Club in Edmonton and a member of our civil claims mediation team – I should say essentially a volunteer member, because members of that mediation team get paid an honorarium for the mediation they do – and of note, of course, also a member of the new Super 8 on Calgary Trail. These guests are seated in your gallery. They're here and they've visited our courthouse and they've looked at some of our judicial dispute resolution sessions. I've met with them and talked generally about the benefits of arbitration and mediation. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some special visitors from France. Paul Guiguen is the mayor of a town of 1,900 people, the mayor of Plessala in the province of Brittany. Like our Premier he's serving his third term. Paul Guiguen is here, of course, because his daughter Aurelie Guiguen is a grade 12 student visiting Edmonton and will have three more months with us as another Rotary International exchange student. She has been here providing volunteer services, working in our community, and will be here to work on the world games. She participated in the Success by Six golf tournament, which I hosted last fall. She's done other volunteer activities with the Rotary club that is sponsoring her, and she has devoted lots of energy to working as a volunteer with Grey Nuns and in many other ways. Her family from France is fortunate to be able to come and visit her while she's here: her father, Paul Guiguen, her mother, Gisele, and her sister, Catherine. All of them of course are accompanied by Dave Dorcas, a member of the Gateway Rotary Club in south Edmonton, which is sponsoring her visit. I'd like them all to rise while we wish them bienvenue and bonjour.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some very special guests seated in your gallery today.

From Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency we have Louise Knox, founder of the Lakeland chapter of Mothers Against Drinking Drivers, who, I would say, was recently elected national president of MADD Canada. She is accompanied by her husband, Ed Knox, who will take over her responsibility as president of Lakeland chapter of MADD. Mr. and Mrs. Knox's introduction to Mothers Against Drinking Drivers came about after the tragic loss of their 16-year-old son, Mike Knox, to a drunk driver on October 2, 1999. It is our sincere hope that no other families experience the loss of a loved one to a drunk driver. Accompanying them today from MADD Canada are Andrew Murie, national director from Mississauga, and Chris George, national director of communications and public policy from Ottawa. The ribbon that the Assembly has before them is in recognition of today's ceremony that took place in the rotunda, which was the joining of the Edmonton PAID chapter and MADD. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition, which was originally presented to the Minister of Seniors and MLA for Stony Plain, on behalf of the Youth Coalition against Poverty, which was signed by approximately 2,650 residents of Edmonton and the surrounding area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of my responses to questions raised during the Committee of Supply estimates for Sustainable Resource Development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a response to a question posed by the hon. interim Leader of the Official Opposition on May 9, 2001. The second is a response to questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on May 9, 2001.

MR. DANYLUK: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of a letter from the Aspen View board of trustees regarding Bill 16.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have two tablings today. They're both from school boards in my riding. There are five copies each of some letters regarding the School Amendment Act, Bill 16. These letters outline the things that they support in the act and some of the things they'd like to see changed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have one tabling today. It's five copies of a letter from the board of trustees of the Peace River school division. The school board has concerns regarding some of the sections of the School Amendment Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the required five copies of a letter from Chinook's Edge school division that I'd like to table at this time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to make two tablings today. The first is an Alberta Environment memorandum from the deputy minister to the minister dated January 12, 1987, and the subject is used lubricating oil. It says: "find an analysis of the used lubricating oil problem in Alberta."

The second is the required number of copies from Hub Oil Company. This is a response to an emission control order "as requested by the Emission Control Order issued on May 25, 1988."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I would like to table for the Assembly an incident summary put together by Alberta environmental protection, environmental management system. It is dated July 22, 1998.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table three different letters in the House. The first two deal with the Spray Lakes sawmill forest management agreement issue. The first one is from Hal Retzer of Calgary, opposing that agreement. The second one is from Mr. Bob Hinman of Turner Valley, also calling on the Premier to turn down the Spray Lakes sawmill proposed agreement.

The third letter, Mr. Speaker, is a letter written exactly four months ago today by the Premier to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General asking him to undertake a legal review of the eligibility criteria for MLAs seeking support from the Alberta risk management fund.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. I'm tabling a letter which is addressed to me with attachments of letters sent to the Premier and to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment from Mr. Lance Lamond, a board member of Poverty in Action. The letter highlights the plight of the poor in Edmonton and urges the Alberta government to increase the SFI benefit rates by 11 percent.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe my guests are in until 2:45 today, so if I could defer that to later.

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to rise in the House today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a wonderful lady from the Innisfail-Sylvan Lake constituency. She has worked for this Assembly for the past four years as an assistant to your former colleague Mr. Gary Severtson and now continues her hard work as my constituency assistant, and she does a super job. She is accompanied today by her husband, who is a horticultural colleague and friend of the hon. Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. He also has a radio show on 95.5 FM called Gardening with Pete. I would ask Jan and Pete Wasylyshyn to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's not often that I have guests from my constituency, so it's a real privilege for me today to be able to introduce to you and through you two members from my constituency. They're from Crossfield: Mr. Iver Storseth and Ms Joanne Penner. They just happen to be the family of a young man working in your office, Brian Storseth, who is your summer temporary employment program student. I know that he's in good hands in your office and he comes from a good area. It's a real honour to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Agricultural Waste

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In southern Alberta a livestock truck wash has been overflowing its lagoon this winter. Under a special permit it has been surface spreading the water on agricultural land. This week the sledge from the bottom of the lagoon was spread on a reclaimed gravel pit on the floodplain of the Oldman River. This operation is zoned commercial but handles agriculture waste. I raise this in the open, recognizing that this operation is only a few miles from my farm, but I raise it on behalf of the public and on behalf of the immediate neighbours who have been calling me. My first question is to the minister of agriculture. Is it true that because this is zoned commercial and handles an agriculture waste your department is not responsible for the actions?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'll try and clarify as best I can the areas of responsibility. First, the truck wash was permitted by the county of Lethbridge. I should make that point. Secondly, I will say that the county used recommendations from Alberta Agriculture regarding manure nutrient utilization in its permit. So I should say that. Thirdly, the other departments that would be involved in this, of course, are Alberta Environment and Alberta Health through public health. So they also have a role in determining the safety of handling wastes. Primarily, Alberta Agriculture is used on the technical advice portion of these types of permits, or in fact if there is a call of a possible infraction or a concern, they would be called, again by either the county or Alberta Environment or public health, to offer that type of technical advice as to how to handle the complaint. That is what has occurred in this case.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Environment. Is it true that because this is a livestock waste handling operation, even though it's zoned commercial, your department is not responsible?

DR. TAYLOR: At the present time, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment does not have legislation regarding agricultural truck washes, as this one particularly is, but we are working with the county and I believe it's the Chinook health region down there. In the particular case in question, the gentleman or the business has been given until June 30 of this year to develop adequate ponds or adequate lagoons – that would be the right word – to handle his wastewater. These lagoons have to be in place by June 30, and that will be enforced by both the county and the regional health authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. My next question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, who should the neighbours and the southern Alberta environment group that has taken this up appeal to for help in determining the appropriate actions on this case?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suspect there are a number of areas and jurisdictions where the residents can appeal. Obviously, there are a number of departments involved. As the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development pointed out, this is a matter that involves the county, involves Environment, involves Health, involves Agriculture. So I'm not saying that I'm the appeal body, but if the residents want to send a letter or if the hon. member wants to communicate on behalf of the residents with my office, I'd be more than happy to undertake a process to co-ordinate the efforts to address this particular issue.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Continuing on this issue, Mr. Premier, who should have controlled this week's spreading of the sludge from the bottom of those lagoons on the Oldman River floodplain?

MR. KLEIN: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development pointed out, there are three government jurisdictions involved in this particular matter, and of course there is the county. I sense from the hon. minister's answer to the first question that Agriculture seems to be the lead agency on this, so I'll have her respond.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the county would probably be the first response. Alberta Environment would be involved in this, as would the health unit or the public health portion of the Chinook health region. Again, I do know that in this instance Alberta Agriculture was requested to be a part of this to give technical advice on the use of manure nutrient. I believe that this is being done as part of a reclamation project, so the Minister of Environment may want to expand on that area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're getting conflicting information from this. Is the code of practice law in these cases? Alberta Environment says no, yet fish and wildlife, in the same department, say yes, and Alberta Agriculture says: if it's in the bylaws for the county. How do we get a consistent set of guidelines to control livestock waste?

MR. KLEIN: Well, it's an interesting question, and if there appears to be or if there is in fact a lack of co-ordination, I would like the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition to bring this to my attention in perhaps a more formal way, in a written form, so that we can get to the bottom of the problem and correct whatever deficiencies may be identified.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of agriculture: is the Klapstein report covering this issue where there seems to be a hole between Agriculture and Environment, commercial zoning, agriculture zoning, livestock wastes, other pollutant wastes? There's a real hole here, and this operation seems to be fitting right into it nicely.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of the Klapstein report, as it's known, or the report on intensive livestock operations, will contain some rather broad-based recommendations in this whole area. However, there are issues around zoning, and that's why this consultation in this report was necessary. Whether it's a commercial zoning for an agricultural industry or whether it's on a farm, I think all members in this Assembly recognize that the environmental side of this or the health side of it is incredibly important. I think the hon. member has identified an area, and I sense from the Premier that there are three ministries that had better be sitting down and ensuring that there is an avenue and a venue for these matters to be dealt with expeditiously.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Calgary Regional Health Authority

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A long-standing member of the CRHA board served on the CRHA's finance committee at the same time that a company in which he was a director and shareholder reneged on a $650,000 loan from Alberta Treasury Branches. This individual still sits on the CRHA board. To the minister of health: can the minister of health explain how someone who was a director of a company that reneged on a $650,000 government-backed loan is an appropriate candidate for an RHA board?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that the immunity from civil litigation arising from slander or libel which is conferred upon members of this Assembly and comments that they make here ought not to provide a basis for attacking individuals who are not here themselves to respond to such allegations.

Mr. Speaker, there are good people who serve on our regional health authorities. They do have conflict of interest bylaws, which are extremely strong. They are the same bylaws that form the basis of that which applies to Members of the Legislative Assembly who sit in this House. Our Health Care Protection Act ensures that there's full ownership disclosure that members may have with respect to private facilities. Contracts are reviewed through a very lengthy and complete process. We do scrutinize the individuals that are appointed to regional health authorities.

I need not remind the hon. member that we are going to two-thirds elected members on our authorities this fall. I expect that not only will good people continue to be appointed, but good people will also come forward to be elected.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions were on the policy with which government appoints RHA members.

Can the minister explain how the government's policy on appointments to RHAs would allow a person to lead an RHA's finance committee at the same time his company is defaulting on a $650,000 government-backed loan?

MR. MAR: Well, I can say this categorically, Mr. Speaker: our policy is certainly not to besmirch the good reputation of individuals.

DR. TAFT: Is the fact that this same individual has family connections to three for-profit nursing homes that contract with the CRHA of any concern to the minister?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, as I raised this the other day in this Assembly, this is a well-worn path that leads exactly to nowhere. All of these contracts are scrupulously examined, and I stand by the good work that is done by the regional health authority and its members.

Mr. Speaker, it is not for me here today to make any kind of response to the kinds of allegations that are being made here. If the individual has such an allegation to make outside of this Assembly about an individual, as the Premier said, he should do so and stand by the consequences.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Risk Management Fund Review

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Exactly four months ago today the Premier asked the Minister of Justice to undertake a legal review of the eligibility criteria for MLAs seeking support from the risk management fund. The Premier took this action, clearly before the election, in the context of the $800,000 legal bill racked up by Stockwell Day, which the Premier himself described as obscene. My question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, did the review ever take place, and if so, what are the results?

MR. KLEIN: I will have the hon. Justice minister and Attorney General supplement my answer. Indeed I asked the hon. minister to undertake a review of the risk management fund and how that fund is administered. Mr. Speaker, I think I also sent a memo to yourself relative to the duties and the functions of Members' Services to adjudicate these particular matters. I must remind the Legislature that Members' Services is a committee of all members of the House, including members of the opposition.

I would like to see this matter resolved, Mr. Speaker, indeed. I talked about the $800,000 cost associated with this particular action, including the judgment and the fees that were charged by the lawyers in particular as being obscene. In my mind they are too, and I think the hon. leader of the third party agrees with me on that particular point.

Relative to the question, I will have the hon. minister respond.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we have of course started and conducted some internal reviews with respect to the conduct of the risk management fund and how it's handled, but in the intervening period an application was brought before the court by the former Speaker of the House. We're awaiting a decision on that application, and we took a considered viewpoint that we should wait for that decision before we conclude the review on the chance that something coming out with respect to that decision might be appropriate to be considered as part of the review and also on the basis that as we go outside the department for advice on issues relative to insurance and insurance coverage, those sorts of issues, it would be prudent to do so after the decision comes down from the court, which we expect anytime.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is looking for agreement where it doesn't exist. I don't agree with his assessment of the obscenity of the charges.

But let me ask the question now. Would the Premier or the Minister of Justice give some reasons for the prudence that they're using to delay conducting this review?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if I heard the hon. member correctly, he said that he doesn't agree with the obscenity of the target. Well, the obscenity of the target was a judgment of I believe $60,000 compared to a combined bill for both the plaintiff and the defence of $800,000 less $60,000, $740,000. If he doesn't see anything obscene in that, then his sense of money value is a lot different than mine.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, my final question. If the Premier really wants me to make a judgment on whether or not that bill is obscene, I think he owes it to this Assembly to release that bill so that we could all look at it and then make a decision whether we agree with it or not. Just $800,000 in itself is neither obscene nor not obscene.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what there is to release that hasn't already been made public. As a matter of fact, I think the lawyers for both sides released the costs associated with this particular action, both the plaintiff costs and the costs associated with the action on the part of the defence to defend the particular lawsuit.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Home Schooling

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Home schooling has become a popular choice of learning in the last decade. During the election campaign I had several of my constituents ask questions on funding. My question is to the Minister of Learning. What is the increase in funding in home schooling in Budget 2001?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, the amount of money that was before Budget 2001 was $1,051. This has increased to $1,088, which is an increase of 3 and a half percent, the same as the school boards received.

The other component of this which is extremely important, as well, is that a parent is eligible to apply for up to 50 percent for curriculum courses and curriculum books if they show receipts to the school board. So the parent can be reimbursed directly for their expenses on the home schooling side.

MR. BRODA: My first supplemental to the same minister: do home schools receive funding for computers or other educational technology?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, no, they do not. However, I would add a proviso here, and that is that if 50 percent of their course is taken through a distance learning centre, through a school board, they could possibly be eligible for things such as computers, Internet access, all of this, through the school board.

To the hon. member, I would encourage your home schoolers to take a very close look at some of the virtual schools that we have, because I really feel that that would accomplish a lot of what the home schoolers are attempting to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again. He briefly touched on the Internet. I was just wondering: with the Supernet, the high-speed Internet, that's going to be coming throughout the province, will the individuals that do home schooling have access to line charges to be paid by Alberta Learning?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the very quick answer to that is no. Obviously, what is involved with Supernet is that we will be connecting Supernet to schools, hospitals, and libraries as well as, potentially, municipal buildings. If the home schooler wants to access Supernet, I'm sure what they can do is go to the school libraries and utilize it there or the libraries within their communities. That's probably the best way, but we are not going to get into the business of paying line charges for every house to be hooked up to the Supernet.

Oil and Gas Reserves

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, yesterday Alberta's Energy minister made a trip to Washington, D.C., to talk about Alberta's energy sector. At the same time, the U.S. is planning to unveil its continental energy plan today in Washington. My questions are to the Premier. Has the government examined the effect that increased demand would have on oil and gas reserves in Alberta over the next 20 years?

MR. KLEIN: Have we done an examination? I don't know, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the Department of Energy keeps current on these particular matters along with the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. I don't know if the hon. member is talking about the pressure on oil and gas or the pressure down the road on a by-product of gas in particular, and that's electricity. Perhaps she can clarify that particular remark.

We're there, Mr. Speaker, because we understand that the continental energy policy involves pricing for a commodity or commodities, ostensibly oil and gas. The reasons our minister is there – and they're valid reasons – are to participate with CAPP in a series of seminars to outline Alberta's position relative to investment in the oil and gas industry and also to familiarize, I guess, those in the United States who might be interested about the rules and regulations and especially the constitutional authority of the province as it relates to the ownership of those resources.

Mr. Speaker, we've often said that as the Prime Minister and the President talk about a continental energy policy, they're talking about commodities or they're talking about setting a price for a commodity that in the case of Canada the country doesn't own. The province of Alberta owns the majority of those commodities, and we want to make sure they're protected.

MS CARLSON: Then perhaps the Premier can answer this question. Will the Premier commit to examine the longevity and sustainability of Alberta's oil and natural gas reserves before entering into any continental energy plan with the United States and making that available to Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, it's not up to the province to enter into a continental energy plan. It's a responsibility of the province to protect as vigorously as we possibly can our constitutional authority over the ownership of natural resources, including oil and gas. We're talking about a significant resource – a significant resource – some 300 billion barrels of oil sands product alone today, and that's outside of conventional oil and gas, 200 trillion cubic feet of proven reserves and 260 trillion cubic feet of proven reserves for gas, Mr. Speaker. That is very substantial indeed, and we want to make sure that we protect it, because it is our resource.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier answer this? How can he be certain that an increase in resource sales to the States won't mean increased costs for Albertans in the long run? Large volumes, you're talking about, but not a large number of years of sustainability for this province.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is the ability to export natural gas right now. As I understand it, we're providing the United States with something in the neighbourhood of I've heard as high as 19 percent and as low as 12 percent of their total energy needs relative to natural gas and natural gas in turn generating electricity. That is huge. But while those exports take place, there are rules and regulations in place to ensure that the needs of Albertans and the needs of Canadians are met. You simply can't take and suck all the gas and the oil out of this province and send it south or anywhere else. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, I heard this absurd comment from across the way that that is what is happening. I'm wondering today how this hon. member is heating her home or running her automobile. She's doing it through the resources, and the resources of this province are providing that. So obviously it's absurd to say that it's all going to the United States and it's all being exported. It's not. We will make sure that Albertans are protected and that Canadians are protected, but we'll make sure that we have the opportunity to earn a reasonable amount off our resource and at the same time ensure that there's an adequate supply of energy for the nation and for the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Board Trustees

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The job of school trustee requires a great deal of skill, hard work, long hours, and dedication, and they also often have to endure a great deal of public criticism. There are concerns being expressed that we will have difficulty in continuing to attract highly qualified candidates to take on this important role in future particularly because of very low salaries. A few weeks ago a Calgary school board trustee resigned her position with only a few months to go until the next election, and I understand an Edmonton trustee also recently resigned. My questions are to the hon. Minister of Learning. What kinds of remuneration are made available for the position of school board trustee?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will say at the outset is that the majority of the school trustees are very dedicated people and are people that definitely are not there purely because of the salary, purely because of the remuneration. They're there for what they can do for kids and are very active in the school system. In general, across the province what we have is a wide range. Probably on the low side it's around $3,000, and on the high side it's around $25,000. For the hon. member's information the average salary that was paid in Calgary, which is where the hon. member is from, was around $11,700.

MR. LORD: To the same minister: are there any specific actions being taken by your department to attract and retain school board trustees who have the necessary experience and qualifications required to excel at the job?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you. First of all, the elections are coming up in the third week of October, and I would encourage everyone in this Assembly and everyone who is listening to think very seriously about running for a school trustee position. It's a very rewarding task, and indeed it was something that I performed before coming into the Legislative Assembly.

In direct answer to the hon. member's question, the Alberta School Boards Association is undertaking a very intensive communication campaign right now to educate the public about what a school trustee does and the rewards of the job in the hope of getting a whole group of candidates to run for the upcoming election, because reasonably, hon. member, it is democracy that will determine who our next school boards will be, and the more that we get to run the better.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you. My final question: since voter turnout historically has been very low for school board elections, are there any actions under way to increase voter interest and awareness and encourage more people to get involved and come out and vote in the elections?

DR. OBERG: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I've stated in the previous two answers, a school trustee position is an extremely important position. It affects the lives of each and every one of our children, and it's something that we cannot take for granted.

Prior to the election in the third week of October, we will be putting out a very generic advertising campaign to say: please run; make sure you get out and vote. Historically, as you stated, the turnout for these elections is extremely low, and we would like to see that changed. I think it is very important for people to get out and vote, very important for them to exercise their democratic right and vote for the school trustee that they believe will do the best job for their particular circumstance.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Gasoline Prices

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year at this time the price of oil was $29.33 per barrel and the price for gasoline was around 65 cents per litre. This year the price of oil has dropped to $28.86 per barrel, yet gas prices have risen, in some cases above 75 cents. My first question this afternoon is to the Premier. Will the Premier commit to striking an all-party committee to immediately study gasoline retail pump prices in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't mean to sound facetious, but by the time we strike the committee, get it up and running, it's very likely the price of gas will be down to about 65 cents. You know, these things are cyclical, comparatively speaking, and related to the earning power.

I can recall back in the '70s when the price of gasoline at the pumps went through the roof. As a matter of fact, there was an extreme shortage, and there were pictures on television of miles and miles of cars lined up to get gasoline because basically someone started the rumour that we were going to run out of gasoline and there was going to be a tremendous shortage. The price went up. There was indeed a shortage at that particular time. It had nothing to do with the oil in the ground. It had something to do with world politics and the supply of oil particularly from the Middle East.

Nonetheless, there are a number of factors that reflect the price of gasoline at the pumps, and relative to the specifics – oh, I don't have the hon. minister here.

I was going to have the hon. former minister reply, but she can't. So I will take the matter under advisement. I will.

MRS. McCLELLAN: The Finance minister could.

MR. KLEIN: Well, I could have the hon. Minister of Finance reply because it does relate to money.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we're going to move on to the next supplementary here. The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I said: immediately strike a committee.

How can the Premier stand in this Assembly and tell us that gas prices are based on oil prices when clearly today we have higher prices for gasoline and lower prices for oil?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. Minister of Energy answered this question – I believe it was on Monday – in response to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I believe. He explained that there are a number of factors that lead to the pricing of gasoline. One of those factors, I think I heard him say, was how much they bought the product for some months previously; in other words, how much hedging was going on, and how much did they pay for future oil that was, in turn, turned into gasoline? That may be one of the factors.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the Premier. Yesterday at the Petro-Canada at 90th Avenue and Ottewell the price of gasoline per litre was 70 cents. Today at the Esso at 99th Street and 82nd Avenue the price is 75 cents a litre. In Calgary at Centex Gas on Elbow Drive and 95th Avenue the price of gas is 72.9 cents a litre. It goes even higher in other neighbourhoods in Calgary. This is an issue that is very, very important.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please. We've all agreed that there would be no preambles. What is the question?

MR. MacDONALD: Will the Premier, please, for the sake of consumers in this province strike a committee of members from different parties in this Assembly to study the retail price of gasoline in this province? Immediately strike a committee.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we can strike all the committees we want. But what can be done other than to get into the marketplace? And I don't think we want to do that. I know we don't want to do that, and I'm sure the Liberals don't want to do that.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Oh, yes, they do.

MR. KLEIN: Well, perhaps they do.

Mr. Speaker, there is an agency that looks into prices for all commodities called the Competition Bureau of Canada. It's a federal agency. Whether it's gasoline or bread or anything else that is a consumer product, if it's deemed there is unfair competition, the bureau of course has the authority to look into these matters.

So, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, as I said at the beginning, by the time we strike a committee, by the time we get into a process – and I don't know what the end of the process is going to be, because I don't know what authority this Legislative Assembly or an all-party committee would have; probably none whatsoever – by that time the price of gas could very well be down in the mid-60s, where it was a couple of weeks ago.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Opticians' Scope of Practice

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Concerns have been raised in my constituency that optician associations in several provinces have initiated discussions regarding legislative amendments which would allow opticians to prescribe eyewear. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Have similar discussions occurred in Alberta?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this is an issue in the eye care community. In this province the professional association, the Alberta Opticians Association, has proposed that opticians be authorized to perform simple sight testing. This is something that would be properly discussed with respect to the regulations that are being developed under the Health Professions Act.

MR. JOHNSON: My second question is to the same minister. Is it likely that when regulations are developed under the Health Professions Act, the scope of practice for opticians will be expanded in any way?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can't speculate on exactly which regulations will be developed under the Health Professions Act. I can say, however, that this is an appropriate avenue to review the proposal by the Opticians Association. All affected stakeholders, including the opticians, would have several opportunities to give input into the development of the regulations under the HPA.

There is a Health Professions Advisory Board under that particular act, that is composed of members of the public as well as health professionals. This board will provide advice to me with respect to matters under the act, and it would be my intention to ask this board for its recommendations regarding the scope of practice for opticians.

MR. JOHNSON: I have no further questions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Hub Oil Company Ltd.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the terms of approval from Alberta environmental protection due to expire on February 1, 2006, there is a requirement for the plant operation of Hub Oil Company to carry out groundwater monitoring on a semi-annual frequency and submit an annual report. To the Minister of Environment: given that crucial information such as the amount if any of PCBs, arsenic, cadmium, and lead would appear in this report, will the minister provide to the Assembly the reports from 1999 and 2000?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have an appropriate process to go through. It's the FOIP process, the freedom of information and protection of privacy, and certainly the member has access to that process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Transportation, then, please. Given that Hub Oil Company has sold blended fuel oil to asphalt companies in this province for years, has the Department of Transportation analyzed the level of PCBs, arsenic, cadmium, and lead shipped from Hub Oil to the province's asphalt plants to ensure that the levels of these toxic substances are below maximum allowable levels?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I don't know specifically of any products shipped from Hub Oil to any paving project in this province. However, I can assure the hon. member that we don't allow any kind of material to be incorporated in asphalt unless it meets the very strict guidelines and regulations that are monitored by the Minister of Environment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: what are the bases on which groundwater monitoring reports are reviewed by the chemicals assessment and management division's groundwater protection branch of Alberta environmental protection?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously when we're doing tests and monitoring, they are reviewed by our professional scientific staff. We have a number of scientists there. When we do monitoring, whether it's air quality monitoring or soil testing or groundwater or drinking water monitoring, our professional scientific staff in the particular area – if they're water staff, then they monitor scientifically the tests. The air staff monitors the air quality tests. If it's soil testing, then our soil experts monitor that. The water sample monitoring will be handled in the same way as any monitoring is handled.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Petro-Canada Labour Dispute

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are on the strike-bound Petro-Canada refinery, which last Saturday sent a thick plume of black smoke across Edmonton's east side. A spokesperson for Petro-Canada described the incident as very serious, yet the company has announced its intention to resume refinery production today despite the current strike. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. In light of the tentative agreement reached yesterday, which will be voted on tomorrow, will the minister order Petro-Canada to hold off resuming production at least until the vote results are known so that the health and safety of metro-Edmonton residents are not further compromised?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, it's not quite a mixed metaphor in terms of the question, but the hon. member, I think, is trying to bring two different aspects of our department into play. If there is any sort of health and safety hazard that currently exists, then our workplace health and safety people will be on the job and will be looking at that. That will have no impact and no effect over the collective bargaining process. Employees in this province have the legitimate right to go on strike. Employers have a legitimate right to try to carry on their operation as best they can during that strike. So one does not necessarily lead to the other.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the minister justify allowing unskilled replacement workers with less than two weeks' training to handle extremely dangerous substances in large quantities, such as hydrogen sulfide and hydrochloric acid?

MR. DUNFORD: Under our workplace health and safety guidelines, Mr. Speaker, there are ample legislation and regulations in place to cover that. Certainly in the sense of compliance, then, with those regulations, it's a matter of workplace health and safety. Unlike the hon. member, I have full confidence in our staff.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, then, share with us what information he is relying upon that makes him so certain that the use of untrained or partially trained replacement workers in a highly complex oil refinery is not compromising either workplace safety or public safety?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, the standards are in place. We have workplace health and safety officials that monitor such standards. The allegation about a worker's ability to deal with it is simply a matter of the company's obligation to meet the standards that are in place. If those standards are not met, then of course we have all manner of ways in which we can take action.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Alberta Trailnet

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning Alberta Trailnet announced two programs: the Trans Canada Trail discovery program, which involves the development and installation of interpretive panels along the Trans Canada Trail, and the Bridges for Canada initiative, which involves building bridges along the Trans Canada Trail, involving the military forces. To date eight bridges have already been completed. My first question today is to the hon. Minister of Community Development. Can the minister tell me if Trans Canada Trail or Alberta Trailnet has obtained or plans to obtain all the necessary municipal development permits prior to the construction of these bridges?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are no bridges on the trail in Alberta at this point, but I should point out that one has been proposed for the Athabasca area. It is neither the responsibility of the Trans Canada Trail Foundation nor of Alberta Trailnet to obtain any local approvals. Any of those approvals for any type of construction or for the trail itself, for that matter, are totally the responsibility of the local trail operator. The local trail operators, I'm sure, will be working with the municipalities for any of those proposed projects. That's my understanding of what's going on there in the Athabasca area, and that has to be done prior to the commencement of any of that trail development or bridge development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister was so thorough in answering my first question and also answering my second, it leaves me with my last supplementary. Could the Minister of Community Development tell this member if this government has any financial involvement whatsoever in the construction of this bridge program?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, no, Mr. Speaker, we don't have any direct involvement, but I think the House would be reminded that we did give a start-up onetime grant of about $1.1 million awhile back. Those moneys undoubtedly have been used for a variety of purposes.

I would say specific to the issue of bridge construction along this trail, that will unite all of Canada eventually, that that particular project is being funded largely by the Canadian military, the Military Engineers. I understand that they're covering the costs of development as well as production and implementation and materials. The one spec'd for Athabasca, assuming approvals are had and all of that, would be entirely covered by the Canadian forces. We should thank them and the Bronfman Foundation, by the way, for their work on this trail to date.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Use of Outside Counsel

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his last annual report the Auditor General recommended that "the Department of Justice enhance its systems for managing and reporting on the cost-effectiveness of legal services, including contracted services." The Auditor General stated that "Justice's accountability systems for contracting outside counsel do not include measurable performance expectations, or monitoring and evaluation of performance" and that "public disclosure would improve Justice's accountability." My questions are for the Minister of Justice. Since the Department of Justice did not provide a response to this recommendation, what is the minister doing to improve the accountability of outside counsel?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're following the recommendation of the Auditor General in developing a process to better monitor outside counsel, the effectiveness of services provided by outside counsel, and the efficacy of using outside counsel.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Has the minister completed his review of the bill for outside counsel in the recent defamation action relating to the former Minister of Finance? Did the department get value for money?

MR. HANCOCK: A very interesting question, Mr. Speaker, and I think a very good question. The department has reviewed the account in question. The account was rather large, and I would be offering an opinion, I guess, if I were to say whether we viewed it that we got value for money. Suffice it to say that the case in question was quite complex, notwithstanding that the result and the amount of damages claimed was not significant. The problem with that particular case was that it involved an individual member of the Assembly, it involved defences to a defamation action, and it involved a law firm providing advice with respect to that particular lawsuit, which involved numerous avenues of research.

What I can assure the member is that department counsel followed the various bills that came in on that particular incident – it wasn't just one bill; it was a monthly bill that came in – followed up on the bill as it came in and ensured that every avenue that was being researched with respect to that case was considered to be if not an appropriate avenue at least one that we couldn't, in our judgment, complain about at that particular time.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. The minister spoke of following every avenue of review, but did the minister – and if he didn't, is he willing to? – send this particular bill to the taxing officer of the court so that it can be impartially reviewed by an independent officer of the court?

MR. HANCOCK: As I responded with respect to an earlier question in the House today with respect to the matter about the review of the risk management process and how we handle it, we have deferred making a decision with respect to taxation as well until after we receive the decision from the court, because I think both of those avenues of review should be done in the full context of the court decision.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

School Board Boundary Changes

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent letter from the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta outlines its concerns related to the proposed changes to the 4 by 4 separate school formation process. Two of the school boards in my riding have also written me to say that they do not support the changes outlined in Bill 16 regarding this specific issue. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. How do you respond to the association when it says that this process will be more cumbersome and less democratic than the current process?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the best way to respond to this question is to explain what we have now and what Bill 16 will provide. What we have right now is called the 4 by 4 process. Essentially what happens is that the minority religion within a four-mile by four-mile square has the ability to petition for a school board. First of all, they have to ensure that they are the minority religion. There has to be a poll taken to show that they are the minority religion. Second of all, a vote has to be held. The vote has to be tabulated by the separate school board, and then the vote is sent on to me, at which point I either approve or disapprove the formation of that school jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, what is being proposed in this legislation is two ways that this can occur. First of all, if the separate school board sits down and combines with the public school board, where both school boards come forward to me and say, "We want the separate school board expanded to be coterminous," it will occur. The second way is that if a separate school board wants to expand within the area of a map that is predetermined, it will be petitioned by its petitioners, of which there must be three electors. It must be then a public process to listen and to talk to both the public side and the separate side, mediated by an independent facilitator. It will then occur. You be the decider or whoever be the decider whether that's more cumbersome. Personally I don't think it is, and even more importantly I think it's a lot fairer.

REV. ABBOTT: Again to the same minister: will the proposed changes, as the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta says, promote the separation of students and contribute to the decline in enrollments in rural communities?

THE SPEAKER: The purpose of question period is not to have a debate on a bill before the Assembly.

The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much for that, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the 4 by 4 process is available right now, today, to every Catholic elector, to every minority religion elector within the province of Alberta. So if the concern is whether or not Small Town, Alberta, will receive a Catholic school jurisdiction, that chance is out there right now. What we are trying to do under Bill 16 is we are attempting to put some rationality to this process. We are attempting to have everyone in the community, not just the minority religion, sit down and have a good discussion about whether or not there should be a separate school district in that particular small town.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is the fairest way possible. The 4 by 4 system did not allow for any public consultation. I will give an example of my own community, in which case there are 13,000 people: 175 people voted to have a separate school district in Brooks, and with those 175 people there was a separate school jurisdiction brought to Brooks. There was no way for the other 12,000 and some people to even get into the discussion.

REV. ABBOTT: So my final question then: will these changes result in one minority faith being favoured over the other?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the quick and short answer to that is absolutely not. The minority rights are still there. The minority rights, whether they be Catholic or whether they be Protestant, are still existing. The constitutional rights are still there under this law. What this bill does is provide a better, more rational alternative to formation of separate school districts.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's not often I get the privilege of introducing guests from my constituency. Today I have quite a number of them, 130 very studious and well-disciplined students, and I know because I was visiting with them on the lawn. They're here today to see how well disciplined their members of the Assembly are, and I'm sure we won't disappoint them.

Accompanying the students is a group of very hardworking and dedicated teachers: Mr. Bob Worsfold, who is also the ATA local president; Ms. Cindy Patterson; Mrs. Jane Flexhaug, a teacher's assistant; Kelvin Beaudry; Ms. Kara McDonald; Mrs. Sharon Collin; Mrs. Jolene Burgeson. As well, a group of parents: Mrs. Cindy Lodder, Mr. Lyle Blatz, Mrs. Debbie Rockwell, Mrs. Laura Olson, Mrs. Carolyn Leeuwenburgh, Mrs. Tami Gardner, Mrs. Tammy Cotton, Mrs. Cheryl Corsiatto. They were delivered very safely to us today by bus drivers Don Irwin, Mike Irwin, and Bill Moore, who preferred the sunshine on the lawn. I'm sure the group will take our best greetings back with them. I'd ask them all to rise today, in both galleries I believe, and accept the warm welcome of our Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Theresa Nelsen

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my privilege to acknowledge and extend congratulations to Miss Theresa Nelsen. Miss Nelsen, a grade 12 student from Whitecourt, was named a member of the 4-H Alberta-Northwest Territories agriculture development tour during the annual Alberta 4-H selections program in Olds. Miss Nelsen is 18 and a member of the Roydale 4-H Multiclub, where she's specializing in beef production. As a member of the Alberta-Northwest Territories agriculture development tour Miss Nelsen and 25 other 4-H members will participate in activities designed to increase the awareness of the diversity of our agriculture industry.

Miss Nelsen will have the opportunity to travel to Yellowknife this summer and explore the diversity of culture and lifestyle in Canada's north. Mr. Speaker, this is a great honour and an important education experience for Miss Nelsen and the 25 other participants. It's a chance for them to see part of our great country that they may not have otherwise had a chance to see and to experience the rich culture of the north and to find out more about the depth and significance of our own agricultural industry. This is important not only in developing the skills and knowledge of the participants who may follow a career in agriculture but also in developing the citizens and leaders of Alberta. This is something the 4-H program is designed to do.

To close, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again offer my congratulations to Miss Nelsen on receiving this honour and to wish her a wonderful experience on this trip and a very bright future. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:40 National Missing Children's Day

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May 25 is National Missing Children's Day, a day to reflect upon the appalling tragedy of missing children, a day to join together to offer hope to those families who are still searching, and a day to remember with sadness those children who will never return.

In the past week we've all lived the anguish of parents faced with a missing child, and when we learned that that missing child would never return, we were devastated. The Jessica Koopmans of the world shatter us. How could she have been protected? How do we prevent children from meeting such an end? We can be overwhelmed by our grief and our helplessness, cowed by the feeling that we have no control, but we dare not and we must not. We can take control, all of us: our families, our society, our schools, our child care agencies, our government, and our courts. We must all redouble our efforts to create a safe environment for children, an environment where our children are allowed to be children, to grow, to learn, to dream, to play, and to love, free from drugs, violence, poverty, and fear.

While we are doing that, we can support groups like Child Find Alberta, Missing Children Society of Canada, Missing Children's Network Canada, and Our Missing Children. We can acquaint ourselves with strategies that will prevent our children from going missing. We can work with children themselves, arming them with the knowledge that may prevent them from becoming victims.

A week Friday, on National Missing Children's Day, we will be asked to leave our porch lights on to help light the way home for missing children. Let those same porch lights remind each of us of our responsibilities to children. Let those porch lights remind us that we can take control, and this year let those porch lights shine across the province in memory of Jessica Koopmans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Crime Prevention Week

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While door-knocking in my constituency during the recent election, I was very surprised at the great increase in the number of large, barking dogs I was encountering, even just over the last couple of years. It was pretty clear to me that concern about crime has become one of the very biggest issues on my constituents' minds, and my conversations at the doorstep confirmed this. That is why I am so pleased today to rise before this Assembly to speak to an important awareness initiative in this regard, important not just to my constituents but to all Albertans.

May 11 to May 18 is Alberta's 10th annual Crime Prevention Week. Led by Alberta's Solicitor General, this week is intended to raise awareness about crime prevention initiatives across the province and to encourage Albertans to help make our communities safer. The theme this year is the Many Faces of Crime Prevention, and it is intended to remind us that we can all play a role and should play a role in helping prevent crime in our communities. I would encourage all members of this Assembly, if you aren't doing so already, to work with your constituency organizations to help identify and bring some well-deserved recognition to any individuals who have gone above and beyond to help prevent crime in your communities.

The province is helping to do this. Two weeks ago Alberta's Solicitor General announced more than $580,000 in community crime prevention grants to assist various community organizations across the province. On May 12 in Calgary a ceremony was held to honour some of the businesses, organizations, and individuals who have put their heart and soul into making a difference through crime prevention in their communities.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to encourage all members of this Assembly to play an even bigger part in building safer and stronger communities by getting more involved. Let's all just get out in our communities, not only this week but year-round, and support crime prevention initiatives in our neighbourhoods.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Inland Cement Limited

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is recklessly fast-tracking the approval process for Inland Cement's conversion to coal operations. Doing so is needlessly endangering the environment as well as the health and well-being of tens of thousands of Edmontonians. By Inland Cement's own account arsenic, mercury, sulphur dioxide, and chromium emissions will all increase. In addition, converting to coal will increase greenhouse gas emissions by more than 400 tonnes per day.

This proposal has raised widespread concerns among the residents of this city. At a recent public meeting over 200 local residents came out on a beautiful spring evening to express their concerns and their frustrations at a government that appears to be doing only the company's bidding. In addition, a petition calling for a full environmental impact assessment has gathered 1,300 signatures and is still being circulated. Finally, there are major concerns about the risk of setting a precedent for future coal operations. The government has been talking about streamlining approval of coal-burning power plants for some time now, and I fear that if the Inland Cement conversion is fast-tracked, other coal projects will be as well.

In this case, the Minister of Environment has the authority to order a full environmental impact assessment. This would include public hearings where intervenors could obtain legal funding, witnesses could be cross-examined, and alternative evidence presented. I strongly urge the government to order such an assessment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

MS CARLSON: I would ask the government to please share the orders of business for next week with us.

THE SPEAKER: The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Victoria Day being Monday, government business on Tuesday at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, second reading of bills 17, 15, 11, 16, and Committee of the Whole if time permits as per the Order Paper.

Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, day 13, estimates for the departments of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, Innovation and Science, and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, May 23, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, the estimates for the departments of Revenue and the Solicitor General and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, May 24, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, the main estimates of the Department of Environment. Time permitting we would request reversion to Introduction of Bills for the introduction of the main estimates appropriation bill, which I believe will be Bill 20, and then second reading of bills 17 and 18 and as per the Order Paper.

THE SPEAKER: The Official Opposition House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Imputing Falsehoods against a Member

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise under 23(h) and (i): making allegations and imputing false motives, in reference to a response from the Minister of Health and Wellness earlier this afternoon in the exchange during question period.

This is a continuation, Mr. Speaker, of an exchange between this minister and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview since Monday of this week on issues that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has been asking with regards to conflict of interest policy. The minister has been making some allegations and urging – as well as some private members in the Assembly in heckles – to name names and that the questions being asked are not based on policy.

I would suggest that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is well within his rights within the terms of the questions he has and the rights he has under the terms of qualified privilege of a member where he has an obligation to ask questions, and the minister has an obligation to hear those questions and respond accordingly.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has not made any case under 23(h) or (i) with respect to the exchange in question period today. Clearly, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was, in phrasing the question, referring to a specific individual. It was clear to myself and to all other members of the House in the detail that was provided that there was a specific individual being referenced.

A question could have been brought on a policy question as to what qualifications a member might have before being appointed or what type of a review is in the appointment process, but by raising the question in the manner that it was, there was a clear allegation being made in the question, and the hon. minister, in responding, indicated exactly that: there was an allegation being made which could be a clearly identifiable person. If someone were to raise questions of that nature in the House, where the individual in question could not defend themselves and where the details of the incidents being brought forward could not be properly explored, that was improper. I agree with the hon. minister, quite frankly, that it is improper to bring questions forward of that nature.

Issues with respect to ethical questions of that nature have to be phrased very, very carefully, Mr. Speaker. If you want to raise a question of policy, which is most appropriate in this House – to raise issues of policy – then phrasing the question in a policy framework is appropriate. But phrasing a question in a manner which anybody can tell is an allegation about an individual who's not here to defend themselves, in a situation where the specifics could not be brought forward and dealt with is inappropriate. Therefore, the minister's response was entirely appropriate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on this point of order.

DR. TAFT: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've taken great care and I take great care with every question I ask not to impute or raise allegations. It was a question of policy and how a policy was implemented, and I raised an example to illustrate it. If you read the question, you will realize that there was no allegation there.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on this point of order?

MR. MASON: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Please proceed.

MR. MASON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Government House Leader indicated that questions on policy alone should be brought before the Assembly during question period. In fact, it is fundamental that accountability of the government is also a fundamental principle for question period. The appointment of individual members by the government, if there is a serious problem that could affect the performance of their duties, is perfectly within the scope of question period.

[Mr. Hancock rose]

THE SPEAKER: No, you've already participated once; that's it.

Hon. members, the citation provided by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had to do with Standing Orders 23(h) and (i) of the Alberta Legislative Assembly. Let me at the outset make it very, very clear that sections 23(h) and (i) have nothing to do with the arguments put forward here or the questions this afternoon. Sections 23(h) and (i) have to deal with allegations made against another member, or "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." That's what the protection of that particular standing order is all about.

Now with respect to what we have here this afternoon, here's the text of what happened. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

Can the minister explain how the government's policy on appointments to RHAs would allow a person would allow a person to lead an RHA's finance committee at the same time his company is defaulting on a $650,000 government-backed loan?

The word "his" is included in the question.

The hon. minister, "Well, I can say this categorically, Mr. Speaker: our policy is certainly not to besmirch the good reputation of individuals."

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview: "Is the fact that this same individual has family connections to three for-profit nursing homes that contract with the CRHA of any concern to the minister?"

The minister:

Mr. Speaker, as I raised this the other day in this Assembly, this is a well-worn path that leads exactly to nowhere. All of these contracts are scrupulously examined, and I stand by the good work that is done by the regional health authority and its members.

It is not for me here today to make any kind of response to the kinds of allegations that are being made here.

Now, with respect to allegations, 23(h) and (i) have to do with allegations with respect to another member. There was no allegation made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview with respect to another member in the Assembly. Neither was there any allegation made by the Minister of Health and Wellness with respect to another member in the Assembly from my reading of the text and my observing of this particular matter this afternoon.

Now, there is a concern, though – policy issues: yes, absolutely; no doubt at all about it. That's what this Assembly's all about, and that's what question period's all about. Question period is not about debate. It's about seeking information and holding the government accountable. There are situations that do happen periodically when hon. members sometimes name individuals who are not in this Assembly who cannot be protected or sometimes have allegations that may be made about members whose names are not there or suggestions.

The difficulty the chair has is that the chair never knows if an hon. member raising the question is, quote, seeking something with a shotgun approach; i.e. you fire a shotgun bullet and the 57 pellets are going out, hoping that one of the 57 will hit a mark. That's a pretty dangerous form of questioning. That's a very, very dangerous form of questioning, because it also leads to another member rising on a point of privilege with respect to that kind of an approach. So one has to be very, very careful.

These questions today do not suggest the existence of a known individual to the chair, never raised in this Assembly before, but it can lead to some implications that all hon. members can deal with if they want to rise on a point of privilege at any time or a point of order that can be dealt with in the question period.

In terms of a point of order today dealing with allegations, the rules speak very clearly about allegations about other members in this particular Assembly. There's nothing in the text that the chair reads with respect to this that would cause concern about that.

There are, however, a whole series of violations today with respect to the Standing Orders. Let's just remind ourselves of what some of these are. We have a clear understanding that when we stand in this Assembly, we deal with another hon. member with the greatest degree of concern and courtesy that we should have. That means addressing the hon. member by the constituency and the correct name of their constituency, and if they happen to be the Opposition House Leader, that's the courteous title that's given to the Opposition House Leader. If it's the Leader of the Official Opposition, that's the courteous title that's given to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

It's also courteous to deal with ministers in much the same way, and the correct title for ministers are what they are listed as. It is not the minister of agriculture; it's actually the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. It's not the minister of health; it's the Minister of Health and Wellness. We had two violations with respect to that today. The Leader of the Official Opposition incorrectly referred to one minister with the incorrect title, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview incorrectly referred to a minister with the incorrect title.

Now, preambles are also an agreed-upon procedure, agreed to in this Assembly, and the chair has a signed document with leaders from three parties agreeing what the rule on preambles is. They've been signed. Their name is etched on the piece of paper. It's there. I endorsed it.

So let's see now. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, in your second question you had a preamble. The leader of the third party, in your second question you had a preamble. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, in your second question you had a preamble. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, in your third question you had a preamble, and there was an interjection from the chair with respect to that matter. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, on your third question that you had today, you violated Beauchesne 408(e) and (f), and you violated 409(1). The minister of education and the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmr, you received an admonition from the chair with respect to enticing debate in the Assembly.

So we have a four-day weekend coming up . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: That's Minister of Learning.

THE SPEAKER: Minister of Learning, yeah.

We have a four-day weekend coming up, and the first thing that will happen with the chair is that he will spend much of Friday reading the rules, getting the titles correct. I would encourage all members to take the Standing Orders, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, Erskine May Parliamentary Practice, the House of Commons Procedure and Practice and do a quick overview just so that we're really going to be in shape on Tuesday next.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order. For the those sitting in the gallery, just so you're aware, this is a portion of the procedure of the Legislature where there is some informality. Members are allowed to remove their jackets and move around from their seats, and they are also able to have a coffee or a juice in the Assembly.

Seniors

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: This is a designated department. I'll invite the hon. Minister of Seniors to open debate.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased to be here today to discuss the first three-year business plan for the new Ministry of Seniors. Alberta is the only province in Canada that has a ministry devoted to seniors. This demonstrates the government's strong commitment to enhancing the quality of life for Alberta's seniors. It also enables the government to provide a greater focus on the current and future needs of seniors in our province, particularly those most in need. As the Minister of Seniors I'm looking forward to working with Alberta seniors and being an advocate on their behalf.

Responsibility for housing is also part of the new Ministry of Seniors. This includes housing for seniors, for lower income families, for individuals with special needs, and for the homeless. It is incumbent on us to help those members of our society who are unable to find adequate accommodation and to support them in becoming healthier and more self-reliant, contributing members of our communities.

The Ministry of Seniors' business plan is closely aligned with the priorities of the government of Alberta's 2001 to 2004 business plan. Of particular importance to this ministry is the government's priority of caring for children and supporting seniors and families. As the ministry responsible for seniors and housing our three-year business plan is developed around two core businesses:

1. supporting the independence and well-being of seniors; and
2. supporting family and special purpose housing needs.

Our 2001-04 business plan takes a different approach from previous years. Instead of identifying a list of actions that relate to each goal, we have taken a broader approach and identified corporate initiatives. You will see these listed under each of five success factors.

Regarding our performance measures, a number of improvements have been made, retaining a link between measures and performance assessments in each core business. We wanted our performance measures to be more meaningful to our stakeholders and partners as well. The measures will address what we have heard people want us to deal with.

Our first goal is to ensure that seniors have "access to the supports they need to live as independently as possible in a secure and dignified way." One of the most effective ways to do this is to actively communicate with seniors on a daily basis. We accomplish this through our toll-free Alberta seniors' information line: 1-800-642-3853 or, if you're in Edmonton, 427-7876. Since its introduction in 1994 the line has received over 989,000 calls, and we expect to take our one millionth call early next month.

My ministry is always looking for ways to enhance the communication and/or delivery of our services and programs to seniors throughout the province. One way that's being considered is through existing seniors' centres. Late last year I gave the go-ahead to the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, the Alberta Council on Aging, and my ministry to conduct a study on the role, services, and funding of seniors' centres. I look forward to the results of the study as it may offer some good opportunities to further our support to seniors. I should explain that a key component of successful aging is for seniors to have opportunities to be active and involved in events, programs, and the life of their communities. Seniors' centres offer such opportunities.

I'm proud to say that Alberta offers one of the most comprehensive packages of benefits for lower income seniors in Canada. The Alberta seniors' benefit program provides a cash benefit and is used to calculate a partial or full subsidy of Alberta health insurance premiums for seniors that are most in need. As of March 2001 over 181,000 Alberta seniors, or roughly 59 percent, were receiving benefits from the program. More than 166,000 seniors pay no health insurance premiums whatsoever.

Budget 2001 provides an additional $2.1 million over the 2000 budget for the Alberta seniors' benefit program to assist lower income seniors with increased living expenses. The special-needs assistance for seniors' program is an income-tested program that provides lump sum cash payments to help seniors who can demonstrate that they are unable to meet their basic needs. It is the only such program in Canada. Last year the program helped more than 7,000 low-income seniors who were experiencing extreme financial difficulty.

Budget 2001 provides an increase of $2.2 million over last year's budget for the special-needs assistance for seniors' program. These increases bring the budget for these two programs to $166.3 million. Seniors eligible for benefits will see the increases starting this July, as this is the start of the new benefit year. Most seniors will receive approximately a 4 percent increase, but as in the past we are looking at fine-tuning the program, so it is possible that some seniors will receive a higher amount.

Seniors' housing is another important program in our ministry. Between the shelter component of the Alberta seniors' benefit program and our seniors' housing program, over 1 in 3 seniors in Alberta receives some form of assistance with their housing costs. The government is committed to working with our community partners to determine how best to meet seniors' future housing needs. We support the development of community resources for seniors to allow them to age in place. By this I mean ensuring that personal and health services that seniors want are available to them within their own community whether they choose to live in their own home or live in a supportive housing facility.

In 1999 the government introduced the healthy aging partnership initiative, a $10 million fund to encourage the development of appropriate supportive housing accommodation so that seniors can live in a place in their own communities. Last fall the government committed an additional $10 million and targeted onetime funding for the seniors' supportive housing incentive program. This program aims to provide additional supportive housing projects that are comfortable, residential, and safe for low- and moderate-income senior citizens.

This year the budget saw an increase of $33.8 million to support seniors' housing. This includes $31.7 million to develop more community-based supportive housing for seniors to age in place, an additional $1.6 million to address the maintenance and operation of publicly owned seniors' housing units, and an increase of $500,000 to support 300 new lodge units for Alberta seniors.

The government of Alberta has made seniors one of its top four cross-ministry policy priorities for 2001-02. Led by the Ministry of Seniors and co-championed by Alberta Health and Wellness, Alberta will lead the country with seniors' policy initiatives that will see 19 ministries and government entities develop a strategic framework with a 10-year outlook. The initiative will build upon a solid base of current programs and services and set the course for the well-being of seniors in future years.

The second goal in our business plan is to support "family and special purpose housing needs.” Alberta Seniors is committed to facilitating the provision of social housing while adhering to the fiscal responsibilities of the government. This government has in place a family and special purpose housing policy framework that establishes the strategic cornerstones needed to ensure that affordable housing alternatives are available to those in need. The framework sets a new direction for the continuum of housing needs of the homeless, transitional housing, supportive housing, social housing, and affordable housing based on flexibility and local decision-making.

As part of our business plan my ministry is committed to working with communities to address housing needs, recognizing that every community has different housing needs and circumstances that are best resolved by local planning and decision-making. My ministry will continue to develop its partnerships to meet the housing needs of low-income families and special-needs clients.

The ministry offers family and special purpose programs to help low-income families and persons with physical disabilities and hard-to-house and Metis families. Our plan is to recognize the needs of remote, rural, and off-reserve aboriginal housing, and we look at the feasibility of this program being self-supporting. We will also pursue co-operative commitments for funding from the federal government in this regard.

Mr. Chairman, I see that I’m running out of time, so I will just close by saying that there are quite a few more housing initiatives that I was going to bring forward at this moment. We’ll wait for the questions to come and then deal with the homeless and programs that we have in place and so on.

What I’d like to say in conclusion is that my staff, who are up in the gallery working so hard this afternoon, will attempt to answer the relevant questions after they hear the comments here and they have the opportunity to review Hansard.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’m glad to have the opportunity to have the Ministry of Seniors as a designated ministry under our budget process, which allows us to spend two and a half hours looking at the budget and the policy, performance measurements, and plans of the government regarding seniors. As the minister mentioned, this is a new stand-alone ministry. It was previously under the Department of Community Development, and as the critic for Community Development I had seniors under my critic portfolio in the past.

I’d like to start today, at least in my first opportunity to debate, by just going through some of the concerns that have been raised with me by seniors. They fall broadly into three categories: health, housing, and other issues around money that are placing seniors into strained financial circumstances.

Just before I start, I do have a couple of inquiries from seniors who at times feel frustrated that what they’re trying to say through to the ministry is not being heard. I’m wondering if the minister can please detail for me and for all seniors in Alberta: what is the process when a senior phones into the seniors’ line expressing a concern? What is the process that that message follows to get through to the minister, if indeed it does get through to the minister? What kind of follow-up monitoring and evaluation is involved in that?

Now, issues under health care. The one that comes up I would have to say the most often is the question: why did the government choose not to eliminate health care premiums for seniors? This was talked about a lot during the election. I think it was mused aloud by the Premier at one point, but in fact this budget has come down . . . [interjection] Yes. I think there were Conservative candidates that talked about it in their election.

MR. MacDONALD: Promised it.

MS BLAKEMAN: I’m sorry. Promised it. [interjections] Not the one I was working with.

So we would like an explanation from the minister as to why the choice was made not to eliminate health care premiums for seniors. Certainly when we look at the fact that seniors have a fixed income and are not in a position where they can readily earn more money or get more money through investments, if they’re fortunate to have them, the strain of paying health care premiums can really put a dent in their pocketbooks, and when we talk about trying to assist seniors, it has always struck me that this was a very immediate and straight-through line to putting dollars back into the pockets of seniors. As the previous Minister of Finance used to say: putting those sweat-soaked loonies back into people’s pockets.

MR. MacDONALD: What’s he saying now?

MS BLAKEMAN: Not much.

Along with that question of course goes a question about reducing the amount of money that seniors are having to pay for their Blue Cross, another issue that has been raised with me.

The next issue is around dental support or payments for dentistry. I had raised this with the minister in the previous year, written to both him and the Minister of Health and Wellness, I believe, asking why there couldn’t be more assistance for dental care for seniors. I’d been hearing both from seniors and from dentists, in fact, pointing out that the range of programs that are available is very confusing to seniors as to whether they will qualify for subsidy or they won’t qualify for subsidy. What we’re finding is that they’re just not going, and as one senior pointed out to me, seniors need good dental care if they’re going to be able to eat a nutritious and healthy diet.

The present dental assistance program which comes under the seniors’ benefit program is totally inadequate. Somewhere else someone points out that the government manages to support children’s teeth, and why aren’t they paying a bit more attention to the teeth of seniors which, when they fall out, don’t grow back? I thought that was a solid point.

I think it is a concern for us, and this is ongoing now. I’m looking to the ministry as to why they chose not to give additional support here. What I was asking for was a fund of money that would essentially ensure that seniors who wanted it would be able to at least get a dental checkup. Certainly on the campaign trail I heard from specific individuals who required extensive dental work and simply couldn’t afford it even through the programs that were available through the ministry. This was really affecting their health and their quality of life, for obvious reasons.

Next on the list of concerns under health is home care, and this is an ongoing, chronic area of concern for those working with seniors, those who are seniors, and the people who are family members of seniors. There is not enough funding in this area. What has the minister done to work cross-departmentally with the Minister of Health and Wellness around ensuring that there is adequate funding for home care? Is there some formula that the government is working on that they just don’t want to spend more than X amount of money? Is that connected to the demand for the program? Because we have a situation where the government is saying, “We want seniors to stay at home; we want seniors to age in place," but seniors, in order to be able to do that, need home care services, and they can't get them. I mean, there are waiting lists for them. One woman from an agency here in Edmonton wrote to me that there's a three-month wait for in-home occupational therapy assistance, difficulty with the waiting list for home care.

Also, we have split home care into a number of different areas, because we've got home care, we've got housekeeping, and in some cases we seem to have this personal care, which is yet another area. When we look at the housekeeping, the point being made is that it's not very well done, that they're not there very long, and it makes it really difficult for seniors to keep going on their own when they can't get that kind of assistance. It has to be pretty specific to cover what they're looking for.

So what is the budget? Can you break it out for us, please, for housekeeping services and exactly how that works and how much the ministry is putting toward it? And if it is a cross-jurisdictional funding, then what is the other funding coming towards it? Are there any plans to increase the amounts of funds in here? What is the formula by which the minister is determining how much money is in that fund? Is it based on need, or is it based on some arbitrary amount that the minister decides is enough?

I have notes here that with extended care there needs to be more respite beds and access to respite beds, more in-home follow-up and community resources for people. There's a special note from Fran Matthews about mental health, that we're lacking in community resources including – and I've certainly experienced this one – a need for home visits and assessments. It's very difficult to line that up. We know something's wrong, and we can't find anybody to go into the home, have a look around, make sure that the person is all right, that there's some food in the fridge and that everything seems to be moving along on an even keel. It's quite frightening to know that there's a senior in trouble there and you can't get a mental health professional to go in and make sure that everything's okay. I am very cognizant here of not contravening someone's privacy, but I think we're much in need of mental health professionals that are specializing in seniors. Also under the mental health banner we're looking for better day programs, social programs, and low-cost counseling.

A number of people have raised the issue of transportation as far as health care. They get taken to the hospital in an ambulance, but they may not need an ambulance to go home. A taxi fare is quite a strain on their pocketbook, or they have to phone and wake up a friend or a relative in the middle of the night to come and get them. If they are visiting doctors' offices, they can go to a doctor's office in one place, get sent for lab tests in another place, and get sent somewhere else to pick up some sort of prescription. This really adds up if we're looking at taxi fares. I know of one organization for seniors where they will drive people around, but that agency is constantly struggling for funds, and I only know of the one available in Edmonton. So transportation for seniors for that is an issue that's being raised to me.

I've had this same issue raised somewhere else. Yes, here it is. They can't get around without expensive taxi fares, especially if they're frail and unable to drive. Health services are scattered: an appointment with a physician in one place, another place for lab tests, and another place for prescriptions. This is especially difficult if they're having to get in and out of these cabs and release the cab and make it across an icy sidewalk. So what is the minister doing about this? Are there any plans? Is there any funding that's available to assist community groups to deliver this kind of service?

What's out there to help people on this one? Yeah, this is the same person that raised the issue of being stranded at the hospital as well.

Back to home care. This is from Wanda Cree: there needs to be considerably more money invested in home care services, especially services which are of a personal care nature. I agree with her that more seniors are needing personal care than nursing care. They may need help getting dressed in the morning, are having trouble buttoning things or combing their hair or fixing their hair in some way. They are capable of living in their own home, but they need some assistance. The frustration that's out there is that when they go looking for that little bit of assistance or even a little bit more of assistance, it's very hard to access it, and the cutoffs for where the assistance is provided for a nominal charge or no charge seem very, very low to people. Wanda points out that staying at home is a laudable goal, but it is not feasible unless personal care can be provided where needed.

What's the government doing to work with seniors, with municipalities around the issue of building codes so that it's possible there could be more of what are sometimes called garden suites or granny flats or smaller facilities where a senior could be living on the same lot or very near to or in the basement of a family member but still have a separate life? That's mostly around bylaw and zoning changes with the municipalities. Is any work being done on that?

A couple of issues are being raised under health care around continuity of care and training of doctors. Wanda is making the point that for older people with chronic conditions, they need to be able to consult a physician who knows and understands their case and is making sure that the medication and the advice is consistent. We do certainly see that, where seniors are having three and four and five different doctors and nobody seems to be in control here or in charge of a sort of totality of care to make sure that they're not being overprescribed. One doctor doesn't seem to talk to another doctor. Again, probably a cross-departmental initiative here, but it still – and I've raised this issue before – needs to be worked out.

I'm having a couple of concerns raised around the amount of support that's given to seniors for hearing aids and for glasses. It's minimal; that's certainly true. There is something there, and that's better than nothing. But I'm sort of curious. As we're trying to encourage independence, for things that for a fairly small amount of money make life much better for seniors, like hearing and sight, which enables them to travel and move about and be much more a part of our society, which is so hearing and sight based, I'm just wondering why the amounts allowed here are so low and so infrequent.

The other issue around doctors is the need to encourage more graduates with a specialty in geriatric medicine or gerontology and also look at the way they're paid. Right now there's no incentive for a doctor to spend additional time with a senior because they're paid per visit regardless of what the visit is for or who the visit is with. There's no incentive to spend a longer period of time with a senior going over all the different kinds of medication that they've been prescribed or explaining what a condition means or explaining what other kinds of lifestyle changes a senior could take that didn't involve pharmaceuticals. There's no incentive for them to spend that time because they're making their money by having people pass through at a certain rate per hour. Sorry; that's not fair. That sounds very mechanical. Nonetheless, for an amount of time that would prove productive for us here, there's very little incentive for doctors to do that. The first area there was incentive programs to have more people going into gerontology.

Another issue raised around health care was that there are qualifying times for provincial health care programs, and we're seeing a situation now where seniors may be moving to a different province to be closer to their children. I think the statistics tell us that most parents try to live within 100 kilometres of one of their adult children. When that's happening, they're moving across provincial lines, and then they're into a situation where they can be into a qualifying period of time in order to get assisted accommodation. So it's less about health care and more about housing and access to programs there. I'm wondering if the minister has been working with any of his colleagues that are responsible for seniors' issues in other provinces around making this more transportable so that seniors are not as restricted by mobility and could more easily join their children in another province.

Once again I raise the issue of women and osteoporosis funding for pharmaceuticals but also for research and for health and wellness alternatives. I continue to have a concern around this area. Osteoporosis is 100 percent preventable. What are we doing to make it nonexistent here? I'm not seeing much of an improvement in the rates. So I hold the minister accountable and ask him to please respond about what initiatives they're looking at. Is there anything happening right now? What kind of encouragement are they giving the Minister of Innovation and Science to look into that?

Thank you. I'll resume my questions again shortly.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise to speak about seniors' issues. I have a great deal of personal experience working with seniors, working on policy areas and working on service delivery, and I have a large number of seniors in my constituency. It's delightful that there is once again a Department of Seniors. It's not the first time there's been a Department of Seniors in Alberta. There was 10 years ago or so a Department of Seniors, and when the current regime came to power, it quickly ended that department. So it's good to see it coming back to life. It is an area to which we all should be paying careful attention.

I do receive many comments from my constituents on seniors' issues. In fact, I certainly have one of the largest concentrations in terms of percentage of seniors in my constituency of all the constituencies in the province. I sense two sorts of populations of seniors. One group, who are perhaps better educated and have a higher income, are enjoying their retirement or enjoying their older age, have sufficient money to stay in their own homes, to enjoy their lives, to do some traveling. I also know that there's a large number of seniors whose incomes are actually very low, sometimes appallingly low, and I think we too often don't pay enough attention to these seniors. Their numbers are growing, and they are dominated to a large degree by women who through their earlier lives have not had the opportunity to build up pension reserves or other sources of income and find themselves often as widows in very vulnerable positions.

With that sort of framework I would mention a couple of specifics that I hear routinely from constituents. One is a call for the restoration of seniors' benefits to a level that was available up until 1992 or so. Seniors' benefits peaked in Alberta in about 1986. They were tightened and tightened through the later '80s and early '90s. Seniors would like to at least return to the levels of the early '90s. They look at other areas of the province where resources were reduced: wages for public servants, wages for MLAs, support for health care and education and transportation, and so on. They now see the funding to those areas returning to levels of 10 years ago and in some cases even exceeding the levels of 10 years ago, yet seniors consistently feel that they are not enjoying those benefits. They have not had resources restored to them that so many of the rest of us have had restored, and that feels to them and frankly to me like unfairness and injustice.

The seniors' property tax benefit comes up frequently in my constituency. Seniors feel like they did enjoy a property tax benefit some years ago that offset the cost of the education tax to a substantial degree and allowed them, especially if they're in a lower income area, to stay home longer. That benefit has been eliminated, and I'm not at all aware that there are any plans to restore it. I certainly would encourage some kind of renewal of that program or a program similar to it.

Also, in general I hear a lot of concern that those support services to keep seniors in their homes – whether it's homemaking, home nursing, home care services – are not what they need to be. As a result, seniors' health and independence deteriorate sometimes more rapidly than they ought to, and seniors actually end up requiring more help by being forced into institutions. As a point of human dignity and as a point of good management of resources, I would encourage the Seniors minister to advocate as much as he can for stronger services to keep seniors in their homes and in their communities. With those general comments, I'll move to some specifics.

Line item 1.0.1, to be very specific, for operating expense and capital investment for the minister's office, is $308,000. Being a brand-new department, of course there's no previous figure, but considering that the figure from last year for Community Development for the minister's office was $307,000, given that this is a smaller department by a considerable amount, I'm wondering how the minister justifies this new amount for a department that has less combined responsibility than when it was but one component of a bigger department.

I also notice the budget for the deputy minister's office, item 1.0.2, will be $260,000. It was only $216,000 for the Community Development department last year. Again, considering that Seniors is a smaller department than the old Community Development department, why do we see this increase? What is the justification for this rise? What in fact accounts for the over $200,000 increase for finance and administration in this department?

Getting to the issue of communications, which is always so important to this government, how does the minister compare the budget for communications at $363,000 with that for the old Department of Community Development's budget of $367,000? In other words, we are spending virtually the same amount on communications for a much smaller department. I'd appreciate a rationale for that.

Moving to some other specifics: income support for seniors. As my opening remarks suggested, this is an area of real concern for a large number of Alberta seniors. The government is in fact boasting of spending an additional $4.9 million for the Alberta seniors' benefit program this year. Of course, any increase in money is something that we applaud, but this increase is really misleading. It's not going to have a significant impact. As a percent, it amounts to I think just over 3 percent of the total budget in this area, barely adequate to cover a rise in the cost of living. I doubt if it's adequate, in fact, to cover the per capita rise in the cost of living. If I'm wrong on that, I'd appreciate the minister correcting me.

I would like to see in the longer term greater support for the incomes of seniors. I'm wondering how much of the increase that's there this year will go to things such as administration costs. How much of the increase will actually go to individual seniors and senior couples? Is the department changing its criteria for availability for funding under the income support programs?

Now I'd like to move to one of the particular things that undoubtedly the minister will be leading, taking a great interest in personally, and that's the announced seniors policy initiative. I believe, going from a news release, it says: Alberta will lead the country with a seniors policy initiative that will develop a strategic framework and a 10-year action plan to address the needs of Alberta's aging population. Well, I think that's a terrific idea. If we're looking for a strategic framework and a 10-year action plan, I've got various thoughts and suggestions for that kind of an initiative.

I would, for example, suggest that there's a strong rationale for that initiative. It's a well-known fact that Alberta faces a rapid increase in the number and proportion of older persons in its population. As a result, Alberta's system of services for seniors probably needs to be re-examined to ensure that it can effectively meet the changing needs of seniors in the future without sacrificing resources available to future generations.

I think you may want to look at some key objectives for this seniors policy initiative. It could include, for example, developing a seniors action plan to guide government action and decision-making for, say, the next 10 years. It could also include as a key objective developing and continuing an effective consultation process that involves seniors and other members of the community in decisions about public policy and about the seniors' plans. I would encourage you to ensure a good geographical and sociological mix of people in these debates about seniors' issues and the development of a seniors' plan.

In developing and proceeding with the seniors policy initiative, there is a series of strategies that the minister may want to look at. You may want to consider a public opinion survey, for example, of seniors or people, say, age 45 and older about what their experiences and expectations and attitudes are with respect to aging and programs and services for seniors. You may want to invite briefs about seniors' issues and potential resolutions to them from organizations across Alberta. You could potentially conduct a survey of people who provide services to seniors, including perhaps services focused on aboriginal Albertans, who are too often overlooked. You could have a series of public meetings in, say, 12 different communities across Alberta to address issues of concern to seniors. You might want to have some special study sessions on issues, and of course you'll have a series of meetings with seniors and with people interested in seniors' service delivery.

You might well find that seniors want more money, but I suspect that they would recognize that there are limits to what society can provide to them. They would want, as much as anything, fair treatment, not special treatment.

If you proceed with this seniors policy initiative, I'm sure you'll find some important results. You might find that the people expect commitments to seniors to be respected and that if significant changes are made to seniors' programs, enough time is allowed for them to successfully adjust. After all, many people plan years and decades in advance for their senior years, depending and counting on government programs to be there. If those government programs are cut or eliminated or changed, people do not necessarily have the time to adapt and change decades of planning.

You might also find from your policy initiative that greater emphasis should be placed on services provided in the home and in the community as opposed to services provided in institutions such as nursing homes and lodges and so on. You'd probably find that people are encouraging the provincial government to provide a greater range of housing options for older people so that people have the most flexibility we can allow them to adjust their housing to their own physical, financial, and social needs.

You might find that the provincial government ought to co-ordinate more closely with the federal government to improve the financial security of older Albertans through, for example, expanding pension coverage to cover the people I mentioned earlier on, widows and people who find themselves in their older age without adequate pension coverage because they never had the opportunity to contribute to pensions.

There are great concerns around the co-ordination of services to seniors. That has been an issue for many, many years, and I guess it will always be an issue, something that we have to always work at. Of course, the need to evaluate seniors' services will come up.

Now, a great deal of information and study was done and a great deal of money was spent on this exact kind of initiative 10 years ago. Something close to $1 million was spent on that. An extensive report was developed, planning for seniors' services, looking 10 to 15 years ahead from that time. It looked at spending patterns. It looked at technological developments, new technologies enabling people to stay at home. It looked at issues such as elder abuse.

I'd encourage the minister to go back and review all those files and draw on that knowledge that was prepared at such length and with such expense and commitment 10 years ago under the former Department of Seniors. He may even wish to consult with the minister of the time, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury, Mr. Roy Brassard. Of course, a lot of that material was going to be made public and in the end was ordered to be destroyed by the government, but perhaps we'll see it come back to the public eye.

I'll wrap up my comments by encouraging the department and the minister to enthusiastically pursue his mandate, to listen carefully to the needs of Albertans, not only seniors but all Albertans, people who will become seniors as the years go by, and to consider their plights, their needs, and the frailties and problems that all of us will face as we grow older.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll wrap up. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to participate in the estimates debates on seniors this particular year. It's nice to see that finally this government has elevated the importance or status of seniors by separating it out of its previous home in Community Development and giving it some measure of importance. Certainly to seniors this is a very important department, and certainly to all of us who will some day be seniors it is also very important.

[Mr. Maskell in the chair]

It's of particular concern to us, I think, when we take a look at what's happened to seniors and seniors' programming and seniors' funding over the past years that I've been in this Assembly. They've taken some pretty hard hits on programs. They've taken some pretty hard hits in housing, and they've taken some pretty hard hits in direct dollars and benefits. Many of us, including the Official Opposition, would argue that those programs haven't been reinstated and that seniors are still hugely disadvantaged in this province that's supposed to have an Alberta advantage for all. In fact, they are still behind in terms of the original '93 round of cuts that came forward. Continually it is of serious concern to people in my constituency how seniors are supposed to experience their share of the Alberta advantage after putting decades of their lives into supporting this province.

My constituency, Edmonton-Ellerslie, people often think would have a very low seniors population. Mill Woods is a relatively new community in Edmonton, but the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that I have a high seniors population. More than 8 percent of the people in the constituency are up to 65 years of age, in the 55 to 65 years of age range, and 7 percent of the constituency are 65 years or older. That percentage is creeping up year after year by small percentage points, by tenths of percentage points in terms of the age of the population base there. So we are seeing a significant aging in that particular population. They are vocal about their concerns and about what has been happening to them in programming, and it's wonderful to have an opportunity to bring some of those concerns forward.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about some of the issues that are also outstanding in my constituency. Property taxes were a big benefit and were something that people planned into their retirement income or expenses and which isn't available. There used to be home upgrading grants. I know there's now that seniors' benefit that's available to seniors for unusual expenses, but there is a great deal more than just unusual expenses that come up to throw seniors into a loop.

In terms of them being able to share in the vision that the Seniors department outlines in its ministry business plan, I think that significant changes have to be made, Mr. Chairman. If we take a look at that division, it talks about "a vibrant province where all Albertans experience the quality of life to which they aspire." Oh, that's a motherhood and apple pie statement if I ever heard one. But is it actually a vision that this government is on the road to being able to implement and seniors are able to access? I think not, Mr. Chairman. I don't see it in the acts of the government. We see some commitment in the words of the government, but we see little commitment in the acts of the government to ensure that all Albertans experience the quality of life to which they aspire.

In fact, even when you take a look at the mission and the core businesses and goals supporting those, we don't see quality of life specifically defined there. For the most part, what they talk about are issues that they don't support with dollars or programming.

In the core businesses when they talk about "supporting the independence and well-being of seniors," there are specific problems. If we take this over and relate this to the measure of quality of life that is in the more detailed Seniors' business plan 2001-2004, what do we talk about? If you're talking about supporting the independence and well-being of seniors, what's that backed up by? It should be backed up by some of the measures.

The measure they have here is Quality of Life, and that's the only one I see here that relates to this particular core business. What do they say? They say, "Percentage of eligible seniors receiving the Alberta Seniors Benefit." So what they're talking about is dollars, Mr. Chairman. They don't talk about the other aspects of well-being or independence for seniors that would support that. Money helps, Mr. Chairman, but it isn't the answer to all of the issues that are outstanding for seniors.

So who this helps, then, in terms of money are those who are significantly disadvantaged, but what else do seniors need to be both independent and have well-being? They need health. How do they get health in this province? They have to have access to the health care system. Do they have timely access? Are there support systems in there once they are within the system to help them be both independent and support their well-being? I would suggest the answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is no.

If we take a look at access to health care, there is no special treatment given to seniors for them to be able to jump queues or have access to support systems. I don't see any special access for seniors in terms of even letting them know what's available and how they make their way through the variety of systems.

Talk about often complicated problems when it comes to seniors. It isn't just primary care hospitals that they need to access. Often there are rehabilitative issues around injuries, or there are mental health issues often with seniors or support issues in terms of those who are accessing the health system.

Do we have a good home care system in this province so that seniors, if they have some sort of a health issue, can either be independent or ensure that their well-being is enhanced? The answer is no, Mr. Chairman. If seniors do not have children or other people supporting them who come into that sandwich generation, those who provide support for elders in the community, if they don't have access to those kinds of people, they are often left in great trouble. They don't have the support system from the government to provide enough or ready access to home care if they need transitional health care.

They don't have that kind of access to mental health or even to transportation to get to primary care sources. There's the bus system. The public transport system in this province is nonexistent in many locales and poor in the larger regions. So if they don't have independent means of getting there – and often if they're not well, they're not able to transport themselves – how do they get to these primary care facilities, and how does this core business of supporting independence and well-being support that? It doesn't, Mr. Chairman.

There's the DATS program that supports people who need to access the system, but what's wrong with the DATS system? Quite a few things. They won't guarantee pickups, Mr. Chairman, so people can't make appointments on time. You have to book several days in advance, and people often don't know. If they have a health issue and they need to see their doctor that day, it doesn't work like that. You just can't pick up the phone and call them like a taxi. You have to book well in advance. You can't make appointments on time. The arrival time is not guaranteed, so often we see frail seniors, people who need assistance out in the cold, out on the street waiting for their rides, to be picked up.

Those are serious issues that I don't see being addressed in either the business plan or the summary if we're talking about achieving independence and well-being of seniors. Where does this happen in this program? This has got to come under this particular minister's mandate, and I don't see any measures there in terms of enhancing quality of life on those kinds of issues. So if the minister could tell me specifically what it is they are doing in their department to enhance access issues, to enhance transportation issues just on the health care side.

What else is there that can support the well-being of seniors? Well, there are all the extracurricular activities, the cultural side of society. What do we have that the government does to support that? Nothing in this particular department. So if the minister can address that in terms of the issue, I would appreciate it, because I don't see anything listed here. It seems to be completely not here.

Then they talk about "supporting family and special purpose housing needs." Well, it's a joke, Mr. Chairman. If we take a look at the waiting lists and the requirements for people in terms of housing needs, they're astronomical in this province. There are huge waiting lists for people who need access to housing.

I liked the system that there was before in this province, where the government owned and participated in low-income housing. Now with the kind of system that we have, it's a long waiting time for people to get on the list to have housing.

Often with seniors, because of health reasons, housing needs can change overnight. I think there are some pretty decent programs in place in terms of adapting households for wheelchair access or decreased mobility. [interjection] Yeah, the home adaptation program. I think that's a pretty good program. We've had a few concerns over the years in my constituency with that program, but for the most part it works pretty well. But if we take a look at people who, because their health changes, need to come out of the homes they're in and into other kinds of housing, particularly if it's low-cost housing, it's a nightmare. It's a nightmare of paperwork for those people to go through, it's a nightmare of departments for them to have to access, and the waiting list is long.

What often happens and what I see in my constituency quite often is lower income people where the husband has a stroke or a heart attack or some other issues and now he's in a wheelchair. Generally in my constituency that spouse has been the primary breadwinner, so often the wife isn't working. Suddenly now they're coping with reduced income, perhaps only pension income left, reduced mobility of the person, dealing with the wheelchair, dealing with additional support systems that they have to provide for the individual, and what help is there for that person? There's not much, Mr. Chairman. If they need to move into a different kind of housing, the waiting list is long and the paperwork is formidable, to say the very least. They have to deal with transportation issues. Is there support within this department for those kinds of issues? I would suggest that it is minimal and tough to get. Hard for these people to make their way through the paperwork.

I know that in my constituency office my executive assistant spends a great deal of time supporting these people through the hallways of government to try and access the kinds of resources they need, and that's a real shame, Mr. Chairman, because these are people who would like to live in dignity, who would like to be a part of this vision that the government has for seniors, and clearly they are not. So if the minister could address why that is.

When I take a look at their business plan and I take a look at the second measure that they have in the quality of life category, it says "percentage of . . . applicants receiving the Alberta Seniors Benefit." Mr. Chairman, I don't know why that's a quality of life measure. I'm not exactly sure where you would put that kind of a measure, but people who need the Alberta seniors' benefit, who are eligible for that, are looking at quite a different quality of life than this member is going to look at when she's a senior. I'm not sure that measuring who gets it, who's eligible for it, is a reasonable way to measure quality of life. It's 99.3 percent in '98-99, 99.4 percent of those people in '99-2000, and the target is 100 percent for future years. Excellent. That's an excellent target. It isn't a measure of quality of life though. It's a measure of the efficiency of the bureaucracy of the government. I do not think it's truly a measure of the quality of life, and I take great offence that that should be listed as a measure here.

Let's talk about the other one. The percentage of eligible seniors receiving the Alberta seniors' benefit is a new measure, and the targets haven't been established yet. Once again I believe that that is a measure of the efficiency of the government department. It isn't a quality of life measurement.

For quality of life, measuring the success of that would be to go out and survey the seniors and ask them what they think about their quality of life based on input factors like the cost of living, like access to health care, like access to proper housing, like access to transportation systems, like access to cultural activities. Those are quality of life measurements, Mr. Chairman. Let's see what people have to say about that. List those categories; ask them on a scale of 1 to 10 how satisfied they are with the kind of support they get from the government on that. I think we're going to see some very interesting information, and it may point out to this minister where there are some serious deficiencies in the kind of support that this government is providing in terms of meeting what they say is their vision and their mission and their core businesses. So let's get some performance measurements in here that actually measure what it is they're talking about, not government efficiency, although that's important to have too, but let's put those under government efficiency measures. I don't think they're quality of life measurements at all.

Satisfaction measurements. Once again, what do they talk about? They talk about performance factors for government departments. They don't talk about anything to do with quality of life issues. So I think that's very important to be addressed.

Before I run out of time, I just wanted to spend a little bit of time on the Auditor General's comments. Seniors was taken out of Community Development, which is where it was and where the seniors' issues are addressed in this particular report. Most of them are with regard to housing assistance, Mr. Chairman. I would like the minister to update us in terms of what's happening with the issues outlined by the Auditor General.

He talked about how this ministry "provides subsidized housing to Albertans in need" and how "housing programs are administered by management bodies on behalf of the Ministry." How effective are those management bodies? Do we see the costs of those being lower than what they used to be when government did that service itself?

You know, a lot of people think that the government isn't an efficient provider of some services, but in fact that's not true. If you take a look at things like road building, the government is much more efficient. Particularly when you take a look at the long term and the cost of repairs and standards, the government can be very efficient. So does the minister have some information available on whether or not these management bodies are providing better service and more efficiency and lower costs than the government did when they did it themselves? Any documentation he has on that, I'd be happy to take a look at.

Then it talks about the ministry maintaining "an infrastructure of government owned housing projects, and supplies additional housing units," and so on. The issue is that there are increasing numbers of families and seniors needing assistance, such an issue that the Auditor General remarked on it. We need to know what it is that this minister is doing about this, how they're shortening up the waiting lists, how they're providing more housing: important issues, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad to have the opportunity in this special longer debate today to be able to do a part 2 and continue on. I had started out by saying that I was looking at three areas: seniors' health, seniors' housing, and other issues that have arisen around seniors' financial situations. In the first part I had spoken about health care premiums and why weren't they eliminated, access to dental, concerns around home care and availability of home care and housekeeping, comments on hearing aids and glasses, the need for doctors trained in gerontology, medical research on women and osteoporosis.

Just two more issues I'd like to do under that general category of health. The first is exercise. This is interesting, because the generation of seniors that we have now is not a generation that grew up with Club Fit and Spa Lady. I mean, essentially these folks worked, and that was their fitness. So they are not as aware as generations that will be following them of proper exercise, access to facilities, perhaps even being trained in the use of equipment or in rules of the game.

One of the points that's been raised to me, again by Wanda Cree from the Seniors Community Health Council, is that it's difficult for seniors to get good information about exercise without paying a significant amount of money, and I'm aware that seniors may not be terribly comfortable going to some of the fitness centres that are around now. The point she's making is that seniors' centres should be offering more of these types of programs, but it's difficult for them because they're not receiving funding. So I was very happy to hear that my years of pounding away saying that there should be some kind of operational funding for seniors' centres is being taken seriously by the minister and that the minister has charged the Seniors Advisory Council and the Alberta Council on Aging to work together on a study about operational funding for seniors' centres. I'm very glad to hear that. It was worth it. Sometimes you wonder if you're being successful. It's nice to see when you are.

But I think that's an interesting point that she's raised about essentially training for exercise. It's just not part of the current generation's life experience that you need training for exercise or even different things that people could be doing. It just isn't part of their life. They just worked and got their exercise through their work, and now they're not working anymore. We do know now that exercise is a part of health and wellness, so what can we be doing to promote this? Certainly putting it through the seniors' centres seems like a good suggestion to me.

Earlier I was looking for the reference for one point – and I've found it – coming from Ed Gordon. This was around prescription drugs. He and others are suggesting – and this isn't the first time I've heard this – “reduce the charge for prescription drugs from 30% back to the 20% that it was prior to 1993.” I know somewhere else – I'm sure I'll find it in my notes as I go – there was a suggestion that there be no more than a $25 charge for prescriptions. We are more and more managing seniors' health through pharmaceuticals, and it's not unusual to have a senior on eight to 12 prescriptions. Those all start to add up on the pocketbook pretty seriously. So that's the suggestion.

My question, then, to the minister is: what's being done about that? What kinds of studies are up? What amount of money is budgeted for it? How much will be allowed for that? What kind of assistance is available around that?

One of my colleagues had talked about the home improvement grant, and there was a RRAP program in conjunction with the federal government. Now, I'm noticing that there is a home adaptation grant line. It's appearing under the housing budget. Yeah, 3.2.1, home adaptation program grants. Based on what I'm seeing from the seniors, they don't know that this is still available, so I'm wondering exactly what this program is. Perhaps it's just on your web site and is easily downloaded and sent over to me, and I apologize for asking if in fact it is on the web site. But obviously the seniors are not aware of it because I've got several people that are commenting on the loss of it.

Particularly when we look at increased prices in utilities and we add to that the government's desire to have seniors staying in their own homes, I think we may all be well served if they were able to make adaptations to their homes to make them more energy efficient both for electricity and for heating. So that was from Ed Gordon.

Now, two more things under health care. One is – and there's no specific program for this; it's just a situation that I keep seeing come up – what's the department got to offer in these circumstances? I understand that there is an expectation that people should be able to look after themselves, but that isn't always true. Certainly there's an expectation out in this society that when you get sick, somehow you'll be cared for, and people just don't understand that that is not a seamless function. I note that in a copy of the Alberta Council on Aging News, the May/June 2001 issue under Val's Views, she tells a story about a couple where one of them fell and was injured and was hospitalized for a period of time.

The spouse at home in fact was not very independent, had been relying on the wife to do the grocery shopping, take the dry cleaning in, do the laundry, clean up the house, get the prescriptions, and all of those little trips back and forth. He in fact was blind and all of a sudden was faced with strangers coming into his home going: “Okay. Your wife won't be back. She's in hospital for a month. She won't be back until the end of the month, so now we've got to look after you.” They discovered very quickly this is not a seamless system. There's a lot of places where you can fall through the cracks: in trying to get respite care, in trying to get home care workers. She details the concerns about personal care attendants supplied by a private company and the concern that they'd “been given minimal domestic and dietary training.” I've certainly heard that concern before, and what we're coming to here is standards of care.

I'm curious as to why there was a lack of support – or was it a government policy? – for the Member for Calgary-West's private member's Bill 203 to establish a committee that would look at developing standards of care. I've raised this issue of standards of care a number of times in the Assembly. There seems to be reluctance on behalf of the government to go down that path. I'm interested in hearing from the Ministry of Seniors the reasons why there is so much resistance to developing standards of care, which would cover wide-ranging levels of care.

I have often heard the complaint about limited domestic and dietary training that they'll come in, but they won't actually make you a hot meal. They'll make sandwiches, and maybe they'll open something that's in the pantry, a can of soup or something. Then the person is asked to sign a form that says that the care worker has been there for 45 minutes. In fact, they may well not have been, and there's a question about whether travel time is included in the time the individual is signing off for or not. So I think there's an issue there.

So I highly recommend this. I'm sure there are staff members in the department that regularly read the Alberta Council on Aging newsletter, but this is the May/June issue with Val's Views, and I'm particularly talking about that story. It is a good illustration of a story that I've heard many times.

The last issue under the health area that I want to talk about is elder abuse. I did receive a very thoughtful letter from Catholic Social Services talking about their elderly adult resource service, which is nicknamed EARS, and the elder abuse intervention team. They point out that while many seniors do have the resources to be able to extricate themselves and they're not as vulnerable as children, there are seniors who are not. They are too frail. They have a life history of being victims of abuse. They have increased social isolation, family dysfunction: a number of things that add up to this small group of people being very vulnerable and requiring outside intervention.

They raise a very good point, and that is that we are now dealing with a number of seniors that arrived in Canada as immigrants and haven't fully integrated, and that can be for a number of reasons. More frequently I'm seeing family reunification where there are grandparents who are being brought over to join the rest of the family. That's hopefully a good thing. They may not have ever really learned the culture and how to get around on the bus and how to use the bank machines and all of those other things that the rest of us take for granted and know very well how to do. They are particularly vulnerable if they are outside of that particular ethnic community.

The plea that I'm making on behalf of these organizations is to consider creating a mandated service for them. They're envisioning caseworkers who are trained in intervention strategies in abuse and have legal and financial resources to implement change. So when I look back on the Protection against Family Violence Act that was originally proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in 1996 and eventually became a government bill and was passed – I mean, there are all kinds of financial resources and legal resources that were in that bill, and I think it might be time for us to look at a similar sort of bill that puts those in place for vulnerable seniors who are victims of elder abuse.

Part of the concern here is that these two programs through Catholic Social Services are really only available in the city of Edmonton. They're not available for outlying regions or for rural areas, and I did not have time to check to see if there was a similar program in Calgary. So there's a very good one here and very good examples to be followed, but we certainly need the support for it, and they need to be able to do the intervention.

Now, I'm moving into the area of seniors' housing. I have had a motion up two years running now – I never had a good enough draw to actually get it up and get it debated – about having the cost of telephones included in the 30 percent subsidized rate that seniors are paying in subsidized housing, the argument being that telephones are no longer a frill, an extra. For anyone that has the medic alert, they work through the telephones. If you don't have a telephone, you can't even have that service. The phone is certainly the first resource that someone who's hurt or in trouble would need to dial 911, but it goes well beyond that in that it's also a contact with the wider world of families and friends, and that's contributing to better mental health and better socialization.

So I urge the government to consider including that. I mean, it's $22 or $23 for a base telephone rate at this point, which may not seem a lot of money to members of the Assembly but can be significant when the disposable income for a senior is less than $100 a month. That's a big chunk of it. I'm looking at someone that's contacted me from one of the seniors' residences, and they're again asking about that telephone subsidy and again asking why they're still paying health care premiums.

The other thing that has happened with housing – and I know the government's aware of this, but the situation is improving at a glacial pace.

DR. TAFT: Painfully slow?

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, painfully slow.

That's around long-term care beds and new housing alternatives or living alternatives for seniors. We do have a situation where the system is backing up. There aren't enough long-term care beds, so then they've got people staying in lodges and other types of accommodation for much longer than they would have. So now you have a program that was not set up to be dealing with seniors that are that ill, but they are having to. Then people that should be moving into the lodges can't get in because there's not enough room, and now we've got them in my constituency, where I have independent living, where I have apartment buildings with individual suites in them. The building itself is a subsidized seniors' residence, but every senior has their own apartment in there. Those started out as 55 and over, and they were meant to be either for individuals who had to retire early because of some health problem or who were in fact seniors that needed subsidized housing.

They were meant to be independent living units, but what we are seeing now is that they are having to accept people who are more frail and in much more need of assistance, without any sort of consultation with the seniors that were already in there. The buildings are having to become less independent and more care oriented, which is of some distress to the seniors that are already living there. There's no question that it's the lack of long-term care beds that has made that come into being.

Another issue that's raised often by seniors who are living in the subsidized senior residences is that the 30 percent they pay for their rent is based on their gross income, not on their net income. They feel very strongly that it should be based on their net income, in other words on what we would call their take-home pay, rather than on their gross revenue for the month. We've had problems with that in the past, where somebody would cash in a bond or an RRSP and because it appears as a lump sum in their bank account, then all of a sudden they are assessed 30 percent of that huge chunk of money. I mean, eventually we find ways to work that out, but it's quite a frightening experience for a senior to think they're going to lose 30 percent of that kind of income. They feel very strongly, and I'm wondering whether the minister has looked at this at all, considered it.

What is the justification for the policy that they have in place at this time? Considering increased numbers of seniors, is the department looking at sort of grandfathering one type of program and phasing in another type of program? What's being looked at? I mean, I've read all of the studies that have been done by this government, but there are not very many specifics there. A lot of nice words, but it's not clear what direction it's going in, and I'm looking for more detail.

I've also spoken before about portable subsidies. And I'm aware I'm going to run out of time, so I will come back to do part 3 as soon as I can get back on the speaking list. But I'd like to cover having these subsidies being portable, protection of persons in care, standards of care, and then some of the other miscellaneous issues that have been raised with me around programs that were cut by the government that seniors would like to see reinstated. I will return to go over those issues at another time.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak on the budget estimates for the Department of Seniors. It's a new ministry. In talking about budget estimates this year, I've been somewhat critical of the creation of several new ministries. The Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General: that ministry has been split. Finance and Revenue have been split. These splits were difficult to justify in any real way, based on substantive reasons for it. It appeared to us, at least, that these splits and the creation of new ministries was more an attempt to create work, you know, for more Tory MLAs than based on the need for good governance.

However, in the case of a separate ministry for seniors, I think it's a welcome development, a welcome change, and I congratulate the government for making that decision. I wish the minister, who's an experienced member of the cabinet, good luck with his new responsibilities. I think he's well qualified to represent the interests of seniors and to make sure that services are delivered to them.

[interjection] I'm talking about myself too. He'll represent me well.

So the minister, I think, needs to be commended for undertaking this effort and presenting his budget estimates in the way he has.

Seniors, as we all would agree, have paid their dues to our society. They worked hard. They paid their taxes. Now is the time that they need our care and support, and we ought to meet their needs. Their numbers are growing. There's an identifiable need for these services, and the need for these services is growing.

I think when I look at the ministry's core business statement here, "supporting the independence and well-being of seniors," certainly the question of independence and well-being is a very critical one from the point of view of aging seniors. Many seniors, of course, who own homes want to stay in them, and certainly all of them want to live healthy lives in their aging years as much as possible.

Of course, in order to remain healthy, they need to be able to access health care services with reference to their particular needs. It is, I think, well known that seniors in general use more drugs than the rest of us, so their resources get increasingly channeled into paying for the portion of the expenditures that they incur with respect to the use of drugs to remain healthy and to seek a cure of ailments that are related to aging in particular. So I was looking here to see where the new ministry may have undertaken some new initiatives to address, for example, the special needs and the special circumstances which seniors are faced with.

In general, I perhaps should say that in looking through the mission statement, the core business, the goals, the highlights for 2001-2002, I was looking for sort of a statement which would suggest that the minister is willing, as I know he would want to be – in addition to being shepherd of the services and the provision of those services that seniors need – to play an advocacy role as well. So he would become an advocate on seniors' issues, although that statement is not to be found in the text on pages 389 and 390. I would certainly encourage him to view his role, in addition to what's stated here, as seniors' advocate. I know that seniors' interests, seniors' concerns are close to his heart, so I will encourage him to think about inserting in the next year's business plans a commitment to advocating on their behalf.

I know that in 1994, in the midst of the Tory government's budget cuts, the government started requiring Alberta seniors, for example, to begin paying health care premiums. I suspect that this minister may be one of those in the government and also in the Tory party who might in fact favour the scrapping of health care premiums for all Albertans. Certainly there is, I think, a compelling argument that can be made that health care premiums should be scrapped for seniors. Most seniors, unlike many working Albertans, do not have the employers sharing their premium costs. Many Albertans who work may in fact benefit from the employers picking up at least part of these costs.

In the case of seniors where incomes are particularly limited, middle-income seniors in particular, I think they find paying $800, if a senior couple, rather onerous when their expenditures related to use of needed drugs continue to go up as their ailments increase with age. So I would ask the minister to seriously consider standing up for seniors and to call for abolition of health care premiums. The seniors are a good group to start with in order for us to move towards scrapping health care premiums for all in Alberta and to become the ninth province in the country to do so.

Secondly, in the health care issues I think there's a need for a seniors' universal drug plan which covers medically needed drugs for all seniors without seniors having to pay exorbitant prices for the use of these drugs in order just to remain healthy. So that would be my second proposal to the minister. It's certainly not in the works. It's not in the budget, but I'm trying to sort of focus my comments on what I see is missing in the budget rather than what is. I'll come to what is, also, if time permits.

I am aware that the minister recently met with several seniors' groups. These seniors' groups have been urging this government, and I'm sure they've urged this minister, to work towards the elimination of health care premiums at the earliest opportunity. The question is: will the minister take these concerns seriously and work towards putting an end to this unfair, regressive tax that especially hurts seniors? I would like him to comment on it to see what kind of actions he might be contemplating taking on behalf of seniors on this issue.

One of the other casualties of the government's budget cuts over the years is the partial rebate of property taxes to seniors, that dealing with education taxes. This was a very useful program in that it encouraged seniors to remain in their own homes longer rather than having to sell those houses and move into institutional care.

In my own constituency there's a very large number of seniors. Many of them live in their own homes, and with the costs of heating and electricity going up, they are very concerned and express these concerns to me at the door and through phone calls to my office. They're very concerned about their ability in the future to be able to own their own homes and stay in them as long as they choose. They may have to make the decision to sell them for economic reasons, not for reasons that they cannot any longer live alone or independently in those homes.

On the surface many seniors look rich because they are owners of homes. Their homes are all paid for. They may be home rich, but most seniors are income poor, and I think that needs to be kept in mind. So the question there is: is the government considering bringing back the seniors' property tax rebate, at least for lower income seniors who own their own homes? I guess if the answer is no, is the minister thinking of taking an initiative in the future? Is he opposed to it? Seniors in my constituency certainly will be interested in hearing from the minister on his reasons either for or against reinstating that rebate program.

The next set of questions that I have deal with waits for home care and waits for admission into long-term care facilities. I do frequently receive complaints that waiting times are too long. I appreciate that the primary responsibility to address this rests with the Ministry of Health and Wellness, but I also notice that one of the key strategies that the ministry has stated here is to play a leadership role, to "provide leadership, organizational assistance, consultation and facilitation services" to support seniors' organizations and also to co-ordinate, I guess, across ministries the programs that seniors need and access. So I wonder what the Minister of Seniors is doing to address this problem.

Mr. Chairman, a few other comments here. I was looking at page 391, the ministry statement of operations by program. I apologize to the minister for being absent during most of the time he was making his introductory comments. Some of these questions may have been addressed already. If that is the case, I do apologize for it. I had to go out to attend to some other urgent business.

There is a question here that I have on the debt servicing costs on page 391. The debt servicing costs budgeted for this year, for example, the current budget year, are smaller than for the previous two years, information on which is included here. Is it because of the drop in the mortgage rates or interest rates, or is the need declining? How do we explain this? So some comment on it, if possible, would be helpful.

A couple of other matters here that caught my attention have to do with program 3, special purpose housing. There's an item, 3.2.3, support to special purpose housing providers, with $18.6 million allocated there. That's a figure that's about 50 percent more than the previous year's actual estimated expenditure. First of all, what form does this support take, and secondly, would the minister kindly comment on this 50 percent increase, which is a fairly substantial increase? I just was curious as to how come we have this increase here?

Community-based homelessness housing. There is again $3 million mentioned here, and there are several initiatives that seem to be indicated here. I just wondered what those initiatives are. Does the minister consider $3 million adequate, or is the figure there because that's all that the government can afford? Is this sufficient to meet the needs associated with these initiatives related to community-based homelessness?

Assistance to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation at 3.2.6. I notice a substantial increase there of about $10 million. I think that is to be welcomed, because the needs for housing are growing for seniors, and this increase in assistance to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation I think will be very, very useful.

There are a couple of highlights for the year 2001-2002, two items at the bottom of page 389 that I was looking at. "Provide $31.7 million to support the Healthy Aging Partnership Initiative." I wonder who the partnership is with and how this money can be accessed. Is it a new initiative, or is it something that has been there and more money has been added to it? It looks like it might be a new initiative, and that's why I'm asking the minister to provide some basic information on it: what exactly it means, how it can be accessed, if it's new, what specific population it targets to service.

The second item there: "Provide a $7.9 million increase in funding for seniors and family and special purpose housing providers to assist with maintenance and rising operating costs." Again there's a mouthful of things here: seniors and family and special purpose housing providers. Seniors and families: are these the ones that are living independently in their own homes? Is "special purpose housing providers" a reference to special subcategories that refer to the activities of providers or what? So I'm a little bit unclear about what this particular allocation of money is about and what its purpose is.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude, and I'll let other members of the Assembly speak to the estimates. Thank you.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to discuss the new Department of Seniors this afternoon. Certainly it was part of the provincial election campaign of the Liberals in Edmonton-Gold Bar to advocate that there be a stand-alone ministry. I think it's a very, very good idea that this ministry is now independent. I thought that to keep the size of the cabinet down, we could have eliminated the junior Ministry of Health and Wellness and had a stand-alone ministry without increasing the size of the cabinet. Regardless, I congratulate the government for initiating this stand-alone ministry, and I wish the minister the very best as this ministry develops its programs and policies. Certainly seniors and seniors' issues in this province cannot be taken for granted.

I hope we're not going to continue to consider that the rising costs of health care are the fault of seniors. We have heard countless times, Mr. Chairman, that the cost of health care is increasing because the seniors percentage of the population of Alberta is increasing. Well, we all know that is simply not the truth. There is 10 percent of the population of this province that is over 65. To cite the rising population of seniors as a reason for health care costs going up is again simply not true. I don't think it is appropriate to use seniors as a scapegoat for rising costs in health care. This negative stereotyping of seniors in this provinces is simply not supported by any data.

Donna Wilson, a professor of nursing at the university, did a very extensive study, and her conclusion was that a small minority are heavy users of the health care system. Most of Alberta seniors are healthy, happy, and able and willing to live independently. I would encourage the minister to ensure that Albertans who are over the age of 65 have that choice to live independently. Even if they have some health problems, I think that there should be a program in place to ensure that they can live independently in their own homes as long as possible.

Now, there's the CHOICE program, which has been initiated by the Capital health region. I believe it came as an offshoot of a pilot project in San Francisco, and it worked well with seniors. To the credit of the regional health authority they have experimented with it here. It is working well. I understand it is an expensive program, but it works well. I would encourage the minister to take programs of this nature and expand them, because it would be, I think, appropriate to do.

We see that in the budget there is an increase in ministry support services. I'm curious about that. I understand the department has now grown and was previously only one part of a bigger department. Before I get into my questions regarding the reasons why this spending increase has gone on, I would encourage the minister and his officials – and some hon. members of this Assembly may be astonished at this – to study what the Japanese nation is doing in its care of the elderly. The percentage of Japanese citizens who are over 65 is significantly higher. If they can't do some studies on the Internet or through the fine library that's downstairs, I would encourage the minister not to travel alone but to take several members of the department and go to Japan at taxpayers' expense and study exactly what the Japanese are doing and come back and apply that to long-term planning in Alberta. So when the day comes that we have an aging population, then everything can be in place so that we can deal with it effectively.

The first example that comes to mind of the lack of long-term planning is the manpower study that was done on the shortage of health care professionals in this province by Alberta Health in conjunction with the regional health authorities. It was squirreled away in the library. It was hidden from public view, and now look at the mess. I even see in the paper today where there's cancellation of surgeries at the Royal Alex because of a shortage of nurses. They have pared back six weeks early for the summer season because they simply do not have the nurses. If that study had been acted on three years ago, then we wouldn't be in this trouble today. I would bring that to the minister's attention so that if there are some long-term studies, the minister and his officials can start planning now for the future. There won't be nearly the need for crisis management through appropriation bills, which is currently the trend.

Now, program 2, services to seniors, on page 387. Under 2.1 a number of items are seeing slight increases from the 2000-2001 budget, but since a number of those are expected to be over budget for 2000-2001 – this is according to the preliminary, Mr. Chairman. The preliminary actual amount reported in this year's budget for some of these is actually dropping from the comparable 2000-2001. Why was it deemed necessary to increase spending throughout last year but it is not necessary to continue? Could the minister also please tell us what the money was spent on, tell us all the things that are going to be available this year?

In the time that I have, will this minister tell us if seniors can expect an increase in benefits yearly to match inflation and the rising cost of living? I understand that the federal government was even contemplating in 2001 having an exclusive seniors' benefit. [interjection] Yes, we as Liberals considered that we have an increasing cash benefit to match inflation. Such a program would lead to yearly increases in the budget but would bring stability to recipients and the ability to anticipate what their future benefits will be. It also would provide the security of knowing that benefits will increase to match rising costs of living. Static expenditures do not allow for that.

Now, I don't have the page here, but I see a significant increase in grants for the Alberta special-needs assistance program. That's needed certainly. I would be curious if the minister could provide an update to me on the turnaround time on the application for these grants. I know the staff in the Alberta special-needs assistance program go out of their way with constituency-based applications, particularly with the rising costs of energy. The special-needs assistance program was even quoted when the crisis was at its zenith before Christmas as a solution for seniors who may be cold or in the dark this winter. The turnaround time for the special-needs assistance program will certainly have to be turned around.

When we think of fees and fee changes in this province and how it might affect seniors or how it might affect how the government thinks of seniors, I have to look at the Community Development fee changes for the Provincial Museum of Alberta, for the museum in Drumheller, the field station outside Drumheller, Rutherford House, and the Frank Slide Interpretive Centre. Seniors' entrance fees are going up a dollar at the Provincial Museum of Alberta. At the museum in Drumheller they're going up a dollar. At the field station they're also going up a dollar. At Rutherford House they're going up 50 cents, and at the Frank Slide they're going up $2.50.

Now, I would have thought, you know, that at nonpeak times in the spring and fall perhaps we could keep those fees for seniors where they were if not eliminate them entirely. It's sort of a reflection on the whole argument of Alberta health care premiums for seniors. If you put the price up, that amount of money, if you're on a fixed income and three or four seniors want to go on a day trip, is a lot. Other people may think it's small and it's insignificant, but I think it's a reflection on just what this government thinks of seniors. I certainly hope not, but I was looking at that and thinking to myself: those price increases can mean a big difference on whether seniors will visit the facility or not.

Now, in getting back to increasing cash benefits to match inflation, I would strongly encourage the minister to adopt our policy and match the Alberta seniors' benefit to inflation. We need to look at the boosting in funding here. I think it's $4.1 million for the special-needs assistance program. Now, I've gone through that, and I have one more item that I would like to briefly discuss before I take my seat and cede the floor to my colleague from Edmonton-Centre.

It's regarding seniors' housing grants. I had the privilege of attending along with the mayor the 100th birthday celebration of a senior in Montgomery Legion Place. You enter the Montgomery Legion Place – it has over 300 units. We need more of this type of housing, not less. I think it's the responsibility of the government, regardless of whether it's here or whether it's in Saskatchewan or British Columbia, to provide affordable, safe housing for seniors. The word here is affordable. The private sector seems to be taking care of the high-end units. Many of the seniors, particularly women, can't afford those, and I would encourage the minister to ensure that there are lots and lots of units built across this province at this time, because they're needed. They're what people can afford.

I would like to ask: what is the department's policy on providing support to housing providers and to seniors directly? What is the balance between the two, providers and seniors, and will that be changing?

With those questions, Mr. Chairman, I believe I will take my seat. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. There were just a few other points and comments that I had received from people that I wanted to bring up. In this, my part 3, I've already addressed a number of issues under health and quite a few issues under housing. There are just a few more I want to go over.

I should make a point here of saying that in all the correspondence and comments and opinions I received from people that I've been using in my comments today, the agencies that have responded were very complimentary to the department and made a particular point of noting that they felt that the staff had always worked to try and resolve issues or try and make something happen. I think that that's a very good sign of the dedication of the staff, that are understanding that the endpoint is what's important here and not allowing bureaucracy to stand in the way.

Now, Operation Friendship is pointing out something that in fact has wider implications. They're talking about the shortage of nursing home or long-term care beds, and I had spoken of this before. It's interesting because they're dealing with people that are more difficult to deal with. They have addictions or chronic mental health, a bad lifestyle, or a combination of all of those. She does point out that the government has been aware since 1981 of the need to be dealing with the hard to house, but she's raising the point that they can't find any place to move people when they need more care than their facilities are designed and funded to offer. So they end up trying to cope with people who in fact need a higher level of care.

That's a point that I raised in the second section, that was around the subsidized seniors and the independent living and the whole dearth of long-term care backing everything up all the way down the line. That's exactly what she's bringing out here, so it is an issue. I know it's been brought up in the long-term care report and in the impact on aging report, but we're still struggling with this, and the facilities are not becoming available fast enough.

The other issue she raises – and again this is not specific to the particular community she's dealing with. Early discharges from hospitals, both for physical and mental problems, is a really large problem for seniors without families to help. They have trouble getting out, maybe dealing with stairs. They can't shop or find something proper to eat, get their prescriptions filled. She in particular is dealing with people who are illiterate, but again this crosses communities, because if you have a language barrier, it's almost the same thing. They're not understanding directions for care as well. So that's the gap I spoke about earlier, where it's not seamless.

I also heard from some folks in Ansgar Villa. They're raising a lot of the same points. The subsidized housing should be 30 percent of net. They talked about dental care. They note: "Mr. Klein announced free dental care for children, why not include seniors? When our teeth fall out, they don't grow back." They're talking about the increase in seniors' benefits in general as they start to look at the cost of food, gasoline, heating, and bus fares. Everything is going up, and their incomes don't go up. So it's very important, and we need to look at indexing whatever assistance we are providing.

Always there are questions about what happened to the property tax rebate program and the renters' assistance program. Now, there was a series of I think it's close to 20 programs that were cut or reduced by the government in '93-94, and every day there are seniors saying: "When are we going to get some of that stuff back? We helped. We gave up our 5 percent. Why is the government restoring everyone else to a level they were at before these cuts or restoring them in some way, everybody except the seniors?" I have to agree. Certainly, again, if we're going back to that overriding principle of keeping people active and healthy and independent in their own homes, the issues around property taxes are ones that we're going to have to deal with here.

The other issue that's new to that mix is the cost of energy and of electricity, particularly for people that are living in high-rise apartments or condominiums. Once again, I'd point out that they are paying both a higher rate for the utility and their rebate is lower because the government has allowed them to be classified as a commercial user and are not recognizing that this is residential. For seniors in condominiums this is an enormous struggle, and it's not going to help any of us here if they end up having to sell or move out of their condo because they can't afford the condo fees anymore and then are looking for some kind of subsidized housing from the government. That is all just going to back upstream and end up in the minister's lap, and we have to be proactive about that and, at the same time, be fair. I think that's going to be the struggle.

Another woman, Mrs. Moore from Calgary, was asking about the provincial property tax and said that "fixed-income senior homeowners need larger rebates on electricity and [natural] gas." So same point being raised again.

I wasn't able to get into a number of the other specific questions that I had for the minister. When I sort out the notes, what I will do is pass them on to him in writing and ask them to be included and to be answered as well. Even with an extended debate period today, I'm finding I didn't have enough time to get out all the questions and issues that I wanted to raise with the minister.

My thanks to the House leaders for allowing this ministry to be designated as a special debate time. I appreciate that very much. Thank you for the opportunity.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the hon. Minister of Seniors, is there anybody else who wishes to speak?

The hon. Minister of Seniors to close debate.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the participants for their questions. I will be trying to get back and respond to the relevant questions upon a review of them. There are, as was pointed out, a lot of issues that we have to deal with. A lot of the questions raised were on cross-ministry stuff, so you can see that our cross-ministry initiative is very appropriate.

I would like to close by saying thank you for your input. We'll try and get back to you with as good answers to the relevant questions as possible. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 4 and 6.

I'm also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 11, 12, and 13.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After question period today and pursuant to Standing Order 40, I plan to rise in the House and ask for unanimous consent to debate the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to stop making decisions that could provoke provincewide job action by teachers, interfere in free collective bargaining, and have already raised serious concerns on the part of school boards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and table five copies of the Power Pool of Alberta 2000 annual report.

I'm also pleased to table five copies of the Balancing Pool annual report for the year 2000. This is their first year of operation, and I note as I table this that the average price of electricity in Alberta today for the month is 9.2 cents per kilowatt-hour. This is about a 30 percent decrease from January 1, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table today five copies of a letter dated May 17, 2001, addressed to me and signed by Dr. Morag Pansegrau, the chairperson of the board of trustees of St. Albert Protestant schools.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. I'm tabling five copies of a resolution passed on May 20 by the Alberta Teachers' Association annual representative assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter addressed to the Premier by Mr. Will Lusena of Calgary regarding his opposition to the proposed Kananaskis FMA.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the benefit of the Assembly I have a chart today to table. It's entitled Natural Gas Prices for Electricity Generation. It's from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter by the CEO of the Workers' Compensation Board to an injured worker in Calgary. This was dated March 27 and indicated that he would be getting a wheelchair replacement. As of this date he is still waiting for a wheelchair to replace the one that was damaged, and he is a prisoner in his own home.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very honoured and pleased to rise in the House today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of energetic and enthusiastic grade 6 students from St. Teresa of Avila school in Red Deer-North. They are accompanied by their teachers Ms Shari Schoenberger and Mr. Ken Griffith and their parent helpers Mrs. Carol Havell, Mrs. Kate Kuhn, Mrs. Erma Brady, Mrs. Angela Alvarez, and Mrs. Laurie Gilbertson. I would ask that they all rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you a number of students from the Argyll Centre in my constituency, where virtual learning is occurring. There are seven students and eight adults. The group leader and teacher is Mr. Mark Karstad and the parent helpers are Mrs. Donna Howard, Mrs. Laura Warman, Mrs. Judy Wollman, Mr. Trevor Smolski, Mrs. Cheryl Schulz, Mrs. Sati Singh, Mr. Edmund Howard, and the students. I would ask that they all rise now and receive the very warm welcome of our Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly my assistant from my constituency office, Whitney Issik. She's come to meet with some different departments and help me out in my office here in Edmonton for the day. Could you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, Whitney.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Missing Children's Week

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the government of Alberta I proclaim May 20 to May 26, 2001, as Missing Children's Week in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, our society is evaluated as a just, caring, fair, and honourable society in direct proportion to the compassion, dignity, and even love that we give to our frail elderly, to other vulnerable souls, and souls like our children. In Alberta parents support all of our children, their growth and development. Surely together our goal must be that every child grow up secure, safe, and capable of achieving their full potential, successful at life, and most of all loved by that family.

A missing child is every parent's worst nightmare. The morbid fear, the overwhelming guilt, and the anxiety consume every waking moment. Thankfully most parents and children never endure such a grievous separation. For those that do, we stand by them or perhaps we search in teams to recover the child. We all too frequently, as in the case of sweet Jessica Koopmans, attend a final service of memorial.

This week many communities are joined in raising awareness of child safety through the Child Find Alberta organization, who reminds parents and children of the importance of staying safe as families, a reminder to our communities, too, to protect their most vulnerable by staying alert to danger and by being ever watchful for a child.

Mr. Speaker, 63,712 children went missing in Canada in the past year, and 8,832 children went missing in Alberta in 1999. More data will come out on the 25th of May. While most children that were reported missing are found or returned home, some are never found.

To this House I commit both to prompting parents and teaching children to be safe and to assisting children to understand their responsibilities and rights as well and commit to all that we will serve our children better if we join forces in this proclamation.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May 25 is National Missing Children's Day, a day to celebrate those children who have been safely returned to their families, a day to offer hope to those families who are still searching, and a day to mourn those children who will never return.

Three symbols are associated with this week: a child's teddy bear, a crossed blue ribbon, and our porch lights. The teddy bear signifies the love and the security we want for all children. The blue ribbons can be found posted next to child-friendly sites on the web. The porch lights are those that we will all leave on on Friday of this week, National Missing Children's Day, to light the way home for missing children.

Tragically for us Jessica Koopmans has become a fourth symbol, a symbol that we haven't done all we can to protect our children, a symbol that reminds us we have failed to prevent evil from invading a child's world and a community, a symbol that reminds us we must redouble our efforts to ensure every child is victim proofed, and a symbol that reminds us that only through community action can we create safe, caring environments for children and prevent future tragedies. Child Find Alberta, Missing Children's Network Canada, and Our Missing Children are but a few of the organizations we can support.

We must do more. We must ensure that our schools have the resources to help children grow into healthy adults. We must ensure that child and family services are in a position to help those in need of assistance. Most importantly, we must create a community and a culture where the lives of children and families are rendered the sanctity that they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main Official Opposition question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Water Quality Standards

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Environment confirmed that Alberta has among the highest standards of drinking water in Canada. Setting high standards is a good start but not the full solution to the problem. Walkerton demonstrates that standards alone are not sufficient protection. My questions are to the Premier. What provisions are there for safeguarding, testing, and monitoring water quality in Alberta so that we can make sure that our water is safe?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's been some time since I was involved in that portfolio, so I will have the hon. minister respond.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, all the water treatment facilities are operated by trained and certified staff members. So that's the first thing: we have quality staff operating those.

The second thing is that as they do their water treatment, they are constantly monitoring their own water. We had a recent incident in Grande Prairie where a piece of equipment shut down. They immediately knew that they had a problem, and they immediately put out a boil water order. So that's the second thing that happens: the operators constantly monitor what's happening in their own water treatment plants.

The third thing that happens is that we do spot and random checks constantly throughout this province, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that everything is operating as it should be so that Albertans can be assured of the safety of their drinking water.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: which ministry has the ultimate authority and responsibility to act when standards are violated?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there are both federal and provincial agencies that have the authority to respond, but as it relates to Alberta, to this province, it's my understanding that it is the Minister of Environment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: what are the remedies or penalties for the violation of these standards?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, relative to the intricacies and the details of fines and other punitive measures that might be taken, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, once again, we do enforce our standards through a number of procedures. First of all, if there's a problem in a water treatment plant, we will go and enforce our standards on that plant, and we will say to the municipality or whoever that you must meet these standards and enforce those standards to maintain our high-quality standards and ensure them. So through our constant monitoring, our constant spot-checks, the randomness of our checks, we very carefully monitor this.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Continuing to the Premier: how does the government's plan to increase privatization of water testing improve the safety of Alberta's water supply?

MR. KLEIN: I don't know the extent to which there are plans to privatize water testing, but I would assume – no, Mr. Speaker; that's incorrect. I wouldn't assume. I would take it as a matter of fact that whoever is contracted to test water would have to abide by the standards that would be set by the Department of Environment and to some degree, as it relates to public health, by the department of health.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When they move to the privatization model, are they considering the issue of increased penalties, the addition of sanction or some means to make sure that the private sector does follow the rules that the public servants are now dealing with?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the process to ensure that the rules are being followed, again I'll have the hon. minister respond.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly as we move to privatization, it's just like anything else: it will be constantly monitored. Just as we monitor and check on our water treatment plants, so we monitor and check on the people that are actually doing the testing. Once again, the fact that we move to privatization does not lower the standards. It only allows the private sector to do that. We can all have confidence in Alberta's water.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not questioning the standards at all. The question again is: as we move to more privatization, will there be the same kind of confidence available for Albertans to make sure that their water is safe, that they'll have confidence both in the process and in the carrying out of those tests?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that ultimately the buck stops here. Whether it's a member of the Alberta public service or whether it's a contracted service, if it is a government responsibility, the buck stops here. In other words, eventually the minister and perhaps the Premier or the government as a whole are held accountable no matter who provides the service, whether it's the private sector or public-service employees.

Meridian Dam

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. The Meridian dam, if it's ever built, would be an Infrastructure project. Why is this department not leading the feasibility study?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm somewhat surprised by the question from the hon. member, because she's been around here for some time and should know that Infrastructure does not build dams anymore.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Minister of Environment. Why is the Minister of Environment leading the study into the feasibility project of the Meridian dam when his department is supposed to be protecting our water resources, not developing dam projects?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, in the first place, we're not developing dam projects, Mr. Speaker, and we are not leading a feasibility study. This is a project that has been talked about for at least 20 years. In the past there were commitments made that when Saskatchewan was prepared to contribute a certain amount of money to a feasibility study, we would go forward with a feasibility study. It should be noted also that the federal Liberal government has done a considerable amount of engineering work already in the past on this project.

Now, what we're looking at, Mr. Speaker, really is a cost-benefit analysis. What it is: how does it affect the environment? I mean, our job is to protect the environment, and before any project like that is built, we must be able to see how this protects the environment. The other part of our job at Environment is water management. So part of our job is to manage the water, which is a very scarce resource in this province, and we will do that as well.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister then: can he tell us why his department is leading the charge on the study of the Meridian dam when he potentially stands to benefit from this project?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a bit of an innuendo there, quite frankly, and I think it's totally inappropriate. I do not in any way benefit. I'm not sure what she's suggesting by that innuendo. The dam certainly isn't in my constituency. I have no personal benefit out of this. So how would I benefit? I'm not sure, and I resent that innuendo.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend the Alberta Teachers' Association held its annual representative assembly in Edmonton, including a special session Sunday afternoon right on the steps of this Legislature. I've never seen teachers as angry as those attending the ATA assembly with what they consider to be this government's unjustified interference in their negotiations with school boards. My questions are to the Premier. Why has this government decided not to leave it up to school boards and to the ATA to decide what constitutes a fair and reasonable salary adjustment for this province's teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as has been said so strongly in this Legislative Assembly before, we are not getting involved in the collective bargaining process. What we have done is we have put in a line item guaranteeing the teachers of this province at least 6 percent and have left the flexibility for the various school boards to negotiate higher if they deem that's where the money should go. It also gives them the flexibility to put those extra dollars into other classroom activities, and it's based on the priorities identified by the local school districts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Premier as well. Why is the government putting the province's school boards in a no-win situation by not providing them with sufficient resources to both improve classroom conditions and pursue fair salary settlements in their negotiations with teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the hon. leader of the third party deems to be fair, but I'm telling you that if I had in a business plan a 19 percent increase over three years, I would think that that was fair, plus an absolute figure of 6 percent to accommodate a minimum raise for the teachers. I would deem that to be more than fair, and I'm sure if the hon. member were still a university professor and if he knew for absolutely sure that he was going to get 6 percent – well, maybe not. I don't know. But I'm sure that most professors, if they knew that they were going to get 6 percent – 6 percent at least – would be more than happy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It looks like the government is ready to bring in wage controls like Mr. Trudeau did in the '70s. Why is this government determined to pick a fight with teachers by singling them out for its new policy of wage controls?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, since when has offering money been related to picking a fight? Never. When we say, "Here's 6 percent, and here's the ability to negotiate more," that is hardly picking a fight. We have no intention of picking a fight with the ATA or the teachers. We value very much teachers in this province and the tremendous contribution they make. There are teachers in this caucus. There are teachers in the Liberal caucus. There's a teacher sitting right over there. It's a wonderful profession, it's a respected profession, and it's for precisely that reason that we put as a line item in the budget a minimum 6 percent increase for teachers. That could hardly be construed as picking a fight.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Provincial Investment Returns

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our province's spending budget has reached a high-water mark of $21 billion. I feel very confident that now we have an excellent minister responsible for money generation.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I really enjoy listening to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. Would you please join with me in listening to him too.

MR. CAO: Thank you.

My question is to the Minister of Revenue. Given the drastically low value of the stock market relative to its peak time, can the minister explain how Alberta's investments are affected?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to respond to the Member for Calgary-Fort. As he rightly said, our investments are substantially affected by how the market bears. Our equity markets have been down over the past year, but I would like to assure this member and all Albertans that our investments are both soundly and prudently invested. It's important to note that we have quite a diversified portfolio, not just in the equities but in fixed income, in real estate, as well as foreign and national equities. Our income is down about $300 million over the past year, and that's in part because the previous year was such a strong year in the equities market. Even this year we will earn a $787 million return on the heritage savings trust fund.

MR. CAO: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to hear that our investment is not tied into the stock market alone.

To the same minister: what is the future forecast for investment income given that the stock market is low?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a challenge to predict any markets, where they're going to go, but in our three-year business planning we do make our estimates of what we would best guess would be our return on our investments. We estimate in this coming year that we'll have about $550 million dollars. That is once again down due to the decline in the markets, but that still is a return on our investment, because about 73 percent of our investment is in fixed income at this stage.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Based on the information that the minister stated here, what is the wisdom of taking risks with Alberta's money by investing in the stock market?

MR. MELCHIN: Once again, Mr. Speaker, it is a prudent investment strategy to invest in the equity markets. The equity markets have outperformed over the long term, and the purpose of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund is to maximize those returns for all Albertans. We should have a portion of our portfolio in the stock markets to ensure that over the long term, not just over any one year – for example, over the last three years we've had an average of about $1 billion in returns because we are in both the equity and fixed income markets.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Premier's Flight to Prince Rupert

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to get clarification on issues relating to the upcoming review of the Conflicts of Interest Act. Last Tuesday the Premier indicated that he had flown on the Syncrude jet to his fishing lodge twice. This was confirmed by his chief of staff. This past Friday the PC Party vice-president confirmed that the party had paid for one such flight. To the Premier: how was the second flight covered?

MR. KLEIN: I understand the same way, Mr. Speaker.

DR. TAFT: Given that the Premier has at various times said that this fund is taxable income and at other times that it is for expenses, can he tell us if it is taxable income or if it is for expenses?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is taking us relative to this. This is party business. It is none of his business. It is personal business. I don't get into whether he received any money for the books he published using a tremendous amount of government research and government information. I don't know if he gets any money for his activities with the Parkland Institute. I don't care, because that's his personal business, and the business he's talking about relative to the fishing lodge is personal business. The simple fact is: those flights were paid for, and they were not paid for by taxpayers' dollars.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier confirm that this fund uses money from tax receipted donations?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would assume, and I don't know how and I don't care how the Liberal Party conducts its fund for its leader. I have an idea. I don't get involved in the intricacies or the details as to how the fund is managed for me. I know it is there. There are no objections, only from the Liberal Party. They don't talk about their own fund. One day they say that it's $500, and the next day they say that it's $1,400. Now it's probably nothing, because they have no money.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules

& Forms, sixth edition, section 410, states the following: "Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities."

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Shooting by Edmonton Police

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Solicitor General. The minister will recall that last week Mr. John Pavic, a resident of Edmonton-Rutherford, was fatally shot by an officer of the Edmonton police tactical squad. Edmonton police have stated that the action was justified because the police officer considered his life to be in danger. My question: given the police must have a strategy to avoid confrontation where possible, why was the police officer in a situation that endangered his life and resulted in the death of Mr. Pavic?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be pleased to provide a response to that question, but the matter is currently under investigation and is the subject of an internal Edmonton Police Service review. Also, in matters of this sort a fatality inquiry is mandatory.

I can say generally that the Edmonton Police Service and all police services across Alberta do have policies and strategies in place designed to avoid confrontation wherever possible. The chief of the Edmonton Police Service has indicated that several attempts were made to talk with the man and get him to put down the knife that he carried. It was apparently requested that the police obtain a warrant before entering the man's apartment, which they did. The police chief has also revealed that a nonlethal taser gun was used to try and subdue the man, but for some reason the taser did not work successfully. My understanding is that the result was that a police officer found himself in a hand-to-hand combat situation with a man armed with a knife and that lethal force was then used.

Mr. Speaker, as always happens in cases of this sort, the investigations and reviews will determine whether policies and practices need to be changed. I'd also like to tell the member that police are taught to protect lives and not to take them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has touted the AISH program as being a nationally recognized program providing adequate compensation for people with disabilities, yet my colleagues and I receive calls on a regular basis indicating that with escalating costs $855 monthly is not enough to live on. My first question is to the minister of human resources. How can the minister expect people in this province to live on $855 a month?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the hon. member and for all Albertans I think we have to expand a little bit on the AISH program. When it is put in such a way in which the question indicated, one would then think that that was the only asset that an AISH person might be eligible for. If that is the case, then I would hope that hon. members would bring situations like that forward, because what we find in an overwhelming majority of cases is the fact that along with that income we have provided some assets that can be exempted from consideration of this person's overall total portfolio. One very, very key ingredient to that is that an AISH person in Alberta could have up to $100,000 of assets and not be deducted in any way. So I think in the matter of fairness – and certainly I know that the hon. member has always shown himself to be one that wants to be fair in these matters – it's important to have a look at the overall situation of an individual or that individual within their family.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Community Development. Does the minister disagree with the strategy to revise AISH as set out in the Full Citizenship March 2001 document prepared by the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities?

Thank you.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities does an incredibly good job in reviewing all the issues that pertain to the disability community, and in fact the member across the way would be very interested to know that we have again taken the lead in this important area by creating now the Alberta disability strategy. It's not yet ready for public release, but I'm sure he'll find some comfort and some greater expansion on the issues in that report once it's finished. It's been arrived at, I should conclude, after provincewide consultations with all the stakeholders that we could possibly get to, literally hundreds of people, dozens and dozens of groups and organizations who advocate for the disability community, none the least of which is this minister.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Premier. Will the Premier clarify for this Assembly what the government's position is on AISH considering that strategy 2 of the Full Citizenship document calls for matching the Ontario maximum of $930 per month, which is an immediate increase in pay to those on AISH of $75 a month?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, things are vastly different in Alberta than they are in Ontario. As far as I know, we're the only province that has a program that is specific to AISH, the assured income for the severely handicapped. I don't know what program or programs exist in Ontario, but I do know that our AISH program is somewhat unique. Perhaps the hon. minister can shed some more light on it.

