Now, the budget for the streets improvement program was $60 million in 2000-2001, yet only $25 million of this money was spent. That is amazing. I don't know how the streets are in Edmonton-Glengarry, but certainly in sections of Edmonton-Gold Bar there are some rather large potholes. Ball joints, tie-rod ends: sometimes I think they're going to fall off. This is quite a difference, but this year the estimate is $51 million, down again from $60 million. Can the minister provide some background on these numbers, specifically why the full budget was not spent. Was it a matter of material, labour costs, contracts? I'm very curious about that when I consider my own neighbourhood and exactly the conditions of the streets.

Again to the minister regarding municipal partnerships, program 2.3, why is the capital investment for resource roads dropping from $4 million to $1 million? What projects were funded in 2000-2001, and what projects are on the list for 2001-2002? Will the minister please provide a list of all the projects that were funded under the street improvement project in 2000-2001? It would be very interesting to see this. What streets were actually done, and how many kilometres of streets were actually improved?

Now, again under municipal water and wastewater grants, line 2.3.5, what projects were funded under this program in 2000-2001?

The budget for this program was $29 million, yet again we see there was $19 million spent. I don't know if the $10 million was left on the table or where it went. For 2001-2002 the budget is set at $35 million. Municipalities have said how hard it is to get money for water and wastewater projects because everyone seems to need money for this program. The waiting lists are so long that necessary projects can often be put on hold for a year or two until funding is available. What projects does the minister anticipate funding in 2001-2002?

Now, water management infrastructure. I understand here the 2001-2002 operating estimate was over $33 million. For 2000-2001 the actual budget was $32 million, and the operating budget was identical. It was also $32 million. What projects were funded for the $20 million spent on capital investment in water management infrastructure in 2000-2001, and what projects again are on the list for 2001-2002? What is the minister's view on the Meridian dam project in southern Alberta?

Now, on line item 2.5, infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, what projects does the minister anticipate funding with the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program? Could the minister please provide some background about the application and approval process for grants under this program? I certainly know of situations in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar where this money could be put to very good use, and I'm sure that also applies for Edmonton-Glengarry and Edmonton-Mill Woods as well.

In line 2.7, the financial transactions, the budget for consumption of inventories is increasing from $9.5 million to 15 and a half million dollars. Could the minister please provide some explanation as to what is covered by this budget and the reason for the substantial increase in 2001-2002?

Mr. Chairman, I also have at this time some questions from the business plan, and these are questions about the business plan from the year 2001 to the year 2004. The first goal here is to improve transportation safety with Justice, the Solicitor General, Government Services, and Innovation and Science. There's going to be permission to "allow enforcement services electronic access to ministry transportation safety data." This is on page 337. Now, will the minister please provide some background information on the cross-ministry initiative to "allow enforcement services electronic access to ministry transportation safety data"?

On page 337 also there is discussion to "develop a process to license private sector mechanics to repair and inspect vehicles written off in Alberta or other provinces." I don't know if I'm at all in agreement with this, but my question to the minister at this time would be: what is the current process for inspection and repair of written-off vehicles, and how will this change with the new process to license private-sector mechanics to perform this service? Who will manage this process and set the standards?

Now, we have to be very, very careful about this, and I'm sure at some time the Minister of Government Services is certainly going to have an opinion on this. Every time we see a consumer advocate talk, there is always discussion about write-offs from other provinces winding up shiny and looking new on Alberta streets and highways, but in reality these are not safe vehicles, and the state of repair and the condition of them has led to not only frustrated consumers but unsafe conditions on the highways. Whenever I see this, it just amazes me where these vehicles come from, how many there will be. Will it be cars? Will it be trucks? Will it be tractor trailers for the transportation industry? I need a lot more information than this.

Now goal 2, enhance transportation infrastructure planning and management. On page 338: "evaluate long-term funding requirements for municipal infrastructure in conjunction with the [AUMA] and the [AAMD and C]." Will evaluating the long-term funding requirements for municipal infrastructure take place in another Premier's task force on infrastructure, or will it take on some other form? Another question following from that one is: what is the time line for this evaluation?

Also on page 338 there's a discussion on exploring "opportunities for the deployment of Intelligent Transportation Systems technologies to improve the safety and efficiency of the provincial transportation network." What precisely is the intelligent transportation system? Where does the safety and efficiency of our highways need to be improved? Is this a government initiative, or is it a joint initiative with industry?

Goal 4, to improve access to global markets. "Partner with Canadian and United States governments and the State of Montana to operate a joint border crossing facility in Coutts." Will the minister provide some information on the joint border crossing facility at Coutts?

Now, on page 339 there is further discussion on evaluating "trends in rural transportation." Also on that page, to "promote the establishment of an efficient grain handling and transportation system that is based on commercial principles." How will the minister evaluate trends in rural transportation? Will the minister please table copies of any reports or studies the government has on the long-term effects of grain trucks and other agricultural vehicles on secondary paved and gravel roads? Another question for the hon. minister is: does the promotion of "the establishment of an efficient grain handling and transportation system that is based on commercial principles" mean that the minister is again looking at toll roads?

Now, the question that also comes to mind, Mr. Chairman – and it's again directed to the minister – is: at what point will I be able to drive to Calgary on a three-lane highway in both directions? As the province has grown, many of the hon. members that commute by automobile to Calgary who represent Calgary ridings are probably going to have to consider promoting this, and that's the idea of three lanes in each direction, north and south, between Calgary and Edmonton. I've looked at this. I'm sure there are studies being done by the minister's department, and I would be very anxious to have a glance at them. I would be now asking the hon. minister if he could table these, because I would like to see what sort of cost would be involved in this. I think the initial design of the road may have been included in the span on the overpasses. That would certainly benefit the economies of both cities, and it would certainly enhance safety. I'm very anxious to see the cost of this.

Now, I would also like to ask the minister if there's been a cost-benefit analysis done regarding the privatization of all the road maintenance that's gone on and what sort of quality control is being conducted as far as the quality of paving that's going on. I know there's a stretch of road out by Edson that had to be resurfaced. I for one as a regular commuter on that road to Jasper and to Hinton am not impressed at all with that surface. I've received a few gravel cracks in my windscreen because of that road, and I would like to know what sort of cost-benefit analysis is being done.

I'm disappointed that my time is up. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to ask some questions and to make some comments about the Transportation estimates and business plan before us this evening.

I wanted to start off, if I might, with some comments about the business plan. I know that the split-off from Infrastructure must have caused some difficulties for the department and some difficulties for the staff, but I wondered why the advice of the Auditor General in terms of the preparation of business plans has largely been ignored by the Transportation department. I go back to what the Auditor General said in the last report. He made a number of recommendations about government business plans, and his first recommendation was:

We recommend that the Department of Treasury, in conjunction with other ministries, clearly define the core measures and targets in the government business plan.

So my question is: has the department been working with Treasury on the business plans that are presented in this department's portion of the budget?

The second recommendation talks about ministry business plans too. He says:

We recommend that ministries, with assistance from the Department of Treasury, improve the link between goals and core businesses in ministry business plans."

He has a third recommendation.

We recommend that ministries, in conjunction with the Department of Treasury, ensure that all performance measures in ministry business plans include clearly defined targets.

He goes on to make some comments that there needs to be further improvements to the targets. I think the criticisms that the Auditor General makes certainly apply to the business plans here.

If you look at the business plans of the ministry, the goals are set out fairly clearly, the objectives I think are fairly clear, and certainly the key strategies provide a great deal of detail for us. But when you look at, for instance, goal 4, which is to "improve access to global markets," there are four objectives: to develop the north/south trade corridor, encourage consistent trucking standards between Canada and the United States, and so on. Then you go over and look at the key performance measures for goal 4, and you only find one. That is the percentage of "four-laning open to travel." Well, it hardly is a performance measure that can be used to evaluate the objectives that are listed under goal 4 and completely misses any of the key strategies.

I know there's a footnote under one of them – it's not under this one – that measures are being developed. Surely, given the history of business plans and business plan development with this government since 1993, we're further along the road with the development of performance measures for the business plans. The performance measures here are really, really very limited, and in terms of judging the success of the department in assuring us that the money is being well spent, these are going to provide us really very limited information the next time we find ourselves looking at the business plan and trying to evaluate whether or not the money that the department had was well spent.

You know, I don't think I make too much of the matter, Mr. Chairman. The government has invested a great deal and has asked for the public's confidence in terms of its budgeting process based on the three-year business plans. They're referred to often by commentators and critics when they look at the government and its operations, and they're always looked on in a favourable light. Certainly the Auditor General has wholeheartedly adopted and promoted a system of performance measures.

I go back to the advice the Auditor General gave, and I mentioned it when we looked at the Department of Infrastructure.

The business plan is a performance contract with the Legislature and the public. When it does not clearly describe the performance measures then various interpretations are possible. Since the business plan is the basis against which performance is measured it is important that the desired measurement and expected results be clearly defined.

That's not the case, I don't think, with the Department of Transportation.

There has been a great deal of work done and a great deal of work that should give us confidence that things are headed in the right direction and that there is a pretty good articulation of goals. But the next step, that advice we need, the measures that would say, "Yes, this much progress has been made," or "No, in this area we aren't making the progress that we want" are not there. I think it's unfortunate, as I said, that we're this far along with the government claiming that business plans are a useful instrument in terms of the budgeting process and an instrument that makes transparent the government's operation and that the plans don't reflect those statements.

Given the number of questions there are about the Transportation budget, it goes back to the Auditor General, and his comment is: "In our view, clearly defined measures and targets in the business plan should not require extensive additional disclosure." He's saying that if you lay out the objectives and the goals of the department clearly and you put in place the appropriate measures, then we shouldn't be spending a great deal of time in this Legislature going back and asking for additional information. That's certainly not the case to this point.

So I would ask the minister in the terms I asked before: what work has been done with Treasury in terms of performance measures, and what can we expect in the future? What kind of work is in progress in terms of those performance measures?

I have a couple of specific questions. I'm not sure, at least for one of these questions, that this is the appropriate place to ask it, but maybe the minister can advise me. The concern is with ineligible drivers being kept off the road. I notice that there's been some work done by the department with the Solicitor General's department. The concern that's been raised by at least one of my constituents has been that drivers will obtain a licence, will show the insurance certificates, and then have their insurance canceled and will be driving on the highways without insurance yet still with a valid licence plate. I wondered if that problem has been addressed. Is there a process in place where, when insurance is canceled, the authorities are automatically alerted to the fact that there is a driver who now has a valid licence plate and is not insured? Exactly what is being done?

Again, I'm not sure this is the ministry that would address that problem, but it seems to me it could fall under Transportation in terms of expecting that those drivers would be kept off the road. If it hasn't, I wonder if it can't be pursued. I think I had at least one constituent very concerned. He'd been hit by a driver who had a valid licence plate but who had gone out and canceled his insurance, and it put the constituent in a very difficult position.

I look at the key strategies under "improve road user behaviour" and the number of really good programs that are under way there. Are those done in co-operation with the Department of Learning? The kinds of cross-ministry projects that are under way have been mentioned in a couple of places, but it isn't mentioned here in terms of promoting traffic safety and traffic safety messages. Are those done in conjunction with schools and with the Ministry of Learning?

Here is the reference I wanted, under goal 1, objective 3:

With Justice, Solicitor General, Government Services, and Innovation and Science, allow enforcement services electronic access to ministry transportation safety data.

So there's that cross-ministry co-operation there, and I wondered if the same was possible in terms of the problem I raised with uninsured drivers being on the highways of the province.

Again, if you look at the key strategies, they really cry for some performance measures. Under "provide for the safe operation of railways under provincial jurisdiction through the proclamation of the new Railway Act," the objective is to "enhance rail safety." How are we going to know at the end of the day that rail safety has been enhanced? What are the kinds of measures that are going to be in place that will tell us there has been progress made on this? Will it be the number of rail accidents? Just exactly what will be the key measures? You can go through the strategies and pose that same question.

I wondered about providing the cities of Calgary and Edmonton with annual funding based on the 5 cents per litre of fuel delivered for road use and the provisions for other cities, if that is being found to be an adequate base for those municipalities and their use. Is it going to provide the kind of support they need to adequately provide transportation facilities in those cities?

I had a question about the north/south trade corridor. There's been a lot of confidence placed in the development of that corridor in terms of it increasing trade, and I wonder if there is information available, the information base those projections are based upon. You know, it seems to be accepted that if you twin the roads north and south, that will improve transportation and encourage trade, but is there any hard data to say that that is actually the case? Or will it just make driving and access for current users more convenient? I wondered if there was information that could be shared with us in terms of, yes, that in fact is going to increase trade. Is there some percentage figure that can be given to us to justify the expense that that project is costing taxpayers?

There's a question I had about the organization of the department itself. It seemed to me that in the past there was a great cutting of Transportation staff by one of the previous ministers. Now there are a number of strategies to build up that staff and to recruit additional staff. I wonder if we could have some information on that. Is this new initiative needed because of the cost cutting that went on before and the kind of staff that was lost? The strategies here seem to be identical, or at least some of them are, to those that we found in the Department of Infrastructure. Again, my question is: are we paying now a price for the kind of departmental cutting that went on before? It's under goal 5, objective 1 and objective 2, and it's the human resource plan that I would like some more information on from the minister.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that those are most of my comments. There have been a lot of questions raised this evening about the Transportation budget, and I look forward to the response from the minister.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: Any further questions?

I'll call upon the minister for his concluding remarks.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I can't reply in five minutes to all of the questions that were raised but can assure the hon. members across the floor that we will respond to them as quickly as possible.

I do want to just make one comment. To provide a list, a description of every street in Alberta that was paved or rehabbed under the street improvement program will probably take half a year. Can you imagine hundreds of millions of dollars poured into street improvement, and you're going to say: west off X to . . . I mean, let's get a little serious here. We can put it all together, but be careful what you're asking for, because it takes reams and reams of people and information to put this all together to say just what street was paved in every community in Alberta. There's a lot of money that was spent here, so I don't think we can give you the actual description of every street in just a couple days, because that's a heck of a lot of work.

With respect to, very quickly, new rules for driving, there is no agreement in place. The federal government had promised open consultation right across the country. They didn't have one consultation at all. Alberta was the only province that conducted consultations on hours of driving. We're not proceeding until we get the federal government to the table, and they seem to be reluctant to do that at this particular time. Contrary to what was said we're actually decreasing hours, not increasing.

The north/south trade corridor. The number of dollars spent on infrastructure in 10 years: we got about $30 million back for the roughly $600 million a year we send to Ottawa in fuel tax. We got some of it back. We can certainly accelerate even more the road program in the province. The accident rate on the north/south trade corridor: as we improve the road, definitely there is a change in the accidents, and we'll try and get a measurement on that.

Where it shows a decrease in budget, I'd like to remind the hon. members that it's actually as a result of accelerated funding in the previous year. As a result, the municipalities got an increase last year, and that's reflected in this year's estimates.

I want to reiterate that there is no policy being developed by the government for toll roads, regardless of the position taken by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that we must support them, I guess.

In municipal partnerships we've advanced funding. Edmonton saw almost a doubling in grants. They're now receiving 5 cents a litre of every litre of fuel sold in Edmonton. It goes directly to road infrastructure. That's a huge increase in grants. I believe it's about $65 million for Edmonton.

ICAP, which is the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program: we're working with municipalities. We have the money in place now, but remember that the federal portion may not arrive here for at least six years.

The other thing is: I would like an example of some of the cars that have apparently been sold in Alberta that have been put together, pieced together here that come from other provinces. Can you give me an example of that and send that to me in writing so that we can respond? That's rather important, and I take that accusation quite seriously.

With respect to grain transportation, yes, there are a number of grain trucks on the highways. We've got to move a lot of the grain. Much of it is not leaving the province; it's going to value-added locations in the province. Again, there was some tie there to toll roads, and we're definitely not forming any kind of policy with respect to toll roads in the province.

Privatization of maintenance has saved us millions of dollars. We'll bring that forward to the Legislature.

I'd just like to say in closing that we are working very closely with the Auditor General in developing performance measures that are easy to measure but also easy to communicate to fellow Albertans. We'll do whatever we can to reach some agreement on them, because a lot of it is rather subjective in terms of you may think this road is rather smooth but I may think it's a little rough. We'll do whatever we can to co-operate with the Auditor General.

The rest we'll bring together and send it in writing in a response.

THE CHAIRMAN: That concludes this part of the evening.

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Transportation, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$1,542,628,000
--	-----------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the votes and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following departments:

Infrastructure: operating expense and capital investment, $2,832,240,000.

Transportation: operating expense and capital investment, $1,542,628,000

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:38 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 2, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/02

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 28 individuals from Calgary who are asking that Stockwell Day be "made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 25 people from Edmonton urging the Legislative Assembly "to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation" suit.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 31 residents of Calgary urging the Legislative Assembly "to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose."

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion or belief that human life is sacred.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 94 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that were presented Monday, April 30, 2001, and I can advise the House that all but two of the petitions comply with Standing Orders 85 to 89.

The committee has considered the remaining petitions and recommends to the Assembly that Standing Order 89(1)(b) be waived for the petition for the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001, subject to the petitioner completing the necessary advertising before the committee hears the petitioner.

The committee also recommends that the petition for ING Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001, be deemed to have satisfied the requirements for advertising under Standing Order 86(1)(b).

Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

THE SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table five copies of an information bulletin from Community Development commemorating the inaugural Grant MacEwan author awards, which took place today at Government House. I was honoured to represent our Premier and our government at this important inaugural awards ceremony and particularly privileged to present these inaugural awards to Mr. Fred Stenson of Calgary for his book The Trade and the Grant MacEwan author inaugural award also to Ms Erin Knight for her book May Without Snow. She's an Edmontonian, and she's the inaugural recipient of the Grant MacEwan young author scholarship. All of this was done in the presence and in the good company of Dr. MacEwan's daughter, Heather MacEwan Foran. I want to extend our heartfelt congratulations to these two winners, to Ms Knight and to Mr. Stenson, and to all the finalists who were in attendance.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table with the Assembly today the National Child Benefit Progress Report: 2000. Also, I have the 2000 annual report of the Alberta Association of Architects, the 1998-99 annual report of the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association, the 2000 annual report of the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta, the 2000 annual report of the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association, and the 1999-2000 financial statements of the Certified Management Accountants of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a press release dated April 25 from the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board which addresses the rollout of the proposed public safety and sour gas implementation plans, and that responds to well over a year of consultation, public input, and comments by constituents across Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of 27 recommendations contained in the Tupper report called Integrity in Government in Alberta: Towards the Twenty First Century. This 1996 report reviewed the Conflicts of Interest Act, and these recommendations continue to call for adoption.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this afternoon for the benefit of the Assembly a letter that I received through freedom of information from the Department of Municipal Affairs. This is dated January 10, 1994, and it indicates that there was a ministerial review of the certification process of pine shakes being conducted by the then minister of labour.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd table five copies of 162 letters, each from Calgary constituents and all of which were copied to the Minister of Learning, opposing the closure of Glenmeadows elementary school in Calgary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from Anne Brown, spokesperson for the Heartland Citizens' Coalition. Ms Brown's group is concerned that the full environmental and public health implications to Alberta's heartland, a proposed 194 square kilometre industrial development to the northeast of Edmonton, have not been considered.

My second tabling is five copies of an article that appeared in a Dutch newspaper about the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. The article suggests that the former Environment minister supports importing foreign waste into Alberta to keep the plant operating.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, all concerned with power plants in the centre of cities which have been rejuvenated into something new and wonderful. The first is the home page from the Battersea Power Station Community Group detailing the work that they've done. It's being reborn into an office and shopping complex, the centre of a new residential area.

The second series of tablings, of which I have the appropriate five copies, is an additional newspaper article detailing how they have gone about transforming the Battersea power plant into this complex.

The final tabling, Mr. Speaker, is an excerpt from a web site for the Steam Plant Square, which is a redeveloped power plant in Spokane, Washington, a very similar building to the Rosedale power plant here in Edmonton, both of them excellent examples of what is possible.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with two tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a series of articles from the esteemed medical journal called The Lancet which outline in some detail the concerns that many international trade agreements represent for public health care.

The second tabling is five copies of a report outlining in great detail the concerns with the conflicts of interest in the Calgary regional health authority.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table five copies of a letter from Margaret Coumts, president of the Red Deer River Naturalists. The Red Deer River Naturalists are concerned that the government is about to sign a deal with Spray Lakes Sawmills to log a significant part of Kananaskis without any public input.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The other day I had the honour and privilege of introducing to the Legislature a former colleague in the Legislature, Mr. Rollie Cook, the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. Mr. Cook has returned today to watch question period and has brought with him two special guests, Mr. and Mrs. Pan from Hebei, China, near Beijing. Mr. Pan is president of a large construction company that's looking at making investments in Alberta. Mr. and Mrs. Pan and Mr. Cook have joined us in the members' gallery, and I'd ask the House to join me in welcoming and saying [remarks in Chinese].

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to introduce a group of children from the A.H. Dakin school in Edson. There are 31 of them and five helpers. I would also like to express my thanks for them being here today during Education Week with their theme being A World of Opportunity. At this time I would like them to stand and be recognized.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through to the members of this Assembly Mr. Richard Arcand, a managing director of the newly opened Aboriginal Business Development Centre, whose vision is to develop, promote, and assist in sustenance of aboriginal entrepreneurs in the city of Edmonton. In 1991 Mr. Arcand was instrumental in the evolution of the Western Aboriginal Development Alliance group, an organization whose aim was to promote and enhance aboriginal employment and business development in the corporate sector. I would ask Mr. Arcand to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly a resident of Rocky Mountain House, an individual who has been described by a former education minister as one of the best high school principals in the province of Alberta. I'd asked Jimmy Clark to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 26 students from Alberta College. They are accompanied today by their teacher or group leader Miss Kim Rusnak. I see them in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 17 grades 4, 5, and 6 students from Queen Alexandra school, which is located in Edmonton-Strathcona. These students are accompanied by their teacher Mr. Jim Higgs and parents Mrs. Rosemary Litschel and Mr. Ron Cresey. They're all seated in the public gallery. Queen Alexandra school was built in 1906 and is the oldest operating school in Alberta and has a proud history of many achievements. I would now ask these guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a total of 14 visitors. Ten are grade 6 students from the Waskatenau school in the constituency of Redwater, which I'm proud to represent. Accompanying them are teacher Mrs. Barb Cyrynowski and parent helpers Mrs. Sandra Rozak, Mrs. Becky Mulak, and Mr. Zen Gurba. This being Education Week, it gives us a world of opportunity to visit the Legislature here, and I also had the opportunity to visit the school in Waskatenau. I can tell you that the quality of questions these students asked was very good, and I think you have to credit it to the teacher that teaches them but also to parents at home, because I'm sure that with some of the questions that came out, they must have sat at the kitchen table to discuss them. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Dan MacLennan, president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Accompanying Mr. MacLennan are Dan Tilleman, chair of local 52, and Barbara Jenkins. I will be meeting with this group later on this afternoon. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two days ago in this House the Premier defended the different wage increases offered to nurses and teachers by arguing that whereas teachers had received a 17 percent increase over the past four years, Alberta nurses had not. Nurses actually received 16.9 percent over the same four years. My question is to the Premier. Given that both teachers and nurses have in fact received similar wage increases over the past four years, what's the real reason the Premier is treating Alberta teachers differently than Alberta nurses?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement my answer. Before I provide an answer, I don't recall ever saying that nurses had not received a wage increase. I did allude to teachers having received a 17 percent wage increase I believe over a period of four years.

Relative to the situation vis-a-vis negotiations with the various school jurisdictions relative to teachers' salaries, I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed the teachers have received a 17 percent increase since 1992-93. Included in that is a 5 percent decrease, where they have actually gone down to 12 percent net over that time frame.

The rationale for not treating teachers exactly the same as nurses is that they are different occupations. What we have done is we have taken what I feel is a much fairer look at the various salaries by comparing teachers with teachers in other jurisdictions across Canada. That way we compare teachers with teachers, nurses with nurses, doctors with doctors.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Is it fair that you limit school boards to a 6 percent increase for teachers or else take it out of instructional grants when you put no such limit when the health authorities were dealing with their nurses?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't comment on the health authorities, but I will comment on the statements that the hon. member has made. I'll draw the member back to the last 50 years or even more that has occurred in Alberta. Up until now what has occurred: the teacher increases come out of the general per student grants. Over the last 50 years the school boards have had to make the decision: should I give money to the teachers' salaries, or should I put the money into the classroom?

What I have done this time in this budget is I've included two pots of money. One pot of money must go to teachers, so at a minimum they must get the 4 percent and 2 percent. The school boards have the ability on the other 3 and a half percent, which I would remind the hon. member is a half a percent more than what they were expecting last year – they have the ability to use it for classroom issues. They have the ability to use it for teachers' salaries. They have the ability to use it for computers. They have the ability to use it as they wish, because during the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, I heard from the school boards that they wanted flexibility in their funds.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the Premier explain how his government gives school boards the spending flexibility to ensure teachers are paid fairly when actually they have to make the trade-off between fair wages and classroom instruction?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister just pointed out, school boards in this province have had to do that for the last 50 years or so. I believe that was the figure he used. The difference this time around and with respect to this budget is that a line item has been put in guaranteeing teachers at least a 6 percent wage increase and out of the other component in the budget to allow school boards to negotiate for even a further increase if the school boards deem that an increase is warranted.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Marketing

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has said that increased generation of electricity will lead to increased competition and choice for consumers. Well, another truck of groceries at the same store in town does not increase competition. My question is to the Premier. With so few retailers, how is an increased number of generators going to lead to increased choice for consumers?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker – and I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement – the whole issue of competition of course is a matter that can and will be adjudicated by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. In a letter to Mr. Lorne Olsvik – I imagine I'm going to have to table this letter, and I don't mind doing that – the minister says:

I do agree with you that retail competition has been slow to develop for smaller consumers. The government is working to help retail markets develop. As part of the government's 7-point Retail Transition Market Plan for electricity, a Retail Issues Subcommittee was established to address these issues. The Subcommittee is expected to provide its recommendations by the end of [this month].

So we recognize this as a problem, Mr. Speaker, and we are taking steps to address the problem.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: is the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board going to look at retailing options being proposed by new generators to determine if that application actually enhances competition and choice for consumers, or is it just going to be based on their ability to generate?

MR. KLEIN: Again, if the hon. minister wishes to supplement, if he so desires. I will quote further from the letter relative to this specific issue. The minister goes on to say, and he refers specifically to the ATCO retail component:

The EUB's approval will be also required for the sale of the ATCO retail businesses. The Board will determine, based on the public interest, if the sale should go ahead or what conditions or arrangements should be attached to the sale.

I would imagine this relates to any retailing component of electricity. This all of course refers to the whole issue of competition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The other side of the competitive aspect of this market is that we are seeing now expert companies start to handle groups of customers. Then we can expect to see further competition in that area, where at the household end you would conceivably have a company that would supply you with a multiplicity of services at a cheaper price.

So the competitive pressures of the marketplace, Mr. Speaker, come from two places: one, from companies offering multiple services; secondly, from increased power supply where people may decide to be in the retail business themselves. So there's increasing pressure to create more and more competition in the retail marketplace.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy. You're trying to tell the House that two marketers bundling goods together so that people don't have a choice actually creates more competition and more choice? I'm sorry, Mr. Minister.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you. We are trying to say that there are two marketplaces unfolding here, Mr. Speaker. We do know that more power generation, the type of generation that has been announced by Calpine, 250 megawatts – that would light 250,000-plus homes in Alberta per year. We're talking about 80 megawatts from Pan-Canadian, announced a week ago. We're talking about the 80 megawatts announced from TransCanada PipeLine. We're talking about well over 600 megawatts, or 10 to 12 percent of the power supply, being added as well as people who are in a position to deliver more efficiently services to the households of Albertans today.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Gas Marketing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A major role of the EUB is consumer protection, yet the EUB recently approved an application by ATCO Gas to pass a financing charge on to customers to cover some of the costs of natural gas. My questions are to the Premier. Why are customers being held accountable for business risks taken by marketers?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is simply the role of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board; that is, to determine what is fair for the producer or the deliverer of a service, whether it's gas or electricity, and what is in the public interest and what is fair for the consumer.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, if I could just add to that. Of course the member has seen the public hearings held by the Energy and Utilities Board with respect to gas pricing, but at no time when I reviewed the list of intervenors did I see the Liberal Party of Alberta in there.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how can the Premier call the passing of financing fees by marketers on to the consumer consumer protection?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we don't direct the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to take into account specific items, but we do direct them and they have the mandate through legislation to determine what will be a reasonable rate of return for the producer and what steps need to be taken to protect the consumer.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, it also gives the opportunity, as you see competitive marketplaces unfolding, for the market to determine what these prices are and how they should best be set. That's the whole fundamental foundation of both electricity competition in the marketplace as well as gas deregulation, which has been in place since 1985.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: does the Premier agree that exit fees of up to $60 for a residential user to a marketer actually reduces competition and consumer choice?

MR. KLEIN: Well, you know, it's certainly not for me to comment, especially when there is a regulatory agency that has the power to adjudicate whether this fee is indeed fair or whether it isn't fair. Again I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. SMITH: That's exactly the point, Mr. Speaker, behind the hearings that took place. Again, if the member has information that he can put in front of a world-respected regulatory board, then he is more than welcome to put it forward in a public hearing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Conflict of Interest Court Case

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier said yesterday that he would be inquiring of the Attorney General about matters relating to a former member of the Alberta Gaming Commission. Exactly what concerns or facts did the Premier have that led him to decide to make these inquiries of the Attorney General?

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

THE SPEAKER: A second here, please. It's my understanding that there currently is a case before the judicial system in the province of Alberta, and I want hon. members to be very, very careful about the line of questioning and any responses with respect to this matter.

Now, I'm going to look at the hon. Government House Leader, who is also the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and I'm going to ask him a question: is this matter currently before the courts? Yes. It is. So I want all hon. members to be very, very careful as we move forward here. I may interject again.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer one component of the question, and that component I think deals with: why did I say something about this? The reason I said something was because I was asked. I mean, I didn't raise the issue. I was asked.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I will be very careful and will have only one supplementary question, in light of what the Premier has said and what you have advised.

Will the Premier assure the House that he will share all facts relating to this issue with the House at an appropriate time?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that, as you so appropriately pointed out, is before the courts.

Relative to how the case is being adjudicated, I'll defer to the hon. Justice minister and Attorney General. I don't know what more he can add.

THE SPEAKER: No, and we're going to stop right there. If the question is should the settlement of the court come to the Assembly, well, if somebody wants to table a court document that's public at the time, so be it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Electricity Conservation

MR. LORD: Thank you. This government is providing short-term relief to Albertans who have recently been affected by the increasing price of electricity, and we've certainly heard a lot of good news about new plants being built to generate new megawatts of electricity supply to address longer term concerns. The same benefits, however, can also be accomplished by generating negative watts of power, or nega-watts, instead, which is energy supply freed up through new technology, conservation programs, and more efficient use of current supply already available to consumers. My question through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Energy is this. As a government do we have a strategy to generate nega-watts, and do we have plans to promote energy conservation technology and to assist with or create further incentives for average Albertans to reduce the energy consumption requirements in their own households?

MR. SMITH: I must compliment the member, Mr. Speaker, on a carefully, carefully crafted question. It certainly asked for a great deal of information.

I will say that one of the great parts of the Power Pool is that it gives new generators of different types of power a freely based marketplace to be able to put their power into play to be sold. Such is the reason that his former employer, the citizens in the city of Calgary, can now power their light-rail transit through the use of wind power.

So this government's message and, I'm sure, all governments' messages are on the importance of conservation. When it comes to conservation, it also talks about the associated effects of power generation, and that is of course the main reason why Climate Change Central was formed, which is a private/public partnership between Alberta industry, businesses, governments, and the environmental community. I know the Minister of Environment would want to respond with more details on Climate Change Central.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Just one question at a time, please.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: has the government ruled out any ideas or incentives to promoting energy-efficient retrofits in residential households such as interest-reduced government loans which could be repaid out of energy savings produced?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, $300 has been distributed. As a matter of fact, my wife received her cheque yesterday, and we're quite thankful for that. I haven't got mine yet, but I will be able to make individual decisions with that money. For example, I know that the Auditor General – and there's a man who's close to a dollar – spent his money putting compact fluorescent lights through his own house, thereby reducing his power bill. So there are a number of options that individuals in Alberta can undertake with the rebates that are coming through, with the $300, that allow them to make conservation choices. We know, as we use a nonrenewable fossil fuel for generation, that it is an important conservation measure. There are details to conservation that I know the Minister of Infrastructure has to offer the House as well.

THE SPEAKER: I'm sure, hon. minister, but we're going to proceed with the next question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Mr. Minister, has your department looked at improving or reviewing building code regulations to ensure that the very latest new energy-efficient technologies and approved energy-efficiency requirements and specifications are being incorporated into new residential and commercial construction?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta and stakeholders within Alberta have been working on a model national energy codes policy with the National Research Council, and in fact these codes prescribe energy-efficiency requirements in all houses and buildings within Alberta and, for that matter, across Alberta and all of Canada. I'm also very proud to say that they're looking at energy efficiencies in terms of the furnaces we use, the hot water tanks we use, and the lighting we use. As the hon. minister earlier mentioned, the official opening pertaining to Climate Change Central, the first of its kind in Canada, is going to be taking place in Calgary on Friday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Education Funding

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education in our province was founded on the ideal of public schools locally governed, supported from tax dollars, and open to all students regardless of a parent's or a guardian's ability to pay. The policies of this government are slowly but surely eroding that ideal. My questions are to the Premier. Given that provincial funding policies force our schools to charge registration fees, course fees, option fees, textbook fees, graphing calculator fees, program fees – and the list goes on – are our schools still truly public?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement, but our public schools are indeed public. I don't know where the hon. member has been, but certainly as we go through the budget debate, he will find that we're spending something in the neighbourhood of $4 billion – significant; those are big, big dollars – on public education. Four billion dollars. That is a lot of money.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In direct response to his question I would again take the hon. member back about 30 or 40 years. When I went to school, which was a fair amount of time ago now, I paid fees for textbook rental. I think everyone has for the last nth number of years. So to say that there's a threat to public education is, I think, pushing it considerably.

The other component, Mr. Speaker, is when it comes to fees for options. For example, if there is an option where a child is going on a field trip, if there's an option where a child is having special course material that is being brought in, that particular child needs to pay for that. If my child does not go into that class, why should my child be paying for another child to go on a field trip? It's as simple as that.

The other thing that I'll say is that in September of last year the Alberta School Boards Association brought out an excellent document on fees and fund-raising, and it set out that fees should not be charged for core educational materials. That is something that all school boards have complied with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is again to the Premier. How accessible are our schools when a major school board in this province finds it necessary to create a half million dollar endowment fund to generate enough interest to cover the fees for needy students?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, to answer the fundamental question how accessible are the schools, well, the public schools are accessible to all children. I have to remind the hon. member that there is a legal obligation – a legal obligation – so it stands to reason that the schools have to be accessible to everyone if children are legally obligated and their parents are legally obligated to send them to school.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Given that the government has a plan that will allow postsecondary tuition fees to rise to a percentage of program costs, is there a similar plan in store for public school fees?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister provide the hon. member with details relative to that particular question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the fees that each school board provides or charges are completely different all around the province. Each school board takes a look at what they feel they need to charge. Again I draw the hon. member's attention to the ASBA document that was put out in September of last year. In it they gave out strict rules for fund-raising, and they gave out strict rules for school fees. The majority of school boards around this province are falling under that.

The other point I will say is that the very important thing that must be remembered here is what every school board in the province must do and, in fact, indeed does. If a child cannot afford the textbook fees or any other school equipment, the school board picks it up, leading to what the Premier said about being accessible to absolutely everyone in the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

New Power Generation Plants

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta needs new power plants to keep up with our strong economic growth. In a news release recently there has been talk of the Alberta government fast-tracking the approval of new generation plants, especially coal-fired plants, for which West Yellowhead has the best clean-burning coal in the world. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister explain fast-tracking and how it will affect Albertans?

MR. SMITH: Fast-tracking, Mr. Speaker, will get new power into the grid faster. Recently the federal Minister of the Environment was here. He seems to have a concern about our fast-tracking process or has made comments about it, and perhaps the Premier would like to add to those comments with respect to fast-tracking in the federal domain.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Why is the industry concentrating on coal rather than other sources of electrical generation?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that coal is a thermal source of energy that is much less expensive than natural gas and that once it's onstream, it can produce power for a great length of time at a reasonable cost. Alberta has well over 800 years of supply in only one series of reserves, and to get this power on and to get it into the service of Albertans is important to Albertans. It is important to Alberta business and is important to the future of secure power supply in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What is his ministry doing to ensure that the investment in energy research is focused on clean-burning power?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question for all Albertans. In this province we have an organization known as the Alberta Energy Research Institute, which is ably co-chaired by the Member from Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and they are working on a strategy which addresses the emergence of new energy in the new energy economy. Among those strategies are thrusts that include technology development in clean coal, value-added products and processes of Alberta's vast hydrocarbon resources, exploring renewable and alternative energy like wind, solar, and biomass, and accomplishing this while we sustain the environment.

In the research environment there are several parts to the research that you have to understand. The first one is to find a process that can deliver the clean power that we're seeking in this province. The second part is to take the process, once you've discovered it, and refine it to make sure that it's economically deliverable.

Mr. Speaker, research into the areas that I've mentioned, the clean-coal technologies, will ensure that Albertans get the value from our vast coal resources while keeping our electricity prices low and ensuring clean air.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Inland Cement Limited

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Environment confirmed that his department does not have a formal application from Inland Cement for their coal conversion project. He also rejected calls for a full environmental impact assessment because this proposal that is coming forward from Inland is one which falls within the purview of the departmental review and departmental expertise and departmental jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, how does this minister know that the application will not go beyond the jurisdiction of his department if the final and formal application has not been submitted?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, we know that, Mr. Speaker, because we have had ongoing discussions with Inland. We have had public open houses. There has been a public meeting, and there are ongoing discussions. Now, if they try and change something in their formal application from what the ongoing discussions have already indicated, we will certainly rethink the process.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, when the minister said his department will consult with Alberta Health and Wellness about public comments received on the project, doesn't that show the application will be outside of departmental expertise and therefore should be subject to a full EIA?

DR. TAYLOR: No.

MS CARLSON: Perhaps he can answer this question, then, Mr. Speaker. What will be used as the baseline value for reviewing cumulative impact of the proposal: current emissions or some other value?

DR. TAYLOR: With the surrounding noise, Mr. Speaker, I was trying to hear that question, but I couldn't hear it. Can I ask her to repeat at least a central portion of it?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, the noise came from the direction area that the hon. minister is in, so the hon. minister has some responsibility.

Please repeat the question.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What will be used as the baseline value for reviewing cumulative impact of the proposal: current emissions or some other value?

DR. TAYLOR: That will all be part of the environmental impact review that we are doing and the baseline value will be determined and the cumulative effects will be examined.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Electricity Pricing

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Under deregulation producers agree to sell electricity to the Power Pool for a certain period of time and are paid according to the price paid to the last producer who signs on. This means there is an incentive to sign on early before all the anticipated demand is met and results in a fair return to all producers. However, if a producer who has agreed to sell electricity does not deliver, supply is reduced and prices go up. My question: why do producers who fail to meet their electricity delivery commitments not pay the difference between the original contract price and the increased price to the consumer resulting from their failure to deliver?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Suppliers are committed to a price and are expected to do everything they can to supply their customers. Of course, anybody who fails to deliver electricity loses the opportunity to sell that power. Power cannot be stored, so it creates an instant market opportunity.

Secondly, they still must find a way to meet any supply contracts, which then means going to the Power Pool, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that a stable supply of electricity remains in Alberta.

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister. That still doesn't force upon the producers the market reality that's necessary. The question is: how is it possible to benefit from market realities in the generation of electricity when the producers are shielded from the realities of the market?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the market surveillance administrator monitors this market and has the authority to report unusual behaviour and apply penalties accordingly. This would mean purposely withholding supply. Of course, we continue to have to go to the side where we can find ways to ensure that that power stays onstream, and even though the generator does lose the revenue for the sale of that power, they're expected to replace it through the Power Pool. Again the key is more supply, more options in the hands of Albertans for power.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. minister: that still doesn't answer the question. Why should consumers pick up the tab when producers fail to meet their commitments?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the tab sits both in the hands of the market surveillance administrator and in the hands of the Power Pool, that replaces the power that is not, in fact, supplied by the producer or the generator.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Lobbyists Registry

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's reasoning for saying there is no need for lobbyist registration for this province is that Alberta doesn't subsidize private business, leaving limited opportunities for lobbyists to seek government largesse. Mr. Speaker, this is a red herring and a bit disingenuous, because private business and others have also been known to lobby government to seek legislation more favourable to their interests. A printout of the federal lobbyist public registry shows 539 pages of registrations, many of which are lobbyists and companies operating in Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Government Services. Since Albertans can simply log onto the federal public registry web site and in a matter of moments find out which Alberta companies are lobbying the federal government, why are Albertans not allowed or not able to find out the same type of information about their own government? What's the big secret?

MR. COUTTS: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department is in charge of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act itself. We don't get into the actual administration within my department unless it affects my department. I'll take the question under advisement and get back to the hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. Since there are many other benefits to be had from government besides funding, why does the government appear to be opposed to a lobbyists' registry, that would go a long way to making the government more open and accountable? The minister is also responsible for registries.

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, our government is an open and accountable government. The Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, that was put in in 1994, certainly has contributed to that accountability and that openness that we have.

Again, in terms of the hon. member's question regarding lobbyists, I'll certainly take that under advisement and let her know.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. As well as that commitment, can the minister also commit to conducting a review of the current rules governing lobbying, conflict of interest, and tendering of contracts?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, under freedom of information and protection of privacy there was a review done a couple of years ago, and it was done under the chairmanship of the hon. Minister of Gaming and the Member for Peace River. There was a commitment at that time that within a three- to four-year period freedom of information and protection of privacy would be and should be and could be reviewed again. I have made the commitment to this House. I have made a commitment to the AAMDC's organization, that I was speaking to here about a month ago, that everyone will have an opportunity to look at the next review, which will take place next year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Conflict of Interest Guidelines

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Serious questions have been raised this week about the adequacy of the government's conflict of interest rules. There are also no rules in place in this province requiring those lobbying the government to either be registered or to divulge the payments they receive in exchange for influencing government decisions. [interjections] I'm going to continue; you don't know the question yet. My question is to the Premier. Why has the government failed to put in place legislative conflict of interest rules governing the conduct of senior public officials like the chairs of government agencies?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not so sure that it doesn't. I will have the hon. Minister of Government Services respond or maybe the Justice minister and Attorney General, but I believe there are conflict rules that apply to senior public service employees. We'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, there was a thorough review of the Conflicts of Interest Act sometime ago, chaired by a professor from the University of Alberta. A report was done. I believe it was an all-party committee which reviewed it. Recommendations were brought forward. Amendments were made to the act at that time. Not all of the recommendations were adopted, but it was a thorough review of the act. In that review I believe consideration was given to how far the conflict guidelines in our legislation should go and what types of senior officials should be covered by those guidelines in the Conflicts of Interest Act.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, why is there so much confusion on the government side about this issue when registering lobbyists is required, given the government's growing reliance on contracting out, which actually increases the opportunity for the private sector to seek government largesse?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises an issue that simply hasn't been an issue until he's made it an issue. The way this government operates is such that any group, any individual, can write a letter, make representation. We have the standing policy committee system. I try to keep my door open as much as I possibly can. All the MLAs have their doors open. I'm sure the opposition members keep their doors open to any constituent or any person who has a concern with government or with a constituency problem.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know of a paid lobbyist in the province.

There are many, many paid lobbyists in Ottawa. I do know that various corporations, for instance, have government-relations people who deal with government. I know that many unions have government-relations people: the teachers, the ATA, EPCOR. I know that the mayor of the city of Edmonton feels free to come and see me or any minister regarding any particular matter. We don't consider that to be lobbying. We say that is the right and the responsibility. It's a responsibility of the government to be accessible to all people.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, how does the government expect Albertans to believe that the kind of arrangements like those involving a former member of the Alberta Gaming Commission are not running rampant through this government . . .

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Sorry; sorry. There's a matter before the courts. It's a criminal offence. We're not going to have aspersions in this Assembly about anything until it's over with.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Workers' Compensation Board

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there were two investigative reports on WCB completed last November, my question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to reflect my constituents' pressing queries. What is the process and the time line the minister plans to release the government's response to the reports?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by again publicly thanking the members of the MLA review committee and also the members of the committee that looked into the appeal system for all of their work. As a matter of fact, they have submitted 59 recommendations to our office for review in terms of the WCB. As we speak, we are finalizing the ministry response to those reports. I would anticipate starting through the internal government process on an imminent basis, hopefully within two to three weeks appearing at a standing policy committee. We will then be taking the ministry response to become the government response and of course revealing that to all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is: given that the WCB management is a major stakeholder on the subject matter, will the responses to the reports be made public?

MR. DUNFORD: Actually the response from WCB was one of, I believe, 94 responses that we had to the two reports. As it currently stands, I've not made public any of the particular responses, whether it be WCB or the Alberta Federation of Labour or any of the other recognized and organized groups here within the province. I plan, though, as part of the process, once the government response has been communicated, to work with the individual stakeholders that have made a response to determine in what manner we will communicate then with the public. Without trying to presuppose any sort of agreements, it certainly would be my wish that at the end of this day we could file all of the reports with the Legislature Library.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that you will release to the public the responses, would you consider putting it on the Internet so it's more accessible for other people?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I think that we've now reached a part in our history as it relates to technology that when we talk about making things public, I think we almost automatically assume that we're going to be putting things on a web site.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Water and Wastewater Grants

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Transportation. Isn't the significant budget increase for municipal water and wastewater grants an indication that Alberta's water infrastructure is in desperate need of repair?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, we've always made an endeavour in this government to keep up with the ever increasing standards for good, clean water. There are a number of municipalities, as well, that are increasing in size and also require additional infrastructure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. What is the status of the waiting list for projects funded under municipal water and wastewater grants?

MR. STELMACH: The status as of last night and of course the presentation of the estimates to committee is that those lists will be getting smaller.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Has the department done any studies on the ability of the water and wastewater infrastructure to deal with low water tables in this province?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the water and wastewater portion of our budget is dedicated generally to urban municipalities: small towns, villages, summer villages, and of course larger urban municipalities, including cities. The issue the hon. member is raising I believe is the result of abnormally low snowfall for the last number of years. He is quite correct that water levels, the aquifers, are of course decreasing, and rural people especially are having difficulty accessing that water. However, I would submit that that issue has to be taken up jointly with the Minister of Environment. It's affecting large areas in our Deputy Premier's ministry and in ours as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Electricity Rebates

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Constituents have contacted my office over concerns with the Alberta energy tax refund cheques they have received or not received. The callers to my office are expressing concerns that they are not receiving the full $150 rebate or none of it. To the Minister of Finance: can the minister explain why this is the case?

MRS. NELSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On September 6, 2000, the energy rebate program was announced, and that program would see over two million Albertans receiving help for higher-than-expected energy costs in the home and at the gas pump. The second set of the $150 cheques started to go out this week, at the start of the week, and I can report that some almost two million Albertans received their cheques without any difficulty whatsoever.

However, when we looked at this program and we were running it through the federal tax program for returning to Albertans, we determined that if in fact there were outstanding payments in regard to things like maintenance enforcement or taxation, through our tax agreement with the federal government those balances would be rectified with the $150 on the second cheque. In most cases, though, what happened is that when someone got a cheque and it was less than the $150, it was because there was an outstanding bill on their tax from either 1999 or even from this year. In some cases, though, Mr. Speaker, some people filed their tax returns electronically and subsequently sent in their cheque, and there was a crossover between the cheques being received with the federal tax department and the refund cheque coming back, so an adjustment was made. So there has been some difficulty with that, but it is being rectified.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. I have been told that in some of these cases Albertans who have paid up to date and have filed their 2000 federal income tax returns have still been seeing deductions off their $150 energy tax refunds. Can the minister tell the House if anything can be done for these people?

MRS. NELSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had our officials from our department – my deputy has been in touch with the deputy minister in Ottawa and asked them to rectify the situation. If in fact there was this crossover between the filing of their tax returns for April 30 and the issuance of these cheques, could they in fact go back immediately and expedite a refund to those people that were inadvertently deducted on their $150 cheque.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: can the minister explain to this House what she has done to ensure that Albertans get their rebate cheques, that rightfully are owed to them.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, as I say, my deputy has been in touch with the federal deputy, but we've also contacted the federal minister of customs and revenue and made sure that there's a follow-up process. They are co-operating fully to see that they expedite the refund of these cheques where they were inadvertently deducting payments that had been made on taxes.

Now, clearly, if you have a tax bill or a maintenance enforcement payment outstanding from last year, this $150 will go as a credit towards that outstanding balance. So every entitled Albertan will in fact receive the full benefit of the $150. Albeit some may be clearing a bill from the past, it's still a full benefit.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, very shortly we'll begin the process of dealing with seven hon. members in Recognitions.

Speaker's Ruling Sub Justice Rule Decorum

THE SPEAKER: There are two comments the chair would like to make arising out of question period.

First of all, the chair would like to draw to all hon. members' attention Standing Order 23(g). All members have the Standing Orders. It's very clear what the Standing Orders say. In particular, as a result of two series of questions today, I want to read again what Standing Order 23(g) says. It "refers to any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination." Questions that are impacted by that statement, referring to "any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination," are clearly outside of the rules and not to be accepted in the House, particularly if the issue is of a criminal nature from the time charges have been laid until passing of sentence and from the date of the filing of a notice of appeal until the date of a decision by an appellate court, or . . . where there is [any] probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate.

It's the chair's view that in a criminal matter there is very real risk of prejudice. I would also refer members to Beauchesne, sixth edition, starting at paragraph 506 in terms of such matters.

The second thing. There was more enthusiasm and energy in the Assembly today than we have experienced in the last eight or nine days. Energy and enthusiasm are okay – no problem at all with that – even from time to time good-natured interjections, if they're low key. Some people might call them heckling, and that might be in order as well. But it crosses the line where the heckling and the statements are of a derogatory nature, where they are denigrating or they are insulting of another member, particularly in the area of gender, age, disability, colour. The chair will not accept such items.

Today the chair received a number of notes from members saying that they didn't like what happened. Unfortunately, the chair did not hear them. It doesn't mean that they will not be found in Hansard, and the chair will review Hansard to see if any of these statements have been picked up. Should hon. members hear such statements, I would invite hon. members to rise on a point when they've heard such statements, and we will deal with them in this Assembly at the conclusion of question period. That is quite inappropriate.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Thirty seconds from now, the first recognition.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Coral Chovjka Kenman Gan

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is Education Week, and I'd like to comment on the Great Kids awards that were announced by the Premier in October 1999 at the first Children's Forum to recognize outstanding young people of this province who positively contribute to their families, schools, and communities. It celebrates their compassion for others, generosity, desire to serve, and community leadership.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Alberta government and all Albertans I am proud to recognize the outstanding efforts of two young Norwood residents. Coral Chovjka is one of only 16 Albertans who received the Great Kids award. They had a ceremony in Calgary on February 19. I will be presenting Mr. Kenman Gan with an honourable mention award on May 4.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank these two Albertans for their outstanding contributions to their families, schools, communities, and the province of Alberta. We are pleased to have Coral and Kenman as a winner and honourable mention of the 2001 Great Kids awards.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Nellie Laboucan

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 14, 2001, Alberta lost a truly remarkable woman. Born in 1887 and raised near Lac La Biche, Elder Nellie Laboucan, nee Ironvoice and Gladue, passed away at Atikameg, Alberta, at the age of 114 years. Known as Kookoom to those close to her, Nellie touched many lives during her lifetime, especially her 39 grandchildren, 96 great-grandchildren, 76 great-great-grandchildren, and four great-great-great-grandchildren. Nellie had in total 223 descendants.

Nellie was always concerned about the welfare of young people, welcoming anyone into her home. Whether it was a helping of stew that was always simmering on the stove or even a little bit of discipline, Nellie was selfless in her love and support. Somehow there was always enough to go around no matter who walked through the door.

Nellie Laboucan was an amazing centenarian who could hear and see well and had most of her own teeth right to the end of her life. Nellie leaves a wonderful testimonial to the human spirit.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

International Day of the Midwife

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize International Day of the Midwife this Saturday, May 5. In 1989 the Alberta Association of Midwives applied to the Health Disciplines Board for the designation of the discipline of midwifery. It took until 1992 for the designation to be granted, and finally in 1998 the midwifery registry was opened.

These accomplishments would not have been possible without the dedication and commitment of Noreen Walker and the Alberta Association of Midwives, the Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth, the Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues, moms and their families, and many individuals.

While we have made great strides, Alberta women do not have access to the services of a midwife paid for by Alberta health care. This is not right. The government keeps asking for more and more pilot projects and studies, delaying the inevitable. I hope next year at this time I will be able to recognize the province for providing fully funded midwifery services to all Alberta women.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Tracy Lynne Poulin
Warren Griffin Letchford

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among us in Alberta are individuals who toil in their profession of eloquence but very seldom receive the public gratitude that they deserve, and it is teachers that I refer to. Yesterday I had the pleasure to hand out awards to finalists in the excellence in teaching awards program that was conducted in the Edmonton Catholic and the Edmonton public school boards.

Mr. Speaker, the writer Mr. Yeats once so eloquently said that teaching and education is not a process of filling an empty bucket but rather lighting a fire. Indeed, these two fine individuals are lighting a fire in young individuals. It is my pleasure to recognize Tracy Lynne Poulin of Lorelei school and Warren Griffin Letchford of St. Lucy Catholic school, who are so graciously contributing to our community by teaching.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Carla-Joan Fahlman
Barbara Lynn Forbes

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize two teachers who work in Edmonton-Rutherford. As members know, this being Education Week, the Edmonton public school board had their recognition of the 31 finalists in the Edmonton area last night. Edmonton-Rutherford had two finalists among the very many distinguished hardworking teachers.

The first that I'd like to recognize here today is Carla-Joan Fahlman. Carla has shown outstanding classroom management skills and intuitive knowledge about how students learn best. Incredible planning and a great sense of humour all help Carla achieve excellent results in student learning. She dedicates herself to her students in their becoming independent thinkers. She encourages leadership skills by teaching her students how to form an argument, understand another's point of view, and work together towards a solution. We've all been in Carla's class obviously.

The second teacher that I'd like to honour here is Barbara Lynn Forbes, who teaches at St. Boniface Catholic elementary school. Her parent handbook is truly a work of art. It provides parents an informative, comprehensive outline of their children's studies. She's a leader of the teachers and a key player and a key leader in the school. She keeps her very young students, five year olds, interested and involved in the learning process.

Colleagues, through you, Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize and thank those among all the many hundreds of very dedicated teachers in our community. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Wilco Tymensen

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to acknowledge a great Albertan, an educator, this afternoon. Wilco Tymensen has been nominated as a finalist for the 13th annual excellence in teaching awards program. His name was selected from a group of 400 educators from across the province who were originally nominated. What makes this award unique is that it is the highest recognition that can be received from not only fellow teachers but by students as well.

Mr. Tymensen is one of the most valuable assets to his school, the ACE Place Learning Centre, an alternative school in Taber, Alberta. He has taught a range of subjects to his students at this fine institution and also offers mentoring services for students, but what makes him valuable as a teacher is that he sees his classroom not only confined to the traditional in-class setting but any place where learning can occur. For example, Mr. Tymensen once seized a teaching moment when he explained the laws of physics to a student who had just fallen on a ski hill. Mr. Tymensen stands out to all of us as a model of the teaching profession, and I wish to thank him and congratulate him for that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Audrey Cormack

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a great Albertan, Ms Audrey Cormack, president of the Alberta Federation of Labour for the last six years. Ms Cormack has recently announced her decision not to seek a fourth term with the Alberta Federation of Labour. Her career began in the early 1980s, holding a variety of positions with her union, the Communications, Energy, and Paper Workers Union. In 1989 she broke new ground by being the first woman ever elected to serve as an executive officer for the AFL and later as its first woman president.

Audrey is a woman of great vision and commitment who knows that we can accomplish great things when we work together. She has worked tirelessly to improve the lives of hundreds of thousands of Albertans and working people. She knows that now more than ever workers need strong voices and support and that making a life is as important as making a living.

As she leaves the province of Alberta later this month, we say good-bye to her with deep affection, appreciation, and admiration. Audrey, we thank you and wish you the best of luck.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before going to Orders of the Day, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: In the Speaker's gallery today are three individuals from a few miles away from the city of Edmonton: Robert Jackson, who is the reeve of the county of Barrhead and the chairman of the Aspen health authority, Clem Fagnon, who is the chairman of the Westlock foundation and a councillor in the town of Westlock, and Robert Cable, who is the chief executive officer of the Aspen health authority. The three are in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive a warm welcome.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following notice having been given yesterday, I would move now that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following notice having been given yesterday, I will also move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

Bill 204
Medicare Protection Act

[Debate adjourned May 1: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak against Bill 204, sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I have strong reservations about Bill 204. This government has already made a sound choice for the future of health care in Alberta with the Health Care Protection Act. We already did this because we are committed to listening to Albertans. We take their opinions and concerns seriously, and that is how we determine the direction of health care in our province. The Health Care Protection Act is an integral part of that direction. Bill 204 would repeal this act, and for that reason I cannot support it.

Why would we repeal an act that was just proclaimed? Why would we repeal an act that was just debated last session? During that debate we talked to many Albertans at length. In fact, the debate itself was very lengthy. Bill 11 was the most debated bill in the history of this Assembly at well over 40 hours.

Now, I've heard the stories of sitting until 1, 2, or 3 o'clock in the morning. I'm sure that every possible argument was raised during that time for all Albertans to consider. This government talked to Albertans both before and after the creation of the Health Care Protection Act. We listened to their concerns and to those of the people who work in the health care sector.

The Health Care Protection Act was not created in one night, and it encompasses the direct involvement of the people it was designed to protect. There was much information and misinformation distributed about the Health Care Protection Act. The information of course was distributed by this government, and the misinformation was distributed by the opposition parties. On March 12 of this year the people of Alberta indicated who they believed would best represent their interests in health care.

Before the act there were over 50 unregulated private clinics in Alberta. The people in this province wanted regulations and standards impressed upon these clinics. That is what the Health Care Protection Act does. It ensures that no private clinics can operate outside the control of the public health system. By request from the people of Alberta, the act has also made the contract procedure for all private health care facilities open and transparent. The Health Care Protection Act sets out the guidelines for the regional health authorities and specifically the College of Physicians and Surgeons to make sure that the clinics meet strict standards. Bill 204 would be repealing an act that works in favour of the people of Alberta.

The Health Care Protection Act is important because private clinics are not a unique fixture in just our province. In fact, there are hundreds all across Canada. Private clinics support minor procedures and surgeries for things like eye care, some reconstructive knee procedures, and other athletic and sports-related injuries. The current Health Care Protection Act prohibits the existence of private hospitals in Alberta, and therefore all major surgical procedures requiring more than 12 hours of postoperative care still must be done in a hospital.

In Alberta these private clinics provide tens of thousands of surgical procedures each year on behalf of the public system. These private facilities provide an extra source for care. They have lightened the load of certain surgeries on hospitals, and they help us continue to reduce waiting lists. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Health Care Protection Act is such a good act that a former NDP Premier working for the Liberal federal government is looking at this act with great interest as he charts the course for the future of health care in Canada.

Now, a key objective of the Health Care Protection Act was to reduce waiting times. By contracting out minor surgeries, we can free up beds for major surgeries in our hospitals. Also, Mr. Speaker, these clinics are able to increase the number of surgeries they can perform by specializing in a smaller range of procedures. A private clinic can specialize in a certain kind of service, like providing MRIs, and develop greater efficiency, which subsequently takes pressure off the public system. They can free up extensive operating rooms and full-service hospitals for more complex and emergency procedures. I would like to remind this Assembly that any surgical procedure done in a private clinic under the Health Care Protection Act must first be approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. As well, the clinic itself must be an accredited facility which meets rigorous standards.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot support Bill 204, and I urge all in this Assembly to do the same. Only by continuing to support the Health Care Protection Act can we continue to improve our health care system.

I have before me a copy of Bill 204, and there are some things in here that I am very concerned about. The third paragraph in the preamble says, "Whereas those principles are compromised, and the credibility of the public health care system is undermined." Mr. Speaker, these are statements that are absolutely wrong, and this is not true. This government has created an act that was created by much thought and care. There was a lot of consultation. There was a lot of professional opinion that went into the Alberta Health Care Protection Act. It does not compromise the principles of the Canada Health Act nor does it undermine the credibility of the public health care system. There are some very wrong statements as I look at Bill 204 and as I read it over.

Again, the people of Alberta obviously had the chance to say no if they did not like the Alberta Health Care Protection Act. The people of Alberta overwhelmingly said yes, said yes to this government and said yes to the bills that were debated in the last session. They said yes to the Alberta Health Care Protection Act.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that my colleagues and all of the people that are concerned about this act will see that the Alberta Health Care Protection Act is in fact the way we want to see health care go in the future in the province of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 204 as it's going through the second reading. I'm pleased and proud that this bill is sponsored by a member of the New Democrat caucus and my esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Highlands.

By any measure, Mr. Speaker, health care is definitely one of the most important services delivered by government. More dollars are expended in health care than in any other government program. The health care system touches us all. While the need for health care services depends on our age and our health status, all of us have friends and family who would have faced financial ruin had it not been for Canada's universal health care system.

This Bill 204 is an important bill. It sets out a comprehensive set of rules both to improve timely access to public health care services and to set strict, enforceable limits on private, for-profit involvement in the health care system. Timely access to medically necessary health care services is essential if public support for our health care system is to be maintained. Unacceptably long waiting times lead inevitably to and result in the richer people jumping the queue if they're willing to pay privately for their needed diagnosis or treatment.

Unacceptably long waiting times are not unique to Alberta, but Alberta does have the financial resources to ensure timely access. I'm surprised that some members opposite will not be supporting setting legislated waiting times for medically necessary health services, whether it is for lifesaving MRIs or for lifesaving cancer treatment. Clearly, waiting time targets would require extensive consultation with affected stakeholders. Clearly, the needs of patients would have to be balanced against the available financial resources of government. These would not be easy decisions, but by the same token we as legislators should not be afraid to make such decisions.

I note that the Ministry of Health and Wellness is making some moves to address unacceptably long waiting times. I sincerely hope these efforts to relieve the pain and suffering of those being kept waiting are successful. However, where is the accountability back to this Legislature if the government fails to meet its waiting time targets? Bill 204 would bring such accountability into the system.

Bill 204 does more than just implement a patient bill of rights entitling Albertans to receive medically necessary or required health care services in a timely fashion. It also makes us as legislators more accountable by setting up a health care services commissioner as an officer of this Legislature. Bill 204 clearly sets out the duties of the health care services commissioner. Given that health care is one of the most important services delivered by government and received by Albertans, it is essential that citizens have some recourse if they believe that the public health care system has failed to deliver high-quality, timely care. The establishment of such a commissioner would do much to restore public confidence in our health care system.

I now wish to briefly address the provisions of Bill 204 that set clear and enforceable rules around the involvement of the private, for-profit sector in a publicly funded and publicly administered health care system. I may, Mr. Speaker, in passing make a comment here to my hon. colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar, who just spoke on the bill, when he said that the esteemed former Premier of Saskatchewan is ready and happy to accept Bill 11 as part of his recommendations. I guess he knows more than I do about what this commissioner is thinking. I think he'd better have some conversation with his own government and do some more reading of what the commissioner is saying with respect to this bill and with respect to the role of the private, for-profit sector in the health care system.

The government's Bill 11, unlike Bill 204, does open the door wider for commercial business interests to directly deliver health care services funded by public dollars. Nobody said during the intense public debate last spring that Bill 11 would lead to the wholesale privatization of our public health care system overnight. Instead, Bill 11 is part and parcel of a creeping privatization of our public health care system.

Contrary to the statement made yesterday by the Member for Red Deer-North, Bill 11 puts no new rules and regulations in place for the existing 51 private clinics that are involved in doing day surgery. Instead, what Bill 11 does is allow private health facilities to perform, on contract with regional health authorities, complex surgeries that require overnight stays by patients. As a result of Bill 11, for the first time private, for-profit health care facilities in Alberta will be providing in-patient care.

Now, the government may for political reasons choose not to call these kinds of facilities hospitals. I know that the government did all kinds of surveys and held little group sessions to find out whether they should call these surgical facilities or whether they should call them what they are, hospitals. They decided that the people of Alberta didn't like them to be called hospitals, hence its avoidance of that term in Bill 11. But the fact remains that these kinds of facilities, which will be owned and operated on a commercial basis, will be hospitals in all but name.

Bill 204, the Medicare Protection Act, will completely close the door to private hospitals owned on a commercial basis. In its entire history Alberta's hospitals have been owned and operated on a nonprofit basis. Let me underline this: whether they're private or public, they have been owned on a nonprofit basis and operated on a nonprofit basis. Essentially what Bill 204 does is restore this long-standing practice, from which the government's Bill 11 represents a radical departure.

I reject the proposition put forward yesterday by the Member for Red Deer-North that the government's election win was an endorsement of its health care privatization scheme. The same mantra was repeated just a moment ago by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor. The same person is writing the speeches, I believe.

This privatization scheme generated an unprecedented amount of public concern just one year ago. Tens of thousands of Albertans wrote letters, sent e-mails, made phone calls, and attended public rallies, including rallies in front of this very Legislature one year ago today. Just because the governing party won the last election doesn't mean that Albertans endorsed every aspect of this government's agenda. Every public opinion poll that I'm aware of indicates that Albertans are strongly opposed to the government's plan to legalize private, for-profit hospitals by using its so-called Health Care Protection Act, Bill 11.

There are very sound reasons why Albertans were right to oppose the government's scheme. First of all, the government has provided no credible evidence that the private, for-profit sector will be able to deliver health care services any more cost-effectively than the public system. As mentioned yesterday by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the overwhelming worldwide evidence is that increased reliance on the private, for-profit sector increases health care costs; it doesn't reduce them. It doesn't reduce waiting times or improve quality of patient care. Trying to run the health care system as a market commodity just will not work. If an increased reliance on the private, for-profit sector was the way to go, the U.S. would have the most cost-effective health care system in the world, but we all know that the U.S. has the least fair and most costly health care system among all developed countries.

Increased reliance on the private, for-profit sector to deliver publicly funded health care services will inevitably give rise to more conflicts of interest, and as evidence of this we need look no further than the existing situation in the Calgary regional health authority. A recent study on surgical contracts and conflicts of interest done by journalist Gillian Steward found that three of the private, for-profit surgical facilities that have current contracts with the CRHA are owned or partly owned by senior medical officers of the CRHA; second, that two of the five private, for-profit surgical facilities that provide virtually all of the eye surgery in the Calgary area or in the regional health authority are similarly owned by CRHA medical officers. As we expand these contracts into complex surgeries like hip replacements that necessitate overnight patient stays, these conflicts of interest will multiply. This in itself is a good reason to support Bill 204 and repeal Bill 11.

Going further down the road to health care privatization also poses significant risks under international trade agreements. Under these trade agreements Alberta has no obligation to open the publicly funded health care system to commercial interests. However, once that decision has been made, foreign-owned corporations are given the same access to the health care system as Canadian-owned companies. There's no question that should access to contracted health services not be provided on the same basis to foreign companies as to Canadian companies, Canada would face a trade challenge. Some Alberta private day surgery clinics are already foreign owned. The Gimbel eye centres in Edmonton and Calgary were recently sold to U.S. interests without a peep from this government.

Given all of this, Mr. Speaker, there are compelling reasons for this Legislature to support Bill 204, to make it into a law so that for once and for all we can guarantee to Albertans that there will remain in place a well-funded, accountable, publicly owned health care system and that services remain at their disposal as they need them. I'm therefore both proud and pleased to support Bill 204.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One year has certainly made a great deal of difference in the perception of Albertans with respect to the Health Care Protection Act. Last week I was just thinking about the previous year. I was at the Fort Saskatchewan trade fair for the whole weekend, Friday night and Saturday and most of Sunday, and as people came through last week, there were all sorts of comments and we had good discussions about where the government was going with budgets and what was coming forward and congratulating our government on being re-elected with a considerably increased majority.

The difference was really notable. A year prior at the same trade fair the opposition had a booth a few doors down and were encouraging folks to sign petitions. They were telling them about how terrible the Health Care Protection Act was, terms like "creeping privatization," the same kind of terms that we heard in the last speech and a few speeches yesterday, the same kind of speeches from before in Hansard. I took the opportunity to flip through some and saw all of the negative statements that were made and the dire consequences, the end of health care that was soon upon us.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, those folks in Fort Saskatchewan at that trade fair last year were really concerned. They had been told these messages by the opposition, that the health care system was soon to end, that it would no longer be there. One of the messages I had for them a year ago was, "Let's wait and see. Let's see what happens in a year. Even better, let's see what happens in five years and see if, in fact, our health care system has completely deteriorated." "If it has deteriorated," I told them, "then turf us out. Turf me out personally, and elect the candidate that was just down the hall who had a booth there and was saying all those negative things about the Health Care Protection Act."

So, in fact, this dialogue went on at length last year, and we see that the Health Care Protection Act has served Albertans well. We will see in the four years hence what we were talking about at that trade fair a year ago, that things are going to be even better than they are today, and they will be better because of the concern and commitment expressed by this government and the enactment of legislation like the Health Care Protection Act.

It's hard to understand sometimes how come there was as much confusion as there was. I recall going to talk to a grade 6 class at one of the schools last year in the midst of the health care debate. Actually, it was subsequent to the passing of the Health Care Protection Act. We were talking about government funding, and one of the students asked the question: where does government revenue come from? A bunch of students got through the things like property taxes and income taxes and all the different kinds of taxes that exist, liquor tax and so on and so forth. They'd been well taught by their teacher. It was a really impressive bunch of students.

One of the students came up with another source of revenue. He said: after the government privatizes all these hospitals, people will have to pay so much money for all the health care services that the government's going to rake in all kinds of money for this. I looked at this fellow and said: what is this fellow's name? When I realized who he was and who his folks were, people that I knew, I started to understand. This is the message this same person as a professional had been out there communicating to the public and, in fact, to his own family, completely misunderstanding the intent of the Health Care Protection Act.

Somehow it had been turned around to be filled with dire consequences, the same kind of concern expressed over and over again as recorded in Hansard from before and the same kinds of concerns expressed incorrectly in the last few speeches as well. They're still filled with those claims. Those are the kinds of claims that are incorrect but do concern Albertans and cause confusion and uncertainty.

Mr. Speaker, the concern probably is caused because we really like our health care system. We know it's evolved over the past 35 or 40 years, something like that, into the health care system it is today. Its funding has changed a great deal as well. It was once funded equally by the provinces and the federal government, and now it's become mostly a provincially funded program. About 30 percent of our budget, a little over, goes into health care, and about 5 percent of the federal budget is dedicated to health care. I'll put it another way. Our province contributes about 87 percent while the federal government contributes about 13 percent of the expenditures in health care in Alberta. This is similar to other provinces as well.

We also like the way it appears to be unique in the world for the level of service to the citizens and the adherence also to the five basic principles of the Canada Health Act. One of the benefits for sure of the debate last year – prior to the introduction of the Health Care Protection Act and the great debate that followed, I bet there wasn't any more than a handful of people in the province that knew the five basic principles of the Canada Health Act. After months of debate and whatnot the principles were much better understood by Albertans, the principle of universality, where all insured Albertans are entitled to all insured services provided in the province; the principle of comprehensiveness, where all medically necessary services are insured; the principle of accessibility, where there's access to all insured services provided uniformly and reasonable compensation is paid for those services provided; the principle of portability, where health care services can be utilized by insured Albertans in other provinces; and also public administration, where health care is publicly administered and publicly funded.

I should commend the member. He made a commitment a year ago, and he has followed through on that commitment to bring forward a bill that he promised to bring forward. It may have been misguided. It may not have been a good way to deal with the issue, but in fact it was a commitment made to the constituents. He's fulfilling that commitment and, therefore, as a private member has the opportunity to bring that forward. We have in this Assembly the opportunity to discuss and look at whatever we may consider to be the benefits of this bill and consider its weaknesses and evaluate it against the Health Care Protection Act, passed by this government a few months ago, and decide whether, in fact, it should be passed or rejected. So that is the task of this Assembly, and that is the task that we will consider, and we will debate and conclude that debate in a few minutes actually from now.

We also as Albertans reject the American style two-tier health care system, the system where citizens obtain different levels of care based on the kind of money they have or the kind of insurance policy they bought or their employer bought for them. Following the principles of the Canada Health Act, our system is equal and free, and that is enshrined in the Health Care Protection Act.

We know it's not a cost-free system. We know it's paid for through our tax dollars, our resource revenues, and even our medicare premiums, which provide about 10 percent of the cost of health care in Alberta. We know, too, that the cost of health care provided under the Alberta health act and under Alberta health care is around $6 billion. For the 3 million Albertans that means that for every man, woman, and child the expenditure in health care in this province is about $2,000 every year.

If we consider some aspects of our current health care system, we know there are around 5,000 different surgical procedures identified and regulated by the medical profession and most of those are paid for by medicare. There are about 150 of those procedures that are currently done in privately owned surgical facilities, surgical facilities that have been approved under the Alberta Health Care Protection Act and that are being done, have been done in the past, and will continue to be done to benefit all Albertans. The contracts can be found on the Internet. If you wish to see what the contracts are with different health care facilities, you can look them up and see what, in fact, their reason for existing is, what they do, and what their authorization was from essentially, in the end, the minister of health.

The doctors in those facilities are paid by Alberta health care for whatever operation, whether it is a cataract removal or something else. They are paid that same amount of dollars whether the cataract is removed in the Fort Saskatchewan hospital or the Royal Alex or, in fact, the Gimbel Eye Centre. The costs of the building and the support staff are paid in both cases by Alberta health care, and it's paid through the local health authority with funding provided by the citizens of Alberta through the government. Those costs are called facility fees, and a patient cannot pay the facility fees.

In some of the speeches we see talk about patients being charged for medically insured services. That's not the case. It's against the Canada Health Act. I believe it's inappropriate to make those kinds of claims when, in fact, it's not possible. It's not the intention of the Health Care Protection Act, and to read that into the act and make those claims serves only to confuse and bring discredit to the member who may be making those claims.

We know, too, that the private sector plays a large role in the delivery of health care, and the public system pays for some parts but not for others. There are chiropractors, opticians, optometrists, dentists, pharmacies, drug companies, ambulances, physiotherapy, child psychologists, walk-in clinics, medcentres, and long-term care facilities for older seniors.

We recognize, too, though, that there are many challenges in the delivery of health care. Earlier the federal government challenged the provinces to be innovative and do something to reduce wait lists, increase the number of doctors and nurses available, implement more home care, and reduce hospital stays. Those challenges are the same in every province, and as has been mentioned, Roy Romanow with his committee has said that they will be looking at the role of the private sector in health care. He said yesterday that he will explore the idea of allowing private-sector facilities to provide more publicly funded health care services. That move by the federally appointed former NDP Premier is an interesting one. He's recognizing that it's necessary to look outside the box and to see what options do exist.

There are several initiatives that here in Alberta we have put forward. The six-point plan was put forward to protect and improve our health care system. That six-point plan had the following points: first of all, to improve access to publicly funded services; second, to improve the management of the health system; third, to enhance the quality of health services; and fourth, to increase emphasis on health promotion and disease and accident prevention. We as members recently had delivered to our desks some information about the Injury Awareness and Prevention Centre, and the members that had opportunity to read that would notice that they are working on preventing accidents; for example, a fall or some other injury that causes a spinal cord injury. In the first few weeks after that injury, millions of dollars, or at least a million, in excess of a million, would be spent in care of that individual for something that was preventable and resources that could go to another aspect of the health facilities.

The fifth point is to continue to foster new ideas to improve our health system. We do not see in Bill 204 any new ideas that would improve our health care system.

Finally, point 6: take steps to "protect the publicly funded system" from external threats. Well, the Health Care Protection Act does serve to do that, and to repeal the Health Care Protection Act would be inappropriate and also irresponsible.

Without the Health Care Protection Act we knew that private hospitals could in fact start up and go ahead and charge facility fees, and Alberta would lose transfer payments in the process. The Health Care Protection Act prevents that. To repeal it would leave those opportunities open to somebody who was perhaps interested in starting up a private facility without the approval and without the permission and putting the government or the citizens of this province at risk of losing transfer payments from the federal government.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, the Health Care Protection Act is essential to the sound and regulated operation of any private health clinics in Alberta. Without it there would be limited protection for patients in this province, and there would not be reasonable limits on how those clinics operate.

Alberta is a leader in protecting the principles of the Canada Health Act. We were the first to put an end to the ad hoc licensing of private facilities, and we've set down firm regulations for their conduct. To repeal the Health Care Protection Act would seriously undermine the interests of all Albertans. The act is specifically designed to protect health users as well as the taxpayers of Alberta. The Health Care Protection Act provides stability for the entire health care system, and there must be ongoing assurances that licensed clinics are meeting cost-benefit performance standards while also complementing the public system. Any contracts determined to have the potential to negatively affect publicly administered hospitals are identified, and if there's no net benefit to the regional health authority, the health authority is obligated to terminate that contract or not to enter into it if it's proposed.

Mr. Speaker, through cost-effectiveness and regular performance measures, Alberta provides timely medical services to those in need without regard for their ability to pay, and that fulfills our ongoing commitment to the Canada Health Act. As my colleagues have noted, Bill 204 would focus on developing firmly established targets for waiting times. The issue of waiting times has been discussed and researched across the country, and many interesting conclusions have been drawn from a 1997 Health Canada study. The study found that waiting lists are unmanageable and are arbitrary indicators of health care performance.

In Alberta we're more concerned with measuring the number of surgical and diagnostic procedures and also the quality of those procedures. Those who are in urgent need of surgery or diagnostics will receive the highest priorities, while others will wait a little while longer. For some, the waiting times will be much longer, and for others there'll be no waiting time at all. The length of the line is variable from case to case, and it's not the best measure of performance of the health care system.

I would, Mr. Speaker, encourage all members of the Assembly to reject Bill 204.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have the opportunity to support Bill 204, the Medicare Protection Act. I think that it is timely that we do have this debate resurfacing here in the Legislature approximately one year from the time that we had the past debate and to take a look at the information available to us in terms of whether or not it is still a really good idea to ensure that we have a strengthened and strong public health care system by guaranteeing that funding and timely access to health care services are available.

Do we need a patients' bill of rights in this province? I believe we do. If we don't have that in place, then we see a steady erosion of people's abilities to access the kind of health care they need. Is the idea of a health care service commissioner a good idea? I think so. We have a Privacy Commissioner, and health care services are equally as important, Mr. Speaker, so I support that.

Should the Health Care Protection Act be repealed? Well, we've talked about that for a long time. In fact we brought in a bill, Bill 221, last fall in the 2000 session that did exactly that; it repealed Bill 11. So we've been on the record about that for a long time, as we also have, Mr. Speaker, about a patients' bill of rights. It was introduced in this Legislature in 1998 by our former leader and good friend Grant Mitchell. Certainly the government was quite happy to vote that down at that point in time, but it's still a good issue and something that needs to be talked about.

A former speaker, the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, said that Bill 11 was necessary in order to be able to rein in private operators in the health care system. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would challenge that comment. I don't think that it is accurate. I think there are many other options for this government to do that, not the least of which is their very favourite one, which is regulations. So there were lots of avenues open for them to be able to pursue the kinds of controls that are needed to ensure that we have some control over private operators in this province.

I think we're still getting the same kinds of questions throughout the province, Mr. Speaker, that we did during the Bill 11 debate and haven't got good answers for them and have seen a government who is still quite happy to put forward their rhetoric on this particular issue but not very much substantive background information to support whether increase in privatization in this province is the right way to go in health care.

Interestingly enough, I recently attended a conference on globalization in the eastern United States where a number of people came to talk about the privatization of health care and what impact that has on our country and countries. There were many senior-level bureaucrats from the federal government there, Mr. Speaker, people who are studying what's happening in Alberta and taking a look at what's happening across Canada and globally on this issue. There were a number of academics from both Canada and the States and Europe present and presenters who were academics from Europe talking about the impact of globalization and privatization on health care.

It was interesting to hear what they had to say, Mr. Speaker. The greatest emphasis by both bureaucrats and academics from the States and from Canada was on the need for us to take a look at the Americanized system as a real anomaly, a system that absolutely doesn't work, a system that is the costliest medical system in the world to administer and one that gives very poor service: in fact, service rates in the bottom third of all countries in the world, certainly down there with many Third World countries, whom we would normally say provided really substandard care. What they talked about there was what drives that system to be a system that is impractical to operate, costly, and not effective in terms of the care it gives to the users of the system on a dollar-for-dollar basis, and it is the immense privatization.

There's a great deal of documentation available to support that. In spite of what we've heard from government members, the documentation is science based. It's independent. It would be something they'd be trotting out happily if it supported their argument, but it doesn't. So we need to take a look at that and take a look at the reasons why they're unwilling to use this kind of information. There is no doubt that looking at a system that has such high administration costs in it and such poor service delivery is not a system that we should try to adapt or monitor.

We're still getting, like I said before, the same question as we did before the election, and that is: are private hospitals cheaper? You know, this government is driven by the almighty buck, and they think that everything that's privatized is going to be better, but that isn't the case, Mr. Speaker. We have some basic services that we have found out are not better when they're privatized, and health care is one of them. We can just look to our neighbours to the south to have that verified, or we can look to Britain, where they've had a parallel system running that has been not good at all. A privatized system drives costs up, and I think there are many reasons to substantiate that. In fact, a private system is more expensive and less efficient.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

So if we think about why that is, one of the reasons is competition for practitioners, be they nurses or doctors within the system. When you run two parallel systems, private systems can charge more, therefore pay practitioners higher rates of dollars. So what does that do, Mr. Speaker? It not only increases the costs of service delivery to the end users but also drives up the costs in the public system, because then suddenly the public system has to be competitive in the wage market or else they lose all their doctors. They just move from one system to the other, and we've seen lots of examples of that, particularly in the British system, where we have seen many studies that will indicate that the doctors who have to provide some public service minimize their hours there, thereby creating long, long waiting lists, forcing people to see the same doctor on the private side and pay the higher dollars. So it's certainly an issue that we have to think about and talk about and a good reason to support this bill, I think.

There are cost gaps between profit and not-for-profit hospitals and how they operate, and they widen. There are lots of good reasons for that. We're seeing that in the public system. There's no expectation of profit at the end of the day, but when private investors put dollars into the system, they expect a return on their money. Somebody pays for that, Mr. Speaker, and it's us. It's us in the cost of medical services.

The administration costs drive up the costs. When we take a look at comparisons between systems that are private and that are public, we see that the administration costs are significantly higher than what they are in public systems. They have to have administrators to deal with all the HMOs or whatever kinds of private insurance providers they have. They have administrators to deal with marketing aspects, technology aspects, investor relations, corporate filings. There can be all the legal filings other than taxes, securities filings. All that stuff is costly and takes up a lot of time, Mr. Speaker, and somebody pays for it.

We don't have that in the public system. It's not necessary, and it's good that it's not necessary. We have other added expenses in the private system like the salary costs, not just the monthly expenses but the benefit packages that are used to attract people to the system. We saw that with nurses and doctors here who were attracted stateside because of the great benefit packages – stock options, pension plans, extended other kinds of benefits – and somebody pays for those. Once again, it's the user. Income taxes, then, on profits too are an issue with corporate filings. We also have the subsequent costs of doing business in terms of taxes, and all of that stuff has to be factored into a public system: all add-on costs, all not necessary in a public system. The dollars, if managed correctly, Mr. Speaker, can go directly to providing frontline services.

Now, I don't say that that system is perfect as it stands today, Mr. Speaker. We hear concerns from people within the system who say that even now in the public system we have administrative costs that are too high and that we need to see some of that trickle down to service providers on the front lines, be they cleaning staff, nurses, aides, or doctors. I think that's an efficiency that we always need to be improving on, but no doubt it is half the cost that it would be in a private system, so we have to think about that.

This government talks a lot about market forces driving down prices and costs. Well, it hasn't worked in electricity so far, Mr. Speaker, and it isn't going to work in health care either. Health care is an anomaly. It's different than a lot of other kinds of consumer goods, and it's a perfect example of market failure, where the market, in fact, doesn't work, where you can't supply enough services to meet the demand. Where the service is specialized and often can be pitched to the patient in a fashion where the patient or the user of this service can't verify or justify the services that they need, the system is then open to taking advantage of people who don't have a lot of technical background or medical expertise. So this is not a system that lends itself to competition.

It's hard for patients or users of the system to comparison shop, Mr. Speaker. It's not fun running around trying to check out different doctors or how you can substitute one product for another. It's tough to do that. They just often don't have the ability or the technical expertise to be able to do that, and they're just open to being manipulated or otherwise talked into services that may or may not be necessary. They don't have any ability to judge the quality of the service and the cost-effectiveness of the service that's being brought forward. It isn't really that kind of commodity. You can take a look at two apples sitting on a shelf and make a decision about which one to purchase, but it isn't that easy when you're talking about medical services. So I think that's something that we have to consider in this.

Another question we hear all the time is: will for-profit health care raise costs to the public system? Yes, they do. There are all kinds of issues that need to be addressed. Conflict of interest in those systems is something that we've talked about in this Legislature before and something that is a possibility with elected RHAs. We've had some discussions about that in terms of who sits on the boards, who makes the decisions, and who gets to decide who's making the money at the end of the day. We know that historically in this province it isn't the average person who benefits from those kinds of deals, Mr. Speaker, and I see no reason for that to change.

This government talks all the time about shorter waiting lists in a private system or else how ineffective waiting lists are as a measure of performance. They argue both sides of that case. I think it's interesting that they do that when it's convenient. They talk about how we shouldn't be using waiting lists as a measure, and then we'll hear the minister also talk about waiting lists having been shortened.

In fact, when we took a look at the cataract operations in this province – and we spent some time doing this during Bill 11 debate – what we found was that those regions offering completely public cataract services were not only cheaper but had the least long waiting lists. That was Lethbridge region, Mr. Speaker, that provided a completely public service at a much lower cost and with much reduced waiting lists. Edmonton was a good example of being a middle example of costs, where I think it's about 80 percent of the services were provided publicly. The waiting lists were substantially lower than those that were all provided by private operators like in Calgary, where it was a completely private system. They had the longest possible waiting lists and the highest cost.

So there just isn't any way you can justify a private system being better than a public system based on either evidence available from other jurisdictions or evidence available right here in this province. It'll be interesting to see how this unfolds, and it's certainly a concern for us as we see more private operators cropping up in Alberta, particularly from the international agreement side.

I think what we'll find with NAFTA is that once the doors are opened to these private operators, it's a very slippery slope, and this province will fall off that slope very quickly. They won't be able to shut the doors and say: this is enough; we have enough private operators in here now. The public system down the road looks like it could be completely eroded, and that might be okay if everybody can afford to pay, but everybody can't afford to pay. In fact, I would suggest that most of the members in this Assembly would have a hard time financing a serious health problem within their family at the cost of current services, not to mention the escalating cost of those in the future, and I think that's something that we need to be very concerned about. It's easier to make sure that you have all of the steps in place before you move forward with something like this.

We saw this with the deregulation. Had the government put the rules in place before deregulation happened, it might have worked, Mr. Speaker. As it is now, we have a very costly boondoggle on our hands for the next couple of years at least, perhaps longer than that. Who pays when we do? Ultimately, we hope deregulation will sort itself out. Ultimately, privatized health care won't sort itself out, because there is no mechanism for us to revert to a system that is publicly funded or publicly based. Once this system erodes to the point where it isn't providing adequate services for people at any level, it'll just be gone, and what about those people who can't afford to pay?

As the opposition, when part of our role is to be the watchdog of government, it's very important for us to raise these concerns. When part of our role is to be the spokesperson for those people who feel they are not represented by this government, then it's important for us to bring those issues forward. In this case, in a privatized health care system, there are many people who are not represented by the government: the poor, the middle-income earners, people who have chronic health problems, people who have children who have chronic health problems. Those people are not represented by private health care and this government.

So it's important that we continue at every possible opportunity to talk about these issues and keep them in front of the people of this province and keep them in front of the government, because we've known in the past that there have been cases where this government has changed its mind or incorporated some of our good ideas into legislation. Mr. Speaker, it takes a long time for this government to listen to anybody, particularly to the opposition, but it does happen, and we're quite happy to continue to put forward the arguments that people in this province are asking us to do.

That concludes what I have to say about this bill at this time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on this bill. Much was said over the past session of this Legislature. Much was said after the session. Much was said during even this past election campaign.

I read the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands' bill with some interest, and I am curious as to why anyone would want to replace the Health Care Protection Act, which is totally complete in its protection of our public system, with this bill, which is wholly inadequate. It would take more than the 20 minutes I've been allowed to point out the inadequacies of it, but I'm going to try. I'm going to remind people that we had a good debate about this, and it was the focus of both opposition parties for their election bid. It failed dismally, and this bill should fail as well.

The issue is this, Mr. Speaker. They are entirely on the wrong tack. It is not an issue of private or public. It is the issue of offering quality health services in a timely fashion. That's the issue the people I talked to are concerned with. In fact, I held four meetings in my constituency. I admit I didn't have a large turnout at any of them, but the people who were interested did come. You know, we sat down with the actual bill and went through it clause by clause, and they were shocked and dismayed and annoyed that they had been listening to such wrong, wrong information on the bill.

The fact is that the Health Care Protection Act does first in its preamble outline the responsibility of the government of Alberta "to provide leadership and support . . . of quality health services." Another part of it talks about all of the principles of universality, comprehensiveness, accessibility. There is a correlation in these two bills in that respect, and I commend the hon. member for that.

It talks about excellence in the health system, which this does not. This does not talk about excellence. It talks about a narrow system, an outdated system, that nobody – nobody – in the private system should ever offer a service, whether it's needed or whether it's a quality service. It doesn't talk about the qualifications of the provider, which this bill does. It talks about government, in my view, in reading this, determining who should provide health services.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a firm believer that health professionals are in a better position than this Legislature to determine who should provide the services. Frankly, if I have a choice between the College of Physicians and Surgeons determining a facility and if the people who operate in that facility are qualified to provide me services over the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, with all due respect I'm going to pick the College of Physicians and Surgeons every time.

We should talk about – and I wish there had been more support from both opposition parties – who has the funding responsibility and what the Canada Health Act really is, because the Canada Health Act is a funding mechanism. That's what it is. You can wrap yourself in the flag, you can wave it around, but it talks about funding, and it talks about penalty, and it talks about doctors and hospitals. That's what it talks about. It doesn't talk about the services that are important to our seniors, like allied health services, like access to optometry, to physiotherapy, to chiropractic, to podiatry, to all of those things that are important. It doesn't talk about rehab. It doesn't talk about home care. It doesn't talk about those support services that are of huge importance to our seniors' population in this province. In fact, under the Canada Health Act you wouldn't be compelled to offer MRI services. The only part that's compulsory under that is the reading of the MRI, which is done by a radiologist. That's the doctor's side of it.

So I think it's time we had a discussion about health care, not ideology, and to me this is about ideology, not about ensuring that the people of this province have quality health care.

Let's ask the federal government why their contribution to health services in this country, in this province is 13 percent when it used to be 50 percent. Well, they will tell you – and I've heard all of the stories, as all of us have – that with tax credits and that if you only take the narrow part of the health system that it covers, they're much higher than that, and they are somewhat if you take that all in but nowhere near the 50-50 that we started with.

Let's talk about who has the opportunity to raise money and the responsibility to pass it on to the province delivering the services: the federal government, who collect the vast amount of taxes – income, excise, GST, all of those things – and don't deliver health programs. They have a serious responsibility, and some of that I believe they carry out very well. In protection, in disease, in licensing there are some very good things. Some years ago when I inquired how many people in that vast array of civil service in Ottawa actually worked on the Canada Health Act, it was about 25. You know, there's something wrong with this.

So I looked at this, and I thought there must be something in here that's going to improve over Bill 11. Does it state that no person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta? Well, I found that in the Health Care Protection Act, the first article. I found:

No physician shall provide a surgical service in Alberta, and no dentist shall provide an insured surgical service in Alberta, except in

- (a) a public hospital, or
- (b) an approved surgical facility.

I didn't find that in here. I may have missed a page, and I'd like the hon. member to correct me if I'm wrong.

I found out that queue-jumping is prohibited, not in this bill but in the Health Care Protection Act, and it's very clear in article 3. I found out in article 4 that no person could be charged an extra fee for a service associated with a medically necessary service. I'm not sure that's very clear in this area although there is a vehicle in section 10(2) for that to happen, but it's much clearer in this bill, and I would have commended the reading of this bill to the hon. member to get a few more sections. Some of them are close.

I went on and found other sections about payment, where it's prohibited and where under special circumstances it might happen. I found out that if it did happen, the patient had the full explanation of what the service was for. I found out that they couldn't be refused service because of inability to pay or saying that they wouldn't pay, but I found it in the Health Care Protection Act, not in this bill.

The area that's very important to me I found in part 2 of the Health Care Protection Act, and that is the area of the conditions of operation. It states in there that

No person shall operate a surgical facility at which insured surgical services are provided unless

- (a) the surgical facility is accredited as required by section 11(1)(b).

That's important to me when I go for medical services. I want to know that that facility is accredited. I want to know that it has been visited and inspected by people that know the system. I found out in that section that the operator of that facility has to have an agreement with the regional health authority. I thought that was excellent.

I went on and found out that the minister in approving a facility has a number of conditions that he or she must meet: that there must be a defined need, that it must be shown that it is efficient to operate both in the delivery and on the financial side of it. I found out that of course they would have to be accredited. I found out something that was incredibly important to me, that the minister could also refuse to approve a facility, and I think that provision is incredibly important.

So when I went through this bill from the hon. member, which I think he put forward in good faith, I found it woefully lacking in some of the areas that are important to me and to my constituents, the people I talk to, the people that said: I want quality services, I want timely access, and I want to ensure that the practitioners who are delivering those services and the facility they're delivering them in are accredited. As I say, I'm afraid this bill doesn't do it.

Now, the interesting part of the bill to me is the health care services commissioner. The Health Care Protection Act has a provision in it for a health advisory committee, which I thought would be quite adequate. I looked at what the health care services commissioner would do that this other body might not. Well, reporting: I think the other body could do that. Laying a copy of the report: I think that could be done. I see that a select committee might be called, which I would support if it were going to improve somebody's health status in the province, because I'm really talking about measures that will improve people's health status rather than things that are in my view – in my view and I may be wrong – more ideologically driven than they are health delivery.

The other thing that I found that was lacking in this bill was any ability to think outside the box, to look at new and innovative ways of delivering services. When we look at the health budget in this province and in other provinces across the country and we see that they are rising from 30 to 35 to 40-plus percent of budgets, you have to wonder where the line is. There's no way that you can sustain a system unless you look for new ways to deliver services.

I found it interesting in my experience over the years when a new technology would come in. MRIs are a good example. It's a wonderful diagnostic tool, but what I want to know is how much less we're using the other diagnostics. MRIs are new. Have we reduced costs by not using other diagnostics as often? When a new drug comes in that allows a patient to go home and have a quality of life rather than being in an institution, does that save us some dollars? We have a health economics group that I think looks at some of those issues for us.

There isn't a member in this Legislature on either side of this House in any party that doesn't want a quality health system. There isn't a member in this House that I know that doesn't support a publicly funded and administered system. I believe members on both sides of the House agree on those points. Where we do disagree is on how to achieve that. I can tell hon. members that unless we look at this with some innovation, with some idea just a step forward – the same is not always better. We all feel comfortable if we don't change anything. Change is frightening for everyone, but what's more frightening to me would be the loss of a system that everyone in this country cherishes and I believe we all want to fight for.

I'd like to see a bill come in that really forces us to look at innovation. I am hopeful that Mr. Romanow's committee is going to deal with that. However, I'm a little discouraged because the Prime Minister had another committee in place – and I think he actually co-chaired it – maybe four or five, six, seven years ago. We had three members on it from Alberta. They wrote a very good report, and unfortunately very few if any of the recommendations have been carried out or followed except by the provinces of their own volition. So I worry that this committee might do very good work and then the responsibility for carrying this out might fall back to the provinces, who do not have the ability to raise the funds in the same way that our partners in the federal government have.

You know, members, "profit" is not a bad word. "Private" is not a bad word. The private sector is what drives this province and allows us to enjoy the highest quality of health services in this country. The private sector is the engine of our economy. We exist with them in the public system by being the supporters of the delivery of some quality services.

The biggest danger to our health system is not the Health Care Protection Act, or Bill 11. The biggest danger is the narrow vision that many of us have that if we change anything, the sky will fall, the earth will shake, and our health system will disappear. Well, you tell me why after this time, after hearing this – and I've heard it for some years – "Doomsday; it's going down," the Capital region has been named two years in a row in Canada as the best deliverer of health services. Tell me, hon. members, why. Tell me: how could that happen? We know that the Health Care Protection Act has been in place for a year, has been proclaimed for some time, and you know what? They're doing better and better. They contract though. They contract. You know what? They're doing well.

The other thing I want to ask the hon. member is if he had the time or the opportunity to read the act that's in the Saskatchewan Legislature on this issue. If you want to read a permissive act that would allow, actually by my reading of it, for-profit hospitals, then read the Saskatchewan legislation. Have a look at it.

We asked the federal government, when they were kind of coming around making comments, just one thing. Would you do a review of all the legislation in Canada in every province, and if we are lacking in some area, we'll look at changing our legislation. But don't look at us in isolation because we're Alberta, because we are innovative, and because our health system is working pretty well. Look at every piece of legislation in this country and then tell us where we're lacking. You know, we're still waiting for that answer.

So I have a little problem when I'm trying to determine in my own mind what the real agenda is. Well, I can tell you what the real agenda is from this member's point of view. As a person who represents a very large rural riding which depends on the cities of Calgary, of Edmonton, of Medicine Hat, of Red Deer, and to some extent maybe Lethbridge for the assistance in delivery of health services, our interest is quality health care. Our interest is having it provided in a quality facility and by qualified physicians.

When I asked my constituents how they would feel about the Gimbel health clinic being shut down, they were appalled. They were absolutely appalled. You know, when I thought about it, I was too, because who has really brought that surgery to what it is today? I remember people when they had to lay in hospitals for it. [Mrs. McClellan's speaking time expired] My, the time flies.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to close debate, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND Party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a distinguished teacher and Edmontonian, David Eggen, who is sitting in the public gallery. David ran for the New Democrats in Edmonton-Centre in the last provincial election. I ask David to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

MRS. GORDON: I, too, Mr. Speaker, would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you someone who is sitting in the public gallery, probably not a stranger to many, Mr. Pat Brennan, who hails from Parkland county. He is a councillor with the Parkland county and on the Northlands board. He is standing in the public gallery. I would ask that you give him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to close debate.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin, I wonder if you could enlighten me as to the amount of time I might have left to conclude my remarks.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Five minutes.

MR. MASON: Five minutes. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to be able to conclude debate on second reading of Bill 204. I'm quite proud of Bill 204 and would certainly recommend it to all members of the Assembly.

It does three main things, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it enshrines the five principles of the Canada Health Act in the clauses of the legislation itself, and they are therefore stronger and more binding than if they were just placed in the preamble, as Bill 11 does.

Secondly, it does set minimum standards for health care, including limits on waiting lists and a ban on queue-jumping, something which the government's legislation fails to do.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, it prohibits outright private, for-profit hospitals and clinics, something which the government's legislation clearly does not do.

Now, I'd like to respond briefly to the comments of the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. He talks about Bill 11 protecting the principles of the Canada Health Act, and I suppose that it does, Mr. Speaker, but I think that it's not nearly as strong as it could be. He says that repealing the government's legislation leaves us open to sanctions from the federal government, but I remind members of the Assembly that it was the Conservative government of Alberta that incurred those sanctions by continuing to promote balance billing, otherwise known as extra billing, and it was the federal government that forced Alberta to heel. I wasn't in politics at that time, but I sure remember the squealing and the howling from this government when the federal government did the right thing and enforced the Canada Health Act. If they hadn't done that, you can imagine what we might be paying.

I want to talk about the comments that a number of members have said about Roy Romanow being open to consider private aspects in the health care system. Of course he's open. He's got to study all aspects of it, and certainly this government would squawk a great deal if he wasn't open to it. But what will he find, Mr. Speaker? When he looks at all of the research that's been done about which kinds of systems work well, which kinds of systems are cheaper and reduce waiting lists and provide good services, he will find a mass of evidence that a publicly funded, publicly owned and operated health care system achieves those goals best.

When he looks for the evidence on the side of private health care, what will he find? Well, he'll find just what this government found – and it's only come to light as a result of a freedom of information request. The government's evidence for private health care amounted to nothing, nada, zip, not a thing, not a speck of evidence to indicate that private health care provides better outcomes than public health care, and that is the difference between this bill, Bill 204, and the government's legislation. The government's legislation is based on a foundation of sand. There is nothing there to support the principles that the hon. Deputy Premier has talked about. On the contrary, my bill is supported by virtually every major study that has been done on the economics of health care.

MR. NORRIS: Pravda. Proletariat. You're Red.

MR. MASON: Don't Red bait me, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, I take exception to this yappy old minister across the way here. He's so damned pleased with himself, he can't . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please address through the chair, and that will avoid any such confrontations.

MR. MASON: I find that completely unacceptable from a minister of the Crown.

Now, I want to say something about the comments of the hon. Deputy Premier. I am honoured that they would bring in a heavy hitter like this to speak to my bill. I appreciate it, but she's talked about thinking outside the box, as all the government members are wont to do. They're all wont to talk about thinking outside the box. What does it really mean, Mr. Speaker? It's a code word for relentless experimentation and search for the Holy Grail of privatization.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The five minutes are up, so we have to call for the vote.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: You are calling a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I'd like you to rule on the use of the language that's just been used repeatedly from the other side of the House when this member was speaking. Those words that were used: I'd like you to look at the Hansard and rule on whether or not those words and those expressions are parliamentary. It's offensive to hear this kind of accusation made without regard to the dignity and the respect with which we need to deal with each other in this House.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair was unable to hear those words, and a ruling will be made once the Hansard has been referred to.

On the motion for second reading of Bill 204, Medicare Protection Act.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:21 p.m.]

Bill 205 Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture is an integral part of Alberta's economy and is of significant importance to those of us residing in the Lacombe-Stettler constituency. Unfortunately, many Alberta farmers have been hit with a combination of factors over the last four years, factors certainly beyond their control, including low commodity prices, rising input costs, multiple weather related problems, and, most recently, changes made or changes now being contemplated in some jurisdictions to local land use bylaws that threaten the long-term sustainability of livestock production and overall viability of these family farms.

Viability of the overall livestock industry is important and at risk.

In order for you, the members of this Assembly, to better understand the current issues surrounding livestock production and expansion in Lacombe county, it is necessary for me to begin by first providing you with a short historical perspective.

The presence of large numbers of livestock has been part of the western Canadian landscape for thousands of years. These animals, of course, were buffalo, or bison, and they have sustained First Nations people for hundreds of generations. Their effect on the landscape was at times very dramatic and would today be called threatening and pollutant. With the coming of European settlers approximately 125 years ago, agriculture replaced hunting as the way of life, and attention became focused primarily on producing grain for export markets. Vast quantities were grown and sold, millions of people were fed, and relative prosperity prevailed on the Canadian prairies.

But times have changed, Mr. Speaker, and our agriculture sector has had to deal with the many, many challenges of this change. Countries that were once customers have become competitors. Making a living producing grain for export has become more difficult, but farmers in Alberta are moving ahead, meeting these challenges by diversifying, moving out of the box, adapting to changing market conditions by expanding their production in new areas, particularly specialty crops and livestock.

My farmers are no different. They, too, have had to rethink their farming operations, with emphasis on adapting quickly and with resilience to pressure from a moving target, the ever changing global marketplace. My farmers recognize that as a family farm they must increase production capacity and maximize value from their existing land base to remain economically sound. Flexibility is also key. On August 3, 2000, things changed significantly for livestock production, for livestock producers operating within the jurisdictional boundaries of Lacombe county. This was the day that council gave second and third readings to a new land use bylaw that, quite simply, has gone way, way too far. This poorly conceived bylaw is punitive, excessive, and severely hampers and/or restricts now existing operators from expanding.

Allow me to explain, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, these changes were made in haste without prior due consideration given to consulting with affected stakeholders. In fact, according to producers this bylaw was rammed through in less than a month, with the county repeatedly rejecting all attempts by responsible producers for discussion, resolve, or compromise. I, along with 600-plus others, attended the only public meeting held, and it was in my opinion a complete sham. Most came seeking clarification, needing answers, wanting answers, and hoping, hope upon hope, for an extension of time. Questions were certainly raised, but no answers were given. No dialogue took place. Nothing was clarified. No rationale was stated as to why these changes were needed, and absolutely no consideration was given to the repeated requests by many for a full review involving the entire industry. It literally made a joke of what should constitute a public hearing process and what it should accomplish.

What has this done, and what does it mean to the individual livestock producers now existing and operating in Lacombe county? More than likely a dairy farmer or a hog farmer, the ongoing viability of his entire operation is threatened. His lifelong investment in land, buildings, and equipment is jeopardized, the assets he owns greatly devalued. His resale value, if he has one, is greatly diminished. The way of life for him and his family and often his family before him, his father and grandfather, the quality of life and the life they have lived has suddenly become compromised. The banks he has used are now questioning his operation long term in relationship to his borrowing requirements. The flexibility he very much needs is decreased dramatically, if not entirely gone. Neighbours, friends, and family are fighting over who is right, who is wrong, and where we are going. He knows he is represented by a council who refuses to acknowledge his contribution at the local level, his contribution to the agriculture sector as a whole, knows that this same council doesn't seem to care whether he can continue to operate successfully in their jurisdiction, and his existing farmstead is now not in compliance with the amended land use bylaw.

Throughout the area the effects are dramatic and evident: the divisiveness, the uncertainty, the confusion, the conflict, the pessimism, and the questions. Why is this happening, and why now? One truly has to ponder the drafters' intent with these bylaws. What is the reasoning? Do the drafters not realize the full implications of what they have written, or have the council and councillors made this decision, with the majority making the decision? Do they not support nor will they endorse livestock production? Though I can't give an answer to that, I can tell this Assembly that today in Lacombe county we have a very much divided community. It's time for the province to get involved, to take action, action aimed at equity, fairness, and consistency. Producers only want what they deserve: clear, concise, and understandable rules under which they must operate, the same rules that would apply to all, regardless of where they live or where they farm.

Producers universally recognize and accept that they must adopt best management practices and ensure responsible stewardship and sustainability, but these practices must be set out in consistent guidelines that are not subject to arbitrary change or arbitrary interpretation. These producers need predictability. They need some level of protection from continually being harassed by frivolous challenges to their ongoing farm business operations. Their business needs are basically the same as those of other important sectors in Alberta relative to the Alberta economy and critical to the Alberta advantage, namely the oil and gas industry and the petrochemical industry.

This is in fact, Mr. Speaker, the very essence and thrust of Bill 205 and the amendment relative to section 619.1 of the Municipal Government Act. I would like to see us elevate the status of livestock production to the level of importance similar to natural resource development within the province of Alberta.

Let me go back for a few minutes and explain for your benefit and the benefit of the members in greater detail why many of my existing farmsteads are now not in compliance with the new land use bylaw and what it means to the individual operator. The reason is thus: the new bylaw requires that livestock operators own all of the land within the minimum distance separation setback. So it must be entirely on one consolidated parcel. Previously the minimum distance separation under the old bylaw allowed operators to encroach on a neighbour's property, and expansion was allowed if the neighbour provided consent. So simply stated, most of my existing livestock operators today do not own the land with the new setback requirements.

Because of the grandfathering provisions contained in the Municipal Government Act, these farmsteads have now been designated as a nonconforming use by Lacombe county. However, there are complications and severe ramifications. There are two circumstances where grandfathering does not protect a nonconforming use. Number one, where the building is damaged by fire and needs to be rebuilt. This means that any existing operation in Lacombe county that does not contain the minimum distance separation on its own property would not be allowed to rebuild on their present site after a major fire. This leads, of course, to a number of questions, one being: what happens with insurance proceeds? It's my understanding that if you don't build on the site where the fire was, you are just paid half the proceeds.

Number two, where the building or use is vacant for greater than six months. So if a producer ceases the use of his operation for six months or more, he would have to apply for a new development permit and move his buildings. I have no idea where he is supposed to move his buildings, but in order to comply with the setback requirements, this is what would have to happen.

Now, why would an operator cease to operate? Possibly out of necessity; he's ill and needs time to hopefully recover; he decides to temporarily shut down his operation because what he is producing is at depressed commodity prices; he decides to sell his operation, but it's taking more than six months to find a buyer. Again, I ask this Assembly: is this fair?

I recall a quote something to the effect of: necessity is often the mother of invention. Such is the case with this situation. As a direct result of the changes made last summer the Lacombe County, Partners in Agriculture was formed. This group's membership is well over 600-plus local residents from the livestock sector and agriculture businesses in the Lacombe region, and they are working diligently to see if they can assist in implementing changes. They have taken much time and care and have spent considerable dollars to review this entire situation and are committed not only to livestock production in Lacombe county but seek changes necessary for the betterment of the industry as a whole, provincewide now and with sustainability well into the future.

Their mission: the preservation of economically viable family farms living in harmony within the rural community.

Their goals. As most are responsible producers, many second- or third-generation farmers, they are seeking a balance between environmental protection and commonsense regulation. These goals include greater regulatory certainty, science-based standards, fully enforceable legislation protecting right to farm, public education regarding the importance of agriculture, and industry education regarding leading-edge management practices.

I would like to share a quote with you from the Lacombe County, Partners in Agriculture:

We want to work with the province and establish a regulatory framework that protects the environment and human health but allows producers to operate if they meet certain criteria . . . The real problem is that municipal governments lack the expertise or technical knowledge to address these issues and instead resort to these [very] restrictive By-Laws. Until that's fixed, livestock producers will continue to face unreasonable hurdles.

Could, Mr. Speaker, the code of practice 2000, the code that's used for the safe handling of manure, or any amendments thereto not be successfully entrenched in legislation? There is so much that needs to be talked about regarding this issue. This is a huge issue not only in Lacombe county but in many other parts of the province, and unfortunately a 20-minute speech does not allow me to touch on very many aspects of it. I know and appreciate that the province of Alberta is working to resolve many of these outstanding issues. I'm very pleased that we can see some changes and the industry can carry on and do what they want to do; that is, farm. As I said, in 20 minutes unfortunately one cannot cover everything that's involved. My intent today was to make this Assembly aware of the situation as it relates to my constituency. It's a critical situation, one that needs our resolve.

Agriculture is very, very important to everyone, not only to farmers. It's also very important to rural communities. Your communities, my communities, the town of Stettler, the town of Lacombe, the village of Mirror, the village of Donalda rely heavily and are dependent on their surrounding agricultural community, and all of us in Alberta, in Canada, in the world enjoy and want to continue to enjoy the bounties that these farmers produce and grow. Nothing beats Alberta meat.

Yes, I'm convinced that common ground can be found. It will of course require commitment and action by this government and the industry to mitigate as much as possible the many concerns related to the impact of livestock production and expansion on Alberta's environment and rural landscape, but I'm confident that it can be done. Yes, it will also require more education and a greater willingness on the part of opponents of the industry to recognize the importance of this sector and that sustainable, well-managed livestock development is not inherently bad.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege this afternoon to rise to speak to Bill 205. You know, the issue of how we deal with all of the impacts of intensive livestock has been a debate that's been going on basically the whole nine years now that I've been involved in the Legislature. We've seen a lot of different impact studies done and issues that have been looked at in terms of how best to deal with both the impact of the intensive livestock operation on the community but also how to deal with some of the issues that come up in the context of fairness and openness and the kind of participatory decision-making. The government has undertaken two and a half different consultations, and they have basically led to what now is, I think, a fairly well-documented and accepted code of practice for handling livestock waste and for dealing with the issues of siting.

The issue is: how do we deal with it in the context of trying to make some of the recommendations in there actually functional and promote the decision-making that goes on in the community? Bill 205 is effectively going to take a lot of the conflict, a lot of the technical aspects of the debate out of the hands of the community. It will put it into an agency that will effectively be making the environmental waste handling, siting decisions associated with: how do we deal with an intensive livestock operation? It'll take those away from the local community.

If we look at some of the aspects of the Municipal Government Act and look at them from the perspective of section 619, we have to basically question whether or not this is the best place to insert some kind of control or decision-making into it. Because basically under subsection 1(3) we end up there saying that the local community has no chance to override a decision that's made by one of these agencies that are going to be designated to approve essentially an environmental plan for the intensive livestock operation in question. The end result then is that if an application is made, the local community has to accept the siting and the location and the final decision. They can't overrule it using local parameters.

In effect what we're seeing here is, I guess, two things. One is that a local community would essentially have to have a very solid, a very well-thought-out, a very encompassing land use plan and zoning criteria in place before such an application was considered so that when it came back, the community would in effect be in a situation to say: okay; yes, this intensive livestock operation fits our community land use plan, our zoning plans, and that's the place it can go. If we look at the flexibility that local municipalities have in designing their land use plans and putting in place their predetermined zoning requirements, they don't have the flexibility that would give them that much say over how or where one of these intensive livestock operations gets situated.

The other option, then, is essentially: if we don't have this well-thought-out plan in place, the local community basically has no choice for second thought, for a reconsideration of what impact such an activity would have on the way they see their community. We end up then in a situation where if this kind of arm's-length decision can be made about the environmental aspects, that's extremely useful.

Mr. Speaker, I've been to a number of community meetings, appeal panels, land use board meetings. What we've heard there on a constant basis is, you know, just basically discussions about the technical aspects of whether or not a business plan for an intensive livestock operation is environmentally sound. This gets into some extremely technical aspects.

Bill 205 would go a long way to address that. The province, by appointing or designating a particular agency to undertake the environmental approval, could take out of the local community debate around a lot of the technical issues that the expertise is not necessarily always available to all parties in the community. It might be available to the planning appeal board or to the county council or MD council. It might be available to the applicant. But for each of the people, in terms of either their wish to be a supporter or an opponent to an application, they don't have the technical expertise. So moving the technical discussion, the technical question away from the appeal panel, away from the local community, that's a good idea. I think that's kind of what we have seen in some of the discussions that are going on with respect to how should the intensive livestock waste-handling system be implemented in the province.

I spent a lot of time last fall at the AAMDC convention, and just one after another the councillors or the Reeves were coming up and saying: "What are we going to do about this. How are we going to handle it?" How will we effectively have common standards for environmental protection, common standards for the issue of all of the technical aspects that are necessary?" But what is most important to the local community is the ability to still have some say over the lifestyle that they are going to live in conjunction with these intensive livestock operations.

What I'd suggest is that, you know, this is a very effective way to deal with the technical aspects, but on a stand-alone basis it effectively takes away from the community any ability to deal with the definition of the kind of community they want, unless they are given a time frame up front to basically put in place a comprehensive land use plan for their community. When I read through the Municipal Government Act and I talk to the councillors out there, when I talk to community people, talk to even some of their land use individuals, the people who actually get involved working with groups who are either a proponent or an opponent to some of these issues, they're saying that the Municipal Government Act right now doesn't provide the flexibility to the local rural municipalities to deal with the kind of zoning and the kind of land use planning that they'd like to see.

What I would like to suggest is that we look at this as a convenient way to handle the technical aspects of intensive livestock. You know, when you talk to individuals even in the livestock sectors, whether it's cattle or hogs or poultry, they're all saying: "Yes, we want to know the ground rules. We want to know what is expected of us, and we want to have a firm commitment that if we live up to these standards, the neighbours will as well." That's what's important and that's what's good about this kind of a process, when you deal with it from a provincial or agency-type review. What it doesn't have, though, is that partnership that's necessary to provide a sense of self-control or self-determination for the local communities. Right now they look at their own land use planning options, and basically they don't have the ability to deal with any of the kinds of questions that are associated with how they can develop their own community.

Mr. Speaker, some of the suggestions that have come up – and I think some of them are very good. What we need to do is have within the zoning options that are available for rural municipalities the kind of flexibility that an urban municipality has in the gradients of particular types of classifications of land use that are available. Some of the suggestions that have come up from some of the rural municipalities indicate that they would like to be able to say: okay; if we've got a park or a place that individuals and groups attend on a regular basis, maybe what we need to have is a buffer area around it. Well, they would perceive the buffer area to be larger than the minimum-distance requirements in the guidelines.

So what we want to do is say okay; let's give them the option of, say, from around their park going out a mile or two miles and let them zone that into a particular type of agriculture land. Then the next couple of miles have it zoned a different kind of agriculture land, and then after that maybe that's where they'll be willing to allow for the zoning that would encourage and permit the establishment of, you know, some of the larger sized intensive livestock operations. The cutoffs that are available in the code of practice are in some cases really quite modest in terms of the potential environmental impact or the community impact that could result from the establishment of these kinds of operations.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that there's an awful lot of difference between a 1,000-head feedlot – there's a quantum increase to a 10,000- or 15,000-head feedlot. There's a significant increase again as you get up into 25,000 or 30,000 or 40,000 head. We see some of these applications now being made for very large multi-unit hog operations, where the impact there becomes very, very significant, and we need to deal with giving the local communities a sense that, yes, they have the ability to deal with how their community is going to develop. We give that freedom and we give that flexibility to urban areas. Why don't we provide it to the local area in rural Alberta as well so that they have control over what's going on: the kinds of businesses, the size of businesses, and the degree to which the business they're allowing into their community interacts with the rest of the community, the different aspects of the community, whether it's residential, whether it's recreational, whether it's commercial/industrial as opposed to just agricultural.

I think what we need to do in the context of Bill 205 at this time is look at it in terms of its kind of threat, not necessarily a threat but its potential use whereby a decision is made totally away from the community about whether or not a particular type of activity can occur in that community, and then the community has no second chance. What we need to do is build into this a situation where the community says: yes, we want it; we want it sitting there. Then let's do the environmental analysis, let's do the technical review, let's look at whether or not that particular site can provide an adequate business plan for that intensive livestock operation, and then if it can, everybody's happy. The community has said that it's okay if it's there, then we've looked at the technical aspects and we've said that, yes, it's a sound business proposal, and that's when we should go ahead with it.

It seems to me that if Bill 205 were to further amend the Municipi-pal Government Act and further deal with the flexibility that would provide local municipalities within their land use planning framework the option to deal with zoning different levels of land use classification, then what we would have is a set of options which would give us an environmentally sound water quality, air quality, and the whole function of land use: to prevent land degradation. These kinds of issues would all be addressed by the technical review, but the community still has its own say about the kind of issue that comes up. I think if we track through the incidents that have gone on – and I know the member sponsoring the bill has had a number of comments about how these issues have divided communities. Mr. Speaker, we need to act and act quickly to prevent that kind of community impact.

What we want to do is make sure that in a sense we have a situation where the community still feels it has a say, where the community can determine how it wants to grow and on what basis it wants to grow but which will also give a reasonable signal to a lot of other individuals that, yes, we are committed to protecting the environment and that we're committed to protecting the land base of the province.

We have to look at it, Mr. Speaker, from the perspective of how these kinds of guidelines and rules really do deal with the issues of the local community. Given the time frame that we've had, we've had some contacts made with people out in the community, and the general sense is that this bill would provide a very sound environmental review process based on the code of practice, but it does take away from the community any sense that they are in control of what their community is all about. Until we can get those kinds of issues addressed and those kinds of concerns addressed on behalf of the community – the role of government is to deal with the issues of how communities can be run, directed, and legislated to deal with the community as the people who are there.

What we want to do is look at it from the point of view of: is this bill truly giving the people of the community a sense? If we're talking about the people who are involved in the business, then this serves their interests probably very adequately, but when you look at the neighbours who are there, the rest of the community, the adjoining individuals, even the current code of practice doesn't address the necessity for the community to feel comfortable with what's going on and the community to have a sense that this is what we want, what we need, or what we enjoy in our community and what will give our community an economic benefit and also a sense that we do have an aspect within it that we care about each other and that the quality of life and the style of life and the ability to move about in the community are priorities.

So, Mr. Speaker, on that basis, at this point in time I would suggest that we not support this bill, delay it, adjourn it, or amend it when it gets to committee stage so that what happens is we can make sure that this act is further amended to make sure that those local people do have the final say about the kind of community they want. Otherwise, I don't think that in this form and with just this part of it I can support it.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak on Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001. This bill raises some very important but contentious and complex issues in rural Alberta and certainly issues that I've been familiar with as a rural councillor for 17 years. I think I'm a little bit familiar, as well, with the issues in the mover's constituency, having known a number of the people involved there for many years and having attended the public hearing that she spoke about in her opening comments. So I certainly understand why she would like to bring forth her proposal to this Assembly to resolve this issue.

Mr. Speaker, in principle I agree that something certainly needs to be done to provide direction to the intensive livestock industry so that they may know what the rules are and have the assurance that they, in fact, can develop and expand their operations if they meet that certain standard. This is something, however, they are unable to do.

Intensive livestock operations are a very important part of our agriculture industry, especially the value-added agriculture industry in this province, and a very vital market for our feed grain industry, that is having some difficulty, and I raised some questions about that in the House just yesterday.

As it stands now, Mr. Speaker, ILOs are finding that even though they may meet the conditions of the local land use bylaws and provincial health and environmental standards, they're invariably appealed, and they feel that they're losing those appeals on a regular basis based on emotions rather than hard facts. Certainly I'm not saying that people aren't justified in being concerned when they think that an intensive livestock development in their community is going to jeopardize the enjoyment and value of their homes and their property and even perhaps restrict further development of that property. Of course, pollution and odour and health concerns are invariably the reasons that they cite for appeal, but many of these concerns are based on perception rather than facts. Many of the older ILOs that have existed for some time are utilizing outdated management practices. They are existing under the rules of the day that they were permitted to adhere to, and they haven't been updated. I'm not denying that they're causing some problems.

The industry has made great strides, however, in the last 10 to 20 years, and I'm pleased to say that in some small way I think I was a part of that, being involved in local government. They've improved their management practices, they've improved their facilities, and they've improved by embracing new technologies. In spite of those improvements, perceptions that the public has of all ILOs still remain quite negative even to the point of being very divisive and confrontational in our farm communities. Bill 205 appears to be an attempt to rectify this situation. However, I'm not convinced that I can support this particular bill the way it is.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that Bill 205 is going to produce the desired effects that the communities are seeking. I'm aware that this government has been undertaking a review of the whole intensive livestock issue, and the hon. Member for Leduc has been chairing a committee which I understand has conducted extensive public consultations on this matter.

As I said before, as a former reeve and councillor with the MD of Kneehill and the chairman of the development appeal board there, I've had ample opportunity to deal with this issue, and, Mr. Speaker, I believe we provided leadership to the industry as well as other municipalities.