MR. DUNFORD: It is a matter of some uniqueness, Mr. Speaker. In fact, at a recent national forum the AISH program in Alberta was credited with its ability to respond to the needs of low-income Albertans. But just because we might be doing good doesn't mean we can't do better. As a matter of fact, we're about to embark on a review of all programs and services to low-income Albertans, and certainly we're going to make sure that AISH is a part of all of that in terms of investigation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care System

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the recent provincial election and since, many of the residents of Edmonton-Meadowlark indicated to me that they were concerned about the future of the Misericordia community hospital, which is located in my constituency. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the status of the Misericordia community hospital and its role in the future?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the Misericordia facility is an important acute care facility with the Capital health authority. The facility has recently been expanded and is back to full service status, and in this regard a number of things have happened. There's been a recent opening of a new intensive care unit at the facility. Also, three more operating rooms have been opened, and finally a number of surgery beds have been recently opened with three more to open this summer.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same minister. As health care is one of the major concerns to my constituents, can the minister advise what progress has been made in recruiting doctors to Alberta?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue. Attracting and keeping physicians and other professionals here in the province of Alberta is a top priority. The Canadian Institute for Health Information indicated that from the years 1996 through 2000, if memory serves me correctly, the number of general practitioners increased by 11 percent and the number of specialists increased by 16 percent. From 2000 to 2001, the current year, I'm advised from the College of Physicians and Surgeons through one of their quarterly updates that there were 5,205 physicians on the in-province registers, and this is an increase from the previous year of 161, or 3.2 percent.

We think that we're doing a good job in terms of recruiting physicians. We think that our overall tax structure and fee structures make Alberta a very attractive place for doctors to live and work. We've done a number of things, Mr. Speaker, in not only recruiting but also in the training and retention of physicians. The setting up, for example, of residencies for international medical graduates and also having residencies for rural physicians and increasing the number of physicians that we train in our medical schools have all helped to increase the number of doctors that we have practising in Alberta.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, last week there were media reports about the earlier than usual closing of wards at the Royal Alexandra hospital. This action was in response to the amount of overtime being worked by our nurses. As the health system cannot operate without our nurses, can the minister of health advise what strategies are in place to hire nurses to work in our health facilities?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the new collective agreement with nurses in Alberta we think will go a long ways towards helping recruit and retain registered nurses in the province of Alberta. That agreement includes a number of new and innovative recruitment strategies and retention strategies. I'm advised by regional health authorities that since the ratification of that particular agreement, a number of nurses have been calling wanting to return to work or take refresher courses to allow them to upgrade their skills so that they would be able to return to nursing. We are working with regional health authorities, Mr. Speaker, on a number of fronts.

Perhaps most importantly, though, we've done a recent quality of life survey for nurses. The responses from nurses have been quite instructive and quite interesting. One of the things that nurses indicate would help with their work environment is further education. Nurses have indicated that this is very important. In that regard, we have responded fairly recently with a $10 million program to allow nurses to further their education. That, we think, is going a long ways towards improving the quality of their work environment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Lobbyists Registry

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over two weeks ago after questions from the opposition the Premier committed to having the Minister of Government Services examine the issue of a lobbyists registry in Alberta. Indications were given at the time that this report would be completed within two weeks. My questions are to the Minister of Government Services. Well, given that it has been two weeks, could the minister report on the status? Where is the report?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly right. As a matter of fact, I believe that as of last Thursday it was 14 days. The initial intention was to make sure that we looked at the provincial governments across Canada, looking at their lobbyist registrations as well as finding out what the federal government did for lobbyist registrations. Since that first mandate was put out, we've added a few things. I recently wanted to make sure that the review includes some other key criteria, so that's why the report has not been tabled at this point.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I appreciate the additional work that the minister is putting into this. But given that we already had a report, the Tupper report, and we had a report from the Ethics Commissioner, how much longer are we going to have to wait for this information?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there are those other reports out there, that we are also looking at. Some of the scope of the work that I've expanded on is to look at the cost of such a registry as well as the bureaucracy that such a registry will put in place. Now, the other thing that came up a few days after we talked about costs and the bureaucracy was to look at a definition of what a lobbyist would be, could be, what it would look like. We're expanding our scope into that area as well, and that is a very difficult area to describe and to define. So I'm afraid it's going to take quite a bit longer before this comes forward.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, since I can't get a commitment for this session, could I get a commitment from the minister to table his report when we return for a fall session?

MR. COUTTS: I think the hon. member can be reassured that something will be made available for everyone to take a look at prior to the next session.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Natural Gas Reserves

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy has just returned from his mission to Washington in which he was trying to sell more of Alberta's energy, including natural gas. The government's own data from the EUB show that proven natural gas reserves are dropping every year. At current production levels the proven reserves of natural gas would only last 8.2 years if no new gas reserves were found. The discovery of new natural gas reserves has fallen short of consumption and exports in every year since 1983. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Is the minister at all concerned that proven natural gas reserves have dropped dramatically in the last 10 years and are continuing to decline rapidly?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to correct the member's information in that gas reserves have not dropped substantially. What we've seen with the gas reserves is that it takes more and more to replace them. So in fact two things happen. One, Alberta will always have first call on its own natural resources. Part of the prosperity is the fact that Alberta has more gas, more oil sands, more oil than what it uses itself. I know this is a foreign concept to the New Democrat member, but what happens is that the private sector invests money. That in turn creates jobs, and then the products that are refined from that are sold to other markets, with the exchange coming back to Albertans. In fact, the royalty income that Albertans enjoyed from oil and gas last year was some $10.1 billion Canadian.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister seems unfamiliar with the statistics provided by his own department, does the government's energy policy support an increase in exports of natural gas from Alberta?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, there is always opportunity for this province to export gas, to see the building of a multibillion dollar pipeline in Alliance, that has created tremendous jobs and opportunities for Albertans. In fact, Albertans are world leaders in the technology of Arctic fabrication and the technology of pipeline fabrication and the technology of getting oil from the ground and into markets, the same as natural gas. One of the reasons that Alberta has been able to move ahead in its development of rural Alberta, the many farms that are out there, in the areas of this great province, is because of the oil and gas reserves that sit in the ground, that are worth nothing when they're in the ground and only take value once they become a marketable commodity.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the minister's interesting grasp of economics, what is he doing to address the fact that proven natural gas reserves have dropped every year since 1983? I'm asking for concrete steps.

MR. SMITH: Twelve thousand gas wells will be drilled this year, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Sex Offender Registry

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Solicitor General. More needs to be done to protect society from sex offenders. Our laws today are simply not getting the job done. In recent media interviews the federal Minister of Justice, Anne McLellan, is quoted as saying that a federally administered Canadian police information centre, commonly known as CPIC, could easily provide a national and less expensive alternative to the provincial sex offender registries. Why is Alberta proceeding with the provincial sex offender registry if an existing national information base is already there?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you. I'd like to tell the Assembly that Alberta has been asking the federal government since 1997 to set up a national sex offender registry. Mr. Speaker, talk is cheap. We would like the federal government to take some action and put a national registry in place.

CPIC is not an easy solution. First, the database that they use is outdated. The police have expressed concerns about the effectiveness of the system for its current use, let alone adapting it to a new national registry. Use of the system for a national sex offender registry would require a costly upgrade. In addition, there is no present federal legislation compelling an offender to provide personal information once the sentence is complete.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see the federal minister put her money where her mouth is and put the necessary legislative changes and resources in place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What benefit will there be to Albertans if a provincial sex offender registry is put in place?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government's priority is to protect Albertans and ensure our communities are safe places to live and work. With respect to a sex offender registry, our position has always been that a national registry is our first choice. The thing about sex offenders is that they do not stay in one place. A system that allows them to be tracked between provincial boundaries would be the most effective, but in the absence of a national tracking system, a provincial sex offender registry would at least enable police to track the movement of sex offenders within Alberta.

We also hope to co-ordinate with other provinces that are setting up a registry. Ontario has recently introduced legislation, and I've spoken to the justice minister there. B.C. and Saskatchewan are also looking at introducing similar legislation, and I will speak to them this week. Our hope is that by moving ahead at the provincial level, the feds will start moving ahead at the national.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you. Given that my constituents have asked why chemical castration is not used as an alternative, has the minister considered this alternative?

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry, but there are many details that we're looking at right now. The bottom line, of course, is to protect all Albertans. I'll be recommending to cabinet in the next couple of weeks. Decisions about what it will look like and who will have direct access to it will be made at that time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mobile Community Response Teams

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lack of family resource centres, family violence shelters, or ministry-operated child welfare facilities in some children's service authorities are presenting some significant challenges. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. How soon will the minister be initiating the mobile community response team pilot projects to assist youth and children and families in crisis?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As reported earlier in this Assembly, our mobile response team is going to the northeast quadrant of the city of Calgary. Currently we are almost on the threshold of getting those teams active, but the necessity of bringing all members of the team together, listening very carefully to the needs of the nonprofit groups in the provision of children's services, particularly in the McCall centre and other parts of that general geography, have taken a little longer than we'd hoped, but by later in June and clearly by July these mobile teams will be active in the city of Calgary in the summer months, when I think they'll be most effective.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Yes. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what are the time lines for the evaluation of the pilot projects?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, over the next two years, but clearly over the first year we'll be looking very closely at the effectiveness of that program. Added to that, we're looking at the addition of funds, about $1.2 million this year, for the youth in transition program throughout Alberta, and I would hope that through the addition of those funds, particularly in that centre, we will also be able to look at ways and means of assisting some of the youth and see if together those programs are going to net a positive effect.

If they are not successful or don't show success in the first year, Mr. Speaker, we could certainly look carefully at whether to continue the program. But the indication from Street Teams and other CART teams, child rescue workers both with the police and so on, gives us a lot of confidence that it will be successful. So at least over two years for the pilot projects.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given that some authorities must transfer children to another authority with complete services, when will all authorities become full-service authorities?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. It is a function, however, of economics. For example, in the treatment of children who have been apprehended and protected under the PCHIP legislation, we will have very specialized staff trained and very specialized facilities, and it's simply not economical to put those through all authorities. We will be looking at what is cost-effective, what is practical, and looking at where the needs are greatest. I could look at the treatment for fetal alcohol syndrome in much the same way.

Where we have concerted growth of populations that have really special needs, then we will look at that particular centre as most desirable. Throughout Alberta the demographics are so different, the resources are very unique between the two cities and parts of rural Alberta, so to promise or commit to something in every region would be impractical. We will look at what is practically possible in all cases.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

U.S. Energy Policy

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday in Washington, D.C., the President of the United States released the country's national energy policy. This policy document was over 170 pages long but mentioned Canada and Alberta only briefly. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy, who I understand was in Washington at the time this policy was made public. Can the minister please indicate to the members of this Assembly what opportunities this U.S. national energy policy might present to Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that you would like me to go on in great detail about this meeting, but for brevity in question period I will make it brief. Canada is mentioned in this document in chapter 8, under Strengthening Global Alliances. There is a good awareness both that Alberta is the number one gas exporter to the United States and last year was the number two oil exporter. If you combine the hydroelectric imports from Quebec into the United States, in fact today the number one export to the United States from Canada is energy. In fact, that's what puts it on the front burner of the United States today.

They're talking a great deal about an energy crunch in the United States, and it's not one where you see cars lining up at gasoline pumps and prices rising. You're seeing one more of a duck on the water, Mr. Speaker, where it's very calm on the top, but that duck is paddling vociferously underneath to keep it going. You have an aged infrastructure. You have power plants that are producing at obsolete rates. You have an obsolete pipeline structure, an obsolete delivery system. In fact, what it does deliver is a great opportunity to Alberta, a great opportunity in two terms: one, our ability to supply the resource that we have been graced with in this fair province and, secondly, to supply the strengths of our technology sector and of the people that make their living in this industry and that can work on these projects throughout Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. I wonder if the minister could indicate if in his discussion with officials in Washington there was much recognition of the role that Alberta may play in helping the United States meet its long-term energy needs.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's clearly a need. In fact, although the members of the Senate energy committee didn't mention the Member for West Yellowhead by name, I know that they were thinking of him because they talked about the important role of coal. They talked about the diversity of supply. In fact, at a presentation that afternoon from members of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers there was a comment made by an oil sands owner, who said: the oil sands have the capability to replace all offshore imports of oil to the United States. That really got their attention.

What we see is a real need for increased awareness of Alberta – Alberta producing companies, Alberta shipping companies, Alberta pipeline companies, Alberta petrochemical companies – with U.S. legislators, with U.S. lobbyists, with those individuals. They need to know two things, Mr. Speaker. One is that Alberta is the owner of its natural resources. We can assist in meeting their energy needs, and we have the technology and processing capability to make it happen.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question. The recent release of the United States' energy policy makes mention of the United States, Mexico, and Canada working through the North America energy working group. If Alberta resources are to be protected and Albertans to receive full benefit of their use, it appears we need to be involved in the North America energy decision. Can the Minister of Energy tell the members of this Assembly if Alberta is involved in the energy working group?

MR. SMITH: It is a good question, Mr. Speaker, because in fact Alberta per se is not involved with this group, and the federal government is representing Canada. We are concerned about not having a presence. As the role of this group develops, it is key that Albertans need to be forceful in our desire to participate and willing to deliver our expertise to that table. Clearly, if decisions are being made about how Canada might fit into this U.S. national energy policy or even a continental energy policy, Alberta and the other energy-producing provinces of this land need to be and must be directly involved.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before the Clerk calls the next order of business today, earlier today in question period there was an intervention by the hon. Government House Leader, who advised me he wanted to rise on a point of order or a point of privilege. I also received such notification from the hon. Minister of Environment and subsequently received a note from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. So I'm going to look at the hon. Government House Leader and the hon. Minister of Environment. Would it be okay to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on this point.

Point of Order Member's Apology

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon in question period I rose to ask the Minister of Environment a question which I believed I had the facts on. It turns out that I did not. It is not my intention to make unfounded allegations against any member of this Assembly, and I do withdraw my comments and sincerely apologize to the minister for that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment on this point.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. I'd just like to thank the member for her comments, and I accept the apology.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Crosswalk Safety

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday, January 7, 1999, little Daniel Negash was dressed up in his very best clothes, including a miniature bow tie, and he was a very excited little boy that day because he was on his way to his very first day at a new school. He never made it to school that day, however, because as he was crossing the street in a marked pedestrian crosswalk in my riding, he was struck by a car and killed. I bring up this tragedy during road safety week to relate a serious and continuing concern of mine regarding crosswalk safety and to draw attention to a little known crosswalk safety improvement that I believe would have saved little Daniel's life that day.

I call it the modified-advance stop-bar crosswalk design. This simple $500 improvement, designed over 10 years ago, which can reportedly reduce vehicle/pedestrian collisions in crosswalks by up to 80 percent, still has not been adopted by the powers that be in this country, nor does it appear likely to be anytime soon. I for one simply cannot understand why the delay. The simple new design does not have any negative implications that I am aware of, and I have the original pilot study from 10 years ago and the opinions of a couple of Canada's leading traffic safety experts to back that statement up. Yet we still cannot seem to get it introduced into the Transportation Association of Canada manual, the bible of the industry.

After hundreds of personal hours over several years on this issue, after protracted public discussions and arguments and my presentation of thousands of names on petitions, I have yet to hear one rational reason why such an improvement cannot be adopted. The entire experience has left me very concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the ability of the process to promote visionary and innovative improvements into safe road design, even when lives are at stake. So I appreciate this opportunity to make people aware and draw attention to the modified-advance stop-bar pedestrian crosswalk safety improvement and to let anyone know who is interested that I would be happy to send them information on this subject if they have any concerns about their children having to cross busy and dangerous crosswalks in their own community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Meridian Industries Inc.

MRS. GORDON: I rise today to bring attention to some exciting news, the unveiling last week of a $217 million multifaceted and value-added enterprise proposed for Lacombe, Alberta, by Meridian Industries Inc. I congratulate Meridian on choosing the Lacombe site, a move I know they will not regret. Lacombe is a wonderful community situated in the midst of some of the best agricultural land in this province, agricultural land that will in the future grow much of the needed produce they will require.

It is hard to envision a project this large: seven agrifood processing plants as well as three additional manufacturing plants. The first phase, to be constructed this year, will produce ketchup, wine, juice, potting soil, pellet fuel, and fire logs. The second phase, scheduled for 2002, will process Alberta-grown vegetables and will utilize at full capacity daily 800 tonnes each of potatoes and carrots. Eighty percent of all production will be exported. Incorporating the newest technologies from Italy, this project will not only boost economics within the local community and surrounding area but will impact greatly and benefit overall the provincial economy as well, indeed another positive example of the Alberta advantage at work.

Again, my very best to all involved. Thank you. The overall effect and the benefit provided will be phenomenal: employment exceeding 560 individuals; local farmers growing needed carrots, potatoes, and other vegetables; secondary industry spin-offs; substantive purchasing requirements procured locally; and Lacombe being now recognized as a community with a large international global presence. I look forward to continuing to work with both Meridian Industries Inc. and the town of Lacombe as this facility becomes a reality. Only by working together can we make a difference.

Alberta Teachers' Association

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, government intrusion into local teacher bargaining by setting in the budget a provincewide salary increase has been met with predictable protest from the Alberta Teachers' Association. Also predictable is that the standard criticisms of the ATA by detractors will now be given another airing. Before they rush to condemnation, those detractors might pause and reflect upon the history of the organization that they criticize.

The year 1918 is considered the birthday of the Alberta Teacher's Alliance, the year the organization received a charter from the Alberta government. The conditions the alliance sought to remedy then and in the ensuing years were draconian even by standards of the day. Teachers were forced to pay exorbitant board bills, sometimes for teacherages that were no more than shacks, or be fired. Kickbacks were being extorted from teachers' salaries by a system of double contracting. School board members threatened teachers as a matter of routine. School positions were filled by auction, with positions going to the lowest bidder. There were two salary scales for the same position: one for men and a lesser one for women.

Any insistence that those days are gone forever needs re-examining. Today the government treats teachers in ways that are just as arbitrary. Where is the logic that insists that teachers must pay for smaller classes for our children with smaller salary increases for their families? Where is the logic in awarding other helping professions double-digit salary increases while insisting that 4 percent and 2 percent over two years will suffice for teachers? Where is the logic in setting figures in the budget for teachers' salaries, then insisting that teachers bargain with local school boards?

Yes, the Alberta Teachers' Association can be tough at the bargaining table. I know; I've been there. But any fair evaluation of that organization needs to be just that. It needs to be fair. Better salaries help make teaching the attractive profession we all insist it must be. The work of the ATA on behalf of children and teachers over an 80-plus year history deserves more than a disparaging knee-jerk reaction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Debbie Muir

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is hard to miss many local functions and meetings because of our commitment to be here while the Legislature is sitting, and I understand that expectation, but tonight I am missing a very special evening personally for a very special Albertan who is also my constituent, the internationally respected Olympic synchro swimming coach and mentor and Alberta sports hall of famer, Debbie Muir.

I wish to share the letter that I have written to Debbie, and she'll be reading it tonight.

Dear Debbie,

I am very regretful that, as your MLA for Calgary-West I am not able to bring personal words of recognition tonight . . . as many of your swimmers, friends and supporters in synchronized swimming gather in Calgary to celebrate your official retirement from the sport and, better yet, celebrate your numerous accomplishments, from local to international levels. As a "synchro parent" for many years with the Calgary Aquabelles Synchronized Swimming Club and then as judge and Provincial Association V.P., I have hundreds of proud and stressful moments I will always cherish.

Debbie, you are to be highly commended and respected for your exceptional leadership qualities. It was very hard, but I picked three most notable qualities:

- First, for your commitment of 25+ years in the sport of synchronized swimming, balancing such challenges as being mother, traveller and coach-administrator.
- Second, for your ability to set and achieve lofty goals – for yourself, your swimmers and those around you – and to stay focussed on the task and to motivate your swimmers to even higher levels of performance.
- And third, for your ability to stay true to your values despite all the international acclaim over the years.

Debbie, I am personally very proud of your leadership qualities – these and many more – and also of your exceptionally positive influence on so many women over the years. As they mature in life, they will appreciate your influence even more! Especially as they become leaders in their [own] communities!

The Provincial Government sincerely thanks you for your totally impressive contribution to the sport of synchronized swimming and wishes you continued success and good health in the future! Congratulations!

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, this afternoon we were given notice during the earlier part of the Routine of a notice of motion under Standing Order 40. This is the first time we've had such a request made in this session, and for members who are with us for the first time, this is a unique opportunity when a member can stand up, ask for unanimous consent for a motion, and if all hon. members in the Assembly give support for this request, then the ordinary business of the session is adjourned for the remainder of the day as we deal with this particular motion. So I am now going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to briefly move his request under Standing Order 40.

Teachers' Collective Bargaining

Dr. Pannu:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to stop making decisions that could provoke provincewide job action by Alberta's teachers, interfere in free collective bargaining, and have already raised serious concerns on the part of school boards.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I would like to move that the motion that I read earlier in the House be approved. There are two main reasons. I'll be very, very brief.

The first reason for urgency is that the government's decision to limit salary increases for teachers was made after the House business for this spring session was finalized. The only way that debate in this Legislature can be held during this spring sitting on this very important issue is if members allow an emergency debate to proceed. In the interest of forestalling any job action by teachers, it is imperative that this debate take place here and teachers' concerns be addressed.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, as MLAs responsible to our own constituents we can't afford to wait until a fall sitting, which would likely not commence until mid-November in any case. By then, province-wide action, job action, could already have commenced. The important job of educating our young people could by then already be disrupted through provincewide job action. I urge therefore all members to allow a debate on this matter to proceed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 207

Alberta Personal Income Tax
(Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate May 16: Mr. Knight]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to speak in favour of Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act. Over the last few years this government and the people of Alberta have worked hard to make this the best place in Canada to live and to do business. Government has provided sound fiscal policy and a friendly tax environment, and Albertans have given the hard work and determination. This partnership has resulted in a strong and ever expanding economy which has benefited all Albertans. We have come to call this the Alberta advantage.

The advantage is ever strengthened by the efforts of many new Albertans who have come here to benefit from what our province has to offer. While many have come to enjoy the Alberta advantage, there are people who are seeking even greater ways to appreciate the prosperity that our province has to offer. Our youth want it, and this is why I am addressing the Assembly today.

I believe we must examine ways of expanding the Alberta advantage, especially for our young, and I believe that Bill 207 would be a fine start. Not only will the bill give our youth entering the trades a helping hand, but it will also help to attract more people to our province who have been so instrumental in making Alberta the place it is today.

Bill 207 would create a tax credit that would be available on money spent on tools above a $500 threshold to accredited members of any of the 50 apprenticeship trades or crafts in the province. This credit would allow tradespeople to obtain the tools they need to conduct business so they can set up shop and begin their careers.

First, Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 would benefit our youth immensely. Our young people are frustrated by the lack of support offered for them to get starts in the trades. Many employers expect a new worker to provide all of their own tools, and for most people this can be a formidable expense and a severe obstacle. If they do not have the financial resources to purchase the equipment they need, they probably won't be able to begin their career in the trade of their course.

You know, I'm speaking from personal experience. My son, Scott, is a recreational vehicle technician in Calgary and has just finished his first year of instruction at SAIT. A local firm in the city, recognizing his talents, offered him a position in the field, but for Scott a major problem has been acquiring the tools he needed to work on his job. For my son there are no great surprises as to what he receives for his birthday or his Christmas presents. Simply put, he receives tools. Scott is fortunate though, Mr. Speaker. Our family can afford to assist him in getting the expensive tools he needs. This is not the case for all of our youth in our province. Many of Scott's young friends in his field have expressed their frustration at the fact that there is no support for them to obtain the costly tools they need.

Bill 207 would let these young people in on the Alberta advantage. It would greatly assist them and help them to get going in their respective trades. Also, Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill will attract youth to our province from all over North America. As mentioned by other members of the Assembly, there is a shortage of skilled workers in several parts of our province, most notably in our rural areas. In order to bring these valuable entrepreneurs into our community, we must try to identify new ways to help them get started. I believe that offering a tool tax credit to journeymen tradespeople is an important way to assist these folks to get going in towns and villages. Bill 207 would be a valuable asset to all in our province, not just our youth and our new Albertans.

The government has always shown a commitment to providing an environment that lets Albertans thrive. We have demonstrated considerable courage in taking steps to expand the prosperity for the people of this province. Bill 207 would further the Alberta advantage, and I urge all members of the Assembly to support it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to join in the debate on Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tool Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001.

I first would like to commend the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for introducing this bill to the Assembly. I'm surprised it wouldn't come from a locale such as Leduc. My statistics tell me that Leduc has the highest percentage of tradespeople per capita anywhere in the province of Alberta. I don't know why so many tradespeople congregate in Leduc; perhaps because of the international airport. Not only can they fly to the northern parts of the province and other parts of the province but internationally as well, because Alberta tradespersons are recognized for their excellence in virtually every area of the world.

This bill is, I believe, a step in the right direction. It's an issue of fairness in my view. There are many people that already have this luxury in their profession, in their occupation, but tradespeople do not.

At some point in the debate perhaps the hon. member can clarify for me in particular – the purpose of this bill is to allow a tradesperson as defined under the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act to deduct the cost above $500 of their tools used in employment. Now, is that above $500 annually, or does it include hand tools? Because above $500: that is open to a lot of discussion. For instance, a B welder with their own rig: would there be a total deduction for that? I doubt it. Hand tools: there are certain trade qualifications. I believe the electrician is a compulsory trade where each electrician as they come to the job is to appear with a pouch filled with hand tools. Instrument mechanics is another trade where the person is expected to come to the job with quite a wide array of tools, including electronic meters to do loop checking and whatnot. These can add up into the thousands and thousands of dollars, and as technology changes, so do the meters. So there's no doubt that this is a bill that would help apprentices and tradespeople of over 50 different trades in the province.

I think it would be in a lot of ways a good bill because it would help enforce the trade qualifications in this province. It is my view that trade qualifications are not being enforced rigorously in this province. I look at what happened in Swan Hills where shoddy welding occurred. No one in this Assembly has proven to me that the welders who worked on that job were qualified.

We go across to the university: last year before Christmas I was reading in the university newspaper where there was some work that certainly didn't meet the standards. It was structural steel, and there were cracks in it. It had to be redone. Now, were those individuals qualified?

I'm assuming here that one has to present their certificate from the province when they do their taxes if this bill were to become law. I would have to say that I would think that any tool cost, whether it be above or below $500, should be included here, because if I were an electrician apprentice or an instrument mechanic apprentice and I was to buy a pouch and buy all the appropriate hand tools – both of these trades are in short supply – those costs as an apprentice starting out would be below $500.

Now, there's also the issue of auto mechanics. I believe this was where the hon. member was coming from when he introduced this bill, because auto mechanics have thousands and thousands of dollars in tools. Some of them estimate the value of their tools in excess of $50,000. With this chronic shortage – another hon. member said earlier if we are to encourage Albertans to enter an apprenticeship, whether it's a compulsory or an optional trade, then I think this would be a step in the right direction.

I certainly would like to hear – and perhaps in second reading or in committee we will hear from the hon. member who proposed this bill – whether there has been any consultation with the automobile dealers' association, because each one of those dealers would have perhaps 20, 30 auto mechanics or technicians on site, and some of the equipment that they would have to use in their daily work would be specific to certain makes or models of cars or trucks. A tax deduction would, I think, benefit those individuals.

When you think of the cost of tools as a factor in a young person's decision whether or not they will enter a trade, I think the hon. member's purpose for bringing this forward is a very sound one, Mr. Speaker, realizing that there was a similar bill introduced at the federal level in the House of Commons this past year. However, as I understand it, the bill dealt exclusively with automotive mechanics, and this bill, Bill 207, is much larger in scope, impacting upon 50 trades under the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act.

The 50 trades that are in the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act I believe should be the only ones that would be covered in this, not individuals who are going to the minister or to the Department of Learning for whatever reason and trying to pare off sections or duties or responsibilities of trades in this province. I strongly disapprove of that. It's a way of cheapening our rigorous standards, standards that have been developed over 50 years.

In my opening remarks I talked about the respect and the recognition that tradespeople in this province get internationally, particularly in the oil industry. If we were to start this idea or notion that somehow we could take for instance the welding trade and pare off one part of it, one discipline – let's use electricians, for example. We're going to take the electricians and allow a certain group who are permitted from a minister to pull tech cable and do nothing but pull tech cable on construction sites. By that I mean install a tech cable from one instrument to an electrical panel, maybe back to a control room. That's all they're going to do. These people – hopefully they're apprentices – are going to get no more on-the-job training than that. They're going to have these hours built up where they can challenge for their journeyman test, but they're not going to have any experience, Mr. Speaker. In that way they're going to, I believe, diminish the reputation of Alberta tradespeople and the reputation of the province of Alberta as well.

That's why I would like to see this designed so that it is only for the 50 compulsory or optional trades that are indicated. You go through this, and you think: well, maybe it should be just for carpenters or ironworkers or insulators or millwrights or sheet metal workers. But I see in the paper where cooks from Alberta are winning awards in Europe and France, as a matter of fact, in Paris, France, for the quality of their culinary talents. [interjection] Yes, it's an optional trade. A topnotch cook, maybe a sous-chef – or what do they say in Paris: a saucier? – has a need for copper pots, and they're very, very expensive. The hon. member's bill would go a long way to starting off one of these young Albertans in the right direction. I believe that if you are employed in a hotel, one of the requirements is that you bring your own saucepans.

Not only should we think of construction workers and the construction trades, but there are certainly other trades as well. We could think of a barber. How could we forget barbers in this Legislative Assembly?

MR. MASON: We haven't forgotten barbers.

MR. MacDONALD: Oh, okay.

For instance, barbers are a trade, certainly. Barbers need scissors. For instance, if I'm a left-handed barber, I may need special scissors, and I have to order those scissors. The hon. member's tax deduction could go a long way towards that.

We look at water well drillers. We look at roofers. We look at power linemen. They're certainly going to be needed in this province. Whether it's a union or a non-union trade, I think this bill, particularly for auto mechanics, would go a long way to resolving a lot of their issues when they complain about the high cost of tools.

In closing, again I would like to say that I believe the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan is on the right track, and I'm surprised that the hon. Member for Leduc didn't come up with legislation such as that in recognition of the demographics of that constituency. I look forward to hearing what other hon. members of the Assembly have to say about the legislation. It is legislation that I certainly would consider supporting when you consider the number of Albertans who could benefit directly from this. They could perhaps at the end of the year have a little bit more of their hard-earned money for themselves.

With those comments I would like to cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak in support of Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, introduced by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I'd like to bring forth a point that I don't think has been directly touched by my colleagues yet this afternoon.

The trades professions, Mr. Speaker, are unique careers that have a rare amount of independence and responsibility. This bill recognizes this unique quality and provides a means to improve the efficiency of these occupations given these unique qualities. Trades careers are distinct in the amount of individual decision-making that exist in them on a daily basis relative to other service careers. Tradespeople will determine how they will attack their assigned project and to some extent what types and how much material will be used. Most importantly tradespeople very often determine what tools they are going to use at their tasks.

Now, in most cases tools are first acquired during the process of training in whatever specific trade someone might be pursuing, be it construction, plumbing, mechanics, welding, or even barbering, as our member opposite has mentioned. Even in large shops tools are often owned by the worker in part because this automatically encourages workers to look after tools to the best of their abilities and in part because it's difficult to loan out tools as employees move from one task to the next. In a sense, then, all tradespeople, whether they own their own business or not, are entrepreneurs. Their skills and their tools are what they own and bring to the market. They are given a task and use self-direction and initiative to get the job done.

It makes sense, then, that Alberta should treat tradespeople as entrepreneurs and encourage them to fulfill their potential with self-initiative. The nonrefundable tax rebates on tool ownership does just that. It allows our tradespeople to take part in the Alberta advantage by decreasing taxes. As our Premier has said so often: the only way taxes are going in this province is down.

Mr. Speaker, I have many oil companies in my riding. Some of these include large trucking companies that move heavy equipment from site to site. When these companies need new tires for their trucks, it is a direct write-off as a business expense. Bill 207 would treat tools bought by tradespeople the same way it treats a trucking company that purchases new tires for its fleet. Just as the owner of the new tires, the tradesperson, the owner of new tools for work, would now be eligible for a work-related tax credit. This credit would serve as an incentive to do more and to do it better. I believe that this credit would also serve as an incentive for our tradespeople to buy all of the latest tools. It would promote the retail purchasing of some of the latest tools by our tradesmen and tradeswomen.

Mr. Speaker, I think that all members of this Assembly should support any bill that promotes lower taxes. Some have expressed an objection towards this bill, suggesting that in offering a nonrefundable tax credit for tools, the bureaucratic costs will undermine the economic benefits that this bill would bring forward. These critics suggest that it would be complicated to enforce this bill because tradespeople would have to keep their receipts and tax administrators would have to verify claims and it would be difficult to determine if tools had been converted to personal use. This argument, however, is weakened when one considers that all this bill is doing is treating tradespeople as entrepreneurs.

Already businesspeople have to collect receipts to make claims for tax returns and already administrators have to determine whether these claims are valid. If critics are suggesting that tradespeople would not be competent enough to collect receipts, as businesspeople are already doing, that is outright insulting to practitioners of trades-related jobs. I happen to think that tradespeople are very intelligent, very organized and systematic people, and that they would do a very good job at collecting their receipts and collecting their tax credits.

Critics may suggest an already existent bureaucratic infrastructure cannot be extended for tax credit claims of tradespeople, but again I disagree.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would encourage tradespeople to be innovative and to be productive in their careers. It would encourage young Albertans to enter the trades and to fulfill their potential. As I said, it would promote the retail purchasing of all the latest tools by our tradesmen and tradeswomen. For all of these reasons and many more that my colleagues have already put forward, I urge all the members of this Assembly to support Bill 207.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 207 is a bill we have to look at through the eyes of people that are involved in the apprenticeship program. When you buy tools, you look after them, and it encourages people to buy a better grade of tool such as Snap-on or Mack with a lifetime warranty. [interjections] Mind you, everybody, I don't sell the tools. I buy them, and I know from experience that they're about three times the amount of money.

It goes even further. You look at people in the fatigue inspection business. They buy a pickup coil, a black light to check drilling stems and drilling collars and different things for cracks and fatigues, but they come out a fairly hefty price. Some of the market in that area, whether it be Leduc or Red Deer or wherever you service this industry the best – if you can get these tools and have a remote type of system, you could probably go right to the pipe rack and inspect the tools right on sight, and that would incur employment.

Mr. Speaker, in the area of automotive mechanics we're not expecting them to buy a big diagnostic machine worth a hundred thousand dollars. However, when they go looking for employment, they bring along with them a toolbox full of wrenches and different gauges and a handful of things. They go to their employer and they open up the box and say: well, I can start work today; here's all the stuff that's required. It encourages the employer to give employment to this individual so he can start his practice of mechanics.

The same with plumbers. In the plumbing industry the way things are nowadays you piecemeal your work out. The journeyman would go with his hardware and his tools to a site, and he would tell the general contractor: well, I can rough all this in for X number of dollars. The general contractor would probably ask: well, what do you have for equipment? And he would say, "Well, I have all the necessary tools," by way of this bill being passed. That would incur more employment, and the chances are that within a year or two he would continue to fill his tool chest full of different things for larger jobs. Therefore, he would have more people to work for him. So probably within a couple of years he would in turn be a general contractor and have two or three people working under him and apprenticing. That's what we have to look at. That's actually the bigger picture that people tend to miss: what it's going to spur off, these opportunities for other people.

The same again with electricians, Mr. Speaker. Whether it be a house or a housing complex or if you go right to the battery, a lot of things are depending on the project. Then you look at it, and the contractor would say: well, I mean, if you want to rough in the box and rough in the wiring – like the hon. member says, you know, you would string tech cable or you would string Lumex on the different sites. You would do that to get a feeling of what the whole industry is about. That's like sweeping the floor at the stockroom, but within a few years of hard work, like most of us are aware, you become the president of the company at some point in time. It depends what you have your sights on.

Mr. Speaker, by having your sights on different goals, what that does is spur a lot of economic development, and that takes in a lot of different ministries in the government. They can hold their heads up high and say: well, this is what's happening; we're not short anymore. Right now the way it's looking, every industry is shorthanded. That's not a very good feeling, and it's not encouraging. So by passing Bill 207, we go from a pessimistic type of view to an optimistic type of view. We look at things from being not so favourable to being extremely encouraging.

Mr. Speaker, to deduct tools for a tradesperson makes a lot of sense, because what it's going to do is get the shop people who sell the tools, the warranty people who fix and rehabilitate the tools – I can say from my personal experience that I apprenticed for electrical and for welding, but I had a corporation and was able to write off everything: the welder, the rods, the gasoline, my lunch as a matter of fact. I never finished either one of them, welding or electrical, just because neither one of them was my thing. Anyway, I ended up with a welder, I ended up with a whole pile of electrical equipment that I was able to write off 100 percent for my tax year. These things that go to the tradespeople – they have their eye on what they do, whether it be the plumber or the electrician, whether it be the welder, whether it be the fatigue inspector. The list goes on and on.

I think, Mr. Speaker, there were some comments about people who are looking at the area of being a journeyman and the tools are expensive. Well, there's a hoisting or a crane operator. It is a journeyman ticket, but to have somebody buy a million dollar crane to write it off as their pocket tools, well, I think we have to use common sense to think that we're not going to write off a crane or a picker or a dragline because the fellow has a craning ticket as a journeyman.

I think it's the hands-on types of tools that we're focused on, and what we're doing is trying to encourage it and spur economic development. A lot of people that will support this bill will see it through the eyes – and you really do have to step back and look through the eyes of people who are actually buying the tools, who are actually sitting in the tech schools about to graduate in their particular vocation.

Mr. Speaker, once all that is achieved, then I think that things could proceed very economically. I think, like I said earlier, that common sense would prevail. A lot of people that are buying these tools may not find employment immediately, may be not able to afford the fifth or sixth year of experience, but they could probably venture into the lower industries. But if you take agriculture, I'm sure a farmer would probably hire a first-year or a second-year to help him fix his tractor. When he's building a shop, I'm sure they would help him, you know, plumb it or wire it.

Things like that, Mr. Speaker, are what this government is about: to help people, to take care of these individuals. I think it's our duty and our obligation to step forward and step to the plate and say: yeah, we do appreciate you coming forward, and we recognize the shortage in Alberta. That's why bills like Bill 207 do come up, to spur encouragement.

Mr. Speaker, on that note I would like all the members to really have a look at it through the eyes of the people who are sitting in the classroom or listening to their instructor wondering what they're going to do when they finish in a month or two and give them some direction and some insight on what they want to do.

I'd like to close and ask everybody to look at and support Bill 207. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in favour of Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act.

Mr. Speaker, for the last several years this government in Alberta has worked very, very hard to make our province the best place in Canada to live and to do business. Government has taken an active role in providing a tax environment that lets Alberta and businesses thrive. We have come to call this the Alberta advantage. The impact of this advantage is visible all over our province. Edmonton, Calgary, and many other communities have seen some large, substantial growth in many sectors of their economies. Every day people from all across Canada and indeed all over the world come to Alberta to find opportunity and employment. However, there are parts of Alberta that deserve further attention in order to expand the Alberta advantage.

In my own constituency of Dunvegan and in many communities in the northern half of our province there is a great need for skilled workers in all the trades. We need tradesmen to build our homes, wire our businesses, and work on our oil and gas rigs. As proposed by Bill 207, Mr. Speaker, a tax credit would be available for moneys spent on tools above a $500 threshold to accredited members of any of the 50 apprenticeship trades or crafts in the province. This credit will allow tradespeople to obtain the tools they need to conduct business as they set up shop and begin their careers.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 would have a positive influence on Alberta and especially on northern Alberta. First of all, it would help our towns and villages keep our younger people who are interested in pursuing a career in the trades. Second, it would help us bring in new tradespeople who wish to open businesses in our smaller communities. For many years our small towns have seen an exodus of youth as they leave to go to the larger cities. Simply put, a sad fact is that our young people have to live in larger centres in order to pursue employment. Many of them would prefer to stay in their own hometowns if only there were similar employment opportunities. We must consider ways to address this situation. These young Albertans are frustrated at times that they must move to find employment and by the lack of support offered to them to stay in their communities. Bill 207 is one step that would help to address this problem.

Simply obtaining the tools necessary for many trades is an expensive endeavour and presents a prohibitive cost to many young people, Mr. Speaker. For example, an auto friend of mine has estimated that just to get the most elemental tools to work in his trade, he would have to spend at the very least a few thousand dollars, and it seems that's just for a basic set of tools such as wrenches, screwdrivers, and ratchets. That figure is also assuming that he would be working with a mechanic who already had some of the more expensive and elaborate equipment. Another friend of mine who is a locksmith by trade has told me that the base complement of tools for his position can also be in the thousands of dollars.

I believe the tool tax credit as proposed by Bill 207, Mr. Speaker, would have a direct influence on those young people who wish to enter the trades and also want to stay in their home communities. It will help to significantly lower the financial barriers for our youths interested in a trades career. Also, as I mentioned, there is a shortage of skilled tradespeople, especially in the north. In order to bring these valuable individuals into our communities, we must try to identify new ways to help them get started. I believe that offering a tool tax credit to journeymen tradespeople is an important way to assist these folks to get going in our towns and villages.

As I already mentioned, the start-up costs for those entering the trades are extremely expensive, Mr. Speaker, but the costs do not stop there. In order to stay competitive, tradespeople are often required to purchase additional and updated new tools on a regular basis. They must keep on the cutting edge of advances and innovations in their trades and have access to the latest equipment. Bill 207 would help our tradespeople address this concern. This bill would be a significant shot in the arm to our small communities trying to keep youth interested in the trades in our towns and to bring other tradespeople in. While I realize that this bill alone will not solve all the problems facing our communities, it would be an excellent way to help those who are looking to enter the trades in those towns.

Mr. Speaker, we have worked hard as a government and as a province to develop the Alberta advantage. This bill will only further support the hard work we have all done and will truly be an aid to our rural communities. I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 207.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise in support of Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act. There are two points I wish to make about this bill this afternoon. First, I wish to demonstrate that the bill is consistent with the vision of fiscal conservatism that characterizes this government. The bill calls for nonrefundable tax credits. This government has already established that tax reduction is a positive goal for . . .

Speaker's Ruling Private Members' Public Bills

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt a new member, but it's necessary to sort of just review for a moment that these bills are private members' public bills. If they are either supported because it's government or opposed because it's government, that misses the point. They're private members' public bills, so if you could just keep that in mind.

Debate Continued

MR. OUELLETTE: This government has already established that tax reduction is a positive goal to work toward. Bill 207 does not detract from this broad mandate at all. Rather, it serves to fill out this vision to an even greater extent.

Secondly, Bill 207 will help Alberta attract and keep tradespeople. Alberta has had enormous growth in trade-heavy employment sectors over the past few years: construction, forestry and logging operations, and oil and gas, to name but a few. This province needs workers in these sectors, and it needs them now. This bill, in offering tax credits to people in these targeted sectors, will provide a tailored solution to attracting the skills we need in this province.

This Assembly needs no lecture about the benefits of general lower tax rates. We know that lower taxes put money back in the hands of those that have worked hard to earn it. We know that we can trust Albertans with their own money, and they don't need government to tell them how to spend it. We know that lower taxes provide a positive incentive for strong investment and growth. That is why over the past few years this government has brought in policies such as the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, which will give Albertans the most competitive income tax regime in the country. Bill 207 is in tune with this vision and philosophy of putting money back in Albertans' pockets. It complements the changes that have been made to put Alberta on firmer fiscal footing.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, Alberta needs tradespeople in volumes like it has never needed them before. This bill would help to satisfy this overwhelming demand by offering an economic incentive for people to enter the Alberta trades labour market.

Alberta's economy has grown by leaps and bounds over the past five years, at the furious pace of over 4 percent a year. A large part of that growth has been in the trades areas: constructing housing, installing pipelines, and maintaining machinery. In the election campaign I heard from a number of small businesspeople looking for ways to get and keep skilled employees. With their businesses growing rapidly, they need people from apprenticeship programs to enter into the trades right away. The people I met in the campaign are not isolated examples. The need for tradespeople in this province is very real. Statistics from last summer show that demand for employees in trades, transport, and equipment operating and related occupations was red hot. In June the unemployment rate in this category was at a mesmerizing low of 3.8 percent, far below the average unemployment rate for all occupations, which stood at 5.7 percent. For many . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I really do apologize for interrupting the hon. member yet again, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has expired, and you'll be able to pick up next day if you so desire.

I wonder, before we begin the next part, whether we might briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

3:30

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like at this time and I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three guests in the members' gallery this afternoon: Carleen Brenneis, program director of the regional palliative care program, Capital health authority; Dennie Hycha, palliative care program co-ordinator for the David Thompson health region and also president of the Palliative Care Association of Alberta; and Mr. Brian Hlus, director, government affairs, for the Capital health authority. Would these honourable guests please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Palliative Care

506. Ms Kryczka moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to identify palliative care as a core service in each regional health authority to ensure the availability of a coordinated continuum of care and support services for end-of-life care with access to palliative community services (palliative home and hospice care), acute care, consultation services for physicians, staff, and patients, and tertiary care.

[Debate adjourned May 15: Ms Kryczka speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to continue with the debate on Motion 506. As I have only eight minutes, I will conclude by highlighting the issues, recommendations, and opportunities of Motion 506. The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross and others will be providing critical background on provincial palliative care programs and the wonderful vision being developed.

Mr. Speaker, I want to highlight several issues. First, the cost of palliative care to the patient is somewhat inconsistent across provincial regional health authorities. For example, daily accommodation costs in palliative care settings vary from region to region. The Capital health region charges $13 per day for a palliative bed in a long-term care setting, while in another region, the CRHA for example, the daily accommodation fee for a hospice bed is $25 and $28.60 for a palliative bed in long-term care.

For palliative patients at home receiving support under the palliative care drug program, they must cover the cost of their own prescriptions to a maximum of $25 per prescription. This can become very expensive. If a person is taking 13 different prescriptions, for example, the individual could be responsible for up to $325 per month. For some this is much too expensive. For palliative care patients in acute care facilities all costs are fully covered, so the costs of staying at home, therefore, can be a disincentive for many terminally ill patients, who would rather stay in an acute care facility as everything is paid for. This discrepancy in costs creates excessive pressure on acute care facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the second issue arises with funding going to the regional health authorities in one envelope. This means that the regional health authorities decide on their funding priorities. Some programs in smaller regions, however, may not get the amount of funding that a similar program receives in larger regions due to the size and population and the priorities of the regional health authorities. If regions want to increase funding to provide a fuller range of palliative care services, they will have to shift resources from other programs.

Palliative care was identified as a key priority in many of the regional health authorities' business plans for 2000-2001. If it is a key priority, are these regional authorities receiving adequate funding to provide quality palliative care in their region? Is this government emphasizing enough that end-of-life issues are truly important and that all regional health authorities should be pursuing the vision of a provincewide network for quality palliative care? My research indicates that many formal caregivers providing palliative care services in the smaller regions in particular have insufficient training and education about end-of-life care. The smaller regions find it difficult to give palliative care the focus needed as there is a lack of financial resources and trained specialists.

The third issue, Mr. Speaker, is that larger regional health authorities are better positioned to offer a full range of services, while the smaller ones have little chance of offering an equal level of service. The larger RHAs need provincial leadership, however, in their efforts to develop an effective regional support network with the smaller RHAs, ensuring that the proper level of palliative care services can be given throughout Alberta.

The fourth issue with palliative care is that the cost to the informal or family caregiver is immense both monetarily and spiritually. For the spouse or adult child providing care to a dying loved one, there is no legislated palliative leave or guarantee of job security or even of position or even of continuation of benefits during a work leave. This issue is one of national concern, which I have evidenced in my work with the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. The family caregiver also needs mental and spiritual support after losing a loved one, as there are understandable psychological implications that must be dealt with sooner rather than later.

Mr. Speaker, I have four recommendations on how we can improve end-of-life care in Alberta. The first is that there should be a philosophical debate on palliative care and very soon. I strongly believe that palliative care must be openly included in the debate on public health care. Everyone should become aware of the very successful network or support system that is developing in Alberta. We must discuss this issue because at some point every one of us will require some degree of palliative care. Why do only 30 percent of Albertans know about palliative care? We must focus on the whole continuum of care from childbirth right through to end of life.

Secondly, I recommend that the government provide leadership in developing and implementing a provincewide system of standards of RHA accountability for palliative care with flexibility within individual regional health authorities. Currently there is collaboration between a number of regional health authorities to develop a network of palliative care across Alberta. Provincial government MLAs should be aware of the benefits and the roadblocks in the development of this provincial system in their constituencies in particular and should also support a government leadership role in this regard.

Third, in the vital area of education and research support this government needs to endorse the regional model developed by the Capital health authority and now the CRHA, and it should also collaborate with the federal government. For example, the federal government recently announced that a Calgary program has received $250,000 in funding for Pallium, a continuing professional development initiative in palliative care. Pallium aims to improve the care of terminally ill patients in the prairie provinces and the Northwest Territories through a research partnership led by the University of Calgary with the universities of Manitoba and Alberta and regional health authorities centred in Yellowknife and Inuvik. Mr. Speaker, why not establish a provincial centre of distance education or a 24-hour assistance line?

My fourth recommendation is that as a government we must take action now. We have a window of only 10 years to prepare before the baby boomers start retiring in large numbers and demanding quality services, including palliative care. Also, new invasive cancer cases in the CRHA, for example, are expected to increase 41 percent by 2010.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share with the hon. members two of the most important opportunities this motion would give the government of Alberta. By providing Albertans with a system of quality palliative care, whether in the home, community-based hospice, long-term care, or tertiary setting, more beds would be available in acute care facilities for other seriously ill patients. The best possible quality of life should be provided to the end of one's life in a comfortable, loving, and secure environment. However, a network of support must be there for terminally ill patients and their caregivers, whether professional, family, friends, or community volunteers.

Mr. Speaker, palliative care is a very important health service that is presently undervalued in our province. We will all benefit from future discussions on increased awareness and leadership action in support of a strong, provincewide palliative care network system. I strongly encourage all members to support this motion today.

I'd also like to extend a sincere thank you for co-operation to Pam Brown, who is program director of the regional palliative care program of the Calgary regional health authority; to Dr. Jose Pereira, medical director, tertiary palliative care unit, Foothills hospital, CRHA; and to Sharon Tell, senior operating officer, community care and public health, Capital health authority.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to speak briefly to this motion around a corollary issue or perhaps an overriding issue with palliative care. That's the issue of dementia and Alzheimer's. Now, I know that as a result of the long-term care report and the impacts of aging report, the government has been working on some different streams, following through on developing some of the recommendations that came out of those two reports. My concern and specific to what's being proposed here with a governmentwide strategy for palliative care and recognizing it as a core service is that I think exactly the same thing should be happening with dementia and Alzheimer's. For individuals over 85 years of age, 50 percent of them will have some form of dementia, which of course includes Alzheimer's. We don't seem to be recognizing that and integrating it into what we're doing.

I'm seeing the Alzheimer's strategy being developed as a health care strategy rather than a cross-departmental strategy, and when I look at what's being proposed here by the Member for Calgary-West under Motion 506, again, it's being developed as a health care strategy under the regional health authorities. My concern is that we need to be building more of a matrix structure when we're dealing with these issues.

You know, dementia affects more things than just the kind of care they're receiving through the health system. It affects things like housing. It affects things like transportation. It affects things like how our medical professionals are trained and what sort of spaces are available through the Department of Learning to move health care workers in. If we're saying that we need X number of health care workers specializing in dementia, do we have the spaces open in the universities to be able to receive these people?

When I actually start looking at this issue in the context of what's being proposed by the Member for Calgary-West, I'm actually, without trying too hard, looking at three different ministries here. We've got a Seniors ministry, a Health ministry, and a Learning ministry. Again, this is part of my concern here, because the member is proposing that it be cross-departmental, but it's still being housed in the regional health authorities. Maybe I'll just read the motion into the middle of my text here.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to identify palliative care as a core service in each regional health authority to ensure the availability of a co-ordinated continuum of care and support services for end-of-life care with access to palliative community services . . . for physicians, staff, and patients, and tertiary care.

When we're looking at palliative care, especially obviously for seniors, we know right now that 50 percent or better of the people that we're dealing with will have some form of dementia. To my eye what's being proposed here by this member in Motion 506 has to be taken into context in a much wider cross-governmental stream of how we are planning to deal with and how we're allocating resources overall for dementia and Alzheimer's.

Some of the other issues around that are respite care and the standards of care, and I note that this is the same member who brought forward private member's Bill 203, which surprisingly to me was not supported by the majority of members in here. That bill was around establishing a committee that would develop standards of care. I was shocked that that wasn't supported by the House, because it's something that we so obviously need here. So once again she's looking at standards of care being incorporated into what she's proposing with this motion.

So I'm more than willing to support this motion, but given what I've seen go on already with the support for Bill 203, with the insistence that things like palliative care and dementia be dealt with solely as a stream falling under health care, I think we're going in the wrong direction here. I understand where the Member for Calgary-West is trying to go with this motion, but I think we have to take a step back and be much clearer in how we're putting in place these different streams of action resulting from the long-term care report and the impacts on aging report, because we are going to create an awful lot of cracks in the system through which people can fall. There needs to be more of a matrix structure when we're dealing with a number of these different issues.

Finally, when I look at housing, I'm getting increasingly frustrated. Someone I met with recently brought up to me that the government spends twice as much on a child in care as we do on a senior in care. That's pretty chilling to me. I'm definitely not saying that less resources should be dedicated to children in care, but certainly we can and we need to be looking at committing more resources to seniors that are in care. I think that's a question of how much we value our seniors. There's a lot of talk, a lot of rhetoric, a lot of pretty pictures and pretty brochures about how much we value our seniors, but when I actually look at the programming, especially when I look at the programming that's being targeted in the future, I'm not seeing that value translated and manifested in what's being proposed.

There are a number of other programs that are possible here around early apprehension of Alzheimer's that I'm not seeing show up at all. Those programs should be in place long before anyone is needing the services of palliative care.

Part of what this person was bringing up with me – and I think it also relates to what's under Motion 506 – is that we must be dealing with the fee codes and how doctors are paid for the care that they're giving. I talked earlier about recruiting medical professionals and medical workers into the area of dementia and into the area of palliative care. It's darn hard for us to do that when we don't have a fee code that accepts and understands that more time needs to be spent with these patients. So that's another area to be looking for.

I just wanted to raise those points. I know that the member has lined up a number of her colleagues to speak in favour of her motion, so thank you for the opportunity to raise those points. I hope she will consider and integrate the issues that I've raised around Alzheimer's and dementia.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 506, proposed by my colleague from Calgary-West, is really quite powerful. I think it offers a catalyst for change in the way in which palliative care in our province serves the community but more importantly how that service is delivered.

I was honoured to be asked by my colleague from Calgary-West to speak to her motion. She's become known over her years as an MLA with incredible wisdom in regards to seniors' issues, which is one of the reasons why I believe we have this important motion before us today. My colleague's role as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council has shown all of us that a true reverence and compassion is essential when seniors are involved.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506 highlights a topic that many either do not understand or are afraid to discuss, and that is because it relates to death and dying. Whether it is terminally ill children, AIDS patients, or the elderly, my colleague is attempting to bring understanding and change for those coping with their own fears or the deaths of their families, friends, and loved ones.

The essence of this motion is that palliative care become a core service for all of the RHAs in our province. As I was sitting in my backyard yesterday writing this speech, my husband and son asked what I was writing about, Mr. Speaker, and I said palliative care. Well, you can imagine my surprise when they both asked me: what is that? My explanation was simple. It is highly specialized care of a person whose illness no longer responds to treatment that is designed to cure them. Palliative care is provided to people who are extremely ill and are making their transition from life to death. It is care that provides people at this stage in life with as much comfort and dignity as possible, and this is accomplished through a network of support which includes physical, emotional, and spiritual comfort.

Most often, Mr. Speaker, palliative care is administered through the comfort and warmth of the individual's own home with the assistance and support of family, friends, and community care agencies. The programs are flexible and can be altered to meet the unique care needs of each individual. In fact, as their symptoms change, a person can move from one palliative care setting to another. These compassionate services can be provided in the home, in a hospice setting, in a long-term care facility, or in the hospital as acute or tertiary care. As the patient moves toward more institutionalized settings, a greater percentage of the costs are covered by existing health care programs.

Mr. Speaker, I understand from my colleague from Calgary-West that 70 percent of seniors live in homes that they own, and the majority of seniors, even those over 85 years old, are expected to remain there. The ability to administer palliative care at home will enable more of our elderly to remain comfortable at this stage in their life. They will continue to receive the best and most complete care available surrounded by love and given respect, dignity, and affection.

Mr. Speaker, this important service significantly decreases the cost to our health care system. However, the cost to the individual and their family increases dramatically as more and more services are provided in the home. In fact, an ongoing problem with home-based palliative care is the significant time and monetary cost borne by the primary caregiver, who is often a family member. However, most family members do not complain because they know that by having their loved ones at home during life's last stages, they've said goodbye with love and are at peace.

The motion before us today by my colleague urges the government to identify this vital service as a core service in each regional health authority so that no Albertan is denied the best possible end-of-life care available. As stated, this motion will ensure the availability of a co-ordinated continuum of care and support services. This includes access to community services such as palliative, home, and hospice care, as well as respite care.

Home health services refer to those health services which must be available or reasonably accessible to every person who needs them. "Available" means the service is provided within each region, and "accessible" means that if the service is not provided within a region, it will be available from another region or through a program that serves the entire province. Currently palliative care is defined as a core service by Alberta Health and Wellness. So that means, Mr. Speaker, that it's a core service that's defined by Alberta Health and Wellness. I think this is where it gets a bit confusing. At least when I was writing this speech and I was going through it, I thought that.

It's a core service through Alberta Health and Wellness, yet it's delivered through the RHAs to terminally ill patients and their families. Now, the RHAs are responsible for the decision-making within their region, but they still work within an overall provincial framework. The identification of core services is intended to ensure that all regions offer a similar mix of services to Albertans. Funding is provided to the RHAs in one envelope, and they are responsible for allocating the dollars to fund the various services provided in each region.

In general, core services encompass the complete range of services needed to protect and promote health, prevent illness and injury, and provide diagnosis, treatment, care, and support. I think that this last point is particularly relevant: providing highly specialized care and support to the terminally ill is what palliative care does. Providing this service is a recognition that death is a part of life's natural cycle and that care and support to individuals and their loved ones is a fundamental health care service that our system should be providing at this important stage of life.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506 seeks to increase the importance of palliative care to a level that is equal to that of other services provided by the regional health authority. Motion 506 encourages the government to standardize policies relating to palliative care within the local autonomy of each regional health authority. I think that's a very important point. As well, my colleague had made that one of her four recommendations which were put before the Assembly earlier. That will ensure that all Albertans are receiving adequate care options.

Mr. Speaker, the Royal Victoria hospital and the St. Boniface hospital in Winnipeg opened the first palliative care units in Canada 27 years ago. They provided a new perspective on how people making their transition in life should be cared for. All of the provinces used the insight gained from these first palliative care units to develop their own and have continued to expand their method of delivery and resources.

In Alberta we have outstanding caregivers working in this critical area of medicine, and some were introduced to our Assembly today. You do magnificent work and thank you very much. To talk with them about the care of the dying is more than just informative. It is inspirational. These caregivers see the challenges of delivering the health care service that they believe to be essential within each RHA's jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, Sheila Weatherill, the president and CEO of Capital health, believes that the public is unaware of the first-class program that is available in the Capital region, and this is causing the program to perhaps to be under valued. In addition, Mrs. Weatherill has indicated that she believes we can develop provincial standards and still maintain local autonomy within the regional health authorities.

According to the Canadian Palliative Care Association, the Capital health model for palliative care is world-renowned for its excellence. Here in the capital a regional program was developed to integrate the services provided to those needing palliative care and allows easy access to different levels of care based on the severity of an individual's condition. These services are provided by a team of specially trained physicians and nurses who provide consulting services and support the region's primary care physicians and nurses in looking after the terminal ill.

Services are delivered both in the home and in continuing care settings. I understand that there is also an acute palliative care unit at the Grey Nuns community health centre which admits and cares for the terminally ill with severe physical and/or psychosocial distress. This continuum of care allows individual treatment by utilizing the services and care locations that are best for their personal circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, people in rural and urban communities require access to specialized palliative care services. Motion 506 will ensure that these services are available for all Albertans, regardless of where they live. We must encourage the creation of a provincial network for the delivery of palliative care services. Large regional health authorities have greater financial resources and as such are able to offer a full range of services that would not be practical in regions which do not have large populations. The building of a provincewide network for delivering palliative care services in Alberta I think should be encouraged for the benefit of everyone. Under such a network, patients from one region could easily access services available in another region.

To have even one family disadvantaged because they could not access appropriate palliative care would be a great tragedy. It is precisely during these difficult times that we need to ensure that proper care and treatment is available to everyone, regardless of where you live. We cannot allow people in any region to be denied full and comprehensive access to these essential and vitally important services. Compelling each RHA to recognize the importance of palliative care services will enable everyone to receive the critical care they need when they need it.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to identifying palliative care as a core service, education and training are required for primary caregivers, which include family physicians, local community nurses, and other community care providers. They are the first line of care and are compassionate, understanding, and humane when caring for those who are dying. In order to assist ill people and their families in making informed decisions, we need to provide the primary care providers with information about the programs and services that are available. Everyone will then be better able to meet the challenges that may arise.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506 also attempts to raise public awareness of palliative care services already available in Alberta. It makes our end of life as important as the beginning of life. People need to become aware of the services that are available to them so they can make educated decisions about the care that they receive or their family members will receive. The more informed Albertans are, the more qualified they become to make difficult decisions relative to life's transition.

Mr. Speaker, we should also recognize that by bringing forward Motion 506, my colleague from Calgary-West is addressing the needs of an aging population and the services they are going to require, and she does this by making it a standardized service in each RHA. I understand from my colleague that by 2016 the percentage of seniors in Alberta will have increased from around 10 percent to nearly 15 percent of the provincial population. This means that the actual number of seniors will grow by 60 to 70 percent, which I believe requires the development of long-term strategies that allow the elderly to live the end of their lives in comfort, with dignity and with respect.

The service should be standardized because people requiring palliative care also live in all corners of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I believe that palliative care relates to all age groups, but understandably seniors are the largest population that the service is provided to. While approximately 60 percent of seniors live in Edmonton and Calgary, many smaller municipalities have higher proportions. Camrose is composed of approximately 20 percent seniors, and 16 percent of Drumheller residents are seniors. In addition, many villages and towns, including Mundare, Viking, and Two Hills, have senior populations in excess of 30 percent. You can see why, due to our aging population, we cannot afford to ignore the issue of palliative care.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-West for sponsoring this motion. You can see from the detail in the motion that was debated in the Assembly today that it has been well thought out and carefully researched by my colleague from Calgary-West. I urge all of my colleagues in the Assembly to support Motion 506 and take another step towards the development of a viable palliative care system here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in support of this motion and commend the Member for Calgary-West for bringing it forward. It think it is very, very concise and deals precisely with the elements that need to be addressed. That is that palliative care should be a core service offered in every health region in the province, and it recognizes that this is simply a continuum of care, that the object of medical services is not always to save life. There comes a point when that is no longer possible, and then it is as important to provide compassionate care in appropriate settings for people who are beyond the reach of treatment.

I think, Mr. Speaker, this is a very progressive motion, and I'm pleased to support it. I don't intend to speak for more than a few seconds on it, but certainly I'm pleased to support it and am pleased to find that there are indeed some progressives amongst all those conservatives opposite.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise and address the Assembly with regards to Motion 506. I would like to extend my thanks to the hon. Member for Calgary-West for bringing this important health care matter before us. Not only is it health care, but it deals with seniors as well. I think, having known the hon. Member for Calgary-West, that she certainly is taking note of what others in the Assembly are saying, and I'm sure she's very receptive to some of the remarks coming from the opposition as well.

I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, who has an extensive past history in nursing and dealing with seniors, talked about the need for this to happen not only today but in the future because as time goes on, the number of seniors in this province will increase and increase drastically. It is time today to start thinking ahead to what will happen when the baby boomers do reach that age when they will need some help, love, and understanding.

This motion aims to address the state of palliative care in the province of Alberta. What it essentially does is seek to achieve to urge the government to implement a standardized system of palliative care throughout Alberta.

Currently, palliative care is listed as a core health service here in our province, but unfortunately its status as a core service is just not enough to ensure that each Albertan has access to the same high standard of palliative care across this province. This motion would ask that the government recognize palliative care as an essential service to all, and we heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross talk about the lack of understanding. If you really want to understand the benefits of palliative care, talk to family members that have in fact utilized palliative care and some of the health professionals trained to administer and work with these people. They will attest to all of the good things that can happen when this is implemented in communities.

Albertans, regardless of where they live, want to see some of these services take place. I think that it is important to look firstly to the regional health authorities. They have now been going for some time and have worked over the last several years to implement new and different programs that utilize the professionals that are available to them and take into consideration the needs in their own area. So possibly the difference in what is needed in palliative care could be incorporated as well into their overall business plans.

The regional health authorities, as was stated just a few minutes ago, certainly are to be commended, and certainly one that I'm familiar with, as many of you in this room are, is the Capital regional health authority. Over a period of time they've been recognized across Canada, if not throughout North America, for some of the very innovative programs which they have put together and are now implementing. One such program is palliative care, so I think that we don't need to reinvent the wheel. I don't think that we need to spend a great deal of time trying to figure what should be done. There are many, many examples, not only in Alberta but in other provinces as well, of things that would work and things that the community would embrace as well as the professionals delivering them.

Throughout our system of the regional health authorities we do see different levels of care that take place in many areas and pricing differences, as well, from region to region. We heard here a few minutes ago about some of the smaller communities today having 30 percent of their population as seniors. This over time is going to increase, and the needs are going to increase. So I think that it's prudent for us today to start looking at this in the long term.

One thing I do have to commend the Member for Calgary-West on. Time and time again, through her experience as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council, she brings to this Assembly in the form of bills or motions some of her concerns and concerns of her constituents to do with seniors.

Now, one thing I'm very pleased with is that after the election the Premier did make some changes and has put in place a minister responsible for seniors. I think this is very, very important. Possibly as we move ahead, we can see things like palliative care being taken into consideration, not only on the health side of the issue but also on the seniors' side of the issue, so that possibly there can be palliative care delivered in any number of settings, whether that setting be a person's home, whether that setting be a seniors' complex, or whether that setting be a long-term care or an acute care hospital. Palliative care must be delivered in a caring and sensitive manner, and today there are many, many people, health professionals, that are trained exclusively to deal with seniors and dying as well as seniors' families and dying.

We spend a great deal of time, effort, and dollars looking at life from conception till end. Many, many dollars are spent even before a child is born, at the moment of conception, and I think it's very, very important to help people deal with their death, if not so much for the individuals themselves, because many are very, very sick, but their families, their loved ones, their spouses need some help.

One thing that I have found, coming from a smaller rural community, is that many, many organizations and associations, wonderful community groups and service groups like the Kinsmen Club, the Lions, the IODE, the Rotary, will oftentimes take some part of the health care facility, some piece of equipment or some room in the hospital, and raise dollars to furnish it and work very hard to bring the community together to fully understand and appreciate the need to do this.

One such area that I think many service groups would be willing to work towards and with in rural Alberta is palliative care, so I think we could look to our communities. I know our Rotary Club is to be very much commended in Lacombe. They spend considerable time on a weekly basis driving many, many seniors to appointments to make sure that they see their optometrist, that they see their dentist, that they see their doctor. Over a period of time they have furnished many, many rooms not only at the Lacombe community hospital but at the seniors' or nursing homes as well, and I know this is one more project that they might consider taking on to ensure that the entire community knows the importance of palliative care.

I think what the member is proposing here is to develop a seamless network for the delivery of palliative care across the province. As a result of this network, there would be a co-ordinated continuum of care and support services available to address the needs of the persons who are at the end of their lives and their families. The motion would give palliative care the recognition it deserves. This is an essential health care service in this province, and it would ensure that the implementation of a comprehensive network would be examined by this government.

The goal of provincewide palliative care will be achieved based on the world-renowned model developed and implemented, as I said, right here in the Capital health authority, and I know Mrs. Weatherill and her people work together very closely. The board and members of her team would be more than willing to sit down with anyone and discuss what can happen with palliative care. I think Edmontonians can be very pleased that they have such an exceptional health authority and are receiving some of the best care in all of Canada. I think each and every one of us in this room can ask for some assistance from them in this regard.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, but under Standing Order 8(4) I must put all questions to conclude debate on the motion under consideration.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully request unanimous consent of the House to deal with Motion 505 at this time.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

507. Mr. Cao moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to ensure that assured income for the severely handicapped recipients transferring to a nonexempt income such as the Canadian pension plan disability program retain medical benefits until similar income limits are reached that disqualify medical benefits to partially exempt income earners under the assured income for the severely handicapped program.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to rise and introduce Motion 507 to the Assembly today. This motion concerns a pressing matter, because the assured income for the severely handicapped, or AISH, recipients who receive nonexempt funding from other sources exceeding $855 are automatically removed from the AISH assistance and therefore lose the medical benefits that AISH provides to them. This is especially disheartening because people on AISH are the Albertans who are most in need of our assistance, and when we take away their medical benefits because they have received more than $855 from other sources, we take away one of the most integral forms of help that we can provide to them.

Before discussing the details of the motion, I'd like to take a moment to clearly outline the difference between exempt, partially exempt, and nonexempt funding under the AISH framework. Exempt funding is any funding coming from outside of AISH that a recipient can earn without having deductions taken from his AISH benefits. Some examples of exempt funding include GST rebates, child allowances, and CPP death benefits, as well as others.

Partially exempt funding is the money that an AISH recipient can earn and that is not deducted dollar for dollar from his or her AISH payments. There are many forms of partially exempt funding. For example, dividend income is partially exempt as is net employment income after all statutory government deductions are taken. Partially exempt earnings are usually derived from employment. The first $200 of earned wages cause no reduction in AISH income benefits, and then 75 cents for every dollar earned thereafter is deducted.

Talking about the nonexempt income, these incomes are those which are deducted dollar for dollar from the AISH payments. I will discuss the many forms of nonexempt income later in the debate.

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced this motion out of a concern raised by one of my constituents. This person approached me and told me that his AISH medical benefits were taken away from him when he was granted Canada pension plan disability funding that exceeded $855 per month. Without the medical coverage that accompanied his AISH funding, he had to use his CPP funding, which amounted to $860, merely $5 more than the AISH limit, to fund his living expenses and his medical expenses. Clearly, he would have been better off without the extra $5 but with the medical coverage. I do not see why we could not have given this person medical benefits to go along with his CPP disability funding. He's a disadvantaged person who is in need of government assistance to maintain a quality standard of living and is a person with medical needs that far exceed those of average Albertans. The system did not work for him. We can make this work for him if we pledge today to ensure that the AISH recipients who receive above $855 in nonexempt funding are allowed to retain their medical coverage.

My constituent is not the only person to find himself in this situation. The list of nonexempt income sources is wide and includes Canada pension plan disability payments, workers' compensation, employment insurance, pension and retirement income, payments from Veterans Affairs, mineral royalties, land claim settlements, support payments from a sponsor for sponsored immigrants, spousal support from a former spouse, or inheritance income. While this is not an exhaustive list, it is clear that many of these sorts of payments do not come with medical benefits, and this means that many more Albertans are likely facing similar problems as those of my constituent. If any of these nonexempt income sources provide AISH recipients with more than $855, they lose their AISH money. I can understand that. However, they would lose their AISH medical benefit too. That I cannot understand.

Alberta has always made sure that we take care of our vulnerable citizens. Through our various legislation and regulations we ensure that those who face extraordinary health challenges are given every opportunity to live quality lives. We ensure the safe care of our elderly, stringent health regulations in our hospitals, and efficient provision of health services throughout the health care system. The needs of Albertans are not ignored by this government. Rather, we have made giant strides in guaranteeing that our health and social care systems are the best in Canada.

AISH is another of these generous programs. AISH ensures that support is there for those who need it most. The Alberta government is committed to supporting and improving the lives of citizens with disabilities through AISH and other targeted programs. AISH is one of the best and most generous programs of its kind in Canada and supports more than 25,000 Albertans who are in need of assistance. This number is expected to grow to over 30,000 over the next three years.

People who receive AISH are those with severe disabilities that inhibit their ability to earn a living. These disabilities that they have are permanent, and there's nothing that can change their physical condition. People receiving AISH already find themselves at the lower end of the economic spectrum before being granted government assistance. AISH is therefore an essential part of their ability to take care of themselves and in many cases their families.

These are Albertans who with little assistance are able to live productive lives. They have by nature or by accident been dealt a different hand than the rest of us. The assistance that AISH provides, both monetary and medical, helps them with many things that we take for granted. By providing these Albertans with assistance, we afford them the firm footing required to live with dignity and respect. AISH medical coverage provides recipients with coverage for necessary services like ambulance care, drug coverage, psychological counseling and treatment, and home nursing. However, unexpected loopholes always pop up. For example, consider one concerning my constituent.

Now, I would not ordinarily have known that such a loophole existed, but when I am faced with a constituent who has fallen through the cracks, I feel it is my duty to work on his behalf to make sure that neither he nor anyone else in a similar position falls through that loophole again. In the larger picture this is the duty of everyone in this Assembly. The best way to make sure that the health of my constituent and the health of others is adequately safeguarded is to stitch up the loophole with the thread of sound legislation. I urge the government to create this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, before I continue today, I would like to note that I do see an upper limit. For example, a single person who receives partially exempt funding outside of AISH can receive up to $1,340 monthly before they are ineligible for AISH monetary funding. For every dependent child an AISH recipient can add $400 to this upper limit. For example, an AISH recipient with two children can earn $2,140 per month before he or she loses all AISH monetary funding. Further, a single AISH recipient can earn just over $20,900 annually in partially exempt funding before his or her medical benefits are discontinued. For every child after the first child that is dependent upon an AISH recipient, $2,000 is added to his annual limit.

I propose that while keeping an amount of income needed to become ineligible for an AISH payment of $855 per month, we allow all persons eligible for AISH benefits, even those who receive funding from nonexempt sources, to continue receiving the medical coverage until they reach the upper threshold as prescribed by rules governing the partially exempt income. By doing this, we will ensure that the person eligible for AISH will not only be able to take care of their day-to-day expenses but will also continue to receive medical coverage.

What is at stake here is fairness. At $855 per month AISH provides severely handicapped persons with $10,200 per annum. If a severely handicapped person receiving money from nonexempt sources earns any more than that amount, he or she becomes ineligible for AISH income and medical benefits as well. This hardly seems fair when someone with similar problems but with different sources of income can earn up to $20,900 before their medical benefits are discontinued. Why would we drastically disadvantage one group?

Mr. Speaker, it should not matter where the funding comes from. It should only matter that all persons who need AISH medical care are able to get it. The medical benefits that these persons are entitled to should be theirs until they reach the higher income level, such as the $20,900 threshold, regardless of how they get that money. Also, we would make the care of the severely handicapped in Alberta more fair by equalizing the medical benefits received by AISH and by CPP disability recipients.

Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 15, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001.

What a great pleasure it is for a new MLA to speak to a bill that will have such a significant, positive effect on so many Albertans. What rookie politician anywhere wouldn't want to introduce a bill that lowers the tax rate, increases tax deductions, and puts more money in peoples' pockets?

There are three significant parts to this bill. I'd like to speak to each part. The first part is the reduction of the Alberta single rate of tax from 10 and a half to 10 percent. This change reduces income tax for all taxable Albertans. The biggest winners are the 200,000 low-income Albertans who are completely removed from the provincial income tax rolls.

This bill increases the value of tax credits. The tax credits benefit specific Albertans. Several credits are increased to match federal increases; others are adjusted for inflation in a very simple manner. Some examples. For the in-home care of a relative the credit goes from $2,386 to $3,500. The full-time education tax credit doubles from $200 a month to $400 a month. The age credit goes from $3,531 to $3,619. This change indexes this credit to the rate of inflation as per the CPI.

Albertans at every income level will pay less tax than they did in 2000. In Alberta single-income families will be treated fairly. The spousal amounts will match the basic personal amounts, and their income will no longer be pushed into a higher bracket. The province will not punish these families for making the decision to have one parent stay at home with their children. Minimum wage earners working up to 2,300 hours per year will be treated fairly as they will not pay any provincial income tax. Single parents will benefit from the significant enhancement made to the equivalent-to-spouse credit. This credit was more than doubled. Two-income families will pay less tax. Families with two children who earn less than $33,500 will pay no provincial income tax after the Alberta family employment tax credit is taken into account. Seniors will benefit from the large enhancements to the basic and spousal credit amounts. In addition, Alberta will index both the age and pension income credits, protecting seniors against bracket creep.

The second change to this act, Mr. Speaker, is a reduction in the fuel tax on locomotive fuel. It reduces this fuel tax from 3 cents a litre to 1 and a half cents a litre. This reduction in railway fuel tax will ensure that Alberta farmers, resource exporters, and other businesses have access to low-cost, high-quality rail transportation services.

The third part of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is intended to maintain the same tax collection abilities for the Crown that have been in place for many years. Exempting the Crown from the Limitations Act for the purpose of tax collection will ensure the Crown's established abilities to collect taxes within Alberta remain whole.

Now, I shouldn't have to urge members of the Assembly on both sides to support a bill that lowers taxes. Needless to say, it's a great step forward for the province of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for an opportunity to speak to Bill 15, Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001. There are a number of issues that are raised by this. Certainly Alberta Liberals are always willing to support a bill that reduces the tax burden on Alberta families, but this bill is again raising the issue of whether or not a flat tax is a fair tax for Albertans.

I spoke strongly against the previous incarnations of this, that it was really shifting the tax burden onto the shoulders of the middle-income earners in Alberta. I don't feel that it is a fair tax system when we have reductions in the double digits for the high-income earner elite and a significantly less percentage of reduction for middle-income earners.

I think the plan that was proposed by the Alberta Liberals around a fairer tax system in fact would have given greater savings and would've been much more fair. What we were looking at was a 0, 10, 12 plan that would give all Albertans a significant tax cut. It was a zero percent rate for income earned to $13,569, a 10 percent rate for between that amount and $79,999, and a 12 percent rate for every dollar of income earned above $79,999, so $80,000 for all intents and purposes.

We were looking to increase the personal tax exemption from $7,231 to $13,569, and we were also looking to increase the spousal and equivalent-to-spouse exemption from where it was to $13,569 so that families with stay-at-home spouses are treated the same as families with two incomes from outside of the home. I still believe the 0, 10, 12 tax plan provides a more fair and sustained tax relief for all Albertans.

One of the questions that came to me as I quickly looked over this bill is: why is the government introducing legislation that would cut railway fuel tax in half when in fact this was a recommendation that was brought forward and was rejected by the Business Tax Review Committee? What's happened between when that idea was rejected by the Business Tax Review Committee and now, when we see it coming forward enshrined in Bill 15? Has there been some lightbulb go on somewhere, some lobbyist that's not registered that we're unaware of? What's happened here? Well, tell me: what was the change? We had it rejected previously; now it's in legislation. So what allows for that change? The member sponsoring the bill spoke very briefly, and perhaps he can arrange for one of his colleagues to stand up and explain that as part of the debate as we go along.

There are some good things in this bill, as I've said. It is reducing the tax burden, although we think there is a better way to do that. It is also working with the tax credit increases provided for people that are providing home care for relatives. We've spoken about this issue in a lot of other contexts where people are giving up their time and their earning ability to care for relatives in their homes. There needs to be some recognition of that. Indeed, it is one of the tax credit increases that is in this bill. That would also capture people that are providing care for children with physical and mental infirmities.

There's also an increase in the education credits, although I still believe the best way to deal with encouraging people to participate in postsecondary education is to work to lower the tuition fees all the way around. The education credits may not be the incentive that we're looking for if we really wish to follow through on that, but I'd rather have them than not have them.

An increase in the amount that is deductible for persons that are over 65. Now, as the Official Opposition critic on seniors' issues, my colleagues in this Assembly have heard me get up on a number of occasions and talk about how seniors are really feeling that their sweat-soaked loonies are being pried out of their pockets with alarming frequency, especially with the increase around user fees and also the continued insistence from the government on having seniors pay for health care premiums and their Blue Cross coverage. So this increase in the amount deductible for seniors is welcome. There's still much more that the province could be doing that would be even more helpful.

Now, when we start looking at more specifics of what's being offered in this, we see that it's amending the Alberta Corporate Tax Act by stating that "the Limitations Act does not apply to the Crown with respect to any matter arising under this Act." So, in other words, when it is found that a business owes the government corporate taxes, there's no limitations on when the Crown can bring this claim forward. A good thing, say I. I think that's perfectly appropriate because when we're all contributing, both individuals and corporations, to the revenue base in the province, I'm always seeking equity and fairness.

Certainly the government has proven to be most vigilant in pursuing recovery of moneys for the government from individuals. For example, with a SFI overpayment or an educational grant overpayment they're voracious in the intensity with which they pursue individuals to vacuum that money back out of their bank account. I think it is perfectly appropriate that that should apply to industry as well, and certainly I'm glad to see that there are no limitations on when the government can be pursuing owed corporate taxes from businesses.

The act is also covering individuals by saying that "the Limitations Act does not apply to the Crown with respect to any matter arising under the Act." In other words, when someone owes the government taxes, there's no limitation as to when they can bring that forward. So that's capturing the individual. In the earlier section we're dealing with being able to pursue corporate tax, and there's another section that's able to pursue individuals.

Now, the big one that everyone is most familiar with is decreasing the flat tax from 10.5 percent to 10 percent. This is the second reduction that we've had of this flat tax rate. I remember when it was brought in with much ballyhoo – streamers, champagne corks a-poppin' on the other side – at 11 percent. Then the federal government brought down their budget. And, oh, my goodness, that all of a sudden put the Alberta flat tax in a very poor light because in fact those on the lowest end of the spectrum would have been paying more.

I think what it did in having the federal tax lower is that it really pointed out that that flat tax acts almost as a wringer. It torques, and those on the higher and lower end of the tax spectrum – it's like wringing a dish rag. You know, the part that gets rung the most intensely and where the water flies off is the two ends. So when you have the federal tax lowering and when we looked at the Alberta flat tax, those who would have been paying significantly more were the very low-income earners, and those who would have been saving significantly more, would have been taking home more were the high-income earners, the very wealthy elite.

Nothing pointed that out more clearly than having the federal government come down with their budget so very quickly. If my memory serves me, I think that even before this act was originally brought forward, they had to change from 11 percent to 10 and a half. We've now had another federal budget, and what do I see when I look at Bill 15? Well, indeed, we are now going down to 10 percent. So this is not through any sort of magnanimous gesture on behalf of the government. I believe it's because the federal program in fact points up how inequitable this Alberta program is and how it does torque on both ends of the income spectrum. They are now having to reduce it to 10 percent.

We've got a number of other sections that are dealing with the in-home care of relative credits, which I've already spoken about, plus the tax credits for those who are taking care of children with infirmities that have to be cared for in their homes, the section increasing the amount for people over 65.

Then we do have one section that is dealing with a very slight change in the formula for calculating medical expense credits. Combined with that is an increase in the tax credit for people suffering from a prolonged mental or physical impairment which is restricting their daily activities.

We have the education tax credit, as I spoke of. Now, there is a section in here that's really interesting. The government is changing what students can do with their unused tuition and education credit if they made no income to deduct against the credits. Well, a nice idea. Glad to see it. But I don't know how many people this is really going to be helping out, because every student that I've run into – I have a lot of students living in Edmonton-Centre, and my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview certainly has the university in his constituency and a lot of people living in that area. I don't think either one of us has met a student that isn't working at least one job.

Certainly many of the students I've had through my office are working three jobs just to keep up, and they're having to extend the amount of time that they're in fact in university. So if it was a three-year degree they were going for, they're now doing a three-year degree over four years, and they're still working three jobs, most of them a combination of part-time and full-time jobs and, obviously, most of them in the service sector, where they're not being paid a lot of money.

So a nice idea, but I don't know how many students are able to go through postsecondary education in this day and age and not hold down some kind of job where they are having some kind of earnings. This is only going to apply to students that have no income to deduct against the credits.

There is an amendment that deals with a calculation, also for tuition and education tax, that can be transferred to another person.

I notice that there's also a change in the overseas employment tax credit. For those people who earn overseas income, they currently get to deduct 40 percent of that amount that the individual is deducting under section 122.3 of the federal act for the taxation year. This is being reduced to 35 percent, so this actually increases the income tax payable because the tax credit has in fact shrunk by 5 percent. I know that for some of our oil field workers and those that have experience in that area that get snapped up by a company, sometimes Canadian companies that are operating overseas, this is certainly important to them because they often feel that they're getting fairly severely taxed.

There's a possibility here of a section that might be increasing the deduction for business income in Alberta. It's allowing a person to use their pension credits, unused tuition and education tax credits, the transferred credits, deductions for taxable dividends, overseas employment tax credit, foreign tax credit, political contributions, and royalty tax credits in calculations for determining their allowed deductions from business income in Alberta. So we'll see what the effect of that one is. It's allowing them to add up everything in their personal life, basically, and then look to see whether it could also apply on their business income.

I know that one of my colleagues had also wanted to speak to this bill. Again, as I said when I started, the Liberals are not going to have any objection to the lowering of taxes. It certainly does follow through on the government's earlier promise.

I still find that railway tax credit odd, and I'm looking forward to hearing from the sponsor of the bill or someone else who can explain why there was a change in direction there or whether the Business Tax Review Committee was discredited in some way. There must be a good story behind all of that. I'd love to hear it. [interjection] Oh, good. It sounds like the Minister of Energy might be looking to speak. I'm looking forward to that. Maybe he'll be able to answer some of the questions that I've raised instead of just commenting from the sidelines.

As I was saying, I'm really pleased to see . . . [interjection] Oh, there's another minister going to get involved. We're getting lots of people engaged on this really important and exciting bill today, Mr. Speaker.

I think the provisions that have been put in dealing with the Limitations Act and being able to pursue people for both back corporate and back individual taxes is a good one. I'm glad to see that that's been put in there.

So those are the issues that I really wanted to raise and the questions that I wanted to raise in the context of debate in second reading on this bill. As I say, in principle I'm certainly willing to support it, but I look forward to the other issues that are raised during debate and to what the answers to the questions are that I have brought forward.

Thanks very much for the opportunity.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few brief comments at this time on Bill 15. I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti discuss the merits of this legislation this afternoon, and I listened particularly with interest to the discussion since, the discussion by the Member for Edmonton-Centre regarding the locomotive fuel reduction. If it's good for the locomotives, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti in particular that if I was to go to Grande Prairie, I could stand on a street corner and not five minutes would go by and there would be at least one pickup truck come along with at least a 200-litre propane tank in the back.

Unfortunately, there's a 6.5 cent a litre propane tax levied in this province. Last year – I looked it up – we received $14 million in revenue from that tax. This year, according to government projections, there's going to be a $9 million sum realized from taxes on propane at the retail pump. Now, that's a reduction of $5 million in government revenue. I look at Ontario. Ontario has a 4 and a half cent a litre tax on propane at the retail level. Quebec eliminated theirs.

Now, I think of the revenue that's lost because of this tax. People are not getting conversions anymore because there's no cost saving here. This is an environmentally sound fuel, and I would urge at some point in the future – perhaps it's a little bit too late for me to amend this legislation at this time – all members of this Assembly to consider it. I'm not talking about having a lobbying effort on the Minister of Finance, but certainly if government members, for instance, were to go to Wainwright on a caucus retreat, it's something they could all discuss together.

This is a tax. If it was eliminated, I think it would increase the consumption of propane as a fuel in this province for delivery trucks, for farm trucks. I think it is a sound thing to do. You look at other provinces and what they have done and the fact that members of this Assembly are very fond of comparing the tax regime here to the tax regime in Ontario. Well, in Ontario currently there are 2 cents a litre less tax on propane. Also, considering the fact that so much of the production of the western Canada sedimentary basin is from Grande Prairie and north right to the border, all this propane has been shipped from here to Toronto and to Ontario. I believe the latest figures I had were that there was a 17 cent a litre price reduction in Ontario. I don't know what it is in Grande Prairie, but I know what it is in Edmonton.

I would urge members of this Assembly to consider in the future eliminating the propane tax as a fuel tax. I think it is a good idea. Can we survive without the $9 million in revenue in the budget of this province? I think we can. We can start with things like the risk management fund. There was money spent on that. We can ensure that that's not done again. That's almost 10 percent of the savings right there. There are ways to save money, and I'm sure we can get along without this.

In closing, I would like to remind members of the cost of the conversion to propane and the cost of the tanks. If this 6.5 cent a litre tax on propane were eliminated, it would demonstrate to the consumers, the motoring public of this province who want to choose propane as a fuel, that the government is serious, that this is a fuel not only for now but also for the future.

At this time, I would like to thank all hon. members for listening to my pitch to eliminate the 6.5 cent a litre tax on propane. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close debate.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government is committed to maintaining the most competitive overall tax regime in Canada. We believe that a simple, low, and fair tax system is the most competitive. Lowering the single rate of income tax from 10 and a half to 10 percent is proof of that commitment. Alberta has one low rate of 1 and a half cents per litre for all aviation fuel, and now the same low rate will apply to railway fuel. It's just another example of this government's commitment to lowering taxes.

With that, I'll conclude. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 11 Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate May 15: Ms Blakeman]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm anxious to participate this afternoon in the debate on Bill 11, the Employment Standards Amendment Act. This is certainly a long time in coming. You know, I've heard many politicians across this province, some of whom are in this Assembly, discuss family values, and finally I can see that the family is being put first with this legislation.

To support this bill is quite easy, because it is good legislation. When it comes, again, to supporting this, you have to consider the families, the young families of this province and the parents. This legislation gives legislative force to maternity and parental leave regulations passed in February, and later on perhaps I'll talk a little bit about that. It also gives entitlement to up to one year of unpaid job-protected employment leave to care for a newborn baby or an adopted child. Unlike federal and other provincial legislation distinction is made between fathers and adoptive parents, who are entitled to 37 weeks. Adoptive parent groups, as I understand it, are opposed to policies that differentiate them from other parents, and that is understandable. I don't feel that there should be any difference between birth parents and adoptive parents.

Now, in February of last year the federal government doubled the duration of maternity and parental leave under the EI or employment insurance program to 50 weeks, and that was effective, of course, after Christmas, in January of this year. This gave parents the opportunity to spend more time with their newborn and newly adopted children. Again, that goes back to family values. I'm not going to go into any detail on this whole concept of family values and how on occasion there's just lip service, in my view, paid to it, but again this is a positive step.

I can remember getting a call about three years ago at the constituency office from a mother in Calgary. She was a professional. She had moved to Calgary and had taken a job and had to have maternity leave. She phoned in utter disgust at the law in this province and how she felt it was inadequate. I understand the persistence that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort has provided on this issue. Perhaps that member also received a phone call from that particular individual, because she made her points very well and for my benefit compared our leave schedule here with other provinces. It got to the point in the discussion where she said that if she had realized this, she probably would not have taken the corporate transfer to Calgary. That was amazing in my view, because we have to ensure that there is an attraction to workers to this province.

Now, while the federal government decides how long EI is paid out for maternity or parental leaves, the federal government can only compel employers governed by the Canada Labour Code. This is why this legislation is so important to Alberta parents now. Why have we waited so long? Who knows? At least it's come forward. It may not be letter perfect, but it is certainly a big step in the right direction.

Several provinces passed legislation matching or exceeding the federal extension. In fact, the province of Quebec, as I understand it, offers 60 weeks. Although the provinces had plenty of notice and while the federal legislation took effect, as I said, after Christmas this year, Saskatchewan and Alberta were the only holdouts. Previously, as discussed in the phone conversation I had with the professional person from Calgary, Alberta law had protected jobs for only 18 weeks.

Now, it appears that the government has finally listened to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, and this extension on parental leave is going to improve all workplace relations in this province. Small businesses certainly had reservations about this, but I think that when you think of satisfied and content employees, I'm sure it's going on.

Both private- and public-sector corporations in this province are on recruitment drives. For instance, if whatever regional health authority is to go on a recruitment drive for registered nurses, the registered nurses, Mr. Speaker, the majority of whom are female, that may be a question they would ask a recruiter: how many weeks of maternity benefit leave could I expect in your province? It may be easier as a result of this legislation for the recruiters to attract not only registered nurses but professionals of all sorts. Perhaps the civil service in the province is going to be on a major recruitment drive.

When we think of extending leave provisions to the federal standard, I believe it also can benefit small businesses. A company that has to hire and train someone to replace an employee on maternity leave for 18 weeks any way – that was to be the length of time. So why not 50 weeks? It might actually be easier to recruit someone to a job, and perhaps if the economy continues and unemployment rates stay as low as they are, well, that person after that leave can find themselves in an advantageous position and find employment in the corporation, in maybe that department or some other department, because as the economy continues to expand, it might be easier to recruit someone to a job.

This is a bill I think that is generally supported by the majority of Albertans. I can't understand why people would have difficulty supporting this, but an additional argument in favour of the 50-week extension is that parents will be able to work part-time while receiving benefits. Now, if that is to happen, it will help businesses whose specific needs are difficult to fulfill. You know, there are niche careers, or there may be difficulty in recruiting someone full-time. Well, that will help out.

But when we think of job experience and the demands of the workplace and the demands of the workplace on family, we need to understand that parents who are better able to balance the demands of work and family experience less stress. There is a lower rate of absenteeism from the job, therefore more productive workers. Alberta is noted for the productivity of its workforce. A recent Canada Health study estimated that 19.8 million workdays at a cost of $2.7 billion, Mr. Speaker, per year were lost in 1997 due to work/family conflict and stress.

This bill as it was introduced by the minister was turning regulation into legislation. It was the final step, it states here, in protecting the rights of working parents and employers.

Now, the consultation process with this went on for some time. There were employees, employers, working parents. Maternity and parental leave provisions had to strike the right balance between providing parents with the flexibility they need to care for their young families and ensuring employers have adequate time to make good hiring decisions. Well, I think all of that has been done with this bill.

Under the Employment Standards Amendment Act, Mr. Speaker, mothers and dads and adoptive parents are entitled to 37 weeks of parental leave, and birth mothers will also be eligible for 15 weeks of maternity leave. The leaves are available to parents of children born or adopted after December 31, 2000.

Now, why did we wait so long in this province? Many people have brought this to the attention of the Assembly, but we waited and we waited and we waited in this province. The only thing I can say is that it is well worth the wait, I suppose, but I'm a little disappointed at the speed, but there is very little that can be done about that. We can talk about family values, and we do talk about family values, but when you look at some of the cautions that one has to consider when debating this bill – it's a rubber stamp. It's a whitewash, because we had the regulations. They were announced in February, and they were announced in conjunction with the election, and now we wait for the legislation. One can only bring those concerns forward to politely remind all members of this Assembly just exactly the importance that should be put on legislation. Regulations should come a distant, distant second.

In closing I would like to remind the minister that there is more work to be done on the Employment Standards Code. This is one amendment, but I look forward in the future to amendments to change the Employment Standards Code so that there is rigorous enforcement of all Employment Standards Code rules and regulations, because unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it is anywhere between 75 percent and 82 percent of Albertans who rely on the Employment Standards Code to govern all the workplace rules and regulations, and there have been just some dismal failures in enforcing one of the most important statutes. All statutes in this province are important. I'm not saying that. But when you consider the size of the workforce that relies on the governance or by the commitment of this government to enforce this law, whether you're working for an oil company in downtown Calgary and you're applying for maternity benefits or if you're working for a car wash in downtown Calgary and you're not getting the hours on your paycheque that you worked for, it should be of concern to the government.

Now, the current minister has taken the bull by the horns, so to speak, with enforcement of the occupational health and safety rules and regulations, and I expect to see the current minister do the same with the Employment Standards Code. I'm looking forward in the future, Mr. Speaker, to other amendments to this legislation to make the minister's job much easier, because when you think of someone who is earning $6 an hour, they should be entitled to every cent that they earn. Earlier in the Assembly we heard that low-income Albertans – and many of those are earning $6 an hour and $6.50 an hour – are going to be experiencing total tax relief, I think was the description used, provincial tax relief. If individuals are working for that, they're entitled to every penny, and they're not getting it.

There are other examples besides the car wash industry. There's the hospitality industry. You have young people entering the workforce, some of whom are entering the workforce for the first time, and they are being exploited. One thing we are doing by not enforcing the law is that we are building a confrontational relationship, and I am strongly opposed to a confrontational relationship between employer and employee. If you go into the workforce for the first time and you've got to fight like a badger, if you've got to go to the employment standards office to get what's rightfully yours, the wages that you worked so hard for, you're going to have a suspicion towards all employers in the future because you just can't rely on them.

You know yourself that if you've punched the clock or whatever – your time was taken – and you're going in to work for three hours in a restaurant but suddenly the restaurant is not willing to pay you your time because there are no customers, that's wrong. The restaurant should have the management skill to be able to put you to work in another productive capacity. I can't believe that in this province we tolerate that sort of activity.

Another example, Mr. Speaker, is if one restaurant, for instance on one end of the street, is abiding by the Employment Standards Code and another restaurant, a competitor down the street, is not abiding by the code. Each of them have, say, a range of between 15 to 20 either part-time or full-time employees. How can the restaurant which is abiding by the rules – paying the wages, paying vacation pay, holiday pay, overtime pay, all those rules in the Employment Standards Code – compete on a level playing field with another enterprise of a similar size and in the same market up the street who is not abiding by the rules and is ripping off the employees? It is unacceptable that we allow this to happen.

I look forward – I'm sure it's coming – to further amendments to the Employment Standards Code to deal with this issue of chronic repeat offenders of the Employment Standards Code in this province. Whether it's in the hospitality industry, whether it's in the car wash industry, whether it's in the construction industry, or whether it's in the dry cleaning industry, it is very, very important that the hon. minister take a look at this. I look forward to these amendments as they come before the Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is well known for its focus on people, prosperity, and preservation. I'm very happy to commend the Minister of Human Resources and Employment for bringing Bill 11 forward, the Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001. I'm very pleased to join the debate on the bill as it relates to my focus on people, the human factor of our Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, in my constituency work I have encountered many cases of hardworking parents who need parental leave. For instance, in the case of a young, hardworking family after the birth of their first child, the mother and the baby were not in good health, and the father could not take leave from work to care for them. In order to do so, he had to quit his job, and having quit the job, employment insurance would not cover their income.

In another situation, Mr. Speaker, a young mother had to stay home longer than the minimum employment standards, at that time 18 weeks, to take care of her infant. She had to quit the job and lost all seniority benefits with the company.

In yet another situation a working couple wanted to build a family through adoption. They had to wait a long, long time for the child. The adoption process exhausted their very limited financial resources and all their time for leaves long before the child arrived. So once the child arrived in their family, they did not have leave time left to familiarize with and to take care of the newly adopted member of the family.

Visiting a few child care facilities, Mr. Speaker, regardless of their superb services, I saw very young infants lying lonely in their cribs without warm, motherly care. I also know that there are many new parents who are in distress because of demands at work and the natural parental feelings for their infants.

As the chair of the Employment Standards Regulation Review Committee in 1999 I discovered that the minimum parenting leave in Alberta was at that time the lowest of all Canadian jurisdictions. So in the year 2000 these were my motives in designing my private member's Bill 209, proposing a change in maternity, adoption, and parental leaves. I approached the situation not from the point of view of benefits for the mother or the father or the employer. I considered the issue from the perspective of a newborn Albertan, of a very recently adopted child. From the perspective of that infant the very best thing possible is, without doubt, to spend as much time as possible with a loving and nurturing parent. Once sitting in the Chamber during the debate of my private member's bill, I had the thought that if all members were magically turned back to our infancy time, all those babies would have voted for their parents to stay with them.

I believe that all Albertans take pride in caring for our children and all good businesses take pride in caring for their staff. After all, what are business successes for if not for our family and our children?

As the fall session in the year 2000 came to a close, my private member's bill was stalled, but I was very, very pleased that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment announced on December 18, 2000, that a committee would be established to study the issues and report its findings by January 31, 2001. The committee included Sue Evison, a professional engineer, the president of APEGGA, a consulting engineer, and a working mother with two teenagers. Joining her on the committee were members Corinne Pohlman, senior policy analyst, Canadian Federation of Independent Business; Co Vanderlaan, director, Christian Labour Association of Canada; Shannon Wyatt, a lawyer returning to work after maternity leave; Audrey Cormack, president, Alberta Federation of Labour; and the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, currently the Minister of Gaming. To those who have helped and participated in the subject matter, my sincere thanks.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 does everything and more than I proposed in my private member's bill last year. First, with the recent extension of the federal employment insurance to pay for parental leave for the entire year, it allows parents to enjoy the EI entitlement while doing the hard and dutiful work of parenting. Secondly, the bill allows parents the freedom to determine which one of them will stay home with the child and for how long. Thirdly, the bill extends its new parental leave provision to adoptive parents as well, giving them the same rights as other new parents, other new mothers and fathers. Adoption should be encouraged to meet their needs and to help those unwanted children or the children in government care.

I feel the potential benefits of the bill are clear. Study after study shows that the early relationship between parent and child is one of the most critical factors in determining the future health and happiness and success of a child. Parenting leave's impact on Alberta's tremendous prosperity is likely to be minimal, and the potential impact on the future of our children is so great.

Before concluding I commend the Minister of Human Resources and Employment for taking this initiative forward. I also want to thank the staff of Alberta employment standards for working hard behind the scenes to bring ideas for changes to fruition.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased that Bill 11 will codify the maternity and parental leaves in law, not just in regulations. I urge all member colleagues to give the bill your full support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we now adjourn and reconvene at 8 p.m., at which time we'll reconvene in Committee of Supply.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: All those in support of this motion, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Those opposed, please say no. Passed.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:27 p.m.]

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister to open debate.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, it's a great pleasure to stand before you as the first Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development for the government of Alberta. I'm really pleased to present the estimates for this new department.

As I travel across the province, aboriginal leaders and northerners tell me how pleased they are to be recognized in this new ministry. Responsibility for aboriginal affairs was transferred to this stand-alone ministry from International and Intergovernmental Relations, and responsibility for the Northern Alberta Development Council was transferred from Alberta resource development. Our business plan and budget have been amended to reflect these changes. I will address aboriginal affairs first, and then I will discuss important northern issues and the key role of the Northern Alberta Development Council.

We may be one of the smallest ministries, but we are also one of the most active and dynamic. We deal with a full scope of issues, and we are championing one of the four cross-government priority initiatives. In order to do the job, however, Mr. Chairman, we rely on the good efforts and co-operation of every government ministry. We facilitate solutions rather than just managing problems. We work with aboriginal governments, communities, and organizations to ensure that their requests and views are heard within the Alberta government. We also work with other Alberta ministries to develop strategies to address the needs of aboriginal people. This includes providing guidance on appropriate protocol and ways to consult with aboriginal communities. Our ministry also has knowledge of and sensitivity to aboriginal issues and culture in Alberta.

In the year ahead our key goal, as set out in the government of Alberta's business plan, is to support aboriginal people and governments in achieving self-reliance and enhanced well-being. We will be pursuing this goal through the implementation of Strengthening Relationships: The Government of Alberta's Aboriginal Policy Framework. In addition, the ministry will also contribute to the other priority government goals through both an aboriginal and northern development perspective.

The framework was conceived by the Hon. Dave Hancock and supported by ministers like the Hon. Mike Cardinal. Their support, that was instrumental in the development of the framework, and involvement will be needed as we move forward through the whole process of implementation of the aboriginal policy framework. Addressing aboriginal issues requires co-operation and teamwork of all ministries. It is not my responsibility alone. We will be relying on their continued support and all other ministries that are also part of this process.

The vision of the framework is a future in which strong, sustainable aboriginal economies support self-reliant First Nations, Metis, and other aboriginal communities and people. The framework consists of two goals. The first goal focuses on well-being and self-reliance of aboriginal people and communities. The second goal addresses federal, provincial, and aboriginal roles and responsibilities. The strategy is not to provide handouts but to provide a hand up through the development of relationships, participation by aboriginal people in the economy and programs that affect them, and cross-cultural awareness that works for both aboriginal and nonaboriginal partners.

I will soon announce a collaborative process through which the province, aboriginal communities, and industry will work together to develop an aboriginal capacity-building strategy. In the meantime, we have been working with aboriginal communities, including the Grande Cache co-operative enterprises, the Cold Lake First Nation, and the Kapawe'na First Nation on specific capacity-building initiatives.

There are a number of cross-ministry initiatives that were completed last year that merit recognition. An aboriginal high school, the Amiskwacy Academy, was established in Edmonton. An Alberta First Nations gaming policy was announced. The First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act was passed, the first legislation of its kind in Canada. A Provincial Court with an aboriginal judge, court workers, and a peacemaker program was established on the Tsuu T'ina reserve. An oil and gas consultation pilot project was initiated with the industry and the Dene Tha' First Nation, and a natural resources initiative and petroleum employment training pilot project have graduated trainees in land administration, oil and gas field workers, and oil rig work.

We are also starting discussions with aboriginal communities on developing best-practice guidelines with respect to traditional-use studies. My ministry staff and I will work hard to fulfill the promise of the aboriginal policy framework and the aboriginal policy initiative.

A key concern for the ministry is to continue improvements for the Metis Settlements governing structures, systems, and accountability. Our main objective is to enhance the settlements' capacity to be self-reliant and self-regulating. We are working with settlements representatives to develop proposals for revised legislative and long-term financial arrangements to further these ends. We'll be reviewing this proposal throughout the summer.

This year is the final year of operation for the Metis Settlements Transition Commission, an organization that has been assisting with the development of the settlements' governance systems. The commission will dissolve on March 31, 2002, and its essential functions, such as the Metis Settlements land registry, will be transferred elsewhere. With the dissolution of the commission the settlements will be fully responsible for their own administrative affairs.

A significant focus for this fiscal year will be to ensure that appropriate accountability mechanisms such as community-approved three-year business plans are in place for each settlement. The Metis Settlements Transition Commission has implemented a revised performance measurement system that focuses more on the results actually achieved. We are also working with the Metis Settlements to examine additional ways to address the need for greater accountability.

The ministry continues to make progress in the settlement of outstanding aboriginal land claims. Since 1986 Alberta has been instrumental in settling 11 treaty land entitlement claims. Our record is one of the best in Canada, Mr. Chairman. The settlement of these claims has created greater certainty for all parties. The financial compensation and opportunities provided by land claims settlements provide the means for First Nations to truly benefit from Alberta's thriving economy and increase the role of aboriginal Albertans in the province's economy. This ministry will continue to strive towards settlements that are fair and equitable for all parties.

Over the past year we have seen an improvement in relations on aboriginal issues with the federal government. I do not want to give the impression that there are no problems. However, there is greater co-operation among federal and provincial ministries on projects that produce specific and meaningful results, as indicated in goal 2 of the framework. To this end the Canada/Alberta partnership forum has been established to work with First Nations and Metis organizations to develop partnerships that will lead to improved participation by aboriginal people in the Alberta advantage.

As well, Alberta participated with the federal government, other provinces, territories, and national aboriginal leaders to develop a national framework to increase aboriginal participation in the Canadian economy. This document supports our own provincial initiatives and our framework. An essential theme of the federal/provincial framework and Alberta's aboriginal policy framework is the need to recognize and develop solutions for including the rapidly growing aboriginal youth population, who could address future labour force shortages. As part of the implementation of a national aboriginal youth strategy, a conference involving 120 youth from across Canada will be held in Edmonton this year from October 26 to 28.

I will now briefly focus on the northern development work within the ministry. Under the leadership of my colleague Gary Friedel, MLA for Peace River and chairman of the Northern Alberta Development Council, the council continues to work on the advancement of the north by communicating northern interests, both private and public, addressing development opportunities, and promoting skill development for northern youth and adults. The ministry's aboriginal initiatives complement the work of the council, and the work of the council supports the ministry's initiatives. A key initiative for the NADC will be the preparation of a strategy that further advances northern development.

I would be remiss if I did not mention NADC's work on interjurisdictional initiatives. We will be hosting this year's northern forum in Edmonton this summer. This international forum brings together delegates from around the world to discuss northern issues. For the first time this fall Alberta will be represented at a meeting for northern development ministers from across Canada.

I am also looking forward to assuming the Alberta co-chair position for the implementation of the Alberta/Northwest Territories memorandum of understanding for co-operation and development. Our neighbour to the north is entering an exciting period of development that is expected to have a positive impact on Alberta. The department looks forward to addressing these northern opportunities as well as challenges.

In terms of staffing, our ministry is relatively small, with a complement of 60 FTEs, which includes 15 within the NADC and seven within the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. The total budget for the year ahead is $30.2 million. The department's budget is based on the budgets for aboriginal affairs and NADC with minimal cost increases over last year. In order to maximize the resources of the ministry, we will be implementing a human resource plan with the priority focus on leadership development and success in planning.

Finally, a brief outline on the performance measures. We will report on the strategies outlined under the government of Alberta's business plan aboriginal goal and the aboriginal cross-ministry initiative. We are developing cross-government performance measures for these activities. We will work with all ministries to improve the number of data sources for aboriginal-specific data and the quality of data. Improved data will be used by ministries to report progress on improving the well-being and self-reliance of aboriginal people. The department will undertake the development and the evaluation of pilot projects, and we will also conduct a client satisfaction survey. These measures will help us track our progress in meeting our goals in both an accountable and efficient manner. The new business plan for Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development lays out in more detail how we will meet the priorities for our province in the year ahead.

I look forward, Mr. Chairman, to listening to what the comments will be from my opposition critics as well as finding out how they can improve the system in order that we can satisfy the needs of aboriginal Albertans and northern Albertans.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a privilege to rise to speak to the issues concerning a brand-new ministry, and I congratulate the government on setting up a separate department for aboriginal issues: Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. It's undoubtedly a very important area. The minister and I already briefly chatted, and I'm going to encourage that her budget be doubled next year. But if that doesn't work out, I've got some other thoughts as well.

I noticed the overall trend. As you compare expenditures in these areas from when it was under a combined department to now, it looks to me like the pattern in spending is very stable, and the intentions are that spending will remain stable. In fact, if I read the figures correctly – and I'm going from memory here – looking over the next three years, I think that in the business plan there's very little increase in spending anticipated. I would expect that once one were to account for inflation and a growing population, actually the minister will be dealing with a shrinking budget, which may bring various problems and issues of its own.

I did notice in her opening comments the emphasis on interdepartmental co-operation. I think that's tremendously important. If there is one thing that this department can do that would be of great help to all Albertans and to all aboriginal Albertans, it would be to act as a catalyst to bring together in a focused way the efforts of departments such as Health and Wellness, Learning, and other departments to address the concerns of the aboriginal population.

My suspicion and my experience would suggest to me that too often, especially when it comes to provincial affairs, the aboriginal people fall through the cracks, between programs, and their particular needs get left in between other departments and other programs and are not adequately addressed. It's probably aggravated by the fact that the federal government has such a major role in this area and things tend to get pushed off from one level of government to another, either between the provincial and federal governments or between provincial, federal, and municipal governments, or local governments, when we're talking, for example, about urban concerns. So if this department and this minister can succeed at pulling together and focusing the efforts of each of those other departments on aboriginal concerns, it would be a great success for us all. Of course part of that is working, as she noted, on the community collaborative process, bringing the local people together in a true program of community development, listening from the grassroots level and responding at that need, rather than bringing solutions down from above.

I noticed a few particular initiatives that were mentioned. The repatriating of sacred objects, a very, very difficult subject or a very difficult area to sort out. I commend this government for its initiatives, I think probably groundbreaking initiatives, in repatriating sacred objects. I'm aware of the struggles that can occur between museums and their legitimate interests in preserving objects for the very long term and safeguarding them and studying them and, at the same time, the legitimate claims of the people to whom those objects belong to use them and to use them as part of their own culture to sustain and develop that culture. I think this government probably has handled that about as well as any government will have done.

I also noted her comments on judicial reform. Again, a very difficult area. I'm sure we're all aware that the aboriginal population is overrepresented in our judicial system and that there are great cultural frictions between the European-based, the British-based judicial system and the traditional aboriginal judicial system. There's plenty of room for innovation there, so I would encourage the minister in that direction.

Before we get into specifics, the general areas that I see as needing most attention are all interrelated. Employment, the very high unemployment rates among aboriginal people is a serious concern. Of course, then, not surprisingly, so is poverty, poverty and unemployment going hand in hand. In so many of our situations now I suspect that with our aboriginal population there's a multigenerational pattern that's been established, and it will be a real challenge for us to break. Along with the unemployment and the poverty go persistent health problems, and those will have, I'm sure, some aspects of them specific to aboriginal predicaments, whether those are on reserves or in cities. Lack of education or inadequate education again raises problems that relate back to unemployment and poverty and health. I think there are some innovations occurring in education, but those could certainly be extended and encouraged so that they offer hope of breaking the cycle that so often we see our aboriginal people caught in.

Finally, one other area that may not get as much attention as perhaps it deserves in this discussion is environmental issues. I'm concerned with the great burgeoning of development across this province, whether it's in the northeast, in the huge areas of north-eastern Alberta around the oil sands, the whole development of forestry along, for example, the Athabasca river, or the problems over the long term in the Peace River delta right down to recent proposals in southeastern Alberta for water damming or certainly in southwestern Alberta and the Oldman River dam. Everywhere we turn, the natural environment is under pressure, and certainly historically the stewards of that environment were the First Nations, the people who managed to survive and create a culture in this environment that was sustainable not just for generations or centuries but for millennia. I think that we need to be very careful as we look at how we manage our environment, to learn all the lessons we possibly can from our First Nations people.

So those are some areas – employment, health, poverty, education, and environment – that I think I would certainly encourage attention to.

Shifting now to a little bit more specific material, the whole notion of breaking out a separate department for aboriginal affairs, as I said earlier, is probably a far-sighted one. It will take some particular care to manage that properly so that the new department will perform as efficiently and effectively as it possibly can. I'm wondering what work is being done in that area and what analyses the government did to reason through or to think through its decision to break out this separate department. Presumably it's a reflection of a shift in government priorities, and it would be useful to know what that shift is. How have the priorities changed now that we have a separate department as opposed to the time when aboriginal affairs was under the minister of intergovernmental relations?

Among the three programs under the department there is aboriginal relations, Metis settlements governance, and northern development. We'll talk to those just one by one and then keep going into more and more detail.

I would have to look at the figures to ensure that I've got them correct here. It looks like there may have been a real drop in spending in the area of aboriginal relations. The gross comparable actual figure two years ago was about 11 and a half million dollars, and it's budgeted this year at $8.3 million. That's a drop of about 30 percent. That's a pretty marked decline, and I'd be interested to know what's caused that, if it's a transfer of activities to other departments or what's going on there. It's notable for its size.

Also, in the Metis settlements governance program there is a substantial decline, I think a difference of about, if I'm correct, 16 percent. A similar question there: what accounts for the marked decline in those areas?

Again, in the third area as well – no, I guess there wasn't a drop in northern development. Anyway, there are a couple of trends in spending there that are surprising for the decline in spending that's occurring there. It's probably easily explained, but I'm curious to know what it is.

The Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development focuses its goals around the three core businesses: people, prosperity, and preservation, which has a nice alliteration to it. I'm not precisely sure what the preservation refers to. I like particularly the phrase I saw. The department's key goal is "to support Aboriginal people and governments in achieving self-reliance and enhanced well-being" and then somewhere else ensuring that "the well-being and self-reliance of Aboriginal people will be comparable to that of other Albertans," which seems to be a goal entirely justified and perhaps difficult to achieve but certainly something to strive for. Until we reach that level, I don't think we can say that we are as socially fair and just a society as we ought to be.

Many of my comments actually address some of the questions around key results. I talked about emphasizing the co-ordinated approach to Alberta's relationships with aboriginal people, the interdepartmental co-ordination, and increasing the self-reliance and well-being of aboriginal communities and people. That could of course include some of the areas I've mentioned, education and employment and also economic development in aboriginal communities, which can include businesses based within those communities.

The original entrepreneurs of Canada were the First Nations people. The First Nations people were the original traders, and if you look at the historical trading patterns of the Blackfoot or the Cree, they covered huge areas. They were very successful at trading within their nations and from one nation to the next. Of course, with the arrival of the Europeans the trade expanded. We so frequently forget that heritage and underplay it, and if we could do something to encourage and stimulate the entrepreneurial, to use a very European kind of word, heritage of the aboriginal community, it would be a big step forward. I think it would be important for developing and increasing their self-reliance, their self-respect, and reducing some of the concerns around poverty and poor health.

Given the stability of the budget over the period we're looking at, except for those questions I had going back a couple of years when there were the big drops in spending, I don't have extensive comments on the budget.

I am however noticing some issues around the performance measures and performance indicators, particularly numbers 3 and 4 under the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Number 3 is "survey of clients and partners." I generally have a lot of difficulty, as I know some of my colleagues do as well, with performance measures that are based on surveys of satisfaction.

Surveys are easily manipulated. They're easily shifted. It's difficult to be sure exactly what they're measuring, and frankly satisfaction is important, but it's only one facet of the whole issue we're looking at here. So I would much prefer something meatier and – what would the word be? – more reliable as a performance measure than a survey of clients and partners. Certainly you don't want your clients and partners to be upset with you. You want a good working relationship, but as a performance outcome it's not going to convince me.

I have similar comments also about performance measure indicator 4, "public polling data." Public polls are, like surveys, very easily manipulated. Public opinion can shift dramatically over a period of just a few days as issues flare up or die away. I can easily imagine public polling being done immediately before or immediately after a particularly vivid incident, perhaps revolving around First Nations people, incidents such as those that have occurred in other provinces, at Oka or elsewhere, wildly affecting the results of public opinion polls and throwing the value of public opinion polls as performance measures right out the window. So as with surveys of clients and partners I find public polling data as a source of performance measures to be very weak, shall I say.

The work of the Northern Alberta Development Council has been ongoing. It seems to me it's been around for 25 years or something. My memory goes back at least that long with this council. Obviously, to the extent that it can take responsibility for the economic development of the northern half of the province in the last couple of decades, it's been doing something right. Far and away the largest portion of major industrial development in Alberta has in fact been Edmonton and north over the last 10 years and will be even more so over the next 10 years.

I would encourage the Northern Alberta Development Council to take whatever steps it can to guarantee that the economic development of northern Alberta doesn't just go to people who newly arrive or recently have arrived to northern Alberta but rather to the people who have lived there the longest and whose heritage is the deepest in the north, whether those are the First Nations or Metis or the long-term European settlers. These are people who may have come here as agricultural people, as homesteaders, as trappers, as First Nations, and they are easily steamrolled in the process of industrial development of the north. I would encourage the Northern Alberta Development Council to take whatever steps it can to ensure that all people in Alberta from Edmonton north participate in the economic development of the north.

I see that my time is just about running out here, so I will take my seat and wish the minister the very best. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the estimates debate this evening for Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Contrary to my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, the budget of this department and the size of this department and the expansion of the cabinet to 24 ministries, including this one – I'm not so certain that we needed this large cabinet. These are very worthwhile and noteworthy initiatives that are being proposed in this budget, but at this time I don't know if it should be a stand-alone ministry. But certainly the goals and strategies – there's so much work that needs to be done here.

The department's key goal is "to support Aboriginal people and governments in achieving self-reliance and enhanced well-being." Well, certainly that is, to say the least, commendable. We look at some of the Third World conditions that exist in our communities with our First Nations' people. There have to be improvements, and I certainly wish the minister well in her leadership and her department well.

There are rates of child poverty, there are suicide rates, whether it's with adults or with teens, there's alcoholism, there's drug abuse, there are issues of malnutrition, there are issues of inadequate housing all across Alberta, not only in northern Alberta but everywhere. These issues have to be addressed. There is the entire issue of policing itself. My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview mentioned the disproportionately high number of inmates in our justice system who are First Nations. That is all the key performance measures that this member needs: to see that there is so much work to be done. I would certainly like to see and hear from the minister in due time.

In the business plan there was a discussion about collaboration not only with the federal government but also with the Northwest Territories. I would like to understand a little better the relationship between – I know it's a federal police force – the RCMP, the province, and the Territories in regards to recruitment and retaining of First Nations' officers. I think an increase in the hiring of young First Nations' persons would be beneficial for the entire justice system. Now, at what pace this is going on, I don't know, and if the minister could share any initiatives that have occurred, I would be very grateful.

The minister also in the business plan – well, this fits into the enhanced well-being. Hopefully the days when First Nations' members are going to be on slashing crews and skid hounds on pipelines are finished. There's going to be on-the-job training. There are going to be apprenticeships. I know there are unions based in Edmonton here, the northern Alberta Building Trades Council, quite willing to foster a relationship and ensure that members of First Nations are trained in the skill trades. Again, hopefully the days of just going ahead and slashing a cut line for a seismic crew or for a pipeline project are over, and there's going to be an improvement so that once the projects are completed, northern Albertans have jobs and the better paying jobs as well.

At this time I would like to talk about the Northern Alberta Development Council. I'm just having a quick look at the business plan here, and I see northern Alberta, certainly, and we seem to forget about that. I don't know if we can call Edmonton the south, but certainly it's what's affectionately called "the city" by northern Albertans. They're going to go to the city. To all hon. members from Calgary, well, I'm sorry, there's only one city in this province, and it's the capital city.

Now, 60 percent of Alberta's land mass is in the north, 10 percent of the population only.

It is resource rich, with 90% of Alberta's forests, 100% of Canada's oil sands development, nearly 40% of Alberta's conventional oil and gas activity, and 20% of Alberta's agricultural land.

Well, at this time I would like to inquire if the Northern Alberta Development Council has done any sustainability studies on Alberta's forests – I would be very curious to know – and particularly on what species of trees there has been any sustainability studies done. We all hear every now and then that there's going to be further development in the north, and I'm curious to find out if the wood fibre is there to meet the long-term requirements of those developments.

Certainly 100 percent of Alberta's oil sands are in the north. I would like an update, please, on the Peace River/Shell project. This was a pilot project that I believe started about 15 years ago. I think that the Peace River tar sands are a little deeper than the ones over to the east in Fort McMurray. Shell had a very successful pilot project there. I know what this would mean for the development of northwestern Alberta. Earlier this evening, Mr. Chairman, I attended a standing policy committee, meeting as an observer, and I noted . . .

DR. MASSEY: Not as a participant?

MR. MacDONALD: I was not a participant, no. I was an observer.

I noted a question from an hon. member regarding the proposed development that was going to go on at Fort Kent by a subsidiary of Koch oil of Minnesota, and in the discussion this particular member was concerned about the development and the pace of expansion in Fort McMurray: would it be possible to slow down the development in the north so maybe the people of Fort McMurray could catch their breath? Perhaps a solution to this, if it is a problem – I don't know if it is a problem. I was listening to the reassurances of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Perhaps the next stage of the development of our synthetic crude resources could occur in the Peace River district. Shell certainly is building an upgrader at Scotford. It has capacity, I believe, for a hydrogen cracker. So that would be worth exploring by the Northern Alberta Development Council.

Further on we see that the hon. Member for Peace River chairs the 10-member council, and there are members from Fort McMurray, Kinuso, Athabasca, Cold Lake, Whitecourt, Peace River, Grande Prairie, and Fort Vermilion, which is fine, but I notice that no one from High Level is on that committee. As a frequent visitor to High Level over the years I'm curious about that. I also see over in the strategies in goal 1 that there is to be an increase in consultation in northeastern Alberta through the new Northern Alberta Development Council office in Lac La Biche. I may have missed it somewhere, but I'm wondering if there is a regional office also over in the Peace district, and if not, why not. I think I'd have to put a pitch in for one at High Level and Peace River. I'm told now that there is an office in Peace River, and I think that's a good place for it.

Now, I can't remember the exact details, but I believe there was an order in council shortly after the cabinet expansion to increase the salary of the hon. Member for Peace River to chair this council, and that salary increase, I think, was $1,970 a month. Fair enough. But when you add it up, it's, like, 20 grand a year. And who knows? There could be a vehicle with this appointment. I would like to know where in the budget that 20 grand plus is going to come from. You know, that's a significant amount of money. I'm sure I saw that in an order in council, probably the end of March, first of April. Where that money is coming from I would be very grateful to find out.

Whenever we think of northern development, the first thing we think of is roads. I can recall not getting a satisfactory answer before in this Assembly when inquiring about road construction, the development of roads. There is a proposal, as I understand it, to come across from Fort McMurray west to the Peace district with an all-weather highway. Now, I don't know whether it's going to go as far south as Wabasca or not or whether it'll be further north, but when you think of that, I think it would be prudent to study the construction of that road, not just a lease road but an all-weather road across there.

The trade pattern there I think would be very interesting with all this development that's going on in Fort McMurray. There is talk of further diamond exploration in that immediate area. Well, it would certainly be beneficial to the oil and gas industry. Right now you've got to come fairly far south from Fort McMurray if you want to move machines or trucks or crews around. I know it's not very far by air, but a lot of people cannot afford that. I think it would be an initiative to benefit all northern Albertans.

The cost of this I don't know. I know there's some muskeg there, but if in this modest budget there is a study, I would love to see this, because again I think it would be a noteworthy project not only for diamond exploration but oil and gas, and there are some tar sand deposits further west there as well. I don't know how far below the surface they are, how much overburden there is, but this is where a road would come in really handy.

Now, is the Northern Alberta Development Council also studying the whole idea of local content in the contracts to ensure that local citizens can have a fair shot at the jobs that are created? If there are local fabricators, for instance, local welding shops, local X-ray firms – I can go on and on and on. Is local industry being given a fair chance at developing their own businesses to meet the demand, or is all this work coming from outside? I think one way to develop the economy is to encourage local citizens to be entrepreneurs and to help them out along the way.

I have a few other questions at this time that are specific to the Slave Lake area. We all hear the talk and the questions around the quality of our water. Certainly with what is called the brown rivers – those are like the Athabasca and the Peace rivers – that is the term put on them by scientists. The quality of water in the brown rivers as the north becomes industrialized – is the Northern Alberta Development Council doing any studies on the quality of the water in the rivers?

Also the Slave Lake; sometimes we forget just how big the Slave Lake is. Just to the east of the Slave Lake is the Mitsue oil and gas field, and that was a real nice find in its time. It's been a producing field and continues to produce rather well. I believe Chevron has a major play there. Is the Northern Alberta Development Council working with the oil industry in regards to drilling in the lake itself? I realize we can go a fair distance with directional drilling, but what exactly are the plans for any oil or gas that is under the lake itself?

Are there any initiatives by the Northern Alberta Development Council with Tourism Alberta to promote Pelican Lake? For that matter the beaches at Slave Lake, too, but Pelican Lake is noteworthy, for all hon. members, and it is a great place to go camping with your family.

DR. TAFT: Why?

MR. MacDONALD: Because the lake is very aptly named. The pelicans are there, and they are also raising their young in the summer. It's noteworthy and is a rather unique place.

I'm just wondering if it's going to be part of any Travel Alberta promotions, because I think it certainly would be a very modest promotion. I think it would be worth while. Particularly now that gas is expensive and the Canadian dollar so low, maybe Edmontonians could visit the Slave Lake area more frequently. There's a folk festival in Slave Lake. It's an old country fair, and it's a good one.

I have one more question, and that is also in the business plan, again on cross-government strategies. This one is in relation to gaming. As I understand it, there are going to be increased opportunities for First Nations' people to set up casinos in our fast-developing gaming industry. I wonder what measures are going to be employed by this department to check on this initiative.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to my colleague, and I look forward to more questions later on. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to take part in the discussions this evening of the estimates for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. I'm pleased to congratulate the minister on her appointment. We have a bit of a history that precedes our work here in the House, and I know she'll do a fine job of the responsibilities that she's been assigned. I think it was a very appropriate appointment, and I wish her well. Having said that, I do have some questions. Given who the minister is, some I find somewhat surprising, and maybe the minister would comment on them.

As I look at the business plan on pages 42 and 43 and read through the Vision, the Mission, the Core Business, the Clients and Partners, the Goal and Strategies, I come away with the feeling that things are being done "to" the aboriginal population rather than things being done "with" the aboriginal population, and I say that, I think, with good reason. If you look under the core businesses, one of the first is to "provide leadership in the management of Alberta's relationships with Aboriginal governments, communities and organizations." So those organizations are set aside, and we have that juxtaposed against Alberta.

If you look down a little further to the key services provided by the department, at "coordinating Alberta's strategies relating to Aboriginal relations," it seems to be sort of us against them in this front piece to the business plan. I think there are other examples in this text that would bear that out, and I wouldn't mind the minister commenting on that observation. There seems to be – and the minister underlined it in her opening comments – a great emphasis on teamwork with everyone else, yet for instances where the teamwork involves aboriginals, you have to start and look for them, at least on this front page, although there are some examples on page 44 where they talk about "working with" the aboriginal community. I guess it was that kind of language that I expected to see in this business plan with this minister, and, as I said, I'm somewhat surprised that that's not what we see here this evening.