One of the concerns I have with supporting Bill 205 at this time, Mr. Speaker, is that I feel it's premature, especially with the expected report from the committee that's chaired by the hon. Member for Leduc, as I stated before. I know I'd feel better equipped to make a decision, as I'm sure all members in this House would, if we had the advantage of having that feedback from the public and the industry stakeholders. It's my understanding from reading this bill that municipalities' concerns certainly would not be met, because they have grave concerns over land use decisions being transferred from the local level to the provincial level. The way this is written, that's exactly what this would do. This is a drastic change from the current legislation, and I'm concerned that not enough consultation has gone into this particular bill.

In light of the fact that there is a government committee which has consulted with the public, I would have to say that although I do strongly support looking at changes to the current system governing ILOs, I do not believe Bill 205 adequately addresses all the concerns that need to be addressed. It may reduce the appeals by restricting them, but it's not going to reduce the desire for an appeal. So I don't believe it's the answer at this time.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks, and I'd like to move adjournment on the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 205.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

THE SPEAKER: Before recognizing the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, earlier today, hon. members, a situation developed in the Assembly which has required a wee bit of investigation. The chair is understanding that when one hon. member was speaking, there was an interjection by another hon. member.

Looking at the text of what occurred, this basically is what was said. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was speaking.

And that is the difference between this bill, 204, and the government's legislation. The government's legislation is based on a foundation of sand. There is nothing there to support the principles that the hon. Deputy Premier has talked about.

On the contrary, my bill is supported by virtually every major study that has been done on the economics of health care.

Then we had an interjection by the hon. Minister of Economic Development: "Pravda. Proletariat. You're Red." Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands went on to say:

Don't Red bait me, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, I take exception to this yappy old minister across the way here. He's so damned pleased with himself he can't . . .

The Acting Speaker went on to say, "Please address through the chair, and that will avoid any such confrontations." The hon.

Member for Edmonton-Highlands then went on to say, "I find that completely unacceptable from a minister of the Crown."

Well, hon. members, Standing Orders, your rules, 13(1) says:

The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order.

Then 13(4) says:

When a member is speaking, no person shall . . .

(b) interrupt that member, except to raise a point of order.

The English language is a wonderful language, and words generally have meanings that are usually accepted by most people and understood by most people. Sometimes in the context, though, these words have multiple interpretations. Just so as to ensure that there's absolutely no misrepresentation or no misunderstanding on this matter, the chair would like to have this matter brought to a successful conclusion and would call on the Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, earlier today while listening to the hon. member speak, I let my Irish heritage get the best of me, and I saw red while he was talking. I would like to go on record as apologizing for references that I made to certain magazines that he might subscribe to. It was not my intention to indicate that he was any of those things, and for that I apologize to the Speaker, to the hon. member, and to the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene tonight, we do so in Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: On the motion put forward by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, would all members in favour of the motion please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. It's carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 2, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/02

head: Committee of Supply

head: Main Estimates 2001-2002

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Again, as usual, we ask that there only be one member standing and talking at a time. We must remind hon. members that the House leaders' agreement constitutes two hours for questions.

Health and Wellness

THE CHAIRMAN: We'll start off, then, with the hon. minister for his opening comments.

MR. MAR: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to present the Alberta Health and Wellness budget for 2001-2002 for your approval.

Colleagues, public health care in Alberta faces a herculean task: to help the 3 million people of this province with the full range of their diverse, acute, rehabilitative, and long-term health needs to achieve optimal health and wellness. The biggest issue we face is not our commitment to that goal; it is our ability to sustain that commitment in the face of a growing and aging population, a health workforce that is nearing retirement, the impact of new technologies on budgets and training, public expectations of access, and a growing concern over the ever increasing cost. As we look ahead, our biggest challenge is to ensure that our health care system will continue to be there with the right service at the right time and by the right professional.

The Health and Wellness budget covered by the business plan for 2001 to 2003 is dedicated to maintaining the health system while we continue to consult on and discuss how our system must evolve if we are to meet Albertans' health needs in the future. The 28 percent increase in health expenditures over the next three years simply to maintain our health system shows how urgently that evolution is needed. I look forward to seeing the results of the Romanow commission, the outcomes of the Senate Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, and most importantly the results of discussions with health providers and people in this province as we seek to develop made-in-Alberta solutions to sustainable quality care.

For example, our business plan makes a commitment to review how health services are used, examine policies and guidelines for community rehabilitation and related services, and consult on new directions for primary care. Until we receive the recommendations and are able to act on them, we must work to maintain our health services for the benefit of Albertans. This budget addresses the costs of retaining our health workforce in the face of stiff domestic and international competition for professional staff, maintaining services to meet the rising demand, continuing to underwrite prescription drugs, protecting the wellness of Albertans, and staying in the lead in health systems management.

It is not just our population that is aging. A large portion of our health workforce is nearing retirement. The inevitable loss of thousands of workers at a time when the demand for services is increasing lends urgency to strategies that keep and attract health professionals to maintain our workforce, let alone help it grow. Doctors and nurses agree that recent contract agreements will help attract professionals, but the increase in salaries and benefits will cost us over $700 million over the next two years, $390 million in the first year alone. In addition, $34.5 million in the first year will pay for more physician services provided to a growing and aging population, while an added $4.1 million will help maintain our physician workforce by increasing support for physician training programs such as academic health education, residency programs, rural medical education, and the international medical graduate program.

To address the growing costs of physicians, we are exploring alternative compensation for doctors through pilot projects that also improve patient services. An example is the Crowfoot Village Family Practice in Calgary, where physicians are paid a fixed rate based on the number of patients they treat rather than the standard fee for service. This allows physicians to spend the time that a patient needs.

This budget includes an additional $7.5 million in the first year for the medical services delivery innovation fund to support more alternative physician payment plans. Another $5 million will go into a fund to meet the unique needs of specialists who provide province-wide services, specialists like heart and transplant surgeons and neurologists.

The higher cost of health care workers is just one indication of the pressure our growing and aging population is having on our health system. In this budget we are allocating over $250 million simply to maintain services in an environment of higher demand for programs and supports. For example, we expect it will cost health authorities $51 million more just to provide the same health services to a growing provincial population.

Allied with that are corresponding increases in other patient services: $7 million more in acute care coverage; an equal amount for higher caseloads at AADAC; $3.6 million more for ambulance services; $3.1 million for growth in Aids to Daily Living. Another $43 million will cover both the higher cost and higher usage of drugs those doctors prescribe. Eighty percent of all prescriptions are used by seniors, and $12 million of the total is for cancer drugs.

We see the further impact of growth on the cost of blood services, $10 million more; public health laboratory work, $1.1 million more; out-of-province health care, an additional $3.5 million; and $7.3 million for higher demand in allied health care such as chiropractors and extended benefits for seniors. Providing MRI scans to meet the growing demand will cost an additional $13.4 million in operating costs for the new MRI units and buying public services from private MRI providers.

Maintaining our health workforce and health services addresses only one of our core businesses, which is to "lead and support a system for the delivery of quality health services. But we have another core business, and that is to "encourage and support healthy living." A sizable portion of our budget increase is aimed at maintaining the health and safety of Albertans. While that is a laudable goal in itself, focusing on wellness has the added benefit of helping to sustain our acute and long-term care services. A healthy and injury-free Albertan has less need for acute care or rehabilitation. To the extent that exercise, diet, and avoiding tobacco can have a positive impact on one's health, there can be a corresponding impact on long-term care as well. To maintain the health of Albertans, this budget includes a significant investment in wellness activities.

We must start with an increased investment in protecting and maintaining the health of our children. In all, this budget has increased its allocations for our children by more than $29 million over the next three years. We are investing $10.8 million in strategies with other ministries to improve children's health, including children's mental health, $3.2 million to AADAC for youth at risk initiatives, and $1 million more in perinatal care for newborns. To protect against disease, we are allocating $10.2 million to immunize Albertans, mostly children, against meningitis and $4 million for other vaccines to protect children from other diseases like chicken pox. I'm also targeting $1 million to tobacco reduction, primarily to initiatives aimed at children.

For other Albertans we've increased our support for breast cancer screening by $3.6 million, and I am allocating $2 million to pharmacy information and $2.5 million to continuing care information and accountability in year 1, growing to almost $6 million in year 2.

One of our most potent tools in serving and protecting the health of Albertans is information. Quick access to health information not only supports service delivery. In the case of pharmacy information it can avoid potentially harmful drug interactions, and it provides the basis for other decisions that can have an impact on health. In the first year of this budget $10 million will help equip health offices with information systems to support the exchange of information. This investment is the groundwork to support information sharing that will help sustain our health system in the future.

The emphasis on maintenance in this budget does not minimize our commitment to improvement. Our first business plan goal is to sustain and improve health services delivery, and goal 2 is to improve Albertans' health and well being. One of the most important features we want and need is to maintain our leadership in health care delivery in Canada for the benefit of Albertans. The new MRI scan rate of 24 per 1,000 population will meet the growing demand, but it is also the highest scan rate in Canada.

Alberta has the highest organ and tissue donation rate in Canada and is recognized as a leader in transplant surgery and care, and this is why the federal government has located the national secretariat on organ and tissue donation in this province. In addition, Alberta is exploring its own organ and tissue strategy. This coming year we will support that strategy by increasing the allocation to $1.8 million in year 1, and that grows to $8.9 million in year 3.

The first point of contact with the health system is primary care. In the fall of 2000, at a primary health care conference, health care providers gathered to celebrate the conclusion of the pilot projects that explored new ways of delivering primary care and reviewed some of the aspects of those projects. As we complete our assessment of the completed projects, we will work with the health system to explore what primary care in Alberta could and should look like.

I'll conclude with this. In this budget $13.7 million is set aside to develop Alberta's primary care system that will maintain and improve access to services for Albertans to medical care and wellness initiatives that maintain health.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will speak to the budget. I won't say that I'm pleased to speak to the budget. I think in many ways it's a step in the right direction, but I do have serious questions about the entire process.

Let me begin by setting the context. A budget is a plan about how to spend money, how money will be spent, and as with every plan this budget has a context. We can start from the global context. I tabled some articles today from the esteemed medical journal The Lancet which discuss at some length great concerns about the growing pressures of globalization on health care systems throughout the world and how that trend is replacing the number one goal of health care, which has been patient and health care delivery, with a new goal, the goal of maximizing profits. The globalization trend, of course, is being felt in Canada and Alberta, and it's a significant part of the context we face.

In the continental context, closer to home, we of course live in the shadow of a very powerful country, the United States, and the American model of health care delivery is probably being studied more than any other. It teaches us many things, mostly what not to do when it comes to delivering health care. It's worth noting that Americans are spending about twice what Albertans are spending on health care per capita for a health care system that provides no coverage whatsoever to about 15 percent of their population and seriously limited coverage to another 35 or 40 percent. In fact, the kind of coverage that Canadians enjoy would be the envy of a majority of Americans. We are getting it for about half the cost, and I'm sure we all appreciate that here.

One of the great problems with the American health care system is that it's a massive intertwining of public, nonprofit, and for-profit interests. There's a huge public component to America's health care system. Astonishing as it may seem, more tax money per person goes into health care in the U.S. than it does in Canada. In short, then, their system is so inefficient as the mix that it is that as a society they are spending far more per capita than Canadians on health care, including more tax money for a system that leaves a large portion of their population with reduced or even no health care coverage. My great concern is that in recent years we've been heading down the road towards a mix of for-profit and public interests that looks more and more like the American system and that this budget shows no sign of stopping that or, indeed, of even making it visible or traceable.

In the national context our budget faces a range of challenges and opportunities. We have the Romanow and Kirby reviews. We have the aging of the health care workforce, which is a serious problem in this province and across the country. The average age of RNs in Alberta now exceeds 45, and we are not replacing them with anywhere near the sufficient numbers. Partly as a result of that, of course, we are in a situation of interprovincial competition for workers of all kinds. We also face the ethical challenges presented by new technologies and new treatments. Undoubtedly certain portions of the budget address these new technologies and treatments, and we must down the long road address the ethical questions that these raise.

Finally, our own provincial context. Health care spending in Alberta has been on a roller-coaster ride in the past 20 years, a roller-coaster ride that reflects almost perfectly the booms and busts of our economy. In the early 1980s, 20 years ago, health care spending in Alberta soared. In the later 1980s, when the price of oil and gas was very low, health care spending was squeezed and flattened right out. In the first half of the 1990s health care spending in Alberta was chopped with drastic speed and severity, more than any other province, with literally almost 15,000 health care workers losing their jobs or having their jobs downgraded.

Now we are back on the upswing of the roller coaster, where we're seeing rapid and enormous surges in health care spending. Is it any wonder that our health care system seems in turmoil? Is it any wonder that health care workers are burned out and that many who were pushed out a few years ago have no interest in returning? We have to get beyond this approach to health care budgeting and onto an approach that is based on the services that are needed. A system that is driven by services rather than surpluses is what we need.

So what are we trying to achieve with this plan? What is the government trying to achieve with their budget? Well, their mission statement is "to maintain and improve the health and wellness of Albertans by leading and working collaboratively with citizens and stakeholders.” What does that mean? How do we interpret that? How does that translate? As the minister indicated in his opening comments, the ministry’s budget identifies two core businesses. I want to take issue, in fact, with the use of the term “business.” The government is not in the health care business; it’s in the health care service. We are not customers of health care; we are citizens here, expecting a public service. It’s fine for a government to run in a businesslike fashion, but neither a government nor a health care system is a business in itself.

Nonetheless, using the terminology of the department, one of their businesses is to “lead and support a system for the delivery of quality health services.” The second is to “encourage and support healthy living.” I’ll talk for a moment about the second one first. It is, as the minister referred to in his opening remarks, very important. It has to do with prevention of disease and with maintaining the health and welfare of the public so people do not need doctors and hospitals and diagnostic services.

One of the best indicators of the health of a society is the equality of wealth distribution within that society. There’s remarkable research from countries throughout the world showing a very close correlation between the extent or the size of the range between the higher and lower income groups in a society and the level of illness. The greater the inequity of income in a society, the greater the levels of illness. Similarly, a society in which there is a reasonably equitable distribution of wealth typically has higher health indicators and longer life expectancies. I’m concerned – and this is certainly not just the minister of health’s issue – that Alberta is headed in the wrong direction on this kind of an indicator for health care and that the impact of the growing gap between the bottom and the top of Alberta’s income levels is already being felt in this budget and will be felt even more sharply in future ones.

There are, of course, some areas, any number of areas, which deserve commendation in the budget in terms of this second business. I note one that I’m aware of from outside of the budget: the Health for Two project, which is supported in part by the Capital health authority and entails a special support program for single moms and their newborn babies. As well, smoking cessation programs are of course of great importance. Automotive and car safety programs are of great importance.

But let’s set those aside, and let’s talk for a minute about the first so-called core business identified by the ministry, which is to “lead and support a system for the delivery of quality health services.” Here I come to perhaps the most important comment I can make in this or any other discussion on budgets: this budget is to a great extent practically meaningless. Why do I say that? Because all the budgets of the RHAs are presented without any detail whatsoever. There’s no indication of capital costs versus labour costs, of drug costs, of program costs. We have no clue about how much will be spent on preventative health care versus active treatment. How much is going to be spent on long-term care? None of us here know, with perhaps the exception of the minister, nor will we learn from these documents.

In fact, if you turn to page 201 of the Budget 2001 business plans, 3 and a half billion dollars is listed on one line without any detail. That’s about 15 percent of the entire expenditure of this government, and there is no way of getting more detail in these budget documents that I can see except the breakdown into the various RHAs, which tells us very little. This in my opinion makes a farce of this budget process and diminishes legislative accountability to a rubber-stamp process.

The RHA budgets themselves will not come to this Assembly. We’re being asked to approve 3 and a half billion dollars without any meaningful knowledge of how it will be spent. On this basis I feel – and this is for the record – like I must participate in this discussion with great reluctance and with a sense that it is a failed attempt at accountability. Indeed, I considered personally boycotting this discussion.

How much are we approving for staff? Don’t know. How much are we approving for administrative overhead, which this government has been so proud of cutting? We don’t know. How much is going to prevention; how much to active treatment; how much to long-term care? Don’t know. How about how much is going for information systems? Is it a million? Is it $5 million? Is it $100 million? Don’t know. Is this accountability? How much is going for MRIs? The minister’s comments talked about $13 million for MRIs. There’s no MRI line in the budget. Is that 13 million additional dollars? How does that compare to the year before and the year before that? We don’t know. How much is going to private nursing homes? Governments used to tell us that, let me remind you, but they don’t any longer. No wonder the public is nervous about conflict of interest.

Let’s look at what was available in the estimates of 10 years ago or 12 years ago. Of course, even then the estimates weren’t a wealth of information, but at least something could be gleaned. I just pulled this one, no particular purpose, off the shelf: 1988-89 government estimates, page 227, hospitals and medical care. What do we have? Well, we have a detailed listing: program supports, major urban medical and referral centres, specialized active care, rural community-based hospital facilities, community-based hospital facilities over 40 beds, capital support – there was actually a capital line in those days – salaries, wages, and employee benefits.

On page 229 the Legislature debated and could approve, in a way that we have no opportunity to do, items such as auxiliary hospital budgets, district nursing homes. How about this one? Private nursing homes. That was a separate line that could be traced in the estimates of 10 years ago that has disappeared. Voluntary nursing homes. Capital support. Those items could be seen and debated and approved in former estimates and budgets, and they have disappeared from these ones.

With that in mind, I’d suggest that we really need to determine what the RHAs actually are. Are they agents of the minister, are they agents of this Assembly, or are they self-governing organizations similar to school boards? I think we must, we absolutely must in the future include regional health authority budgets in detail in these estimates or we are simply failing in our duty as legislators to hold public dollars accountable.

I might ask: what basis are the RHAs operating on now? If there’s no detail in this budget, what’s their authority for operating now? What budget do they have? And if the minister has access to their business plans and their budgets now, why aren’t those available to us? When will the RHAs’ individual budgets be made available to the minister?

Let me now turn to a longer look into the future: my concerns with this budget as to sustainability and responsibility. I have – I know the minister shares these concerns, and I think he shares them sincerely – profound doubts that this government is constructing a sustainable health care system. I look, for example, at the increase in doctors’ fees. The rise in spending projected in this budget from 2000-2001 to 2003-04 is from $1 billion to $1.5 billion, an increase of about 50 percent. Is that sustainable? Clearly not over the long run. Budget and cost overruns in recent years in the health budget indicate a poor record of planning and a poor system of controls.

I’m also noticing in the budget – maybe it’s justified, and maybe it's not; we'll never know, or maybe the minister can answer for us – there's a drop in staff at the department. Who will there be to ensure the long-term coherence of Alberta's health care system? Again I must warn the Assembly that turning more and more of our health care delivery over to investor-owned, for-profit corporations is a recipe for disaster, a surefire way to crash the sustainability of our health care system. Yesterday there was a brief exchange with one of the ministers on the expected rate of return; I believe it was the Minister of Economic Development. I suggested to him that for-profit health care corporations were looking for an annual growth in revenues of 15 to 20 percent a year and that by bringing these organizations into our health care system, we were courting disaster.

Let me quote from a company called MDS, a major multinational that is in a large joint venture with the Calgary regional health authority. This is from MDS's own web site.

MDS aims to double its revenues in five years while providing earnings per share growth at a compound rate of 15% over the same period . . . MDS has achieved compound annual growth in both operating income and earnings per share over the past five years in excess of the 15% target established by the Company . . . MDS is organized . . . to make senior management of each sector accountable to Corporate management and the Board of Directors for the achievement of growth objectives.

We bring those parties into our health care system at our peril.

The Gimbel eye clinic has also aimed and achieved at various times in its existence similar growth rates, as have a number of other companies contracting to the Alberta department of health.

Mr. Chairman, for the moment I'll stop there, and I'll save other comments for later. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to spend another fun-filled night discussing government estimates, health being the topic tonight. First of all, I'd like to thank many of the minister's staff that are here listening. I know that they review what we say and answer the questions and sometimes even have the opportunity to act on some of our suggestions. I'm hoping that with the topic I'm going to be talking about first tonight, that will in fact be the case, that we are going to see over the next year, even though not many dollars are dedicated in this particular budget, some goals and directions, more resources dedicated to mental health. I think that's where I want to focus the majority of my time this evening.

If we take a look at this year's budget and look for specifically targeted dollars for anything to do with mental health, we have to look quite hard to find anything specifically identified. As my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview said, there isn't a great deal of detail available in these budgets that we can scrutinize and compare from year to year and see if we've had an effective use of the dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I think it's common knowledge in the business world that the issue isn't how much money you spend in a particular area. It's whether or not you're getting value for that money and whether you've increased the efficiencies and the operating abilities to get more value than you did the year before. Can we say that's true about Health? I don't think so. We've seen a lot of money dumped into this department in the last year for spot funding or for specific projects, some to beef up some existing problems, but we don't actually see many benefits that are over and above what we had in prior years as outcomes for those dollars. I would think we can particularly say that's true when we talk about mental health.

What we've seen since I've been in this Legislature is that there has been less of an emphasis on providing support for people with mental health issues in the community. If we take a look structurally, we've seen people literally being thrown out of institutions and back into the community without the necessary follow-up support that helps those people have the stability, the structure they need to manage within the communities. What we see as a result of that are many more street people, many more people living in abject poverty who for a variety of reasons aren't able to manage their lives and therefore manage their money and organize themselves to live any kind of decent life, never mind lives that contribute to their well-being or the well-being of other Albertans. Those are primarily mental health issues.

If we take a look at program 1 and try to find some dollars that are dedicated to mental health, we have to go three-quarters of the way down page 238 to find the dollars. The Mental Health Patient Advocate's office is dedicated $309,000 this year, which isn't very much money when you consider that the deputy minister's office is allocated $395,000. So when we see the proportion of dollars that are allocated and what share mental health gets, it isn't very much.

When we try to take a look at the line items and pull out any dollars dedicated to mental health, once again it's tough to see much there, Mr. Chairman. If we go to program 2, we do see the Alberta Mental Health Board at $216,813,000, certainly in the middle of the pack in terms of spending but not much of a proportion of the $3.6 million that's being spent in that total subprogram.

If we keep flipping through the budget and we start to look at the ministry business plan summary, we should be able to see some sort of resources dedicated to mental health. Mr. Chairman, guess what? It's not here. When we go down to the key strategies and take a look at all these excellent key strategies that are laid out here – improving access, improving management, enhancing quality of health services – we come to the one that I think should include mental health as an issue. It talks about “increasing emphasis on promoting wellness for Albertans and preventing disease and accidents.” You'd think we'd find some reference here to mental health and well-being and, even more specific, to age groups, because we are finding specific problems with children and mental health. It should be in one of these seven bullets that are outlined here, but it isn't. It's missing. So my question is: why is it missing? Why don't we see a key strategy being aimed at mental health?

There's no doubt that in the work that has been done, the studies that have been done in the area, spending some money up front on mental health issues saves us dollars down the road, not just within the health system, Mr. Chairman, but within the justice system. Many of the people who have mental health problems end up in justice institutions. Most recently a University of Alberta study found that 34 percent of male inmates in provincial penal institutions suffer from a mental illness like schizophrenia or bipolar depression. It's expensive to keep those folks in those institutions, and I wonder if that's a good use of our tax dollars or of benefit to those people. I think those are issues that we need to start thinking about and start taking a look at a more preventative model.

We all know that there are huge draws on health care dollars, so this government needs to start spending those dollars in a much smarter and more accountable fashion. I would suggest that in conjunction with a number of other preventative measures some focus and attention should be given to mental health. If we take a look at it, the stats would indicate that one in five Albertans will suffer from some kind of mental disorder during their lifetime. If those can be caught, managed, and controlled early on, then we save society from a lot of issues and problems including a lot of social issues involved with keeping families together, which is said to be a priority of this government, but we don't actually see the kind of support coming through that allows that to happen and allows children to grow up to be healthy and happy human beings. I think those are important issues.

When we talk about mental health, among the 10 leading causes of disabilities of mental illness are things like alcohol abuse, depression, bipolar disorder, schizophrenia, and obsessive-compulsive disorder, all disorders, Mr. Chairman, that we know are at least controllable if not correctable. What it means when people fall into a mental illness is that they're not able to be fully functioning people in any kind of social or working capacity.

In fact, 30 percent of those visits to doctors' offices are for emotional reasons. If you could cut out 30 percent of the visits to doctors' offices, take a look at what that does to the budget. I think those would be dollars well spent to even take a small portion of the 30 percent of the dollars that are spent on doctors' visits right now and dedicate some of that money. Let's take half of it and put it in mental health work and prevention and see what happens to our health care budgets and see what the outcomes are not only in terms of dollars but in terms of people's happiness and ability to contribute to society. I think that's important to talk about.

When we talk about mental health, there are other health issues that fall out of that. People who have mental illnesses have suppressed immune systems. They're more susceptible to other kinds of illnesses and disease. Therefore they become a greater drain on the system, be those respiratory kinds of ailments like colds and the flu or more serious like cancer and heart attacks, which are very, very costly illnesses when we put those people into our health care system. So I think those are issues that we need to be talking about.

What do we need in this area, Mr. Chairman? What we hear from the Alberta Alliance for Mental Illness and Mental Health is that we need some vision and a strategic plan. We need to work towards a balanced system in this province, and I think the information they have available is very good and would be a good guideline for the health department to follow. I would ask the minister if he will respond to this. Will he do it? Why hasn't he? What steps are they taking now? Are they going to be working towards a strategic plan that deals with mental illness and well-being that would be balanced and brought together by many people, by stakeholders, which would include users of the system and providers of the system in addition to the government service departments? I think that would be a question I have that I would like the minister to answer.

Why don't we have an integrated system for mental health services? I know that the government in some ways has tried to work to a more integrated system across ministries and within departments, but so far it just isn't happening. So I'd like to know if the minister could answer: what are the roadblocks to providing a fully integrated system in terms of putting together all the key stakeholders and coming up with plans that will have outcomes that are measurable, tangible outcomes that we can see some benefits from?

Will the minister in committing to a strategic plan here make a firm commitment to evaluating, to having performance indicators, and to measuring outcomes at the overall system level, the program level, and then the individual level? Could he answer that question for me? Are they looking towards doing this? If they are, what are the time lines on this? When can we expect some progress reports? If they're not, why not, Mr. Chairman? I think that would be a very effective use of tax dollars.

What's happening on the prevention side? Are we taking a look at a co-ordinated approach that emphasizes both education, prevention, promotion, and treatment? How many dollars are being allocated to that? Why aren't we seeing the outcomes here? Why don't we see the minister tabling information? Why don't we hear groups that are working in this area come out and congratulate this government on a job well done? I'd be happy to congratulate the government on a job well done if we could see that it was really happening.

The AAMIMH talks about specific needs, and I would like the minister to tell me how far they're going in terms of achieving these specific needs. If they haven't addressed them yet, when can we expect some feedback on them? What they're asking for is an explicit vision shared by stakeholders. They're asking for an explicitly laid out implementation plan with regular progress reviews. They're asking for consolidated and protected funding envelopes that can be used flexibly but only for mental health. They're asking for a plan of concrete, measurable outcomes. They're asking for regular monitoring for program and system accountability. They're asking for one regional local authority with overall responsibility for mental health delivery. They're asking for community-based services near people's homes. They're asking for a common, confidential, consumer-centred information system. They're not really asking for much, Mr. Chairman, just a basic system that would be measurable and would have some significant, positive outcomes for users of the system.

I'm asking for one recommendation to be added to this, and that's for the government to recognize the importance of this issue and dedicate this as a priority. I'm looking forward to seeing in next year's budgets this area laid out in the key strategies and sometime between now and next year's budgets the minister standing up in this House and telling us what a good job he's done. I think that would be excellent and certainly something that needs to be done.

Another thing this organization talks about is the need for adequate funding directed to priority areas including acute psychiatric care in regional general hospitals. I don't know about the rest of the Members of this Legislative Assembly, but I know that throughout the years I've received several panicked phone calls from parents or caregivers for people who need to be admitted to acute psychiatric care facilities and can't get in because there just aren't enough beds. Often these people are suicidal, or they're a direct threat to those they live with or sometimes work with.

This is an abysmal situation, Mr. Chairman, when we can't meet this bare minimum need. You can't put somebody who is having an acute psychotic episode in a waiting line. It just doesn't work. It doesn't meet their needs, and it just isn't good enough. What happens to those people? They end up in the justice system, or they end up on the street, or they end up killing themselves, or they end up hurting people they live with.

This organization says that what is needed here are additional beds in acute care general hospitals. I can't emphasize that strongly enough. All of us who have dealt at the constituency level know this to be a fact, Mr. Chairman, and I would ask the minister what he's doing in this regard and when we can expect a dedication of more beds there.

What they're asking for also is a systematic reallocation of funds to priority areas that could address the community support gaps in the current system. [interjection] Very true. You know, these people get admitted to the system, then they get discharged, and there isn't any follow-up care or any transition care for them when they go back into their home environment. Without that transition support, Mr. Chairman, how can we expect people to go back and be fully functioning? It just doesn't work. It's an impossibility. It's an impossible burden on their families, who are expected to fill in that gap when they aren't trained, when they're under stress, and when there are all kinds of underlying problems involved in that. So I would ask the minister how he is addressing that particular need and when we can expect some feedback on it.

They're also asking for providing funds on the basis of targeted outcomes and a requirement for ongoing evaluation and benchmarking for best practices. Well, go figure, Mr. Chairman. They're asking for something that the Auditor General has asked for not once, not twice, but many times. In fact, it's a part of the 37 recommendations made to the department for improving systems accountability from 1995 to 1999, also listed in the year 1999-2000 Auditor General report as amongst one of the requirements, once again, for the ministry to get to.

So what's the problem, Mr. Chairman? Can the minister answer that for us? Why aren't they there? They're not doing a good job of measuring and reporting the performance of the health system. The Auditor General is recommending that the Department of Health and Wellness, in cooperation with health authorities, continue with implementation steps for improving performance measurement and reporting on the quality of health services.

It isn't really a very tough thing to do. Businesses do it every year and do it very successfully. You have to measure what it is you're doing, and you have to work towards improving it. How can you improve it if you can't even measure it, Mr. Chairman? I'm hoping the minister can comment on that for me.

Two more items I'd like to talk about in the brief moments I have left: one is children's mental health, and the other one is comprehensive community-based systems. I think both are very important. We'll talk about the community-based systems first. What we have is a system that isn't balanced. It needs to be. We need to see increased mental health funding for beds in general hospitals and community and home-based services. So the flow-through follow-up work and the acute care side of it.

This integrated system has to include a continuum of crisis response and emergency service. A big issue. When there's a flare-up in a home, who comes? The police, not necessarily mental health support. So where do people go in the first place? They go into the justice system, the last place someone with mental illness should be, Mr. Chairman, and a misuse of resources there, poorly allocated in that case, and we end up with incurring costs within the system that aren't needed and aren't justified. So there needs to be some sort of crisis response system put in place that meets the needs of the people. Housing alternatives – lots of people with mental illness, Mr. Chairman, who can't support families.

In the few seconds I have left I want to talk about children's mental health. You know, this is so important. Thirty percent of the children in this province suffer from some kind of psychiatric disorder, and we really need to dedicate some resources to solving that problem. Policy framework on children's mental health services would start to help that. Will the minister do that? Will he give us some feedback on when we can expect that?

What about those services for kids who are in child welfare, for young offenders, and for children with complex needs? We see the Children's Advocate having addressed that as an issue in his latest report, Mr. Chairman, a well written report. I would ask the minister of health to respond on the areas that should be a part of his responsibility, which includes laterally going into the Justice department, into education, and into social services. So I'm looking forward to answers on those questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, unless you're planning to move to the opposition, you're not on.

We have right now the hon. leader of the third party, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not entirely sure about the time I have at my disposal, so maybe I'll start with some specific questions. How much time do I have?

THE CHAIRMAN: Twenty minutes.

DR. PANNU: Twenty minutes? Okay.

Let me then start with some general comments, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and make some comments on the budget estimates for the Ministry of Health and Wellness for the budget year 2001-2002. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview made some very broad observations about the context in which we need to look at this budget. I concur with many of the observations he has made and the concerns he has expressed.

I think the primary global set of forces that are at work which seem to affect our debates about the future of public health care and the question of what to spend and how to spend and where to spend the public dollars that we have to provide health care services and who should be the providers are all driven by a general sort of expansion of multinational business interest activities across areas that previously, at least in this country, were out of bounds for private, for-profit economic activity. So multinationals are very much interested, of course, as are national private interests, in moving into areas of health, education, and so forth. It's in that context that the debates about health and, in particular, debates related to the expenditures that we incur for the delivery of health services must be assessed.

One of the claims not generally made that seems like an article of faith with many governments, including this one, is that market competition in every area of economic and social order works in the same way and has similar results, an assumption which, Mr. Chairman, is highly questionable. Enormously weighty evidence draws attention to the fact that markets do not work, particularly in the areas of health and perhaps education.

Nevertheless, since this government is committed to bringing the market into health care to enhance the role of private, for-profit agencies of delivery of services, I think it is incumbent on it to be transparent in its budget and make every effort it possibly can to show how the budgeted dollars will be apportioned between the public providers and the private, for-profit providers.

It's impossible to get any idea from the budget documents with respect to that very weighty question, which the government I think should feel obliged to address, given its open public commitment to increasing its reliance on for-profit agencies of delivery in the area of health care. Transparency, accountability, honesty I think all require that the budget documents pay attention to that and desegregate the manner in which these moneys will go in one direction or the other. There is no evidence of that happening here, so it's impossible to hold the government accountable with respect to its claims that either the delivery of the services will become more accessible because private, for-profit agents are involved and/or, secondly, that such services can be delivered more economically than would be the case within the public sector. So these claims remain just claims, no evidence one way or the other, either produced by its own efforts reflected in its budget estimates.

Looking at some of the goals in the business plan general statements, one thing I find missing under the core businesses, "lead and support a system for the delivery of quality health services" – I think perhaps advisedly the government has left open the question of whether the system is predominantly public, will remain public, or whether it's just a system in which different blends of the public/private will work together in tandem or in competition with each other. That's a very interesting omission. It seems to be deliberate.

There is no indication here that the government is committed to keeping the system as public as sometimes the government claims it intends to do.

Two or three other things under the goals. There is the question of prevention. The second goal: “strategies for protection, promotion and prevention.” When looking through the detailed business plans here, goals 1, 2, and 3, I’m trying to see if there are any performance measures that will help us see whether or not the government has made any efforts and whether those efforts made any measurable difference in the area of prevention of ill health rather than simply providing treatment to Albertans who get sick. So prevention is used as an empty word. There is no commitment at the level of performance and the ability of the government to measure its own performance and allow its own performance to be measured when it comes to prevention.

Similarly, I was looking in the four areas under the key strategies. “Improving access to quality publicly funded health services”: there is a bullet on “improvement of access to home care and continuing care.” Again, under that section in the elaborate strategies and key performance indicators I found absolutely no mention of what kind of performance measures are being developed or are already in place to assess this commitment made; that is, to the improvement of access to home care.

We do not know, of course, what portion of the budget for home care is going to be targeted for the private, for-profit sector and if there’s any portion of that budget that will go for the nonprofit sector delivery of home care services. Again, it is difficult from this budget to make any judgments about whether the statements made here and the allocations made are justified or not and on what grounds.

Similarly, in the area of primary health care, “enhancing the quality of health services,” the first bullet is about “health system reform with focus on primary health care.” No indication anywhere under strategies or key performance measures that this goal is taken seriously in the budget. There is nothing about any performance measures and indicators that will be available to members of the Assembly to assess whether or not the government means what it says and whether it can be held accountable for what it claims it’s trying to do.

So with those general observations having been stated, Mr. Chairman, I will just move to a few specific questions. On the positive side one will have to of course agree that the government is putting significantly increased financial resources into the health care system. After years of cuts both in real terms and in terms of inflation and population growth the government appears to be reinvesting in the health care system.

I also note that for the first time the ministry of health business plan contains targets for waiting times for some health care services. While those targets are a bit vague and do not cover a sufficient range of health care services, again I think I’m willing to concede that this is a step in the right direction.

It’s hard to overstate the importance that properly funded health care services play in the lives of Albertans. Properly funded and delivered health care services are literally a matter of life and death to tens of thousands of Albertans.

My questions to the Minister of Health and Wellness are these. I’ve got four or five of them, so I’ll just state them. My first question relates to the key performance measures contained on page 244 of the estimates book. Is the government planning to incorporate additional performance measures in terms of waiting times? Why is it taking so long to put these performance measures in place? In terms of persons waiting, where’s the benchmark being used for persons waiting for MRIs or for a bed in a long-term care facility?

My second question relates to the provision for the write-off of health care premiums. Why the steep rise in the amount of the write-offs between the estimate of $28.6 million for last year and the actual writeoff of $50.4 million? Why this difference of nearly $22 million? In light of this, why has the government only provided $28.9 million for health care premium write-offs next year? Where is the connection between what it in fact will cost the government to write it off and the actual budget provided for that write-off? Finally, why doesn’t the government recognize the fact that these high write-off levels clearly show that health care premiums are simply unaffordable for a growing number of Albertans? Why won’t the government commit to eliminating or at least phasing out an unfair health tax that clearly imposes an oppressive financial burden on Albertans?

My third question. I note that the government spent $250,000 last year and the same amount this year on the so-called Premier’s Advisory Council on Health. This was a council of so-called health care experts that was appointed through Bill 11. This is a council that’s heavily weighted in favour of interests who support further privatization of our health care system. What are we getting for our $250,000 a year? Albertans haven’t heard a boo from this council since it was appointed last fall. What is it doing? What can we show for the amount of money that it takes to keep that council alive?

My next question relates to the government funding of Blue Cross benefits programs. I understand that most of this funding goes to subsidize prescription drug costs for low-income Albertans and seniors. Prescription drug costs are the most rapidly expanding area of health care expenditures, and I note that there is a further 11 percent increase projected for these benefits. Then as I was looking through the estimates book, there is a section on sustainability of the system. Where is this concern with sustainability reflected in looking for ways of limiting, containing, and bringing down the drug-related costs to the system? There’s no indication in the budget or in the goals that are stated in the business plan or in the strategies that are indicated here that the government is looking for ways of cutting down, containing, and limiting the costs of drugs that are exponentially increasing in this system, yet we talk about the concern about sustainability that this government has.

Is the government using strategies such as bulk purchasing and reference-based pricing – that is, use of the cheapest available drug including generics – in order to keep a lid on drug costs, and if not, why not? Why is there hesitation, why is there reluctance to look at ways of saving money for Albertans, saving taxpayer dollars by using best practices used by other jurisdictions relative to the purchase of drugs and reduction of costs related to those purchases?

My final question, Mr. Chairman, has to do with the Alberta Wellnet initiative. This initiative shows up in several places. Expenditures total tens of millions of dollars this year on top of the tens of millions that have been spent on this telemedicine initiative in previous years. The Auditor General has commented in his past reports on the vast amounts of money and the slow pace of progress in completing this initiative. I’m wondering if the minister can enlighten this Assembly on what the status of the Wellnet initiative is and when taxpayers can reasonably expect an end to the enormous sums that have been expended on it.

I will stop at this point, Mr. Chairman, and take a chance later, perhaps, to enter the debate. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to get an opportunity to question the hon. minister tonight regarding the critical portfolio of Health and Wellness. Now, this is obviously the largest budget, well in excess of $6 billion, and as was noted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, it is welcome funding. I certainly hope that it is being put to good use.

I see in the general overview of the department that the mission of the ministry is "to maintain and improve the health and wellness of Albertans by leading and working collaboratively with citizens and stakeholders." Now, this is the mission statement on page 193 of the business plan. I would also have liked to have seen in there: and also to foster, enhance, and promote public health care in this province. Unfortunately, that has been missed in the mission statement, and I believe it is significant.

Mr. Chairman, this year's budget estimates for the department are roughly $950 million more than the department's budget estimates from last year. This is as close to a $1 billion difference as one could get, and the department's responsibilities have actually become smaller. I note that the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board is no longer with the department. Also, the department doesn't have an associate minister, another change from last year.

Given the department's stated major goals for Alberta's health care system, including "to improve the health and wellness of Albertans through provincial strategies for protection, promotion and prevention," we in the Official Opposition would be interested in knowing what those strategies are and whether the department has employed cost-benefit analyses on those strategies to ensure that Albertans' dollars are being spent wisely and prudently. For example, will the ministry consider such programs as pharmacare as part of a prevention strategy? It would appear that if more Albertans had easier access to prescription pharmaceutical products, fewer Albertans would have to deal with chronic health problems because they simply cannot afford the products.

Another place where the ministry could go a long way toward its stated goal of preventive strategies is in the area of diabetes. Costs for persons with diabetes can range from $300 to as much as $1,000 a month. Currently Alberta health care insurance covers a fraction of the potential monthly costs for Albertans dealing with this condition. Some 90,000 Albertans have been diagnosed with diabetes. For seniors on limited incomes the additional out-of-pocket expenses associated with diabetes, including diet, testing, and medication, are a serious hardship. Sustainable, direct funding, funding that would help Albertans burdened with not only the weight of diabetic symptoms but also the costs associated with treating those symptoms, would show a true commitment to preventive or health promotion strategies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, will the minister please provide a breakdown of the ministry's gross operating expenses of $6.24 billion for 2001-2002 by object for the following components: health care workers' salaries, permanent, nonpermanent, and contracted positions. A little while ago we heard about the efforts that were made to train and recruit health care professionals, and I think this is a reasonable request.

The recent pay raises provided to physicians and nurses are generally a good thing. We need to pay our health care workers adequately and fairly, but we also need to know how many health care workers, if any, are left out of pay raises or benefit packages or educational opportunities because they are on contract, particularly those involved in home care, or don't qualify because they are part-time workers. It is only fair that we properly compensate persons working in the health care field, but we also need to know whether the amounts paid to health care workers, the amounts budgeted to pay health care workers, are sustainable amounts.

Nurses certainly took wage rollbacks, as did many other public service workers in the early 1990s. It is patently unfair to give workers a certain wage and then at some time in the future expect those workers to accept another wage rollback. It's poor planning. What Alberta health care workers and all Albertans need is sustainability in funding and stability, a combination of that and long-term planning of the workforce. This hasn't been done in the past. There have been reports done by the regional health authorities, Mr. Chairman, paid for with tax dollars and hidden from public view and discussion, and we have now an expensive problem to fix, and we are fortunate in this province that we had the financial resources to at least try to fix it. It's been mismanagement. It's been past mismanagement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, will the minister please provide a breakdown of the ministry's gross operating expenses of the $6.24 billion for 2001-2002 by object for the following component: contracts, all contracted-out insured medical services with all regional health authorities. During the Bill 11 debates the minister and the Premier assured Albertans that contracted-out insured medical services would result in both higher quality health care services and more cost-effective health care service delivery. I on behalf of the Official Opposition would like to know how much money each of the regional health authorities spent on contracted-out insured services to private providers. I would also like to know how much the department spent on doing the cost-benefit or performance measure analysis on these contracts.

Another question is whether the department relied on only one cost-benefit performance measure analysis or whether the department relied on more than one to get a truer picture of the quality of health care and the cost-effectiveness of health care service delivery? We all know, Mr. Chairman, that there was no study done that could prove the cost-effectiveness of Bill 11. There was none, zip. They were blank pages, and now the blank pages seem to be apparently reflected in blank stares, but that is the reality. They were just simply blank pages. There was no backup to the argument. None. Absolutely none.

Now, Mr. Chairman, will the minister provide a breakdown of the ministry's gross operating expenses of $6.24 billion for 2001-2002 by object for advertising, promotion expenditures? Another question to the minister regarding these estimates: is the minister planning any more hard-sell legislation in the order of Bill 11 that will require promotion? Certainly there was a lot of promoting done in regards to Bill 11, and I don't know if I should even be asking these questions in Health and Wellness estimates. I probably should wait for Executive Council and the bureau, the Public Affairs Bureau. You know, it sort of reminds me of, is reminiscent of J. Edgar Hoover and the FBI, but that's another matter.

Now, health care insurance premium revenue. This was covered by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I just want one clarification. Was it $22 million or $28 million that was the write-off in 2001-2002? I understand the actual write-off was $50 million, but why does the 2001-2002 budget estimate have a write-off of only $28.8 million? I would like to know what the difference is here. Although the minister has already indicated that he did not see Alberta families having difficulty paying the premiums as the reason for more than $50 million in health care premium write-offs, maybe the minister would like to explain why more than $50 million again has been written off. We're sure the minister isn't suggesting that the write-offs are attributable to scam artists or to people who don't pay on principle or people who are looking to hoodwink the system.

In budget item reference line 1.0.1, the minister's office, the estimate here of $487,000 for operating expenses represents an increase of $13,000 over the last year's budget. What accounts for this increase, given that the minister's office has less responsibility this year than last? Again in reference to the PDDPB, which has moved. Continuing along this line of questioning, what is the breakdown in the minister's office budget for 2001-2002 by salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and also hosting expenses?

Now, the deputy minister's office: what happened here? In the deputy minister's office there is $395,000 in the budget for 2001-2002. Again, could I have a breakdown, please, of salaries for permanent positions, nonpermanent positions, and contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, hosting expenses, and dry cleaning. Again to the minister: why is the deputy minister's budget increasing by $12,000?

Now, public communications. I'm sure this was a branch of the department or of the minister's office that was quite busy in the last year. That's reference line 1.0.4. The estimate is an increase of $20,000 over the previous budget, and of course I'm very interested in finding out what accounts for the $20,000 difference between the 2001-2002 budget estimate and the 2000-2001 actual expenditures.

During the Bill 11 debate, Mr. Chairman, the government supposedly spent some $1.7 million on so-called information on the bill. Where did that money come from? Because with these numbers, the department only spent $1.3 million on public communications, so where did this money come from for this campaign? We have very little money in this province for the needy. We can't seem to increase the rates for those on SFI; there are perhaps 27,000, 29,000 files at the moment. We've got no money for any of this. We've got our priorities, I think, wrong. We can casually spend $1.7 million on so-called information, or it could be disinformation for all I know. I don't know, but I'm very concerned about that.

Now, health accountability. That's again going farther down the page, reference 1.0.6, Mr. Chairman. My first question to the minister: what accounts for the $7.28 million operating expense increase between the 2001-2002 budget estimate and the year 2000-2001 actual expenditure? There appears to be a pattern here, given that the 2000-2001 capital investment estimate was $1.1 million, the year 2000-2001 capital investment actually is $2 million, and the 2001-2002 capital investment estimate sits at $1.15 million. Can we expect that the 2001-2002 capital investment actually will again be slightly over $2 million? If so, why not simply make the estimate more in line with what the actual expenditure will likely be? Also, what is the breakdown for the department's 2001-2002 operating expense estimate of $31.8 million?

Now, program 2, health services, Mr. Chairman. I see my time is running down, and I have a question that I don't want to neglect to ask. That is in the statement of operations by programs. The onetime energy rebate of $40 million: I can assume that that is to all the regional health authorities and the two other boards. I would like a breakdown on that $40 million figure, please. How much of it was used for natural gas rebates, and how much of it was used for electricity rebates? I'm told – I'm shocked and appalled – that I will never know that figure, but I'm very curious about that. That's a $40 million hit. How much was used for electricity, and how much was used for natural gas? I imagine one would just have to go to, say, the University of Alberta hospital and see the meter that would be outside that institution. I would think the meter dials would be moving quite rapidly, and also the electricity consumption there I think would be enormous. I would appreciate very much an answer forthwith to that question.

Program 2 on health services: the regional health authorities, reference line 2.3. How did the department arrive at its 2001-2002 gross expense estimates for each of the 17 regional health authorities?

My next question would be on reference line 2.3.22, supplemental capital equipment funding. There is an operating expense estimate for the year 2001-02 of $48.9 million. Actually the operating expense the year before was $98.7 million. What accounts for the decreased funding for capital equipment between the year 2001-02 and the operating expense estimate and the 2000-2001 operating expense actual? That's a significant difference.

Line 2.4.1., Mr. Chairman, the Calgary regional health authority. Now, we have to have a review of this. In the year 2001-2002 the gross expense estimate was $170 million. In the year 2000-2001 the gross expense actually was $154 million. For 2001 the estimate was $149 million roughly. Okay. My question to the minister is: what accounts for the difference between the 2000-2001 gross expense estimate and the 2001-2002 gross expense estimate? Again, what is the breakdown of the 2001-2002 gross expense estimate?

With those questions, I will look forward to the answers from the minister.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The Member for Edmonton-Centre, please.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. I'm not happy about this budget, but I'm sure glad for the opportunity to speak to it and get some questions on the record, which I'm assuming will be answered in writing and forwarded to me. So a couple of different areas I'd like to cover tonight. I have a number of questions and issues around seniors' health care. I'd like to look at the performance measurements, and I'd like to look at the department responses to the Auditor General.

Starting with seniors' health, this is certainly an issue for me with the number of seniors that I have living in Edmonton-Centre. It's always the number one concern on the hit parade. It is the issue I hear the most about. It's also the issue that our constituency office does the most casework on, without fail, and has been for five years now. So what the Department of Health and Wellness is doing, where they're putting the money, what the performance outcomes are expected to be, and what are the key performance indicators are of great interest to me.

We know now that our traditional method of treating seniors, especially seniors that are in acute care, is not the most successful way to be treating them. I know that there are three specialized geriatric units in the province. My question is: is the Department of Health and Wellness looking at increasing the number of those units or expanding the capacity of the units that are in existence?

There are a number of issues that they have been proven to deal with expeditiously. Of course the obvious one, which has already been mentioned this evening, is overmedication, and there are a number of issues around that. You get seniors who end up going to different doctors or, frankly, being sent to different specialists, all of whom are prescribing medication. You may not have a central, controlling physician who is actually keeping track of all the different kinds of medication that everybody is on and cross-checking that they're not taking a medication that's either canceling out a different kind of medication or causing complications when it's used in combination with another drug. So certainly when the frail elderly get onto these units, that's the first thing they do: get the list of all the medications that people are on.

There are a number of other issues around that. It may well be for some seniors that they'll take the full prescription from the doctors they like, but they're not so keen on taking the prescription from the doctors they don't like, and that also contributes to the difficulties with medication and seniors. So there's a lot of work that we have to do still in Alberta to be able to manage that, and we know that these three units are successful at it. I'm looking for answers to the two questions I've already asked and whether there are any plans as part of the rest of the three-year plan. I've gone through it and I don't see it in here, so I'd like that confirmed or some indication given.

Some of the other issues raised around those specialized units. For example, when a person goes into the hospital and they're not well, usually they end up lying flat on their back in a hospital bed and are getting the treatment or whatever is necessary for their ailment. That doesn't work for seniors. We've all heard the stories of somebody who went in with the flu or a broken hip or something like that and a couple of weeks go by, three or four weeks, and now they've got pneumonia. Eventually these people can die from pneumonia. You think: well, how on earth did that happen? They were in a hospital. Part of it is that they need to get up and move around every day, and our hospital system is not set up to do that. We need to keep people lying flat on their backs being good in their rooms, and we need to be able to get seniors up and move them around in order keep their system working properly. So a number of issues around that and any information that's forthcoming on those units.

I'd also be interested in how much these units are costing overall and if I could get a breakdown for the costs on those three different units that exist in Alberta already. What are the staffing costs specific to that and any overhead or operational costs that are specific to those units' operation.

I'd also like to talk about prevention for seniors. Now, one of the two biggest issues in my constituency – and as Seniors critic for the Official Opposition I can also say for many other seniors in Alberta and for their families – is availability of home care. I'd like to know what the percentage breakdown is of funding for home care that goes to subacute care and what percentage goes to home care for assistance to seniors, to the frail elderly? The figure I had heard previously was that two-thirds of funding in home care in fact goes to subacute care, leaving only one-third of the funding going specifically to seniors. So I'd like to get that specified, please.

I'm also interested, if there is an increase in home care in this budget, whether the increase is satisfying a volume increase – in other words, more people that the system is trying to satisfy – or is it that more funding is being given to each area to give better service to the same number of people?

That sort of issue keeps coming up as I examine the government's estimates. Many of the increases are in fact just reflecting population increase, volume increase, demand on the system in other words, but it's not actually giving better quality care in any way, shape, or form. So I'd like to get that breakdown. If I could get that breakdown also by the health regions, I would appreciate it.

Certainly there is a disconnect that we have in this government between what is being said about the desire to keep seniors in their own homes as long as possible and the kinds of services and support we're actually offering in order to that. There's a disconnect there between the goal and the reality, and I'm encouraging the government to look at that very carefully, because this is one of the most obvious areas to be successful in this.

We need to look carefully at the kind of care that's being offered through home care. We need to look at standards of care. We need to look at staffing and at the contracts that are being signed with home care providers. Is there detail in those contracts about the wage that the staff that in fact go out and offer the service are getting? What is the percentage of profit that's built into it if it's a private business? What is the administrative percentage that's being taken off as well?

We're not getting enough home care out there to assist these seniors and keep them in their own homes. There are other stresses that are causing seniors to leave their homes and move into either subsidized care or some other kind of accommodation or even into institutional care like long-term care or auxiliary hospitals. Certainly home care is our easiest and most direct avenue to keep seniors in their own home. In many cases they just need a little bit of help, perhaps to get up in the morning or get going or have breakfast, or assistance with various aids, prosthetics, or getting into wheelchairs or scooters or whatever. I think we're failing in that. I'm interested in what the long-term plans are there and exactly how much money is actually going into that system and how much is filtering down to the seniors.

The second part of that is housekeeping. This is the other thing that I hear about so much from seniors. Now, I don't know whether there is a lack of public education and the government just not being clear on people's expectations about housekeeping. First of all, most people think home care is going to include housekeeping services, and it doesn't. Home care is personal care. No, they're not going to do your dishes or wash your floor, but for many seniors that is the yes or no between staying in their own homes.

When we look at housekeeping services, again I want to know the same kinds of answers. How much is in the housekeeping budget? How much is allocated to each of the regional health authorities? What is the breakdown in the way the contracts are allocated? If it's not a contract situation, if it's a direct delivery from the regional health authority, fine. What's the staff wage? What's the percentage for administration and overhead? If there's an increase in this budget, then what is the increase a reflection of? Is it a volume increase, or is it in fact money to provide better quality service? Those are the questions I want answered in that area.

Now, we go on to more prevention, still under the category of prevention for seniors' care. I have been lobbying for some time to have the government consider funding or a funding program for seniors' centres, which exist across the province and which in many cases truly are prevention in that these programs are getting seniors out of their homes, are getting them active and walking around. They often offer a lunch or a nutrition program. They're offering all kinds of classes, self-education. They have educational seminars. They bring in speakers. They have activities to engage people's minds, to keep their bodies active. You know, there are all kinds. I'm sure anybody that's walked into a seniors' centre has seen the tai chi classes and the weight lifting and the dancing and all those kinds of physical exercise classes and the great encouragement to do so. We know that is health prevention. It is wellness. It's a wellness model. These seniors' centres are frontline deliverers of this service and are not getting any assistance.

This government likes to use user fees, but we have a generation of seniors right now, and all seniors are on a fixed income. They don't get any more money. What they've got is fixed, so they can't continue to pay higher and higher and more and more user fees. Eventually they say, "I can't do this anymore," and they sit at home. Then there's a disintegration in their mental health. There's a disintegration in their physical health. There may well be additional problems with eating proper food and eating three times a day. So I really see these centres as preventative medicine. I'm still urging the government to look at a system whereby there is funding to these centres, you know, based on an amount of money per signed-up member that they have or whatever kind of system the government wants to look at to make sure they're funding reasonably and not setting up a system that's open to abuse. I think it's still something to be looked at.

In particular, I'm wondering about one of the centres that's in my riding, which is West Edmonton Seniors. It got into a situation where it had been renting space in the General hospital at a very reasonable rent, and then Caritas took over the administration of the building. The rent started to go up. They went from something like $345 a month for rent into the $3,000 range. I'm sorry. I don't have the figures in front of me, so I may be not quite accurate on that. I'm sure you've got all the information. You can check it. They got into this ping-pong game, being bounced back and forth between Community Development, which at that point was responsible for seniors' funding, Infrastructure, and Health and Wellness, none of which seemed to be willing to take responsibility for this group. We were going to lose this service. I'm wondering: what was the end result of that? Was there funding from any or all of these departments? I'm also looking for what kind of other preventative health models are being put in place to assist seniors.

The obvious question coming out of the election is: why didn't the government eliminate health care premiums for seniors? I'm interested in what the exact amount of money is that is taken in from health care premiums charged to seniors less the administration costs, less the subsidy costs for those seniors who are receiving a full or partial subsidy. What is the actual net amount of money that this government takes in on health care premiums from seniors? So I'd like all three of those figures, please.

I'm hoping that I'm going to get another chance to raise these issues, but I'm aware of time restrictions here. I'm going to move on to the performance measurements. Now, when I look at the public accounts from '99-2000, Alberta Ministry of Health and Wellness, section 1, pages 71, 72, and 73, we actually do have a listing there of key performance measures. I think a number of these are flawed and aren't really measuring what they need to be measuring, but some of them do in fact give us something we can work with here.

I look in the budget documents at the business plans for Budget 2001. I am looking for key performance measurements, and in this department, lo and behold, I actually find some. This is a wonderful night for me, to actually find key performance measurements. However, when I try and match these back and forth between what is being admitted to in the last fiscal year and what is being set forward in this fiscal year, we don't have a match. So are you changing your performance measurements year to year? What happened to the old ones? Where did the new ones come from? I'd like to see some kind of direct comparison between these.

I do notice that on page 195 of the business plan we are getting key performance measurements like 1.A, which is actually listing targets for waiting list times. Very good. Now, you've actually got something you can measure against here. But then when I get into targets like 1.C, "ratings of quality of care received, percent who report that quality of care personally received is 'excellent' or 'good'", that's an incredibly subjective performance measure done by a survey of people who are on their way out of the hospital. I don't find that these kinds of performance measurements are a useful management tool, and it's certainly not incredibly useful for someone who is trying to scrutinize the performance of the government in this particular department.

Here's another one, 1.D: "Percent of persons, who have received a service, who are satisfied with the way the service was provided." Now, how is that a useful management tool? I think we have to move beyond these kinds of performance measurements which are simply surveys of satisfaction of clients. We have to start moving to ones that are more useful.

Now, we have some in here like 2.D, "childhood immunization coverage rates, percent of two year old children who have received the recommended immunizations." That's a more useful target if what you're trying to do is make sure that all children at a certain age are immunized.

When I go back and look at breast screening, 2.C, "screening rate for breast cancer, percent of women age 50-69 receiving mammogram every two years," you've got a target of 75 percent screened. That needs to be linked to a clear indicator of whether we have a reduction in new breast cancer cases so that we actually know whether what has been done here is achieving something. It's moving from doing to achieving, from measuring what you're doing to measuring what you've actually achieved as a result of what you've put in place. So I encourage the government to continue with this.

I'm also looking for why there isn't a direct correlation between the performance measurements of the previous year and the performance measurements of this year. This is an ongoing deficiency in what this government has done across the board, where performance measurements are changed every year. So you've no way of looking and saying: oh, yes, over this five-year period we are able to track along and see that we've actually improved or achieved something here.

In changing these performance measurements every single year, you have lost the usefulness of this as a management tool. It's of no use to the public or to the opposition as a scrutiny tool for what the government is doing and whether in fact we are getting value for our money. What are we achieving with the money that's being spent on these various initiatives?

Very briefly, the last I'd like to look at is a quick comparison of the Auditor General's recommendations and the government's response. I'm seeing that almost all the recommendations are accepted, but I do not see anything actually happening with that.

Thanks very much. I look forward to continued debate on this budget.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I won't take too long here just to get a handful of questions on the record on information I would like to be provided, information that in some ways is comparable to what used to be brought to this Assembly and I believe ought to be brought to the Assembly again.

There did used to be a much larger number of hospital and health care and auxiliary home and nursing home districts, and the department managed to work with all of those to come up with line items. I'm sure it can be done again now with a mere 17 regional health authorities and a couple of provincial health boards.

What I would like by regional health authority is their capital and operating budgets. I would like by regional health authority information on their expenditures on for-profit, voluntary, and public nursing homes, which did used to be provided.

I would like by RHA expenditures on for-profit and public surgical procedures and again by RHA expenditures on for-profit and public diagnostic procedures. I would like by RHA expenditures on board expenses for the RHA boards themselves and, of course, for the provincial boards. I would like to see estimates for RHA expenditures on drugs and estimates by RHA on expenditures on information systems. Exactly how much are we spending on information systems in Alberta Health? I hope the minister will provide that information in a timely fashion.

I will finish with just a handful of comments. I think there are some bright lights, and there is certainly some reason for optimism in the health care system. Initiatives such as the Northeast health centre in Edmonton are to be commended as examples of successful primary care, and I think the work of the western Canada waiting list project, the first report of which was released yesterday, is commendable and will help us make some sense of the chronic confusion over what really is a waiting list.

I would encourage the minister to look very seriously at a pharmacare program. Drug costs, as he well knows, are out of control or certainly are soaring in Alberta, and across the province it's an obvious direct correlation with having the drug industry run the system without a coherent public program. So we need a coherent public pharmacare program.

I would encourage expansion of home care to help take pressure off the active treatment and acute care system. We are going to be taking a long, hard look at long-term care delivery in this province and watching it very closely, and I hope the minister's expenditures reflect that priority.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I stop. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I'm glad I was able to get in a bit more time to ask some more questions here. I was on questioning performance measurements and responses to the Auditor General's report from '99-2000, and in particular there have been repeated requests for the government to include the regional health authorities' individual reporting in a consolidated report. In fact, although the government has repeatedly said that they agree with this and they'll look at it and they're going to do it and achieve it, year after year I look at the public accounts and the Auditor General is saying yet again that this hasn't been done. So what is the issue with the government being unable to achieve this? It's never really been detailed, and I'm interested in why we are looking at this.