The minister talked about the aboriginal policy framework. It's mentioned a number of times in the business plan, and it's mentioned again on page 52, the last page of the business plan. The minister mentioned the work of at least two of her cabinet colleagues in the development of that policy and there is reference to some other groups that were included, but I wonder if we can have more information on who exactly was involved in that policy development. What was the nature of public input, wide public input? How aware, I guess, are Albertans that that policy exists? What was the invitation to Albertans to be involved in the development of that policy?

While I'm on collaboration and teamwork, the minister indicated that there would be a collaborative process that would be announced. Just what does that involve? Who is going to be part of that collaborative process? What's the time line on the announcement? What is going to be the substance that the individuals involved will address? So some more information, if we might, on the collaborative process that the minister remarked on in her opening comments.

One more while I'm on the business of public involvement and wider public involvement, and that is the reference to land claims in the documents. We're all aware of the controversy brewing in British Columbia about the settlement of land claims and the election of a new government that at least before the election indicated that there would be greater public involvement, that in fact there would be plebiscites held, I take it to approve any land claim agreements. The documents before us talk about the success we've had in Alberta in settling aboriginal land claims, but I wondered if the minister feels comfortable that the general public as well is aware of what's involved in those settlements and the implications of the settlements, because I have a feeling they aren't. I wondered if the minister has given thought to that and whether it's an issue that has to be addressed.

The record seems to be good, and maybe we shouldn't play with something that seems to be working well, but I think the red flags have been raised in our province to the west and that we'd be wise to heed the warning that comes from there in terms of the backlash that there seems to have been by the general public in terms of the settlements that have been reached and the lack of public input into those agreements.

I'd like to move on, then, if I might, to some of the goal 1 strategies. There's one in particular, and that's strategy (f), to acquire, prepare and distribute Aboriginal-specific data for internal use by provincial departments, Aboriginal governments and organizations, other governments and agencies, the private sector, academic institutions and the public.

I have a word of caution in terms of the kind of information that is gathered and then distributed. I use as an example the work that was done in terms of rating the success of schools in the province based on achievement and diploma test results. That information was widely circulated, and I've heard from individuals involved with aboriginal education that that did more harm than it did good. Certainly the problems in schooling in some aboriginal communities are severe, problems of attendance and problems with completion rates, but the treatment of the data, the way it was handled by the agency that gathered it and the information made public, did nothing but hamper the work of those who are involved in trying to improve aboriginal education and to work towards excellent programs in those schools. I think the information may be valuable and may be useful as we do some planning, but I think we have to be careful why we're gathering information and what use will be made of the information to assure ourselves that it's going to be used to improve conditions and not, in fact, cause further problems. So just a caution as we move into acquiring that kind of information for planning purposes.

I was also a little surprised that, on page 45 under key result 1.3, the key result expected is "accountable, self-regulating, and self-reliant Metis Settlement governments." The first strategy, strategy (a), would be to assist the Metis Settlements General Council to develop and implement business plans, including the reporting of accomplishments through appropriate performance indicators.

I can't think of a more worthy strategy, but it would be one where you would think that the department would lead by example. Certainly that's not the case in this budget. In fact, it's a rather curious collection of text that one finds when one looks under the performance measures and indicators of the department. Page 45 of the business plan indicates:

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development has several methods of measuring its performance, including the following:

1. Reports on Department Performance
2. Secondary Indicators
3. Survey of Clients and Partners
4. Public Polling Data

Then you go over to see each one of these better defined or extrapolated, and there's only one performance indicator, which is an "approval rating on Aboriginal relations." Even that one is really very questionable.

If you look at the reports on the department's performance, again where are the measures? Attention to aboriginal affairs has been part of this government's operation since at least 1993 that I know of, and you'd think that by now with the great emphasis the government has had on the development of business plans and the admonitions of the Auditor General, they would have had performance indicators honed to a fine level at this point, yet they aren't here, and one would have to question why. Why are they not here at this stage in our development? It's like this has just been created, and we have nothing to go on.

Under secondary indicators again why aren't there the indicators that we would expect to find there? If I could make a plea, I would hope that some of those indicators, when they are developed as promised, will include some education indicators. What exactly is happening in terms of education, and what is the performance of the government or this department in helping to promote high school completion rates and participation in postsecondary programs or postsecondary training by the aboriginal community?

The survey of clients and partners again I think is interesting, but this business plan, like many others that are contained in this document, asks other departments for an approval rating. So here we have every department asking every other department: do you approve of the work we're doing? I really question the validity of the information that you'll gather from those kinds of surveys, that you won't end up with you pat my back and I'll pat yours kind of information. I also question having to focus so heavily on it throughout the entire budget documents. Surely competency of a department is something we should assume, and only when things go wrong would you expect to hear about it.

"The Department will undertake to develop and implement a satisfaction survey." My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview has made some comments about satisfaction surveys and the value of the surveys, again good public relations – people like to think they're being asked – but in terms of usefulness, in terms of program planning I think rather limited. I say that out of experience in public education with the annual parent surveys that indicate, for instance, that 90 percent plus of parents who send their children to public schools are satisfied with the programs that their children receive. Well, that's not really very surprising, and it's not really very useful information, but it's very good information, I guess, if you're waging a public relations campaign and trying to convince people that you're doing the job that you're supposed to be doing.

On page 47 the public polling data I thought is interesting in that the department seems to be satisfied with such a low performance and that they use as the standard the four-province average. Just because those four provinces are at 29 percent, somehow or other we're supposed to feel good at 43 percent. As far as I know, 43 percent in most situations is not considered a satisfactory performance. So why would you pick such a low standard? Why would you not set goals that were higher than those that have been established in the document that we have here?

I'd like to move on to the Northern Alberta Development Council business plan and ask a couple of questions there. On page 50, goal 3, "to increase northern skill levels," I wondered what part Campus Alberta plays in this effort to increase northern skill levels. Is Campus Alberta part of this planning? If it isn't, why isn't it? It seems to me that it fits into the goals quite nicely and that seamless movement of students through to postsecondary institutions. As I understand, Campus Alberta is part of their plan. So is Campus Alberta part of this planning is my question.

I looked with interest at the bursary recipients return service rate, and I think that's a useful measure. The actual is 74 percent. I think it's really quite good. I've done some work in the north with teacher education, and if we had a 74 percent return on those programs, we would have been ecstatic. So I think that this is a good and useful measure to have and points to some success.

I wondered about other measures. Do we have participation rates for students in northern Alberta in terms of taking part in postsecondary education in the province or postsecondary training of any sort? Do we have program completion information that would tell us how successful those students are when they complete the programs that they're enrolled in?

If I could move on to the next page, there are a number of items under expenses. One item that I would appreciate some explanation on is the Metis settlements legislation. It's $10 million in 1999-2000, $10 million in 2000-2001, and then it's $10 million, $10 million, $10 million, $10 million. What does that include? I assume it's an estimate, but I would be interested in what it includes. If you add it up over that time period, it's a tremendous amount of money unless I'm not reading this correctly. Is there any allocation for this in, say, the Department of Justice's budget or other government departments?

If I might ask about Metis settlements governance. Just what is included in that? Can we have a breakdown of some of the items that that would include?

On the last page of the document I have just a couple more questions. I've referred already to the aboriginal policy framework. It was approved by cabinet in 2000, and I already asked what the involvement was of the public in that policy other than interest groups. Was there a wider distribution asking for input?

A further question. I think it's something that maybe the minister can address. That's the difference between the performance measures that are included in the business plan and . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, you've run out time.

Before I call upon the hon. minister to close debate, is there anybody else who wishes to speak?

The hon. minister to close debate.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank all the members who participated in this evening's discussion. I really appreciated getting the good questions and the comments that were raised. Although I'd like to answer all the questions that were asked tonight, I'm not able to do that with the amount of time we do have. However, I want to make a few comments.

I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for his comments. He had some really kind words, and I appreciate that. He made some recommendations also that I'm sure we'll look into and try to figure out what we can do in relation to that.

There was a question, however, that he asked about a drop in funding in aboriginal relations from 1999-2000 and 2001-2002. That was the result of land claims settlements in 1999-2000. So that was why it dropped in terms of the amount that he saw in aboriginal relations.

I really want to address his concerns in terms of some of the areas that he has identified, and one of them, of course, is that in my opening comments in response to his concurrence – we do serve as a catalyst with government for both aboriginal and northern issues, so I think it's very important for us to be able to identify what it is that Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is doing, which is to make sure that we do work with other ministries as well as aboriginal governments to ensure that we continue to work as that catalyst. That's an important perspective.

Edmonton-Gold Bar, I was really disappointed with you in terms of your comments relative to the stand-alone ministry. I thought you were always concerned about aboriginal people, but it appears that you really don't care when you're talking about some of the things in terms of saying that this is not needed in terms of an aboriginal affairs ministry. I was really taken by that, and I think that's an important comment for me to remember as we move forward in the province. But I liked the idea of you bringing forward the collaboration and how we can do things within the departments and how we can do that with the various aboriginal governments as well. So for me that's a very important part.

Edmonton-Mill Woods, you targeted your comments very well, and I appreciate the fact that you were talking about identified measures. Those are important in northern Alberta and making sure that we continue to work in that vein. I can't answer all the questions, but I really appreciate the fact that you do that. I will answer them to you in writing and make sure that we continue to ensure that everyone understands that the establishment of this ministry reflects government's commitment to resolving the issues raised tonight as well as others throughout the province as I've traveled. We want to make sure we resolve these issues as we are a catalyst, as I identified, within government, and we are currently in discussion with aboriginal leaders throughout the province as well as industry and other stakeholders to make sure we continue to implement the aboriginal policy framework.

Of course, we'll answer any questions that we can have answers to to the members that asked questions. I can't do this alone, Mr. Chairman, so tonight I have staff in the public gallery, and I'd like to introduce them because they are a very big part of what I do in aboriginal affairs. I'll start out with Paddy Meade, who is my deputy minister, and some of you may know her. Ken Boutillier is the assistant deputy minister of aboriginal relations. Martin Hanly is director of project resourcing. John McDonough is executive director of strategic services. Tom Baldwin is executive director of the Northern Alberta Development Council. Ken Borch is the senior financial officer. However, this is his last official duty tonight, and I appreciate him coming. He's leaving as of tomorrow and won't be back to the government. Thank you, Ken, for all your hard work. My acting EA is Donna Hickey. It is with them that I'm able to carry out some of the projects that have been identified, and I know we look forward to a really good year coming up and in the future dealing with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense $20,210,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Innovation and Science

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister to open debate.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee. I am pleased to present to you this evening the 2001-2004 business plan and the 2001-2002 estimates for the Ministry of Innovation and Science.

With today's rapid pace of change it makes it challenging to plan ahead, but I believe that the activities and investments outlined in the plans presented tonight will help to create a framework for sustainable prosperity for all Albertans. One of the keys to economic success in this era of change is innovation. We must continue to embrace new ideas if we are to become leaders in a global knowledge-based economy.

Thanks in large part to the growth of technology and knowledge-based industries, Alberta has made great strides in diversifying its economy. As Minister of Innovation and Science I'm committed to continuing that work to diversify the provincial economy, particularly in the information and communications technology, life sciences, and energy sectors.

Referring now to the 2001-2004 business plan, our vision is to have Alberta recognized locally and globally as a world leader in the development and application of science and technology that improves the well being and prosperity of its people and improves its communities and natural environment.

Innovation and Science consists of several elements, the first being the Alberta Science and Research Authority and the research institutes that fall under it; namely, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, which is co-chaired by the Member for Wainwright, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, which is co-chaired by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, which is co-chaired by the Member for West Yellowhead. There are also two provincial corporations that are part of ASRA, those being the Alberta Research Council, commonly known as ARC, and ICORE Inc., which refers to the informatics circle of research excellence.

The second element is the Department of Innovation and Science, which includes the components of information technology services, the chief information officer, and of course Supernet. In addition, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research report through me to the Legislative Assembly but are not included in the business plan or voted estimates for Innovation and Science.

Innovation and Science has two core businesses. The first is science, research, and development. This involves providing strategic leadership for science and research in Alberta, promoting a science culture in Alberta, applying science and research to improve stewardship of our resources and environment, and increasing the application of technology throughout the economy.

The second core business is government information technology. This involves ensuring that the government of Alberta is exemplary in the efficient and effective use of information technology in providing services to all Albertans. It accomplishes this through a number of means: one, co-ordinating the effective use of computer technology, voice and data networks, and information systems within government; secondly, establishing cross-ministry policies and standards for information and communications technology to improve the efficiency and flexibility of government; thirdly, identifying, facilitating, and providing cross-ministry solutions for ICT; and fourthly, identifying and promoting best practices through cross-ministry initiatives.

As you are aware, Alberta Supernet will be initiated in this fiscal year, 2001-2002. This project is a significant initiative under this core business, and when complete, Supernet will make broadband Internet and network access available in 422 communities across Alberta. Lethbridge will be one of them.

Our business plan outlines long-term goals and strategies that will support activities in Alberta's research community and nurture the innovative spirit that will make this province a prominent and recognized leader in the global economy. Our business plan is focused on ensuring that Albertans have the skills, incentives, and tools they need to succeed and thrive in a knowledge-based economy, in a knowledge-based world. Our six goals focus on the development of human resources, infrastructure, access to financial capital, a supportive business, social, and political environment, and ensuring that we effectively manage our human resources within the ministry.

I'm now going to refer to the 2001-2002 fiscal plan. In order to obtain these goals, the goals I referred to in terms of the previous goals, we need to ensure that sufficient funding is available. The government recognizes this need and over the past several years has increased its support for research, science, and technology. Our 2001-2002 voted estimates are $204.5 million, and this includes $90.8 million in lottery proceeds. This total funding is split between our two core businesses: $105.5 million for government information technology and $94.6 million for science, research, and development. In addition, $4.3 million has been allocated to provide support to these core businesses.

Programs within information and communications technology are co-ordinated and delivered by departmental staff. Within this program $50 million will be allocated to develop Alberta Supernet, $53.7 million will be allocated to working with ministries to carry out the corporate strategic direction for information and communication technology applications and infrastructure and ensuring that quality ICT and telecommunications solutions are provided through shared services and/or the private sector, and $1.8 million will be allocated to the development of resource policies and standards as well as corporate strategic direction for information technology applications and infrastructure.

The science, research, and development program's main component is an $89.6 million grant to the Alberta Science and Research Authority, commonly known as ASRA. ASRA and its various entities also attract significant funding from the private sector and has a total budget of approximately $140 million. ASRA is an independent board made up of key members from the business and research communities in Alberta appointed by the Lieutenant Governor who seek to enhance the contributions of science and research to the sustainable prosperity and quality of life of all Albertans. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that the people that are involved in that particular independent board contribute an enormous amount to the well-being and success of our province, and we can't thank them enough for their involvement in that process.

As the senior science and research body of the government of Alberta, ASRA's two core activities involve, one, developing and promoting informed and practical recommendations to the provincial government with respect to science and research policies and priorities, investments in science and research, and science and research infrastructure and, secondly, facilitating the identification, development, and implementation of strategic, high-value science and research initiatives. The ultimate goal of ASRA is to increase the socioeconomic benefits of science and research investments in the province of Alberta.

The following are some highlights of the budget allocations made by ASRA in 2001-2002: $25 million to support research infrastructure and research activities at Alberta universities and research hospitals; $10.9 million for strategic investments in science and research activities; $10 million for ICORE – the goal of ICORE Inc. is to attract and grow a critical mass of outstanding researchers in the fields of computing science, computer engineering, physics, mathematics, and other ICT-related disciplines – 3 and a half million dollars to support the retention of top-quality faculty at Alberta universities and research hospitals; $2.4 million to promote the application of technology in electronics and microelectronics, telecommunications, and information networks, computer technology, multimedia, biotechnology, advanced materials, and manufacturing with the ultimate goal of attracting IT business to the province; $68 million in spending by the Alberta Research Council to support the provision of applied research to small to medium-sized Alberta enterprises that enables Alberta firms to enhance their global competitiveness; a $1.5 million grant to the Alberta Forestry Research Institute; $8.6 million to the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, your time has elapsed. The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You can't fault enthusiasm.

I'd like to start by thanking the minister. The minister was courteous enough to invite me to his office after he was first appointed to the cabinet, and he was frank in sharing with me his vision of his department and where he would like it to go, but he was also frank in sharing his trepidation as a new minister. I have to admit that I was impressed, and I think you'll notice that we haven't asked the minister a question this session. I'm not sure the two are related, but that's the way things have developed. I do wish him the best, and I'm sure that he'll serve the ministry well.

I'd like to start off with a number of comments, if I may. On page 231 there's a reference to priorities. One is "a focus on education"; two is "public relations and stewardship issues." I wondered if we could have some more information in terms of exactly what public relations involve. From reading the document and the thrusts that are there, I think I have an idea, but public relations is usually used in a different context than it's used within this budget document, so I wondered, when the minister has an opportunity, if he might comment on that priority as it's outlined in the document.

The minister – and this is a bit of an aside – when I visited his office shared with me a report from the Alberta Science and Research Authority. I looked through that document, and I came away unclear – and it may be my problem – as to the relationship between that authority and the ministry, because in the report they list the Alberta Science and Research Authority and do in fact list the ministry as an equal entity. It was my understanding that the research authority was subsumed under the ministry, and certainly from the budget documents that would seem to be the case. Oh, I found the part I needed.

On page 40 of the report the Alberta Science and Research Authority is listed. The Ministry of Innovation and Science is listed. Then the Alberta Research Council, the informatics circle of research excellence, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, and the Alberta Forestry Research Institute are listed as almost parallel or separate entities. I think it's misleading. I had sort of a picky question, they used to call them when I was on the school board, about the Alberta Science and Research Authority having the money to put out a report which is as luxurious as this one is. I know a bit from preparing annual reports that when you have embossed covers, when you have ghost leaflets, when you have the quality of paper and the binding used in this document, the price tag is fairly hefty. I noticed in the document that they said the report was posted on the web, so I wondered about the need for such a showy document. But it is picky, and I'll set it aside for more important questions, Mr. Chairman.

I've had a bit of a discussion with the minister about the Supernet project, and I'm still a little concerned about the technology changing so fast. The minister indicated that wireless technology was going to be used at the extremities of the network, where it wasn't possible or it wasn't feasible to have hard wiring. I wondered if there's more information on that. He talks about 422 communities being served by the high-speed network band, and I have a question with respect to the measure that's being used. I think the project is mentioned on page 233. There's a performance measure on page 243. It has as the heading, "Number of communities where residences are using high-speed internet access." So 422 communities have access to high-speed network bandwidth. But how many residences are there actually involved? How significant is the fact that there are residences there in terms of the total population or the total number of residences in a community? It seems that without that further information, just saying it's there isn't very useful.

The same with the second indicator: businesses "are using high-speed services." The information has yet to be collected. I would be interested to know if the data being collected would tell us the extent of the user service in a community. I think it would be interesting to know and it's an index worth pursuing, because the access is available in this city, yet I know a number of individual residents who are reluctant to sign up for it, given the cost. Getting access to cable is about a $50 bill a month for a residence. I think it would be interesting for our own community in terms of how extensive that service is being used. It seems again to me that low-income families may be excluded from this. So any information on that use objective I think would be interesting in terms of trying to judge the success of the money that's being spent on it.

There's a strategy under goal 1 that would "support graduate students through project and program funding." The graduate students across this province have made their voices very loud in terms of the need for more assistance. This is one way that the assistance available to them can be increased. I would appreciate some more details in terms of that particular program.

I wanted to move again to page 238, "increase the awareness and promotion of science and technology to K-12 students so that they will consider science and technology as a viable career opportunity." That's a great goal. I think schools have other objectives that supercede that one in terms of why they want students to have access to the technology, but I'm also aware that schools are really struggling with finding appropriate funds for software and finding appropriate money for the hardware. Evergreening is becoming a huge problem for them, as it is for the rest of us that use the Internet in our daily lives, and I have this vision of the schools all having access to the Internet yet not having the money to pay for the machines and the software to access it. So this is an objective, and I guess my question is: how well co-ordinated is this with the efforts of the Department of Learning to ensure that schools aren't left in that position?

On page 239, where the strategy is to "adopt standards and best practices across government," one of the strategies, the fourth strategy, the fourth bullet, is to identify opportunities in IMT for shared service approaches, standards (e.g. common platform and tools), best practices and cross ministry initiatives to reduce duplication of effort/investment and collaborate with ministries to implement solutions.

Further, the next bullet is to lead government in the planning, standardization and ongoing development of a compatible, secure infrastructure for information management and ICT.

I was looking back at the Hansard for November of 1999. A previous minister made comments about the problem of developing common standards and common platforms across government. The minister indicated at that time that the "issue is being handled by the chief information officer," and he further went on to indicate:

I believe we have four or five different e-mail platforms inside government, and some of these e-mail platforms can't talk to each other. Well the question is: why? So that's one of the issues. We have a whole series of different desktops across government, and these desktops can't talk to each other.

That was in November of 1999. We see the same item here. Although the minister did indicate at that time that this was going to take a number of years to resolve, to get the common standards in place, I wonder what kind of progress has been made to have all the departments working from common platforms and using standards that bring some uniformity to government operations.

There's a further reference that I wanted to track too. It is on page 240. Given the minister's comments at that time, where the desktop standards are indicated, there's e-mail: nothing for 1999-2000, so a standard wasn't set; 85 percent for 2000-01. Then it goes on to list some of the other kinds of standards they're working on. I'm surprised, given the information that was here in 1999, that there isn't the information available for the 1999-2000 budget year and that the goals are still rather modest in terms of the hardware baseline.

I'd like to move on to the government survey of Innovation and Science employees and raise the same point that I raised in the previous estimates, and that is this business of the government asking employees or employees of other departments how satisfied they are. Again, in terms of all the key performance measures that could be included in a business plan, I wonder about the extensive treatment being given in this business plan to the Innovation and Science employees.

The information is interesting, but it raises another question that I have, and that is: how do you decide what information you're going to include in the business plan and attach it to dollars and what information do you include in annual reports? I looked back at the Department of Learning, for example, which has a fair number of measures that are useful within the context of the business plan and that are attached to dollars. Their annual report is much more extensive in terms of the performance measures they include. So if you look at the business plan, you have a good idea of how the dollars are being targeted, and if you want further information, if you want some of that information interpreted more widely, you can go to the annual report eventually to see a wider range of performance measures. It seems to me, at least in some cases, that is becoming closer to the kind of thing the Auditor General has commented upon so often in his report and has been so critical of government, in terms of the performance measures that are not there.

There's a line question I have on page 244 in the ministry expenses, and that's ICORE, the informatics circle of research excellence. If I read that, there was $855,000 spent in 1999-2000, and there's $10 million for the next number of years included in the budget item. There are some chairs that have been dedicated at postsecondary institutions, and I wonder if we could have some expansion on that item. What else is intended to help attract and keep high-quality researchers in the province? This is an important initiative coming out of the Cloutier report a number of years ago that indicated there was a brain drain and that government action was needed. I'm delighted to see this in the budget, but I would appreciate some more information in terms of what is exactly going to be included and does it include more than dedicated chairs.

The office of the chief information officer shows the budget remaining about the same. I wonder, given that the work of standards over the next number of years will eventually be completed, why there is not a decrease eventually shown in that budget. Or is it just the nature of technology that there are always going to be new problems to solve and that this is going to be an ongoing budget item that remains at that level?

I had some other questions on some of the specific budget lines, but I think I'll leave those for now and conclude with those remarks. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to make my comments on the estimates of the Department of Innovation and Science. I listened to the minister's introductory comments, and I appreciate his enthusiasm and his commitment to the department and to the task at hand. I notice he's having a nice increase in budget that will help him and that I'm sure contributes to his enthusiasm.

But as I listened to him, I felt like I wanted to put up a caution, thinking back to efforts along these lines starting in 1976 and going on through until the late 1980s. There was a department of technology, research, and telecommunications. There have been variations on this current Department of Innovation and Science for years either as a stand-alone ministry or as a subset of some other ministry such as Economic Development.

I'm sure the minister is well aware of the pressures he's going to face, but he's now got a substantial budget here, and it's large enough and growing rapidly enough that it's going to attract and create all kinds of pressures. People are going to be after him for money. As they say, honey attracts flies. There's a lot of honey here, and he's going to have a lot of people coming to him to get a piece of it. My concern, frankly, is that keeping control on expenditures is going to be difficult, and exercising wisdom in allocating those expenditures is also going to be very difficult. All kinds of enthusiasts for different projects are going to be coming his way, and it makes me nervous to see governments getting into these kinds of areas. At the same time, I will admit that it's necessary. It just requires a great deal of caution. A great deal of wisdom is perhaps the way to put it.

As I mentioned already, it's a department which is experiencing a rather generous increase in its budget, I think over a 26 percent increase from the budget of last year, and that's obviously not a sustainable sort of pattern. I'm not sure what the trends are expected to be over the next two or three or four years, but a 26 percent increase in one year may be fine once but it's clearly not sustainable. So, again, that reinforces my sense of caution with this department and for this minister.

Part of that trend, the department's capital investment, is budgeted at nearly double last year's estimate. This year it's expected to be $8 million, and last year it was about $4 million, so that again reflects the pattern of rapid increases in expenditures.

I'm also noticing the commitment to strategic investments and various research initiatives, whether it's the Supernet or the research infrastructure in universities and teaching hospitals or commitments to promote economic development through commercialization of research. Again, these are areas that are so prone to commercial pressures and to the pressures that will come when leaders of projects see this as their last resort for getting money and put intense, intense political pressure on the department to pay up. I feel very nervous for that $204 million.

The biggest jump, I think – it's certainly one of the biggest – is in program 2 of the department's operating expenses, information and communications technology, which is getting a 28 percent increase and now will surge to over $105 million this year. So given that program 2, the information and communications technology or ICT area, was actually about 15 percent under budget last year, I'd like to know how the department justifies a 28 percent increase in spending for this year. How is that justified? What are they spending the money on? Why the big jump? Indeed, what do they foresee for next year and the year after?

Given my concerns over spending, I'm going to ask for more detailed information from this department than I have from most others. I would like the minister to provide a breakdown of the ministry's gross operating expenses for the year by object for the following components: salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, and salaries for contract positions as well as travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses. There are areas in there where we could see all kinds of expenditures slipping out of control: hosting expenses, travel expenses in these high-tech areas could quickly get beyond our reasonable controls which we are expected to respect for the taxpayers of Alberta. If the minister would also provide a breakdown of where the additional 28 percent in expenditures for program 2 is going and how that spending will meet the department's stated core businesses and goals, I for one would appreciate it, and I think all Alberta taxpayers would.

The $50 million that is budgeted for the Supernet this year alone is a tremendous amount of money. Fifty million dollars is a perfectly round figure. I wonder what the plans are for the next four years and how they arrived at exactly $50 million. It is a suspiciously round figure, and I'd be interested to have more details on that.

Has the department done a cost-benefit analysis on the Supernet project to determine whether it will really be worth while and, as my other colleagues have mentioned, whether it's technology that will even be up to date by the time this project is implemented. I'd be curious to know beyond simple buzzwords how exactly the Supernet will make Albertans more competitive in the world marketplace. What's the direct tie between that $50 million expenditure and the goal of making Alberta more competitive? I'm not sure that it holds up if you become critical on the buzzwords.

If on the other hand it's meant as a sign of commitment to bringing most Albertans onto the Internet in the same way that there were the rural electrification programs in the '50s and the programs of Alberta Government Telephones decades ago to bring telephones to all Albertans, if it has a social component to it, I'd like to know that. What steps will the department take to ensure that all Albertans will have access to the benefits of the Supernet? Could it be in fact that it will undercut local businesses if a bookstore owner in a small town, say Lac La Biche, suddenly is facing a lot of competition from the big Internet suppliers? Is that really something we want to have? If these things are thought through, are we sure they are going to be as beneficial as the promoters of them want us to believe? I'm also interested, once this system is in place, in what the costs will be to maintain it. Has the department done any in-depth studies on the administrative and maintenance cost associated with the Supernet? So there are a lot of questions around the Supernet. I know my colleagues have raised those from time to time, and they will be raised again.

The goals of the department are worth mentioning here, not only for what they include but for what they do not include. The goals as listed in the business plan are:

1. Maximize the international competitiveness of Alberta's science and research system.
2. Promote effective technology commercialization, adoption and investment in Alberta.
3. Promote effective application of science and research for improving the stewardship of Alberta's resources and environment.
4. Promote the benefits of science and innovation within Alberta.
5. The Government of Alberta will be a model user in the application of information, knowledge and technology.
6. Effectively manage human capital within the Ministry of Innovation and Science.

Those are laudable. My concern is that when we are into an area like innovation and science, things happen so quickly and there is often so little forethought that the big picture is sometimes forgotten. So while I note, for example, that goal 3 does refer to "improving the stewardship of Alberta's resources and environment," that's about as close as the entire business plan comes, as far as I can see, to addressing any questions around the ethical implementation of new technologies and the ethics surrounding innovation and science.

We are seeing ethical questions rise all over our society from these areas, whether it's in the medical area and the ethics of new medical technology, whether it's in the wisdom of committing to unrelenting innovation and the stress that comes from a rapid change in society as we are forced and driven to innovate and innovate and innovate. We see reports out of Calgary, done by the Calgary regional health authority, that Calgarians are under intense stress. They're some of the most highly stressed people in the country.

AN HON. MEMBER: Do you think it's the traffic there?

DR. TAFT: Traffic is part of the problem.

The speed of change in that society is part of the problem. The suicide rates in Calgary are among the highest in the country, and indeed the suicide rates in Alberta are among the highest in the country. How many of those relate to the unrelenting pressure of innovation and change? It's certainly worth some consideration in this department. Where is the wisdom going to come from as we bring in more and more of these technologies and create more and more change and pressure in our society? So I would encourage this department, and I think it would indeed be of fundamental importance to the success of this department in the long run, to actually set up an office for ethical issues around new technologies.

With those comments, I'll move to some of my reactions to the major strategies. I read, for example, the second strategy, "make strategic investments to help modernize the research infrastructure at Alberta universities and teaching hospitals." How will this operate? Who is going to determine the priorities? I'm sure every department in every hospital and every faculty in all the universities and colleges has ideas for improving their research infrastructure. I'd like to know how this is going to be implemented, how the priorities will be determined.

The strategy relating to ICORE Inc., attract and grow a critical mass of outstanding researchers in the fields of computer science, electrical and computer engineering, physics, mathematics and other ICT-related disciplines, raises the question, of course, of how that will be done and who will do it. Is this something the department will largely delegate to universities and colleges and institutes, or is it something the department and the minister plan to have a direct say in?

"Promote economic development through the commercialization of research in existing and emerging industries." A strategy here, a major strategy of the department, sounds very much like getting back into the business of choosing winners and losers, something that we have struggled mightily to extricate this government from. Yet here they are, moving in with a burgeoning budget and a growing department, back full scale into the notion of picking existing and emerging industries and presumably channeling public money to them to promote economic development. It sends up all kinds of red flags for me. How is that going to be done? How are we going to avoid the pitfalls of these kinds of initiatives of the past? How are we going to ensure that we don't end up backing the NovAtels and MagCans of the world yet one more time?

Further down the list of strategies: working with key Alberta science, research, and technology organizations to "enhance the science culture and literacy within the province." Who are those organizations? I'd be interested to know. Are they universities? Are they schools? Do they start in kindergarten? Do they include organizations like Access television, which maybe can undertake science programming for schools? Would they include something like sponsoring and encouraging greater participation in science fairs among elementary and junior high school students? So some more detail on those areas would be of real interest to me. My concern consistently is that in the fast-paced, overhyped world of high-tech innovation, the taxpayer is going to be fleeced or runs an increased risk of being fleeced and that the pressures on the minister and his senior officials to avoid that will be intense.

Continuing through the strategies:

$39.4 million will be allocated to provide strategic leadership for science and research in Alberta through the allocation of funding to ongoing science and research activities, research infrastructure and the retention of top quality faculty at Alberta universities and research hospitals.

A laudable goal. I'd be interested in how it will be implemented. When they talked about providing "strategic leadership for science and research in Alberta through the allocation of funding," whose leadership? Is this the minister's leadership? Undoubtedly he will have a host of advisors, but again it resonates with the old problems we got into of picking winners and losers. I would like to see how this will be implemented and what safeguards are going to be in place for that.

I also read with some skepticism the strategy that says that

$45.6 million will be allocated to ensuring that the Government of Alberta is exemplary in the efficient and effective use of information and ICT in providing services to Albertans; coordinating the effective use of computer technology and so on. I am concerned that information and communications technology within government can be a bottomless pit and that we can end up pouring millions and millions of dollars into IT systems that are frankly often of very disappointing value. I reflect back on experience that I've had and have observed directly in the government over the last years with spending huge amounts of money on information systems that in the end were very disappointing indeed.

Moving along to indicators of success, I notice R and D investment. An indicator will be "$2 billion total R&D investment from the province, federal government and business by 2005." I'd like to know: what portions do they anticipate coming from each of those levels, from the province, from the federal government, and from business? Of that $2 billion, which of those three groups will be putting up how much money?

Under Business Innovation again I'm concerned about getting into very high-risk areas when we're talking about putting Alberta taxpayer money into promoting "the Internet to sell goods and services."

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, your time has elapsed. The chair now recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get a chance to participate in the debate this evening on the Innovation and Science department. I listened with a great deal of interest to the minister's initial remarks. I, too, would like to echo my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods and wish the minister the very best in his career as Minister of Innovation and Science.

Now, there are the core businesses that are outlined here. The goals are certainly, I think, very important. You can just go down the list here. Science, research, and development involves "providing strategic leadership for science and research in Alberta." That's an excellent goal.

"Managing and funding strategic investments in science and research." That, too, is noteworthy, but there were cautions expressed by my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview.

"Co-ordinating government science and research." There is a real need for government science and research, and there's also a need to ensure that if there are to be commercial applications for the science or the research, the taxpayers benefit as well as the commercial enterprises.

"Promoting a science culture in Alberta." As a parent of three elementary schoolchildren that is also very important, and I can't stress that enough to the minister. There is also the fact that as you work in Alberta industry and you see young people coming out of school and you're working with them either on the job or in a supervisory capacity, you can notice straight away those that have had their curiosity tweaked, so to speak, Mr. Chairman, by science and how readily they are able to adapt to the workforce. You can really see that. I don't know – and perhaps the minister can explain this – how the department is going to promote a science culture in Alberta. I suppose I may be getting ahead of the issue here by assuming that it's going to be in schools. It could be a lifelong learning initiative. I don't know.

"Applying science and research to improve stewardship of our resources and environment." I'm going to hopefully get a chance to talk about that a little later on.

"Commercializing the results of research." Well, that's fine again, Mr. Chairman, but let's ensure that the taxpayers are also going to be beneficiaries of that.

"Developing the 'knowledge industry' component of the Alberta economy." We have to realize – and time is running out as our resources are being exported – that there's more to this province than, as they say, rocks and trees, and there's more to this country. The development of this knowledge industry: well, that's fine, but let's ensure that it continues and that it's just not more sloganeering.

Now, "increasing the application of technology throughout the economy." Again, I'm not going to dwell on this. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods asked some very pointed questions about the Internet and Internet access for Albertans. Everyone was very excited with this initiative. Students told me that it's fine that we've got high-speed Internet, but they can't afford a computer because tuition fees are high. The farmers: well, they were very excited about this, but unfortunately with the price of commodities they cannot afford a computer. So the farmers are not going to have to worry about getting any dust in their laptop. It's not going to happen this year. Hopefully, it may happen next year.

There are some research initiatives that I would like to talk about specifically. I have some questions around the Alberta Energy Research Institute. There are three different research institutes, but at this time I want to talk about the Energy Research Institute. Now, just exactly what is going on there? I would like to ask the minister a couple of direct questions, Mr. Chairman. The first is: is that department doing any research into semiconductor activity? For instance, let's say nitrogen is going to be the core of our electricity transmission lines. Naturally it's going to be very cold, and there's going to be very little resistance on the high-voltage lines. The reason I ask this is that there's talk now of more power lines to export electricity to America. There are limits that have been put on the main transmission line that's running north/south, and this is something that I think we need to do some research on.

In many transmission grids there is at least a 7 percent loss, and I think it's greater in Alberta. I'm having difficulty getting the statistics on Alberta. For some reason it's easier to get American statistics than it is Canadian statistics. It's easier to get data from the NEB than it is from the EUB. You know, there seems to be a veil of secrecy. The old cone of silence is over the province. Anyway, in America it is 7 percent of electricity that is lost in the high-voltage transmission lines. There is nitrogen being used to chill the line, and zing, there's no electricity loss. There's no line loss. Now, I don't know what the commercial applications are of this technology. Are the individuals at the Alberta Energy Research Institute doing any such research on this?

It's unfortunate that the hon. members in this Assembly who have large deposits of coal in their constituencies – I'm sure they're all interested. It's the Member for West Yellowhead, yes. I was looking over there, Mr. Chairman.

Now, clean coal technologies. Unfortunately, clean coal technologies do not exist in commercial applications, because there needs to be more research done. The cost has to be lowered. Clean coal technology is more than throwing a little bit of lime in the snuff box of a power boiler. There's a lot more to it than that. I was at a standing policy committee this evening where the Minister of Environment expressed concerns about CO<sub>2</sub> emissions in Fort McMurray. We have to develop these clean coal technologies. We need to ensure that clean coal technologies are developed. I want to know how much research is going on in the Alberta Energy Research Institute to develop the clean coal technologies.

George W. Bush, the current President of the United States of America, has also expressed reservations. He was shocked and appalled to realize that clean coal technologies do not exist in commercial applications. I have a report sitting in my office that indicates that we're at least 10 years from that, Mr. Chairman. This is another project I would like to see research done on in this province.

I had the pleasure of being at an Alberta youth forum with the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, and in his remarks he instructed the Alberta youth that there's a project on CO<sub>2</sub>, I believe it was, in Fort McMurray. In the next 10 years this was going to be reality. It was going to be piped . . .

MR. HERARD: What?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, that's what I thought: what?

Now, it was going to be piped to central Alberta. There are coal seams down by Sylvan Lake that run west to Nordegg, and this was going to be used as a catalyst to develop methane coal gas beds. I would be very interested to know how far from reality this is and if any research is being done by the Alberta Energy Research Institute.

I would also be very curious to know from the hon. minister, please, Mr. Chairman, if there is any research being conducted regarding the efficiencies of natural gas fired electrical generating stations. Is there anything that can be done to increase the production of those facilities? Is there some little thing that has been missed over the years in the burners that could increase the efficiency? As far as that technology exists, what can be done?

Getting back to the coal-fired generating stations, to reduce the grams of carbon particulate in relationship to the generation of a megawatt of electricity – now, that is a measure that's routinely used by American researchers. I would be very curious to see what's going on here in Alberta.

Now, the Alberta Forestry Research Institute. That department has a lot of information, and much of it must be vital to the economic prosperity of the West Yellowhead region of this fine province. I would be curious to know if there is research being done as to the sustainability of our forest cut or our timber harvest. This is vital. I was after the same information in the last series of estimates, so I won't go into detail on this, but I think it's important for the long-term view of the province.

Getting back to commercializing the results of research, we'll have to go to the Alberta Research Council. I have to ask the minister at this time if the Alberta Research Council – I may have missed it here, and I apologize if I have – has any formal ties with the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority. I'm very curious about this because there is so much research needed to be done to ensure that we can get every barrel out of the tar sands in a safe environmental fashion or method. Whether the tar sands are in Fort McMurray or Cold Lake or over in the Peace district, it doesn't matter. What is the relationship between, again, the Alberta Research Council and AOSTRA?

The Alberta Research Council. I think there was a $56 million line in the budget, but I can't see it here. Anyway, I may have missed that, Mr. Chairman, and I apologize to the minister and officials if it's not $56 million. The Alberta Research Council, of course, was involved in the whole pine shakes scandal, the untreated and treated pine shakes scandal. The Alberta Research Council was an accredited certification agency for a while.

AN HON. MEMBER: Is it still?

MR. MacDONALD: No, no. They were very anxious to let other third-party agencies be involved in the inspection and certification of the pine shake product.

Now, the rotting pine shake is a fine example of what can go wrong with research. The Alberta Research Council, to their credit, started some long-term durability testing on both the treated and untreated pine shake. I still have outstanding questions about the durability of the treated pine shakes in these field tests, but they were responsible enough to start field testing. There's no doubt about that.

This field testing went on and on for intervals. I believe it's going to go on for another three years up in Whitecourt, and there's a lot of rain in Whitecourt. There's a lot more rain in Whitecourt than there is in Calgary. We need to have a good look at these field studies, and I don't think that has been done to date. Also, at the farm down by the Ellerslie rugby pitch the Alberta Research Council had some battens set up with pine shakes on them, and none of the homeowners either to the north of that development or in Calgary or anywhere else in the province had the opportunity of having a look at those detailed field studies.

So hopefully that's been a lesson learned by everyone in the province. Not only do we have to do through research and development, but we've got to do it before we commercialize the product. Even as I was driving down here at 8 o'clock, I could see on 98th Avenue where there were lots and lots of residential homes, Mr. Chairman, that had the pine shakes removed and cedar shakes put on, and they had large reroofing bills to deal with. However, it reminds one of the quote that came up in this Assembly – and I forget which hon. minister it was at the time – about how the gray weatherbeaten look of these pine shakes was an example of Alberta entrepreneurship. This was the quote. This quote originated in a committee similar to this one. Of course, we all know that is not the truth. It's simply not the truth. This product is just one headache after another for Alberta homeowners, and it is a fine lesson.

Now, the Alberta Research Council certainly does notable research and development, and I would like to see that continue. We all learn from our mistakes, and I'm curious: are there any sorts of liability contingencies set aside? Or is there an insurance policy in case the Research Council is at this court case that's going on? Now, maybe other members of this Assembly know more about that court case than I do. What's the status of the Alberta Research Council in relationship to the fact that the government may at some time be found guilty of authorizing and promoting this shoddy building product?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm curious about this office of the chief information officer. I would like some details on that.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the hon. minister to close debate, is there anybody else who wishes to speak on these estimates?

The hon. minister to close debate.

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for giving me this opportunity, and with the five minutes I have to close debate, I can't possibly answer all the questions this evening but will commit to do written answers.

I do want to recognize some members from Innovation and Science who have come tonight. I want you to know that I have encouraged all the staff at Innovation and Science to stay home, fill their emotional tanks, and prepare for another exciting day tomorrow, but even here at 10:30 at night we have members of our finance division who have come to see the proceedings and help me out. I do want to introduce Brian Fischer, who is a senior financial officer, Sophie Kwan, Clem Benoit, and Byron Nagazina, who have come tonight. Thank you very much. I appreciate your attendance here.

I do want to make a couple of points and finish my opening comments, as I never had a chance to do that. First of all, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about not having asked me a question in question period yet. I know that eventually he will get around to doing that, but I realize he has had other conflicting priorities that have more compelling urgency. So I respect that.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked a lot about the Alberta Energy Research Institute. I did want to refer in my opening comments, and didn't get around to it, to the $8.9 million grant to that institute to support research on efficient and economical recovery and processing of oil sands and related products and the development of technologies that will ensure economic and sustainable energy production from currently underutilized resources such as oil sands, clean burning coal, and coal bed methane.

There was a simple question about the relationship of ASRA to the minister. I would point out to the hon. member that if he would review the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Act, it really gives legislative authority to that particular board and shows you what the relationship is. Just in review quickly, the authority gives advice to the minister respecting science, engineering, and technology. It stimulates research and development and technology activities in Alberta. It develops and recommends science, engineering, technology, and research policy and priorities. It conducts an annual review and evaluation of all government science, engineering, technology, and research policy, and it goes on. But quite clearly that relationship is established within that particular act.

As far as Supernet is concerned, there were a number of questions about Supernet. I just want to point out that the primary benefit of Supernet – well, that should be, too, what I will call the extended network or primarily to the rural or remote areas – is eliminating the digital divide in Alberta, one of the few jurisdictions actually that has taken the initiative to eliminate that disparity between, if you want to call it, the haves and the have-nots. It will provide access at equitable pricing across the province, thereby giving the economic initiative and incentive for those communities in use of that particular technology.

With those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the questions, and actually there were some suggestions which I appreciate as well. We will commit to get back and table those responses at a later date. So with that, I will take my seat.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Innovation and Science, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment                      $204,458,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

10:30

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 23, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/23

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly officers of the Salvation Army, an organization that has given so much to so many in both Alberta and in the Dominion of Canada over the last 100 or more years. The Salvation Army is widely recognized and is loved and respected for its unconditional, compassionate, and spiritual commitment to those in need, regardless of circumstance. In your gallery today are commissioners Bill and Gwen Luttrell, territorial leaders for the Canada and Bermuda territory; lieutenant-colonels Doug and Lorraine Moore, leaders of the Salvation Army for the Alberta and Northwest Territories division; majors Jim Champ and Ray Rowe; and captains Brian Venables and Eddie Vincent from the Army's divisional headquarters here in Edmonton. The Moores are retiring at the end of June after having given some 45 years of dedicated service to the welfare of others. I'd ask all our visitors to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Bills

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001.

The bill makes minor changes to six pieces of provincial legislation, including the Animal Protection Act, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, and the Legislative Assembly Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to questions asked of me on Tuesday, May 15, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark,* I am pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of specific projects being funded this year under the Alberta municipal water/wastewater partnership. Included in that is a list of all projects that have been approved to date since 1992.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter from Black Gold regional schools in which they express some serious reservations about some of the provisions of Bill 16.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from the Red Deer public school district on behalf of Red Deer-North and Red Deer-South concerning Bill 16.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. The first tabling is an action alert issued by the Alberta Wilderness Association. This deals with the following:

The Alberta government is finalizing plans to turn the management of a large portion of the Rocky Mountain Forest Reserve . . . including the Kananaskis, Ghost-Waiparous and Burnt-Timber forests, over to Spray Lake Sawmills through a Forest Management Agreement.

The second is a set of three letters, all dealing with this proposed FMA, and they are written by Mr. Guy Greenaway of Calgary, Mr. Will Gadd, and a third one is from Jeff Perron, all addressed to the Premier, asking him to stop this FMA from proceeding.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a document outlining statistics from the police in Calgary outlining the increase in hate and bias crimes in that city.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the information of all Members of the Legislative Assembly a letter dated September 27, 1999, that I received from the Minister of Alberta Environment. This is regarding documents, correspondence, and soil tests relating to the Hub Oil facility.

The second tabling that I have today is a document that I received through freedom of information. It's a site map of Hub Oil. It's dated October 1992, and in the northwest corner someone has drawn in "Cap'n Jakes treasure," and it has the skull and crossbones attached.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today five copies of a letter addressed to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness from a businessman in Lethbridge who is very upset over some correspondence from the health insurance commission over premiums.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of Ann-Marie's bicycle safety program at St. Matthew school. Ann-Marie St. Jean was tragically killed as an eight year old due to an accident. The St. Jean family has agreed to have St. Matthew school create a bicycle safety program in honour of her and to help as many children as possible become safe riders.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had the privilege of meeting with three very important Edmontonians who are members of the Greater Edmonton Foundation responsible for housing for seniors, as we all know. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly as I call their names. The first gentleman is Nick Hertz, the chair of the board; the vice-chair, Dennis Vasquez; and the alternate vice-chair, Maureen Hemingway Schloss. I do thank them for an excellent meeting.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a visiting Rotary student. With us today in the members' gallery is Tuulia Valiheikki, a grade 12 student visiting Edmonton as part of a Rotary International youth exchange program. Tuulia is a Rotary exchange student from Finland. Since arriving in our city, Tuulia has attended Victoria composite high school – the high school, I might mention, is where the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is still the principal – and has been active in our community. Accompanying Tuulia is Dorothy Hollands, president of the Edmonton Glenora Rotary Club, which is sponsoring her visit to Edmonton. I'd ask Tuulia and Mrs. Hollands to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a young man whom I had the pleasure of hosting for lunch today. Kyle Franz is from the town of Brooks, but he's probably known more among members of my caucus, in particular, as president of the PC Youth of Alberta. This young man I think exemplifies the adage that if you want to get a job done well, you find a busy person to do it. In the course of our lunch he talked about a role that he's playing in the Brooks Chamber of Commerce. He's involved in the local theatre group as well as getting his life organized for something that is very particularly pleasing to me. He'll be transferring to Medicine Hat College in my constituency this fall as well as carrying on his responsibilities as president of the PC Youth. So I would ask that Kyle, who is seated in the members' gallery, now rise and receive the recognition and welcome of all Members of the Legislative Assembly.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure and honour to introduce two fine gentlemen to you and through you to the members of this Assembly, one being Mr. Manuel Leon Vazquez, who is an Albertan but for a number of years has resided in Spain, and today he is visiting us from Spain. The other one is a resident of Castle Downs who is quite known in Castle Downs for a great deal of volunteer work. He has been involved in such fine and noble causes as getting me elected to this Assembly as my co-campaign manager. If I may ask those two individuals to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today with great pleasure I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature two friends from Calgary. First, Mr. David Gaskin, who has chosen Calgary, Alberta, as his home from many places around the world, even from his birthplace in the United Kingdom. Mr. Gaskin has been very active in his professional years in major cities around the world. He was a financial controller of many international corporations. He's now active in community organizations promoting international relationships, understanding, and co-operation. With Mr. David Gaskin is Mr. Yunchao Sun, a young man from Beijing, China. He's here to study at the internationally known Mount Royal College, a testimonial to Alberta's high-quality learning system. He's here to observe the democratic system of Alberta. May I ask the two gentlemen in the members' gallery to stand and receive the warm welcome from the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly today four members of the Calgary-West Special Places Committee, to which the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow and I are advisors. The committee was formed some two years ago at a very well attended community forum on the environment and historical resources. Today they have traveled to Edmonton from Calgary to meet with the Minister of Community Development. Gloria Wilkinson, who is a constituent of Banff-Cochrane; Steve Meadows, a constituent of Calgary-West; Tom Baker, a constituent of Calgary-West; and Hugh McGill, a constituent of Calgary-Bow. Would they please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly here today four very good friends of mine and constituents. They are members of the municipal district of Mackenzie, from the farthest northwest corner of Alberta. The members here are the reeve, Mr. Bill Neufeld, members of council Pat Kulscar, Frank Rosenberger, and Wayne Thiessen. They're here today to hone their persuasive skills with a minister and a couple of members at meetings earlier this morning. I see they're already standing, so I'd ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Dr. Penny Albright, vice-president, government and health economics for Janssen-Ortho Inc., and Mr. Chris Halyk, managing director of Ortho Biotech Canada. Ortho Biotech recently made a $1 million donation to the Health Smart Solutions campaign. Dr. Albright and Mr. Halyk are in Edmonton to receive recognition from the Capital Health Council of Foundations for their generous donation. Dr. Albright and Mr. Halyk are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the following gentlemen from Agricore. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'll ask them to stand as I give their names. First is Neil Silver, president; next is Gord Cummings, who is the chief executive officer from Agricore's head office in Winnipeg; and Phil Hyde, who is corporate services representative from the Red Deer office. I would ask that members give these gentlemen our usual warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Eric Szmurlo. Eric is returning to work in my constituency office of Calgary-Glenmore for a second summer and will be returning to his second year at Queen's University this fall. Eric is here in Edmonton today of course to see the good work that government is doing for the province of Alberta. I'd ask Eric to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Soil Contamination

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of the Lynnwood Ridge community in southeast Calgary are wondering how approval was given for their homes to be built on a former oil refinery site. My questions today are to the Minister of Environment. Who is responsible for certifying that soil or water contamination on an industrial or commercial site has been cleaned up to standard?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, in regard to approval of homes being built, as the member has asked, that approval of homes is clearly the responsibility of the municipalities. Only municipalities approve homes.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the question was: who is responsible for certifying that soil or water contamination on the site of an industrial business is safe before the homes are built? That was the question.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, in this particular case, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe it was certified before the subdivision was built. In this case this subdivision was built in the 1980s, and the site was cleaned up in the late '70s and '80s. Things were done, quite frankly, differently then. Standards were different then.

Now, what we're talking about here is lead contamination. Right now our standard in Alberta is 140 parts per million. The EPA standard and most other standards across the country are 400 parts per million. So as we've made our standards more stringent – we've reduced the numbers, which has made them more stringent – then that of course changes the conditions around Lynnwood Ridge.

DR. NICOL: To the same minister: what role does Alberta Environment play or do they have any role at all when an industrial site is abandoned or given up for reclassification by the local municipality? Does Alberta Environment have any role whatsoever to play in approving that site for an alternative use like residential?

DR. TAYLOR: We don't have a role in approving that site for building homes, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following up on that, does the government assume any responsibility for any houses being built on industrial sites that may not have been appropriately cleaned up, or is this all local municipal responsibility?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, let me say, to start, that of course the safety of the people is first. Certainly I visited Lynnwood Ridge on Friday of last week and saw the area. As I said in Calgary on Friday, we will enforce – we will enforce – our environmental standards. Once again, the municipality is the only one that subdivides. The municipality is the only one that can grant permission to build homes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Who should be responsible for the cleanup and loss of property value: the homeowner, the previous business owner, or the government, in this case local or provincial?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister. But not into opinions.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I can see you want me to be brief. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the municipality and the company involved, Imperial Oil. It is very clearly their responsibility to clean up the area, bear the costs of the area. We actually wrote to the city. We have given the city a short-term plan. We said: "You have to tell us what you're going to do in one week. You have to develop a remediation program by the 30th of June, and we will enforce it."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final follow-up on that: is Alberta Environment in any way responsible for testing industrial sites for environmental pollution or environmental contamination from things like lead or other heavy metals?

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As these situations arise, we certainly will test. You know, in the '50s and '60s things were handled in what was thought to be appropriate methodology of the '50s and '60s. As I said earlier, our standards have changed. We're not going to go on a treasure hunt all over this province trying to find contaminated sites, but as sites show up, as individuals raise them to us, we will certainly go out and test, as we've done in Ponoka, as we are doing in Calgary. As sites are brought to our attention, we will definitely go out and test.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Hub Oil Company Ltd.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year Alberta Environment indicated that the Hub Oil site in southeast Calgary would cost millions of dollars to clean up because of extensive soil contamination. In fact, the site may never be fit for habitation. My questions this afternoon are for the Minister of Environment. Why did the Department of Environment agree with Hub Oil officials during the renewal of the licence to operate in 1996 when Hub oil stated that the decommissioning costs of $500,000 were excessive, suggesting the fee remain at $150,000?

Thank you.

DR. TAYLOR: I'm not quite sure what the question was there, Mr. Speaker. Let me just say that in regards to the Hub Oil situation it was certainly a very serious situation, and we recognize that. There were charges placed against Hub Oil in August, so that's where the situation is.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that in 1993 the city of Calgary's city and community planning division stated that the $150,000 security bond would not cover reclamation costs at Hub Oil, why did the department fail to act upon the city of Calgary's recommendations?

Thank you.

DR. TAYLOR: Okay. I think I understand his question finally, Mr. Speaker. Essentially what he's asking is: why was the bond not large enough to cover the reclamation? I can tell you that right across this province this is not a unique case. Right across this province there are a number of instances like that. One of the things I have instructed my department to investigate is: what level of bond and what level of security do we need to make sure that each of these industrial sites can and will clean themselves up if there is some horrific accident?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Environment. Given that in July of 1995 Alberta Environment officials themselves expressed concern about the $150,000 security bond – they felt it was insufficient and should be increased – why was a 10-year licence to operate granted in 1996 to Hub Oil when there was no increase in the security bond to cover contamination?

Thank you.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I've already answered that question, if you'd bother to listen. What I said was that there were situations in the past where the bond did not cover the possible cleanup costs. So listen. I have very clearly instructed my department to examine all these cases across the province and come up with a solution to the problem.

Increase in Hate Crimes

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, today I tabled statistics from the Calgary Police Service showing that hate crimes in Calgary have risen by 56 percent in the last three years. While this information is troubling, to say the least, what is more troubling is the government's neglect of this issue. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Is the government concerned about this 56 percent increase, and what plans do they have to deal with it?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't aware of the increase in so-called hate crimes, but I can assure you that I will look into that. It is a very serious situation, quite obviously. I would say, though, that we have the Alberta human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund that does provide moneys toward educational purposes which help all of us learn more about individuals with backgrounds different than ours. It's a very aggressive education program that I think will yield some results toward stemming any of these so-called hate crimes, should they be racially, culturally, or religiously based.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, if the government's educational program is so successful and so aggressive, why is there an increase of 56 percent in hate crimes in the city of Calgary over the last three years?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, I'm not sure what the basis of that so-called proven or unproven fact might be, but I would say, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of other organizations that we assist who help carry out this program. This is not something that just the government alone is involved in. There are many volunteer organizations, one of which is the NAARR group, the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, who every year bring to our attention some of the atrocities that occurred in Sharpeville and elsewhere. We're very cognizant of these facts. What we are trying to do is to not only stem these kinds of racially motivated crimes or slurs or what have you, but we're also very pledged and committed to reducing and eliminating them totally. It is a long-range plan, and it's not something that we can accomplish overnight, but we are doing what we can to help out in that regard.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, my second supplementary is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Given that the Edmonton police do not track hate crimes in the same systematic fashion as the police in Calgary, will the Minister of Justice and Attorney General act to ensure that uniform tracking of hate and bias crimes exists throughout Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question and I think one which I actually have been active on in a broader sense than just hate crimes. In terms of developing criteria and having police forces across the province work together so that they can report crimes in a common manner, so that they're understandable across the province and can be compared across the province, we do have a committee, actually, involving the RCMP, the city of Edmonton police, and the city of Calgary police, and our department in talking about how we can develop a common set of reporting criteria and statistics on major crimes. I can't tell the hon. member whether hate crimes fall into that list of crimes that we're developing the statistics on, but I will certainly check on that and go back to it.

Mr. Speaker, I would also want to mention that when we use percentages, we have to be very careful. We talked today about a percentage increase of 50 percent in hate crimes reported over a period of time, but we should also note that by the statistics on the tabling that was made today, the number of hate crimes that were calculated in the city of Calgary, which, as I understand it, has in excess of 900,000 people, was 133.

Now, any hate crime is abhorrent. Any hate crime should not be tolerated, and we certainly want to reduce the amount of intolerance in our society. But you have to put it into perspective: a 50 percent increase from 85 in 1997 to 108 in 1998, 119 in 1999, and 133 in the year 2000. While it's important and significant and needs to be taken care of, the 56 percent increase suggests a much larger problem than is suggested by the actual numbers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Fish Conservation

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We live in a world with many stresses and very important concerns such as environment and health care. In order to remain healthy mentally and physically, we need to balance our hectic lifestyles with rest and relaxation. We also need to recognize the importance of leisure activities to our health and to our economy. One of the greatest leisure activities of all time and perhaps one of the oldest professions in the world is fishing. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. My constituents and interest groups have informed me of the concerns about the decline in the walleye population in the province and the desire of Albertans to catch and keep some of these fish. What is your department doing in response to these concerns?

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll try and give the right answer. It is, of course, like the member says, a very important issue, and it's a concern to all Albertans. In about two months or so I will be taking through the normal approval process a rationalization of the sportfishing and the commercial fishing and the domestic fishing industries. We have a good walleye management plan in Alberta of course, and this plan will go a long way towards addressing the issue of the declining walleye population.

2:00

In addition to that, we have other management tools; for example, closing commercial fisheries and sport fisheries during April and May, the high spawning season for walleye and pike. The other area is improving the natural spawning areas for walleye, and another important one is trying to manage the domestic fishing industry by closer monitoring of that particular process. The other one is to manage commercial fisheries by zones, possibly by tolerance limits and also by looking at gear restrictions, how and what types of gear fishermen may use to limit the catch.

MRS. JABLONSKI: To the same minister: can our current commercial fishery be sustained as it stands?

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to healthy sustainable fisheries in Alberta, and that is why we're dealing with, for an example, the natural spawning grounds that are out there right now. I believe that in the past number of years the natural spawning grounds have changed. I've given instructions already to my staff to look at improving that particular area. Of course, the other one is enhancing our stocking programs for walleye and other species. I will be touring the fish hatcheries, in fact, in Calgary, Blairmore, Cold Lake, and Caroline. I believe they are the four areas where we do have fish hatcheries. I will be touring those in the very near future to determine as to how we may enhance that particular industry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member?

MRS. JABLONSKI: No. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Children's Advocate

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government announced a review of the Child Welfare Act, including the role of the Children's Advocate. Public consultation is to begin at the Children's Forum this fall. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that the 1999 forum recommended that the Children's Advocate answer to this Legislature and not to the minister, why was that recommendation ignored?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, that forum identified over a hundred recommendations which were separated into theme areas and examined by the Alberta children's initiative, all of the partners that are at this front bench that look after children's needs through various ministries. We determined what was practical and feasible to do.

The issue of having the advocate account directly to the Legislature is a matter for some legislative change and contemplation if it should ever occur, and we're looking at not so much how to look after the checks and balances but how to get the children's services delivery system right. That was the focus for the commitment to action and the task force report following the Taber incident. So although this is something that is still on the shelf, has been reviewed again by the Chan Durrant report, has been duly noted, I have committed to the hon. member that prior to the end of this legislative session, if at all possible – and we're working very hard to identify what responses to the advocate's report will be appropriate to table now, what will have to wait for further consultation and perhaps legislative amendment through the Child Welfare Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the 1999 forum recommended that an advocate for all children be appointed, why was that recommendation ignored?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. It's not so much a matter of ignoring a recommendation, but let's consider children's services today. The 15,000 children that are in the child welfare system, half of which are supported in their homes, half of which are under temporary or permanent guardianship, reflect a very small percentage of Alberta children. Alberta children comprise about 750,000 youth. If an advocate or an advocate's role is going to take the responsibility of advocating on behalf of all children, what is the role of the parents, what is the role of the guardian, and what is the role of the community? If you broaden that advocate's role, it certainly talks about government-based resources, community-based resources, which may better be expended in actually looking after all children well that require that need through the child welfare system and allowing parents and families to do the job that in most cases is being very well done by themselves: looking after their own families, advocating on behalf of their own children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the past recommendations concerning the Children's Advocate have been ignored, isn't this fall's consultation really a sham?

MS EVANS: I'll forgive the hon. member for that question. I will also respond that every time we are in consultation through the forum, we deal with many and complex issues. The advocate's role in response to the communities, in response to Albertans, and in response to the Legislature is one that we're not intending to dilute. Rather, we're intending to focus it in the best way possible. We have tabled reports. Quite honestly, I have done my very best to respond to those issues of resources where appropriate. I think the hon. member is ignoring that in the last two years we've moved to a community-based child care delivery system which is showing a great deal of success, even in this capital region.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Sustainable Workforce

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final report on the governmentwide study on the impact of an aging population identified as two of its eight themes the need to prepare for financial security and the need to provide more flexible options for work and retirement. In Alberta we are already facing a huge employment shortage. The mandatory retirement age is 65, and we have an Alberta corporate attitude to retire employees, especially management, much sooner than 65, yet we have a real shortage of workers in many sectors with large numbers of employees retiring within five years or less. My first question is to the Minister of Seniors. What is happening in your ministry to address this issue?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As everyone knows, seniors are a high priority with this government, and as a result the government has made one of its four cross-ministry initiatives seniors, and that's entitled the seniors' policy initiative. Hopefully that's one group that will be looking at this issue, which is a very significant one. In addition, I'll be asking the Seniors Advisory Council and the Alberta Council on Aging for their input and their opinions on what should be done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Minister of Seniors. In many sectors retired employees on company pensions are limited to a maximum number of hours they can work if rehired before their pension received is reduced. Is there any way this government can resolve this disincentive to return to the workplace?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I may not have a complete answer, but it is my understanding that people who return to work in the same field may be penalized on the pension that's given in that field, but nobody who has a pension and chooses to work in another area would be penalized. For example, a teacher who chooses to do something else would be able to collect their full pension and also work elsewhere. I think the equalizer here, however, is something called income tax, because the more you earn, the more you pay, but this is another issue that we'll be having a look at. For the areas that need help, for example the teaching profession, it's within their bailiwick to change that particular provision if they so choose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Is your department involved in developing opportunities for older people to gain skills or to upgrade present skills in order to participate in the workplace?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, yes, we are. We're in a situation here in Alberta for a lot of reasons, most of them good, where we're really trying to find ways to expand our workforce, and certainly we do it out of necessity. Also, of course, we're not going to get into ageism in this province. There's an opportunity for people to come forward at whatever age they are that want to develop skills, want to get into our skills development programs, or need postsecondary education. We look at all of that. An older worker can truly be not only a compatible worker but also a very loyal and competent worker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, whose birthday it is today, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Women's Shelters

MS BLAKEMAN: Nicely done. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The placement of women's shelters under Children's Services was dismissive of women in general and women in need in particular. The situation is aggravated when children's authorities cut funding to women's shelters. This recently occurred in the Sun Country jurisdiction when the Pincher Creek women's shelter had their budget cut by $17,000, or 8 percent. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Why are close to a thousand people, 300 Pincher Creek and area women and their 600 children, being put at risk through these budget cuts?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, the proposed reduction in that budget has not received the approval of this ministry or this minister. We've increased the budget for women's shelters from $11 million to 13 and a half million dollars in this year's budget.

There are a number of points that should be made, however. There's not only one new shelter being added to that child and family services authority down in region 1, but there are at least two that have expanded. There is some very serious review that's required by the child and family services authority. I will personally be visiting on Saturday to talk with the members of the board to review the expenditures that have been outlined by the chief executive officer to a number of agencies, such as this particular shelter. I will be reinforcing what I do in this House; that is, there is a priority on not only sheltering women who are victims of violence but finding second-stage housing and finding programs that prevent violence in the first place. So we will be looking very carefully not only at the proposed funding reductions but what the priorities of this ministry are.

I'm going to point out one more thing. There has been at least $5 million in additional funding to Sun Country provided over the last two and a half years, which is a larger percentage increase than anywhere else in the province. Although this may not be deemed relevant, it is relevant in terms of the overall population that's served. There are a number of reductions that have been proposed by this particular child and family services authority which we are reviewing in the context of the accountability for our service delivery plan. We will be doing that not only on Saturday, but I intend to visit the proponents of those shelters throughout Sun Country in the month of June.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Could the minister tell me how many women's shelters in Alberta are being put at risk because the department is not approving the local children's authority budget?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody is being put at risk. We are in fact examining with community partnerships the best way of delivering programs for women that are at risk. We have 19 shelters. We have not only provided some additional funding for some of those shelters with our partnerships, but we've been looking at other ways to make sure that the community combats family violence and works to protect not only the mothers but the children and looks at other ways of nurturing.

Mr. Speaker, there has been no intent by the department to put at risk anybody in need of shelter. In fact, with those authorities we are looking at prevention and looking at other ways to house women where shelters don't exist in other parts of this province.

MS BLAKEMAN: The minister mentioned a review when she is in the south tomorrow, I think. I'm wondering if the minister will review the administrative costs of the authority to ensure that the bureaucracies and boards are not consuming money better spent on at-risk women and their families.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member raises a very serious issue. It will be Saturday that I will be there, and I'm well aware that the particular shelter in question sat in a hearing in front of the board and heard several administrative costs discussed. They were neither with the final approval of their board nor was it through the approval of this ministry. We will be reviewing the administrative costs. I believe there was a suggestion that administrators attach themselves to the four pillars of the child care delivery system. We'll be looking at all aspects of the administrative costs, and I really thank the hon. member for her concern.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta Teachers' Association

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Last Saturday I had the pleasure of attending the Alberta Teachers' Association convention at the request of the minister. I came away from the meeting concerned that teachers find themselves through their association in a catch-22 position. On one hand, they rightfully advocate in their own self-interest as regards salaries, pensions, and benefits. On the other hand, at the same time they advocate on behalf of students and the learning system in general. My question: would the Alberta Teachers' Association not be more effective as either the bargaining agent or the professional certifying body but not both?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister, and we're not into a debate.

DR. OBERG: I wouldn't debate that, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, in answering that question, I'd like to go to the experience that has been across Canada and the experience that has occurred. There are some organizations where the professional body and the union body are separate. I believe that our province is well served by having the Alberta Teachers' Association as both the professional and union bodies.

When you take a look at what has occurred in other areas across Canada, what you have is some pure unions that have advocated strike action to a much greater degree than what is presently advocated in Alberta. By having the professional association as part of that, I believe it allows them to do a better job in advocating for children, as the hon. member has stated, as well as tempering some of their demands when it comes to the union side.

MR. McCLELLAND: What, then, is the government doing to ensure that the adversarial relationship resulting from the collective bargaining process does not spill over into the professional relationship between the Alberta Teachers' Association, representing teachers, and the government, representing Albertans?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the collective bargaining arrangement is between the school boards and the Alberta Teachers' Association. The provincial government does not enter into the collective bargaining arrangement.

I feel that the Alberta Teachers' Association continues to advocate on behalf of the students, on behalf of the kids that are in the system, and I think they do a good job at that. They certainly raise concerns to me on a relatively frequent basis about some of the things that have been happening in the school system, and on many occasions we have attempted and indeed have changed things at their request. So I believe that they continue to advocate on students' behalf.

I believe that the collective bargaining position is best left between the school boards and the Teachers' Association, and we'll see what comes from that relationship.

MR. McCLELLAND: Given the circumstances, then, surrounding education with school boards, with the Alberta Teachers' Association, and government, how is the government going to convince the Alberta Teachers' Association and others of our commitment to public education?

DR. OBERG: That's a fascinating question, because lately there has been some question about whether this government is really committed to public education. I guess, Mr. Speaker, that the proof is in the pudding. We just added $250 million this year for public education on the K to 12 side. I now spend $3.8 billion, and that's a lot of money. We are definitely – and I can't say this loud enough; I can't say this often enough. This government is definitely, 100 percent committed to a public education system in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ambulance Services

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ambulance workers in Edmonton are taking steps towards strike action in part because of the level of salaries and compensation. My first question is to the minister of health. In light of the precedent set by the province for increases in health care professionals' salaries, shouldn't paramedics receive comparable treatment?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that emergency medical services are not the responsibility of the province. They are the responsibility of municipalities. This matter is being reviewed in an overall context by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo with respect to emergency medical services. However, it is not for me to say as it does not fall strictly within the purview of my responsibilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the government expect municipalities to increase local taxes to deal with shortfalls in provincial funding for ambulance services?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised that the hon. member wouldn't be asking this of the mayor or of his city councillor. It is the responsibility of municipalities to pay for the services that they provide, including emergency medical services. That is a question that is appropriately put to somebody else.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Yes. Well, considering, Mr. Speaker, that the government does provide grants to the municipalities, my final question, then, will go to the minister of human resources and development. What proactive steps is your department taking to avert a strike by Edmonton's paramedics?

MR. DUNFORD: I think he wants me. I'm not sure. This is just that little shuck and jive that they do. He said human resources and development.

THE SPEAKER: And it should be Human Resources and Employment. Hon. minister, you're recognized.

MR. DUNFORD: I'm going to take it that's it me, so we'll do a little shucking and jiving.

We have very good mediation services in this province. We've been working very, very actively with both parties, the city of Edmonton and the ambulance drivers, represented by their association. I think it's very important that we all keep in mind that this is a very, very important service, but there is an obligation on the part of both parties to bargain in good faith. The information that we have is that that is what's taking place at the present time. I, perhaps like you, Mr. Speaker, and certainly all Edmontonians as well as all Albertans hope that the two parties will come to a quick and satisfactory agreement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Spray Lakes Forest Management Agreement

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is once again negotiating a forest management agreement behind closed doors. This time the government is preparing to negotiate away thousands of square kilometres of public land next to Kananaskis Country and Banff national park to a company called Spray Lakes Sawmills. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How can the minister justify ignoring the thousands of Albertans who want a say whether to transfer thousands of square kilometres of valuable wilderness and recreational lands into the exclusive control of a single forest company?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to clarify one issue. There is no such thing as transferring public lands to a company for exclusive management, because that is not a fact when it come to forest management areas. We have four different types of allocation of timber out. We have the local timber allocation to smaller companies that want to utilize timber. We have the commercial timber permits, which are a bit smaller operations that access the commercial timber permits on a year-to-year basis. Then we have the quota system, which could run up to 20 years.

The fourth one we have is the forest management agreement, Mr. Speaker. The forest management agreement basically gives the rights to manage and harvest the resources of a specific area of the forest. In the case of Spray Lakes, the negotiations are only underway. There was no final decision made yet as to if the transfer will take place to that particular company. What it does is give the company more responsibility. The plan in the Spray Lakes FMA is that it does not harvest at this time any more than what they were doing with the existing quota. It also doesn't cover any extra area of public lands.

The other thing. We've had FMAs since the early '50s in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and it's a good way to manage our forests in a balanced way, keeping in mind that there are environmental needs and there are also job creation needs. The forest industry is a very, very important industry in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then why is the minister and this government prepared to sign an FMA that will intensify logging, allow smaller and younger trees to be clear cut, all in an environmentally sensitive area with tremendous wilderness value?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of misunderstanding. Of course, like I said earlier, the forest industry is a very, very important industry in Alberta, very, very important. It's an $8 billion industry that employs over 50,000 people. It is the backbone of a lot of our communities in Alberta. In fact, it's the third largest industry in the overall economic action plan of Alberta. On the other hand, as the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I also have to ensure that the public lands and resources are protected. You can be assured, as we move forward, that we are only negotiating the agreement with this company at this time. There is no transfer that has taken place.

When the public hearings will start, Mr. Speaker, is once the agreement is signed with the company in the forest management area. The public hearings will start once the company files their operating plans. The public will have full participation in the process. In fact, through the FMA process the public has the opportunity to be involved more than in the quota system.

DR. PANNU: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the minister. How close is the government to holding public hearings, or how close is the government to signing the agreement in question?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, like I said earlier, we are at the negotiation stage with the company at this time. Once the agreement is signed, if it is signed, then the company will have to file their operation plan. This could be a five-year operation plan. There is opportunity for the public, including the opposition members, to input each year when the company reviews their five-year operation plan. So the opportunity for public participation is there.

In relation to the Kananaskis area, the company has been logging that area since 1950 in a planned, managed way.

Three Sisters Resorts Wildlife Conservation Easement

MRS. TARCHUK: Mr. Speaker, today there is a public meeting being held in Canmore regarding the draft conservation easement that would run through the Three Sisters Resorts' property in that community. This is to address a very important concern about how wildlife can pass through the sensitive area of the province. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: can you tell us how effective the conservation easement is when it comes to facilitating wildlife movement through the corridor?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, this again is another important area. One thing I'd just like to advise the public and the members of the opposition here in the House and our colleagues also is that there is a lot of area that is protected in the whole eastern slopes of the Rockies: the national parks, provincial parks, wilderness areas, and also the prime protection areas. We are in a good position.

Specifically to the very sensitive area that's mentioned, the Three Sisters development, we are committed to very careful management of the wildlife. Of course, we have a conservation easement in place, which is very effective. Under Alberta's environmental legislation it gives legislative authority within the wildlife corridor. But this doesn't end there. Alberta has a very capable team of biologists, experts who are doing very important work throughout the corridor development. Not only are we looking at the corridor development itself and the Three Sisters development, but we are going beyond that to ensure that the corridors are protected and our wildlife is protected, at the same time ensuring that the project moves forward as planned.

MRS. TARCHUK: Also to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The conservation easement may look good on paper, but obviously animals can't read easement policies. How can Albertans be assured that it will work in real life?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, like I said earlier, we have a lot of areas that are protected. In fact, the zone 1 area has over 4,000 square kilometres protected. Again, as I mentioned earlier, this is a very sensitive area of the province, and we are moving very carefully as we move forward. We drafted the conservation easement plan based on the 1992 design report of the Natural Resources Conservation Board, and we are now bringing forward this plan to the public. That's why the public meetings are being held. We will follow very closely the guidelines that are established. In fact, I will be touring the area on June 4, I believe, to ensure that I'm comfortable that areas are being developed the way they should be developed and also that areas are protected for the movement of wildlife throughout the process. We can do both.

MRS. TARCHUK: Lastly to the same minister. I understand that there is some concern that the easement may be appropriate for elk movement through the corridor but may not consider all species that use the area. Can the minister tell the House whether the draft easement addresses other species?

MR. CARDINAL: Yeah, I believe it does, Mr. Speaker. One of the reasons why I'm touring the area firsthand is to ensure that this happens. The terms of reference for monitoring mention specific animals: the grizzly bear, the bear, wolves, cougar, elk, deer, snowshoe hare, and other small animals. I believe there is some comfort in the direction we are going in this process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Health Care Insurance Premiums

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are prompted by a letter I tabled earlier from an upset Albertan. A few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Health and Wellness if the dramatic jump in health care insurance premium write-offs last year from $29 million to over $50 million was a result of some Albertans having more difficulty making payments. He said and I quote: no. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is there such a huge and unbudgeted jump in health care insurance premium write-offs?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, in previous years the Auditor General has indicated that he has disagreed with how the Department of Health and Wellness has estimated uncollectible accounts. In response to the Auditor General the department conducted a review of its uncollected accounts, and it increased the estimate in the year 2000-2001 by $21.7 million to $50.4 million. That is a change in practice in how these are recognized. It does not represent a difficulty, as near as we can estimate, in people being able to pay their health care premiums.

Mr. Speaker, the action taken by the department is consistent with what the Auditor General's recommendations were. It will more accurately reflect what the government may actually collect. I should note that premiums for low-income Albertans and for seniors are partially or fully subsidized. As of March 31, 2000, there were nearly 500,000 Albertans who received a full or partial premium reduction. This is out of a total of roughly 2.9 million Albertans that come under the Alberta health care insurance plan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In situations where it is difficult to collect, how much notice does the Department of Health and Wellness give Albertans when they fall behind in paying their health care premiums before commencing action to recover those premiums?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we are aggressive in collecting our unpaid accounts. That is only fair to those Albertans who do pay them on time. We of course look into circumstances, and this letter tabled by the hon. member may be one of those circumstances where the individual has indicated that they believe that their premiums are paid up. If it is determined that the individual is correct, then of course we would make the correction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering how the minister cost justifies his department threatening Albertans with legal action, including action in the Court of Queen's Bench, plus notice to the credit bureau, plus forcing them to pay all related legal expenses over bills smaller than $250.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I should note at the outset that no Albertan is ever denied services for health care because of the inability to pay the premiums. We have premium subsidy waivers, premium subsidy programs. We tell Albertans about these programs through notices in their bill, on the Internet, and automatically mailing an application to them when their account is past five months overdue. You know, this is a good program, and it is important that we do collect – and we do collect aggressively – from those individuals that are not paying on time. If an individual is not able to pay, that is quite a different issue, and they may fall within the purview of the programs that I indicated for a subsidy or a waiver of their premium.

Coal Supplies

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, not all coal concerns are in West Yellowhead. In Whitecourt-St. Anne I have constituents that have had problems purchasing coal from the coal suppliers. Their homes and their businesses have coal-fired burners, and for their farm use they have coal-fired burners. Is there an obligation on the part of the coal producers, Mr. Minister, to supply coal to these people?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Mines and Minerals Act has been around in Alberta for a long time. In fact, the good work of Premier John Brownlee in 1930, as a result of over seven years of work, ensured that resource ownership belonged to all Albertans. That includes coal. At that time Alberta was characterized by a great number of rural communities. Towns like Barrhead and Sangudo were just growing, and there were people who used coal in their furnaces on their farms. In section 67(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act there is a requirement that the lessee of a coal lease who operates a coal mine shall make available for sale at his mine to Alberta residents the coal they require for their own domestic household needs.

So there are large coal mines, and these coal mines will provide stoker coal for houses. Now, unfortunately this past year a plant called Wabamun 4 up in the Keepphills area, in the Wabamun area of Alberta was down. This 280-megawatt generator was down, and there were less requirements for that type of coal. Because of that, less was mined, and that made less of that particular type of coal available for those households not only in Edson but in areas like Whitecourt that could be used for personal consumption.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Minister. To the same minister again. Many furnace suppliers are promoting the use of coal. We know it's good, clean energy. We know that it's a good resource. Is there any incentive to these homeowners to expand the use of coal to fire their furnaces and their boilers?

MR. SMITH: Well, there has been a real return to an interest in coal. There has been a real return to an interest in generating electricity from clean, coal-fired combustion. This will continue. It's a North American phenomenon. One of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, that it is on the increase and of more and greater interest to individual homes is the fact that the price of natural gas has increased. That price of natural gas in Alberta is one that is set by market forces. There is some shielding for Albertans in recognition of the ownership of the resource, but the mere fact that the price of natural gas has risen provides the market incentive to move towards coal-fired furnaces and boilers where appropriate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before the Clerk calls Recognitions in the Routine, hon. Minister of Transportation, did you want to make a clarification of facts?

Point of Order Clarification

MR. STELMACH: Definitely, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon I inadvertently, in tabling a response to a question raised May 17, did say "the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark." Quite frankly, it's the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.*

Thank you, sir.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

No Bull Organization

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today to recognize and congratulate an outstanding young man, 18-year-old Ken Stretch from Spruce Grove composite high school, who has been honoured as one of 20 Canadian students to win the TD Canada Trust scholarship. He has been awarded $50,000 towards any Canadian college or university. Ken was chosen because of the excellent program he started on behalf of community development in his school called the No Bull organization. Two years ago Ken realized that silence was not the answer to dealing with bullies in school. He banded together with a few other students to start the organization to raise awareness about the effects of bullying in schools and educate groups of younger students on the best way for an entire school to deal with the problem of harassment.

Ken Stretch is one of many outstanding youths in my constituency. The No Bull organization has dramatically improved student life at Spruce Grove composite high, and I hope Ken's commitment to ending student harassment serves as an example to us all.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Bob Maskell

MR. HUTTON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great thrill and a privilege today to recognize a very special gentleman. He is a colleague, a friend, a great educator, and a great administrator. On Thursday, May 17, Bob Maskell was recognized at Victoria school's commencement ceremonies with the first ever Victoria school lifetime achievement award. The award was designed to honour the alumni of Victoria school who through their actions have worked to improve the society and the lives of the people they have touched. He was presented with an award, a gold pin formed in the Victoria school logo and with a diamond appointment. Bob was recognized for his work in creating Victoria School of Performing & Visual Arts and, in doing so, enabling so many students to live their dreams.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Junior Forest Wardens

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize the junior forest wardens program. This program gives young people the opportunity to develop an awareness, appreciation, and respect for the natural environment and promotes responsible use of the environment. The roots of this incredible program were planted back in the 1920s in British Columbia when some young boys reported a forest fire to a forest warden. This story was published in Forest and Outdoors magazine, an official publication of the Canadian Forestry Association. The response to this story was impressive, with boys all over B.C. contacting the author wondering how they, too, could help with protecting forests.

Charles Wilkinson, the local manager of the Canadian Forestry Association in B.C., decided to establish the warden program to teach youth about forest protection. Individual clubs soon started forming throughout western Canada in 1944, and the girl forest guards were also established. In 1974 the boys and girls groups combined to form the now familiar group, the junior forest wardens. They do invaluable work in this province in maintaining our natural environment.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Canadian Actors' Equity Association

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to recognize and celebrate the 25th anniversary of the formation of the Canadian Actors' Equity Association. In 1976, after massive consultation with performers across the country, the Canadians separated from the American equity association. I'm proud to be a member of Equity and, even more, proud of the professionalism of my many colleagues and friends who act, dance, sing, direct, stage manage, and choreograph the performances that bring our stories to the stage.

Interestingly, the beginnings of the American Equity came from a Canadian actress, Marie Dressler, who led a 30-day strike in New York in 1913 to create conditions of equity for the actor and for the management. The most recent change for Canadian Equity was here in Alberta, where in the year 2000 Equity was certified as a union in order to represent dancers at Alberta Ballet. On June 3 regions across the country will be celebrating Equity's 25 years with a variety of events and parties. I will be joining my colleagues for the Edmonton version, the Silver Skewer Barbecue.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Gary Bobrovitz

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize one of my constituents whom I've known for some 20 years for achieving a goal and dream of his this past weekend. Over the weekend Gary Bobrovitz, a well-known and respected journalist and investigative reporter for Global news in Calgary, competed in the Canadian national powerlifting championship in Lethbridge. Gary was successful in winning the gold medal in the men's open division 60 kilogram classification, lifting over 700 pounds, or nearly five times his own weight. Gary will be attending the world powerlifting championships in Dallas, Texas, in August of this year. I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate Gary on his outstanding feat and wish him all the best in the future.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Chad McConnell

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to recognize Canada's best automotive mechanic under the age of 22. Chad McConnell works in a small garage in Gibbons, located in the constituency of Redwater. Chad is in France this week for another mechanic's skills competition on cars he has never worked on before. Chad McConnell will represent Canada at the world championships in Korea this September while competing against the best young mechanics in the world. I'd also like to recognize Chad's trainer and boss, Richard Skawronik, owner of Quality Auto Care at Gibbons, for his excellent training skills. Please join me in congratulating Chad McConnell for his outstanding accomplishment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Canada World Youth Exchange

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada World Youth is once again sponsoring an exchange to Ukraine as a part of their international educational exchange. The program is comprised of nine Canadian and nine Ukrainian woman aged 21 to 29. The women begin the program in Red Deer in September with their Ukrainian counterparts. Together for three months they live with a host family and volunteer at work placements where they learn and educate on sustainable community development. In January they arrive at L'viv, where they live with their counterpart's family for three months and volunteer together at a work placement. Work placements within the exchange deal with international and community development. Some examples include women's shelters, orphanages, educating on small business and micro enterprises, and preventative health. I would like to recognize CWY for their contributions in organizing over 26,000 youths in 30 years on international, nonformal, educational exchanges. This year they'll be joined by my constituent Rhonda Zuk, who is looking forward to contributing to her community and having the opportunity to play a role in a country in transition.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 4 and 6.

[Motion carried]

Swan Hills Waste Treatment Facility

Q4. Ms Carlson moved that the following question be accepted. What were the estimated receipts, revenue, and net income from the operation of the Swan Hills joint venture for the fiscal years 2000, 2001, 2002, and 2003 as set out under article 9.7.1 of the July 12, 1996, agreement between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta, the Alberta Special Waste Management Corporation, Bovar Technology, Bovar Inc., Bovar (Swan Hills) Limited Partnership, 542936 Alberta Ltd., and Chem-Security (Alberta) Ltd?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Environment we are rejecting Written Question 4.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think this is information that is important to have available to people within the province. What we're getting at are some of the details in the agreements with the Swan Hills waste treatment plant, which is often in the media and of great concern to people who live in the vicinity, particularly downwind of that site. It's unfortunate that the government chose not to share the reasons for which they are rejecting this written question.

Swan Hills Joint Venture

Q6. Ms Carlson moved that the following question be accepted. What were the revenue projections payable to the government for the fiscal years 2000, 2001, 2002, and 2003 from the Swan Hills joint venture net income as set out under article 4.2 of the July 12, 1996, agreement between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta, the Alberta Special Waste Management Corporation, Bovar Technology, Bovar Inc., Bovar (Swan Hills) Limited Partnership, 542936 Alberta Ltd., and Chem-Security (Alberta) Ltd?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Environment we are accepting Written Question 6.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the minister for his co-operation.

[Written Question 6 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 11, 12, and 13.

[Motion carried]

Council of Economic Development Ministers

M11. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies and reports prepared by or for the Council of Economic Development Ministers between August 1, 1997, and March 31, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are going to reject this motion for the following reasons. Many of those studies and reports were prepared for the Council of Economic Development Ministers and were done in a form of internal draft for discussion purposes only. Furthermore, a number of these reports were submitted in confidence by third parties. The rest were already made public.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great disappointment that we're not going to get this information. Perhaps we will now have to follow a process of FOIPing the information, and that will come with many of the lines blotted out. Certainly that would be better than nothing in terms of being able to find out what happened in terms of government preparation for the Council of Economic Development Ministers between August 1 of '97 and March 31 of 2001. If the minister has any sort of a briefing that he could provide in the absence of our having to go through that long process, I would appreciate it.

Thank you.

Economic Development International Representation Priorities

M12. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the studies and reports prepared by or for the Department of Economic Development between January 1, 1998, and March 31, 2001, relating to the development of the matrix of department priorities for international representation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good news for the hon. member. There'll be no FOIPing required. I will accept Motion for a Return 12 and do it in due course.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the minister for his co-operation.

[Motion for a Return 12 carried]

MLA Education Property Tax Review Committee

M13. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. Bonner that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of studies and reports prepared between April 1, 2000, and April 9, 2001, by or for the MLA (Member of the Legislative Assembly) education property tax review committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Yes. On behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs I'd like to point out that this is a work in progress, and in due course, when it's completed, it will be made available to the public. In view of that, the government will reject Motion for a Return 13.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We appreciate that information. However, we would like some preliminary information if it's available, and perhaps the minister would be co-operative in that regard and share that information with my colleague.

Thank you.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 207

Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001

[Debate adjourned May 22: Mr. Ouellette speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Yes. Mr. Speaker, seeing that I believe this is a very important bill, I think I'll carry on where I left off yesterday. I was just explaining how red-hot the demand for trades workers was in Alberta and a few of the stats, and I'm going to repeat them.

In June the unemployment rate in the category was a mesmerizing low of 3.8 percent, far below the average unemployment rate for all occupations, which stood at 5.7 percent. For many provinces such an eye-popping, low unemployment rate would not be cause for concern, but for Alberta it is an indication that we don't have enough skilled workers to fill the growing demand. Just as this province has been working hard to fill the demand for health care workers, this province needs to work hard to recruit and retain skilled tradespeople.

Bill 207 would offer an incentive for tradespeople who are already here to stay and for those considering moving here to make that move. We as a province would offer an advantage that is currently not available in the rest of Canada. We would be adding one more item to the long list that makes up the Alberta advantage. So because general tax reduction is a positive goal and because this bill will provide a tax credit for an occupation that is especially important to Alberta, I strongly support Bill 207.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for sponsoring Bill 207. It's a bill that I believe identifies the solution to an issue, that solution being long overdue. I think everyone appreciates and we've heard prior speakers indicate the importance that the tradespeople are to the economy of the country, this province. Any efforts that can be made through this Legislature to introduce measures that will improve the fairness to these people I think is laudable. On that basis the member has gone a long way. In most every vocation that you have, there are avenues to recover some of the costs of the tools of your trade, if you will, with the exception of people in the trades themselves, individuals.

The system as it currently stands I think is unfair. It doesn't recognize the fact that people, in order to pursue a particular vocation, have to invest money out of their own pockets in varying amounts over a long period of time to ensure that they can become employed. As a matter of fact, it's their livelihood. Yet these many cases, these same tools, if you will, if they belong to a company can be declared as expense items. I don't want to go down that path very far other than to point out that it is one of what we sometimes perceive as many unfairnesses in the tax system.

There is some concern whether or not this bill can actually be implemented. I personally share that concern. However, that does not mean that a sincere effort should not be put forward to show the people both in this province, other provinces, and indeed the federal government that we in this Legislature are supportive of a process which would introduce fairness to the tradespeople. The spin-offs of this fairness have been very well articulated by previous speakers, and it will have benefits to the economy and so on. Hopefully the positive message would go all the way up to Ottawa where I do understand there have been some efforts to address this particular issue. If this bill achieves the purpose of making the federal tax people aware and in fact implementing some, if not all, of these changes into the system, then it will have been very, very successful.

Now, we can pursue that for a moment and see what happens. If nobody advocates for this particular group of people, their concerns are never articulated, they will not be addressed, and the system will go on and on. I should point out that it would be perhaps somewhat different if in fact these same tradespeople ever had the required amount of tools to do their trades, but as we all know, they wear out, so they have to replace them. We all know that depending upon what particular area they're in, there may be new requirements which again require new investments. On and on it goes.

If you look at the bigger picture and see what is in fact here, these same tools are used to generate the income on which these individuals are taxed. So in reality if you look back on it, it's one of the costs of doing business, if you will, and as such that should be recognized. I don't know if the bill goes far enough in terms of how much credit they receive for it, but I would say that this is a good start. Also, I don't see any retroactivity in the bill, but hopefully if things come to pass, there should be some recognition given there.

In closing, I might say, Mr. Speaker, that in the instance of this particular topic we have to appreciate that the tradesperson has to do an outlay of cash on which the taxes have already been paid out of his or her pocket to acquire these tools in order that they can qualify in this legislation for some sort of recognition for that. As such, I congratulate the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan once again and commend him for bringing this legislation forward. I would ask all my colleagues on both sides of this House to give this very important piece of legislation unanimous support to show that we in fact in Alberta care about the people who contribute so very, very much to the economy of this country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the chance to support Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, in the House today. I support the bill because it is consistent with the fiscal vision of this government.

Bill 207 seeks to put money back into the pockets of working Albertans. Our government has shown that it believes in the reduction of taxes as a means of encouraging economic growth and therefore a better life for all Albertans. Bill 207 can be seen as one more step in the fulfillment of this vision.

We have taken an active role in providing a tax environment that lets Albertans and business thrive. Lower taxes spur on investment and growth and promote the incentive of entrepreneurialism for small businesses. These are some of the reasons that this government has brought in the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. The tax plan implemented by our government helps make Alberta an attractive place for all citizens. However, no plan is perfect. Every once in a while some tweaking needs to be done in order to provide relief for those who need it most. Mr. Speaker, I think this is how we ought to be looking at Bill 207.

Bill 207 asks us to give tax relief to registered journeymen and apprentices working in Alberta's trades who spend more than $500 on the purchase, maintenance, insurance, and rental of tools. This bill is important because of the high investment necessary to purchase tools for most journeymen, tradesmen, and apprentices. We are all aware that the prices of these tools make it difficult for tradesmen. Passing Bill 207 would give them the opportunity to perform much-needed and appreciated jobs in Alberta and at the same time enjoy our Alberta advantage.

Tax reduction is a positive goal, but the promotion of opportunity for all Albertans is a better goal. Targeted tax reductions like Bill 207 alongside the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act help to bring about that goal. I therefore strongly support Bill 207 and would urge the members of this Assembly to do so as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you. Indeed, it's a pleasure to speak on Bill 207. As one of the three licensed tradespeople that I know of in this Assembly I can personally speak on this from experience.

We know that fishermen, tradesmen, and politicians are the salt of the earth, and I happen to be all three, sir.

We know that supporting this bill would enable an accredited member of any of the 50 apprenticeship programs that Alberta is involved in to receive a nonrefundable credit on their tool purchases. Currently people in trades across Alberta are burdened with the requirement of purchasing increasingly expensive tools in order to perform their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta prides itself on having the Alberta advantage. This advantage means that we welcome private enterprise and we endeavour to make it easy for companies to do business in Alberta. We also have a strong record of supporting employees and making Alberta an attractive place to work. We do this by having the lowest taxes in the country and by minimizing government involvement in business. Allowing Albertans to act in their best interest and not interfering with their decision-making enables them to work hard and reap the benefits and rewards of their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, the result is outstanding. Alberta continually leads the country in economic growth and new jobs that we're creating here in our own backyard each and every day. Many of these jobs are created in construction and trade-related industries. These industries are growing, and new projects are being developed all across Alberta. As a result, demand for skilled labour is increasing. Alberta needs to ensure that there are enough skilled tradespeople to meet the demands of our growing economy. In order to meet this growing demand, we need to provide incentives for people to enter these industries. This is what Bill 207 seeks to accomplish, sir.

Mr. Speaker, providing a nonrefundable tax credit for the benefit of trade journeymen and apprentices would remove . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan to close debate.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the support from the members who have spoken so eloquently about their experiences, their concerns, their desire to see this particular bill passed and given the opportunity to make a difference for the tradespersons in this province.

The bill appears to make sense to folks. It makes sense to those people who have told me over many years in many different circumstances how it isn't fair, it doesn't seem to be right that in any small business that you want to initiate, you can fully deduct all of your costs of tools or equipment, whatever it might be, yet when you're an employee, a journeyman or an apprentice, and you have to buy the same kind of equipment, tools for your trade, you can't deduct those. It does make sense, and in fact there are some other applications in legislation currently where deductions are allowed. I should mention those, and I'll get to those in a second.

The purpose of this bill, as has been well stated, is to give tradespeople a break on their income tax for expenses related to tool purchases or rental or insurance or replacement or repairs. As my colleagues have noted, there are many ways that the province of Alberta and Alberta tradespeople will benefit from the passage of this bill. It may help encourage young people into the trades, and that will help Alberta, because we know that there's a shortage of tradespersons.

Before closing debate on this bill, I would like to comment and bring to your attention that the Income Tax Act allows employees to deduct among other things the cost of supplies as long as certain employment conditions are met. Some of those conditions are listed in an income tax bulletin that I received from an accountant just a couple of days ago.

(c) these expenses may reasonably be regarded as applicable to the earning of income from the office or employment; and

(d) in the case of supplies, they are consumed directly in the performance of the taxpayer's duties of the office or employment.

Those examples of supplies are limited though. They're very restrictive.

The bulletin goes on to talk about those supplies being things like pencils and paper. One example, though, is the cost of gasoline and oil used in the operation of power saws. In fact, for lumberjacks those chainsaws are also deductible from their income tax. Other examples: cellular phone air time or long-distance telephone calls are deductible. Tools used by salespersons to get income are deductible. In the case of tradespeople it doesn't work that way. Somebody else sent me a letter which I received and read just yesterday evening. Apparently, according to this person, salaried musicians are also able to deduct the cost of their instruments. So these are cases that exist currently and certainly don't exist, though, for tradespersons. Journeymen and apprentices operating in those trades deserve a break due to the high cost of the tools just like the phone calls or the cell time is deductible.

By making these changes to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, we'll make a small impact because our tax rate is only 10 percent. On the other hand, if the federal government sees that we're in favour and are moving in that direction, we can perhaps encourage the federal minister to make similar changes, which would have even a greater impact on the trades both in Alberta and elsewhere in the country.

So I appreciate the support that has been voiced during this last hour and 20 minutes or so of debate. I would encourage you in the interest of tradespersons in Alberta to support this bill, Bill 207. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a second time]

Bill 208
Alberta Official Song Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise today to introduce the second reading of Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act.

First I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for having permitted me to introduce this bill and to thank my colleagues for having accepted the first reading of this bill and the many other Albertans who have expressed their enthusiasm for the idea of the bill. Over the last week, since Albertans first heard that we were considering adopting an official song, there has been an enormous amount of talk about the idea amongst MLAs, amongst the media, and especially amongst ordinary Albertans.

National newspapers and radio shows have done feature stories on the topic. A local radio station has started its own serious competition to find an appropriate song for Alberta. My offices in Calgary and Edmonton have been flooded with interest from Albertans living across the province. Schools and choirs have called to see if they can submit a song as a group. Chat groups have been set up on the Internet looking for possibilities. Recommendations for songs from a wide variety of musical tastes have been pouring in. From country and western to reggae, people have sent lyrics, CDs, and tapes, beaming with pride about what they have written and hoping it might be considered to become the permanent symbol of Alberta.

Clearly the response just to the idea of a song has been enormous, but it has been overwhelmingly positive. For me, Mr. Speaker, this just proves why Bill 208 ought to be passed by this Legislature. The notion of a song has sparked the interest and enthusiasm of Albertans. Their spirit has been uplifted, and that is the main objective of this bill. Unlike most other bills presented in this Legislature, this bill does not seek resources or new programs. It does not even seek to change policy or regulations. Rather, it seeks to make life even more exciting than it already is in Alberta. It seeks to free our immense community spirit, and if the response we have seen so far is any indication, this bill will do just that.

3:30

Before I go into detail about the strengths of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to explain exactly how the bill is intended to work. This bill would establish a nonpartisan committee of the Legislature to solicit the submissions of songs that could be adopted as an Alberta official song. The bill is specific in citing that membership of this committee should come from all political parties. This detail is included to reaffirm the objective of this bill: an effort to unite Alberta, an effort to find commonalities that link all Albertans no matter what their background. Also on this committee will be members of the Alberta music community, hopefully including a wide variety of academic music experts, music industry specialists, and experienced musicians. These members will compose the majority of the committee and will back up MLAs in whatever musical expertise they may lack.

This Alberta official song committee will seek submissions for songs and lyrics in any way it chooses. There may be performances; there may be subcommittees traveling across the province. The only certain rule is that submissions must be open to all Albertans, giving everyone a chance to let their Alberta pride shine. When the committee has ultimately agreed on one selection, this song will be brought forward to the Legislature to be adopted as Alberta's official song.

I think it is important to note that the Alberta official song committee will not necessarily seek a new song. Already several well-known tunes exist relating to Alberta, such as Four Strong Winds. Many less well-known ones, that have already been written, may surface in the selection process. The point of the committee will not necessarily be to seek an oration but to seek a work that could appropriately be deemed Alberta's official song.

So, Mr. Speaker, that is how the bill works: plain and simple, no frills, no whistles, just a clear, open process to selecting an official song for our province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to elaborate on why Alberta needs an official song and, perhaps more importantly, why our centennial is a perfect opportunity to adopt an official song. As most members are aware, I'm sure, Alberta has already selected several official emblems. Probably most familiar to us are our official flag, our coat of arms, and our official flower, of course, the wild rose. The official mammal is the Rocky Mountain bighorn sheep, and we also have the official tree, stone, and fish. So why not add a song to this list of emblems? Why not complement our set of visual symbols with something that people can listen to? It's like adding the sound to the video.

A song can help unite people. When people hear national anthems, they are reminded of the ties which bind them together. They are compelled to achieve for themselves and for others. They are flooded with pride and enthusiasm for their province or their country. People are inspired. A song can also help define who we are. It can point out the different attributes that make Alberta a unique and enjoyable place to live, including all our historical, natural, and cultural heritage. A song can point out the colourful history of our province and its memorable people. It can point out the beautiful scenery and geography that are found only in Alberta. It can point out the diversity in people, work, and interests that make up this province. A song can help search to know what it is to be an Albertan, to define, to unite, and to inspire Albertans. These are some excellent reasons why finding an official Alberta song is a worthy and admirable endeavour of this Legislature.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain why 2005, Alberta's centennial year, is a perfect opportunity to enact Alberta's official song. Alberta is approaching the end of a century of extraordinary growth and development. Albertans have worked hard over the century to build a strong, dynamic province and build a strong and dynamic country. This is something to be proud of, something truly worth celebrating. Over the next four years the government will be encouraging and supporting Albertans as they plan and develop projects and events to celebrate the centennial. The centennial legacies program will provide funding for communities to build and renovate public-use facilities for future generations to enjoy. The centennial celebration programs will provide support for special rodeos, parades, and cultural events organized by local leaders to celebrate the centennial.

In addition to these legacies and celebration projects, the province will be involved in putting on a number of provincewide events and mementos. This might include the production and sale of coins, plaques, special editions of newspapers. So you see, Mr. Speaker, in the year 2005 the Alberta government will be directly involved in a number of projects designed to celebrate our centennial in particular but, more importantly, also to leave a legacy for the future generations of Alberta. What could be more fitting than selecting an official song during this year for future generations to enjoy?

Choosing the song for 2005 will also serve to confirm the celebratory nature of the song. Certainly the song would be intended to be part of making Albertans proud of their accomplishments, but this Alberta pride would be in the context of greater Canadian pride, which Albertans also hold dear to their hearts. Suggestions that choosing a song of our own might be a sign of western alienation or protest would be entirely misleading if not nonsense. This I'm sure members of the Assembly are well aware of, but in selecting a song in our centennial, this nonthreatening, celebratory nature of the song is highly emphasized, limiting room for misinterpretation. If we are going to choose an official Alberta song, 2005 is the year to do it.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 is very straightforward in its design and intent. It will establish a committee of MLAs and respected members of the musical community to solicit and choose an appropriate official song for Alberta. An official song offers many benefits for our province. It complements a long list of other visual emblems we have, from the tartan to the flag. It offers an opportunity for Alberta to better define itself, to articulate its culture, historical heritage. It offers an opportunity to unite and to inspire Albertans. As Alberta celebrates its centennial in 2005, it will be seeking events and mementos that will be exciting and fun but will serve a long-lasting function; 2005 is the perfect occasion to select a song, to find the words and the melody to articulate Alberta's proud history and promising future.

Wouldn't it be memorable for members of our 25th Legislature to be known as the ones who established Alberta's official song? Wouldn't it be memorable for Albertans in our centennial celebration to be known as the ones who started the Alberta official song? It is time for Albertans to sing Alberta. Now, Mr. Speaker, is the time to prepare for a song.

I also would like to say that many, many lyrics have been sent to me, so I want to share with you just a few here. For example:

Alberta is where I want to be.
It's a great place to raise a family.
The pioneering spirit is still alive.
With each other's help we can all thrive.

Another example is:

Strong as the mountains.
Free as the blue sky.
Taller than wheatfields in the sun.
Growing faster the wild roses one by one.
Alberta.

This is from an 84-year-old gentleman in Edmonton. He plays music and sings too. Here are his lyrics:

Where the hills in spring are fresh and green, and the rushing waters flow.
Where the fields of waving grain give way to the lonesome cattle call.
See the foothills yield their colored hues.
Oh, Alberta, my homeland,
That's where I want to be,
For Alberta will always be my sweet home to me.

Also, you can have a feeling from a person, in fact a song already composed by Ben and Beth Devan. It's titled Alberta, We Love You, and the lyrics go:

The mountains shout it to the sky.
The woodlands whisper in reply.

The rivers murmur it as they flow by.
The breezes hum the lovely strain.
It echoes in the fields of grain.

So, Mr. Speaker, from this inspiration that I've received so far, not to mention I have CDs, tapes, and many others, I believe that this is the right moment for an official song. That's the reason why I introduced Bill 208, and I hope that all of you will join me in supporting this bill and provide a celebratory song for Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was a very inspirational and certainly heartfelt introduction to a bill, and I thank the proposing member for it. I'm sure that we have staff joining us in the galleries who have assisted the member in creating the bill, and I'd like to express my appreciation to them for their work on it – I'm sure they're very proud of this bill – and bringing it forward.

I don't know how people are going to vote on this, but I think, coming from the arts, I have a strong reaction to this suggestion. I appreciate that the member is wishing to draw on our strong arts community and on Albertans that have latent artistic talent that they want to make use of to give a gift of music to the rest of Alberta. I'm glad that that professionalism and that talent of Albertans is being recognized. I've stood in this House many times expressing my frustration at the lack of acknowledgment and value and, frankly, budgeting in support of the arts in this province. Over the years since the 75th anniversary we've seen almost a through line downwards of support from the government for the arts in this province, so I appreciate what the member is proposing here.

I had just a couple of questions about the setup of the bill. The member is proposing that it be essentially an all-party committee or at least not only government members and is allowing for two MLAs who are not members of the governing party to be on the committee. A little later on it says that if there are not enough of the members that are not from the governing party that are interested in being on the committee, then they can appoint members from the government backbench, but I notice that the reverse of that is not in here, that if there weren't enough people, backbenchers of the governing party that were interested in being on the committee, the rest of the seats would be filled by members of the opposition.

That's a curiosity to me, and perhaps the member can address that in his closing remarks or in Committee of the Whole. It just strikes me as odd that when the oppositions have been so vocal and forthright in their support for all good things Albertan and particularly for the arts, there'd be some sort of assumption built into this that there wouldn't be members of the opposition interested or willing to sit on the committee and that the member had to go far enough to provide for a replacement of them. So I'm just wondering why he did that, and maybe he can explain it so we can get him on record with that.

I found it very interesting when I first read the bill that the only people that are specifically listed as being on this committee are MLAs, and then it says Albertans. It doesn't give any indication, it doesn't list any organizations from which members of the committee would be drawn. It just says Albertans.

In the member's opening remarks he spoke about having most of the committee be representatives from different sectors of the arts community or from the music sector. Again, I'm curious why that wasn't actually put in the bill. Heaven forbid anything went wrong and someone or many of us are left to look at this bill years down the road and try and understand how to do this. There's nothing in the bill that allows for or asks for musicians or representatives of people in the music industry to be on the committee, but it was in the member's remarks.

I think this is important for a number of reasons. I've sat on a lot of juries over my days, and you really need to have expertise from the community at the table. Just by way of a small example, if this committee had existed in the '70s, for instance, and had decided to go with the newest pop tune on the radio or something that was written following those lines, we could end up with a disco tune, which obviously by the time we got to 30 years later would not be something that we'd be really thrilled about. So it's important that we have the expertise. [interjection] Oh, I'm sorry. I shouldn't speak for others. Disco's coming back. Oh, please.

It's important that we have expertise on the committee that can advise as to whether the music has a quality to it that is going to surpass the current day and the current fashion and in fact whether it's a well-crafted piece of music and lyrics. I know that there are a number of organizations that are available here in Edmonton and across Alberta, and I'm hoping that the member will commit to contacting those organizations and soliciting membership on the committee from them.

For example, there's ARIA, the Alberta Recording Industries Association. Now certainly they have a lot of musicians pass through their doors, a lot of recording artists. They certainly develop an expertise as a result of that. We have the musicians' union here in Alberta. We have a number of people who've developed a very wide-ranging expertise in music as a result of the festivals that we have developed here in Alberta and which are now very long running, some of them celebrating their 20th anniversary, some their 25th anniversary.

We have people like Holger Peterson, who was one of the originators of the Edmonton Folk Festival, now with Stony Plain Recording and with a very popular CBC program. We have people like Terry Wickham, who's now programming for both the Edmonton and the Calgary folk festivals, or Maureen Chambers, who is programming for the South Country Fair and has a very progressive and a very fine ear. So that would give you some representation from different parts of the province. There are people around like Dick Finkel, one of the people that worked with the first big folk festival in Canada, the Winnipeg Folk Festival, and then came to Edmonton and ran the Street Performers Festival for 10 or a dozen years.

We certainly have a very exciting and successful opera here in Edmonton and expertise in that company that could be drawn upon. The Calgary Philharmonic is another place to go looking if we're just looking at the music itself. There is actually a small festival here in Edmonton run by Ken Brown out of Grant MacEwan Community College called the singer/songwriter festival. That is coming up shortly I think. Perhaps I can get the information on when that would be and forward the information to the Member for Calgary-Fort and he could try to attend, because that whole festival is about emerging singer/songwriters, and they're all Albertan.

So there are lots of possibilities there. I think it's important to have expertise from the community not only to acknowledge the depth that the music industry has developed but also to pull on that expertise as to what is a well-crafted piece of music or song and, further to that, to be giving advice on something that is not in this act and that has caused me concern.

There are provisions in the act for payment of remuneration and reimbursement of expenses to members of the committee, although there's something a little odd about that because then it goes on and it's talking about "other than those who are employees of the Government members or employees of an agency of the Government." I'm looking for clarification on that because it sounds like anybody would be remunerated on this committee unless they were employees of government members, which would make them constituency staff or something or "employees of an agency of the Government," which then again gets quite specific. But that's the way it's written here. So if there can be clarification of that.

My point in this is that there is a stipulation in the act for payment of the committee members. Nowhere in here do I see a recognition of payment for the work of the artist that develops the song. Thanks to the federal government and many people who worked for a very long time, we now have a copyright infringement law in Canada which recognizes production of artistic material like songs, designs for theatre, and a number of other artistic creations as intellectual property that therefore belongs to the artist and can't be modified or used out of context without the permission of the artist, but contained in that is payment to the artist. I don't see that anywhere in this act.

Now, if the intention is that the committee itself would be establishing a royalty rate, for example, you know, so much every time this song is used, or whether they would be negotiating with the artist for a split fee up front plus a royalty or some sort of fee up front, I'd like the member to be articulating that into the record so that it's very clear. In this province we spent a lot of time and attention developing a truly extraordinary artistic community. Then we've spent almost an equally long period of time totally ignoring it and leaving the funding at stagnation. I have to say, "Where do you think these brilliant lyricists and musicians come from?" Well, we nurture them. They have to get jobs here. They have to be able to pay their rent and buy food and gas for a car or a bus pass, things like that.

There's a sort of assumption that I see coming from this government that disturbs me a great deal. I see photos in tourism brochures and in promotional material for the government that, you know, has the picture of the Edmonton Folk Festival on the hill and thousands of people in the band shell at the bottom, and I think, well . . . [interjection] Absolutely, it's super. But then those groups go to Tourism, wherever it is now, whatever's left of it, and say, "Look; could we get some help with marketing money on this?" "No. Sorry. No, no, we don't do that. Oh, no, not for festivals, not for this, not for that."

Every time the artistic community is looking for that kind of operational funding which gives it the security to develop new artists and new work, they're told no. When they look for other ways to promote their work, like through Tourism or Economic Development, they're told no. Yet the government is more than happy to take their picture and put it on brochures, and I don't think they're paying back into that organization for the use of that picture either.

MS HALEY: Is this relevant at all to the song, the bill we're on?

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes, it's very relevant because it's about the artists . . .

MR. BONNER: Carol, you can get up and speak.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, yes. Maybe the whip from the other side will be speaking. I'm sure she will.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'd encourage you to speak through the chair and refer to the bill, please.

MS BLAKEMAN: I am happy to, Mr. Speaker.

What's important about this is that if we're looking for the work from Albertans, we have to understand – and I'd like it on the record – that there is a recognition and a willingness to pay for the work that's done. That's also a recognition that the larger community that develops the artist and develops the work needs to be supported or we don't have those artist here, and I've already seen a number of them leave this province. This is such a wonderful opportunity for everyone, and I want it to be something that we're really proud of and with all the wonderful possibilities that we can get and work into it.

Now, the member also spoke about funding for legacy projects as part of this, and perhaps he foresees a royalty payment for this song coming from the legacy money. He wasn't specific about that. That is part of my question: do we then anticipate seeing in the budget a year that would encompass the time span being put forward in the bill, which is 18 months from when it's passing? I'm assuming we're talking the 2002-2003 fiscal year. Where do we expect to see money set aside with which the committee, I'm presuming, can negotiate a fee? Does he have any assurances from the Minister of Community Development, for example, that in fact that money would be there? Is there a hope that it will all come together, or has work been done in anticipation of that? I'd be interested in knowing.

There's also some mention of the staff from Community Development being involved, I think as a support to the committee. I'm wondering if the member can expand a bit on what's being anticipated there. The arts development sector is fairly small in the whole department of Community Development now, and I know that their staff are working flat out to accomplish the duties that are on their plates at the time, so I'm wondering where the support would be coming from. Is it from a different sector, then, or will there be additional money going in to pay for that? Is there already a line item in the Community Development budget that I didn't see or that wasn't pointed out in the budget debates that we've just done that is allowing for support for meetings and things like that, for sandwiches, I suppose, or whatever else? Where is the budget for this committee? If it's to go on for the next 18 months, where's the money? Part of it's got to be in the budget that we're currently debating. Where is it? If that could be explained for me.

So those are the few points that I wanted to raise. As I said when I started, I can see what an inspirational project this has been for the member who proposed it, and I'm glad to see that he is so excited about the possibilities. I think there are wonderful possibilities here. As an Albertan I would certainly like to see a wonderful song that we can all be proud of, whether that's a new song that's created or whether it's acceptance of a song that already exists. I think it's a great birthday possibility. Everyone knows that at birthdays Happy Birthday is usually the song of choice to celebrate it, so in a way this is putting into legislation the opportunity for Alberta to choose its own happy birthday song, which is perfectly appropriate.

I do support the bill. I support the member and the staff that worked with him to create this, but I feel obliged to make sure that the artists are represented in this, that I'm reassured that I can go out into the community and tell people to get involved with this, that they will be dealt with fairly and honourably, and that there's no expectation that somehow an artist would be expected to do it for free. [interjections] Oh, everybody is so excited about these possibilities. They're all singing. Isn't that wonderful?

To know that they will be treated properly – I mean, you hear a lot about: oh, will you do something for recognition? But, you know, artists can't eat recognition. It doesn't pay the bills. They need to be paid for what their efforts are bringing them, even if it's not someone that would consider themselves a professional. Perhaps it's an Albertan out there that just has a hidden talent that's going to contribute to this for fun. They still need to be recognized for the work that's done, and I want to have those reassurances on the record.

So thanks very much for this opportunity to participate in this fun bill. I appreciate it, and I look forward to hearing the responses from the Member for Calgary-Fort.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to rise today to speak in support of Bill 208. I congratulate my colleague on this exciting and, indeed, inspirational idea. If I could, I would sing these words for you. However, that is not advisable.

Despite what this government has been saying for the last several years, the province of Alberta has been running a deficit, a cultural deficit. It is a deficit that we have ignored and put off because we as an Assembly did not believe it was a priority to act upon, but it is a deficit that could haunt us in the future if we do not act on it now, leaving us with the questions: who are we, and what makes us special? Specifically, I am referring to Alberta's lack of an official song. This province needs an official song, and as Alberta experiences abundant prosperity entering into its second century, now is the time to find that song and sing it.

The 19th century German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche once said that without music, life would be an error. One does not have to be a philosopher to know what he meant. The power of music is enormous. When we hear music, it resonates inside of us. I don't think any of us could explain quite how, but it evokes emotion. My granddaughter Taiya Anne at the age of seven months cannot walk, cannot talk, but when she hears music, her legs swing and her head shakes and her arms move and she giggles with delight, and that is the power of music. Even the youngest citizens of Alberta can't help but be affected by the sweet strains of music.

When a group of friends sing a song together, it's a symbol and a confirmation by action that these friends have something in common, that they are truly bound by something greater than themselves. A song is a rallying point for the people of a state, a province, a sports club, or a school. Songs stir the dormant passion inside all of us, lighting up our sense of pride. I can still remember the great high school song we used to sing at all our assemblies, and we would always sing it louder than the next person.

Mr. Speaker, music has been adopted by countries and states for thousands of years to stir allegiance, to depict a greater sense of purpose, and to unite people into common cause. Picture the images evoked by Australia's anthem, Advance Australia Fair.

Our land abounds in nature's gifts
Of beauty rich and rare;
In history's page, let every stage
Advance Australia fair.

Listen to the call for peace and prosperity in the newly adopted anthem of South Africa.

Sounds the call to come together, and united we shall stand,
Let us live and strive for freedom in South Africa, our land.

There is no reason that this emotion, this appeal to the greater good of humans, this collective call to duty should not be offered to Albertans as well.

I'd like to address, though, two objections to this bill that I have heard in passing, which I believe are entirely groundless and misguided against what is really a good-natured and beneficial idea.

First, selecting an official song for Alberta will not inflame western separatist sentiment nor disturb other provinces in this country. Ontario sings:

Give us a place to stand
And a place to grow,
And call this land Ontario.

Alberta will not be the only province with a song, if we adopt one in 2005. Newfoundland has had an official tune since 1979. As well, more than 40 states in the United States proudly boast of having an official song; some even have two or three. Somehow these provinces and states have managed to exist with no apparent desires to separate from their respective nations anytime soon. Rather, the songs have become part of these jurisdictions' identities and cultures. People from other states have come to recognize some of these tunes and know to associate it with the respective state. Rodgers and Hammerstein's Oklahoma, for instance, a tune I am sure many here are familiar with, is now the state song of Oklahoma. Home on the Range, no surprise, is the state song of Kansas. The purpose and effect of adopting state and provincial songs is entirely good natured. If history serves as any guide, there is no reason to believe a song will ignite separatist passion.

In my opinion, in fact, I would like to see all provinces eventually adopt a provincial anthem. Perhaps Canada as a country is simply too young to have felt that its provinces deserve songs, or perhaps Canadian provinces traditionally have been more shy than our friends to the south to sing out loud about how good it is to be here. In either case, these are not excuses why all Canadian provinces and Alberta in particular cannot adopt songs now. At 100 years of age Alberta is definitely mature enough to have had many important achievements, people, passions, and dreams to sing about. Well, yes, boasting is a bad thing to do, just like our mothers always said, but this form of boasting is all in good fun. Hopefully, in adopting a song, Alberta will be setting a trend, like we usually do, for other provinces to follow.

The second objection I wish to refer to regarding Bill 208 is the idea that Albertans might not know when and where to sing our newly created Alberta song. I think the bill is appropriately designed to give guidance on this topic that is not too broad nor too specific. Currently there is very little formal protocol as to when the Canadian national anthem must be sung, except that it must be used in honouring the Lieutenant Governor. Yet Canadians and Albertans have worked out for themselves when it is appropriate to sing O Canada: at this Legislature, at hockey games, at school assemblies, at meetings of Boy Scouts and Girl Guides. These are the times that logically call for an official song, at times of formal and informal ceremony, at times when we seek to celebrate our commonality. These are the times we sing our national anthem, and these may be the times we would sing Alberta's official song in the future. This is not to say that the official song will be necessarily sung on these occasions, but the precedent is set. If organizers and participants feel that including Alberta's official song is appropriate, then so be it.

Recently I attended a dinner sponsored by the Red Deer Public School District Foundation called Striving for Excellence. Some of our great students in Red Deer were awarded for demonstrating excellence in academics and community work. At this dinner we were treated to the beautiful songs of our children singing in a choir. One day that choir will be able to sing the official song of Alberta, helping everyone in that room to feel proud and happy about this province.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has come of age. One of the most appropriate ways we could commemorate this growth is through the adoption of an official song. The objections to a song are not strong. It will not be mistaken for a plea of western alienation, and the times when the song will be sung are appropriately defined. The benefits of adopting a song, on the other hand, are enormous. An official song will remind Albertans and others of our exciting and intrepid past. It will evoke an image of our tenacious character. It will ask us to rise to the collective challenge of fulfilling the potential that has been laid for us by destiny.

Mr. Speaker, Members of the Legislative Assembly, now is the time for an official Alberta song. I support this bill, and I encourage you all to support it with me.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before I recognize the next speaker, could we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce a couple of fellows that worked very hard on my campaign, Jeff and Ryan Hollands. I'd like them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House. They are moving to B.C. and very sad to leave Alberta.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to introduce guests.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to the Assembly it is definitely my honour to introduce three guests that I have in the members' gallery. I'd like to introduce Mr. and Mrs. Victor Chrapko from the Two Hills area. Mr. Chrapko has been a previous reeve and councillor and school board chairman from the county of Two Hills. Along with him we have Mr. Marcel Podlosky, who is with STARS ambulance.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am anxious to participate in the debate this afternoon on the bill to declare an official Alberta anthem. I'm going to be brief.

The notion – and in this Assembly it's a novel notion, I must admit – that we would be willing to strike all-party committees certainly is a notion with merit. But last week I thought we could strike an all-party committee to examine retail gasoline prices, and that was ruled out. In the past we've had urging to have all-party committees on the WCB, but that did not happen. Yet we can have official opposition members on a committee to select an Alberta song for the centennial year. That is a novel notion coming from the Assembly, but it's a notion that I would like to encourage all hon. members to consider in the future, that all-party committees be struck regularly.

However, in regards to this I can't see any need for an official song for this province. Now, I think of 1988. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North spoke earlier about coming of age. If there was one event that you could say was the coming of age for the city of Calgary, it certainly wasn't the discovery of oil and gas in Turner Valley. It was important, but the 1988 Winter Olympics – I think it was probably the finest Winter Olympics that was organized, and the city of Calgary did a very good job.

MR. SMITH: Who was the mayor then?

MR. MacDONALD: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Yes, that's a very good observation the minister has made, because the mayor of Calgary, the current Premier, took the flag in the closing ceremonies and handed it off to the next city that was to host the games. For that ceremony McMahon Stadium was full. There were perfect weather conditions. There was a breeze blowing, and Ian Tyson was singing Alberta Bound in the closing ceremonies. On worldwide television the Premier at the time, Mr. Getty, and Mrs. Getty, when Mr. Tyson went to the podium to sing Alberta Bound – and no disrespect to the former Premier and Mrs. Getty – had their hands in the air like teenagers. That is my view of the closing ceremonies of the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary.

I'm sorry to disappoint you, but we already have an official song, and it was the one that Mr. Tyson sang that evening, Alberta Bound. To see the Premier and the official party get so excited and to see the citizens at McMahon get so excited whenever Mr. Tyson sang that song convinces me that there is no need for this bill because we already have an official song. In Mr. Tyson's ballads about this province he sings about springtime in the Rockies. He sings about coyotes. He sings about cutting horses. He sings about Navajo rugs, cowgirls, pickups running like hounds over the Monida Pass. He talks about cowboys going to some of the ranching states to earn a living whenever the weather is really cold in Alberta.

So I'm not going to go any further in my remarks regarding this bill, but I would just like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly of the 1988 closing ceremonies at the Calgary Winter Olympics and the fine job that was done by Mr. Tyson and the reaction of the crowd as I observed from my living room. I'm afraid we already have an unofficial official song, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe we're still Alberta bound, and it's good to be Alberta bound.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to stand today and speak to Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act, proposed by my distinguished colleague from Calgary-Fort. The province of Alberta will mark its centennial anniversary on September 1, 2005. For this historic occasion the government of Alberta is committed to supporting Albertans as they plan events and programs to celebrate the centennial. Alberta's 100th anniversary provides us with the setting and the opportunity to look back on the history of this wonderful province and the progress that we've made. Our accomplishments are numerous, and our reasons to celebrate are many.

Mr. Speaker, we've transformed this province from the barren wilderness that greeted the first settlers over a hundred years ago to the modern society that we live in today. As our province has grown and evolved, we have succeeded in building and developing institutions to care for our sick, to educate our children, to protect our wilderness, and to govern our land. These accomplishments are results of the decades of hard work and dedication to the virtues of this province.

In addition to looking back, the centennial affords us the opportunity to reflect on where the province is today and where it's going. Mr. Speaker, who would have imagined in 1905 that Alberta would look as it does today? However, I imagine the Albertans of 1905 were as fiercely proud of their new province as we are today, a hundred years later, of our Alberta home. Where will the province of Alberta be a hundred years from now? Well, I'm not sure that I'll be around to see that day, but I hope the people of that time will be able to understand and share the pride and respect that we hold for this province.

Mr. Speaker, it is in this light that my colleague from Calgary-Fort is proposing the Alberta Official Song Act. The creation of the official song will provide a tangible representation of our current culture for future generations to enjoy. A song can capture the unique cultural and social aspects of a society in a way that no other medium can. I think my colleague earlier talked about that. A song is a work of art capable of capturing the feeling and the love that we as Albertans feel for our province. Commissioning a song for Alberta on our centennial anniversary would provide a lasting impression of the people and the culture that currently make up our province. We should seize this opportunity and create a legacy that future generations will recognize and be proud of.

Last weekend many citizens of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne spoke to me about this proposal, and I've received broad, broad support. I'm proud to be an Albertan, and I support the use of an official song as a means of honouring the heritage and the culture of our province. It is for these reasons that I support Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act, and I encourage my colleagues in this Assembly to do the same.

Alberta bound, Alberta bound,
It's good to be Alberta bound.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to have been invited by my colleague from Calgary-Fort to speak on his Bill 208, which is the Alberta song act. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, despite what you heard earlier from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, there is not an official song in the province of Alberta, which is why my colleague has brought this bill before us today.

I think it's very fitting that my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fort brings forward this creative piece of legislation. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, he works tirelessly in Calgary. He's often seen supporting many different events, celebrations, and social gatherings with that wonderful smile of his, and I believe the inspiration for this bill may have originated from all those gatherings that he's been at as an MLA over the years.

Mr. Speaker, I found this bill actually to be quite invigorating. It asks that we try something new by establishing a committee that would encourage submissions of original songs, one of which would be adopted as Alberta's official song. The plan, in my understanding from listening to my hon. colleague earlier, is that this song be unveiled during the centennial anniversary celebrations in September of 2005. I think that sounds like a lot of fun because there's absolutely no limit to what Albertans can submit. They can be creative. They can be imaginative. They can be visionary. In fact, it is so invigorating that we heard some songs back here as other speakers in the Legislature were speaking today. Great singers, my colleagues, I must say.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to celebrate centennials by leaving lasting legacies, and for me that brings to mind when the city of Calgary celebrated their centennial in 1984. The city council of the day initiated a competition for designing a Calgary flag to commemorate the event. My friend and I, along with hundreds of other Calgarians, decided to enter, and we had the good fortune of winning. This meant that red and white, the colours of our flag, became Calgary's official colours, and Premier Klein, who was the mayor of Calgary at the time, presented us with a $1,000 prize. I was very proud when our flag was raised at city hall by the mayor and members of city council that New Year's morning of 1984.

So, Mr. Speaker, you can see why I am supporting my colleague's community-minded bill. This experience showed me the significance of celebrating historic events such as Alberta's centennial. These important anniversaries allow us the opportunity to create legacies for years to come.

What might we expect an Alberta official song to sound like? Well, that would be wholly up to the inspiration of the songwriter, and that's the beauty of the creation of Bill 208. My hon. colleague actually read some lyrics to the Assembly earlier, Mr. Speaker, and they were quite wonderful. I think we're going to have hundreds, perhaps thousands of submissions much like that.

The artist may be moved by images of our spectacular Rocky Mountain views, flowing prairie wheat fields, pristine northern forests, and expansive southern ranchlands. The natural beauty, I think, of our province provides many powerful images, and these images embody the themes to which the song may speak.

Mr. Speaker, if it is acknowledged that an official song should refer to our physical environment, then perhaps it could also represent our collective cultural identity. An official song containing references to our cultural heritage and picturesque landscape would certainly bring feelings of pride and togetherness within our Alberta community.

Just this past week my colleague from Calgary-Montrose and I had the opportunity to be at the official opening of Monterey Park elementary school. The theme of the program was Celebrating the Colours of Our Earth. Over 100 ECS and elementary students, Mr. Speaker, celebrated this theme with awesome songs and dance. As you can imagine, their music was truly outstanding and exhilarating. It united all of us with smiles and simply left us feeling good about being a part of this beautiful celebration. When my hon. colleague from Calgary-Montrose and I presented the principal, Mrs. Kerwood, with an official school plaque and an Alberta flag, I thought: wouldn't it be wonderful if the children of our community had an official song to sing as well? Those thoughts came, of course, because we have this motion, this bill, before us today in the Assembly.