We have a situation where the government has set up a delegated administrative organization, a DAO, in their regional health authorities. I know that this was a clear and deliberate move on the part of the government to shift responsibility for provision of services to these regional health authorities. I think there are long arguments about whether this is appropriate, and they did not shift with that a clear accountability line, and I continue to look for that line of accountability.

Often we would, for example, ask questions of the minister or the Premier in question period about the regional health authorities or actions that the regional health authorities have taken. We'd ask that question to the minister or the Premier, and we'd be told: sorry; ask the regional health authorities. So you'd go and ask the regional health authorities, and they'd say: well, we don't really have an answer for that because we're essentially, certainly through our budget provision, under the control of the government; go back and ask them. So on things like, you know, waiting lists and provision of services – and we've gone round and round in a circle on that one.

Certainly when we start to take accountability to taxpayers seriously, it's important that those budgets and public accounts be presented in their entirety and in the consolidated statement with what's brought forward from the government under the Department of Health and Wellness.

On a slightly different topic here. I'm interested in public communications. There was a great deal of debate around Bill 11 and a number of questions asked, saying how much money is being spent to convince the public of the government's point of view, and we were told repeatedly by the Premier: no problem, you can get every detail out of the public accounts. Well, I've looked in the public accounts, and it's not there. So I'm looking again in this year's budget for a breakdown of exactly how the communications money is spent.

I'll continue to pursue the expenditures around the Bill 11 debate through another avenue, but I would like to know exactly what the breakdown is on the public communications budgets in the Department of Health and Wellness. Where does this money come from? How is it expended? What is it expended on? How much of it is for advertising? How much is for printing? How much is for postage? I want to see the complete breakdown of what this communications money is spent on here. I believe a number of checklists were provided in the past from the Official Opposition to the government. Those checklists are still around. Perhaps they could consult that for the kind of breakdown I am looking for.

I'm glad I was able to get in those last two sections' worth of questions, and I know there are additional questions coming from my colleague. Thank you.

The hon. minister is reminded that only one person is standing and talking at a time.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to be able to finish my comments; however, if the minister wanted to get up and take a little time, I'm sure we could have agreement in the House for that too.

Some of the things that I didn't have a chance to talk about when I was standing before and talking about the health estimates were the expenses in program 3.0.1, which is the assistance to Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, the operating expenses and the operating expenses funded by lotteries. What we see here is a significant increase, almost a 20 percent increase in funding from last year to this year. That's a problem, Mr. Chairman, because most of those new dollars are funding for people with addictions. Where's the greatest increase in addictions coming from? From VLTs and gambling. It's AADAC money, and while we're seeing a significant increase in revenues from gambling-related activities, we are also seeing a significant increase in costs.

The most direct costs that we see are in this line item, 3.0.1, but there are many social costs involved in this too. I would ask the minister of health to undertake a costing of all related areas with regard to problems created by gambling. They are all health issues and addiction issues whether we see them in the social system through social services or services provided to children because families aren't providing for them due to addiction problems or whether we're seeing them in the Justice area because the people are within that system for whatever reasons or that we are seeing them in the direct health costs. I would ask the minister if he would undertake a review of that and compile the associated costs so that we can get an accurate idea of what it actually costs us to bring in those gambling revenues.

We see some interesting things here in the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. When they talk about the actions and achievements, they say that the action contributed to cross-government initiatives including Alberta partners on fetal alcohol syndrome, Alberta children's initiative, Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, aboriginal policy framework, and Alberta's strategic plan for seniors. All of those are related issues, so if the minister comes back and says that he can't do what I had asked because it isn't specifically within his department, I would challenge that and say that there are actions under way within the government departments and related departments that are starting to track that information. I think it is available. I think it's very important for them to compile it, and we would like to see it presented and measured against the assistance they are giving in this particular program. So if they could do that.

Now, I understand that there have been some changes to AADAC in the last couple of years, some reorganizational changes in terms of where the delivery of service is. I know that there was some consolidation happening with regard to their programming into the downtown area. I don't know where to find that specifically in these programs or goals. Perhaps it's all rolled into 3.0.1, but if the minister could elaborate on that, I would appreciate that.

You know, there was a concern with the consolidation of AADAC into the downtown areas, that some people wouldn't use those services anymore because they didn't want to be in areas where they could be readily identified by people that they knew. They wanted to go to the outlying centres for the services. They didn't want people to know that they were in these programs. So I'm wondering what happened to the stats for the people using these services. Was there a drop when they consolidated the offices? If so, did they track down why that drop was? How is the consolidation working? Did they save any money? Is it costing more money? If we could get some information on that, it would certainly be helpful for us to be able to assess the viability of those operations. What are the people who are working within the system and the users of the system in AADAC saying, Mr. Chairman? Do they do satisfaction surveys for both the people who provide services and those who use the services there? I think that would be one measure that would be very interesting to see and would be a way of actually properly evaluating the outcomes of some of those dollars that are spent.

I never had a chance to really go through the Auditor General's report on Health and Wellness, Mr. Chairman, but in fact there are seven key recommendations that were made by the AG last year with regard to Health and Wellness. I wonder if the minister could report back to us in terms of the progress they have made in achieving those objectives. Are we going to see these same recommendations come forward next year, or has there been some progress made? I won't have enough time in the few minutes that are left to me to go through the seven recommendations, starting with number 17 and carrying through the various sections of Health and Wellness, but if the minister could specifically comment on those for us, that would be appreciated.

I think that there were some excellent comments being made. "Accountability for the cost and quality of health services" is a very important issue, Mr. Chairman. We need to know that we're getting value for our money. We need to know that these systems are properly in place prior to our seeing any more privatization of health care services. If all we're going to do is layer different kinds of services on the province, what we're going to do is get different layers of bureaucracy and problems. We want to know that the department has moved forward on these various recommendations and has made significant progress on them, not just token progress or no progress at all, before this province moves into a system that will be more of a parallel system with the additional privatization that we're going to see.

You know, there's been lots of talk in the AG's report and lots of talk in this Assembly about the various health authorities in the regions and some of the problems that have occurred in there in terms of deficit budgeting and extra strain on the regions because of extra costs associated with those authorities. I'm wondering, Mr. Chairman, what progress has been made there. That's a little bit about what recommendation 18 talks about, "a joint strategy for improving the implementation of authorized business plans," with Health and Wellness and the health authorities. I see this as a critical recommendation and something that definitely needs to be brought in-line.

There have been some significant changes. We've had problems with deficit budgets and deficit budget plans being submitted. The Auditor General remarks on how patterns of prior years have continued, that we haven't seen a change in spite of the recommendations that he's made. Why is that happening, Mr. Chairman? I think that's a valid question to ask here.

Also, the Auditor General comments on interim funding and how that has increased more in terms of the budget than annual budget increases. So what that means is that in fact this department isn't actually budgeting. It's setting up a forecast and then dumping more money in as it's available or as the minister can lobby for it. That is not sustainable, as we all know, in any kind of fashion, particularly in health care. We have to provide both stability and sustainability. People need to know that the system is going to be there for them when they need it, and they're going to need to have some idea of what it's going to be like to be in the system. What kind of service are they going to get? When are they going to get the service? Is it going to meet their needs, and is there going to be bridging from acute care service to whatever they need as they move back into their home?

We know at a constituency level that that bridging service is nominal at best and is a real issue when we talk about home care and lack of home care and what it takes to get people out of the costly health care system in terms of hospital use and back into the home, where people do recover faster if they have adequate supervision and proper support provided than they do in a hospital bed. But the problem with what's happening now is that we see all kinds of horror stories where people are released from hospitals when they either have very little support at home or no support at home and can't get enough support from the home care system. I think that's an area we need to seriously look at in terms of cutting down the bricks and mortar costs of hospitals and also from the preventative side. If we can provide a little support to these people before they become acute users of the system, then that's going to be a benefit for everybody. So I think that's something that needs to be done.

Did the department follow through with recommendation 19, that "the Department of Health and Wellness take a lead role in working with health authorities in reporting the costs of key service outputs"? Clearly, the department has some expertise in this area, Mr. Chairman, and we would hope that they would share that expertise and the people they have that know how to do this in terms of training these health authorities on how to both report and measure outputs. I think that's an important aspect that needs to be done.

Tied in with the seven major recommendations are a number of minor recommendations that the Auditor General has talked about, and one of those is timely reporting. Not reporting in a timely fashion in the business world would mean that you would lose shareholders and customers. Why doesn't that happen when government departments don't provide timely reports? It seems like there's no accountability at that level, and it's something that the Auditor General has remarked on. It's surprising to me that it isn't in itself a major recommendation, because I think that it's quite important.

In talking about recommendation 19, the Auditor General makes a comment that "there has been little change in reporting the cost of outputs," and what he talks about is linking costs with outputs in terms of assisting resource allocation and providing readers of annual reports with information that's meaningful about a particular authority's operations. Once again, basic accounting principles. It is hard to believe that it doesn't happen, but clearly it's something that's been an ongoing issue.

What he talks about then is that he reviewed fifteen annual reports issued by RHAs in 1999 [and] twelve did not contain management discussion of financial position and risks.

Fourteen reports did not present information on the costs of outputs.

Well, who's training these guys? Mr. Chairman, it's practically inexcusable behaviour that we see here, and clearly the government needs to be doing something. So if the minister could give us a progress update on this. I don't even think it would be reasonable if we had 10 percent of those authorities not reporting in a proper fashion. That would be one and a half of them. When we talk about 12 and 14 of them not bringing forward proper management discussions or information on the costs of outputs, you have to really be concerned about the way they are managing themselves.

Why wouldn't the minister of health have seen this as an important enough issue to ensure that these RHAs were properly trained? This is a problem with a government that makes decisions by the seat of their pants and says: well, we'll just cut costs, and we'll figure out afterwards whether it worked or not and where we need to make improvements. It isn't a very responsible way to manage, and it certainly is a costly way to manage. If you were truly interested in reductions of costs and finding efficiencies, what you'd do is devise the framework, figure out what the issues are, the process to move through the framework, try and anticipate where the issues are going to be that could arise, try and fix them before they occur, and then have a fairly manageable plan as you move through the process.

That's completely the opposite of what this government has done, and consequently they waste money. When you can't measure what's happening and you don't properly report what's happening, you get a system that has a number of inefficiencies and abuses built into it in terms of costs. So I would think that this should be a very high priority for the minister of health, and I'm hoping that when he reports back to us in terms of what progress they've made, that progress is going to be substantive in nature, Mr. Chairman.

Then we talk about recommendation 20, where the AG recommends that the Department of Health and Wellness develop a process for reporting the full cost of delivering health services for the population of each health region of Alberta as a means of supporting business planning decisions and the accountability of regional health authorities.

Once again, pretty basic information that isn't done. How is it that this department, that spends so much money, cannot tell us what the costs are for each region by population? Of course, you'd have to do some tracking costs, because people move in and out of regions depending on expertise and need, but that's not very tough to do. Businesses do it all the time, Mr. Chairman, so I don't understand why this happens. Consolidated financial reporting in businesses, in global entities happens all the time. Certainly this isn't as complicated as many global entities are, and the government should be able to do that. We're just talking about 17 regions. It's not the end of the world and certainly should be well within their mandate.

Another interesting point he makes that doesn't make it to a key recommendation is that there is no information accounting for the full cost of health services provided to regional populations. Too bad again, because that means there really isn't an understanding of basic population-based funding.

Some good recommendations in here from the Auditor General. As I asked, I would like a report back on the progress made on all of those and how many recommendations they expect to be coming forward in the next report. Mr. Chairman, I hope it's fewer than seven. I hope the Auditor General is going to be able to say that there aren't any recommendations that weren't completed from the last time and that the new recommendations he comes forward with are fine-tuning. We're a long ways from there.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister to conclude our deliberations.

MR. MAR: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'll undertake to review Hansard and provide written answers to questions asked this evening. As far as the suggestions and undertakings that have been asked by members opposite, I will look at those suggestions as part of our business planning process and budget review for next year.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

--	-----------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the Department of Health and Wellness: operating expense and capital investment, $6,241,417.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order. Again, as before, one person standing and talking at a time would be the order of the day.

Bill 1
Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure this evening – or maybe I should say tonight – to stand and speak to the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. This is kind of a chance to go through now and look at some of the issues that are outlined in the sectional material, but I also want to talk briefly about some of the basic premises of how the bill operates and how it's put together and deal with it from the perspective of, you know, what it tells Albertans about how this bill will operate on their behalf and how they will be able to see the effectiveness of it or the degree to which it will work.

If we look at the bill itself as it is printed and put together, we end up basically with a bill that shows a lot of material undefined, undetermined, and not clearly outlined. A consumer that was really looking at this bill wouldn't have any idea to any degree other than the fact that there potentially could be and there might be situations or circumstances under which they could expect to get a rebate or payment to protect against high prices.

You know, this is one of the issues that we really need to look at in the context of the kinds of expectations we're going to create as we go out and try and market this to Albertans and make them feel comfortable that this piece of legislation will truly provide them with a sense of comfort. What we have to do is look at it from the perspective of: what can we tell them with this? Basically, at this point in time we can just tell them that there's going to be an Alberta price determined, and if the price that is prescribed by the minister is different or is above that market price or the Alberta price, then they'll be able to deal with some kind of a trigger mechanism, which we don't really know, because that's going to be defined in the regulations.

So what we've got is basically a whole set of uncertainties that are out there that are going to be put together by regulations. If we look at section 7 in the bill, it goes through and tells us that the minister or the Lieutenant Governor in Council can go through and basically redefine or restructure this whole price protection system in any way they see in order to achieve the objectives that they set out.

The whole set of providing for definitions by regulation is here. The question comes up in the context of: when you start off section 1 with a series of definitions in it, why do you have a clause in the regulations component that allows for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to further put forward definitions? If we're going to try and modify the concept of this bill and the application of this bill in a significant enough way that we need to have new definitions put into it, I guess I would suggest that that would be a reason to come back to this Legislature, because by changing definitions we're effectively changing the direction, the philosophy, the application of the bill.

To me that's much different than when we have regulations that talk about setting a level of a rebate or a protected price or a target price, because these are in essence variables that we expect to change on a year-to-year basis, and conditions surrounding them are expected to change.

But when we're starting to talk about how we deal with definitions that are in a piece of legislation, then what we see is that these are the kinds of things that to me, in essence, we should be putting right into the legislation under section 1, where all the other items that are going to be important to the legislation are actually defined. This includes all of the aspects that talk about how you define the eligible consumer, the types of substances that can be subsidized. These kinds of things are all defined in the definitions section, and we have to look at that and wonder why we're going to be able to change those definitions when we get into the regulatory part.

The issue comes up in terms of what we want to do with this bill in the context of trying to put together some mechanism of price protection. We need to make sure that these kinds of issues are considered by the minister when they put forward the regulations and put forward the formulas or whatever they're going to use to trigger the Alberta prices, and that is basically the issue of: what is it we want to do in the context of protecting the price for Alberta consumers, our users of gas?

When we get to these kinds of situations in the regulations where we're talking about the level and the trigger point for the regulations, if we want to set it at an absolute level, then what this does is give the consumer a basic upper point that they'll be able to expect or plan on and build their decision-making around. But if we're also going to look at it in the context of some of the true aspects of a market economy, which most of us stand to support, we have to make sure as we go about determining the level of price that we're going to be supporting that we look at it in the context of: how does that fit with the market? How are we influencing the relative prices so that we don't affect decision-making either by consumers or by intermediate users, input users?

This is important, because if we do these kinds of things that actually influence the relative price of the product, we bias in favour of different types of energy the relative decisions that are being made, and that can have ongoing impacts and implications for the business community, the energy community, and Albertans as a whole as we interfere with the level to which the true market gets to operate in consumer decision-making.

The thing we have to make sure of is that we look at a lot of the benefits that come from a true market-based system, and that is the fact that as we go trying to set out a program that triggers off a price and provides a rebate, what in essence we're doing is sending a signal to consumers that we don't have to worry about conservation the way we should. If we have cyclical patterns that bring price spikes, what that does is send a signal to a consumer that says that, you know, you should think about conservation, you should think about investments that will reduce your consumption, and you should think about changing to alternative sources of fuel, whereas if we protect that, those kinds of signals aren't felt as strongly.

You know, Mr. Chairman, there are a lot of cases, if you follow the literature, that talk about consumer decision-making, and if prices just gradually filter up or filter down, the reaction of the consumer is a lot less imminent, or immediate, than if there are spikes at certain times. What you'll find is that when the spikes occur, there's a real significant change in consumer behaviour. It then kind of moderates through the period when the spike changes, either up or down, and then what you end up with is that you get a real stable transition in the use of that rather than what comes with this kind of consistent price system, where there's no real shock to make consumers think about what they're doing in the context of their consumption patterns.

When we have to look at that, we want to make sure that we in essence make sure the price that we choose and the mechanism that we use for making the payments are consistent with allowing the signals of a marketplace to really transfer through to the consumers. So when we deal with it, you know, what we want to do is make sure that in the regulations, as that part of it comes up when they start developing those regulations, let's not do like we did this winter and just put the gas rebate or the price protection rebate onto the gas bill, because that doesn't send the signal that it should.

It would be quite easy for us as the administrators, the directors of this rebate program to use the utility companies as an agent, even to the point that if they were to go out and actually send a bill and have the full cost of that gas on the bill and then the next day send a rebate cheque instead of having it deducted off the bill – and we could, you know, use the utility company to send that out. But what it does is provide the bill with the true cost of the product so that the consumer can truly see what is going on, and then they get another piece of paper in their hand which is basically the rebate cheque, and they say: gee, you know, if I were to actually conserve here, I could spend this on something other than my gas bill. That's important, Mr. Chairman.

You know, I sat there this winter, especially this last month. My bill came just the other day, and during the past two or three years I've been looking at heating bills that have been $200 to $250. One month it actually went up over $300. When it got up to that $300 mark, I was saying to myself: gee, I've got to start thinking about this. This winter, when we actually had the high prices, where the market was trying to send a signal saying, "Prices are high, you should think about conservation," I was getting bills that were $75, $80, or $100. That doesn't send the right signal to the consumer.

So as we put these regulations together so that we end up making sure that we don't interfere with the market, I hope the ministers look at this and say: we've got to make sure market signals transfer through to the consumer and the consumer sees that true cost so that they will begin to undertake and be responsive and respond to those signals so that they can actually implement conservation. Because when we give them a subsidized bill, there's no incentive for conservation. One of the best ways we can undertake to get control of our markets, to get reaction is through conservation. We can save, reduce demand. That's just as good as increasing supply if we can do it through proper market signals.

Some of the other aspects that come up within the bill are quite useful, I guess. One of them is the actual use of clause 3(1), that deals with vendors, so we in essence have built right into this a set of conditions which will really encourage anyone who is an agent incorporating the gas on behalf of someone else – you can make sure that you end up with this coming in to deal with the aspect of how those signals get sent and how the money gets to the actual consumer that we want it to go to. So that kind of message also gets through.

As we look at some of the sections in here, they indicate that some of this rebate can be going to industrial or manufacturing consumers. We want to make sure here that this is not subject to any of the NAFTA conditions, that we don't create situations that will in essence precipitate or possibly bring forth a set of countervail duties or countervail actions by a foreign government. The aspects that we want to look at there basically are how we deal with that fairness, with the perception of the rebate program in the context of how it influences and affects international trade and international marketing.

When the minister is allowed to make regulations which talk about who the eligible consumers are, I guess the question that comes up is: will we see differences from one application to the next of who eligible consumers might be? Can we see a situation where it might go only to the municipal or industrial/commercial users? Some other times it will only go to residences? When we define a set of parameters for these conditions or for the definition of who the eligible consumers are, we want to make sure that we are dealing with it in a consistent way. If we're looking at it in terms of how best to protect, the residential consumer is probably the one that we should be looking at in any way possible.

Now, I guess the aspect that we look at in that context is also an issue of – you know, there was legislation on the books already, the Natural Gas Rebates Act, that would have allowed basically a lot of these kinds of programs to be implemented, so you kind of question why it is that we're dealing with this new piece of legislation as it's being put forward. We need to look at how it's going to be effective in getting out and getting material put in place so that we can deal with, I guess, achieving the end that we wanted from this piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I think that as we go through this, you know, we're going to see that there are some other issues that come up. We've got some amendments that we're going to be proposing to some sections of it, and what we'll do then is look through and see how some of the different aspects come about.

I guess the one concluding comment I'll make is: we go at length in this act to talk about how to deal with vendors or pass-through activities. One of the comments that was asked the other day was why we couldn't have done the same thing with the acreage payment that went out to farmers in the sense that we should have been putting restrictions on it that had it passed through to the current operator as opposed to some previous list of farmers who may not now have the same need for the money. We've got a very easy way to deal with pass-through requirements here, and that same kind of situation could have been used in that other legislation. So we have to kind of look at that.

Mr. Chairman, I think my time's just about up. I'll let others have a chance, and maybe I'll contribute more as the clock ticks on. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Other members need to be reminded that we would have only one member standing and talking at a time.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is quite a bill here. It indeed is quite a bill. As I said before, it's the classic slogan bill. It is certainly not necessary, but whenever you see a bill like this, you have to think to yourself that it has to be proved. There are many things that I have to question with this legislation. The first thing that comes to mind is that the gas that is going to be used to determine whether or not a rebate should exist does not necessarily, as I understand it here, have to come from within the boundaries of Alberta. I'm curious to know: in the drafting of this legislation, was that taken into consideration? Now, that is certainly my interpretation here, that the gas that would be eligible for rebate would not necessarily come from within the boundaries of Alberta.

Now, I've done some research on this, and unfortunately in the time this evening that we've had to devote to health care estimates, I never got a chance to get the statutes from the cupboard. There are at least four bills in one form or another that are currently statutes of this province that deal with natural gas, the transfer of it in pipelines, the development of it in gas fields. Of course, there's the Natural Gas Rebates Act. There's the Gas Utilities Act. Part 1 of that act, as I understand, has legislation to enforce price mechanisms. This is totally unnecessary, this bill.

We need to just look at the Natural Gas Rebates Act, and I believe that would have been enough. In fact, when I look at that bill, it is much better than this. One of our ace researchers, Mr. Kaplan, used to talk about having price cushions. In that legislation it would be very easy to have a fund. Money could be set aside to deal with these real sharp spikes in natural gas prices. So I cannot understand why we just didn't leave this alone, why we need this legislation.

Now, the national residential gas reference price. In my remarks earlier in committee I was questioning how this is going to be established. Are we going to use NEB figures? Are we going to use market figures? Are we going to use figures from as far away as Louisiana? Who knows? There are issues in here of remedies. If this act is to be violated, what are the penalties? The definition of a vendor. Why no definition of a vendor? What happens – and this is a perfect time, Mr. Chairman, when we're discussing rebates to vendors – for instance, if the vendor is generating electricity?

Now, we're going to have to live with this bill. We look at the massive majority after the last election, and reality tells me that this bill is going to become law, and with that fact staring me in the face, the only thing we can do is try to improve it. It's our job.

When you look at a vendor and the possibility in this legislation that a vendor could be someone who is supplying gas for electricity generation, natural gas fired generating stations, is this in the best interests of all Albertans? This could become a vast money pit, and we have to distinguish between natural gas that would be used for, say, a 275-megawatt generating station and the gas that would be used – and possibly something that we're going to have to look at in the future is solution gas that's flared at various sites across this province, whether it be a compressor station, a battery, any sort of that waste gas.

It's odd that years ago in this province – and I've talked to lots of people who grew up in the southern half of the province – when the oil and gas industry was first being developed in this province, possibly in the constituency of Highwood, natural gas at one time would have been all flared off. It was just considered a nuisance, and fortunately now it's a very, very valuable product not only for heating but also as a value-added product for the petrochemical industry or as a feedstock for fertilizer plants. I could go on and on. It's gone from a nuisance to a very valuable commodity in a period of 70 years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we look at the difference between solution gas – and perhaps instead of flaring it, at some time in the future there will be incentives to make small-scale turbine generators that would supply power for the industrial facility where it is located and perhaps a few residences or farms or ranches that are in the immediate area. Depending upon the volume of the gas, it would be useful to supply a small portion to the provincewide grid. This would be a sound use of a product that at this time is being flared. It could be used as a source in conjunction with a turbine to produce electricity. That's solution gas, and that's a little different than natural gas. One has to be very careful here.

I think we need to know more about who precisely a vendor is going to be in this bill, and I'm sure other members are going to have questions also on exactly who will be a vendor. I don't think we should leave that up to regulations, particularly when we consider that a vendor possibly could be someone who is going to be involved in subsidizing electricity generation.

I was at a TransAlta function this evening, and I don't know how that corporation would feel if someone else was receiving the fuel subsidy. Of course, the majority of their power comes from coal-fired generators. I don't think that's fair.

Also, Mr. Chairman, we need to discuss further this whole idea of price protection. That legislation, as I said earlier, also exists in current statutes. The Minister of Energy has all this information readily available.

We need to think of an auditing system as well. We have $125 million set aside for further natural gas rebates already. Who's to say what sort of auditing process there is to ensure that that money gets to its intended destination? Earlier, in health care estimates, I noted the $40 million in energy rebates that went to the health authorities. I was shocked and appalled to hear: can't find out; don't know.

This is why an auditing process is so vital in this bill, and I don't see any such initiative anywhere, Mr. Chairman. We talk about being accountable. How are we to know when the rebates are going to kick in exactly where the money is going? Not only have we spent that $40 million amount on energy rebates in the health budget, but we've spent billions already on natural gas rebates. Now, what sort of control or auditing function should we have? I think that would be an interesting discussion for all members of this Assembly to have. When you consider that in this bill we are going to be sheltering consumers from the escalating price of natural gas, we have to realize that we have to have mechanisms in place to ensure that if this has to happen, the taxpayers are getting their value – it's $125 million to start – because this is probably going to continue in one form or another.

I don't think we will see natural gas prices retreat to their former levels, not anytime soon. I would remind all hon. members of the pipelines that are being engineered to the north. If there was enough gas here, we wouldn't have to be developing resources farther away from the markets in the south. That's why there's going to be a long-term price that is far greater than what existed two years ago. So legislation like this is going to be used; there's no doubt about that. But this bill, Mr. Chairman? I really don't think that this bill is necessary.

The Alberta price: in this act, "Alberta price" means the price of marketable gas determined in accordance with the regulations." Eligible consumer: the definition will also be subject to the regulations. Now, marketable gas is defined as in the Oil and Gas Conservation Act. This definition also exists interestingly enough in the Gas Resources Preservation Act.

That's another statute that I unfortunately forgot to mention, the Gas Resources Preservation Act. Almost sounds like the heritage savings trust fund in some sort of way. Of course, the previous governments were planning on making the heritage savings trust fund larger by prudent management of our gas resources. There is another bill already in the statutes cupboard that could be used. But it is interesting that marketable gas is already defined in a couple of pieces of legislation, and further along in this debate, Mr. Chairman, when I get access to the cupboards – I was doing research here the other day – I'm going to further elaborate on the legislation that already exists.

Now, I talked about price protection and what role the federal government, the NEB, will play, in the opinion of the Minister of Energy. It's unfortunate that at this time I don't have the exact wording of the latest NEB report, but I note with interest that they are concerned about a Canadian price. There's also talk of having a continental price. It was a direct contradiction of the debate that's occurring in the American Senate. The Senators in America are very concerned about the supply and cost of their natural gas. The Senators are in the process of developing legislation, as I understand it, that is going to have conservation measures. This is another issue that I don't see in this, measures relating to conservation.

My earlier remarks about the use of solution gas as possibly a source of fuel for further generation is one that I would encourage all hon. members to think about. The Americans are looking at a plan of conservation. They're looking at opening up more of their own lands for drilling and further exploration. They're certainly looking at opening up more land in Alaska, and they're also concerned about the strategic storage of natural gas. They're looking at a series of underground caverns. Now, in Fort Saskatchewan we have developed some rather large underground caverns. This is a noteworthy item because if we had large volumes of gas stored, that is a form of price protection, Mr. Chairman. We could draw off that supply as the price went up.

Now, there are some people who think that we could perhaps influence prices that way, by drawing off. In Fort Saskatchewan and even if we went farther, towards Bruderheim, I'm sure there are lots of places where we could develop high-pressure underground storage facilities. If the price went high for natural gas, then the Minister of Energy could demand that this gas be removed slowly and sold into the market. We could perhaps protect consumers that way. We could certainly help out.

This gas could be bought and injected into those underground storage facilities as a form of price protection whenever we're in between the heating and air-conditioning seasons, like we're almost in right now, with the heating system in the northern climates and the air-conditioning in the southern climates, when gas is usually cheaper. Buy low; sell into the market high. Market forces. I'm learning more and more about market forces all the time. I have no problem with market forces, none whatsoever, and I'm confident in their ability to have a price that is real.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we forget sometimes about former acts in this Assembly.

Oh, goodness. My time is up for the moment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to have my first opportunity, actually, to speak on this particular bill. An interesting bill it is that we have before us. It's a flagship bill of the government, and it's a bill with essentially no substance, no detail either, and consequently no accountability for the government in this bill. What we see is a bill where literally half of the substance of the bill is designated to be made up afterwards by regulations, so away from the scrutiny of the Legislature, and that's a bit of a problem for us, no two ways about it.

We see a bill that's a blank cheque for the government to write the rules and write the cheques for the people of the province, to be determined at some future date how and when and the criteria for how that will be determined. We have a little problem with that, not only that that kind of information should come to the floor of the Legislature so that it can be scrutinized by all legislators but have the opportunity and the time to take it out to all stakeholder groups and have them scrutinize the regulations and then be brought back in. That would be the democratic way to go through this process and to actually be able to determine what it is the people want for this legislation and how it should be processed.

A particular concern to me in terms of letting this government write a blank cheque for these regulations and the process is that they haven't been able to successfully manage the rebate process so far. The plan was announced back in September. The first set of cheques came out in January, the second set of cheques were mailed this week, and there are a few problems with that process, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, we haven't heard a good explanation yet for their rationale in having the cheques delivered by the federal government. We weren't told and neither were Albertans told that people who had outstanding debts with the federal government, no relationship with the provincial government but with the federal government, would have dollars withheld from their rebate cheques until those other balances were cleared up.

Well, if people were actually looking to use that money to offset the cost of their gas bills, then they're out of luck, Mr. Chairman. I know of families who had projected that rebate into their budgets and were counting on getting the money, so they got a double whammy in essence. You know, people who have outstanding balances with Revenue Canada aren't all deadbeat parents or people who deliberately don't pay their taxes. Often they're people who are caught in circumstances unawares or through no fault of their own, through things that have happened in their lives, and are just trying to get caught up. People in that particular kind of instance need this rebate, and they are particularly the people who are not getting it.

The provincial government decided to do this through a process which they didn't ask people about, a process where they may not be getting their money, and we're starting to get those complaints in the constituency offices now. Then there's that whole group of people who hadn't filed on time either for . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, the conversation has not yet reached a crescendo, but we wanted to preclude that by asking you to soften your voices or, if you want to enter into a lively discussion, to go and get a coffee or juice and go outside. It was reaching such a pitch that we could no longer hear the hon. member. So, hon. members, the courtesy of the House is to allow the person that has been recognized to speak without being drowned out by extraneous conversation.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for that courtesy. It's pretty clear from the feedback we received that not all members, I'm sure, were concerned that they couldn't hear me. I'm sure that after the number of times I've been on my feet this evening, many hon. members are sick and tired of the sound of my voice. But you know, it's not me who sets the agenda for the evening. It's the government. So take it up with your own House leader if you don't like it.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: I was on the topic of the rebates and talking about the people who for whatever reason hadn't filed their taxes by the time the rebates were announced last fall, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of those people who subsequently filed, which is what the government told them to do. They were told then that they would get their rebate cheques together, a $300 cheque, or they would get the first rebate soon and the next rebate at the appropriate time, which is this week. That hasn't happened for some of these folks. Some of the people who have filed have yet to receive the first rebate cheque and of course haven't received the second. So my question to the appropriate ministers, and I believe in this case it would be the Energy minister and the Finance minister, is: what happened in this process? Why haven't those people got their cheques? Who should they be calling, Mr. Chairman?

Now, there was a question in question period today dealing with this particular issue. I fully expected the minister to explain the circumstances for those people and to subsequently tell us what the process would be for those people who haven't received their first cheque yet. So I look forward to receiving that answer, and so does my son, Mr. Chairman, because he is one of those people who haven't received their cheque yet. He feels quite let down by this government. No surprise to me, but it was a bit of a surprise to him. So if we could get the answer to that question, that would be very beneficial.

We also think that this bill is unreasonable from another perspective, Mr. Chairman. We think it's inappropriate for the Legislative Assembly to pass a bill that will allow for unknown transfers of dollars. That's the blank cheque part of this bill. We don't know yet at what level the government's going to set the rebate kick-in rate. We don't know how that may change over time. We don't know how many dollars that will cost. We don't know any part of the process in terms of how the government's going to assign the rebate allocation.

Are they going to say that when it hits a certain point in terms of cost, 100 percent of that amount is going to be rebated back to Albertans? If it's a true rebate, a true sharing of the revenues of surplus funds, that's what the government would do. They would kick all the money back into the pockets of the people. Or are they going to kick back some percentage of the rebate amount, Mr. Chairman? We don't know that.

The government is going to decide at their leisure sometime in the future, and that's a problem, because we are in the mess right now. People need to budget. They need to forecast. They need to be able to anticipate what kind of money they're going to be receiving in the next year. Maybe to this government, Mr. Chairman, $300 isn't a lot of money, but there are a lot of people in this province for whom $300 is a great deal of money. It's substantive in nature, and they need to know when it's coming, how it's coming so they can appropriately plan their lives.

We think that's a problem. It just can't be proper parliamentary process to allow a government to go off and write blank cheques in this kind of manner. Why bring in a bill at all, Mr. Chairman, is my question. If that's the intention of the government – and we have seen the government do things like this in the past – then why bring a bill to the floor of the Legislature at all? It's really an affront to the parliamentary system when we see something like this come in that really doesn't have any substance in it. It's regulations to be determined elsewhere.

We know what happens with regulations in this province. They get written up and decided upon behind closed doors. We have a Law and Regulations Committee, Mr. Chairman, that doesn't meet. We know it doesn't meet, so they are never going to be scrutinized by anything other than cabinet. I don't know what kind of input backbenchers have into that process, but I'm assuming it's little or none. I'm wondering even if they will have any backbenchers assigned to a committee that will determine regulations. I doubt it. I'm sure this is going to be an inner-circle decision and that people are just going to have to swallow the outcome, whether they like it or not, regardless of which side of the House they're on and regardless of what their constituents are saying. So for sure that's a real problem for us.

There is no mechanism here that's concrete for providing the rebates: how they kick in, when they kick in, and what time they kick in. You know, there was a problem, I think, with the way the rebates came now. We got them in January, and we got them in April. People need help on a monthly basis. It's hard, when you live on a limited income, to manage from paycheque to paycheque. Having a lump sum come once every quarter is helpful at the moment it comes, but it doesn't get you through those months in between. So we would like to have seen in this bill some sort of concrete mechanisms that would have told us how the rebates would be allocated and a consistent manner in which they would come. It's more costly for the government to administer on a monthly basis, but if the true intent of the dollars is to offset the cost of gas, then that's what they should be doing.

We see that the triggers for providing the rebates are unknown. An issue for us. They need to be laid out not just for us in terms of legislative scrutiny but for people to plan.

The definitions in this bill, this flimsy little bill that we have before us, are very unclear, once again an indication that this government likely doesn't quite know what it's doing in this instance. Once again, an issue that we brought up years ago. I remember standing in this Legislature in 1995 talking about what would happen with deregulation, and until closure was brought in, we talked about how important it was for the government to set out the rules early in the game for everybody in order to keep the transition from regulation to deregulation as easy as possible for producers and subsequently for users of the system.

What we ended up with after all this time, Mr. Chairman, is not really a deregulated system. What we have is a reregulated system. It isn't deregulation by any stretch of the imagination. It isn't a free-market system. We've got only a couple of major producers, who are raking in absolutely obscene profits at this point in time on the backs of taxpayers. The government is trying to mollify taxpayers to some degree by bringing in these rebates, but in fact it was a poorly thought out plan, even though lots of stakeholders told the government what the issues were going to be.

It wasn't just the Official Opposition who talked about the need for the rules to be put in place early, about how important they were. Industry was telling government the same thing. Industry was also telling them that they were not going to move forward on building plants for additional capacity until they knew what the rules were going to be. In fact, their hands were tied. It's tough to get financing for building these megaplants from financial institutions or from shareholders when they don't in fact know what the rules of the game are going to be. So their hands were tied on their side.

Why would they take that kind of leap of faith that this government knows what it's doing? Those were the times when we were just rolling out of some of the greatest boondoggles in the history of this province. I think about MagCan and NovAtel and Bovar, billions of dollars absolutely squandered because the government had no clue what they were doing when they interfered in business, and here they are right back interfering again through forms of reregulation. So industry was smart to hold their fire and not look for financing or start to build excess capacity until they absolutely had to, Mr. Chairman. They were forced to do that prior to their even knowing what the rules were.

We remember the kerfuffle that was occurring in the province prior to Christmas of this year. I think industry was a little shaken by what was going on, and they needed some certainty in the marketplace so that they could provide services. When there's no certainty, there's no stability, and when there's no stability in the marketplace, prices skyrocket. That's exactly what happened here. We don't have to look any further than this front bench, that is supposed to be making decisions, to see where the blame actually lies. So those are certainly some problems.

With this bill we're talking about stability, sustainability, and affordability of the rebates and the whole processing system. In this bill too many items are left to the discretion of the minister, and that's a real problem. Mr. Chairman, more needs to be explained in terms of how this bill is going to unfold, and it has to be laid out before the Legislature before we can be expected to give the minister the okay to go forward with this.

Do we need some relief for citizens in the province? Yes. Is the process by which they have decided who gets the rebates fair and reasonable? I doubt it. When my 17-year-old son, who has no expectation of participating in paying the bills of the house, is getting rebates, you have to wonder how the decisions were made. When we see people in some condo associations and some apartments not seeing those rebates actually reflected in their costs, we have to wonder about the process. We'd like to see tabled here the criteria the government used to determine what those rebates should be. Certainly I would like to see that, and I'm sure that's something that many other people in the Assembly would like to see.

We need to know why the government thinks the current legislation isn't adequate or can't be amended to meet the needs. Why this particular bill? That hasn't been explained by the minister and is an issue for us, I think. There is already existing legislation that provides for rebates, and what we see here I think with this bill is a bit of showboating, Mr. Chairman. Was it really necessary, or was it just a flag to raise up on the pole and show that this government had something to say in this session? In essence, the rest of the legislation we've seen here is basically housekeeping, very minor in nature, not substantive, doesn't show any leadership, doesn't show any long-term strategy in terms of where this government is going or where they think Albertans should be going. So I think those are all issues of concern for us.

Certainly I'm looking forward to some prolonged debate on all the amendments that we're going to be seeing coming forward both from ourselves and the other opposition party in the Legislature. That will give us some time to get some feedback from Albertans on what they think about these sections. We have quite a number of stakeholders who have been consulted in this process. We haven't got information back from many of them. However, some, like the Alberta Chamber of Resources, we have heard quite a bit from, not just directly to us but through the media. This is an organization that I would think traditionally is quite supportive of the government and its actions, but they certainly had a lot to say about this particular bill. I can't think of anything they've had to say that was positive, other than their spokesperson having said that it has a heartwarming title. But it's a mixture of failings.

A good point, I think. It sounds nice, but it isn't very substantive, Mr. Chairman, and that sums up a lot of what this government does. They trot out nice sounding ideas and bills and legislation, but when you scratch below the surface, you see that there are any number of failings and that quite often they lack substance. So I think that's a good point. This particular chamber had some questions that I don't think have been answered yet on this issue. They want to know what measure of protection the bill will provide for people. They want some stability. They want to know where this is going, and that hasn't happened yet.

I haven't even begun to talk, Mr. Chairman, about the environmental costs of these rebates. You know, what they're doing here is essentially market interference. How can we expect to be looking towards alternative energy sources in this province either from a producer's perspective, a marketer's perspective, or a consumer's perspective when the government is artificially subsidizing prices in the province? Of course, they artificially created the price increases, so maybe in the short term there is a good reason for doing that, but in the long term we have to take a look at what this kind of market interference does to the economy and to the future of Albertans in terms of research and development opportunities.

You know, if we're the only place on the globe that is subsidizing these prices, then there is very little incentive for producers to look for alternative energy sources or to spend research and development dollars on sourcing those sources out. So what happens is that they get left out in the competitive race for new ideas and new forms of energy. They'll be a step behind other players in the marketplace, Mr. Chairman, and when you're talking about a global marketplace, that can be substantially, I think, a real problem. When we look at it from the consumer side, there are also issues outstanding.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to take this opportunity to make a few comments on this bill during committee stage and certainly to urge support for a bill that will put into law a commitment that we made to the people of this province to protect the people of this province in the time of unexpected spikes in natural gas prices.

I wanted to just also make a couple of comments about the importance of this industry to our province. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, this is an industry that has benefited us greatly. It's a commodity that, fortunately for us in this province, trades in the continental market, trades east and west, north and south, and provides great benefits to the people of this province. Bill 1 will ensure that while we reap those benefits, the people who own the resource will also receive protection from unexpected spikes. So certainly I would support this bill.

I've listened rather carefully to some of the comments that have been made tonight. I tried to associate them with what was in the bill, which is really an enabling piece of legislation which talks about ascertaining a price of the commodity and putting a protection price in place. I find little correlation to some of the comments I've heard tonight to the bill, but perhaps it's just because it's late and I'm not hearing well.

Mr. Chairman, I have more comments that I want to make on this bill, but at this time I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

11:20

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 1.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very interesting day indeed, and I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[At 11:21 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 3, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/03

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a rare honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly constituents of mine that are seated in your gallery, especially when they're the proud grandparents of a wonderful young lady that members will know as your head page, Ms Laura Gill. Laura has recently been selected for a position as a page in the House of Commons page program in Ottawa beginning in September of this year. She is one of four young Albertans to be chosen. She will attend either Carleton or Ottawa university on a scholarship given to those fortunate enough and, indeed, deserving enough to be chosen as House of Commons pages. I would ask that Ed and Emilie Zentner along with their son Gerard and his two children, Matthew and Emilie, please stand and receive not only the warmest welcome of the Assembly but our appreciation for their granddaughter's dedicated service to this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 20 residents of Morinville, 186 residents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and 52 residents of Calgary. The petitioners are asking the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government to introduce legislation "to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred."

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday, Wednesday, May 2, regarding Stockwell Day's defamation litigation be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request that the petition that I submitted yesterday be read.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday to the Assembly be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 9, being the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill will streamline award processes of innocent victims of violent crime in Alberta. Bill 9 extends the time limit from one to two years for victims applying for a financial award and grants increased authority to the program to dismiss frivolous claims.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

Bill 10

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and introduce Bill 10, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001.

The Traffic Safety Act itself was passed in 1999 but not yet proclaimed. The 2001 amendment will improve the existing act and make it ready for implementation in 2002. Highlights of the changes include the establishment of an administrative licence suspension process for new drivers under the graduated driver licensing program relating to zero alcohol tolerance; fine-tuning of the Alberta administrative licence suspension program by adding an immediate 24-hour suspension for persons providing a breath sample of over .08 or for failure to provide a breath sample. This is in addition to the current AALS program already in place. Other technical and administrative changes are also included to enhance the current legislation. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be able to introduce these amendments to the Traffic Safety Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 10 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly this afternoon five copies of The Lobbyist Final Report, dealing with WCB reform, done by a Calgary injured worker, Allan Jobson. This man makes a big difference in the lives of many injured workers by assisting them with their WCB process gratis.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings today. The first one is a letter that I received from Mr. Darrell Park, a retired geologist who lives in Bragg Creek, Alberta, expressing serious concerns about the proposed forest management agreement with Spray Lakes Sawmills giving "this company sweeping rights to the timber" covering the reserve areas and also about the future of Bighorn wildland park.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of the government of Alberta news release dated May 29, 1997, regarding the Tupper report recommendations.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter dated March 9, 2001, from Mr. Brian Tobin, the federal Minister of Industry, addressed to Ms Susan Whelan, chair of the Standing Committee on Industry, Science and Technology. This letter deals with the matters pertaining to consultants/lobbyists and their conflicts of interest.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. I would like to table five copies of a report entitled Losing Ground: The Slow Decline of Workers' Rights and Privileges in Alberta from 1975 to 2000. It was published by the Alberta Federation of Labour and released today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter dated February 2, 1999, from members of the Congress of the United States, and it's addressed to the President of Colombia, President Arango.

The second tabling is an address by President Arango at the 12th presidential summit, that occurred in Lima, Peru.

The third tabling I have today is an article from TIME.com, and it is entitled Defending His Strategy. It is written about President Arango, again.

Thank you.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is another in the series I've been tabling to show positive examples of other uses for the Rosedale power plant. This particular tabling is selections from the web site of the Oregon museum of science, showing the conversion of their old power station L into a science centre.

Thanks very much.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of 51 senior high school students from across our province who are visiting the Legislature this week for the Forum for Young Albertans. The Forum for Young Albertans is a nonpartisan political learning experience which provides the opportunity for close study of provincial and local politics. Joining this group of enthusiastic young Albertans is Mr. Jason Blair Stolz, executive director of the Forum for Young Albertans. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce some individuals who've played an important and instrumental role in the development of Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, which I've just introduced. Cal Wrathall is the director of victims services and co-chair of the review committee. Dennis Willner is the operational manager of the financial benefit program and co-chair of the review committee. Linda Unger and Brenda Young are financial benefit officers with the Alberta Solicitor General. I ask them to rise today and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour today to introduce to you and through you I would guess 95 percent of the public gallery, who are from Hazel Cameron elementary school in Vulcan, Alberta. They got on the bus at quarter to 6 this morning, and they're here for Education Week. They're going to tour the Bennett centre tomorrow and have a presentation on trees and forests, which they're studying in their course. With them today are 18 parent helpers; their bus driver, Gordon McLean; and their teachers Toni Garlock and Jenn Garbutt. In the interest of time I'd like to table the names of all the helpers that have come with the students. I've got five copies. I would ask all of them up there to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today for me to stand here and introduce to you and through you to Members of this Legislative Assembly two ladies in our members' gallery. One lady is here from California by way of Texas and is quite a student of U.S. politics. She is here for three days and wanted to see how our system operated. Her name is Pat Wirth. The second lady I've known for 50 years, and she is someone that is extremely close to me, my sister, Judy Mills. I would ask that they both stand and receive the warm applause of this House.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you stakeholders who have provided valuable support and input to staff from the Department of Transportation. At this time I would like to introduce to the House the following people: Staff Sergeant Kees Kikkert, RCMP, Stony Plain; Constable Glenn Stark from the Edmonton Police Service; Eloise Leckie, president of People Against Impaired Driving; and Doug Hollands, president of the Alberta Motor Association. I would like to ask these individuals to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly a very close friend of mine from the constituency of Fort McMurray. Blake Robert was born and raised in Fort McMurray, and he now calls Fort McMurray his home again. He was twice elected as PC Youth's vice-president of organization, north. He's traveled throughout all parts of this province in terms of working with young people. He's here with us today, and it's my pleasure to ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two fabulous women from the Edmonton-Centre constituency office. The first is a woman whom I pried away from the theatre community. She was a very well-known stage manager; now she's going to manage me. [interjections] She'll do well. That's Betty Hushlak, the new constituency manager for Edmonton-Centre. Also joining her in the public gallery is Sunita Chowdhury. She is our summer placement student, and we welcome her to Edmonton-Centre. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the summer constituency assistant for Edmonton-Riverview. Her name is Jayne McPhee, and she's seated in the public gallery. Jayne has recently completed her fourth year of political science at the U of A. Her focus has been Canadian government policy and politics. She now has the theory and is looking forward to getting some practical experience. I'd ask Jayne to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often I get to rise and introduce guests from Lethbridge-East. I'd like to introduce Stan Klassen this afternoon. He's part of the board of the Chinook health region, but he's also the executive director for the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association and in that role has had a lot of input into the issues that are important to agriculture and southern Alberta. I'd ask Stan to rise and be recognized by the House. He's in the members' gallery.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before proceeding to Ministerial Statements, might we revert to Reading and Receiving Petitions?

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Further to the report of the Standing Committee on Private Bills, which was concurred in by the Assembly yesterday, I move now that the petitions for private bills presented in the Assembly on Monday, April 30, 2001, now be deemed to be read and received.

head: Ministerial Statements

Education Week

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise before you in the middle of Education Week to speak about Alberta's learning system. Each year the province designates a week dedicated to celebrate learning. This year Education Week is April 29 to May 5, and the chosen theme is A World of Opportunity.

I had the privilege this week of attending the opening of the Strathmore storefront school. This school began operation in 1996 with an enrollment of eight students, and as of April 2001 there were 140 students enrolled. Between 60 to 65 percent of the students end up returning to the regular school system. Fifty percent of the graduates have gone on to postsecondary education. These students have overcome their unique personal issues and tragedies that caused them to drop out of the traditional school system.

This did not happen by accident. The Golden Hills school division had the foresight to establish and continue funding this school. The community embraced the concept by providing space and furniture and generally assisting whenever help was needed. But the unsung heroes of the Strathmore storefront school are the principal, Denise Peterson, and her staff. Denise has the compassion and ability to make the school a success, but more importantly, she cares for and about her students 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year. She and her staff are providing a world of opportunity for their students on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker, the many school boards we have like Golden Hills, the many communities we have like Strathmore, the many unsung heroes like Denise Peterson are what makes the world of opportunity for the students of Alberta. As parents and politicians this government and Legislative Assembly thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Roman orator and master teacher Quintilian, the source of many of our public education ideas, would be pleased with the theme of Education Week this year. Quintilian firmly believed that schools should open a world of opportunity for students.

Education Week provides an annual opportunity for citizens to celebrate and rededicate themselves to the ideal of public schools, schools that offer excellent programs, schools that are open to all students regardless of their ability or their parents' capacity to pay, schools that are fully funded from the public purse, and schools that play a vital role in the intellectual life of a community.

We are fortunate in Alberta to have widespread support for the work of our schools. In that context our public schools are confidently able to respond to changing conditions and public interests. We have seen their mandate broaden to be much more inclusive, and they are inclusive, Mr. Speaker. Our public system itself includes fully funded Catholic schools. Within our two school systems alternative programs serve a wide range of community, parent, and student interests: the international baccalaureate program, advanced placement programs, a host of languages from French and Ukrainian to Mandarin and Cree, the performing arts, the fine arts, religion-based programs, and even an exclusive girls' school.

Historically, an important extension of our public K to 12 schools has been the development of our public colleges, institutes, and universities. We must ensure that they, too, meet our ideal of offering excellent programs accessible to all qualified Albertans and sustained by adequate, long-term public funds. The Official Opposition will continue to make proposals and to measure the government's performance with these ideals in mind.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Lobbyist Registry

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Premier. Is it the policy of this government that free and open access to government is an important matter of public interest and that lobbying public officeholders is a legitimate activity?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, relative to the first component of the question, yes, this government is open and accessible. As a matter of fact, it's a fundamental policy of this government to have an open-door policy so we can hear the legitimate concerns of our constituents.

Now, relative to the issue of lobbyists, I guess everyone who approaches government is a lobbyist in one way, shape, or form. Very seldom do people approach government without wanting something. Mind you, there was an exception yesterday when the Capital regional health authority held a luncheon to, believe it or not, thank the government for all it has done to bolster health care in this province.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: is it also not the policy of this government that it is desirable that public officeholders and the public be able to know who is attempting to influence government and that free and open access to government should not be impeded?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it is not impeded. You know, I have probably on average three, four meetings a day in my office with constituents, representatives of various institutions, some for-profits and some not-for-profits, all wanting to discuss an issue and in many cases wanting something from the government. It's the policy of this government to maintain an open door to hear from all of our constituents on matters that concern them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier agrees with these four basic principles of open and transparent government, then I would ask him: why is it that he's opposed to a lobbyist registry for Alberta where Albertans will know individuals who are being paid to get influence to the government?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member now alludes to paid lobbyists, people who are paid specifically to lobby the government on behalf of organizations or individuals. It's not fair of the hon. member to say that I am opposed. What I have said to the media is that there has been no call for a lobbyist registry in this province. I don't get any cards and letters and phone calls on this particular issue.

But I will tell the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that we will have the hon. Minister of Government Services revisit this particular issue, find out what's being done in other provinces, the expense involved, how much of a bureaucracy has to be created to undertake a lobbyist registry, and in light of the openness and the accountability of this government, if one in fact is needed.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate the Premier on that suggestion. Given that that was my next question, I'd like to just basically pass my question. He did a very good job of committing to that kind of public scrutiny.

THE SPEAKER: Well, then, we'll move to the third Official Opposition main question. But before doing that, we'll recognize that today is the anniversary of the birth of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. Given that it is a requirement that donors to political parties are listed in public documents, why not have those companies or individuals paid to lobby MLAs directly also made public through a lobbyist registry?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I've already answered those questions. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition asked ostensibly the same question.

I reiterate and repeat that this has not been an issue. I don't get a lot of cards and letters and phone calls on this particular matter, the reason being that we are an open and accessible government and the whole issue of paid lobbyists simply has not been an issue. It has not been before this caucus, this government. It has never been raised, at least not in the past five years. The last time this issue was raised was the result of the Tupper report in 1997.

Relative to the Conflicts of Interest Act and recommendations in that act with respect to lobbyists, I will have the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General respond, because there is a requirement in that act, I believe, for a review of the situation within five years.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's essentially right. The Conflicts of Interest Act was brought in in this province and provided for an automatic review every five years. The first review, I believe, resulted in what's called the Tupper report, and that was dealt with by this House in 1997. I presume that the next five-year review would be coming up fairly shortly, 1997 being about four years ago. So it is up for review. Also, as the hon. Premier has indicated, he's asked the Minister of Government Services to review the efficacy of registries across the country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Also to the Premier. I appreciate that he's undertaken to review or research, but given that the Tupper report recommendations were in fact not fully implemented by this government, I'm asking now if the Premier is willing to establish a lobbyist registry.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I said earlier. We will look into the situation. Again, this has not been an issue. Now, there has been in recent days some lobbying going on to have us bring about a lobbyist registry. The Liberals are lobbying; the media are lobbying. No one else is lobbying, but because we have some people lobbying, we will look at the whole issue of lobbyists.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask now if the Premier is willing to fully implement the recommendations of the Tupper report.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, we said that we would review this particular situation. There is nothing to compel government to accept all or any recommendations contained in any report. As I understand it, many of the recommendations in the Tupper report were accepted. Some were rejected. That is a matter for government to decide: what recommendations we're going to accept and what recommendations we're going to reject.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Conflict of Interest Guidelines

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tupper report on integrity in government in Alberta strongly recommended that legislated conflicts of interest rules govern the conduct not only of elected members but also appointed officials such as the chairs of provincial agencies. Four years ago in its response to the Tupper report the government rejected this important recommendation. My questions are to the Premier. Given the enormous power wielded by senior appointed officials, how can the government justify not having a legislated code of ethics in place to govern their conduct, as recommended by the Tupper report?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out earlier, there is a provision in the Conflicts of Interest Act that requires a five-year review of the act, and since the leader of the third party is also now on the lobbying bandwagon, we will look into that as well.

DR. PANNU: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Premier is promising that he is going to undertake a serious review of it, I will forgo asking the next two questions. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is not about lobbyists. It's to the Minister of Revenue. During our recent campaign door-knocking in my constituency I found that there was a real sense that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund has been loaned out and that there's virtually no money left in it for a rainy day and that it, in fact, has been squandered. I know that between 1977 and '82 six provinces borrowed money from the Alberta heritage savings trust fund: Manitoba, Quebec, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island. How many loans from these provinces and their corporations are outstanding on the Alberta heritage savings trust fund books today?

MR. MELCHIN: Given the goodwill nature of our Legislative Assembly this afternoon, this is a tremendous time to tell the great story of the heritage fund.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. minister, it isn't. This is the question period.

MR. MELCHIN: I'd be honoured to answer the question.

In fact, you know, the Alberta heritage savings trust fund is not squandered at all. It actually has over $12.2 billion of real money. This month of May is actually the 25th anniversary since the creation of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and I would like to assure all Albertans that this fund has been there and will be there for all Albertans and their benefit in the future.

With respect to his particular question on the loans, there were a number of loans that were given out starting back in the 1970s. The last loan was in 1982. We have had over $1.9 billion loaned to various provinces over that period of time. We have received on an average over 12.5 percent interest rate return on all of those loans, no missed payments, and the last one was repaid just this past December from the province of Nova Scotia. So all of those loans as of December of 2000 have now been repaid.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a newly appointed member to the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, can the minister tell me in his wisdom: is there a mechanism in that fund to ensure that fair returns are returned to Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you. To the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. This fund has actually performed exceptionally well over the past few years. It's actually averaged over 7.9 percent return over the last three years. It has quite a diversified portfolio: short- and long-term investments, equities, bonds, Canadian and international investment. It has a very diversified portfolio and is benchmarked against a number of well-known indices in Canada and the United States and throughout the world. This portfolio in its benchmark, be it in the bonds, be it in the equities, on average has outperformed all of the benchmarking over the past number of years.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister. This government presently has $6.9 billion in debt. Is there a way that we can use our heritage savings trust fund to pay this debt down?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you. That as well as many other ideas have been suggested for use of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. In 1995, actually, that was put in a survey to all Albertans: "What would you have us do with that fund? Should it be liquidated? Should it be used to pay down the debt? Or should we retain it?" Overwhelmingly Albertans have said that they would wish that we retain that fund and that its emphasis be turned from not just investment in capital projects but to maximize its return over the long term. That's precisely what this government has done over the last number of years. It has followed the advice of all Albertans to maximize its return and ensure that it is there for the future.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Calgary Regional Health Authority

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The chief medical officer of the Calgary regional health authority is paid over $240,000 annually by the authority to act as senior manager of medical services in Calgary. As a result, he has extensive access to information that is not generally available and has substantial influence over the delivery of medical services including contracting out. Yet a search of corporate documents today shows that members of his immediate family, including his wife, own a substantial share in a corporation that has contracts with the CRHA worth over $1 million. To the Premier: is it the policy of this government that this kind of arrangement is acceptable?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there are conflict of interest guidelines for regional health authorities. They're very clear, and they have to be followed. If there is deemed to be a conflict and if there is evidence that can be produced to show conclusively that there is a conflict, then the RHA is compelled to take appropriate action to make sure that that conflict ceases.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, for the record, is it the position of the Premier that the conflict of interest policies of the Calgary regional health authority are adequate?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I believe them to be adequate, but here's what I would suggest. I would suggest that the hon. member file or lodge an official complaint asking for an investigation, certainly in concurrence with the rules of conflict of interest as it relates to the Calgary regional health authority, and see if in fact there is a conflict.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, in fact such information has been brought to the attention of the Ombudsman, of the Attorney General,* and of others. Where now should this issue be brought?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure of the process for lodging such a complaint or having an investigation into the particular allegation. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General can shed some light on what course of action the hon. member might take.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. Premier indicated precisely what needs to be done. If there's an allegation of conflict of interest with respect to a matter before the Calgary regional health authority, that is the first place that the complaint should be taken: to the Calgary regional health authority to ask them to investigate pursuant to their conflict of interest guidelines.

If there's information brought to the attention of my office – and I'm not aware that it has been, but I would accept the indication that it's been sent to my office – we will certainly look at it and refer it, as I do with any allegation of that nature that would be brought to the attention of my office, to our special prosecutions section to look at and refer to police if there's a criminal investigation involved or to look into it if it deals with an issue which we should be dealing with through the special prosecutions. But the first place for a conflict of interest allegation to be raised is with the authority in which the allegation resides, and in this case that would appear to be the Calgary regional health authority.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

MR. VANDERMEER: Mr. Speaker, in the days following Budget 2001, as I've met and talked with my constituents, some have raised concerns about increased spending and whether or not it is affordable. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. Is the $21.6 billion in spending that was announced in Budget 2001 sustainable?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I won't go through the entire budget debate, but I do believe that what's important for Albertans to remember is that the $21.6 billion that is being expended this year is actually broken into two components, the first being the $18 billion for ongoing program spending that our government has supported, and it was the wish of Albertans to see that program spending maintained.

Second is the onetime spending, and it is one time. It's this year only. It's the $3.2 billion that is being spent through Infrastructure to play catch-up and deal with some of the pressing needs that have been on the list for a number of years. This year we were able to accommodate this because of the additional operating cash flow that we were fortunate enough to experience. An example for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is that we are going to deal with the long-awaited completion of the Anthony Henday road, that I have heard about, quite frankly, as an MLA since 1989. So we're delighted that the community of Edmonton is going to have that ring road completed through this onetime spending, but it won't be there next year.

MR. VANDERMEER: Mr. Speaker, also to the Minister of Finance: is there any way this government could reduce its current planned spending levels?

MRS. NELSON: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, that would be a Finance minister's dream come true. We are always encouraging departments: don't spend money where you don't have to; don't spend it because it's allocated; in fact, turn it back in lapsed dollars.

I have to say that in this up-and-coming business planning process I have asked departments and colleagues, when they go through the business planning process, to go inside and make sure that they focus on what are core elements for government. If you're bringing forward new ideas, you have to be pretty much prepared to take the old ones out so that it's not a piling-up. Program spending must be contained. It cannot go up. It has to come down or at least, at the bare minimum, be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. VANDERMEER: No further questions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Government Aircraft

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Infrastructure. How many airplanes does the government own or use or lease for its exclusive use?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, he'll have to repeat the question. I couldn't understand what it was when he said it.

THE SPEAKER: Well, the question was addressed to the hon. Minister of Transportation, and the hon. Minister of Infrastructure responded. Sorry; if hon. members can't hear, they had all better lower their temperatures and start listening. That's their job at this time.