I really feel it's important, when we invite the public to make submissions to the song committee, that a special invitation is sent to all our schools inviting our students to participate in this historic competition. I see my colleague from Calgary-Fort is nodding his head, Mr. Speaker, indicating that that must be very much an intent along with this bill.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Official Song Act, proposed by my colleague from Calgary-Fort, could very well produce a song of lasting appeal. I believe we should take this unique opportunity to choose a song that would then be played as a tribute to Alberta at official gatherings, events, and celebrations. I think in time it would become as much a part of our province's tradition and heritage as our provincial flag. Bill 208 is a chance to celebrate the distinct aspects of Alberta and to provide a unique and lasting gift to Albertans. It offers us a special opportunity to celebrate the pride that we have in Alberta's hundred-year history.

I'd like to congratulate my esteemed colleague from Calgary-Fort for bringing this matter before the Assembly. I personally feel that the 2005 centennial celebrations will be a magical time for our province, and I think we should all recognize our centennial anniversary with the unveiling of an official Alberta song.

So, hon. colleague, I wish you well with this bill. I offer my support for Bill 208, and I urge all members of this Assembly to do the same.

Thank you.

4:30

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act. I would like to certainly commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort for bringing this proposal before this Assembly.

Bill 208 proposes the blueprint for the selection of an official song for Alberta which would add to the provincial emblems that Albertans are so proud of. An official song would be an excellent addition to the centennial celebrations Alberta will enjoy in the year 2005, and the benefits of the song will last much longer than 2005, because it will serve as a symbol of our province for future generations.

In the short term an official song will provide music that Albertans can celebrate to in 2005. The official song will add a sense of grandeur to the centennial proceedings while tying together celebrating Albertans across the province. The song will continue to provide a source of unity for Albertans long after the celebration is over. It will be used at official functions, future celebrations, and wherever it is deemed appropriate to play the official song of Alberta.

The first centennial is something that Albertans will only experience once. This is why we as a government should recognize the special date in our province's history with the same Albertan initiatives, skill, and vigour that have made Alberta what it has become in the first 100 years. In this respect, the centennial serves as a perfect launchpad for the official song. The official Alberta song can serve as a commemorative tool for the 2005 celebration, as that time will provide an excellent opportunity to use the song and for Albertans to become familiar with it. As an official song as opposed to a commemorative song, the life span of this piece of music will carry on long past the centennial celebration.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta currently has several provincial symbols and emblems which serve to represent such things as Alberta's heritage, natural beauty, and even our prosperity. These symbols may not play a vital role in the way that Albertans regard their province in an everyday light; however, they do provide an interpretive guide to the citizens of this province. The emblems hold different levels of importance and meaning for each Albertan, but I think it can be agreed that music is something that we all enjoy. In effect, the official song can help to bind Albertans around a symbol that can be loved as much as our flag.

With so many emblems and symbols currently representing Alberta, you may ask: why do we need an official song to serve the same purpose? An official song will have a distinct use over and above many of our other emblems, such as the enhancement of an event, as its presentation will denote a certain level of importance to the proceedings at hand. Meaningful pieces of music instill pride in us all, going back to when we were very young. I'm sure many of us can remember times with our parents at hockey games or at school with our classmates singing O Canada. The song serves as an audible symbol of something that we as Canadians cherish. We all well up with pride when we see the Canadian flag being raised over the podium at the Olympic Games and hear O Canada, which only serves to reinforce the beauty of the moment. An official song for Alberta could provide the same source of pride for Albertans.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that not only would this bill endow Alberta with an audible symbol, which we currently lack, but it will be the beginning of a new tradition that all Albertans will be proud of. Imagine if Alberta's official song can gain the notoriety inside Alberta that O Canada has achieved nationwide. That would be truly something special.

I urge all members to vote for this private member's bill. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and make a few brief comments in support of Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort for bringing this matter in front of the Assembly.

Bill 208 proposes to promote the development and selection of an official song for the province of Alberta. In doing so, it would provide Alberta with a symbol unlike any other.

Bill 208 calls for the creation of an Alberta official song committee. This committee would transcend party lines as well as reserve spots for citizens of Alberta outside the government. Under the bill the official song committee is charged with soliciting and reviewing submissions and then recommending a final choice for the Assembly to adopt.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Bill 208 proposes the addition of a musical emblem to the several distinguished and unique emblems that Albertans are proud to have represent their province already. A song will allow the author to convey the splendor of this province in distinct terms that all Albertans can relate to and be proud of. To achieve that, Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt in my mind that the song would be of a country/western theme, but perhaps that's just my personal preference.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in his comments spoke of his favourite being Alberta Bound, sung by Ian Tyson*, and I can certainly relate to that, being a longtime fan of Mr. Tyson and probably having the biggest collection of his music of anyone I know. Certainly Alberta Bound would be amongst those top choices, but I would like to remind the hon. member that we're not debating which song the official song would be here today. We're simply debating whether or not we're going to have the process of choosing a song and adopt it as the official song by that all-party committee. I'd certainly invite him to be part of that process if he would take that opportunity. Perhaps Alberta Bound would be that committee's choice.

As we're all aware, Alberta's 100th birthday is fast approaching, and excitement is already building about this once-in-a-lifetime celebration. To commemorate Alberta's centennial, this government has proposed to begin work on several initiatives under the centennial legacies grant program to restore several of Alberta's special historical sites. Another proposal includes the development and production of different pieces of collectable memorabilia honouring this event. I certainly anticipate that my constituents are also planning events to celebrate this momentous birthday party. From parades to rodeos and fireworks we'll celebrate in style.

What better way to add to the occasion of Albertans celebrating the 100th anniversary of the inauguration day of this province than with a song? The official song can reduce the barriers of time and space across Alberta and provide unity and coherence to the celebration across the province during our centennial. The official song's purpose can be extended well beyond the centennial celebrations that Alberta will soon be enjoying.

There's nothing new in adopting an official provincial song. It can be likened to a state song, which 44 states already have. They selected and adopted music and lyrics to embody their feelings and pride regarding their home states. It's time for Alberta to do the same.

An official song can be played on several different occasions such as official provincial ceremonies, sporting events, other competitions, and even family barbecues or perhaps while riding on the trail out in the beautiful Rocky Mountains. The song can be something that will help to unify Albertans of all cultures and heritages. It will serve as a symbol with different qualities than any of our current emblems. It would help to foster a sense of community across this province.

It's time to give the people of this province an opportunity to craft something that will exemplify and highlight the qualities of Alberta. A province with as many talented individuals as we have and can boast of surely can create a song that will inspire and instill pride in us all. This song will leave a mark for this period, this generation on Alberta forever. This is a special honour and indeed a special opportunity for today's Albertans to leave a lasting impression on Alberta.

I urge all my colleagues to support Bill 208. No one in Alberta is more proud of our heritage than the men and women in this room. An official Alberta song is an excellent demonstration of our pride and appreciation for this province that we all call home.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 208. I must say that this bill, the Alberta Official Song Act, is very appropriate as we are approaching our 100 years as a province. I really feel that writing about our proud history and then expressing it through an appropriate song would bring the voices of every Albertan together and add to the joy and pride that we already feel but I know we will feel more so during that year.

There will be many, many functions we'll attend; people will have public functions. There's just a multitude of settings. I know that personally I have been at swim meets where they have the march of athletes that come in, and especially if it's Alberta athletes, why wouldn't they come in with the Alberta flag, singing the Alberta song? There's just no limit to when this Alberta song might be utilized.

I just wanted to make a comment, although he's not here, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think Alberta Bound, that type of song, is inappropriate. We shouldn't be singing it. We are already here as Albertans, and these are people who are on their way here, so that is not a good example of a song. I would refer to the Olympic song that was composed by David Foster as something that would be more exciting and have more essence to it.

I believe that this bill is an excellent addition to the noble emblems that we already have as we approach 100 years as a province. I think emblems are symbolic. What we have are great, but they're static. You wear them on a lapel or a hat. A flag again is something that is static, certainly representative. A song is something that could be sung, whether by a single person or by a multitude of people.

We have many things to be thankful for, Mr. Speaker. As Albertans we are privileged to live in a province that holds many advantages for its people. We have an abundance of industries and resources which provide for our needs and a wealth of people who are hardworking and good community neighbours.

As a province, again, we have the emblems that remind us of what makes Alberta a special place. There are many meaningful symbols present in these emblems, such as the coat of arms, which represents strength and good character, and the Mace of our provincial Legislature is encircled in different stones to represent Alberta's name. The Alberta wild rose is probably one of the most known symbols of Alberta, and I know through my experience as an MLA that that is a very popular pin with people of all ages. The beauty and the freedom that are represented by the wild rose are important to many people in our province. Our growth as a province has given us many experiences to share as Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I think the creation of an official song for Alberta would tell our experiences in an appropriate and a heartfelt way and provide our citizens with a special mark in history. With the centennial drawing near, I think it would be an appropriate time certainly to give voice to and to celebrate all of these experiences, the ones I talked about earlier and more. In a country so young, 100 years of working together is actually a tremendous amount of history. We've grown from a gathering of settlers looking for a promise of new prosperity to the province that we are today, a vibrant province. I'm proud to say that we've struggled through our hardships together as hardworking people and have risen up because of our efforts to develop today's proud and worthy province.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the people in our province, being proud and worthy, would be well represented by an official song. We have worked so hard to stand where we do today. I talk about us, but I really mean the people before us. I believe these are important reasons to preserve the feelings that define an important part of Alberta's culture and heritage.

In looking at the centennial itself, I think we are so busy in our day-to-day work these days that we don't stop to think about down the road and place ourselves in that year of the centennial. It really will be a special moment in our history, and it will mark a passage of time that is substantial in our young country. Again, the emblems we've adopted to show our unique qualities will be beneficial, but I think the song will certainly mark the centennial itself even more.

When I first heard the proposal for Bill 208, I wondered what my predecessors would have to say about it. Just as I'm standing here today, down the road there'll be another – what do they call the second 100 years?

MR. MAR: Bicentennial.

MS KRYCZKA: Bicentennial. Thank you, hon. member.

Just as I'm standing here, they wouldn't have known of the progress that they had made in the longer period of time. We stand here today being able to recognize what they have contributed. Again, some of us have less time than others – we don't know – to know what lies ahead in the next 100 years. I'm confident that they would be very proud of how far we have taken the province and the bright future that's ahead of us. The strength of our generations helped enable us to overcome the natural hardships that only people raised in our province could know. They've overcome them to plant bountiful crops, to build valuable schools, to develop strong communities. I believe a song would give the past generations recognition of their hard work and signify a pledge to continue with success.

I also want to make a very personal comment. I have been in other countries in an international sports situation. I want to say that Canadians – I speak more on a broader base – are really very conservative in those kinds of environments. There are others where the patriotism level – and I go beyond the United States – is very high. I think it would be very special, even on just a provincial level, to see at public competitions or exhibitions a much higher level of patriotism. Certainly that could be expressed through this song.

In 2005 it will be 100 years since Albertans pledged to work hard together to build a successful future. I believe we have been successful in our goals. Our success and pride in the province we've built is shown through our provincial emblems, but again I'm saying that a song would certainly add to these emblems and give voice to our history.

I urge all my colleagues to support Bill 208, because I feel it is one appropriate way to live our history. The centennial of Alberta marks a very significant period of history, and there is no better opportunity to express our feelings of pride than through a song which will carry on for many generations to come.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to enter into the discussion and the debate on this bill today. At first glance I was intrigued by this bill. I think that it in fact does make sense for Alberta to investigate the possibility of adopting an official song. If this were the extent of this bill, I probably would have no difficulty in supporting it, but what the bill does is that it really goes one step further. My understanding is that it in fact would then make a decision. I frankly have some reservations with the process that's being proposed by the member.

Songs, regional songs and provincial songs, from my point of view tend to be something that has become adopted over time. I would think that if you're going to have a provincial song, it would make sense that you would have a long-standing tradition of the song within the area. Then the member would be coming to the Assembly and saying: you know, we've all been humming this song for many, many years and generations, and I think it's about time we make this our official song. That kind of a bill I think I could support, but that's not the case in this bill. This bill is saying, "You know, I think we should have an official song, and let's strike a committee," which really brings terror into the minds of many Albertans, striking a government committee, "and let this committee tell Albertans what that song should be."

Mr. Speaker, I think, frankly, that we've got it backwards. I think Albertans should be the ones that decide. They should be deciding by having an opportunity to adopt a song, to come to government and say: you know, this has been a tradition in this province for many years, and we think it's about time that this unofficial provincial song be recognized in some way to make it official. So that's one concern that I have with the bill.

The other concern that I have with the bill is the fact that we have a celebration that's coming up in the year 2005, the centennial of this province. I think that's something that we as Albertans can take a great deal of pride in. I think we all look with a lot of anticipation to 2005 and the celebrations that will take place in conjunction with the centennial of Alberta. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think it's absolutely appropriate that there be a song, that would perhaps even be commissioned, to celebrate 2005.

I remember when I was a youngster. In 1967 I was . . . [interjection] I was 13, hon. member. I was born in 1954. In 1967, when Canada celebrated its centennial, I think we can all remember the centennial train that traveled across the country. I know it stopped in Medicine Hat, and we went down to see that train. There was a lot of hoopla associated with that train, not the least of which was the Bobby Gimby song Canada. [interjection] I'll follow the lead of the member from Red Deer; I won't be singing either, Mr. Minister. That is a song that caught the spirit of the nation. It was appropriate that the spirit of the nation should be wrapped up in that kind of a song, and I think that a similar kind of a song would be absolutely appropriate as we celebrate the centennial of the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, that song, as much as it was in all our heads and in our minds in 1967 and perhaps for two or three years after that, was a song that was designed to celebrate something, to celebrate the centennial of a world-class nation, our beloved Canada. It was appropriate that we have a song to do that, but it was not a national song. It was a centennial song. I'm thinking that the same kind of thing could apply in the case of Alberta's centennial. I think it's appropriate that in the centennial activities there could be a song commissioned to recognize and to help Albertans to celebrate the centennial in 2005, but I don't think it's appropriate nor is it necessary that we pass a law in this province outlining in detail the process that must be used to select that song.

There is some confusion in my mind, Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not the purpose of this bill is to select a song that would be used in the year-long celebration of Alberta's centennial or if we are asking this committee to choose a song that would be the official song for Alberta. Frankly, I don't see those two being the same. If we're going to have a song that is the Alberta official song, as I said earlier, I think that needs to grow up with the people of Alberta. That has to be something that we all know and we all grew up with, where people come to Alberta and say: this song has been around for generations, and I think it's time that you made it official. On the other hand, if we're going to have a song that's designed to help Albertans celebrate the centennial of this province, then I think that that probably would be appropriately the type of project that you might commission someone to do.

I've heard brought up in debate the wonderful music that was commissioned and incorporated into the Calgary Olympics in 1988. That brought tears to my eyes, Mr. Speaker. That was terrific music, but it's not something that you and I could join in on. It wasn't a really hummable kind of song, but it was a very appropriate song for the occasion, just as I think there could be some very appropriate music that is composed to celebrate Alberta's centennial.

Mr. Speaker, while this bill is well-intentioned and I support the spirit of this bill, I think that Albertans would like to have some kind of song that we could declare to be official. I think that on two counts this bill fails. Firstly, I think we've got it backwards. I think the member is putting the cart before the horse. If we are to have an official Alberta song, then I think it should be something that already exists. We've got a lot of people that have unofficially considered a song to be the Alberta song and then have come forward with it.

Secondly, I think where this bill fails is that if it's to be a song that is to be in conjunction with the centennial in 2005, then I think the most appropriate song for that celebration is not a longtime song that should be enshrined in law. I think it's the type of song that we saw for the Calgary Olympics and we saw for the Canadian centennial back in '67, a song that is very specifically composed and presented and performed during the year-long celebration, and Albertans will have an opportunity to appreciate and feel pride in that song. But, Mr. Speaker, it's not something that is designed – nor should it be everlasting and enshrined in law – as the official song for Alberta.

I wish the member all success with his bill. I recognize from hearing others speak that I may not be in the majority view in this House, but I can't support this bill, simply because I don't think it's necessary at this point in time. I look forward to having all kinds of musical tributes as we move forward with our celebrations in 2005. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think that those tributes can and will come forward without the force of the law behind them.

Thank you very much.

5:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in support of Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act. I am proud to add my name to the list of members who have already risen to support this bill.

It seems that every time I open up the newspaper, turn on a radio, or watch some television news, I'm hearing about the bill proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. This bill has certainly captured the imagination of many Albertans and with good reason too, Mr. Speaker. It's a great idea, and the time is right for a provincial song. A song can accomplish many things. It can sing praises of how beautiful the land is. It can tell a story of the people. It can relay the pride of people's heritage. It can rally people, or it can even accomplish all of the above.

First, Mr. Speaker, a song for Alberta could tell a story of our province. It can reflect on our First Nations people's history in Alberta, how Europeans and explorers settled in the region and how this province was founded in 1905. There are many ways to tell a story of our province. The only limit is the imagination of the storyteller. A song would also tell how proud we are to be Albertans, and we have many reasons to be proud.

Several other members of this Assembly have already added to this debate and noted how wonderful a place we have that we call home. In my constituency, Lac La Biche-St. Paul, we are blessed with a magnificent countryside. There are beautiful lakes, rolling hills, thick forests, splendid fields, when it rains, offering a range of crops, and acres and acres of ranchland.

We are blessed with a diverse community of people. Lac La Biche-St. Paul offers a rich distribution of cultures and languages. We have a strong and diverse First Nations, Francophone, Ukrainian, Russian, British, Lebanese, and many, many more communities in our area. [interjections] And Dutch and Irish people. You can't miss any.

This can equally be said for Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Just as my constituency has a wide range of land features and people, the rest of the province can offer all of these and even more. I think a song of this province should be crafted keeping in mind the diversity of our environment and peoples.

A song of this province also should be a testimony to how lucky we are as Albertans. When I stop and think about how simply amazing this province is or how endless the opportunities seem, it really makes me thank God that I am fortunate enough to be here in Alberta.

We have a province that provides a setting for almost any endeavour, Mr. Speaker. As a rancher I can speak from firsthand knowledge that this province has ranchlands that are second to none anywhere in the world. I also know that most farmers would rather farm in Alberta than anywhere else in the world. We have a bounty of clean and fresh water. We can boast of lush and deep forests – we're just a little short on the grass this year – and tall rugged mountains.

The business community has also noticed this, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta is a place of choice for a wide array of interests, from high-tech companies to oil sands exploration firms. Most of all we are attracting people, our most valuable resource. Clearly we are fortunate.

It might be hard to write, Mr. Speaker, and possibly a song praising this province's peoples and its opportunities could go forever, but I am sure that some talented person or group of people could master that feat, even Ian Tyson.

Also, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason I would like to offer as to why we should have a provincial song. Songs are rousing and compelling. It is hard to imagine going into a sporting event without hearing O Canada. Whether sitting up in the bleachers or down on the field ready to play, it is really a piece of music that can bring people together and give a team the courage to compete at the highest level. It gives us that encouragement before every week of session here in this House. Pride to represent our province is of the utmost relevance.

Mr. Speaker, for a Kodiak that left home to compete for Alberta in the national championship, it would be very honourable to have an Alberta song. For the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to be able to stand in front of the Viking Cup opening and to sing an Alberta song would also be very much an honour. Representing your university or representing your province would be an honour in all national championships. Can you imagine being a Red Deer Rebel in a couple of days, after they win the next two games and are in the final and are able to stand on the ice and listen to the Alberta song?

We need to remember to reflect most of all and appreciate our fortune and our pride. We need a song for Alberta that could give us an incredible magic when our provincial teams play across Canada. When our teams take the diamond, take the field, take the court or the ice, they should have a spirited song to help them rise to a level of competition that is unsurpassed in the upcoming game.

This song should be a source of motivation for our athletes. We need a powerful piece of music that will invigorate our athletes and inspire them to play at the highest level possible with the pride of knowing that Alberta is behind them. When we send a provincial team to the Canada Games or any other national competition, let's give our boys and girls and men and women something to rally around.

It can also give inspiration to our entrepreneurs who travel and move to other parts of the country to have a song to reflect on their homeland. I'll give you an example today, Mr. Speaker. Today we have the Chrapkos with us in the Assembly and their boys, leaving here to go to Ontario as entrepreneurs to sell their software. Can you imagine them being in Ontario and being able to have an Alberta song to reflect on Alberta?

For those of us who have ancestry that comes from other areas of the world, our parents and our grandparents still reflect with passion on the songs of their homeland. Would it not be nice for us also to have that liberty? We should have a song to express to all who sing and hear it how proud and fortunate we are to be Albertans and to warn whomever we meet on the field of play to watch out, because here come the Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all the members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this Bill 208, the Alberta song. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start out this afternoon by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort for bringing this bill forward, this very unique idea. I, like others before me, want to thank him. I think we're very lucky to have the Member for Calgary-Fort. He is one of the most enthusiastic members we have, and he does a very good job of representing Alberta across the province and with his constituents.

I have to tell you, hon. member, that I had the opportunity last week to talk to one of the gentlemen from the press that's in this building, and he told me that he did a short piece in one of the daily papers regarding your bill, and it generated so many faxes, telephone calls, and comments, probably more than anything else has in the time that he's been in the press gallery in this building.

I think this tells us several things. I think it's been stated over and over that now is the time for this to happen, but it also tells me that Albertans are proud, proud individuals and that they want a song that reflects why they're here, why they love this province, and why they plan to stay. I also think it talks about: they want to be happy, they want to look to the future, and they want to remember all of the good things. We've been part of those good things. We've helped work towards making this province the very best province in Canada. So I think Albertans want us to put together a song, and I think your idea definitely has merit, and it's something Albertans want us to do.

I think back to a lot of things we've done to recognize Alberta. We have an Alberta animal. The animal is the bighorn sheep. My predecessor, the Member for Lacombe at that time, the hon. Ron Moore, was the person that brought through that bill, if my memory serves me correctly. We also have an official fish. I'm sorry, hon. member for Red Deer; it's not the walleye. We also have an official tartan. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore made sure that we felt very strongly about an official tartan last year.

We have a flag that I know I'm very, very proud of, and I know all of you are. I do know that when I give a flag away, people actually ask me if I will please donate a flag to a fund-raising function or whatever. People want our flags, people pay good money at fund-raisers for flags, and we're very proud of flags.

Speaking about flags, I remember when I was a director on the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. Of course, once a year they have the big convention with the towns and villages and cities attending from all over Alberta. One of the first things they do at their opening ceremony is parade the flags, and each and every municipality in this province has an official flag of their municipality. Now, who would have thought years ago that that many municipalities could come up with an idea and incorporate it into a flag? They certainly could have used some of the expertise shown by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, but they weren't offering a prize of $1,000, hon. member. But it is a very impressive ceremony, and I know many, many people in this room have been part of that opening ceremony with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the flags will continue for many years to come.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat talked about: would this song be forever? Well, folks, nothing is forever, because through the capabilities of this Legislative Assembly we are able to amend and delete legislation as time goes on. So if somewhere down the road, 10 years or 15 years, some other big celebration happens to be of importance and the song needs changing, it can be done. So I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort would be very receptive to the idea that the song that he wants is for our celebration in 2005. I commend him for that.

I also do have to say, though, that like one of the hon. members back here, I have always been an Ian Tyson fan. It must be an age thing. I also remember Ian and Sylvia. I won't say how old I was in 1954, but I would encourage Mr. Tyson to submit a song, and what better song for Mr. Tyson to submit than Alberta Bound. So there's just a thought.

We have a lot of talent in Alberta, and I think that we will see some very creative songs and music come forward as this evolves. I think Albertans want to be very, very proud of the very important year that we'll be celebrating in 2005. We already have a flag that has stood the test of time. We have an official fish, an official animal, an official tartan. What better thing to do than have an official song?

Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. Please, members, support this bill. Mr. Tyson, I hope you're listening.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can hardly believe that I'm standing to speak in support of a provincial song, because in our particular family my wife has all the musical talent, and I have absolutely none. However, when the hon. member decided to bring this song bill forward, Bill 208, the Alberta Official Song Act, I mentioned this to my wife, who is a music teacher, and she thought that it was a great idea.

She talked about it with her grade 6 students, and she went around through her archives and found some old songs from way back when and dragged them out and taught them to her students. In fact, the other day they were singing them, and when it was time to end the music class, the kids were saying: can we sing those again? They were all enthused about these Alberta songs. I asked her for the music, and in fact she sent a tape to the member. Perhaps he listened to it and found it interesting. I checked the sheet music, got a copy of it, and looked at it. You know, when you look at some of these phrases, they're really quite encouraging. Those kinds of terms have been mentioned here by many members. It builds enthusiasm for our province and recognizes our great province.

One particular one that my wife came across was from an Alberta government motion picture called Under the Sun. Now, this goes way back to the '70s sometime.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's a long time ago.

MR. LOUGHEED: Way back.

If you consider the words of these songs, they're really quite inspiring:

With our eyes upon tomorrow
And our faces to the sun,
We're partners in a dream.

I'd hesitate to sing it myself, as members are encouraging me, but the phrases used in this music are great, Mr. Speaker. I think that as the member is bringing these song ideas forward, these are things that we can consider.

Another part of it:

With our eyes upon tomorrow
And the wilderness we've won,
We're building on a dream we share.

That certainly speaks to our Alberta advantage and our heritage and our thinking in this province currently.

5:20

Some other parts to this, if I may belabour the point just a little bit – and there's something that I'm looking for here, Mr. Speaker. I seem to have misplaced the part that I was seeking to have. We're looking at:

We're partners in a dream,
Our eyes upon tomorrow,
The wilderness we won.

And the refrain goes on about Alberta.

Another part:

Our eyes upon tomorrow,
We've only just begun.

Those kind of phrases, Mr. Speaker, are enthusiastic. Certainly the students, in going through these songs, thought: those are great. They in fact were eager to embrace this idea of having an Alberta song and move towards having it part of their competition process, something they could contribute to and something they would be really excited about having.

So I certainly commend the hon. member for bringing this forward, and I would encourage all members to vote in favour as well. With that, I'll conclude my comments, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the hon. member is about to close.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to close the debate.

MR. CAO: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. members, for the excellent thoughts, the positive thoughts as well as the thoughts that triggered some improvement. I would just want to conclude that in fact in front of me there are stacks of material, CD tapes and letters that I received. In fact, I received one from Mr. Quint Freimark from Medicine Hat, and here's what he said: "I don't want to miss out on something I've been dreaming about for a great long time." That's his submission on the idea of a song.

I just want to illustrate something from his lyrics here.

Sittin' on a ridge lookin' out over the Cypress Hills
With a cool breeze blowing cross our backs and down into the draw

The golden glow from the east will soon light up my Alberta
And as the sleepy pines awake, for us the day begins.

Mr. Speaker, those are the examples that I have received and also that the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler has mentioned.

I would just want to thank you. This is second reading, the principle of the bill, and I have a feeling that this is the good essence of the bill debated today. I just want to conclude by saying thank you very much for the opportunity.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene this evening at 8 o'clock, we do so in Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: Will all hon. members in favour of the motion put forward by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Those opposed, say no. The motion is carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 23, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/23

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I wonder if we could call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2001-02

Revenue

THE CHAIRMAN: To begin the evening, we will call upon the Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to be able to stand tonight and talk about the best department of all of the government departments. I'm certain that every member here tonight after this riveting speech is going to agree with me about how great this department is. Furthermore, I've got to introduce three of the most outstanding individuals in all of the services. [interjections] When you speak the truth, it evokes all those great feelings and smiles and laughter. I'd like the House to acknowledge Eric McGhan again as the Deputy Minister of Revenue; Bonnie Lovelace is corporate secretary; and Richard Shelast, budgets and financial statements. We certainly welcome them here with us tonight. [some applause] I'm certain that we could do a little bit better round of applause for them than that. We could get some emotion into this. And if that wasn't convincing enough about how great this department is, you'll be riveted to find out the rest of the information I'm about to tell you.

Actually, I think it's very timely that we have an opportunity to see that the Treasury Department has been divided, as everyone knows, into two different departments of Finance and Revenue. We're entering an era in Alberta with deficits and debts about eliminated, both of them, that we have another, I would say, opportunity and chance to review the revenue streams of the government. We can look to the long-term sustainability of revenues, what those mixes might be, what varieties of taxes we might look at, how much in tax we might look at, rather than just focusing on expenses. I'm surprised, when we speak in the Legislature and we present our estimates, that there's very little focus on the revenue streams, very little discussion even when we hear in question period about all of the moneys that come into the government, and they are from hardworking Albertans. [interjection] Well, please do.

It certainly is a stewardship of ours to ensure that we take in no more than is ever required. The Premier's comments I think are right on. We want to continue to ensure that we have a very competitive, low tax base in this province and that the only way the taxes would go would be down. We want to see that we keep the pressure on Albertans to see that we manage their affairs appropriately. [interjection] The speaking notes don't say that.

The other I would say very significant part to this department is not just looking at a revenue framework. This will be one of the significant tasks that we will engage in over this next year to two years, to look across departments and look at the revenue flows, be they from royalties, be they from taxation, be they from gaming, but we also have to look hard and close at our investment management decisions. Today we have a heritage fund of $12.3 billion. We also manage a number of other different funds – the medical research fund, the science and engineering fund, the heritage scholarship fund – and in addition to that, all the short-term, day-to-day cash flow management of the government, plus the investment management division is involved with managing a number of pension funds. In total that division manages and oversees investments of close to $37 billion to $38 billion, a very significant portfolio, and it's critical that we ensure that we have the ability to manage that and maximize the returns for Albertans.

In '95 it was asked of Albertans what we might do with the heritage fund. Rather than liquidate it to pay down debt or otherwise, Albertans came back in a very significant endorsement to say: "Keep the heritage fund. Use it, but change its purpose from investing in capital works projects to maximizing its return. Invest it like you would expect of a pension fund, and invest it that you would show a return for future Albertans from those funds." So that has shifted the mandate of the investment management division to ensuring that we have a long-term sustainable income generation from the heritage fund. So we would have that same stewardship of the other pension funds that we administer.

In the core areas, in addition to a revenue framework and investment management framework, there is a significant aspect of ensuring that we administer tax and revenue programs fairly and efficiently. If you're going to be able to service the programs of health and education and infrastructure and all of the services that Albertans require, there has to be a means to fairly collect and account for and to ensure compliance so that all Albertans would have a fair chance to contribute to those services and that those that might wish to evade or avoid, they too should have that opportunity of contributing through means of compliance.

I would like to say also that we're fortunate in this year that there's been some redesign of the tax systems, both personal and corporate, a very significant change in our personal income tax stream. We've gone to a simpler, single rate of tax, a whole redesign but a very substantive reduction in tax. We do actually expect that despite this onetime reduction of this year, the base is broadening. The growth in Alberta continues to be strengthened by it. It is attracting and bringing people to Alberta as a result. In short order we would think and believe that the revenue stream through reductions will actually be a broader tax base with higher growth and will actually offset experiences in other jurisdictions. We may find that our tax base is actually increasing. So in both our corporate and our personal taxes we've seen and taken measures, but it doesn't stop there.

We have many other sources of taxes – tobacco and fuel taxes – that we collect. Part of the work will be to make sure that we've justified the appropriate measures of collection, whether they are the fairest methodology of collecting those taxes, whether they are the taxes that we should actually continue to have in place. With a postdebt era coming at us, those will be the questions that we will ask and require.

Another area of importance is the Alberta Securities Commission under this stewardship. As we know, it is a quasi-judicial body to ensure that the capital markets operate efficiently and effectively and that there is an access to capital. It's very important, if we want to look to the growth of industry in Alberta and the prosperity of people, that there are capital markets. So they have to be effectively run. There has to be a means of compliance and testing and ensuring that the regulations would protect the public if they are investing their dollars and at the same time allow for the free flow of exchange of investment in the businesses in this province. So we will continue to work with the Alberta Securities Commission to ensure that those rules, those procedures are the best that we can have not only in this jurisdiction, but we would find the best climate for attracting capital here in Alberta from any jurisdiction throughout North America.

With those comments I look forward to the comments that the opposition might have, and we'll be delighted to get back to them with responses to any questions that they may have.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise tonight to speak to the estimates of the Department of Revenue. I want to start by welcoming the staff up in the gallery for helping out and thank them for the work they've done in the transition to the new ministry and all the work that comes with separating out those responsibilities.

We have to deal now with looking at, I guess, some of the issues that come up in terms of both the comments that were made just now and the materials that are presented to us in the budget documents and the business plans. As I was listening to the minister talk, just toward the end of his presentation he mentioned that there was some discussion about his role in selecting tax policy and being involved in deciding what were the appropriate taxes and how that worked. It was interesting because during the debate with the Minister of Finance there was an attempt made at that time to claim jurisdiction over the idea of the tax policy being still in the Ministry of Finance. I guess what we need to do as we evolve this new structure is get a little bit more clarity involved in how the two ministries relate to each other and how they function from one side to the next and go on dealing with that. But that was just an interesting issue that arose as the minister was making the initial preparations.

Mr. Chairman, as I start through the budget document and that, I think I want to start initially with some comments on the business plan, because this kind of gives us the focus to go back, then, and address the specific line items that come up and deal with the specific allocations of the dollars and the reported activities that come up under the minister's budget.

As I read through the business plan here, we started looking at some of the goals that were there and some of the strategies and the performance indicators, and one of the things that came out was the idea that in the goals they talk about maximizing "investment returns subject to client-defined objectives and policies." I guess what I would like the minister to do is kind of define a little bit what he means by "client-defined." I thought the client here was, you know, the people of Alberta or the government, and it gets defined through the policy process of the government in terms of the decisions that are made with respect to the number of dollars that are in the particular funds, the management of those particular funds.

When we start talking here about "client-defined objectives," I get the sense that maybe there's somebody else becoming involved a little bit in dealing with the issues of how we put in place our investment strategy that gives us some kind of target return or mix that will provide us with an investment return. I don't know whether the intent here is to name as clients the relevant advisors and management teams that are associated with each of those funds that are managed in that investment portfolio or whether it's some other indication of a different group, so I would ask for some clarification there.

We also get down in the goals: fostering "a fair and efficient capital market" in Alberta. I know this is a lot with the Securities Exchange. It also goes over into the Alberta Opportunity Company. I guess what I would ask is: how do we co-ordinate this with the federal government as we deal with issues that come up in terms of interest rate setting by the federal government? That becomes a very important factor in how we deal with our capital markets here, because as they change the interest rate at the federal level in their monetary policy, that creates different incentives for international or inner flow of capital, and we have to deal with that. I guess the question I was leading to here is: does this particular goal relate specifically to the Securities Exchange, or does it have other implications and other areas that it has to deal with as well?

The other thing that we get looking at here: under the strategies they're talking about maximizing "long-term return on the government's investments to generate sustainable income to support the province's financial position." This, I take it, is in reference to the funds that we invest. We have to look at the long-term investment strategies, the mix that is there, to give us the cash flow coming out of them as an income that we then have available to use.

I guess when we look at the funds that are included under the umbrella of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, being the medical research fund, the scholarship funds, the new science and technology fund, these kinds of things, is that the extent of the kind of investments that we're talking about here? Or does this include, you know, investing the day-to-day, the month-to-month residual that's in the general revenue fund to maximize the day-to-day cash flow and revenue part that comes out of that? Are there different strategies associated with those day-to-day types of investments, because the capital, in essence, has to come back and be part of our general revenue cash flow? So a little bit of clarification there.

I guess the other thing I would just kind of caution on is under Highlights for 2001-02. On the very first line you've got "$16.4 million for the collection of corporate taxes, consumption taxes and other revenues." Mr. Chairman, I guess in the community that I move in, when they see the words "consumption tax," the first thing they think about is sales tax. I know that's not a sales tax here in Alberta, but when we talk about these, we might want to change the term there to prevent that association coming up in a lot of cases and to talk about it. I guess when I look at this, I kind of wonder what they've got in that group that they're calling consumption taxes. Is it the hotel tax, some of these kinds of things that are associated with tax on the use of a service? If that's what they are, maybe we should call them something a little bit different than a consumption tax, because that has a reasonably strong association with sales taxes, which are not a popular thing to be talking about here in Alberta.

The other strategies and goals, Mr. Chairman, I think are quite adequate and quite consistent with what I would look for in terms of the ministry and how it works. When we look at some of the key performance measures, on the bottom of page 371 there is kind of the benchmark profile and the index weight mix that they use for targeting their endowment portfolios. In the little box there at the side they say that this was changed effective as of this year and that as of April 1 they've got a new target group. I guess the questions I would ask are: how often is that changed, how often do we look at a new benchmark mix for our portfolios, and what factors would come about that would change these kinds of portfolio weight factors? Would it be the relative performances of, say, interest rate versus equity investment, this kind of thing?

When we go back and look at it, these are basically cash-generator investment funds. If we want to make sure that we do have some long-term opportunity there as well as some growth potential, I guess I would ask how often that mix does get changed and again, as I said, the parameters that would trigger the change. I don't remember noticing in the last couple of years that little box where they've talked about the indexes being changed when it was all under Treasury. I will admit that at that time, not being the critic responsible, I wasn't probably paying quite as close attention, so I passed that off onto other people to manage and look at.

I guess as we start through some of the individual line items, then, what I'd like to do is just raise some initial questions. I'm starting kind of at the back, but we'll deal with that. On page 374, under the department statement of operations, there were some other issues that came up here. When you look at the comparable 1999-2000, the preliminary actual for 2000-2001, and then the 2001-2002 estimates, I guess some questions come up on a couple of these areas.

We can start by looking at the hotel room tax. It seems unusual that in effect the hotel room tax revenue of $47 million, the preliminary actual, is exactly what the budget was. Yet when you look at all the other revenue sources there, you know, there's enough off to be subject to some of the conditions that come up in varying the economic performance, the revenue levels that would affect those. I guess if the actual estimate that was made at the beginning of the year and put in the budget of $47 million was actually the predicted experienced level of $47 million, Mr. Chairman, I think most of us in the House here would like to know who the modeler was that came up with that estimate, because we've got a lot of other things we can model and start making some pretty good investment decisions based on that kind of accuracy. I think this is something that we want to look at.

You know, the fact that it transfers over into this year's budgeted amount seems reasonable. You're going to use about what you had last year for next year, but this seems kind of interesting in the sense that we keep talking about economic growth, tourism growth . . .

MR. MELCHIN: That's a close enough estimate.

DR. NICOL: The minister across said, "That's a close enough estimate." But you still want these things, when they're estimates in our budget, to be based on some kind of an expectation of the performance of our economy.

If we're talking about an increase in tourism, an increase in people coming here, and with the Worlds coming to Edmonton this year, we should have an increase in the capacity of our hotel rooms in the province on a percentage basis this year. So you would think that there would be some kind of an estimate or some kind of a projection that would say, you know, even $5,000 more of taxes this year or maybe $10,000. I think I'm going to be a little bit more optimistic and suggest that the Worlds coming here this summer would probably give us a significant change in that particular item.

I guess as the minister gets used to the new structure of the Revenue department, we need to review and look at some of the modeling that goes into estimating these funds rather than just dealing with them off what was there last year. We've got to be able to look at them in the context of a viable predicted amount or an amount that actually shows some relationship to where the actual numbers are going.

When we look at another one there, the personal income tax, it's interesting to note that there is a $100 million difference between what we were going to get last year and what we're predicting next year, yet we talked about these significant tax cuts. When you go through this, what we're saying here basically is that, yes, individuals experience a tax cut, but we as a province, because of the growth, because of the increased employment, because of the increase in wages, are going to come out basically not being affected because of that income tax. This is a good indicator, Mr. Chairman. I'm not making any derogatory comment about that. It's a sign that our economy still is robust in the sense that we can give tax cuts and still come back with the same tax revenue because of that increased vibrancy in our economy. I think that speaks well for Alberta.

I've got a couple of others, but I think I have to flip back to the beginning. On page 379, under the Alberta risk management fund, the expenses there on the programs. I guess these are basically the payouts that come associated with the operation of protecting Alberta. As an observer looking at that, I would ask the minister: is it possible at some point to give us an idea of the different categories of payouts, like fire, theft, damage, these kinds of things, so that we can see basically how the risk management fund is actually being used and applied in the context of protecting our public assets?

I want to just go back now to the beginning, where we talk about the operating expenses in program 1. The thing that comes out here is quite interesting in the sense that when we look at last year's budget and this year's, it seems that we basically had approximately a $100,000 increase in operation of the minister's office and about a $117,000 increase in the operation of the deputy minister's office, yet a lot of these expenditures would have been transferred out of the original Ministry of Finance. What we're seeing is that a lot of the increase in expenditures of the Finance department occurs at the administrative level rather than the service level and the operational level that goes into the actual implementation of programs responsible. I guess in the end we're going to have to ask: is this additional administrative cost justified in terms of the operation of the ministry?

The other one, as I close out with just a couple of minutes left to go, is program 3, investment management. I guess I would just ask for a clarification on my part. I looked at this table and I thought: okay; there's about a $7 million expense there for investment management. What's the dedicated revenue? Especially when it's in brackets, that usually indicates a net loss. So what you've got is expenses of revenue that's a negative, and it doesn't add up. Are the brackets there an indication of something that I don't quite understand? It would have balanced out a little differently if we would have read them correctly as a number, unless we're reading all of the materials there as expenses and this, by being in brackets, becomes a negative expense, which is a revenue.

What revenues do we get out of investment management other than the revenue that's associated with the interest return or the return on those investments? But that shows up at different places. Is that actually the $6 billion of money that we made by having those investments?

Mr. Chairman, I think I've not got enough time to continue with another point, so I'll sit and let someone else raise some issues. I've got a couple more if time permits, but we'll deal with those as we see.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to participate in the debate this evening.

First of all, before I get to the notes that I have here, I would like to respond to some of the comments that the minister made in his opening remarks. He may feel that he has the best department, but with all due respect and as much as I like this particular minister and believe that he brings the highest level of integrity and work ethic to his department . . . [interjections] They don't like it when I compliment them. I still have to believe that the splitting of these two ministries between Finance and Revenue was a make-work project. So he's definitely got a high-paying job, and I have no doubt that he will do a good job of it, but taxpayers are paying through the nose once again for the Premier being able to hand out a few more candies on the front bench. We have to take the opportunity to respond to that.

No doubt the minister is right when he says that he has some of the most outstanding individuals in the government in his department. I'm sure that he does. I haven't had an opportunity to meet them or work with them in any regard, but I certainly take his word for it and know that he'll be there to back them up and to answer the questions that we have with regard to this department this evening and over the coming years.

My first question on these budgets is in response to some of the comments he made with regard to forecasting and starting to develop the investment in revenue frameworks for the future. Why are they doing real-time forecasting, Mr. Chairman? You know, in the corporate world, which is where this minister comes from, organizations wouldn't do the kind of forecasting for revenue projections that this government does. What they do now is make the yearly forecast and then announce the surpluses whenever they feel it appropriate to do so. What about quarterly budgeting here and quarterly forecasts? Let's treat this government in a more accountable fashion than it is. So I have a real problem with the way they do the forecasting in this department, and I think it is not a fair representation of the revenue flow that comes into this province. In fact, I would go so far as to say that it's misleading people in terms of how they move forward on that. I'd like to use a different word than that, but I'm not quite sure what would be the most appropriate thing to do there, so I'll leave it at that.

The minister talked about long-term sustainability of revenue streams, and it's good that this department is starting to talk about this and that the government is taking this issue seriously, Mr. Chairman. My question to him is: what are they thinking of in terms of options at this time? We know that oil and gas is on its way out.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, if we could visit in a more quiet fashion. The noise was beginning to drown out the hon. member. She's the only one that's officially recognized, so we'd ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to continue, hopefully with the cooperation of everyone else.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

What I was talking about was oil and gas revenue streams available to the province and that they're running out, gas likely within 10 years and oil likely within 25 years. What are the replacement revenues going to be?

Some talk in the communities now that royalties on coal may be ultimately where this government goes for part of the resource-dependent revenue streams they take a look at. I'd like to know if the minister is talking about that in the long term. I know in the short term what we're probably going to see with these new generation facilities coming onstream is some sort of tax credits or incentive program. I don't support that. I think that in a level playing field they pay their share of the freight and that's the way it is. In fact, for heavily polluting resources like coal is, perhaps they should pay more than their share of the freight and help bring us to a point in time where they help support building an infrastructure of alternative kinds of heating sources. So I put that out there for people to respond to. I certainly would like the minister's comments on that.

In the long term, Mr. Chairman, 10 or 15 years down the road, I'm putting my money on there being some sort of coal royalty in addition to what's effectively in place now, because this government is going to need revenue stream replacement. Why? Because I don't think they're going to be doing the kind of planning and looking at replacement options that they could be at this stage. I know that in some part that's what the Future Summit is about, and I'll get to questions on that a little later in my questions. But for the time being, I would like to hear what the minister has to say about that.

When we take a look at replacement revenue streams, well, the obvious option for this government is to take a look at something that occasionally gets floated out there, which is what my colleague had talked about, and that's a sales tax. I know this government has been adamantly opposed to that, but I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that they do use consumption taxes now quite effectively and increase those rates substantially year by year; those would be user fees. So I would like the minister's response on that. Does he have any comments on these kinds of consumption taxes? What difference does he see between that and a sales tax? And his justification for why he wouldn't see user fees as a tax. Certainly we have court documentation to prove that user fees that charge an amount that is over and above the actual replacement cost of a service they're using is in fact a tax. So I'd be interested in hearing some comments there.

There's always room on the user fee side with a government with this kind of mind-set. I would like from the minister and his department an exact forecast from now until 2004 of what kinds of additional user fees they see coming forward and what kinds of increases they see coming forward in those following years. So if he could give us that information.

The minister talked about taxes a little bit, and I'm wondering what happened to the Tax Reform Commission report. You know, they're going to redo a lot of this work in the Future Summit, or they may come out as a recommendation to look at total tax reform and redo what happened on that last commission. So my question there is: why haven't we seen the implementation of the key recommendations that were in that report? What's happened to it? Does it ever get referred to any more? What's the point in going out and asking people for their opinion if you're not prepared to use it, which is the premise for the Future Summit. It doesn't seem like this government has a very good track record of actually using the information when they get it.

Now, I thank the minister for the information he gave me the other day on the Future Summit just in terms of us trying to really figure out when it's going to be and part of the mandate. I know that this is a work in progress at this stage, but I would like the minister to formally reply, if he could, on what preparations have been made by the department with respect to the summit at this stage. When it's available or when a public portion of the information is available, can he give us a copy of the department's plans and objectives for that summit?

I'd also like to know some of the mechanics of how that's going to be organized, Mr. Chairman, things like how the views of Albertans will be heard during the summit, what kind of role they will play, who will be participating at that level, how the government will solicit information or send out invitations, what kind of cross section of people they are taking a look at being represented at the table, that kind of information.

I think the government did a good job on one of the ones that I most recently attended, although that was a couple of years ago. That was on climate change. One of the major outcomes of that was Climate Change Central, which is taking its time getting off and running but is working, Mr. Chairman. I think there was a lot of valuable information made available for government during that weekend, some that the government didn't want to hear, quite frankly, but they did hear it, and they took a lot of it into account. I think some of the directions they've been going in in this past while are reflective of that. A little slow but certainly not a bad start.

So I'm taking a look at this Future Summit being the same kind of format, I'm hoping, and with similar kinds of outcomes. With that, can we know what the major themes are that the government is outlining for that summit? How does the government intend to carry out the recommendations from the summit?

The growth summit: not much happened there. It didn't go very far. Lots of good information, lots of reasonable information, but not much happened with it.

Some of the other summits have been a little more proactive, and I'm hoping that this, too, will turn out to be. I guess time will tell on that. Certainly I'm looking forward to some good information coming out of that and the government being able to use it.

We'd like to know what the projected costs are for holding the summit and the exact time lines in terms of when the plans will be ready, when it's going to occur, the time line for gathering and processing the information, for reporting back to the people and to the Legislature, and for acting on any of the recommendations or actions that are outcomes from that summit. If we could get that information, that would be good.

The minister in his comments, Mr. Chairman, talked about tax, that the revisions to the corporate and the personal tax systems are simpler and have resulted in substantial reductions. I give you the simpler reductions on the corporate side and simpler on the personal side, but we still have an issue with the taxation rates and who pays the freight there. Substantially, it still falls on middle-income people, so I'd be interested in the minister's feedback on that.

He talked about the tax structure being attractive in bringing people to Alberta. I'm certain a low tax structure is, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to know how they're doing the tracking on that. If in fact it is bringing people to Alberta, then the department must have some form of tracking that information and being able to base it on fact. So whatever is available there, we would like the information on that. I think that would be excellent and definitely something that would be informative for us to see on both the corporate and the personal sides. Which is more attractive, the corporate reductions or the personal reductions? How did they collate that information? Who did they gather it from? Where is it available? Are they doing surveys? Are they doing – I don't know what they're doing to get the information, so whatever they've got, we'd like to know.

The minister also talked about stewardship and that part of the role of stewardship for this government was to take in no more money than what was required. Well, how true can that be, Mr. Chairman, when we see billion dollar surpluses? Really, that's hard to believe, that that would be – maybe that's your personal mandate, but it's not this government's mandate, because if it were really your mandate, the instant a surplus occurred, the money would be returned to the people as a direct refund. So it isn't really the mandate. It may be where you'd like to get to, but it's not what's happening right now. We wouldn't have surpluses if that were the case, or the surpluses would be marginal. So I would like the minister to expand on that a little more completely. Then we'll see where we go on that particular issue, because it isn't what's happening here.

They're not taking in any more than what is required. They're taking in a great deal more than what is required, Mr. Chairman. Other than those small energy refunds that we've seen this year, I haven't seen any money going back to the people. Maybe they plan to change that in the future, and gee, that would be dandy. They'd get voted in forever, I'm sure, if they did that, but it doesn't look like that's what's happening at this time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to spend just a little bit of time talking about the business plans of the department because we have some concerns with those as well. It seems the same as what happened in Treasury and it seems to be not that unusual, because they were the same department just last year. There's no information for 2001-02-03-04 in the plans for gross operating expenses and capital investments by program vote and subprogram vote as was last provided in the Treasury spending profiles which we saw way back in, I believe it was, 1995. So that's a concern. I would like to ask why that is occurring, if the minister could answer that. You know, if you can't get these ready for budget time, maybe you could roll them out sometime during the year so that we could take a look at them. There are lots of opportunities for us to review them and ask questions on them, and that would be helpful.

Also, the only information we've got on expense projections, as I see them, are presented in the consolidated statements. We need the comparables between the programs and the subprogram votes. They're not here. Could we have that? I think what would be helpful, and perhaps even help in the commitment the government has stated to their three-year fiscal planning, is if we could have comparable three-year projections for the Ministry of Revenue in this main estimates book and the three-year ministry income statement found under the business plan. This minister knows – that's his background exactly – that you need comparable figures. You need information that you can tie down. We don't get it. I believe there must be a reason why we don't get it. So if the minister could respond to that, in terms of why we're not getting it and why we got some of that information in years past and if he expects to present it to us in the future, I think that would be very helpful.

Can the minister also tell us why this business plan still doesn't provide the three-year expense profile by program and subprogram? Those ones we had even back as late as maybe '97-98, that year. Once again, you know that figures just thrown on a page are no good for us if we don't have any comparisons and more detail is better than less detail. In fact, you'll find that with more detail we have fewer questions and the questions may be better questions, questions that enhance your ability to do your job. Give us the tools to work with here. We don't always choose to be difficult. Lots of the questions that we do ask are reasonable questions and should have answers to them and should be information that's available to the public. So if the minister could address that, that would be really good.

What would be helpful with this and I think would assist the readers of these plans is if we could have a three-year spending profile, too, of the department by program areas for future years in some detail. Where do you expect the money to go? It would be helpful to us and I think not that big of a deal for you to do.

Now, in terms of information we'll ask the same question I think we've asked for every one of these departments, and that's information on the FTEs and the expense breakdown. We ask this question every single year in every single department, and I don't know why you just don't put it into the income statements, because it would just be helpful and eliminate some of the issues.

It looks to me like FTEs, if I see this correctly, are not going up by much. It doesn't look like there's much of an increase here at all. Fifteen, if I read this, one in the department, nine in securities. So that's kind of interesting. The minister talked in his opening comments about refocusing a bit on income stream and how that money is coming in, and I'm assuming that's why they're beefing up their staff in the Alberta Securities Commission, and I'd like him to confirm that if it's true.

Also, how is it going in terms of recruiting people and keeping them? This is a hot area to be employed in, and I'm wondering if the department is having any trouble keeping their staff. I'm sure they're paying competitive salaries, but perhaps there are other bonuses or perks that they're not matching in terms of what's offered in the marketplace. So if he could respond to that, that would be great.

You know, when we talk about the breakdown of the expenses in the department, we really want some detail on everything: salaries, hosting, telephone, advertising. If we could get the salaries broken down between full-time, part-time, contract positions, that information would also be helpful.

One more thing. You know in your goals, in goal 2, you talk about maximizing "investment returns subject to client-defined objectives." I have a problem with calling them clients. They are Albertans, or they are constituents, but they are not clients.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to begin by raising the question of the division of the departments of the government following the recent election. Like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I have great respect for the minister here, but the question really is the advisability of making the division that has been made between the Finance ministry and the Revenue ministry. Of all the moves made by the government after this recent election to enlarge the provincial cabinet, this is perhaps the most puzzling and the least justifiable. I know of no other jurisdiction in the country that has created this kind of two-headed monster.

The decision to split the Treasury ministry in two is a different situation, for example, at the federal level, where there's a Minister of National Revenue separate from the Minister of Finance. At the federal level it's clear that the Minister of National Revenue is a junior minister, and the Minister of Finance is in charge of both fiscal policy and taxation policy. Who is in charge of the Alberta government's taxation and fiscal policy? Is it the Minister of Finance, whose budget estimates we reviewed last week, or the Minister of Revenue, whose budget estimates are being dealt with this evening?

This is a serious question, Mr. Chairman. If you look at the goals of the two ministries, there's clear duplication and overlap. For example, the Ministry of Finance has a goal of "a fair and competitive provincial tax system." That's on page 181 of the estimates book. The Ministry of Revenue has a goal of "a fair and competitive provincial tax system managed efficiently and effectively."

There's duplication in other areas as well. The Revenue ministry isn't even responsible for all the revenue sources that the Treasury minister used to be responsible for. For example, investment income from the heritage trust fund falls within the Ministry of Revenue, and that's on page 373. Investment income from the general revenue fund and income from commercial operations like the Treasury Branches falls within the Ministry of Finance, and that's on page 184. Each ministry has staff to manage these investments. The Ministry of Revenue is responsible for regulating capital markets. The Ministry of Finance is responsible for regulating financial institutions and insurance companies.

How do you decide who gets to read the budget speech? Do you flip a coin? The Finance minister delivered the budget speech this year. Does that mean that the Revenue minister gets to do it next year?

Dividing the Treasury ministry is creating employment at the top, and that's for sure. The combined expenditure of the two ministers' offices is going from $330,000 per year to $530,000 per year. Spending on deputy ministers' offices between the two ministries is going from last year's $346,000 to this year's combined $616,000. Those are on page 178 and page 366. How can the government, on the one hand, call for fiscal restraint for folks like social assistance recipients and teachers and, on the other hand, justify these obscene increases in spending at the very top of their ministries?

To conclude this section of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, why is there a duplication and overlap between these two ministries? When it comes to managing the province's finances, two is really not better than one.

As part of his responsibilities the Minister of Revenue is responsible for collecting personal and corporate income taxes and, I presume, for developing policies governing the collection of these taxes. Most years personal income taxes remain the single largest source of provincial government revenues. Last year for the first time in many years the government received more revenue from oil and gas royalties than it did from personal income taxes. However, energy revenues are highly variable depending on the prices received from the production of oil and natural gas.

Last year the government made radical changes to the personal income tax system, increasing personal and spousal exemptions and levying a flat tax on all remaining income. The net effect of the flat tax is to provide a greater proportion of tax relief to those on both the low- and high-income ends of the tax scale while shifting more of the tax burden onto middle-income earners making anywhere from about $30,000 to $100,000 per year.

Alberta stands alone in its support of a flat tax on personal income. All other provinces, including Ontario, have maintained a progressive income tax system. My question to the minister is a simple one. Does the flat tax shift more of the overall responsibility for paying taxes onto middle-income earners? If so, how can this be justified?

On corporate taxes the government has embarked on a four-year plan to cut corporate income taxes roughly in half. The first reduction came on April 1 of 2001, when the general rate for larger, profitable corporations was reduced to 13 and a half percent from 15.5 percent. My question to the minister is this: should oil and gas prices go down, would the government consider postponing, or delaying, years 2, 3, and 4 of its corporate tax reduction strategy? If not, does the government place a higher priority on cutting corporate taxes than it does on providing adequate funds for schools and hospitals?

My next questions deal with the heritage savings trust fund. Last week the Ministry of Revenue put out a news release saying that the heritage fund was 25 years old and the picture of health. The fact is that virtually all the asset growth of the heritage fund took place in the first 10 years of its existence. In the past 15 years the heritage fund has been stuck at the same $12 billion asset level. As a result, due to inflation the earnings of the heritage fund have been declining as a percentage of provincial government revenues. This year in particular the earnings of the heritage fund are expected to further decline to just over $580 million. This is all located on page 373, for those of you that are avidly following along. It's hardly the picture of health, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased that the future of the heritage fund is up for consideration at the so-called Future Summit this fall, because it's pretty clear that the government has run out of ideas in terms of what to do with it.

I'd also like to raise the other possibility, and that is a revenue stabilization fund for oil and gas revenues. It seems that given the volatility of those revenues over an extended period of time, it would make sense to take about half the revenues you get from the fund that are surplus to the government's needs and, instead of using them to pay down the debt, put them in a stabilization fund. So when you have higher than average revenue from natural resources, you build up the fund, and when you have lower than average revenue from oil and gas, you can draw down from the fund and thereby stabilize revenues for the provincial government. That was just a suggestion, and I'd be pleased to hear what the minister has to say about it.

My final question deals with the future of the Alberta Securities Commission. Now, I'm aware that the commission's $15 million in expenses is offset by $15 million in revenue generated from those looking to sell securities in this province. Canada's stock exchanges are in a period of consolidation. Last year the Alberta and Vancouver stock exchanges merged into the Canadian Venture Exchange. Now the Canadian Venture Exchange is in the process of being taken over by the Toronto Stock Exchange. My question is: how much of a shelf life does the Alberta Securities Commission have as a stand-alone entity? Has the time come for us to consider merging it with the security commissions in other provinces, in particular in other western provinces?

I'd be very interested in the minister's responses to these questions, Mr. Chairman, and that concludes my remarks on the estimates this evening.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of the Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to continue with a couple of the issues that I didn't get covered at the start and look at some of the ideas that we wanted to talk about.

I was at ministry support services, on page 366. I guess the question comes up in terms of the relationship with the communications estimate and how it went from $205,000 a couple of years ago down to $161,000. Why is it back up to $213,000? Is it because of the division of the two departments and the creation of the new Ministry of Revenue? If so, what kind of communication initiatives will be undertaken to justify the increase in the dollars?

Then when we look at program 2, it's interesting that the whole idea is tax and revenue administration under 2.0.1. The title is Rebates, yet what we've got here is no place where there's a net rebate number reported. Within the ministry's mandate last year or in the coming year will there be no rebate programs put in place?

I guess the other question I just wanted to ask is under program 4, risk management and insurance. Again, here, I take it that under Members' Services or somewhere there is another one for the risk management fund for the MLAs. It doesn't show enough of a change from one year to the next year to really deal with the issue of the big payment that was made with respect to the Day claim last year or this year even. One or the other should have been up, because in essence the numbers we're reporting there are no different than what would have been that one claim. If that's kind of a continuing item from year to year, then what we have to look at is how we're reporting and dealing with this so that we can get issues put in place to justify or to illustrate how these funds are used and how the payouts come about.

Mr. Chairman, one final set of questions that I'd like to look at is associated with the government reports as we see them here. I think I raised this one other night as well. What we've got is a situation where as we go through a lot of the departmental materials and you get in to start looking at the information that's put out on the web site – and a lot of them are really excellent web sites and give a lot of information to Albertans. I guess the question that comes up is in the context of how they're managed. How do you deal with the private-sector links that are attached to some of those web sites?

Specifically, on the minister's web site there's one place where he provides some links to a whole series of different types of items in the area of insurance. When it gets down to the area that deals with brokers and investment banks, Nesbitt Burns and Scotia Capital markets are listed. How did those two get selected to be linked there? Are they making payments for that link, or is it just that they were picked out of a hat and put on there? There are an awful lot of other similar kinds of private-sector firms that provide the same service. I guess the question comes up in terms of: what policy is there to talk about how the particular links show up?

Mr. Chairman, I'm not implying here that we shouldn't have those links. This is good information. It's illustrative of the kind of information that's available to someone looking at Alberta's web site and the Finance minister's information. But what we need to do is, I guess, have a little transparency in how we go about setting them up, how we identify them, and if there is a revenue associated with them to the government, this needs to be pointed out – I'm sure that some of those companies would very gladly pay for the link associated with the Alberta government page, especially in areas in connection with finance and revenue – so that we can see what options are there. There's a whole series of them there, and I don't want to really go through a lot of them. I apologize both to Nesbitt Burns and to Scotia Capital markets for having picked them out of the list, but it was the shortest list that I got to look at, and I didn't want to have to read a long list into the record. That's kind of the final question that I wanted to raise.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to close by saying that as we move into this new framework of having Revenue and Finance split out under separate ministerial responsibilities, I would encourage the minister to look at how Albertans can be informed about the benefits of having this dual ministry associated with it. I've looked at the performance indicators and dealt with some of them. Much more so than with a lot of the other departments, I see there is some actual relationship in terms of the performance of our investments and that to industry standard. It's fairly accurate and fairly well related to the activity of the minister, so from that perspective, you know, and that one set of performance indicators there, right on. It actually deals with issues that you're responsible for, whereas some of the other ministers that we've dealt with and had review of their budgets have got performance indicators in there that are not responsive in any direct way to the action of the minister. So thank you for having those performance indicators that deal with specific performance and specific management measures and quality measures of the performance of the ministry.

Again, just in conclusion, I think we need to convey to Albertans a real, justified reason for having divided these two. Otherwise, how do we justify the additional dollars that are required to operate and man two different ministries when it used to be done under one and there was a lower overhead or administrative cost associated with it?

In the meantime I'd encourage the minister to try and look at some additional performance indicators, maybe in terms of our risk management fund, you know, the fire, theft, and damage types of claims that go out against that fund. How do they compare to other commercial and industrial – probably mostly commercial – claims systems? Are we paying out appropriately? Are we paying out in an effective way and in essence lower than what we would if we were buying commercial insurance? Is there the kind of indication to Albertans that we as a public operating our own self-insurance program through this fund are dealing with something that, in effect, is cost-effective and a benefit for Albertans because of the lower total cost?

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and let us move on to the next part of our debate. If not, even if that means a vote, that's great. We can move on.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Revenue to sum up.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A lot of comments have been said tonight. We'll be more than pleased to respond to all of them in short order. I would say, just as a concluding remark, that one of Premier Klein's statements made early on with regards to the division of the two departments was: in light of the growing complexity and the size of the revenues of the government, it created an expanded and greater need to have to look at the scope and mandate of our revenue streams and, therefore, creation of a Revenue department.

The confusion as to, for example, a budget statement. The Finance department certainly has the responsibility for the three-year business plan and budgeting process. There's no duplication between the two departments. The tax and revenue administration division of Treasury has now become the tax and revenue administration division of Revenue. The investment management division and all of those staff are now part of the Department of Revenue. There is not a duplication and hiring of more bodies to do that work. Those were actually very cleanly separable areas.

With regards to finance policy in the Department of Finance the overall policy for the fiscal direction of the government includes all the departments. Looking at the fiscal projections of the spending and of the revenues of all of the departments is the mandate of a three-year business plan that the Department of Finance is responsible for pulling together. We can be of tremendous help, under the mandate of the Department of Revenue, in assisting in taking a harder and closer look and working to provide great information to the Department of Finance in accumulating those three-year budgets as we look forward to the planning and administration of revenue streams, the investment management division. So there's a great need for this, and it's a perfect time and opportunity for it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Revenue, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed?

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$30,114,000
--	--------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

9:10

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Solicitor General

THE CHAIRMAN: To begin this evening's deliberations, we'll call upon the Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to present the Alberta Solicitor General's 2001-2004 business plan. I'll take a few minutes at the end of the hour to respond to some of the questions raised by the opposition, and I'd be happy to respond in writing to other questions that I'm unable to answer today.

The Alberta Solicitor General strives to implement commitments made related to recommendations from the 1999 justice summit, and we will continue to consult with Albertans through initiatives such as a review of policing in Alberta. As our provincial economy remains strong, the number of people coming into Alberta from other provinces and other countries remains high. Changing demographics present challenges for the judicial system, including a great fear of crime amongst Alberta seniors. We see continued public concern over perceived increases in crime, and we see concerns about the needs for a higher level of local policing. Advancing technology provides new challenges. It has resulted in complex global economic organized crime and Internet-based crimes such as illegal gambling and child pornography. Through our programs and services the Alberta Solicitor General is committed to building a democratic and prosperous Alberta based on the respect of law, a province where all Albertans are safe in their homes and communities.

I'd like to very briefly outline the core businesses that make up our ministry's $253 million budget. We will encourage crime prevention and ensure adequate and effective policing to all Albertans. We will provide effective and efficient correctional programs. We will work to support the rehabilitation of offenders into communities as contributing members of society. The Alberta Solicitor General will continue existing efforts to ensure that victims are treated with dignity and respect. Our common cross-ministry goals are a key part of the way the government does business. These are goals based on the needs and priorities of Albertans.

We recognize the importance of building strong partnerships with the judiciary, the legal community, aboriginal communities, and our stakeholders in policing, community organizations, and local governments. We will continue to measure our successes in the important areas by asking Albertans how safe they feel in their homes and neighbourhoods and how satisfied they are with policing.

Two other key measures that we will use to access safe communities are the provincial crime rate and the victimization rate. We anticipate that the provincial crime rate will remain higher than the national rate, as has been the case historically. What crime rates tell us is often unclear. For example, Alberta has a crime rate higher than the national average but a victimization rate lower than the national average. This would seem to reflect effective and proactive policing rather than a higher incidence of crime. Further, national rates are based strictly on population, and they're not adjusted for demographics. This should be taken into account when selecting our performance measures. That said, we will strive to achieve a crime rate equal to or lower than the Canadian average and a victimization rate lower than the national average. Our goals related to providing services to victims of crime will be measured by the number of community initiatives we partner with and client satisfaction with our financial benefit program.

We have done considerable work already with our performance measures in the area of offender rehabilitation. Most people who come into contact with our correctional system return to the community in a short time. Therefore, it is important to identify and deal with the root causes of crime and encourage offender rehabilitation and a successful return to the community. We have selected two measures for our goals of facilitating the rehabilitation of offenders. These measures will indicate compliance with court-ordered sanctions and our record of selecting appropriate offenders for participation in work and rehabilitation opportunities in the community.

The financial content of the business plan provides a major increase for funding for essential police service, increased support for victims' programs and children's mental health initiatives, and a consistent level of support for other core programs. The spending profile on the last page of the business plan shows our spending targets of $253 million, $259 million, and $267 million over the next three years. That represents an increase of $25 million, or 11 percent, for 2001-02.

The major component of the increase is $16.4 million for provincial policing. The provincial police service agreement provides RCMP provincial policing in municipal districts, Metis settlements, and every town, village, and summer village that has a population less than 2,500. Alberta pays 70 percent of the provincial police service cost; Canada pays 30. Increased funds will allow Alberta to meet its commitments under the agreements for RCMP service. The Alberta government will spend almost $110 million on policing and crime prevention in 2001-02.

I would like to take the members through some key Solicitor General initiatives. Crime prevention programs are most effective when developed and implemented at the local level. We have budgeted $1.3 million for project grants to community organizations and for contracted crime prevention services provided by aboriginal and other organizations with their respective communities. In addition, an MLA committee has consulted with Albertans to review current policing issues, including potential changes to the Police Act. The committee will present recommendations to help Alberta police forces take on the challenges of the 21st century.

We will continue to implement our provincial strategy to fight organized crime. We will strengthen our partnership with provincial and national justice stakeholders to co-ordinate resources against organized crime.

We will continue to support the federal DNA Identification Act. The ministry will also develop a strategic plan for policing in Alberta in consultation with police executives and police commissions. The process will position Alberta as a Canadian leader and contribute to safer communities.

We heard very clearly from Albertans that victims have an essential role in the judicial process. To achieve this, we will review current legislation from a victim's perspective. Funding for victims' programs and initiatives has increased by $1.9 million. Available grants/funds for community victims' services organizations have increased by 39 percent, to $2 million. The growth in funding permits increases in grants to programs we have helped in the past, and it allows the victims of crime fund to assist other organizations providing victims' services.

Community justice partners have helped develop local response to crime, especially in recent years. Enabling legislation and policy decisions have encouraged this. Through this plan we will restate our commitment to supporting community justice. We intend to work with municipalities, communities, and community agencies to make restorative justice approaches more widely available in Alberta. A key part of the success of restorative justice is that it encourages the victim, the offender, and the community to be directly involved in resolving conflict through dialogue and negotiation.

Youth justice in Alberta focuses on greater co-operation and communication between partnering groups. The Solicitor General is committed to providing appropriate sanctions for youth crime while working with young offenders to help them on the right path. To support this commitment, we'll explore other nontraditional sanctions.

The budget includes a $2.3 million increase related to children's mental health initiatives.

The Solicitor General remains committed to enabling First Nations police services to provide law and order in the community.

With the increasing emphasis on interdepartmental teamwork we will be actively involved in several governmentwide initiative and partnerships with stakeholders. We will be a partner in the aboriginal policy initiative. We will provide our support for the development of governmentwide and department strategies to improve the well-being of aboriginal people in Alberta.

We are also a key participant in a number of children's priorities. This includes child prostitution, youth justice committees, domestic violence, expanded mental health and addiction programs for youth, and staff and offender education initiatives regarding fetal alcohol syndrome.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my comments for the 2001-2004 business plan for the Alberta Solicitor General, and I will be happy to answer any questions regarding the plan.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. [The members sang Happy Birthday] Thank you so much to my colleagues for celebrating my birthday. I really appreciate it. That's very kind and generous of you. I'll try not to be so acerbic now in gratitude to you all.

All right. Here we go. A couple of things came to mind as soon as I looked at these estimates. I understand that we're covering the core businesses of policing, crime prevention, victims' services, and corrections, but when I look at the strategic objectives on page 317 of the business plan, there seems to be a disconnect between what's being said and reality. For example, the first bullet is talking about augmenting "crime prevention initiatives by expanding the Provincial Crime Prevention Strategy and supporting the National Strategy on Community Safety and Crime Prevention." But when I look at the budget itself on page 401, crime prevention increased by only $5,000, so obviously there's not a lot of money that's going into augmenting "crime prevention initiatives by expanding the Provincial Crime Prevention Strategy." What exactly are the specifics, then, on how you plan on doing this?

Then I looked at the second bullet:

A Policing MLA committee has been appointed . . . This committee will consult with interested Albertans and make recommendations for changes to policing and the Alberta Police Act.

But I'm sure that the government has already claimed that those consultations were over in January, prior to when this book was released. Well, the minister is shaking her head, so I know she'll be responding to me at the end. I'm wondering then: are the consultations continuing behind closed doors or with invited stakeholders? And who would that be if we're no longer doing a community consultation? If the consultation has indeed ended, then I'm looking for the recommendations. Where are they, and when can we expect that they would be tabled in the House or released? If the government is following on the number of other initiatives that seem to be waiting to be released until after the session, maybe she can give us an idea of when that might be.

Then I looked at the fourth bullet in which the ministry is talking about developing a strategic plan for policing in Alberta in consultation with police executives and police commissions [providing] a strategic vision for the work of both the Policing MLA committee and the Policing . . . steering committee.

Now, the policing MLA committee was struck in September of 2000. The public submission deadline was December of 2000, and you're just now developing the strategic vision for the committee? Isn't this the reverse of the way it should be, where you develop what you were looking to accomplish and then you go and do it? Was the announcement of the review rushed in an attempt to do what? To get it out and started early for some reason? It got out there ahead of when the ministry was actually developing a strategic plan for it. Did this have something to do with the election? Why do we have the committee in fact having already been out there, the submission deadline long since past, and now we're going to look at a committee or a ministry developing, one presumes over the next three years, between 2001 and 2004, what this committee was supposed to do? So perhaps the minister can clarify that one.

Now, specifically under policing we have increased funding for the RCMP, and both the Premier and the Minister of Justice have signaled that the establishment of a provincial police force is not in the cards. So what other initiatives are being looked at, then, by the ministry? If we've already had the kibosh put on a provincial police force, then what else is this money being used for, or what else is being considered by the department?

Perhaps I could also get the statistics, obviously in writing after the fact – I don't expect the minister to have this off the top of her head. How many new police officers are being anticipated or planned for in Alberta? I'm also interested in what the ratio of citizens to police officers is, and if we can get comparatives on that going back a few years so that we can see in fact if we are decreasing that ratio or increasing that ratio. Is there a specific target that the ministry is looking toward in that relationship between police officers to citizens? What is the ministry anticipating here, or what are they going for?

I've been concerned – and others have certainly brought it up in the House – with an increase in the use of private security forces by a number of different entities including municipal and provincial police services. Now, I would like to hear very specifically the philosophy behind this from the minister. I'm wondering if there is an intent to create a larger market for private security and if that may be coming about because of underfunding or perceived underfunding, certainly by the municipalities. We've seen the example set by the government in underfunding in education leading to private education and in health leading to private health. This is the third area that I'm seeing this in, and I have a great deal of concern around this. So I'd like some specifics about exactly what's anticipated by the ministry.

How much support for this is there? What philosophy is behind it? What strategic directions are being involved here? Do you have performance measurements around how many are being used or how much money would be spent on this? Is there any direction forthcoming to the municipalities or others?

In fact, we have private security now on the Legislature Grounds. There's one security staff here in the building, and there's a separate one on the grounds and a separate one for the Annex. I mean, right here we have an example of where money is being expended on private security firms. We've also had a problem with those private security firms. I can talk to the minister in more detail about that later.

So I'm very interested in exactly where the ministry thinks they're going with this or what they're anticipating. Or if the minister is not in favour of this, then let's hear it, and let's hear what the plan is around this. Is there a "No, we won't go beyond this amount of money or this number of contracts"? Let's hear it.

The minister is inheriting somewhat here from the setup of the Ministry of Justice prior to the election, but I note that there was a strong signal sent out – or perhaps it was just election timing; I don't know – with the Minister of Justice providing funds for a start-up fund for a helicopter for the Edmonton Police Service. I'm wondering: is the province planning additional onetime funding in support of this helicopter? Are they planning longer term ongoing support for this helicopter? Was this an initiative or a philosophy that was being followed by the department that's now been cut off and inherited by this minister? What was the thinking behind the onetime funding on that helicopter, or was it just timing that was important there? I think that's of great interest to the citizens of Edmonton and certainly to the Edmonton city council. So I'm interested in what other plans there are around funding or support, whether it's financial or otherwise, for that helicopter.

I appreciate that the minister is new in a new ministry, but in listening to her opening remarks, it was long on enthusiasm and short on specifics. So I'm looking for quite a few more specifics.

I've already pointed out a number of inconsistencies between what was written in the strategic objectives and in fact what has happened, where they don't always mesh. So can the minister provide additional statistics or information on the extent of organized crime in Alberta? How big an issue is this? Is it small? How much of the budget is the minister looking to dedicate to it?

When I actually look at budget breakdowns – for example, you get page 407 in the estimates book. Basically, you've got five breakdowns and that's it. It's not broken down by any significant subvotes underneath. I have no way of knowing what the minister is expecting to expend out of any one of those given vote lines. So I'm looking for specifics about what programs are anticipated to be paid for out of that vote line, whether there's an increase or a decrease, how it compares to what was happening before. We have a five-line item here and can't get any more information from that.

Back to the extent of organized crime and, specifically, what is the government looking to do around that? That was very much in the news and in the Legislative Assembly a year ago. We're not hearing so much about it now. What programs are there? What is anticipated to be done? I'm not picking up a particular strategic focus out of the objectives that are stated here. Has it just dropped off the edge of the table? There's no interest in it? What's happening?

I'm wondering if the ministry has done anything specific – commissioned any research, done any reports, done a literature review of similar jurisdictions across Canada or other places in the world – around money and gaming, particularly through the casinos. I used to work a lot of casinos for various nonprofit groups, and it was sort of common chatter as you worked in the cash cage that money in fact was being laundered through casinos. People would come in and would buy a bunch of chips. Then they'd go and cash them in at the window and they could have some sort of proof that they had money from the casino, but in fact it was being laundered. What has happened around that whole issue? What's being worked on there? What's being anticipated? How does it fit into your strategic plans? Is there any money under any of these votes that is covering that?

We have a gaming review going on that supposedly has a freeze on activities. That's expected to come off this summer. People are lining up at the gates for more casinos and more possibilities around that. What's the Solicitor General looking at as far as pre-emptive action there? In fact, where's the baseline? Where are we starting from? That's the first information that I'm looking for. What's the minister aware of now? What is our benchmark, and where is the plan to go from there?

I'm wondering if there is a global budget, provincially or cross-departmentally, to combat further expansion of organized crime in Alberta. I mean, we still like to think of ourselves and I think we still conduct ourselves as a fairly open and honest society. I don't know that we leave the doors of our houses open anymore, but we like to think that we could. In some ways I'm wondering if we aren't a bit naive about what's out there and how much is out there and how it affects what's going on. This is a very minor version of this, but certainly when we look at the number of scams and fraudulent schemes that are being run, those are definitely on the increase. I mean, that's a very minor version of what I'm talking about. Nonetheless, what are we doing there? That is a form of organized fraud, if you will. What specific targets are happening there? Those are certainly crimes with victims attached to them.

Still under the heading of organized crime, we've had a number of very unfortunate incidents here in Edmonton and I think in Calgary as well. I'm aware from the communities representing many cultures in my constituency that new Canadians and specifically new Albertans are victimized by organized crime in their community, and it's really important that we have community police officers that are able to communicate with and gain the trust of citizens. I suppose that even if there were to be some sort of undercover or informational gathering, it would be important to have officers who were capable of infiltrating gangs or organizations, so we do need to have a police force that's reflective of the composition of the community. Could the minister give me the benchmark on that?

How many members of the police service in Alberta are members of visible minorities? Do we have a target about what we'd like to get to? What is the ratio that should be expected here? When the minister is signing contracts, working with and negotiating with the individual municipalities that have RCMP contracts, is there any sort of incentive that is being offered to ensure that there is a better composition and reflection of the communities that the officers are working in? I know at one point that was a focus for the Edmonton Police Service, and I did know some folks that got involved because of that, but I haven't seen much of a focus on it recently. I think that's part of the key to working with organized crime, particularly coming from other cultures.

In the health care field we've now come to understand the importance of – what are they called? They're special health care workers that speak different languages, multicultural health brokers. We've come to understand how key they are to taking information about health programs into various ethnic and cultural communities and helping to get the information out, but also they're there to identify problems and help bring those individuals or those families to some kind of assistance that's available. Is there any kind of program that's looking at mirroring the multicultural health brokers? Are we looking at multicultural policing or corrections brokers? Are we looking at providing language training, particularly in the larger centres? Perhaps the minister could supply a list of how many languages are in fact part of the services being offered by the Edmonton Police Service and the Calgary Police Service and other forces that are large enough to be dealing with those kinds of communities.

Now I'm going back to the strategic objectives. Under the enhanced services for victims – and, again, the minister mentioned this in her opening remarks. I'm wondering how long it will take to review legislation from a victim's perspective. I've now heard the government talk about an aboriginal lens that they're going to view legislation and programs through. This is talking about a victim's perspective, like a victim's lens, that they would be viewing legislation from. Can the minister give an indication of how long that will take and if there is a cost associated with it?

I'm aware that I'm coming to the end of my time, so I look forward to a second opportunity to be asking questions to the Solicitor General. I would like to thank the staff that have accompanied her tonight. I appreciate the work they're doing. It's not easy to set up a new department, and I'm sure they're being of great assistance to her and will be of great assistance to me in answering the questions. So thank you for this time, and I will look forward to part two.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to be able to participate in these estimates as well. Once again we have a department which has been split up. Maybe the minister here can address why this split was done and how the government sees it as being more cost-effective to now run two departments. I would be interested in hearing that.

Most of my comments are around the issue of crime and crime as we have been experiencing it in my constituency, Edmonton-Ellerslie, and the greater constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods, which is really southeast Edmonton and is one quadrant of this city. We've had a series of incidents in southeast Edmonton which have brought to all of our attentions the need for a variety of community-based solutions to solving the issue of crime. Some of those I would like the minister to address within the framework of what she's doing with budget dollars in the next year.

Certainly we hear from the municipalities that policing is a big issue. What people in Mill Woods have asked for is a greater police presence. We have a community station there now, but what they really want to see is something akin to the old beat cops. Well, no municipality has the kind of funding these days to supply that kind of service, so police in the area have reached a form of compromise in that they do a lot of their paperwork in their cars now so that they can be on the street, be more visible, and act as a deterrent on the one hand and provide some sense of security and safety for residents on the other hand. So if the minister could address what's happening in terms of the downloading of municipal grants around the issue of policing, we'd be happy to see that.

In our ongoing discussions with people in the police department, street cops and those at higher levels within the department continually ask us to do whatever we can to try to bring the issue of lack of funding to the province's attention and ask them to respond to it, so I am bringing that question and that issue forward. Can they expect more dollars? Why are they being squeezed in the way they are? What can the minister see to solve those issues in terms of municipal funding? So if she could do that, I would be very appreciative of it.

My colleague from Edmonton-Centre talked a little about multicultural policing. I'd like to talk about that too, because of course in southeast Edmonton we have a wide variety of cultures represented. Many of the people in the area are first-generation Canadians whose first language is not English. That can result in a number of challenges in terms of policing. One is the cultural expectations they bring with them around policing. Many of them are very frightened of the police and are resistant to dealing with them at any level. Often there are language barriers, so those are issues too.

I think the Edmonton police department has done a very good job of getting cultural representation within their departments and certainly in then assigning people with appropriate backgrounds to appropriate areas of the city where they can be most helpful. That's been very helpful in Mill Woods; there's no doubt about that. So I would like to applaud them for that and also give credit to the ministry for any responsibility they may have in that regard and for any support they provide, be it intrinsic or actual dollars or support in terms of training. That's really a good tactic and way to go on that.

I know that judging is not part of the mandate of the Solicitor General, but I'd like to speak about it here, Mr. Chairman, with the hope that this minister will lobby her colleague. One of the key issues that is an outcome of the meetings we've had in Mill Woods is around the Young Offenders Act. When we start to peel off the layers on that issue, a great part of the issue is what happens in provincial courts. There seems to be an agenda of warehousing these kids like cattle and running them through the system as fast as they can. What that subsequently results in is deals being made on a constant basis, so the kids are not fulfilling sentences at all. They're back out on the street in hours often. The kids know this. There's no incentive for them to not be involved in crime, and it's very much a problem for people who live in the community.

So if the Solicitor General could talk to the Attorney General and address the issue of what's happening with the prosecutors and judges within the system, that would be excellent, because there is a real issue there. Likely it's underfunding in two areas I would suspect: not enough prosecutors, and secondly, not enough incarceration facilities. Incarceration facilities do come under this minister's mandate, if I am correct. So what's the problem here, Mr. Chairman? Do they need more money? Do they need more facilities? Do they need more outreach programs? Maybe they need all those things, but I think what they also need is more preventative dollars.

The minister in her comments talked a little about crime prevention being most effective at the local level. I certainly agree with her and commend all efforts there. I personally don't think she has enough money assigned at that particular level, not through any fault of her own, but I think that's an issue. My questions to her on that are: does she think she has enough money? What does she think she can actually accomplish in a year? What are her long-term goals in that regard? How is she benchmarking those and measuring success?

The bigger question is prevention in other areas, Mr. Chairman. How is she strategically integrating with other ministers and their departments to provide that kind of preventative support, to provide the linkages that are needed? She knows this issue very well. I know through work she's brought forward in this House and discussions I've had with her over the years that she believes that prevention at many levels is very important. So where are the linkages – I'm sure she has them; either formally or informally, we'd like to know on both fronts – with Children's Services, with social services, with the education system, and with the health system? I think those are all frontline ministries that deal with frontline preventative issues, whether we're talking about teaching parenting skills, providing early intervention in the home or in the school, identifying ongoing or potential crises within the education system, identifying kids at risk from drugs or family situations, and crisis intervention.

We have serious social problems within families because of addictions: gambling, alcohol, drugs. So how are those being addressed? What happens with these kids once they get into care? If you read the Children's Advocate's report, you would see that there are many issues outstanding with children in care at this time, many of them directly relating to this minister's responsibilities and some of them connected to other areas. So how is that working in terms of integration? How much money is dedicated to that kind of prevention? Is there a kind of global working group that this minister's knitting together with these other ministries to try and actually seriously address this issue? Put the dollars up front where they're needed so that we can save them at the incarceration stage, which is the output of her responsibilities. She has a strong input responsibility, and I believe she also has a strong enough will to pursue this kind of agenda. It would be very forward moving, and it would be something that many people throughout the province could applaud if they actually saw it put in place.

So those are primarily the concerns I have with this ministry. I think they're very important. They're fundamental to our success as a society and to her success, ultimately in the long run needing fewer dollars. Let's see some of that money well spent up front. Let's see some successes benchmarked and measured. Let's see the outcomes from them. I look forward to hearing about her integrated activities on the prevention side with other ministries.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and make a few comments in regards to the Department of the Solicitor General and also to congratulate her on her position with the new ministry and thank the department for being out tonight.

MS CARLSON: I forgot to do that. Could you do that on my behalf?

MR. BONNER: Yes. I'd also thank the department and the minister on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. She forgot to do that and asked me to do that on her behalf.

One of the areas that I wanted to focus on I know is a concern of the department and many people here in Alberta. When we look at planning in Alberta, particularly what's coming down the road in the way of demographics, certainly our population in Alberta is aging. In that regard, I think that will certainly lower our crime rate. As well, when I'm looking here in the business plans, on page 314 I notice that "Canada's Aboriginal population is growing twice as fast as the country's total population and it is proportionally younger." I think that when we do look at crime statistics, we will see that through all segments of the population crime amongst younger people is higher. So, again, if my assumption is correct in that regard, then certainly when we look at the aboriginal population, this would also hold true there.

I also notice here in the business plans that between 2000 and 2011, the Aboriginal population is projected to increase by 22%, versus 12% for Alberta's total population. In Alberta, Aboriginal people represent approximately 6% of the total population and 36% of the prison population.

I know that a major goal of the minister and the department is to reduce that, but in looking at that and looking at public security – and I'm referring first of all in the budget to line 2.2.3, First Nations policing – I see here that even with this huge increase in the population of aboriginal communities, the net expense for 2000-2001 was 4,936,000 and the net expense for 2001-2002 is only $5,048,000. So we have here in the neighbourhood of roughly a hundred thousand dollar increase, yet we have a huge, huge increase in population. As well, when we are looking at the demographics, we certainly see that this is a younger population.

Therefore, what we have to do, then, Mr. Chairman, is wonder why we have such a limited amount here in First Nations policing, yet we do have an increase in younger people, and as well we have an absolutely unacceptable percentage of 36 percent of the people in prison being aboriginal. So, again, it is a problem, and I know that in the final Alberta Summit on Justice report of April 1999, the aboriginal and the Metis communities did make a number of recommendations where they felt that programs could be changed, which would certainly reflect more of their needs, and these programs would be tailor-made and focused to their particular groups.

I see that one of the recommendations on First Nations, Metis and Inuit justice was that as an alternative relating to civil matters or disputes within the Metis Nation of Alberta, the Metis Judiciary Council be empowered, operated and recognized by Alberta Justice as an alternative (in-house matters) to the courts, within the guidelines established by the Metis Nation of Alberta.

Also, here under that same list of recommendations is recommendation 4, that "equitable funding be provided to all police services across Alberta." Now, when I see a statement like that, what I would like the minister to clarify for me is: is there equitable funding for First Nations, Metis, and Inuit justice as with other police services across the province? If she could please clarify that when she is providing us with the answers to our questions.

As well, I notice on page 402 – again I'm referring here to line 3.4.2, and this has to do with native court workers. I see that our estimate for net expense for 2001-2002 is $1,920,000, and for the year 2000-2001 this was $1,868,000. So we have roughly a $50,000 increase there. Yet in looking at the recommendations, the whole idea here is not to focus more on the courts but to develop programs which are community based and more available and less intimidating to our aboriginals.

I also notice here, Mr. Chairman, that under the First Nations, Metis, and Inuit justice they want more funding allocated "through the Aboriginal Justice Initiatives Unit to better enable settlements to access federal justice initiatives." So, again, I would think that if the federal program has something to offer which enhances what we are presently doing here in the province, then every effort should be made to allow these groups to access funding. Certainly I don't see under what I've looked at in the budget so far those funds being available. There has to be perhaps some shifting in priorities in the budget that will free up money for this particular recommendation.

As well, I notice that one of the recommendations in the final Alberta Summit on Justice report for the Metis Settlements of Alberta is to "provide rehabilitation and support programs that are geared specifically toward Metis incarcerated in provincial jails." Again, if the minister could please tell us what work has been done on this recommendation so far, what is going to be provided specifically towards those Metis who are incarcerated in provincial jails, and when they can expect to see these support programs initiated.

Another recommendation here was to "increase funding for Native alcohol and addiction treatment programs." I don't seem to be able to find that anywhere in here, and again just a huge, huge concern of those communities. Certainly when we look at the issue of fetal alcohol syndrome, we do need some intensive programs to help children who have been subjected to fetal alcohol syndrome to get them on the right track and to keep them there.

Under recommendation 6 another recommendation was to "increase funding for Aboriginal justice programming." Again, the whole idea here is that aboriginal people will be allowed to develop more and more of their justice programs, keep them closer at hand, and be more in control of what is happening with those programs but not only with those programs. What they also want to do is identify specific programming and servicing dollars for aboriginal peoples. So those are some of the concerns I have under recommendation 6.

I just want to finish off with recommendation 8: "The Treaty 6

First Nations of Alberta recommendations be supported." I want to focus in and zero in on one here: "The development of restorative justice initiatives through consultations with First Nations." These of course would include "community-based peacemaker/mediator programs." It would also establish "treaty-based youth and adult healing facilities to reflect First Nations differences." Their third recommendation was that they would have "community-based diversion programs."

So if the minister would please tell us, then, at what point these recommendations are at this particular time, if these communities, the aboriginal communities, the Metis communities, can look forward to a huge shift in their programs, in their financial support. Certainly this figure of 36 percent, as I mentioned earlier, is too high. For the benefit of all society we would like to see that figure much more representative of the total population.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat for now and listen to other hon. members.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise to address the estimates of the Solicitor General. I would just note, although it's clearly a done deal, our continuing concern with the division of these departments. Some of my comments with respect to costs in the previous estimates I think could apply here. Although I will admit that the division of these departments between the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General is a more traditional type of division, the additional costs are something that remain a concern.

As I understand it, the core responsibilities of the new Solicitor General ministry are policing and crime prevention, victims' services, and corrections. I have two questions pertaining to policing. One is the growing inequity between those parts of the province that depend on the RCMP for policing services and those cities that have their own municipal police forces. The province provides a greater level of support to those areas policed by the RCMP than it does to those areas that are municipally policed. To correct this imbalance, until the mid-1990s the province provided policing grants to those municipalities with their own police forces.

Over half of Albertans live in communities with municipal police forces, and as recently as fiscal year 1992-93 over $33 million in policing grants was provided to those municipalities to offset policing costs. Is consideration being given to reinstating policing grants, and if not, why not? Reinstating municipal policing grants is particularly important because of cost pressures facing all police services. The government is responding to these pressures by increasing funding for RCMP policing by almost 20 percent this year, thereby increasing the disparities between those municipalities policed by the RCMP and those municipalities with their own police service.

In the same connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to deal a little bit with the whole issue of leadership of policing in the province and would like to talk a little bit about community policing as an excellent way in which to conduct policing and suggest that we need strong leadership from the minister in order to maintain and strengthen community policing in Alberta. Particularly Edmonton but also to a certain degree Calgary were the first exponents of community policing and for a number of years were considered leaders in policing in the entire North American continent. People came from around North America and even from Europe to visit the police in Edmonton and in Calgary to learn how things were being done.

Community policing has been very successful. It has reduced costs. It has had a very strong impact on rates of crime. It has enhanced public confidence in the police, and it has reduced fear of crime in the community. It's based on Peel's principles, and the first one of those is that the police are the community and the community is the police. It's based on problem solving. It's based on the principle that instead of going to the same location eight or nine different times to respond to a call for assistance, you go in and work with the community and with the people in the neighbourhood to resolve the issue that is resulting in the calls for service in the first place. As a result, it has the impact of eliminating those sources of calls for police service, reducing crime, and involving the community in problem solving to reduce demand for police services and to increase public safety.

There has been in recent years a serious erosion of community policing in Alberta. I have a certain knowledge of the situation in Edmonton, and I think it is a matter of very serious concern. So I think that it would be beneficial if the department would use its resources in order to promote and support community policing.

The traditional macho police culture has reasserted itself in the police force as far as I can tell. That's my assessment. We're now not inviting people from North America to study community policing in Edmonton, but we are studying the California model. So we've reverted now to American styles of policing, and it is a trend that I think is very dangerous. We see more things like helicopters and tasers and more focus on the use of tactical squads.

I need to comment a little bit, Mr. Chairman, on disturbing recent events, including police shootings here in Edmonton, all of which are a matter of serious concern and indicate to me at least that we ought to be very concerned about the direction of policing as it is now. I will give you an example. I know that police are now looking at the use of tactical squads and the training of tactical squads in schools in case of an incident that could occur. At the same time, the number of schools that are served by community resource officers is being reduced. I would ask: what is the best way to secure the safety of students in schools other than having police officers in the schools who know the children, who know the kids and know what's going on? They can take preventive action in advance of an incident rather than having to send a tactical squad into schools after a very unfortunate and terrible incident has already occurred.

So I believe that action is needed on the part of this department and this minister to show leadership in Alberta in community policing. I would suggest a number of things, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I think the government could provide funding for research, education, and training of police officers in Alberta in community policing and further develop the community policing model. I would suggest that we establish a centre of excellence here in Alberta in community policing so that we once again become the centre of advanced police procedures and techniques.

Also, we need to deal with antigang activity, and the province needs to support police forces in that regard. I give an example of how gang activity has worked in the communities that I've represented. A few years ago we had a fairly notorious youth gang developing called the North Side Boys. The police got involved with them, and they made a number of arrests.

What they did that was proactive I think was the important thing, Mr. Chairman: they got involved with the young people who were most at risk of joining the gang. They organized things such as basketball tournaments. They raised money to take kids to Calgary to play in a basketball tournament. They basically intervened with the most at-risk children to prevent them from becoming victims of the gang. As a result, that gang is almost completely broken up.

You contrast that with the approach of putting these young people in an incarcerated situation, where all they're going to do is come into contact with much more experienced criminals, be recruited to more serious gangs, and come out, as they almost all will do, as much more experienced, hardened criminals. That approach only gives a little bit of temporary and illusory protection from gang activity. So a community policing model is essential, in my view, to deal with gang activity.

I think the government should take a look at providing additional assistance to help police with urban aboriginal programs. I see that there is a good focus on First Nations' policing, but we need to address the issues of urban aboriginals and the issues that police need to address around that.

I think there's a very strong role that can be played, also by Community Development and Children's Services, in developing a comprehensive model of community policing and establishing it as government policy and establishing it as the model of policing that the Solicitor General is going to take a lead in in this province in order to achieve all of the goals of community policing which are outlined in Peel's principles, which I believe are still printed on the program of the graduation of at least Edmonton city police graduates.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. I think it's important that the Solicitor General address the issues of large urban cities in her portfolio and that the estimates ought to reflect the urgent need to deal with emerging problems in some of the larger cities, not just additional money for rural policing.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

MS BLAKEMAN: Good point. Actually, just before I lose that thought, one of my colleagues has just raised the information that was in the newspaper this morning that in some jurisdictions in Edmonton the 911 calls weren't able to be answered and have cars dispatched. Now, I think part of my issue here is not a complaint about the Edmonton Police Service but once again a notation that the government no longer supplies funding through to the municipalities of Edmonton and Calgary for their policing. I know that's a real struggle for them.

Just a couple of other points that I wanted to go over in the few minutes that we've got left here. Under the community justice approaches that are noted on page 318, under the strategies here I'm just wondering: what is the status of the community justice initiative? The minister mentioned it in her opening remarks. Exactly what's going on, and where are we with this? Also, a question about whether the restorative justice programs will be expanded. Is that anticipated in this year, or is it anticipated in the next year or both? What's the scoop here?

Offender labour. It's noted that "over one million hours of offender labour [is] provided annually to non-profit community groups." Are we able to get a breakdown of which community groups and the number of hours that are provided to each of them? I'm also looking to find out whether this offender labour is also provided to government departments or to those providing contracted-out work to government. So if I could get something in writing answering those two questions.

I'm interested in the cost of operating the community service programs. Also, how many hours of community service were logged last year, and how many does the budget anticipate will be logged this year?

I'd also appreciate an update on the Calgary domestic violence court. I recognize that that hasn't been running very long, but you must be monitoring it fairly closely. What are the impressions or any statistics that have been gathered thus far?

Youth justice is, again, on page 318. Will the province be increasing its share of the funding in this budget for this year, or do they anticipate next year or both? Again, what's being done here?

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Very quickly looking at the performance measurements that are noted on page 320. For the victimization rate, this is measuring the number of Albertans that "have reported being a victim of crime." Do we have any estimate to go on about how many crimes are going unreported? An equivalent example is with the women's shelters. We know how many were served by the shelter, and then there's some idea of how many were turned away by the shelter. So how many people are we not servicing? Is there any measurement that the department has used or is looking to develop to use around this one?

Under corrections intervention do we have any measure of recidivism after completion of the program? I would think this is the one of more concern to the public.

I know that this department has now been sort of created again. Having had the Solicitor General and Attorney General put together in the mid-90s, now they've been split apart again. I'm curious: was there no performance measurement that existed under the Justice department that could have been transferred to the Solicitor General? Almost everything in here is a new measure, and I'm curious about that.

How much new funding is expected to be received from the federal government under the new Youth Criminal Justice Act? Is it correct that Alberta is going to be a big winner in this? How much is expected?

Finally, the ministry support services budget. I noticed when I went back and looked at the '99-2000 Justice annual report that there was about $11.3 million total on ministry services. Now, when I look at the Justice and Attorney General department this year, it's at $12.5 million and the Solicitor General ministry support services is at $5.7 million. So we're now looking at $18.2 million for the running of the minister's and the deputy minister's offices, which is a significant increase of some $7 million. What was the benefit that was anticipated by splitting up these two departments?

In this instance and the instance where we split off Seniors from Community Development and one other example where departments were split, in each case it seems to be costing us between $5 million and $10 million for the running of the new ministers' and the deputy ministers' offices, which seems like a substantial amount of money to me. If I could get an explanation on what exactly that money is being spent on and whether this was in fact anticipated. I certainly wouldn't want to think that this was some kind of make-work project, but I do have to start asking the question when I've seen it happen three times in these budget debates.

So those are the questions that I had, and my timing is perfect tonight. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I'd call on the hon. Solicitor General for her concluding remarks.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate hearing all of what the opposition has to say, and I indicated earlier that we will respond to them in writing.

I'd like to, if I can, please, introduce some people that are in the gallery with me, some troopers that have had an early morning and are still here tonight. The Deputy Solicitor General is Jim Nichols, my deputy minister. Arnold Galet, the assistant deputy minister, known to me more as the big guy. Robert Dunster is the assistant deputy minister for public security. Dan Mercer is the assistant deputy minister for strategic services. Bronwyn Shoush is the director of aboriginal justice. Jean Olynyk is director of communications, who's been busy for the last couple of weeks with all the issues we've been dealing with. Rita Lauterbach is the executive assistant to Jim Nichols. Debbie Malloy is my executive assistant, who is also celebrating her birthday today. I'm pleased they're here, and I appreciate them putting in a long day and sitting here listening intently to the questions that have been put forward.

I appreciate what the opposition has said tonight. Thank you.

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to the Members of the Legislative Assembly a very important and dedicated group of people who have done good service for the province of Alberta: the Unified Family Court Task Force. First I should mention that they are accompanied today by the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court of Alberta, Judge Ernie Walter. In addition to the members in this Chamber, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who chaired the task force, and the members for Leduc and Calgary-Montrose, the additional task force members who made such a wonderful contribution are the Hon. Justice Marguerite Trussler of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta; the hon. Assistant Chief Judge of the Provincial Court, family and youth division, Jan Franklin; Michael Benson of the Native Counseling Services of Alberta; and Rhonda Ruston, a family law lawyer and a bencher of the Law Society of Alberta from Lethbridge. They are joined by Geoff Ho from the Department of Justice, who was the secretary and resource person to the committee.

All members of the task force have now been suitably acknowledged by the Legislative Assembly, and I'd just like to publicly and on the record say thank you for the incredible work that they have done for us.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly His Excellency Ingvard Havnen, the ambassador of the kingdom of Norway. He is accompanied by Mrs. Elisabeth Havnen and Mr. Roar Tunglund, the honorary consul of the kingdom of Norway here in Edmonton, and his wife, Mrs. Marilyn Tunglund. I'd ask that they rise, please, and be recognized by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the Member of Parliament for the constituency of St. Albert, Mr. John Williams. He is accompanied today by Mr. Syed Yusuf Hossain, the controller and Auditor General of Bangladesh; Mr. Syed Sajedul Karim, the controller general of defence in Bangladesh; and Mr. M.A. Sabur, the first councillor of commercial in Ottawa. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask them to please remain standing and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon I introduced the members of the Unified Family Court Task Force. Back in March of last year we struck a task force to recommend how access to the courts could be improved for those having family law problems. The task force has come back with 17 recommendations to improve our justice system for family law litigants, including the establishment of a unified family court in Alberta. I'd like to table the requisite copies of that report for the benefit of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies that I'd like to table with you from Palliser regional schools regarding the Bill 16 provisions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies from the Grande Yellowhead regional division No. 35 on Bill 16.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from Gordon McIntosh, a resident of Edmonton-Ellerslie. He is concerned about violence in the community and would like all levels of government to work together to find a solution to this problem.

The second tabling is five copies of a letter from the University of Alberta Student Liberal Association. This group is concerned about the lack of a properly functioning parliamentary democracy in Alberta. They offer several suggestions about how this situation could be remedied.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a memorandum from the Alberta environmental protection department dated July 24, 1995, concerning security bonds in place at Hub Oil.

The second one is a city of Calgary memorandum from December 7, 1993, also discussing the same issue.

The third tabling today is a letter from Hub Oil Company Ltd. dated February 6, 1996, to Alberta environmental protection, and in here is a discussion on the decommissioning costs of $500,000, that it's an excessive fee.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Family Ties Association in Lethbridge, Alberta. They are expressing concern about the recent announcement by the Sun Country child and family services board proposing that 8 to 10 percent of funding will need to be cut from the business plan submitted to Children's Services.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling is from the Alberta Society for Pension Reform. This would be a membership form for all retired members of the Alberta teachers' retirement fund, the public service pension plan, and the local authorities pension plan.

My second tabling is also from the Alberta Society for Pension Reform. This is a cost analysis of how much pensions for these three sectors are going to be reduced for the lifetime of the pensions due to changes in the Pension Fund Act.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter I received from Mr. Keith Brown of High River several weeks ago. Mr. Brown is urging the government not to grant permission to log, run a sour gas pipeline, or allow for oil development in the Bighorn wildland park north and south of the David Thompson highway.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it is a copy of information from the Alberta Wilderness Association pertaining to the Meridian dam proposal.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure and an honour for me today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 43 very bright and pleasant French immersion students from the great high school of Lindsay Thurber in Red Deer. They are accompanied by their two teachers, M. Carl Malenfant and M. Ron Alleyne. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm greetings of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure for me to be able to stand in my place today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature a friend of many in this Legislature, in fact a former colleague who served from the 18th to the 21st Legislatures. He's currently chairman and president of Webber Academy, and of course I'd be speaking about Dr. Neil Webber. He is accompanied by approximately 20 students, who frankly looked very, very smart when we were doing the pictures because they were all in class uniforms today, also extremely well behaved. He's accompanied also by Miss Janice Chan, a teacher, and parent helpers Mrs. Barbara Marshall and Mr. Ed Smid. I would ask that they rise in the public gallery and that we accord them the warm welcome we accord our visitors.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a really good friend of mine, Mr. Bob Anderson. Bob served as a councillor for the MD of Rocky View for a number of years. He is currently on our General Insurance Council, but more importantly than that, he's also a member of my Progressive Conservative Association board and helped us to achieve a 79.98 percent victory plurality. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, you must be thinking that my timing is impeccable. As fires are raging in your constituency, I am pleased to rise and introduce some 40 junior forest wardens who are visiting our building today. These fine people have planted over 80,000 trees to commemorate the 80th anniversary of the Alberta Research Council. They are today accompanied by Mr. Bob Young, the provincial co-ordinator, and Mr. Ernst Klaszus, chief warden. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 32 bright students from the Wetaskiwin composite high school who are visiting the Legislature today. They are accompanied by three adults: Miss Alva Holliday, Mr. Doug Tarney, and Miss Paula Marshall. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise at this time and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce someone who I feel is a true Alberta success story. After finding herself on her own, she scrimped and saved and went back to school, and within a month she will be graduating as an RN. I'd like to introduce to you and to the rest of the Assembly Ms Sharla White. I believe she's in the public gallery. Would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Hazardous Waste Inspections

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment recently conducted spot inspections of 27 metal-plating companies in Edmonton and found that over half violated environmental regulations. These spot inspections were only conducted after one company was found to have been leaking cancer-causing agents for over six years. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why did it take his department over six years to respond to an Edmonton company leaking chromium into the ground and storm sewers?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. I'm very pleased to talk about this program, Mr. Speaker. We started last fall with a program of education as to how the plating industry right across this province should handle some of the chemicals that they use in their industry, and it was a very well-received program. It's our philosophy that we should provide educational opportunities first to let people know what they should be doing and then go on and enforce the laws as stated.

MS CARLSON: Can the minister explain why information on the proper storing of hazardous waste, or his education program, by metal-plating companies was sent out only after the company had been found to be leaking chromium for over six years?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, once we find the problem, we know there is a problem. We realize that this is a big industry in Alberta, and we felt we needed to educate the whole industry, not just deal with one particular company, and that's what we did.

MS CARLSON: Then, Mr. Speaker, can the minister explain why a problem has to occur first before the department will conduct spot inspections on the storage of waste? We have many problems in this province.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not true. We conduct spot inspections all the time. We do spot inspections on water treatment facilities. We do spot inspections on all sorts of industries across this province.

I would like to point out that she said in her preamble that about 50 percent of the industries were found to be in violation, but most of these, Mr. Speaker, were minor violations that were readily and easily correctable. There was one major case that we have dealt with and will continue to deal with.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: can the minister tell us whether any spot inspections are being conducted on metal-plating companies outside of Edmonton at this time?

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have conducted spot inspections all the way to Fort McMurray.

MS CARLSON: Will the minister tell us if the department is conducting unannounced spot inspections of waste storage at industrial sites in Alberta as a matter of policy now?

DR. TAYLOR: We will continue to conduct spot inspections in all sorts of industries in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. But that wasn't my question. My question is: will Alberta Environment continue these inspections beyond this current round of inspections and conduct them as a matter of policy?

DR. TAYLOR: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Hub Oil Company Ltd.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a government of Alberta news release on August 8, 2000, the government announced that it was charging Hub Oil under the Occupational Health and Safety Act for the 1999 explosion that killed two men and injured five others. That news release noted: "The matter remains under investigation by Alberta Human Resources and Employment, Alberta Environment and Calgary Police Service." My questions this afternoon are to the Premier. Have additional charges been laid or will additional charges be laid under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and/or the Criminal Code?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can honestly say that I really don't know, and perhaps either the hon. Minister of Environment or the hon. Solicitor General can shed some light on the two questions that were asked.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I can comment, Mr. Speaker, on part of that question. I can read exactly the charge that was laid.

On or about August 9, 1999, in the City of Calgary, in the Province of Alberta, [Hub Oil] being an employer, did unlawfully fail to ensure that all equipment used on a work site, to wit: the Number 2 Distillation Unit, Number 2 Heater, heat exchangers and all associated piping, pumps and vessels, were maintained in a condition that would not compromise the health or safety of workers using the equipment, contrary to section . . .

And it goes into a lot of information on the sections. I will ask the Minister of Justice to respond on any further charges.

THE SPEAKER: No. We're going to move on here. If there are charges laid, this is public information.

The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Environment: is the minister stating that in the almost two years since the explosion nothing else has come from the other investigations?

Thank you.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, a lot has come from investigations. This particular case is in the courts, and I can't comment further. Perhaps the Minister of Justice would like to comment.

THE SPEAKER: He can't either.

The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question, then, is to the Minister of Justice. Why did Alberta Justice in August 2000 support only one charge being laid under the Occupational Health and Safety Act? No other charges, just the one.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't directly answer that because the question of what charges are laid and what charges are proceeded with is in the discretion of the prosecutors who have access to the investigating file and the evidence that they know they can put before the court. What I can tell the House is that prosecutions as they go forward have to meet a test, which is essentially the test in all cases, which is: do we have sufficient evidence which, if proved, would result in a conviction?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to show its ignorance and neglect of Alberta teachers' concerns. It has played cruel games with thousands of teachers by raising expectations and then suddenly crushing them on the budget day with a 6 percent salary increase over two years. My questions are to the Premier. Given the deep disappointment that has been expressed by teachers, will the Premier reconsider his government's decision to impose this unfair policy of wage controls on Alberta teachers?

1:50

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this government has treated teachers with neither ignorance nor neglect. As I've said in this Legislature, we value our teachers and we respect our teachers, to the extent that a line item was put in the budget guaranteeing the teachers of this province at least a 6 percent wage increase. That is, to say the least, a very unusual but very generous gesture relative to the compensation of teachers in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Premier will benefit from a reality check. Let me make a challenge to him. If I make all the arrangements necessary, will the Premier commit to joining me in spending one whole day with a classroom teacher to get a firsthand look at how hard public school teachers work in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's the hon. leader of the third party who needs a reality check. The reality of the situation is that the teachers of this province are guaranteed at least a 6 percent wage increase. I can think of no other segment of the public sector that has been given that kind of guarantee.

Relative to spending a day in the classroom, Mr. Speaker, I would venture to guess that every member of this caucus, perhaps the Liberal caucus, and what remains of the ND caucus has spent time in the classrooms. It's part of our duty, our responsibility, to visit schools from time to time. I know that I've had the opportunity on a number of occasions to attend schools and speak to classes, and I'm sure that all my colleagues have had the same opportunity. You know, I can't recall visiting a school where I met a mad teacher or where the students weren't being given quality education and where there wasn't enthusiasm for the school and pride in the school. So we've all been there.

Now, I can't speak for the hon. leader of the third party, whether he's been there, but I'm sure that every member of this caucus has been in a classroom to enjoy the students and to appreciate the quality of education they are being given.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has turned my challenge down, I wonder: what does the Premier have to fear from spending one whole day with a schoolteacher?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have just said that virtually every member of this caucus spends some time in the classroom, and I spend most of my day with many teachers. I think there are maybe 12 or 13 teachers in our own caucus, so I have the opportunity of spending a lot of time and quality time with a number of quality teachers. They are still teachers. They'll always be teachers. I look at the hon. Minister of Community Development. I look at the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I look at the hon. Minister of Environment. You know, I myself taught in the vocational system. I look at the hon. minister of aboriginal affairs. I look at the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I mean, it goes on and on and on.

Electricity Rates

MR. McFARLAND: Through you to the Minister of Energy I have a question, Mr. Speaker. Until September 2000 a rural power customer in Little Bow and other parts of southern Alberta would receive a power bill every two months from TransAlta. If there was a question or a problem, they simply picked up the phone and called TransAlta. Today, after at least two name changes on the billing letterhead, some of these same constituents are confused and upset with the quality, the accuracy, and sometimes the abruptness of utility company staff in responding to their inquiries. To the Minister of Energy: why should the utility company staff tell irrigation customers in my area and other parts of the province that they don't qualify for the 3.6 cent per kilowatt-hour rebate under the regulated rate option?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset of a very good question that as the new competitive market model came into place, TransAlta sold its customers to Utilicorp, which then sold the customers from Utilicorp to EPCOR. In fact, these three companies did not do a good job of customer relations, and I think they have to look closely at the marketing equation, the fundamental business equation, where the customer comes first.

Mr. Speaker, the balancing pool allocation regulation does set out the amounts of payments to both residential and nonresidential customers for the year 2001. All residential customers are eligible for a payment of $40 a month in 2001, and nonresidential customers receive 3.6 cents per kilowatt-hour. Farmers, in fact, receive both of the credits. The residential versus nonresidential criteria are set out in the regulation and available on the Energy web site.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second question to the same minister: why should utility company staff tell some of my constituents that, quote, power prices aren't going to fall below 11 cents per kilowatt, so get used to it, end of quote?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. In fact, the rate has been set at 11 cents for 2001. There is an opportunity for customers of the regulated rate option provider to approach the Energy and Utilities Board, because there is a process of review under way, and argue that the soft price cap is either too high or too low.

It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to provide accurate forecasts of market prices. However, the weighted average for the month of May to date is 9.4 cents and the 30-day rolling average is 10.7 cents per kilowatt-hour. So in fact maybe we could just stop for a minute at the customer level, take that extra time as a customer relations representative and be able to put the accurate information in front of the customer and not use the age-old phrase: I don't know, but I think it's the government's fault.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final question on behalf of my constituents is: how many cents per kilowatt markup are these utility companies making on the initial 11-cent energy charge?

MR. SMITH: This is under analysis and is only completed under the regulated rate option with the approval of the regulator, who determines if costs are reasonable and prudent. There are 22 retailers interested in doing business. We need to see the retail market increase in size. We also need to I think take a further and closer look at the other charges, not only directly in the cost of electricity but the rate classification, load profiles, administration costs, all that ancillary basket of charges that in fact might be conceivably loaded onto the charges at the consumer level.

Mr. Speaker, as you get into the early sides of a new competitive market model, both from the department level and from a regulator level, we're looking at the issue very, very closely.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

2:00 Underground Tank Remediation

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question today is to the Minister of Environment. Is it the policy of this government that polluters should pay to clean up their own mess?

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is the policy of this government or of this department that polluters do pay in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that the government supports a concept of polluters paying, why is your department subsidizing the cleanup of industrial contamination through the underground tank program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The underground petroleum tank program, the remediation work that's going on, is an $80 million fund, and I can assure this House and all Albertans that there are no free rides in this province for anyone. To supplement what the previous minister had commented, we are committed to remediation to make Alberta and continue to have Alberta as the best environmental community and province in this country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the $70 million for underground petroleum tank remediation only for oil companies and businesses to clean up their property, or will Albertans who are living on contaminated land have access to this money also?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The priority of this government has been dealing with a variety of remediation actions. One of them, first and foremost, is on orphaned sites that have remained unattended, and I am pleased to say to this House that the province is dealing with those orphaned sites in a very productive manner. The stakeholders we're working with are very pleased with the environmental remediation that we're taking action on as we speak.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Drought Assistance

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Bonnyville-Cold

Lake constituency has experienced very dry climatic conditions for several years. Water dugouts that store water for cattle are dry or nearly dry, and local streams, rivers, and lake water levels continue to recede. Farmers are presently replenishing the water in their dugouts if they are close enough to these local rivers and lakes. My question is to the Minister of Environment. In the Cold Lake water basin I am aware that there are industrial use moratoriums for drawing water from lakes and rivers. Mr. Minister, are there similar moratoriums for agricultural use of water?

DR. TAYLOR: No. At the present time, Mr. Speaker, there are no moratoriums for agricultural use in the Cold Lake basin, which includes not just Cold Lake but a number of lakes in that basin. We also have that lake and that whole basin managed on a long-term plan. It's called the Cold Lake/Beaver River long-term water management plan, and it is managed on that long-term plan. This plan does set limits, however – we must know that it does set limits – at which once lakes fall below a certain limit, then water withdrawals will not be allowed.

This is a very serious situation. We had a serious situation in Okotoks just today, Mr. Speaker, and yesterday about water in the Sheep River being at a level so that really Okotoks is in short supply of water. Now it's back up and flowing today, but with these dry conditions in the province – it's three years in 130 years, I'm told, that these conditions have occurred – we are going to face serious situations around this province for water supply this year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the minister of agriculture. If farmers are having difficulties filling their dugouts by pumping from local sources because of reasons such as distance, are there any plans in place to help farmers with a water hauling program?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we have offered water hauling programs in the past. It is one of the options that certainly we are looking at. When it appeared this spring that there could be a drought condition in this province, the Premier made a commitment, as did in fact this government caucus, to monitor the situation and to respond appropriately. Certainly what we have been doing, with the help of my colleagues in the House, is talking with farmers and ranchers from across this province, trying to get the intelligence from them as to what program we might put in place that would be the most helpful to them. Up to this point we have provided the $3 an acre on pasture, which can be used certainly for that. We have provided $10.29 an acre on cultivated land, which producers are free to use in any manner they see fit.

We're going to continue to talk with them and try to put something forward that would alleviate the problem in the majority of the areas of this province. But I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have not ever seen, at least not in many, many years, dry conditions that cover as much of this province as we do today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Gaming Expansion

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Gaming claims that while they review their regulations and policies, a freeze is in effect in gambling expansion. Yet while this freeze is in place, talks are being held regarding the proposed development of a new casino in Sherwood Park. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. Has the department given the Sherwood Park casino developers some sort of indication that gambling facilities will be expanding in this province after the review is complete?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December of 1999 the previous minister put a freeze on gaming expansion in the province, and since that point in time there has been a gaming policy review undertaken. It's anticipated that that review will be completed this summer and government will be making its policy known in that regard.

As it relates to the Sherwood Park matter, it's my understanding that there is a group that has been working in Sherwood Park with the municipality there, dealing with regular municipal matters. There has been no contact with the Ministry of Gaming relative to that particular site. We are not taking applications, and no offers or indications have been given to that group or any group with respect to expansion in the province at some future time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Can the minister tell us how many applications his department has received which are currently on hold for either new gambling facilities or for the expansion of existing ones?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in the previous answer, there has been a moratorium with respect to expansion since December of 1999. Accordingly, the ministry and the AGLC are not receiving applications.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. When the freeze is lifted, will the minister commit that any increase in the number or size of gambling facilities in the province will be met with a corresponding increase in funding for gambling addictions?

MR. STEVENS: I think it's fair to say that a gambling addiction is one of those things that this government takes very seriously. In fact, the AADAC budget is funded entirely through the Alberta lottery fund, and some $3.7 million for this fiscal year is being put into gambling addiction problems specifically. We continue to see that as a very serious issue, and this particular minister is committed to ensuring that the appropriate funding goes to gambling addiction matters.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Emergency Hospital Services

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans who have had experience with our hospital emergency rooms feel that service is slow and waiting times are long and frustrating, and many of them end up leaving without seeing a doctor. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister advise the House and Albertans as to what plans are in place to shorten waiting lists in our hospital emergency rooms?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should say that I recognize that waiting in an emergency room can be a frustrating experience. But I have raised this subject with regional health authorities, and I believe sincerely that they're working hard, that they're putting plans in place to improve services in emergency rooms and reduce waiting times.

As an example, one of the things that regional health authorities are doing is improving their emergency triage systems and the protocols to ensure that those individuals who are most in need of attention on an urgent basis get that attention first. They're also implementing mental health triage and assessment tools so that those individuals who have mental health problems receive the care that they need.

Here in this city, Mr. Speaker, the 24-hour phone advice line known as Capital Health Link has provided an excellent service, in my opinion, that allows individuals who have difficulty to be able to contact a registered nurse 24 hours a day and avoid unnecessary emergency room visits.

Also, Mr. Speaker, on the capital side a number of emergency rooms throughout the province are being upgraded and expanded to meet not only the current but also future needs.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the initiatives that are under way to address waiting times in emergency rooms across the province. We will of course continue to work with regional health authorities in this regard to improve the service further.

2:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Since many people visiting emergency rooms do not really require hospital care, would the minister support the opening of more 24-hour clinics in order to alleviate pressure on our hospital emergency rooms?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, this may in fact be a very good suggestion to be applied in some cases. Certainly trying to deal with the issue of the use of emergency rooms for non-urgent needs is a challenge that we're always trying to address throughout the system.

Regional health authorities are taking different and various approaches to address the needs of people who need assistance when their regular health care provider is not available. Of course, individual physicians themselves set the hours of service that their clinics will provide. They've been encouraged by regional health authorities, however, Mr. Speaker, through recruitment and retention efforts to establish new office practices.

Also, under the primary health care project we're looking at different ways to deliver frontline care across the province. This project is in my opinion very, very important because it is aimed at making sure that patients receive frontline care from the most appropriate health care professional at the most appropriate facility, and often, Mr. Speaker, that may not be a doctor and it may not be at a hospital but at some other facility provided by some other health care professional.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could the minister advise the House and Albertans whether or not the RHAs have the flexibility in their budgets to start these 24-hour clinics?

MR. MAR: Well, categorically, Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question would be yes. Regional health authorities do have the ability to use their global budgets however they deem appropriate to best meet the needs of the residents in the regions that they serve.

However, having the budget available to open such clinics as suggested by the hon. member may be only one of the required inputs. One of the other inputs, of course, would be the ability to staff such clinics. That could still be a barrier in the short term to operating the types of 24-hour clinics suggested by the hon. member, but we will continue through the primary health care project and through other venues and means to work with regional health authorities to find other ways of delivering an effective service for Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electricity Prices

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago I asked the Minister of Economic Development about a report by the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters showing that higher electricity costs under deregulation would cost Alberta's manufacturing sector 31,000 jobs. The minister wasn't aware of the report, so I did provide a copy to his office. My question again to the Minister of Economic Development: what is his department's response to the report?

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question, and I'd like to point out again, as I did then, that electricity is but one of the many factors that go into production costs. In Alberta we are working on supply, and it's going extremely well. With the net migration that he's referring to, in the last two years there have been over a hundred thousand new jobs created in Alberta, so our department is working and continuing to work on that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the power price today is now running at $185 a megawatt-hour, I'd like to repeat a question that the minister took under advisement two weeks ago. Can the minister name any jurisdiction in Canada where the delivered cost of electricity to small manufacturers is higher than Alberta?

MR. NORRIS: Well, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I can. I don't generally like to put down other jurisdictions. In Alberta we tend to respect other people, and we don't like to criticize them for our own benefit, but there are numerous maritime jurisdictions that are charging far higher prices than us.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know the hon. member will want to tell us which other jurisdictions have a lower business tax.

I do want to say that CIBC, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, has said that an important reason for the confidence that emerged among generation investors in Alberta is the province's practice of protecting residential and small commercial customers without distorting prices and inhibiting development of an efficient market. The member did accurately quote the price at noon today, but he probably was taking notes of the answer to another MLA's question today that talked about the average moving down some 30 percent from January 1, 2001.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, given that the power rates in Alberta are averaging two and a half times the most expensive prices in Saskatchewan, for example, and given that the demand for electricity in Alberta in the 1970s grew at double the rate it did in the 1990s without significant price increases, can the minister explain why electricity deregulation has gone wrong?

MR. NORRIS: You know, Mr. Speaker, numbers are so deceiving. I recall the former leader of the Liberal Party just prior to the election referring to the number 43. I think she said that that was the number of seats they were going to end up with. I'd like the members to pass on to her that it's actually 4 plus 3.

The actual answer to the hon. member's question is once again that there are so many factors why people come to Alberta, not the least of which is that it's the best place to live. Saskatchewan people are migrating at a net migration far higher than they're leaving. So I'll leave it to the hon. member to figure out why.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Meridian Dam

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Environment is also responsible for approving new dam projects in Alberta. He has recently resurrected the discredited and environmentally unsound Meridian dam project, which is of direct benefit to his own constituency. In 1996 the minister, then an MLA, told the Edmonton Journal, "If you have to flood a portion of an ecological reserve to get the water, flood it, I say." My question is to the minister. Why should taxpayers have to shell out $100,000 for a feasibility study into a project the minister already supports?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have to differentiate between a minister and an MLA. Perhaps in 1995 or 1996, which was my first term as a legislator in this province, I maybe said some things that I wish I hadn't said. I look along this front row and there are probably some other ministers . . . [interjections] Speak for myself, they say.

Mr. Speaker, this project has been on the books for more than 20 years. That's a fact. Nobody has ever done a feasibility study. When I say a feasibility study, I'm not just talking about a cost-benefit analysis and the benefits not only to Alberta, not only to my constituency but to other constituencies in this province. Saskatchewan would benefit as well. We've never done a feasibility study that looks at the effects on the environment, quite frankly, and that's what we need to know. That's what this study is about: if this dam were constructed at some future date – I want to make it very clear that nobody's saying that we're going to construct the dam – what would the effects be on the environment? That's the question we're asking.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much. My first supplemental question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Premier. Is the Minister of Environment flying on his own, or does he have full cabinet support for his decision to spend 100,000 tax dollars on a so-called prefeasibility study on the Meridian dam?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, ministers of the Crown are given a certain degree of latitude to conduct various studies that are associated with their portfolio. I assume that that's what the minister is doing.

Now, when it comes time to develop policy, then the minister will bring his report first of all to agenda and priorities. That report will probably then go to the standing policy committee that would deal with that particular area of policy. It would come back to cabinet, it would go to caucus, and eventually government would make a decision as to whether we would support a project.

Mr. Speaker, before any work is done on any project, you have to make a determination as to whether we should proceed. What are the pros? What are the cons? That is the normal process. Certainly every minister of the Crown has the latitude to initiate something, but the final decision of course rests with the government.

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that this is just a pork-barrel project for the minister's constituency and cancel the $100,000 for the so-called feasibility study and save the taxpayers' money?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is an insult, an absolute insult to even suggest that this is a pork-barrel study. This is a very serious study that speaks to the fundamental and crucial issue in this province of water management. If this member doesn't think that water management is a crucial issue, then I would suggest that he has no social values whatsoever. You have to examine these issues. You have to examine these issues because water is our most precious resource in this province, and we have to make sure that we use it wisely and for the benefit of all Albertans.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We must look at water, as the Premier has said, in terms of the overall context of water management for the whole province. We need to have short-term goals, mid-term goals, and long-term goals. This is only one example. We will be doing more feasibility studies across this province on water management issues.

I would remind the member opposite that his socialist colleagues in the province next door have contributed one-quarter of the funding for this study.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Property Taxes

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I understand that because the province reduced the education property tax levy, most Alberta homeowners will see a reduction in their municipal taxes. However, the reduction varies from municipality to municipality. My question: if the reduction is in the provincial tax levy, why is the tax reduction not the same in all Alberta municipalities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two indicators on this that the hon. member mentioned are growth – and you know, there is lots of growth happening at a variety of levels across Alberta that we call the Alberta advantage. What I am pleased, though, to say to the hon. member across the way is that growth and also the issue of the type of fair market assessment are the principles that we use. I'm pleased to report to the hon. member and to his constituents in the city of Edmonton that this year the majority, over 95 percent of them, will be receiving a 14 percent reduction in their property education tax.

MR. McCLELLAND: My first supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. Should municipalities in the future expect the tax rebate to be the same across the province?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, because of those two indicators, such as the growth and the kind of fair market value that's taking place that we call the Alberta advantage, it's difficult, but what we want to be able to do is ensure a principle of fairness and equity for all municipalities across Alberta. We're attempting to do that. We're working on that, and we're going to continue to commit to the principles of fairness so that all municipalities, in dealing with this issue, are dealt with fairly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary is to the same minister. Will the education property tax requirement remain frozen at $1.2 billion per year in future years, even though student enrollment will probably increase as our province continues to grow, and if so, how will education funding keep pace with need?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, a very good question. I'm proud to say that education funding continues to grow even though the education property taxes are dropping. I also want to say that the challenges are to balance the interests of municipalities, the associations, taxpayers while continuing to sustain a first-rate educational system.

What I will do is ask the Minister of Learning to supplement because he can speak of the additional funding with this growth that the hon. member has mentioned.

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Minister. First of all, what I would like to say is that despite the fact that the educational property tax is being frozen, there continues to be an increase in the amount of dollars that go to education. This year alone, for example, there was $343 million more. The rest of the money has come from the general revenue fund, and this government has made it a promise that even though the taxation goes down with regards to the education property tax, this will have no influence on the amount of dollars that are spent in the Learning department.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Teachers' Salaries (continued)

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On budget day the government provided information which purported to show that Alberta teachers will be the highest paid in Canada. The information has been used as the basis of an aggressive media campaign and appears to be without foundation. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister share his source of those figures?

DR. OBERG: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I have a table here, that I would be more than happy to table with the Legislative Assembly, that basically explains the varying averages around the province. Where I believe the hon. member is headed is the notion that there are four school boards in Ontario that have higher wages. Yes, these are school boards in metro Toronto. But we felt it was a much fairer comparison if we took a weighted average of all teachers' salaries across our province and a weighted average across the other provinces. I don't feel that it would be fair, for example, to use the salary in, say, Fort McMurray versus the salary in Podunk Corners, Ontario. I believe that that just isn't a valid comparison. What we have done is provided apples and apples and oranges and oranges across Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta ranks fifth for the salary category in which the largest share of teachers are employed, hasn't the minister done exactly what he accuses the teachers of doing, cherry-picked categories?

DR. OBERG: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. Category 4, which is the majority of the teachers around this province: already, before the 6 percent, we are number one in the minimum salary, or level 1 on the salary grid. At level 11 of category 4, we are also the highest. Giving the 6 percent will allow us to be roughly $6,000 more than number two in the same category. So there is no doubt that we are number one in the most predominant category, which is category 4.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister again table that information? Because my information is that we are third in category 4.

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will do is I will read off the information that I was going to table. The rank of the minimum with category 4 at four years of education in Alberta with the 6 percent increase will be $37,389. The next highest is $35,182, which is British Columbia. In level 11 of the salary grid under category 4 the maximum will be $62,879, with number two being $56,543, a difference of a little over $6,000. Here is the evidence. I'd be more than happy to share it with the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister, I understand, has tabled that document. Copies have been made for all members.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Highway 43 Twinning

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. With the government's commitment to twin highway 43 within the next few years, concerns are coming to me about the progress in Whitecourt-St. Anne. Presently in my area the only activity on highway 43 is resurfacing the already twinned portion near Onoway and the construction of a bridge over the McLeod River in Whitecourt. Will there be further progress on the twinning between Gunn and Cottonwood in Whitecourt-St. Anne this year?

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to say that there will be continued progress on the north/south trade corridor.

There'll be a 14-kilometre stretch of highway going to tender soon with a completion date of June or July of next year but possibility even the end of this construction season, that will take us west of Glenevis to west of Gunn, and a further 11-kilometre stretch at Blue Ridge corner scheduled for work this year.

MR. VANDERBURG: My first supplementary again to the same minister. At Rochfort Bridge CN's overpass, which is presently one of the longest wooden structures in North America, will present a challenge. How will your department deal with another lane through this magnificent and historic structure?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, discussions are progressing very well with CN, and CN has offered in those discussions to replace a section of the bridge to accommodate the twinning of the highway. The new construction is scheduled to begin this fall unless weather conditions change it otherwise, but we will see progress on that bridge this fall.

MR. VANDERBURG: My second supplementary question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, we talked a bit during your visit to Whitecourt a couple of months ago about the highway, but most of your time was spent in the classroom and in the school of St. Mary's. My question to the Premier is: I've had so many students, principals . . .

THE SPEAKER: Okay, hon. member. We don't have preambles. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Relocation of Burial Sites

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The discovery of human remains at the EPCOR Rossdale site a few days ago raises some additional concerns regarding the treatment of discoveries of this nature. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. When human remains are found in the province, what process is followed by the Department of Community Development to ensure that they are treated with respect and dignity?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure we would all agree that this is indeed a very sensitive matter, and we're all concerned that dignity be preserved in circumstances like this. I know in the case of the Rossdale EPCOR situation that EPCOR also has a policy which kind of parallels ours and that is for an excavation to stop immediately when human remains are discovered; secondly, to immediately notify the police; and thirdly, to call in a medical examiner so that all of those legal aspects are addressed.

From the Community Development point of view what we also do is engage in a process to connect with individuals and/or groups that might be known to be associated with the particular area or the particular group – maybe it's a religious or a spiritual group – so that proper, sensitive treatment can ensue thereafter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what precedents exist for how Alberta Community Development handles these types of situations and have done prior to this?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I think, Mr. Speaker, one of the more recent case precedents, if you like, surrounds the St. Joseph's industrial school site in the Calgary area, indeed the burial site of several children in particular from that school who were there at the turn of the century and then passed away due to disease reasons or poor health care reasons or whatever. What happened in that case was that the local nations were contacted by Community Development and others. An agreement was arrived at to prevent any further erosion of the burial site, and they were properly and very nicely relocated to another centre under the strict supervision of the people in charge. That ceremony in fact just occurred, I believe on May 5.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member?

head: Members' Statements

Unified Family Court Task Force

MS GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to chair the Unified Family Court Task Force, whose report was tabled in the Legislature today. We have recommended the expeditious establishment of a unified family court in Alberta which would exercise jurisdiction over all family law matters and would provide essential support services to people involved in family law disputes.

Mr. Speaker, I sponsored a resolution in 1999, which received the unanimous support of this Assembly, that government examine the establishment of a unified family court. Based on the extensive consultations conducted by this task force, I am now more convinced than ever that there is a need for a unified family court in Alberta.

Although the courts and court staff have done their best within the constraints of the existing system to meet the needs of family law litigants, there are very clearly sufficient deficiencies and gaps in the present system. People have told us that the existing system is too adversarial; one spouse is pitted against the other to the detriment of families. Mediation and other services are available to a limited extent, but much more needs to be done to help families resolve their legal issues with the minimum of damage, particularly to the children.

People have also told us that the existence of two levels of court for family law results in gaps and injustice. If one spouse starts proceedings in the Provincial Court, the other spouse can create delays by beginning a separate action in Court of Queen's Bench. The Provincial Court with its less formal procedures can deal with family breakdown where the parties are not married, but if the parties are married, the divorce must be handled by the Court of Queen's Bench. Further, Mr. Speaker, where the parties are unmarried, an order for child support cannot be obtained in the Provincial Court if the paternity of the child is in dispute. This is because only Queen's Bench can issue a declaration as to paternity.

None of this serves the public, Mr. Speaker. The people of Alberta deserve better. Our task force has proposed a single family court, and that would alleviate many of the problems. The unified family court is an idea whose time has come.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Independence of Judiciary

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about the fundamental separation of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of government in our parliamentary system. It is well established that in our system neither the legislative nor the executive branches may interfere with the work of the judicial branch.

Prior to the Act of Settlement of 1701 the King often beheaded judges if they ruled against him. A lengthy and acrimonious struggle occurred between the King and the Parliament over the issue of the judiciary, resulting in the passage of the Act of Settlement. With this act the principles that judges are independent, that judges can only be removed on a vote from Parliament, and that judges' salaries are determined by Parliament were established. These principles are ones that we still hold sacred today.

I would urge all members of this Assembly as well as certain members of the federal House of Commons to respect the independence of the judiciary. It would be unfair for us as parliamentarians or as members of the ministry to criticize the judiciary as being unaccountable, because this is simply not the case. First, judges must excuse themselves from actions where they are involved with one or both of the parties. Second, litigants may appeal unfavourable decisions to higher courts, and lastly, almost all court cases, except under narrowly defined circumstances, are heard in full public view. In fact, the Canadian judiciary is held in such high international regard that many developing countries are modeling their justice systems after ours.

Just as Parliament struggled with the Crown to achieve its independence, so too do the judiciary. Thus it is only fair that we respect the separation of the different branches of government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Hinton Government Centre

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to speak on partnership. It's a pleasure to rise and speak of the opening of the Hinton government centre on May 15. It was an honour to be there at this opening as a representative of this government and this Assembly. In many ways the centre represents one of the most important goals of the government of Alberta. By providing a progressive, environmentally friendly, and energy-efficient approach, this building mirrors the ambitions of our government for the province of Alberta.

2:40

Mr. Speaker, the Hinton government centre was built in response to the burning down of the old town hall a few years ago. It was decided to construct a facility that would be functional and environmentally friendly. Made of energy-efficient material, this building would use less than half of a like-sized building that uses conventional material. This visionary facility also presented the partnership between the town and the people of Hinton and the government to provide the staff for the Department of Children's Services, AADAC, Sustainable Resource Development, Health and Wellness an ideal place to conduct their business on behalf of the people of this region. The government centre in Hinton is a fine example of what can be achieved when government works together.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this facility will be an important addition to the community of Hinton for years to come. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bird Habitat

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Birds in Alberta are at risk as a result of environmental degradation in the province's foothills and boreal forest natural regions. Birds are valuable for many reasons. They are key components of numerous ecosystems and play a vital and economically important role in the control of insects.

Because birds bioaccumulate toxic chemicals present in our environment, they act as bioindicators for the detection of pollutants. In addition, expansions or reductions in the numbers and ranges of certain species over time faithfully reflect the impacts of human-induced landscape scale ecological changes.

All birds are the canaries in our environmental coal mine. They are early warning lights of impending ecological problems, yet we continually threaten Alberta bird life with habitat fragmentation and habitat destruction.

Alberta bird species whose conservation needs are cause for particular concern include habitat specialists such as old-growth dependent species, forest interior and area-specific species that need large, intact areas of forest in which to breed, and breeding species that are especially vulnerable to human-caused disturbances.

Of the 386 species of birds reliably recorded in Alberta, 183 are Neotropical migrants. These birds link us ecologically to the tropics, and we bear an international responsibility for their conservation.

What can the provincial government do? They can support a genuine endangered species act and endangered habitat wilderness act. No net loss of old-growth forests and minimizing habitat fragmentation and deforestation of the Neotropical migrants' wintering grounds would be an excellent start. We need genuine protected areas to be set aside in each of Alberta's six natural regions. I urge the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to address this very important issue.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the Government House Leader share next week's projected business with us.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to share next week's business, because we will be finished with Committee of Supply. On Monday, May 28, in the afternoon under government business for second reading we anticipate dealing with bills 17, 18, 16, 19, and 20 or such of those that we haven't dealt with today and Committee of the Whole or third readings as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. for second reading as per the afternoon and then in Committee of the Whole on bills 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, and 11; for second reading on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act.

On Tuesday, May 29, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for third reading bills 1, 2, and 7 and as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading private bills per Tuesday's report, Committee of the Whole for private bills as per Tuesday's report, bills 20, 14, 17, 15, 16, 18, and 19, and third readings as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, May 30, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for third reading private bills, Committee of the Whole as per progress made on Tuesday, third reading of Bill 20 and as per progress made on Tuesday as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 31, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we would invite Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor to attend on the House for Royal Assent on such bills as may have been passed through third reading at that time, including bills 3, 4, 5, 6, 20, private bills, and as per the Order Paper, and such other business as may be left on the Order Paper at that time.

THE SPEAKER: On the first of two points of order that I've been advised are forthcoming, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Point of Order Sub Judice Rule

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My points of reference for the point of order are Standing Order 23(g) and Beauchesne 509 and 510. In reference to the Minister of Environment in response to a question from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Hub Oil, the minister stated that the Hub Oil issue was before the courts and he was therefore not willing to respond to the question. I would refer you to 23(g) in Standing Orders where it talks about:

where there is a probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, [in sub judice matters] the rule should be in favour of the debate.

Beauchesne 509 references: "In doubtful cases the Speaker should rule in favour of debate and against the convention." And 510:

The Speaker has pointed out "that the House has never allowed the sub judice convention to stand in the way of its consideration of a matter vital to the public interest or to the effective operation of the House."

We have numerous instances of pieces of correspondence from the Minister of Environment on this issue talking about a variety of violations. We have ongoing safety and environmental infractions. We have ongoing groundwater and soil contamination issues with regard to this matter, and we have two people who were killed in this particular matter. In addition to this, we have seen in this Assembly over the past two weeks the minister answering Hub Oil questions, other ministers having answered Hub Oil questions, and even the Premier, responding to the extent that his knowledge on the issue was present, answered questions on Hub Oil.

So our position is that in accordance with Standing Orders and Beauchesne that refer to not allowing sub judice "to stand in the way of its consideration of a matter vital to the public interest" or where there is any doubt, the rule should be "in favour of debate," we believe that the minister should answer the questions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on this point.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Orders do not say what questions must be answered; they say what questions cannot be brought up. It's clear under the Standing Orders and under Beauchesne that you cannot raise a question or enter into debate in a matter which is sub judice. The rules do not require a minister or any other person in the House to comment on something when they feel it's inappropriate to do so, and it may or may not fall within the purview of the Standing Order rule with respect to sub judice. It may be quite appropriate still not to answer a question because you don't feel it's appropriate to do so.

In the House today the question that was raised was a question directly related to the charges which were laid against Hub Oil, and the minister, in my view, quite rightly indicated that he was not comfortable speaking specifically to the question of the charges or the progress of the charges. That was quite in order. It may well have been a question that was in order, but it's also, certainly, the minister's privilege, right, and I would suggest, his obligation not to comment in those circumstances where he feels that providing an answer in that case or proceeding with discussion in that particular area would be inappropriate.

So notwithstanding that the sub judice rule may allow questions to be raised in certain circumstances, it does not compel an answer. As you have commented many times, no minister is compelled to answer a question, and in this case the minister quite rightly indicated that he was unwilling to provide answers under the circumstances, because there were charges before the courts, and he didn't wish to get into discussion on that.

To go further, Mr. Speaker, this was not a debate; it was question period. While, again, the discussion at an appropriate time and an appropriate place may have come up under the conduct of debate in the House, the Speaker may well not have ruled it out of order for it to come up in discussion, but it still would have been up to the minister as to whether he wanted to engage in that discussion and whether he thought it appropriate to do so.

THE SPEAKER: The Blues are very clear. A question was forthcoming from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I'd just quote from a section of the question: "Have additional charges been laid or will additional charges be laid under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the Criminal Code?" The response from the hon. minister: "Well, I can comment, Mr. Speaker, on part of that question, and I can read exactly the charge that was laid on August 1, 1999," and he goes on to quote some sections from the charge that was laid.

Now, one can go on ad nauseam with respect to the sub judice rule, but very clearly, in a nutshell, from the date the charge is laid until a determination of the charge, we follow the practice that basically says that the matters would become sub judice and questions should not be proceeded with in that regard. That's the traditional approach we've taken on the basis of all the consultations that we have. Beauchesne is part of the consultation mechanism, and the whole thing has to be read in the context of the whole section and all sections with respect to Beauchesne and other parliamentary authorities. One should avoid just extrapolating certain paragraphs and staying in the context.

The flexibility that the chair would use in these regards: number one, it's quite legitimate to ask the question, "Has the charge been laid?" Once the answer has been given – "Yes, the charge has been laid" – then I think we should avoid with a great deal of prudence further questioning with respect to this matter until a conclusion to it has been reached, as we just recently had a situation here before the Assembly where certain charges were laid, then decisions were made, and questions were forthcoming thereafter.

There is no incumbent need for any member of the government to answer any question. That's a time-honoured tradition of the parliamentary system, and how that individual, he or she, might choose to answer a question is also subjective for that individual in the manner in which they would want to raise that. So the matter has been raised, I gather, more for information than anything else.

The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Actually, Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

THE SPEAKER: A point of privilege?

MR. HANCOCK: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Citations please.

Privilege Imputing Motives

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, during question period today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands raised questions with respect to the Meridian dam project and, in raising the first question, referenced a benefit to the hon. Minister of Environment's constituency. I chose to overlook raising a point of order at that stage, although I think it would have been quite an appropriate issue to raise a point of order on.

However, in the supplemental question he referred to "a pork-barrel project." In the context of both of those comments it was very clear to members of the House and to anybody who might have been watching that he was doing what we've heard earlier this week being done, and that is impugning the integrity and the character of the minister and Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne 485 and 491. Sorry; I had it marked. No, that references unparliamentary language.

But I would refer you to page 86 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, where it clearly indicates examples of obstruction, interference, and intimidation under the Privileges and Immunities section.

The unjust damaging of a Member's good name might also be seen as constituting an obstruction . . . The normal course of a Member who felt himself or herself to be defamed would be the same as that available to any other citizen, recourse to the courts under the laws of defamation with the possibility of damages to substitute for the harm . . . However, should the alleged defamation take place on the floor of the House, this recourse is not available.

I've argued with respect to questions of privilege before, Mr. Speaker, and I think them to be very, very serious matters. The question of reflection on a member's integrity is one of the worst accusations that can be made. It goes to the very ability of a member to represent his constituents. If you do not have integrity, if you do not have honesty, if you do not have your character and reputation intact, you cannot be a member of this House and represent your constituents appropriately.

Therefore, the allegation, which is clearly there in the member's questions. The first question, talking about benefit to the constituency, one could take in many contexts, but when you combine that with the accusation of this being a pork-barreling project, Mr. Speaker, it is very, very clear that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was accusing the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the Minister of Environment, of taking on a project for his own benefit. It clearly calls into question the member's character and integrity, and the hon. member should be referred, in my humble submission, to the appropriate committee of this House to investigate and to call him to account for those remarks and for attempting to take away, in the way these questions were phrased and the way the accusation was brought to the floor of this House, the reputation of the member in question.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members – and I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands – the hon. Government House Leader has risen on a point of privilege, which should not to be taken lightly and will not be taken lightly by this Speaker or the chair. This is not the same as a matter of a point of order. The points of order we try to deal with quickly and have them out of the way the same afternoon.

Now, having heard the statement made by the hon. Government House Leader with respect to this matter, the chair does not have the Blues and access to them because of the timing with respect to this question. There is no easy resolution to a point of privilege. Pending a full review of this matter, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you may either choose to make a statement now or await till Monday to make a statement pending a review of the Blues. An opportunity would then be afforded at the conclusion of question period on Monday for the hon. Government House Leader to further participate, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to participate, and any other member who would choose to participate on this review of the point of privilege, and no decision would be rendered today with respect to that.

However, in fairness to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands and recognizing his parliamentary experience and the length of it, the chair will provide an opportunity for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to venture forth at this point if he chooses to. If he chooses not to at this point, then he will be recognized on Monday. That's entirely the hon. member's option. The hon. member should be advised, however, that there is a charge against the hon. member. The hon. member may choose to seek advice.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was expecting a point of order from the hon. Government House Leader, I am not prepared to deal with the point of privilege right now and appreciate your offer of deferring it until Monday.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Totally appropriate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order.

Point of Order

Insulting Language

MR. MASON: Earlier in the response to the same question the hon. Premier suggested that under certain circumstances I had no social values. I believe that this is a contravention of Standing Order 23(j), when a member "uses abusive or insulting language" and would request that you rule on that point of order. Mr. Speaker, I can understand how such a suggestion might be made in the heat of debate or in the heat of question period, but anyone who has looked at my work in politics over the years would have to admit that that is not a correct statement.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, I'm tempted to even just ignore the point of order, Mr. Speaker, given the juxtaposition of this point of order with the previous question of privilege, which was a far more serious nature.

Obviously the Premier and I haven't had the benefit of the Blues on this one, but when he was commenting, he was suggesting that water issues in this province are of utmost importance. The management of water is a clear issue and an issue relating to social values just as important as any of the social values that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands might raise from time to time. I think the response that was given by the Premier this afternoon was very clear in the context that he was raising with the hon. member, that questions of water should be dealt with on just as high a plane as some of the other social issues that are raised because they're important to Albertans and different parts of the province have different issues that raise their level of importance for them. Water in the south is clearly an important issue. It was in that context that the Premier made the remarks that he made.

I don't think anyone in the House could have taken that as impugning the hon. member's character at all, and everybody of course knows where the hon. member comes from. His public positions from time to time on various issues have been very clear. The answer that was given this afternoon by the Premier very clearly was intended to indicate to the member that he should consider water issues as important as some of the other issues that he raises and wasn't, obviously, an impugning of the member's character.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, the chair was listening very attentively to what was happening. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands did not at the time advise the chair that there would be a point of order. The chair received that later by way of a memo. Normally, again, if there's a point of order, one rises and advises at the time. The chair, again, had great difficulty ascertaining where there was an allegation made against another member at that particular point in time. The chair is however prepared to review the Blues and will provide additional comment on Monday with respect to this matter.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order.

Environment

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd just like to remind all members that this is not a designated committee. Therefore, the standard rules that were agreed to by the House leaders apply. The minister will have 10 minutes to open debate, followed by one hour allocated to opposition members. If any of the government members wish to speak, they'll have an opportunity thereafter, and then the minister will have five minutes to conclude debate.

With that, I'll invite the hon. minister to open debate.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to be here this afternoon and go over my estimates and be able to listen to the fine members of the opposition that are here and hear what they have to say.

Just as we go forward, I'd like to introduce some people that we have upstairs. We have my fantastic deputy minister, Dr. Roger Palmer, who was with me in Innovation and Science and has kindly consented to come with me into Environment. I very much appreciate his advice. We have my terrific communications director, who wishes I didn't say some of those things I said in the past, Val Mellesmoen, who also came with me from Innovation and Science. Upstairs as well we have Alex Hildebrandt, who also came from Innovation and Science, and Bruce Perry. Bruce is part of our financial team that keeps us on the straight and narrow when it comes to our finances, and we certainly need that. Thank you for coming, folks. Why don't you folks all rise and we'll give you an appropriate welcome.

Anyway, it is a pleasure to be here as the new Minister of Environment. I can say, Mr. Chairman, that when I was first informed I was going to Environment, I was perhaps – how shall I say it? – a little surprised. I think there were a number of other people out there that are probably still surprised, some of my colleagues. But I'm very much enjoying it. I was used to a very strong economic ministry in Innovation and Science, in which we were driving a research agenda, driving a business agenda. Although I had general concerns, as one does, about the environment, I never really had to pay an excessive amount of attention to it in terms of what I was doing and some of my actions.

Mr. Chairman, now I think constantly of how we make decisions. I think constantly of how I personally make decisions: about my recycling and how I can recycle better at home. Actually, my wife is in the business of helping to train me, and my kids are in the business of helping to train me as well. So it's opened up a whole new world of experience to me.

One of the ways I'm using to help me make decisions is the fact that I have grandchildren. I will have grandchildren living in this Edmonton area after July 15, so when it comes to a decision-making process, when we're talking about Inland Cement or any of these decisions that we make, one of the questions, just one, that I ask myself is: would I want my grandchildren living there? That's a very serious question to me because, as you know, Mr. Chairman – I think you've had the opportunity to meet one of my grandchildren once several years ago in the summer – these two little guys are going to live here in Edmonton, a six-year-old boy and a three-year-old girl. They are the smartest and best-looking grandchildren in the world. So the question I ask myself is: would I want my grandchildren living in the vicinity of Inland Cement? Would I want my grandchildren drinking this water? [interjection] I see that the Minister of Learning is greatly enjoying my conversation here with the group this afternoon.

That's an important question. If I answer that question and say, "No, I don't want my grandchildren drinking the water," or "No, I don't want my grandchildren living in that particular location," then the question for me, Mr. Chairman, is: why should your children or why should anybody else's children be expected to drink the water or to live in a location like that? That's a very serious question. That's one of the things that's helping me become focused, helping me to understand some of the significant issues that we are in fact dealing with.

I want to be able to hear from Albertans, quite frankly, and I'm making myself very available to do that. In fact, some of my colleagues were at a meeting I was at – it would be two weeks ago this coming Monday night – in a community hall here in Edmonton. I've forgotten the name of the community hall offhand.

MR. RATHGEBER: Woodcroft.

DR. TAYLOR: Woodcroft community hall. There were 250 or 300 people there, Mr. Chairman, and you may have seen some of the results on television. They very clearly told me what they were thinking at the time, and I very clearly heard what they were thinking.

We're going to do it in the same kind of format in the Exshaw-Canmore area a week from tomorrow night. We're going down to Exshaw and Canmore, once again, to hear people's concerns. I want to be very up front with people, I want to be very open with people, and I want to listen to their ideas. I want to hear: are there better ways of doing things? Can we as the Department of Environment do things in a better way?

Not only do we want to hear about actions, but we need to hear their feelings as well. We need to know how they're feeling about certain issues. It's been my experience, just from the one meeting that we've had, that people are not shy in telling us about their feelings. So that's why I'm going to do everything in my power, as we move forward, to make this ministry friendly to the people of Alberta. When I say friendly, you know, it's our frontline staff that has the largest contact with the people of Alberta, and we're going to work very hard with our frontline staff to make them listen to the people of Alberta and to be respectful to the people of Alberta and to be helpful to the people of Alberta. It's not enough for our frontline staff just to sit and listen, even in a respectful fashion. We have to learn to be helpful to the people of Alberta as well.

Now, this ministry has received many kudos in the past number of years and will continue to receive kudos for its professionalism, but we do get some criticism – and, I believe, legitimately so – because of the length of time of our processes. Some of our processes, Mr. Chairman, do take a long period of time. In fact, it takes too long, and rather than getting the results to people, in some cases we serve up red tape. I want to tell this House and I want to tell the people of Alberta that this process will change.

Now, because we're changing the process and speeding up the process, that does not mean we are lowering our standards. I want to be very, very clear on that. We will maintain our standards or even make our standards more rigorous. What we are doing is reducing the amount of time that it takes for the companies, for the individuals to get through the process. Whether it's an Environmental Appeal Board hearing or whether it's an environmental review process, we're going to reduce the amount of time it takes to get through that process. It has absolutely nothing to do with lower standards.

We're going to seek outside public advice, Mr. Chairman. One of the first steps we will take is to appoint a new environmental advisory committee. This committee will be chaired by Moe Amery, and we will activate that committee. We will put some experts on the committee, but as a former Treasurer of this House said: we've got to listen to the Henrys and Marthas. We will be putting Henry and Martha on this committee or, as the Premier refers to them, severely normal Albertans. This committee will be my first line. When I've got some new ideas, when I've got some new programs, I will be taking the new ideas, the new programs or issues that the environmental advisory committee wants to talk about and listening to them. This will be a very activist committee, and I have some experience with committees like this. I was very involved with the Alberta science and research authority for four years, and I can assure you that it is an activist committee that advises the government.

I see you're just signaling one minute, Mr. Chairman, but I'm only on page 2 of nine pages. So what I will be asking for is unanimous consent to continue.

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

DR. TAYLOR: I can't believe I heard that from a colleague.

We will be going forward with the environmental advisory committee and bringing the average Albertan in to provide advice not only to me but to the department.

Not only will we do this, but in this whole process we will become more transparent. It is necessary that companies and Albertans understand clearly the process. People have to know where their processes are, where their application is in the process. People need to be able to understand and see where their appeals and processes are. What we're going to move very quickly towards is a one-window access for such things as applying for a licence that may require a regulatory approval under the Water Act. For instance, Mr. Chairman, if you needed a water licence today in southeastern Alberta in the St. Mary River basin . . . [Dr. Taylor's speaking time expired]

Could I request unanimous consent to continue, Mr. Chairman?

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I regret that your request has been denied.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's nice to see that the minister has got some friends.

Mr. Chairman, I'm happy to participate in the Environment estimates this afternoon. First of all, I would like to say hello to the staff from the department, all really good people, people that, for the most part, I've had the opportunity to work with over the years. Certainly I respect their abilities, their judgment, and their commitment to the environment. Sometimes what I don't respect are the rules that they have to operate under based on the kinds of government policies that this government has brought forward in Environment, but that is an entirely different issue. I know that they do absolutely the very best job they can given the mandate that they work within.

The first few comments I have are with regard to the divisions in this ministry. Sustainable Resource Development is gone. Environment stays with limited kinds of areas of activity including environmental assessment and compliance, environmental sciences, environmental operations, climate change, and water management. What it looks like to us, Mr. Chairman, and only looks like because we don't have the details on this yet from the minister or his department in terms of the exact scope of his responsibilities, is that this minister is in charge of air and water and the decision-making that provides a base for discussing protection issues in this province, and those issues that relate to the province's ability to participate in moneymaking have gone to the Sustainable Resource Development side. I would like some clarification on that and some detail in terms of what the department sees now as their mandate and the scope of their responsibilities. If we could have that, that would be helpful.

The minister talked in his opening comments about the environmental advisory committee. The concept is, I think, a good concept and interesting. What will be primarily interesting here is how this unfolds. The other most recent committee that this department has been responsible for is climate change, and I think that that overall is working not badly. I do have some questions on that. I would hope that this advisory committee would follow suit and, also, at the very minimum work not badly.

I have some questions with regard to that, and that is: how does the minister expect to achieve a balance in terms of representation on the advisory committee? He talked about stacking it with average Albertans, so what we need here, Mr. Chairman, is a definition of exactly what average is. You can be average industrial supporters or you can be average environmentalists. There's quite a wide range of beliefs and standards that will be set and recommendations that will be brought forward depending on which side of the teeter-totter you happen to sit. So if we could get some definition in terms of that.

What I would expect to be happening on that committee is that we would see a fair and reasonable balance. The selection of the people to the committee is perhaps going to be absolutely the most important process that can happen with the committee. It is fundamental to the committee actually being helpful, complementary, and taking the best interests of the province to heart in terms of its membership.

We would expect to see some industry representation on that committee. We would expect to see some agricultural representation on that committee. We should expect to see some representation from either municipal districts or municipalities on that committee. We would expect to see some representation from environmental groups on that committee. We would expect to see people who truly have no direct ties to any kinds of interest groups, be they from any of those particular sectors, and we would expect that screening process to be quite severe in terms of establishing what ties people have to what places.

We saw during the special places committee assignments how easy it can be. Skewing of the representation on the committees can occur. It's very easy to say that you put someone on the committee who has a strong environmental interest who also has one or several other interests that would be deemed by environmentalists to be competing. I'm thinking of a person representing themselves in this instance as an environmentalist whose real, key interest is off-road vehicle trails or industrial development of some form or rezoning of some form. So I would ask that the minister be scrupulous in terms of the criteria he develops for the advisory committee and the manner in which he proceeds in bringing people on to that committee.

If it not only is fair representation but is perceived to be fair representation by people in the province, then there will be a lot of trust put into the committee, and it will have a lot of credibility. I believe the minister will find that a committee such as that could be immensely helpful to him and his department in the kinds of decisions that they're going to need to make in the future. So I would hope that in spite of the flippancy of some of the remarks we've heard from him this afternoon, he will take this issue seriously. I believe that he does in most instances take the issues seriously and that would be the case here.

We would also like, Mr. Chairman, some more information in terms of what the budget is for the committee, the breakdown of the expenses: who gets paid; what kinds of expenses will be reimbursed? Some sort of outline in terms of when they'll meet; how issues will hit their agenda; how resolutions will be made; if, in fact, there are resolutions or recommendations, how they are presented to the minister; any kinds of time lines on reports back or even bringing the resolutions forward; also any kind of benchmarking the committee is going to do in terms of measuring their successes or failures over time.

I think this is a serious and significant step in the right direction, and I will watch with bated breath as it unfolds and hope that it will actually achieve the objectives that will truly benefit the entire community, being the province of Alberta.

So, with that, I want to talk about one of the other comments that the minister talked about when he said in his opening comments that he wants to hear about better ways of doing things. Mr. Chairman, I think we have a few good ideas in that regard in response to the environment.

I have been the environmental critic for some years now in this province. It is interesting to watch the way things unfold and the kinds of filters that the government has used to make decisions and the lobbying that has gone on, both at the industrial level and at the environmental level, how money gets spent on lobbying, how people use different kinds of schemes and avenues to try and get what they want in environmental decision-making. What that has proven to me beyond a shadow of a doubt over these years of watching this is that the lobbying process that we have on environmental issues is completely flawed. I would hope that this minister, who I think likes to make a big splash and who has an opportunity in Environment to do so, would consider an idea that we are bringing forward in terms of supporting the sustainability of the province.

The idea is this. The objective here is to take the lobbying, the personalities, the dollars out of the decision-making process for the environment and instead provide a framework under which environmental decisions and, in fact, industrial and agricultural decisions can be made on a science-based basis as opposed to the kind of lobbying techniques that happen now.

How would this unfold? What needs to happen? We need to do an inventory of activity that's happening on the landscape in the province at this particular time. That inventory would include determining what uses the landscape is under and what pressures the landscape is under right now from an agricultural perspective, from an industrial perspective, from a people perspective, from a wildlife perspective, and from a plant life perspective. What is the current land use load in all regions of the province right now?

Once that has been established, then you can ask the question: is the landscape currently supporting the uses it has? I think that in some cases we can just say yes. In some cases we can say that the landscape is underutilized, and in some cases we will see that there is a burden on the landscape right now that is unsustainable. Perhaps in some of the northern parts of the region we'll see that the landscape is underutilized from whatever perspective you take. There is lots of argument that in the greater Edmonton area the air is overutilized at this time, and the kinds of industrial uses and pollutants we're putting into the air now is not sustainable in the long run. I think you will find that some places in central Alberta are just fine the way they are and that they're very sustainable in the manner in which they are being taken care of.

As we do that, at the same time what we have to do is take a look at the province and decide what kinds of uses we want and where. Some of them are already mandated by us: the national forests, some of our provincial parks, and some other land uses. We already know what those are designated as, and we're quite happy with those. In other areas we have competing interests and aggressive lobbying going on by all sides for different kinds of use and sometimes integrated use at this particular point in time.

So, first of all, we decide what the land use is right now, and then we need to decide what is it that we want it to be used for. Then we have to decide: is that sustainable? Perhaps we need to move some of our industrial regions into different parts of the province. If they're not sustainable on an air, water, and landscape basis, then where do we go with development?

If we can decide that kind of criteria, it certainly helps us with decision-making in the future. Then it doesn't matter who's lobbying the government; there is a science-based response to the decision-making that goes on. If we find out that wildlife corridors cannot be multi-use facilities, then that helps us in our decision-making process.

I was at a briefing this morning with the staff from Sustainable Resource Development, and I thank them very much for the briefing. An interesting thing happened there. We're taking a look at a map of some proposed development at Three Sisters and its two golf courses. The staff are explaining to me how the wildlife corridors are going to be sustained through that basis. I'm looking at the map, and what I see are golf courses. What doesn't occur to me is that now golf courses in this province are multitasking. They're also wildlife corridors. This only happens in Alberta, Mr. Chairman.

MS BLAKEMAN: What do the golfers think about that? A moose just wandering through.

MS CARLSON: Well, often the moose do wander through and the elk and the ducks. We've got lots of Canada geese on golf courses in the mountains that have been beamed by golf balls. Well, what we need to do is put little helmets on them to protect their safety; right? It's hard for me to grasp the concept of golf courses as multi-use facilities, multitasking also as wildlife corridors, but clearly this is what is proposed.

This falls within the rules of the decisions that were made on this piece of land, and clearly to the best of their ability, the ministry will carry out and exceed, whenever they can, the expectations according to the rules. The issue is the rules, Mr. Chairman. I think that often they are wrong when it comes to actually being able to sustain different kinds of uses of our landscape.

So the filter can't always be industrial development in this province. The filter needs to be land base utilization and what is sustainable in the future. We change the way we make the decisions just a little bit to decide what is sustainable on the land base given the kinds of things we want in our life.

So what do we want? We all want good jobs. We all want clean water. We all want clean air. We all want some green space that we and our children and our grandchildren can access and enjoy.

If we use those as the criteria for deciding how we're going to carve up the province and then we back it up with some science-based facts in terms of what the landscape can actually sustain, we end up with a decision-making process that is very clear, that is not open to lobbying by whomever has the ear of the government and is not open to protest by those who don't have the ear of the government. The decisions are science based and are sustainable in the long run. So when we talk about sustainability, I'm not talking about these three-year business plans that we see from the department; I'm talking about 15, 20, 30, 40, 50 years down the road. [interjection]

If you're going to sit here and stare at me while I'm talking, then you'd better be prepared to participate in debate.

3:30

MS BLAKEMAN: This is a cute trick.

MS CARLSON: Yes. They try to do this to me quite often. They think that it's going to cut down my speaking time or somehow otherwise interfere, and normally the chairman would interfere at this point and ask the member to take his seat and not be bugging me or otherwise providing interference in my speaking time.

Mr. Chairman, I'm looking for a ruling to remove this person who is not in his place while I'm speaking.

MR. LUKASZUK: You're not enjoying my company?

MS CARLSON: No, I'm not enjoying your company at all. If you want to sit here and bug me for the rest of the time, then . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Would the hon. member please take his own seat? Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. [interjection]

Yes, they do have to grow up. The peanut gallery over there likes to interfere in our speaking time if they can. But certainly that's not what we're prepared to tolerate, Mr. Chairman, and as the chair I'm surprised that you would be either.

To continue on with my comments in this regard, we have some interesting times before us in this province as the minister decides how he's going to move forward with this department. I think they're doing some very good things. We're going to see a long-term planning process, I believe, being put in place in terms of where they're going on this issue, so I hope that he and his department will take my comments under serious consideration.

This is an idea that I have talked about with many other people. Certainly in talking to the University of Alberta and their environmental department, they are quite prepared to participate in establishing science-based criteria for determining land load and for determining what is sustainable in terms of increased or potential land load in the future. So we then also take some of this decision-making away from the politicians, where people can say that the decision-making process is also skewed. We put it into the hands of reputable people who can do adequate research and provide a good foundation for decision-making. I think that's very good.

I've talked to people from industry on this, and in fact I have a commitment from some people in industry in terms of monetary support should this kind of a project go forward. So industry, too, is wanting decision-making to be made on environmental issues on a science basis rather than by lobbying. While they're winning the war on lobbying in this province at this particular time, they know that in fact that's not always sustainable, that the decisions being made are not always the ones they would choose as a first option. But they have to make some choices in terms of who gets the rights, and they're going for the brass ring, as they should.

I have talked about this idea with people from the environmental community. They, too, would like to see science-based decision-making on land load and land use for this province. Also, many groups would be willing to participate in any manner that they can in terms of suggestions or more direct participation in this area.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully ask the minister and his department to consider this as a viable option. It's something that now, with the change in his department, he could move forward on and truly have some excellent results. He could go down in the history of this province as the best environment minister that we've ever had. He could establish a basis for decision-making that then could be taken not only by other provinces but by other countries as we move forward into a global economy where environmental decision-making will actually gain a larger portion of attention.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thanks very much. It's a great pleasure for me to stand in this House and introduce to you and through you two gentlemen in the members' gallery. These two fellows I met about a year ago when we took on the challenge. They believed in me then and they still do, which is kind of a miracle, Mr. Chairman.

DR. TAYLOR: You shouldn't admit that publicly.

MR. NORRIS: I won't admit that publicly. The fellows in question are the president and vice-president of the Edmonton-McClung riding. They're as happy as I am that we have it back.

DR. TAYLOR: And surprised.

MR. NORRIS: And surprised, yeah.

I'd like to have them rise and receive the warm welcome of the gallery. It's Mr. Marty Raine and Mr. Ralph Henderson.

head: Main Estimates 2001-02

Environment (continued)

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to join in the debate and questions for the estimates of the Department of Environment. I have to admit that I'm struggling a bit to track the way the government has divided everything up. Mind you, this government seems to like to change their structure and how many ministries they've got every 18 months or so just for fun. My understanding of this department now is that it includes air and water essentially.

As I look at the notes there, the "two core businesses are Environmental Management and Environmental Hazard Management", and these are to support their vision and mission. When I looked at the core values, this is the first time I've seen this: this ministry lists it last – but nonetheless it's there – core value as "honesty, integrity and ethical behaviour." I thought: well, that's the first time I've seen that. Very nice to see, and I hope it's followed through with.

The areas that are of interest to me this time are the ones with increases, and what we've got is increases in environmental assessment and compliance, environmental sciences, environmental operations, climate change, and water management. Now, this is interesting to me, Mr. Chairman, because in Edmonton-Centre the environment consistently comes in as the third most often raised issue of importance to constituents. That's following health, education, particularly postsecondary education, and then the environment. Of course in the last six months the issue around energy, electricity prices and natural gas prices, have superseded all of those.

Consistently the constituents of Edmonton-Centre have been very thoughtful, concerned citizens of Alberta who in particular are concerned that we find a balance in the struggle between people and places and corporations and development. If anything, I think my constituents would prefer that we erred on the side of people and places. Although we live in the centre of a metropolitan urban city, we seem to share a deep concern for our environment and for the natural resources that we should all be sharing in as Albertans.

Now, as I start to go through the actual numbers in this department, a couple of questions. I'm interested in the ministry support services. I'd like to know how many FTEs are employed under ministry support services for this budget year. We've been given one number for the entire department, which isn't really helpful to understand how the breakdown in the programs happens. I've seen this as a consistent factor all the way across the estimates that I've looked at this year, and therefore I end up asking the same question over and over again to try and get some idea of detail about what's actually going on in these departments. We're tending to get a one-vote breakdown and sometimes a second-layer breakdown about what's actually going on under these program headings, but it's difficult to plow through. So a breakdown in the ministry support services, and I'd also like a breakdown of the FTEs by each of the subprograms that are appearing in the budget.

I look and I see a $320,000 budget for the minister's office for this year. If I could please get the information on salaries: how many are full-time permanent, part-time permanent, contract positions, and, as well, the hosting expenses, travel, advertising, and telephone and communications, please.

Now, that's a comparison that I didn't do here, what I've seen in a number of the other departments that have been sort of broken off from what they were before. Environment in fact has lost some areas that they covered to Sustainable Resource Development. If that were the case, then some of the money from the minister's office should have gone over to that department, and I bet you it's the same amount.

The same question about the deputy minister's office budget. That's listed at $312,000. I would like the breakdown of salaries there as well, the number and amount as to permanent positions, nonpermanent positions, contract positions, and the hosting, travel, telephone and communications, and advertising budgets.

One thing of interest to me is that there's a little less than a $200,000 increase in the budget for human resource servicing, and I'm wondering if this is a signal that the department is looking to hire new staff for some particular project. The overall number of FTEs didn't change, but is the staff expected to decrease with a number of ministerial duties going over to Sustainable Resource Development? What's that $200,000 buying us when we look at that increase in human resource services?

I'm also interested in finding out how many requests the department received under FOIP in the last year. I note that this year there is a modest increase, so is the department expecting more applications in the 2001-2002 budget year? Perhaps I could get some clarification from the minister on that.

Moving to program 2, policy, program and standards. Again my question about the FTEs. Under the program for policy, program and standards, where are the FTEs allocated, please? What is the breakdown of FTEs by subprogram?

I'd also like to know why in vote 2.0.2 the capital investment is increasing from $124,000 to $794,000. Why is that? What is anticipated there? And some detail on the capital investment, please. Could I also get a comparison between what capital goods were purchased in 2000-2001 and what investments are considered or contemplated or anticipated for 2001-2002?

Looking at the budget for environmental assessment and compliance, that's increasing from $3.2 million to $6.2 million. That's a lot of money, $3 million. Is this including additional staff? If that's the case, since we see the same total number of FTEs, what other area is losing staff?

The budget for environmental sciences, which is vote 2.0.4, is increasing from $8.3 million to $15.6 million, almost double. Again, what is this covering? Could I get some detail and breakdown about why we're seeing this? Is there a new research initiative, with this being here, that hasn't been announced somewhere, where we're waiting for a big announcement sometime later in the year when we need a diversion? What is this amount of money? Is it a volume increase for some reason? A higher anticipation of demand? What's the money for?

We've also had an increase in the budget for climate change, which is 2.0.6, and it's going from $1.69 million to $3.36 million. So some details and breakdown, please, on programs and initiatives that are funded under this increase and, with that, the accompanying staff assignment.

Moving on to program 3, regional operations. Now, this is interesting. All of the budgets for regulatory approvals are increasing except for the one for the northeast slopes region. Why is this budget decreasing? What is the difference between this budget and all of the other regions that are noted? Is something happening there that's not happening in this particular region? Could I get some details on that, please?

When I look at the next line items here for environmental enforcement and monitoring, again, all of them are increasing except for the northwest boreal region. Why is the budget for enforcement in this region decreasing? What's anticipated here that's not going to happen anymore, or correspondingly, what is anticipated to happen in every other region but this one that would account for their increase in the budget?

The third part of these votes is water management. We've got the northwest boreal region and parkland. Again, those two budgets are decreasing for water management, but the rest of the budgets in all the other areas are increasing for water management, so I'd like detail, please, on what's happening in each of these regions. Do they have more activity? Or what is the activity that's being decreased in the parkland and northwest boreal that they have need of less money?

Now a couple of specific questions here. Are the dedicated revenues in the various areas from the fees paid for water diversions? How is this money used within each region? Does any of the money go into research on water levels in the individual regions? I'd also be interested in knowing how many applications for water diversions had fees waived, and under what circumstances were the fees waived?

Can I also get information on what studies the department is doing regarding water tables in the province? What is the status of our water tables? There's a lot of interest since Walkerton and then the more recent episode just across our own border in North Battleford and Saskatoon – I think it got that far – around water, plus there's an overriding concern from people that there might be some attempt to be selling water, which under NAFTA would commit all provinces to then be selling water. So both the potability of our water and our management of it as a resource have moved up on everybody's radar screen. Obviously our water tables are a big part of that equation. So I'm looking for more information about that.

Has the department done any recent studies on interbasin water transfers? Are water transfers being considered as a way to deal with drought conditions? That would be interesting.

Those were a few of the questions that I had. I know that I have other colleagues who are looking to bring forward additional points and concerns and questions on this budget, and I will make way for them.

Thank you for the opportunity.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to raise some questions about the budget estimates that are before us this afternoon from the Department of Environment. I wanted to start with some specific questions about the measures that are going to be developed. Page 136 of the business plan begins with a goal to develop a "credible set of environmental indicators," and it goes on further to say that this is "important for sound" policymaking. Then what follows is a number of goals and some targets that are being set for them. I guess what I worry about, Mr. Chairman, is the reliability of the measures that are going to be developed and the targets that are going to be set.

One of our experiences on this side of the House with the business plans is that they keep changing. They keep changing in terms of what is being monitored and what is being reported. Instead of what we might have expected, which was a continuous improvement of business plans from 1993 onward when they were first introduced as a tool by government, what we have is just the opposite. There's no track record. Every time a department moves, there are changes in the performance objectives, and we're left with the kind of budget that we have here, with very few measures that give us any real confidence that things are being monitored and that next year we won't be faced with business plans where things have been moved around again and we're asked to look at a set of proposals for targets. So it's a growing concern, I think, and it's one that the Auditor General has addressed in general to all departments. No matter how many times the Auditor General mentions it, life seems to go on as usual, and we have what we have before us.

I'm concerned about the reliability, the credibility, and the durability of the measures that are going to be put in place, and I wondered with many of these: who's going to be involved in establishing the indicators? I hope that it's going to be more than just an inside department task, that there will be a wide range of interest groups and authorities consulted in the development of the indicators, and that when they do come before us, they are ones that we have some confidence in in terms of what they purport to measure.

Every year we seem to go through an annual sort of exercise where one group across the country will rate the province on environmental matters as a D and then the department promptly responds, "Oh no, it's not a D; it's really a B" and we go through this sort of foolishness. That's because the kind of indicators that are being used aren't accepted by all as being reliable and being valid. My question is: who's going to be involved in setting these indicators? Has consideration been given to setting up an independent group to develop and to monitor? I think that as long as it's being done by the department itself, it's always going to be open to suspicion that the data is being manipulated for government purposes. Again, my question is: has there been consideration given to putting in place an independent agency that could take the measures, once they're developed, and monitor them for environmental purposes?

Under the air quality index they have a report that over the last 10 years the Index has been rated air quality 'good' 97.6% (356 days) of the time. The other 2.4% are for days rated 'fair'. There have been no days [rated] as 'poor' or 'very poor'.

Again, it's a very global index. I'm not sure how useful it is in terms of, say, people living downwind from refinery row. I know there is monitoring done in Edmonton and Fort Saskatchewan, but it's site-specific monitoring. How much of that is being done, and is it enough to make us confident that these global measures like the one that's being reported here are really an indicator of the kind of air quality that Albertans are experiencing?

The drinking water index I think will be welcome by all. We've all had our faith in the public water supplies shaken rather badly in the last year or so. I think the notion of having in place an index and having in place a method of constantly monitoring that water and being able to assure everyone that the water supply that we draw upon is safe and that we won't find ourselves down the road wishing that we had done something as a result of the experiences in North Battleford and Walkerton – so the index is good. Again, I'd be interested to see who's involved in putting the index together and who's consulted and how it can be used as a tool in local communities to report the quality of the index. Again, I don't think a provincial index is useful as much as an index in local communities could be.

The goal of bringing downstream water up to a better standard I think is one that, again, will be welcome. I was pleased to see a group of behavioural indicators being listed, specifically that they're going to get an indicator of "Alberta's progress in reducing the generation of municipal solid waste." The target there I would question. It says: "Continuous reduction of municipal solid waste going to landfills." That's a worthy objective. How fast is it to proceed, and are there going to be targets set so that no matter what the index is set at, we have some target levels in terms of reducing that amount of municipal solid waste?

The next one: "pulp production versus amount of biochemical oxygen demand discharged." There's a target that it "does not exceed 1.0 kilograms/Air Dried Tonne of Pulp." My question is: where does that standard come from? I would be pleased to know the source of that standard, that target.

Similarly with greenhouse gas emissions, it says, "New targets are being negotiated." Can we have some of the details of that negotiation? It says that it's "for achieving its 14% target." Just exactly what is being done in those negotiations? The reduction of greenhouse gas emissions: a number of voluntary organizations, they indicate, are part of that effort. Can we have an indication of who those voluntary groups are in this project?

The climate change concerns raised on page 138, particularly goal 1.1, is again, I think, a welcome addition. One of the activities that they're going to undertake is under the fourth bullet, which is: "Set clear and enforceable standards and guidelines for landscapes (air, land, soil, water quality and biodiversity)." Again, very important measures. My question is: who is going to be involved in determining those standards, and will we be assured that they are standards that are acceptable and recognized as being acceptable and won't be open to constant challenge by one group or another once they are implemented?

I had something on management. The goal is to make decisions "about allocating resources through approvals, dispositions and licences and ensure compliance with those decisions." I think that has been raised in past budgets. I know it was raised last year when we looked at this department's estimates. I know they completed a survey of users some time ago, and I wonder if the results of that survey have been reported elsewhere. I don't recall seeing it. It doesn't mean that it's not there. I know there was a survey undertaken by the department where it asked users of the department's services to rate the department in a number of areas, and I would appreciate being able to see the results of that survey.

There were some indicators before that survey was taken that approval time lines were inordinately long in some areas and that particularly when it came to individual Albertans, their requests were put on the back burner and could linger for months and in some cases even years before they were addressed. So if that information is available, I would appreciate having a copy.

Over on page 140 the department takes on the responsibility of "environmental hazard management" and talks about flood prevention and damage to property due to drought being mitigated. Then it has, "The safety of individuals utilizing public land is supported by an effective and efficient system of responding to events and incidents that may threaten life or health." I wondered just as a matter of curiosity if they have considered warning systems for Albertans at public use sites? I think particularly of Pine Lake and the tornado that struck there. The ensuing losses could have been prevented had there been a warning system in place. My question is: is that part of this budget? It may well not be, but seeing that there is this environmental hazard management portion of the budget, I would be interested in that.

I'd like to go back to some questions that were raised last budget time, Mr. Chairman. These are some specific questions about the emissions from gas flaring and from gas plants. There was some work being done. I know the government was making some progress, and I wonder if we could have an update in terms of what's being done in that area to reduce emissions from flaring and from gas plants.

In terms of the accidental risks – and this is where sour gas wells come into play – what protection is in place for Albertans in terms of accidental emissions from sour gas wells and particularly those that are close to populated areas in the province?

There was a lot of work done on the northern river basins study, and it was the subject of a number of questions in the Legislature and a number of questions in last year's budget. Could we have an update on the recommendations that were made in that study? Is there ongoing monitoring? What is the state of the ongoing monitoring? I know that there was some work being done in conjunction with the federal government as a result of the study. Could we have an update on the progress of that work?

One of the concerns that was raised was the fisheries. Has there been any more work done in that area? There were fish advisories on some of the rivers due to high levels of mercury and dioxins. Can we have an update in terms of what has been done?

The other area I'd like to ask about before my time is complete, Mr. Chairman, is the Cold Lake area. Again, it is an issue that was raised in question period and at budget time. What is the state of the water supply in that area? What activities have been undertaken?

What kinds of preventive measures have been put in place to ensure that the quality of that water remains one that people are comfortable with and should expect?

The Pine Lake landfill was poorly sited, and because of its siting, there are hazards in terms of the water table. I wonder who's responsible for the monitoring of those conditions. Are inspections being made? Just what is the state of not only the Pine Lake landfill but also the Ryley landfill? What monitoring has been undertaken by the department? How often are on-site inspections undertaken? Those are two specific landfills.

The other area is intensive livestock operations. I'm not sure that all of these are in the department now, Mr. Chairman, but if they're not, maybe I can receive some direction from the minister in terms of where the questions should be directed. I remember at the time of our last budget the size of the livestock operations was a problem in that it seemed that the size selected for monitoring was very large. The question is: what is done in terms of smaller livestock operations? Are they monitored? How can people be assured that there isn't a cumulative effect from a number of smaller operations that the department wasn't going to monitor in the past?

I think maybe that's the end of what I have for this round, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the few minutes remaining to me, I'll touch on a number of issues of particular importance and priority for me. This is obviously a department with a very high public profile, high public concern. The number of questions that have gone to the minister in question period I think reflect that. I'm sure the minister will be kept extremely busy during his time as Minister of Environment.

One of the puzzles in this department that I haven't quite solved is how some of the responsibility for the land has been shifted out of the Department of Environment and into the department of sustainable development. I'm concerned that that reflects a view of the environment that fails to recognize the integration of all of the different components of an ecosystem. So I would be curious to know more detail about how the line is drawn between the responsibilities of this department and the responsibilities of the department of sustainable development.

The number of high-profile issues that come up under this are many. I'm thinking back just to the last few weeks, the issues of high public concern that I've heard about and that have come up in this Assembly: the intense debate over the Inland Cement proposal to burn coal and the issue of the Meridian dam that has come up repeatedly both in the Assembly and in the press, the widespread concern over water quality, the media coverage and debate in this Assembly on the Ponoka dump, on the deterioration of Lake Wabamun. Those are all issues of high public concern, both in the Assembly and outside. I'm sure the minister has the necessary light touch to handle them, but it will be keeping him busy, and it's a good thing he has over $100 million to address them as the year goes on.

Relating to all of these are some broader issues such as climate change. Certainly climate change is an issue of national and international concern. As we look at the drought that's intensifying here, there are questions, of course, to be raised. Would this have occurred regardless of human impact on the environment? Whether the link is there directly or not between the weather we have at any given time, the issue of climate change is not going to go away and is likely to accelerate as we see more and more evidence supporting the fact that climate change is under way and is likely linked to human activity.

As critic for the health department I'm also concerned about the public health aspects of the work of the Minister of Environment, and certainly those relate back to public concern over pollution, emissions, water quality, and so on. I would encourage the department, when they speak of integrated practices and integrated delivery and so on, to ensure that their perspective includes health and that their resources in the budget are committed to keeping health in mind and to working closely with the regional health authorities and the department of health.

There is a long list of business practices. I'll only mention one right now: science-based decision-making. I commend the department and the minister for that. I think we would all support that. I am concerned, of course, as undoubtedly the department is, over the quality of science and the source of science. For example, we need only look at the issue of coal burning to realize that the science is very contradictory, and the source of the science seems to relate to the nature of the argument that is put forward. So the support for the science is important, and I would encourage the government to seek as independent sources of information as is possible. Relying on the coal industry for science on the safety of burning coal is fine up to a point, but it needs to be recognized for what it is.

Key strategies. I commend the key strategy under goal 1.2, working with aboriginal communities.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt, but your time has elapsed.

Before I recognize the hon. minister to conclude debate, are there any other members who wish to speak on this estimate?

The hon. minister to conclude debate.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm actually very pleased to hear the comments from the members. They are in Hansard, and we will take the comments seriously. We did have some staff up there listening, but as I said, they are in Hansard, and we will respond and give you appropriate responses to the comments you made through a thorough review of the Hansard. I thank you all for your comments and time that you've taken in somewhat of an unruly forum on occasion. As I say, the value of Hansard is obviously evident because some of my members perhaps didn't hear your comments, but they'll be able to read them, and we will respond to them.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Environment, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $117,225,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report the vote and, parenthetically, not seek leave to sit again any time soon.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following department.

Environment: operating expense and capital investment, $117,225,000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that the supply estimates have all been reported and in keeping with the past practices of the Assembly, I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to revert to the Introduction of Bills to allow for the introduction of Bill 20, Appropriation Act, 2001.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Bills

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 20
Appropriation Act, 2001

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Appropriation Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

4:20

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 19
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

MR. STEVENS: It's my pleasure to move on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice second reading of Bill 19.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have reviewed miscellaneous statutes in conjunction with the government and certainly support what is within that bill and will be supporting it at second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

Bill 17
Insurance Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to move second reading of Bill 17, Insurance Amendment Act, 2001.

The scope of Bill 17 is to provide for the regulation of employees of insurers who adjust insurance claims, commonly referred to as staff adjusters. It also provides for the attendance of witnesses to give evidence at regulatory hearings.

[Mr. Speaker in the chair]

On the first part of the bill, relative to staff adjuster licensing, it can be said that Bill 17 achieves the same objective in the new Insurance Act, which comes into force September 1, 2001, under which the regulation and licensing of employees of insurers who adjust insurance claims is provided for. Under Bill 17 the objective is achieved differently, and I'll speak to that now.

The new Insurance Act which, as I mentioned, will come into force September 1, 2001, would require employees of insurers, staff adjusters who adjust insurance claims, to be licensed as insurance adjusters similar to independent adjusters who are now required to be licensed. This was done, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that insurers' employees are qualified to handle policyholders' claims and also to ensure that such employees comply with the market conduct rules in the new Insurance Act.

In the face of this, however, insurance companies argued to government that they are in fact responsible for the conduct of their employees and that it was therefore not necessary for government to license insurers' employees to ensure compliance with the Insurance Act. Consequently, after much discussion with industry, it was decided to remove the licensing requirement for insurers' employees but still make the employees subject to the market conduct rules in the new Insurance Act.

This is achieved in the following ways: by codifying that regulatory action will be taken against the insurer who is the employer of the adjuster if the employee adjuster in the course of adjusting an insurance claim breaches the Insurance Act; secondly, it will give the minister the power to order an insurer to stop using a particular employee as an adjuster if that employee is found to be incompetent or consistently breaching the Insurance Act; thirdly, it will provide regulation-making power for claims settlement practices by adjusters.

A consequence of Bill 17 will be that it will remove the need to license over 2,500 employees acting as staff adjusters and therefore avoid the associated regulatory cost while at the same time providing an effective mechanism to ensure that employees of insurers who adjust claims are qualified to do so and that they comply with the prescribed claim settlement practices. That deals with the first part of Bill 17.

The second part, which is the provision to require witnesses to provide information at hearings, gives the minister and appeal boards appointed under the Insurance Act the power of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act to require a witness to attend and give evidence at regulatory hearings. This power is necessary to enable the regulator and appeal boards to gather all relevant evidence before making regulatory decisions. Similar powers are in the current Insurance Act, and Bill 17, therefore, refers to the appropriate provisions in the Public Inquiries Act to ensure that the rules for procedural fairness in that act are also applicable to the power in the Insurance Act.

That, then, Mr. Speaker, is the substance of the contents of Bill 17.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to be participating on Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2001. This is an interesting bill. What we have seen develop from the time that this bill was printed, had first reading, and was distributed to members here in the Legislature is interesting feedback from stakeholder groups. We've sent the bill out. We've talked to a number of organizations and other people who could or would be directly affected by this particular bill, and the longer it stays out there in the public domain, the more concerns we have coming forward from particular interested parties.

Given the nature of these concerns that are starting to come in – and some of them look like they need some additional research – we are hoping that this is one of the bills that will be held over until the fall, Mr. Speaker. We are hoping and expecting to be able to spend some time over the summer consulting more extensively with people. It looks like I'm going to need some amendments to the bill. That's what we're starting to hear out there. There really hasn't been enough time to get the details on this at this time, so it's our expectation that we wouldn't want to pass this bill in committee. [interjection] I understand what the minister is saying. [interjection] Yeah, if you want to heckle me, then I can go 20 on this, or I can go 10 if you don't heckle me, so it's your choice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member for Edmonton-Ellerslie does have the floor.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are, as I was about to get to before I was interrupted by the minister . . .

DR. MASSEY: Which minister?

MS CARLSON: Yes, which minister is a good question. Both of them.

MRS. NELSON: Oh, name names.

MS CARLSON: I'm polite. I'm not going to go there yet, but keep it up. We could go there.

I think there are some good things in this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I do acknowledge the long consultation process that has been involved with the industry on these issues. I do think that the key substance of the bill and the overall intent of the bill, which is what we're speaking to today in second reading, is commendable.

What I did state – and perhaps the minister wasn't paying attention at that particular time – was that I thought that there were going to be some amendments that needed to be brought forward. What we find is that the most proactive way of dealing with issues like that is if we get some detail and some substance from people in the community with regard to the kinds of amendments that they would like to see, then we could work in conjunction with the sponsor of the bill and have the sponsor bring forward friendly amendments that would enhance and strengthen the legislation and would be acceptable to all parties directly affected and certainly to all members of the Legislature. So that would be the kind of progress we're looking forward to in this instance.

It's nice to see strong legislation passed in the Legislature, and sometimes an amendment or two can achieve that purpose. That would be where we would expect this particular bill to go, and it certainly would be our hope of where it would go. Our critic for this, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, is certainly willing to take a look at working with the sponsor of the bill in terms of strengthening this.

The requirement that adjusters who are employees of insurance companies need to be licensed is removed. I'm not sure that I particularly agree with that. I think that's a highlight of this bill, and I have some concerns about that in general. There was some explanation by the sponsor with regard to that, and I'm looking for more feedback from people that I have talked to about this. So that's an interesting point.

Also, it makes clear that insurers are held responsible for the actions of adjusters who are their employees. There's no doubt that all of us who have had some involvement in advocacy work at the constituency level have had issues with adjusters who are employees. So to have a flow-through of responsibility is excellent, and certainly that's a part of this bill that we can support.

That this bill also gives the minister or an appeal body the power to call witnesses to give evidence at hearings and appeals under this act seems overall to be a positive move. Certainly it seems like we have support for that at this particular point in time.

This bill is really entitled an amendment act. Amendments are supposed to be minor changes, and for the most part I think these can be identified as minor changes, and that's positive.

The licensing one I think is the key issue here and is one that people have in general supported. We've seen that this is the response to concerns heard from the industry during the debate we had back in 1999 on the Insurance Act as it was brought forward. So it's good that the government is responding to the concerns of industry stakeholders in this regard. We're wondering where the rest of those amendments would be in terms of the other concerns that were raised by stakeholders during the consultation process on this act. If we could get some explanation from the sponsor of the bill in terms of why these were not addressed, that would be helpful to us.

Some of those were eligibility on sole or primary occupations. What we heard there was that licensing regulations will no longer restrict insurance agents from engaging in other occupations except where other occupations place the agent in the position of conflict of interest. You know, scrupulous people follow these rules to the letter, and in some instances it compromises their ability to make a living or to provide services that are complementary but not in conflict. I can think of several instances in that circumstance. So that's an issue that I think needs to be addressed.

Can an insurance agent sell real estate? I don't see why not. Can they do something in direct conflict? Well, I think that's a different issue. Certainly in my constituency I have heard issues over the years where agents – perhaps not themselves, because that would definitely be against the law – have someone directly related to them, be it a close associate, a business partner, or a family member, who does engage in positions of conflict, what could be perceived or real positions of conflict. So that's a problem.

Those things have been ongoing. What we need to do is make sure that the rules are in place for those people who do like to follow the rules, Mr. Speaker. I think that's an amendment that could have been brought in here that would have been quite easy to address and include in this particular act. Government believes that a prohibition against insurance agents from engaging in other occupations is anticompetitive and a barrier to new agents entering into the insurance business, so it's another argument in favour of having included that particular amendment in this legislation. We're wondering why that didn't happen. I think they're probably right, and I think we could have supported that had we seen it come in here.

From stakeholders we hear that they're concerned that the full-time sole-occupation provisions have been removed and is of particular concern as it pertains to the level 1 licensing of insurance agents. You know, I've had quite a bit of correspondence from people on this particular issue. I've received a number of e-mails and letters, certainly not the highest volume that I've ever seen in my time in this Legislature but enough to make me pause and go back and reread the material and hear the two conflicting sides to this story. I think that's interesting and would appreciate hearing from the sponsor of the bill in terms of how they address that particular issue and why they felt it was important to leave it out.

There's a thought among stakeholders that there's a need for beginning agents to master the foundation of knowledge and skills involved with the process, that they need to have some depth to their ability to do the job, and that consumers have the right to advice and services from an insurance provider who is fully committed to satisfying the needs of the clients. So in terms of the argument on why they shouldn't be able to multitask in their jobs, that's what we hear from stakeholders. I think that can be valid, Mr. Speaker, and we would like to see some provisions in there in terms of the length or kinds of training provided to these folks before they have the right to advise and provide service. I think there can be issues around that, and I'm sure my colleagues will talk about the education component of what could have been put in this bill at some depth. It's an issue that's also important to me. I've heard from numerous stakeholders in terms of it being an issue that needs to be addressed. So if we could get some feedback from the sponsor of the bill in that regard, that would be excellent.

We also heard that Alberta practitioners may not be able to obtain reciprocal nonresident licensing opportunities in other jurisdictions that continue to adhere to the full-time sole-occupancy rule. I'm not sure we buy that argument in this province as a reason for not having it in the legislation, Mr. Speaker, but it's something that has been brought forward. I think there are always ways around that provision if that's where you want to go, and I think there are some good reasons why other jurisdictions would take a look at them being sole practitioners based on evidence of past performance within the industry. I think that's an argument that isn't really one that I support.

We've also heard from stakeholders that Alberta licensing regulations uphold the sole-occupation requirement for level 1 insurance agents and provide that the regulator suspend, revoke, or refuse to renew a licence if during the term of the licence that level 1 agent has breached a condition of sole occupation, of course a rule that only applies if sole occupation becomes a key issue. There are, as I understand, thousands of insurance agents throughout the province, or people involved in that employment, and this could have a profound effect on their ability to make a living and perform their duties.

We've heard some instances where people who have the licensing facilities now would also like to be insurance providers. Should the sole-occupation provision be removed? I think there need to be some pretty strict rules in terms of what is a conflict and what isn't a conflict. I would say that operators of the licensing bureaus would be in direct conflict in this instance because they would have a significant advantage in terms of providing service. Then you take a look at other players in the industry, and you wonder if they don't have a direct advantage right now. People who do road testing or provide insurance and related services are a good example. I think we can use grocery stores and liquor licences. We've heard that argument in this Legislature before. It is another good example where it certainly looks like there is a direct advantage being given to a particular provider of service.

I think that should this go forward, then, there needs to be some good thought put into what the framework for deciding what conflict of interest is, Mr. Speaker, and the question would be: who would be deciding that? Do we need to put together an advisory committee? Which ministry handles that? How long does the process take? What's the process for public debate? Does it come back to the Legislature? Is it done through regulations? I think those are all the kinds of questions and issues that come up around that kind of point.

We heard, too, from some stakeholders that they believe that a list should be established in the legislation of prohibited occupations that are deemed to expose a client to the risk of undue influence. What they say is that these precluded occupations could include professional advisers such as doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants, mortgage brokers of credit-granting institutions, and full-time government employees. Well, you know, we would support that, Mr. Speaker, but I know this government is never going to go there. They don't do anything, or they do as little as possible, through establishing it in legislation. This is a government that likes to bring in blank-cheque bills and then decide what the rules are going to be by regulation, behind closed doors.

That was the basis for my previous comments in terms of what would be the process to establish what the rules of conflict would be. We're not going to see that here in the Legislature, and I'm not so naive, after all these years of participating in this process, to believe that the government for one second would undertake that kind of a process. Should it happen, it would be done by regulation. It would be done behind closed doors. I would hope that before the decisions were actually made, there would be some sort of a consultation process put in place.

It would be nice to see if the recommendations were made public and input and feedback provided on those prior to the regulations actually being passed by order in council. I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that that would not be in keeping with the habits or the traditions of this particular government, but it would be nice to see that it would happen. It certainly would be a point of cleanup and something that we would support seeing. It would be, I think, something that would be a very positive action for this government to undertake. So I think those are some interesting comments there.

Some of the coverage that we've seen on this particular bill has been that there are tough new insurance laws coming forward. I don't know if these are particularly tough. I think they do strengthen the bill, and that's positive in nature, but it isn't the toughest legislation, I don't think, that I've ever seen.

It is talked about as being the largest piece of legislation ever. I'm not sure that that's true either. I think we've seen some other legislation come forward that is further reaching than this, and particularly what comes forward as those kinds of comprehensive bills are amendment bills. Generally when they come forward, it is nice to see that they have gone through a relatively rigorous process in terms of involving stakeholder groups.

Given the feedback that we've had from people in the community on this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose the question of who the government included in their decision-making bodies as stakeholder groups, because it seems like there's a whole sector that has been missed in this process. So if we could just get that question answered before we get to committee, it would be helpful for us, because when we take a look at it, it seems like there are a few pieces of the puzzle that are missing.

I'd like to applaud the government, though, for having undertaken this review, for having stuck with it, and for taking a really old piece of legislation that in many ways was outdated, over 80 years ago that it was brought in – that is progressive and certainly good to see. If they could take that same kind of proactive approach to reducing regulations in this province, that would be an excellent step forward and something that we could applaud. So I just applaud and support and throw that out there in terms of the government taking a look at other things that need to be reviewed.

We've got some old regulations on the books that are time consuming and cumbersome and a complete waste of people's time. Regulations and paperwork are the number one complaint we hear from small business owners, many of whom are insurance agents and who are party to those kinds of concerns. So we would like the government to consider undertaking that task now that they have completed the task of the Insurance Act. Hopefully we'll see that the sponsor addresses a couple of the amendments that we think will be coming forward from this.

One of the things that's really good about this act . . . [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired] Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. A couple of issues that I wanted to raise around this bill. Now, I understand that Bill 17 is in fact tweaking, making a few adjustments to the major change that happened to the Insurance Act in 1999, which was about an inch thick and covered a whole change in the Insurance Act, which I think hadn't been changed since 1913 or something. This Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2001, is a few small considerations that are being made to adjust that.

I have some concerns that flow out of what's being suggested here and flow back to what was not included in the Insurance Act, which was known as Bill 25 in 1999, I think it was, feedback from agents that I have spoken with or small brokers that I've spoken with. My overriding concern here is the small broker. What I'm seeing being proposed through the change to the Insurance Act and this amending act is a move supposedly to open this up to wider competition, but what we're moving from is people that specialized in providing insurance services to anybody else that deals with money in any way being able to do this as well.

Now, I'm painting that with a broad brush stroke, and I admit that, but we're now looking at banks offering these same insurance services. We're looking at travel agents offering the same insurance. We're looking at credit unions potentially offering these same kinds of services, or maybe they do now. I think that's making it harder for our small brokers, the small businessperson to stay alive in this market.

I think you may well have set this up to increase competition globally or with very large providers, but in doing so, I think we are making it much more difficult for the small businessperson in Alberta. I really believe that the small businessperson is the backbone of this country and the backbone of Alberta. You know, every farmer is a small businessperson, and certainly in our other economic drivers I still believe that it's the smaller entrepreneur or businessperson who really brings us forward.

A couple of huge corporations, yeah, they can throw their weight around and they look really impressive, but what kind of stake do they really have in our community? They move on so quickly, and really their alliance is probably to some head office that isn't even in the country. That is what has shaped my concerns when I look at what's being proposed in Bill 17 and, through that, to what didn't happen in the amending Insurance Act. Given that context, I want to go back and look at this.

Now, Bill 17 specifically is removing the requirement that adjusters who are employees of an insurance company need to be licensed. The quid pro quo for that was that insurers are held responsible for the actions of their employees who are adjusters. My concern around this is that we also lost a provision around mandatory continuing education. There was no provision in the act for mandatory continuing education, which we now have in place until September 2001, when this Insurance Act comes into being. There was nothing done in the new act to allow for that, and I think stakeholders believe that the needs of consumers demand a knowledgeable, dedicated, and competent financial adviser providing a certain level of service.

Given the increasing diversity and complexity of financial services – it's absolutely bewildering now – I would prefer to see that practitioners stay current in their knowledge and skills and continually upgrade them. When you look at other areas where the government has interceded to insist on some kind of mandatory lifelong learning – that's happened in the medical professions; that's happened in a couple of other areas – why was it allowed to lapse here?

I mean, the counterargument to that is: well, employers will train their own employees who are adjusters. You know, that isn't being exposed to a diversity of opinions and new programs and challenges. That's often a sort of company indoctrination, if you like, where it's: this is what we need you to know, and that's all we need you to know. There's not an additional challenge and exposure to new ideas and concepts and practices. It's just exactly what is acceptable to the employer, who again could be a multinational who has no real commitment or stake in the local economy or in the local community.

You know, all of the Canadian jurisdictions with insurance councils either mandate continuing education requirements or are planning to, and Alberta is now going to be left behind on this one. B.C. requires continuing education, Saskatchewan does as of January of '99, Manitoba is expected to introduce it or already has, Ontario requires it, Quebec requires it, and Nova Scotia looks like it's going to go for it as well. If we look to the States, I think some 48 U.S. states have continuing education requirements. So that's a fair preponderance of examples in front of us of what others think is important, and I'm curious as to why we are not considering that as important.

I also note that the Alberta Insurance Council is opposed to mandatory continuing education. That's curious to me, because I know that the government set this group up as sort of an arm's-length DAO to regulate the industry. I'm really wondering how well it reflects the industry in fact, because certainly the stakeholders we consulted felt very strongly that they wanted the mandatory education requirements in there. Now, it's a cost to them to send their employees on conferences or seminars where they're picking this up, and they're acknowledging that that cost is important to them, and they're willing to pay it. So I'm curious as to why the Alberta Insurance Council would be opposed to it.

I mean, they're saying that disciplinary measures can be used if incompetence is demonstrated, but that's after the fact. There has already been a problem because somebody wasn't up to speed or wasn't up to code, and there has been some sort of disciplinary hearing, and now there has to be some punishment meted out, suspension or revocation of licence or even a requalification, I suppose. That's after the fact, and the consumer has already been dinged. The industry has already got a black eye. It's all after the fact, and I don't understand why there's resistance to this from the group that is essentially established to make sure that everybody keeps their nose clean in this industry. Very odd. Essentially the cost of continuing education is borne by consumers and agents, so it's not even costing these larger brokers significant amounts of money.

Now, I know that the government is on record as saying that forcing agents to keep up to date with new products and practices is not acceptable, that they think insurance agents should be required to meet tougher prelicensing requirements. Well, I'll agree with tougher prelicensing, no problem, but I strongly believe in lifelong learning and continual updating especially in a field that is moving and changing as rapidly as this one is. So there's an inconsistency in the government position there that I don't approve of.

The other area that was causing me concern – and again this is coming at it from the point of view of the small broker – is the concept of the antirebating provisions. If we're moving into this era where we have small independent brokers, you know, a one-, two-person office maybe, trying to compete with the Toronto-Dominion/Canada Trust/PriceWaterhouse conglomerate, whatever it all is now, down on the corner and a credit union a block away that has 900 outlets in Alberta, and a travel agent that's in the local mall – I don't know that that's going to be a very good competition for everyone involved. I think what happens is that people get drawn to that one-stop shopping, and in particular you end up with the little giveaways, the little incentives for people. I mean, I've never been drawn in. I've never gone to one place over another because they were going to give me something. I'm always a little suspicious about that actually because I think that somewhere along the line I'm paying for that gift, and I'd rather just have the discount.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

MS CARLSON: Go back to sleep, you guys.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, I think so. Sorry I woke you all up. I'll try and talk softer so you can snooze again.

The industry had been quite clear that they did not like what's called rebating, which is part of either discounting what's going on or giving away of little . . .

MS CARLSON: They want to know if you've ever bought a coupon book.

MS BLAKEMAN: A coupon book? No. I've never bought a coupon book.

5:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre does have the floor.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

Back to rebating, which is where I was. This makes it very hard if we have a situation where we've got very large banks and credit unions and who knows what other kinds of corporations that are selling insurance having these giveaways. It makes it really hard for a small broker to compete with that. I mean, their margin of profit could be quite small on any given policy. They might be looking at a profit of $50 or $70 on a given policy. So they just can't be competing with a bank that's looking at giving away, you know, gold Cross pens or something.

The industry had always opposed removing the anti-rebating rule between the original act and the amending act. It was a well-established market conduct practice that was based on the principle that a company should not practise unfair discrimination between individuals presenting the same risk. That makes perfect sense to me, and it came from the grass roots. It came, in fact, from the community that was practising this and whose sector we are talking about. It's not conceived as a form of price-fixing or an anticompetitive measure. Premiums are based on actuarial considerations, and they should not be open to competition which would undermine a pricing consistent with the insurers holding appropriate reserves.

Once again, I'm questioning why the government seems so keen to make it difficult for small brokers to keep going, in the same way that some of the practices that have been put forward by this government have made it very difficult for small farmers and family farms to keep going and seem to make it easier for corporate farms to go well.

In this particular instance, those are the concerns that I want to bring forward about the mandatory education and about the rebating.

Now, there's another section, the deposit-taking institutions: banks, loan and trust corporations, the Alberta Treasury Branch, and the credit unions. In this new Insurance Act that we're hooked to here with Bill 17, which is the act that's amending it – and then somehow they all come in together hand in hand in September of 2001 – it permitted the minister to issue a restricted insurance agent certificate of authority to a business that is a deposit-taking institution, a transportation company, a travel agency, an automobile dealership, or other prescribed enterprise. Gee, that's sure a big restriction. It named just about every kind of sector there is in Alberta. The restricted insurance agent certificate of authority authorizes the holder to act as an insurance agent in respect of classes or types of insurance specified by the minister.

Currently, loan and trust corporations, banks, the Alberta Treasury Branch, and credit unions are permitted to distribute certain limited types of credit-related products in their branches. These products are sold to credit union customers without an individual assessment of risk, and under the act loan and trust corporations, banks, the Alberta Treasury Branch, and credit unions will be required to obtain a licence to sell this limited range of credit-related insurance products. But it still puts them in direct competition with your neighbourhood independent, small businessperson insurance broker.

There is no provision in the Insurance Act that allows deposit-taking institutions to underwrite and sell insurance through their branches. Industry stakeholders are concerned that because the terms and conditions of their restricted agent certificates are left to regulation, it may open the door in the future for provincially regulated institutions like the ATB or like the credit unions to market insurance products directly from their branches. I can see it coming.

You know, those large institutions are capable of doing such massive and expensive campaigns to talk you into things. Once you get hooked into that, unless an individual takes the steps to say, "Don't send me any accompanying or related information from your agency, please," in your mailbox within a few weeks you'll start getting all kinds of related services that they're trying to sell, and it's very convincing. They're glossy brochures, and it looks really good. They can offer you all kinds of incentives on all sorts of things, and that's what we're setting up our small businesspeople to have to try and compete against. It's just not possible for them.

Now, the government has suggested that there's no provision in the Insurance Act to allow deposit-taking institutions to underwrite and sell insurance through their branches and that the restricted certificate of authority will allow them to sell a limited range of credit-related products. But there are no indications in the new Insurance Act about what types of limited insurance products these institutions such as the ATB or credit unions will be able to distribute since this is the subject of regulations. Now we're at the nub.

So once again it's been left to come in through the back door. It's been left to be developed behind closed doors by the government, and we end up with all the same ferris wheel of problems that we have for the community being able to understand what's happened and to get the information when the stuff is coming through regulations. Everything can be changed. Then you've got to know to be watching the Alberta Gazette to see the order in council and then go back and track the information to find out what actually happened there.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to make some observations and ask some questions about Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2001. As we're at second reading, I think it's useful as we consider these amendments to go back and look at the principles that were the basis for the original Bill 25. I think some of those principles are still supported by the amendments that we have before us, but having said that, I do have some questions.

One of the principles – and I thought it was an important principle – in Bill 25 was that the responsibility and liability for how an insurance company conducted itself, the responsibility for that behaviour, really rested on the shoulders of the directors of the company. That's, I think, a principle that deserves support as long as it is viewed in the perspective of the public interest, that they can be held responsible and that they will be acting in terms of not only their company's interest but that there's a public interest that is also part of what they accept.

Another principle that seemed to be a part of Bill 25 was the principle that there had to be in place some fairly clear procedures and ways of dealing with those who would engage in coercive or deceptive practices, and Bill 17 I think does nothing to change what was agreed upon for Bill 25.

The principle that there should be full disclosure from insurance companies and their agents again is one that we supported when Bill 25 was before the Assembly.

I think another principle was that there had to be a firm set of rules, a clear set of rules that surrounded claim practices. We've all heard of difficulties with people filing claims and those claims either being rejected or being delayed, so it was an important principle, when Bill 25 was discussed, that we felt had to be part of that piece of legislation and is. I think it's in everyone's interests that those rules are abundantly clear and particularly to consumers, because I think that's where the difficulties arise, when insurers pay for policies and then come to claim on them and find that the policy doesn't actually cover what they expected it would.

The principle that the minister has to have the power to impose administrative penalties for specific violations again is one that I think at the time we questioned and remains untouched by Bill 17, that there had to be a system of fines and penalties that were appropriate for inappropriate acts, and that those fines and penalties had to be in keeping with today's economics.

So those are some of the principles that we supported in Bill 25 and we also had questions about and had in some cases asked for amendments to make stronger.

At the time of the passing of Bill 25 we raised a number of questions for change, and they weren't ours alone. For my own information I would appreciate hearing from the member who sponsored the bill what is being done in terms of the concerns and suggestions that were made for amendments. I remember that at the passage of Bill 25 the compensation plan was a matter of concern, and there were requests at that time to make sure that the compensation plan was inclusive. Yet I don't see that having been changed in Bill 17. The plan was to be established under regulation. I should know, Mr. Speaker, but I don't. I assume that that plan has been established through regulation, and I would ask what the stakeholder reaction was to the compensation plan.

I remember at the time their concern was that there might be some companies holding restricted agent certificates of authority who didn't have or who wouldn't obtain errors-and-omissions insurance. I think the reference used at the time was to travel agents who sell insurance as a coincidental product to their core business and wouldn't know the policy or the wordings as thoroughly. There was concern about that group of businesses like travel agents who have some exemption. It was felt that the consumers would be the ones who paid for this group of businesses not being part of the compensation plan.

To the mover of the bill: I wonder what's developed with the compensation plan. Is the industry happy with it, and are there actions taken to make sure that businesses like travel agents are part of it and thus the consumers that would deal with them would be protected?

The sharing of compensation was another concern, and there's nothing in Bill 17 that addresses the issues that were raised at the time. Some of the stakeholders thought that it opened the door to allowing unaccountable individuals who didn't have the kind of background and skill and knowledge that they should have of the industry to take control of an insurance transaction for personal gain, contrary to the interests of the consumer. That was raised, if I recall, a number of times during Bill 25 debates, yet I don't see anything in this amendment that would address those concerns.

Now, I do recall the government at the time making statements to the effect that the market should dictate how compensation is shared and then also stating that financial intermediaries such as insurance agents and security brokers should be permitted to enter into partnerships where referral fees and profit sharing is possible, but that is the other side of the fear that was raised at the time. Again, the stakeholders – and I haven't heard that their position has changed – believed that sharing of compensation should only take place when an agent shares a commission with an insurance agent who holds a licence to sell the class of insurance for which compensation is being paid. Again, a number of issues around compensation sharing that are not addressed in the bill as we have it before us now. I raise the issues, Mr. Speaker, because it was an opportunity to address those concerns, seeing that amendments were going to be brought forward in any case.

There were some other concerns in the former bill that again this bill doesn't remedy. The concerns were about unfair, coercive, or deceptive practices and that there was no detailing or defining of what those practices are. I realize the difficulty in that, trying to anticipate the creative work that can be done in terms of deceiving consumers, but there was the concern put forward at the time Bill 25 was passed that there had to be some definition. The definition doesn't appear in the act, whether or not it's through regulation, but it gave some concern, and I think the preference was that there be some defining within the act itself.

At the root of that concern about those practices was that stakeholders I think believed that just talking about unfair, coercive, or deceptive practices was too broad, and they wanted to ensure that it was made more specific. I guess the question is: were there discussions with stakeholders as the regulations were being formulated? Just exactly what was the meaning of that phrase? I'd appreciate again hearing from the mover of the bill as to what the situation is in terms of that concern. I assume that it has been dealt with in regulations and that the stakeholders were involved in those regulations and that regulation formulation. So that was another area of concern. I remember it being raised at the time and again wondering why those concerns aren't addressed in the amendment that we have before us at this time.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 17 makes really a compromise in terms of adjusters. It's a compromise that I think we support, although I do recall at the time supporting the requirement that adjusters had to be licensed. An underlying principle of this amendment is that the insurers are the ones that are responsible for the adjusters who work for them, and that is where the responsibility rests. A lot of the sections in the bill are a result of that provision being taken out, so a lot of it is housekeeping in terms of some of the subsections of Bill 17.

The removal of any reference to the need of an adjuster who works for an insurer to have an adjuster's certificate: I remember talking about and supporting that provision at the time. Obviously the industry didn't think it necessary, and this bill reflects the input from the industry. So it will be interesting to see how this turns out.

I think that with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude and look forward to hearing the kinds of responses the mover of this bill has to some of the issues that my colleagues and myself have raised. I think we initially saw the bill as something that could be passed quite quickly through the Legislature, and it's only in the last few days that we've had some reservations raised about provisions of the amendment. I think those reservations being raised need to be dealt with before we continue and pass the bill.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 17, the one before us today, makes amendments, obviously, to the Insurance Act. I think our concern is that there are other improvements that could be made to this act and that those are not being considered here. The act that it amends comes into force in just a few months, in September, and this is our last chance to make amendments to the act before it comes into force. So it would be worth serious consideration to review Bill 17 and have a look at perhaps extending the principles and the details that it addresses.

The way Bill 17 stands now, its main purpose, as we're looking at it and as I see it, is to remove the requirement that adjusters who are employees of insurance companies need to be licensed. In place of this, the bill proposes that adjusters working for insurers no longer need to be certified, but the insurer instead is held responsible for the actions of adjusters who are their employees. I can see, as the sponsor of this bill said, that this can increase accountability of the insurance companies themselves. But is that far enough? That's our question. Are we going far enough with Bill 17? Are there not other amendments that ought to be made? We believe that there are.

The bill also gives the minister the power to call witnesses to give evidence at hearings and appeals under the bill, but our proposal and our concern here is that Bill 17 needs to address some other issues.

The issue that Bill 17 does address did come to our attention during stakeholder consultations on Bill 25 in 1999. Bill 25 led to the Insurance Amendment Act. We were hearing even then – well, we of course heard many concerns. This particular one we heard was that insurance companies wanted the staff adjuster licensing provision removed even at that time from Bill 25. They felt it was redundant given that insurance companies who act as adjusters are already required to have a valid adjuster's certificate of authority, so the additional licensing requirement that was built into Bill 25 represented an increased cost to insurers that would simply drive up consumer costs. Certainly the people we were hearing from on this viewed this requirement as needless and costly, and in some cases they were even concerned that it was a possible money grab by the government by way of licensing fees and so on.

This Bill 17, to the extent that it addresses this one issue, I suppose is a reasonable compromise between the industry and the government. It does clearly outline that an insurer is the one who is ultimately responsible for adjusters who work for them. There's been a case recently sorted out in which an insurance adjuster was caught for unethical behaviour in the auto industry and I think was recently fined by the court system. I'm not sure if in that case the insurance company ultimately covered it or if it was paid out of the adjuster's personal pocket. But certainly there's room for abuse here, and I'm glad to see that this act holds the insurer accountable for the actions of their adjusters. In exchange for that, of course, the government is no longer requiring adjusters who work for insurers to be licensed.

However, the question is: is this enough of a change? Or perhaps before the Insurance Act is actually enforced this coming September, do we want to improve it a little bit further and give it some more changes? The kinds of things we would like to see considered and used to extend Bill 17 would be some kind of provision in the Insurance Act that might allow deposit-taking institutions to underwrite and sell insurance through their branches. When they do this, industry stakeholders are concerned that because the terms and conditions of the insurance agent certificates are left to regulation, this may leave the door open in the future for provincially regulated institutions such as, say, the Alberta Treasury Branches and credit unions to market insurance products directly from their branches.

[At 5:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 28, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, welcome back.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the beauty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. In this difficult time we ask You to hear our prayers for Your intervention so that much-needed moisture may assist in the sustainability of all of Your wondrous works in this Your Alberta. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem, and would you please join in in the language of your choice.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I have great honour in introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Shenaz Jeraj, president of the Ismaili Council for Edmonton since July 1999. Canada is home to some 75,000 Ismailis, of which about 10,000 reside in Alberta.

Mrs. Jeraj and the council have partnered with your office, Mr. Speaker, in co-ordinating the celebration of Eid al-Adha for the past three years. During those events the community has made charitable donations to several organizations such as the Winnifred Stewart Association for the Mentally Handicapped as well as the Alberta School for the Deaf to buy equipment. The council will be hosting yet another charitable event, with the proceeds going to Compassion House for breast cancer victims, on June 23 of this year.

Mr. Speaker, this past weekend the Ismaili community also organized a partnership walk here at the Legislature grounds as well as in many cities across Canada. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General as well as the Minister of Community Development attended the event in Edmonton, and the Minister of Health and Wellness attended the event in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Jeraj in her private life works for Dow Chemical at the Fort Saskatchewan plant and looks after the computer infrastructure for that organization. I request Mrs. Jeraj to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition which states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly . . . to end the Policy permitting hazardous wastes to be transported into Alberta from outside Canada and delivered to Swan Hills Waste Treatment Plant.

This petition has 2,000 names on it that come from the communities of Smith, Hondo, Slave Lake, Wabasca, Widewater, Wagner, Canyon Creek, Kinuso, and High Prairie.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Bill 21 Electronic Transactions Act

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 21, the Electronic Transactions Act.

This legislation has a very simple purpose: to give electronic transactions and electronic signatures the same legal status as their paper counterparts as long as both parties involved consent to handling the business transaction electronically. The omnibus approach of this legislation removes the necessity of individually amending each piece of Alberta legislation that makes reference to requiring signatures or information to be in writing. It will give Albertans the option to communicate electronically while still allowing for current methods of interaction with government organizations or the business sector. In the spirit of harmonization, Mr. Speaker, the intent and scope of this legislation are aligned consistent with similar legislation across the country and will result in consistency in dealing with electronic transactions across provincial borders.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, with the introduction of this bill today, we will be releasing a discussion paper to seek feedback on our approach. Albertans will have an opportunity to provide input on the legislation through comments on the discussion paper, which will be available on the Innovation and Science web site, www.innovation.gov.ab.ca. The deadline for this input is August 1, 2001. In addition to that, government departments have also submitted lists of stakeholders they wish to have an opportunity to comment on the legislation. The discussion paper will be mailed to these individuals and/or organizations and the departments I've identified.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 21 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise with two tablings. One is a letter of congratulations to the Aga Khan Foundation members for a very successful partnership walk this weekend, which was co-ordinated by Mr. Salim Bhimji, the volunteer convener, along with assistance from our guest Mrs. Jeraj and numerous others. In this International Year of Volunteers it's a particular pleasure to make that tabling.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to present a tabling of a letter sent to Mr. Orest Korbitt, chairman of the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame, regarding the outstanding work that he and his board members did to recognize inductees this weekend into the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame: Pat Bawtinheimer, Michelle Conn, Catriona LeMay Doan, James Greenough, Jean Jarrell, Mark Roy, and the Edmonton Oilers hockey teams from the '80s, also Bill Powers on the Bell memorial award, Alex Decoteau on the pioneer award, and century award recipients Wayne Gretzky, Kerrin Lee-Gartner, Glen Sather, Elsie Barlow, the 1978-82 Edmonton Eskimos, and the 1915-1940 Edmonton Grads. It was a pleasure to be there with the Deputy Premier and numerous other colleagues from Red Deer and elsewhere.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table five copies of two letters that are expressing strong support for bicycle helmet legislation, and they are signed by 15 emergency pediatricians and specialist physicians at the Stollery children's health centre here in Edmonton. These physicians care for the most severely injured children in northern Alberta and have seen firsthand "the devastation preventable injuries have on individuals, families, and society."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with two tablings. The first is a letter from Mr. Frank Andruchow of Edmonton. Mr. Andruchow is concerned with the deforestation of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the second one is a letter from Anne Williams of Lethbridge. Ms Williams does not agree with the rezoning of land on the edge of Waterton park.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is five copies of letters from Mr. Wilde, who is very concerned about Inland Cement's plans to convert from natural gas to coal.

The second tabling is a letter from Alberta Environment to the municipal district of Cardston. In the letter the department outlines its concerns with the proposed subdivision of land on the edge of Waterton park.

My final tabling today is copies of a letter from Bonita Field of Calgary. Ms Field is concerned about overdevelopment in the Castle-Crown area.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table five copies of a document announcing good news for my constituency, Medicine Hat, as well as southern Alberta. I will be tabling a copy of a news release issued today by PanCanadian Petroleum Limited announcing that they have entered into a memorandum of understanding with Canadian Fertilizers Limited for the development of an 85-megawatt natural gas fired cogeneration plant to be located in Medicine Hat. This project was selected by the province of Alberta's transmission administrator under the location-based credits standing offer process, designed to address transmission constraints with the development of new power generation in southern Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the program from the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame & Museum induction banquet, which was held Friday in Red Deer and attended by a number of members from this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the information and interest of all members of this Assembly I would like to table the lyrics to Four Strong Winds by Mr. Ian Tyson and also the lyrics to Alberta Bound by Mr. Gordon Lightfoot.

My third tabling this afternoon is a news release dated July 19, 1999, from Alberta Resource Development. It is titled: "Results of natural gas liquids policy task force announced." Unfortunately, the task force identifies several possible policy options but makes no specific recommendations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is a set of two letters, each written by two members of Manyberries School Council, Michele Mayer and Sharon Bodin. One of these letters is addressed to me and one to the Minister of Learning. In these letters these parents are expressing their concern about the quality of education as the Prairie Rose regional division 8 does some budget cuts that would force their school to be triple graded in September of this year.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is appropriate copies of an application for an electricity export permit before the National Energy Board. This application is dated May 1, 2001, and is made by Morgan Stanley Capital Group Inc. of New York.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling an appropriate number of copies of a letter addressed to the Premier from the Bragg Creek Environmental Coalition opposing the proposed Kananaskis FMA and urging the Premier to stop the de facto privatization of these public forests.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly two constituents of mine who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I'd ask them to stand, please. Dr. Donald Jolly and Mrs. Christina Jolly are the parents of page Tim Jolly. Tim has been a page with the Assembly since 1997 and is going into his second year of university in September. He is majoring in political science, even though I've tried to talk him out of that. I understand that his work with the Assembly is coming to an end, and I want to take the opportunity to thank him for his service to this Assembly. We're all very, very proud of Tim. I would ask Dr. and Mrs. Jolly, who are in the Speaker's gallery, to please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you 38 enthusiastic students from William E. Hay composite high school in Stettler, Alberta. With the students today are teachers Mr. Neil Humphreys and Mr. Garry Fix and parent helper Ms Cathy Chartier. I am very pleased that they're here today and thank them for coming. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 34 very bright and ambitious grade 10 students from Trochu Valley school. They are accompanied by some very hardworking teachers and friends of mine, Mr. Brian Vokins and Mr. Bill Cunningham. I would ask them to rise in the public gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Swan Hills Treatment Centre

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Bovar annual report for 2000 blames falling revenues at the Swan Hills waste treatment facility on "increased efforts by generators to pursue alternative, lower-cost disposal for their hazardous waste." My questions are to the Premier. Mr. Premier, why is it that the government is promoting old, outdated technology that even the generators of the waste doesn't want to use, especially given that there are alternative technologies that can treat these toxic wastes at source and at lower cost?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging, absolutely encouraging – and on this point I agree with the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that industry should use all efforts at source to reduce the amount of toxic materials that would otherwise have to be destroyed. They should deal with that at source. I'm pleased also that new technologies are evolving to deal with hazardous waste. But I would remind the hon. member that the Swan Hills plant guarantees a 100 percent kill of toxic wastes. No matter how far the technology progresses in the next 10 or 15 or 20 years, there will always be a requirement for a facility like Swan Hills to absolutely kill those wastes that otherwise can't be disposed of.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. When you talked about, Mr. Premier, that it guarantees a 100 percent kill, the industry standards are saying that these other alternatives are at least as efficient. So does that not imply that they achieve the same kill of these toxic materials?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if they can achieve the same kill, better. Better. You have to understand and go back and look at the history of this plant. It was probably years ahead of its time. We can say with a tremendous amount of pride in this province that probably we're the only jurisdiction that is absolutely free of PCBs. We're probably absolutely free of toxics that otherwise would've cost us hundreds of millions of dollars to ship elsewhere and created a problem for another jurisdiction. This plant has served a useful purpose as far as I'm concerned and from the evidence I've seen thus far will serve a useful purpose into the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we're going to be doing that, then why not let industry move on and deal with the new technologies, the new alternatives, and the cost-effective means to do this? Why stand behind an old technology?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we are not stopping industry. As a matter of fact, I'm sure the Minister of Environment would concur that we would encourage industry to develop new and more efficient and more effective ways of dealing with toxic waste, but until all of that technology develops, until there are processes in place to guarantee a kill of all toxic wastes, I would suggest there will continue to be a use for the Swan Hills waste treatment plant.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following up on this, Mr. Premier, you talk about the idea that we have to allow them to move on. When we have deregulation as a major premise of Alberta, why is it that you continue to create a cost subsidy for this Swan Hills plant and we don't allow the other industries to develop? If they have to have a competitive industry, they shouldn't be fighting against a subsidized industry supported by this government.

MR. KLEIN: Again, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition makes somewhat of a point, not a total point. The simple fact, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a cost to garbage. There is a cost to garbage whether that garbage is toxic garbage or whether that garbage is municipal waste. In the city of Lethbridge, where the hon. member resides, he pays taxes to subsidize the collection and the disposal of garbage. There is a cost to garbage. As a matter of fact, there is an argument amongst some municipalities as to whether garbage is in fact a service that is a utility or whether it is something that should be the responsibility of the private sector or whether garbage should solely, absolutely, completely be the responsibility of the individual or individuals who create the garbage.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just remind the Premier that I live in the county of Lethbridge, and I pay $14 every time I take a load of garbage to the landfill.

Will the Premier explain to this Assembly where the plant is expected to get enough waste revenue to make money, given that its previous owners shut it down four times in 2000 due to a lack of volume of waste?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to where we are with negotiations to have a private-sector operator take over the plant, I will have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're currently dealing with a number of international companies on the sale of the Swan Hills plant. We're calling now for the specifications for qualification, and we will be moving forward with those companies. Certainly, they are looking at the market. They will make those decisions whether, in fact, they believe there's enough waste, and we'll be moving forward with it as quickly as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. Then to the Premier: will there be continued subsidies as part of these negotiations with these international companies when they're coming to look at the option of taking over that Swan Hills plant?

MR. KLEIN: That is an interesting question. Mr. Speaker, certainly we would like to make the plant as profitable as we possibly can for the operators without going to the extent of dreaming up new ways to manufacture waste for them to dispose of.

Will there be subsidies? Mr. Speaker, as I explained earlier, there will always be a cost to garbage. In this province I don't know how many orphan sites there are for which the provincial government has assumed responsibility, contaminated properties for which we cannot assign responsibility to those who originally contaminated the property because of the amount of time that has lapsed. So if there are contaminants that will be recovered from those properties, contaminants that must be by law destroyed at the Swan Hills plant, then, yes, the taxpayers of Alberta will have to subsidize those particular disposals.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Cataract Surgery Contracts

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last September the Capital health authority awarded a two-year cataract surgery contract to Surgical Centres Inc. The request for proposals was issued in mid-summer with a short response time, and the winner was a company that had neither a surgeon nor the equipment to do the work in Edmonton. It's the same company that is owned to a significant extent by immediate family members of the chief medical officer of the Calgary regional health authority. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the government committed during the Bill 11 debate that contracts with private health care providers would be open and public, will the minister make public the tendering and evaluation documents from this contract?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can say categorically that this is a completely transparent process. We have gone through a tendering process. We've had our evaluation of those contracts, under the Health Care Protection Act, evaluated by the Auditor General. We've had them evaluated by an outside of province consultant from the province of British Columbia. We've had each contract reviewed by an outside of province consultant from the province of British Columbia. I can say without fear of hesitation that these contracts have all gone through a very scrupulous process. The regional health authorities do have the same conflict of interest bylaws that apply to MLAs that sit in this Assembly, including the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The Health Care Protection Act requires full disclosure of ownership of private facilities that seek to have contracts with regional health authorities. If individuals wish to see the contracts, those contracts are available on the Internet, and individuals can look at them. We have no fear in having individuals review those contracts for themselves.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Was there a detailed cost-benefit analysis done for this process, and if so, will the minister provide those details to us?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the issue of cost-effectiveness while important is not the only issue that is looked at in the review of these contracts. For example, there may be an advantage in providing such services in a private surgical facility as opposed to being in a hospital, because it frees up space in a hospital surgical suite for more serious types of surgeries to be done. So cost-effectiveness is one element, but it is not the only one. There are a number of other factors, but overall there must be, on balance, more benefit. That benefit may come in terms of cost-effectiveness, or it may be, for example, that better use of resources is being made by contracting out certain services to private surgical facilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I need to repeat the question. Was there a detailed cost-benefit analysis done for this process, and if so, will the minister release details of it to the Assembly?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can again say that each of these contracts has gone through a very, very stringent review process, and I stand by my previous answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Electricity Exports

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Saturday it was reported that an American investment firm is applying to the National Energy Board to ship 3 percent of Alberta's total power generation to the United States. The application for this export, which I tabled earlier today, clearly states that the export would come from the existing power supply. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the application clearly states that the export would come from the existing supply, how much more will Albertans be forced to pay when a major sell-off of electricity takes place as a result of this application?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would assume that this would be a matter for the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to adjudicate. Our policy is quite clear relative to the export of electricity, and I will have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement. That policy, as I understand it, is that the demands of Albertans relative to supply must be met, that a certain amount of surplus has to be left in the country, and that the surplus on the surplus can be exported contingent on very strict approval requirements being put in place. I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The National Energy Board does have a role to play in international interconnect, and the group Morgan Stanley Dean Witter did the appropriate thing, and it filed for export. They're, in fact, one of 10 companies that hold export permits already. There are also exports going on today as we speak to Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

There is a compelling commercial reason why power is used in Alberta first. One is that when you export it, it then is subject to line losses. Line losses make it less economic to use that power in a mileage-based jurisdiction or someplace far away from grand Alberta than it does locally. So there will always be an Alberta-first issue.

I think the hon. Member for Medicine Hat today showed the positive effects of a deregulated market by tabling yet another 85 megawatts in cogeneration. That adds up, Mr. Speaker, for PanCanadian to some 300 megawatts. That, coupled last week with TransCanada Pipelines that are in various stages of approval, is some 500 megawatts. That's very close to 1,000 megawatts that is going onstream and will be used in Alberta for Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The export to Saskatchewan and B.C. is different from exporting to the U.S.

Perhaps the Premier can explain to the House how his government can protect Alberta's domestic supply of electricity, when NAFTA will almost certainly prohibit any efforts to limit exports to the United States once exports have started.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I will defer to the hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: I know the term "compelling commercial reason" is one that is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to get through to a New Democratic Party jurisdiction. But I will repeat that in fact there is a cost advantage to use Alberta-produced power in Alberta.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, my last question to the Premier: given that power exports result in a larger market for coal-fired electricity, will the government explain how all environmental concerns will be addressed?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I'll have the hon. Minister of Environment supplement, but there are stringent rules and regulations already in place relative to emission and stack standards for coal-generated power plants and other forms of coal generation. Relative to the specifics of those rules and regulations, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, Alberta does have very strict standards on emissions, but we need to recognize that emissions can be fuel neutral. It's what comes out of the stack that counts; it's not necessarily what goes into the furnaces. So whether it's natural gas or coal or some other fuel source, we will monitor the stack emissions. We do have tougher standards on the stack emissions, and our standards will only get tougher.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workers' Compensation Board Reviews

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that the two WCB review reports completed at the end of last year have raised expectations from injured workers as well as WCB caseworkers, could the minister give an outline of the process for consideration and implementation of the recommendations from the reports?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, this allows me the opportunity to again thank the chair and the committees of those two groups that have provided the input.

As we stand here today, Mr. Speaker, we're currently involved in what I would class as a ministry response. We have an internal system within our government that we must move through now in order to arrive at the government response. The timing of that of course is subject, as all of us are, to the various demands that are made on our time. Of course, in recognition of the member's comments about expectations, we are trying to arrive at some sort of public announcement that we'd have available by mid-June.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have only one supplementary question, and it's to the same minister. Given that a number of injured workers have expressed to my office their frustration that existing and new cases seem to be put in limbo and decisions delayed because WCB caseworkers are waiting for the implementation from the report, could the minister shed some light on this?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned by some of the components of that question in the sense that with the mandate that the two committees were given, there really shouldn't be anything that would have impacted on a decision when a worker is injured as far as the case manager is concerned. So all I could indicate to you and, of course, to all members of the House is that if there are specific situations now of where decision-making is being held up due to some sort of reference to what our ministry and our government will be doing, I think it would be very, very important that those specific situations be brought forward to my office as soon as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Natural Gas Liquids

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another major policy shortcoming of this government is its failure to ensure and protect an economical, reliable supply of ethane for Alberta's petrochemical industry. My first question this afternoon is to the Premier. Why did the government's task force in July of 1999 on natural gas liquids make no specific recommendations regarding ethane supply for this province?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is, as they say, a work in progress.

MR. SMITH: A moving target.

MR. KLEIN: And it is a moving target, absolutely.

But certainly relative to gas produced in this province, there is a policy, Mr. Speaker. What we want – and I hope I receive the support, the undying support, of the hon. member from the Liberal opposition in our endeavour to establish a policy and a program that will allow us to strip the ethane and the propane and the butane and other liquids from that gas, those trillions of cubic feet, that hopefully will flow through Alberta from both the Mackenzie Delta and Prudhoe Bay as it gathers at Boundary Lake to support our growing and our thriving petrochemical industry. I look for his undying support in this endeavour.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the moving target in this case is gas and jobs out of the province, why is the Premier allowing the government's policy on ethane supply for straddle plants to be phased out starting in the year 2004? The phaseout is to be complete by June of 2008.

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true at all. As a matter of fact, that would be counter to our policy of achieving as much liquid as we possibly can from natural gas. But to shed more light on the situation, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. SMITH: The member tabled today the results of the natural gas liquids policy task force, and because it is a tabled document, Mr. Speaker, I know I can quote from the task force chairman, the MLA for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, who is named in the press release as being Rob Lougheed. Mr. Lougheed has been returned to office from that pre-election time, July 1999. In it he says:

The issues raised by our partners in industry and government will shape policy on ethane and other natural gas liquids to ensure that Albertans continue to receive fair value for these publicly owned resources. I trust our stakeholders will continue to work with us to achieve this goal.

That is, in fact, the policy. That is, in fact, what is occurring today, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, my question again to the Premier: why didn't the Premier actively intervene at the National Energy Board hearings that were held in conjunction with the Alliance pipeline to protect the ethane supply of Alberta so it wasn't shipped off to Chicago and the jobs along with it?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Why didn't I personally intervene? I didn't intervene because we have experts in the department, Mr. Speaker, who did intervene in those hearings. Again, relative to the extent of that intervention, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

2:10

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, today in this economy anybody can buy ethane, and there is a balance that allows us to continue to have a healthy, thriving, petrochemical industry. The difficulty that exists today is the price of natural gas, helped in part by the building of the Alliance pipeline that created a continental energy market that allowed producers in Alberta to share in world market prices.

Now, as that happened, we had an opportunity for ethane to be used here, but ethane . . . [interjections] It's hard for me to get through with the chirping from the Liberal opposition, so I'll just continue to talk and maybe slow it down a little, Mr. Speaker, so that we get the point through.

Mr. Speaker, we have now a balance in ethane. We have an issue where ethane is being challenged for its competitive price because of the rise in the natural gas price relative to the price of crude oil. When that natural gas price rises to that extent, those petrochemical plants that are based on crude oil and naphtha start to become more competitive. That starts to challenge our industry. So just as the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan said, it's a moving target; it's an evolving market. That's exactly what we're faced with today.

The great thing about the Alliance pipeline, Mr. Speaker, is it created jobs in this province. It allowed the petrochemical industry to be sustained, and although there are less Liberal jobs in this caucus today than there were a year ago, there are more petrochemical jobs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Typically, rent controls, price ceilings, price caps, deferral accounts, or any artificial pricing mechanism imposed by government has the unintended consequence of providing consumers a reduced supply of an inferior product. Consumers are not motivated to conserve, and producers are not motivated to innovate or invest. My question: what flaws in the design of Alberta's move to a deregulated electricity market have been identified, and what has been done to correct them?

MR. SMITH: Well, we're starting to move on a topic, Mr. Speaker, and I welcome the question from the member. As a matter of fact, on Friday I met with individuals from the Power Pool Council, those involved in electricity in Alberta. It was a productive meeting, and we asked some fundamental questions: what's gone right, what are the warts, and how can we change it if we have to make it stronger? In fact, as the member mentions, we'll be working hard at that part.

One of the parts of that meeting, Mr. Speaker, was an overview from a top world-based consultant that talked about Alberta's restructured electric model. Now, in fact there are 27 states that are in some form of renegotiation of their offering of electricity in a competitive market. He said that what Alberta did in a year, it took the United Kingdom over a decade to get to. So there's progress to report. Part of that progress refers to the earlier questions in that Alberta is not an island. We have to find larger and more creative ways to tie into a prairie power grid, to tap into the hydropower of Gillam and Kettle Rapids on the northern borders of Manitoba.

We do know there's need for a continual review of governance. We also need to know, Mr. Speaker, that we have strong market surveillance administration. As the member appropriately and correctly pointed out, price caps are the way to the California experience; free market is the way to lower prices in Alberta.

MR. McCLELLAND: My first supplementary is to the same minister. Is the date for the removal of price caps or the regulated rate option fixed, or is it tied to competition? Can they be removed earlier if competition is present in the marketplace?

MR. SMITH: A good question, Mr. Speaker. The regulated rate option is in place for five years for residential and farm customers, three years for small commercial customers. Again, we'll be reviewing what is appropriate based on market experiences to date, but those time frames are locked in.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary. Given that conservation is cheaper and better for the planet, what is the government of Alberta doing to promote energy conservation in our present regulated-rate environment?

MR. SMITH: Well, again another good question. We've had questions from the Member for Calgary-Currie that talked about what's occurred in the city of Calgary and in fact the production of what is termed mega-watts. Anytime you turn a regulated product such as electricity into a commodity, you get two outcomes from that. One is innovation, and the second is conservation.

Now, we've seen from early reports that the conservation in Alberta has been as much as 6 percent. I do know that the government is taking an active role, I think probably with your co-operation and help, Mr. Speaker. As you go through the Legislative Assembly and the building itself, you'll see compact fluorescent lights in place. I know that there is a deputy ministers' committee. I know the good work of the Minister of Infrastructure, who may wish to supplement about what conservation measures are taken part in across government. There is a great bounty of opportunities to save on power and particularly in that time between 4 and 7 in the evening, which is peak load time, because conservation can save Albertans hundreds of millions of dollars. If you look at today's Power Pool, you'll see power prices at $80.17 a megawatt-hour.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Underground Tank Remediation

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this legislative session Albertans have learned that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is very concerned about underground tank remediation, that tank remediation is a priority issue, and that 80 million taxpayer dollars are funding the cleanup of industrial waste. What Albertans don't know is where the leaking tanks are, who will receive money from this fund, and what the specific cleanup plans are. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. How can Albertans find out if they are living on or near a former tank site?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, the program that this government announced last year is the only program of its kind in this entire country. The $80 million that is being used for this remediation work is on a priority basis. In fact, presently we are looking at establishing an even broader criteria on the almost 5,000 sites that have been identified within this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how much of the $80 million is earmarked for assisting Albertans who are living on or near a contaminated site?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, every single site that is being identified – that is the purpose of the $80 million. My response to the hon. member across the way is quite simply this. If it has been identified as a site that needs help, this province and this government are going to help.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday the minister said that the stakeholders were very pleased with the remediation process. Specifically, who are the stakeholders, and what is the process?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, the process has been that we've been working with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and we've been working with the AAMD and C, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. We continue to work with them. The municipal identified sites have been moving forward very productively, and I am proud to say that over 300 and some sites have already been remediated. That good work is going to continue over this next year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Two weeks ago I asked the hon. member responsible for AADAC some questions relating to fetal alcohol syndrome and related programs here in Edmonton, and I will continue to do the same in the following years. Will the minister tell us about funding that her ministry has in place to address this serious issue?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

2:20

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the next three years we'll spend at least $7 million dealing with fetal alcohol initiatives, but I should point out that we are also in partnership not only with Health but with Justice. Numerous issues that emerge there are being funded through numerous programs, even in our local FCSS groups. Some groups do devote dollars to mentoring programs. Overall, that dollar will be placed in the 18 authorities through partnerships that are locally driven, so dollars there may also include some support from various corporate and business partners. Born Free, which we mentioned a couple of weeks ago, is an example of a particular pizza company getting involved and making sure that nonalcoholic drinks are given to pregnant moms. So a number of initiatives beyond that $7 million.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned the amounts, but could she please let us know some of the initiatives under way that she is planning for combating fetal alcohol syndrome?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the first thing to do would be to take a look at what happens when a child with FAS or FAE is diagnosed, and that is not a simple issue. We have to in fact do that very important assessment. The assessments of FAS are really important. From the time last fall when I mentioned that about 1 percent of live births carry that potential for fetal alcohol syndrome or fetal alcohol effect – I cited at that time that if we have 36,000 births in Alberta and 1 percent were identified as being FAS/FAE, we'd spend a million and a half dollars for each of those children. That would start with dollars at the time of assessment, Head Start and healthy start programs in communities at the community level, and working with health authorities to make sure that we had mentoring in place for families.

Mr. Speaker, recently I asked that question to an Ontario pediatrician, Dr. Mary Gordon, who said that the most important thing we can do for an FAS child is to love their mother. If we love their mother enough, we'll look after the mother. We'll train her so that her understanding of FAS/FAE will make her so interested in not having any further alcohol during pregnancy that we will be involved in that very important prevention that is critical in reducing the number of FAS/FAE candidates that present themselves in our province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was at a function last week with the federal Minister of Justice, and she mentioned that Alberta will lead the prairie/northern FAS partnership. My questions to the minister: are there other ministries involved in this partnership, and are there other stakeholders that are going to be involved?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the prairie/northern FAS partnership actually is our way of networking or making a definitive contact with partners in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and recently the territories and Yukon have been added. We do liaise with the minister of health. AADAC is involved. Our staff work in teams together. The prairie/northern FAS partnership ensures that we're not all reinventing the wheel on issues like guidelines for pediatricians in understanding the assessments, in promotional programs. We build on each other's strengths. We have many people that have a common interest in all of these areas, because there's a mobility among the population that frequently sees children transferred from one area to the other.

Electricity Prices

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, under questioning about electricity prices last week, the Minister of Economic Development said, "There are numerous maritime jurisdictions that are charging far higher prices than [Alberta]." In spite of his comments, we have yet to see any evidence from this minister to back up his claim. To the Minister of Economic Development: will he either provide details backing up his claim or withdraw his comments?

MR. NORRIS: Well, Mr. Speaker, my parents raised me that once you say something, you stand by it. I won't withdraw it. I have information that I'll supply to the hon. member.

I would like to use this opportunity again to tell them why people choose Alberta. The pricing of electricity is one of many, many things that go into people making decisions about coming to Alberta. I have some information that may interest the hon. members opposite about people very close to us. I won't use names, but there is a gentleman . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Tell us.

MR. NORRIS: I can't tell you, but I can tell you it's from Saskatchewan. His comment was that he's moving his business, Mr. Speaker, because he is absolutely fed up with Saskatchewan's high taxes, and he has put his Regina-based business up for sale to come to Alberta.

I would encourage the members to stop myopically looking at this issue as electricity only and understand that the Alberta advantage is made up of many, many, many things, not the least of which are the lowest taxes in Alberta, the lowest corporate tax rate, and the highest net migration of employment. There is so much more than electricity. They seem to be hung up on all the wrong things.

In answer to the hon. member's question, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are the jurisdictions. I did mention that I don't like doing that. I wasn't raised to criticize other people. But it is here in black and white.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what is the department's response to the report by the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters showing that higher electricity costs under deregulation would cost Alberta's manufacturing sector 31,000 jobs?

MR. NORRIS: Again, I would encourage the hon. members to look at the long term. Certainly under the current situation of electrical deregulation there may be some sectors that are doing better or worse. There may be shortages that I'm not aware of. I don't understand why they can't focus on the fact that our net business migration was over 7,000 businesses last year, Mr. Speaker. The number of new jobs created was 110,000. It's endless, and to be myopically focused on this one issue just shows me that there's a lack of direction from the members opposite.

MS CARLSON: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given the findings of the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters report and the fact that Alberta's small manufacturers are subject to the highest electricity costs in the country, aren't the benefits of Alberta's lower business tax being squandered by electricity deregulation?

MR. NORRIS: Well, Mr. Speaker, again we're getting into that very fuzzy Liberal ground of speculation versus fact. Quite simply put, I don't know how to get the message across that one of the many, many factors of coming to Alberta . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Speak slowly.

MR. NORRIS: I'll try and speak slowly.

One of the many, many factors that people choose about Alberta is electricity. That's certainly true, but there are so many others, Mr. Speaker, and at the end of the day all business facts point to the very obvious truth that Alberta is the place that people want to come to. I'd encourage the members to start spreading the word instead of being so negative.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Municipal Transportation Grants

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend's meeting of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities has once again highlighted the need for longer term funding partnerships between the province and Alberta's municipalities. Both Edmonton and Calgary have identified LRT as a key transportation strategy and a major way to reduce traffic congestion in the two cities. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Will the province take a firm funding commitment to extend LRT in Edmonton and Calgary beyond their current limits today?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, as I pointed out to the member one other time, the building of LRTs and that kind of work is not in the Department of Infrastructure.

MR. MASON: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, the same question to the Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, this government has done something quite unique in the jurisdiction of the dominion of Canada, and that is to extend to Edmonton and Calgary 5 cents of every litre of gas sold in those jurisdictions to go directly to transportation needs in those respective municipalities. Nobody has ever done that before, and that gives the city of Edmonton almost an 80 percent increase in the kinds of revenues they receive from the province and well over 62 percent to the city of Calgary.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, why does the government use specific funding formulas for its pet projects like the twinned export highway to the United States, yet when it comes to important municipal projects like the LRT, the province does not have specific funding programs?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the north/south trade corridor is a $1.3 billion project that will connect the Grande Prairie area, all the way through the cities of Edmonton and Calgary and all the way down to Coutts, Alberta, to Montana. That project is undertaken by the province of Alberta. It's solely sourced by this province, and it has no partnership with any municipalities.

In doing that, Mr. Speaker, we've also taken over full jurisdiction of the Deerfoot in the city of Calgary, which would see, oh, a funding commitment of about $220 million to $250 million, and we've also taken over the Anthony Henday construction in the city of Edmonton, full construction, which would be about $250 million, with three bridge structures: one over the Blackmud, one over the Whitemud, and the other one over the North Saskatchewan. That shows a tremendous commitment to those two municipalities, plus we've taken over all of the maintenance. So that gives them at least another 10 percent saving on what they used to spend on those roads.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Court-ordered Prison Visits

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Children's Services. A mother in Red Deer, Lisa Dillman, is being forced to take her young children to see their father in prison despite the fact that he is a convicted sexual offender. Due to the trauma that the children will suffer, has the Children's Services ministry taken any action to prevent these visits from occurring?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Right from the moment that I first realized that the children may be affected, I asked officials both in our department and in Justice what actually is the role of the Children's Services ministry in this situation. Under the current Child Welfare Act there is absolutely no authority to either contradict or challenge the judgment from Saskatchewan. I did advise the mother to get a lawyer, seek legal opinion, and we have also taken a good look at the fact that the Child Welfare Act is under review. With my colleague the Minister of Justice I fully intend to discuss whether or not there could ever be in the Child Welfare Act a section included that would allow that intervention.

I should point out that one of the things about the mother in question here is that she was an excellent advocate. I wrote to her and expressed my sincere concern as she had also demonstrated that our role of children's advocacy tends to be interventionist when there is no other advocate available. Mrs. Dillman is an excellent advocate. She followed through with the lawyer, and as you can see, there was further work done by the courts in appointing a social worker to attend with Mrs. Dillman on the occasion of the visit that the judge indicated must take place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Justice. Is there anything he or his ministry can do to prevent any future visits to the penitentiary by these young children?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Children's Services indicated, children are the top priority of this government, and in our view a determination should always be made on what's in the best interest of the child. However, this unfortunate situation arises through a Divorce Act application which originated in Saskatchewan, and therefore the Alberta courts do not have jurisdiction in that issue. Neither this department nor any department of government can interfere with respect to an order of a court, particularly the order in this case, made in Saskatchewan.

So the answer given by the Minister of Children's Services is exactly correct. The mother in this case, although she has our complete support and sympathy with respect to what she is trying to do, must avail herself of the court in Saskatchewan to have that particular court order dealt with or reheard. It's not within our authority to interfere with the independence of the court in this particular circumstance.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in that case, can the Ministry of Justice and this government change legislation to prevent a similar situation from happening in the future?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a timely question, because there are issues with respect to jurisdiction. Last week we tabled the task force report from the Unified Family Court Task Force, bringing the jurisdiction of the Provincial Court and Queen's Bench in this province a suggestion that it be brought together so that there be one forum.

At the same time, we indicated and in our business plan for Justice is an indication that we are reviewing family law in Alberta with the hopes of bringing a simplified form of family law to this Legislature, perhaps this next spring, and in that review we will be looking at issues with respect to family law, custody/access provisions, as they pertain to provincial jurisdiction. Again, in the course of that review the first and foremost as a principle will be that it should always be what's in the best interests of the child.

I should also mention to the House that the federal government is at this very moment conducting a review with respect to their aspects of family law under the Divorce Act, with respect to custody and maintenance issues relative to the federal jurisdiction, and that there are consultations going on. The province will be participating in those consultations, and we're trying to co-ordinate as much as possible the federal and provincial consultations. I do hope that through the course of those revisions, both in the federal and the provincial laws relating to family law, we will be able to deal with issues like this, which seem to fall through the cracks, and provide better assurance for Albertans that the best interests of the child will always be paramount and that we have no interest in advancing the interests of pedophiles or other sex offenders but that we must protect the child at all costs.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Gary Macyk

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize coach Gary Macyk of the Waskatenau Chiefs baseball team. On October 29, 2000, at the annual Baseball Alberta awards banquet Gary received the coveted Aurora coach/manager award. This award is presented to a senior coach who directed his team with sportsmanship and is perhaps the highest recognition a coach can receive.

In the third week of August the Waskatenau Chiefs welcomed four teams from British Columbia to Manitoba for the western Canada championship. Gary was not only on the organizing committee, but his team also won the first-place gold medal. In a game against Team Alberta, the Fort Saskatchewan Giants, producing a victory over the Giants by a score of 8 to 6, the Waskatenau Chiefs became the first Alberta team in nine years to win this event.

Over the past 20 years Gary has made an impact on many athletes. I ask the Assembly to congratulate Gary Macyk.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Sports Hall of Fame Induction Banquet

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday evening I had the opportunity along with a number of other MLAs to attend the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame 2001 induction banquet. This was a very special year as not only inductees were welcomed into the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame, but also there were onetime century awards, which acknowledged outstanding contributions to Alberta's sporting heritage for the last century.

Worthy recipients of the century individual awards include: athletes, skier Kerrin Lee-Gartner and hockey player Wayne Gretzky; builders, Elsie Barlow for softball and Glen Sather for hockey. The century team awards went to the Edmonton Commercial Graduates basketball teams and the 1978 to '82 Edmonton Eskimo football teams.

All the award recipients have given us great moments and events to remember. Their outstanding contributions have been witnessed provincially and in many cases nationally and internationally. Today we congratulate these recipients on their achievements and thank you for your great involvement in sports in this province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Nelson Lumber Company Ltd.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize another Alberta success story. The Nelson Lumber Company, with its head offices in Lloydminster, has long been recognized as one of the best home builders in western Canada and has now become Canada's largest home manufacturer. Earlier this month the Nelson Lumber Company acquired SRI Homes of Kelowna, B.C., and now employs 800 people, with expected annual revenues of $160 million. The type of growth and accomplishment demonstrated by the Nelson Lumber Company is a direct result of sound management, excellent customer service, and a positive vision for the future. This company contributes to the Alberta advantage and the resulting booming economy that we all enjoy.

I would like to congratulate Mr. Ray Nelson, his daughter Ms Glenda Elkow, the board of directors, as well as all the staff that make up the Nelson Lumber Company team. The achievements of this successful Alberta company are a direct result of Mr. Nelson and Ms Elkow's initiative and perseverance. I would also like to wish this new venture success and to Mr. Nelson, the oldest ever heart transplant recipient in Canada, continued good health.

THE SPEAKER: Now we'll hear from the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

2:40

Red Deer Rebels

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today for the first time in their history the Red Deer Rebels are bringing home the Memorial Cup, representing the Canadian national junior hockey championship. All of Alberta shares in the pride and excitement of this musketeer team that believes in the one for all and all for one system. The Red Deer Rebels are a team of dedicated, hardworking, and talented hockey players, and we congratulate each and every one of them for this outstanding national performance.

Congratulations go to Martin Erat, Justin Mapletoft, tournament MVP Kyle Wanvig., captain Jim Vandermeer, Ross Lupaschuk, Andrew Bergen, Colby Armstrong, Jeff Woywitka, Doug Lynch, Joel Stepp, Boyd Gordon, Jeff Smith, Bryce Thoma, Diarmuid Kelly, Darcy Robinson, Devin Francon, Shane Bendera, Shay Stephenson, Derek Meech, Ladislav Kouba, Joel Rupprecht, Shane Grypiuk, and Cam Ondrik and their excellent coaching staff of Brent Sutter, Dallas Gaume, Justin Wallin, goaltending coach Andy Nowicki, trainers Dave Radar Horning and Les Scott, and head scout, Carter Sears. Congratulations to all of you. Mr. Speaker, if this ran into overtime, that's how Red Deer wins.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Emery Dosedall

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I recognize the career of an exceptional educator, Emery Dosedall, superintendent of Edmonton public schools, who last week announced his resignation.

Since 1995 Superintendent Dosedall has achieved remarkable success during a time when the monopoly position of public schools was challenged by the introduction of charter schools and attractive funding increases for private schools. Instead of allowing public schools to become a victim of the changes, Dr. Dosedall offered Edmontonians an expansive vision of public education.

Building on the site-based decision model that he helped create under former superintendent Dr. Michael Strembitsky, Dr. Dosedall moved to make the public schools as responsive to parents as possible. From schools focused on the fine arts and heritage languages to those with narrow academic concerns, Dr. Dosedall has redefined public education in our city.

Emery is an exceptional leader because he is an exceptional person. His wisdom, love of learning, enthusiasm for life, and ready sense of humour have served students and citizens of Edmonton well. He'll be sorely missed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Dr. Llewellyn Schwegmann

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today in this House and recognize an Alberta physician and relate yet another good-news story about health care in Alberta. A young man was attended by a physician in Valleyview, Dr. Llewellyn Schwegmann, who works in the Mistahia RHA. He had a scrape on his leg. An early diagnosis of flesh-eating disease by Dr. Schwegmann and a rapid response in treatment at the University of Alberta hospital resulted in not only saving the leg of the young man but in all likelihood his life. So I think we owe the system and the doctor our vote of support.

Thank you.

Privilege Imputing Motives

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on Thursday last there was a point of privilege raised in the House. It was raised by the hon. Government House Leader. At that time the chair invited the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to make a tentative statement if he so chose. The chair also indicated that this matter would come back today. So, hon. Government House Leader, do you have something further to add to this point of privilege?

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker, unless there's an initial statement that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands would like to say first.

THE SPEAKER: Please proceed now then.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned on Thursday, I consider it and I think members of this House consider it to be of utmost importance that in the public's eye and in our own eye the question of character and integrity is first and foremost. I think it's well understood, as you review Erskine May, the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and Beauchesne, that the question of privilege can and in fact should be raised when there is an issue which tends to impede or goes to impeding a member's ability to carry out his parliamentary practice. There is nothing which impedes a member's ability more than a reflection on their character, integrity, and honesty. That's the root of this whole question of privilege today.

Mr. Speaker, I outlined on Thursday that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands had in the course of both his first question and then a supplemental question referred to issues relating to a "direct benefit to his own constituency" and "Will the Premier admit that this is just a pork-barrel project for the minister's constituency?" Those two comments made together go directly to the question of the member's integrity and in that way constitute a question of privilege.

Now, I'd refer you to Beauchesne 64 on page 19. "The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members," most notably where a member was referred to as "a cheat and a swindler." Now, that's obviously a much more significant comment than the one here, but what's important about that section is that it says that "for the offence" – and this is an offence of impugning a member's integrity – the member "was judged guilty of a breach of privilege and was summoned to the Bar to apologize."

I'd also refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne 69.

It is very important . . . to indicate that something can be inflammatory, can be disagreeable, can even be offensive, but it may not be a question of privilege unless the comment actually impinges upon the ability of Members of Parliament to do their job properly.

Again, I take that section with respect to its reference to the ability to do the job properly, and there is nothing which is more deleterious to a member in this House than to have their integrity or their character questioned.

Under Erskine May, page 117, under Constructive Contempts and Reflections on either House:

Indignities offered to the House by words spoken or writings published reflecting on its character or proceedings have been punished by both the Lords and the Commons upon the principle that such acts tend to obstruct the Houses in the performance of their functions by diminishing the respect due to them.