MR. BONNER: I'll repeat the question for the minister. How many airplanes does the government own or lease for its exclusive use?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, we currently have three King Airliners and the Dash within the government. We also have now I believe it's four water bombers, that are used for forest fire fighting.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister: given that a key strategy identified in the Department of Infrastructure's business plan is to "ensure government aircraft are allocated according to established priorities," what are the priorities for the use of those aircraft?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, the ones that the government owns, the King Airliners and the Dash, are used extensively in things like air ambulance. They're used in transporting personnel for forest fire fighting. They're used for the Executive Council. The Lieutenant Governor uses them. There's a host of areas. In fact, they're very, very cost efficient when it comes to moving personnel around, and within the ministries the staff of the ministries use the aircraft. This is a big province, long distances, and this is a very, very efficient way of moving personnel around the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister release copies of the passenger manifests of flight records from 1997 to the present for all government planes?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, this has been going on for years. These manifests have been available for I don't know how many years now. I believe it was even maybe when the hon. Speaker was the minister responsible for aircraft that he started to release those. So it's many years ago.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Union Organizing Practices

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a constituent of mine raised concerns about an organizing tactic normally practised in the construction sector called salting. Union supporters or members apply to nonunion jobs in an attempt to organize their workers. Once the union is established, the new employees leave, and employers are often left with union contracts they can't afford. My question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Can the minister tell us if this practice of salting is legal?

THE SPEAKER: That's a legal interpretation here, and you know what the rule is.

The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, salting is a recognized tactic that is used within the union movement and within the construction sector, as the hon. member has pointed out. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, a practice such as salting is legal not only in Alberta but in all jurisdictions within Canada. It certainly falls within the area of the basic human right of an employee to either bargain individually or to decide to bargain collectively.

Now, whether or not the intent of the writers of legislation contemplated such a tactic on the part of the union movement would be a matter of research and probably further debate. But in answer to the direct question, salting is a legal methodology in this jurisdiction.

2:20

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can employers ask job applicants whether or not they belong to or support a union?

MR. DUNFORD: They do ask such questions with a great deal of risk involved. If they decide to ask the question prior to hiring and then they don't hire the person, under the terms of the Labour Relations Code that employee has the right then to bring an unfair labour practice charge with the Labour Relations Board against that employer. Now, if in fact the employee has been hired and then they ask that question and it's in relationship to perhaps ongoing pension availability and those sorts of benefit type of things, then it is not illegal. But I would want to caution any employer involved in a recruitment plan that if he's going to ask that type of question, he has to be very, very careful what he does with the answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Is there any appeal process that an employer can use if they have been affected by this practice?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, there is, Mr. Speaker. How it works out is a practical matter. When the union, perhaps having used the availability of so-called salted employees, applies for a certification of that union, there is going to be a determination of who are the employees, then, that are entitled to vote on that certificate application. At that particular point in time, if the employer wishes to object to the names that would actually be on the list of those eligible to vote, that would be the time to bring it up. The Labour Relations Board would then make a determination, as they have the right to do under the Labour Relations Code, and of course the majority then of those that vote will determine whether or not a certification goes ahead or whether in fact it is defeated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "I can't get involved . . . as the government in the negotiations directly." These are the words of the Premier in this Assembly on April 13, 1999. Yet through the budget and musings outside the Assembly the Premier has inserted the government into the middle of teacher/school board collective bargaining. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the policy of noninvolvement in negotiations been changed with respect to teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I repeat what the Minister of Learning has said a number of times in this Legislative Assembly, and that is that the 6 percent line item is there to give some assurances to teachers that that is the least they will get. There is the flexibility also within the budget for various school jurisdictions to negotiate that amount up if they so desire or to use those dollars in other areas as those areas pertain to education.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I notice that today is Thursday,

May 3, and the estimate designated by the Official Opposition for discussion today is Learning. Perhaps some of these questions might be held for later.

The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Yes. These are policy questions, Mr. Speaker.

My second question is to the Premier. Were teaching contract negotiators consulting on this change in government policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if there was consultation, I wasn't involved. I'll defer to the hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The most important thing to remember here is that there have not been any changes in the negotiation with teachers. There is a minimum amount that will be given to school boards to pass on for teachers. The negotiation of the contracts will still be between the ATA locals and the school boards involved.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. How does the government decide which sets of negotiations merit government interference?

MR. KLEIN: I don't know – that's an interesting question – because we don't interfere, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Learning in conjunction with the Minister of Finance and all of their colleagues in this government are doing the teachers a favour by saying that a line item in the budget will be included to guarantee, to ensure notwithstanding everything else but as it pertains to the funding of Learning: you will get at least a 6 percent increase.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Workers' Rights

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In the report that I tabled today entitled Losing Ground: The Slow Decline of Workers' Rights and Privileges in Alberta 1975-2000, it indicates that the real average weekly wage in Alberta has declined from $681.97 in 1975 to $642.81 in real, year 2000 dollars, a 5.7 percent drop. To the Premier. How does the Premier explain this drop in the real wages of working people in Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, all reports are, I would suggest, subjective. You know, you can read into those reports what you want to read into those reports. You can assign people to write reports to obtain the conclusions that might be beneficial or might be of interest to a particular cause or organization like the New Democrats. All I know is that relative to quality of life issues in this province and the earnings of Albertans, I don't hear many people complaining. As a matter of fact, we have people moving to this province in droves to take advantage of our economic growth and prosperity.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. Why is the Premier unfamiliar with the real wages in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I am not unfamiliar with the real wages in this province. I am a wage earner. The hon. member is a wage earner. It doesn't look like he's suffering, you know. Most people in this province are wage earners, and I get the impression that most wage earners in this province are very, very happy with the money they earn.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given that the report also shows that unionized workers earn on average 18.3 percent more than non-unionized workers, will the Premier tell the Assembly why Alberta labour legislation makes it more difficult to organize workers than in any other province in this country?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true, and to shed some more light on it, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, it's quite a statement. Of course we were talking earlier about lobbying, and I guess this is just another example of it. Under the provisions of the Labour Relations Code any employee in this province that wishes to join a union, there is a process in place. There is ample opportunity for union movement to become certified. The reason that Alberta enjoys such a low union percentage isn't the fact that people can't get organized; it's that they don't want to be organized.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Seniors' Benefits

MR. MASZYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Seniors. I have spoken with seniors who are concerned about the obstacles they face due to the high cost of basic necessities; for example, rent, food, clothing, and the little things as they occur. When can seniors expect to see the increases in funding to them that were announced in the new budget?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might start by saying that Alberta has the best program in the country for needy seniors. However, having said that, there is a significant number of seniors who are above the thresholds yet their income is low, where there's a great amount of concern. We have tried to address these special-needs people in this year's budget by increasing the area of the special-needs program. We'll be asking for increases in the special needs also. As well, there is 28 some odd million dollars being directed towards improving seniors' housing. Between the shelter components and the Alberta seniors' benefit programs, Mr. Speaker, we touch about one out of three seniors in this province with respect to aiding them in shelters.

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASZYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One final question. The increase in funding that they're going to receive: when will they see this increase?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, we normally adjust the seniors' programs on July 1. In addition to the 10 to 14 percent increases that seniors in the program received last year, we're looking at an increase of about 4 percent on July 1 of this year to the people on the program. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this is anticipating a 2 percent increase in the cost-of-living index. We're trying to stay ahead of that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Boilers Safety Association Annual Report

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Minister of Municipal Affairs presented to the Legislative Assembly here the 1999 annual report of the Alberta Boilers Safety Association. This report indicated that 10,805 new vessels were produced and inspected in Alberta's fabrication shops, compared to 14,420 items the year before. My first question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Given that this report indicates a 25 percent decline in pressure vessels manufactured in Alberta shops, how is the Department of Economic Development ensuring that Alberta manufacturers are treated fairly while competing for all the work currently that is going on in Alberta?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you. I'll decline that to the Minister of Justice, unless I misunderstood the question.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, your second question, please.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Economic Development: is it the department's policy to receive quarterly reports from all construction projects in Alberta regarding purchase and contracts awarded by location, divided into the following economic sectors: aboriginal, local, provincial, Canadian, and international?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, and I apologize, Mr. Speaker and hon. members. I misunderstood the first question.

I will take that under advisement. I'd like to look at the report, and I'll get an answer back to the hon. member as soon as possible.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Economic Development: what policy is the department taking to protect qualified Alberta fabricators from unfair competition from South Korean manufacturers, who are dumping in this province pressure vessels and heat exchangers?

Thank you.

MR. NORRIS: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, not having seen the report he's referring to, I'll look to read it and get an answer to him. I would comment that Alberta has the best business climate in all the world. Our net migration continues to rise. Business increases are at an unprecedented level. So I will get an answer back to the hon. member but remind him that Alberta is the place to be.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Energy Conservation Initiatives

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today through you is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure. The city of Calgary was able to identify and is now proceeding with energy conservation initiatives within city-owned or city-associated buildings, initiatives that are expected to reap $100 million in benefits just in the next 10 years alone as well as meet an estimated 50 percent of the entire city of Calgary's Kyoto commitments on greenhouse gas reduction. It was able to do this without incurring any major capital expenditures through performance contracting, in which all costs are paid for up front by the contractors and then recovered by them entirely through energy savings experience. My question is: has your department fully explored all opportunities to undertake performance contracting initiatives within all provincially owned buildings?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we have taken advantage of the very same type of contracting that the hon. member refers to. As a matter of fact, we started out with buildings that we own in excess of a thousand square metres. We currently are 50 percent complete. This has been done through contracting. The contractors will in fact get their money out of the contracts through the savings, and it's basically in the five- to seven-year time frame. We are also now moving forward to complete the whole project, getting into the areas with less than a thousand square metres, and we hope to have that completed within the next year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Is there a report which could be tabled quantifying estimated greenhouse gas reductions and energy conservation dollars savings that have been produced thus far from the province's initiatives?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brought up another area that we've been very active in. As a matter of fact, it started back in about 1995, and that's looking at our greenhouse gas emissions. It's very interesting to note that we have reduced the amount of emissions to some 422 kilotonnes last year. Our target for reduction was down to 464 kilotonnes, so you can see that we're well ahead of the target. As a matter of fact, since 1990 we've reduced our greenhouse gas emissions by some 19.8 percent. The energy savings have gone – as an example, in 1995 we used 1,909 megajoules, and last year we used only 1,812 within our enterprises. So in fact there is very good progress being made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister. I'm wondering if the minister's department has developed a public relations campaign or effort or nominated employees or departments for awards to promote and highlight the provincial government's considerable accomplishments in this area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that in fact we as a government have sold our accomplishments as well as we could have, because quite frankly the government has led the way in conservation and the reduction in greenhouse gases, as was called for by the Kyoto agreement. As a matter of fact, when we started in 1995, what we did was set up a committee that looked at all of the operations within government and took action where we knew there was a payback within three years. That, of course, has been completed, and now we're moving on to the more difficult areas to reduce our consumption and reduce the emissions.

National DNA Data Bank

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, the recent provincial budget contained $1.1 million in funding for the DNA data bank. I'm aware that the data bank came into existence with the proclamation of the federal government's DNA Identification Act last spring. My questions are to the hon. Solicitor General. Is the DNA data bank now available to policing services and agencies in Alberta?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, the national DNA data bank is in place as we speak. This data bank contains DNA obtained from crime scenes and DNA profiles of adult and young offenders who meet specific criteria. A three-year agreement between Alberta and Canada regarding biological casework analysis is in place, and Alberta police services are accessing the DNA data bank now. DNA samples are being taken from crime scenes in Alberta and from offenders according to the regulations set out. The data bank is a very important investigation tool and is strongly supported by the police in this province.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Solicitor General: how will the $1.1 million in provincial government funding be used?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, under the agreement between Alberta and the federal government Canada has paid the costs of DNA biological casework analysis for the past year. Starting in 2001-2002 Alberta will pay 55 percent of the biological casework analysis conducted for police services in the province. The federal government is responsible for the balance of the cost. The cost-sharing agreement is consistent with the way costs are being handled in other jurisdictions, and we anticipate that the cost to Albertans, as the member has indicated, will be $1.1 million per year. The provincial funding will permit over 400 DNA samples to be collected and examined in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Solicitor General: have we obtained any results regarding the DNA data bank?

MRS. FORSYTH: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. In March of this year Alberta received its first hit in the data bank. An offender was convicted of sexual assault in Brooks. The DNA bank registered a match with the offender's DNA against an unsolved sexual assault case in Stony Plain. We're pleased that the project is working. Again, the government supports the police services in this initiative.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have exhausted the list of hon. members who wanted to participate today, but just a couple of points of clarification arising out of business yesterday.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you asked for clarification of a point.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to clarify one of my statements. I stated that the issue on conflict of interest in the Calgary regional health authority had been brought to the attention of the authority itself, the Ombudsman, and the Attorney General. I meant to say Auditor General.* I will now see that it's brought to the attention of the Attorney General. Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Apology

THE SPEAKER: Yesterday afternoon in the business of the House there was an exchange between two hon. members, and towards the end of the day the chair called upon the hon. Minister of Economic Development to deal with part of it. The chair now calls on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to deal with the remaining portion of the matter.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. Minister of Economic Development stood in the House and apologized for some words that he directed in our direction. I appreciate that, and I accept the apology.

I would also like to apologize in turn, Mr. Speaker, to him and to the Assembly for some intemperate language that I used in response.

THE SPEAKER: May I say thank you to both hon. members, who I believe are honourable.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly during Education Week three of Alberta's finest teachers. These three teachers are 2001 excellence in teaching awards finalists. They teach at Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts, known by many as Vic Comp. These three outstanding teachers are: Gail Annett, who teaches grade 2 primary years international baccalaureate students; Kelly Chernischenko, who is a mathematics teacher to middle years international baccalaureate students and is also an excellent basketball coach; and Wendy Sorenson, who is a science teacher to middle years international baccalaureate students and is a counselor. These three teachers make learning a joy for their students. Would my three colleagues please stand – they are standing – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we'll call upon the first of four hon. members.

head: Members' Statements

North American Occupational Safety and Health Week

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, May 6 to 12 is North American Occupational Safety and Health, or NAOSH, Week. NAOSH Week focuses the attention of employers, employees, and the general public in Canada, the United States, and Mexico on the importance of preventing illness and injury in the workplace. This year's theme is Prevention Is the Cure.

In Alberta workplace safety is more important than ever. Our workforce has expanded from 1 million in 1990 to 1.7 million today, and we were short 30,000 workers in the province last year. This means that we have very few veteran workers to be hired, and many new inexperienced workers are entering our job sites.

Inexperienced workers are far more likely to be injured on the job. Forty percent of all lost-time claims come from workers in their first year at a job. Last year for the first time in a decade our lost-time claim rate went up. That fact should concern every member of this House and also every Albertan. We know that a major part of this increase was caused by the inexperience of many workers. In order to reduce the lost-time claim rate, we must make sure that our employers focus on accident prevention and take extra care with new workers and employees. Accidents can be prevented. Care and training is the cure.

NAOSH Week is an excellent opportunity to reinforce and strengthen our commitment to occupational safety and health by increasing public awareness. To achieve good results in occupational safety and health prevention, we need corporate executives who exercise leadership and responsibility, employers who give their full support and commitment, occupational safety and health committees who demonstrate their effectiveness, and governments that exercise vigilance.

Through NAOSH Week we are striving to increase employers', employees', and the public's understanding of the benefits of investment in occupational safety and health, to raise awareness of the role and contribution of safety and health professionals, to reduce workplace injuries and illnesses by encouraging new safety and health activities, and to make information available to employers and workers so they can make their work sites safer.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

National Composting Awareness Week

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about national composting week and the importance of resource conservation. Composting is, of course, about dealing with our leftovers and waste.

Long before hip and trendy urbanites began building compost bins behind their homes, farmers were composting. They knew the value of putting the leftovers and waste products back into the land. Composting has become a way of life for many in this province. In 1998 Alberta had 84 of the 344 centralized composting facilities in the country.

The Alberta Agriculture Research Institute has a number of composting research projects that involve large industry and small operators. These projects look at improving the quality of the waste products coming into the process as well as recovering gases and developing markets for the final product. There are significant commercial benefits as well as positive impacts on air and water quality from this type of research. Here in Edmonton 70 percent of the residential waste is diverted from the landfill because of the city's state-of-the-art composting facility and related programs.

Here in Edmonton 70 percent of the residential waste is diverted from the landfill because of the city's state-of-the-art composting facility and related programs.

As we take time to consider the importance of composting, it is equally important to remember the importance of conservation. The most positive impact we can have on the quality of our air, water, and land is to conserve and reduce the amounts of resources we use. Whether those resources are metal and wood, oil and gas, or water, we have a responsibility to use only what we need. Sometimes we may find that we are using more of something than we really need because of its inexpensive cost. While the purchase price of the final product may be low, we have a duty to consider the environmental impact of all of our purchases.

National composting week recognizes the importance of dealing with products at the end of the cycle, but it is equally important to be responsible with what comes into the cycle at the start.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak about teachers during Education Week, about our teachers who contribute so much within the school community and in the larger community in which they reside. An important way to recognize teachers is through this government's excellence in teaching awards program. Through this program nearly 5,500 teachers have been nominated for the awards. Whether or not a teacher becomes a finalist, they're honoured by the recognition through nomination by students, parents, and colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the four finalists from the constituency of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the Hon. David Hancock. The teachers are Shelley Lynn Hardie, Lansdowne school; Linda Margaret Jackson, Brander Gardens elementary school; Charlotte Marlene McKellar, Lansdowne school; Dolores Mae Whiting, Lansdowne school.

I also want to recognize five teachers from the constituency of the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, the Hon. Mark Norris: Yvette Aline Casavant, St. Martha school; Karlene Rae Chorney, S. Bruce Smith school; Linda Marie Parr, S. Bruce Smith school; Christine Carol Sankey, Our Lady of the Prairies elementary school; and Janice Lynn Smith, Lymburn school.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate all of the nominees, the finalists, and the 20 teachers who will be honoured in Calgary this Saturday. I'm especially pleased to be able to congratulate the 47 finalists from the city of Edmonton. I would like to table this list of 47 Edmonton teacher finalists.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Board Trustees

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Education Week I would like to acknowledge the hard work of Alberta's school trustees. School boards have come a long way from the early days in our province, when they were the very first locally elected governance body in most districts. Now they are responsible for multimillion dollar budgets, programs that no one ever imagined would be part of a public school curriculum, and classroom accommodation problems that would amaze the stewards of those early one-room schools.

Changes in the past number of years have made life difficult for school boards. They've been subjected to change that has weakened their authority. They've had their boundaries change, enlarging many into huge geographic areas. They have lost the ability in any meaningful way to levy taxes for local needs. They can no longer independently hire their own superintendent. In spite of these changes, outstanding men and women continue to serve the community in trustee positions. Once elected, they work in the best interests of our children, and they make an enormous difference.

A recent example is the part they played in working with teachers, superintendents, and school business officials to create a vision and an agenda for public education in the province. This hallmark document sets out the goal of educating all children well and then details the conditions that must prevail if that goal is to be accomplished. This document and the daily work of trustees have shown that trustees in spite of what has happened to them will continue to be a powerful force in the education of our children.

Horace Mann once feared that school boards would become yes-men instead of watchmen. Alberta school trustees are neither. They are leaders, dedicated men and women determined to take an active part in improving the public schools of this province.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair does never, never interfere or interject when members are giving their statements, but at the conclusion I would just like to point out to hon. members again that it is really not appropriate and within our rules to basically individually name hon. members by name. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who is a distinguished teacher, certainly knows that in the environment of education one called the educator puts out the message and hopefully the student will absorb the message. This is not to suggest for a moment that this is the relationship, but it's just metaphoric if nothing else.

Just so that there is not an inundation of calls coming to the office in the next few days, the chair would also like to point out that in addition to being Education Week, National Composting Awareness Week, Alberta Library Week, and National Summer Safety Week, which have all been mentioned by hon. members, this part of May is also still part of the Easter Seal Mail Campaign, also part of Girl Guides Sandwich Cookie Weeks, also part of Hire-A-Student Office Openings. May is also Asian Pacific Heritage Month, Better Speech and Hearing Month, Cystic Fibrosis Month, MedicAlert Month, Motorcycle and Bicycle Safety Awareness Month, Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month, Red Shield Appeal Month, Child Find's Green Ribbon of Hope Campaign, and Light the Way Home Campaign. Arbor Day is May 3, World Press Freedom Day is May 3, the 7th Annual International Pet Adopt-A-Thon goes May 4 to 6, Alberta Search and Rescue Day is May 5, and all Albertans will relish in joining the Annual Highway Clean-Up on May 5 as well.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the government share their projected government House business for next week with us at this time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, May 7, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading we anticipate dealing with Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act; Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act; and Bill 10, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act. Time permitting, in Committee of the Whole we would deal with Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act; Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act; and Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. Under address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, it being day 10, the motion to engross and present the address in reply and as per the Order Paper. On Monday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, day 5 of the supply estimates, the main estimates of the departments of Gaming and Justice, and time permitting in Committee of the Whole on bills 7, 2, and 1 and as per the Order Paper.

Tuesday, May 8, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 12, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001; Bill 13, the Farm Implement Dealerships Amendment Act; and Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, all of which are anticipated for introduction for first reading on Monday, and as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply the main estimates for International and Intergovernmental Relations and Economic Development, and in Committee of the Whole on bills 7, 2, and 1 and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, May 9, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, as designated, the estimates for Human Resources, and in Committee of the Whole as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 10, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for third reading supplementary and interim supply bills, bills 5 and 6; Committee of Supply as designated, Children's Services; and thereafter as per the Order Paper.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 5, supplementary estimates, at this point in time. We have some serious concerns about the lack of planning within the government's budgetary process. We see before us supplementary estimates asking for significant dollars for the second time in this 2000-2001 year. We believe that the continued resorting to supplementary supply is symptomatic of this government's inability to plan. It's certainly not the way it would have been done in private industry and is a significant issue for us.

Given that we have much other business to deal with this afternoon, specifically the Learning estimates within the budget, I would at this time, Mr. Chairman, ask to adjourn debate on this particular bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Thank you. I note that this is a bill with a value of $7.4 billion, and I also note that it appears there is not a single government MLA who has any opinion on spending that large an amount of money. I'm very concerned about that. There is in this bill no mention of objectives for the spending. There are no performance measures. I certainly realize that there will be budget debates that incorporate some of these issues, but frankly those come after the money is approved, as I understand it, and it's like closing the barn doors after the horse has gone.

I do think it's worth reading into the record the percent of a number of the departments' budgets that are being approved here with no meaningful debate whatsoever. For example, we will be through this approving 58.1 percent of the entire annual budget of the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. We are approving here, apparently to nobody's particular interest in the Assembly today, 51.9 percent of the Agriculture, Food and Rural Development budget. We are approving a third of the Children's Services budget. We are approving 35 percent of the Community Development budget. Again, no debates. A quarter of the Economic Development budget.

MR. HANCOCK: A point of order.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Point of order. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's unfortunate that I have to raise a point of order for the first time in this session. Under section 23(h), making allegations against members, I think it's entirely inappropriate for the member to use time in debate in the House to suggest that other members are not interested in the debate because they have not had either the opportunity or the inclination to speak in the House on a particular matter. It's totally inappropriate to try on a unilateral basis to put that type of a statement on the record of the House when we have had many different opportunities to speak about the estimates. In this case in particular, we're talking about interim supply, which of course, as every hon. member knows, is supplanted by the main supply, which is what we're dealing with as soon as this debate ends.

So it's quite inappropriate to impute motives or to make allegations against all members of the House that we're not interested in supply and we're not interested in the money that's being spent and allocated by this appropriation bill, and I think he should be asked to withdraw those comments.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, there is no point of order. The Government House Leader is being argumentative in nature. My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview was simply stating the obvious, that on these particular estimates we have not seen the government or other members from the government caucus participate in this debate, and he was stating a fact.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On the point of order, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: I shall continue, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Did you want to speak on the point of order?

DR. TAFT: No, I won't speak on the point of order. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Well, this is an opportunity for anyone to participate in debate, and that opportunity is provided to everyone. Members have the option of either speaking to any subject or not speaking to that subject, and there are many different stages of the bill at which members can speak. Therefore, I think it is probably inappropriate to generalize such statements for every member of the House. So hopefully you will all take that into consideration before you generalize a statement that impacts every other member of the House.

You may now proceed.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall continue with some observations, but I'll take the hon. member's comments and the chairman's comments into consideration.

Debate Continued

DR. TAFT: We are approving here over 40 percent of the budget of the Department of Environment, 48.5 percent of the budget of the Department of Finance, 68.5 percent of the annual spending on Infrastructure, 36 percent on International and Intergovernmental affairs, 40 percent on Sustainable Resource Development, and almost 42 percent on Transportation. In my opinion, although I understand how this fits into the budgetary process, for us to be in a situation where we are having to make these approvals is unfortunate, and I hope that we're not in this situation again.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report progress on bills 5 and 6.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following: bills 5 and 6.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Committee of Supply

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The chair would like to make a brief statement just so all hon. members are clear on what will occur this afternoon. The Official Opposition has designated the estimates of the Department of Learning for consideration by the Committee of Supply this afternoon. Under paragraph 9 of the House leaders' agreement of April 10, when appropriation bills are considered prior to the calling of the Committee of Supply, the committee shall vote on the estimates of the department it is then considering by 5:10 p.m. The Committee of Supply will then rise and report.

Of course under Standing Order 61(4), when any appropriation Bill has been considered by the Committee of the Whole, the chair is to put a single question on the bill or bills which must be decided without debate or amendment. This must occur at 5:15.

Accordingly, if consideration of the estimates for the Department of Learning is not completed by 5:10 this afternoon, the chair will call the question on the estimates pursuant to the House leaders' agreement, after which the committee will report to the Assembly in time to resolve back to Committee of the Whole to consider the appropriation bills.

Learning

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will keep this extremely brief. In accordance with the House leaders' agreement I will not be speaking again to these estimates, and I will be taking the questions that have been asked by the opposition under advisement and will respond to them on a written basis. Therefore I look forward to the questions as they are put forward in the Assembly.

I would say that we are presently voting on an estimate of $4.8 billion, Mr. Chairman, which represents an increase in the basic K to 12 education system, an increase for the school boards of 8.4 percent, for postsecondaries of 8 percent, and in student finance of adult learning of 22 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that this is an excellent budget, and I look forward to answering the questions that the opposition will pose before us.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister being willing to respond in writing to the questions that we raise this afternoon.

It is a lot of money. I'm not sure what the calculation would be in terms of how much we're spending per minute on this particular budget item, but it's a very important budget for Albertans and one that affects some of our most valuable citizens, our children and young people.

I'd like to start off with looking at goal 1 on page 273 and to ask for some comments and make some observations about the program there. The strategy is to develop policy and program responses to recommendations from the Native Education Policy Review that will support the Government of Alberta goal of improving Aboriginal well-being, self reliance and employability.

That's an important goal, Mr. Chairman, and it's coupled with the strategy that follows: "develop a plan to collect Aboriginal student data and monitor and evaluate the effectiveness of programming." I applaud the department for doing this at this time.

I think there has been some very, very unfortunate public airing of the performance of native students in the province. I'm not sure what the motive was for making those achievement measures public, but I do know that the public airing of results when they aren't the best is a disservice to the people who are working to try to make things better. They find it very disheartening to see the results of their work, as hard as they work, made public, and they suffer a kind of criticism from that publication. It makes their work in the classroom and in communities much more difficult. So I'm delighted that the government has seen fit to include this as a strategy and to include it under goal 1, having a high-quality learning environment.

With that I would have a couple of questions. Just how soon will the policy and program responses be available? When can we expect to see them? What programs is the government actually looking at? What specific programs are they looking at in terms of that particular strategy?

The achievement data from aboriginal students I assume will be similar to the achievement data collected on other students in the province. I would ask if it's possible, not just with the aboriginal student data but with achievement results for all students in the province, to get an indication of the performance of female and male students, whether that can be sorted out. I've had a visit from a citizen who's really concerned about national figures and international figures that show the performance of boys lagging far behind that of their female counterparts. I think it would be an important piece of information to have to see if that is the situation in Alberta, that boys don't perform as well as girls.

What prompted the question to be raised by the visitor was the Rutherford scholarships and his attendance at an awards ceremony where he noted that the number of Rutherford scholarships that were awarded to female students far exceeded those that were awarded to male students. I think it would be an interesting piece of information to have, and it would be a useful piece of information, particularly when we look at native populations. So I'm pleased the project is under way. I look forward to the information.

I wonder, too, just before I leave that, if achievement test data from that population is as important at this point as maybe diagnostic information. I would ask the government if they have considered implementing diagnostic tests that would actually help teachers working with aboriginal children plan programs for those children based on their situation at the beginning of the year instead of what we seem to be into, a cycle of constantly measuring and measuring and measuring at the end of the year. So that would be my question. Have they considered diagnostic tests, and if not, will they in terms of actually helping make a difference to the performance of these youngsters?

I'd like to talk about special education. A strategy here is to "develop and implement an action plan to address the recommendations of the Special Education Review." Special education, I think, Mr. Chairman, really does need some attention. I must have, as many MLAs in the Assembly must have, at least a dozen or 15 really, really difficult cases where I've heard from parents about their concerns with the inability of the school system to meet the needs of their child. Most of them are long tales, tales of parents trying to work with schools, tales of schools trying to provide programs, parents going to the private sector for help, trying to hire their own specialist to help, yet in the end all of it not proving satisfactory in terms of providing programs for their children.

I don't know what can be done. There's a high level of frustration in terms of special-needs programs. We took the opportunity last fall to hold two town halls. One was held in Edmonton, and one was held in Calgary at McDougall Centre. Parents with children with special needs attended those sessions, and it was a listing of the kinds of difficulties that these parents are experiencing with the special-needs programming as it now exists in the province. So any information that we can get in terms of that action plan. Who's going to be involved in it? I would really hope that parents who are having difficulty with special-needs programs would be contacted and would be asked to make a contribution to putting in place that plan. I think it would be worth the time and effort that involving those parents would involve.

I'd like to comment on the evaluation of the results of the class size reduction pilot. I'm not quite sure what it means to evaluate that project. It was $500,000 that was spent. The results were known before the project was undertaken. It confirmed the research that has been found across the continent, that class size does make a difference. Certainly other things make a difference: the teacher, the number of children you're working with, the kinds of resources, the subject you're working on. Those things all make a difference, but overlaying all of that is class size, and we know it makes a difference.

I urge the government to come forth with some targets, some idea of where we're going in this province with respect to class size. The Official Opposition later in this session will be introducing a bill to that effect, again to try to keep on the public agenda the issue of class size because it is so important in terms of the achievement of youngsters in our schools. It's one thing we know. A lot of educational research is not very conclusive, but this is one piece of research that is conclusive. We know it makes a difference, and I think it's time to stop procrastinating and do something about it. The time is now with this item in this budget.

Some questions about the Minister's Forum on Lifelong Learning. We've been to a number of ministerial forums in the last number of years, and there always seems to be a bit of a disconnect between the things that are said at those forums and what actually happens in the classrooms and the laboratories and lecture theatres of this province. I wonder if there has ever been any evaluation of those forums and if there is an evaluation planned of this forum to ensure that the things and the recommendations that come out of those discussions actually make a difference to learners in this province.

There's an interesting notion that's going to be looked at in the forum, and that's Campus Alberta. I think that'll be welcomed by postsecondary institutions in the province, where there have been more questions raised about Campus Alberta than any real knowledge of what exactly it means and what exactly the goals are and what the implications are for the 27 institutions in the province as that concept is implemented. I'll look forward to the work that's done on Campus Alberta.

I would also like to know in terms of that forum: who will participate? How is the list drawn up? Again, on what basis are people invited to that forum? I think it would be a useful piece of information to know who is represented there. I've been to a number of the forums, as I indicated earlier, and going back to reflect on some of those forums, I had no idea, for instance, that degree-granting status would be offered by private vocational schools in the province. It seemed to come right out of the blue. I don't recall any previous discussions about that, and that I guess is one of the reasons that what goes on at these forums and tracking what happens to the recommendations I think is important.

I look at the request for a framework for Access and Learning Television, an accountability framework, and I think that that's something we can look forward to. I'd like to know who's going to be involved in that framework, who will be making the contributions. What is the nature of the accountability that the Department of Learning is looking for? Is it in terms of viewing audience? Just what is the nature of the accountability that the department is pursuing?

Implementing the recommendations of the school councils again is a good step. I think it's timely that those recommendations are being implemented, and I'd like to know who's involved in making the decisions in terms of which recommendations will be implemented. Will those recommendations be accompanied by performance measures so that unlike the recommendations that have come out of special-needs reviews, somewhere down the road we'll be able to look back and say: this is exactly how far we've come along in terms of this recommendation; this is where we are? So the performance measures there I think will be an important part.

I'd like to, if I might, look at the strategy to implement a kindergarten to grade 12 information and communication technology program of studies. It seems to me that the department has gone ahead and seems almost oblivious to conditions in the classrooms and in schools as they make their plans. Acquiring hardware, acquiring software, and evergreening are extremely huge problems for schools. Many schools are not able to hold casinos and have the proceeds of those casinos offered in terms of buying software and hardware. In talking to school after school, it's a very, very difficult problem. How do they keep up-to-date? How do they acquire equipment in the first place?

To proceed with a curriculum and program specification without first ensuring that there are going to be the tools in schools and in classrooms and in teachers' and in students' hands to ensure that the program can be conducted seems to me to be almost irresponsible. I would look forward to some comment from the minister in terms of how money is going to be spent to ensure that the basics are there before teachers and students are asked to embark on a program of studies.

Connected to that is the safe and appropriate use of the Internet project. It would be interesting to know if there has been a pilot project done on this. Has there been some work done preliminary to this item appearing in the budget? How many schools are going to be part of the project? Is it to be a universal program, or is it to be selective? Again, will there be some performance measures that we'll be able to look at a year or two years hence to say, "Yes, we've made progress," or "No, we need to do more work in this area"? It's an interesting project. I think it's one that concerns parents.

I've heard from parents from a variety of school jurisdictions across the province concerned with the access that their youngsters have at school to the Internet, concerned with some of the releases that they've been asked to sign in terms of their youngsters' use of the Internet in the schools. Many parents are just a little worried in terms of what's happening with the Internet and the school's use of the Internet.

I had one parent ask if he could have his youngster excluded from the use of the Internet in school, and he was a little upset when he was told that, no, that was not possible, that that was part of the school programming, and that the school would not take any responsibility should the youngster stray onto sites the parent thought were inappropriate. It's an area that needs some work, and it needs some measures so that we can tell whether or not we've achieved the kinds of goals that we think appropriate.

Those are some of the questions I have in terms of the program of studies, except I'd like, if I could, to talk a little bit about the western Canada protocol in social studies. I have had a representation from a teacher who is very, very concerned with the western Canada protocol in social studies. I think one of the major complaints was that the protocol has pushed content down from upper grades into lower grades, and it's now going to offer an inappropriate academic load for students at all grades. The whole appropriateness of the protocol has at least this individual very worried, and it's an individual who I respect and has some background in teaching.

So I would like to know what kind of critique of the protocol is being done. Are there external evaluations of the protocol that will assure us that the demands being made, both contentwise and learningwise, are appropriate for the age level that the protocol is aimed at?

I'd like to also know who represents Alberta Learning at the protocol deliberations and if we could have a list of not the names but the positions those people hold in terms of making decisions about what is appropriate for social studies classrooms in this province.

I wonder if we could have some information on the cost of the protocol, what it's cost to this point and projections of where we may be going. I know it's a huge project. It's a very ambitious project, and it's one where support has come and gone in some provinces, but the project still seems to be held together, so I would like some information.

I think that that's my time for now, Mr. Chairman, and I look forward to asking questions further on. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have the opportunity to speak to the Learning budget estimates for this upcoming year, the year 2001-2002. Learning is a big deal in my constituency. Certainly, in the past election it was a serious topic of discussion at the doors and at the forums. People are very concerned that their children are going to have adequate access to education both at the postsecondary levels and in the K to 12 areas. They have specific concerns with a variety of issues, particularly, as my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about, learning difficulties and issues such as that within the school system.

We spend a lot of money on education in this province, Mr. Chairman, but the question, I don't think, and the point of this discussion is not how much is spent but whether we're getting value for those dollars that are spent. This continues to be a huge issue, and it would seem that the answer is: not always. In fact, we may have a misplacement of dollars in some particular areas.

When talking to people in the constituency during the election, I would ask what their key areas of concern were. Education was always the number one, two, or three issue. That hasn't changed since the first time that I was elected back in 1993. It continues to remain to be in the top three of concerns for people in the area.

Something did change this time though, and that was the areas of concern for people. When they would express education as an issue, I would say to them: are you most concerned about postsecondary education, K to 12, or both? The first two terms that I ran, Mr. Chairman, people said K to 12. They saw that most of the funding problems and the areas of concern for them in terms of service delivery were in the K to 12 areas. This time many more people said that postsecondary education was a priority, but the vast majority of people said that both areas were their key concern.

That's an interesting change, Mr. Chairman, and when we take a look at the makeup and the demographics of the constituency, we can see that it's aging, that many more people like myself and our own family are taking a look at the next stage of education for the children. They're getting older. They're starting to graduate. They're looking at postsecondary institutes, and they're seeing a number of challenges there. They're seeing that it's costly to get into postsecondary education. They are seeing that it isn't always that easy to have access to those areas, that there are some limitations on what it is that they can take and also that not always do we have a preparation system in the K to 12 system that adequately gets them ready for going into postsecondary education: in particular, concerns around the math programs and a disconnect between what people in the K to 12 system as teachers and counselors have been told and are passing on as information to these kids getting ready to go into advanced education, as there are requirements that advanced institutions of learning have for these kids coming in.

These new math pure programs are causing a great deal of concern. Counselors and teachers are telling the students that they don't need to have math pure to get in to all faculties and all postsecondary institutes, yet these very same institutes are demanding that that's a preliminary standard that the students coming in have. So that's an issue, and it holds people up in their planning.

I think the transition from a high school to a postsecondary institute is tough enough on kids. We don't need to add any extra burdens. They don't need to get to the end of grade 12 or the last quarter of grade 12 or make their applications to postsecondary institutes and find out that what they've taken, regardless of what they've been told by instructors and counselors, isn't going to be good enough to get them into the faculties they want. That's an issue that I would like the minister to respond to and tell us how that particular problem is being satisfied. I think that's an issue that needs to be addressed.

Student loans, still a big problem in my constituency, Mr. Chairman, and the access for students who are living at home and who have parents who are working and are middle-class earners – that's the vast majority of the people in my constituency. Most of those young people don't qualify for student loans. It's tough for them to find the dollars to be able to go to school at today's costs, and at the kind of minimum wage and the kind of job offers we see for young people, few of them can earn enough money throughout the school year or over the course of the summer to pay for their tuition fees aside from other costs. Sometimes they can pay them in portions, in which case they pay a penalty. They end up paying surcharges on those dollars. So that's an issue that needs to be addressed.

I know the minister likes to talk about remissions and things of that nature, which work very well for those who qualify, but what about for those young people who don't? I still think that there are some ongoing issues there. The degree of debt load that young people are coming out of institutes with is amazing and formidable, and sometimes I wonder why they're prepared to undertake that kind of a debt. It shouldn't be necessary in this kind of a province.

Mr. Chairman, we're penalizing our young people by not allowing them access to a public education system that will prepare them to be competitive in the global marketplace. We are also penalizing ourselves when we do that because bringing up the average wage and education level of the people who inhabit this province is a benefit to all of us regardless of where we stand in the social structure of the province. It is particularly a benefit, can be a benefit to low-income earners, because as people earn more income and pay more income tax, there are more dollars available for those kinds of baseline programs that help people in this province. I would like the minister to consider that and give some feedback on that particular point.

I was interested in the comments my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods had to say about the Supernet. I think that is an interesting program that the province has undertaken, one that they're quite happy to pat themselves on the back for, Mr. Chairman, but one that is also fraught with a number of difficulties.

Recently I had the opportunity to talk to a fellow who is actively involved in bringing the Supernet to the outside borders of communities and schools. I asked him how he thought the schools were going to bring those lines inside and into the classroom. He said that it didn't really matter, that the issue was really getting it to the outside of the building and that people would find a way to bring it inside. I said to him: "What about the kinds of funding constraints we see on education institutes right now? Are those dollars going to be available to bring it inside?" He said: no, he didn't expect so. He thought that schools and parents could find innovative ways of providing that service delivery.

So then I said to him: what are you doing in your own kids' school? He's got kids in high school. He said: we have no idea, but we'll probably look for a corporate sponsorship or do some kind of fund-raising endeavours or the teachers can make choices, and we can have fewer teachers or fewer other services in order to spend the dollars to bring the lines inside. So I thought that was an interesting choice. He was willing to sacrifice quite a bit to get those lines inside the school, certainly willing to sacrifice teachers or any other supplies they may need for the year. That's interesting, because those same teachers are going to be needed to help those students move along in terms of their learning process with the Supernet itself. So he didn't really care. He said: if you bring it there, they'll find a way in. I said: "What about low-income schools? There are lots of schools who are not going to be in a position to be able to fund those lines inside.” He said: well, too bad. His kids didn’t go to a low-income school, so it didn’t really matter to him. That was an interesting comment on the part of social responsibility for the province.

I said to him: do you believe that corporate sponsorship is the way to make these computers accessible inside the school system? He said: whatever it takes. He didn’t see anything wrong with having Coke signs stamped on the side of the computers, and if that’s what it took to get them in, then that was more important than not having access in there and that, in fact, corporate sponsorship could take care of evergreening issues and things of that nature and other kinds of technical support. So it’s interesting that that’s where he thinks this is going. I don’t necessarily disagree with him in terms of that’s where it’s going, but I certainly disagree with him in terms of that’s the right way to handle the situation.

I think those are the kinds of issues that we should have before us for a matter of debate in this Legislature and so far haven’t, Mr. Chairman. This is going to be another one of those decisions that is made behind closed doors, where the ball is bounced across to the schools to pick up, and then the government turns its back and doesn’t really care how it happens. It’ll be interesting to see how this unfolds in the coming year. I’d be interested to hear the minister’s comments on what he thinks about corporate sponsorship, what he thinks about what low-income schools would do in this regard, and how he thinks schools are going to fund this. Not only that part of it, but what about the in-service training for the teachers who are going to have to keep on top of the kinds of issues that there are with regard to the Supernet being available in the schools? So if we could have some feedback on that, I’d appreciate it.

I’d like to now go specifically to some of the programs and ask some questions there. When I take a look at program 1, which is the ministry support services, it’s interesting to note that more dollars are being asked for this year. There is, in fact, an increase in ministry support of 1.8 million additional dollars being asked for in these particular estimates, so I’d like some information, Mr. Chairman, if we could, on what those dollars are going to be spent on. Always a concern when we see more dollars going into administration in education rather than on frontline support, where we know that it’s desperately needed, which would be in the classroom. What are we going to see those dollars spent on in terms of full-time equivalent positions within the ministry? How much is going to be in administrative support? Could we get some kind of a breakdown of what those dollars would be? I think particularly we need to be quite insistent that specifics on administrative dollars are available to people so that they can judge whether or not those dollars are being well spent.

If we take a look at program 2, we’re talking here about supports for basic learning, and I have a few questions here. Once again we see an increase here, $1.3 million in this case, Mr. Chairman. That’s a question for us. That $1.3 million is the total 2001-02 being higher than the estimated actual of 2000-01, so some specific explanation in terms of why those dollars are there would be helpful.

When we take a look at the total 2000-2001 estimate, the actual is $2.3 million higher than the 2001-2002 estimate. Once again, the question here is why? Some detail in terms of what the increase is allocated to. Are we seeing full-time equivalent positions being added in this case? What will those positions be? What new programs are being supported by this increase? I think that we’re quite interested in new programs that add value, not just reorganizing of old programs but something that is benchmarked and monitored for value. That’s the issue, I think, for us, and certainly for me as a parent that’s what I want to know, how those dollars are being spent.

How many programs are being supported by this increase, Mr. Chairman? If we could have that information, too, it would be very helpful. In fact, the breakdown of all the programs being supported by this line item would be helpful. We don’t get that information. It’s very much consolidated in these budget books. We don’t have briefings by the department in this regard, which would be helpful. If we had a little more detail on where the government was going and how they were spending their dollars, it would be helpful. I know that I can often get those kinds of briefings in the ministries that I’m the critic for, and I find them immensely helpful. It cuts down on some of the concerns that show up in question period, and it sometimes helps us share good-news stories that the government is involved in. So I would suggest to this department, too, that that is something they might want to take a look at.

If we go to vote 2.2.1, operating support for basic education, I’ve got a few questions. Quite a bit of money is being spent here, $1.9 billion that we’re taking a look at on the operating expense side. Can the minister tell us why there is a $3 million increase in the operating expenses for education? What operating expense items does this cover? We’d like some detail once again here. How much is allocated to each expense item that this increase covers? There’s not a concern about spending more dollars if we’re getting value for the dollars, but the issue always is value, and we can’t determine that if we don’t know what the detail is. Then we can compare it to outcomes. So that’s quite helpful for us.

In this line item, too, are operating expenses funded by the lotteries. I have issues with lottery dollars being spent on education, but perhaps I’ll keep those concerns for when we get into the lottery debates. I’m not sure why these dollars aren’t just consolidated in here when it looks like virtually everything else is consolidated. Maybe we could get from the minister an explanation for why these are specifically broken out.

Questions on this. Why has the 2001-2002 line item for operating expenses funded by lotteries doubled from 2000-2001? Why are the lottery funds being used to fund education operating expenses in general? There must be some kind of rationale that the government has for that. We’d certainly like to hear it, and I’d like to be able to share that information in a format that we can send out to the PACs in the constituencies because it’s certainly a concern for them. In fact, some schools are deliberately choosing not to do additional fund-raising in their schools through gambling revenues, yet in fact some of their operations are being funded by the government from gambling revenues. So if we could get some information there, that would be helpful to us.

We’d also like to know if it’s sustainable to use lottery fund revenue to fund education in the future. Sustainability is important in some of the other areas, but it’s crucially important here in education that we know our children can receive the same quality or higher quality education from year to year. So we want to know what will happen to those funds if lottery revenues dry up or if it’s deemed fit that they should be used in some other area. If we could get some explanation there, that would be helpful.

Another question on this particular line item: will the ministry continue to increase its reliance on lottery funding for education? We’ve seen since I’ve been in this Legislature a significant increase in the number of dollars that we receive from lottery funding. It’s been a big concern for us. We certainly ask for that kind of funding to be stopped. The removal of VLTs some years ago I still think was a good idea. When we see the vast number of dollars coming in in general revenue, we see that the government is quite happy to take those dollars and allocate them to whatever catches their fancy for that particular year, not sustainable, I don't think, when we run it right into program funding and of concern to all of us. So we would like some information on why they've decided to undertake that kind of funding, how they justify it, information that we can literally share with people in the community.

I think, Mr. Chairman, those are most of my questions at this time. We'll see where everybody else gets on these particular estimates. I do have concerns about early childhood services support, private schools, and public and separate school board support.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat at this time.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure this afternoon to speak to the budget estimates for the Ministry of Learning and, as well, to look at one area in particular in the budget that deals with our apprenticeship and industry training programs here in the province.

Now, then, we realize that the apprenticeship and industry training programs here in the province are industry driven and that these programs are supported by the government. Under the guidance of the apprenticeship board, the system relies on an Alberta-wide network of local and provincial apprenticeship committees and operational training committees, and their responsibility is to represent the interests of over 50 trades and crafts here in the province. As well, their responsibility is to set industry-based standards to develop course outlines upon which the technical training is based for our young people or for people entering apprenticeship and industry training, a very, very critical responsibility here in the province. It deals with an area in industry and in business today where we have a tremendous shortage of workers.

Part of the reflection that I take upon this is that when we look at the average age of our people in the trades industry here today, it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of between 46 to 48 years of age, and of course that represents a huge top-end or older population. It presents a problem as we look to the future. We are going to have a very, very serious shortage of tradespeople in this province in the very near future. In fact, I think one of the limits to growth in this province, particularly right now, when we do have an enormous strain for trained and qualified personnel, is that companies cannot get the trained personnel they need. As a result, we certainly see some raiding on other companies. We certainly see a great influx of workers into this province as a result of our high demands for skilled labour. We do have a very, very serious shortage here in this province.

Now, as well, this puts other stresses on the system. Certainly institutions such as NAIT and SAIT are major trainers of our tradespeople here in the province. Of course, they take time out of each particular year for experience on the job and return to these education facilities to get the education part of the trade completed.

In looking at the budget items here, I cannot determine whether these institutions have had an increase in their funding, whether their funding has remained the same, or whether their funding has decreased, particularly at this critical time when all indicators show that we definitely need more people in skilled labour, not only today but down the road as well. When we see indicators in the economy that we are having growth periods until at least 2005, when we have indicators that show us that many of the people in the trades will be retiring in the next five to 10 years, then of course it certainly indicates that we are going to need an influx of skilled labour.

When we look at what the product is that our institutions in this province have put out in the way of skilled labour through the apprenticeship training programs, we see a very, very high-quality skilled worker. These workers are not only respected in this province, Mr. Chairman; they're respected in this country and in other nations throughout the world. I think of our workers particularly in the oil industry and the pipeline industry that have absolutely no difficulty getting jobs anywhere in the world. In fact, they're sought after and sought rather highly for their talents.

One of the things that we are experiencing even in industry here today is that when other tradespeople come to Alberta, there is no standardization of training between provinces. The standards as set, for example, in Newfoundland or Quebec or Ontario are different from what we have here in Alberta. I heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods speak earlier of the western Canada protocol. Certainly in our school system we are making every attempt to harmonize our education system across this country and, particularly through the western Canada protocol, to do it in this region of the country. I know that there are certain attempts by organizations in the various provinces to get together and try and harmonize these standards. So what I would hope the minister could provide is an update as to how these standards are going to be harmonized and where the discussions on that are at this particular time.

Now, then, what we have here because of the different standards is different barriers for each of our somewhere over 50 trades to mobility between the provinces. Not only do we have that difference, Mr. Chairman, we also have differences in the level of certification when it comes to workers in this province compared to other provinces. As well, in this province we also have a number of apprenticeship centres in the major centres, and they have a specific responsibility to monitor the apprentices when they're out on the job. I think overall, from the results that we see, they do an excellent job.

As well, what's happened here in the province is that we have a number of emerging growth centres, areas in this province where we've had rapid growth, where we've had a great deal of demand for apprentices, where they are working. In these particular communities, what I would like to know is: what are the plans to establish in these emerging growth centres apprenticeship centres so that apprentices in these rapidly growing areas will also have the same quality of help and assistance as they go through their apprenticeship?

We certainly know that local apprenticeship committees have played a very, very major role in this province. They have certainly led to greater communication amongst all apprentices, and this has certainly led to a great strengthening and development of partnerships throughout the province. It certainly is one of the reasons that we have been able to develop the quality of apprenticeship program that we do have here.

With growth and with the demand for skilled labour and apprentices in this province I think we have to look at another side that we have to concentrate on as well, Mr. Chairman. That is that when I look at the statistics for 1999 of workers who were injured in the workplace or encountered industrial disease, it was serious enough in this province that 35,000 workers had to miss at least one day of work. When we also look, there were 27 workers a day who were injured in this province and were in their first six months of being on the job. So certainly experience on the job is a big problem.

We can't help but wonder in this situation if some of these apprentices were being asked or required to do jobs that they were not trained for yet or whether they were not properly supervised. Again I think that it is critical that we have in place the proper apprenticeship centres that can monitor new apprentices and certainly to make the workplace a much safer place, and this is through the education of these apprentices. We certainly all realize in this Assembly and in the workplace that this is money well spent, that if we can prevent these workplace injuries, then it certainly is a much lower cost item in the long term than the strains and the demands that it will put on the system. So my next question to the minister in this regard is: how are we dealing with monitoring these apprentices in these particular areas of growth, the emerging areas of growth? What is the opportunity of developing and establishing these centres where we can monitor apprentices?

As well, what is happening here in the province is that the rate of injured workers, particularly young workers, is growing at a much greater rate than our workforce, than the percentage that our workforce is growing. It indicates that we don't have enough training in safety for these people. I know that the WCB certainly has done an excellent job in developing safety programs, but it also indicates here that we have not done enough.

DR. TAFT: A lot of injuries occur in the first six months.

MR. BONNER: Yes, especially when the injuries are occurring within the first six months.

Therefore, what I would like to know is if the ministry has looked at the possibility of introducing a safety component into the apprenticeship program or expanding what is in the program presently.

In looking at the business plans for the ministry, I was quite happy to see here that the percentage of Albertans age 17 and older that are attending credit and noncredit program courses grew from 32 percent in 1998-99 to 33 percent in 1999-2000. I see that our target for next year, the year 2001-2002, is still 33 percent. When we have such a demand in the skilled trades area, why wouldn't we expect this figure to rise, especially when I see that the target for the year 2003-2004 is 36 percent?

Now, Mr. Chairman, when I look at goal 2 in the business plans, I see that the outcome here is that "learners demonstrate high standards." I see as well here that under this section one of the bullets is to "enhance awareness of education and training attained in other countries for entry into trades and professions and educational institutions." Certainly we do want opportunities for people that arrive in Canada, but it would seem to me that rather than us looking for people from other countries, again, we train our own. It is the same situation we have in education, where we are all of a sudden short of teachers, so we're going to look outside the province of Alberta when we have an excellent facility right across the river which has a remarkable record of training teachers for this province. These are foreseeable, these are predictable, and that is why I can't understand why we wait until we are in this situation, why we haven't properly prepared for these.

Now, one of the programs that I'm particularly happy to see and that is gaining popularity is the high school registered apprenticeship program scholarship initiative. This is one of those areas that will certainly attract our graduates here in Alberta to enter the apprenticeship program, and it is also an excellent opportunity and a new opportunity for school-to-work transition.

When we are promoting the high school registered apprenticeship program, I do have a few questions here that I would like to ask the minister. The first question is: how is the registered apprenticeship program scholarship initiative going to be promoted to high school students? Again I think that this is critical, because every indicator is that we are going to have a tremendous shortage in this province, and who better to attract into those positions than our own youth, who are constantly looking for these good jobs?

Now, then, as well I would like to know: if we are going to pay proper attention to the registered apprenticeship program scholarship initiative, then what is this promotion going to cost? How many young people will be impacted by it? Could the minister please indicate which communities will receive the benefit from this program? Is it going to be open to students across the province, or are they going to have to be in certain cities or just where we have apprenticeship boards or whatever? So if the minister could please provide that information for me. Another one of my questions is: how much is the total program going to cost?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did have some questions here as well on program 3, the support for adult learning. Under apprenticeship and industry training I see that our gross expense for the fiscal year 2000-2001 was $10,793,000 – that was under the operating expense – and for this year it is $12,337,000. My question here to the minister would certainly be: where are these extra dollars going in the operating expense? To what institutions are they going? Again, is that amount for our facilities at NAIT and SAIT increasing, decreasing, or remaining the same?

Finally, when we look at our amortization of capital assets, I see that in last year's fiscal program it was at $36,000, and this year it has increased to $186,000. That is quite an increase in the amortization of capital assets.

So thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to rise and speak to the estimates for the Department of Learning, in large part because the largest single educational institution in Alberta is in my constituency – and indeed it's one of the largest in the country – the University of Alberta. As well, there's a campus of Grant MacEwan Community College in my constituency and in addition, of course, a large number of schools.

There's no question that for me personally and for my constituents education is an exceedingly high priority, a highly valued government program, a public service that ranks up there with health care and justice and other areas as being of absolutely paramount importance to a successful society and, indeed, to successful individuals.

In going through material from the Department of Learning in the Budget 2001 business plans, on page 278 I notice in the outcomes two or three areas worth commenting on. One is the outcome that "learners are well prepared for citizenship." That gets at perhaps the single most important aspect certainly of advanced education and of all education.

I know so much of our education system now seems to be geared towards training people for jobs, and that's commendable and that's fine and important. But in doing that, we don't want to lose track of the role of education, the fundamental role and perhaps even the original role of education going back to the academies of ancient Greece: creating citizens. I'm pleased to see that the business plan for the Department of Learning pays some attention to that. They have strategies to "develop learning opportunities that will build an active and responsible citizenry." I would be curious to know how citizenry is defined here, what it means, and indeed how this information presented on page 278 of the plan is compiled.

It does suggest here that public satisfaction that learners are well prepared for citizenship among high school students actually is a bit low, 41 percent. The target I guess isn't that high either. It's 42 percent. I'd encourage both the target and the achievement of that target to be raised. The results are a bit higher for postsecondary, for adult learners, at 65 percent. Nonetheless, it's a difficult concept to measure, and I would like more background on exactly what is being measured here, but commendation to the minister and to the department for paying some attention to that.

On the same page there is a graph or chart discussing the more practical or certainly the more economically oriented aspect of education, which is employment rates. It's worth noting here how high education corresponds directly with employability. I note that employment rates for vocational college graduates are 85 percent, and then the employment rates rise from there to the highest level, which is not private university colleges but in fact the general universities, which I assume mean the University of Alberta, of Calgary, of Lethbridge, and Athabasca University, of which 96 percent of graduates are employed. I think that's commendable. We need to keep on that kind of a target, of course remembering that it's not just the education but the entire economy that assists us in achieving that.

There are some specific issues I would like to raise in these discussions concerning postsecondary education. I have had inquiries, that I have in fact raised here in question period, from constituents who are concerned about the cost of education and, in particular, specifically the cost of housing at universities. There is some attention paid here to reviewing the tuition fee policy for universities.

I think we mustn't lose track of other living expenses that students face when they are attending university or college, and among those probably the greatest are housing costs. So some attention by the department to housing costs would probably be in order. We're going to see those costs jump as a result of the soaring costs of natural gas and electricity, and I would repeat my encouragement to the department that in their budgeting and in their financing they ensure that any rebates that are provided to educational institutions for energy costs flow through and cover that and offset the costs of student housing.

Tuition fees are also an ongoing issue for many of my constituents and of course for citizens across Alberta, not just the students themselves but their parents, their grandparents, who may be supporting them as they attend postsecondary training. I am very concerned that the tuition fee increases in the last decade have far exceeded the rate of inflation. While they have doubled or tripled, I don't think there is any measurement that would suggest that the quality of education the students are receiving has doubled or tripled. We need to watch tuition fees, and I would encourage any budget activity at all that was undertaken here to ensure that tuition fees are flattened right out and, indeed preferably, that tuition fees be reduced. So I have questions here about how soon the tuition fee policy review will be completed and what it's likely to find, what its recommendations will be, when we can see that tabled in the Assembly.

I would also like to just raise a handful of questions around education for aboriginal populations. I notice from time to time in the business plans there is mention of opportunities for aboriginal groups or aboriginal individuals to further their education. I would encourage that particular attention in resources be paid to that area, as we are all I think well aware of the particular problems that our aboriginal populations face when it comes to achieving levels of education that will help them get along in a modern society.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I think I will take my seat. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will try to focus on issues that have received less attention than others. Several of my colleagues in the House have already spoken on the estimates for this very important department in our government. I heard a few comments that encourage me to believe that government is paying more attention than it has in the past to issues of chronic underfunding for our learning system, both K to 12 and postsecondary. There are some indications here that some steps are being taken. So I certainly want to acknowledge that. Looking at the business plan, there is certainly more attention to detail in this department's business plan than I found in some other departments. So, again, I think the minister and his staff deserve some credit for this.

Having said that, the key issue that I will focus on, of course, at the postsecondary level is a worrisome development that has taken place over the last 12 months, that I want to visit for a moment: the approval of a private, for-profit postsecondary institution in this province being given the accreditation for it to offer degree-granting status so that it could offer degrees to Alberta students and others who may enroll in its programs. This is not only a private college; it's a private, for-profit corporation, a large one with a great big array of commercial activities, a corporation that's listed on the New York Stock Exchange with billions of dollars of capitalization and therefore has shareholder interests to look after as distinct from educational challenges to meet seriously. The first and foremost obligation of a private, for-profit corporation listed on a reputable stock exchange is a force to generate and maximize profit and to be accountable first and foremost to its shareholders.

I asked the minister some time ago a question on whether or not this college will now receive public funds, and his answer to my question at that time was unequivocally clear that not a cent of public dollars will go to this. I was certainly reassured by his clear answer, but the questions do arise, given the fact that we live within a framework defined by NAFTA, as to the rights of corporations to have access to resources, facilities, conditions that apply to local or national economic players. So the national treatment chapter of NAFTA gives me some concern, and I would like the minister perhaps in his response to explicitly address that issue.

Has he got sound legal advice on it, and will he be willing to share that advice with us so that we are assured that the DeVry institute's accreditation to become a profit-making, degree-granting institution in the province will not subject provincial revenues and resources to go to all other claimants that might want to enter the field and thereby open the opportunities for privatization of postsecondary education? That certainly is an issue that continues to worry me. I know that the minister takes concerns like this seriously, so I expect that I and the House will be hearing from him on this specific issue.

Looking at the business plan – again, I'm looking at page 275 – there is the issue of the section on outcomes: "affordability, financial need," and "the learning system is affordable," and "accessibility." These three sections, I think, deal with the issue of equal opportunity, which has long been very closely linked to the goals of publicly funded public education systems in Canada and elsewhere over the last 50, 60 years. I'm trying to track down here a reference to the words "equal opportunity," and I have not as yet been able to find it. Maybe the minister can assist me to see whether or not there is an explicit commitment or statement of intention of the government and the minister stated somewhere here. The reason I raise this question is because some of my constituents certainly are affected by this government's tuition fee policies relative to postsecondary education in particular.