Reflections upon Members, the particular individuals not being named or otherwise indicated, are equivalent to reflections on the House.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's clear in Erskine May that reflections on an individual's integrity can be constituted and should be constituted as a reflection on the integrity of the House as well. Drawing a person's character or integrity into question is a serious offence.

I raise this, as I have in the past, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that we as members of this Legislature are duty and honour bound to raise the profile of the Legislature and legislators in the public's mind. We need to have, in order to do our jobs properly, a clear understanding that we're here for the betterment of Alberta and not for the betterment of ourselves. If we in any way as members of this Legislature put out into the public mind that any given legislator is here for their own benefit, that calls into question the integrity of each one of the members of this House and makes it more difficult for us to do our job. It is a question that is of the utmost importance.

Now, given that, Mr. Speaker, and given that it is the duty of members of this House to hold members of the government accountable and it is difficult sometimes to do that in certain circumstances where there may be questions to be raised, this House has set aside a special process for that. We have established the office of the Ethics Commissioner, and that's an officer of this Legislature under appropriate legislation. In any circumstance where there is a question about a member's ability to carry out their office and whether they're doing so with integrity and honesty and ethically, then, clearly, the appropriate way to raise that type of a question is to refer it to the Ethics Commissioner for investigation. To bring questions before this House in a manner designed to impugn the integrity of any member impugns the integrity of all members and brings us all into disrepute and must be sanctioned.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment on this point of privilege.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, I would, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Justice has provided good legal documentation and the parliamentary documentation of the point of privilege, but if I might, I would just like to add a personal note. As you know, I come from a rural constituency, as you do, and the one thing we have in a rural constituency is our reputation. That's why I feel that I need to protect my reputation to the utmost.

We moved to that community in 1945, and we have been in business in that community since 1945, when my father started a business there. My father unfortunately passed away, but my brother and I have sterling reputations for honesty in that community, and our business is based on our honesty. So I strongly object to anything that impinges on my reputation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the hon. Government House Leader rose on a point of privilege, which he has briefly outlined for the House again today. I certainly take a point of privilege very seriously and have spent a considerable amount of time over the last few days reflecting on the issue, looking at the various authorities and consulting with people, who have provided me with advice.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you rule that no prima facie case of privilege exists, and in doing so I draw your attention to Beauchesne 27, which states that a question of privilege ought rarely to come up in Parliament . . . A genuine question of privilege is a most serious matter and should be taken seriously by the House.

The Government House Leader could have risen on a point of order rather than the much more serious question of privilege.

Now, in my reading, Mr. Speaker, it is the difficult task of Speakers to balance the requirements of the protection of individual members with the important principle of freedom of speech and the duty of the opposition to hold the government accountable. Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada on page 315 states:

It is clear that freedom of speech is a constitutionally inherent privilege, being one of those powers or privileges that are intrinsically necessary for the legislators to perform their legislative work.

The matter should not have been raised as privilege for the following reasons. The alleged use of language impugning the integrity of other members does not constitute a question of privilege. The Speaker himself made this very clear in a ruling rendered in this Assembly on November 17, 1998. The Speaker was ruling on a question of privilege raised by the then Minister of Transportation against the former Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. In that ruling the Speaker said:

Language spoken during a parliamentary proceeding that impugns the integrity of members would be unparliamentary and a breach of order contrary to the Standing Orders, but not a breach of privilege.

The Speaker went on to say, "Accordingly, the chair does not find that there has been a prima facie case for a breach of privilege."

The Government House Leader cited page 86 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice in support of raising a question of privilege. However, if one looks at the section cited within its proper context, you'll find that some very strict tests have to be met, including significantly impeding a member from fulfilling their duties and functions. On the citation of the Government House Leader the Speaker of the House of Commons ruled that there was no question of privilege despite the fact that a federal cabinet minister had been accused of being involved in a conflict of interest.

No similar accusation was made in my questions against the Minister of Environment. No evidence has been provided by the Government House Leader that my questions interfered with the ability of the Minister of Environment to do his job. Furthermore, no suggestions were made in my question that the minister would derive any personal benefit either from the commissioning of the feasibility study or from the possible building of a dam down the road. The minister himself did not object to the way I had framed my question at the time. Nothing is wrong with supporting projects benefiting one's own constituency. There's also nothing wrong with pointing it out when it takes place.

I'd like to cite page 224 of Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, which says:

Parliamentary privilege is concerned with the special rights of Members, not in their capacity as ministers or as party leaders, whips, or parliamentary secretaries, but strictly in their capacity as Members in their parliamentary work.

My questions last Thursday were clearly directed at a decision made by the minister to order a feasibility study, a decision made in his capacity as a minister, not as a member. The minister himself made that distinction in answering the question.

I would like to refer you also to Beauchesne 31(1), which states: "A dispute arising between two Members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege." Two members may differently interpret the same set of facts. It is a fact that within months of being appointed, the Minister of Environment commissioned a feasibility study for a major water management project located near or in his constituency. While we may disagree about the significance of these facts, it does not give rise to a question of privilege.

I'd like to address the question of the term "pork barrel." We had been very careful, Mr. Speaker, in looking up this term before the question was even asked. It does not appear in any of the expressions which are ruled unparliamentary by Speakers or chairs of the Alberta Legislative Assembly or in the list of unparliamentary expressions provided by the Speaker's office. The Random House Unabridged Dictionary, which is located in the Legislature Library, defines "pork barrel" as "a government appropriation, bill, or policy that supplies funds for local improvements designed to ingratiate legislators with their constituents." It does not imply personal benefit by any member.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, we did a quick search of Hansard and found dozens of instances where the words "pork barrel" have been used in this Assembly over the past 10 years by both opposition and government members and no member stood up to make a point of order or certainly not a question of privilege.

Again, using the words "pork barrel" last Thursday, I was very careful to apply it to the proposed Meridian dam project. I did not apply it personally to describe the minister or his conduct. In response to my question, the Premier acknowledged that I was referring to the project not to the minister when I used the words "pork barrel." The Premier said that it's "an absolute insult to even suggest that this is a pork-barrel study." The Minister of Environment, in supplementing the Premier's response, certainly expressed no objection at that time to the use of the term "pork barrel."

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning of my comments, I believe that this issue could have been raised by the hon. Government House Leader as a question of order. If you want to raise it as a question of order, I would certainly be most willing to make the appropriate amends as you direct.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on this point of privilege. Citation, please.

DR. TAFT: I feel that these rulings are exceedingly important for setting the tone of the House and for maximizing the opportunity of our debates to proceed here. I don't see the comment as directly impinging on the personal reputation of the hon. minister, so I'd like you to consider those factors as you make your ruling.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Since last Thursday the chair did receive a visit from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and all members should be aware of that.

I believe, hon. members, because this is the first time that we've had a point of privilege raised in this session, that I'll just spend a few seconds longer than perhaps ordinary on this particular point and point out that the basis for the Government House Leader's argument for breach of privilege was certain comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands the afternoon of Thursday last. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands raised a question related to the Meridian dam, and as Alberta Hansard records at page 775, the hon. member said that the project "is of direct benefit" to the Minister of the Environment's constituency. In his second supplementary question the hon. member said on page 776 that "this is just a pork-barrel project for the minister's constituency."

3:00

Under our Standing Order 15(2) written notice of a question of privilege is to be provided to the Speaker "at least two hours before the opening of the sitting," or under Standing Order 15(5) a member may raise a question of privilege "immediately after the words are uttered or the events occur that give rise to the question, in which case the written notice required under suborder (2) shall not be required." Privilege is such an important issue that any delay in raising the matter may serve to deny the request. In this case there is certainly no doubt that the issue was raised at the earliest possible opportunity. Under 15(3) the Speaker "may defer debate on the matter until such time as" it is determined that the matter may be dealt with fairly, and that is what the chair did last Thursday when he invited the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to respond.

The Speaker's role is to determine whether the matter raised constitutes a prima facie question of privilege. Joseph Maingot states in Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition, at page 221:

A prima facie case of privilege in the parliamentary sense is one where the evidence on its face as outlined by the Member is sufficiently strong for the House to be asked to debate the matter and send it to a committee to investigate whether the privileges of the House have been breached or a contempt has occurred and report to the House.

Only you, hon. members, can determine whether there is a question of privilege and what to do about it. If the chair finds that there is a prima facie question of privilege under suborder (6), “any member may give notice not later than at the conclusion of the next sitting day of a motion to deal with the matter further.” If the chair finds there is not a prima facie question of privilege, then under suborder (7) the matter is concluded.

The chair has listened attentively to the arguments made by those participating in this debate as early as last Thursday and today as well. It should be clear to all members that an Assembly is a place of strong words. It is the Speaker’s role to ensure that all members are allowed the greatest latitude to express themselves in line with centuries of tradition attesting to a member’s freedom of speech. The right carries a duty to act responsibly consistent with the Assembly’s rules and with traditions, and the chair will not be guided by an individual member’s point of opinion exercised on a particular day but will be guided by the rules and the traditions of the British form of parliamentary democracy created, developed, and extended for nearly 800 years.

Last Thursday the hon. Government House Leader quoted a passage from page 86 of the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice. The passage quoted by the House leader was from a May 5, 1987, ruling by former Speaker Fraser of the Canadian House of Commons. The chair examined that ruling, which is found on pages 5765 and 5766 of Commons debates. In that case, allegations were made against the then minister of fitness and amateur sport, the hon. Otto Jelinek, concerning a reported conflict of interest. Speaker Fraser found that while the allegations were serious, they did not amount to a prima facie question of privilege as the member’s ability to perform his functions was not impaired.

In this case the Member for Edmonton-Highlands may have violated certain provisions of Standing Orders; namely 23(h), “makes allegations against another member,” or 23(i), “imputes false or unavowed motives to another member.” The comments could have given rise to a legitimate point of order. The chair does not believe this is a case that falls into that very small category of comments that would impede a member in performing his or her parliamentary duties.

In a November 8, 1998, ruling in a similar issue, the chair quoted Maingot at page 254:

Language spoken during a parliamentary proceeding that impugns the integrity of Members would be unparliamentary and a breach of order contrary to the Standing Orders, but not a breach of privilege.

Furthermore, although the term “pork barrel” has been used in this Assembly, it has not been ruled unparliamentary. However, as all the authorities point out, whether a word or expression is parliamentary or unparliamentary depends on the context in which it is used. To quote Beauchesne’s at paragraph 491, “A word which is parliamentary in one context may cause disorder in another context, and therefore be unparliamentary.” The chair did not intervene last Thursday when the words were spoken. While they might have been the subject of a point of order, they do not give rise to a point of privilege.

To return to Speaker Fraser’s 1987 ruling, the Speaker then made some very interesting points. One is that the absolute privilege that was extended to members for what they say in the House came about in “the British House of Commons in a different age when things said within the House would probably not be heard throughout the length and breadth of the kingdom.” He then said:

Today, as a consequence of television and electronic broadcasting, anything said in this place is said in the street right across the country, and that has to be borne in mind.

He also reminded members to take the greatest care in framing questions relating to conflicts of interest.

While there is not a prima facie question of privilege, the chair is very concerned about the type of statements that give rise to these types of points of order and questions of privilege. This is a place of honour, and members on all sides must respect the institution. The tremendous rights and immunities that members possess must be tempered with responsibility. If members will not exercise some self-restraint, then the chair will intervene more frequently to ensure that the proper level of decorum and respect is maintained. In the chair’s view this was a regrettable exchange that did not reflect well on a particular member. We will move on.

Second Reading

Bill 17

Insurance Amendment Act, 2001

[Debate adjourned May 24: Dr. Taft speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to stand up and make a few comments and a few observations on Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2001. I would like to compliment the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who had a tremendous job in trying to overhaul the legislation. I gather that the former act has been in effect in this province since 1915. It is also my understanding that it has been amended over the years to fit the bill and fit the needs of Albertans, but this major update to our legislation which is provided in Bill 17 will certainly not only update the legislation, but it is designed to carry it into the future.

Now, then, when I look at the major object of this bill, it is to amend the new Insurance Act, which is to take effect on September 1, 2001, by removing the requirement that adjusters who are employees of the insurance companies need to be licensed. In its place adjusters working for insurers no longer need to be certified, but the insurer is held responsible for the actions of adjusters who are their employees.

I also see as one of the highlights of this bill that it gives the minister the power to call witnesses to give evidence at hearings in appeals under the act, again I think something that the industry has seen a need for for some time.

As I said in my opening remarks, this was quite an exhaustive review from stakeholders. We have been receiving information for seven years, but like so much of what we do, as the date of instituting and bringing into effect this new legislation gets closer, we continue to hear more and more input from the stakeholders. As they see how the bill is going to affect them, they certainly bring forward new ideas. So what we have been witnessing is some increased scrutiny, not only from the stakeholders but also from the public domain, and they are bringing more concerns forward.

Now, what we hear from the public domain is that they continue to request more research. They wish there to be additional research, and again I think, Mr. Speaker, that because of the impending implementation of Bill 17, people are finally taking a very close look at it and putting all these changes under the microscope and seeing exactly how it is going to affect them. I think that overall Bill 17 has attempted to address these concerns. What I would like to do is just continue my remarks with regards to some of the parts of this bill that people have made comments on.

When I look at section 2 of the act, 459.1, I see that where an individual referred to in section 460(2)(c) contravenes this Act or the regulations in the course of employment as an adjuster, the contravention is deemed to have been committed by the insurer that employs the individual, and any remedy available under this Act in respect of the contravention may be pursued directly against the insurer.

I think this particular amendment is a very good amendment. It takes into account here how we want consumer protection, better protection for all Albertans when it comes to dealing with the insurance industry. The insurance industry like so many industries in this province has been impacted tremendously by technology, by increasing demands and changing demands, so I see that this particular amendment, 459.1, is definitely one of those amendments which addresses some of the concerns of the stakeholders.

Now, I see as well here that section 460 is also amended by substituting the following: "The individual is an employee of an insurer and the contract . . . by that insurer or by an insurer that is an affiliate of that insurer," again one of those changes that is certainly an update and simplifies the responsibilities of the employee of the insurer.

In looking at other issues in this new legislation, I see that the new Insurance Act will place the responsibility and liability for the conduct of an insurance company on its directors. Again, this is exactly where it should be. I see that in the present act they have definitely looked at what can happen when insurance companies do not live up to the responsibility and liability placed on them. Certainly they have instituted fines where the maximum fine to insurance companies now has increased dramatically, a thousand-fold, from $200 originally to $200,000. When you are looking at those sizes of fines, it certainly bodes well for the average consumer who does want protection when dealing with insurance companies. As well, I see here that these fines will also apply to any dealings with insurance companies which are coercive or deceptive in the way that the insurance company or any of its agents practise.

Another major issue in this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, that it now deals with, is that we will have disclosure from insurance companies and their agents. As well, we will have the implementation of rules governing claim practices.

All of these changes, Mr. Speaker, certainly do a great deal to update this legislation, to move it forward, and to carry it into the future. So with those few comments I will take my seat and listen to what other members of the Assembly have to say in regards to Bill 17.

Thank you for this opportunity.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a few words to say regarding Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2001. I worked with our ace research staff on the coverage we did back on the Insurance Act, Bill 25. There was such an extensive consultation between the drafters of the legislation and the insurance industry that I'm surprised that this amendment act comes so quickly to the Assembly. It is scarcely two years since Bill 25.

Certainly at that time the industry's opposition to the situation regarding staff adjusters was brought to our attention. Of course, that was during the stakeholder consultation process. The insurance companies wanted then the staff adjuster licensing provision removed, as I understand it, going back a little ways in history with Bill 25. The opinion that was expressed to us was that it was redundant, given that insurance companies that act as adjusters are already required to have a valid adjuster's certificate of authority. The additional licensing requirement represented an increased cost to insurers that would be passed on to consumers.

The insurance industry viewed this requirement with a great deal of suspicion. They thought it was needless and that possibly it could be a money grab by the government in the way of licensing fees. This could easily happen, because we know the number of fees that have been introduced into this jurisdiction in the last seven years. There's a fee for this; there's a fee for that. In my view, there is no difference between a tax and a fee. Such is my view, and fortunately in our case the courts had something to say about the excessive costs of user fees in this province.

The highlights, as I see them, of this bill include removing the requirement that adjusters who are employees of insurance companies need to be licensed. Secondly, it makes it clear that insurers are held responsible for the actions of adjusters who are their employees, and I think we should make it abundantly clear that this should go for all employees of insurance companies. This also, again, gives the minister or appeal body the power to call witnesses to give evidence at hearings and appeals under this act.

This insurance act – as I understand it, we are going to receive another rather large, extensive document in regards to the second half of the old Insurance Act from 1918. I'm wondering if the sponsor of this bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, in the discussions that have occurred – and I'm sure there have been discussions both ways between the government and industry regarding this specific insurance amendment. What else is coming down the road with the last stage of the overhaul of the Insurance Act?

When we look at, I suppose, the size of the legislation and the fact that it's two years later, perhaps the other side of the coin, Mr. Speaker, is that if there's only one amendment to the act, then the drafting of that legislation was sound and there was certainly a consultation process. But one cannot take that chance, I believe, with consumers in this province. Consumers are sort of at the bottom of the last-to-know list. If there's anything going on in this province, the consumers seem to be habitually left in the dark. We think of pine shakes; that's one example.

The issue of pine shakes, Mr. Speaker, is one of great importance to all Albertans, and the insurance companies certainly have a very keen role as observers in this as it goes through the court system. But when you think of consumers and you think of the priority that's placed on the consumers' right to know, perhaps we're a little bit too hasty with the amendment here. It looks sound, but one can never be sure, and I'm a little reluctant, I'm a little cautious to support this amendment at this time until I hear back specifically from the insurance industry myself.

Now, I'm looking at the notes I have. The stakeholders consulted, I believe, on Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2001, were the Consumers' Association of Alberta; the Insurance Bureau of Canada, Alberta division; and the Independent Insurance Brokers Association.

For Bill 25, the Insurance Act, there was a long list of people consulted. There was the Consumers' Association, the Canadian Bankers' Association, the Canadian Institute of Actuaries, the Alberta Treasury Branches, the Canadian Independent Adjusters' Association, the Independent Insurance Brokers' Association, the Insurance Bureau of Canada in Alberta, the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, the Canadian Association of Insurance and Financial Advisors, and several others. Now, realizing that the consultation was not as extensive for this amendment, I'm concerned about this. I've sent out several letters to various stakeholders. I'm waiting to hear back from them, and I'm sure I will.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when we consider that this legislation will change the insurance industry – now, there are people who will tell you that, no, it's not going to change the insurance industry, but I think in five or six years we will see increased competition. Certainly the banks are very anxious to get in on the industry, and there are certain legislative triggers that are going to be initiated in Bill 25, the Insurance Act. There's also the issue of eligibility, sole or primary occupation, and that's an idea that we've discussed here before. There's the issue of mandatory continuing education, and there was no provision in the act for mandatory continuing education.

Now, many people believe that the needs of consumers demand knowledge, dedication, and education on the part of financial advisers. I myself went in February – yes, Mr. Speaker, in the midst of the election – to make an RRSP contribution. An adviser was there, a young man, and I was astonished at the advice I was receiving from this man. I believe I'm certainly a much more cautious investor than he, but this concept of mandatory continuing education is one that I think would be noteworthy in that specific industry and in that specific institution, which, I can guarantee you, is going to want to sell insurance.

There's also the issue of financial guarantees, compensation plans, compensation sharing, antirebate provisions. Of course, getting back to what I said earlier about the deposit-taking institutions – the banks, the loan companies, the trust corporations, Alberta Treasury Branches, and the credit unions – there's the issue of unfair practices. When will we see an amendment before the House in regards to the specific concerns relating to an unfair or coercive or deceptive practice? You know, many people thought that that definition was too wide, too broad, and they wanted details. But as I view that, it certainly was not in that bill, and it's certainly not part of this amendment. When will that happen?

Now, Mr. Speaker, at this time I think I will conclude my remarks at second reading on Bill 17. Hopefully I'm going to hear back and receive direction on this bill from the stakeholders that I've consulted, and until I do, I'm very cautious. At this time I'm going to withhold judgment on this bill until I hear back from those stakeholders, possibly as soon as tomorrow or perhaps even Thursday evening, because I'll see some people involved in the industry, if I'm lucky, on the soccer pitches of southeast Edmonton.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'd like to introduce to you and through you a very valuable person and a good friend of mine, Mr. David Despina, who worked very hard on my campaign and is also the PC president for the Edmonton-Norwood constituency. He has risen. I'd like the House to give him the warm traditional welcome.

Thank you.

Bill 16 School Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate May 8: Dr. Massey]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to talk to Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, 2001, at second reading, a time when we have an opportunity to speak in principle to the bill and the very beginning stages of when we are able to send bills out to a variety of stakeholder groups and get their feedback and their comments on what they think about the legislation and sometimes have them respond to us on their own, depending on how controversial or how interesting the bill seems to various organizations, groups, and people.

This is what I would call a classic government bill. We see about one-third of the people in the community very much in support of the legislation, we see about one-third of the people in the community very much opposed to the legislation, and about one-third of the people are sitting on the fence, like some parts and don't like other parts and aren't quite sure how they want us to vote. Certainly this is what is unfolding with this particular bill, and it's been quite interesting to watch. This is a bill that's very important for us in terms of the future of our education and, in certain areas that are played out, in terms of how our children will be taught and the manner in which they will go to school and who will have rights and who will have their rights changed. What we've seen with this particular piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, is one of the greatest volumes of correspondence that I have witnessed on a piece of legislation while I've been an MLA – and that's for some time now – and certainly there's been lots of information.

There's an interesting part of this process with this particular piece of legislation, and I believe that it's one of the fundamental reasons why we have to be very cognizant of our responsibilities as legislators not to pass legislation too fast. What has happened in the course of the timing of this bill having been introduced and now, when I have an opportunity to speak to it in principle, is that we've had the first flurry of feedback from groups directly affected by the legislation. Over the course of last week some of those groups have amended their position slightly after they've had a longer time period to look at the bill, and the bill isn't a short piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. It comprises some 17 pages of changes, portions to the amendment that are being acted on, and those take some study and some review in order to fully understand not the first wave of implications but other implications involved with the legislation in and around what can happen, may happen, or how it will potentially affect other areas of education.

So what we've seen in the letters and correspondence that we've got from groups is initial reaction and then some of the reactions being somewhat amended as this particular amendment act has been sent out for circulation among additional stakeholders, and some of those stakeholders then have sent this bill to lawyers for legal opinions. It's interesting that those opinions have come back in some detail and, as often is the case with legal opinions, not always expressing exactly the same concerns or perspective.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So what does that tell us, Mr. Speaker? It tells me that there are some flaws in this bill, that there are some areas for concern, that it certainly needs sober second thought before it gets passed into legislation, and that perhaps this is the kind of bill that would require some amendment, not to say that there aren't potentially some very good things in this bill. Maybe I'll just spend a moment talking about some of the parts of the bill that are particularly appealing to me.

The first of those would be the aspect that deals with charter schools. What we see happening here is that this places charter schools in context, which I think is something that we've needed. We've seen over the past few years that charter schools have been increasingly popular for a variety of reasons, not the least of which, I hear in my constituency, is that they give parents more direct control over what their kids are learning and the process by which they are learning. It allows them sometimes to specifically stream into an area of interest or provide what they believe is a subsequent beefing up of aspects of education that they for whatever reason feel are not available within the current public or separate system. Many people like the charter school system for who it excludes, Mr. Speaker, so I think that in itself is an interesting topic for debate.

What happens here in this legislation, as I understand it, is that the groups now must apply first to a school board to be included as an alternative program. That's really a positive step forward. I think that for the most part most of the charter schools that we have in existence could easily fall within the umbrella of the public or separate school system.

My kids are in the separate system, and as I chose a school for them, I did certainly take a look at the kinds of activities that were available in the school, the scholastic record of the school, and some background on the teachers that they would be most directly affected by and made my choices for my kids based on that. They started in the immersion program, Mr. Speaker, because I felt that it was very important for kids at an early age to learn at least a second language. In my constituency many people speak four or five languages from a very young age. I felt at the very least my kids could have a good grounding in both official languages of this country, that that would be beneficial to them and beneficial to the country.

So that's where they started out, in French immersion at a very excellent school where there were some good programs. A downside to that, though, is you don't get everything you want, and perhaps that school didn't have the same programs for sports or cultural activities that some other choices would have had. Primarily as a result of those options, my children chose to start junior high in different schools.

We took a look at what options were available in the community there, took a look at all the options, including the public system and charter schools, and they chose to remain in the separate system and again by choice went to a school that wasn't within walking distance of the home, that they had to take the bus to or I had to drive them to. Now they're in high school, and they made their choices in terms of where they wanted to go, and they made choices based on programs available there. So once again they looked at charter schools.

The schools they looked at that were charter schools I felt would have fit very well under this umbrella as is listed now for charter schools, that they first must apply to the school board to be included as an alternate program. If they're turned down by the board, the minister may issue a charter. What that does also is raise more than one opportunity for the public to get involved in those decisions. I think that isn't a bad thing, Mr. Speaker, so I'm glad to see that at least the charter school part of the act will be included. I think that's a progressive step.

Something else that I was quite happy to see in this particular bill were the discussions around teachers, where they're requiring the school boards to report any employment action against teachers to the registrar. It surprised me actually, Mr. Speaker, that that wasn't already existing in the current legislation, because it seems to be good common sense. It seems to be that when we're talking about the safety of our children and their ability to be educated in a manner and an atmosphere that is positive for them, we would certainly want employment action to be reported to somebody who is in a position of being able to keep track of that information and act on it as necessary. So what will happen now with this piece being in here is that records will be available to employers across the country. I think that teachers are held in the same high regard as nurses and doctors and other professionals, and certainly I have found in my experience that that is a regard that is well placed.

However, there are exceptions to every rule, Mr. Speaker, and certainly teachers fall within that framework. We've seen situations arise throughout this country where there are issues where it would have been very important for the school boards or any employers of teachers to have information about teachers that would have perhaps changed the decisions about where teachers were placed or even if they were placed. So I think that this strengthening of the act is long overdue and a good move.

What it means is that teachers in trouble will not be able to move to other schools without their records following them. It doesn't address what kind of assistance may or may not be available to teachers who are in trouble in terms of turning their records around or addressing outstanding issues, but certainly it weighs heavily on the side of protecting students and the people who hired those teachers, so I'm quite happy to see that particular provision being put in place with the changes in this amendment act. It's a good part of it.

Another good thing that's happening here, Mr. Speaker, I think, is the changes within the bill to the School Buildings Board. While I have a couple of reservations about this, I think in general this is a positive move. What we see happening here is that the School Buildings Board is being dissolved, and what's going to happen now is the school building decisions are transferred to the Minister of Learning. So it's a bit of a dilemma. We don't like to have too much power in the hands of the minister for decisions about where a school is to be built because . . .

DR. MASSEY: School boards become lobbyists.

MS CARLSON: Yes. School boards absolutely become lobbyists under that kind of a situation, Mr. Speaker, and it gives the Minister of Learning a tremendous amount of power and control. Of course, the concern always is regarding the independence of the decision-making about where the schools go. We saw some of that here recently just prior to the election. There seemed to be a priority list where schools should go. The next thing you know there's a sod turning, and people are participating in the building of schools in areas where it's a surprise to the rest of the province that they're going up.

DR. MASSEY: Block funding would be better.

MS CARLSON: Yeah, block funding would certainly be better in this regard in terms of where the schools would go and how the decision-making will be.

So we would like some information, Mr. Speaker – and perhaps the Minister of Learning can give this to us when we get to the committee stage – in terms of how he's going to make the decision on the school buildings. What we would like to see happen is that criteria be developed, a framework for the decision-making that is open, accessible, and where the minister is accountable for the decisions that he makes. What I would envision seeing is a weighting given to the various criteria for schools wanting or needing to be built, so that the weighting develops and what can be the kinds of criteria. We've all seen them. I have many of those instances in my own constituency. We have plots of land designated particularly for junior highs in my constituency that haven't been built and it looks like, under the existing system, will never be built.

What are the demands in the area for those schools? There are a great number of children who need access to that education who are now being bused or driven by parents to other locations that are quite far out of the way. Why do you want kids to go to your school locally? So that they can participate in extracurricular activities, so that they can develop friendships within the community, so that it's easy for them to get to the school and get home afterwards. I think that those are some excellent reasons.

We've heard all kinds of horror stories of kids taking very long trips on bus rides. Certainly my own kids have been in that situation where they've had 45 minutes or an hour to ride on the public system. The biggest problem with that in Alberta is that when they're on the public system, particularly if they have to transfer, what do they do in cold weather? Small kids get pushed to the back of the lineups; they get pushed out of the bus shelters. Those are all things that you have to be concerned about when you're in a situation where you cannot drive your child to and from school every day but they need to get there. So having schools in local areas is important.

We have a particular problem in Mill Woods with the high schools at this time in terms of them being overcrowded and periodically going to time periods when they have closed boundaries and kids who live right across from the school can't go to the local school. They have to bus someplace very far away. So those are all items that we would like to see developed in the criteria for assessing who gets a school and who doesn't: the population, current and future in terms of pressure on existing school systems; how many kids are currently being bused out of the area; what kind of programing would be developed there; perhaps infrastructure needs of other schools in the area. All these kinds of things can be put on a list. They can be assigned a weighting, and then depending on the weighting, it can be determined how fast they move up to the top of the list and schools be built there.

There's a tremendous amount of development in southeast Edmonton, and in fact there are another 10,000 homes slated in my own constituency over the next five to 10 years. There's no way, Mr. Speaker, that that kind of a population increase – that's homes, not people. That means 30,000, 40,000 people moving into the constituency over the next few years. Mill Woods is an area where young families tend to move in, so kids of school age will definitely be moving into the area, and the current schools can't sustain that kind of pressure on them by any stretch of the imagination. We have gone through many years of school boards moving in portables and setting them up, and that's not going to be adequate to meet the needs. So we would like to see, specifically, the kind of criteria that the minister is going to be developing to deal with these pressure points in the province.

Conversely, what decision-making is he going to be making in terms of shutting down schools? We know that there are many schools in rural Alberta who share the concern with declining populations that they're going to have to shut down a school. Schools are always a fundamental anchor in a community and particularly in rural areas. If they only had to ride on a bus for 45 minutes, the parents would be happy. We've heard some horror stories of kids and the amount of time that they have to get on buses and the age that we're putting kids on buses.

You know, when I lived in Coronation, Mr. Speaker, the big debate then was to change kindergarten from a half-day program to a day program there in town. Why? The only reason was the school bus ride. There were a number of young kids – so those are four and a half and five year olds – who were on the bus for longer than 45 minutes five days a week. It was crazy. We think about it: they're very young children being put on a bus like that. So what they decided to do was to have two full days of school instead and provide a nap time for the kids after lunch so that they could rebuild their energies. That turned out to be much more beneficial, I think, to the kids in the long run than the half-day programs, where they had to spend so much time on the bus. So those are issues that I'm hoping the minister will take under consideration and will report back to us on.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to take this opportunity to make some comments on Bill 16, which contains amendments to the School Act. The amendments are diverse. They deal with a variety of issues and aspects of the existing legislation. Some amendments would seem to be quite timely and helpful. Others I have some questions about. Now, I'm not sure which way I would lean in the end. Yet there are others that are so contentious that I'm hearing a fair bit of opposition directly from school boards that will be affected by those changes. So this is sort of an omnibus bill, but let me outline the various sections that I'd like to speak on and then continue with my remarks.

I think the preamble to the School Act, as I read it, is a good one. It seems to underscore the fact that minority language education guarantees will be respected in the province. I think that's really a question of the Francophone community and its language rights being protected and respected, I guess, if this bill passes. That's good.

The next section, section 3, talks about abolishing co-ordinating councils, and I guess that becomes redundant given the changes that are proposed here. So that's fine. I don't see anything particularly controversial about that.

Section 5, then, goes on to talk about the process of establishing charter schools. I guess what's intended here is that if these amendments go through, anyone wanting to establish a charter school would apply to the minister now and not to the board. Really several sections of the bill deal with charter schools. Given the experience we have had with charter schools in this province, which is one of, I think, failure of the experiment, I don't know why the minister has gone on in detail to outline a somewhat modified procedure to establish schools rather than to say that the experiment has failed, that we recognize it, that it was an experiment, let's get rid of it, and encourage school boards to continue doing what they're doing; that is, to establish alternative schools in order to meet the needs of the diverse communities which they serve.

The minister clearly recognizes that the public school systems, both separate and public, under the overall umbrella have been sensitive to growing community needs which grow out of growing diversity. They provide choice and alternative programs that have been subscribed to quite heavily by the families and students who enroll in them. So I just have questions about why the minister still wants to retain and put in his own hands the power to establish private schools, when he duly recognizes that the current system of public school boards works well in providing diverse and special programs where there is a demonstrated need. There's an ability on the part of the board to deliver those needs by way of special programs.

Then there are some minor changes, I guess some wording changes. The word "company" is fine, I guess, in the way it's being used now. The word "person" is eliminated. I have no problem with that.

Section 15 still continues to talk about private schools. It is certainly a welcome change with the amendments in this act that are being sought by obliging the school boards and schools – whether they're private schools or charter schools or public schools – to report in a systematic way on unsuitable teachers. I think that's a change that was overdue. I understand that it has the support of all segments of the stakeholders in the education system. So that's certainly been a very welcome change.

There's the abolition – let me look at my notes here, Mr. Speaker – of the School Buildings Board and the space utilization committees, you know, that arrive out of that, so I guess that's good. The two ministers, the Minister of Infrastructure and the Minister of Education, can deal directly with those questions now. So it certainly helps reduce some bureaucratic bottlenecks and give to the ministers the ability to directly respond to community demands and pressures.

In that regard I guess I would like to mention in passing the question of school closures, particularly in the inner-city areas of Edmonton and Calgary and even in Red Deer. I visited a school council there about three years ago, where parents in an older area of Red Deer were facing a school closure, a school that served not only their children exceedingly well, but most of the parents who had sent their children there were in fact recent immigrant families. They thought the school served the special needs of their children exceedingly well. In addition to that, they thought that the school also served as a community centre with all kinds of facilities. They, as new members of Alberta society, needed those facilities located nearby them in their own schools so that they could access them.

So those are the kinds of concerns that continue to persist, not only persist but are growing in Edmonton. I know they're also quite serious concerns in Calgary. In another school area that I visited there about a year or so ago, I met with the school council, and there were very similar concerns.

So I hope that with this change the minister will be able to show much greater responsiveness and sensitivity to the needs of local neighbourhoods, particularly in the inner-city areas, which are certainly in crying need of renewal. The city centres are losing businesses because the population is thinning out. We in fact need to attract more people into the inner-city area. If schools are being closed, the ability to attract more people to move into those areas is thereby reduced.

So I hope the minister will use this new power that he's seeking by way of changes through this bill to respond more sensitively and more openly to these pressures from inner-city neighbourhoods and communities. The space utilization formula is in part to blame for school boards having to close inner-city schools, and I would urge the minister, again, to revise, change this formula, make this formula sensitive to the needs of these local neighbourhoods and inner-city communities.

There's always, of course, a fear that this kind of centralization of authority in the hands of the minister himself could be used in the opposite direction. I certainly would hope that doesn't happen. It is centralization. It does concentrate power in the department's own bureaucracy, which, on the one hand, can make it easy for the minister to simply say, "I'm going to do this and do it very quickly" to respond to local community concerns. On the other hand, the communities might find that the power is placed now so far away from them that it's not accessible to them.

Mr. Speaker, to turn to some of the other issues, the most contentious area, as I said, has to do with the establishment of separate school regions, starting with section 29 onwards in the bill. I want to just draw to the attention of the House and the minister some of the concerns that have been communicated to me through letters and have been communicated to other members of this House. I'm going to just use a sample of them to put them on the record.

On Thursday, I guess, at the reception of the Alberta School Boards Association meeting in the Royal Glenora club, next door to us here, there were several from all sides of the House present. I certainly was very seriously lobbied and buttonholed by concerned members of the school boards. One message that I received from them was that on this issue of the establishment of separate school boards there isn't support from the majority of the members of the Alberta School Boards Association. I hope I'm not wrong. My impression is that the minister, in fact, did say that there's wide, broad-based support for this. Certainly that's not the message that was given to me firsthand, face-to-face by several members of these boards who were present at this reception.

Let me take a letter from the Black Gold regional schools jurisdiction. In this letter I think the interesting part for me is:

My Board has some serious reservations about some of the provisions of Bill 16. We are particularly concerned about several of our smaller communities where any erosion of student enrolment will jeopardize the programs currently in existence. We are extremely proud of the educational opportunities we provide in New Sarepta, Calmar, Thorsby and Warburg and to allow decisions from outside those communities to determine the availability of educational opportunities within those communities is completely unfair.

That's from Black Gold regional schools.

Red Deer public school district No. 104. Again, let me read, Mr. Speaker. It says:

The Board of Trustees of the Red Deer Public School District No. 104 wishes to share with you its grave concern regarding some of the provisions of Bill No. 16, The School Amendment Act, 2001. Specifically, our Board is opposed to the provisions which establish a new process for facilitating the expansion of separate school education. We urge you and your colleagues in the Legislative Assembly to withdraw these provisions.

So that is another letter.

Then a letter, a copy of which I received, to the minister from the Francophone secular school division, and that's quite categorical about the way they think this bill fails to address their rights and their concerns. So there are several problems with this bill. Let me just quote a couple of sentences as well from the Greater Southern public Francophone education region No. 4. The observations made here are something that deserve the consideration of this House in my view. It says that although a solution may have been found which may meet the legal requirements, the proposed amendments do not respect the rights and needs of the secular Francophone community.

Again, since the letter is addressed to the minister, it says:

As a result, Dr. Oberg, this is to advise you that as advocates for public Francophone education, the Board of Trustees of the Greater Southern Public Francophone Education Region No. 4 cannot accept on principle that this second condition regarding prejudicial hiring practices be incorporated into the governance structure of the . . . Boards concept.

So they're also expressing a very serious concern about it, Mr. Speaker.

The last letter from which I want to quote is from the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta. They have expressed several concerns which overlap with the concerns expressed by school boards and school board associations which I referred to in my remarks a few minutes ago.

So there are problems, Mr. Speaker. There are problems to be resolved. All of us realize that these matters of public/separate school boards are contentious ones. They're complex ones. They're sensitive ones. We shouldn't rush to impose solutions which are unacceptable to a substantial number of school boards involved and citizens involved.

In light of what I've heard as representations from a variety of school board members from different jurisdictions, different backgrounds, different stakes in the changes being proposed, I get the feeling that what we need to do as an Assembly is advise the minister to withhold further action on this bill in this Assembly and give himself and give his department time to consult, to find solutions that would be appropriately acceptable to these large numbers of significant educational players, policymakers and decision-makers. If we show some degree of patience in this regard, if the minister and his department are willing to consult further, it may be possible to ultimately find solutions that will enjoy greater permanence, that will enjoy more widespread support and approval across Alberta, across various communities.

So I'm going to certainly call on the minister to consider holding this bill until the fall session and to engage in consultations with those who have expressed serious concerns. I know that the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta, with 41 members, at the end of last week told me that they had 18 boards who had formally expressed opposition to certain sections of this bill having to do with the establishment of those public schools.

Public education, Mr. Speaker, is such an important institution in our kind of society not only because it provides young people with skills which are related to their intellectual performance later on and their ability to earn a good living and become productive and responsible citizens but also because public education is a very important means of seeking a degree of harmony through integrating diverse segments of our society into a harmonious totality or entity. So I would certainly hope that the minister will pay attention to the concerns that are being expressed broadly across this province with respect to those provisions that I've drawn attention to. These concerns should be taken seriously, and an attempt should be made to address them before we proceed any further with this bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that I close my comments on Bill 16. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few concerns. I have a few observations and some analysis in regard to Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, 2001. As other speakers have said before me, this certainly is a contentious and conflicting piece of legislation yet legislation that all parties in this province, I think, seem to have some need of. Yet they are very cautious and very concerned about the contents of Bill 16.

These amendments to the School Act certainly are amendments that will have far-reaching concerns and perhaps cause us more problems than solve problems. So when I heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona talk about taking time to pass this bill and taking more time to consult with the various stakeholders, I would certainly have to echo those wise comments, particularly when it comes to something that is so important to Albertans, and that is public education.

Certainly all members in this Assembly realize the importance of public education. For many of us it was stressed by our parents, by our grandparents, particularly parents and grandparents that had experienced situations in other countries before they immigrated to Canada. They certainly saw public education as one of the key instruments for their children to get ahead, for their children to become educated, for their children to have a better life in this country than they had, certainly worthy, worthy principles that all of us hold dear.

So in looking at this, I saw that the object of Bill 16 was to address the equalization of the assessment tax base, new methods for expansion of the separate school jurisdiction, and other amendments for the Francophone regional authorities, charter schools, reporting of employment actions against teachers, and the dissolution of the School Buildings Board.

Now, last week, Mr. Speaker, a number of members from this Assembly had the opportunity to attend the meeting of the Alberta School Boards Association, zones 2 and 3. I can certainly say that in my four-plus years in this Assembly I have never, never encountered so much concern over a piece of legislation by a group of stakeholders. Some of the things that came forward from my meetings with those stakeholders that particular day were not by people in our school boards from our major cities and major urban centres but from those that were from outside.

The county of Sturgeon school board was well represented at this particular meeting, and they had many, many concerns. Their concerns were certainly what this would do not only to education, not only to the funding of education, but also what it would do to communities as they struggle to deal with some of the provisions of Bill 16. It certainly is full of conflicting and contentious issues, and it will have a huge impact on our rural communities.

I was quite interested to see, when I was going through the material on this particular bill, what impact this would have on, say, smaller communities like Jasper. Certainly that is one of those communities that I'm familiar with. I obtained my education from grades 1 to 12 in Jasper, and we certainly had a number of Catholics but a far greater percentage of Protestants that attended school in Jasper. I can't begin to think what would have happened at that point if, for example, we'd had to have two separate systems. I would think that perhaps our math 30 class, which had five members, would have been cut to a system where we would have had three students in the Protestant system and two in the Catholic system. So, again, we have to look at legislation and certainly hope that reasonable minds deal with these changes and that when they deal with these changes, they make changes which are for the good of all when it comes to education.

Now, I notice here that the bill addresses six issues. One of those that we do wish to make comments on is the expansion of Catholic separate school education. When we look at this particular part of the bill, the amendment assumes that the only minority faith entitled to separate school education is Catholic where Catholics are the minority. There are communities in Alberta where Protestants are in the minority compared to Catholics, and the amendments make no provision for this reality. They go on to say that the amendments discriminate against a Protestant minority.

I had an opportunity to teach in this particular type of a situation when I taught with St. Albert public, which was the Catholic board, because at the time that the school board was formed in St. Albert, the Catholics were the majority, so they were considered the public board, and the Protestants, who were the minority, were considered the separate board. Now, over time the number of Protestants in St. Albert that are attending school have far outstripped and outnumbered the Catholics, yet we still have the situation where in St. Albert the public board represents the Catholics.

As well, under the amendment it assumes that the local members of the minority faith invariably want separate school education, so there is no provision for these people to say no to separate school education. The amendments discriminate against local minority faith communities that wish to remain part of the public system.

The amendments also transfer control of this issue from the local electors to politicians, who perhaps do not even live in the affected community. What this would do, as well, is take away that citizen control; they would lose local control of the particular situation. This again, Mr. Speaker, is something that as members of a community we certainly hold dear: the fact that we do have locally elected school boards and we wish those people to speak on our behalf.

Now, as well, one of the other issues that I have concern with is that certainly in education all educators and all boards do have a very restricted budget with which to work. Certainly one of the key issues that is going to be addressed this fall, again a very contentious issue, is where in our budget we had a line item that indicated that teachers over the next two years would get a 6 percent raise. This is certainly a challenge as to how this is going to be dealt with. Here we have legislation that is going to increase quite dramatically the cost of educating students, and one of the outcomes of this legislation is that because of the sparsity, we can look forward to increased busing. We also are going to have huge bills when we look at providing education to all, as is the possibility under this bill.

When I look at this busing issue – the former assistant superintendent of schools in the county of Parkland, who is a good friend of mine, had to make the decision whether they were going to close a couple of rural schools. The enrollment had dropped in those schools, as it has in many of our municipalities across this province. They were really looking, at times when they were short of money, as to the feasibility of keeping these schools open or the reality of perhaps having to close them. At that time it was indicated that perhaps they should close these schools because enrollment had dropped significantly, but it also meant that they'd have children in elementary school that would be riding school buses for 90 minutes one way in order to get to school.

Now, they were holding this meeting on a Friday afternoon, and he said: "Well, why don't we hold off on this decision until Monday morning? We'll meet over in the yard where we have all the school buses and we have our maintenance department." So when all the school board members arrived on Monday morning, he instructed them to get on the school bus, and he had the school bus driver take them for a 90-minute tour on the back roads, the gravel roads, the rough roads, of Parkland county. Now, when they got back to the yard 90 minutes later, he then had the school board members vote on whether they should keep those schools open or close those schools. It was a unanimous vote, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely nobody that rode that school bus for 90 minutes wanted to close those schools.

So what we have to look at in this legislation, as well, is how we are impacting the youth of this province. If we are going to require them to ride buses for an inordinate amount of time, what are we doing to those students? It is not only from the point of view of the time taken out of their day riding a school bus but the opportunities they lose at school because they have to get on buses and head home directly after. You know, the additional burden we would put on parents: they would have to drive in order for their children to take part in school activities. So that is another issue in this particular legislation that does cause me a lot of concern.

I think what we have to do here is look at other implications of Bill 16, and this is the effect that it will have on our communities in this province. We have already had examples of where people have built partitions in schools so that they can have two separate types of education, and we have seen how this has torn communities apart. As well, when we have this being allowed to happen, Mr. Speaker, we also have the situation that we cannot offer the same quality education to each particular student. When we are taking a pie, a small pie, I might add, and splitting it into even smaller amounts because we are not working together, because we have to deal with two small groups rather than one group that could be dealt with much better by being combined, then I really have to question the value of this.

These were many of the concerns that I heard last week from the Alberta School Boards Association, zones 2 and 3, when I met with those people. There weren't too many people that I spoke to at that particular time that were in favour of Bill 16 in its present format.

So, again, when it comes to legislation, legislation that is difficult and legislation that people realize there is a great need for in this province, when we have this much opposition, this much concern, then I think that as legislators it is very, very important that we don't push this through, that we do search out other alternatives to what is suggested in this bill, that we do look at amendments which will strengthen this bill, which will strengthen our Alberta communities, which will strengthen the education program that we can provide to our students.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. I certainly would urge all members of this particular Assembly not to rush forward and pass this bill but to certainly look at it with the tools that are available to us to make it a much better piece of legislation.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 16. I think that it's a very significant piece of legislation, and I think it's worthy of some comment. As my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and leader of the third party has said earlier, there are different elements to this bill that make it very difficult to sort out whether or not we can support it. There are certainly some positive elements in the bill, and I do want to acknowledge that fact.

Certainly the right of electors belonging to one group or another, that previously may have been compelled to support a separate or a public system, to actually under the new legislation look at opting out and supporting the system that they choose is a very positive development. I think it's important that parents be permitted to choose the system in which they want to enroll their children. These decisions are, in my experience, made less and less along the basis of faith but more and more along the basis of the individual school: the quality of the teaching staff, the quality of the administration staff, the programs that might be offered in that school, and the overall quality of the education that might be had.

We've seen examples of this, Mr. Speaker, in some of the discussions around closure of inner-city schools in my constituency. Certainly decisions of parents to go to the separate or the public systems are made more along the lines of the convenience and quality of the education that's offered. For example, in one case one school lost enrollment because the other one in the different system instituted a program of all-day kindergarten. That was the deciding factor, not which particular faith they belonged to but rather that specific program. So I think it's a positive step and one that I'm pleased to support.

The second element that I think is positive about this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is that it – and I forget the other positive thing. I will come back to that. Perhaps reciting a few of the negative elements of the bill will jog my memory, and I will come back to it. I guess I'm just unaccustomed to saying positive things about government legislation, but I do try to do it every once in a while. I do try to do it.

I guess the most difficult piece of this legislation is the capability of a minority group within a specific area to force the creation of a new school jurisdiction and people not being in a position to stop it once it has happened. I think you come back to the question of what the quality of the education is. So if you have a small school jurisdiction where there's just one system, whether it's public or separate, and then a group wants to divide it into two because they think there might be some advantage to do that, whether it be for religious education reasons or other reasons, then you may in fact have a situation where the quality of education received by the children in that district is reduced because the schools are too small to support an adequate level of education. I think that that's a difficulty of the bill.

I know that the Public School Boards' Association has raised a number of concerns with respect to this bill, and I think that's got to be one of the more difficult elements of it. I think that we ought to have sufficient flexibility built in so that between the parents, whether they're supporters of the public or the separate system, the local school board, the department of education, and the minister the right decision can be achieved. The right balance has to be there to ensure that the rights of the minority to their own separate school board are qualified by the parents themselves from that particular faith community having the right to say, "No, we don't want to have a separate system; we think that the students are best served by having one." I think if that were incorporated, it would make it much easier to support this bill.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have remembered the other positive element of the bill, and it has to do with the changes around creation of charter schools. I think it's certainly an improvement in the bill to specifically further restrict the ability of charter schools to be established, so we find that the minister has more jurisdiction over that.

I think the whole question of charter schools is something that the government should relook at. I know that it was an article of faith of the neoconservative developments of education coming out of the 1980s. It was certainly something that people believed needed to be done because public school systems had not been responsive to the changing demands of parents. But as I think we've seen and we've heard in the debate and, in fact, in one of the tributes that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods made this afternoon, the public school system has responded to those demands of parents. They have in fact provided a large measure of variation in programs to meet the needs of parents, whether it be for special education or the arts. We've seen a number of schools – I know in Edmonton there are at least a couple of schools, one at the junior high and high school level and another at the elementary level – that have developed outstanding arts programs that attract students from around the city. They are very highly recognized schools.

We find a number of other schools that have offered language instruction, primarily in the area of the French language, first of all, with the French immersion schools and so on. That has become a really important development. Parents now have an opportunity not just in the big cities but even throughout the province to enroll their children in French immersion schools and have them educated in the French language. I think that that has been predominantly provided through the public and separate school systems. I sometimes use the term "public school systems" to mean both, but what I mean is that those systems that are elected and supported by taxpayers have been very responsive, particularly in the area of language. Also we've seen, for example, Ukrainian language programs. I know that in my old ward 3 that I represented on city council for many years, I often was invited to programs at schools that offered Ukrainian language education. And there are more. There are some that offer Chinese language education.

The fact of the matter is that the main argument put forward in the 1980s in favour of charter schools has been refuted by the facts and by the development historically of responsive public school and separate school education systems that have really dealt with the demands of parents for options and choice for their children. So I think the government might want to reconsider its commitment to charter schools. I think that it would be better if people as a whole participated in a democratically elected school system and insisted that the needs of their children for education were properly represented within that system rather than opting out and setting up a number of smaller scale schools or school divisions. I think that that's an important piece, Mr. Speaker.

I think there's a danger when you have smaller groups in the community insisting that they need to have direct control over the programming that exists. I think there needs to be a balance between the interests of society as a whole to provide education and to making sure that there are some common elements of education, that we're all educated with some common values and certain principles, some things that everyone has in their education, yet allow a variation in programming to provide for the individual needs of students and the special qualities or special interests that the children themselves may have to enable every person to individually become a great contributor to our entire society.

In general, Mr. Speaker, I think that the bill has some very positive elements. I would like to see a greater emphasis, a greater shift to publicly delivered education, whether it's separate or public systems. I would like to make sure that individuals in small areas have some option if it's suggested that you want to split the school system in that particular area. I think that that's an important piece.

Generally, I think the bill deals with things that maybe ought not to be considered together. It would certainly make it easier for us on this side if we could somehow divide the positive elements of this bill from the negative ones. It presents us with some quandaries, but perhaps when the bill comes to committee stage, we will be able to address those through the suggestion of a number of amendments, which I will be only too pleased to present and speak to the members opposite about and give them a full and detailed understanding of our positions and the things that we think could be done to improve the legislation.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to take my seat and allow others to continue this very important debate. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Bill 20
Appropriation Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand today and have the pleasure of moving second reading of Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2001. With regards to this bill, we've already had some discussion in the Assembly with regards to the estimates, and this bill brings forward the authorization of the spending amounts as identified in those estimates for the period of 2001-2002, ending March 31, 2002.

With particular regard it does authorize operating expense and capital investment of $19.364 billion, including operating expenses of $18.795 billion; program expenses and voted debt servicing of $80 million; capital investment of $569 million; voted nonbudgetary disbursements of $179 million; and lottery fund payments of $1.016 billion.

Ministries are also authorized to make additional statutory payments as permitted under the statutes other than the Appropriation Act. Statutory payments are identified in the estimates document for Budget 2001, but they do not form part of the Appropriation Act.

Just as a side comment to this, we in the Legislature have an opportunity of debating all of the estimates of the departments. Especially with the assignment of the Department of Revenue, at this stage I've always been puzzled in some respects that we spend all of this time debating the expenditures and the appropriation of that – and I appreciate that we have legislation that authorizes the collection of all of our taxes and fees and revenues that are associated with funding those expenditures – yet we don't take the time, really, in this Legislature to actually review and debate all the various revenue related items. I know it's been a procedure that we've gone through in the past, but I certainly would like to see that we have the opportunity likewise to give full considered debate to all of the items that we collect and disburse through this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to see that the Minister of Revenue and I agree on something, and that's that we should have more debate time for the budget. Certainly we would support having an equal amount of debate time for each type of revenue that comes into the government's hands. That would be very appropriate, we feel, and perhaps he can lobby his colleagues to add that to next year's agenda. We'd certainly be looking forward to seeing that happen.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 20, this year's appropriation bill, at second reading. You know, we have a problem with this bill in principle. It's tough to support the appropriation bill without getting some kind of explanation about how the new spending will contribute to meeting defined outcomes and performance criteria such as reducing health care waiting lists and reducing the pupil/teacher ratio and improving the lives of vulnerable children and protecting our seniors. The list goes on and on.

It's hard for us to also talk about passing this bill and approving it in principle, Mr. Speaker, when there are any number of questions that, in fact, we didn't get answered during the debate time. In some cases we certainly did talk about sending additional questions in writing to the minister and having those responded to in writing at some future date never quite determined at the point that we were talking about it, but it isn't quite the same as having an opportunity to debate. In fact, we don't really have an opportunity to debate budget issues in the process that's set up. What happens is that the minister makes a short introduction, we lay out our questions over the course of an hour, and then the minister responds for an even shorter time period at the end of that.

It would be really productive, I think, for both sides of the Legislature if we could honestly have a question-and-answer kind of process in here where not only was the minister available for questions, but we had key staff available from the departments. Often the minister knows the basic concepts of what it is, the policy-kinds of directives in terms of what's happening in the department, but they don't often know the details, Mr. Speaker, not through any fault of their own. There's just too much work to do. Sometimes it's those very details that we'd like to get at when we're talking in budget debates, and I certainly would support a process that made that possible.

When we have tried to do the question-and-answer thing here in committee debates over the past years with regard to budget, what we did find was that we didn't get very good answers. Some ministers were excellent, but for the most part what the ministers would do would be to stand up and answer a question and rattle on for however long on that particular answer to the question and related items and use up the speaking time that was available for the estimates. What would be the most proactive is for us to get, for instance, our one hour of debate time, and then the minister could respond to the questions in as much additional time as was required to adequately meet those questions. I think what that would give us is a quality of question-and-answer time. That's the kind of process that we would like to see develop in appropriations over the future, where good questions can be asked and good answers are provided and where we still get at least a minimum of one hour talk time per ministry.

That isn't very much time, Mr. Speaker, when we're talking about huge dollar expenditures, a total of $19.544 billion in expenses this year. In fact, one hour was all we got to talk about the $19.544 billion in revenue that was collected by this department for the government in general. So we would think it would be more appropriate to have more time than that.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to put some of the questions that did not get discussed during budget debate on the record at this point in time. Perhaps we'll get some response prior to us having to actually vote on the appropriations. This Wednesday looks like the date when the final vote will come up. I think these issues are important. They're outstanding issues that need to be talked about and discussed.

The first one that I would like to talk about is under the special places program. A change was made this year, Mr. Speaker, where special places programming was put into the Community Development department business plan rather than in Environment, where it was before. I have some reservations about that having been done. I think the jury is still out in the department in terms of whether they support those changes having been made. We never got a full justification for why those changes were made, and that's one of the questions that we would like to have answered. How does the Minister of Environment feel that special places and parks in general will be enhanced by moving them to Community Development? My first impression of that happening is that now we're supporting a theme park kind of filter when making decisions on parks. I hope that's not the case, and I guess as time unfolds we will find that out.

In terms of special places specifically I have some questions. What's the status of the Special Places 2000 program at this stage? We know the long and not very happy history of that program, and it was to have been concluded by 2000. It isn't yet, Mr. Speaker. There are still several outstanding issues involved in the program, and we'd like to get an update on where it stands and what the Minister of Community Development plans to do in terms of finishing up the program and what replacement program there is for finishing the concept. I don't think we actually got to the stage where we can adequately say that the mandate of that committee to designate 12 percent or better of this province was actually met. So if we could get that information, it would be helpful. I would also like the Minister of Environment's feedback on what he thinks in terms of the success or failure of that particular program.

We'd also like to know if the department plans to continue to protect areas under this program in terms of any additions and those areas that were still under discussion. If the department is continuing with the program, will economic development rather than environmental protection continue to be the cornerstone of protected areas? That's, of course, our very grave concern.

You know, I hearken back to when this government set out a committee to talk about public lands in this province. The government committee went out and talked about them, solicited feedback from the community, and they got it. One of the government members who was on the committee at one point said to a participant in the program: ranchers are bringing money to the table in deciding about these areas, grazing leases; what are you bring to the table? That was quite startling to the person to whom that question was asked, because they felt, as I feel, that the mandate of the government is the greater good of the landscape and not necessarily the monetary value that is brought by using that landscape in a particular manner.

Greater good isn't always economic good, Mr. Speaker. It can include many different facets. In fact, often the greatest thing we can do for the landscape is to protect it. So our question is: how does Community Development, whose very name, Community Development, would be in contradiction of environmental protection, expect to continue to be the cornerstone of providing protected areas? We'd like some specifics on that if we could, exactly where the minister expects to go with that, the framework within which he will be making decisions. Do they have any long-term plans in this regard? When can we expect feedback, and how are they benchmarking success? So those are the questions with regard to that.

Also, if you could tell us what the department is going to do if they're not going to continue with the program. Is there a program replacement idea out there? If not, why not? What will happen to all the areas that were nominated for protection? I ask this on behalf of many people throughout this province who are gravely concerned about this issue, and we have been waiting, in fact, for some sort of public announcement that has not been forthcoming from the minister. So if we could get that information, it would be very helpful to us.

Another question in that regard is: how will the department monitor applications for industrial developments in or near parks and protected areas? The buffer zones have always been an area of great contention, and now, Mr. Speaker, we have a ministry that really doesn't understand the mandate of protection and the impact that can occur with industrial development very near or right beside protected areas. Has any of the staff from Environment been transferred over? Who is it that's got the technical expertise in that area? Those are the kinds of questions that we like to see answered. If the minister can develop that, that would be very helpful to us. Have they been receiving applications at this stage? That would be a good question to have answered.

Also, what are the department's plans for promoting low-impact ecotourism? Always an area of keen interest to us, and certainly those are some areas where we can see replacement income coming into regions that have been otherwise economically disadvantaged. I think particularly of some of the coal mines that have been shut down recently. It certainly has an impact on areas.

However, there is no doubt that for every single place where we had a coal mine, we also have incredible opportunities for ecotourism. I'm wondering what the Minister of Community Development has in mind for those areas. To be seen as the minister who really drives ecotourism in this province would be a feather in his cap, I think, and something that he wouldn't really want to ignore. Those questions relate to page 88 in the business plan, and if the minister could respond to them, I would appreciate it.

If we go to page 96 there too, now we talk about the total area of parks and protected areas in Alberta being 81,000 kilometres squared. We need to know what new areas are anticipated in this increased area. Not getting much information about that, and some feedback would certainly be beneficial. Do we see that there are major areas planned, or, Mr. Speaker, will Albertans continue to see a patchwork of fragmented areas evolve from that?

I'm not sure if the Minister of Community Development is up to speed on the Y2Y concept, Yukon to Yellowstone, the kinds of wildlife corridors that are needed and necessary in this province. I'd appreciate his feedback on that if he knows about the concept and if he supports it. If he supports it, what action is his department taking?

I know that formerly in Environment there were some people dedicated to that particular concept, pulling in some research and, I'm hoping, trying to develop the science on why it would be necessary to have those linkages. Certainly I think that we've put on the record many times why the linkages are important, but we haven't particularly seen great support on that issue from the government. Hopefully we can hear something back on that, hopefully a big announcement. But in the absence of that, perhaps before the summer comes, we can see the Minister of Community Development respond to those particular issues.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk a little bit about climate change, if I could. There are issues here that also weren't fully developed in the budget. If we talk in principle about spending billions and billions of dollars in government expenses, then part of what we need to talk about is how we reduce those dollars in the long run and what decisions the government has currently made, whether or not they're feasible and whether they're going to create additional costs in the future.

One thing I'd like to talk about is some of the statements that we've heard from the Premier about the clean coal technology. We need to get a definition of exactly what this government means by that. There's some desk thumping at the idea of clean coal technology. I agree with the member that clean coal technology is where we want to go, but let's talk about the scientific facts in that regard, Mr. Speaker, which would state that clean coal, truly clean coal technology is not feasible, is not possible even scientifically at this particular stage.

I see that the member is shaking his head that I am wrong. Well, I would like to see some facts tabled on this, Mr. Speaker, because certainly all the research we've done would indicate that we are at least 15 years away from true clean coal technology. There are lots of cleaner coal technology systems available, but that is quite different from clean coal technology. I know that all of the businesses involved in coal technology support cleaner coal technology. Good for them. It's the right thing to do for people, it's the right thing to do for the environment, and it's the right thing for them to do in the long run in terms of dollars spent and saved. So we would like to see them pursue that beyond a shadow of a doubt, and what the government can do to support that technology we're also in support of, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, clean coal technology is absolutely not available at this time. It isn't even at the pilot project stage. All scientific evidence and feedback that we're getting would indicate that we are at least five years away from being able to build a pilot project on clean coal technology. Then in order to get a proper length of time to evaluate the pilot project, it's going to take about another five years to be able to identify whether in fact it is running on a clean basis and any tweaking that needs to happen in the process. Traditionally what has happened then is that it takes another five years before that technology can get to market. So what we're seeing now are some public dollars being spent on this research and development. That's somewhat of a concern because what we're seeing are the bucks being spent on something that might or might not work and has a payoff that is coming quite far in the future, incredibly far in the future, Mr. Speaker.

What we would like to see at least with parallel dollars allocated to it, if not more dollars – at the very minimum we would like to see parallel dollars dedicated to looking at alternative sources of technology such as wind or solar or whatever else is out there or other kinds of options that will reduce emissions and reduce the usage of coal as a fuel at this particular time. We don't see that kind of commitment by this government, Mr. Speaker, and that's really too bad.

The kinds of things that we need to take a look at are retrofits for individuals and for businesses and not the least of which is government, Mr. Speaker. This is a place where the Minister of Environment, who is not all that thrilled with listening to this particular debate, could have some huge impact. Why doesn't the government take a look at retrofits for its buildings and its vehicles? They could show some true leadership in this regard, and they could move a serious way towards reducing emissions in general. The government is a huge consumer both in public buildings and in public vehicles, and it would be very proactive of this minister if he could move forward to see the government undergo major retrofits. That would be an economic development stimulant. So perhaps the Minister of Economic Development can get on this particular bandwagon too, because certainly what it does is stimulate the retrofit industry, stimulate the incentives for businesses to look at alternate sources, and it also serves a huge environmental benefit, Mr. Speaker. Those are the kinds of things that we think the minister should be taking a look at. This could be a big hit for him, and we'd like to see him pursue it.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 20, the Appropriation Act. This bill is kind of the culmination of the Committee of Supply debate that we've had where we've dealt with each of the departmental budgets and we bring them together now into the aspect of dealing with the overall approval of the appropriations.

One of things that we have to look at in the context of the Appropriation Act itself – we end up with a few dollars, the dollars actually reported in here in each of our departmental areas and this Legislative Assembly, but what is missing in this from the perspective of judging it as a functional document for the public and for us in the Legislature are some of the issues that would relate back to outcome measurements. When we talk about the commitment of dollars in the context of this act, we're seeing more and more where there are provisions being made for a kind of flexibility within what's going on without any resulting accountability for the change in dollars.

Mr. Speaker, you know, we've seen all the way back to when we started the debt retirement act and allowed for, within a department, changes in budgeted processes. We spent a lot of time in Committee of Supply talking about the line item values. What we end up with is debating the allocation of a lot of dollars, yet when it comes to an operational budget, the minister responsible is never held accountable for anything other than the total value of dollars that are put to that department in the sense that here now is the bill that allocates money to each of those departments without ever putting into legislation the commitment that we make to the specific programs that are represented by the line items in those budgets that we debated at length for the last 20 days.

This is the kind of thing that leaves Albertans with a question in mind as to what kind of legitimacy there is to the budgeting process. Even though we spent time debating the line item allocations, when it comes time to deal with accountability and verifiability, the government can spend them as they see fit. What we then end up with as the only mechanism for accountability is the Public Accounts debate a year down the road, and, Mr. Speaker, even there we're finding now that as we get involved in dealing with the public accounts – as an example, this year there's no way we're going to be able to address each of the departments in the one time per week only during session scheduling that comes up with the debate on public accounts. So there's no follow-up ability in terms of the government's performance and the government's measure except in those few areas where we do get to bring them to Public Accounts.

I think what we've got to do is look at this from the perspective of how we provide for that accountability when we go ahead and present our budget to Albertans. I guess that's where I would suggest that it would be useful to have the line item, full-scale budget brought into the actual enactment. Mr. Speaker, I say that because what we're finding now is that more and more the needs of Albertans require action from more than one ministry. In essence, as an example, what we end up with is that in our service-providing ministries they decide the focus of a program and they decide the delivery of that program, but the capital structure for that program gets moved over to Infrastructure. That's even true in Transportation now, where this becomes a part of the Infrastructure debate. What we then have is no relationship between the related needs and the actual delivery capacity that we have within the budget.

The other area where this comes up is if we take issues that relate to some of the seniors' or some of the children's programs that we have. Even though more and more children's services or children's needs are being addressed by the minister responsible, we now have a news seniors' approach. What we want to do is watch, because a lot of the needs of those individuals are actually delivered by other departments, through Health or through Learning. What we see then is that you can end up with dollars being shifted around, and they're not accountable in terms of the recipient of that service when all we see are totals for the budget as they come out reported in the Appropriation Act.

I think it would be useful for us to further review whether or not it's legitimate to not deal with incorporating into the legislative approval process, i.e. the Appropriation Act votes, the actual line items. We can see some very significant changes in the direction of a ministry just by moving dollars from one part of their budget to another, which does not require, then, any subsequent legislative debate or legislative approval. That's the issue that becomes really critical in the case of what I'm talking about. If there's no legislative debate, this in essence becomes an internal decision of the minister with possible standing policy committee and possible cabinet discussions behind closed doors in the government structure, where there's no open public debate available to Albertans, when we see significant shifts in the way the dollars are being moved from one program to the other.

The issue that I also wanted to look at that kind of follows on this a little bit is as we get into the Appropriation Act, section 3(2), when we're talking about effectively allowing any surplus. I assume it also then would be any negative or any deficit that would occur in the lottery fund to automatically roll over to general revenue under the title of debt repayment and contingency reserve so that it moves over and becomes part of that 75-25 pool that the government has. I think that what we want to do is make sure that we look at that as being a true statement in the sense that if lottery fund commitments that we vote through the Legislature at the end of the year are greater than the revenues – now, we have a history, Mr. Speaker, of increasing revenues from lottery. Still, if there was to come a year when revenues were not as expected and we ended up with the revenues coming into lottery not being sufficient, does this section here also then imply that there would be additional general revenue dollars made up to effectively meet the needs of those programs that were being funded by those lottery dollars?

I think that should be clarified for Albertans, because what we see is essentially that if there's a surplus in the lottery fund after commitments, it rolls over. But what happens to those dollars that are specifically identified in programs as being funded by a transfer from the lottery fund? If there's not enough revenue in the lottery fund, how do we deal with that?

So we've got kind of an inconsistency here. If we've got extra, we put it in general revenue as a surplus. But if we have a deficit, what happens? How do we fund those programs? Are they just automatically cut, as would happen if the general revenue fund revenues did not reach the level that was necessary to meet the expenditures that we pass in the budget? You know, that's part of the act as well, which basically says that on a quarterly update if we don't have the revenue stream to support our expenditures, the expenditures are reduced proportionately. Well, would that necessarily transfer over on a program-specific level to the lottery fund program allocations and how they are treated? So I guess that section, when we looked at Bill 20, triggered that kind of concern and that kind of inconsistency when I was looking at that.

The other thing that I wanted to basically touch on initially as we go through this is to look again at the fact that when we deal with our budgets, we keep talking about the idea that we want to be accountable to Albertans, that we want to be accountable to ourselves in terms of our process. The Auditor General has also suggested that we build some measure of performance into our budget approval process, but we don't see it here. We don't see at all in the Appropriation Act any reference back to the performance measures or even to the business plans. If we see the information we're dealing with in the context of the performance measures, in the context of the business plans having any relevance as we go through this approval process for the budget and the appropriations, what we should do is have an additional section in the act which basically stipulates that any ministerial transfer of dollars within their budget has to be consistent with the business plans or has to be consistent with achieving the performance indicators.

You know, this would just be a statement that would stand out for Albertans that says: we've gone through the process of developing business plans, we've gone through the process of selecting a series of performance indicators, and we now want our budget to be reflective as we put it into operation. That way what we would have is just a slight reminder to the ministers that when they start transferring dollars within the legal authority of the minister but outside any voted amount, they would still do it in the context of and under the achievement of those performance indicators.

Mr. Speaker, as we look through the budget, we also see that in the last two years we've now rolled together operating and capital. This creates a real kind of opportunity for a minister at the end of the year when there are additional dollars available to say, "Oh, well, let's buy some capital; let's buy some supplies," those kinds of things. In essence, "Let's make sure we've used our money."

By separating out the capital allocation from the operating expense, what we end up with is a clear, separate process for decision-making that would allow us to say that these capital projects are needed during this year's commitment to delivery of a service. Yet by not earmarking those dollars separately in our Appropriation Act, what we basically allow is for a minister, as they move through the year, to deal with specific capital projects as part of their overall budget, so there's no operational separation.

If we're going to allow for additional operating dollars, say to be transferred to capital, what we would see then is that that may in effect commit in subsequent years a need for further operating dollars. In essence, we are committing future years to an expenditure pattern that hasn't been approved, prior to implementing it, by the Legislative Assembly, by the people of the province. So I guess I just raise that as kind of a companion to this issue that I was talking about of moving the operating dollars between programs, yet we don't have the flexibility that we need.

Those are the kinds of things we need to look at in terms of a more direct relationship between our votes here, the debate that we had in Committee of Supply, the actions of the minister delivering those services and programs during the year, and the subsequent follow-up that we have to have when we go back to the accountability phase that comes up under Public Accounts. I guess what we have to do is look at how that whole process maintains and effectively conveys to Albertans a degree of true commitment to the openness and accountability that we talk about in the Legislature on a frequent basis.

The final area that I would like touch on is: how do we measure the idea of budget management, budget stability, and budget sustainability? When we see the ability of the government to increase expenditures in the middle of the year, to switch expenditures in the middle of the year, we don't have that same kind of commitment to a sustainable budget or a sustainable operation of our commitment in the delivery of these programs. I think we've talked about this a lot in Committee of Supply, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about how we measure the change from one year to the next in our budget.

You know, this budget now is about 22 percent above the approved budget for last year, but it's only 12 percent above the actualized or expected expenditures when we get to the end of the year. In essence, there's almost a 10 percent increase in expenditures that occurred during that year, which becomes a baseline for this budget. If we start listening to the Provincial Treasurer talk about having only a 12.5 percent increase this year in the budget, that implies that the budgets from last year are based on what was actually spent, not the value that was approved by the Legislature. We have to look at that in the context of the appropriateness, in the context of the planning process.

I guess in that previous comment, Mr. Speaker, I was not quite correct in the sense that I said “approved by the Legislature.” Even the supplementary estimates are approved by the Legislature, but I meant the amounts that are approved at the time of the budget debate.

Even though we add those in, what we’ve got then is basically a two-step process for budgeting in Alberta. One is the budget debate. One is what we need in the middle, and then that relates to the next year in terms of what is the base for the next year. My contention is that we should always use the budget that is approved in the Legislature at the time of the budget debate. In other words, when we pass the original appropriation bill, that should be the base for the subsequent year, not the realized expenditures that we deal with through additional appropriations in the interim period. That way we end up with a degree of consistency in our debate and our legitimization, I guess, of those expenditures, because they’ve come before this House, they’ve come before the people of Alberta and had a true open discussion as part of the expenditure pattern.

So that’s basically where we’re going. Mr. Speaker, it gets to be a real issue about: how do we deal with appropriations when we want to look at voting for the bill, when we have a whole kind of series of questions that we raised about the individual line items? The province has to go on. We have to have the dollars. When we get it presented in this kind of a manner, it’s hard to argue at this level that we should be changing money between ministries without having the line item information to justify or to verify where we would be moving the dollars from. So I guess in the end what we have to say is that we vote yes for Bill 20, but remember all the comments we made when we were voting on and debating each of the individual ministries as we went through the discussions, and we ended up then basically questioning a lot of the things that came up for debate in the actual decisions on the individual programs and the individual services that we would be providing.

Mr. Speaker, what we want to do then is basically say that in order to keep the province running, we’ll be looking at voting for this, but we’ve still got a lot of questions on the exact way that the dollars were allocated and, more specifically, in terms of the way the performance indicators relate back to the expenditures of those dollars and to the way that we deal with the issue of keeping our budget in line with the discussion and the debate and the approval process that we go through in this Legislature.

So with that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I’ll take my seat and let someone else continue. [interjection] Before I sit, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 20.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Prior to adjourning for the afternoon, there’s one item of business that needs to be dealt with prior to Committee of the Whole consideration of certain bills later on this evening. Members may have noticed a minor typographical error that appeared in the title on the cover sheet of Bill 13, Farm Implement Dealerships Act, when it was first printed and distributed to members on May 7. I would request the Assembly’s unanimous consent to replace the original copy of Bill 13 with the correct version for the official records of the Assembly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m.]

[Adjourned debate May 28: Dr. Nicol]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be speaking in second reading on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2001. During the Committee of Supply debates on the budget, particularly in the area of Community Development, there were some issues I wanted to raise and didn't have the time.

When I look at Bill 20, this is going over the final budget amounts in every department, and I do notice that under Community Development we have an operating and capital investment of $591,160,000. Inside that is $16.1 million for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. I've had contact in response to my request for information on how the stagnant budgeting in the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is affecting our professional arts organizations in Alberta. I've had responses from a number of organizations, and I raised points that they were concerned about during Committee of Supply, but a couple of them I want to go over now in conjunction with Bill 20.

First of all, the situation of funding for artists in residency programs. I've had some very intelligent, thoughtful correspondence from David Chantler at Trickster Theatre, and he's been doing a lot of work in the area of artists in residency programs in the schools. His point is that the program is desperately underfunded. Often parent organizations and the schools' students themselves will raise moneys to contribute to the cost of this artist in residency program, but in fact "this program is hopelessly under funded," to quote his words. The AFA does in fact jury them, but it looks like about half to three-quarters of the applications to the fund are turned down simply because there's a lack of funds. So they're good programs, they're excellent companies, they really contribute and are a life-enriching experience for the students, their parents, and the teachers, but they simply can't be done. Then at that point the money that has been raised by the school, by the students, by the parent advisory councils has to be given back because in fact they couldn't get the necessary amount of funding through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts.

Now, some time ago – and I'm talking pre-1990 – in fact there was money in the education budget for arts education. That doesn't exist any longer. It was all transferred under the auspices of the AFA. They're now responsible for all of this, and with their stagnant funding allocation they've had to cut a number of these. I had spoken earlier about the position that the PASOs, the provincial arts service organizations, are finding themselves in, where they took over programs the government had run but are getting into a position now where they simply cannot afford to run them anymore because the grants they are given are not enough to actually pay for the program. We're running into the same area with this section of education arts funding with these artists in residency programs.

The current situation is the worst funding environment ever. This artists in residency program is immensely popular. I've been into my schools in Edmonton-Centre. There was one artists in residency program that was done at Queen Mary Park. It was just an amazing program incorporating all the multicultural aspects of that school. So, you know, I really urge the minister to lobby his colleagues in the coming year to ensure that we get some more funding into this area and, indeed, into the funding for the AFA, period.

One of the related issues that has come up around that is the funding for visual arts organizations that are doing work that is less standard. They're working in multimedia. They're working in electronic media. They're pushing the envelope. It falls under what I would call development. There has been a steady erosion of support for development of art in Alberta, and in particular these experimental galleries have really been hard hit. We've got Latitude 53 here in Edmonton and the new gallery in Calgary. So this is really affecting us across Alberta because those are the two centres that are large enough to support a public that's interested in what the gallery is doing, and they are really under stress at this point and have corresponded repeatedly with the AFA board, with the chairperson of that board, with the executive director. I don't know what's going to be done to support them here.

They're falling under the one-grant rule that's now been put in, which has really affected all the organizations in that the additional grants were brought in to indeed supplement what the groups are doing, with an acknowledgment that the base operating fund wasn't enough. Now they're being told that all of that is taken away from them. So they've really suffered a double hit: one from a lack of funding increases to keep up with the cost-of-living increases and the second in losing these ancillary granting opportunities. It's really affecting these organizations.

There has been a change in the way funding was allocated. They are going to make galleries fall under the community-derived revenue formula, which is almost impossible. I mean, galleries don't charge tickets to get in. There's usually a donation setup. People here in Alberta and in Canada are not accustomed to going into a gallery and paying a particular entrance fee. It's usually done by donation, and they just don't generate a significant income by which there could be a community-derived funding formula applied to that to let them get any kind of assistance.

I've spoken pretty much across the board: arts education, public galleries, experimental galleries, performing groups, dance companies, musical companies. All of them are really showing the wear and tear of trying to continually do more with nothing and, more than that, having the Alberta Foundation for the Arts constantly shifting the deck chairs around on the Titanic trying to come up with new funding formulas, which requires re-training which nobody is going to be paying for. The administrators in the organizations are just expected to somehow put in a couple of additional hours on top of their 15-hour day to figure out how all these new applications are to be done and followed through with.

We do have most companies working with smaller administrative staff, doing the same amount of work. We have them hiring less artists, producing less shows. So there has really been an erosion here. Shortly I think we are going to be seeing programs being dropped because they just can't afford to do them, and we may well see the collapse of some companies, which I wouldn't want to see, but given the state of affairs here and the lack of support, I think it's inevitable and most unfortunate.

The new gallery, for example, is talking about a substantial decrease in funding due to the new restructuring, and their cost of living is increasing at a rapid pace, their rent likely doubling, and the cost of utilities for these groups has increased rather dramatically. After much lobbying the government did in fact come through with some sort of rebate program for the nonprofit organizations, but it's based on the commercial rate, and it's less than what some of the other sectors are getting as far as rebates.

Additionally what's happening with the galleries is that they're being mandated to pay the CARFAC fees, which I think every gallery has a commitment to, but may not be able to pay the full CARFAC fee. They just won't be able to continue to produce at anywhere near the level that they have been. The new gallery, for example, is looking at eliminating another staff position. There are only three staff members left, and they're looking at decreasing essentially 30 percent of their staff. Also advertising. So it makes it more and more difficult to get people to come in and see the shows and give them some revenue at the door, which they can then base their formula for application for funding on, when they can't get the word out about what they're doing and what's going on. There's only so much assistance available from the media outlets in the community for free advertising. They have to make a living too. Most of them are for-profit businesses, and they're just not interested in doing that kind of community service for free.

Of course, everybody is trying not to cut programming, but at a certain point it's inevitable. You just cannot uphold the structure of producing a five-play season, for example, when you've got a staff of three people. It just can't be done. When you don't have enough money to pay for a six-actor show, you're paying for a two-actor show. In the galleries you're mounting fewer exhibitions every year, doing less by way of art education. I've already talked about what's happening with the artists in residency program, a very long-standing and very successful program, which is just suffering a drought of enormous proportions here.

So those were the comments I wanted to make, specifically picking up on what I had been going over during the Community Development debates, and I'm aware that there are others who are anxious to be speaking to Bill 20 in second reading here.

I think that overall, when I look at what's happened with this bill, I'm very reluctant to support it, not that I don't support the various ministries carrying on their programming, but I have real issues and have had for some time with the government's management of the finances of the province. It's a boom-and-bust economy, and I don't see plans being made to accommodate that. I see a gutting of programs that took place in the early '90s and then money going back in but not accomplishing the goals that were supposedly set. In fact, in most cases there's been no attempt to accomplish those goals. It's just been more money going in to satisfy demand and pressure from the public but not actually restructuring the health care system, for example, not dealing with the housing issues that we have.

What I see are the easy targets being hit for so-called holding the line: the seniors, who have yet to have their 5 percent restored to them or any of the programs that were taken away; people living on social assistance and living on AISH, who are having to cope with significant increases in their cost of living with rent and utilities and food and user fees, yet the government is staunchly holding the line on any increase for them. I think that long term we have a number of studies that now show us that if you continue to impoverish people, you never get them out of that cycle.

I don't see the government looking at useful bridging programs that actually assist people to move off things like SFI and into the workforce. They're just kind of pitched off and expected to sink or swim. In fact, a number of them have sunk, and we see the result in a 60 percent increase in the child welfare load, and that is going to cost us dearly in years to come. So there's a very short-term vision here. There's a very short-term reaction. It's at a crisis point. What was that favourite expression we heard from the government? Pressure point reaction to budgeting and management of finances.

When I first came here, I was debating a $16 billion budget total.

We're now looking at something that's in the range of $19 billion, so that has come up by $3 billion in four years. That's a significant increase, yet we still have waiting lists in health care. We still have housing problems. We still have issues in education with classroom sizes, equipping of classrooms. We still have issues with maintenance of our infrastructure, our highways, building of new schools. So, in fact, I don't believe it is good management, and I don't think it's good stewardship of our resources.

We look at the process we've just gone through with an hour of negotiated debate on most of these different departments, and then we're expected to vote on the budget without ever having the responses back in writing from the minister before we're expected to vote on Bill 20, the appropriation bill. So all those questions that I was putting forward to the ministers on which I was going to be basing my decision to support the budget for a given department – I've heard back from very few of the ministers to whom I put questions. I'm just expected to let this go carte blanche. It gives me some real issues as a legislator and a responsible person to be allowing this kind of thing to go on and to be supporting it through my vote for a bill like this. So I struggle with the situation that the government places me in constantly.

I'm aware that others wish to get some time in. [interjection] I think that the Minister of Environment is also angling for an opportunity seeing as he's mouthing off and heckling me from across the way, so maybe we'll look to him to rise and speak to this as well. In the meantime, I think one of my colleagues wishes to address this.

Thank you for the opportunity to bring forward a few more remarks at second reading, and I look forward to Committee of the Whole and third reading.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to address Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2001, this evening and to make some specific comments about the Department of Learning and the Department of Children's Services that I didn't have an opportunity to include in previous debate and to start off, though, if I might, with some general comments related to performance objectives.

A former Provincial Treasurer in this House is quoted as to having said . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: What happened to him?

DR. MASSEY: It's still happening.

He is quoted as having said, "Business plans are one of the cornerstones of Alberta's prudent fiscal management." That was in A Plan for a Debt-Free Alberta. If these business plans are the cornerstone, then I think the building is in some jeopardy. Since the government started using business plans, what should constitute the elements of a business plan have been under debate and have appeared in various ministries with varying formats.

The Auditor General has been fairly persistent in his criticisms of the business plans, and he took the opportunity in the last report to summarize some of the business plans' shortcomings. It was against this list of shortcomings that I judged this year's business plan and the estimates.

One of the criticisms he made was that over 60 percent of the ministries do not relate the goals to the ministries' core businesses. I think the Auditor General this time will probably indicate that they're doing a better job, but there are still some departments that either refuse to do that or choose not to or don't know how to. I'm not sure what the case may be, but that relationship to the core business and the goals still eludes some ministries.

I think the second criticism he had and the most telling one for me was that many of the business plans seem to be no more than, I think his words were, a paper exercise or a device to negotiate more money rather than an effective system of accountability. That is rather a devastating criticism of business plans given that we are in 2001, and we've been looking at business plans since 1993. To have them labeled by someone like the Auditor General as little more than a paper exercise is something that I think should be alarming to members of this Legislature and to Albertans.

So much of the budget and the budget process is predicated on the development of these plans and the tracking of resources, and the effective use of those resources is again based on effective business plans. To have them regarded as nothing more than a paper exercise probably helps us understand why they have been so inconsistent year to year and why the measures keep being developed and dropped and redeveloped and dropped again and are in some departments almost totally missing and in other departments a major number of them are still under development. It's not taken as seriously as those of us who were sold the plan on its inception would like to have it taken.

There were a number of comments that related to budget management, but in terms, again, of the business plans he indicated that core businesses are still defined variously in terms of goals, strategies, activities, or performance criteria, and strategies are sometimes defined as desired results rather than broad actions to achieve them. If you go through this set of business plans, I think that same criticism applies. What's a strategy in one department is a goal in another, is an outcome in another. Community Development has come up with its own little set of labels called a stretch target. I'm sure the Auditor General will have some comment in terms of the addition of a new category called a stretch target and how that differs from targets, because the business plan sheds no light on that. It will be interesting to learn.

The hit-and-miss situation in terms of targets and outcomes and performance objectives is again something that has been commented on, and how extensive that criticism is throughout the business plans is, as I said, disturbing. The number of ministries that are still developing performance measures even after this long period of time for some things that you would have thought would have been very simple to measure at an early stage is still quite amazing. I think a criticism that would make the business plans much more readable if the criticism were met is to include the external factors that can influence performance in an area. We don't see much of that in these business plans.

The last criticism that I'll mention from the Auditor General was that output and outcome measures are not always well defined and measurable and clearly related to core business goals. It's a theme that comes through again and again and again. Some of the performance measures that are there certainly cause one to wonder. With a lot of the measures you wonder if the government is in the best position to be doing the measuring, whether it shouldn't be done by an outside or an independent agency. It's rather like in some cases asking schoolchildren to mark their own work, and I think that's the level of the performance measures that are in place. So a number of criticisms of the performance measures as they exist in the business plans.

I would like to now, if I may, Mr. Speaker, move to some specifics in terms of the Learning department and some criticisms, again, of the estimates. Approximately 60 percent of the extra money that found its way into Budget 2001 for Learning had previously been announced. It was spending that we already knew about. You wonder what that does to the budgeting process when large amounts of a budget are already announced to the public. You wonder what it does to the role of legislators when material comes to us in that form, having already been the subject of public debate.

The same for some of the increases. While the per pupil grants received a 3.5 percent increase, only .5 percent of that was new money. We already knew about the other 3 percent. Again, is that the way budgeting on the magnitude that we are involved in here should proceed?

In terms of Learning again, the basic instructional grants: the 2000-2001 estimate is 3 percent below the 2001 budget, and 2001-2002 is 3.4 percent more than the 2000-2001 actual. So it's a curious set of figures and I think one that deserves some explanation.

Spending on special needs. Special-needs funding continues to be a huge problem for those parents who look to that funding for their children to be provided the programs they need and deserve. I'm sure that my experience isn't a solitary one, Mr. Speaker, in the number of calls I get from parents who are upset about the lack of resources for their special-needs youngster. We've been through this budget after budget, and here we are again this year and I'm receiving the same calls, two of them at the end of last week from parents who are alarmed that they've been in touch with their child's school and not only has the special-needs funding for next September not increased, but the funding has decreased. In one case the special-needs youngster who had a classroom aide will be losing that aide and in another case the same withdrawal of resources that had been in place.

So the money in special-needs programs is still clearly not adequate to children's needs. It leads in terms of the parents who are involved to a tremendous amount of frustration, knowing that the kinds of programs their youngsters need are available and yet not having the resources, not being able to appeal to the school, not being able to appeal to their local school board, but having to rely on the provincial government for the funding and that funding not forthcoming.

Another concern – and I did mention this briefly – in the budget has been the rapid growth of the money placed in the Alberta initiative for school improvement. Again, this is a way of earmarking and controlling dollars that would in my mind be more appropriately placed in increasing the basic grants, the per pupil grant allocations.

This earmarking is done at a price. It takes school systems, school districts hours and hours to put forward their proposals. Many of the proposals are duplicates, but systems and districts are forced into this just to get their hands on those dollars. A good example is the $500,000 that was spent on the reading initiative in Edmonton public out of the AISI initiative, I think proving to everyone's satisfaction that small class sizes make a difference, supporting all the research we had from elsewhere saying that small class sizes make a difference, yet we find a number of projects under the AISI label being funded across the province to see if class size makes a difference.

That seems quite incredible, Mr. Speaker, that that should be happening. Again, it's a way for the department to control funds that are going into school districts, to earmark them and to avoid that basic responsibility of dealing with an underfunded system where the per pupil grants are the ones that really need to be bolstered at this point.

It can't go unnoticed, given the other increases in the Learning budget, that private school budgets are increased by 11 percent for the year 2001-2002. Again, that's a healthy increase for those schools, and would that the public school systems could enjoy such generous increases in their budgets.

The dollars allocated, the percentages allocated for teacher increases, that new line in the budget that has so alarmed teachers in the province and school boards is one that is still going to be played out. We haven't heard the last of this initiative by the government in terms of what it will do and what it has done to provincial bargaining, and we haven't heard the last of it in terms of the amounts that have been included for teachers who really, really are angry and resent what they feel are games that have been played in terms of their income, with expectations raised by the Premier and members of the government that there would be increases in the 10 percent plus range and to only have those expectations dashed with the 4 percent and the 2 percent included in the budget. So I think this is something that's still going to haunt the government. It's going to have implications for provincial and local bargaining far down the road from what I think the government expected when they included that line item in this budget.

The government's reduction to the education property tax, a lot of money, $135 million, really is just tinkering around the margins. Between 1992 and 1999 the government reduced the grants to municipalities by $335 million. They've now created this tax room at the local level, but at the same time they've told municipalities not to move into that tax room. So I think the kind of long-term planning in terms of education financing and the financing of municipalities comes together in this reduction and leaves neither school boards nor municipalities happy with the outcome.

Those are the major comments I had about the Learning department, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to mention a couple of items out of Children's Services, and that is the seeming preoccupation with short-term outcomes instead of long-term goals, goals that we'd look at: children being free from abuse, a family's ability to access family violence services. There's a great thrust in the Children's Services ministry on being sensitive to the culture of aboriginal children, and that's laudable and a praiseworthy objective. This is a province of many, many diverse cultures, and one would hope one might find at least some mention of those cultures in becoming sensitive to other cultures in the business plans and in these budget estimates and that, in fact, there would be attention paid to all cultures, but that doesn't seem to be the case.

The problem with day care staff is growing more acute day by day. The ministry has as a goal or a strategy or an objective – I'm not sure which – of having skilled caregivers with level 2 or 3 training. Level 3 training, of course, Mr. Speaker, is a two-year diploma from a college like Grant MacEwan, and level 2 is one year of that same program. This is, again, a laudable objective but hardly one that's going to be achieved when the money going into day care – they lost their operating grants. They're being paid in subsidized day cares $12 a hour, but in some private day cares they're making minimum wage. As long as those salaries prevail, attracting good people to the child care field is going to be very difficult. In fact, I was in conversation with a child care worker who indicated that many of the students now in child care programs in the colleges are seriously looking at education or at social work as an alternative to staying in the child care field because of the unattractiveness of the salary scales. Again, that's going to be a huge loss.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I've almost used my time. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 20.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. [some applause]

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, thank you very much for that enthusiastic response. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 19, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2001.

Traditionally there is very little debate on miscellaneous statutes, because in fact the opposition has been given an opportunity to scrutinize what's being proposed and we have some time to contact stakeholders and ensure that there is no issue and time also to review the implications of any proposed changes.

Ideally, miscellaneous statutes is to make small administrative changes, a correction in spelling, typographical errors. [interjection] Sorry. The Minister of Justice is trying to signal me on something. I'm not wearing my glasses, so I can't read his lips.

MR. HANCOCK: I'm just saying that we know what the miscellaneous statutes are about.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, yes. I know. Yeah, that's right. He understands what miscellaneous statutes is, and that's a good thing because he's the Justice minister.

We have had time to review what's being proposed in Bill 19. In Committee of the Whole one would generally be going through clause by clause, which I do not need to do in this case. Any proposed sections to be amended that we had an objection to have already been removed.

So this is looking at amending the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, the Animal Protection Act, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act, the Legislative Assembly Act, the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act, and the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. In every case it's a housekeeping or a minor or an administrative change that we have been able to scrutinize and find acceptable, and therefore I'm pleased to speak in Committee of the Whole in support of Bill 19.

Thanks very much.

[The clauses of Bill 19 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 9

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is such an important bill and a very progressive bill. There were some questions that were raised in a number of the proposed amendments during second reading of Bill 9 on May 7 that have to be addressed.

The first question was about the release of information. This section of the amendment is desired to provide clarity to the program's authority in the gathering and use of information. There is no intent to unnecessarily or unreasonably use or release personal information of any individual involved with the program, and the individual's right of personal privacy will continue to be respected.

Clear authority within the act is desired to permit the program to obtain the police and medical information necessary to determine eligibility and assess the victim's injuries. The sources contacted to determine the extent of injury may include treatment professionals other than medical doctors. Examples of these professions are physiotherapists, chiropractors, and licensed counselors. It does not extend to nonprofessional treatment providers or general care providers such as home care nurses. It is necessary to identify the victim and date of the incident when requesting information from these sources to ensure the appropriate record of reference.

A general reference to the applicant being a victim of crime may be included when requesting medical information. Only the police receive additional information provided by the applicant regarding the details of the alleged crime. The program also recognizes that there are circumstances where it is in the best interest of the victim or his survivors to allow the release of such basic information to relatives or others closely involved with the victim. For example, when multiple family members of a deceased or incapacitated victim are making inquiries, clear authority is desired to confirm the existence of an applicant and the name of the applicant. Some decisions on death benefit applications result in the award being paid or shared with someone other than the applicant. Clear authority to contact these potential recipients and advise them of the application is needed. Clear authority is desired to respond to queries from estranged parents with shared custody of a child victim. If one parent has applied for financial benefits, the program should be able to confirm this if the other parent makes inquiries. These individuals often rely on local victims' services providers for assistance. This provision will allow the victims' services program to make inquiries on the victim's behalf.

Under no circumstances would general third-party queries be entertained. The personal information of individuals continues to be subject to the protection provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Health Information Act. The information provision in this bill was received and approved by the office of the Privacy Commissioner and appropriate officials from Alberta Health and Wellness. Changes to the program application forms are also planned to ensure applicants are clearly aware of the program's disclosure requirements and to obtain the applicant's approval.

The frivolous request for a review. This provision only relates to applications for a review of the director's decisions on an application. The cost savings to the board's administration is only a side benefit. More importantly, we do not wish to raise false expectations with an applicant if a request for a review clearly has no grounds. It is far less frustrating to the applicant to be advised quickly than to unnecessarily put them through the hearing process only to be told that there is no basis for a change in the director's decision. The intent of the provision is to address these requests that are clearly without merit. The review board should not dismiss an application if there is any indication of a possible change to the director's decision. This can be further defined within regulations when they are drafted.

Common examples of meritless requests include instances when the alleged crime occurs outside Alberta, instances when the offender applies – after all, this is a victim's program – instances when the applicant was already granted the maximum award under the program. Duplicate applications: this is most common with relatives of a deceased victim applying for the same death benefit.

The requirements for a physician was another question. The requirement for one member of the board to be a physician is the minimum requirement. In reality, the intent is to have two or three physicians or medical professionals appointed to give some flexibility to the chair in selecting panels for hearings. A minimum of one physician member will ensure that there is always at least one appointed member available to hear appeals involving medical evidence. This requirement does not extend to the panel selection, as there are some hearings that deal solely with eligibility issues and do not require medical expenses or expertise.

The panel quorum. The quorum of two members for conducting hearings is not a change from the existing act. Agreed, it is preferable that every hearing panel consist of three members. That is why the amendments require the chair to designate three members to sit as a panel. However, board members are people and may occasionally be unable to sit at the last minute due to illness or other personal emergencies. We do not wish to cause inconvenience to the applicant by postponing the hearing at the last minute. Assigning a last minute replacement member is not a realistic option as it does not provide that member with sufficient time to prepare and would be a disservice to the victim.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that answers all the questions that were brought forward in second reading, and I thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise on this opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001. Now, Committee of the Whole is giving us an opportunity to go over the bill in detail, clause by clause. I'm already on record as speaking in support of this bill in second reading. Actually, I think most or all of my caucus colleagues are in support of this bill because it is strengthening and cleaning up a program that we feel is very valuable. I remember being at the official launching of the very first victims' assistance fund, in '89 or '90 perhaps, when the fund was first established. Now, it has gone through some changes in legislation since then.

Let me just go through very quickly. I don't want to spend a lot of time on this but will go through the different clauses that are put forward and put some comments on the record as I go through them.

I think one of the highlights of the '97 Victims of Crime Act which this bill is amending is that financial assistance is provided to the innocent victims injured by a violent crime, and it also funds agencies that are helping victims of crime or working with violence issues in the community. This is another area where the community has taken on a good deal of service provision and the brunt of the work making sure that these programs are out there and are accessible to people who wish to access them, and it's important that we do support them through government funding. That can often be a sort of patchwork of applications that organizations are making to put together an operating budget because no one department is willing to fund them adequately. I know that for some organizations access to the funds in this victims of crime fund is very valuable and does allow them to expand programs or to do special short-term programming to augment programs that are much in demand for any given reason, so I'm certainly in favour of that.

When I look at section 7(2), this is allowing for government appointments, patronage appointments essentially, to the criminal injuries review board, and I'm hoping and I'm encouraging the Solicitor General to ensure that any government appointments are following the PAO directive regarding appointments to agencies, boards, and commissions. Essentially that's to make sure that people receiving these patronage appointments have some qualifications to be appointed to a given board, because if they're just going to be handing out favours to people, we're not getting good quality and in fact good public input. So I'm encouraging the minister to follow that PAO directive and to certainly make use of the most valuable services and expertise from the personnel in that department, who are able to look at potential appointees and make sure they have some experience, expertise, and background in this particular area before they are appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is essentially cabinet, to these positions.

One of the areas that I had spoken about extensively during second reading of Bill 9 was extending the time limit for the application for individuals to access the fund from one year to two years. My comment at the time was that that was in fact bringing it into line with a number of other programs and qualifying criteria for victims. A number of the Criminal Code and I think other statutes in Alberta as well are subscribing to that two-year rule, and I think it's appropriate to bring this into line with them.

The one area that's always controversial – and I don't need to go into it at this time – is those people that are recovering memory of some trauma that happened some time ago. Then it's expected and the community standard for this is that in fact the clock starts ticking when the memory is recovered and the two years would run from there, but I think that's still an issue that's under debate by this particular government.

The sort of trade-off, if you will, in the bill for increasing the time is allowing the dismissal of frivolous claims. I understand that sometimes people just don't understand the process, and for whatever reason they hear what's being told but they interpret that in their own words to be giving them more leeway than, in fact, is there. It can be very frustrating when there are people that really do need assistance who are caught in a backlog because there are a number of applications that, in fact, are not eligible for any given program. So there has to be a way of regulating who's applying to the fund and to be able to allow the review board to dismiss frivolous claims, people that are coming back repeatedly just because they didn't like the answer no the first time.

It doesn't happen often, and certainly most people are quite genuine in the way they approach programs like this, but it does happen. Sometimes individuals can be quite tenacious and really take up a lot of time, and that's not fair to the others that are in fact waiting to have their application heard.

What I would be interested in – and perhaps the minister could just supply this to me in writing shortly – are some examples. I don't need personal information but some anecdotal material of what kind of situations the panel has found itself in where a claim was considered frivolous. We weren't really given examples of that when the minister spoke at second reading. This is not an area I'm familiar with, so I'm not quite understanding what kinds of issues are coming up that would require this section to be put into place. Perhaps the minister could give me a quick phone call or have staff just jot down some anecdotal experiences of what sorts of frivolous claims they've had. Again, I certainly don't need personal information.

Section 13.1 is around collecting personal information. I had raised a number of concerns around this during second reading, and the minister has spent some time responding now in Committee of the Whole to the concerns I was raising during second reading around this determining of eligibility and the ability of the director to seek out information, both collecting information from law enforcement agencies or people providing medical care or public bodies and also being able to disclose personal information to others to determine eligibility; for example, to parent or spouse or child or other family members or victims' services.

I always have a real concern around protection of personal information and have accused this government in the past of being a little free with putting that kind of information out and not being as respectful, in fact as vigilant of personal information as I believe they should be. Given that we now have huge databases that can in fact be accessed by unscrupulous people, we need to be constantly on guard for that.

I listened carefully, and the minister has put a number of responses to my questions on the record, which is important, because it's not immediately that this is an issue. It's three, four, five, 10, 20 years from now when people are looking at the act and some other situation has arisen and they're saying: "Well, it's not in the act. It's not spelled out there. It's not spelled out in the regulations. What really were they intending?" To be able to go back and look at the remarks on the record from the minister proposing the legislation gives us some recourse. It gives individuals and even members of the review panel such as it will be in the future some recourse to be able to understand what was intended. I'm sure there have been a number of times when we wish we could have questioned the Fathers of Confederation on exactly what they meant by putting any given clause into our Constitution, and we don't have their remarks on the record, so we're unable to determine what it was that they were attempting to get at.

So I'm cautiously satisfied by hearing the reassurances from the minister that really the idea in collecting the information is strictly within the bounds of what's proposed here in the legislation. I hope every attempt will be made to handle that information with scrupulous care and not allow it to get to any person or agency who in fact should not have access to it. I understand now – it's been clarified for me – what is being intended by the ability to disclose the personal information to any person, which I went on about at some length, because the way it was written and I was interpreting it and I think others were interpreting it, it could, you know, be publicized to anybody that was asking.

Now that I've got the minister on record as clearly indicating that it's really to be used for clarifying duplicate applications from family members or to let one parent know that another parent has already applied for it, where you have a case where there is an estranged family or multiple family members all applying for the same benefit, yes, then that's appropriate, because otherwise people just keep saying: "But it says I can get this. Why can't I get it?" Well, until you know that someone else in the family has already applied for it and received it, you just think you're being discriminated against for some reason or that you're not understanding the process. So it may well be important that you're able to receive the specific information about who has already received funds from this agency.

Now, that covers most of the individual sections I had wanted to go through in Committee of the Whole. Again, my biggest concern when I first looked at this was the use of personal information, both gathering it from various sources and disseminating it to various people. If the minister is clear and upholds the act, we are to be working within the confines of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and, I think, in some cases, even further than that, because I think we've already had some examples where personal information has been released under that act but in retrospect we question as being really appropriate.

Overall this is a good act. This is a good amending act. The original act is a good one. The concept that the funding comes from a surcharge on provincial offence fines and surcharges imposed by the courts under the Criminal Code has a lovely ring of poetic justice to this member's ears. I think it's quite appropriate. It's really hard these days, I think, to find a victimless crime, and certainly the intention of the government to be able to compensate people or to reimburse them for extraordinary expenses that have arisen as a result of a crime is an important part of a caring government and of one that is attempting to administer justice fairly. I think that's an important concept that I am more than willing to uphold.

So with those comments I am willing to take my seat and support Bill 9 in Committee of the Whole. I appreciate the minister coming in tonight to clarify and give answers to the questions I had put forward during second reading. I'm awfully glad to have her on the record on that.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is with pleasure that I rise to speak at committee on Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act. I believe that the proposed changes to the Victims of Crime Act will streamline award processes and focus resources on innocent victims of violent crime in Alberta. The description of violent crime in Alberta is limited. Later in my remarks I will express my concerns about that.

In 1997 the Victims of Crime Act replaced the long-standing Criminal Injuries Compensation Act and the Victims' Programs Assistance Act. I wonder how many people would have been affected and why these provisions weren't included in the act over four years ago. Now, it's about time the application process was streamlined. I think this will be a good thing out of what is probably just a horrible situation for the victims, for the people involved. It is bad enough that people who suffer injuries as a result of violent crimes are forced to wait long periods of time to receive compensation. It's unfortunate that the government did not also review the amounts of damages for each type of injury to ensure they reflect current realities.

We need to have a look at some of the key amendments, Mr. Chairman. Certainly we are allowing the appointment of three more patronage-style appointed board members. Currently there are three. I'm very interested to know from the hon. minister who brought this bill forward if in the view of the minister it's an issue of workload and an issue of overwork.

The financial benefits program was established in November of 1997 with the proclamation of the Victims of Crime Act. The total awards granted in the fiscal year 2000 was $6.7 million, according to my information. Now, my question at committee on this specific fact would be: how much of this money comes from the 15 percent surcharge collected on provincial offences fines and surcharges imposed by the courts under the Criminal Code? In respect to my earlier comments that perhaps the whole compensation package should be reviewed, it's summed up in the fact that the average award amount is $6,900. I, too, wonder how far that goes and if it's sufficient. You look at some of the reasons for entitlement that are listed in the back and you wonder how far that amount of money will go.

The number of concluded cases last year was over 1,200, Mr. Chairman. Interestingly enough, the number of cases resulting in an award was 967, roughly 75 percent. Now, that may be the reason for the feeling that there has to be more members on the review board. It simply may be a case of workload now. If I could receive in committee an explanation of this, I would be very grateful. Obviously it looks like it's a full-time job.

I see further down in section 7:

Where a hearing is required under this Act, the chair must designate any 3 members of the Review Board to sit as a panel, which may include the chair, to conduct the hearing.

Am I correct in concluding that the workload has increased dramatically and the review panel can be divided into two teams to carry on investigations and the other duties relating to the review board?

When you look at the review board in that light, perhaps if it's going to be divided into two, at least there should be the necessary requirements of having two physicians out of the six panel members so that perhaps at all times, if need be, there is a physician available for each panel. I'm assuming here that both panels, if they're busy, could be working at the same time. This would be an excellent place for social workers; I think they would be a valuable addition to the review board. Perhaps retired police officers would be a welcome addition to the review board. I certainly hope, Mr. Chairman, that the review board is not strictly set up on political affiliation, because these are people that would be very good members. Their professional background would perhaps stand the entire review board in good stead.

The Public Inquiries Act. I'm familiar with the Public Inquiries Act because of the carnage that's happening in the workplaces of this province. I believe there should be a review of each fatality in this province under the Public Inquiries Act, because the OH and S staff are so overworked that they don't have time to do an adequate review of the accident. Perhaps I can discuss that further at another time.

Mr. Chairman, there's roughly about 25 or a little less than 25 percent of files that are denied award requests; there's no need for compensation. The first reason given here is that many of the applications are beyond the scope of the program; no violent crime occurred. Well, if a law is broken and that leads to a death, then I think we need to have another examination of this. With that I'm again referring to occupational health and safety violations where there's been a crime committed. When you consider that it may not have been a violent crime – but that's not true. It would all depend on your definition of a violent crime; for instance, if a backhoe in the winter is being operated in an illegal manner and the operator of that machine is not adequately trained and he or she turns the machine abruptly and hits with the bucket an employee who was standing nearby and that person is killed. That, in my view, is a violent crime, yet there is no recourse for family members who are left with the loss of a loved one and in some cases the primary breadwinner for the family. These are crimes that unfortunately are not covered in this Victims of Crime Amendment Act or in the original legislation, but hopefully at some time in the future hon. members of this Assembly will take a look at that.

Now, another common reason for denying award requests is that there are often duplicate applications, various family members applying for benefits relating to the one deceased victim. Well, I would like to know from the hon. minister how often this is occurring with these duplicate applications. Another common reason is that too much time has elapsed before the application. The proposed amendments increase this amount of time from one year to two years. For that reason and that reason alone I think it is notable and it would be worth supporting this legislation.

Now, the eligible offences, again I would note, are under the Criminal Code, and that would exclude certainly the accident I described previous. I believe it would also exclude, for instance, the case that occurred last year, the horrible, tragic death I believe of two individuals who lost their lives while working on a corporate farm outside Calgary. This accident is under investigation, but of course because it occurred on a corporate farm, as I understand – now, I don't have the luxury of having these accidents . . .

Chairman's Ruling Computers in the Chamber

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the chair wishes to make a comment. It is not allowed to wear speaker phones in the Assembly that are attached to the laptop. The only hearing aide you are allowed to wear is the one attached to your desk so that you can hear the debate that's proceeding in the House.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you may now proceed.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, getting back to this accident that occurred last year. Because, as I understand it, WCB does not cover farms, whether it is a family farm or a corporate farm, these individuals would not be eligible for compensation under the victims' benefits regulation. If my interpretation of the events that led to this accident and my interpretation of the laws of this province as have been explained to me are true, then we have to do something about that. We either have to change the law so that everyone who is working for a wage in this province, regardless of where, is eligible for WCB or that people can turn to this or similar legislation, because what occurred there is wrong. Just plain and simple it is wrong.

Now, when you look at the offences that can be eligible here, there's everything from riots to hijacking of aircraft. There is careless use of a firearm, sexual exploitation, failure to provide necessities, abandoning children, causing death by criminal negligence.

Now, that is interesting. I wonder how many people who lose their lives in an industrial accident fit under that criteria, causing death by criminal negligence. One specific case comes to mind, Mr. Chairman, and that of course is the tragic explosion that occurred in early August 1999 at Hub Oil in Calgary. There were two individuals unfortunately killed there, and what is chilling about that is that one of the individuals who unfortunately lost their life in that explosion was on a committee who wrote the best practices manual for the entire facility. When I opened that manual and saw that individual's name in there, it was certainly a sobering, chilling experience, because safety was a priority for that individual or he would not have served on that committee.

As I understand it, there were other charges to be laid there as well as the occupational health and safety charges which were laid last summer by Alberta Human Resources and Employment, but there was also contemplation of charges under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the Criminal Code.

Now, if those charges were laid under the Criminal Code, would the families of those individuals be eligible for compensation under line item 220 here, "causing death by criminal negligence," if those charges were laid and that employer was found guilty? This is all pending, and it'll have to work itself through the courts.

These are a number of offences that can happen: everything from arson, extortion, robbery, kidnaping, abduction, illegal confinement, intimidation by violence or, in other words, stalking.

Now, the financial benefits here. I believe $6,900, yes, was the average award amount, but the benefits here seem low: for a head injury a thousand dollars, shock that lasts from six to 16 weeks, lower limbs, scarring, dislocated fingers or thumbs, temporary or partial deafness lasting at least 13 weeks. This category, burns, is up to $1,250, and it doesn't seem like very much money for the pain and suffering one would have to endure. There's disfigurement again, fractured ribs. If in the act of some sort of violent confrontation there's a perforated eardrum, that's $1,500. Eyes are blurred or double vision, lower limb disfigurement, whiplash injuries with effects lasting at least 13 weeks: the list goes on and on. For an eye injury it's $2,000. A simple fracture of the skull is $2,500.

If any other hon. members of the Assembly have had the time to compare this list with the list that is provided by the WCB, I think it would be interesting, Mr. Chairman, to compare the two. A ringing noise in the ear is $3,000. A loss of four or more teeth is in this category. A fractured ankle, a fractured femur, and it goes on. I don't know where we will get to next, if there are any higher categories. Partial deafness in one ear, a compensation package of $3,500. Moderate burns on the head is $4,000. A pre-existing condition towards epilepsy is $4,500. Loss of smell, detached retina, and a whiplash injury that is termed moderate and the recovery period is a half a year – these injuries are significant.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the time allocated to you has now elapsed.

MR. MacDONALD: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to address the amendments to Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001. I'd like to indicate that I'm generally positively disposed towards these amendments. There is an area that I would like to raise some questions about, and I haven't yet had a chance to get hold of the regulations under this act, so I may be not entirely informed as to the impact of some of these sections.

If we look at section 13, it says that "on receipt of an application for financial benefits, the Director," who is an official appointed by the minister, of course, "in accordance with this Act and the regulations" determines eligibility. As I go through this and look at the various powers delegated to the director, I find they are in fact very significant. One of the things it says is that the director, subject to the regulations in this case, can "require the applicant to provide information respecting how the injuries were acquired and describing the injuries suffered by the victim," and so on – and that makes a great deal of sense – and then can require evidence to be provided, documents and so on. That makes sense.

It's under section (3) that I have the most questions, I guess. I'll just call them questions for now. It says:

(3) The Director may dismiss an application made under subsection (1)

(a) if the Director determines that the applicant or victim is not eligible under section 12, and that makes sense. But here's where the concern is, Mr. Chairman:

(b) if, in the opinion of the Director, the applicant or victim

(i) did not fully cooperate with any investigation into the events that resulted in the injury or death of the victim, or

(ii) did not provide information required under subsection (2)(a),

or

(c) for any other reason provided for in the regulations.

Now, the question I have is whether or not an individual civil servant ought to be in the position to simply dismiss an application on the basis of an opinion without a greater context for the director to make those kinds of decisions. There's a strong element here, I think, Mr. Chairman, of subjectivity that could result in arbitrariness in the treatment of victims. I certainly appreciate that appeals are there, but I think it would be much better for all concerned if we had a situation in which there was a real context for the director to make these kinds of judgments. I would hate to see someone who had suffered grievous loss as a result of a criminal act to be denied their benefits under this act for anything less than the most objective reasons that are possible. So I think that's one of the difficulties I have.

9:30

Now, the other question.

The Director is authorized for the purposes of subsection (1) to collect and use information, including personal information, from

(a) a law enforcement agency relating to the event . . . or to determine previous conduct of the victim.

I have a concern, I guess, Mr. Chairman, that does set off some alarm bells for me in the sense that we're looking very much at the conduct of the victim, who's not been tried, who's not under any charge, I assume, in almost all cases. There's an implication here that someone who is the victim must conduct themselves in the most exemplary fashion and make no errors or not be involved in any errors of judgment, which we're all inclined to do from time to time, and if they are, the implication is clear that they can be denied benefits.

This allows the director, if someone makes a claim – and keep in mind, Mr. Chairman, that people who make claims are victims. They have suffered some sort of serious loss, injury, may be permanently disabled as a result of criminal activity. The director is then in a position to go through and inquire about their conduct to the police or other law enforcement agencies, inquire to their doctor. It says: anyone “who provided diagnostic, treatment or care or other similar medical services to the victim.” So the director could interview the nurses, could interview people who'd operated an ambulance and so on, or a public body as defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to determine or verify whether a person is eligible for financial benefits under this Act or to determine the amounts of those financial benefits.

So it seems then, Mr. Chairman, that by the simple act of applying under this act for compensation as a victim of crime, that person's privacy is seriously compromised by the provisions of these acts. The director can then go and inquire from police or nurses or doctors or virtually anyone else what exactly the situation was. Now, is that fair? This is a question I have. Is it fair that someone who is a victim of a crime should have their entire history explored without any of the normal protections for their privacy in order that they might obtain compensation? When you combine that with the earlier issue I referred to, that “the Director may dismiss an application made under subsection(1)” if the person did not co-operate or did not provide information, then it creates a situation where there's a potential for injustice at least and abuse at worst to occur to someone who makes application.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that these amendments to the Victims of Crime Act could be strengthened considerably if we provided provisions to protect an applicant from an unjustified intrusion into their personal affairs and business by the director and, secondly, if we would provide a greater contextual basis for the director to make decisions once they've acquired the information they need. It really does seem to me there's a bit of victimization of the victim here – victimization is maybe not the right word – stigmatization of the victim, which is implied by some of the provisions of the act. So I think we ought to take a look at that.

Now, having said that, Mr. Chairman, I see that under section 14 it talks about the review board. “A person may apply to the Review Board for a review of a decision [made] under section 13 or 15.” But I think that damage may already have been done at that point. I think it would be better if we strengthened the earlier section and not leave everything to the review board. It goes on to say that the review board may “require a victim to undergo a medical examination,” and I suppose that is something you can't avoid. I mean, obviously somebody has to have some sort of injury and so on, and the board has a right to know the exact extent of that and draw conclusions about how it may have been inflicted and under what circumstances before they provide public funds to the person in compensation.

I'm pleased as well, Mr. Chairman, that the review board can “rescind, confirm or vary a decision of the Director as to eligibility for financial benefits.” I think that's important. Otherwise, why would you have a review board at all?

Then you have a situation where “significant new evidence is provided to the Review Board,” and it can “refer the matter back to the Director to review the original decision, taking into account the new evidence.” I wonder if that's not just an unnecessary complication that could prolong the situation faced by somebody who's waiting for benefits. Why does it get referred back to the director instead of simply being varied or changed by the review board? Instead of sending someone back to the beginning, why can't the review board simply make the decision at that point?

I guess, Mr. Chairman, it reminds me a little bit of the game of snakes and ladders. Just when you think you're going to get to the top and you're finally getting through the system, all of a sudden you land on a snake, and you're all the way back to the bottom. I'm sure many of the members of the Assembly have played snakes and ladders as a board game as a child. Sometimes it's very analogous to politics as well. I think that's a concern. We don't want people to get caught in loops. We don't want people to be constantly thinking that they're getting through the system and then being drawn right down to the beginning when they don't expect it.

Now, the final point I want to make with respect to the provisions of the act has to do with appeal to the courts. We're seeing more and more in law people's rights to access the courts being restricted by legislation. A most notable example is the Workers' Compensation Act, where people agree – I guess there's a sort of social contract between employers and employees – that in exchange for the coverage under the WCB people's right to access the courts is eliminated or severely restricted. We've seen that there have been a lot of problems in that, Mr. Chairman. I certainly get many, many calls from people on workers' compensation who feel that they haven't been well treated and haven't got their just compensation, have exhausted the appeal procedures and so on, and would like to challenge some of the things that have gone on in the courts. Of course, they can't. Their rights to access the courts have been taken away by the legislation that established the Workers' Compensation Board.

Here we have, again, a section that says: "The applicant may appeal a decision of the Review Board to the Court of Appeal only on a question of jurisdiction or on a question of law." Now, I'm not a lawyer, Mr. Chairman. That's for sure. Maybe there are some lawyers here who can advise me.

DR. TAYLOR: Too many.

MR. MASON: Well, I won't go there with the hon. minister, but if you put all the lawyers end to end, Mr. Chairman, I don't know if you reach a conclusion or not.

I would hope that someone would rise on the government side who is a lawyer or who at least has asked this question of a lawyer and respond to the question of what is allowed on an appeal on a question of law, which is what it says. This is the part that I would like some clarification on. It's section 14.1(1). It says: "The applicant may appeal a decision of the Review Board to the Court of Appeal only on a question of jurisdiction or on a question of law." Maybe the hon. Government House Leader could respond to that. I would find that to be an important clarification that needs to be made.

Then we have the director's decision, which is dealt with under section 15.1. It says:

After making a decision under section 13 or 15, the Director must provide the applicant with a copy of the decision and must advise the applicant

- (a) that the applicant may apply to have the Director's decision reviewed by the Review Board, and
- (b) that the applicant may request that the review be conducted in person or by written submission.

That's an important point there, Mr. Chairman. I'm really glad to see that the act really will require written confirmation of the decision and notification of the route and avenue of appeal. I think that's essential. I guess it's probably fairly common these days, but you'd be surprised at how many avenues of appeal are available to people, and there's no requirement that they even be informed of it. So I think that's a strong section and something I can certainly support.

You know, in general, Mr. Chairman, I think that the amendments here are good ones that could be better. Certainly the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001, is a good step forward. The Victims of Crime Act was of course a very positive and progressive development, and I think it's to the government's credit that it was passed into legislation, because for too long, of course, victims of crime were completely ignored in the entire process. Investigations go on and people aren't informed.

I dealt with one person – and this wasn't a victim of crime per se, but there is a criminal investigation, as I understand – with one gentleman who lost his son in the Hub Oil explosion and fire. I met with him when I was in Calgary some time ago, and he described to me in detail his struggle to find out where the investigation was around the death of his son and whether charges would be brought, what the status of the investigation was, and a whole list of questions that he of course had. He finally tried to get some further assistance, and he contacted the Calgary labour council, which deals with workers' rights, and it was the natural place for him to go when he couldn't get answers from the law enforcement agencies and from the agencies of the government.

Now, I should say clearly, Mr. Chairman, that he did contact someone who was involved in the investigation, who was a very sympathetic individual, and she was able to connect him with all the people he needed to get the information he required. The difficulty is that it shouldn't take a stroke of luck that you find a person who has compassion and is willing to work a little bit of overtime in order to make sure you get the information you need. It needs to be provided to you as a matter of course, regardless of who the individual is in the organization or in the bureaucracy or in the law enforcement agency. So the provisions of the Victims of Crime Act are very welcome, and I think it's a very positive step, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you. I'll let another member speak now.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 2 Cooperatives Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. I have a few brief comments this evening on Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act. Certainly again I would like to recognize the efforts of the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill in the exhaustive research and consultation the member did in the preparation of this bill. This legislation modernizes and replaces co-operative legislation for the first time since after the Second World War, and it's notable that it's aimed at attracting more co-operatives to Alberta. We need to ensure that the more than 400 co-operatives in Alberta – and the majority of them are involved in agriculture, the farming industry – continue to be a focal, important institution in the lives of many.

When you look at the co-operative movement across Alberta and then across the country, the 400 co-operatives in Alberta, there are more than 15 million memberships in co-operatives in Canada, Mr. Chairman. The memberships of some other co-operatives are also significant. You know, the consumer movement has 3.7 million co-operatives. Housing co-operatives: some quarter of a million in more than 2,100 co-operatives. Now, the insurance company of course is The Co-operators. This is an important company in the insurance industry.

Mr. Chairman, we think of the types of co-operatives – there are producer-owned ones, like I mentioned before, for the farmers, for the producers, for small businesses, marketing and purchasing supplies, the UFA, the Bison co-ops, Bee Maid Honey. An example of consumer-owned co-operatives certainly would be the Calgary Co-op Association, and that is considered, as I understand it, the largest consumer co-op in North America. It has nearly 40 percent of the local retail market. Mountain Equipment Co-op, for example, reported revenues of over $130 million in 1998 and has over 1 million members. As part of the consultation process in reviewing

Bill 2, I met with some of the individuals who are very active and are taking leadership roles in the co-operative movement in Calgary, and they were very supportive of this legislation.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

When we think of health care, we sometimes don't think of the co-operative movement, but our sister province to the east, Saskatchewan, has been using it since 1962. Some other provinces have been using it in the last 10 years; for example, for day surgery, pharmacy, ophthalmology, rehab, health promotions, workers' co-ops for the ambulance sector, home care, nursing.

We can think of natural gas and rural electric co-ops. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it is interesting that there was one of the natural gas co-ops – I don't know where this would fit into the bill, but certainly what we need to have a look at in committee are the gas co-ops. Triple W Natural Gas Co-op – and many hon. members of the Assembly are wondering: where's Triple W Natural Gas Co-op? Well, it's east and, I understand, a little south of Lethbridge. Now, there was a possible contamination of natural gas in the distribution system of Triple W Natural Gas Co-op. When it learned that there was a potential for contaminants in the natural gas received from the co-op's supplier, naturally it became quite concerned.

I don't know where in Bill 2 such a deficiency would be addressed. There's examination, there's notice of error, there's a right to information. There are a number of categories where the citizens or the clients or the customers or the owners or the members of Triple W Natural Gas Co-op would look to seek some sort of redress or to at least answer questions about this possible contamination of their gas supply. These contaminants, as I understand it, have the potential for causing personal injury to occupiers of households or businesses to which natural gas is being supplied. The effects of such contamination can create flu-like symptoms. These symptoms include a headachy feeling and watering or smarting of the eyes, dizziness or vomiting, tightness across the forehead and at the temples, and weariness and weakness.

Now, according to Triple W Natural Gas Co-op, there was an advisory put out. The advisory listed three items: that there was a potential for gas contamination in the natural gas supply, that in the event there was a natural gas contamination, there was a possibility that occupants of a building or buildings supplied with natural gas would experience symptoms that could be described as flu like, and in such an event persons should immediately consult a physician regarding such symptoms. Now, for a rural gas co-op and its board of directors, where would they go in this legislation to seek an answer? I don't know where the directors would go.

The minister in this case would be the Minister of Energy, and perhaps the minister has issued a waiver of compliance under the Gas Distribution Act regarding quality assurance of natural gas for rural gas utilities. Where would the board of directors for the natural gas co-operative go under the Cooperatives Act to find out if the minister did this? Where would they go to find out if the minister of health has issued public health warnings or bulletins to alert the citizens or the co-operative participants south and east of Lethbridge of the flu-like symptoms caused by the effects of such contamination? Where would the board of directors go to ensure that the minister, the Minister of Energy in this case, would order an investigation of the gas plant supplying gas to Triple W Natural Gas Co-op?

These are all very important issues, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps with the guidance of the Member for Calgary-North Hill we could get an answer for those people, because certainly they deserve answers. The Cooperatives Act, as good as it is, has to protect all the members.

When we think of the modern co-operative principles, Mr. Chairman, this province's legislation for co-operatives dates back almost to the time that we became a province. The co-operative principles are those established by the International Co-operative Alliance, an independent nongovernmental organization founded in 1895 to link co-operative movements in several countries and foster an environment conducive to co-operation on a worldwide scale. These principles were updated in 1966 and again in 1995.

I'm pleased to support this legislation in this Assembly this evening, but we need to look at one of the principles incorporated in section 2 of Bill 2. Now, I'll go through these briefly. Bill 2 incorporates co-operative principles in section 2(1) with the following:

- (a) membership is available to persons who can use the services of the cooperative and who are willing and able to accept the responsibilities of and abide by the terms of membership,
- (b) each member or delegate has only one vote,
- (c) no member or delegate may vote by proxy,
- (d) interest on any member loan is limited to a maximum rate fixed in the articles,
- (e) dividends on any membership share are limited to the maximum rate fixed in the articles,
- (f) to the extent feasible, members provide the capital required by the cooperative, restricts use of surplus funds, and provides education on the co-operative principles.

These are noteworthy, and in the remainder of my time I think I'm going to have a discussion on the new-generation co-operatives because they're very important. Hopefully in the future there are going to be no problems, Mr. Chairman, with the new-generation co-operatives. When we're discussing them, we need to think of the free rider problem. We need to consider that since economic benefits arise through the use of the co-op, little incentive exists for members to invest in the co-op, and the co-ops rely more heavily on debt and are chronically short of capital. So we have to be careful of that. We have to also be careful of the horizon problem. Of course, some co-ops may be prone to inefficiencies because of limited patronage horizon to members. Patronage refunds, when used in the co-op, tend to support activities that maximize short-term rather than long-term returns.

There's also the control problem. Because co-op shares are not traded on open markets, share values cannot be used as a performing gauge, so operational inefficiencies can go unobserved.

The portfolio problem, the lack of tradeability in co-op shares, Mr. Chairman. This lack of tradeability in co-op shares also means that members cannot adjust their investment portfolio to reflect their own risk preferences. Consequently, members will attempt to direct the activities of the co-op in a direction that better matches their own risk return trade-off.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, the influence cost problem. When we look at this, we have to understand that the dual role of member as owner and user can lead to attempts by groups or members to steer the co-operative to positions that will benefit them personally, and managers must spend much time building consensus for decisions. That is perhaps a tactic that would be well suited for this Assembly. Perhaps we all could take a lesson from the manager of a co-op and spend more time building consensus for decisions. Since there are very few amendments to the legislation that comes forward in this House, perhaps it's time that in this Assembly we could better spend at other activities.

Now, those are problems that can be identified, and they certainly can be identified with the new generation co-ops. Many people may think: what's a new generation co-op? Well, the new generation co-operative, or the NGC, is the name given to roughly 200 value-added processing, closed membership co-operatives that have emerged first in North Dakota and Minnesota and most recently in neighbouring states and provinces. Many of them in this province are centred around, of course, the agricultural industry and the farming communities. They have their own problems, Mr. Chairman. There are external pressures. There are internal pressures. There are always conflicting proposals or counterproposals being presented.

When you look at property rights issues and problems, co-operatives must find a way to respond and to keep their organizations viable, and the maturity process is going to be working on the new generation co-operatives. I'm sure and I have confidence that they will adapt to this legislation, and I'm confident they will prosper. I certainly hope they prosper.

The external environment in which co-ops operate has changed because rural Alberta is changing. Rural Alberta is changing from the family farm unit, and it is a discussion that I think is long overdue in this Assembly as to what exactly is going to constitute a family farm, what constitutes a corporate farm. There has been significant industrialization of agriculture. Now, I'm not in this debate going to go as far as calling it 20th century sharecropping, but I have before, because this is what's happening, in my view, to our agricultural industry not only in this province but across the country. The farmers are simply becoming 20th century sharecroppers. We have to discuss this at length on another occasion. I realize that, Mr. Chairman.

Internally a reduction in traditional member commitment and the increasing importance of well-defined property rights to structure members' behaviour have resulted in a need for new structural features in co-operatives, and this is the new generation co-operative, in my view. When we think that the new generation co-operatives are clearly seen as organizations that are not on the fringe, I think this is positive. The model of the new generation co-ops is now viewed, as I understand it, as a serious organizational structure both among farmers wishing to form new co-ops and more traditional co-ops looking for ways to adapt. That's why I have confidence in the future of these organizations, and I certainly hope I'm proven right.