I was visiting a storefront high school on Whyte Avenue in my constituency about six months ago. I visited with students and teachers and talked with students who had for one reason or other dropped out of school some years ago and had now returned and were doing well and on the way to completing their high school diploma at a level of performance that would qualify them to enter, if they so chose, college or university education. When I asked them about their plans for college or university, the clear answer was: no way; can't afford it. So this question of affordability, when it's addressed without linking it to ensuring opportunity for every Albertan who is qualified and willing to go to a postsecondary institution, without linking the whole question of opportunity and how it is the obligation of a government, the obligation associated with good governance that all qualified citizens be treated equally – that kind of commitment I think is missing here. The word "affordability" seems to not address the question that I'm raising here, so maybe the minister will help me understand how he and his plans plan to address how this budget reflects the commitments to the ideal and the principle of equal opportunity.

Another matter, Mr. Chairman, a general matter that I want to raise – I was at the press conference this afternoon at the press availability of the Premier. He was asked some questions about skilled labour shortages, the shortages of people in Alberta with high levels of skills which will require postsecondary education training. He started musing about perhaps the need to enter into agreements that will facilitate easy movement back and forth across national borders so that in this province we could address the problem of such labour shortages by importing people and immediately followed it by saying that he wanted to assure Albertans that any such entry, if it's eased, will not be at the expense of job opportunities for Albertans.

The point here that he missed, of course, is: why these shortages? They are not merely the result of the economic growth that's taking place. It's clearly also the result, the cumulative effect, the impact of the ever growing cost of postsecondary education that impacts students' decisions once they are about to finish their high school on whether or not to proceed to the postsecondary level to seek or obtain the qualifications and the skills they need to enter the labour force at a level of skill and training for which we are now saying there aren't enough people around.

I think we need to pay some attention to this. There's no point, on the one hand, of alluding to the problem of growing labour shortages and then not being able to link it to the very policies of the government that may over a period of time have created the situation that we're now trying to address. If we don't pay attention to it today, then the situation is likely to get more serious rather than abating. So that's the other issue that I wanted to draw to the attention of the government and the minister for some comments, if possible.

Making education more costly is clearly something that needs to be acknowledged. When you make it more costly, you're going to reduce the demand for it. To some extent that's a simple, I guess, economics 101 kind of observation that I make.

I was speaking this morning to Alberta high school students who were here at the Forum for Young Albertans. I was listening to them very carefully in terms of the questions they were asking. They're concerned. Many of these students come from perhaps relatively economically well-off families, but they're concerned about their own perception about the very high cost of going to college or university in this province. I'm talking about just a few hours ago. Five or six hours ago I was speaking with these students, addressing their questions, and I came back with the clear impression that there is a growing concern among young Albertans about the government's failure to take action in order to contain the costs of going to college. They don't understand why in this province there should be such indifference on the part of the government to addressing this question.

Of course, there is in the business plans an indication that the government is undertaking a review of the tuition fee policy. I guess my question to the minister on that one is: what are the terms of reference? Is a reduction of tuition fees, a rollback of tuition fees one of the possibilities included in this review? What's the time line? When would we hear about it? When will the government in fact complete this review and act upon this review? Who is doing the review, and to what extent is public input sought and secured on a very wide basis before this review is completed and recommendations or conclusions are drawn from it?

The next point I want to make again of a general nature is that there's a danger, Mr. Chairman, that I read into the way the targeting of additional funds to universities for faculty retention is being used here. They are certainly targeted to certain faculties, certain areas, very specific areas which are perceived to be directly connected with the economic growth needs of the province. I submit that this is a very narrow view of the role of postsecondary education, I expect more or less exclusively seen as a means of economic growth rather than as an endeavour worthy of our investment and commitment as a society that's highly educated and civilized and is committed to the ideal of pursuit of knowledge in all areas of human activity, be it philosophical, cultural, artistic, social, or economic and scientific.

The result, as I hear from my colleagues on campuses across this province, of such policies of targeting funds specifically only for certain areas in the university is the growing marginalization of studies in liberal arts and humanities across our campuses, and I think that's a dangerous trend that needs to be stemmed. It's not just a perception on the part of a few who may be concerned about this as a very generalized concern. I hear about it quite a lot regardless of which campus I visit or what time of the year I go there.

So there is, I think, a blind spot here in the business plan, in the vision that directs the business plan and the budget, the issue of what postsecondary education and what education as a general human endeavour is about, whether we need to conceive it more broadly, more imaginatively or whether we should reduce it simply to skills training and production of knowledge merely and exclusively for the purposes of enhancing economic growth. Not that economic growth is not important, but to reduce education to that purpose and to that purpose alone is shortsighted, is misguided.

Mr. Chairman, let me see if there are a few other points I can make here in the remaining three minutes or so that I have. I also want to not be remiss in noting that the business plan does include a reference to education for citizenship. Citizenship as a goal of education is a very noble goal, a very important goal for a democracy, for a democratic government, and for our future democratic developments, particularly in light of the risks that we face as we meet the world under the new model of corporate globalization. The threat to democratic norms, the attempt to narrow the view of democratic forums such as Legislatures is real, and we need to pay more attention at the level of education of our young to make sure that they begin to look at citizenship in this new light, in the new context, which does pose some serious threats to the viability of vibrant, democratic institutions and their functions and the role of citizens in determining and shaping their own future as democratic actors in the process.

These are some of my general comments. I have some specific questions on the budget, about three or four pages of questions, but I think I will now wait for another opportunity, maybe this afternoon if I have it, to put that on the record.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to continue and look at the K to 12 system with some questions about the Alberta initiative for school improvement. I notice that there's been a dramatic increase in the budget to $65 million for that project. Again, I wonder what the intent of the government is in terms of that being a continuing budget item and also raise the concern in terms of adding to the increased number of earmarked funds that school boards have to work with. It, I think, detracts from the need to make adequate the basic per pupil grant and to address the problems of that grant being inadequate.

I have some specific questions about the AISI projects, and I would like to know how the results of the projects are going to be communicated so that all students in the province benefit from the research that's being undertaken. I guess I would like some assurance that the projects aren't being initiated because boards are underfunded and they're using this as a mechanism to bolster their budget as one of few alternatives they have in terms of adding to the basic budget. I'd like to be assured that that's not the case.

In the case of the class size study in Edmonton I was disappointed with the spin that was put on the results. The results, I think, were fairly conclusive in terms of the benefits of smaller class sizes, yet having spent the $500,000 to confirm what was known from jurisdictions elsewhere, it seems that the government made every effort to downplay those results and to negate the findings. I find it curious to spend the money, to get the results, and then to deny that the benefits should be applied to all students across the province.

It makes me a little suspicious of the AISI programs. I know from discussions that there are some exciting projects under way. There are some good things being done, but I'm, again, suspicious of the context that we find ourselves in and somewhat alarmed at the rapid growth of the budget for those earmarked funds.

I'd like to move, then, from that to the "strategy for parents with children aged 0 - 6 to improve family literacy practices and children's readiness for school." I applaud this strategy and the resources that are being put into it, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that this is money that's going to be very well spent.

I look at some of the rather ambitious programs undertaken in some of the American states to improve literacy: a state where the governor got personally involved in leading a tutorial project for parents and interested members of the public who were interested in working with youngsters in a tutorial capacity, projects where industry and businesses were encouraged to have employees devote part of their week to reading to children or working with a specific child in a school. Those industries and businesses were willing to give employees time off to go to the schools to do that kind of work. I think it's part of that recognition of how important it is for us to get to young children at a very early age to make sure they all end up capable of reading and having the kind of skills that they're going to need to be successful once they hit the formal learning system.

I wondered in terms of this specific strategy who has been consulted. Who are the stakeholders that they have talked to regarding this strategy? Is there a priority in terms of the communities where the work will be undertaken? For instance, are our inner-city, low socioeconomic areas on a priority list, where the work will be first done? Again, will we have in place a group of performance measures that will allow us to see the progress on this project? I think it's a worthy project and one that the opposition certainly supports.

The second part of that is the "best assessment 'tools' for describing levels of development and learning in preschool children." Again, a long-overdue project and a long-overdue investment in terms of young learners, preschool children, in helping make sure that we diagnose at an early age any difficulties and the strengths that those youngsters have.

I have some questions about exactly what the inventory is and how it's going to be applied. Who's going to be responsible for the inventory and working with youngsters? Is it one that's going to be generally available in schools, or will it be through the children's initiative? Just exactly how is the inventory going to be delivered, and who's going to be involved in assessing the results of the project and the progress on it?

That leads to the third strategy: "develop an action plan to implement recommendations from the Primary Programs Curriculum consultation." Again, a good project, a good strategy that needs our support. I'll be interested in the action plan that actually comes forward. I'd be interested, again, in knowing who is going to be involved in developing that plan and what kind of time lines they have in mind in terms of completing and implementing those recommendations. Is there a time frame being attached to that work? Again, will there be performance measures so that we can come back to this at a later date and assess progress?

I think the evaluation of the early literacy program is worth while. It's one of those projects that I think was destined to be successful before it was ever undertaken. If you talk to people that have been involved doing it, they're certainly enthusiastic. I feel that the resources committed to that have been worth while. The only caveat is that, again, it's money that's earmarked for a specific reason, and it takes away the flexibility of schools to respond to the needs of students as they best see fit.

I did have a question in terms of: will youngsters that have been home schooled be part of that evaluation? What about charter schools? Will they, too, be made part of that evaluation? I have some questions about home schools and their participation in a number of these initiatives. Has there been thought given to an evaluation of the home schooling that goes on in the province other than the kind of monitoring that goes on by boards that umbrella those students? How successful is the home schooling program, and are we certain that children are being well served with the program?

I would like, then, if I could, to skip over to that portion of the budget that deals with financing postsecondary institutions. In particular, I have some questions about program 3, support for adult learning, and item 3.1.5, other program support. Just what exactly is included in that line item? It's gone from $9,870,000 to $15,540,000. It's a dramatic increase, so I'd be interested in knowing what's happened in terms of expansion or just why there is such a dramatic increase and what that increase covers.

A similar question with the line below it, 3.1.6, the international qualifications assessment. I know there are a lot of students coming to the province, but it seems to be a fairly large increase from the previous budget. Could we have some explanation as to what caused that increase?

As I look down at the grants to postsecondary institutions, Mr. Chairman, I notice, for instance, that the grants to universities on line 3.2.4 have increased by about 4 percent over the last budget and that the grants for technical institutes – my math may not be right, but I think it's something less than 3 percent that those basic grants have increased. That seems to me not to really cover the cost of increases that those institutions would face over a year, to say nothing of salary grid advancements by faculty and instructors. I guess when I look at the earmarked funds and the growth in them, I get the feeling that there is less and less confidence by the government in those institutions to spend the money that they have wisely. So the overall grants are being kept minimal, yet earmarked funds again, money under the funded envelopes, have grown rapidly.

In particular, the one that I think concerns me the most is the money that's now found its way into the access fund. It's gone from $70,331,000 to $101,004,000 in terms of funding those access places, and it seems to me that the major criteria for that fund has been the opening of student places in institutions. I've heard time and time again that the fund does not adequately cover the costs of opening those spaces, that it's a way of controlling the faculties and institutes and colleges. There's an inordinate amount of money spent in trying to get the other proposals and to administer those proposals once they've been accepted. I wonder if the government and the ministry have considered evaluating the access fund from any other perspective than the number of student places that it opens. I worry about the large growth and the impact that has on the autonomy of institutions to determine where they think the resources to serve their student body are best spent.

I also look at, again with a little alarm, the faculty retention envelope. I'm sure it's welcomed by the institutions, but again it earmarks money for a specific area and takes away the autonomy of those institutions to deal with faculty retention difficulties in ways that might more appropriately fit their institution. I haven't got the figures before me, but if you look back over the amount of increase in earmarked funds through the funding envelopes over the last number of years, the increase has been really very dramatic. I think it may have accomplished some good things, but I think it comes at a high price for the independence of institutions.

I wanted to spend a few minutes, if I might, looking at item 4.3, the student loans issue. Again, I have some questions about the loans and the loans program. The government is I think rightly proud of the remission program, and I was pleased that the remission program has now been made automatic. There were a number of students that left institutions unaware that they were eligible for remission. I talked to a number of students who said that even though they knew about it, they were sent running around from place to place trying to find exactly how they applied for the remission. So I'm glad now that it's an automatic remission that they get.

In talking about the loans program, I wonder if the government really does have a good handle on how much students are in debt. The debt that the government accounts for is the debt that's accounted for through government programs. As I talk to students, the loans that they have from government sources are for many of them only part of the debt that they've incurred in trying to secure an education, and many of them are carrying large amounts of private debt that add to that burden. So I think we may fool ourselves when we just look at the amount of debt that's been incurred to government. I wonder if the government has ever considered undertaking a study, an evaluation of the loans program and trying to get a handle on what students' costs actually are in accessing programs and the kind of financing that they find themselves forced to engage in in terms of completing those programs.

I would be interested in knowing just exactly the impact of tuition increases and the loans program on students. I hear students talk about having to have a number of part-time jobs to keep going, to pay expenses. The welfare loads at institutions have increased. So

I would encourage the government to undertake a fairly thorough study of student costs in our province and the ability of students to finance those costs.

One of the other questions I had about the remission program was the impact on students who have incurred debt previously and weren't aware of or didn't access a remission program. Is there any retroactivity in those programs? Can they go back and ask for relief if they left the institutions three or four or five years ago and didn't seek that relief at that time? I'd be interested in knowing if the department has addressed that problem.

With those comments, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm cognizant of the fact that only limited time remains, so I will try to limit my comments to the K to grade 12 level in my specific comments on the estimates in the budget. I note that the budgetary increase this year comes from a 3.5 percent increase in per pupil grants and a further 4 percent provision being made and intended to cover increases in teachers' salaries. On the issue of teachers' salaries, lots has been said in this House over the last week and today, but I want to put on record some of my concerns here.

It was clear that it's the first time, that I'm aware of, that the government has actually tried to set the fiscal parameters around collective bargaining between the Alberta Teachers' Association and local school boards. There is no question that this is a significant departure from past practice in which school boards negotiated collective agreements with the teachers and other staff and government provided the necessary financial resources to assist school boards in meeting their obligations.

In this year's budget, in my view, the government's approach certainly looks heavy handed, arbitrary, and represents unacceptable interference with free collective bargaining. My question, of course, to the minister is: why are teachers being singled out in this way? The government has not taken this approach in negotiations between provincial health authorities and nurses. The government has not taken this approach in terms of negotiating with doctors. The government has not taken this approach in negotiations with other staff, nonteaching staff employed by school boards. So why this double standard when it comes to the provincial teachers?

Meeting with the press the other day, when they asked me, I tried to be charitable towards the government and simply said: it's unfortunate that teachers' negotiations are coming off; the election is over. For the nurses and doctors the negotiations came just before the election. So it's the reality of politics, that every government, including this one, responds to pressures more quickly and positively on the eve of an election. But once the election is over, those pressures are gone and teachers get treated rather shabbily.

There was another suggestion made to me and that was: are teachers being punished because of their role in the provincial election? I said: I don't think so. Both of these explanations, in light of the fact the government has really failed to explain why it is making this radical departure from previous practice, do meet sort of a test of plausibility. So take your pick: whether it's teachers being targeted because they did things politically that the government didn't like or whether they simply happen to come for consideration after the election, not before it.

Depending upon how you add up the numbers, doctors and nurses received increases between 17 and 30 percent in their remuneration packages for the next two or so years. Yet teachers are being restricted to – it's called now a minimum – 6 percent over two years. The president of the School Boards Association expressed their concerns that this really is putting school boards in a very difficult situation, where they have to choose between cutting back services provided at the classroom level, including their ability to consider reducing class sizes on the one hand, and paying teachers what school boards think they, in fact, deserve.

So why the government has taken this step is a question that continues to be asked again and again. The government's explanations simply don't cut the mustard or don't make sense. They are not persuasive. I submit that this is a recipe for conflict with the province's teachers at a time when there's a growing teacher shortage, and it's unfortunate that the government seems to be mainly responsible for creating this potential for conflict.

My final question on teachers' salaries is this: how does the minister plan to allocate these funds to school boards? The formula for allocating per pupil grants is fairly well understood, but what formula will be used to allocate the increases for teachers' salaries to school boards?

My second set of questions relates to this government's failure to take meaningful action to reduce class sizes. A report on class sizes, which included a pilot project involving 12 public schools in Edmonton, was completed last November. This government sat on the report until the election was over. They didn't allow the issue of class size reduction to become an election issue on the pretext that they were still considering the report. The minister tried to give the impression that he was favourably inclined to take positive action on this but no action in this budget. The class size report clearly shows that the vast majority of students benefited from reduced class sizes in the pilot project, yet one searches in vain for a specific allocation in these budget estimates to assist school boards in reducing class sizes. The 3.5 percent increase in per pupil grant is there. I welcome this, but it will simply allow school boards to more or less keep up with the inflationary side of the equation and not be able to take positive steps towards the reduction of class size. Why would the government on the one hand provide an allocation for increases in teachers' salaries and yet on the other hand fail to make a specific provision for a reduction in class sizes, especially in the lower grades? All I can say is lack of political will or disingenuous interest in reducing class size by doing nothing about it.

My next question at this level relates to support for private schools. I note that there is about an 11 percent increase in estimated spending for instructional grants to private schools. This is on top of an even larger increase in private school funding last year. In total over the two years there has been a 40 percent increase in private school funding. My question is: why? Is the increase driven by an increase in enrolments in private schools? Is it driven by some other considerations? I think the minister owes us an answer.

There are only a couple of minutes remaining, Mr. Chairman, so I guess I won't start on the next segment of my speech here. I'll conclude by saying that I'm disappointed in the fact that the minister hasn't addressed the questions I've raised, certainly not addressed to my satisfaction. I know he has not addressed these questions to the satisfaction of school boards, and he hasn't addressed this question to the satisfaction of parents and public education advocacy groups and certainly not to the satisfaction of teachers in this province.

The postsecondary students who are expecting the minister to take some action, to give them some hope, to take some action on his promises that he was making to students – and again we find that there's no action on the question of either freezing tuition fees or much less any indication that any time soon this government is thinking of beginning to roll back or reduce tuition fees in this province for our postsecondary students. That's a real disappointment, I guess, for the thousands and thousands of postsecondary students who made representations to this government through all kinds of means, by meeting with the standing committee, by signing petitions, yet there is no action. Again, I don't understand why, why the government is refusing to take any positive action on that score.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will now vacate the floor.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I see that we have a very short time remaining to us, and I'd like to put some concluding remarks on the record in terms of the Learning budget estimates. We see that we spend a lot of money in this province on learning, but what we also see is that there are still a great many areas where we're having problems with how those dollars are spent. So I would urge the minister to respond not only to the questions raised this afternoon but to the heart of the issues and tell us how in the long term he expects to respond to the issues that have been brought forward, I think all legitimate and substantive in nature.

We're looking forward to getting his responses on this, Mr. Chairman. We hope that we will see those responses before the end of this particular legislative session. The speed at which we're rolling through these bills, it's going to be before the end of this month. I know that puts some pressure on his department, but certainly it would be helpful for us, so if we have follow-up issues, we can follow a particular point.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to the leaders' agreement I have to put forward the question. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Learning, are you ready for the vote?

5:10

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$3,582,159,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$83,000,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following department.

Learning: operating expense and capital investment,	$3,582,159,000;
nonbudgetary disbursements,	$83,000,000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

[Title and preamble agreed to]

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 7, 2001 1:30 p.m.
Date: 01/05/07
[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon. Hon. members, would you please remain standing after the prayer for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Now would you please join in the singing of our national anthem as we're led by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please participate in the language of your choice.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd like to ask that the petition I presented last week be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Bill 12 Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 12, being the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill standardizes sales and lease agreements and provides implied warranty and parts availability for farm implements. It also sets out the process for dealer/distributor termination. The proposed amendments provide harmonization between the prairie provinces and will enhance interprovincial trade as conflicting or dissimilar legislation requirements are removed. Manitoba has recently completed their legislative harmonization amendments, and Saskatchewan is currently reviewing their act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 12 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Bill 13 Farm Implement Dealerships Act

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 13, being the Farm Implement Dealerships Act.

This bill defines cause, process, and remedy for dealer termination by distributors. The act is designed to improve competition and remove restrictions placed on farm implement dealerships by distributors. Similar legislation has already been passed in Saskatchewan in December '99 and in Manitoba and P.E.I.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 13 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Bill 16 School Amendment Act, 2001

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the School Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill provides solutions to issues that in some cases have been with us for more than a hundred years.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

Bill 207 Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill would enable apprentices and tradespeople to deduct the cost above $500 of their tools used in employment.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the requisite number of copies of The Special Areas Trust Account. These statements present the financial position of the account and the results of its operation and cash flows for the last fiscal year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table copies of a letter which I received from a Ms Kathy Howery, co-chair, Edmonton Advocates for Public Education. She attaches to the letter results of a survey essentially answering the question, "Is class size jeopardizing your child's education?" The answer is overwhelmingly yes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today a letter from Ms Margaret Brown in support of the Alberta College of Social Workers in their demand that MLAs debate the welfare payments.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to table for the information of the Assembly the environmental policy of AT Plastics Inc., one of the largest employers in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today. The first is 11 letters from concerned Albertans regarding the severe staff shortages in day care, and these letters urge the government to get involved in setting fair wage standards for day care workers across this province.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a letter dated March 21, 2001, from the Claresholm Child Care Society. The Claresholm Child Care Society is a nonprofit organization that provides much-needed child care services to Claresholm and the surrounding communities. The letter outlines the society's concern about the lack of day care funding and its impact on child care.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is another tabling which gives an example of what's possible with the Rosedale power plant. This is five copies of selections of the web site for the powerhouse museum in Sydney, Australia. Particularly significant is the amount of work they've done on aboriginal artifacts and space for them in the museum, particularly considering the significance of the site to aboriginal peoples in Australia.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two gentlemen who are seated in the members' gallery. They are Jason Randhawa, who is the president and CEO of WavePoint Systems Inc., and Mr. Randy Boissonnault, who works and is the chairperson of the board for the Centre for Family Literacy. As I said, they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 22 enthusiastic grade 6 students from Erskine school in Erskine, Alberta, accompanied by teacher Mr. Hank Boer and parent helpers Mrs. Terri Kelloway and Mrs. Kim O'Neill. Seated in the members' gallery, I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two outstanding Calgarians seated in the members' gallery. Skip McDonald is a distinguished land developer as well as being a founding member of the Calgary regional health authority board, with whom I worked very closely during my tenure with the CRHA. He's also on the board of directors for the Glenbow Museum. Michael Robinson is the president and CEO of the Glenbow Museum in Calgary, which provides a learning experience and atmosphere for more than 200,000 visitors each year. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very special honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my STEP student from the constituency office in Mayerthorpe, Joel Giebelhaus. Joel is entering his second year at Trinity Western University in Langley, B.C., and is a history/political science major. Joel is interested in possibly pursuing a career in politics after graduation. I would ask that my guest, seated in the members' gallery, please stand and receive the warmest welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 18 students from Victoria composite high school. Now, I know this is a school with great meaning for the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and I know he's going to chat with them afterwards, but I have the honour of introducing them as the school is in my riding. So we have 18 students, and they are joined by their instructor, Mr. Keith Kostek, and by parent helper Ms Diane Luzny. I would ask them to please rise now and accept the warm greeting of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'd like to introduce to you and through you 22 students from St. Patrick school and their teacher, Mrs. Michelle Armstrong, and their helper parent, Ms Lilly Cripps. They're sitting in the members' gallery, and I would like them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 30 bright students from Lee Ridge elementary school in Edmonton-Mill Woods. They're accompanied by parent helpers Ms Janet March and Mrs. Noreen Megyesi and by their teacher, Dr. Wade Pike, who is a most excellent teacher, as he was a most excellent student. They're in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly guests who are here today to witness the introduction of Bill 13, the Farm Implement Dealerships Act. Seated in the members' gallery are Dean Lien, Farmers' Advocate; Dennis Budney, inspector, Farm Implement Act; Carolyn Makowecki, assistant to the Farmers' Advocate; John Schmeiser, executive vice-president of Canada West Equipment Dealers Association; James Kryskow, who is first vice-president of the Canada West Equipment Dealers Association and general manager of K & M Farm Equipment Ltd.; and Don Redford, member of the Farm Implement Board and service manager for Buhler Manufacturing. I ask that they rise to receive the usual warm welcome from this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Conflict of Interest Guidelines

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has announced that the Minister of Government Services will undertake a review of the need for legislation pertaining to registration for paid lobbyists in the province. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier commit to include in this review the need for open disclosure on when and where lobbyists are meeting with the government?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not about to give any undertakings at this particular time. Basically, the Conflicts of Interest Act requires a five-year review of all the legislative components and the regulations associated with that act. We'll take the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's suggestion under advisement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier also commit to looking at the rules defining what type and form of lobbying is appropriate to determine the Conflicts of Interest Act's adequacy when it covers issues of the relationship between lobbyists and government officials? [interjection]

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Minister of Energy put it right: it's lobbying if it works, and it's not lobbying if it doesn't work, I guess.

Mr. Speaker, again these are matters that could be taken under consideration as the review unfolds, and I'm sure that the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General has heard the hon. member's suggestion and will take it under advisement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier also commit that this review will include lobbying of nonelected officials such as officials associated with boards and agencies of the government?

MR. KLEIN: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Justice minister heard the question, and as the review unfolds, he may or may not take that suggestion into consideration.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Power Generation

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board announced approval for location credits to be provided to electricity generators to encourage electricity generation in specific locations. My questions are to the Premier. Rather than a subsidy for locating generators, why not let the market work by having transmission differentials when there are shortages in power in certain locations in the province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I know of no instance where direct subsidies are being given. Relative to the specifics of the question, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Location-based offset credits were determined in an auction format in a marketplace manner that would determine where is the best place to site generation, how it would benefit all of the users. The process took place accordingly, and a press release was issued by the transmission administrator.

DR. NICOL: So they are subsidized.

Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: if the in-province transmission grid is full and cannot move electricity to the locations where it's needed, why do generators need incentives to locate where shortage can be served by their production? Why not let the market work?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the intention is to let the market work. Relative to the details, again I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

MR. SMITH: It saves all the electricity users money, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question again to the Premier: does it save everybody money when, using this method of incentives – are businesses in areas of shortage not being subsidized by businesses in other areas when they have to pay the added transmission charge or a service charge or an administrative charge that's applied to that?

MR. KLEIN: Does it save everyone money, Mr. Speaker? I really don't know. Relative to the specifics, again I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of ways that you can deliver electricity through transmission. One is to have the power close to where the power is being used. That, in fact, drops the power losses and results in more electricity being delivered to the user. On the other hand, you have areas where there are long distances to cover. For example, with the tremendous growth in the oil sands we're also creating new opportunities for cogeneration. In fact, for the steam generated, there's 60 percent electricity available on that system to move off. Now, we have to find a way to get that electricity moved to where the people are who use that.

There are two options: to build transmission lines and charge that to the rate base – and the transmission site is still regulated – or to find ways where people can use entrepreneurial spirit and the marketplace dictates and find ways to put that power right where the source is, thereby saving the transmission administrator and all ratepayers money.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Calgary Regional Health Authority

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question will be to the Premier. The first chairman of the Calgary regional health authority was appointed in June 1994 and remained in that position for over four years. This individual was also deeply tied to Bovar as an important investor and corporate director. During the period in which this individual served as chairman of the CRHA, one of Bovar's companies had valuable contracts with the CRHA. To the Premier: can he explain the government's position on conflict of interest as it relates to the first chairman of the CRHA and the CRHA's contracts with Bovar?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if I recall, those allegations were raised in this Legislative Assembly approximately four or five or perhaps six years ago, and as far as I know, there was no foundation to any allegations of conflict of interest. I recall in the Legislature – and I'm paraphrasing right now – the comments that I gave at that particular time and how reprehensible I thought it was for the Liberal opposition to try to undermine the good thoughts and the good work of a well-thinking and a well-meaning Albertan. I said that, and I repeat that again here today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the Premier undertake to release all documents relating to relations between Bovar or its subsidiaries and holdings and the Calgary regional health authority?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again that goes back years and years and was responded to, all those allegations and all of that nonsense that was raised by the Liberal opposition at that particular time. I don't know what was tabled in this Legislature at that time and what wasn't tabled, but I don't believe that as the result of the allegations that were raised some years ago, there was anything to be tabled that demonstrated or indicated any conflict whatsoever.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: did conflict of interest concerns have any bearing on this individual's departure as chairman of the CRHA?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, I can absolutely recall no incidents and no evidence and no proof whatsoever. I can recall innuendo, vicious innuendo, from the Liberal opposition but no evidence whatsoever. So, Mr. Speaker, as it relates to the question, since there was no conflict and no evidence of conflict, it can naturally be assumed that that had absolutely nothing to do with his departure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Conflict of Interest Court Case

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many questions remain unanswered in the influence peddling case concluded last Friday.

Foremost among them is the $20,000 in secret payments made to the former executive director of the Premier's office of the time. These payments were made from the bank account into which $200,000 was paid by an Edmonton developer for the purpose of influence peddling. My questions are to the Premier. Is the Premier satisfied that the whole truth about the $20,000 payment to the former high-ranking Tory official came out as a result of how this case was handled?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what I will say about this particular incident – and it occurred before I was the Premier. As I understand the way this all unfolded, this evidence of the payment was made at a preliminary hearing and became part of the public court records. I would assume – and I'm only assuming – that if the police, on the basis of that evidence presented, thought there was any wrongdoing, they would have investigated. Now, I don't know if they are, and I don't know if they aren't, because we don't tell the police what to do. If the police know or have suspicion that there's criminal activity, they will conduct an investigation. So my answer to the question is that I leave it in the hands of the police, the proper authorities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there's no paper trail to substantiate that a loan of this magnitude was ever made in the first place, would the Premier tell the House if the government has any evidence in its hands to give it the confidence that this matter doesn't need any further investigation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if we have any evidence of wrongdoing relative to any incident, whether it involves this government or the Liberal opposition or the ND third party, we would hand it over to the proper authorities. If the hon. leader of the third party has any evidence or wants to go outside this Chamber and make any allegations and he feels comfortable making those allegations on the basis of some evidence that he might have, then I would strongly suggest that he turn that evidence over to the police.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only evidence I have is that made public up to this point.

My final question to the Premier: will the Premier commit to this Assembly that he will call an inquiry to ensure that every single question raised in this matter is addressed?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. I will not commit to the expenditure of at least $250,000, probably a half million dollars, maybe a million, and depending on how deeply the NDs and the Liberals want to get involved, five, six, seven, eight, nine, 10 million dollars. No, I won't commit to that kind of a fishing trip – believe me, a fishing trip – when there are authorities in place, when there are highly competent police agencies in place to investigate any allegations that either the Liberal opposition or the NDs want to make.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Water Quality Testing

MR. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Environment. Many of us are closely following the water quality issue in the community of North Battleford in our neighbouring province and wondering if this is something that could happen here in Alberta. Can the minister tell us what is being done in this province to protect our drinking water from parasites such as cryptosporidium, the same bug believed to have killed three people in North Battleford?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to assure Albertans and my colleague opposite and all the colleagues in this House that we have the most stringent drinking water standards in Canada. In fact, in 1997 we adopted the Canadian drinking water quality standards. We are only one of two provinces to have adopted those standards. The other province is Quebec.

What makes it possible for us to adopt those standards so quickly is something called a multibarrier system. We in Alberta have a multibarrier system of water treatment. That will take out over 99 percent of the parasites in water, and that includes the cryptosporidium and includes giardia and so on. So with that multibarrier system we protect Albertans, and it will prevent any widespread illnesses that you see such as in North Battleford.

2:00

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Why does Alberta Environment not require mandatory testing for cryptosporidium in its water treatment facilities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the first thing we have to realize with crypto and giardia is that it already is in the water systems. It's already in our lakes. It's already in our theoretically pure mountain streams. So, in fact, if you go swimming in a lake this summer in Alberta or anyplace else, you will actually swallow water and you will swallow some crypto probably. So that's the first thing. It's there.

In regards to the specific question about testing, right now the technology for the testing is not that accurate. We need to develop better technology and better testing procedures, and that's not just here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. That's a worldwide issue when it comes to, in particular, crypto.

Now, what's happening, Mr. Speaker, is we are working with EPCOR and the University of Alberta to develop better testing techniques, and that's ongoing right now. The issue is: we know it's there, so we're probably better to concentrate our efforts on getting rid of the parasites in the water. That's where we're going, and once again we're working with EPCOR and the University of Alberta to develop technologies to rid the water of these nasty little bugs. We're working with ultraviolet light right now with EPCOR, and the United States Environmental Protection Agency is also working with ultraviolet light as it relates to getting rid of parasites in the water. We expect to have some results later on in the fall as to how effective ultraviolet light is in getting rid of parasites.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. The recent incidents in both Walkerton, Ontario, and North Battleford have raised a question about implementing national standards for drinking water quality. What is Alberta doing with the other provinces and the federal government in this regard to national standards?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. Well, remember, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, we are one of two that have adopted the national standards, so we are seen as leaders in the country. A week ago today, actually, I was in environmental ministers' meetings with the provinces and the federals, and one of the major issues that was discussed was the water quality and what we are doing with national standards. We have agreed as a group of ministers to go forward to developing and working with the other provinces on establishing national drinking water quality standards.

For instance, as a particular example and as it relates to turbidity, which is the amount of particulate matter in the water, we have the lowest standard in the country. Our standard is 50 percent lower than any other province; that is, we allow 50 percent less particulates in our water than any other province. The federal government has asked one of our experts now to look at our standards and adopt them as a national standard. I would expect that the federal government and other ministers will be using Alberta's water quality standards as models for the rest of the country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Swan Hills Waste Treatment Facility

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Premier, and they're regarding the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. Mr. Premier, can you tell us what the status of the request for proposals is on this plant?

MR. KLEIN: Yes, I can. I can because I was just briefed on this particular matter. The status is that it's a work in progress, but for more details I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond, Mr. Speaker, because relative to the asset it is his responsibility. Relative to the environmental concerns it is the responsibility of the Minister of Environment. It concerns the disposal, so I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, we're working with a number of companies to really determine the parameters that are necessary to go out for calls for proposals. The work is progressing very well, and those calls for proposals will be going out very shortly.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, then will the Minister of Infrastructure table copies of the requests for proposals when they're finished?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, these sorts of things are out in the public when they're called, so we certainly will be working with that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier now make public the documents, as he said he would, concerning the reacquisition of the plant when I asked for this information on April 26?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we'd be happy to table whatever we can without violating any proprietary rights or information under the rules of FOIP without having the hon. member go through the whole exercise of FOIP. If I could suggest that she ask for the information she requires by way of a written question, we'll be glad to respond as appropriately as we possibly can.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Parks Supervision

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many years Cypress Hills provincial park has been the destination of choice for pregraduation celebrations for hundreds of students during the May long weekend. Over time this tradition has grown to the point where over 1,500 young people, many of whom are under the age of 18, gather in the park each year. Recent years have given rise to serious concerns including vandalism, liquor-related offences, weapon seizures, impaired driving as well as hypothermia, missing persons, drug overdoses, and alcohol-related injuries. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development, responsible for provincial parks. Given that many parents who allow their children to attend these activities seem to be under the impression that park staff are available to supervise the participants, can the minister advise of the degree to which such supervision exists?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cypress Hills provincial park is indeed one of the most beautiful parts of our province. I've had the pleasure of being there. I would say that, yes, there are conservation officers who frequent the park, who work there and staff it, and there are other members of our parks system who are there as well, but their primary role is really to ensure the effective management of that provincial resource as well as ensuring the public safety whenever the public is frequenting the park. There is an additional role of education and so on that occurs within those confines, but I think the issue of supervision is not something that the parks officials or the parks staff undertake for any single particular group. They're involved in the overarching protection of safety.

I would suggest to the hon. member that the issue of supervision, particularly where minors are involved, is much more in the hands of the parents. Perhaps if it's a school-sponsored event, the teachers may have a role to play and/or other chaperones.

So, yes, we do have conservation people there, Mr. Speaker, who are concerned with the overarching issue, but specific, direct supervision of one particular group is not within their particular purview.

MR. RENNER: Well, I can guarantee the minister this is not a school-sponsored event.

Why does it appear that there has been limited ability for park officials to enforce provincial laws as well as park policy in recent years?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, the parks officials do a pretty good job, but when you get as many as 1,500 users over a weekend, they can become stretched pretty thin. Nonetheless, the wardens in the area, the conservation officers, do have the ability to issue tickets for a variety of possible breaches. That includes everything from disorderly conduct to issues of alcohol abuse or violation to speeding to potential vandalism and so on.

In this particular year the hon. member would be pleased to know, as I think he probably does, Mr. Speaker, that there is a pilot project under way which calls for a zero tolerance policy with respect to any possible abuses of park privileges in the Cypress provincial park area. That zero tolerance approach has been crafted by our parks people in conjunction with the local police out of Medicine Hat, and I think we'll expect some very positive results in turn.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thank you. Well, given that park officials have indicated to me their intention to enforce zero tolerance this year, will the minister advise how it is they will carry out such a policy when attempts in previous years have been hampered by limited resources in both manpower and equipment?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, one of the unique parts of this particular pilot project this year is that we will be circulating a lot of information in the area through the Medicine Hat and local newspapers enforcing the message of zero tolerance for that particular weekend at that particular park. We'll also be sending out a newsletter to the schools whose students may have occasion to use that park. We'll also be increasing the number of conservation officers and parks management staff who will be on hand to enforce further our zero tolerance policy. We will also be increasing the connections with the local police, and because of the remote distance of the park from a main centre we'll also have provisions for ambulance backup in the case of any unfortunate circumstances. So the safety of the park as well as the users I hope will be well preserved through this pilot project, and we'll evaluate it thereafter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:10 Government Restructuring

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past nine years this government has gone from a cabinet of 26 ministries to 17, then to 19, and now back up to 24. During this time they also amalgamated departments, restructured others, and created new ones. My questions are to the Premier. Has the government completed any reports on how much it will cost Alberta taxpayers for this government's current postelection restructuring scheme?

MR. KLEIN: No, I don't think that we have done any cost assessments, but I would imagine that the costs are pretty much the same as they were before. Basically, Mr. Speaker, we have identified Albertans' priorities. Certainly those priority areas were identified, the areas where we needed more work, and where there needed to be more significant political involvement was in the area of aboriginal affairs, in the area of safe streets and safe communities, in the area of seniors, and in the area of children. Basically, we have reorganized departments to reflect the priorities of Albertans. I suspect that there have been no significant, if any, additional costs associated with the actual administration of government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More work for government MLAs.

Again to the Premier: can the Premier explain why the government combined public works and transportation into the superministry of infrastructure only to break it up just two years later?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, had the Liberals elected more members, there would have been less work for government MLAs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how can Albertans trust this government has a plan when this government has structured, restructured, and re-structured government services in the past nine years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, Albertans can be assured that the government has a plan or plans because it is the policy of this government that all departments, all ministries, prepare three-year business plans which are tabled and are made public. Further to that, it is also the policy of this government that we update Albertans on our progress relative to those plans every three months. I can't think of any other political jurisdiction in this country that has that kind of system in place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Pine Shakes Court Case

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask my question today with due consideration for this Assembly's rules regarding sub judice. Some of my constituents are concerned about the time that the court proceedings are taking with respect to the pine shake case. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Could the minister provide an update on the status of the pine shake litigation case?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that this is a concern to the hon. member as well as to other members in this Assembly who are impacted by their constituents' concerns. I want to assure the House that it is in front of the court as we speak. Representatives from both sides are looking at sample cases, which I understand they're proceeding with in an orderly and responsible fashion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. O'NEILL: No, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

School Fees

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the minister of education agreed that fees should not be charged for core educational materials. My questions are to the Minister of Learning: why, then, are math students required to pay over a hundred dollars for a graphing calculator?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in the mathematics curriculum is the need for a graphing calculator. I talked to my math specialist, and I talked to the high school principals. Quite frankly, there was a choice, and that choice was that the student could write out the graphing equation by hand, in which case he would do probably one problem per 80-minute period, or he could use a graphing calculator, in which case he would be able to do five or six different problems during that period. We felt that the education experience that these students gained was much more if they could do five or six different problems during that period.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to graphing calculators, the prices are coming down. You can now buy a graphing calculator in roughly the $80 to $100 range. For those students who cannot afford the $80 to $100, every school board in the province makes do for students who can't and will ensure that those students can get the graphing calculator either by renting, by sharing, having it checked out, things such as this. There is no one in Alberta who does not get the graphing calculator.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how can the minister claim that schools and school programs are accessible when high school students are now avoiding courses like the math course based on their cost?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I've talked to a lot of students over the last year, I've talked to a lot of teachers, and I've talked to a lot of school boards. There is no one nor should there be anyone who is deciding what mathematics course to take based on the price of a graphing calculator. As I already said, if that cost is prohibitive to the student, the school boards will allow these students to rent one or provide them the money to purchase it. I have not heard of any students who have not gone into the mathematics course of their choice because of the cost of a graphing calculator.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what information does the minister have concerning the impact of fees on student course selection?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I'm not the new minister, that I have been minister for roughly two years, two and a half years, and I am the longest serving minister of education or Minister of Learning in the country. So I'm not really a new minister.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good issue. The whole issue of graphing calculators is something we have looked into to a very significant degree. It is something that we feel is important for the students to learn how to use. It is very important for the students to have more exposure, roughly five or six times the different problems, that a graphing calculator would enable them to do. So the school boards make those calculators available to those kids that can't afford them. I believe that this is the right direction to go.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Premier's analogy of our call for a public inquiry on the recent influence peddling case as a fishing expedition, because this smells like a fish plant in a heat wave. Given that this case involves murky issues of money, lobbying, influence, and government officials, it is vital that the public know everything that went on. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the Minister of Justice and Attorney General assure Albertans that no government officials were influenced by Mr. Jaber, given that Mr. Jaber received $200,000 for the express purpose of having a specific lease approved?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking a very silly question: can I assure him that no one has ever been influenced by someone? There are a lot of people that have been in this government, and I don't know all of them even personally, much less know who's talked to them from time to time. This is, again, a fishing inquisition actually, not an expedition, and it's totally inappropriate to even ask a question of that nature. That falls into the category of the question: have you stopped beating your wife? There is no good answer to that question.*

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Justice assure Albertans that government officials were not lobbied by Mr. Jaber, given that a contract he signed stipulated he would be paid only when the relevant lease reached certain stages of the approval process and the payments in fact corresponded to those approvals?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, the case that the hon. member is asking about is still before the courts. Sentencing happened on Friday, but there is an appeal period of 30 days, and it would be inappropriate for us to raise or answer any questions relative to a specific case. I'd be more than happy to answer those questions, but it would be inappropriate to deal with a case which is still before the courts. There's an appeal period outstanding, and there still could be a question which is raised in the course of that appeal.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the hon. member read the transcripts of the preliminary inquiry, which are now available as of Friday. Obviously certain newspapers in the province have had access to them. He could certainly have access to them, and I think if he read those transcripts, he would have some answers as to what evidence was given under oath in the case.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, can the minister assure the House that in fact he's satisfied that a $200,000 payment was made to secure the approval of a small liquor store in a small strip mall? Does that sound reasonable to the minister?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, the RCMP have been investigating this particular case. They raised a brief, which they turned over to the prosecutors' office. The prosecutors, in analyzing the brief, determined that there was enough information, enough facts which, if proved, would cause a conviction, which is the test that they use in determining whether to proceed with charges. I presume that if there are any other issues coming out of that case, the relevant authorities would continue to investigate.

It's not our place nor is it a good idea to ask for the political head of the department, the Attorney General, to direct the police with respect to continuing prosecutions or as to what they should investigate or what they shouldn't investigate. However, the information which he's asking for, all of that evidence was put forward in the preliminary inquiry, as I understand it, and if there are other issues that come out of the evidence that was put forward, I presume the appropriate authorities would continue to investigate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Special-needs Review Report

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many special-needs students even with additional help find it very difficult to keep up through the year and indeed lose ground during the summer only to be further behind at the start of the new year. During the campaign and in my constituency office I hear from many parents and school boards who bring up the special-needs review report and the need to address the whole issue of special needs. In addition, funding continues to be an issue. My question is to the hon. Minister of Learning. Given that current funding levels for a special-needs student amount to approximately $13,000 per student and the cost of a full-time teacher's aide is approximately $27,000, is it the minister's intention to increase funding to the schools for the special-needs students?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I must correct one of the points that the hon. member said. The funding presently is roughly $16,000, not $13,000. It's $12,000 per student plus the $4,000 basic grant.

Mr. Speaker, the funding for special-needs education in Alberta has risen from roughly $158 million in 1995-96 to $298 million this year, so that has actually doubled during that time frame. The other thing, as I'm sure the hon. member knows, is that in Budget 2001 we have increased by $7 million the category of severe behavioural special-needs children so that indeed within three years they will be up to the same level as the severe special-needs children. That's an increase of roughly 20 percent for these kids, or $16 million.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. The special-needs review has been completed, and it is my understanding that the recommendations have been accepted by the minister. Could the minister please update the House on the status of those recommendations?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker. As I've said in this House a couple of times before, we recently did the special-needs report, in which there were 66 recommendations that were put forward by a group of people who were very interested in the special-needs area. Those people came together and gave me a unanimous report. As of this date, today, there are 18 of those recommendations that have been implemented. We expect that roughly another third will be implemented in September of this year and that over the next two to three years there will be a further third. So I have accepted all 66 recommendations and hope to put them in absolutely as soon as we can because they were excellent recommendations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the same minister. Given that special-needs students take more time to catch up after the summer recess, would the minister consider some form of summer school, funded by the province, to give these kids a leg up when they start the new year?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and I have had this discussion on several different occasions, and I certainly see the validity of what the hon. member is saying. What he's saying is that the special-needs kids fall further behind than the average student in the two months that they have off. I will sit down and continue to work with the hon. member. I believe we can come up with a solution. Yes, it may well be that we do something with those kids over the summer. I think the hon. member has an excellent point, and I will work with him to come up with a solution for this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Underground Tank Remediation

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is the $70 million budgeted for underground tank remediation all being spent in this year, or is it being spent over a number of years?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member across the way raises an important point. The underground petroleum storage tank program, of course, which this government committed $80 million to – we've had a very good response. It's been spread over the next couple of years. We're dealing right now, though, on a priority basis with those that can help mitigate environmental concerns, that have been raised by many members in this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what studies has the department done about the effects of the estimated 5,200 leaking tanks on Alberta's drinking water supplies?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me say that first and foremost the environmental issue pertaining to leakage is the top priority, and that's why we committed $80 million for remediation action.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister: how does the department notify Albertans about the potential health effects if they are living near a leaking tank?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member again raises an important point. We're working in collaboration with the local municipalities and those affected owners. We're working with them right now. I understand that we're dealing with them on a priority basis and that the remediation is taking place as we speak.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend the Minister of Learning hosted the excellence in teaching awards, honouring some of Alberta's outstanding teachers. In speaking with the nominees and past recipients of these awards, I understand the general consensus to be that these teachers are extremely happy to have their talents and dedication recognized, even though some fear repercussions from the union and other members. It is obvious that they value the program. Unfortunately, while clearly Alberta's communities enjoy this opportunity to salute their teachers in schools, I am also hearing concern expressed about the future of the excellence in teaching awards program. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Can the minister confirm that the Alberta Teachers' Association is considering withdrawing from this valuable community event?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, in September of last year I received a letter from the president of the ATA stating that they were in fact considering pulling out of the excellence in teaching awards. They were involved in the awards on Saturday night, and I must echo the hon. member's issue that it was an excellent evening. There were 22 teachers that were given awards, and they were extremely happy. Overall it was a fabulous evening.

MR. HLADY: Mr. Speaker, my second question is also to the Minister of Learning. Can the minister explain why the Alberta Teachers' Association, which exists to represent Alberta's teachers, has said that it intends to turn its back on a program that honours the very people it represents? What reason has the ATA given to you?

DR. OBERG: In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, the ATA has given me two different types of reasons. The first one obviously is an operational issue. Prior to these particular excellence in teaching awards we were requiring that a teacher would have to take about five days off in order to sit on the judging committee. We have changed that slightly so that it can only be two days this time, but there are some operational issues. There are some philosophical issues that the ATA has with giving one particular teacher an award when they feel that all teachers are excellent teachers.

MR. HLADY: My final question to the same minister. If the ATA's withdrawal goes ahead as planned, what will the government do to ensure that all Albertans have opportunity as a collective community to publicly salute the good work that takes place in our classrooms and schools and combat the extremely negative attitude towards excellence in teaching pervading the Alberta Teachers' Association?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would not jump to the issue and say that the Alberta Teachers' Association is negative against excellent teachers. I think the Alberta Teachers' Association wants to put forward excellence in teaching as much as the next person.

Mr. Speaker, we are presently working with the ATA to find perhaps a middle ground that we can look at with these awards. It's my hope that even if the ATA does withdraw, we continue to have these awards, because they are an extremely positive evening for the general public as well as the teachers themselves. We heard different ways that teachers were putting across their views to the classroom, different ways that they were allowing the students to learn, and it was truly gratifying listening to some of these. Indeed, for example, two of the teachers who received excellence in teaching awards were actually in colony schools. These teachers had responsibilities for grades 1 to 9 and indeed were the principal as well as the teacher as well as the administrator within those schools. Some of the work that they have done is truly exemplary, and I think we need to continue it.

Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the hon. member that it would be a much better award ceremony, that it would be a much more worthwhile award if the ATA was part of it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Teachers' Salaries

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, my questions today are to the Minister of Learning. As a principal a lot of teachers are reminding me that they took a voluntary 5 percent salary rollback when they were asked to help this government eliminate the deficit. They've also reminded me that other publicly funded groups had the 5 percent returned to them coupled with negotiated salary increases. To the minister: would you please tell me how to respond to these teachers who say that the 5 percent was not returned and, further, who say that a 6 percent increase is not enough?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, what I will say is that I will reiterate the answer I've given a couple of times in this Legislature already, and that is that since 1992-93 teachers have gained on average a 17 percent increase. When you take away the 5 percent decrease that they had in '94-95, it shows a net 12 percent increase, and that indeed is what teachers have enjoyed over the past six or seven years.

Mr. Speaker, I will say the same answer that I've given at least three or four times in this Legislature about the 6 percent increase. During the election campaign you heard, I heard, everyone in this Assembly heard issues about class size. We heard issues that involved the classroom. We heard issues about technology. The attempt was to be able to give the teachers a raise of 6 percent, which would make them the highest paid in Canada, as well as having a pot of money, in this case $115 million, set aside that school boards could spend on what they deemed to be the most important issues in their jurisdiction, whether it be class size, whether it be teachers' salaries, whether it be teacher instruction, whether it be technology. These are the abilities that school boards now have it in order to do. The 6 percent was to ensure that the teachers actually did get a raise and became the highest paid in Canada.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister. For those more senior teachers the amount of past increases really barely keeps pace with inflation. Why aren't you giving these teachers a bigger boost?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't want to get involved in the bargaining on the grid. As the hon. member knows, there is an 11-stage grid which is negotiated with the local school board. I don't feel that I have the right to go in there and say that this money must be given to starting teachers or it must be given to older teachers. I just don't feel that that's right.

With regards to inflation, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, as the hon. member may or may not know, that last year the average weekly wage increased 1.13 percent, which is the same increase that all the Members of the Legislative Assembly got, which was below the rate of inflation at that time. This year it's roughly 3.3 percent. So I feel it is more accurate to actually talk about the amount of increase. How many people do you talk to say, "Well, I only got 1 percent because 3 percent was related to the cost of living increase"? For that reason it is much easier to talk about the actual increase that the teachers received.

MR. MASKELL: Finally, Mr. Speaker, what steps will the minister take if the ATA membership decides to strike across the province?

THE SPEAKER: That's pretty speculative, but go on.

DR. OBERG: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will say that that question is purely hypothetical, and I would indulge the hon. Speaker on that one. I would encourage the teachers and the Teachers' Association that it would be extremely negative to the students of Alberta for the teachers to go on strike. This education system, this learning system, is about students. It's about students learning. If the teachers aren't in the classroom, students aren't going to learn.

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the time for question period has now left us today, but I think it's important to have several comments made with respect to the sub judice rule as a result of questions that arose today. The chair indicated last week that the sub judice rule is set out in Standing Order 23(g) of the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly. Under that standing order questions cannot be asked with respect to a criminal matter "from the time charges [are] laid until passing of sentence" or from "the filing of a notice of appeal until the date of a decision by an appellate court." It is the chair's understanding that sentence has been passed in the case in question, but the chair does not know if a notice of appeal has been filed.

The Minister of Justice and Attorney General may advise the Assembly if the matter has in fact been appealed. If there is no appeal, then the sub judice rule would not apply, so questions and answers would not be ruled out of order on that basis. If the minister is considering appealing the case, then he may rise and indicate to the House that in his view it is inappropriate to comment until the appeal period has in fact expired. He may be in a position to honestly say that he chooses not to answer these questions, and that would meet with the rules of the Assembly. From this perspective the minister, in fact, is in a better position than any member of the House to determine the application of sub judice with respect to that.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: The chair would also like to indicate to all hon. members that the chair has absolutely no idea beforehand as to the content of a member's question but would, however, caution members about making statements about members of the public. I would refer members to page 524 of the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice, under the heading Reference by Name to Members of the Public, where it states in part:

The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander but from any slur directly or indirectly implied, and has stressed that Members should avoid as much as possible mentioning by name [persons] from outside the House who are unable to reply and defend themselves against innuendo.

The chair would also like to remind members that any and all attacks on judges or the courts are unparliamentary.

Finally, the chair refers to page 427 of the House of Commons book and notes that it is improper to “address a Minister’s former portfolio or any other presumed functions, such as party or regional political responsibilities.”

Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I’ll call upon the first of seven members.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

2:40

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise today to introduce Mr. Wally Mulder, who is the chief executive officer and executive director of Rehoboth Christian Ministries, which is an organization that has a 25-year history in this province of helping people living with mental disabilities. I believe Mr. Mulder is seated in the members’ gallery. I’d ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Well, then, hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, why don’t we call on you first.

Rehoboth Christian Ministries

MR. MARZ: Thanks very much. I was hoping that you would say that, Mr. Speaker.

This past Saturday marked the fifth anniversary of Rehoboth Christian Ministries in the Three Hills community and the 25th anniversary of Rehoboth Ministries in Alberta. Rehoboth Ministries operates in communities throughout Alberta by providing work placement and experience to mentally challenged individuals through relationships with placements in the community. Some of the current projects in the Three Hills community include Care-a-Lot Day Care, the Three Hills petting zoo, the recycling centre, and recycling of computer components. Rehoboth provides opportunities for their clients to reach their greatest potential and live as independently as possible within the community.

I would like to congratulate Rehoboth on their 25 years of success throughout this province. The benefits provided to the various communities are very much appreciated, and I wish them continued success in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Highway Cleanup Program

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much. I rise today to bring attention to and recognize a wonderful and enterprising youth initiative that took place this last weekend in Alberta. About 11,000 members of over 400 different 4-H clubs, junior forest wardens, Scouts Canada, and other volunteer groups in the province took part in the 25th annual 4-H highway cleanup. Figures aren’t in for this year. However, last year these community service groups cleaned the ditches and adjacent land along over 6,000 kilometres of highway in this province. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but they filled 47,000 bags of garbage.

I would like to acknowledge these young Albertans’ efforts under Saturday’s extreme weather conditions as they endeavoured to clean and beautify our great province. Great job.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

VE Day

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May 8, 2001, marks the 56th anniversary of Victory in Europe Day, or VE Day. Anniversaries remind us of the passage of time and provide those of us not familiar with the event an opportunity to learn about those who participated and reflect on the sacrifices they made. Just imagining a world 56 years after a war that the Allied forces did not win is enough to elicit feelings of gratitude and joy even from those not familiar with the experience of war. We are forever indebted to the men and women who made the ultimate sacrifice to secure our present and our future.

The anniversary of VE Day also provides an opportunity for us to recognize the veterans who live amongst us today. All Albertans, indeed all Canadians who care about freedom owe a great debt to the men and women who gave their lives and/or served their country in our defence. Tomorrow is a day to remember and honour these individuals and ensure that their spirit lives on. All of us here today continue to benefit from the heroic and selfless actions of those who participated in World War II. Lest we forget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Salvation Army

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased today to mark the good work performed by the Salvation Army and to draw the Assembly’s attention to this group’s current Red Shield Appeal fund-raising campaign. The Salvation Army is well known for its dedicated commitment to ensuring that the basic food and shelter requirements of people in need are met. Among other things, the Salvation Army organizes food and clothing drives, operates homeless shelters, and generally fills in where other social services all too often leave off.

The Salvation Army helps Albertans every day. The community is getting involved in this year’s Red Shield Appeal. Some restaurants have agreed to donate a percentage of the cost of each meal they serve to the Red Shield Appeal campaign. These restaurants deserve our recognition, and the patrons who choose to dine at these restaurants should be recognized as well. We can choose to go out to eat anywhere this month; Red Shield Appeal makes that choice more meaningful.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Garnet Page

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself and the MLA for Calgary-Foothills I ask all members of this Legislature to join with me in recognizing Mr. Garnet Page, QC, who passed away last week.

Mr. Page had an incredibly productive life, with much of it in service to others. His career highlights included being the founder and general manager of the Chemical Institute of Canada, general secretary of the Engineering Institute of Canada, founding president of the Coal Association of Canada, and the president of his own consulting firm.

His community service highlights were even more impressive. Mr. Page chaired several national advisory councils for the federal government, worked for UNESCO and the OECD, was a member of the council of trustees of the Institute for Research on Public Policy, and was an honorary life member of the International Committee for Coal Research. As part of his work with UNESCO Mr. Page was instrumental in forming a group that helped the more than 13 million orphans left in Europe after the Second World War. He was also an officer of the Order of Canada. As a department spokesman said: "We know him as the department's coal adviser, a small, gregarious gentleman with old-school habits who walks with a cane and always seems to be having a good time. Talk to him. You will discover someone who has a wealth of experience as a soldier, civil servant, public administrator, community volunteer, and foreign aid worker."

In recognition of Mr. Page's long and distinguished association with the Alberta government I'd ask this House to recognize him for his contribution to the province, the country, and the international community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

National Forest Week

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. National Forest Week has been celebrated annually in Canada since 1926, when it was known as Forest Fire Prevention Week. Its main purpose is to help increase public awareness of the importance of Canada's forests and the need to carefully manage them for present and future needs.

Today I would like to recognize the impressive work done by the Alberta Environmental Network on promoting community-level knowledge about industrial development and the health of our forests. The AEN is a nonprofit, nonpartisan, apolitical, grassroots, umbrella organization, dedicated to helping Albertans achieve and maintain a healthy environment. Through action alert bulletins they let interested parties know about emerging environmental issues that need public attention. Barry Breau is the managing director of the AEN, and I would like to recognize the excellent work done by his group on keeping Albertans informed about the state of our forests.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to provide recognition in consideration that last week was Education Week in Alberta and several constituents of Edmonton-Calder were recognized at Saturday's excellence in teaching awards celebration held in Calgary.

Today I would like to congratulate three of Edmonton-Calder's finest teachers. Leona Gordey of Calder school was nominated by her colleagues for implementation of a behaviour assistance program for those students with behavioural issues. Sunita Sahasrabudde of McArthur elementary school was nominated for her development of learning strategies tailored to meet the individual needs of every student in her classroom, and, finally, Linda Steinke of Coralwood Adventist Academy was nominated for her implementation of the SQUIRT program, a silent, quiet, uninterrupted, reading time for individual students. I'm proud to have these excellent teachers enhancing the lives and the education of the children in the Calder constituency.

Speaker's Ruling Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Recognitions is one of those very positive aspects of our daily Routine, and the rule says: "7(6) . . . up to seven members. . . may make a one-minute statement of congratulations or recognition."

The chair has always steadfastly refused to intervene or interfere but would hope that one day if an hon. member does violate the one-minute rule on a Monday or a Wednesday or the two-minute rule on a Tuesday or Thursday, the opportunity will be there for an hon. member to rise on a point of order and then interfere with the flow. So the best way of avoiding all of this is staying within 60 seconds on Monday and Wednesday and 120 seconds on Tuesday and Thursday.

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak in support of Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of my first initiatives since being given the honour of serving Albertans as Solicitor General. The proposed legislation we're discussing here today is a good example of how we're going to approach challenges in the future. This bill, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, will streamline award processes and focus resources on innocent victims of crime in Alberta. Today I will outline for the members of this Assembly how the proposed amendments will improve the way we assist victims.

The Victims of Crime Act was passed in the Legislature in 1996 and proclaimed in 1997. One aspect of that legislation was the establishment of the victims of crime fund. This fund was implemented to support and assist victims of crime. Direct assistance for victims is provided through the financial benefits program. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say this program has helped victims. The financial benefits program is a significant improvement over the board it replaced, the Crimes Compensation Board, in providing direct help to victims. Last year the program assisted 967 victims by granting awards worth more than $6.7 million, triple the number of people assisted and about four times the total awards by the former program.

The amendments we are proposing today change the way this program operates. They streamline the process by extending the time limit for applicants from one to two years. The amendments also give the program the authority to dismiss applicants who are injured as a result of their own behaviour. In addition, the amendment stipulates that a victim must co-operate with police during the investigation in order to qualify for financial awards. As I outline for this Assembly today, these changes will enhance the program and improve services to victims of violent crime in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the program grew out of recognition of the need to assist victims of violent crimes. Society can and should help those who have suffered simply because they happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. There are few things more traumatic than being a victim of a crime, whether it's a physical injury or losing a loved one as a result of a violent crime. We can't forget about the families of victims. If a victim dies as a result of his or her injuries, family members can apply and receive a benefit from the program. Benefits paid to victims or their survivors carry no strings or conditions. They are free to determine their own course of treatment for injuries or may use the funds for any priority in their lives.

The application process is simple. Victims or family members fill out a three-page form and submit it to the program. The program director obtains all necessary police and medical information on behalf of the victim to make a decision on the application. The victim is not put through the additional stress of having to prove the application. If the director determines the application is eligible, a financial award is granted based on the severity of the injury. Put simply, the financial benefit program lends a hand to those in need.

A tremendous challenge to the program is assigning a value to the injuries resulting from a violent crime. How can we assign a dollar figure to a broken arm, a disfigured face, severe burns, loss of a loved one? You can't, and it isn't the aim of the program. The financial benefit program is not intended to compensate victims for their injuries or loss. The program is simply intended to give victims a financial leg up. It's hoped that rewards will help the victims deal with some of the side effects of being victimized. The good news for taxpayers is that the funding for this program is fully funded from surcharges collected on federal and provincial fines.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to explain to the members exactly how the bill will enhance the financial benefits program. One of the ways the bill does this is by extending the time limit for applicants from one to two years. This change is one that will certainly be of benefit to victims. It's often the case that victims are still involved with the criminal justice process after one year. Applying for a financial benefit from the program is probably not on the top of the mind for people going through that emotional and stressful process. Extending the time limit gives people the time they need to recover from the initial trauma and begin to put their personal affairs in order.

The proposed amendments also seek to address a concern that has arisen over the last several years. We all know that a great deal of crime in our society doesn't always involve a purely innocent person and an unprovoked perpetrator. A criminal lifestyle is a dangerous one. It is often the case that criminals are victimized as a direct result of their own bad judgment.

Mr. Speaker, the victims of crime fund was not intended to grant awards to individuals injured as a result of a butchered or botched drug deal, nor was it intended to assist those who continue to pursue violent confrontations despite the threat of serious injuries. The financial benefits program is not a source of income for chronic offenders. Program officials within the department have observed that instances such as this, although rare, have indeed taken place. We're amending the act to allow the program to dismiss applicants who are injured as a result of their own behaviour.

An essential component of policing our communities is a co-operation of victims with police. As a result, we are also amending the act to require that applicants seeking a financial award for their injury must co-operate with police during the investigation. This change is required for a couple of reasons. First, if a victim is truly innocent of wrongdoing and suffered injuries as a result of a crime, he or she should have no problem co-operating with the police. Second, making co-operation mandatory will help further reduce incidents where victims are injured as a result of their own behaviour or lifestyles yet still seek compensation for their injury.

It is important to note, however, that there are special cases when a victim fears for his or her life and therefore is reluctant to co-operate with police. We are mindful with this act that victims of domestic abuse may not be willing to co-operate with police for fear of disrupting and harming the lives of their family. There are also situations that arise when victims fear for their safety and feel they can't approach the police.

In administering this program, we must not forget the special circumstances a victim must face, and we must not refuse them assistance without knowing the truth. These proposed amendments still provide room for those tough decisions. All special circumstances will still be considered, and an enhanced review process will remain in place.

Mr. Speaker, it's a great pleasure to bring forward these amendments and debate them in the House. The financial benefits program has proven that it helps Albertans who need it most. The amendments proposed in this bill will help streamline the process and ensure those truly in need receive assistance. By receiving applicants' co-operation with police, it will help weed out frivolous applications and help police do their jobs. Lengthening the amount of time allowed for a victim to apply for an award from one to two years will give victims the time they need to heal and work through the criminal justice process. Considering the victims' own behaviour as a casual link to the crime will help ensure criminals don't profit from their reckless and thoughtless lifestyles.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak on behalf of this bill. Through you I urge all members of the Assembly to support this initiative as it will go a long way towards helping victims of crime in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Before calling on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, could I have the co-operation of the House to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for your indulgence in allowing us this introduction. I have the honour today of having a group of some 55 students visiting from St. Anthony's school in Drumheller. They're here to tour the Legislature. They're in here to hear some of the activities of the House, and I'm sure they were interested to listen to the Solicitor General make her comments about the bill. They are accompanied by their teachers Ms Lisa Ferguson, Paul Byrne, who is the principal, Celeste Timmons, and Laura Redl. They have parent helpers with them as well. I want to ask them to rise and all members to welcome them to our Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to be able to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three guests who are in the members' gallery, one of them being a colleague of mine when we were on the University of Calgary senate together: Lois Burke-Gaffney, president of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. With her are John Krol, vice-president; and Stefan Michniewski, executive director. Thank you for rising, and we'll all greet you as we should.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak in second reading to Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001, put forward by the Solicitor General.

This is a good-news bill for the most part, and certainly I'm willing to support it and will be urging my colleagues in the Official Opposition to support it as well.

There are just a couple of issues that are raised with the amendments that have been brought forward that I'd like to go over. The proposing member did talk somewhat of what the changes were going to be, but I'll go over them in a bit more detail, if that's possible.

Right now the applications for benefits are assessed by the director's office, information is collected, and then the decision is made definitely on the merits of the case. Under the Victims of Crime Act the director advises all applicants of their option for review by the Criminal Injuries Appeal Board if they're unsatisfied with a decision.

The amendments that are being proposed here are saying that the board must consider all requests for review, but it removes the requirement that all of them have, in fact, a hearing. If we can look at the process that is set up to ensure that there is a reasonable amount of consideration given to any request, then it's probably quite reasonable that the board is not required to hold a hearing on each and every one of them. You find in these sorts of things that although every case is different, they do start to cluster into certain categories, and I'm sure the panel members have seen similar situations many times before. There does come to be an understanding and an expertise from the members of the panel as to what the guidelines are and how well any given application is falling into that. This amendment would in fact allow the board to dismiss a frivolous request at the outset, if I'm reading all of this correctly, and that's probably appropriate as well.

We're always making sure there's no possibility that someone's bringing forward a case that's a little unusual and that as a result of that it gets punted out of the lineup because it doesn't look like all the rest of them that they usually have. As long as we're satisfied that there is a good process to review the application, that in fact panel members do have a look at it, which they do here because they are required to consider all requests – but they don't necessarily have to go through the full hearing for all of them. As such I don't have a problem with that.

These amendments are also talking about disqualifying applicants who do not co-operate with police during the course of the investigation or if for some reason the victim's conduct is seen as contributing to their own injury. Again, as long as we are confident that all sides have been heard and that it just isn't an unusual case that isn't getting the hearing it needs, I don't have a problem with this. I mean, certainly there's a lot of misunderstanding out there about what acts like this one are to offer to citizens.

It's quite clear; in one of the places I read exactly what the criteria were. They have to be in Alberta. The accident has to have happened in Alberta. It can't have to do with a property crime or a motor vehicle accident. I mean, all of that's pretty clear, and I think for anybody that's not understanding those fairly simple and straightforward requirements, then, yes, it probably shouldn't be taken under investigation. I suspect that the Solicitor General is correct when she surmises that an applicant who doesn't co-operate with police raises great suspicions about what their participation in the actual crime might have been.

Of course, always one has to understand those people in our communities who are subject to battery of a kind that may take away their ability to appear as many others do. I'm speaking specifically of violence against women and their children. That can certainly cause someone to act in a manner that isn't what you expect, but we know that now, and we've worked very hard to understand how cases like that might be presenting themselves. Where someone can make it clear that they are choosing an unusual route because they need to protect their family, they need to protect themselves and their children, I'm hoping that this province has grown up enough that we can understand that and make the exceptions for them. Certainly we have enough legislation around that here in Alberta that I would hope that this would not be a problem.

Now, one of the things that I was pleased to see was the increase in the amount of time that's allowed, from one year to two years. That's really bringing it into line with a number of other statutes that allow people up to two years to bring forward their case as such, and that's certainly the case with what Alberta has already done around sexual assault victims, bringing forward their cases after the fact. Although at the time we were debating that, my point was that in the community it's more accepted that the clock starts ticking once the victim has come to a realization of what has happened to them. Certainly with victims of sexual assault or childhood sexual assault, that may not be within a time line that's at all close to the actual incident. But what was being proposed to me from the community was that once the applicant realized what had happened, the clock started ticking for the two years from that point on. In fact, that was not what was allowed in the particular case we were debating, but I am glad to see that we've got a two-year window here.

I understand that this has been viewed by some as a lengthy process. As a result of that, some people felt they had missed the deadline as such or lost their opportunity because the whole process wasn't moving along fast enough and they went past that one year. So having it at two years I think is certainly reasonable, given how long cases are taking to investigate and to get before the courts and to proceed through the courts. Maybe if we have concerns on that matter, we should be directing those towards the Justice minister and Attorney General.

The other issue that's being proposed here – there are two parts to it – is that the panel be expanded by an additional three members, I believe, once again all appointed by the government. I think we've had a number of things come up in the last few weeks that underline for us the importance of the people from the community that volunteer on panels and boards and reviews and agencies, but it also does underline the need for very clear conflict of interest regulations, which I will continue to press for. I think it's not onerous to do this, and it's very advantageous for everyone to know where they stand and what the expectations are and also what the prohibitions are.

So we're adding three people to the review committee, I guess is what it's called, again government appointed. I urge the Solicitor General to look at the recommendations brought forward by the Auditor General when he was referring to a personnel administration office directive, I think brought forward by the Premier, making sure that people who were appointed to various agencies, boards, and commissions in fact had been vetted through the PAO to make sure that they were qualified to be sitting on that particular board. In my questioning of the Auditor General, the department that he pointed out as being the most efficient at this point was Community Development. So that is an area that I would like the Solicitor General to look to and to consider adopting that personnel directive to make sure that those who are being appointed to this review committee in fact have a background and some experience in this particular area.

The next issue. Perhaps the minister can reply or have someone else reply to this. There's a section in here that's really causing me some trouble, and that is the one about being able to request or receive personal information from a number of sources and give that personal information out to a number of sources. I would hope that increasingly we'd come to understand in this province how easy it is to abuse that, how easy it is that if one's personal information gets onto one system, it can get onto other systems. People have not grasped the importance of not relaying that information through other means or allowing others, innocently or not, access to that information so that they can walk away with it or transfer it electronically another way.

I'd like to hear more on why this choice was made about being able to request the information from so many different sources. We have here "a law enforcement agency" – so that's all kinds of information from police files; one presumes court files maybe – and "a person who provided diagnostic, treatment or care or other similar medical services to the victim." I mean, is this including like a home care nurse? How wide is the net being cast here? This always causes me great concern, because we have not proven in the past to be the model that we should be when we are dealing with people's personal information. Especially once you start attaching details like names, home phone numbers, social security numbers, and even hospital record numbers to people, the potential for abuse of that individual is increased exponentially, and I think this is a real concern we always have to be on guard about. So I am going to push the Solicitor General on this one because I think it's a really important one.

The third area that's mentioned under this is a public body as defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to determine or verify whether a person is eligible for financial benefits under this Act or to determine the amounts of those financial benefits.

So always I can see where the minister is coming from in trying to delve into the information and get the background information, but I'm questioning about whether she's looked at what the potential repercussions are as far as a person's privacy is involved. Is there any way that something is being flagged, that, you know, a red flag is going up if an inquiry is made to any of these agencies or medical treatment personnel or law enforcement agencies that the government is asking for information on them? What's that telling someone? Where can they take it and what can they do with it and what kind of a negative repercussion could that have on the individual? We are just not good at this yet, especially with how quickly information can be transferred on electronic databases now. It's truly chilling.

Then it goes on that the information can be disclosed, including personal information, to any person for the purpose of determining whether a person is eligible for financial benefits . . . or determining the amounts of those financial benefits.

Any person? Boy, that's pretty wide open. I understand that it's to be read in the context of everything else, but frankly those of us that get to hear this debate in the Assembly are not the people that end up administering it, and if it is taken out of context, we're in trouble here.

The second category is to a parent, spouse, child or other family member of an applicant or victim or to a recognized victim services agency for . . .
 (i) confirming the existence or status of an application . . . or
 (ii) disclosing the amount of any award.

So I think there are some real concerns there about that that I would like to see the Solicitor General look to and perhaps be able to come back to the Assembly and comment on.

Now, the other part that seems to be a major rationale for bringing the bill forward is the ability to appeal. One may not necessarily have an appeal heard if it's designated that it's in some way frivolous or vexatious.

Am I willing to trust that everything is being looked at fairly and everything is being taken into consideration here? Well, you know, I'm a reasonable person. I'm pretty much always willing to be open to that, but I want to know what safeguards are in place. What are the regulations that are supporting this? Remember that legislation is the what and the regulations are the how. That's the real detail, the real nitty-gritty, particularly with this government, that likes to do sort of shell legislation that refers everything to the minister and leaves everything up to regulation. At least this bill is detailing some of it up front, but I am looking for what the minister expects as the regulations that are the detail that holds this up and how we can be reassured that this is, in fact, a fair process.

I understand the need to be able to dismiss frivolous cases. I'm sure that some of us in our constituency offices have people come back over and over and over again, not because there's anything further that we can do for them but because they don't like the answer, and there we are in the position of explaining yet again that that is the program, that's as far as it goes. So I understand the need for this, but I want reassurance that every precaution is being taken to be fair and open to people given the variety of reasons for which people might be appearing before the panel.

I heard the minister talk about shortening the complexity of it so financial awards would be available to people sooner. I'll tell you that I once dealt with a constituent who was dealing with the WCB in British Columbia, and I heard about a program they offer that I was quite intrigued by where family members could apply for funding to travel to a funeral or a memorial service of a victim of crime. I investigated, and we didn't have anything like that in Alberta. At the time I thought: you know, that's probably a really useful thing to be offering for people. Often you don't have that kind of money, and travel can rack you up $1,000 or more just to get to the provinces on either side of us and stay for a couple of nights. I don't know if it's possible to shorten this waiting list enough so that it's useful for that kind of application, but I certainly was impressed by that service and what it really was offering to a victim of a crime there.

So those are the points that I wanted to raise. I'm certainly willing to support it. I have expressed the concerns that I have with it, particularly around the patronage appointments and the collection of personal information and the distribution of personal information. I'm very glad to see the extension of the time limit for application to two years. I've expressed my concerns around the fairness for the ability either to not hold the hearing in the first place or to not allow an appeal hearing.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak at second reading of this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to second reading of Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001. I support the general principles contained in this bill during second reading. This proposed legislation helps streamline the financial benefits program, ensuring that financial awards get to real victims of violent crime in Alberta. Across the province and, indeed, across the nation people are saying loud and clear that they feel victims should be better represented within our justice system.

As I traveled through my constituency during the recent election some justice issues were definitely raised. There's a perception that often violent crime is a big city problem. This is just not so. Violent crime is a problem in all communities across the province regardless of size, big and small. A common theme that arose at the doorsteps in my constituency is that the needs and rights of victims do not receive the appropriate amount of emphasis in our justice system.

Of course, in our society issues are media driven. Stories of tragedy and bloodshed lead the newscasts and help create a skewed perception of our justice system. How many times have we questioned some of the very gruesome lead photos: front-page photos of murders, accidents, bodily abuse, et cetera, most graphic, most disturbing, and very, very difficult for family members involved? Seldom do we hear the triumphant stories of successful rehabilitation and the tremendous amount of hard work required by government and nongovernment organizations to make those positive outcomes a reality. Seldom do Albertans hear of the very progressive programs currently being operated that are aimed at helping victims and preventing crime.

The most common perception is that victims are left on their own to deal with the initial trauma of violent crime. Mr. Speaker, this is not the reality in this province. The financial benefits program is a perfect example of our society lending a helping hand to victims in need. As the hon. Solicitor General indicated earlier, the financial benefits program awarded financial assistance to 967 victims of crime last year. This is a very impressive fact, one that I know many Albertans are not aware of.

I support the proposed amendments because I believe they will help innocent victims get the assistance they need, but there are also other significant benefits. The proposed amendments provide a requirement that victims applying for an award from the fund must co-operate with police during the investigation of the crime. To me the benefit here is obvious. These changes encourage victims to go beyond their distrust of law enforcement and work with police towards the successful resolution of the matter.

Mr. Speaker, I think the amendments provide clear authority to target possible abusers of the program. While the program currently reduces awards in cases where applicants are involved in criminal activity, the amendments will allow for full denial of benefits. Requiring applicants to co-operate with police helps the program identify those applicants involved with criminal activity.

The amendments will also cut down on applicants who derive their injuries from ongoing acts of retaliation. This money is intended to help innocent victims. It isn't fair, Mr. Speaker, that people whose actions contribute to their own injuries could receive the same benefit from the program. I think these amendments address that potential problem.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to have had the opportunity to rise and speak in favour of these amendments. As I mentioned earlier, the financial benefits program is an excellent way to offer support to victims of crime in this province. Amending the Victims of Crime Act will help get financial support to the people who need it most. In doing so, these changes will help the police enforce our laws.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I urge all members of this Assembly to support the amendments as proposed by the hon. Solicitor General.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few comments on Bill 9, some questions that I would like to have answered prior to this coming back in committee. One is the additional patronage appointments. We're always concerned about patronage appointments and concerned about how people get chosen and who qualifies, and if we could get some information on that, I'd appreciate it.

I also see that it says that one of the members "must be a physician" and then states later on that the chair can "designate any 3 members . . . to sit as a panel." If that's the case, Mr. Speaker, then my question is: why wouldn't the requirement be two physicians on the board? I think that's a good idea, that a physician be involved in the decision-making, and seeing as these members can sit in different areas of the province – there only has to be three on a particular committee – I'm wondering why only one of them has to be a physician. I think that kind of joint decision-making is a good idea, and it's a great step forward here.

Also a little concerned that if one of the members does not attend a day or a part of a day, then the two remaining members have the power to finish the duties of the panel with respect to the hearing. It seems to me that it would be very important to have three people there at all times, so I'm wondering if the minister can talk about that a little bit.

Also, I have some concerns, as my colleague from Edmonton-Centre did, in terms of the disclosure of the information to the people that are outlined in sections (4)(a) and (b)(i) and (ii). I'm hoping it isn't quite as broad a scope as what it looks like, and if we could get some explanation on that when we get to committee, I would also appreciate that, Mr. Speaker.

Those are my comments with regard to this bill, and I look forward the question being called.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to the Bill 9, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2001. I'd like to begin by commending the Solicitor General for bringing this legislation forward. As the hon. Solicitor General and the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler have said in the House this afternoon, these amendments are positive changes to a very significant program for victims in Alberta.

The changes we're discussing are to the financial benefits program, which was established by the Victims of Crime Act of 1996. I believe this program, Mr. Speaker, speaks to the better side of human nature. The program recognizes the pain and trauma suffered by victims of violent crime and offers them support in their time of need. I feel it is our responsibility to help those who need it most, and that's why I support the financial benefits program and the amendments today.

One change that I feel is particularly worthy of our consideration is the extension of the length of time allowed for victims to apply for an award. Under the proposed amendments victims are given up to two years to apply. I'm also very supportive of the changes that grant additional discretion to the criminal injuries review board, allowing them to dismiss frivolous requests for review. Today I'd like to address these two particular amendments and express my support for the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think every member of the Assembly knows or has known a victim of crime. We all know the horrific ordeals victims suffer through. It's only fair to give people the time they need for wounds to heal or to mourn the loss of loved ones before having to deal with the particulars of applying for an award through the financial benefits program. This extension gives victims the opportunity to go through the criminal justice process. This process, however, can take time. I think this is a reasonable change, a change that is intended to address the needs of victims.

As I mentioned earlier, I also support the move to grant additional discretion to the review board to dismiss frivolous requests for review. For those not familiar with the program, the financial benefits program has a built-in review process. If an applicant disagrees with the amount of the reward, he or she can submit the application to a review board that has the mandate to overturn the initial decision. Likewise, Mr. Speaker, the review board can overturn a decision by the program to deny a reward to a particular applicant.

The review board is an important part of the financial benefits program. The problem that program officials have encountered is that there are frivolous requests for review. Under the current legislation the review board must automatically grant a review.

It's unfortunate, but there are situations where applicants may not be sincere in their request for a financial reward. In addition, there are times when the application is completely outside the jurisdiction of legislation. For example, there have been applicants who applied for an award for an injury that happened outside this province or where no injury can be documented. The amendments give the review board the authority to dismiss these requests at the outset and move on to applications that really need further consideration.

One further amendment ensures that authority for the program and decisions made by the board rest ultimately with the Solicitor General. Accountability rests here where it should, with the elected government of Alberta.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I think the amendments in this bill make this a better program. I urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill, and I'd like to thank the hon. Solicitor General for bringing it forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 10 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to move second reading of Bill 10 and provide some comments with respect to Bill 10, being the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001. These amendments will fine-tune the Traffic Safety Act to allow for more effective implementation of programs under this unique and important piece of legislation. With the passing of the Traffic Safety Act in 1999, Alberta became the first province to combine four acts into one which addresses all matters concerning drivers, vehicles, commercial carriers, and road safety.

The Traffic Safety Act incorporates recommendations from a broad base of stakeholders to make driving safer, to keep impaired and careless drivers off the roads, and to provide more effective management of drivers and commercial truck and bus traffic. Since the Traffic Safety Act was originally passed, we have continued working with these stakeholders and other jurisdictions across Canada to ensure that our legislation meets the needs and expectations of Albertans. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, we are adding tougher provisions against people who continue to drive while their operator's licence is suspended and also those who drink and drive.

The four key areas we are amending are vehicle seizures, administrative licence suspensions, graduated driver licensing, and carrier profiles. The first amendment I'd like to speak to pertains to vehicle seizures. Drivers charged with driving while suspended for the second time in a three-year period will have the vehicle they are driving seized for 60 days if the registered owner of the vehicle is the same as in the first offence. This change takes the suspended driver off the road immediately rather than waiting for him or her to be convicted through the courts, which could take as long as two years. The amendment addresses a chronic problem of some drivers continuing to drive after they have been suspended. The vehicle seizure period for a first offence will remain at 30 days.

The second amendment relates to the Alberta administrative licence suspension. We are proposing an immediate 24-hour suspension for anyone charged with impaired driving. The 21-day temporary permit would then apply, followed by a three-month Alberta administrative licence suspension. Currently a driver charged with impaired driving is legally able to use the temporary permit to walk out of the police station and drive away, even if they are still impaired.

The third change of note that we are making to the Traffic Safety Act deals with carrier profiles for commercial vehicles. We are proposing to allow the exchange of commercial carrier and commercial drivers' records relating to their convictions, reportable accidents, and on-road vehicle inspections with the jurisdiction where the driver is licensed and/or where the vehicle was registered for the purpose of that jurisdiction's carrier and driver profile system. The types of offences would include all types of violations under the Traffic Safety Act and its regulations, including moving violations such as speeding or failing to stop at a red light; equipment violations – for example, burned-out headlamps or taillamps or improper securement of loads – commercial vehicle safety requirements like contravention of special permit requirements, lack of safety fitness certificate, altering a certificate or permit, driver's hours of service violations, or altering weight in transit; and, finally, any Criminal Code convictions like dangerous driving or impaired driving.

The fourth key amendment we bring forward today has to do with the graduated driver licensing. The Traffic Safety Act established a graduated driver licensing program. One of the legislated provisions is a zero blood alcohol provision. Under the current provision of the Traffic Safety Act, if a novice driver, which includes both learners and probationary drivers, consumes alcohol, the police would lay a charge and that person would lose their licence for 24 hours. If found guilty, the driver would be given a fine and possibly even a jail term under the Provincial Offences Procedures Act.

The current provisions would require substantial resources from the police and courts to implement, but more importantly the current provisions may not survive a challenge under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Simply put, the current provisions, which have a risk of jail, may be argued to be very harsh in dealing with a novice driver with less than .08 blood alcohol content. Based on these considerations as well as reviewing other jurisdictions' programs, we are now bringing forward a new model for this sanction.

As a result of the success of the Alberta administrative licence suspension program, which came into effect December 1, 1999, we decided to model the zero alcohol provision of the graduated driver licensing program on this other type of administrative licence suspension. I would like to point out that under the AALS program, from the start of the program on December 1, 1999, to March 31 of this year 11,391 people have been suspended for providing a breath sample in excess of .08 or for refusing to provide a breath sample. This indicates the seriousness of the drinking and driving problem in Alberta and why we need to ensure that our new drivers don't develop this deadly driving behaviour. Mr. Speaker, 11,391 people caught drinking and driving in a 15-month period is completely unacceptable. Albertans, whether they are drivers under the graduated driver licensing program or fully licensed drivers, must realize that drinking and driving is not acceptable in Alberta.

Further in 1999, of the 390 drivers involved in fatal accidents, 89 had been drinking, and of the 23,920 drivers involved in nonfatal injury collisions, 1,440 had been drinking. To address this issue at the earliest possible stage, we are proposing that the zero alcohol tolerance provision of the graduated driver licensing program provide for an immediate 24-hour suspension, followed by a seven-day temporary permit, then a one-month driver's licence suspension. There would also be a provision for the driver to request that the administrative licence suspension be reviewed and set aside by the Transportation Safety Board. Using this approach along with the provision of the Transportation Safety Board appeal will make the provision of this violation of the zero alcohol tolerance provision significant, timely, and less vulnerable to a successful Charter challenge.

In addition to the four key amendments, there are a few other amendments we are proposing to do with approved screening devices, learner drivers and their accompanying driver, suspensions for Criminal Code convictions, and failure to stop at the scene of an accident. In regards to approved screening devices, to ensure consistency and fairness, we have specified that devices used by police to screen for the zero alcohol tolerance can be approved under the Criminal Code as well as this act.

With respect to the learner drivers and their accompanying driver, the Traffic Safety Act currently requires learners to have an accompanying licensed driver 18 years or older on or in the same vehicle. We are proposing that the person supervising the learner cannot be a probationary driver. We are also proposing that the supervising driver for a motorcycle learner can be on an accompanying vehicle or on the vehicle operated by the learner. Further, a learner on a motorcycle cannot have passengers, except when the passenger is supervising the learner.

With respect to suspensions for Criminal Code convictions, the Criminal Code of Canada has recently been amended so that it is an offence to initiate a high-speed police chase. These high-speed chases jeopardize the safety of other road users and innocent pedestrians and have led to a number of tragic deaths and serious injuries across Canada. To reflect the seriousness of this type of offence, we are adding this offence to our list of convictions that will result in the suspension of a person's operator's licence in Alberta. Currently there are approximately 95 people who have been convicted of this offence. However, they were only suspended for the period of the court-imposed prohibition, if one was imposed at all.

The final amendment deals with failing to stop at the scene of an accident. The current disqualification period under the Traffic Safety Act for a conviction of failure to stop at the scene of an accident does not reflect the increase in penalties under the Criminal Code where there is injury or death. It is proposed that the increase in penalties be reflected in the provincial disqualification period. Therefore, we are proposing that the person's operator's licence be suspended for one year where there is no injury or death and five years where there is an injury or death.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we are making some minor technical amendments that clarify certain sections of the act and correct minor inconsistencies we have discovered during consideration of the regulations.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my speech, Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to work with our stakeholders and other jurisdictions across Canada and the United States on the resolution of other traffic safety related issues such as restricting the use of cell phones while driving and mandatory helmets for cyclists. If required, these could be dealt with in detail in regulations under the Traffic Safety Act. The very successful consultation process used during the development of the act is being continued for the drafting of the regulations.

Once this bill is passed and the regulations finalized, we will be ready to implement this unique and modern legislation that will be second to none in the country and help us to have not only the best but also the safest roads in Canada.

Thank you.

3:40

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 10, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2001. I would like to congratulate the new Member for Calgary-Buffalo for sponsoring this bill. I think it's an excellent bill. It is certainly going to go a long ways in its intent, and that is to make our highways safer. I also have to thank him and the Minister of Transportation for the briefing supplied me last week to highlight the various parts of the bill that are key and will go a long ways to serving their intent.

When I look at this particular bill, there are a few areas that I must comment on. Of course, the first thing we have to look at is the Traffic Safety Act, which was passed in this Legislature in 1999 but still has not been proclaimed. These amendments that are proposed in Bill 10 will make the necessary changes to the existing act so that it is ready for implementation in the year 2002. Certainly we would support any legislation that will make our highways safer, particularly in these periods of growth, Mr. Speaker, when our infrastructure just can't begin to keep up with the huge number of increases in traffic on our highways. So this is good.

I think, you know, when we look at the highlights of the bill – of course, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo did go over all the highlights – there are three areas that we must focus on. Certainly one is this graduated driver licensing program. This is a step in the right direction. It is going to bridge, hopefully, that area between the issuing of what we would know as a learner's permit and these people becoming fully licensed drivers. It is in this area of inexperience where there are a tremendous number of accidents.

The next area that I think the bill does a very good job in is under vehicle seizures. Certainly none of us want to see a driver who is suspended get behind the wheel and continue driving. I think this has been highlighted particularly when we look at the situation that occurs in some of the states in the United States where insurance has gone out of sight. People can't afford their insurance, and they choose to drive without insurance and certainly put all people on the road at risk at that particular time.

The third area that the hon. member spoke about and I think as well is a key point to this bill is the Alberta administrative licensing suspension. This is a new 24-hour suspension for anyone providing a breath sample of over .08. Again, it is definitely a positive step in our Traffic Safety Act.

Now, in the 24th Alberta Legislature we had serving members here from Edmonton-Norwood and Calgary-Buffalo who certainly brought forward the idea that this 24-hour suspension for refusing to provide a breath sample should be dealt with in court.

MS BLAKEMAN: They felt strongly about it.

MR. BONNER: They felt very, very strongly about it.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think this certainly emphasizes one of the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo's quotes. I heard him say many times that history should be the torch that illuminates the future. If this truly is the case, then this would be an example of where we rushed through legislation. We pushed the Traffic Safety Act through. Unfortunately there were flaws in the original bill, and that is why we're here today with Bill 10.

What I think we have to do from here is take a lesson, that legislation that is pushed through this House and pushed through too rapidly certainly doesn't serve the interests of the Assembly, of the members here, because we go back and we redo the work that should have been done once. As another hon. member in the House has often said: plan your work and work your plan. So I think a thorough plan in this particular case and a timely introduction of it into the House and where we don't speed through it is certainly good advice for all of us.

MS BLAKEMAN: Do it right the first time.

MR. BONNER: That's right. Do it right the first time, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has said.

Now, then, Bill 24 was supposed to be about streamlining and regulatory reform. Bill 10 amends a bill that has not come into force, and it shows the danger again, Mr. Speaker, of us rushing through legislation. Many of the changes that we see in Bill 10 are administrative, and they clean up the original bill in nature. It is certainly a sign that things were not done right the first time around, but it certainly does appear that the work done on Bill 10 will correct those issues.

In looking at the bill and some of the highlights, I think that one of the highlights is the vehicle seizure provisions that the hon. member spoke about. Certainly, I think, a positive change with this particular section of the act is the fact that in order to seize a vehicle, the person does not have to be convicted, that as soon as they are charged with driving while suspended, we will have that vehicle. If it does belong to the same driver and registered owner, it can be removed from the road. This puts the responsibility on the shoulders of the driver. If, indeed, they do not accept that responsibility, if they go ahead and drive while under suspension, then certainly access to their vehicle should be denied. So I think this is one of the sections in this act that makes it much stronger and certainly goes a long way in making our highways and roadways much safer. I also notice that this amendment is similar to both Manitoba's and Ontario's, where there isn't a conviction required for the second vehicle seizure to be for a longer period of time.

The second area that Bill 10 deals with is the Alberta administrative licence suspension provision. What happens here is that we were trying to deal with this whole 24-hour suspension, and the proposal in this bill is that there would be an immediate 24-hour suspension for anyone charged with impaired driving.

Now, again what I think also is a good feature in this bill is that families are not impacted by someone in their family that is responsible for driving and is required to drive. It gives them a 21-day permit period, which would allow them to get their things in order so that they could begin to serve their three-month suspension.

As well, another area in this particular bill that I think helps strengthen the safety on our highways is when we look at the carrier profiles. What this will allow us to do is we will be able to forward records relating to convictions, reportable accidents, and on-road inspections relating to commercial vehicles to the jurisdiction where the driver was licensed and/or where the vehicle was registered for the purpose of that jurisdiction's carrier and driver profile system. So what we're doing in this particular instance is we are weighing the safety on our highways and freedom of information, and I do think that again it is an excellent recommendation in that we are notifying other jurisdictions of drivers who have violated the law in this particular province.

Now, then, a third area that we look at here is graduated licensing, and I did talk on that earlier. In looking at our graduated licences, certainly this is going to impact our young people more than anyone else, and any new drivers that we do have on the road who are over the age of 25 will also be impacted by this legislation, but again it's legislation which will certainly help bridge that essential area where people get their novice licence and move on to full certification.

I think it's wise, because when we do look at the statistics, young drivers under the age of 25 are involved in a greater number of injuries and fatalities on our roads. The relative risk for this age group is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2.5 to three times higher. When we look at a comparison in the province of Alberta of third-party liability, if we look at the age group of 16 to 20 year olds, in 1999 we had a little over 48,000 drivers that fell into this category. They were involved in over 5,000 claims. The total amount of those claims was in the neighbourhood of $69 million, and this represented, you know, about 10.6 percent of those drivers.

Again, the graduated licence is an excellent provision because it does certainly try to address the problem of inexperience and also addresses the idea that these people are not being responsible. If they do have alcohol on their breath, this immediate 24-hour suspension is again one of those issues where we do teach people responsibility. They are given the opportunity, and certainly if they abuse that opportunity, then I see that there are consequences, and these are good. The whole idea of there being zero tolerance on this issue is one that many, many people in this province would agree with. So in the province of Alberta the immediate 24-hour suspension, followed by a seven-day temporary permit, followed by a one-month suspension is certainly a very, very good point.

Now, we also have approved screening devices, and the proposal in the bill is that the referral to approved screening devices be under the Criminal Code as well as the Traffic Safety Act. Certainly this will harmonize this issue between both the Traffic Safety Act and the Criminal Code.

When we look at the Traffic Safety Act and the proposal that the supervisor of the learner – and here we're looking at people that have a class 5. They must have a class 5 that is current. That is also a good addition to this bill and the requirement that a supervisor driver for a motorcycle learner would be on an accompanying vehicle or on the vehicle operated by the learner. Certainly the other provision in this particular amendment would be that the person who is supervising would have to have a valid class 6 licence.

So, Mr. Speaker, in looking at all of the amendments to this particular bill, Bill 10, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, I think this is a piece of legislation that is going to be well accepted by Albertans. It is a good piece of legislation. It is certainly going to fit the bill as far as making our highways safer, and I would encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. There's one point I'd like to raise around this bill. I understand that it is doing some administrative cleanup, sort of, with the fallout from Bill 24 that was passed in 1999, but some odd things are happening. I'm getting a number of e-mails from people lobbying both for and against bicycle helmet laws.

Now, that was decided in our debate of Bill 24 in that it was referred to the municipalities, but I'm wondering if the minister has also been receiving e-mails. Obviously, people really want the government to make this decision. Is there any possibility that this is going to be included in this act or that it's going to be dealt with in some way?

I feel an obligation to raise this before the sponsoring member, although strictly speaking, I'm a little out of my way here on second reading, but it's not covered in what's being proposed here. Obviously, there's some agitation in the community to have this matter of bicycle helmets dealt with and dealt with provincially rather than through the municipalities, which is the way it sits now.

I will raise that to the member and ask that he respond. Perhaps he could respond in writing to me, and I am able to then pass that on to the people who have contacted me. I know that there are others that have received similar or perhaps even the same e-mail. So if I could pass that on.

Thank you very much.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, in closing, I'd just like to say that this unique and modern legislation will be second to none in the country. I urge all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of it, and as I mentioned earlier, it will help us to not only have the best but also the safest roads in Canada.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

4:00

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: This afternoon before we commence Committee of the Whole deliberations on Bill 1, the chair would like to remind all hon. members that at this juncture of a bill, when you go into Committee of the Whole, it is not an invitation to carry on your speech from second reading. It is intended to be more clause by clause.

If you refer to Beauchesne's 688 and 689, I think that would be clear there. If you go to Standing Orders 77(1), (2), and (3), you can get part of it there. If you go to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, Marleau and Montpetit, you will find it there on page 532, where they say, "The referral of a bill to a committee opens the way for close examination of its contents, clause by clause," and it then goes on later, "Speeches made in Committee of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause" when you are going to that. There are some exceptions. Finally, Erskine May – of course, this is another House, the House of Commons of the United Kingdom – deals with that on page 519 of the current edition.

Just a reminder that that's where we should be as opposed to a wide-ranging debate again on a second reading kind of thing. The Assembly has already made its decision on the principles of the bill. Now we go to the details and agree with them or disagree with them and make amendments thereto.

Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: We have a number of people on this. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you so much, and thank you for the wise words. I will do my very best to keep on track. In Committee of the Whole I can go clause by clause, word by word, sentence by sentence in examination; can I not?

THE CHAIRMAN: You can go clause by clause, yes.

MS BLAKEMAN: Good. Excellent.

The issues that I wanted to raise in Committee of the Whole which I spoke globally about in second reading and I want to go into a bit more detail on in Committee of the Whole, where I can go clause by clause, sentence by sentence, word by word are around my concerns of this being shell legislation, which we continue to see from this government. When I'm looking for what is the theory behind this and the implementation behind this bill, it's very difficult to see what it is because everything is referred to regulation.

For example, in section 3(1) we have, "A rebate under this Act may be made directly to eligible consumers or to a vendor for the benefit of eligible consumers." Well, my concern around that is that there's nothing further around monitoring and enforcement, especially as it pertains to those living in high-rise apartments and condominiums, which is of great concern to my constituents in Edmonton-Centre. I know that this is also affecting a number of other members in this Assembly. Anybody that's got a high-rise apartment essentially or a high-rise condominium that has a single meter is affected by what is happening here.

In particular, I look at section 3(2): "If a rebate is made to a vendor under subsection (1) for the benefit of eligible consumers, the benefit of the rebate must be passed on to the eligible consumers." Well, we've already raised a number of questions in this House which haven't been able to be answered about monitoring and enforcement of these rebates being passed on, and I don't see the real commitment to that here. On behalf of my constituents this is a huge issue. I have a number of documents that have been sent to me from people showing the increase in their rent as a result of higher utility prices. This, of course, is of most concern to those on a fixed income.

I have one senior couple saying: what are we supposed to do? Their rent is going from $600 to $755. That's a fairly large chunk to swallow when you're on a fixed income and nobody is going to give you any more money to cover that. I have another constituent who is on AISH due to a severe health disability. They've been notified that their rent is going from $695 to $900. Again, that's a huge leap. They're being told this is why. They come to me and say: well, how do we know that these rebates got passed on? I say: well, gee, you know, in Bill 1 it's under section 3(1) and (2). But it's not happening, not that they can see, and they don't understand why.

I also raise the concern of the discrimination that's happening – particularly high-rise condominium owners are feeling this – with a difference in the price that they're paying for the utility and a difference in the rebate that they're receiving in the utility. I don't see that being addressed in this bill, and I've gone through every section in it. So I'm still looking to the government to fix the discrimination that is inherent in the way they've been handling this up to now and that remains systemic in this bill. Perhaps the government will be bringing forward amendments on that.

Again, with condominiums you've got people that maybe sold their little house in the suburbs, and they've moved into a condominium, which was fine for a couple of years. Now I've got some condominiums where their fees have gone from $500 to over $1,000. People just cannot bear that kind of increase in their payments every month. At this point all I've been able to say is: well, I'm told that your banker doesn't really want to own your condo, so go and talk to your banker to see if they can give you an extension somehow to keep going through this. But that's not helping anybody. They're just incurring more debt here. So there continue to be huge issues around here that have not been dealt with in this bill.

Now, there was one more thing around those condo owners and condominium boards attempting to negotiate a better rate for themselves. When it's said that there's lots of competition out there,

I'm being told: not so. There are the sort of standard two or three suppliers, and that's it. When you're in the cities of Edmonton or Calgary, the idea that there's huge competition out there and that these small consumers like high-rise apartments or high-rise condominiums have the ability to negotiate with dozens and dozens of suppliers just is not happening. So we now have them locked in to essentially a monopoly situation, and the same thing is happening in electricity.

Let me go back to my primary concern here, which is the shell legislation and the number of decisions that are going to be made that are laid out to be made by regulation. In support of that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to Bill 1, and I will send the amendment package with the appropriate number of copies to the table, and I'll keep talking while it's distributed.

My concern is that there is a real need to have bills like this that are shell legislation bills forwarded to the Law and Regulations Committee, which can examine the regulations that are being brought forward in support of these different clauses. When I look at this bill, it's astounding the amount that is to be decided. Basically once you're past the first section, which is the definitions, and you're into section 2, you start to get into how many things are going to be decided by regulation, which is beyond what this Assembly is able to scrutinize and comment on.

We don't see the regulations come through this Assembly. We don't know what's going to happen to them. I've spoken many times before on how difficult it is to chase down regulations as a member of the public and even as an MLA sometimes. We don't necessarily know when they're being released. We don't know where they are housed. They're much more difficult to find on-line. Whereas the legislation is very easy to find on-line through www.assembly.ab.ca, the regulations can be a real hunt, and sometimes you're not successful in finding them.

I somewhat mockingly said in second reading that I would be looking to bring forward the Dickson memorial amendment, which caused some amusement in this Assembly, but indeed that is exactly what I have done. My colleague who was the previous Member for Calgary-Buffalo often brought this amendment forward because he was detecting fairly early on this government's move in the direction of this shell legislation, where it gives you no details, where everything is referred to regulations. Therefore, I follow his wise advice and understand the increasing need to have the regulations that would be under this act brought forward and scrutinized by the Law and Regulations Committee.

Now, I just went and asked for the membership of the Assembly's select standing committees. In fact, yes indeed, there is the Law and Regulations one, and it has 21 members appointed to it, including among others many people who would be able to assist in scrutinizing and discussing regulations that would be brought in. I mean, the Member for Peace River is the chairperson. The Member for Calgary-Egmont is the deputy chairperson. We have new members like the Member for Calgary-Shaw. We have members of the opposition like the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. There's quite a good variation of experience and new thought that's on this committee. The committee never gets to meet because the government never calls it, and I think that time needs to come to an end.

I've even heard through the grapevine that the Justice minister and Attorney General may be more open to passing an amendment such as I have put forward here and which, I guess, becomes amendment A1. So I will hope that he will follow through on that.

Let's look at the number of things that would be decided by regulation under this act and that underline the need to have the Law and Regulations Committee called in order to deal with regulations that would come forward. All of section 2, basically whether there are going to be rebates or not, will be decided and put forward under regulation.

We look at section 5.

The Minister of Energy may, with respect to delivered marketable gas, publish from time to time a national residential gas reference price, based on such factors as the Minister considers appropriate.

That will come out through regulations.

Then we get to section 7(1), which is unbelievable. The Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is, of course, cabinet, may make regulations – and here we go.

(a) defining for the purposes of this Act . . . any terms that aren't already in here.

(b) respecting the determination of the Alberta price and the amount to be prescribed by regulation;

(c) authorizing rebates for the purpose of section 2, which is whether or not we're going to have rebates at all,

(d) respecting the circumstances in which a person is considered not to be an eligible consumer;

(e) respecting applications for rebates;

(f) respecting the conditions on which rebates may be made;

(g) respecting the basis on which or methods by which rebates are to be calculated.

You're starting to catch on here. Everything this bill is about is going to be decided somewhere else which is not subject to any input from our constituents through MLAS or public scrutiny.

Let me continue.

(h) respecting the manner in which and the frequency with which rebates may be made;

(i) respecting the maximum amount . . . that may be made to an eligible consumer for marketable gas . . . used in Alberta for industrial purposes;

(j) requiring a vendor to include information . . . relating to the cost of marketable gas.

I'm still going down this list. All of this is going to be decided by regulations and not decided in this Assembly. This is a good half of the bill that has been brought forward for us which is not going to be discussed by us because it's not determined yet. It's all going to come later in some kind of regulation.

I'm continuing.

(k) respecting the administration of the rebates paid to vendors.

And I love this one.

(l) generally, governing any matter incidental to the administration of this Act or the regulations.

Gotta love that one. That's the sort of just in case we forgot something, let's throw it in there.

Section 7(2): "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations," and then we go into another series of what will be decided by regulations: "rebates to be made in respect of other substances," defining "eligible consumer" in respect of other substances, "specifying other substances," "providing for any matter in connection with rebates" for these other substances. The other substances that are being covered here are propane, heating oil, and other heating substances.

So more than half of this bill is coming forward under regulations which are not debated in this House, which are not scrutinized in this House, which the public through their elected representative gets no opportunity to give input on because none of us know that it's happening, and it's not discussed here.

There's a well-known saying that there should be no taxation without representation. Mr. Chairman, I make the case to you that there should be no regulations without representation. That is what that Law and Regulations Committee is for, so that we can bring that expertise together. The regulations can be gone over, can be scrutinized, can be debated. This is a committee of the Assembly, so the proceedings would be in Hansard and would be available for people to read and to comment back to members of the committee or to their own MLA, who could make representations to the committee. So this is around the enormity of the decisions that are being made in this act.

We can't even tell from this act if there are going to be rebates because it's all decided later behind closed doors by some group of people, the cabinet, without any further consultation. I think either the government has got to start putting the meat back into the bills that are brought forward, or they're going to have to start calling this Law and Regulations Committee so that there can be scrutiny. This is a scary, scary thing. It's a frightening proposition that a government, even if you are 74 seats, even if you do represent 30 percent of the people in Alberta . . .

MR. BONNER: Only.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, it's only 30 percent frankly, because the rest didn't vote for them. But that is a scary thought. How much legislation is being done through regulation, which is not being brought into this Assembly?

Well, I'm sure I'll have other opportunities to hammer away on how important this amendment is, but perhaps there are others who wish to speak to it. Certainly I cannot underline enough how important this amendment is, and I urge everyone in this Assembly to support it. We need to be the best legislators possible on behalf of Albertans, and we are shirking that responsibility at this point. I urge everyone to support this amendment.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak to the amendment put forward by the hon. member. [interjection] I may well speak in favour of it, hon. member, as well. I just wanted to indicate that on my reading of this bill, and I'm relatively new at the function of a legislator . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair apologizes. I perhaps should have mentioned this earlier. When we're into amendments, we want to have the specific one. Of course, this one that has been moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is amendment A1. So in order to refer to it, we're going to call it that.

MR. MASON: A1?

THE CHAIRMAN: A1; right.

MR. MASON: A-okay with me, Mr. Chairman.

So A1 – I'm just going to write that in big letters on my thing here so I don't forget – is an interesting amendment. As I was saying, as a relatively new person to legislation, I guess I was expecting to actually deal with legislation. I look at this act, and as I indicated when we debated it at second reading, it's really not a piece of legislation at all, Mr. Chairman, but rather a framework for regulation. It's nothing more than a framework that puts in place the ability for the cabinet to do all of the things that are envisioned in the bill and do it without any reference to public debate. That is a great concern.

I went through the act, and in the definitions it is mentioned four times. The Alberta price is going to be defined by the regulations. The eligible consumer will be defined by the regulations, and a consumer of other substances is defined in the regulations, as are other substances. So right away all of the key definitions contained in the bill will be set by the cabinet and not by the Legislative Assembly. In that respect, Mr. Chairman, it's a significant step backwards from the bill which it replaces. In the Natural Gas Rebates Act, which I have here, there are three pages of definitions contained in the act. I haven't added them all up, and I won't go through them, but it's clear that the first act is consistently defined. This particular one devotes about four clauses to the definitions, and in each of those clauses it leaves the real definition up to the government. That is a real difficulty as far as I'm concerned.

You know, if you want to look at the question of consumers, I think that's a very dangerous thing to not have in the act. I think we ought to be talking about specifically who is eligible, and it ought to be defined on the basis of need. I come to the question of price. We ought to be talking about what price is too high, instead of just leaving it to the government.

What I'm concerned about – and I indicated that in my other speeches – is that this becomes a very, very powerful political tool in the arsenal of the government. We've seen the impact of nicely timed rebates on the electorate. It is of undoubted concern to the opposition parties going into the future, Mr. Chairman, that the government ought to reserve its powers to issue rebates to situations based on need and not based on the need of the government to get re-elected. That is a concern that we have and I think which all right-thinking Albertans ought to have. So those are real concerns.

You come to "other substances," and there is a bit of a definition here. There is a bit of one. It says, "Propane, heating oil and any other substance used for heating purposes as specified in the regulations." At least, Mr. Chairman, they define it as being used for heating purposes, but they don't say heating of what. They don't say heating of homes for people or heating of barns on a farm or heating of schools or hospitals. It could be anything from heating cement to heating petrochemicals in a refinery. It could be used for any industrial purpose whatsoever.

So a question I would have – and hopefully somebody will be able to respond to this – is: are we going to be allowing the government to subsidize a company's heating of hot water in order to generate electricity in a coal-fired power plant to be considered as a rebate? If that's the case, I don't think that's the intention that I heard when this bill was introduced by the government, but it shows you how lax the bill is, how lacking in any real content it actually is. As I say, it's just a framework for the government to regulate on this issue and make the decisions based on whatever considerations they might want.

If we go on to price protection in section 2, again the word "regulations" appears twice:

Where, in the opinion of the Minister of Energy, the Alberta price is or is likely to be greater than the amount prescribed in the regulations, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may authorize a rebate to eligible consumers in Alberta under the regulations to assist eligible consumers in the cost of [natural] gas.

So the Minister of Energy can trigger it based on a price that is determined by the government and based on consumers who are determined by the government. None of those things are defined in the act. So there's another couple of cases.

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, we are on amendment A1, and you're talking about the regulations. Once the amendment is over, then you can do that, but you have to apply it to amendment A1. I mean, it's okay to go through them, but then bring it back to the amendment, please.

MR. MASON: I was going to do that, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to deal with the amendment to take these regulations to the standing committee, and it's just that I've underlined everywhere in this act where it says the word "regulations." I just was trying to give an impression of the scope of regulation that exists, but I'll try to be a little more general and a little quicker on this point, because I do want to come to the amendment, and I do want to come to the committee that never meets.

Debate Continued

MR. MASON: I'll just move ahead to the actual section in this act called regulations for the regulation of rebates. It's 7(1), and here you have 16 things that can be regulated, 16 of them, and that's a lot. I think that's really a lot. It talks about applications for rebates, the conditions on which they can be made, and so on and so on. It talks about controlling the vendors and then 7(1), which the hon. member mentioned, "Generally, governing any matter incidental to the administration of this Act or the regulations." Then on the next page we have section (2), and there are four more things that can be regulated. So I count, Mr. Chairman, 16 items that can be regulated by the government under this act without debate in the Legislative Assembly, without public discussion, and the decisions are simply published for the rest of us in the Assembly who are not in the cabinet and the public.

That brings me to the point of amendment A1, which is to refer this bill to that committee which never meets. So I guess I think it's a good idea. If we're going to have an act that's not really an act but is just a framework to allow the government to make regulations, then I think it's incumbent on the committee of this Assembly to actually sit down and discuss that and talk about the regulations and which things are appropriate for regulation and which things are not appropriate for regulation.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that in the long history of the British parliamentary system it was not envisaged that the legislative function should be usurped by the use of orders in council. That's been a general trend, I think, right across the country. It's not just limited to this Assembly, but this government has taken it to an extreme, and this bill is the ultimate expression of that tendency to avoid democratic debate by the elected people and to place those decisions in the hands of the cabinet.

The principle is particularly strong when it comes to the question of money, that the people's elected representatives should have scrutiny and control of the finances of the province. That's why we heard all of that fancy language when the Provincial Treasurer introduced her budget: we pray that we'll be needing certain sums and so on. The tradition around expenditures, taxation, and so on is particularly strong in our system. This bill is about nothing more than expenditures. It's about the government spending money to compensate for some of the misguided policies and some of the other things that have occurred beyond the government's control that have driven the cost of our natural gas and other energy sources through the roof. So we're talking about this.

Now, in terms of the amount, I note that the government spent before this last election approximately $4 billion in total for all of the rebate programs, and I don't mean to imply that it was just for natural gas. It was for all of the expenditures for power because of the haywire deregulation regime that we've got in this province pushing up power prices. But $4 billion is a lot of money, Mr. Chairman. You could run a small country for that, and this was all done by the government and not debated properly by the Legislative Assembly. Now we're going to set in place a framework that's going to allow that kind of thing to go on and on and on. I realize we're not going to be spending $4 billion in the next three years, but in the fourth year after that, we might again see very, very large expenditures made under these regulations.

I do believe that the amendment is a good one because it would allow the Assembly to sit and talk in committee about the things that are going to be regulated under this act and would allow some all-party scrutiny of those things, and that makes a great deal of sense to me.

The question comes up: why doesn't the committee meet? I would hope that the government would address that in some of its discussion about this bill. When I was first elected, I sat down with my other colleague and we had to divide up the functions of the opposition between just two of us. There were long lists of things we had to do, but then we came to splitting up the committees and who was going to take what. You know, I said: "Well, this looks like an interesting one. I'd like to be on that." He said: "Well, you can have it. It doesn't ever meet." I said: "Well, why do we have a committee that doesn't ever meet?" The suggestion was that the government never calls it, and apparently there are more committees. I was completely shocked to find that there's not just this Committee on Law and Regulations that doesn't meet, but there are others. They've been established by this Legislature, and it amazes me that the government won't allow these committees to meet.

MS BLAKEMAN: What are they afraid of?

MR. MASON: I don't know what it is. I don't know, hon. member, if they're afraid of something or what.

It really strikes me that we ought to be dealing with standing committees. We ought not to have the government refusing to call committees that have been set up for specific purposes by the Legislative Assembly. I don't think it shows respect for the will of the Legislative Assembly, and I would urge the government to actually call this.

First of all, we ought to be passing this amendment so that this framework for regulation called Bill 1 can be discussed in the committee, and then the government ought to call the committee. I think one of the best ways to get the government to call that committee so that we can help earn our pay instead of just listening to long speeches all the time is to actually get some of these committees going. I think we should. I think if we had more committees, the speeches on the opposition side would be considerably shorter, Mr. Chairman. In fact, I would give that undertaking. If we have more all-party committees that meet in this House and actually do real work and put us to some practical work so that we don't just have to be hecklers against the government and put these vast backbenches to work too so they don't have to sit and listen to us, then I think we could work something out. I really do. I would make that as an offer to the Government House Leader over there.

I think we could spend our time better in this Assembly actually doing real work in a less partisan format and actually kind of work through the bills. I think that it would be more interesting for some of the people in the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth rows. I would recommend it to members of this House.

So I suggest, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, that we ought to pass this amendment. I think it makes a great deal of sense, given the fact that the bill gives a free hand to the government to make regulations on anything they want as long as it's vaguely related to heating or energy and hand out any kind of money whenever they want and have complete control of that process and take it out of the hands of the elected people in this Assembly. I think that it is prudent and makes sense, and we might, if we pass this, actually get the committee going. I think that might be useful and interesting for members, and I think it might help us fulfill our duty to the public or certainly improve our ability to act on behalf of the people who have put us here through their votes.

So, Mr. Chairman, that will conclude my comments this afternoon, and I would certainly urge all members to vote in favour of this most excellent amendment.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to stand in support of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre's amendment, amendment A1, that would ask the Legislature to refer the regulations sections of this bill to the Standing Committee of the Legislative Assembly on Law and Regulations.

Mr. Chairman, it was quite interesting to hear the Member for Edmonton-Highlands add his comments as a new member in this Assembly in terms of what his expectations were of the Assembly and the kinds of choices we have before us when we see this kind of blank-cheque legislation such as the bill that we're trying to amend at this time, Bill 1.

It was quite interesting to then hear the government's reactions to his comments. It's interesting that when he talked about this particular bill being a framework for legislation, the Government House Leader said that that's exactly what good legislation should be. That's an interesting comment to make, I think, and certainly a good inside look at how this government feels it should govern and the rights that it feels it has in terms of putting forward that governance.

It's a philosophical decision, Mr. Chairman, to decide that legislation that comes before this Assembly should be nothing more than a framework and that the key decision should be made by regulation behind closed doors. I'm not sure that's a philosophical decision that Albertans would support if they knew, in fact, that's how legislation was being decided. There are other options to deciding things behind closed doors, and there are good reasons for having those other options.

Mr. Chairman, we have seen some legislation come forward in this Assembly that has been very flawed. I would take the notwithstanding clause that was brought forward in this Assembly as a very good example. When the notwithstanding clause was first being brought forward in here, the entire front bench of this government defended that action and talked about how great it was and how it wouldn't really hurt anybody. Well, you know, if you surround yourself with people who always think like you do and scrutinize things in the same way, then you may think sometimes that very flawed ideas are good ideas. What's always needed to come to the best possible decision for people is different kinds of opinions, not just those who think like you and act like you but those from other sources, from sources that may be dissenting from what you believe to be true. It's that kind of a scrutiny that brings forward the best possible decisions, and that goes for legislation too.

If we could have the Committee on Law and Regulations meet, being an all-party committee, then there would be an opportunity for some very good input from opposition members in this Legislature, that I believe would strengthen any kind of legislation being brought forward. It hasn't been the case for as long as the time I've been in this Assembly. I'm hoping that at some point before this term is ended, we're going to see something. Just try it out. Just give it a try. What have you got to be afraid of? There is nothing wrong with a good second look at regulations before they are put in place.

If the government isn't prepared to do it in terms of standing policy and committees, then they should be willing to put them out in a proposed format to the general public for some review and disclosure at that level. Certainly we cannot be having a continuation of decisions being made behind closed doors that have significant impact on people and on the ability of this government to move forward without having some scrutiny of them. What you get with government members and government backbenchers are decisions that don't allow for dissenting views and don't allow for sober second thought, an outlook on the regulation where you take the potential downsides into account. We don't see that happening, and as a result we get some regulations put forward by this government that I don't believe are in the best interests of the people.

This amendment that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre has brought forward is an amendment that would try to strengthen a bill that is really nothing more than a blank cheque for the government to write rules on right now. We find that to be quite offensive. We find that it doesn't meet the mandate of this government and that at least supporting this particular amendment would go some distance to solving those kinds of issues that we have with the legislation. So I would urge all members of the Assembly to support this particular amendment, and if they are not prepared to support it, Mr. Chairman, then I'd like to hear from them. I would challenge anyone from the government side or sitting on the backbenches there to tell us, share with us the reasons why they do not think supporting this amendment is a good idea.

So with that, I will take my seat and look forward to the input.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. Unfortunately, that amendment didn't pass. That isn't the only amendment that we need to be bringing forward on this particular legislation. We find that many particular sections of this legislation are flawed, not in terms of the writing skill of the drafters of the bill but in terms of the lack of depth that is pursued in this particular legislation. Particularly, I am interested at this time in bringing forward an amendment that will address some of those concerns. So, Mr. Chairman, with your permission I will move I believe it will be amendment A2 on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. House leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak now to amendment A2, I believe this one will be called, on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. This is an amendment that will be specifically amending section 5. If you take a look at that, section 5 on page 2 of the bill, what it talks about there is the "national residential gas reference price." That seems to be the most appropriate place for us to go to this particular issue, which is an auditing issue.

We find that in this bill there are going to be a great many groups and organizations, people and companies that are affected by this bill. What we specifically would like some scrutiny on, Mr. Chairman, are auditing functions for intermediate purchasers or intermediate suppliers or vendors who will in fact be receiving rebates as a part of this bill either directly or indirectly. We want them to be providing audited financial statements to the Minister of Energy on a quarterly basis. This is a checks and balances kind of system that is important to put in place whenever you're talking about large amounts of money or intermediate steps and companies and organizations that are dealing with the government.

We've just seen over the past couple of weeks through the newspapers an interesting unfolding in the court system of a conflict of interest situation. What we need above and beyond anything else in this Legislature is to ensure that the people of the province don't have to worry that organizations dealing with the government or dealing with rebates, dollars, cash back to them are going to be involved in anything that might not pass the smell test, Mr. Chairman. So anything that could potentially cause conflicts of interest, could potentially be deemed to put people or organizations in a position of conflict with the government, where they might be in a position where they can lobby or otherwise directly or indirectly influence government, that's the kind of thing we don't want happening in the Legislature. I think that's a very important function, and that's part of what this particular amendment deals with.

We know that politicians already are not widely regarded by the general public. They're very low . . .

MR. WOLOSZYN: Only the opposition ones.

MS CARLSON: No, no. Not only opposition ones. We all know and we've all heard comments from people, from the general public, that they don't trust politicians, that they think they're all involved in a conflict of interest. So we need to ensure that to the best extent possible we do everything to encourage people to support our actions and what we do and to believe that we are operating in their best interests. The best way to do that, Mr. Chairman, is to operate in their best interests and to ensure that we have the kinds of checks and balances in the system that will make the operations of government and those directly or indirectly associated with government crystal clear and that they are above and beyond reproach.

One of the best ways of doing this when you are talking about money, Mr. Chairman, is to institute auditing policies for people who are involved in that process, and that's what this amendment does.

Section 5.1(2) of this amendment says that "for the purposes of this section, audited financial statements must include reconciliations that verify the receipt and distribution of rebates." So not only who they got the rebates from, Mr. Chairman, but how they are subsequently distributed. Very good information to have available to the public. If audited statements are available to the public, this takes away any kind of concern that there may be under-the-table dealings or any other kinds of conflicts. It eliminates, too, any reason for us to ask questions in the Assembly on these kinds of issues. It's only when there is the appearance of a cover-up or information that isn't fully disclosed that people come to us and ask us to ask questions of the government on their actions. If everything is out in the open, if everything is available for us to take a look at and to scrutinize and for the general public to make their comments on . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: And what would you criticize?

MS CARLSON: Well, don't worry. We'd find lots to do. It would be nice to have a session here . . . I see that there are some colleagues who want to enter into debate, Mr. Chairman, and I'm looking forward to them defending . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: I'll put them on the list. Those that want to enter debate, we only have one person talking at a time. Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. Although knowing that generally they don't like to enter into debate, Mr. Chairman, it's nice to get their comments on the record so that we can respond to them, at least from this side of the House.