Mr. Chairman, the new generation co-ops are also viewed as necessary and legitimate by people outside the co-op sector, and who outside the co-op sector would be more important than the commercial banks? Commercial banks, for instance, are increasingly interested – and again this is positive – in funding new generation co-operative operations. I don't know about the opinion of this government, but it would be interesting to hear the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill discuss this. Do they consider it a tool for industrial development, particularly in niche areas?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act, and I appreciate that this is a weighty bill in more than one sense. I would also like to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for his comprehensive job on this bill.

This bill has a wide range of provisions and is very, very systematic in its approach and is clearly the result of a great deal of cooperation, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure that the member has co-operated with all sorts of co-operatives and co-operative organizations in the province, partly because he tells me so, but I have every reason to believe him. This member has approached me on not just one occasion but on three separate occasions to ask if I have any concerns or problems with the bill and has offered to meet with me and discuss the bill at any time.

This is the only time since I've been in this Assembly that the sponsor of a bill on the government's side has made those kinds of overtures, and I very much appreciate it. I think the Member for Calgary-North Hill is to be commended for that, for taking on the obligation of consulting even with the third party in this House, with only two members. I think that's commendable, and I would recommend that approach to all members opposite who sponsor legislation and particularly to those members of Executive Council, because I think we would all benefit from a much healthier legislative climate if there was rather more consultation in this Assembly. Even though we have only two seats, we represent a significant trend of thought in this province and always have, and the same can be said for our colleagues in the Alberta Liberal Party. So I think the entire province benefits if there's a degree of consultation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, certainly co-operatives have had a major role in the development of this province, and if we look back to the early days of the province, we'll see that co-operatives have always been important and have been significant. If you look at the gas co-ops in this province or even a variation of co-operatives, the electrification districts, which did more to bring electricity to the rural areas of this province than any investor-owned utility ever did, you can see co-operatives operating in many ways.

The farm sector, of course, has been one of the main areas where co-operatives had an early development in this province: the wheat pools, the various forms of organization of farmers. When it was clear that private industry was not prepared to meet the needs of small farmers on a thinly populated land area, as Alberta once was, they did what they needed to do and got together. In fact, you could say that co-operatives came from the earliest days of farming when you needed to co-operate in order to get buildings built, barns and so on. So the co-operative spirit is part of the tradition of this province. I know that lots of people like to talk about the free enterprise heritage of this province and that lots of people in this Chamber certainly talk about little else, but the co-operative spirit of Albertans has long been evident and long been an important part of our political, economic, and cultural makeup.

Now, I think I could talk a little bit about what I see as some of the areas where co-operatives can be of value. I, of course, have long since been a member of a number of co-operatives. Credit unions are another example of co-operatively based financial institutions. I participated for a number of years in a housing co-operative which is now part of my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. I know that the past minister of education in this place under the government of Premier Lougheed – and that is Mr. King – was instrumental in assisting the formation of a number of housing co-operatives back in the late 1970s. I found that the co-operative I participated in was very valuable for a number of reasons. [interjection] It was the Sundance Housing Coop, hon. member, but there are a number of housing co-operatives throughout the city, and they have done a number of things.

The first thing they've done is provide housing to people. At a time when housing was expensive and in short supply, people were able to get together and get favourable rates of interest and participate in the planning, the financing, and the organization of their own housing. The people benefited greatly from that experience, Mr. Chairman. They worked hard. They learned about things that they didn't know. They learned about financing. They learned about incorporation. They learned many, many things. They were able to develop housing that suited their needs. They didn't have to go to the market and say: "Well, I'll take this one. It's got what I want, but it doesn't have something else that I want." They were able to design from the ground up their own housing according to their own needs.

Secondly, they were able to get housing, Mr. Chairman, that was very low cost relative to what was available on the market at that time, and they did that by eliminating unnecessary costs in housing. Specifically, I'm referring to landlords. By eliminating the landlord, who was taking a profit from their housing, they were able to have housing that was substantially less in cost than comparable housing elsewhere on the market. So the second advantage of co-operatives is that it eliminates middlemen. It eliminates people who don't add value to the equation, and it does that by eliminating profit. By eliminating profit, they enjoy lower costs.

I think the third thing I found is that people learned to work together. They learned co-operative principles, which I think are very important. They were able to assist one another. When one person had a set of skills that was of value to someone else, they offered it without charge, without anything being required, just simply because they were neighbours and wanted to work together. Mr. Chairman, they were able under these circumstances to share their capacities, and their sense of value that they had as individuals was enhanced and strengthened. So someone who knew how to do maintenance on furnaces, for example, was able to help someone who knew how to do landscaping, and someone who was a lawyer was able to provide their skills, of course, free of charge to their neighbours and the co-operative members. Altogether everyone benefited.

The other thing I found from the experience of that time, Mr. Chairman, was that people really learned a lot about basic things that they didn't know anything about. People who otherwise didn't have skills and were at a fairly low educational level learned from the people around them. They learned how to conduct themselves in meetings, how to get things done, and how to make decisions collectively. They learned things like basic maintenance, and they learned all kinds of skills. They learned from their neighbours, and they all learned from co-operating together.

Mr. Chairman, all in all, it had a tremendously beneficial effect for many people I have seen who came into the co-op when I was there, who were not people who had a high level of skill in certain areas, and they left as self-confident individuals who were able to go out into the community and had a much higher level of self-esteem. They undertook to improve their education. They got involved in the community league. They got involved in other organizations and, generally, became much better citizens. So co-operatives have a beneficial effect for everybody that participates in them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, they sometimes have disadvantages. One of them is long meetings. Sometimes people who've been involved in co-operatives speak for a long time, and it generally takes a lot of time to administer your own affairs when you're doing it with a group of 20 or 30 other individuals.

So I think those are many of the advantages of co-operatives.

Now, co-operatives of course are important in other areas. I know that in the case of taxi drivers in the city of Edmonton a number of years ago who felt they were not getting a fair shake from their employers, which were a number of big, privately owned taxi companies, they were able to set up their own taxi company, not really a company but a co-operative. Again, they were able to eliminate the middlemen who didn't add value to the work they did and were able to get the kinds of work, the working conditions they wanted. They were able to retain more of the value of the industry for themselves and, generally, have become now the largest taxi company, the most successful that I'm aware of, in the entire city. So they took on the big companies at their own game, Mr. Chairman, and they were very, very successful indeed.

I want to ask about some specific things, Mr. Chairman, and maybe there could be some answers. A co-operative under this act, in section 7, must operate in Alberta and have its registered office in Alberta. My question is whether or not co-operatives that operate in other provinces but have a very small portion of their operation in Alberta can be incorporated here if they do have their headquarters in Alberta.

Now, I know there's a section here under investment shares, and I wonder if other co-operatives already use investment shares. I believe that credit unions, for example, do use investment shares. I'd like to ask if there has been any problem that's been documented with the insider trading of shares. [interjections] Mr. Chairman, I'm a little distracted by the conversation that's going on here, and I wonder if I could . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has the floor, so kindly accord him the appropriate courtesy to complete his remarks.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that.

Just to go back to that and repeat it, the question is, first of all, about investment shares. I understand that credit unions use investment shares. The question I have is whether or not some co-ops also already use them. I would like to know if there are documented problems with the insider trading of shares. If there are, then I'd like to hear, perhaps in the response from the sponsor to this bill, if that has been the case and what the circumstances are. If not, then the question really arises as to why it's in the bill. So those are just some of the things I wanted to talk about.

I know there's another form of co-op that I'm familiar with, and that's the equity co-op. Some of the fairly luxurious high-rise development that has occurred over the years in Edmonton has been on the basis of equity co-ops and has been constructed without the benefit of the government programs that were established for housing by the federal government and also by previous Alberta governments. Those programs no longer exist. People in co-ops were able to actually participate in the establishment of fairly nice high-rise developments on an equity basis. The question I would have, then, for the sponsor of this bill is to outline the differences between an equity co-op on the one hand and a condominium arrangement on the other. I think there must be some differences and they must be significant, but I'm not directly familiar with what those things are.

Now, I think if we ask some questions about membership in co-operatives, under part 2 it talks about becoming a member. It's got some basic things here: that the person needs to apply, that it has to be approved by the directors, and so on. It does provide for the directors to delegate "the powers vested by subsection 1(b) to one or more members or officers of the co-operative." What is the protection, Mr. Chairman, for people who wish to become members of a co-operative that they are dealt with equitably along the line so that everyone is treated more or less the same? There are instances in co-operatives, particularly in small co-operatives where people live together in co-operative housing, where personal factors might get in the way. I think the legislation should protect and ensure that everyone is eligible and is treated the same, especially when the application for membership is delegated.

I think the legislation also talks about classes of shares. It doesn't really spell out what the classes of shares ought to be based on. I think that's something that is fairly important. You have a number of types of shares that are envisaged by this section, which I can't put my finger on just at the moment. I think it should be spelled out and particularly spelled out if there is any equity involved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to conclude my speech on this matter, I just want to emphasize again that I believe co-operatives have had a very important role in Alberta's history, that Alberta's history is not as purely capitalistic and free enterprise as some people would like to pretend, that the province from the beginning of its settlement right up until the present day has had a strong co-operative element, and this has been most evident in rural areas. I think Albertans have always been willing to lend a hand to their neighbour in order to build the community. Albertans are very, very community-oriented people, and they're not afraid to work together in order to achieve common goals.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 8

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, good evening. We're all ready for 15 or 20 minutes from this side of the House, but not really.

Members, as you will recall, when this bill was introduced at second reading, I gave notice that there would be amendments brought forward at the committee stage. I'm going to be moving the amendments shortly, but before I do, I want to acknowledge the fact that the opposition parties were made aware of these amendments just a very short while ago, and for that I apologize. The opposition parties should have had these amendments some time ago and didn't, and for that I apologize.

The amendments that I will shortly introduce will have the effect of removing reference to the Alberta royalty tax credit. The ministers of Finance, Revenue, and Energy felt that the Alberta royalty tax credits would be best considered in their entirety separately, apart from this legislation, and therefore have removed them. The effect of the removal would be to treat all individuals the same regardless of whether they were large or small investors.

Therefore, I move that Bill 8 be amended as follows: sections 19, 30, 48, 59, and 60 are struck out.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

10:30

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to comment on this bill. It's an important bill. It's always, of course, very popular to cut taxes, and this bill will do that. It's not going to do it without a few comments from me, however.

Going through the first area where the bill reduces tax, I think it's the reduction of the general tax rate. A comment I would make here is that we need to take a long-term view of the sustainability of our tax load. The risk we face here is that under the current situation when royalty revenues are so high, we can afford very sizable tax cuts, but we all know that every boom in Alberta is followed by a bust. The risk is that when things slow down, we will not be able to afford the tax cuts that we will have made here, and that's a long-standing concern. It may well be something that comes back to affect this government, and it's a general comment I make. I think we need to look at the tax level in terms of its long-term sustainability.

We also risk becoming overfocused on the tax burden as an influence on business location. In many studies done on the factors that influence where businesses locate, the tax load is but one of a large number of those, and it's nowhere near the most important. Among the most important are issues of quality of life, issues of cheap electricity, issues of infrastructure, of educational facilities, of social stability. By focusing too much on taxes, we end up running the risk of cutting taxes and in the long run not being able to afford the kinds of amenities that really are important in bringing organizations and businesses to a location and keeping them there.

I mean, if it were as simple as low taxes being the cause of business location, then I suppose that countries like Haiti and various Third World countries with low taxes would be industrial powerhouses and New York City or Toronto, which have relatively high tax rates, would be impoverished, and in fact the opposite is the truth. So I think we need to keep that sort of discussion in mind when we look at the portion of the act that reduces the general tax rate.

As for the section of the act that reduces the manufacturing and processing tax rate from 14 and a half to 13 and a half percent, although it's not in the act, I think the ultimate objective is to keep decreasing the rate until it's at about 8 percent, which was the original recommendation of the Business Tax Review Committee. Again, we need to remember that taxes alone are not going to be what drives the development of our manufacturing sector and the diversification of our economy or attracts new businesses here.

I would actually bring in, in particular, the concerns over the electricity rates that are evident in Alberta as something of much greater importance in this area than manufacturing tax rates. Again, it's fine to cut taxes, but what's the point if people are facing greater than that tax cut in higher electricity costs? Certainly I've had calls from constituents, small businesses and manufacturers in my constituency, who are very concerned about what's happening with their electricity bills.

The section of the act that deals with small business tax rates and the increase in the small business threshold. Some of my greatest sympathies economically are for the small business sector, which is very often the most genuinely entrepreneurial, the most genuinely competitive. What we're talking about here are bakeries, for example, or restaurants or small manufacturers, locally owned businesses that employ people here not just at the clerical level but right up the chain, from their frontline employees right through to their directors and presidents. They create more spinoffs because they employ the local law firms, the local advertising agencies, the local media, and so on. So I think that if we are to focus on anywhere in particular in reducing tax loads, I am pleased to see that much of this is in the small business area. If we are wanting to develop Alberta in a truly thorough and comprehensive way, then we should be focusing more and more on small local businesses rather than the large multinationals.

As I was reading through the bill, I found myself thinking of the old slogan that nothing is more nervous than a million dollars. While we can reassure people of our tax rates, we are less able to reassure them about stability in areas like electricity, and the price of electricity is fluctuating hundreds of percent up and down a day. If we are expecting, say, a high-tech company to develop a computer chip manufacturing plant in Alberta, there's no way they're going to do that if they can't nail down a long-term cheap supply of electricity. So I'm concerned that we should be focusing more energy on stabilizing our electricity than is happening, and we should perhaps shift some of the focus away from this bill and onto some actions to stabilize electricity.

I'm also concerned about the general trend in Alberta and across Canada that more and more of the tax burden is resting on personal incomes, on individual people rather than on businesses. If you go back several decades, you will see that the shift in the tax load from the corporate sector to the individual has been quite dramatic. I think all of us and all of our constituents would feel that shift in the taxes that are deducted from our incomes every week or every month here, taxes that at one time were shared much more broadly with the corporate sector.

So while this bill decreases taxes on the corporate side, in the process it shifts more of the tax burden onto individuals. In particular, when we combine this with the flat tax, it shifts the tax burden onto middle-income Albertans, so that is a particular point of concern for me as I approach the government's various tax policies.

This bill was developed in response to the Business Tax Review Committee, and you know we as the opposition have been advocating especially cuts to small business taxes for over seven years. We're wondering why this government took that long to undertake this kind of initiative.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I think I will take my seat. I think generally we will probably support this bill, but the most fundamental concern is that we are creating a situation in which our tax system is not sustainable given the long-term volatility of Alberta's economy.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001. At this stage we're to be looking at the specifics of the bill. Before I do, I'd like to make some comments about the efface that seems to have been created around tax cutting in the province, not just in the province but across the country. It seems to me that one of the things in all of the tax discussions that we've heard recently is the notion that taxes can be a good thing.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair just wishes to remind you that we are currently in committee stage, where we discuss clause by clause. Okay? You may now proceed.

DR. MASSEY: I'm prefacing my remarks, Mr. Chairman.

We use taxes as a community to finance the common goods. Our schools, our highways, policing, emergency services: those are things that I think we all agree are necessary and that we all agree we should support through the tax system. In the rush to cut taxes and conversations about no taxes at all as being a good thing, I think that responsibility is sometimes lost.

I'd like to then look at the specifics of the bill, starting with the reduction of the general tax rate. The provisions of the act reduce the general tax rate from 15.5 to 13.5 percent. Although it's not in this amendment act when the bill was announced, there are plans that will further decrease that rate to 11.5 percent in 2002, to 10 percent in 2003, and finally to 8 percent in 2004. We're reminded that 8 percent was the rate originally recommended by the Business Tax Review Committee. I guess the question I have is: why those particular rates? What was the economic reasoning behind choosing those particular numbers for reductions, particularly when you get to as fine a point as half a percentage point? So there are some answers that I would be interested in hearing surrounding the rationale for particular rates in that general tax rate cut.

The provisions of the bill that relate to the reduction in the manufacturing and processing tax rate raise similar questions. The act reduces the manufacturing and processing tax rate from 14.5 percent to 13.5 percent. For this, too, the government has a timetable projected into the future so that in 2004, 8 percent will be the rate. The question is: what's the rationale? Why those particular numbers over that particular period of time? What prompted or caused the government to select those figures?

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

The same can be applied to the reductions in the small business tax rate. It's interesting, because in travels across the province I've talked to a number of small business owners and asked them about this. We had a proposal several years ago that would have reduced the rate from 6 percent to 4 percent, and most small business owners said that the reduction meant very little, that it really wouldn't encourage expansion in terms of their particular business. I remember talking to the owner of a bookstore in the southern part of the province, and in terms of their particular business it wouldn't make much difference. So here we see the rate going down 1 percent and then to a goal of 3 percent in 2004. What's the basis for those projections? If my information, which I admit is very limited, is correct, why are these particular reductions here?

The increase in the small business threshold from $200,000 to $300,000 is timetabled to move to $400,000, again without any reason being given for those rates. The same with the capital taxes. Those will be changed because of the amendment tonight.

So those are some of the concerns. What was the rationale for choosing or picking those particular numbers? I noticed that one of the conclusions on one of the government releases was that by 2006 these tax cuts are projected to result in 40,000 new jobs, and that is just about 9,000 jobs more than what has been predicted are going to be lost by a number of businesses because of the high power rates in the province. So it's a rather interesting juxtaposition of tax cuts versus increased costs to industry.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude. Thank you.

Bill 10
Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments this evening on Bill 10, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001, as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The Traffic Safety Act itself was passed in 1999 but not yet proclaimed. The 2001 amendment will make changes to the existing act, as I understand it, so it will be ready for implementation next year. I appreciate the work that my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry has done on this in preparing this rather extensive summary for not only myself but other members of caucus.

The highlight of the changes is the establishment of an administrative licence suspension process for new drivers under the graduated driver licensing program relating to zero alcohol tolerance. Another highlight is the fine-tuning of the Alberta administrative licence suspension program by adding an immediate 24-hour suspension for persons providing a breath sample of over .08 or for failure to provide a breath sample. Other technical administrative changes are also included to enhance the current legislation.

I think the object and the highlights of this bill are well suited and worthy of support, but this is really a cleanup of the act before it comes into force. Former colleagues of this Assembly on this side of the House expressed reservations about the police forces being able to hand out 24-hour suspensions for a person refusing to provide a breath sample. They felt at that time that suspensions should be dealt with in court and that there was room for abuse if the suspension was given for refusal to blow in the breathalyzer machine.

Now, there were general comments from many members of the Assembly at that time, but we need to think, as we review this bill in committee this evening, about section 1, the amendment to the Traffic Safety Act; section 2, the administrative cleanup because of wildlife officers and fish and game officers now being called conservation officers. Section 3 is on the administrative cleanup again. Section 4 is dealing with adding information that can be included for the inspection of an accident report. Section 5: the minister may make regulations concerning "commercial vehicles or classes of commercial vehicles to which section 11.1 applies."

Section 6: the process for appeals of a one-month suspension of a novice – and that is a learner's, or eventually it will be the graduated licensing that is going to be part of the province – the details of the hearing process, of course, and when the board must reinstate a licence and when the suspension must be upheld.

Now, section 7 deals with the administrative cleanup related to charges under section 6, and section 8 is very similar to section 7.

In reviewing section 9, the clarification for a person with a learner's licence for a motorcycle and driving on a highway, I'm not sure of the conditions of this. Perhaps that will be clarified further in debate here in committee.

Section 10: I don't know if this is requested by the federal government. I don't know what sort of consultation has gone on there, but there are changes in penalties under the National Defence Act in the Criminal Code of Canada.

Section 13: changes to section 88 dealing with licence suspensions.

Section 18, in a quick review now, referring to the regulation and description of the regulation, that the regulation is sufficient, and the provision that the statute does not have to be referred to. There are probably a few too many tickets that have been thrown out on a technicality, and this, as I understand it, will close that legislative gap with a loophole.

In section 21, as I understand it, we're going to be dealing with the administrative cleanup of the provisions for licence suspension and, when various provisions take effect, for a 24-hour suspension.

As I said before, many of these changes are administrative and sort of a cleanup in nature, and that's a sign, in my view, that things weren't done quite right the first time around. It doesn't appear that in this cleanup the government has considered its position on putting restrictions on riding in the back of pickup trucks – and this has been discussed many times – and the requirement for bicycle helmets into legislation rather than regulation. These are important issues, and I believe they'll be discussed later – hopefully later – in this session if we get time, Mr. Chairman, with a bill that's been proposed by an hon. member through the private bills process.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

While it's not in either of these amendments, it is important to bring up at this time the proposed changes to the number of hours that truckers can drive. We look at the simple title of the bill, Traffic Safety Amendment Act. Government officials in Canada are proposing to allow truckers in this country to drive up to 84 hours a week over extended weeks. Canada would allow up to 14 hours' driving in a shift compared to 10 in the U.S. and nine in Europe. A Canadian trucker will be able to drive up to 84 hours in a week compared to 60 in America and 56 in Europe. Now, I thought at the time that it would be good if the minister of intergovernmental affairs could talk about this entire issue.

I would at this time, Mr. Chairman, remind all hon. members of the Assembly that traffic safety, regardless of whether you know whether its exits are from the right or the left of the highway, is an important subject.

AN HON. MEMBER: Stick to the clauses of the bill, Hugh. Relevance.

MR. MacDONALD: This bill is dealing with traffic safety. It's an amendment to the Traffic Safety Act.

AN HON. MEMBER: Which is very relevant.

MR. MacDONALD: Which is very relevant.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it's not that long ago that we had senior administrators of this government not knowing which direction traffic exited off highways. And members of this Assembly are complaining about relevance? I think not.

11:00

On the issue of what should and should not be in this bill in committee, perhaps at this time it would be logical to consider an amendment. What would be a suitable amendment to the Traffic Safety Amendment Act at this time? I can't think of anything more suitable, particularly after what I read about traffic safety in Calgary. Recently inspectors pulled over truck traffic in Calgary, Mr. Chairman. It was reported in the weekend papers. I don't have the article before me, but it was astonishing the number of vehicles that were not roadworthy. Was it 80 percent of the vehicles that were not roadworthy?

Now, this notion that there would be transport vehicles in this province transporting goods to and from whatever enterprise in the province that would be using the trucks to transport goods. If you were to stop at a light in Calgary, you could assume that if there were five trucks lined up . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: All hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor. We are in the committee stage. If anybody wishes to speak to the bill, you will be provided that opportunity when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar finishes. So please give him the due respect to finish his comments.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you may proceed now.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, there is this notion that you stop at a light and see the trucks that are stopped there. After you read the inspection reports, you can conclude accurately that at least one in five is not mechanically sound. Is this the place to discuss that with an amendment to the traffic safety law, at least to bring it to the attention of all hon. members of the Assembly, particularly the hon. member who is, I believe, still the chair of the Calgary caucus? I'm sure many individual members of this Assembly who drive from Calgary to here on highway 2 now, as a result of this debate, are going to be looking very keenly at traffic on both sides of highway 2, particularly the truck traffic. When you think that we have diminished our standards in this province and are considering diminishing them further – and this is not an issue of concern for this Assembly? Again, I think not.

I would remind all members of this Assembly that it is important, when drafting legislation and the accompanying regulations, that the government ensures there are sufficient resources to enforce the provisions of the act. Reducing policing grants may contribute to provincial surpluses, but they also do not assist our police officers with working to ensure that roads are safe and our highways are safe.

Now, we look at other provisions. We look at the graduated licensing. We compare ourselves to other jurisdictions with zero alcohol tolerance and penalties. We think of what's going to happen here and in British Columbia. There's an immediate 12-hour roadside suspension, one month prohibition for the first offence, one year prohibition for repeat violators. In Ontario there's a $110 fine. In New Brunswick the minimum fine is $70, the maximum fine is $500, and there are 10 demerits. In Prince Edward Island there is an administrative 90-day suspension, and that province is in the process of enacting their graduated driver licensing program, Mr. Chairman. In Quebec we see a minimum fine of $300 and a maximum fine of $600, and in Nova Scotia there are six demerits and fines of $337.50. In Alberta the proposal is for an immediate 24-hour suspension followed by a seven-day temporary permit followed by a one-month suspension. That is I think sufficient, but we shall see.

The provisions for vehicle seizure. Currently the Traffic Safety Act stipulates that the 60-day vehicle seizure is triggered by a conviction for driving while suspended within the last three years where it is the same suspended driver and the same registered owner. Now, I can certainly be corrected if I've misinterpreted this, but the proposed change is that a 60-day seizure will be triggered, Mr. Chairman, when a suspended driver is charged a second time within three years of the first charge for the first offence. A vehicle seizure where the vehicle was released earlier will not be counted as a first seizure. This involves the repeal of the requirement of a conviction to trigger the longer seizure period. This amendment, as I understand it, will make Alberta's program similar to both Manitoba's and Ontario's, where no conviction is required for the second vehicle seizure to be for a longer period of time.

Now, in closing, there are a couple of other questions that I have regarding the carrier profile. It's proposed to enable the registrar to forward records relating to convictions, reportable accidents, and on-road inspections relating to commercial vehicles to the jurisdiction where the driver was licensed and/or where the vehicle was registered for the purpose of that jurisdiction's carrier and driver profile systems. The type of offences would include all moving violations under the Traffic Safety Act and its regulations. That would include speeding, failing to stop at a red light, et cetera, equipment violations, inadequate headlamps, inadequate taillamps.

This is where it is so important, and it cannot be considered frivolous. I'm astonished that any hon. member of this Assembly would make such light of traffic safety, particularly with the heavy vehicles and as we allow more and more vehicles and allow more and more of the trucks to have trailers and pups. In some American states, Mr. Chairman, they're not allowed to haul like that because of public safety. There's a balance there between profitability of transport companies and public safety, but after this evening in this Assembly I'll need further clarification as to the amount of concern for public safety that can be expressed by some hon. members.

The Criminal Code. With Criminal Code violations we think of dangerous driving and impaired driving. I don't know how far we can go with that. Certainly the law has to be diligent.

Now, again in relation to transport trucks, the issue of weight, the loads carried in transit. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm disappointed, but I will certainly cede the floor to another one of my hon. colleagues.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

11:10

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments that I think have to be made as we look at Bill 10. We have indicated our support for Bill 10 and the provisions, but we'd be remiss if we didn't raise the objections that were raised before.

I'm looking specifically at section 90 of the bill: "If a peace officer . . . suspects that the driver of a motor vehicle who is a novice driver [has] consumed alcohol." The section goes on to indicate: "without a reasonable excuse fails or refuses to provide a breath sample when required to do so by a peace officer." I think there can be no question that we all prefer not to see people who've been drinking on our highways. That is not even part of the discussion. But the concern was that those suspensions should be dealt with in court.

If I recall, the previous Member for Calgary-Buffalo had some strong feelings about peace officers dispensing justice at the roadside. He felt that there should be other ways to handle it and that those purported violators should best be handled in a court. The provisions of the previous act that he found objectionable are now here again in section 90. It may be something that is of little consequence. Hopefully the incidents where it would be used by peace officers will be few and far between, but again it's a concern. Given the history of this legislation and the kinds of changes that we see before us, the number of administrative changes that had to be undertaken, it's a bit of a warning. We may be back here again some years down the road with further amendments that specifically address this concern with peace officers dispensing roadside justice.

Those are the only comments I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman, before supporting the bill. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a big job for me to follow behind my two eminent colleagues. I won't be able to live up to their reputations, but I will bring forward my own comments here.

As I understand the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001, Bill 10, am I correct in thinking that we are amending an act that hasn't even been proclaimed yet? I am concerned. We seem to be doing that a number of times in this sitting of the Legislature, and it speaks to me of the risk of rushing through legislation and then finding, after it's been passed, that it hasn't had adequate thought.

So as I look through the various sections here that are being amended, it's quite a long list. It's actually a fairly substantial bill to come forward to amend an act that hasn't even been proclaimed yet. We can go through it section by section if we want. I will, however, spare the Assembly my own comments section by section.

As I go through the sections collectively, there is always the problem, I find, of striking a balance between the need for control and social intervention on individuals and at the same time accepting as maximum an amount of individual freedom as we reasonably can. A great deal of the sections here seem to struggle with that balance as well, and fair enough. It's a balance we'll never have a final solution to.

The sections that particularly caught my eye as I think about the young drivers on the road today included, for example, section 6, which outlines a process for appeals of a one-month suspension of a novice operator's licence. I think it's probably reasonable for the bill to clarify issues around how those appeals for novice operators' licences will proceed and when the board must reinstate a licence and when the suspension must be upheld.

There is also section 9, clarifying issues around learners' licences for motorcycles. The great number of serious accidents involving motorcycles has got to be a concern for all of us. I know a number of emergency room doctors who don't call them motorcycles. They call them murder-cycles because they are so hazardous. So section 9's efforts to clarify some of the issues around learners' permits for motorcycles are probably commendable.

Section 15 addresses issues relating to alcohol consumption and novice drivers. We've got to be concerned with alcohol consumption with all drivers, but I guess we are being even stricter with novice drivers than we are with regular drivers on this. This outlines exactly how a novice driver, when alcohol is detected on his or her breath, will face a licence suspension. I would encourage this. I think it's a commendable step, as I understand it, to be exceedingly strict in terms of alcohol consumption and novice drivers.

I'm going over some of the other provisions in sections here. A number of them have to do with regulatory streamlining, and again I would repeat the point that we're already having to streamline and amend a bill this extensively – we're talking here about 15 pages of amendments to the Traffic Safety Act – when that bill hasn't even been proclaimed. It speaks to the risks of rushing legislation through.

I also wish there were a couple of other sections here, one addressing restrictions on riding in the back of trucks. More clearly, I don't believe that section is in here at the moment, and it would be worth considering.

I think, Mr. Chairman, with those comments I will take my seat, and you can look forward to me supporting this bill. Thank you.

Bill 1

Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move for third reading Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act.

Mr. Speaker, over the course of the last six months Albertans have felt the pressures of unprecedented rises in gas prices, and those pressures have been met by this government bringing in certain programs to ensure that while Albertans get the benefit of a high world price for gas, they also get some of the rebate of the royalties that we earn on that gas to help shelter some of the prices of home heating and other issues in the province. Bill 1 is a method by which this government can continue natural gas price protection into the future for Albertans.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, at this time. It is an amazing piece of legislation. I've said in this Assembly before that it is reflective of a government that has lost its direction. [interjection] It certainly is. You look at this bill, and you look at the Calgary Herald article that's dated May 4, 1974. [interjection] It's research in the newspapers. It certainly is, yes.

The Natural Gas Rebates Act was introduced, and it was suitable legislation. There is no need for this legislation. There is absolutely no need for it. No one in this Assembly is against consumer protection. No one is against Albertans receiving the benefit of the resource that belongs to all the citizens.

Now, this is what the Calgary Herald said in 1974. During the election – and I spoke about this earlier – it is my view that someone was dispatched, probably from the Public Affairs Bureau, and the flagship legislation had to be secured for this session of the Assembly. They simply went to this editorial from the Calgary Herald. It states, Mr. Speaker, in the first paragraph: it probably should be called the gas price protection plan instead of the rebate plan, but whatever the semantics, Albertans received the details of a good deal yesterday. It goes on and on, but in the last paragraph it states: Alberta is already renowned for its low home heating prices; soon the claim that domestic natural gas prices will be the lowest on the continent will be true of Alberta; it is a fitting return on a resource that belongs to the people.

These features of having low home-heating prices and the idea, the notion that the resources belong to the people are already incorporated in legislation. It's not long since we heard from the government that they were so afraid of dome disease, and that concept was that while the Legislature is in session, there are laws being created that are going to have a detrimental effect on Albertans. It even went further, that all laws that are created are in some way detrimental to some Albertans. So if we have a perfectly good piece of legislation that just needed to have its regulations updated, why are we repealing this and putting in Bill 1? I thought Bill 1 could be improved, so if we're going to be spending billions of dollars in Bill 1, why not have an auditing process in place so that we could know where the money is going? That wasn't suitable.

Now, when you think that we couldn't have a definition of vendor – and it was discussed earlier in the Assembly, this afternoon in question period, regarding the location-based contracts to gas-fired electrical stations. How many hon. members of this Assembly know whether or not fuel gas for those power plants is somehow going to be subsidized under Bill 1? We never, ever did get a definition of vendor. Rebates to vendors, but there's no definition of it, Mr. Speaker. This bill as it exists is nothing more than unlimited spending on a credit card. The Premier himself mused in Calgary at a dinner that there was going to be a $5 cap put on through Bill 1. Gas is trading internationally at about that level currently.

There's no doubt that the resources belong to Albertans, not the producers. This is a problem that many members of Executive Council have, that somehow it's for the producers, that it's not for the citizens, not for the consumers, not for the people of this province but that if it's good for the producers, it's good for the province. The producers in this case are many natural gas exploration companies that are operating in the western Canada sedimentary basin, specifically in the Peace River arch. When we look at what has gone on with this slogan bill and we have a look at what's going on in the province in the western Canada sedimentary basin, we have to be very cautious. This is why this bill, this blank cheque, is not necessary for the province, for the people.

We can look in the statutes covered. There are seven specific pieces of legislation to deal with gas exploration, distribution. There are even discussions in the statutes existing on price protection. Yet there's a huff and a puff, and we're going to have Bill 1. We're going to take an old editorial from the Calgary Herald and say we're protecting consumers, but the legislation, as I said, already exists.

Now, with the Canadian gas exports, Alberta gas exports, I think it is suitable at this time to take a look at the western Canada sedimentary basin. Mr. Speaker, the western Canada sedimentary basin includes most of Alberta, but significant portions of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, as well as a part of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories and certainly parts of the Yukon Territory.

Within this vast area there are significant differences. You can go from plains to foothills to the high Arctic.

Now, regional geology and certainly location can also have a great impact on drilling and costs. Geological formations in the western Canada sedimentary basin dip to the southwest, resulting in increasing drilling depths and increasing drilling complexity from east to west. Many people brag about how many gas wells are being drilled in Alberta, but they are being drilled in the southeast corner of the province where you can, as they say, punch a hole in a week. They're shallow gas wells. Sure, we're drilling hundreds of them. What are the production rates of those wells? They're marginal. If you go to the Alberta foothills and to the B.C. foothills and certainly to the B.C. plains or the northwest section of Alberta in the Peace River arch, the wells are drilled deeper. There are certainly higher production rates, but the locations are much more remote and, as a result of that and the depth, the cost of drilling is much, much higher.

We think of our marketable gas production, and we hear musings again from the government that there are going to be gas exports, new pipelines, that it's going to be over my dead body or that I'm going to get my piece of the flesh or Alberta's got to get its pound of flesh. Meanwhile, what are we doing? Before the EUB right now is the proposal to sell the Viking-Kinsella gas field. Meanwhile, we want a pound of flesh from the Alaska developments. We want this; we want that.

How ludicrous does this sound when at the same time we want to sell a gas field for $490 million Canadian, I believe, to interests in the midwest? I believe it's Kansas City. Are they buying that gas for the benefit of the citizens of Edmonton or northern Alberta, or are they buying it for their own purposes in the American midwest? When you consider that part of the Viking-Kinsella gas field would be in the central region of the western Canada sedimentary basin and part of it would also be in the east region and when you look at both areas, they've had a significant production decline in the last 10 years, and that would tell me that perhaps it's an asset worth keeping.

Further on in my remarks I think I can prove without a doubt that the productivity decline of existing gas fields in this province is a lot less than the new wells. The productivity decline rates of the new wells are significant. They're much greater than what was previously thought, and that is of great concern to this member. But why, when you look at a gas field that for years has produced gas to heat the homes of Edmontonians and the surrounding communities, would we be contemplating selling it? It sits in an area of the province which, at least over the last decade, has had a 25 percent decline in production rates. It doesn't make sense, Mr. Speaker.

Despite the drilling of a record number of gas wells – and I'm going back to 1999 because I don't have the figures for the year 2000 – natural gas deliverability from the western Canada sedimentary basin increased only marginally. This is before the Alliance line was commissioned and is now sending 1.3 million cubic feet of gas daily to Chicago and with it the rich natural gas liquid streams. That's before that had happened. An examination of the production characteristics of wells connected over the last four years shows that the average initial productivity per well has been declining, in part due to the drilling of an increasing number of shallow gas wells. The declining rate of production from all existing wells is another significant factor affecting deliverability.

Now, to offset the annual decline in production from existing wells, production from new wells added in one year must amount to at least 85 million cubic feet a day in each year, or 20 percent of current production. Can hon. members of this Assembly assure me that that's going to happen or continue to happen, or are producers going to move to another territory? Are they going to move to the B.C. side of the Peace River arch where there's a greater return on their money? If they're going to spend millions and millions of dollars drilling a well, they're going to go somewhere where they can get a return on their money, and the rich wells now are in that territory or even farther north in the Fort Liard region, whether it's on the western boundary of the Northwest Territories or in the Yukon Territory itself.

Now, the decrease in initial productivity per well within the western Canada sedimentary basin has been much more rapid than previously anticipated. I don't know how many hon. members of this Assembly I've heard assure not only myself but other members of the fact that there's an unlimited supply of natural gas. Well, there's not. There may be a lot of gas, but as to recovering it, what could we do? Perhaps it would be better than having this legislation. Perhaps we could look at a number of initiatives to further encourage production from marginal wells. A little earlier in the debate this evening there was a discussion, I believe, on the Alberta marginal tax credit. We need to have a further discussion on tax credits to see if those wells can perhaps be kept in production until all the gas that can be produced is produced.

We need to look at the solution gas from oil batteries. We need to look at the idea of solution gas as an alternative for electricity generation. But will that happen with the carte blanche here, this blank cheque? The idea that any government, but particularly this government after what we've experienced in the last 10 years with spending cuts and now more spending – this is a credit card with no ceiling. Anything could happen.

Now, gas protection for residential users, that's fine. What are we going to do with industrial users? What are we going to do with the resource companies themselves that use gas for enhanced oil recovery? Are we going to subsidize those efforts through Bill 1? You never know. This is such a brief bill that anything is possible.

I recently read in my research that there's going to be increased natural gas consumption for industrial purposes in the northern Alberta tar sands. It's becoming such a significant problem, the natural gas prices for the developers of the tar sands leases, that some of them are considering going to coal. We don't think of it very often, but there's considerable consumption of natural gas, whether it's in heaters or in furnaces in these industrial facilities for the production of steam. We look at the production of steam for heavy oil recovery with steam injection. Are we going to use Bill 1 for that? I hope not. I think not, but there's nothing in here to stop it.

Ethane that's not used in the petrochemical industry, but ethane that's used for reinjection purposes again is used to sweep a formation, Mr. Speaker. Is that going to be part of this protection package?

Bill 12

Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments to answer the few concerns brought up by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. The first was with regard to custom operators. We have a definition for custom operator which reads:

A person who purchases a new farm implement and uses or permits the use of that farm implement for hire or for service to others for valuable consideration to the extent of at least 50% of the annual use of that farm implement.

One primary difference for custom operators is found under section 5 of the Farm Implement Act, implied warranty. Section 5(3) states:

A custom operator does not have the benefit of any of the warranties provided for in subsection (1)(d) and (e) with respect to a farm implement mentioned in section 1(a) that is purchased by him.

The amendment to the definition of purchaser should not change the status of custom operators. Their equipment will continue to be warranted to be

- (a) made of good material,
- (b) properly constructed as to design and workmanship,
- (c) in good working order.

These warranties "apply for a reasonable period of time not to be less than 1 year." As this equipment is designed for a typical farming operation, it is understandable that custom operators – that is, feedlots – would put considerably more use on equipment 24 hours a day, seven days a week, resulting in greater wear over a short period of time.

With regard to the notice of failure to perform concern brought up by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, it covers situations where catastrophic failure or nonperformance occurs, and this issue is separate and apart from the statutory one-year warranty provided under section 5. The intent of section 6, notice of failure to perform, is to provide farmers who are operating under some tight time constraints with quick repair to new equipment that does not perform, replacement equipment should it not be repairable, or refund of their money to allow the farmer to purchase new equipment. Time is of the essence in farming, as it is tonight, and long legal battles in court do little to help either side. Section 6 clearly sets out the guidelines for dealers and distributors responding to significant failure of equipment during its initial use.

I think that covers some of the concerns that were brought out. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments that have just been made in terms of answering some of the questions that were raised. I think what we need to do now is make sure that we expedite the work on this bill and make sure that it is out there for farmers. As we just heard, this is important. Farmers have been asking for some of these clarifications in terms of warranty coverage and also the relationship between dealers when machinery is recalled or sent back or when a dealer goes out of business.

These are the kinds of things that we have to have in the industry, so I would hope that most people in the House see fit to support this. Thank you very much.

Farm Implement Dealerships Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 13, the Farm Implement Dealerships Act, I want to reiterate will provide options to our farming community, and it should help to go a long way to encourage and create competition. The opposition was indicating that there were concerns about that.

Certainly it will deal with specialized equipment and equipment that would at times not be sold locally. Dealerships and distributors will still be allowed to negotiate volume discounts. Distributors will be free to give whatever breaks they wish to dealerships to be in certain communities. Finally, this will help purchasers to have options, especially with specialized equipment in our communities. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just listening to the comments that were raised when I talked about the bill in second reading. The answers have been provided to the marks that I've got here on my page as we went through it.

I think if we look at that, we've got to recognize that this bill's purpose is to basically make sure that dealerships can, in essence, carry short lines if they want to, that the top-down decision-making by the manufacturers doesn't put a lot of pressure on that, and that farmers then do have some choices in terms of the material they purchase, who they purchase it from, and who the manufacturer is. So I hope everybody supports this bill as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 11
Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In bringing this bill into committee, just again a reminder to all members that we're moving regulation into legislation.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that certainly this is a bill that the minister is to be commended on. It's been a while coming, but it's here. It is a good bill for families. This is in committee stage of the Assembly, and hon. members are certainly welcome to participate in debate or discussion if they so desire.

At this time I think we need to have a look at this whole issue of parental leave in this province. The federal government doubled parental leave EI benefits to 50 weeks in the February 2000 budget. Eight other provinces had enough time to put in place matching legislation to protect jobs for 50 weeks by December 31. This evening I am pleased with the minister, certainly with the direction. But why was this province such a holdout?

Parental leave certainly gives both parents the opportunity to spend more time with their newborn and – I've said this before – newly adopted children in the all-important first year. We can talk a lot about supporting families. We can talk a lot about having family values, but at some point we have to put our actions where our speech is. This is a perfect opportunity for the government to act, and it did, but we have to ensure that we're going to continue to support new families. Again, why did this commitment take so long?

Of course, we had the usual consultation process. Many business representatives had reservations about this, many. I don't think their reservations were ever addressed, but I think they will learn to live with this legislation. I think they will profit from it, as a matter of fact, because when they are recruiting employees to take over from those who are on parental leave, particularly in this economy it will be easier to recruit people because they will be able to offer them suitable employment for some time.

Now, at this stage, at committee, certainly I don't feel it's appropriate to talk about what's not in this Employment Standards Amendment Act. Certainly at second reading I outlined significant deficiencies in the Employment Standards Code. The positive features of this, Mr. Chairman, are the facts that parents are better able to balance the demands of work and family experience, they have less stress, they have lower absenteeism from the workplace, and, I believe, are much more productive employees.

When the hon. minister introduced the Employment Standards Amendment Act, Bill 11, it was seen by people from across this province as a progressive step. I spoke at second reading of the mother in Calgary who had contacted my office. I think she would be very pleased. It took a while, but she would be pleased.

There are a number of questions that we need to discuss this evening.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but according to Standing Order 60, the committee has to rise and report before midnight, so the committee will now rise and report.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 12, Bill 13. The committee reports progress on Bill 11.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. How long does an employee have to work before becoming eligible for leave under this bill? Now, an employee must have 52 continuous weeks of employment with their employer to be eligible for maternity and/or parental leave. This requirement is too long. This requirement applies to both full-time and part-time employees.

The next question: when can leave begin? Maternity and parental leave can begin, Mr. Chairman, as follows. Maternity leave can begin at any time within 12 weeks of the estimated time of child delivery. Parental leave can begin at any time after the birth or adoption of the child, but it must be completed within 52 weeks of the date a baby is born or an adopted child is placed with the parent.

Now, it is interesting, Mr. Chairman, that the following conditions also apply. A birth mother who takes maternity leave and parental leave must take the leaves consecutively. When the pregnancy of an employee interferes with the performance of her duties during the 12 weeks before the estimated time of delivery, the employer may require the employee to begin maternity leave early. A birth mother must take at least six weeks of maternity leave after the birth of the child unless the employer agrees to early resumption of employment and the employee provides a medical certificate indicating that the resumption of work will not endanger her health.

Another question that I think is valuable at this time in committee is: what notice? Since there are so many violations of the Employment Standards Code in this province, it's about time we get this straight. What notice must an employee give to go on leave, Mr. Chairman? An employee must give the employer at least six weeks' written notice to start maternity or parental leave. Parents will still be eligible for the leave if medical reasons or circumstances relating to the adoption prevent the employee from giving this notice. A birth mother who takes maternity leave is not required to give her employer notice before going on parental leave unless she originally agreed only to take 15 weeks' maternity leave.

Now, what notice must an employee give to return to work? There are three issues here. The first one is that employees must give at least four weeks' written notice that they intend to return to work or to change their return date. This notice must be provided at least four weeks before the end of the leave. An employer does not have to reinstate an employee until four weeks after receiving this notice. Secondly, where an employee fails to provide this notice or fails to report to work the day after their leave ends, the employer is under no obligation to reinstate the employee unless the failure is the result of unforeseen or unpreventable circumstances. Thirdly, employees are required to provide four weeks' written notice if they do not intend to return to work after leave ends.

I'm sure that hon. members are concerned about this: can leave be extended if medical problems arise? I don't know how often this occurs, but for the information of the committee, at this time the Employment Standards Code provides for 15 weeks of maternity leave and 37 weeks of parental leave with no provisions for extensions. It would be up to an employer to decide whether to extend leave. Perhaps other hon. members of this Assembly are more familiar with employee/employer contracts than I, and they could enlighten us all.

Now, what protection is an employee entitled to during leave and on return to work? All hon. members of this Assembly know that employees in certain circumstances and particularly in certain industries have very little protection under the Employment Standards Code in this province. It's been proven time and time again. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned part-time workers, and as the number of part-time workers grows in the economy, she certainly is correct, Mr. Chairman.

There are two conditions here. An employer is not required to make any payments to the employee or pay for any benefits during maternity or parental leave. An employer cannot terminate an employee on maternity or parental leave unless the employer suspends or discontinues the business. At the end of the leave the employer must reinstate the employee to the same position or provide the employee with alternate work of a comparable nature at the same wages.

How do these leave provisions relate to maternity and parental benefits available through employment insurance? Now, I'm pleased to say that the new provisions bring the length of Alberta's job-protected maternity and parental leave provisions in line with EI maternity and parental benefits. It's been a long time coming, and for everyone it will mean that you will need only 600 insured hours of work instead of 700 to be eligible for maternity, parental, and sickness benefits. Not only does this apply to all Canadians but to all Albertans as well.

These increases, as I said before, are going to make a difference in families. We all know that in Alberta, contrary to opinions that were expressed during the Bill 11 debate that we have an aging population, the reality is that in this province we have a very young population, and with legislation like this I think hopefully that will continue. We have to ensure that we encourage young people to start and raise families, because there is certainly a decline not only across this country but in a lot of industrialized countries in the birth rate. This is one small way, as I said before, of encouraging families, particularly dual-income families, to perhaps feel more comfortable with the idea of taking time off from work to spend with their newborn and develop bonds that will be there for a lifetime.

That is why, in summation this evening, Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to support this legislation. I think, as I said before, that it's progressive, and I look forward to other amendments to the Employment Standards Code. Certainly there need to be amendments to prevent the exploitation of so many of Alberta's workers, whether they're part-time or whether they're full-time. Close to 80 percent of the workforce is reliant on this code for workplace protection.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to one of my colleagues. Thank you.

12:10

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 11, the Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001. I am supportive of this bill.

[interjections] I'm so excited that members of the government have woken up and are supportive. Great. I'm looking forward to what they have to say to the bill.

MR. AMERY: They're surprised that you're supporting Bill 11.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, yes, and I supported it in second reading as well. There you go.

A couple of things are concerns with me, not enough to make me not support the bill but concerns nonetheless. One is why it took the government so long. We're practically the last in line here, I think, to bring forward legislation that was coming into line with the federal parental leave program that came through in the February 2000 budget. The federal government, essentially, got the ball rolling on this one. They doubled the duration of the maternity and parental leaves under the EI program to 50 weeks, which became effective January 1 of 2001. But the federal government obviously can only compel employers that are governed by the Canada Labour Code, which leaves a lot of other folks not covered for this. So the feds' legislation essentially affected their own employees, federal construction sites, banking, transportation, telecommunications, things that were all directly controlled by the federal government.

It's essentially up to the provinces to protect the jobs of everyone else. So when the provinces get into the act, they're not talking about money. They're talking about protecting the jobs of people that take an unpaid leave essentially. Most of the provinces hopped right to it. This might have been because Alberta has come to a point recently where our fall sittings are very short, and therefore the government didn't have time to get it through, not that that's a good reason. Perhaps it's encouragement, in fact, for longer fall sittings. Alberta and Saskatchewan were the last holdouts on this, so I'm pleased to see that we are coming into line on this one.

Traditionally, we had only protected jobs for 18 weeks, which is a very short period of time, and then there was an extension for medical leave, which really only applied to the mothers, obviously, and we rather left adoptive parents out in the cold, period. So it's excellent that we are recognizing the importance of parental leave, and I'm also pleased to see that there is a recognition for adoptive parents. I am not pleased to see that there is discrimination between the two and that in fact adoptive parents are eligible for less time and also that the father is eligible for less time. I had hoped that we could come to a point where there was equity across the board on this one. If there really is support for families in Alberta, then I was hoping that the government would have dealt with this with an equitable hand, but I'm not surprised they didn't.

Now, we're essentially talking about the 37 weeks of unpaid leave time. How many people in Alberta will be able to take advantage of this? I don't have the statistical data at my fingertips to say. A significant portion of the workforce but not all by any means. A number of people will be left out of this. As my colleague was pointing out, very few people in a part-time wage position would be able to take advantage of this. They just haven't accrued the hours, and often part-time workers aren't afforded the same benefits from an employer that full-time workers are. Unfortunately, certainly in my constituency a lot of people are working several part-time jobs pegged together to give them a living wage. It makes it really difficult for them to start a family or to add to their family. So you do get into a larger philosophical argument here about whether this benefits only a certain portion of people that are in an income bracket and other factors which would enable them to take advantage of this.

Again, I spoke on this when there was a private member's bill bringing forward something similar. It's not enough for me for the government to come forward with one bill like this and go, "Yippee, aren't we sterling examples, shining examples of support for parenting and support for families?" There are a number of other choices the government has made which I think work against families.

We still have a policy in place in supports for independence where mothers with children who reach the age of six months must start seeking work. Then I look at this bill, and we're saying 37 weeks of parental leave and the additional 15 for the mothers. That's 52 weeks of parental leave. So women on SFI get 26 weeks and they'd better be back in the workforce, but everybody else gets up to a year of unpaid leave. There's a discrimination and an inequitable way of treating people based on a strictly economic basis. That's one example of how this government is inconsistent in its treatment of families.

There are a number of other ones. I can refer people back to my debate on I think it was Bill 209 last fall, but there are other examples, like the changes that were made to the funding of day care centres. It made it very difficult for day care centres to stay viable when they lost their operating subsidy and instead the subsidies were provided directly to parents.

I have some day care centres in my riding that are really struggling. I mean, they have to be prepared to have 40 kids on any given day, but they might only get three. Well, when they're having to carry all the costs of that and they're only getting the subsidies for the kids that actually show up, it's really hard to keep it going. If it's a wildly fluctuating area, which some of my areas are, the day care centres just can't stay open. So they close, and then the parents in that area just don't have access to them. Now the parents couldn't even be out getting work and accumulating hours which could contribute to their eventually being able to take some kind of parental leave and add to their family.

So there are decisions being made by the government that I feel strongly impact families, and it's based on the economic status of the family. There's definitely a philosophical underpinning here in the way different people are treated.

Specific to what is being brought forward in Bill 11, I spoke at length in second reading on this. I think what's being proposed is fine. I have to underline again that this is unpaid leave. This is about keeping a position open. This is not about any kind of financial incentive. It just keeps the job open. I think a lot of people get confused about that and what's going on with the federal EI program, so I'm underlining that again.

As I said, I wish there hadn't been discrimination between birth mothers and everybody else, which is what's happened here. I think it is excellent that we have recognized adoptive parents and their role in nurturing children in our society. I think it should have been 52 weeks, but even the 37 will help some families that are looking to contribute to society by adopting children.

There are clauses in the bill that deal with written notice about when they go back to work and when they can leave work. Most people are familiar with how that happens through the federal program, which has been running for some years, and even the shorter program, the 18-week program, that Alberta had in place before. I mean, it's just a reasonable amount of notice to allow a small business to get on with things.

I'm glad to see that the government has come through with this. It's too bad we weren't leaders in this area, that we are in fact following the pack and I think at this point are probably dead last, but I'm glad to see it. I'm glad to support the bill in Committee of the Whole, and thank you very much for the opportunity to provide those few comments.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I think that this bill is certainly welcome. You know, I would say that this bill is an interesting contrast to the government's normal practice, record, and history.

This government is a government of firsts. This government is the first government to balance its budget on the backs of the poor. It is the first to establish labour legislation which takes away the rights of workers. It is the first government to throw the health care system into crisis. It is the first government to completely ruin the electrical generation and distribution system that has served us so well. It is the first government to export massive amounts of natural gas, including all of the butanes and the ethanes and so on, yet it's the first government to say that when anybody else's gas is passing through this province, then we want them to park the butane and other things here.

So, yes, Mr. Chairman, this is indeed a government of firsts. I will give them that. They have many, many firsts to their credit. It's unfortunate that when it comes to progressive legislation, it's a government of lasts. It is the last government to do anything about poverty, the last government to do anything about . . .

Chairman's Ruling Committee of the Whole Debate

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, we are at committee stage, and if the hon. member would follow through clause by clause and stick to the bill, I think that would prevent a lot of the catcalls that we're hearing. I caution you that this is the committee stage, and I hope that you will follow the bill clause by clause.

Thank you.

MR. MASON: I just thought things had become altogether too quiet in this Chamber. I did want everyone to be awake while I praised the government, because if they don't see it tonight, they might not see it for some time, Mr. Chairman.

I appreciate your comments, and I will now briefly address the clauses of the act.

Debate Continued

MR. MASON: So we have here in part 2 in section 45 that a pregnant employee is entitled to 52 weeks without pay. Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased that the government has finally come to bring forward the piece of legislation that it has which protects the rights of mothers to a full year. I think that it is a good piece of legislation. I am pleased to see the province of Alberta following the leadership of the federal government in this respect.

I see that "6 weeks' written notice" will be required unless

- (a) the medical condition of the birth mother . . . makes it impossible to comply . . .
- (b) the date of the child's placement with the adoptive parent was not foreseeable.

This deals with adoptive situations.

You know, it's a fairly comprehensive bill, Mr. Chairman. It deals with natural birth; it deals with adoption. It is the kind of legislation that I wish we would see more of from this government.

With that, I'm just going to indicate that in the third party we're very pleased to support this particular piece of legislation and commend the government for their somewhat belated enlightenment.

[The clauses of Bill 11 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 7

Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 7 is a bill with one or two sections that we particularly like and with a few very serious flaws in it, so it causes us some real concern.

It's worth, I suppose, giving a brief background before we go through it section by section. The government has promised – I can't remember for how many years now – that there will be elections for the regional health authorities. I think there was even discussion of that two general elections ago, and there were delays and arguments and debates and concerns about how elections could be enacted, what legislation would be brought in, what mechanisms would be provided to govern elections of regional health authorities, whether it should be under the Local Authorities Election Act or whether it should be under its own act. We end up now with the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001, which will when it is passed, assuming that it is passed, lay out the legislation and provide a foundation for the regulations that govern the election of two-thirds of the board members of regional health authorities.

One of the dilemmas we face here is that it is only two-thirds of an elected board, and frankly that's not adequate as far as our perspective is concerned. School boards elect their full membership, municipal governments and county councils and so on are all fully elected, and our perspective would be very clearly that we should have fully elected regional health authorities. So it's a small step in the right direction, but it falls short of going the full distance.

When we look at it clause by clause, section 2 reads that section 19(1) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a), by adding "and" at the end of clause (b), and by adding the following – and this following clause is worth some note – after clause (b):

- (c) require the production for examination of any documents or records that are in the possession of a person who is or was a candidate in an election for membership on a regional health authority and that relate to that person's election finances, and make copies of them or temporarily remove them for the purpose of making copies.

Now, this is a section of Bill 7 that I, for one, will wholly endorse and support. It's crucial, absolutely crucial – and I can't overstate this – that the backers of the campaigns of people running for regional health authority membership face controls on the financing they provide to those campaigns and that the candidates themselves have to be accountable to the public for the way in which they finance their election campaigns. So this section, when combined with the proposed regulations, at least as I understand them, will have the effect of preventing the kinds of problems that we're seeing in some American health care elections in which you have absolutely enormous amounts of money being spent to influence the outcomes of particular elections.

I'm thinking here, for example, of a case that was brought to my attention. I think it was covered in a major Boston newspaper, the Boston Business Journal. A number of companies including Aetna US Healthcare, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Massachusetts, Harvard Pilgrim Health Care, and Tufts Associated Health Plans paid between $100,000 U.S. and $250,000 U.S. each to influence health care elections and particular state health initiatives that were going to be voted on. The insurers, these business groups, raised among them a million dollars for particular health care ballot.

MR. MacDONALD: That wouldn't happen here; would it?

DR. TAFT: Well, we would hope that it wouldn't happen here if this section is enacted, so that's why I'm speaking to this section in particular.

The other side of that particular election managed to only raise $5,000, and it's a dreadfully lopsided reflection on the democratic process. This section of Bill 7 is, I think, unquestionably a step in the right direction.

Similarly, the next section, section 3, reads that section 21(1) of the Regional Health Authorities Act is amended by adding the following after clause (e):

- (e.1) governing all matters related to the election finances of candidates for election for membership on a regional health authority including, without limitation, regulations
  - (i) governing who may make and accept contributions to candidates, the maximum amounts of contributions and the time and manner in which they may be made;
  - (ii) governing the disposition of contributions that are made in contravention of the regulations;
  - (iii) requiring a person who makes a contribution in excess of the maximum amount permitted in the regulations to pay a penalty, and governing the amount of the penalty, the person to whom it is payable and the manner in which it may be recovered.

So we would see that the kinds of situations such as we saw in the American case I cited a few minutes ago would probably not be allowed whatsoever, and in fact people would be penalized for making that kind of enormous contribution.

The next clause:

- (iv) governing the manner in which contributions are to be held and accounted for, and the disposition of a surplus where the candidate decides not to contest the next election.

This will provide for regulations that will control exactly how election finances are accounted for.

The next clause under this section:

- (v) governing the keeping of election finances records.

Again, a good idea. Without good, solid record-keeping, how are we to be able to track election finances?

Finally, the last clause under this section, clause (vi), "providing that a member of a regional health authority who fails to submit audited financial statements" – now, not everything is audited in this government; is it? Some aspects of some bills just don't provide for audits. That's one of the things I do like about this piece of legislation. It provides for an audit. It says here:

- (vi) providing that a member of a regional health authority who fails to submit audited financial statements in respect of election finances as required by the regulations ceases to be a member, subject to any appeal provisions in the regulations.

So once again we have a section of Bill 7 here which I think is well worth supporting, and the minister in fact is to be commended for bringing in these kinds of provisions, particularly when they are brought in in conjunction with regulations.

As I understand it, the regulations for this bill are available now, and I have a copy of them here. I must say that in some regards I find the regulations a bit confusing, but I'd first of all like to commend the minister for circulating regulations along with the bill so that we can see the two together before we vote on them. Again, there are other bills before us in this session in which the regulations aren't to be seen anywhere, and I think it's a good idea that these regulations are out there now, although frankly I have some concerns with some aspects of the regulations.

The next section, section 4, raises a bit of a question for me. It refers to, in fact, an amendment of the Local Authorities Election Act. This, as I read it, causes one of the fundamental questions I have around Bill 7, which is: why are we setting up a parallel and independent and separate structure for regional health authority elections when we could have just folded them under the Local Authorities Election Act? This section raises that issue and creates this whole parallel structure and in fact ends up with the effect of having the Minister of Health and Wellness in charge of administering the elections, including giving him the ability to appoint electoral officers, to create districts and wards, and to determine all the details of the election.

So we now have a situation in which we've pulled a major local election activity out from under the Local Authorities Election Act and have created through this section and other aspects of Bill 7 an entirely new electoral process which undoubtedly will have additional costs to it, which raises the question of duplication of efforts and raises the question of inefficiencies. It may even create situations in which I suppose at least theoretically there could be shortages of personnel, because the same election process and structure that's being run by the municipal elections and the school board elections will be competing for people against the parallel system set up for the regional health authority elections. I have yet to see anything close to an adequate justification for this particular section of the act, which creates the separate electoral body and puts the minister in charge of it.

Now, the concerns I have with that are that we very clearly have a case in which theoretically and potentially the minister of health in practice will be directly influencing the nature of these elections in a way, for example, that the provincial minister responsible for municipalities would not be able to influence the election of, say, mayors and city councillors and a situation in which the Minister of Learning would not be able to influence the election of school boards. But we have a situation here in which the Minister of Health and Wellness quite possibly is able to directly or indirectly influence the election of regional health authorities.

I could understand that occurring once at the very beginning of this process if the regional health authorities had not already been in existence for the last seven years, but these are, after all, long-established organizations now with fully functioning staff, fully functioning policies and sets of procedures. There is no reason that the regional health authorities themselves wouldn't be able, for example, to create their own wards and, if need be, appoint their own chief electoral officers. So I am concerned that this particular section of Bill 7 is an unnecessary duplication of law and bureaucracy and creates an opportunity for the Minister of Health and Wellness to unduly influence the outcome of the elections.

We even get into matters that are as specific as section 5 of Bill 7, which reads: section 42 is amended (a) by repealing subsection (1)(d) and (e); (b) by repealing subsection 2(d) and (e); (c) in subsection (3) by striking out "or district board." What this has the effect of doing is creating a lot of confusion. As I and our staff worked through this bill and spent time with Parliamentary Counsel trying to understand it, we've had to refer back to the Regional Health Authorities Act. We've had to check and study carefully the Local Authorities Election Act. We've had to sort out how these sections correspond with each of the many pages of regulations here. It has created nothing but confusion.

We've found, in fact, that that confusion is showing up in our constituencies, because we have constituents phoning into our office. We've had two or three calls from people calling in interested in these possible elections and wanting more details. When we send them the draft regulation and the nomination forms and the legislation, we get calls back from people saying: "Gosh, I can't understand what's going on here. I can't sort it out. Can you explain to me X, Y, or Z?" Then we end up studying it carefully and find that, no, we can't explain X, Y, or Z. We've actually had to be in contact with the minister's office to help us understand and explain this bill to our constituents, and even then we found . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Confusion?

DR. TAFT: Well, to be honest, we found some confusion there and some lack of clarity.

When we find that this bill, as I read it – and I stand to be corrected – makes the Minister of Health and Wellness responsible for things like the nature of the ballots in the election, the number of members in each area, how things will be presented in the entire electoral process, I find myself wondering if we want to be creating a situation in which our Minister of Health and Wellness is becoming a major electoral officer. When we are looking at the scale of money spent here, it will be the people elected to these boards, at least the two-thirds who will be elected, who will have a say over something like a third of the provincial budget. I am concerned that the integrity and independence of this electoral process is under some stress here.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, for the moment I'll take my seat. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This will not be one of those exceptional occasions where I will come to praise the government. I wish I could remember more of Shakespeare, but it is getting a little late.

I want to speak to the bill, and I want to talk a little bit about matters relating to the election finances for election to the membership of the regional health authorities. The regulations that can be made deal with governing who may make and accept contributions to candidates, the maximum amounts of contributions, and the time and manner which they may be made. All of those are within the authority of the regulation. I think, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview indicated, that there is a real problem here in ensuring the objectivity of health authorities and the importance of making sure that they are not unduly influenced by campaign contributors.

There are at stake in these health authorities enormous amounts of money. Given the wide powers that health authorities have under the other Bill 11, not the one tonight but the Bill 11 which was seared into the minds of Albertans a year ago, it allows the health authorities to contract out virtually every aspect of their operations.

Health care is a very, very expensive business, Mr. Chairman. It's billions of dollars, and there are enormous profits to be made by corporations as a result of Bill 11. Of course, the government promised when they passed the old Health Care Protection Act that they really weren't intending on privatizing it, but they've created a framework under which privatization can occur on a very broad basis. So the question of whether or not companies which stand to gain financially from the decisions of health authorities ought to be able to finance candidates for the health authorities is a really, really important issue as far as we're concerned.

Of course, as has already been pointed out, there is less control here than almost any other aspect of governance in this province. There's not even the opportunity for local electors or local authorities to determine their own rules with respect to "who may make and accept contributions to candidates, the maximum amounts of contributions and the time and manner in which they [can] be made." That's the language, and that's all up to the government. So what is to prevent a private hospital, for example, or a wanna-be private hospital – all they need is a contract from the health authority – from throwing thousands and thousands of dollars behind candidates who are going to give them that contract? That is a real concern.

The second part under 3(e.1) deals with "governing the disposition of contributions that are made in contravention of the regulations." That's a confusing clause to me, Mr. Chairman. What does it mean? If contributions are made in contravention of the regulations, what happens to the people who contravened it, and what happens to the money? What happens to the people that accepted the money if it was in contravention of the regulations?

The third subclause requires a person who makes a contribution in excess of the maximum amount permitted . . . to pay a penalty, and governing the amount of the penalty, the person to whom it is payable and the manner in which it may be recovered.

What does that mean, Mr. Chairman? Confusing is putting it mildly. So if someone makes a contribution in excess of the maximum amount and pays a penalty, who do they pay it to? Do they pay it to the government? Do they pay it to the health authority? Well, it's not here. It's going to be determined by the regulation. "The person to whom it is payable and the manner in which it may be recovered." Why can't these things be spelled out in the legislation? Why don't you just say that if you violate the regulations, you pay a fine and you pay it to the government? If the government wants to give it to the health authority, they can do so.

The next sections:

- (iv) governing the manner in which contributions are to be held and accounted for, and the disposition of a surplus where the candidate decides not to contest the next election;
- (v) governing the keeping of election finances records;
- (vi) providing that a member of a regional health authority who fails to submit audited financial statements in respect of election finances as required by the regulations ceases to be a member, subject to any appeal provisions in the regulations.

Now, here, Mr. Chairman, is at least a little bit of a nugget of legislation, because if you sort through all of the verbiage surrounding the creation of regulations, it does say that someone "who fails to submit audited financial statements in respect of election finances as required . . . ceases to be a member." So there's something that's set out very clearly in the legislation, and I'm pleased it's there, but why do you have to search for it? I don't know. I don't know.

I want to talk about the clauses a little bit more, Mr. Chairman. The basic question I have has to do with eliminating health regions under the Regional Health Authorities Act from the Local Authorities Election Act.

Now, here you have a comprehensive system of governing elections for local authorities. A great deal of work has been done over the years to develop a fairly good, comprehensive Local Authorities Election Act that deals with a thousand things that aren't in this act, and that piece of legislation is completely disregarded. In fact, any relevance that it might have had has been amended out of existence by this act.

I think what we've got is the opportunity, should the government choose to avail itself of the opportunity, to have an enormous degree of control over the local authorities that govern the health care throughout the province. So the government has reserved for itself the right to determine all of the regulations, all of the controls over elections that will determine the outcome of these health authorities.

That's unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, because I don't think that it serves the interests of the people who depend on health care. The government has an avowed aim of ensuring some local control over these health authorities, yet it seems to me that with the passage of this act there won't be real, meaningful control on the part of the citizens of the local jurisdiction. The real and meaningful control will reside with the government.

I want to indicate that before the establishment of these health authorities, we had a number of independent hospital boards and we had boards of public health. I'm familiar with some of those, because the local municipalities had the authority to make appointments. In my view, those appointments were a fairly good way to select boards for hospitals, given that you had an appointment principle in place, because you got a variety of groups making appointments, different groups. I think the College of Physicians and Surgeons made some appointments. Doctors made some appointments. The city made some appointments. The city even gave the government the right to appoint a couple of members to its board. So you got a diversity on the boards that didn't exist once the government consolidated all of these boards into local health authorities and began making the appointments directly themselves. Then you got a uniformity of appointee, and quite often you would find large numbers of active Progressive Conservatives on these various health authority boards. I'm sure that's purely a coincidence, Mr. Chairman, but it was very interesting that the diversity of experience seemed to be lost.

Now, we know that the government is reserving the right to appoint one-third of the members to each health board, and we know that the government is going to make those appointments after they've seen the results of the election. We also know that the government is going to make all of the regulations relative to election financing of the candidates. If the government chose, if the government, for example, hypothetically, wanted to support organizations such as HRG in Calgary or other private health care organizations, then they could create a set of election regulations governing finances, and so on, that would ensure that those companies had enormous influence on who is elected to the health care authority. We know that money talks when it comes to elections.

So I think this is a very dangerous precedent because we could have, theoretically of course, only theoretically, a situation where you had health care boards that were very favourable to vested interests in the health care industry, and that would be a most unfortunate situation, Mr. Chairman, and one I'm sure that the members opposite would like to help us avoid.

So on balance, then, Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to take my full 20 minutes at this time, but I do want to say that I'm not prepared and we as the New Democrat opposition in this House are not prepared to support a bill which would give so much power to the government and allow the government to set rules for local elections in a way that could potentially ensure the election of candidates favourable to the government's policies. That is the fatal flaw of this bill, and that's why we are determined to oppose it, and we will certainly be voting against this bill at every stage.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and yield to the next speaker. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

MS DeLONG: Mr. Chairman, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you a couple of constituents from my riding, Leia Laing and James Vallentgoed.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I certainly have to commend the visitors for visiting us at this late hour or early hour in the morning.

Bill 7

Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to inform the Assembly that I have an amendment to Bill 7. It needs to be distributed. Should we take a minute for that? You can indicate to me when you'd like me to begin speaking.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I'll move that Bill 7 be amended by adding the following after section 3. Section 3.1, section 21 is amended by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) For the purposes of subsection (1)(e), all members of a regional health authority must be elected commencing October 15, 2001.

AN HON. MEMBER: All right. Good.

DR. TAFT: Glad to hear that.

Mr. Chairman, one of a number of profound concerns that we have with Bill 7 is the fact that it is a step backwards in the democratic evolution of Canadian society and indeed of the whole tradition of British democracy. We have under Bill 7 a proposal by the government to have only two-thirds of the members of a regional health authority elected. The remaining one-third, including – and I repeat: including – the chairman and vice-chairman, will be appointed by the minister after the results of the election are known. It's simply a distortion of democracy.

I think we need to go back through the history of the development of democracy to appreciate what a U-turn this is in our evolution as a society. If we go back to the origins of democracy, we can reasonably go back to the Magna Carta. Now, the Minister of Justice might be able to tell us when the Magna Carta – what's the date?

AN HON. MEMBER: Twelve-fifteen.

DR. TAFT: Very good; 1215. So we can go back almost 800 years. In fact, it's probably the same 800 years that our Speaker so frequently mentions as being the mandate that he uses for his rulings.

The Magna Carta, of course, was the first beginning of the devolution of powers from the monarchy to the people. Well, we know that through the Magna Carta the British barons were . . . [interjection] Maybe they were robber barons; I don't know. The robber barons came later.

The British barons were struggling with the monarchy because they felt they had a right to partake and to participate in the government of England at the time, and although there was a furious power struggle and even threats of civil war, the Magna Carta ultimately was agreed to, and we had the first steps, the very early beginnings of democracy in Britain and ultimately, if you go back through the years, in Canada.

In the course of affairs the spirit of the Magna Carta extended and grew so that it wasn't just the barons who obtained some version of democratic power. It became a larger group of the British ruling elite, and it leads us through, I suppose, to the English revolution and Oliver Cromwell and King Charles, when we saw in fact the monarchy being overthrown for a period and the establishment of a fully functioning parliamentary republic under Cromwell and his people. Again, a major step in parliamentary accountability. Of course, Cromwell proved to be a little bit of a harsh ruler, and the people brought back the monarchy, but the whole spirit of democracy reaching to more and more people was gaining momentum.

We can carry on 150 years further after the English revolution to the French Revolution, which was a major step forward in democracy. Although it was of course based in France, it had repercussions throughout all of Europe and indeed all the way around the world. The British and all the other European powers watched the French Revolution with great nervousness, because they were concerned that democracy was getting out of control. Too many people were getting a hand in things.

Actually, an interesting footnote in the French Revolution: the French Revolution is the origin of the idea of left and right in politics. The left sat to the left side of the Speaker, and they were the revolutionaries. They were the people calling for change. The right were the monarchists, who resisted change. That's the origin of left and right in politics, and it was a major step forward for democracy.

Well, we cross the ocean, and we come to Canada.

1:10

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, are you standing up on a point of order?

MRS. ADY: I'm not. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you may proceed now.

DR. TAFT: You see local landowners and farmers beginning to get the right to vote in Canada. Some of you undoubtedly will have read the book called How the Fathers Made a Deal about the origins of Confederation. The author there argues that at that time Canada was the most democratic country in the world. The local farmers, the local landowners, the local merchants were all involved directly in the democratic processes.

We move again a few more generations ahead, and we come to – finally, long overdue – women getting the vote, in fact a process that was led by women largely from Alberta. Am I correct in thinking that one of the first elected female officials in the entire British empire sat in this Assembly?

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes, that's right.

DR. TAFT: So we have a great heritage, a vital heritage of expanding democratic powers in this Assembly.

The last major step I can think of before the retrograde step of Bill 7 occurred in 1969 when the voting age was lowered from age 21 to age 18 in Alberta. One of the things that was argued then was that if you're old enough to fight for your country and die for your country, you should be old enough to vote for your leaders. So we have an unrelenting move towards broader and broader democracy in Alberta.

Then we come to Bill 7. Gee, I covered 800 years in eight minutes.

MS BLAKEMAN: You did.

DR. TAFT: I'm going too fast.

Bill 7 takes us to a situation in which instead of a full democracy, an expansion of democracy, we're seeing a proposal that only two-thirds of authorities should be elected. Now, we have full elections for city councils, we have full elections for school boards, we have full elections for the province and for the country. Why shouldn't we have full elections for regional health authorities? How would we feel in this Assembly if a third of the members were appointed by the Prime Minister?

AN HON. MEMBER: Kind of like the Senate.

DR. TAFT: Yeah. Is it the policy of this government to support the Senate? No.

What if the chairman of this Assembly or the chairman and the leader of the government were appointed by the Prime Minister? It wouldn't be acceptable, yet here we are not only accepting but enacting in law a situation in which a third of the people on the regional health authority boards will be appointed.

So the amendment that I have proposed here, Mr. Chairman, represents not a two-thirds commitment to democracy but a full commitment to democracy and a full confidence in the wisdom of the voters to choose wisely and to choose properly who should be governing their regional health authorities.

Mr. Chairman, I could also point out and I will take a moment to point out some of the concerns that I have with a board that is two-thirds elected and one-third appointed. I think we do run the risk of creating factions on boards, and we can all see played out in our headlines every day what happens when politics and organizations get too factionalized. They divide among themselves and destroy themselves. I think there's going to be a serious risk in at least some of the regional health authorities of a split between the one-third who are appointed by the minister and who obviously will be approved by the minister and the two-thirds who will take their mandate from the general electorate. Frankly, if I was on one of those boards – and I'm sure the minister won't be appointing me to any, but maybe someday I'll run for election – as an elected official, I would feel that I had a more rightful place to exercise my role and my authority than those who were appointed at the whim of the minister.

In fact, undoubtedly, Mr. Chairman, we are going to end up in situations where candidates who receive thousands or even tens of thousands of votes in elections are not going to be able to sit on regional health authority boards because they will be one too many for the electoral process. Their rightful place at the RHA governing table will be taken from them, and they will be replaced by an appointee of the minister. That's a sorry comment on the effects of Bill 7 as it is structured right now, and it's an effect that could be corrected very easily this evening by all of us by accepting this proposed amendment.

So, Mr. Chairman, with those comments I thank the members for listening to the historical view of things, and I hope you all fully appreciate the weight of the democratic evolution that rests on our shoulders.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to urge members to vote against this amendment and to recall history, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview mentioned, the Magna Carta. As I recall, the Magna Carta was all about the citizens taking into their hands some of their governance because they were tired of the King spending their money in foreign misadventures mostly. So the whole question of governance comes to taxation and representation.

The hospital boards, being a mixture of appointed and elected, should work fairly well, but we've got to keep in mind that those of us here in this room are elected to exercise judgment as regards the financial implications of the budget. We control the financial implications of what goes on on the hospital boards. All of those elected members and the appointed boards in the hospital boards are not going to be able to raise or spend 1 cent. They will only do what we give them the authorization to do. So the responsibility is rightfully right here in this Legislature. Therefore, I urge all members to vote against this amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the amendment.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate seeing a member of the government side actually participate in debate. That was very refreshing, and I thank the member. [interjection] Yeah, I guess we had to go back 800 years before somebody was motivated there.

An interesting point that was raised there, and I will come back to it.

I am in favour of this amendment A1 to Bill 7 on the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act. To me, that has a lot to do with integrity. The regional health authorities were created as an animal of this government, and at the time I felt and I still feel that they were put in place as an entity created to do the bidding of the government and then be able to hide behind them.

For some time, if you follow question period in this House, to any questions that were directed towards the government around implementation of health policy the answer was: well, that's the regional health authorities; go ask them. Of course, we did go and ask the regional health authorities, who said back to us: well, that's the way we have to do things given the budget that has been approved for us by the government. So in fact we had an entity that was put in place that had the responsibility for doing something but did not in fact have the full authority to do it because they did not have the ability to raise the money and had to come back and petition the government for it.

Let me stop here and say that I'm in no way advocating that regional health authorities should have the power to tax. But for me, as a student of public administration and administrative law, it's a classic example of how not to set a system up. If you're going to give responsibility, the organization has to have the authority to complete the task. Therefore, we have an agency that's been created by the government as a screen, I believe, and finally we were able to come back to the government and go: "Well, don't point us towards the regional health authorities. They can't answer the questions because they're not being adequately funded." The funding comes back to the government, and full responsibility and authority is laid at the feet of the minister.

For me the integrity part of this is that we had an oft repeated promise from the government that regional health authorities would be elected, and this is the disconnect, the schism, the reality/unreality check that we get from this government between what they say and what they do. In fact, what we got was two-thirds, a proposal that two-thirds of the regional health authority members would be elected and the remaining third would be appointed by the government. In further refinement of that, the chairperson – and I will argue with my hon. member here in that I think they should be chairpersons and vice-chairpersons rather than chairmen and that they should be open to all – that position, is also to be appointed by the minister.

This is an issue of control, and this government has managed to, I'm sure with the assistance of their some 7 million dollar Public Affairs Bureau budget, put it out there that this is a government about openness and transparency. In fact, what it is is a government about centralizing control, and this is another example about centralizing control. So even though we will look to a future where two-thirds of the regional health authority members are elected, in fact the control of the regional health authorities will reside and continue to reside with the minister, but they'll be able to stand up and say: oh, yes, we have two-thirds that are elected.

You know, the situation has been created here where it's almost moot. When you have control of the chairperson, the vice-chairperson, and a third of the members, you can be creating factions, you can make the board totally dysfunctional, and given the powers that the cabinet holds to itself, probably you may well be able to make the regional health authorities a puppet of the government.

It's important, I think, that we hold the government to the original promise that regional health authority members would all be elected. I thank my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for following through on that and bringing forward an amendment that puts that out front again, holding the mirror up to the government and saying: this is what you promised, and there's a reason for it. He very carefully has gone through a progression of enlarging, expanding democracy to include all members in it.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had talked about the importance of no taxation without representation and pointed out that this regional health authority amendment and discussion was moot because the regional health authorities do not have the ability to tax. No, they don't, but when you look at the mechanisms of how this organization is to function, it is about responsibility and authority. We are not giving full responsibility under the two-thirds/one-third scheme, and we're certainly not giving authority for them to accomplish it.

So we continue along in a situation where one-third of our budget is spent on health care and where it's very difficult to get accountability, where it's very difficult to determine who made the decision and when and why. When I look at this legislation, once again the primary focus and concern of the government is around finances, money, and less around the implementation of a system that will work well and that will give us a well-managed health care system. Once again the option is to be concerning itself with money and not concerning itself with good management, with planning, and with a system that is set up so that it can, in fact, function.

I think that we careen down the path towards a health system that doesn't function at all, thereby creating the market, so to speak, for the government to step back and say: "Well, you see, public health care doesn't work at all. You see that we've proved it now. Therefore, it should be a completely privatized system." I still accuse the government of strategizing to achieve that objective. I think the one-third appointed, two-thirds elected is a stepping-stone in that strategy, and I have yet to see this government do anything to convince me otherwise. I do hold this government accountable for that, and I will continue to hold the government accountable for that. We have an opportunity in the House tonight to right that wrong, to correct that, to not send us down that road, by supporting the amendment that's been put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I was pleased to be able to speak in support of his amendment.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to this most excellent amendment. It's an amendment which would provide that all members of a regional health authority must be elected commencing October 15, 2001.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview neglected a key piece of his history. It's a history of the development of democracy that took place right in this country. It is the struggle for representative government that took place and which culminated in the revolts in Upper and Lower Canada in 1837 against the Family Compact, which dominated politics in Upper Canada. It was led by William Lyon Mackenzie. In Lower Canada, which is now Quebec, it was led by M. Papineau. This was a struggle which is fundamental to our basic democracy in this country, and it's something that happened in this country.

Mr. Chairman, members will, I'm sure, remember their history, but every time I think of it, I'm just shocked and appalled that we had unrepresentative government in this country. In fact, the Executive Council was not accountable to the Legislature, as it more or less is now. We had a situation where the governor, appointed from across the ocean, appointed the entire Executive Council of the Legislature. It did not come from the elected members. It was not accountable to them. The government did not fall when they did not have the confidence of the Assembly as a whole. That's a very important piece of the struggle for democracy in our country that the hon. member has neglected to point out but which has a direct bearing on the legislation that we're now considering and which I think is very important.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has said: well, they don't have the power to tax. But the fact remains that they have significant powers to spend. They have a direct responsibility to the people in their community to provide good-quality and acceptable health care.

I think it's important to note that the government has indicated that these would be elected – and they've stalled a long time on implementing that promise – but that promise when it was made so many years ago was not qualified. It wasn't: we promise that we'll have two-thirds elected health authorities. It was: we promise that we'll have elected health authorities. Now it's been qualified. Why? Why has it been qualified, Mr. Chairman? I think that the answer is very clear. The government wants to retain control. It wants to create health authorities that look democratic but which are in fact not.

AN HON. MEMBER: With one-third?

MR. MASON: An hon. member across the way has raised a good point, and I thank him for that. He has said: how can you maintain control of an elected body if you can only appoint one-third? Of course, if we looked at this Assembly and if we assumed that we didn't have full independence of the voters of this province and the federal government in Ottawa could appoint one-third of the members, then how would they maintain control with only a third?

Well, I think a third is a very, very significant portion of the whole, Mr. Chairman, and it makes it very, very difficult to overcome. It gives you a tremendous foot in the door. It gives you a huge advantage right from the start, but then you've got to combine it with the other elements of this bill. It's the government that says essentially who can run, who can be financed, how much they can be financed, who can provide the financing. The government is in a position to determine the entire rules of the game. So it doesn't take very many more members of a health authority to get control.

So if you appoint a third – say there were 10 members, just speaking in very hypothetical and round numbers, on a regional health authority. Say that there were nine. That works better. [interjections] Yeah, it's divided by three. That's right. Mr. Chairman, you know, I just want to keep it simple so that everybody can follow along. I know that with the lateness of the hour higher mathematics is escaping many of us, so I'll say nine.

Now, you take one-third of that, and that is three. So the government appoints three. That means there are six that are elected. How many government supporters have to be elected in order to equal a majority?

DR. TAYLOR: Six more, Brian. We'd elect everybody. There'd be nine of us.

MR. MASON: Well, that's very good, but I think the math test is that it would take two more. All they would need is to elect two more. I mean, say that it was a by-election, and you don't do as well in those. [interjections] Two more and the government has control, and that's all that's really necessary.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I just caution you. If you could stick to the amendment that's before us, it would prevent the catcalls that we're getting. Thank you.

Please proceed now.

MR. MASON: I appreciate your advice. I was just trying to be responsive to members opposite who have a number of questions about my presentation. So I will come back to the legislation.

It is really fundamental, then, that this amendment be passed so that we don't get in a situation where one-third is appointed by the government and a small minority of the elected members is sufficient to give the government's unelected members a working majority on the body. The fear, of course, from our point of view has always been the government's intention to contract existing health care services that are now publicly delivered over to the private sector, and of course the ability of the private sector to influence elections through campaign donations and so on is a real fear and I think a legitimate fear.

As we all know, there are tremendous profits that can be made from privatized health care. In fact, it's one of the most profitable areas of business in the entire economy, Mr. Chairman. I think pharmaceutical companies have amongst the highest rate of profitability of any of the sectors of the corporate world. So there are tremendous profits to be made and a great deal at stake.

Of course, if we get into profits in health care, then we all know – and the literature is very clear on it – that health care outcomes decline, waiting lists increase, and generally the situation of the health care system deteriorates dramatically.

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Chairman?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If anyone wishes to rise on a point of order, they need to be in their proper seat to rise and be recognized.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you may proceed.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do want to come to some of the other elements in the existing legislation, because I think they have a bearing. We see on this that if the minister wishes, he or she is permitted to dismiss the entire board and appoint an administrator. So the control that the government seeks is present with or without this amendment. There's no real reason for the government to not support a fully elected board because they have ultimate control over the board. They've got the hammer of removing the board altogether. I think that's important.

Now, I want to try and relate a fully elected board to the question of the functions of a health board. It says in section 5 of the Regional Health Authorities Act that a regional health authority

- (a) shall
  - (i) promote and protect the health of the population in the health region and work towards the prevention of disease and injury,
  - (ii) assess on an ongoing basis the health needs of the health region,
  - (iii) determine priorities in the provision of health services in the health region and allocate resources accordingly,
  - (iv) ensure that reasonable access to quality health services is provided in and through the health region, and
  - (v) promote the provision of health services in a manner that is responsive to the needs of individuals and communities and supports the integration of services in the health region, and finally

- (b) has final authority in the health region in respect of the matters referred to in clause (a).

So it's clear that it's responsible for delivering health care services to the region, and it should therefore be responsible to the voters of the region. I think it's clear that with the government's proposed amendments we will not have a health authority which is responsible to the people in the region. That is, in my view, a very important principle, one worth fighting for and one which the patriots of 1837 would have been proud to fight for, Mr. Chairman, because they were standing up for the rights of the people and acting against tendencies to have arbitrariness and lack of democratic principles in our government in this country.

Here's another one that I think is important, and it's section 11. It says here:

A meeting of a regional health authority or community health council must be open to the public unless the regional health authority or community health council, based on considerations set out in the regulations, determines that holding the meeting or part of it in public could result in the release of [information] and so on and so on. But clearly unless they're concerned about private information being released, they need to hold their meetings in public.

Well, what good is it for the public to come to a meeting and watch people making decisions on their behalf when they can't remove one-third of them? So what if it's in public? They can ignore the wishes of the people of that region with impunity if they're not responsible to them and not elected by them. It's another example of why this amendment is so important and so fundamental to establishing real local control over regional health authorities, which is supposed to be what the government is prepared to talk about.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has said: well, they don't have the power to tax. I was looking as hard as I could, Mr. Chairman, for something in the existing act to refute that. At one point there was the power to levy supplemental requisitions. I regret to say – well, I don't regret to say it, but I don't find that in the legislation as it currently exists.

But it does say that the health authorities can receive grants which come in a manner that "the Minister considers appropriate." He or she can "provide grants or other payments to a regional health authority or provincial health board to assist it in carrying out its functions." That can amount to a very, very great deal of money, Mr. Chairman, so it makes a lot of sense to me to have some assurance that the money that's spent on behalf of the people of the region, whether it comes from taxes or from a government grant, is spent in accordance with the wishes of the people of the region. Once again, unless the people on the health board making those very important decisions are accountable in some way to the people of the region, it becomes very, very difficult to hold them accountable.

Section 18 of the act talks about:

Where an enactment provides that the Minister shall or may provide grants or payments of any kind to any person including, without limitation, an existing health authority, the Minister may instead provide those grants or payments to a regional health authority and, subject to any terms and conditions the Minister considers appropriate, delegate to the regional health authority the Minister's power in respect of the provision of the grants or payments.

So here you've got a situation where the minister can delegate his authority, including his authority in respect of the provision of grants or payments.

You know, you cannot just simply say that the responsibility to the public lies only in this Chamber when it's pretty clear that it also can be delegated to the regional health authority, and the regional health authority I think has once again got to be responsible to the people of the region.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment to this bill will accomplish a number of things. It will ensure that you have a health authority that is accountable to the people on whose behalf it provides health care, that it's going to be spending money on behalf of those people. It has very, very significant financial authority, so it ought to be elected.

I think also, Mr. Chairman, that it removes any concern that might exist that the government wishes to use health authorities to promote a particular agenda of privatization. I think it would go a long way towards calming the fears of some Albertans who may feel that the government's agenda is to increase the level of private health care and introduce the profit motive into our health care system through means other than direct means here at the Assembly.

The government has given authority to these health authorities to contract out any services, including overnight stays, and that gives it a very, very broad mandate to provide health care in a private fashion. So it becomes all the more important to reassure Albertans that the government really is interested in good-quality public health care, that we ensure that these health authorities are fully elected and accountable to the people they serve.

That ultimately is the most important aspect that I see this particular amendment providing, and I must commend the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for introducing this amendment. I think it is exactly what this bill needs, because without it what we have is not a bill that really introduces public control in any way to our health authorities. So I think that he deserves a great deal of credit for having the courage to stand up in this Assembly and introduce such an amendment, and I really hope that some members opposite would also be prepared to support it, because I know that there are many opposite who are democratic in their inclinations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had much more to say, but I'll take my seat.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to support the amendment proposed by Edmonton-Riverview. The amendment addresses one of the difficulties that a number of us identified at second reading of the bill, and that is the concern with having a partially elected, partially appointed board. The amendment brings consistency with school boards in the province, who are totally elected, with municipal councillors, who are totally elected, and this amendment would have health boards in the same position.

Those other boards are fully elected for a number of reasons, Mr. Chairman. One of them is the whole business of chairmanship. What this amendment would do would be to make sure that the chair of the regional health authorities was one who had the support of the electorate and would not be put in the kind of vulnerable position that an appointed chair would be.

The chairing of these regional authorities is going to be important. The chairs are spokespeople for the board when there are difficult decisions made. Whether it's with respect to negotiations or contracts or closing or opening of facilities, it usually falls on the chair's shoulders to speak for the board and to direct the board. It's the chair who's instrumental in much of the activity of the board, and that's why school board chairs are paid extra stipends in terms of their service, as is the mayor of a city council, recognizing the extra leadership function that those individuals have to exercise on the part of the board.

Chairs are usually key in all committee appointments, so it seems only reasonable that the amendment would be supported and it makes sense in terms of looking seriously at the operation of the board. It's going to be very difficult, as previous speakers have indicated, for an appointed chair to argue it out with someone who's elected with – who knows? – 10,000, 15,000, 20,000 votes and to claim the same kind of authority that that elected member can claim.

It was interesting when the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford tried to make the point that these boards didn't raise taxes and therefore they didn't deserve to be fully elected. If I were a school board member in this province, I would start to shake, because that's exactly the position school boards are now in. They don't raise money by taxes, so is the logical next step that some of their members should be appointed by this government? If that's where we're going, then we're in double jeopardy this evening. But the member there is as inconsistent with his arguments, I would submit, as this legislation is in terms of the treatment of boards.

I guess the final point I'd like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that I would predict that we're going to be back here before our term is out making amendments to this bill should this amendment not pass this evening – and I can't believe that it wouldn't – making a similar motion, only this time it'll be proposed by the government benches.

With those comments, I urge members to support the amendment. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am very anxious to participate in the debate on the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and am delighted to see that hon. members from the government caucus are engaging in debate.

DR. MASSEY: One.

MR. MacDONALD: It's a start. It's a real start, and I would encourage more of that debate, because I think eventually, Mr. Chairman, it will lead to better legislation.

Specific to the amendment I have to congratulate the member. We're going to have only two-thirds of the board elected. Now, the Alberta Liberals have been calling for regional health authority elections ever since the creation of the regional health authorities going back to 1994, but equally we have been consistent in our call for full board elections in an open and accountable election process.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the first arguments that the government made was: oh, the elections are going to lead to political instability. I've never heard such an argument made before. Now if we have two-thirds elected, just precisely what is that going to mean with regards to political instability?

This is the same government that for its own political purposes talks about having an elected Senate. We on this side of the House have no problem with that, but can you imagine a Senate that is comprised of two-thirds elected members? Now, where are they going to come from? Are they going to come from western Canada, or are they going to come from Quebec or Ontario? The notion of only two-thirds of a body being elected and one-third being appointed is quite frankly ridiculous, and again I have to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this amendment.

Now, this is a democratic country and a democratic province, and if we can elect all members of school boards, if we can elect all members of municipal councils, why does not the same reasoning apply to regional health authorities? Regional health authorities don't have the power to tax, but they certainly have the power to spend, and that has been noted in the previous remarks of another hon. member.

This whole idea of financial accountability, as I understand from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford's remarks, is that the idea of financial accountability in the Legislative Assembly is paramount, which is true. But, at the same time, particularly during the Bill 11 debate, when this whole issue of regional health authorities and the direction in which they were going to take our public health care system was raging, the government conveniently said that they had no control over the regional health authorities, none, that they were at arm's length, that they were separate entities, so how could they dictate what was going to happen? The regional health authorities were removed from the government.

Now, when you look at the recent budget that we debated and you look at the regional and the provincial health authorities, you start with the Chinook regional health authority, Palliser, Headwaters, Calgary – the list goes on – and the total spending comes to $3.6 billion. Then in the next reference line, provincewide spending – that is spending for the Calgary regional health authority and the Capital health authority – there's another $350 million, and there's a bit more unallocated, $1.5 million, Mr. Chairman. That is a significant sum of money. That is in excess of $3.9 billion alone.

MR. MASON: How much?

MR. MacDONALD: It's $3.9 billion. That is a considerable sum of money. In fact, the health care budget in this province is close to one-third of total government spending, and we have in my view not enough control, and the taxpayers of this province have no control. Certainly it will improve with two-thirds elected, but why not go all the way and elect all regional health authority members? That would include, as my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about earlier, the chairperson also being elected. That's a very important duty. Again, accountability and accountability to the taxpayers is the first priority. There's money – and what do the government public relations people call it? – new spending on pressure points in the health care system.

2:00

Now, there has been a worry expressed to me, and I can't understand it. Apparently there was a task force struck by the government to visit many places, but one place in particular was the province of Saskatchewan, to see how the province of Saskatchewan was dealing with elected health authorities officials. As the tour was described to me, one health authority had only physicians elected to the board. This was a problem because apparently the physicians were deemed a special-interest group, and only they had influence on this health authority in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Chairman, this notion: if you allow full elections, what happens if all the people that are elected, whether it's nine or 12 or 15, are from one special-interest group? I tried to assure the hon. member that I didn't believe that was possible. You look at boards of education, the backgrounds of the citizens who win their respective elections. They're from all walks of life. I don't think it would be possible for one specific special-interest group, regardless of who it would be, to be successful and, let's say, win all available positions in the Capital health authority elections. I don't think that's possible.

You just look at the makeup of the membership of the Assembly here. Earlier in the session the Speaker – and I was very grateful to receive this information – gave a list of the occupations and professions of all the members that were elected, and it was diverse. It was incredible. I think it's a good thing. I think the same would apply if we voted for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's amendment, and I would urge all members to strongly consider and please support this amendment, because we will certainly have a better province as a result of this.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to calm the fears of any member of this Assembly who was part of that committee that went to Saskatchewan and is concerned: "Oh, if we elect everyone in the regional health authorities, it's going to be taken over by special-interest groups." I just cannot see it happening. It hasn't happened, as I said earlier, with the school trustees, it hasn't happened with city councillors, and it won't happen with the health authorities.

Now, I can't finish my remarks without discussing that we need to ensure that if the health authorities are elected and directly accountable to the people every three years, each and every member, and meetings continue to happen in public, as they do, no one can then argue that the regional health authorities were established to serve as an administrative buffer between unpopular government health policies and frustrated Albertans, because Albertans would have the ultimate control, and that is at the ballot box. If they don't like the direction of all the health authorities, because of the hon. member's amendment they can simply replace them at the next election with others.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was present. It was after the Bill 11 debate and in fact was on the south lawn. There was a reception held, and in the reception area there was quite a broad discussion that occurred, Mr. Chairman. After Bill 11 was passed by this Assembly, there was encouragement given to all the people who were at that reception to actively seek a seat on the regional health authorities. The reason for them to actively seek election – and I certainly hope many of them do because I think they would be outstanding board members of the regional health authorities – is that they themselves can be the watchdogs to protect the public health care system.

That is one more reason why we need to ensure that every member, including the chairperson, is elected. They can be whistle-blowers, so to speak, and alert the public, the rest of the province, all the citizens. We can pick one. We can pick the Calgary regional health authority with almost a billion dollars in funds right here, $957 million, one of the biggest budgets, and I'm sure the Capital health authority is about the same. Mr. Chairman, they can serve as whistle-blowers, watchdogs of the public health care system and talk about the contracting out if there is any going on. They can talk about the conflicts of interest. I'm not convinced that there is no conflict of interest. I'm not convinced of this. But those are the roles, those are almost the duties of a fully elected regional health authority.

AN HON. MEMBER: Couldn't they appoint whistle-blowers?

MR. MacDONALD: Well, I would like to see whistle-blower legislation established in this province.

On this amendment specifically, the fully elected regional health authorities can act in that capacity not only in regards to contracting out but if there are other inefficiencies. I don't think there would be a FOIP application by any party if all the regional health authorities were elected, each and every member. I would be curious to know how that would work, but certainly I believe there would be a lot more consultation with the citizens.

Now, there is a perception certainly – and we were talking about that earlier – that exists between the regional health authorities and the CEOs and other high-ranking administrators. The perception is that they're friends and that their positions are about politics, not about sound fiscal policy or quality health care. Mr. Chairman, that perception would be eliminated if all health authority members were elected as well. There are so many good things about this amendment that I'm surprised it's not incorporated in the original bill.

Two-thirds elected, 66 percent: I don't know where the 66 percent comes from. I don't know how much of a percentage of the vote the Hon. Joe Clark had at the Winnipeg convention. It was 66 percent, I think. [interjection] It was a little bit less than that.

Now, if we don't pass this amendment – and I urge all members to vote for this amendment – the minister will appoint the chair. That would be reason itself to support this amendment. The school board, where everyone is elected, after an election selects the chair. When we are elected to this Assembly, one of the first things we do is elect a Speaker. There's no notion that only two-thirds of us can vote in the election of the Speaker. I don't understand the rationale of just having two-thirds elected.

In closing, I would like to say to all members of this Assembly that in your decision to vote for this amendment – and I certainly hope you do – you consider the arguments I made, because I think the regional health authorities as they exist need to have a direct relationship with the voters. There are enormous sums of money being spent.

After the Bill 11 debate – and that will unfold. During the discussion on this amendment I don't believe is the appropriate time to discuss a billboard that I saw, and I certainly will be discussing this at another time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the amendment.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to speak again to this excellent amendment. I wanted to talk a little bit about the election of all members of the health authority and specifically with respect to electing people who would serve in the capacity of the chair or vice-chair of the committee.

You know, the chairs of committees have very, very important responsibilities. You know yourself, Mr. Chairman, that as a chairman you have a very heavy burden of responsibility to the group as a whole. The chairman needs to maintain order, and that is of course one of the first and foremost of his responsibilities. It's not always easy to keep order among members, all of whom are strong-willed individuals, people who have strong opinions, generally quite intelligent, and sometimes just a little rambunctious. So as things progress, the chairman's duties can sometimes become quite burdensome.

A chairman also has the responsibility to make sure that the order of the agenda of the meeting is adhered to and that the group transacts the business it needs to do. A chairman has many other responsibilities: generally overseeing and ensuring that the minutes are prepared and taken and so on, that there's a secretary. All those things are important.

Often in the case of a health authority or a body like it the chairman becomes the interface between the body, that is the health authority, and the administration of the health authority. So they play quite an important role in making sure there is good communication between the policy that's set by the health authority or whatever the body happens to be – I keep wanting to say the elected group, but that's not entirely true in this case – and the administration. So they're the liaison, and that's a very important role.

Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, if you were to attempt to provide these functions for a body in which the majority was elected but you yourself were not elected? That would put the chairman in a very, very difficult position altogether. It would mean that the chairman didn't have the same moral authority and stature as some of the members over which he or she was supposed to maintain order, preserve decorum, and generally co-ordinate the activities so that the business was transacted in a smooth and systematic fashion. So I think we need to take this into account when we consider the motion of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

The same thing would apply, of course, to the vice-chairman of the committee, who also has to fill in for the chairman when the chairman isn't present. Again, you have a situation where they don't have the authority they need in order to maintain the high office with the dignity that it requires for the effective transaction of their responsibilities.

You can take it also from the other side, Mr. Chairman, take it from the side of the elected people who are members of this body. Suppose we had a Speaker in the Assembly who was appointed from outside. In the cut and thrust of the debate, in the tangles that sometimes occur, would they feel that the Speaker had the necessary moral authority to rule on their actions, to say, "You're out of order and here's why," or to move on a question of privilege and rule on that, whether or not it creates a prima facie case of privilege, which is the Speaker's responsibility here?

Similarly, you might find in the regional health authorities that the elected people did not have sufficient respect for a nonelected chair. I think that would put the chair at a very, very serious disadvantage. I really do. A chairman is very important to the functioning of one of these committees. So I think that's another reason, a very strong reason in my view, for members to support the amendment that is before us.

The question I really want to ask and have been hesitating to ask but I will ask because it doesn't seem that the government members are participating as fully in this debate as the opposition members, the question I have for the government is: why do you want to appoint one-third of the members? What is the reason? Have we heard from the other side a reason for one-third of these members to be appointed? I don't recollect it. I may have been briefly distracted or otherwise occupied, but I don't recall the government putting forward a coherent series of arguments in a carefully structured way that explains why they want to appoint one-third of the members to these regional health authorities.

Now, we on our side have put forward lots of arguments for electing them, and the government seemingly believes that we're two-thirds right, but we don't know why we're one-third wrong, Mr. Chairman. I think that before we close debate on this particular amendment, it would be very useful for the House to hear from the minister or some other responsible member of the government why they have chosen to limit the number of elected members at regional health authorities to two-thirds. I think that's really a fundamental precondition for persuading those of us on this side of the House that we might in fact be wrong. I'm willing to accept that the opposition can theoretically be wrong and can actually be wrong in practice. [interjection] I appreciate that; that's true.

But we haven't heard from the government why we're wrong in this case. I wonder why. I wonder if some of our speculation as to the impact of not electing the entire body might just be off base, and if the government is prepared to share that information with us, I think we could seriously consider whether or not we're in error with respect to this particular amendment. I would again encourage the government to enlighten us on this point.

I just wanted to say that I saw an analogy with something I referred to earlier, which was the situation in Canada in the early 1800s where we talked a little bit about the struggle for responsible government in the years before Confederation. I guess I would go back to the comments about the chairman and the vice-chairman. In a sense they're almost an Executive Council and have some of the functions of an Executive Council. I mean, it's just broadly analogous, I realize. It's not a direct relationship, but I think it's fair to say there is a relationship there between the chairman of a regional health authority and the vice-chairman and the Executive Council in the Legislative Assemblies of Upper and Lower Canada. So I see a similar struggle to have a fully elected and accountable and responsible chair and vice-chair of these authorities.

I think that again history is serving us well, the historical precedent that the member for Edmonton-Riverview raised going back to the early days of the Magna Carta, going back 800 years, talking about the barons and the struggle of the barons for baronial democracy. Certainly it wasn't a struggle for the serf to have democracy.

Well, it used to be that we had similar restrictions on voting rights in the past. Even within my own memory, in terms of municipal government there was a case where unless you owned property, you couldn't vote or participate in municipal politics.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

MR. MASON: I apologize, Mr. Chair – Mr. Chairman. I guess Mr. Chair is not the correct form, and I apologize for that.

So I think the fight for the gradual extension of the franchise, the gradual extension of responsible government, as outlined very ably by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, is important and can be quite pertinent to this entire matter.

I know that there's another important element. When serving as a city councillor in the city of Edmonton in the early to middle '90s, I dealt with a number of constituents who called me. At that stage the city of Edmonton still had a role in appointing hospital boards, but the government reorganization of health care had already begun. They were clearly moving towards the development of these regional authorities, but it hadn't yet been consummated. The reform, so called, of health care had already begun, so we of course had lots and lots of people that were stuck in the halls, that couldn't get admitted to the hospital. It was a very dreadful situation. So people would sometimes phone me because the city of Edmonton at that point owned the Royal Alexandra hospital and appointed its board.

One person I know, a friend of mine who was also a bus driver – I knew him from work because that's where I used to work before I got elected for the first time to city council – had been left in the hallway outside the emergency room of the Royal Alexandra hospital for over 24 hours. Who did he want to talk to? He wanted to talk to his elected representative, and I was the closest thing to that. He felt that he should phone me because I was his elected person. I did intervene. I did phone the chief executive officer of the hospital and personally raised a question. I got a response immediately, and it was because I was an elected person with some responsibility for that hospital or at least for appointing some members of the board of that hospital that I was able to get a response.

So the question of accountability arises, Mr. Chairman. Accountability is an important factor. People want to be able to phone someone who they have some control over or with or some relationship to as a result of an elector/elected type of relationship. They want to phone somebody they voted for and get some response from the administration when they don't feel they've been getting the kind of service they deserve.

I hesitate to say it, but I doubt that that kind of relationship can exist in the case of an appointed member of a health authority board. You just don't phone and demand action from somebody that you don't elect. So it makes a lot of sense from the point of view of the citizen, the citizen who's also a consumer of health services, to call the person they have an electoral relationship with, if I can use that phrase.

Why would they feel that they would have responsiveness from somebody whose job or whose position on that health board does not stem from their action as a citizen, as a voter? There's no accountability whatsoever, which is really what I'm concerned about, Mr. Chairman. There is no accountability when people aren't elected. So anybody that's not satisfied with the performance of any health authority or any of its contracted agencies will not get the type of responsiveness that they might otherwise expect from somebody who's appointed by Executive Council or by the minister. You just don't see the same kind of situation at all.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

You know, I am pleased with what I've been able to accomplish as an elected person, and I've always prided myself on being responsive to my electors. I try to help everybody. I'm not like the Member of Parliament who insists that you have to vote for him before you're going to get any service. I think that's just plain wrong. I've always believed that as an elected person you have a duty to everyone.

Also, it's only natural, it's only human nature that you have your primary responsibility to the people who put you there. I certainly, Mr. Chairman, have always given priority to assisting my own constituents. We do try to help other people who call, and sometimes people do call, if they can't get the assistance they need from their own elected person. We do try to help, but we always keep in mind the people that we represent. They are our primary responsibility, and I think that that's an important and fundamental feature of the elected system.

What the government is doing is saying that that's good enough for two-thirds of these boards, but it's not good enough for the other third. I don't understand it, Mr. Chairman. I think that you're really shortchanging the citizens who use those health services. You're completely shortchanging them and making sure that by omission you're creating a situation where they don't get the complete responsiveness of the board that I believe they are entitled to.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I urge the government and all members to support this fine amendment of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Thank you.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Chairman, I don't sense that other members want to speak at length on this particular amendment. We'll move on to others in this series, but I will just close by saying how much I appreciate the animated debate here. I appreciated the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and all my colleagues in the Official Opposition and my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands. I'm sure this is an amendment that would meet with widespread support across the province, and I would encourage all members to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to present the next in our series of amendments. I guess we need to distribute these. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

2:50

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 7 be amended by adding the following after section 3. Section 3.1, section 21 is amended by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) For the purposes of subsection (1)(e), a person is not eligible to be nominated as a candidate in an election for membership on a regional health authority board if on nomination day the person

- (a) is a director, officer or employee of a corporation, partnership or other association that receives income from the Department of Health and Wellness or a regional health authority
- (b) receives income from a contract with a regional health authority, or
- (c) owns voting shares in a corporation or holds an interest in a partnership or other association that receives income from the Department of Health and Wellness or a regional health authority.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to strengthen the provisions under Bill 7 to control conflicts of interest. I think we need a bit of background on this particular issue. I'll read briefly from a book that I seriously recommend for everybody here. It's called Honest Politics – and it's not by me – and it's worth knowing what a conflict of interest is.

A conflict of interest between public and private interests occurs when a public official is in a position to use his or her public office to gain personal benefits or benefits for his or her family or party that are not available to the general public. Conflicts of interest are unacceptable in a society that values the rule of law: the law is to be applied equally to everyone except in the case of justifiable exceptions written into the law. Moreover, public officials who use their positions to provide special benefits to themselves, their families, or their political friends undermine the principle of social equality. We expect public officials – whether they are permanent or contracted public servants, elected representatives or senators – to serve the public interest. Where there is a conflict between the public interest and private, family, or party interests, the public interest should always prevail.

Now, we could go into details on different levels of conflict of interest – potential, real, and perceived – but I won't go there right now for the Assembly. There will be time later.

I am very concerned about the possibility of potential, perceived, or real conflicts of interest in any aspect of public life and in particular in aspects relating to regional health authorities. The way the bill is currently drafted and the regulations are proposed by the minister, there is an area of very great concern. Essentially the concern has to do with the allowance in the bill and in the regulations that people can run for regional health authorities as long as they do not own more than 50 percent of a business that is directly contracting with the regional health authority.

For example, in the background to Bill 7 put out by Alberta Health and Wellness on April 11, 2001, they talk about eligibility for elections, and the following are not eligible:

- Directors, officers or employees of health service organizations receiving 50 per cent or more of their funding from Alberta Health and Wellness, an RHA, or both.

- Directors, officers or employees of corporations, partnerships or other associations receiving 50 per cent or more of their gross income from Alberta Health and Wellness, an RHA, or both.

What that means, Mr. Chairman, and what is of such great concern to us all is that individuals who get 49 percent or less of their income or whose businesses receive 49 percent or less of their income from an RHA can sit on that RHA board or can seek election to the RHA board. Indeed, it allows possibilities.

There is a situation that is coming close to this in Calgary where several members of one family, each of whom may own 10 or 15 percent of a company, together might own a majority of that company. One of them is allowed or potentially, I suppose, all of them are allowed to run and hold office as a member of the RHA. Clearly – clearly – that raises perceived potential and even in some cases real conflicts of interest. It's a situation we wouldn't tolerate in other aspects of our public life.

If the Minister of Health and Wellness were here, I would like to ask him to explain his repeated comments that the same regulations and rules that apply to us as MLAs apply to members of RHAs. To the best of my knowledge we are governed here under the Conflicts of Interest Act, and that act – and I stand to be corrected here; the Minister of Justice perhaps can help me – does not apply to the regional health authorities. So although the Minister of Health and Wellness has repeatedly indicated that MLAs and RHA members are subject to the same regulations, that's not my reading. I stand to be corrected, and I hope I'm wrong, but that's certainly not my reading. The amendment as I am proposing it closes this gaping hole in Bill 7, and I'm sure that everybody here will agree that this is a real concern.

As the health care system in Alberta is developing, we are seeing the once clear line that was drawn between for-profit businesses and the public sector get blurred further and further. We are seeing that under developments under the Health Care Protection Act in which more and more services are contracted out yet on which questions persist on the legitimacy and the fairness and openness of the bidding process for contracts.

We're also seeing these problems arise in the growing number of public/private partnerships. We had, for example, just announced this week or perhaps over the weekend in Edmonton a public/private partnership in extended care in which we have I believe it's tens of millions of dollars of public money being channeled through the Capital health authority into an extended care facility and a so-called aging-in-place facility that will be run and I think ultimately owned by the private sector.

Now, the line between public and private there is very seriously blurred. It's also seriously blurred in Calgary where, for example, the Calgary regional health authority is in a large, joint venture corporation with a big multinational named MDS to run Calgary Laboratory Services, a company that I've tried to probe through the public accounts and other matters, but it's eluding that and it's eluding my questioning. It's a big company and handles, as far as I know, virtually all medical lab services in Calgary, and it's a public/private partnership. As we see those partnerships develop and expand, I think in fact we need to have stronger and stronger safeguards on conflicts of interest. Now, why do I say that?

MS BLAKEMAN: Why? Why do you say that?

DR. TAFT: Thank you. Thank you.

One of the things that public officials have and all of us here have is a fiduciary responsibility. We are under a fiduciary trust. Again quoting from this very fine book, I'd just like to briefly indicate what a fiduciary trust is.

Because public officials always act on behalf of the public, they are trustees of the public interest. A fiduciary relationship with the public is not a form of paternalism - we know what's best for you and it's too bad if you don't understand our superior wisdom - but rather a responsibility to protect and promote the public's best interests in ways the public is fully informed of and approves.

So all the members of regional health authorities and their senior executives, indeed all the employees and contracted officials with the regional health authorities are in positions of fiduciary trust and are under serious obligations as fiduciaries. This amendment is meant to reinforce that, to clarify the rules for them, to help those people stay out of legal problems they might end up in without these rules, because frankly there's a large body of law on fiduciary trusts.

What I hope to achieve through this amendment is a clear line demarking public interest and private interest and reinforcing the fiduciary trust that we place on public officials and precluding conflicts of interest.

Now, I think it's worth going into a few specifics on this just to reinforce for the members that this is a real and serious concern. I have mentioned to you already the case in which the Calgary regional health authority is in a joint venture numbered company with a large multinational named MDS to run all Calgary lab services. That private/public partnership raises any number of questions. Who's profiting? What are the benefits? What are the efficiencies? Frankly, it's made much more worrisome because it has created a monopoly, so there is no functioning market in the Calgary region for medical lab services. As far as I understand, all medical lab services in Calgary are handled by one corporation, and that opens up all kinds of opportunities for real, potential, and perceived conflicts of interest.

Of course, it doesn't stop there. The other day I mentioned a case in which a member of the board of the CRHA is closely tied through his family with a company called Extendicare. Extendicare has three for-profit nursing homes on contract to the CRHA. Again, this raises concerns over conflict of interest. The way Bill 7 stands at the moment, there's nothing preventing any number of shareholders and corporate directors from Extendicare running to sit on the board of their RHA, so they would be there as officials with multimillion dollar contracts to their own corporation.

There are a number of other well-documented cases here. I've mentioned a number of times the case of the chief medical officer and vice-president of the Calgary regional health authority, who is paid over a quarter of a million dollars a year to look after the public interest, who has a crucial role in determining the direction of health care delivery in Calgary, who has access to all kinds of detailed information on costs, on staffing, on waiting lists, on procedures, and at the same time he's a director or at least has been a director and a number of his immediate family members including his wife are significant shareholders in a company that has two or three contracts with the CRHA worth about $1.8 million over two years.

This raises very serious questions of conflict of interest. While there are policies in place at the Calgary regional health authority on this, they do not require that the conflict be terminated, and there is no question that there is a perceived conflict of interest there. It's not simply perceived by people on the outside. It's also perceived by fellow members of the medical staff in the Calgary region, who in some cases actually are trying to compete with their own for-profit clinics against the business that is owned by immediate family members of the chief medical officer, and they frankly at times are not at all happy with that arrangement. They feel that there is no possible way that they can compete effectively. So that's one case.

A second case involves the chief of orthopedics at the Foothills hospital, which is the main orthopedic centre in Calgary, a well-known physician who appears from time to time in the media and is at the same time a director and shareholder in a company that's known for its for-profit health care activities in Calgary, a company called HRG. HRG is already providing some surgical services to the CRHA and has been lobbying actively at times to expand that role in the CRHA. So there you have a chief of orthopedics in the public system who is paid, if public accounts are any indication, in the range of $100,000 a year or more to look after the public interest, at the same time in a position in which he can determine preferred procedures, preferred equipment, scheduling, the allocation of resources, the length of waiting lists, and so on, for orthopedic surgery. Again, there is no question that there is a perceived, potential, and even possibly a real conflict of interest in that situation.

The longer it prevails the more serious the implications are for Alberta's public health care system, for taxpayers' dollars, and indeed for the whole Canadian health care system. For once these services become privatized, there is something of a risk that free trade agreements will come into play and open the Canadian health care system to an increasingly American-like form of health care delivery.

It's worth commenting briefly here that major corporations have much clearer regulations or policies on conflict of interest in many cases than do the CRHA or the other RHAs and are frequently much less tolerant of conflicts of interest than we're seeing in the RHAs. The other day I tabled the conflict of interest policy for TransAlta Corporation. I don't have a copy of it with me here. I might go and get it, and we could talk to it later on. It was clear that real, potential, and perceived conflicts of interest were to be avoided. Period. There was no question that they could be managed over the long term or that they could be tolerated or that people could simply step out of meeting rooms. These conflicts were to be avoided.

I know from inquiries I've made that similar policies exist in other major Alberta corporations including, for example, ATCO. In fact, there was a well-known case last summer of a flight by city councillors in Edmonton to Calgary on the ATCO jet. As a result, the ATCO executive had to resign.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased, delighted to stand . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: To try and convince somebody here.

MS BLAKEMAN: No, I don't have to convince you. I just have to know it myself.

. . . to speak in favour of this amendment A2, which is essentially trying to establish conflict of interest regulations inside this Bill 7, elections of regional health authorities. I think the key to this is that where there is big money, there is potential for big trouble, and there's certainly big money in health care. I mean, let's face it; large American firms don't become interested in the provincial running of our health care unless there's big money involved. They're not doing it to amuse themselves. Those guys are pretty canny. They don't get involved in this stuff unless they think there's an opportunity to make a lot of money. So there's big money here and the potential for big trouble.

On the other side of this equation is an issue that we all deal with every day, which is a perception by the public that politicians are not there to serve the people. Unfortunately, Bill 7 as it stands does nothing to dissuade people of that point of view, because it is allowing people to get involved in a situation that I think anyone would judge as conflict of interest. I mean, in the legislation they're allowing people to own up to 50 percent of a private health care organization or a company and run for a seat in the regional health authority.

When I started to look around for, you know, what was the history of our developing conflict of interest legislation, probably the first and the most thorough is the federal Conflict of Interest Code. That code starts out by saying that "the object of this Code is to enhance public confidence in the integrity of public office holders and the decision-making process in government." So right there that tells you that they were trying to address something that was perceived as being a problem, that the public was experiencing eroded confidence in the integrity of public office holders and an erosion in the belief of the decision-making process in government.

Now, I had spoken previously about the erosion that this government has encouraged and put in place around decision-making and accountability in government with the establishment of the regional health authorities and now the children's health authorities. This long-awaited promise was supposed to address some of that by having members sitting on the regional health authorities elected. In fact, the government was only able to come through with two-thirds of that promise with two-thirds elections. So I think for all of our sakes it's important that we understand how much public confidence in our integrity is eroding.

When we have a government that is refusing to acknowledge this either through naivete, which is a bad enough accusation, or through arrogance, which I think is a worse accusation, I think we're in trouble here in Alberta. For some time the public has been willing to accept what the government has put forward, but I think that as we have more people having access to the Internet, more people having access to uncensored, unfiltered information about what's going on – for example, they have access through the Internet to Hansard, and they can see what transpired tonight: who debated, what members of the government participated in the debate and who didn't. I think that's important, and it will also I think lead to more scrutiny of decision-making of government . . .

MR. DUNFORD: You said that two years ago in a speech.

MS BLAKEMAN: And I'm going to keep saying it, because it's true. [interjection] Well, we certainly have members opposite looking to participate in the debate, and I look forward to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment joining in rather than merely heckling me from across the way. I'm sure that when it comes time to vote on this one, he'll be on his feet speaking to the motion.

So there are two parts to what's happening in the public that I think are important. One is that perception of big money, big trouble and a reassurance on a very transparent process with the public that they can see who's making the decisions about their money and how it's being expended, particularly when that money is being expended on health care, which is an area that the public is adamant about leaving in the hands of government for administration. They want a public health care system, but they want to hold the government accountable for delivery of those services. They want to know who's making the decisions and who's influencing the decision-makers, and very strong conflict of interest guidelines help us see that. It puts in place a process for the public to be able to scrutinize that, to see who is, in this case, running for public office to be in charge of almost one-third of Alberta's budget and also to hold them accountable if they're an elected person, to be able to contact them and scrutinize their decisions and call them to account for it.

I think that's equally important when we have long waiting lists in certain areas, where we have yet to see truly a reorganization and a new way of delivering health care. We're still waiting for that, and I think people will be holding RHA members accountable for the decisions that they make. As I said before, even being in charge of administering this large amount of money, they still do not at all times have both the responsibility and the authority to implement what people are looking for.

Now, let me back up a bit. When you're serving on a body of a not-for-profit agency – and in this case the hospitals fit that definition. My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview had talked about fiduciary interest. There's also a duty of care, which is the other side of that coin, in that those people that accept the public office, that seek it out, have to understand that they are obliged to have a duty of care toward their work. They're expected to do a good job. They're expected to be responsible about it, and they're expected to approach the job in a way that is going to serve the public and serve the organization the best.

That's interesting, because again when I look back to the federal code, when it talks about decision-making, it says:

Public office holders, in fulfilling their official duties and responsibilities, shall make decisions in the public interest and with regard to the merits of each case.

In other words, decisions are not to be made with anything in advance of or taking higher precedence of than the public interests and the merit of each case.

When I look farther down, it's talking about public interest:

On appointment to office, and thereafter, public office holders shall arrange their private affairs in a manner that will prevent real, potential or apparent conflicts of interest from arising but if such a conflict does arise between the private interests of a public office holder and the official duties and responsibilities of that public office holder, the conflict shall be resolved in favour of the public interest.

Again, all of this is about making sure that as we administer public money, the public gets the best deal out of this. I think of some of the examples that have already been raised by Edmonton-Riverview, and it can be argued that those are examples where we don't have resolution in favour of the public interest.

One other part that I found of interest in this is insider information. It goes on to say:

Public office holders shall not knowingly take advantage of, or benefit from, information that is obtained in the course of their official duties and responsibilities and that is not generally available to the public.

Now, that reflects back to the definition that was used by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview when they moved this motion, that is a definition of conflict of interest that states that the use of a public office to gain benefit for themselves or their family, a benefit that is not available to the public. This insider information is echoing that.

Those are the points that I had wanted to bring forward in support of this motion. I don't have a lot of faith that a 74-member government is going to pass this. Nonetheless, it's our duty as opposition to certainly be bringing these points forward. I'm happy to do that at 20 after 3 in the morning because I think it's important that we do continue to bring this information forward and put it out there for the people to understand the choices that the government is making and the issues that the members of the Official Opposition and the third party have made to bring the government decisions to account.

One more reminder as I close. I think that we have to be particularly careful as we end up with more and more money in the public health care system. Where there's big money, there's big potential for trouble, and we really need to be ensuring that those that are in the position of making decisions are making those decisions with a duty of care and always in the best interests of the public.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in support of this motion.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to speak for the first time to this very good amendment by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that there are issues related to conflicts of interest or at least potential conflicts of interest that have been enumerated by other members. Particularly, I think that if someone who has a serious conflict of interest or potential serious conflict of interest sits on a health board, there is a situation that's created that is most serious even if that member absents himself or herself from the decisions which specifically affect their own financial interests. They are a colleague of the rest of the board, and everyone else on the board knows exactly what the interests are, and if they are in any way favourably disposed towards that person, they cannot help but be influenced themselves by that member's interests.

You know, I've served on a number of boards myself, Mr. Chairman, and certainly am aware of the normal procedures for dealing with conflict of interest. In fact, we put together on city council conflict of interest regulations that I think are substantially more strict for boards such as the EPCOR board than this government is prepared to do for its regional health authority boards. I don't know why that is. I think that the government would want to ensure that no one receives financial benefit by virtue of their service on one of these health care boards. I don't know why that wouldn't be a policy objective of the government, and maybe it is a policy objective of the government, but the government is pursuing it in a very weak and irresolute fashion. They are absolutely and without a doubt irresolute on the question of pursuing conflict of interest, particularly as it relates to these health boards.

Now, I've also not only been in a position of having some responsibility for establishing codes of conduct for boards which report to a city council; I have also served on a number of boards, and I know that they have very stringent requirements. For example, the board of Edmonton Northlands, which I served on for six years, requires everybody to disclose at the beginning of the year any potential conflicts that they have, and they must disclose in writing any conflict that they might have at each meeting.

You will find, I think, as other members have intimated, that other jurisdictions, particularly in the private sector, are much more rigorous about preventing conflict of interest situations than this government. Yet the government prides itself on modeling itself after the private sector. Of any government in the country this is a government that admires, supports, and uses as an instrument of its policy the private sector. So why, then, don't they adopt the norms that the private sector has adopted to prevent conflict of interest? Why not is the question, and silence on the relevant question is all that we hear. We hear lots of white noise, Mr. Chairman, but we don't hear any pithy, to the point comments that are germane to the issues that are being raised by this amendment, and again you have to ask yourself why that might be.

Now, let's look at the specifics of the amendment before us, Mr. Chairman. It says that a person is not eligible to be nominated as a candidate in an election for membership on a regional health authority board if on nomination day the person

(a) is a director, officer or employee of a corporation, partnership or other association that receives income from the Department of Health and Wellness or a regional health authority.

So why would the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview propose this, I wonder.

Well, suppose there was a person who was, say, a director or officer of a corporation or other association that got income from Health and Wellness or a regional health authority. It would seem to me that that person would be partially dependent for their income on the same bodies with whom they wanted to do business. Could they be influenced? Well, I think we'd all like to believe people are above that, but we know that personal interests can sometimes cloud our judgment and influence our behaviour. Sometimes we might act in our own financial interests as opposed to the interests of the people we're supposed to be serving, in this case the people who are served by the particular regional health authority.

3:30

Clause (b): the person "receives income from a contract with a regional health authority." Now, if you have a contract with a regional health authority and you're on the board, almost everywhere I know of that would be perceived as a very, very fundamental conflict of interest. It just simply wouldn't be tolerated. I don't know any private corporations that would tolerate that kind of situation. I know that at the municipal level, in my experience, that wouldn't be tolerated. I don't think it's tolerated in the co-op sector. I don't think it's tolerated even in the nonprofit sector. Even when there are nonprofits, they have a stronger commitment to avoiding conflict of interest than this government apparently does. Why is that, Mr. Chairman? That's a question I keep coming back to on every point. Why doesn't the government act with the same rigour that other organizations, profit and nonprofit, do? It's the question of the moment.

Mr. Chairman, clause (c) says that the person owns voting shares in a corporation or holds an interest in a partnership or other association that receives income from the Department of Health and Wellness or a regional health authority.

So here we have someone who has shares in a corporation. Obviously they stand to benefit, then, if the health authority gives their company a contract, particularly if it's a lucrative contract; for example, to operate a private hospital where you might have once had a public hospital.

AN HON. MEMBER: Or a private MRI.

MR. MASON: Indeed, hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, say, for example, the government did a lot of renovations to an older hospital worth millions and millions of dollars and then sold it to their friends for substantially less than it was actually worth. Then suppose they were sitting on this fine renovated hospital, and they were just itching to be able to deliver services for the local health authority. Suppose further that there was a relationship, that some people who sat on the board – and this is all hypothetical – actually were shareholders in that corporation. How could that person serve as a director of the health authority under those types of circumstances? It's hard to believe that such a situation would not be provided for by the government if it should perchance arise.

Now, suppose that the person who had the shares was willing to walk out of the meeting or leave the meeting, declare the conflict. Is that sufficient? Is that sufficient in order to protect the public from undue influence by people who stand to benefit directly and personally? I would submit that it's not, Mr. Chairman. I certainly wouldn't think it would be sufficient, because that person then sits on the board for all the rest of the decisions. That person has a personal relationship with all the other members and would conceivably be favoured by his or her friends on the board as opposed to somebody who didn't have that sort of personal relationship. That's why this particular amendment is very important and, I think, essential.

You know, I think it's a significant omission, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment wasn't contained in the bill in the first instance, because they all seem to make such great sense to me.

I know lots of people who join boards in the public sector for the very best of reasons. I have met people on a wide range of boards – whether they come from the public sector, whether they come from the private sector, whether they come from unions or have been involved in nonprofits – who are sincerely committed to the public good. They are there not to enrich themselves but quite simply to do the best they can for their community. Most of the people, Mr. Chairman, that I have worked with on boards have fallen into that type of category.

So it's naturally hard for me to imagine people who would get involved on a significant public board in order to gain an advantage for themselves. Unfortunately, in our society today it's the case that sometimes that happens, and it's very regrettable. The network of contacts that some people have with movers and shakers in our various communities sometimes lends itself to a little bit of mutual back-scratching, we could call it, and I think the government should not be unaware of those possibilities. It surprises me that they are, but I can tell them that there are situations like that that arise, and there are people who are prepared to arrange so that they benefit from their public service in a way that's not appropriate. It's not common, but it can happen. It does happen occasionally.

Given the government's connections with private business and with the many boards and their great and grave responsibility for ensuring that the administration of public business is carried out above reproach, it disturbs me a little bit, Mr. Chairman, that the government continues to play the game of see no evil. We heard it today. Just a little bit earlier one of the members said: well, you know, if you're suspicious of people, then obviously you're not the kind of person that should be trusted. Well, you know, you can rationalize these things any way you want, but the fact remains that we have health authorities that are responsible for multimillion dollar budgets, virtually a billion dollars – I think that's correct – and they stand to make a lot of money for the people to whom they give contracts to provide services, particularly if we get into the situation where entire hospitals are approved for the provision of overnight care, overnight stays, as was set out in the previous Bill 11, which was simply a bill to legalize private hospitals.

Why would the government pass a bill legalizing overnight hospitals if they didn't in fact intend for private hospitals to exist in this province? I know they call them something else. I think they call them private overnight nonhospital, near-hospital, pseudo kind of close to hospitals but we wouldn't call them one. I forget the term. Clearly, if one were to contract with a health authority for a private hospital which used to be a public hospital, one would stand to make millions and millions and millions of dollars, and that's what's at stake. Members opposite will try to laugh it off and pretend it's not really an issue. They try to pretend there's nothing at stake, but I can tell the hon. members opposite, Mr. Chairman, that there are millions and tens of millions of dollars, perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars at stake, and this government is remiss in not attending to the potential for conflict of interest and for people to inappropriately enrich themselves at public expense through inattention to the critical issue of conflict of interest.

I'd ask this question through you, through the chair, to members opposite. As great supporters and disciples of the creed of free enterprise, why wouldn't they model themselves according to the norms of these institutions for whom they have the greatest reverence? There seems to be something missing. I don't know what that missing link is, Mr. Chairman, but I think if we look through the tea leaves of this government, we might eventually find what it is that's missing. I hope that when all is said and done, what's not missing is some money. [interjection]

MS BLAKEMAN: He woke up.

MR. MASON: Yes. Well, I'm glad the hon. member has rejoined the conscious, or rejoined the semiconscious at least, because, you know, there are very weighty matters that need to be considered by this Assembly.

Mr. Chairman, I would again commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Although I was hoping we were going to get another trip back to the early days of democracy in the British Empire, nevertheless I think he has put forward some excellent suggestions, and I look forward to reading the book he referred to, which he did not write but I'm sure is nonetheless an excellent book.

With that I will take my seat, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to amendment A2, the second in a series of amendments. It certainly provides to me a clear answer from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the whole issue of conflict of interest, that unfortunately has appeared whenever there is discussion on health care and regional health authorities in this province.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has obviously worked very, very hard to try to improve this bill. If at first you do not succeed, try again. When you think of the erosion – it was touched on by my colleague for Edmonton-Centre earlier – of public confidence in our health care system, leading up even to the Bill 11 debate which many of us are familiar with, but before that with the regionalization that occurred, there is this skepticism, this nonconfidence in the current government to provide public health care. This suspicion, this lingering suspicion – and I for one hold it as true that the long-term goal is to turn over to various enterprises, whether they be entrepreneurial doctors, whether they be the HMOs, the hand money over outfits, and the outfits that are . . . [interjections] They're going to be eliminated from election, and that is specific in the first part of this amendment.

We think that idea of private health care is far removed from Alberta, but it is not. Within five blocks of this Assembly there was a billboard – I haven't driven by to see if it's there lately – and ironically enough it was on a Tory blue background, and it had an advertisement for an American for-profit health care provider. Now, what happens if an employee of that company, a citizen of Canada, a resident of Alberta, is to run for the regional health authority? Whose interests would be served here? The taxpayers of this province? The people who have faith in and want to see continue a public health care system? Would their interests be served, or would the interests of the corporation be served?

Mr. Chairman, when you think of that, it's perfectly legitimate because of all the interest that has been expressed in the relationship that is currently occurring between regional health authorities and selected interest groups. I believe these are the special interest groups. These are the groups who benefit from the privatization of our health care system.

When you think that two years ago one of the motions that was being circulated at the AUMA convention, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association – and I listened with keen interest to delegates in the hall discuss this motion. It was a motion to prevent health care workers who were members of unions from participating in the regional health authority elections. Now, I listened to that debate with a great deal of interest, and I'm listening to this debate this morning with a great deal of interest, because it is very necessary that we have conflict of interest legislation in regards to the election of regional health authority board members.

I would like at this time to commend the member for Edmonton-Riverview, again, for putting forward this amendment. The lack of conflict of interest legislation or rules or regulation – it's been mentioned before. It does not correspond with accepted practices in the private sector or even parts of the public sector. The city of Edmonton was mentioned; TransAlta was mentioned. Since health care is the most important service government provides, Mr. Chairman, there is no better place to start.

3:50

Again, in the aftermath of Bill 11 and the fallout – some hon. members of this Assembly may not realize it, but there will be a fallout from the government's use of closure and this insistence to continue against the wishes of the citizens and increase private health care. You have to go no further than a hockey telecast on television from America to look at what the future is going to hold for Albertans. You see board advertising in every major U.S. rink for some sort of private hospital, some sort of private health care insurance plan. It's private health care, and it's on the boards for everyone to see. Will this come to the Skyreach Centre or the Saddledome in Calgary? It's coming to an arena near you, Mr. Chairman. That is the future.

The lack of uniform conflict of interest legislation applies to all regional health authorities. When you don't have any sort of conflict of interest legislation, how do you monitor and deal with conflicts, potential or otherwise? How is this going to work without amendment A2 here? It can't. It won't.

It's the whole idea that currently the 17 regional health authorities write and implement their own conflict of interest bylaws applicable to all staff of the regional health authority. I don't know how many hon. members of this Assembly have been privy to any of these conflict of interest bylaw meetings. [interjection] Someone has spoken up, but I don't believe it's in regards to conflict of interest at the regional health authorities, specifically in Calgary. No. That's what people need, Mr. Chairman, to stand up and speak out.

I see that there's a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar up and about at this hour of the morning and attending to affairs in the Legislature. [interjection] Definitely. Definitely. Yes.

DR. MASSEY: But not yours.

MR. MacDONALD: But not mine, no. The individual is a distinguished resident of the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I'm pleased to see that he is visiting his local Assembly.

AN HON. MEMBER: Vocal Assembly.

MR. MacDONALD: You bet. Just down the road.

Conflict of interest rules for the regional health authorities are always problematic. The lack of a coherent strong set of conflict of interest rules for all regional health authorities is increasingly affecting the quality of public health care delivery and, again, as it was mentioned before, the level of public confidence in regional health authorities' ability to deal with these conflicts.

Now, there have been many attempts and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's is just the latest attempt at trying to settle this issue. I believe this amendment will apply comprehensive and uniform conflict of interest rules to all regional health authorities, prospective nominees, successful board members, and in a certain way also to employees, contractors, and independent health service providers that have a contractual relationship with any one of the 17 regional health authorities.

If any individuals are contemplating seeking a nomination as a candidate, then they should have a good look at this after it is successfully passed in the Assembly. This will address current and future conflicts of interest. It will provide a conflict of interest definition and a mechanism by which it prevents any future conflicts of interest. It will not exactly apply a uniform standard of rules regarding conflict of interest, but it certainly is a start since in my view there is currently none, absolutely none.

When you see something that can restore public confidence, I think you should grab it. That's why I encourage all government members to support this amendment.

There are always going to be competing interests between private and public health care. There are always situations where private health care is going to be the provider. But what was clearly demonstrated last spring was that Albertans want a public health care system. They want it administered and they want it provided by the provincial government. They don't want this notion that there is the private, the for-profit, the not-for-profit, all this mixture. The citizens know exactly what they want, and I have not been convinced that the government is sincere in its efforts to provide this. This is why, when we saw Bill 11, as it was forced through the Assembly, become law – the whole debate was coalesced around Bill 11 and the public health care debate. The whole issue was crystal clear. It was crystal clear.

Now, after those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would have to say that it will be full speed ahead with privatization. Maybe the cat is finally out of the bag, and Albertans will see firsthand, up close that if we do not pass this amendment, we will have increased privatization of our health care delivery system. When we have that increased privatization without this amendment, again it will be a blank cheque. In recent months serious concerns have arisen of potential, apparent, or real conflicts of interest between the private interests of personnel, individuals, entrepreneurs engaged in health authority business and the public interest, which health authorities are created to serve. That's the public interest which I noted before.

Now, these concerns are especially apparent with respect to the Calgary regional health authority. The Calgary regional health authority I think is in a world of its own, and it's very ably outlined in this book, that I've had the pleasure of owning. This one is even signed by the author. It's "all the best," but certainly that was not all the best for our public health care system after the debate and the direction that that bill took us last year. The Entrepreneurial Doctors is the title of this chapter, and it goes on and mentions Dr. Gimbel. Now, under this amendment, Mr. Chairman, Dr. Gimbel would be eligible to be nominated as a candidate in an election for membership on a regional health authority board if on nomination day the person . . . I'm not going to go any further. This amendment would apply to Dr. Gimbel. It would also apply to – let me see; I'm going on here – Dr. Peter Huang, Dr. Ian Huang. Now, there are more individuals here, lots more, and they're all part of this . . .

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Give us their names. Read them into the record.

MR. MacDONALD: Read them into the record. That was one of the arguments that used to be used. There was this taunt, this tease: name names. Well, we did name names, and it's on the public record.

The debate on Bill 11 on public health care versus private health care: this is not over. This is certainly not over.

AN HON. MEMBER: Over for the next four years, Hughie.

MR. MacDONALD: No.

In regards to public health care, I would urge particularly the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to support this amendment.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to stand in support of this amendment to the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001. I think that when we look at the amendment, there are a number of questions that we should ask ourselves, some questions that I guess underline any public policy debate.

The first that comes to mind, of course, is: what is the evidence that there is a problem? I think that the evidence is very, very clear. The Calgary health authority has raised serious questions in terms of where the line between self-interest and public interest should be drawn. I think that in the case of that authority there's fairly good evidence that it's being blurred if not downright ignored. I think that the mere fact that the authorities will be responsible for spending huge amounts of public dollars through contracts that are let and salaries that are being paid, that those huge amounts in themselves will be too much of a lure for some individuals to resist.

I think the other evidence that there is a problem is the fact that a number of public bodies, including this one, and certainly a number of private corporations like TransAlta and many other larger corporations that operate in this province and in the country have strong and very clearly worded conflict of interest laws that lay out very carefully the behaviour of individuals that are working on behalf of those corporations. So there is some considerable evidence that this is a problem.

What this amendment attempts to do is prevent people being involved in any kind of a conflict and thus prevent the problem from occurring in the first place. I originally had some questions about the amendment. I supported people who were working for a particular authority, not running for that authority, but initially I wondered if it wouldn't be appropriate for them to run for another authority, one in which they didn't have a direct interest. Yet if you look at the geography of the province, the possibilities that it could still exist I think preclude that happening.

So I looked at the evidence that there is a problem, and I looked at the assumptions on which this amendment sits. There are some fairly obvious assumptions. One is that public institutions must be protected from those who might possibly be in a position to use that position for personal gain to the detriment of the public body that they are supposedly serving.

I think another assumption is that we shouldn't put individuals in a position where they would make judgments that were not in the public interest and were in their own self-interest. The best way to avoid that is to have the kind of legislation that's embodied in the amendment we have before us.

A third assumption is that we can't afford to have the public interest forfeited at the expense of an individual's self-interest being promoted. So three assumptions that are valid assumptions to make undergird this particular amendment.

If you look at the values that underline this amendment, I think there's a concern for fairness on a number of fronts, a concern for fairness for taxpayers, that the money they pay into this system will be appropriately used and not be open for abuse by any individuals. I think there's a concern for fairness in terms of patients and fairness in terms of the hospital staff, that the staff will not be placed in a position where they have divided loyalties. I think another value is loyalty itself, that board members should have only one loyalty and that loyalty is to the regional health authority that they're serving, that they should not be faced with divided loyalties in terms of either serving or being loyal to the authority or being loyal to their own self-interest. I think there's a huge concern in this amendment for integrity, that we must do everything we possibly can as legislators to protect the integrity of public institutions and public bodies. The regional health authorities will be one of the pre-eminent ones in the province, one that to this date will be at least partly elected.

In looking again at critical questions for public policy, one of the questions we have to ask is: whose interests are going to be served? With this particular amendment I think it's rather clear that the interests of individual citizens, the interests of taxpayers, and the interests of a public institution are being well served by the amendment. I think that the interests in terms of our system of governance and the health care system are also well served by the amendment. I think we'd do well to try to protect that system. There's ample evidence from elsewhere of what happens when a system becomes tainted. We only need to look to the provinces both east and west and the political systems there that have become tainted when self-interest overcame the public interest. We look at the resulting fallout and the lack of confidence that people in those provinces have in a political system that has somehow or other let them down.

One of the things that we can be proud of in Canada is the confidence that the citizens have in various institutions. I'm not sure about health wards, but I know, for instance, that in terms of trust, school boards are high on that list. Unfortunately or maybe fortunately, it may be much higher than members of Legislatures or the federal government, people who are elected to those positions. There is a high degree of trust in local authorities like school boards and city councils, and I think we would do well through this amendment to make sure that that trust is protected and maintained.

I think with those comments I would like to conclude. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll just make a few brief comments to wrap up. I appreciate everybody's participation. I feel this is a fundamentally important bill, not for just the specifics of this case but for setting precedents throughout the public service of Alberta and also for protecting the integrity of not only Alberta's health care system but Canada's health care system. So I do hope that those of you who are still awake and listening will seriously consider supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Do we have the question? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's with great pleasure that I present another amendment to Bill 7, please.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A3.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 7 be amended in section 4 by striking out subsection (4). This is a briefer amendment and probably would have been unnecessary if the previous one had passed. However, given that the previous one wasn't upheld, then this one is an attempt to provide some of the same precautions that were in the previous one.

Basically, what this amendment proposes to Bill 7 – well, the way Bill 7 is currently presented, it strikes a section of the Regional Health Authorities Act, section 22. The relevant portion of section 22 reads:

- (1) A person is not eligible to be nominated as a candidate in any election under this Act . . .

this Act being the Regional Health Authorities Act of some years ago,

. . . if on nomination day

- (j) in the case of a district board election, he or his spouse
  - (i) is a physician and a member of the medical staff,
  - (ii) is a dentist and a member of the medical staff or dental staff, or
  - (iii) is an employee of a hospital or nursing home in respect of which the election is being held.

4:30

Now, Bill 7 repeals that particular subsection, and my amendment would keep that subsection in. The reasoning behind that is simply that again we are very concerned about conflicts of interest. We are concerned, for example, about situations in which a member of the medical staff might also want to run for the board of the regional health authority. If that medical staff, say, were a chief of a medical department, then they would end up in a real conflict of interest being both on the board of the organization and a chief of a medical department. The same applies, of course, to employees. So we would prefer that Bill 7 be amended so that those limitations are kept in place rather than eliminated.

I thought it might be helpful to just elaborate a little bit more on conflict of interest, Mr. Chairman, to drive home the case. We use the term very generally, and sometimes we use terms such as real or potential or apparent, but it's worth becoming more clear on those. I am again referring to a book, Honest Politics.

Public officials may find themselves in a conflict of interest, according to the conflict-of-interest code they are subject to, without actually benefitting from it. If someone could benefit unfairly from their public office (for example, by being in a position to influence the awarding of a contract to a company they have an interest in or to a family member . . .), then that person has a duty to remove himself or herself from that situation. This official could sell certain assets, for example, or delegate decision making to someone who would not have a conflict of interest. If public officials fail to remove themselves from a potential conflict of interest, then they are guilty of what is known as a real conflict of interest, even if they do not receive any benefits.

That's an important point. So you don't need to receive any benefits to be in a real conflict of interest.

There's also the question of the appearance of conflicts of interest. That's the kind of thing that this amendment tries to get straight at and that, in fact, the previous amendment did as well. It says here:

Even if all the rules are complied with, most conflict-of-interest codes state that public officials have a responsibility to show publicly that they are attempting to act impartially, in addition to actually acting as impartially as possible.

In other words, of course, justice must not just be done; it must be seen to be done.

Finally, there's a little more elaboration here on a potential conflict of interest.

A potential conflict of interest exists when a minister "finds himself or herself in a situation in which the existence of some private economic interest could influence the exercise of his or her public duties or responsibilities . . . provided that he or she has not yet exercised such duty or responsibilities."

Again, it says here:

A potential conflict becomes a real conflict unless a minister takes action to avoid the situation by disposing of relevant assets or withdrawing from certain public duties or decisions.

Now, both this amendment and the preceding one take a firm stand precluding conflict of interest from being allowed to persist. There are certainly situations in which we can all understand that in the normal course of events a onetime conflict of interest might arise coincidental to some other activity, and in those kinds of circumstances it is normally acceptable for the person in the conflict to remove themselves from the decision temporarily. However, in situations where conflicts are ongoing, such as being an employee, which is what we're dealing with here in this amendment, or being a chief of a medical department, then stronger steps need to be taken, and that in this particular case means that the person needs to resign their position, in effect, or in fact not run for office in the first place or else they would have to sell their assets.

I'll read one last passage from this book. It talks about the difference between simply creating a blind trust and actually being forced to divest themselves of assets.

Because blind trusts frequently fail and because forcing members to sell non-personal assets is often unfair and might discourage people from running for elected office, the emphasis should shift to broad public disclosure as the cornerstone of modern conflict-of-interest rules.

Well, so far it sounds okay.

The premise is that a "healthy measure of public vigilance," made possible through public disclosure, will eventually result in greater confidence in the integrity of elected officials, as long as they stay away from conflicts of interest.

Now we get to the really crucial part here.

From this perspective, ministers should be required . . .

Here they're talking about ministers, but it would apply to all public officials.

. . . to sell assets only when these assets would be likely to result in a potential conflict of interest so frequently as to seriously interfere with a [person's] ability to perform public duties (for example, a minister of transportation with a heavy investment in a bus company).

Well, a minister of transportation with a heavy investment in a bus company is, I think, a parallel example to a chief medical officer having a heavy investment in a medical service delivery company.

That I hope continues to drive home the notion here that we're up against a fundamentally important principle in Canadian public life and that we are going to take every step, including carrying debate through until 5 in the morning, to drive this message home.

An example that hasn't been discussed in the House concerns yet again the Calgary regional health authority and the chief of ophthalmology in the Calgary regional health authority, the person who's occupied that position now for several years, I believe unofficially since the authority was created and certainly officially for the last four or five years. He and two of his brothers and other family members are owners of a company that bought the Holy Cross hospital in Calgary and then converted it to a private, for-profit clinic especially providing ophthalmology surgery at the same time this person was and remains the chief of ophthalmology for the Calgary regional health authority.

He is responsible for setting all the standards for the delivery of eye surgery, for determining who gets how many eye surgery procedures, how many go to his company, how many go to his competitors. Curiously enough the decision was made in his early days as chief of ophthalmology that all public-sector cataract surgery in Calgary would be shut down permanently so that in Calgary, unlike in Edmonton, there is no public facility for undertaking cataract surgery.

There's internal correspondence at some length back and forth within the CRHA, and there's been extensive public debate on this. Clearly, there is an ongoing conflict of interest here. Under Bill 7 this person could now run to sit on the regional health authority board, as I understand the legislation and the regulations, further intensifying the conflict of interest. So there is no question that we need stronger legislation and stronger regulations here. Again, I repeat for the record – and if the Minister of Health and Wellness should ever read this, I would welcome him to respond and correct me if I'm wrong – that the rules on conflict of interest that govern us as MLAs do not apply to regional health authorities. I think that's a matter of legislation despite the fact that the minister has said otherwise, and I stand to be corrected.

So, Mr. Chairman, I commend this amendment, amendment A3, to the Assembly. I think all of us would agree that we need to control and preclude people such as doctors, chiefs of medical departments, nurses, and other employees of RHAs from standing on RHA boards.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm rising to speak in favour of amendment A3 to Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act.

I think that this amendment was necessary if the previous amendment didn't pass in that part of what we've tried to do here tonight is to show the flaws and the setup around Bill 7 in that we're supposed to be now electing regional health authorities. The first amendment was to elect all, not just two-thirds of them; secondly, to set up strong conflict of interest regulations so that not only was it done but seen to be done and clearly transparent to any member of the public that wished to scrutinize that.

This government is very reluctant to put conflict of interest or any kind of restrictions in place that would narrow someone's ability to take advantage of public office for private gain. I've never heard an adequate explanation from the government as to why they're so reluctant to be putting that in place. I think that doesn't speak well for them, but that's their choice obviously. Therefore, we've come to this amendment in which essentially . . .

MR. HANCOCK: We just don't think that everybody is dishonest.

MS BLAKEMAN: No. I don't think everybody is dishonest, but it's important that as legislators and as carriers of the public trust, we ensure that we do everything we can to make sure that that system is in fact transparent. My version of transparency and the government's version of transparency are worlds apart obviously. So no. I'm in fact one of the people that's up here saying: why is such intrusive legislation being put in place in this government and in a number of other instances, not trusting Albertans to make the right decision on their own? I do trust them to make that, but the process has to be in place for them to be able to do that investigation. It's why I repeatedly speak against shell legislation in which everything will be decided behind closed doors by the government through regulations, which is every difficult for people to get access to and find and make up their own mind about it.

We've come to a point, I think, in certainly the western sector where the potential to cross over between those positions of trust and abuse of power and money has become more possible to us. That didn't used to be so much of an issue, for a number of reasons that I'm sure some academic could chase down. That is a factor for us nowadays. So in not passing an amendment to put in strong conflict of interest regulations, the government has set us on a course where we feel the need to inoculate against those potential and real conflict of interest situations by bringing forward an amendment that essentially removes that sector of people, in other words health workers, who would be most likely to find themselves in a position of conflict of interest regarding the awarding of contracts and provision of services in regional health authorities.

It's certainly not my preferred method of approaching this problem. I in fact would have preferred that there be involvement from health workers in the governance. I think in fact that's important, but I'll give that up because I think conflict of interest is more important and more of an overriding principle.

I remember when the government did the health roundtables, which were the first of the so-called public consultations. In fact, the health roundtables very much invited people handpicked by the government to participate in these discussions. Interestingly enough, there were no health workers that were involved in this. I think, in fact, health workers, doctors, nurses, and other health care professionals were specifically excluded from serving on the health roundtables. [interjection] Well, the minister is welcome to get up and debate back to me, given the hour, rather than just heckling me.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Under I believe it's Beauchesne 482, would the hon. member permit a question?

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, but I would look forward to the member's participation in the debate. No, I will not permit a question. Get up and debate. There's lots of opportunity. We're in Committee of the Whole. I urge the Minister of Justice to participate. I welcome your debate, and I'm sure your colleagues would be ecstatic at the thought of you contributing.

Debate Continued

MS BLAKEMAN: Now, the health roundtables. We have to put forward a proposal here to limit the number of people that would find themselves in a conflict of interest. So this is an inoculation amendment to try and address the fact that there is no clear and strong conflict of interest legislation in place around this.

I know that the minister has spoken and said that the 17 different conflict of interest regulations that are in place checkerboarding across the province are based on the conflict of interest regulations that apply to MLAs. There's a long way between based on and the same as, and certainly what the Official Opposition has been trying to do is to encourage the government to put that same expectation upon other elected representatives and that same high standard of behaviour and stewardship and trusteeship in place for other elected officials.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

We have conflict of interest that's in place for school boards and certainly for elected officials in the provincial government. We know there's very strong legislation for the federal government and beyond that to their deputy ministers and senior workers. I think it's important that that be extended to all levels where we're dealing with someone who is in a position to use their insider knowledge or their position to gain access to a benefit that's not available to everybody else. I mean, it's the underlying concept of equity and access to equity that is not being served here, which is what is so troublesome to me.

No doubt that being 74 members strong, the government is certainly in a position to defeat this amendment, but I sure wish they wouldn't. I think it's important that we pay attention to what processes are being put in place here and to set the bar high, to show leadership and high expectation of ourselves and of others that are to be serving the public and to be serving the public good.

With those brief comments, I will once again state my support. I wish I didn't have to be speaking to this amendment. I wish we could have passed the previous amendment on conflict of interest, but the government doesn't choose to do that, so I will support this one.

Thank you.

4:50

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to again get to try to convince members of this Assembly to support conflict of interest legislation, again as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The member came prepared this evening for debate with a backup plan in case the first was unsuccessful on the conflict of interest legislation, which is certainly needed. This amendment, I believe, was labeled A3 on Bill 7, the Regional Authorities Amendment Act, 2001.

Now, we need to look at – and the hon. member touched on it – what the Alberta government and its agencies, including all hon. members of this Assembly, have regarding conflict of interest laws and regulations. Across Canada governments at all levels have conflict of interest rules intended to promote impartial decision-making by public officials and to ensure that public officials do not receive any special favours because of their public office. These rules are based on legal principles, and they were discussed earlier: the rule of law and fairness, et cetera. The rule of law argues that a democratic society needs unbiased judges and administrators who provide impartial decisions. Last week I talked about that, and I was quite concerned about certain members of the House of Commons and their view on the independence of the judiciary.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that public officials try to exercise their authority evenhandedly to everyone and that the law is applied equally to everyone, unless exceptions are reasonable and justifiable and clearly spelled out in the law. Fairness is a legal concept that has been developed by the Supreme Court of Canada based on an older common-law practice. We had, I thought, an excellent walk, a brief walk, perhaps too brief a walk through history earlier this evening. According to the Supreme Court, under the doctrine of fairness all public officials who make decisions about the application of law must be impartial. They should not be in a position to gain financially from one of their decisions and should not be in a position to favour close associates.

Now, when you look at Canada and you look at the conflict of interest laws and regulations that we have in Alberta, the Alberta government and its agencies have a range of laws, codes, and guidelines addressing conflicts of interest including the following. We're all familiar with those, so I won't go into them in detail, but there's influence, insider information, decisions furthering private interests, use or communication of information not available to the general public. We all know those, and I'm quite sure that all members of this Assembly understand them and, I'm confident, abide by them.

Regional health authorities as agents of the provincial government and servants of the public interest: now, there's no doubt in my mind that the regional health authorities are agents of the provincial government. Others may deny it, but it is clear to me. It is clear from a review of the legislation and regulations that regional health authorities, again, are servants of the public interest, and the public interest in this case is the provision of health care through public hospitals.

The regional health authorities must act within the terms of the regional health authorities legislation, regulations, and the directives of the Minister of Health and Wellness. They also have a limited scope for independent decision-making. The act and the regulations provide a solid foundation for concluding that members of the regional health authority have a duty to act in the best interests of the public, are required to conduct the business of the authority with impartiality and integrity, and should ensure that there is no conflict between the private interest of any personnel involved in conducting the business of the authority and the public interest. This is why it is vital that section 22, as is proposed in this amendment, be there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the members of the authority are persons who manage public money and public property, in this case hospitals. Therefore, they exercise a high standard of care in regard to public money and property, no doubt. But it is also well established in law that employees or agents have a duty to their employer or principal and should not improperly use or allow others to use confidential information to further private interests.

If we are to understand this fully, we should have a very good understanding of the creation of the regional health authorities. This goes back several years. The minister of health at the time, in late 1993, designed and implemented a regional health authority system across Alberta, and this is where we're going to have the 17 different elections. The hearing committee of the project, whose members were appointed by the minister, released a report at the end of January 1994. The health plan co-ordination project action plan called for the establishment of the health boards to govern all aspects of provincially funded health care services in Alberta within those geographical regions, which are outlined and we're all familiar with. The health plan co-ordination project recommended the geographic boundaries of the health care regions to the minister.

Now, later on, in March of '94 into this Assembly was introduced the Regional Health Authorities Act. This bill, of course, was the legislative vehicle, Mr. Chairman, and each regional health authority was to be administered by a board consisting of persons either appointed by the government or elected. Well, the elections are a long time coming, are slow in coming, but they're going to be here. I'm disappointed that we're not going to have the full boards elected. We had a chance this evening to act on that decisively. I thought that was a superlative amendment, but unfortunately others did not. In June of 1994, of course, the Regional Health Authorities Act was assented to.

Section 22, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is so keen to preserve – it's almost like the hon. member is a custodian. If you look at section 22, it empowers the minister to make regulations, and this is why it's very important that amendment A3 be accepted by members of this Assembly. Section 22 empowers the minister to make regulations governing the regional health authorities including regulations to establish standards and guidelines in regard to the provision of health services, the undertaking of capital construction – that would be contracts of many descriptions – the operation of facilities, the selection of auditors, and the amount regional health authorities may charge as fees for goods and services that they may provide.

5:00

AN HON. MEMBER: Oh, that sounds like taxation.

MR. MacDONALD: Sounds like taxation of a sort.

However, Mr. Chairman, both the provincial cabinet and the minister have exercised their powers in the legislation to make regulations. Of note, for example, are some of those regulations. One regulation provides that the regional health authority bylaws are not affected until approved by the minister, if necessary, after the minister directs the amendments to be made and that regional health authority bylaws may not conflict with the act or regulations. Now, if this is not true and an hon. member in this Assembly knows better than I, I would appreciate hearing from him.

There's also a regulation that will prescribe the regional health authority fiscal year – and this would require regional health authorities to apply generally accepted accounting principles – empower the minister to prescribe policies or rules with respect to keeping and preparing financial records, and concern the eligibility of auditors and the compensation packages of members of the regional health authorities. I can see why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, when the staff and the member researched this, decided on section 22.

There's also a regulation concerning the use of requisitions and donated funds by regional health authorities, concerns regarding the availability of minutes for inspection by the public. That regulation certainly would lift the veil of secrecy from the proceedings that occur at the regional health authorities. Now, I have had the opportunity of attending regional health authority meetings in the Capital region but unfortunately not outside the region. After the elections in the fall perhaps the Official Opposition health critic will allow myself to accompany him on a visit to some, because there are going to be very interesting aspects as the chair is selected. [interjection] The chair of the regional health authority is not going to be selected. Excuse me; it's late. I'd forgotten; it's going to be appointed now, because amendment A1, a superlative amendment, was defeated unfortunately.

However, Mr. Chairman, there are also regulations that concern the contents of annual reports to the minister. Now, the regulation is going to determine the annual report and the contents. Am I just of a suspicious nature, that there's going to be information that's not going to be in the annual report that perhaps should be in there? How much contracting out has been going on? I don't know, and if any hon. member of this Assembly has that information, I would appreciate if they would enter in debate on this amendment A3 and provide that information not only to this member but to all members of the Assembly.

Again on this list is a regulation that the provincial cabinet can, will, and probably did make concerning the disclosure of remuneration and benefits payable to management personnel of regional health authorities. Now, I find that also very interesting in section 22, because when you think of the regional health authority in Edmonton and the one in Calgary and the compensation packages, there's a significant difference between Edmonton and Calgary. Edmonton's regional health authority CEO makes significantly less. Now, it's early in the morning, but I think it's $70,000, Mr. Chairman. I don't know why that is. The budgets are about the same for both health authorities. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is not here, but I hope it's not based on . . . [interjection] I apologize, Mr. Chairman; I certainly do.

I hope that decision is not gender based.

Now, there's also the possibility of regulations to require a regional health authority to adhere to prudent investment standards in making investment decisions. There's also a potential regulation under section 22 to require ministerial approval for purchasing, leasing, or disposing of land for demolishing facilities above a specific value and for entering into capital development projects above a specific value – demolishing facilities such as . . . I cannot remember the name of that hospital.

MR. MASON: Which hospital? Where?

MR. MacDONALD: The one in Calgary in Bridgeland that just collapsed in a cloud of fine cement dust.

MR. MASON: The General.

MR. MacDONALD: The General hospital. That's the name of it. How could I have forgotten that?

There are regulations – I didn't know this – for demolishing facilities above a specific value, and the value of that hospital to the citizens of Calgary, I think, was enormous. Certainly to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands it had emotional value. There are also regulations here that could be used to establish that no regional health authority may confer a benefit on or transfer of property, including money, to any person unless the regional health authority receives fair value in exchange for the benefit or transfer.

There's also a regulation here under section 22 to establish that regional health authorities are required to comply with ministerial directives. Well, I hope they do but at the same time if they get directives after the municipal elections to contract out to the HMO, or the hand money over organizations, that they say, "No; this is not in the interests of public health care." Perhaps some of these individuals who are going to be successful in the election will be the same people who were on the steps of the Assembly last spring and expressed their democratic rights by opposing the health care privatization act, or the old Bill 11.

There's also a regulation here, in the time that I have left, Mr. Chairman – as I understand it, the Capital health authority and the Calgary regional health authority bylaws indicate that the minister controls the compensation levels of the board members of those two respective regional health authorities.

Now, in summary, Mr. Chairman, members of regional health authorities must exercise a high standard of care and must act always in the best interests of the public. The Regional Health Authorities Act and related regulations and directives provide a firm basis for concluding that members of a regional health authority have a duty to act in the best interests of the public and are required to conduct the businesses of the authority, as I said before, with integrity. They also, at the same time, must be impartial. That's why we must accept this amendment again as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview specifically dealing with section 22. It is interesting that we can have . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A3.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to this amendment. I referred to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's first amendment as a most excellent amendment, and I referred to his second amendment as a very good amendment, and I'm going to refer to this amendment as an adequate amendment. I'd be pleased to explain to all members present why I am less enthusiastic about this amendment than I was about the other amendments proposed by the hon. member.

It has to do with my history of getting involved in politics for the first time. Some hon. members may know that I was at one time making my living as a bus driver for the city of Edmonton. At that time there were provisions – I believe it was the Municipal Government Act rather than the local authorities act – that said that city employees along with bankrupts, mentally deficient persons, and judges, I believe, were ineligible to seek a nomination for municipal council. That caused me quite some pain and discouragement, Mr. Chairman, because I wanted to be a politician, not in the worst way as some other hon. members opposite want to be a politician, but I did want to be a politician. So I sought redress through the courts and argued that it was very unfair that I shouldn't be permitted to be nominated while I was an employee of the municipality. Now, we weren't successful in that application, and the nomination day intervened before the appeal could be heard.

Mr. Ray Speaker was the Minister of Municipal Affairs at that time, and when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands at the time, who was Pam Barrett, stood up and asked that minister questions about it, he readily agreed that there was an injustice and agreed to bring forward amendments to the Municipal Government Act. So after I had resigned my position with the city in order to run and been elected, the wheels of government ground on, and changes were brought through the Legislature amending the Municipal Government Act so that city employees could run without resigning their positions. Some have subsequently done so and been elected to councils in Edmonton, Calgary, and I believe some other municipalities. So the government can at times be responsive and sensitive and actually, although not quickly, with minimal delay at least bring about the changes that are sometimes desirable.

Now, the point of all of that, Mr. Chairman, is that I do not believe that in every case an employee of an organization should be completely prohibited from seeking to have a position on the board or council which has the responsibility for operating that entity. So it brings us to the question here, and the section that would be repealed by Bill 7 – and that section would be deleted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview – says that

- a person is not eligible to be nominated as a candidate in any election under this Act if on nomination day
  - (j) in the case of a district board election, he or his spouse
    - (i) is a physician and a member of the medical staff,
    - (ii) is a dentist and a member of the medical staff or dental staff, or
    - (iii) is an employee of a hospital or nursing home in respect of which the election is being held.

This causes me some difficulty because I don't believe that someone who works for an organization should necessarily have their democratic right infringed and curtailed in order to seek election as a citizen to a democratically elected body of any kind. Being an employee per se does not in my view represent a conflict of interest except and in particular that the employee, if they are elected, would need to abstain from any matters that might pertain to their employment. That is to say contract negotiations, collective agreements, and so on.

The question of conflict of interest is a little bit different. If someone is doing business with an authority and the decisions being made would mean a financial benefit for them or for the company they work for, that is clearly an example that I think has to be dealt with by the government sooner or later. We only have to wait for an inevitable unfortunate development to become a matter of public knowledge. Some sort of scandal or another will eventually emerge if the government fails to take proper steps to deal with conflict of interest for health authorities.

The government is the one that is going to be embarrassed. It won't be the opposition. The opposition will probably jump all over it. I mean, I wouldn't, but I know some members might and make a lot of hay out of it. The government is going to pay a price for neglecting a serious approach to conflict of interest. Sooner or later it's practically inevitable, because the lack of strong conflict of interest guidelines in this legislation is an invitation to trouble. It's an invitation to people feeling that they can push the limits and get away with something that they ought not to get away with, and it's going to come back to haunt this government. Mark my words. This government is going to pay a price for refusing to deal with the amendments that have been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and supported by both the Official Opposition and the New Democrat opposition in this Assembly. I think it's too bad, but it certainly won't be on our head.

Now, if I can return to the amendment before us, Mr. Chairman, it would remove a section. I'm not sure this section ought to be removed. If someone is a physician or a member of the medical staff, does that automatically place them in a conflict of interest? An employee of any kind: does that mean someone who works in the cafeteria or in the laundry or on the ward or just as a secretary or someone in an administrative position?

AN HON. MEMBER: Just a secretary.

MR. MASON: I should correct myself. I should not say "just as a secretary", I should say "as a secretary." What I'm trying to convey is that people work in organizations that are very distant from influencing or making administrative decisions. They're far from being counted as management or having large influence over management types of decisions. I think we ought not to preclude those people from exercising their democratic right to seek nomination and election for those positions that are established for the administration of public affairs.

So as I'm going along, I'm getting a little bit farther from supporting this amendment than when I started out, but I still think it's worth discussing. I'm pleased to discuss it this morning. I think that in general we need to draw a distinction between people who are employed by an organization and people who stand to benefit as a result of business transactions with that organization. That is a traditional definition of conflict of interest which I think ought to apply in this regard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that I've covered most of the points that I want to cover. If I can find the actual amendment, I could sum up. Well, I'll talk a little bit more about it.

On balance and given my experience, I find that this amendment attempts to do in a rather different way what was attempted by the previous amendment, but the previous amendment was much stronger and it was much clearer. It specified what there was by way of positions that would put one directly in a conflict of interest. So it was a more positive, a more direct approach that I think had a lot of merit. I don't mean to debate an amendment that has already been before the House and has been defeated. I just mean to contrast the two approaches.

The approach of the second amendment, which I called the very good amendment, was very direct. It said that someone who is a director, is an officer who receives income, who owns voting shares is ineligible. That is a positive, direct, and very clear statement of policy which makes a lot of sense, very good and practical sense. Not just health authorities but any organization could benefit a great deal by having this kind of system. In fact, there are many organizations that do have that particular approach, and I think it has a great deal of merit.

Now, if we contrast that with this approach, it is just to maintain the wording of the present section 22, which the government proposes to remove from the legislation as part of Bill 7. So, again, the government is weakening the control, but I think they are at the same time taking out language that may deal with people who are not directly in a conflict of interest situation. As a result, I think that we would not weaken the legislation. We would not weaken the existing Regional Health Authorities Act by removing this section, as the government proposes.

So I finally come to a conclusion, Mr. Chairman, as to how I stand with respect to what I called the adequate amendment by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I regret to say that I cannot support this particular amendment and will have to stand with the government when we stand in a few minutes. That will be harder for me than for the other members opposite, I assure you all. Nevertheless, I think one has to do in the House what one's conscience dictates, and based on my experience, I certainly would be loathe to restrict the rights of employees to participate in democratic forums that we have in our society. As a result, I cannot support the amendment, as well intentioned as it is.

I perfectly understand the intentions of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. He is simply attempting to retain even the slightest semblance of protection under conflict of interest that may have existed in the old legislation. I admire him for that. I respect his attempts to do that, because having defeated the other two amendments – by those I mean the excellent one and the very good one. I've come to realize that he has been frustrated in those attempts, and I'm sure he is very frustrated but not perhaps as frustrated as some other hon. members.

Nevertheless, he's grasping at straws in attempting to find some way to do that which ought to be done but which is being frustrated by the government side when they stand up to protect legislation that is clearly inadequate. So I understand where the hon. member is coming from, and I certainly appreciate it, but I regret to say that I cannot support this somewhat less than adequate amendment that he has put forward.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and invite other fresh voices to enter with vigour into this excellent debate.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak in support of the amendment before the House, an amendment that would try to address the conflict of interest concerns that we've raised in the last number of hours. What it does is try to reinstate the current section 22, which outlines a number of individuals who are not eligible at the present time to be candidates for election to the health boards. Specifically, it includes physicians and members of the medical staff, dentists and members of the dental staff, and employees of a hospital or a nursing home who are working for the authority where election is being sought. This, as has already been indicated, is a second best alternative to the previous amendment.

5:30

One of the things it does raise is: why was this section deleted from the act in Bill 7? Obviously, in the previous legislation there was a need seen for addressing conflict of interest, and then suddenly it has been dropped. I know to this point that we haven't heard an explanation for that from the government.

If you look at the need to be very careful in terms of those individuals and their role in a regional authority and if you start and look at the job descriptions of the individuals, for instance, a chief of a department, who is typically under contract to the hospital or directly to the regional health authority and is paid according to that position – in a large organization that pay can range from perhaps $30,000 per year for a smaller and simpler department to over $200,000 for the position of chief medical officer of a regional health authority.

The time commitments of those individuals to the authority can be quite complicated and quite extensive. So they're deeply involved in the operations and are in a position to have great influence on the work of the authority. To put them on the board seems to be, first of all, making life difficult for them in knowing exactly when they are and aren't in conflict, but also for the unscrupulous it puts them in a position where they may take actions that are not in the interest of the authority or in the public interest.

The chief of a medical department has a range of roles and responsibilities. They work on the day-to-day management of the departments. They're scheduling times for operating rooms and diagnostic facilities. They do a lot of the planning and trying to match services to the demand that comes their way. They're closely involved in budget decisions although they may not have direct budget control. For an individual like that to be elected to the authority, again, seems to place them in a very clear conflict of interest.

On the last amendment I looked at some of the questions that are commonly asked when we look at the public policy question or an amendment such as the one before us, and that's looking at the exercise of power. If you look at how power is exercised in terms of this amendment, the whole amendment is designed and aimed at avoiding the abuse of power, trying to make sure that individuals are not placed in a position where they can abuse the power that they have been given by being either appointed or elected to a regional health authority.

I think the amendment recognizes that board members on those regional health authorities are going to be in a unique position of power. I've given some examples of some of the employees and their involvement in the day-to-day operations. They are going to be in a position where they'll have knowledge and they'll have access to decision-making that could be used for personal gain or gain for others and, again, not in the public interest. Those individuals hold power that obviously other members of the public do not and are in a position where they can exercise that power for good or for ill.

I think the Member for Edmonton-Highlands raised a good point in questioning the range of individuals that are included in this particular amendment. You can ask yourself exactly how much power some of these employees exercise, and certainly for a lot of them it would be far less than a physician or a member of the medical staff. Many of them would be very remote from any situation that would possibly put them in a conflict of interest. But I think, as has been indicated, this is a second best amendment in terms of trying to deal with the problem and to highlight the problem of conflict of interest and I think for that reason alone deserves support.

We've been through a lot of amendments, a lot of discussion this evening and this morning, Mr. Chairman, and it seems to me that the point has been made time and time again that conflict of interest is a major concern with Bill 7. Unfortunately, to this point the amendments that have attempted to deal with those conflicts have been rejected.

I can only echo the words of a previous speaker, and that is that we're going to be back here dealing with this legislation again, because what Bill 7 does is open the door to possible abuse. You can only be in the halls of power for so long before someone will try to take advantage of that. I think that that will be unfortunate for the health care system, and it's unfortunate that the opportunity to make, I think, a couple of very good proposals in terms of avoiding conflict of interest was lost so far in the debate on this bill.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 16
School Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate May 8: Dr. Massey]

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to rise this wonderful Tuesday morning and see all these cheerful faces to speak to the School Amendment Act, 2001. I did have some amendments that I would like to hand out to everyone, so if we could get those out, that would be very helpful. I'll wait for a moment till we get those out to everyone.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: We'll refer to this amendment as A1.

MR. HLADY: Okay. Most members have them now. The first section is 5(b) of Bill 16 that we're looking at an amendment for. The Alberta School Boards Association expressed a concern about the proposed amendment, section 24.21, and asked that it be clarified that the applicant for the establishment of a chartered school is limited to relying upon the same request for an alternative program that was made to the school board in making the application to the minister.

The next amendment is for sections 13, 14, 18, 19, 20, 27, 28, and 30 of Bill 16. All of these sections will be amended to indicate that only separate school electors in the newly expanded areas of a separate school board within a separate school region will be able to elect to remain a public school resident and elector or to become a separate school resident and elector.

The next is under section 15 of Bill 16, and that's an amendment to section 90.

A superintendent of a school board or the operator of a private school or charter school shall make a report in writing to the Registrar regarding the suspension, termination, resignation or retirement from employment of a teacher if the . . . [employment action] results from conduct that brings into question the suitability of the teacher to hold a teaching certificate.

The next section, Mr. Chairman, is section 33(a) of Bill 16: "(2)

A Regional authority must be composed of at least 3 members and not more than 7 members," who represent proportionately the number of separate school electors and public school electors in the region but at least one of whom must be a public member and one of whom must be a separate school member.

Under the next section the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association has proposed that the word "composed" be changed to "comprised." So it's housekeeping really, Mr. Chairman. I think that's a big part of it, and that last amendment certainly affects a number of subsections and so forth.

That's pretty much the substance of the amendments, Mr. Chairman. I'll take my seat and let other members speak to the amendments.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to the amendments put forward to Bill 16. There has been a tremendous amount of discussion about Bill 16 and the provisions, the concerns about the naming of charter school programs or the application for charter school programs being first an application to a local board as an alternative program. I've not heard a great deal of discussion. There seems to be, I think, general concurrence that it was a good move to have those seeking an alternative school to first apply to a local board and expect that the local board would take them under, that they would be able to be umbrellaed and looked after, and that the interests of the parents that want a charter established would be looked after by a local board.

One of the questions I did have and that I took the opportunity to ask the minister was on the loss of the ability of a local board to declare a charter. That has been taken away. Local boards will no longer be able to issue charters themselves. If charters are issued, they'll be done by the minister but only following an unsuccessful bid to have the charter recognized by a local board as an alternative school.

In terms of teachers who may be in difficulty with a board and in terms of having those difficulties reported to the registrar, I think that has had wide support. I think the Teachers' Association, trustees that I've spoken to, everyone agrees on the provisions that would have a teacher who for some reason or other had come into difficulty in terms of employment with a board, no matter what that difficulty was, whether they had been suspended for a time from the board, whether there had been a termination, some reason for a teacher being in difficulty with a board – that difficulty would be recorded centrally and available to all boards in the province and throughout the country for future employers so that a teacher who has had some sort of action taken against them in their role as a teacher would not be able to move from jurisdiction to jurisdiction without the knowledge of an employing board. Again, as I said, there has been a great deal of support for that kind of registry.

Mr. Chairman, given the limited time we've had to look at the amendments and have not had an opportunity, unfortunately, to share them with a number of interest groups to see if they go any ways to satisfy the objections of the various groups that we have heard – there have been some very strong and heated objections. Should Bill 16 have been passed in its original form, I think that some of those objections would have resulted in some court action. As I said, I haven't had the opportunity to study at length the kinds of amendments that are before us and the changes that they actually make to Bill 16, but on first glance they don't seem to meet the kinds of objections that we've heard.

The concern as I heard it expressed from the Catholic community was that on regional boards the Catholic members of that board had to have full sway over the Catholic schools. That included having the power to appoint the superintendent. It included the power over programs that were offered in the school. There was a plea from the Catholic communities for complete control over the Catholic schools that were part of a blended authority. Again, as I said, I've read these quickly, but I don't see these amendments in any way answering that concern from the Catholic community. If that's the case, then, I think that we're going to find ourselves in a great deal of difficulty in terms of the provisions of this bill and the wishes of the Catholic school supporters.

One of the concerns from the public boards was that the provisions of the act didn't allow for a Catholic population to say no to the establishment of a division. There was a consultation, to be sure, with the public board, but once the process was under way, there was no point at which the majority of Catholic electors in a region could stop the formation of a division, and that is unlike the legislation that is in place at the current time.

I'm sure that all members of the Assembly have heard the objections from both Catholic and public school supporters, particularly in some rural and smaller centres of the province, in terms of what the provisions of Bill 16 will do to their schools and to their communities. A number of them are concerned that given the few numbers of students they have, if a division is formed, the small population that they have now attending one school will be split into two and result in the school no longer being viable and the youngsters in a community having to be bused off to centres elsewhere. We've heard that most strongly from public boards, who are really concerned and concerned, too, that those decisions will be made when the division is formed by electors that can be very remote from the community in which they live. There's worry about that decision-making.

Now, I think for their part, as I've heard the Catholic supporters answer that, they indicate that it's in their best interest, too, to have viable schools. Certainly they have no interest in taking and splitting apart a student population so that neither the public school nor the separate board can offer programs that are needed by youngsters in a region. They point out that the practicalities involved in establishing a school division would lead them to not establish a division in those areas where there isn't a viable population in terms of the Catholic school. If that was the case, then likely the same would prevail for the public school system.

So there are concerns that I don't see initially addressed in the amendments before us. I think that I'd be interested to know from the government if these amendments were shared with the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, and the Public School Boards' Association, the three groups who have been most involved with this legislation. I think if the amendments weren't passed by them, that would be a tremendous mistake. Their interests in this run deep, and they're quite emotional. Maybe someone on the government side can let us know just the extent to which that consultation has taken place.

A major objection was the understanding by the Catholic School Trustees' Association that the matter of choice in being able to choose either a public or a separate district would apply only to the new divisions that were created, that it wouldn't be a choice for established areas. Again, I don't see that having been changed from the original bill. I haven't had a chance to look at it that closely, but I expect to be able to do that shortly. I would like to know how that could not be in an amendment, because it seems to me that the Schmidt case has established and reconfirmed the notion that Catholics are born into a Catholic school district, where those districts exist, and constitutionally that is the way the Catholic minority is protected. It cannot be a subject of a piece of legislation like this. It can't be changed by legislation.

I would be interested in knowing, Mr. Chairman, the arguments that have been used to not include that as one of the amendments to the act. Again, it's an issue on which I've had a few words with the minister. The position he had at the time was that this was democratic and that the provisions prior to Bill 16 were undemocratic. So concerns about the ability of Catholics to choose and the concern about the provisions that were in Bill 16 and the issues that were raised.

Now, I know that the three associations were providing the government with amendments on Bill 16. Again I would ask the Government House Leader or the presenter of the amendments if those amendments were considered by the government and if in any way the amendments we see before us today are a reflection of the positions that were put forward by those bodies. If they weren't, Mr. Chairman, I would think it very unfortunate if we were to proceed through committee consideration of Bill 16 without having heard from those associations and the positions they put forward.

I think it has to be remembered that those three groups came together to meet with and to offer to the government some solutions, some changes for Bill 16. Unfortunately for some of the amendments, they fell apart at the last moment, but they have been intimately involved in trying to come up with a solution to some of the problems that Bill 16 was to embody, so I think it would be extremely unfortunate if we proceeded through committee stage of this bill without some assurance that those groups have been contacted and have at least been made aware of the provisions that we see before us this morning.

The concerns about regional authorities – and I'm looking for the section on the Francophone authorities, Mr. Chairman, because there were, again, a number of concerns raised about the composition and the jurisdiction of those authorities and the kinds of protection it provided for the Francophone population and how far it went in terms of meeting the amendments that had been agreed to by the members as they took part in the discussions that the government had put together. There's some mention of the separate school members under 223.34, but on first scrutiny that's the only mention I can see, and again there were a good number of issues raised before Bill 16 was introduced.

I think with those preliminary comments, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to conclude and have an opportunity to look a little more closely at the amendments that we have before us and then have an opportunity to speak again.

Thanks very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister for Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to rise today in support of the amendments that have been brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I want to assure the House that the amendments that have been raised and brought forward today are based on discussions with school boards, with trustee associations, members of the community, and of course members of the church.

The recommended amendments include some changes simply to enhance clarity. For example, under the section related to charter schools we are proposing to include the words "the request" to make it clear that the application forwarded to the minister is the same request that was sent to the school board.

We also propose to clarify the section dealing with teacher conduct by designating the school superintendent responsible for reporting as well as clarifying the scope of reporting a job action to a suspension, termination, resignation, or retirement. This change, Mr. Chairman and hon. members, is consistent with the protocol that's been adopted by the Council of Ministers of Education Canada relating to the suspension or cancellation of a teacher's certificate in order to provide further protection for students.

More significant amendments are proposed to the sections of the bill relating to Francophone governance. The amendments being brought forward will make the number of Francophone public members relate to the number of public and separate school electors. It also allows the separate school members to sit as a separate corporation within the regional authority corporation. These changes have the support of the majority of trustee associations and the Francophone and Catholic communities as these changes respect both minority language educational rights and separate school rights as guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada.

These changes will ensure that Bill 16 accomplishes the goal it set out to do, which is to clarify a number of administrative and governance processes for the benefit of Alberta students. I urge all members to support the amendments to this bill.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to get an opportunity – this is my first opportunity – to discuss Bill 16 but specifically the amendments before us. As I understand it, there is a series of amendments here early in the morning: A, B, C, D, E, and F.

MS BLAKEMAN: Fourteen different sections.

MR. MacDONALD: I'm told by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre that there are 14 different sections as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

I believe it is a significant change to the Assembly, and I'm very interested to know the discussions that have occurred around these amendments with the various school boards and organizations across the province. I certainly have received literature, letters from the Edmonton public school board: with respect to your deliberations on Bill 16, please be advised that the board of trustees of Edmonton public schools has previously expressed the position that the Minister of Learning not change the School Act provisions relating to the formation of separate school jurisdictions.

Now, I would much prefer, Mr. Chairman, to deal with the amendments specifically, one at a time – we could call them quite accurately the group of six – but I doubt if that will happen.

There are other groups. The Public School Boards' Association of Alberta informed all members of this Assembly that "the majority of public school boards are opposed to the proposal for the expansion of minority jurisdictions." How are they going to feel about these amendments at this hour? This is also a question of the suggested new process. They certainly outline their main objections. They believe in an inclusive system, and they mention here the constitutional protection.

The constitutional protection at issue does not exist for only one minority faith; it exists for two, and any new mechanism must treat the two even-handedly. The proposed new mechanism does not treat both potential minorities (Protestants, as well as Roman Catholics) even-handedly.

In the brief time that I've had to have a look at this, I see particularly with amendment – I'm going to label them if no one else is. With amendment E, section 34 is amended by striking out the proposed section 223.33, and it is to be substituted under the "designation of schools" with "A Regional authority must designate each school either as a public school or as a separate school" and the "responsibility and authority of Regional authority." Now, if I'm looking at this correctly – and any hon. member can please point out if I'm not – that is a significant change. We need to look at that, and we need to look at it in the context that it was presented. I believe that when you look at the designation of schools – there's a lot of paperwork around here now – the proposed amendment E states: "is amended by striking out the proposed sections 223.33." That is, I think, significant.

When you look at this entire matter and you look at some of the questions and some of the answers that have been presented and you look at, for instance, the "duty to report," the onus has now shifted, in my view. It has shifted from "a school board or the operator of a private school" to "a superintendent of a school board or the operator of a private school or charter school." What sort of consultations went on with this? Now, it's unfortunate that there are not many members present, but I would be interested to know what led to this amendment, what led to this precise change.

You know, it's amazing. As it's described here in the expansion, it's a separate school education in Alberta, but in casual conversation the word "right" is often used in ways that suggest that all rights are the same. They're not. Perhaps we are forgetting in our haste that separate school rights are not Charter rights. Every Canadian has the right to enjoy free speech and freedom of religion, but not every Canadian has the right to enjoy a separate school education. I don't think that we would know it by this legislation. In fact, the separate school system which is provided in Alberta is only available in one other Canadian province, and that is our sister province to the east, Saskatchewan. In Manitoba, B.C., New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and P.E.I. there are no separate schools.

Now, earlier in the evening we were discussing regional authorities, and I notice the frequency with which they're mentioned and discussed here. Is this the ultimate goal of this government with this bill? Is the ultimate goal to change around the board of governance for our education system and turn it into regional authorities, very similar to what we have with health care? Are we going to dismantle the school boards and set up this system of regional authorities? I look here and I see we're going to start amendment D, Mr. Chairman: "A Regional authority . . ." A regional authority again and again, again and again, and yet again. Am I to conclude that this is the ultimate objective of the School Amendment Act? Because this is the first stage in a fundamental change of our delivery of education – public education I would like to say, but it's also for charter schools – to the students of this province.

Now, I think we need to take a breath here and hold on, because if this is the case, then I would have a lot of concerns and cautions about this. If there is this notion that we're going to set up a regional authority format for delivery of education, what will be next? As night turns into day, we get these amendments, which are significant, and what is the next stage in this? This is certainly a large majority that the current government enjoys, and I don't know if this is a prudent or a wise use of that majority, Mr. Chairman.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, you should have thought of that about seven hours ago.

MR. MacDONALD: I hear an hon. member speak, and certainly that is their democratic right.

We need to ensure – and I don't know if these amendments do it – that there is a strengthening of all education systems across this province, reaffirming the government's commitment to separate schools, providing Francophone education in a way that supports minority language rights and separate school rights. Are these amendments going to do that for the charter schools? There are many parents interested. In fact, Mr. Chairman, they will line up well into the middle of the night to enroll their children in charter schools because class sizes are lower. That's an issue that certainly is not dealt with in this amendment, and the government for whatever reason or measure is very reluctant to deal with it.

6:20

It's astonishing the parents that will line up in the middle of the night to ensure that they can secure a placement for their child in the charter school in my neighbourhood. That's their choice if they like, but are these amendments going to ensure that groups must apply first to the school board – I think it does – to be included as an alternative program?

Now, I don't see in here in the time that I've looked, if it is turned down by the board, the duties of the minister.

Last week I received a letter from the Francophone community. These amendments, specifically that the separate school members of a regional authority "are a corporation under the name of" – this continues, I think, to allow Roman Catholics to claim minority status both for language and denominational rights, but eventually we will get to the bottom of these amendments. There's no doubt about that. If the hon. member who moved these amendments could possibly explain "separate school members" and how that will affect blended authorities within a region.

Now, getting back to my earlier comments on the superintendent and the duty to report, this is going to change. Yes, it's the superintendent's or the operator of a private school's duty to report any employment action. That's still going to mean that the record is available to employers not only across the city but I believe across the country, and teachers in trouble will not be able to move to other schools with their record following them. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View perhaps could clarify that.

With those questions, Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to review my preliminary look at these amendments. Again, I would like to express my dismay. This important legislation I certainly hope isn't a reflection of the government's view toward our public education system nor the children in it. The problem with this is that my questions regarding the governance of the Francophone education by religious minority I believe are unanswered.

With respect to the expansion of the separate school education, I don't believe that this is an adequate proposal to some of the concerns that were expressed, but the manner in which this has occurred certainly is astonishing. If the view of this Assembly is to propose new legislation and to improve existing legislation, then I can't say that there is a great deal of interest in the consultation process. Who was consulted? I went through a list of individuals. The Public School Boards' Association of Alberta: I'm interested to know how extensively they've been consulted. Diane King, Nicole Buret, the Francophone community again, individuals across the province which have the charter schools, the religious communities: how exactly have they been consulted?

Now, there was some concern that the process to develop this legislation was divisive, and the manner in which these amendments were put together in a group like this and presented to the Assembly at 6 in the morning I think is going to add to that feeling, Mr.

Chairman. There certainly is the idea, again, that this is a government that is marching to the beat of its own drum, not to the stakeholders that I mentioned previously. [interjection] I hear from the hon. member from Medicine Hat that they have the mandate to march but I don't think in this manner, Mr. Chairman.

I look forward to more on this issue. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I begin by noting that we are, as I understand it, debating a series of amendments, I believe 14 altogether, that are amending an act that amends an act. So maybe we should be considering amending the amendment to the act that amends the amendment act. Anyway, I think it's a worry that we are amending the act when it's still at this stage of debate. The government is amending their own bills. Maybe they're rushing them through too quickly. It's a sign of hurried and sloppy legislation.

So as we read it through paragraph by paragraph, section 5(b) is struck out and the following is substituted: "(b) by repealing subsection (2) and substituting the following."

There's at least one grammatical error in the next sentence. It says:

An application may be made to the Minister only if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established refuses to establish an alternative program under section 16 as requested by the person or society.

Now, it's I suppose ironic that this is a school amendment act because there's a need for whoever drafted this to consider the use of commas. If we read this sentence as it stands now without a single comma in it, it's not clear which phrase the word "only" refers to. So it may read: "An application may be made to the Minister only, if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established refuses to establish an alternative program." On the other hand, it could be interpreted as: "An application may be made to the Minister, only if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established . . ." I suppose I should propose an amendment to the amendment, and my amendment would be to insert a comma at whichever was the suitable point decided by the sponsoring member, who I'm not sure is even here at the moment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, it is not customary to refer to anyone's presence or absence in the House. I'd just caution you on that.

DR. TAFT: Thank you. So there's the first reaction here. I think we need to decide where the comma belongs and maybe amend the amendment.

In section B section 15 is amended in the proposed section 90.1 by (a) striking out subsection (1) and substituting the following:

90.1(1) A superintendent of a school board or the operator of a private school or charter school shall make a report in writing to the Registrar regarding the suspension, termination, resignation or retirement from employment of a teacher if the suspension, termination, resignation or retirement, as the case may be, results from conduct that brings into question the suitability of the teacher to hold a teaching certificate.

Now, right away the question comes to my mind when the superintendent makes a report in writing: what's the nature of that report? Do we need to be concerned? Undoubtedly, if they are making such a report, it's going to end up, I imagine, before some kind of a tribunal or appeal committee. We may want to consider the nature of the report, what the report would include, whether it's a report that will be subject to legal consideration. So there are those kinds of questions on this particular portion of the amendment.

As we carry along through the amendments, I now move to section D. Section 33 is struck out, and the following is substituted. Section 33, section 223.3 is amended (a) by repealing subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) A Regional authority must be composed of at least 3 members and not more than 7 members.

Now, I assume this is the clause in which the word "composed" replaces the original draft, which said "comprised." Certainly the use of those two words is commonly confused, and I will accept this as a reasonable amendment.

Then we move on to the very next paragraph.

(2.1) Subject to subsection (2.2), the number of public school members of a Regional authority must, if practicable, be in the same proportion to the total number of members of the Regional authority as the total number of public school electors in the Region is . . .

I think there's probably another comma missing there. It should be "is," I think.

. . . to the combined total number of public school electors and separate school electors in the Region.

Now, aside from the problem with commas in this clause, I tripped right away over the only two words that are offset by commas, which are "if practicable." In what circumstances would it not be practicable to implement this? By leaving those two words there, it seems to me to render this particular amendment virtually pointless or meaningless. Who is to determine if something is practicable? On what basis do they determine it?

Frankly, if we have legislation that has clauses in it that refer simply to whether something is practicable, then it strikes me, at least, as a pretty weak statement. If it's not practicable, then this legislation, this particular clause won't apply. It's about as big a loophole as I can imagine in something. So that particular section of these amendments probably needs more attention.

We move on. "A Regional authority must have at least one public school member and at least one separate school member." So we could have one person out of seven, say, one public school member and six separate school members or one separate school member and six public school members. I'd propose that we correct this or improve this particular paragraph by not speaking in terms of absolute numbers but speaking in terms of proportions. You may want to say: a regional authority must have at least one-third of its members who are public school members and at least one-third who are separate school members. It's one thing to have one public school member on a regional authority if that regional authority has a total of three, but it's quite another matter to have one member if there is a total of seven. So I think we might want to reconsider the structure of that particular amendment and switch from absolute numbers to a proportion there.

The next clause, I think, is probably pretty straightforward: "The Minister may appoint the first members of a Regional authority." Fair enough. Once the regional authority is established, there'll be another mechanism – I'm not clear what that is – for selecting members. Section (2.3) as presented here seems sensible.

Finally, we have:

Subject to subsections (2) and (3), a Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that both minority language educational rights and the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada are protected in the Region.

Well, once again there's a problem in grammar here. I'm not sure who drafted this, but it's unclear to which phrase the word "both" refers. Does it refer to both minority languages – I don't know if there are more than two – does it refer to both minority language rights, or does it refer to “both minority language educational rights and the rights and privileges”? The word “both” is lost in that sentence, and it again should be sent back for a careful editing.

A Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that both minority language educational rights and the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada are protected in the Region.

So there’s confusion in that particular amendment.

Let’s try the next one.

Subject to subsection (3), the separate school members of a Regional authority have the responsibility and authority to ensure that the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada are protected in the Region.

That seems clearly enough presented.

If a Public Regional authority and a Separate Regional authority are established under section 223.31 or continued under section 223.32,

6:40

- (a) the Public Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that minority language educational rights guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada are protected in the Region . . .
- (b) the Separate Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that both minority language educational rights and the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada are protected in the Region.

So we have here different authorities and responsibilities, dependent on whether the regional authority is a public one or if it’s a separate one.

It looks to me like the separate regional authorities will be carrying a heavier burden than the public regional authorities, because the public regional authorities merely have the responsibility and authority to ensure that minority language education rights are guaranteed. In addition to that, the separate regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools under the Constitution are guaranteed. So there’s a distinction there between public regional authorities and separate regional authorities, and it makes me wonder if the separate regional authorities may be granted more resources to carry this extra burden. They may well, for example, be caught up in legal appeals and legal arguments and may be needing to proceed as far as the Supreme Court of Canada for their activities.

Now, I have on my desk an extensive amount of correspondence on Bill 16. I can see why the government seems in a hurry to push this through, because there is a great division of opinion on Bill 16. The amendments that we are currently debating are not likely, I don’t think, to sort out some of the concerns. Indeed the government is in a genuinely difficult spot on this one. I don’t think, for example, that the amendments, if they go through once they’re edited and corrected, are going to address the concerns of one of the correspondents I have here, a senior player in the education sector in Alberta, saying that they’re opposed to provisions of Bill 16 which relate to the expansion of separate school jurisdictions throughout the province. Will the amendments address that? Not that I could see, but maybe the sponsoring member would address that for me.

I’m also concerned that the amendments may not address the issues brought forward by another major player in Alberta’s education sector, who wrote: it was with considerable surprise that our board received the news that the Minister of Learning is under the impression that our organization is a strong supporter of the proposed changes to the School Act regarding the establishments of school districts as introduced in Bill 16, currently before the Legislative Assembly. In other words, the writer of this is surprised that the minister feels that he has their support and clearly feels that the minister doesn’t have their support. So I don’t see how the amendments we have here are going to address those kinds of concerns.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

I’m also noting that a number of other groups have serious questions on various angles of Bill 16, and I don’t see any way in which the amendments we’re currently debating will address these concerns. One of them, for example, is an erosion of local decision-making. Again I stand to be corrected, but as far as I can tell from my close reading of the amendments, they do not address the concern over the erosion of local decision-making.

So, Mr. Chairman, with those comments I think I will take my seat and hope that whoever drafts the amendments will take my comments to heart. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m somewhat alarmed at the tone in terms of these amendments from the government side. These are very serious amendments and very serious changes to the School Act. I think they’re deserving of the kind of serious debate that the individuals who’ve been involved in trying to bring about these amendments to the School Act expect them to be given. So I just express that concern.

The minister indicated, if I recall, in his remarks that this had the support of the three groups involved. I find that rather interesting, Mr. Chairman, because if I take a look at the amendments that the government has presented and I compare those amendments to those that were presented by the Public School Boards’ Association and those that were presented by the Alberta Catholic School Trustees’ Association, I don’t see those amendments reflected in what the government has put before us this morning.

I’d like to start with those amendments. The first amendment that was proposed by the Alberta Catholic School Trustees’ Association was to amend section 2(b) of Bill 16. They would have the preamble to this bill amended, and the amendment would be adding “the following phrase in the fifth recital after the words ‘in the Region’ and before the words ‘and’.” The amendment they had proposed was “such that the principles of francophone educational governance are distinct from, not transferable to nor a precedent for the anglophone educational system.” Now, that’s a proposed amendment by that association to the preamble. I don’t see that reflected nor did the minister in making his comments indicate what the disposition of that suggestion from the association was.

6:50

A second amendment that has been suggested by the Alberta Catholic School Trustees’ Association was in terms of section 13 of the bill. This is one of the most controversial sections in terms of the Catholic trustees’ presentation. Their suggestion was:

Delete section 13 of [the bill] in its entirety and substitute the following:

- (a) by adding ‘Except as provided for in Division 2.01 of Part 8,’ before ‘Where a separate school district is established . . .’

They would put in that phrasing as a substitute for section 13 of Bill 16.

I would be interested in hearing from the government their response to the Catholic trustees’ association. This was one of their major concerns, because section 13 now allows the elector, whether they are Protestant or Roman Catholic, to elect in a form prescribed by the Minister to be a resident

- (a) of the separate school district or a regional division made up of separate school districts, as the case may be, or
- (b) of the public school district or division, as the case may be.

So this section is one that I know was very important to the association when it made its presentation, yet if we look at the amendments that are before us today, section 13 has been skipped over completely, and the first amendment applies to section 15.

I would be interested in knowing, Mr. Chairman, what happened to the amendment that was put forth. The minister indicated to me that there were going to be amendments accepted, and certainly I thought that that was one that would be looked at, if for no other reason than the possibility of this one ending up in the courts following the constitutional rights of Catholics and the Schmidt case, where the Roman Catholic citizens were deemed born into a school district where a Catholic school district existed. To ignore that advice without some explanation I think is unfortunate.

If we look at a further suggestion for amendment, the suggestion was that section 14 would be deleted in its entirety and, furthermore, that section 18 of the bill in its entirety be deleted and the following be substituted: "Section 132 is amended by adding 'Except as provided for in Division 2.01 of Part 8' before the word 'When'." So again a wording change suggested by the association, and I don't see that reflected in the amendments that we have before us, Mr. Chairman.

A proposal that section 19 of Bill 16 be amended by deleting section 19 in its entirety was also put forward and seems to be not part of the amendments that we have before us. The suggestion had been that section 134(5) [be] amended by adding the following phrase at the end of section 134(5)(b) after the words 'established the separate school district.'

What would be added is:

or, as provided for in Division 2.01 of Part 8, he has notified the Municipality that although he is a member of the same faith as those who established the separate school district, he continues to support the public school district.

Again, an important provision, and one that's not included in the amendments as we have them put forward by the government.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that I heard the minister right when he said that the government had the support of the three associations involved, because it's very difficult to understand how these amendments are supported by those associations when there's such a discrepancy between what was shared with the Official Opposition and what appears before us.

There was a proposal that section 20 of Bill 16 be amended and in turn section 135(1) of the School Act. The proposal was that section 20 be deleted and that the following be substituted: "Section 135(1) is amended by adding 'or, as provided for in Division 2.01 of Part 8, public school purposes,' after 'separate school purposes'." Again, a lack of attention to that suggestion in the amendments that we see before.

The next suggestion. The government has an amendment for section 31, but there was a proposal that section 21 be amended and in turn section 150 of the School Act. That was the suggestion that detailed wording is to be left to the draftspersons in Municipal Affairs, Assessment Services because of the technical nature of the necessary wording. What is proposed is that these amendments utilize "live assessment" as provided for in the Municipal Government Act, and as applicable to public school jurisdictions, so that calculations as between separate school ratepayers and public school ratepayers are made upon the same type of assessment, with the same calculation date and amount of assessment base, so that they will be at all times equal.

I think that in Bill 16 that was the thrust of the bill. I think there was uneasiness with the language as it existed. I think the intent was clear that both the Catholic and public systems, as far as taxation is concerned, would be equally treated. I think there would be a concern that that has been left unaddressed in the amendments we see before us.

The suggestion that section 22 of Bill 16 be deleted. That is the section, Mr. Chairman, that deals with the enrollment of a resident student of another board as requested by a parent of the . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I'm having some difficulty following. I am, as you know, a relative newcomer here. Amendment A1 is what we're talking about, not what should be in there but what is and why you dislike it. You seem to be referring to sections that I can't find here.

DR. MASSEY: I understand that, Mr. Chairman. What I was trying to point out was that we were assured by the minister that the amendments that had been proposed by the groups that have been most closely involved in this bill had been considered and that these amendments somehow or other accommodated those requests. It seems to me that what I tried to point out is that there's a great discrepancy between what was submitted to the government in terms of changes and what has appeared in the act as it's here in the amendments, and I was asking for some explanation, if we could, in terms of why those particular items were omitted from the amendment.

So that was the line of reasoning I was using, Mr. Chairman, in trying to, I guess if nothing else, put forward the case that was made so eloquently by the three associations. Albeit on many of the points they disagreed, they did work hard. They've been part of the consultations right to the last minute on this, so I thought that they at least deserved the airing of those suggestions.

I looked for the suggestions that section 27 be deleted and the suggestion:

. . . where a separate school district is established, is of the same faith as those who established the district, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, and has elected to be an elector of that separate school district.

And the suggestion that in the case where a separate school district is established, is of the same faith as those who established the district, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, or, as provided for in division 2.01 of Part 8, has notified the municipality that although he is Protestant or Roman Catholic, as the case may be, he continues to be an elector of the public school district.

This goes back again to the concerns about choice, Mr. Chairman.

The amendments don't take into account the concerns that section 28 be amended, nor do they take into account – I'm sorry; they do.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: I know that some of you are anxious to fill in the newcomers with all of the wonderful details of how you've spent your night, but we still are in committee, and it would be appreciated if we could be able to hear the hon. member speak without being drowned out by the conversations that seem to have sprung up in all corners of the Chamber. So if we could be a little courteous, that would be helpful.

Hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Just for clarification, if I might, Mr. Chairman; I was out of the Chamber for a minute. Were the amendments split into six discrete amendments, or are we talking to all? I assumed we were talking to all six of them, that they hadn't been split.

THE CHAIRMAN: That's the reason why we were allowing a little bit more of a ramble, because we didn't have discrete items. There are three pages of amendments, and it is amendment A1, the whole lot. So go ahead.

DR. MASSEY: I appreciate that. Thank you.

There were proposals amending sections 31, 33, 34, 35, and 36 of the bill, and in the amendments we have a proposal that would address three of those sections: 31, 33, and 34. The suggestion was that sections 31 and 33 through 35 in their entirety be struck. Of course that hasn't happened, and we have not had an explanation as to why that advice was ignored.

The suggestion was that section 31, section 223.1 of the act, would be amended

- (a) by adding the words 'Public or Separate' before the words 'Francophone Education Region' in subsection (1) and in the first line of subsection (2);
- (b) by adding the word 'Public' before the words 'Francophone Education Region' in the fourth line of subsection (2).

That was part of the amendments that were put forward and that we don't see as part of the proposal by the government.

Again, as I proceed through this analysis, Mr. Chairman, I am most alarmed that the really very important issues have not been addressed.

Point of Order Admissibility of Amendments

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order, and I would cite Beauchesne's 698(4)(b): "An amendment may not make the clause which it is proposed to amend unintelligible or ungrammatical." I would bring to the chair's attention that as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview had pointed out in his remarks, there are two ungrammatical sentences in the amendment which render them unclear at least and I think indecipherable.

Section A says that section 5(b) is struck out and the following is substituted.

- (2) An application may be made to the Minister only if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established refuses to establish an alternative program under section 16 as requested by the person or society.

Now, there needs to be a comma before or after the word "only" in the first line to indicate if it is "the Minister only" or "to the Minister, only if the board of the district in which the school is to be located." So this is unclear, very unclear. It has two meanings without the comma.

The second one, Mr. Chairman, relates to section 223.35(1), and it says:

Subject to subsections (2) and (3), a Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that both minority language educational rights and the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools . . .

and so on. As it's written, this refers to "both minority language education rights"; for example, two such rights. Or it could say, "both the minority language and the rights . . ." and then there would be a proper parallel construction. So clearly in this one, Mr. Chairman, we don't know if it's both minority language education rights, as in there are two of them, or both minority language rights and the rights and privileges with respect to separate schools.

Again, because of the construction of the sentence it's not clear, Mr. Chairman, what the meaning of the mover is. I would therefore request under Beauchesne 698, The Admissibility of Amendments in Committee, 4(b) – which, I repeat, says, "An amendment may not make the clause which it is proposed to amend unintelligible or ungrammatical" – I would ask that you rule these amendments out of order.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

7:10

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to the point of order.

MR. STEVENS: Obviously, it's a well-drafted amendment, and I don't agree with the comments of the hon. member.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, we can assume that you don't agree with it. What specifically? We're dealing with a specific point. For instance, if you go back to . . .

MR. STEVENS: As I understand it, you listened to his comments, you've heard mine, and you rule. The point is that certain representations were made, and it's up to you. My point is that there's nothing wrong with the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN: On the point of order as raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, we've consulted with Parliamentary Counsel. I don't know whether on your copy you have it, but the Legislative Counsel of the province of Alberta has also indicated that they feel this is adequate, and, with such powerful legal advice as that, the chair would be in concurrence with them. Perhaps as a former teacher going through them, trying to look at them, they seem to mean what's intended, and on the basis of that, then I'll rule no point of order.

Point of Order Explanation of Chairman's Ruling

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the standing rules I would ask for an explanation of the ruling. Specifically, which of the two meanings is meant in the two examples that I've cited in the government's amendments?

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, first of all, I think I've given the explanation after seeking Parliamentary Counsel's advice and my own reading of it and, secondly, knowing that in the original copy, which is up here, Legislative Counsel has indicated that this meets his approval and meets the standards. Those are the two things.

Now, with regard to the second request then: which of the two understandings that you may have? I would deem it to read as follows, in the absence of anyone from the government telling me anything to the contrary: an application may be made to the minister, only if the board. So it's "to the minister," would be my reading of it, but you're asking me to be the grammarian, and I'm not. What this is is a legal description, and that's better suited for lawyers. As I say, the two legal advisements that have been given to me would be that it stands as it is. I don't know that it's the role of the chair to be arbitrating with regard to grammar in these issues. It's more of a legal part, so I don't think there's anything further on that. Although, as I say, from my scan of it, it looks fine to me as well, but for all intents and purposes that's a gratuitous remark on my part.

Debate Continued

THE CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? No?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, a surprise amendment A1 that we are dealing with, brought in after a night where four of the Magnificent Seven and one Lone Ranger have kept the government at bay while important things were debated. And at quarter to 6 in the morning a surprise amendment is brought in, which is what is before us now, an amendment that contains no less than 14 changes, 14 suggested amendments contained in six different sections amending Bill 16. Interesting, because the first question that springs to mind is: why was the government in such a hurry that they had to rush this through at the end of a night in which five people have been trying to uphold democracy and put this in front of them? But the government seems to feel a need, with its 74 members, to crush and annihilate and not to respect what's being done on this side. [interjections] No, no. They're trying to crush and annihilate. We are not being crushed or annihilated on this side; we're ready to go.

So we're looking at an amendment with some 14 different sections that are being amended here and are of some grave concern. Our stalwart Official Opposition critic on Learning, having had a bare 90 seconds to examine a three-page document containing, as I said, 14 different sections being amended while the proposing member spoke in a very cursory fashion about what was in here, was able to get to his feet and attempt to make sense out of this. A dishonourable action, I believe, on behalf of the government to bring this in in this manner and to give a critic absolutely no time to look over a three-page, 14-section amendment. For shame. Nonetheless, it is morning. We have had a cup of coffee. It is 20 after 7, and I shall plow forward in looking at this amendment.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had already expressed concern that what is being proposed here is going against what was put forward by various school boards. We are still seeking confirmation from members opposite that in fact the government has secured support for this three-page, 14-section amendment which is making some substantial changes to the intent of the bill.

Now, it's interesting that the bill itself was brought in, very little debate at the beginning, and then disappeared off the Order Paper for some two or three weeks, and now we were in a big rush to get it passed through second reading earlier in this day, which is now going into its second day, and now we're in a rush to pass it through Committee of the Whole. So I have to question what stakeholders have been consulted pursuant to this amendment and whether they are supporting this.

Certainly the documentation that we've received from a number of different stakeholder groups on this – and without digging too deep in my pile here, I have information from the Edmonton public school board, the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta. I'm sorry; my French is very poor, but the Conseil scolaire du Sud de l'Alberta – so I'm taking that as the southern Alberta scholarly council or school council – is expressing a number of concerns about Francophone education. Plus we have additional concerns from the Sturgeon school division, Fraser Milner Casgrain. So a number of concerns had been raised, and that's what struck me about what's happening here, that there have been a number of very strongly held opinions and very strongly held concerns around this bill, and I am deeply suspicious of a process which tries to push through an amending bill in the wee hours of the morning.

Another member has joined us. There seems to be great celebration that someone on the government side can manage to get out of bed. I suppose that's something they need to celebrate.

Now, starting from the beginning, we have section 5(b)(2), the change being:

An application may be made to the Minister only if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established refuses to establish an alternative program under section 16.

And the new part to this is: "as requested by the person or society." The Minister of Human Resources and Employment did manage to get up about half an hour into the debate and give us a bit more background on this bill, which I thank him for, because it was a bit more of an explanation than we got from the person who moved the bill, who managed to put in about 60 seconds of description on this before it was sprung on members of the opposition.

So one takes it that somehow a person or a society requesting that a school establish an alternative program makes a load of difference to this. I haven't noticed specifically, in what I've looked at thus far out of what's coming from the different stakeholder groups, that this was an area that was of particular concern. It may well be of particular concern at this point, because I think it is substantially changing what's been proposed.

Now, we're working back and forth between three documents, which was the original Bill 16, School Amendment Act, 2001, and that itself is amending the original School Act – most of the sections that I see here that are being amended are, in fact, a little bit of a change to what's already in here, and as I said, our critic has already expressed severe concerns that there are substantial changes being made here. So my question is: why the substantial changes? If the bill had been researched, had gone out to consultation with the groups that are concerned with this, and legislation had been developed, why do we end up with such a massive amending document coming forward to us in the last few hours or perhaps the last few days of this spring sitting? Again, I'm looking for: who was requesting this? What has been the feedback loop from the stakeholders involved? What was the great cause for concern that the amendments are attempting to deal with? Those questions have not been answered by the members opposite, and I would like to hear what their reasoning is.

Now, when I look at section B, which is the second of six sections, we have "striking out subsection (1) and substituting the following." What seems to be of particular interest in this is that what's been added is "a superintendent of a school board" rather than "a school board." Well, the superintendent is a paid staff member as compared to a school board, which in fact is an elected board of people. So we have a very different take on how something is being delivered.

The substance of this amending section is that a report shall be made in writing to the registrar regarding a teacher being suspended, resigning, or retiring if this is resulting "from conduct that brings into question the suitability of the teacher to hold a teaching certificate." So I'm taking it, then, that if this is a concern that is significant enough to require that a teacher retire early or be fired or resign, this report is to be made to the registrar. But it is substantially different if you have a paid employee, this superintendent, making this report as compared to an elected body, the school trustees, making that report. It may appear subtle to some, but in one case we have a group of people who are elected and are responsive back to those who elected them. In the second case the superintendent is hired by that elected body and reports only to them.

What we've done, depending on how you look at it, is taken away a layer of accountability or put an extra barrier in the way there. It used to be that the elected body did the report. Now we're saying that the person that reports to the elected body makes the report. So what's allowed there is that if there is influence or direction to be coming from the school board trustees to their employee, the superintendent, in the way the report is written or how the matter is in fact handled – I think that's an important difference.

For example, here in the Legislature we've often said that the chief commissioner of the Human Rights Commission should report directly to this Legislature as do other legislative officers, like the Chief Electoral Officer or the Privacy Commissioner or the Auditor General, so that information from their reports doesn't pass through any minister. Currently with the Human Rights Commission it very much passes through a minister, and there's an opportunity for the minister to influence or change, add or delete what's in the report. #So it's a very similar situation. You've got the Human Rights Commission, which is supposed to be a somewhat arm's-length group, but with them having to report through the minister to the Legislature, it's a very different line than having an independent Human Rights Commission report directly to the Assembly with the elected official. We have been given no explanation as to why that significant difference has been instituted in this amending document.

The second part of that, which is really interesting, is partway through where it's talking about the "employment of a teacher if the suspension, termination, resignation or retirement, as the case may be" – now, that's another new phrase that's going in there – "results from conduct that brings into question the suitability of the teacher." Again, that's an interesting little phrase to have in there. What's the significance of it? What is trying to be captured by that, and why? Who requested it, and which groups have had time to react to this? Is this responding to one particular group and the other groups haven't seen it, or have all groups seen it?

Also, under section 15 we have subsection (4)(a) adding "superintendent" again in front of "school board".

No action lies against any of the following in respect of any report made under subsection (1) in good faith when acting or purporting to act under this Act or the regulations.

Oh, my goodness. We're not being very successful in writing legislation in plain English. But that's section (4). Under that we had previously just:

- (a) a school board,
- (b) the operator of a private school or a charter school,
- (c) a person appointed as an official trustee,
- (d) the executive secretary, et cetera. Now instead of a "school board" we have "superintendent of a school board" inserted there. That's again making the same change in definition and in reporting structure that I was just discussing in 90.1(1). We're under section 15(b), which is in the amending act, which is in fact amending section 90.1 in the School Act, again making a significant change, and we don't have an idea or an understanding why. That may well be perfectly legitimate, but as I pointed out, given a 90-second overview, we don't know why this is coming or what the reaction to it is.

I suppose we'll be able to get on the phone in about half an hour and start phoning back some of these stakeholder groups to find out exactly what their reaction to this is.

Then we have an entire section that is essentially correcting a typo. In the amending act there were significant references to section 31 of Bill 16, which is amending section 223.1. There were references in the amending act that keep referring to "223.34." That's all the way through this section. I think it turns up in (a), (d), and (e). So in those sections, obviously a mistake was made there. Boy. You know, you'd think with all of the resources the government has in these departments and all the amount of time they have – the government totally controls the agenda about when these bills come forward, when the amendments come forward, and that they would make a typo like that shocks me. I guess better proofreaders are needed. So that's correcting what's appearing as 223.34 to 223.33.

I believe that what that's doing is changing the reference from 223.3(4). We've got:

The board of a district or division required by the Minister to do so must enter into an agreement with the Regional authority respecting any matter the Minister considers necessary, including, but not limited to, dealing with assets and liabilities and the transfer of employees.

So now I think what they're saying is that it applies to:

Members of a Regional authority appointed under subsection (2) hold office until the first organizational meeting of the Regional authority held after the first general election held after the Regional authority is established.

Good heavens, can't they write this in plain English? I think that's what that's supposed to mean. It's not subsection (4) that's being looked at. It's subsection (3), but I'm asking for clarification on that, please, because it makes a significant difference here. One of them is talking about organizational meetings, and the other one is talking about entering into agreements on financial agreements, assets and liabilities, transfer of employees, which is significant, so I'm looking for the explanation there.

Now, you see, my time is getting close to up, and I've just managed to get through not even three of the six sections in 20 minutes. So I'll obviously have to come back to follow up and complete my scrutiny of the other half of these.

In section 33 of the act this is interesting. Who approved of this? What's being suggested here is that a Regional authority must be composed of at least 3 members and not more than 7 members, at least one of whom must be a public school member.

That last clause has been cut so that it would now read: "a Regional authority must be composed of at least 3 members and not more than 7 members," period. It doesn't say anything about them being a public school member or a private school member or anybody associated with the teaching or the learning profession. It just says "members" without giving us any further definition of who the member is supposed to be representing, and that again gives me cause for concern. I mean, obviously this was being set up in such a way that we would have some representation from the school or some representation from somebody working in that area.

I've run out of time, but I'll be coming back to speak on this more.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and good morning, everyone. It's nice to see that this is what a deal by the government looks like.

AN HON. MEMBER: How are you this morning?

MS CARLSON: I'm just fine. I can't believe that this government who has such a vast majority would care to run roughshod over such a very small opposition and try to drive legislation through this quickly and also to not keep to a deal, which is very interesting, very interesting. Bill 16 was not supposed to come up. We were supposed to be finished when Bill 7 was done.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, deals that are made between House leaders and so on have nothing to do with the chairs, and so we are unable to enforce or uphold or deny any such arrangements.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I recall, negotiations made between House leaders certainly come into the House leaders' agreement and certainly do have relevance when we come to talk in debates at this time in the morning and on issues, but I will stick to amendment A1 in my comments, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for that direction. It is still very amazing to see that a government can be scared by such a small opposition and feels that it must push legislation through and amendments through in this fashion. So we see before us . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: We're not scared.

MS CARLSON: Well, then, what are you still here for? What are you still here for?

On amendment A1, Mr. Chairman, we see a series of amendments before us, in fact one, two, three pages of amendments on a very significant bill in this Legislature. The problem with seeing these amendments at this late stage of an evening sitting is that there is no opportunity for us to get any feedback from the groups who are keenly interested in what's happening in terms of this legislation. What we see before us is a piece of legislation that has been quite controversial in the community. Once again this government has had no problem with pitting Protestants against Catholics and bringing through legislation . . . [interjections] Well, then, stand up and defend it. Don't just sit there and whine. Stand up and defend it.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, if you choose to involve everyone individually in debate, then you get this back. The procedure in the Chamber and in committee is through the chair, so if you could address your remarks to the chair, that may eliminate many of these other extraneous interruptions.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. I was provoked. I'm quite happy to keep it clean and honest and on the point, which is that we have a lot of problems with this bill out in the community. This government should know that if they were listening to the feedback they've been getting. We have people who are very upset with the legislation who have . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Speak for yourself.

MS CARLSON: Well, I am speaking for myself, and I am speaking for the feedback that we have heard throughout the province, Mr. Chairman. I'm sorry to engage, but I'm being provoked, certainly, and I'm happy to go . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Ignore the provocations, please.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

On this amendment we have got many, many groups who are very upset with the legislation and who have been keenly waiting for the amendments to come forward. When this bill was in second reading, we had people on both sides of the gallery yesterday afternoon come forward to hear what was being said and who were expecting the amendments to come from the minister at any point in time. Exactly what they expected was that they were going to see the amendments, that they were going to have a chance to give some feedback on them before they came to the floor of the Legislature to debate.

But not this government; no. What did they do? We see them roll in here at about 6:15 or 6 o'clock in the morning, and they're going to stay here until they're done. Now, tell me how any of these groups who have interest in these amendments have a chance for any feedback. That is exactly the tactic of a domineering government who doesn't want to listen to any feedback. [interjection] I have a right to say that.

Mr. Chairman, I have a right to make those comments on behalf of the people in Alberta who would like to participate in these amendments and who now will have no chance. By the time they get to work this morning, they're going to see that these amendments have been passed in this Legislature . . . [interjections] Nice to see you're all awake again. Thank you for that.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, there's only one person standing and talking recognized at a time. I wonder if we could show the courtesy to allow the member to continue her remarks on amendment A1.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. So now we have a situation where these people will get to work this morning, and they will find that they have absolutely no chance to participate in what should have been participatory democracy because this amendment will have been passed. So we're going to get their feedback, and I hope that the members of the Conservative caucus also listen to that feedback when they get it. I don't think they're going to be too happy.

What do we see before us in this package of amendments? Minor changes, Mr. Chairman. Minor changes that don't address the key issues that are still outstanding in this legislation. You know, there was an opportunity with these amendments to correct what were some quite critical flaws in this legislation, and at that point we would have been quite happy to support it. But what we see here are minor changes, mostly technical in detail, that don't go a whole lot of the way to addressing the outstanding issues.

What we see here also, with the introduction of this amendment in the manner it was introduced, is a lack of respect by the Minister of Learning for my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, who he knows is the critic of this particular area. What normally would happen in a situation like this on a controversial bill is that the minister would have the courtesy to contact the critic in the area and discuss the amendments with him. When that happens, Mr. Chairman, we try to be absolutely as accommodating as possible. We'll stand up in the Legislature and congratulate the government on work well done where we agree with them, thank the minister for taking the co-operative effort to get together and thoroughly discuss the intent of the amendments, and then point out the differences we would have with those amendments that we feel don't meet adequately the needs of the legislation.

But not this time, Mr. Chairman. Not in accordance with what had been agreed upon, we see this bill introduced back in at committee. We see the government bring in two and a half pages of amendments that mostly are minor in nature without any explanation, without any discussion or debate, and they're just going to try and ram them through. Of course, they can run several shifts in here to try and wear us down and get through this legislation as fast as possible.

MR. MacDONALD: Debby to the rescue with Tim Horton's muffins.

MS CARLSON: Were they good?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes.

MS CARLSON: Good.

Mr. Chairman, what happens then is that we get a little cranky, too, and we're not quite as eager to pass amendments without a thorough scrutiny. That's what we're going to see here this morning: a thorough scrutiny of every line in amendment A1 as it comes through.

So now I will start with that specific scrutiny. Let's talk about the first section that's being amended with this particular amendment, and that would be section 5(b). If we take a look at it, what it talks about is that section 5(b) is struck out and the following is substituted, (b) by repealing subsection (2) and substituting the following:

An application may be made to the Minister only if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established refuses to establish an alternative program under section 16 as requested by the person or society.

That's interesting. All it is, it looks like to me, is a beefing up of the wording, Mr. Chairman. Nothing substantive there at all. What we had there before was "the charter school," and we are substituting "an alternative program under section 16."

So there are some words that have been added. The part added is:

An application may be made to the Minister only if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established refuses to establish an alternative program under section 16 as requested by the person or society.

In essence, what we have here is the addition of who's doing the requesting: an individual person or a society.

What if the representation, Mr. Chairman, is by a group? In terms of this, I know in my constituency we have the Singh Sabha gurdwara, which is a large Sikh gurdwara right on Mill Woods Road, on Gurdwara Road. They have recently done an addition to that gurdwara at the back of the building, for which they got some support from the government, CFEP grants, and I thank them for that. Certainly they're going to be at the government's door again as things progress in terms of where they're going.

What they're wanting to do is establish a charter school there. That charter school will be teaching children in their first language – for most families, that would be Punjabi – and the key part of the school would be religious training in Sikhism. So while they'll certainly meet with all the conditions and requirements of the educational mandate as seen in other systems, what they really want to be able to focus on is carrying on the traditions, the culture, the training, and the language of their native region, which is the Punjab in India, and basically their religion, which is the teachings of the gurus. What they are doing in the process is looking at the kinds of options they have for moving forward, and what they have seen in the past as one of those options is charter schools. So let's see how this particular amendment applies to their particular circumstances, Mr. Chairman.

Now, what it's saying here is: "as requested by the person or society." When they are at a stage where they've got to make the request to the government, what happens? Does a person or the society come? Is this charter school actually going to be run by the society that runs the church, or is it going to be somewhat independent of that and be another kind of organizing body? What kind of an organizing body could that be, Mr. Chairman? They could be an incorporated organization. They could be a partnership that comes together. They don't necessarily have to be, I think, an incorporated society. It certainly wasn't ever my opinion that that would have to be a requirement.

So they would have to take a look at whether or not they fall within that particular mandate, Mr. Chairman. They could send a person, a representative. Well, I'd be a little concerned about that in terms of whether or not that would meet more overreaching and overriding criteria. If you're just sending one person to make an application to the minister, as is established here, first of all what they have to do is go to the board or the district or the division in which the school is to be established. So what you're saying with this is that one person on behalf of that gurdwara could go first to the public board, make the application, and potentially be turned down. Can one person properly, then, in fact represent the interests of the group? What are the chances of one person coming before a board like that and actually being given the mandate to pursue a school which would be on behalf of many children?

If I were sitting on that school board, I would look a little apprehensively at a single person coming as a representative of an organization to incorporate a charter school. So if a person comes, then I would think that likely they would be turned down. Then they would go to the separate system and perhaps have the same circumstances occur.

Then they've got to go to the minister. How does the minister establish the criteria for deciding the validity of a single person coming to them for an application for a charter school? What kind of background material does that individual have to bring in order to get the minister's okay in terms of independently establishing a school? That would be a question that I have in that regard.

So what you're forcing people to do is either come as a society or come as an individual, and I'm wondering if in fact this bill is enhanced by that particular aspect of the mandate. It would have been nice to have an opportunity to talk to the minister about this, but unfortunately we weren't given that opportunity, and he doesn't seem to be willing to participate in the debate of the amendment at this stage. It'll be interesting to see what he has to say about that.

Mr. Chairman, has this been discussed? Have any of the pros and cons been debated here in the Legislature or within the minister's office or within outside groups in terms of those organizations who may not wish to be affiliated with one of the existing school boards? Has there been any discussion on this amendment in terms of that? What if an organization clearly only wants to be an independent charter school? Would this amendment A1, section A, section 5(b)(2), address that specifically? There is no provision now for people who don't want to be affiliated with either the public or the separate system for whatever reasons. I can see not wishing to be affiliated with the separate system based on religious grounds, and that certainly fits the criteria of the example that I have in my constituency.

Would they want to have some ties to the public school system? Well, Mr. Chairman, that's a good question. I don't know the answer to that question. If these amendments had come out for discussion and review and debate prior to this morning, I would have had the opportunity to take the amendments to the gurdwara and to call a meeting of those people who are organizing this charter school and ask them what they thought about this. It would have been very beneficial to get the feedback of this organization in terms of where they wanted to go on this issue. You know, they would have appreciated that. I know that anytime I have gone to that organization with questions or concerns, they have very much appreciated the opportunity to be participants in what we call democracy here in this province. They like to be asked their opinion, they like to be asked for feedback, and they particularly like the opportunity to be able to improve legislation that will in some way affect their lives and the lives of their children.

Unfortunately, it's not the case with this particular amendment. I'm going to certainly take the copy of Hansard that I have and run it by them, and I apologize in advance if there are any omissions or errors in the descriptions that I have made in terms of what their expectations are or the direction they are taking. I do know that they will be starting the first of their educational services this September. If I remember correctly, there will be kindergarten classes starting in that addition. It's at the back of the gurdwara, and there are certainly entrances through the gurdwara. That's really as much information as I have about what's going to be happening there.

I know that over time they expect to expand the school to a level which encompasses all the grades. I have to applaud their dedication and their thought with regard to what they're doing, Mr. Chairman. They've spent several years now starting to get that school ready and jumping through all the appropriate hoops with the minister of education. Then they're caught off guard a little bit when something like this amendment comes along, when something like this legislation comes along. They have to stop in their tracks, take a look at what they're doing, and evaluate the progress they've made so far with the legislation and with the amendments, amendments that they will have no opportunity to refer to or to have any input on in terms of what happens with this legislation.

They're going to have to adjust. Instead of being participants in this form of democracy, they're going to take a look at this amendment and are going to see that it really does not matter what they think about it because it's already a done deal. So what they're going to have to do then is sit down, call a meeting of those organizers within the gurdwara, and decide how these amendments and these changes are going to affect them. Will it alter the progress they've made so far on this school? I certainly hope not. I would think that if it does, it will only be specifically section 5(b)(2) in part A of the amendment that affects them. I haven't really had a chance to read through the rest of the amendments at this stage, but I'm sure I'll have many more opportunities before the morning is over to do so, and I'll be happy to do that.

In fact, I expect to go through this amendment A1 with a magnifying glass and address every particular word that may apply to constituents' concerns or other concerns that I have heard throughout the province. Fortunately, I got a good night's sleep, so I'm certainly ready to have many discussions in this regard on this particular issue and be able to review them.

So as soon as I get out of here today, I'm going to fax off a copy of this amendment A1 to the gurdwara and ask for their feedback on it and express my concern that I hope it doesn't impede their progress with what they're planning to begin this fall and which they have spent many years planning and organizing for. [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired]

I'll be back.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Nice to see you early in the morning, the first time, I guess, in my tenure here in this Assembly for the last four and a half years. Nice to see you all. Good morning.

Mr. Chairman, it's interesting to be sitting here early in the morning starting debate on a bill when most of those who are going to be impacted by the bill are still asleep. At 6 o'clock, I guess, it started. In my speech yesterday and then during the second reading on the bill I drew the attention of the House to the widespread, broad-based opposition from major stakeholders of our public education system, who are stakeholders in the system, and they have very serious reservations and concerns about this bill. I was arguing yesterday to the House, trying to get the message out to the government and to the minister, that we need to slow down the pace at which the government appears to want to move on this in order to engage in consultations, take seriously the concerns of those stakeholders, and then incorporate perhaps new elements into the bill, make changes to the bill, make amendments to the bill as it presently appears before us, and then proceed.

Public education is one of the most critically important enterprises in our society. To deal with it in such haste, in such a cavalier fashion, I think, is not becoming of any government that sees itself accountable ultimately to the people that it represents.

It's regrettable that we have come to a stage where we are forced as an Assembly – certainly those of us in the opposition feel absolutely under duress in engaging in discussion on this bill, when, in fact, the people of Alberta, whose interests are at stake in terms of what's in this bill, are sleeping. It says, I think, a great deal. It sends a symbolic message that this legislation is being proceeded with by stealth.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, just so that we could be on the same point, we're dealing with an amendment called A1.

DR. PANNU: I have that in my hand, Mr. Chairman. Thank you. I will be certainly paying some attention to it in a few minutes.

The amendment certainly deals with the very – part of the amendment. It's not one amendment. It's obviously five, six amendments bunched together, and that's another reason, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to draw attention to this fact that there is some terribly indecent haste apparent here with which this bill is being pushed through. Six amendments in amendment A1 dealing with six different sections: A, B, C, D, E, and F. Six amendments under one amendment.

That in itself, the procedure that's adopted here by the government, is quite intriguing. It shows a degree of desperation that I haven't seen on the part of the government in this House to get this bill through, to get these so-called amendments debated as one package in such a short time so that those who are concerned about the bill outside of this House, those who have expressed serious concerns, those who are opposed to certain important sections of the bill that are embodied in the so-called amendments or referred to at least in part will not have any opportunity to influence the course of events.

That's not how democracy works. That's a way, in fact, of abandoning democracy. Governments, when they become so entrenched, forget that democratic processes do require that citizens, that stakeholders have an opportunity, are given an opportunity, are afforded an opportunity to speak to the pieces of legislation that they think they have a great deal to say about and that they want changed.

People want to see legislation subject to public hearings in certain circumstances where the legislation is so important that it will impact greatly. This legislation, Mr. Chairman, and these amendments here are about communities, about residents of those communities being able to live together in harmony. It's about young children growing up in those communities not only as former residents of those communities but growing up as friends, growing up as citizens seeing each other's interests, binding them together. That's what public education's role is.

That's why how many schools we have in a community, whether we want all children to go to one school or two or three different schools, is of concern to all citizens. The role of the local communities to be able to make those decisions is exactly the one that's at stake in this bill, the inability of residents of particular communities to determine locally by debating with each other, by sitting together, by consulting with each other what kind of school they want, where they want their school, whether they want their children to go to one school in the community or they want them to be shipped out of the community to some other school that's been designated as appropriate for their use by legislation. I think those are the matters that are entailed in this bill.

Amendment A1 simply doesn't address any of those concerns, and that's why I find it particularly objectionable that we are sitting here at 8 o'clock in the morning. We have been at this bill, I understand, since about quarter past 6 while Albertans, whom we are supposed to listen to, whose views we are supposed to be receptive to and respectful of, are being ignored, not even being sought, unaware of what's happening with respect to the debate on this bill. We are here engaged in pushing this bill through, and in order to do that, the government has decided to put six different amendments under the amendment here called amendment A1, that's under discussion.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

The changes that are being sought through this amendment A1 are certainly not substantive. They don't change the substance of the bill. They are cosmetic. They are poorly worded. I'll give you just one example. Here we have amendment 5, I would call it, or amendment E as part of amendment A1. The language is quite strange. I don't know exactly what it means to say when the amendment phrases the matter in the following way. It says, "Subject to subsections (2) and (3), a Regional authority has the responsibility and authority to ensure that both minority language educational rights . . ." What are "both minority language educational rights"? The reference here, the language of the drafting is misleading; it's confusing. It will cause more problems than it will solve down the road.

I don't understand why we are rushing through this bill when in fact we haven't even got right the language of the amendments that are before us today. So to be able to seriously discuss and debate the proposed changes in the bill, one has to first be clear what those amendments mean. If the amendments are so poorly drafted that that meaning is in itself in contention, if that in itself is in dispute, then obviously the whole exercise tends to become fruitless.

Mr. Chairman, the contents of amendment A1 will impact lots of players in the field of public education. Let me just mention a few. The Alberta School Boards Association is concerned, has raised serious objections about this bill. This association includes all the school boards in this province. Its president is Lois Byers, and its executive director is David Anderson. I had the opportunity to talk with Mr. Anderson just a few days ago, and they are very concerned about this bill, and this amendment A1 doesn't address their concerns at all.

Another player is the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, exclusively a Roman Catholic school board. The president is Lois Burke-Gaffney, the executive director Stefan Michniewski. Again, representatives were present there, and they were sympathetic to the concerns that were being raised by their counterparts on the other boards and associations.

The Public School Boards' Association: again, I put on the record yesterday their concerns, a two-page letter in which they detailed the concerns and, based on those concerns, their opposition to this bill in its present form.

The other stakeholders: Alberta Teachers' Association, Catholic Bishops of Alberta, Francophone school regions. There's the Northwest Francophone education region No. 1, the Greater North Central Francophone education region No. 2, the East Central Francophone education region No. 3, and the Greater Southern public Francophone education region No. 4. Again, I read from the letter from region No. 4 representatives yesterday to draw attention to the serious concerns that that group has with respect to the bill, and this amendment, so-called A1 with six different amendments in it, falls, I'm afraid, terribly short of addressing those concerns.

There are a whole number of charter schools in this province, some of them just struggling to stay alive. Again, yesterday, while speaking during second reading of the bill, I made the point: why do we bother to continue with an experiment which has clearly failed? Should we not, in fact, rather than amending the approval procedures and processes for charter schools, moving them right into the hands of the minister, simply say that this experiment has failed and it's no longer necessary for us to pretend that it's working and therefore simply take out of the School Act any reference to charter schools? We can have alternative programs in public schools. We have those programs; they work. They keep our children together, and they provide choices as needed relative to the specific needs and preferences of parents and their children. So why continue to talk about these schools?

Mr. Chairman, it really is, I think, quite distressing to see a government which claims to be very responsive to public input, which claims that it solicits public input and respects this input and integrates this input into its legislation, a government making those kinds of claims, ignoring clear, vocal, broad-based, widespread opposition from so many of the stakeholders in this province whose interests are really tied to what we are doing here in such a way that they found it necessary to go public, not just lobby the government side or the minister privately, but they have taken the risk of going public to put pressure on the government to stop meddling with a system that's working, to stop changing it in such a hurry, that whatever changes are desirable to be made have yet to be agreed on.

Consensus has to be developed on those changes. Therefore, they're saying that it's premature and it's unnecessary and it's in fact offensive to the norms of democratic ways of establishing and proceeding with legislation.

It is this kind of concern that they have a broader concern about now, the fact that they're not being heard, that they're not being listened to. They're being ignored. They see problems down the line. They see problems particularly in smaller communities and rural areas where this new legislation dealing with the establishment of separate schools will lead to all kinds of potential divisions within communities and could put new physical demands on young children who have to sit in buses and travel, be bused 50 or 100 kilometres away from home just so they could go to a school that now fits the definition of the changes in the legislation, changes that have been made without full consultation with those communities, with the parents. Three persons in one jurisdiction or one little community somewhere could simply cause all this disruption in the lives of individual families and in the lives of communities across this province.

When the stakes are so high, Mr. Chairman, Albertans expect this government to come up with legislation which shows and reflects a consensus, if not unanimity, a broad-based consensus, on what changes need to be made in order to fix the minor problems that have continued to be seen as of some consequence by some members of the minority religious communities in this province. But what's been proposed in the bill doesn't by any stretch begin to address those problems. The amendments that are being proposed here to those sections of the bill, particularly those sections in the bill that deal with the establishment of separate schools, simply are not addressing the issues that are a matter of concern.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to speak to the amendments that we've been provided with for Bill 16. I just want it to go on record that it's really kind of unacceptable in terms of democracy to have almost five pages of amendments stuck in at 6 o'clock in the morning for the opposition. They don't get a chance to see them before then, and if you expect any kind of a reasonable presentation of an analysis of what these mean in the overall context of the bill – that has to be reflected as absolute arrogance on behalf of a government that does that kind of stuff. They could at least have given us these, you know, a couple of hours earlier. They would have obviously known that this is the trick they were going to play on democracy, that they were going to try and bully through these kinds of things. So they should have been able to provide us with these with at least a couple of hours of review on them.

Basically, what we have now are five different significant amendments to a bill that is very controversial, yet when we look over these amendments, not one of them addresses the issues that are being raised by both the public school boards and the Catholic school boards across this province. They want to be able to say that they're reflecting what the interests of the community are and the kind of approach that the community has in the context of how they get a choice to deal with the constitutional authority that allows for the minor religion in a community to have a school system that reflects the appropriate structure, whether it's a separate school board or a public school board.

When we end up now looking at how this is going to work in the context of bringing forward these kinds of changes, what we see is basically a situation where the amendments that we see here now in the five sections don't really address the concerns that were being provided to us from the participants in the community, whether it be the actual members of the boards or individuals from school councils, individual parents, or even individuals who have historically had an interest in the appropriate structure and administrative process for education in Alberta.

When we looked at this, we wanted to make sure that within the separate school boards there was some degree of stability created, and those separate school boards have basically created a situation where what they wanted was that stability for the existing boards even though new boards would be able to come in and deal with the choice that they have in terms of offering education to their children under the chosen administrative structure. We would expect some of those kinds of concerns to be reflected in these amendments and they aren't. There were a lot of concerns, and they wanted to be able to have time to explain this to their members, to their communities so that there would be appropriate input given to the government as they dealt with these kinds of changes. What we see now is basically the structure that's going to be put in place not reflecting what either the public school boards or the separate school boards in this province have been asking about Bill 16, and we have to look at it.

Mr. Chairman, as we go through and look more specifically at some of these amendments, we want to look at them in the context of how they improve, or not, the operation of the bill and the choice that's there for Albertans in the administration of their school system. What we're basically seeing here is that the choices even further erode the flexibility that exists under the current system.

When we look at amendment E, they're talking about the Franco-phone schools. The situation that we see here is that the regional authority under which they operate has to designate every school as either a public or a separate school. This is basically telling the regional authority that they have to be making choices for the people rather than allowing the individuals to do it on their own basis, and you would think that the rest of the act is set up so that members of the community have the authority to designate within their own choice, their own wishes, their own beliefs about the structure and the form of education, that they're the ones who get to set up what's going on and how it comes together. So I think that we're looking here at a situation where really very little is happening that will give us any kind of confidence that these amendments are strengthening Bill 16.

If we want to look at what happens in the communities, essentially the parents who are making the choices in terms of how their children are going to be educated, the structure under which they'll be educated, still don't have the ability to deal with it in the context of their community and the community's wishes.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

When we look at how the former process and this process came about, we look at the public school systems that are out there now, and basically they cover all of rural Alberta. The separate school boards are not yet all inclusive of the province. The school boards that have come along and talked to me have said that what they want to do is have the option so that communities can have a say and that what, in effect, we're doing is creating a situation here where before we can have a separate school board established in a community, then we have to have consultation with the public system. I guess that's kind of implying that the new boards won't have the same freedom to establish and provide education of choice to their children the way Albertans had prior to Bill 16. So I think what we're looking at here is essentially a bill that will erode the opportunity for the free choice that has been part of the premise or part of the basic aspect of our education system and the parental right to have their children educated in the school structure that they choose.

If we look at the way that this might impact on some of the rural communities, we end up with a new separate school being formed, and what we're going to have is some of the children that are currently attending public schools in what are small communities – then what we've got is basically a further reduction of the size of the school, a further slippage of that school's utilization characteristics. Probably this could result in the closure of some of these rural schools if they end up having to split the children into two different school facilities and two different school administrations.

What we want to do, then, is look at what that means in terms of the cost of education. It further adds to the transportation costs, because what you'll have are children designated for the separate school board now being transported to a school facility that will provide them with their education under the structure of the separate school board. That will leave a school in the public system that is potentially going to be closed because of the utilization factor, and then we'll end up transporting those children. I guess this is the kind of thing that we have to look at in terms of what some of these decisions mean in the context of the overall operation and structure of our education system.

The thing that we see here also, as I understand it and as it's been presented to me by the separate school boards and I guess with agreement of the public – the original 4 by 4 concept is still there. It still does provide, in essence, a double standard for the process in the sense that what you end up with are the individuals who are potentially part of a separate school board – if they move and choose to have their children stay with the public system, they can then make a choice and further weaken the opportunity for a separate school board to have the appropriate control over the funding of the residents and the children that are associated with their faith in the context of the establishment of that kind of offer in terms of the education system.

Mr. Chairman, as I look at the rest of these amendments, we basically see that they don't do much in terms of changing some of the aspects of the bill, but also in other areas we see that they do basically further add to the complexity of the kind of approach that has to be taken. The thing that we have to look at here is whether or not the bill reflects, I guess, the current thinking, the current trend, the current wishes of a lot of people in Alberta, where they basically recognize that there has to be the choice between the public and the separate schools. There needs to be the ability of parents to have their children attend whichever kind of structure of school that they believe will best suit the educational needs of their children.

We also want to look at it in the context of what in effect is the issue of how we go about creating some degree of buy-in from the participants that are there as we deal with how they come about in terms of the choice. What we're looking at here is essentially the process that might come up in the context of Bill 16 and dealing with how it works. Basically, we're now going to have a set of separate school regions or separate school areas that have the jurisdictional function of what would be the equivalent of a separate school board in today's format. What we want to do is look at it from the perspective of how that gets administered, and when you allow for a region to be created that overrides or encompasses an existing separate school board, what you're going to have is, effectively, the parents having to make choices: do they want them to go to the current school board, or do they want them to go to a school region? How do they make sure that their children have that choice?

The issue that we have to look at there, then, is how these kinds of inconsistencies can be worked out. I don't see anything in these amendments that deals with that kind of concern that has been raised by some of the members out there in the community. This is I guess the focus that a lot of them have expressed in the context of how they wanted to approach that in terms of making sure that as this bill went through, they had a chance to inform their members and get feedback from them. I guess if there was one thing that was common from all of the people that I talked to or that approached me over the last couple of weeks about Bill 16, it was that what they would like to see is a chance to have this bill held over till fall so that they could have a chance to get input to the government and express their concerns.

A lot of them felt that their major organizations were effectively trying to negotiate in too much of a hurry without consulting back with the local boards. What they would have appreciated would have been more of a chance to have some input and to go out and consult with their members, consult with the participants, and come back and decide whether or not they truly wanted to support it in this format or whether they wanted to work to suggest some real changes.

I guess as we go through and deal with the idea, what we're going to look at here in the section D amendments is the creation of the regional authorities that are talked about here. This is going to be some mix of public and separate school members. The interesting part here is that we're falling into the same trap that we fell into with the regional health authorities in the sense that we give the minister the option to appoint the first members of a regional authority. I don't see why. If we're going to go through the process of striking a regional authority for education, then why not give the members within that regional authority the chance, as part of that process, to develop and hold their elections rather than have the minister come in and say, "Gee, we're going to tell you who you can have on your board"?

In many cases what you'll see is that the people who are going to be appointed to the board are the ones who approached the minister to establish the regional authority. What we'll then have is a situation where in essence the input from the other members who will be affected by that regional authority will not necessarily have a chance to be participating in the founding structure because this will be done by the people who originally approached the government to create that authority.

Mr. Chairman, I think we recognize that this is within the context of the Francophone discussion. What we need to do is look at it in the context of the traditional school board or school authority. Now we're dealing with it in the context of the Francophone authority, and we have to make sure that those individuals have the same degree of choice and the same degree of opportunity as what is presented to Albertans that want to have their education system administration reflected through the normal either separate or public school authorizations.

The other interesting aspects that we don't see in some of the changes here in these amendments include some of the questions that came up about how the relationship was going to be maintained between charter schools and the public school system. I had a couple of individuals approach me about the conditions in here that will basically require charter schools to initially apply through the local school boards to be an alternative program. What we end up with is the option, then, that some of them wanted to be able to apply directly to the minister. So these kinds of concerns were raised. I think we have to make sure that these kinds of issues that are being raised by Albertans get a chance to be heard and do in essence then become part of the debate on how we're going to structure or put together the aspects of how our education system will best meet the needs of individuals and best meet the needs of the structural changes that we're proposing in the amendments to the amendment bill of the School Act.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

I guess as we look through it in the context of the other aspects that come up, section E of the amendments deals again with the Francophone area. What I read this to mean is that what we're going to see is that the Francophone and the public regional and separate regional boards have to deal with some kind of joint responsibility and issues that work out for them.

Thank you. I'll continue later.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a distinct responsibility and of grave importance that I rise today to speak to the amendments to Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, 2001.

As I look forward to speaking to the chair and through the chair to all members of the Assembly, I see that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed is wearing her Graham tartan, I believe. What a fitting tartan, because the Scots were long proud of their tartans, and the red tartans were worn by the hunters. That is exactly what we're doing today: we're hunting for good legislation for our school boards. We certainly are hoping that all members of this Assembly do join in this debate, because it is critical to the future direction of education in this province.

In speaking to amendment A1, I certainly want to commend those four members of Her Majesty's Official Opposition who spent the majority of the night here as well as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who also spent the night here, and spoke so proudly to keep this major issue progressing and at the front of our deliberations today.

Now, then, as other members have said, amendment A1 was a surprise amendment. When we have such a major amendment, members of this Assembly generally are afforded the opportunity to look at these amendments. They are afforded the opportunity to take amendments to the stakeholders. They are afforded the opportunity to bring different views and different ideas for consideration by members of this House. In all of this whole process this certainly hasn't taken place with members of this Assembly. I think that the public at large in this province are being cheated in the fact that they are not going to get the best possible legislation that they could.

As well, Mr. Chairman, I look here and I see that there are some 14 changes covered under amendment A1. It covers six different sections of the bill, and it really is a massive set of amendments which have come forward and have come forward very, very quickly. When I look at government bills that are proposed here in this spring session – and there seems to be such a huge, huge push on to get out of this House – I see that of the first 16 bills leading up to the School Amendment Act, 2001, 11 are amendment acts. If we know that we are making changes, changes in bills and changes that this particular amendment A1 covers, if we are looking at massive changes through so many bills, of which this is one, then what is the haste? Why are we so desperate to push this through without giving all stakeholders, without giving the Alberta School Boards Association and the Alberta school trustees the opportunity to look at these changes and to comment?

The number of us that attended the informative session of the Alberta School Boards Association, zones 2 and 3, last Thursday certainly heard from those people that they do not agree with Bill 16. They certainly haven't had the opportunity to see amendment A1. Therefore, what I'm having difficulty determining right now is why we've taken this approach of damn the torpedoes, it's full speed ahead, and we're going to ram this through no matter what.

Now, as well, Mr. Chairman, I noticed with a great deal of interest, when we were discussing the budget and line items that saw the teachers set at a 6 percent raise over the next two years, at 4 percent and 2 percent, how proud the Premier was to stand up in this Assembly and note how many educators were in his caucus. Yet we have not heard one person, not one of those educators speak to these amendments and the impact it's going to have on education. We had a provincial election a few months ago. We had people that said: "Oh, well, I can be your voice. Even though I'm a backbencher on the government side, I'll be your voice. I can contribute more." Well, where is the contribution?

I look forward to the Minister of Learning arriving and to hearing his comments on this particular bill and this particular amendment. I think it is absolutely critical, since he is the one responsible for overseeing education in this province, that he as well provide his comments, not only to make comments but to defend these massive changes, to defend the fact that members of this Assembly were not provided these amendments earlier and that all the stakeholders throughout this province were not afforded the opportunity to witness these amendments, to study them, and to make suggestions.

In dealing with this amendment, Mr. Chairman, I was very happy to see that people throughout this province had responded, had taken the time to write some very good letters to a number of members. I see a letter here to the Member for West Yellowhead from the Grande Yellowhead regional division that certainly outlined their problems with this bill. I saw a letter to the hon. Member for Barrhead-Westlock constituency, and this was written by the Pembina Hills regional division No. 7. I see a letter in here to the hon. Member for Leduc from the Black Gold regional schools. I see here a letter to the Minister of Learning from Aspen View schools. I see letters in here to the MLA for Redwater, again with concerns about this bill. They also wrote to the hon. member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, for Athabasca-Wabasca. I see a letter here to the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose from the Wetaskiwin regional public schools. This list continues to go on and on.

All of these, Mr. Chairman, are outlining grave concerns with Bill 16, yet these concerns, as far as I can see, have not been addressed in any of these amendments under amendment A1. Why have people in this province been shut out of this process? This expediency certainly doesn't seem to serve democracy well, particularly when we think of this Assembly and what it affords each and every member. It affords us the opportunity of free speech. It affords us the opportunity to get on our feet and make our views known. It affords us even more the opportunity to speak for the people of this great province. This type of expediency, this type of democracy is not what we were elected for.

So I think this is a very symbolic message to the people of Alberta. It is a strong message as well. It is a message that we in this House are not prepared to listen to the people of Alberta, and because of that we can say that this legislation is not going to be as strong and as good as it could be. It would not surprise me at all, Mr. Chairman, for us to be back in here with other amendments, again because we have rushed through and we have not done the job that we were given the responsibility to do.

Now, then, as I mentioned earlier and as I mentioned in debate yesterday, many members of this Assembly had the opportunity to attend a function just down the hill here at the Royal Glenora Club with the Alberta School Boards Association, zones 2 and 3. I can honestly say that in all the functions I've attended in the past four and a half years, I have never had concern about any piece of legislation exhibited to me to the same extent the people in that room did. These were people that were involved in both public and Catholic education. These people did have grave concerns.

It's amazing to me, Mr. Chairman. I was at a forum last fall. It was an educational forum on the establishment of a new high school very close to the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry, one that would have served a number of my constituents very well. I heard a prospective candidate that wanted to represent people in this House express his concerns about how he would make a difference if he were elected. So I look forward to that person making comments in this House so he can reinforce and support what he said at that meeting. Certainly with his grave concerns on education I would think that he would certainly be more than willing to take the opportunity to get on his feet and comment about amendment A1.

As well, when I look at amendment A1, what we have here is a total disregard for the local governments that we have elected to take care of our schools, our local school boards. It continues to be a disregard, in my estimation, of the respect that some of us hold for public education. There are substantial changes here in the way education will be administered in this province by, first of all, the bill, the School Amendment Act, 2001, and more specifically by amendment A1 to Bill 16.

Again, with so many amendments, Mr. Chairman, it certainly indicates that we are drafting legislation which has not had adequate consultation. We are drafting legislation which has been rushed. We are drafting legislation here that is not complete and does not meet the needs of Albertans. So why are we here in an all-night session introducing amendment A1, to the best of my knowledge, at 6 a.m.?

I thought the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona made some excellent points when he said: here we are debating amendment A1, which is going to affect all children in this province and their education, yet the rest of the province is asleep. Why are they not afforded the opportunity to look at this legislation? Why are they not afforded the opportunity to speak and put forth their recommendations to amendment A1? We know they are interested. This group of letters that I referred to earlier from all across this great province urge the government not to speed through this, to seek input.

In drafting these amendments I think we are making a huge mistake. We are doing a disservice to Albertans when we do not afford them the opportunity to scrutinize the amendments, particularly when we look at the amendment to section 5(b), where we certainly have the opportunity to deal with grammatical errors that could drastically change the intent. Yet we have not put the brakes on. We have not said, "Well, are there mistakes here?" Should, in fact, that comma be placed after – and I'm looking at section 5(b), subsection (2) – "An application may be made to the Minister only . . ."

Now, then, in hearing the chairman rule previously, he said that the way it is written is correct. So what does this mean? Is the minister the only one that can deal with an application now? Or do we go on and say: an application made to the minister only if the board of the district or division in which the school is to be established refuses to establish an alternative program under section 16 as requested by the person or society.

So we have ambiguity here and no clear direction. Therefore, I think this is one of the sections, Mr. Chairman, that we would be well-advised at this point to stop debate on to allow for further clarification. Of course, that would also give the stakeholders, the people that are affected by open and responsible government, the opportunity to speak to this amendment.

Now, then, as well, Mr. Chairman, I see that under these amendments – and it was mentioned earlier by one of the speakers – separate school boards presently do not go across this province. When we look at the reason, there is a very good reason. The major reason that we do not have separate school boards across this province is population.

At the reception last Thursday it was very evident that Catholic members who spoke to me were quite concerned about the impact of this legislation on small communities and the long-lasting effects that it would have if in fact separate schools were established where their population is very, very small.

Now, as well, Catholic education in this province also has some very serious concerns when we start dealing with blended jurisdictions. What these amendments will do is remove control over Catholic education in blended boards across this province, and this certainly is not in keeping with what is presently in the act and the powers that have been given to Catholic boards in this province.

When we look at amendment A1, the changes that it will make, it also eliminates the choice for electors. When this proposed legislation was sent out to these particular boards, the choice for the electors was only for newly formed divisions, yet I see that with amendment A1 this provision will be removed and it will be for all divisions in the province.

So, Mr. Chairman, as my time winds down here for comments on amendment A1 to Bill 16, I would like to urge all members of this Assembly to stop, to allow all Albertans to have an opportunity to speak to these amendments. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to speak to the amendment A1, A through F, and to urge everybody here to hasten our consideration of these amendments. I'd like specifically to address some of them in particular: section A, subsection (2). There has been some discussion this morning on the grammatical correctness of section (b)(2), and I'd like everybody to go back and remember what happened when you took grammar in grade school. Quite frankly, "only if" is a recognized conjunction, and "only" here is not used as an adverb. So it is a grammatically correct sentence.

I would like everyone to recognize the fact, too, that the substance of this amendment speaks to the fact that we are looking for co-operation and for consideration among the parties involved, and if they are not able to arrive at it, then at that point the minister would assist them in their decision. So it is a very wise and judicious amendment that is being proposed here.

Section B speaks to the duty to report. I have spoken to a number of people in my constituency, and section 90.1(1) does make reference to some action of duty to report. When I spoke to the people in my constituency, they said: surely to goodness this is already in the School Act; provision for this kind of action and, in fact, red-flagging this issue is there. I told them it wasn't, and they said: well, thank goodness, then, that this proposal is to be put into it.

I'd like to make reference, then, to section D: 33(a),(b),and (c). They again speak to the proper proportional representation that would be there on the regional authority so that there could be harmonious and direct resolution to issues that would be all-encompassing for that area. So definitely there is attention being paid in these amendments to what must be the detail of how these boards would function.

Section E: 223.35(1), (2), 3(a) and (b) all make reference to the responsibility and the authority of the respective regional authorities to make sure that the respective groups mentioned in our Constitution and the rights of the minority are respected. So I take great umbrage at the fact that someone earlier this morning made reference to the fact that we were pitting Catholics against Protestants or public against separate. Quite frankly, this is in recognition of the rights and privileges that are inherent in the Constitution with respect to separate and public and also, I would add, further in the act with respect to the Francophone in section 23 of the Charter.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

So, Mr. Chairman, I would like to urge everyone here to look at the wisdom of these amendments, to stop making reference to what might happen under the worst scenario, because quite frankly these amendments are put here so that the wrong things will not happen and the right course of action and procedure will take place. They are good, they are appropriate, and I would ask everyone in this Assembly to support them.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was pleased to listen to the previous speaker and the comments that were made. The fact that the amendments don't address the key issues in the ongoing debate, I think, has not been properly noted by that member.

I was remiss the last time I spoke in looking at section 33 under the amendment D on page 2 of the amendments. It talks about the representation on a regional authority and the proportions of that representation and then goes on in section (2.2) to indicate that "a Regional authority must have at least one public school member and . . . one separate school member." As I went through my list of things that weren't there and were expected by the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, I was remiss in indicating that this in fact was an amendment they had suggested, and the wording is almost the wording that was provided by the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. That was my expectation, Mr. Chairman, that we would see more of the proposals put forward by the three associations and that that would be reflected in the amendments before us. We could look at an amendment and say, yes, that was put forward by the Public School Boards' Association or the Alberta School Boards Association and we can see the reason for it being there. That, I guess, is the failing we see, or at least I see, in the process we're involved in in the consideration of these amendments.

I think underlying the amendments was a set of proposals from the Public School Boards' Association. They set forward a set of principles which I thought would've made it easy for the government to draft these amendments. They had, as I said, a set of principles, and there were six of those principles. One of the very first was that they did not support any legislation that promoted the separation of students one from another or which promoted the fragmentation of community interests. If you look at the provisions of the amendments and of the bill itself, that fragmentation is actually promoted, and I'm sure the Public School Boards' Association had some suggestions as to how that might have been relieved in the legislation.

A second principle they had was that both potential minorities, Protestants and Roman Catholics, be treated evenhandedly, and that would seem to be a reasonable principle to work on. Again, Mr. Chairman, as we look at the amendments in A1 and the bill itself, I think that's not a principle that's being adhered to by the drafters of this legislation.

In the provisions we have, another principle they thought was important was that the minority faith have the opportunity to say no to a separate education for their children. Again, I'm sure there were amendments they would bring forward for consideration that would have addressed that principle. Mr. Chairman, as with the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, I didn't put them forward as amendments that had to be supported, but I put them forward as examples that have come from highly interested organizations and suggestions that had been ignored.

A further principle that the Public School Boards' Association thought was important was that decisions about education and minority faith should be made by people living in those communities and not in communities remote from them. They gave as an example Jasper, and they raised the question: why is it better to have the decision about separate school education in Jasper made by separate school trustees who live 50 or 250 miles away rather than the residents of Jasper itself? So that was a further principle they had put forth as being one they would like considered as adjustments to Bill 16 were undertaken.