AN HON. MEMBER: Shorten your debates too?

MS CARLSON: You know what? If we had really good scrutiny of the operations of the government and those directly and indirectly associated with them, then, as the hon. member says, we could shorten debates, Mr. Chairman. I know that earlier the Government House Leader was talking about that too.

Well, let's put all those negotiations on the table for discussion. How would we be happy to have shorter debates? If we could have amendments like this passed, Mr. Chairman, because then what we'd have is an open and accountable process. We'd have fewer question periods. Why? Because there are less questions to ask of the government. As it stands right now, we could go 365 days of the year and not get through all of the questions.

MR. HANCOCK: Do you have any good questions?

MS CARLSON: They're always good questions. They just might not look like that from your side, hon. Government House Leader.

MS BLAKEMAN: It makes them uncomfortable. It gives them indigestion.

MS CARLSON: Well, that's true, and sometimes we're happy to make them uncomfortable, Mr. Chairman, when it's necessary to do so. When we don't have access to things like this amendment asks for – and those are audited financial statements with excellent reconciliations of moneys going in and moneys going out – then we do have questions, so then we are required to be in the Legislature. It would be a great day if I could sit here as a part of the Official Opposition and not have a question because I was very happy with the operations of the government, because everything was fully disclosed and all the actions they took in terms of regulations and laws were made on the basis of all-party committees where we came to a consensus kind of agreement. I don't think that kind of utopia is ever going to happen in this province, but it's a goal. It's something that we can start to work towards, and this amendment certainly speaks to that.

Section 5.1(3) of this amendment states:

Audited financial statements provided to the Minister under subsection (1) must be

- (a) tabled in the Legislative Assembly, if it is then sitting, within one week of being received by the Minister, or if the Assembly is not sitting, within one week of the commencement of the next sitting.

That's really just in accordance with the kind of protocol that we see happening in this Assembly now, Mr. Chairman. There's no doubt that these kinds of statements do get tabled and I believe for the most part in a timely fashion. We're asking that this would then also comply within that kind of a framework because I think for the most part it's a system that has worked pretty well. The information gets tabled, usually in a timely fashion. It's available for public scrutiny, not just by us as opposition members but by the general public, and then any appropriate questions can be asked on it or in some cases, as is reasonable, the government can be complimented on good decisions or choices that they've made.

Section 5.1(3)(b) of this particular amendment states that then those audited financial statements should also be “published in the next edition of The Alberta Gazette after being received by the Minister.” Also, Mr. Chairman, once again a formality. We just want these statements to be handled in accordance with the generally accepted principles that other statements are handled with.

I’d be very interested to get the feedback from the Auditor General on this particular amendment. I think, knowing the kind of integrity he brings to his office and the scrutiny he likes to have in various functions, that he would support this amendment. I can’t speak for him. It would be nice if we could have some feedback on this, but it seems like a reasonable expectation. We have seen him over the years, in fact every year that he’s been the Auditor General, put some comments in the AG’s report about the lack of control on reporting procedures in reporting back to the government that there are for some of these organizations that operate at what I would call quasi arm’s length.

The delegated authorities are a good example of that and some of the other associations that are indirectly related to government operations. We often see recommendations coming forward from him that ask for more information or more auditing requirements or more detail being provided in terms of how the dollars are receipted and disbursed. So I’m pretty sure, in taking a look at this amendment, that the AG would also support this kind of scrutiny happening.

It could be, too, that there are other organizations that we should be asking for this on, Mr. Chairman, at this time, but it’s a little tough to make those decisions now, when what we see here is basically a framework of a bill and no detail. Once the regulations are established and made public, which is going to be way after the fact of them happening and before we get to know about them, it could be that there are other sections here that also should be subjected to an auditing requirement. If that’s the case, then we’ll have to deal with those issues in other sittings of this Legislature and through other formats, because we won’t have the ability to scrutinize the details of this particular bill because it will have been decided by regulation long after the bill itself has been passed. That itself is an issue for us and something that we’re not very happy with.

It would be nice just once in this Legislature to see a substantive bill come in that has the detail in it in terms of exactly what the government wants to do and where it expects to go. But it isn’t going to happen with this bill, Mr. Chairman, and ever more so the reason for people in this Legislature to support this particular amendment, A2, that adds an auditing function into Bill 1 for intermediate purchasers, suppliers, and vendors.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A2.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I’m really thrilled to see this amendment being brought forward because it goes part of the way to addressing the concern that I have raised repeatedly around these rebates. I have a lot of apartments in Edmonton-Centre, but many of the members do. I’m sure we’ve all heard from constituents who are very concerned and also very confused because they hear that there are rebates out there, they know that their friends and relatives who are living in single-family dwellings are receiving rebates, I think in all cases better rebates than they in fact are getting in the apartments, but they really don’t have any way of sort of proving that. They want to be able to see the flow-through, and this amendment would be giving them something that they could access. It’s suggesting that the audits for the flow-throughs be tabled in the Legislature. They could get them through the sessional papers. When that happens, they could maybe even access them on-line to be able to see how much their particular apartment complex property managers received in rebate and how much went flowing through to the members.

You know, I don’t know how to answer these people, particularly those in a vulnerable position like seniors or people that are on supports for independence or on AISH or on a disability pension. How do I answer the questions they bring me: “I thought there was going to be a rebate. Show me where the rebate is. Why am I not getting my rebate?” I’m trying to explain to them: “Well, you’re not getting it directly because you live in an apartment building that is single metered and large enough to be consuming more than the base rate of energy. It’s going through to whoever is receiving the bill. That’s who receives the rebate.” You sort of walk through it with them, and you say: “Well, are you receiving a bill?” “No, we’re not.” “Well, then you don’t get the rebate. It’s going through to the property management company or the building owner or whoever is getting the bill.” They just don’t understand where the money went, especially when they’re looking at their rent going up.

Now, some responsible building owners and managers have made a point of giving a reckoning of how their expenses have gone up in a number of areas, and therefore even though they have given consideration for an energy rebate, there are still additional costs and the rents are going up. But right now in many of our areas there are all kinds of reasons why rent is going up, and they can’t distinguish amongst those where the energy rebates are. I’ve got a number of apartments where they had a very high vacancy rate for a number of years, so the owners didn’t do much to fix the place up. Then the vacancy rates started to drop, and all of a sudden there was great interest in putting some money in and spiffing the place up a bit and maybe encouraging some of the longer standing renters to move out. Then they could rent the place for a much higher price rather than sort of incrementally raising it with an existing tenant.

There’s that reason for it. There are costs in all kinds of other areas that are going up. But they don’t get this kind of reckoning from people, and they don’t understand why they’re not actually seeing their rent go down. In the debate on amendment A1, which was asking that regulations be referred to the Law and Regulations Committee, I talked about the need for something like this, for some kind of explanation of how this money was supposed to be flowing through to people. I talked about those tenants that are receiving substantial increases in their monthly rent, and they are saying: “Well, how is this balanced against this rebate?” It’s supposed to be a $150 gas rebate a month, but in fact it isn’t because they’re in an apartment building, so they’re going by $6 a gigajoule and people are not seeing their rents going down; they’re seeing them go up substantially.

I really like the idea that the purchasers, suppliers, or vendors who receive rebates directly or indirectly would provide these audited statements to the minister on a quarterly basis, and those would then be including reconciliations that verify the receipt and distribution of the rebates. That’s exactly what we’re looking for. This would really help. Then the minister would be obliged to table them in the Assembly at the first possible opportunity. That would allow me, even, on behalf of my constituents to get the audit for that particular time period and go back to the constituent or to the building and say, “See here, they did pass this on to you,” or perhaps in a worst case scenario, which I hope would never happen, that there’s some question about whether in fact they did pass them on.

Right now property managers and apartment building owners are under no obligation to give any kind of reckoning. They have to abide by existing legislation like the Residential Tenancies Act and the Housing Act and just give people the three months' notice to increase their rent, and that's it. They don't have to give any other verification of anything, just the three months' notice.

You know, we already have a problem with affordable housing not only in this city but across the province. We continue to have a market that is pushing people out of affordable living circumstances, yet we have nothing else that they can move into that is as safe or in a safe neighbourhood or has the amenities in the apartment that they need. When I say "amenities," I'm not talking about swimming pools and Jacuzzis and things. For a lot of these folks the amenities are an elevator rather than having to walk up five floors.

MR. MASON: A security system.

MS BLAKEMAN: Or a security system, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is suggesting. Absolutely. Perhaps even good lighting or a bannister in the hallways. Those kinds of things become really important to people.

There's a great frustration out there and increasingly a great distrust. You're often going to have a group of people who are struggling, who are looking around and saying: "Who's benefiting here? Who's getting something that I'm not getting, and why is it happening?" When they look at owners that appear to be making lots of money, they don't understand why they're then making even more money on the backs of the renters. This allows the building owners and managers to also be able to defend themselves, to be able to give this accounting and say: "You know, I am a good owner. I am a good manager. We are doing everything that we can for you as a renter."

I'm just seeing a situation where a lot of people are getting pushed out of reasonable – well, pushed out. I mean, that's strong wording. They feel that they're in a position where they're going to have to make a choice to change their housing arrangements, and they don't feel that they have any other choice to make. So, yes, there's no question they feel that they've been pushed out or forced to look for accommodation that is less expensive and therefore in many ways less safe, more troublesome, not as accessible for them, further off the bus route or the LRT line, maybe not in a neighbourhood that's as close to parks or playgrounds or grocery stores or whatever. It's very real for a lot of people.

I think in this Assembly every April, based on whatever the weekly wage index is, everybody in here gets a raise, but that isn't happening out there. There's a disconnect between the people that are sitting in here and many of the people we're representing. I understand that I may well be representing a community whose household income is below, and sometimes substantially below, other members' in here, but they're still Albertans. I think they still deserve respect. Certainly it costs all of us if we end up with that kind of domino effect where everybody's getting pushed into lower quality accommodation. You're pushing some people out the other end.

So I'm really pleased to see an amendment like this brought in. It's very simple. It's very straightforward. It's allowing for accountability. This government loves to stand up and say that it's open and accountable, but almost every day I'm in here, there are examples of how it isn't open and accountable. The opposition and the third party are constantly bringing forward suggestions about how the government could actually be open and accountable.

We have a strange sort of Orwellian twist with language in this Assembly. I'm expecting any day now to have a new ministry established and a minister appointed as the minister of truth because of the way we skew language here. It is a bizarre situation here.

There is a disconnect between the people that are sitting in here making decisions and the lives that people are really living.

When we look at issues like accountability and transparency, that's exactly what this amendment, A2, is trying to get at. It is trying to set it up so that there is accountability, and it's requiring the vendors and the suppliers who are receiving rebates to provide audited statements to the Minister of Energy and that the audited statements are very clear and include verification of reconciliations that verify the receipt and distribution of rebates. Then they're tabled in the House so that everybody can have a look at them, so that we can do our jobs as MLAs and representatives and take that information back to them and say: "You see, there was a rebate that came through to this apartment building. It was X amount. It was passed through to you."

In some cases, you know, we may well be saying: "Your rent would have been that much higher. Your rental increase would have been much larger if this rebate wasn't in place." But, frankly, right now I can't say that to them because I have no idea what the deal was. I have no idea of what the rebate was that the management company or the owner received as a rebate on behalf of a given building. They are not required at this point to pass that information on in any kind of written form. A number of times we've asked the question in this Assembly – I've personally gotten up and asked it a number of times – and the response back from the minister or from the Premier is always: well, we hope they're going to do that; well, we trust that they're going to do that. It would be really nice if they would let people know. Hope, trust, and niceness doesn't necessarily exist outside of this Assembly, and I'm looking for something that's a bit more concrete that can be tabled in here.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I wonder if you would help us out. In a few moments we are going to have a required vote that has to be in Assembly, so that means we have to have the motion to rise and report progress. We have to have a vote on that. Then we have to have the report given in the House, and then we might carry on. So if you'd oblige.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm assuming that you would like me to oblige by adjourning debate on this amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN: Rise and report progress. Yes.

MS BLAKEMAN: Rise and report progress. Thank you. I'm happy to do that.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 1.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 19(1)(c) I must now put the question on the following motion for consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech on the motion as proposed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane and seconded by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Motion carried]

head: Government Motions

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

17. Mr. Hancock moved on behalf of Mr. Klein:

Be it resolved that the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

[Government Motion 17 carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the last motion and my alacrity with that, I think I should move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we can return in Committee of Supply.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that the Assembly be now adjourned until 8 p.m. and when we meet at 8 p.m., it will be in Committee of Supply. All those in favour of this motion, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Those opposed, please say no. Motion is carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:16 p.m.]

Gaming

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you. Good evening, Mr. Chairman and hon. members. I'm pleased to begin my opening remarks this evening by introducing three officials who are part of Alberta Gaming and who are seated in the members' gallery. These gentlemen are part of the dedicated and talented team of individuals who work very diligently on behalf of Albertans: first of all, Norm Peterson, deputy minister; Gerry Brygidyr, director of business management and policy gaming; and Ron Crosby, executive director of finance for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. I'd also like to introduce my EA, Jeremy Chorney.

The Ministry of Gaming includes the Department of Gaming; the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, otherwise known as AGLC; and the Alberta Gaming Research Council. The ministry is also responsible for the Racing Corporation Act. The Department of Gaming includes business management and policy, communications, lottery funding programs including the community lottery board grant program and the community facility enhancement program. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission licenses, regulates, and monitors gaming and liquor activities in Alberta. The Alberta Gaming Research Council is a broad-based advisory group that directs the research activities of the Alberta Gaming Research Institute.

There have been many highlights and achievements for the ministry over the past year. Possibly the most significant has been the development of the First Nations gaming policy. This policy is in keeping with Alberta's unique charitable gaming model and is the result of discussion and dialogue between the government and Alberta First Nations. It's also an important part of the gaming licensing policy review. The AGLC is reviewing gaming licensing policies and processes to better address future changes and possible growth in Alberta's gaming industry. This process has involved the participation of stakeholders, including the gaming industry, municipalities, First Nations, and charitable organizations. Completion of the licensing policy review is expected later this summer, with the existing freeze on gaming expansion remaining in place until that time.

At Alberta Gaming our vision is "to balance choice and responsibility in [Alberta's] gaming and liquor industries," use revenues from these activities to benefit Albertans, and provide "opportunity for competition and enhanced services in [the] liquor and gaming industries." Our mission statement is to ensure integrity, transparency, disclosure, public consultation and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries to achieve the maximum benefit for Albertans.

The Ministry of Gaming has identified three core businesses in its 2001-2004 business plan:

1. Develop provincial gaming and liquor legislation and policy, and regulate the gaming and liquor industries in accordance with legislation and policy;

2. Manage the Alberta Lottery Fund and administer designated lottery-funded programs to support Alberta communities; and
3. Support leading-edge research on gaming and liquor issues in Alberta.

We've crafted the following key goals, strategies, and measures to assist us in fulfilling our commitment to Albertans. Goal 1: Alberta Gaming is committed to ensuring that gaming and liquor policies in this province strike "a balance between social responsibility and economic benefit to Albertans." Key strategies to achieve this are monitoring emerging issues and trends, looking to policies and regulations of other jurisdictions, and ensuring Albertans and stakeholders are not only aware of but supportive of our gaming and liquor policies.

Goal 2: Alberta Gaming is also committed to continuing to use 100 percent of lottery revenues to support charitable, not-for-profit, and community-based initiatives through the Alberta lottery fund and various grant programs and foundations it supports. Over 8,000 initiatives are funded each year.

Goal 3: the ministry is committed to being a key "partner in leading-edge gaming and liquor research." Through the Gaming Research Council and the institute we will continue to support research into and inform Albertans of the social and economic aspects of gaming. We will also continue our partnership with AADAC and the gaming and liquor industries to develop programs for the prevention and treatment of alcohol abuse and problem gambling.

AADAC, including its problem gambling programs, is funded through the Alberta lottery fund. AADAC funding for the 2001-2002 year is $45.6 million, which is an increase of $12.3 million from the previous year. AADAC will receive $3.7 million in funding in relation to problem gambling programs specifically for this fiscal year.

AGLC consists of a board and a corporation. The corporation acts as the operational arm of the organization and is responsible for the administration and day-to-day operations of AGLC. The board is responsible for policy and regulatory matters. AGLC licenses, regulates, and monitors all gaming and liquor activities in the province and its mission is "to ensure that gaming and liquor activities in Alberta are conducted with integrity and social responsibility and to maximize long term benefits for Albertans."

The AGLC has identified three core businesses in its 2001-2004 business plan:

1. License and regulate liquor activities.
2. License and regulate charitable gaming activities.
3. Conduct and manage provincial gaming activities – video lottery terminals, slot machines and lottery ticket sales.

Again, we have established key goals, strategies, and measures that will help us to fulfill these commitments to Albertans. Among these are: firstly, the AGLC is committed to "develop liquor policy and conduct licensing activities in accordance with the Gaming and Liquor Act and Regulation." The AGLC has set performance measures to help evaluate licensing compliance to policies and regulations as well as licensing satisfaction with the level of service the AGLC provides.

Goal 2. The AGLC is committed to develop gaming policy and conduct licensing activities under the authority of the Criminal Code of Canada and in accordance with the Gaming and Liquor Act and Regulation.

It's also committed to ensuring that "all gaming activities, use of proceeds and financial reporting are conducted according to legislation and policy." Key strategies to help fulfill these goals include developing and implementing "policy on eligibility criteria and use of proceeds by charitable organizations" as well as implementing "the policy direction arising from the [ongoing] licensing policy review."

Goal 3. The third goal reinforces AGLC's continuing commitment to ensuring the "integrity, security and operational efficiencies" of our video lottery, casino and ticket lottery network. Key strategies in support of this include reviewing "security requirements," establishing "performance standards" for the gaming network, and implementing a "replacement strategy" for aging terminals and the central network monitoring system. The AGLC will also be measuring retailer satisfaction with AGLC services and ensuring that the "Alberta Lottery Fund revenues are collected in a timely and efficient manner . . . in accordance with legislation and Treasury Board directives."

Total revenue from gaming and liquor activities in 2001-2002 is forecast to be approximately $1.5 billion, an increase of approximately $70.5 million from last year. Liquor revenues are estimated at $478 million and gaming revenue is estimated at approximately $1 billion. All gaming revenue is deposited in the Alberta lottery fund. That revenue goes back to Albertans and our communities. It supports over 8,000 projects and initiatives every year.

Details of the 2001-2002 gaming revenue forecast, which represent an increase of $62.6 million includes: VLTs, $547 million; slots, $308 million; tickets, $154 million; interest, $6 million, for a total of $1 billion. As substantial as these gaming dollar amounts may seem, it's important to keep them in context. Five years ago, in 1995-96, gaming revenue was about 4 percent of total provincial revenue. Today gaming revenue remains approximately 4 percent of total provincial revenue of $22.7 billion.

Our business plans contain a number of key strategies that reflect our commitment to developing policy that strikes "a balance between choice and responsibility in [Alberta's] gaming and liquor activities." The business plans also reflect our commitment to maintaining the highest quality of integrity, transparency, and openness in gaming and liquor activities.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time has run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to be the first to react to the budget for the Department of Gaming that is put before us this evening. I'd like to welcome members of the minister's staff for joining us this evening – I can't see them, but I know they're there – and any other fun seekers that have joined us in the gallery to watch over our proceedings tonight.

For this province of Alberta gaming is big business. Although as the minister points out, it accounts for 4 percent of the revenue that the province brings in, that is still one of the most consistent and one of the largest consistent sectors contributing to the budget. I have often said that this government is addicted to gaming. They certainly need those funds now. They'd have a hard time replacing that 4 percent. In doing so, they've also made the rest of Albertans codependents in this gambling. It's interesting to hear the minister talk about trying to achieve that balance between what is essentially growth in the gaming sector and some sort of justifiable output on the other side.

One of the first things I noticed is that the mission statement has changed slightly between the previous three-year mission statement and the one that the minister read out this evening. In previous years the mission statement was: "To maintain the integrity of gaming and liquor activities . . . and collect revenues." Now the mission is:

To ensure integrity, transparency, disclosure, public consultation and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries to achieve the maximum benefit for Albertans.

I'd be interested in having the minister explain the discussion that led to the change in that mission statement.

Now key initiatives. On page 164 we're talking about considering the recommendations from the gaming licensing policy review to ensure that the appropriate policies and procedures are in place to deal effectively with Alberta's growing and maturing gaming industry.

Yet as part of that I notice that the mission statement, referring back to it, does include "public consultation," but I have seen nothing thus far that was really seeking or making any great effort to include the public in a discussion, in an ongoing consultation about what the gaming industry is going to look like in Alberta for years to come. There certainly was the bingo review, that was chaired, I think, by Judge Lieberman, and the public was able to submit recommendations or discussions to that review, but thus far I am unaware of any initiatives to include the public or, indeed, aside from telling them that the gaming review is going on, to make any kind of effort to have the public join in that discussion.

I'd like to know why the department has decided to proceed this way or why the minister has decided to proceed this way, because I think there needs to be a much wider discussion around gaming in this province. How much of it do we want? What kinds of it do we want? The issue around how widely available access to gaming is. Accountability, which this department has struggled with from time to time and I will discuss a bit later. The whole area around horse racing and what the public wants to happen there. I can see that there are some keen aficionados with us this evening, but it would be nice if others aside from those in the Assembly would be able to participate in that discussion.

The public has not been able to participate in a discussion around VLTs versus slots, and I don't think the public is aware, quite frankly, of how many slot machines are now operating in the province and the fact that the number of machines continues to rise. They may not even be aware that we have slot machines as well as video lottery terminals, commonly known as VLTs. A discussion also around the percentage of gaming proceeds that's going to the charities, and that happens on a number of different levels. The percentage from the casinos that goes to the charities, the percentage from the bingos that goes to the charities, the percentage that comes from the VLTs and the slot machines that are in the casinos and that are in the bars and others that are licensed to hold them.

I think there also needs to be a discussion about the use of lottery funds for government programs, which was something this government started doing. This is the third year they've now done that, where they're paying for entire government programs out of a variety of departments, and 100 percent of the program is paid for out of lottery funds. I think this is a perversion of the original intent, but let's have the discussion. I think there's also been a move away from the charity model, that we need the public to participate in.

So there's quite a bit there, and from the little that I've been able to talk to the public about this, they're interested in having that discussion, not just a reaction to a VLT vote in their municipality or a quick reaction to what's happening in the bingo area. They want to talk about all of this, and the government thus far hasn't given them the opportunity. So I encourage the government to certainly take the opportunity that's available to them now, and I would ask the minister exactly what plans have been made to include the public. When are the consultations available to them? What kind of information has gone out encouraging people to appear before a public hearing or to submit?

The minister had walked through all the goals that are set up in the department, and I would like to follow that as well. When we look at the first goal about achieving "a balance between social responsibility and economic benefit," I'm looking at the key strategies, and I have some questions around that. One of them is: "Ensure Albertans are aware of gaming and liquor policy and are consulted with respect to major policy initiatives." Well, as I've just outlined, they're not being consulted around the gaming review that's happening. So, again, how is the government encouraging or ensuring that Albertans are aware of this and that they're being consulted?

The minister also mentioned, and it is indeed listed as a key strategy: "Ensure First Nations gaming policy is consistent with the government's Aboriginal Policy Framework." What exactly is that policy? I haven't seen it detailed, and I would ask that the minister please supply me with the background and additional deliberations that led up to whatever policy the government has now formed. I understand that the minister is responding in writing to these questions given this evening, so I would ask him to include that background documentation as well.

Now, I've done quite a bit of work on performance measurements, and I'm not very happy with the performance measurements that are being shown in this department. There's a tendency on behalf of this government to have a performance measurement about: are Albertans satisfied with, and then you can fill in the blank for just about any department. I don't find that that is a useful performance measurement. It's very interesting that we can get out there and have surveys, but, you know, frankly I could say that I was satisfied with this government's performance if I was faced with the choice of having to look at some other government that I found even more difficult to deal with. So the whole idea of surveying the public for their satisfaction with a given program or policy or key initiative I don't think is a very good way for the department, in fact, to know how they are doing and, more to the point, to be able to use it as a useful management tool.

So we have performance measurements here, the "percentage of Albertans surveyed who are satisfied with the conduct of the liquor business in Alberta." Well, what do you mean satisfied? What were the questions that they were asked? In all these cases where there's a survey of satisfaction of Albertans regarding this department, I would like to see the questions that were asked in the survey to get that result. As a second performance measurement, "Percentage of Albertans surveyed who are satisfied with the conduct of legal gaming entertainment in Alberta." Why aren't we looking at something more useful? Not satisfaction but let's say reduction of alcoholism, as relates to the activity of the department, or fetal alcohol syndrome that's reduced. Now, that's a target that could be worked towards, but satisfaction of Albertans with the conduct of liquor business? I mean, how is this giving us anything useful to go with other than the department can walk around and say that people are satisfied with them? It's not a useful management tool, and I think I could venture saying that the Auditor General would probably back me up on this one. He's encouraging departments to move towards more useful tools to use in management and engaging actual key performance indicators.

Now, I look at the goal "lottery funds support charitable, non-profit, public and community-based initiatives," and there's a key strategy of "implement and manage changes to the process for distributing revenues, and ensuring accountability for those revenues distributed to the horse racing industry" and then "based upon the terms of the Racing Industry Renewal Initiative." What exactly does that mean? Can we get all the background to that, please, so that we may be able to judge that as well? I'd like to know exactly what's happening there.

The next key strategy: "Develop a process to measure customer satisfaction." Yet again, when you've got a whole bunch of Albertans that have been surveyed through some kind of question about how satisfied they are, that really doesn't tell us whether the department is providing a useful service, whether it's providing an efficient service, whether Albertans are getting value for their dollar, whether the department is a good thing or a bad thing. It just tells us whether Albertans are satisfied. Frankly, it's an easy out. It's a cop-out. So in this what are they supposed to be satisfied about?

I look at the performance measurement under this goal: "Percentage of . . . Lottery Fund disbursements committed to supporting charitable, non-profit, public and community-based initiatives." Well, no disrespect intended, but gee-whiz, guys, tough performance measurement. Of course it's a hundred percent across the board. Supposedly it always has been. What are you doing using a performance measurement for something that's that simple? I mean, it's part of the ongoing mandate of this department, and you now make it a performance measurement. Forgive me, but boy, tough target, duh.

Let's look at the next one, "Percentage of administration costs of lottery-funded programs administered by the Department of Gaming." Well, you've got it at "less than 2% of program disbursements." Yeah, that was the budget that was given to do it, so how is this a useful management tool? You say: this is how much money you get to administer these programs, 2 percent of the program. Then you stand back and go: "Wow, are we ever good. Lookit; we've met our key performance indicator." Yeah. So these are not useful. [some applause] Oh, we have many supporters of the Simple Simon school of performance indicators.

Okay; let's look at the performance measurement for the goal about partnering "in leading-edge gaming and liquor research." "Percentage of partners who are satisfied with level of support and cooperation for research, prevention and treatment programs." We've got "establish baseline" for 2001-2002, "increasing over time" for 2002-2003, and a 90 percent target for 2003-2004. Well, what are you actually measuring here? What are you trying to find out? Are you trying to say, "Our research is exemplary"? Then why aren't you looking to see if you're winning awards somewhere or if you're being printed in prestigious magazines? Is your research leading to new initiatives? Can you test yourself against that? But once again we have "percentage of partners who are satisfied with level of support."

Now we move into looking at the revenue from gaming here, and I'm looking at the estimates on page 169. I have a couple of questions here. Under the casino gaming terminal revenue – and I'm assuming those are slots – the comparable '99-2000 actual is $174.4 million. The budget estimate for 2001-2002 is $308.9 million, and then it continues to rise: in 2002-03, $377.7 million, and in 2003-2004, $416.7 million. On what basis is the government projecting that consistent increase? Are there more slot machines going in, and that is what the government is basing this fairly significant rise on? If we look between '99-2000 at $174.4 million to 2003-2004 at $416.7 million, that's more than double in that period of time. What initiatives is the ministry putting in place that would be giving them the thought that that is the correct way to budget that forward?

Now, I look at the ticket lottery revenue, which in '99-2000 was $157 million and in 2001-2002 it's at $154 million, but in fact if you look backwards at the comparable preliminary actual for 2000-2001, the ticket revenue had dropped by about $5 million from the previous year. So what is the ministry doing that it makes it think it's going to get those ticket lottery revenues back up again, essentially by another $2 million? You're at $157 million in '99-2000, you dropped to $152.3 million, and your budgeting for this year is going back up again to $154 million. Based on what? The ticket lottery revenue has been fairly stagnant, if not dropping steadily, in the past years. What's making you be so optimistic about that?

The liquor and related income, again there's a $10 million increase in each of the three years being covered by this business plan: 2001-2002 is $478 million, then we're looking at 2002-2003, $487 million, and 2003-2004, $497 million. What is making this ministry believe that it's going to increase the liquor and related revenue by $10 million every year?

Now, I'm also interested that under expense we've got gaming research that is fairly stagnant. It's $1.5 million in '99-2000. The preliminary for 2000-2001 is $1.6 million, and it just stays on $1.6 million. It flat lines at $1.6 million across the rest of the board. So I'm wondering why research is not tied as a percentage of revenue. If you're expecting that revenue in all areas is going to proceed upward and at fairly consistent levels, why are you not tying the research to the problem gambling and problem gaming along with the rise in that revenue? Why are you assuming the revenues will go up but there's not greater need for the research to go up tied to that, or is this a deliberate attempt to just keep it down at that level?

I'm also interested in how many casino gaming terminals, which I would call slot machines, there are. How many were there last year, 2000-2001, and how many are you forecasting to have in operation in 2001-02, 2002-03, and 2003-04? I would also like the same figures with the video lottery terminals, please.

Now, when we look at the business plan on page 170 – and we're talking about the responsibility of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission – I'm wondering why the minister is not a vocal advocate for conflict of interest legislation that's covering all board members. This area in particular causes great, I think, alarm with constituents, and certainly I've heard from enough of them over the weekend, given the outcome of the Jaber trial at the end of last week. There's a real concern in gaming. There's the potential for a lot of money there, and there's the potential for a lot of trouble as a result of there being a lot of money there. We do not have conflict of interest legislation that covers board members. Certainly we know from the trial that one of Mr. Jaber's defenses was: well, he wasn't a government employee in being a part-time member of the then Liquor Control Board. Interesting there that someone that in fact was a political appointment didn't seem to see himself as that or didn't seem to see himself as connected to government.

I'm wondering why the minister is not a much more vigorous and vocal advocate for conflict of interest. I note that the conflict of interest legislation is up for review in two years. I don't think that given what's happening here, the government can afford to wait two years. Or maybe they don't mind the scandal. I don't know.

When I look at the AGLC vision – I'm aware my time's running out, but I will try to get in some more time later – I'm noticing that it includes: "provides opportunity for competition and enhanced services in its liquor and gaming industries." What competition in gaming is expected here? Is this competition between casino owners or bingo halls? What kind of competition is being encouraged with this?

I haven't heard my time go off yet. I'm going to keep going. [interjection] I take it, then, my 20 minutes for this go-around is up? Okay.

Thank you, and I'll cede the floor to one of my colleagues.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure this evening to rise to speak to the budget estimates for the Ministry of Gaming. I want to thank the minister and all of his staff for being here this evening. Certainly I have a number of questions that I hope they will answer in written form. I doubt that they'll have time.

In listening to some of the earlier comments made by the minister, one of his first comments was talking about a balanced choice. When I was looking in the Auditor General's report here as well, certainly he outlined the many challenges in a statement when he said:

From a policy perspective, the Ministry has the difficult task of balancing the interests of the government, the public, charitable organizations, and private businesses in decisions about future growth of the gaming and liquor industries. From a regulatory perspective, the Ministry faces the challenges of monitoring compliance with liquor, gaming and tobacco laws and agreements.

Certainly a huge, huge responsibility when we look at this, Mr. Chairman.

Then I go on to look at the mission statement for the ministry, and we see that it is to encourage integrity, transparency, disclosure, public consultation and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries to achieve the maximum benefit for Albertans.

This, of course, comes out of the business plan on page 165.

Now, then, in looking at all this and the concerns that we have, certainly those are major concerns. We do have an industry here that is huge, and it is growing. As well, we have taking place a review of the licensing policy for gambling here in the province, and this is going to be finished some time this summer. Hopefully that will be released soon after, and we won't have to wait and wait like we have for so many other reports.

In looking at this report that's going to be released and also studying the budget, I think that we are in for another period of rapid growth in the gambling and horse racing businesses, the gaming business. I think that certainly spells good news for some people that are in the business of gaming, but it certainly doesn't bode well for the average Albertan that probably is leaving too many of their dollars in there. Even though it is a choice activity, for some people it isn't a choice.

When we are looking at AADAC, for example, we are allowing the problem to escalate in this province. Certainly the resources that AADAC has are not adequate to meet that.

I see that in the gaming industry here in this province we have some other challenges that the department must look at as well. Of course, this year there is the very distinct possibility that casinos will be built on some of the First Nations' reserves. We also have the challenge of existing casinos expanding. We look at the possibility of electronic gambling in bingo halls. As well, in this whole issue we have in this province the possibility that we're going to create new forms of gaming rooms or minicasinos in hotels.

So with all of these indicators that this industry is growing and growing rapidly, I would like to know from the ministry: where is the broad public consultation that would be required in almost any other department before these changes take place? I'd also like to know: where is the public airing of all the issues? What opportunity has the public had to voice their concerns in the form of a debate?

Now, then, I move forward here to the core businesses, goals, key strategies, and measures, and I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre touched on this. Again, I look at performance measures here, and I see percentages. Now, when I only see percentages, I become very concerned, and there are a number of reasons why. First of all, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, we certainly don't know on what basis these percentages were arrived at. In other words, what questions were asked?

When I see only percentages, it doesn't give me any indication of the size of the sample that was used to arrive at these figures. I don't know if this is a random sample, if it's representative of all parts of this province, if it's a biased sample, and certainly those are key issues that somehow should be pointed out here. As well, I don't see anything in here that indicates what sort of control was used, that the information we gathered here is accurate.

As I mentioned, I am quite concerned from all indicators that I see in this budget about this being an expanding department and one where I think the controls, the doors are going to be cast open and we are going to have a huge increase in the gaming business here in this province. Some of this comes from page 168, core business 3. I look under expenses, and I see under Core Business: develop legislation, regulations, and policy for the gaming and liquor industries. I guess the figures that indicate to me that this is growing are when I look at comparable budget for 2000-2001, $73,377,000, and then I look for this particular fiscal year at $89 million. We're growing here by approximately 16 and a half million dollars. Then I see the targeted figure for 2002-2003 at $101,105,000 and again a target figure for the year 2003-2004 of $114,468,000.

We don't get those types of expenses without a huge increase in the gaming industry. So my question to the minister would be: what is proposed? Obviously people have some indication of what is going to happen in the gaming industry for the next few years. That would be my question at this point: what does the minister see for the expansion of gaming in this province even though there is a freeze on at this particular time?

Now, then, in the estimates the 2001-2002 gross operating estimate for the department is $217.363 million. This is an 18.7 percent, or $34.322 million, increase over the 2000-2001 preliminary actual budget. The year before, from 1999-2000 to 2000-2001, the department's budget only grew by 2.6 percent, which was an increase of $4.680 million. Again, everything looks like we are looking at a ministry here that is ever expanding, and certainly rapid expansion leads to its own problems.

So when we look, then, at the gross operating estimates, could the minister please provide a breakdown of the ministry's gross operating expense of $217.363 million for 2001-2002 by object for the following components? Could he please start that with salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephones and communications, and hosting expenses?

Will the minister provide a separate breakdown dealing specifically with the 18.7 percent, or $34.322 million, increase in his budget this year over last year? Again, I would surmise that this certainly is another indicator that we are going to have a gambling expansion after the review is completed and the regulations are put in place this summer. I'm wondering if this increase in demand in applications – are these the ones that are being placed in the department of gambling expansion this year?

Now, then, there is currently a freeze on gambling expansion in Alberta, and this is because of a current review within the department on policies and regulations. One of the key initiatives identified under gaming is:

Consider the recommendations from the gaming licensing policy review to ensure that the appropriate policies and procedures are in place to deal effectively with Alberta's growing and maturing gaming industry.

Of course, this is found in the Gaming business plan on page 164.

My questions to the minister. When will the current review of the gaming licences be completed? Could the minister please provide a list of who was consulted for the gaming licensing policy review? Again, as was brought up by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, certainly we would be most interested in knowing who all was consulted and what will happen in the way of a public airing of all the issues. Also, will public consultation as well as debate in the Legislature be allowed before lifting the freeze on gambling expansion? Will the minister commit to making public a full report including all details and recommendations made during the review before lifting the freeze on gambling expansion? Also, would the minister please provide a breakdown of all costs incurred in conducting the review? Again, what mechanisms has the minister put in place to deal with the recommendations from the gaming licensing policy review? Will it be publicly debated? Has a committee been struck to deal with the recommendations? If the minister could please provide those.

At this time I will cease with my questions and hopefully get an opportunity later to continue, and I will cede the floor to another hon. member.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make a few introductory comments about the Ministry of Gaming estimates, followed by some specific questions for the minister.

This is a government that increasingly relies on gambling as a source of provincial revenue. For the first time this budget year the ministry is estimating that profits from legalized gambling in Alberta flowing into government coffers will exceed $1 billion. Alberta is more dependant on revenues from legalized gambling than any other province in this country. Our per capita gambling revenues are the highest among Canadian provinces.

In the past decade there's been a 10-fold increase in the profits of the provincial government from legalized gambling. You don't have to look any further than page 211 of the estimates to find out where that money is. The huge expansion in government gambling revenues has resulted from the advent of electronic gaming, notably video lottery terminals located in bars and restaurants, and increasing gaming terminals located in casinos. There is no question that electronic gambling has been a huge cash cow for the provincial government, especially this provincial government. According to the estimates over 85 percent of the gambling profits come from electronic gambling, yet it is a relatively new form of gambling and we're still not clear what the long-term societal effects will be from this most addictive form of gambling.

AN HON. MEMBER: Hell and damnation, brother.

MR. MASON: You better believe it, brother.

One thing we know for sure: the amount of money being wagered on electronic gambling in this province is staggering. The government claims that over 90 percent of the moneys wagered on electronic gambling is paid back to gamblers in the form of winnings. If this is so, what it means is that more than $9 billion is wagered on electronic gambling in Alberta. So how much is $9 billion a year? It's more than $3,000 for every man, woman, or child in this province. In other words, about $5,000 per adult Albertan is being wagered on electronic gambling alone.

Now, the minister may say that 90 percent or more of this money is recycled back in the form of winnings from VLTs and slot machines. Well, that's fair enough, but let's not forget that when it comes to gambling, the people losing the money may not be the same people as the people winning the money. Secondly, an independent consultant Harold Wynne estimated that about 50 percent of the money wagered on VLTs and slot machines is wagered by the 6 percent of the population that are pathological or problem gamblers. Given all this, we need to be very cautious about further expanding electronic gaming in this province.

So my questions to the minister. Is the government considering lifting the $6,000 cap on the number of VLTs in Alberta's bars, restaurants, and hotels? The government is under pressure from the hospitality industry to raise the VLT cap, and I want the minister's assurance that no such decision will be made and certainly not without there being broad public consultation first. Second, what is the status of the proposal from the Alberta Hotel Association to allow so-called gaming rooms or minicasinos to be established in hotels? Again, will the minister assure the House that no such decision will be made without broad public consultation and debate in this Assembly?

My next question deals with slot machines in casinos. In recent years the government has allowed a huge increase in the number of slot machines. The government is under constant pressure to allow new casinos as well as to allow existing casinos to expand and add new slot machines. Is the government going to cave in to these pressures? Of course; there's money at stake. [interjection] Thank you, hon. Treasurer, for being clear about the government's priorities. What are the government's plans when it comes to the casino gambling industry in this province?

Now, my next question relates to the First Nations' gaming policy mentioned in passing in the ministry's business plan. Could the minister please elaborate on the status of the gaming policy? Most importantly, will First Nations' gaming policy, once implemented, lead to a further expansion of gambling in this province, or will First Nations people be given a piece of the existing gambling pie?

My next questions are related to the so-called racing industry renewal initiative. Page 203 of the estimates indicates that this is a new program under which $17.9 million will be paid by the ministry for this initiative. Now, this is an interesting point, Mr. Chairman, because the government of course makes a great deal about being out of business, but here is a subsidy, an outright subsidy for a declining industry in this province, being horse racing. Of course, everybody says that, well, it's really important, but you have to ask yourselves why the government is pouring money into supporting this declining industry.

Now, if you recall, in this most recent report the Auditor General rapped the government's knuckles for allowing racetracks in Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge to skim 33 and a third percent of slot machine revenue as retailer commissions rather than the 15 percent they were entitled to under the law. The government is responsible for enforcing the law, and when somebody receives too much money in a social assistance benefit or in a WCB claim, gets more than they're entitled to under the law or the regulations, they're required to pay it back. In fact, yes, the government gets rather heavy with them, and I suppose they should if they're not entitled to it. But when they do it in the horse racing industry, when Edmonton Northlands or the Stampede board or the Racing Corporation engage in a legal activity which entitles them to take millions of dollars that they're not entitled to, what does the government do? Well, so far, at least as far as this member knows, nothing.

I raised this before the election in the committee responsible for looking at the accounts of the government, and nothing was done; my motion was tabled. As far as I know, there are still about $18 million of illegal payments that have been retained by these organizations, and nothing's been done about it. So I would like to ask the minister: has anything been done to collect these debts? Will anything be done to collect these debts? If not, then I would like the minister to explain, preferably in the House and as well in writing, why the government doesn't see fit to go after these nonprofit organizations to collect the money that is rightfully the property of the people of this province. I'd like to know if the government is going to be replacing that with the $17.9 million. Is it the same money that is going into support of the rapidly declining horse racing industry, the same money that was taken illegally in violation of the law by these organizations?

The Auditor General also cited numerous other examples of the lack of accountability by the Racing Corporation, including that "the Alberta Racing Corporation has resisted attempts by the Ministry to direct how it should spend the resources provided to it." That's on page 116. The Auditor General then went on to give numerous examples of this lack of accountability. My question is: what is the government doing to make sure that the Racing Corporation is going to be more accountable? I would like that to be as specific as possible. I wouldn't be satisfied with just vague assurances that they're going to make the Racing Corporation accountable. So far the government has shown no desire to crack down on organizations who have taken more than their share from gaming revenues in this province in clear violation of the law. If they have to take it back, then the question is: are they just going to put it into a pot and then give it back to the industry in the form of a subsidy?

I would like to reiterate the question, Mr. Chairman: why has the government picked this particular industry to provide a direct subsidy of taxpayers' money to? Why hasn't it taken, for example, the taxi industry and done that? Why hasn't it taken the dairy industry? Maybe it has taken the dairy industry. I haven't been around long enough to find out.

I know that the government is ideologically opposed to government subsidies for inefficient and declining industries. They say so all the time, but here we have an example of millions and millions of dollars being poured into this industry, which really makes it the Swan Hills of gambling.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and let another member speak.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a number of questions, and I'll make it brief.

I would like to ask some questions about the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission itself, and I guess my first question is: how are the members for the commission selected? What are the criteria used in selecting members for the commission? What measures are in place to ensure that those members are not unfairly influenced by outside forces?

My further question is: are they required to report to the Ethics Commissioner on their financial activities? And I would ask if there is a restriction on their activities similar to the one that they impose on licensees. I quote from the act:

No liquor licensee or employee or agent of the licensee may

- (a) directly or indirectly borrow or receive as a gift from any liquor supplier or liquor agency money, an advance of money or anything of value [and]
- (b) request or accept a rebate or concession from a liquor supplier or liquor agency.

They impose that restriction on licensees, and I wonder if they operate under the same kind of restriction, Mr. Chairman.

I have some questions about the fines that are levied by the commission on licensees, and they're rather extensive. There was a recent fine of a vendor where the penalty was $10,000, and that was concerning a violation of the regulations where evidently there had been a supplier of liquor who had made an agreement with the vendor to sell the liquor of the supplier. I'm not sure if it was exclusively, but there was an agreement, and they came down very heavily on that and fined him $10,000.

There are some other fines. There are a number of them related to minors on licensed premises, and there seem to be an awful lot of them. I'd ask what's being done to address the problem. There seems to be sort of a scale. They start with a warning, then there's a $250 fine, and then it seems to escalate. So I wondered what's being done in terms of that problem.

I had another example. The second example that I wanted to look at was a penalty of $1,500 for the licensee Molson Canada. Again the misdemeanor, according to this, was trying to directly or indirectly sell, give, rent or lend any furniture, furnishings, refrigeration equipment, dispensing equipment, fixtures, decorations, paintings, signs, supplies or other equipment to a liquor licensee.

So there's an attempt to regulate that kind of activity, and I'd be interested in knowing if it applies equally to the members of the commission.

A number of questions about the social responsibility, and I really do have some concerns. The money in this budget from the lottery funds is rather extensive. There's $150 million for school facilities, $60 million for postsecondary facilities, a million dollars for school support, and transportation subsidies are $40 million: a lot of money going into education. There are citizens in the province who think it makes a difference where the money comes from. I refer to the bishop of Calgary, who has indicated that the Roman Catholic schools in that city are to look very carefully at where the money contributing to education comes from and specifically objected to the proceeds from gambling activities being funneled into schools. So in terms of social responsibility it's a good statement, but I'd like to know who makes that judgment. Who is responsible for that social responsibility judgment? Is there a performance measure? Is the public consulted and asked if they're happy with this state of affairs?

I think with those few brief comments I'll conclude. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I know I've got a little under eight minutes to try and cover everything that the other hon. members haven't already covered, so I will clip along here.

It is interesting for me to note – and I will preface this comment by saying that I understand that there's been a House leaders' agreement on this and that all parties have agreed – that in the last six years we've gone from three hours of debate on a given ministry to two hours of debate on a given ministry, and now we've got one hour of debate on a given ministry. As these ministries get larger and larger budgets and more and more complex, I just find it really interesting how this government moves to have less and less debate on the various budgets.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order
False Allegations

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Under Standing Order

23(h),(i), and (j) it's totally inappropriate for this member to suggest that the government is cutting down the amount of debate on budget when it was subject to a unanimous House leaders' agreement with respect to how budget and Committee of Supply would be handled and was approved unanimously by this House. That was an agreement that was brought together by virtue of the fact that the opposition members wanted all of budget estimates to be dealt with in the House, and we strived to find a process which would accommodate that. For this hon. member to suggest that somehow the government is trying to cut down debate is absolutely inappropriate and casts aspersion on the character of the House leaders who made that agreement, including her own House leader.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the point of order.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. If the minister had been listening carefully, he would have heard me preface the comments with my understanding that in fact it was covered under the House leaders' agreement.

I just wanted to raise the interesting comment that that's where we have come with the debates. So if the minister seems particularly touchy about it, well, I do apologize for that.

MR. MASON: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I see what the House leader is getting at. It certainly is correct that it was the subject of a unanimous agreement between the House leaders, and he may well have an excellent debating point, but I fail to see how it is a violation of the rules of the House or of any other member to simply try and blame the government for something they may or may not have done.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has apologized for making those remarks, and I believe we can proceed with debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I hope that was an interesting diversion for everyone.

MS BLAKEMAN: Now, the questions. I'm back under the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission business plan, and under the AGLC values it says, "is committed to operating according," and then it names a number of points. "Act with integrity and in a fair and impartial manner." Now, I'm wondering: what is the performance measurement for that? How in fact do we know that everything happened in a fair and impartial manner, or is this to indicate that they want to act in a fair and impartial manner? I'll leave it to the minister to explain that.

Another question. Since allowing the casinos to provide in-house cash and count room advisors, has there been any change in the number of discrepancies that are reported? Since the government is so keen on assessing satisfaction, has there been decreased satisfaction from the charities with having to deal with in-house cash or cage advisors? Certainly, in the past those independent advisors were really there for the best interests of the clubs, and I venture to say that we're putting the in-house advisors in an odd position in that they're now paid by the very casinos, so I suspect they're looking out more for the interests of the casinos than the clubs.

Under AGLC core businesses is listed "license and regulate charitable gaming activities." I notice that there's been some investigation by the department into charities which are providing recreational opportunities for adults. It was brought to my attention by the Edmonton Sport Council that a number of their member organizations had been investigated. I don't have the documents, so I can't quote specifically. Certainly, it had been indicated to them that there was some concern and that perhaps in fact these organizations should not even be eligible to hold raffles or casinos, bingos, or pull-ticket sort of activities. Could the minister please comment on whether that's going to change or what's going on there? Why are these various agencies being investigated?

When I look at the performance measurements under core business 2, "gaming activities are conducted in accordance with legislation, regulations and policy." Now, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had already gone through a number of those that were fine for various reasons. I'm noticing that in the performance measurements we're looking for compliance rates of 90 percent for bingos and casinos, 80 percent for pull tickets and raffles, and that compliance rate goes up slightly as we look at 2002-03 and 2003-04. What exactly is the breakdown of reasons for noncompliance, please, if those could be supplied?

A final question. I'm wondering if we could just get a refresher on where the government is with removing the VLTs from those municipalities that asked that they be removed. I know there was a court challenge about that, and I'm wondering where we are in that process and whether the minister has any idea about when these municipalities that voted the VLTs out – and that's got to be two years ago now – will actually get them out of their communities, although I note that the ministry continues to make money from their share of the proceeds of these while they remain operating.

I'm wondering if there's been any move or offer from the government to negotiate or mediate an end to this court challenge that's been put forward by the gaming casino owners. What exactly is being done around Internet gaming? What are the investigations there? What's the policy development that's happening? What studies have been done by this ministry? What does the literature review say on what other ministries have done? Can we please get the breakdown – and I'll echo some of my colleagues – on what exactly is coming forth for ventures with aboriginal-run casinos?

A couple of specific questions. In program 3, lottery funded programs, I'm noticing the Edmonton Northlands and Calgary Exhibition and Stampede are consistent in there at $7.1 million. Are these organizations grandfathered? They seem to get fairly consistent funding.

Just to close off in the last few minutes that I have here, I note that when we first started accounting for the lottery funding, 80 percent of the funds went to the quality of life initiatives that are essentially found under the community development section of the lottery fund summary of payments, and perhaps one could also add in what's found under the gaming component with the community lottery boards grants, major fairs and exhibitions, and some of those. Now when I look at the total amount of disbursements from the lottery fund, in fact those organizations have dropped, I think according to a pie chart I saw in here, to 8 percent.

Certainly a number of these other programs from different departments are now funded completely out of the lottery funds. I've always objected to this. The lottery funds were to be for enhancement of quality of life, and we're now paying for everything. Usually they're called one-time only grants, although I do notice that they're continuing to show up year after year.

In particular in the summary on page 206, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, agricultural initiatives, nothing is listed, yet there's a total on the page for $11.620 million. What is that? I'm also noticing that the funding for the Trans Canada Trail has been dropped, and I'm wondering why. Under Gaming, other initiatives, $11.102 million: exactly what are these other initiatives? Could I have them detailed, please?

I'll note that if we combine all of the original recipients of dollars from the lottery funds, we have $108.5 million. If we add in the new ones the government has come up with under Gaming, that's another $196.4, but the remaining $711 million is going to all of these other initiatives, including Children's Services, Health and Wellness, Infrastructure.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allocated for the consideration of estimates has now come to an end. We have five minutes set aside for the hon. Minister of Gaming to conclude debate.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the hon. members opposite for their keen interest in the estimates of the Ministry of Gaming, and I'd be pleased to follow up on any outstanding questions resulting from this evening that are germane to the review of the estimates of this ministry.

There are a few comments I'd like to make based on the questions that were raised. The first would be with respect to the gaming licence policy review. It was in December of 1999, I believe, that the then minister indicated that there would be a review, and it was in February of 2000 that the AGLC began the review of a provincial gaming licence policy. While that licensing policy review is under way, the AGLC has suspended consideration of requests to license or approve new casinos, casino expansions, casino relocations, new games, and new gaming environments except for some commitments that had been made prior to December 1999. It's currently estimated that that review will be completed sometime this summer.

I noted that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands made some comments with respect to problem gambling. The most recent information with respect to that issue in Alberta is as a result of an AADAC report entitled Adult Gambling and Problem Gambling in Alberta, 1998, which compares findings from its 1994 study. That particular report indicated at that time a significant decline in problem gambling rates. In 1998 4.8 percent of gamblers were problem gamblers and pathological gamblers, and that was down from 5.4 percent in 1994. So that is the best information relative to the Alberta situation and shows a downtrending situation.

I found it interesting that the members opposite were unaware of the detail of the First Nations gaming policy. It was the subject of a news release on January 19, 2001. The particulars can be found at the Gaming web site, which, of course, is www.gaming.gov.ab.ca, and I would encourage the hon. members to review that. It did make the press at the time and was the subject of some considerable comment, and as I recall it, it was a favourable comment from those reports that I did read.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre asked why I am not a vigorous and vocal supporter of legislation with respect to conflict of interest. That may have something to do with the fact that there is a code of conduct and ethics, including a portion relative to conflict of interest, that the AGLC has in place. They've had that in place for some time. The latest iteration is from 1998. It is extensive, and in particular it works well. This all is in aid of the ministry's goal that its business and operation be conducted with integrity, trust, impartiality, and in accordance with generally accepted standards of behaviour.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Gaming, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
 Operating Expense $217,363,000
 Lottery Fund Payments $1,015,949,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are you opposed? Carried.

Justice and Attorney General

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to open debate.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased tonight to present Alberta Justice's proposed business plan for 2001 to 2004 with the commensurate estimates. I'd indicate to the House that with me tonight in the members' gallery, of course, is the Deputy Minister of Justice and Deputy Attorney General, Mr. Paul Bourque; as well as Dan Mercer, the assistant deputy minister of strategic services; Shawkat Sabur, the executive director of financial services; Stephen Gauk, the senior manager of planning services in strategic management services; and, I believe, Betty Ann Hicks, my executive assistant in the minister's office.

I'd like to take just a few minutes now, and then at the end of the first hour I'll respond to questions to the extent possible but would be happy to provide written responses to any questions that can't be dealt with in the time frame provided. The business plan, of course, Mr. Chairman, reflects the new government organization responsibilities assigned to Justice and Attorney General. There were a number of changes to our goals and performance measures as a result of the creation of the Alberta Solicitor General. We'll continue to work in partnership with the Solicitor General to keep Albertans safe.

This, of course, is the second business plan since the Alberta summit on justice in January 1999. The summit brought together a broad cross section of Albertans and justice stakeholders to discuss a wide range of issues and concerns. Last year we implemented a number of key strategies that arose from the summit, and the focus of our business plan 2001 to 2004 is of course continued action in response to those recommendations. I might indicate, Mr. Chairman, that we asked the steering committee for that justice summit to continue on as the Justice Policy Advisory Committee in the sure and certain knowledge that implementation of the recommendations from the justice summit and providing access to justice to Albertans is an issue that is far broader than simply the Department of Justice and Attorney General itself.

In the business plan we've highlighted the many issues that impact the administration of justice, including public concern over perceived increases in crime and the complexity of our court system, and we'll continue to work to address the root causes of crime and address the challenge of delivering services that respond to cultural diversity.

Through our programs and services Alberta Justice is committed to the vision of a democratic and prosperous Alberta based on respect for the law, a province where all Albertans are safe in their homes and communities and have confidence in their justice system, and a province where disputes are resolved fairly and effectively. Our mission is to serve Albertans by promoting safe communities, by ensuring access to the courts and other methods of dispute resolution, by providing legal and related strategic services to the government of Alberta, and by communicating with Albertans about the administration of justice.

This year we've added core business information to our business plan to provide clarification for the public and our stakeholders, and I'd like to briefly outline the core businesses that make up our ministry's $220 million budget. Providing Albertans with access to the courts and other forms for resolving disputes is about 40.5 percent of our budget, or $89.3 million. About $30 million, or one-third of this amount, is required to pay judicial salaries. Providing legal services for vulnerable Albertans is $81.7 million, or 37.1 percent of our budget. These services consist of support for Legal Aid, the Public Trustee, maintenance enforcement, the medical examiner, and child-centered family justice. Prosecuting criminal and other offences with a continued priority on serious and violent crime and organized crime is 13.2 percent of our budget, or $29.1 million. Providing high-quality advice and legal services to government is $20.2 million, or 9.2 percent of the budget, and this consists of programs in civil law, Legislative Counsel, and law reform.

I know you've had an opportunity to review the five key goals in the business plan, so I won't go into them in detail. But I do want to mention a few highlights, Mr. Chairman, and talk about significant changes from previous years.

The government of Alberta business plan states that "Alberta will be a safe place to live and raise families," and promoting safe communities continues to be a goal for Alberta Justice. Achieving this goal is a shared responsibility, and we recognize the importance of building strong partnerships with the judiciary, the legal community, aboriginal communities, and our stakeholders in policing, community organizations, and local government. Alberta Justice has made a commitment to develop a new key performance measure for this important goal. Former measures such as crime rate are under a similar goal in the Alberta Solicitor General business plan.

Recognizing the needs of the victim in the criminal justice system helps to restore the balance of society in a humane and fair way and is an important goal of our justice system. Alberta Justice has made a commitment to develop a new key performance measure for this important goal. This performance measure will relate to victim satisfaction with the justice system and the success of prosecution service in vindicating the public interest through the prosecution of crime. Former performance measures related to this goal are in the Alberta Solicitor General business plan. While victim services are mainly the responsibility of the Alberta Solicitor General, Alberta Justice also supports victims in the criminal trial process through the work of Crown prosecutor public assistance units.

Alberta Justice will continue to focus on providing access to justice services for Albertans in need, improving access to civil and criminal justice, and providing effective legal services to the government of Alberta. Our performance measures for these goals remain unchanged from last year. The goal related to facilitating the rehabilitation of offenders and its accompanying performance measures is in the business plan for the Alberta Solicitor General, the ministry responsible for provincial corrections services.

The financial content of our business plan reflects Treasury Board approvals over the past year, federally funded programs, and funds for continuing initiatives. The spending profile on the last page of the business plan shows our spending targets of $220 million, $223 million, and $228 million over the next three years. This represents an overall decrease of $8.9 million, or 3.9 percent, for 2001-2002.

The primary reason for this decrease is the removal from our budget of $17.2 million in onetime funding relating to the Judicial Compensation Commission. The government agreed to implement the recommendations of this independent commission and fund its costs. Justice will continue to cover ongoing costs for judicial compensation, but onetime costs for the commission and for judicial pensions have now been removed from the budget.

Increases to the Justice budget have been minimal. We do however plan to continue our progress on justice summit initiatives and other priorities by carefully managing within our base funding. The strategic initiatives described in our business plan are primarily funded within our base. The only major increase to our budget is a much-needed increase of $4.7 million for Legal Aid. For 2001-2002 the grant paid to Legal Aid will increase by 20.8 percent, from $22.5 million to $27.2 million. These funds will be used by Legal Aid to expand its financial eligibility guidelines by 5 percent so that more low-income Albertans will be eligible for Legal Aid assistance.

In addition, compensation paid to private bar lawyers doing Legal Aid work will increase from $61 per hour to $70 per hour. The $61 per hour rate has been in place since 1991. It will also provide for a notional increase of $2 per hour until the rate reaches $80 per hour in 2005. Legal Aid will also be establishing a family law staff counsel pilot project in Edmonton and Calgary to ensure that there are lawyers available to help low-income families who need family law assistance.

Delegates at the justice summit identified access to justice and the cost of administering justice as major concerns. In response we've identified several strategies to address these concerns. Early case resolution is an initiative to reduce unnecessary court attendance by victims and witnesses as well as reduce the time to trial. It also identifies at the earliest possible time whether a restorative alternative, such as alternative measures or an early guilty plea, is appropriate.

We will continue to explore communication opportunities with Albertans to improve public understanding of the justice system. Through our education co-ordinator strategy we'll identify gaps in current programs and resources aimed at helping Albertans understand the judicial system and develop and implement strategies to address these needs in partnership with justice stakeholders.

Improving support for Alberta families through family law reform continues to be a key initiative for the ministry. Our planned reform of family law is an ambitious undertaking that will require great sensitivity and effort. Consultation with the legal community, the judiciary, the Law Reform Institute, and public and other stakeholders will be a key part of this process. After its own extensive consultation with Albertans the United Family Court Task Force has made recommendations on how access to the courts can be improved for those involved in family law disputes.

In 1998 the MLA review on the maintenance enforcement program recommended significant improvements to communications with clients and an increased collection capacity. To address these recommendations, $1.4 million has been committed to develop a client services strategy, fully staff needed areas, and deal with classification adjustments.

The MLA review also recommended significant improvements to maintenance enforcement's information system and technology, and for 2001-2002 $1.2 million has been allocated to design a new management information system intended to improve service and reporting ability.

Initiatives to improve the justice system's support to families are also being planned using $2.7 million in federal funding for families in need that will be received over the next two years. We're working with child and family services authorities to expand our child welfare mediation program across the province. Right now it's only available in Edmonton and Calgary.

That will conclude my opening remarks. I'd be happy to take any questions that members might have and, as I indicated earlier, would be happy to respond in writing to those that can't be responded to tonight.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for his overview. He's already provided some information that I was looking for. I'm assuming that we're joined by staff from the Justice ministry in the members' gallery, and I welcome them. I see we also have some other observers joining us tonight, and I welcome you.

Now, the minister has already gone over the four core businesses of the Justice department, but I'm noticing that when I look at the government business plan on page 28, the only key strategy in the government business plan for this three-year period from 2000 to 2004 that's specific to the Justice department is, as the minister mentioned, to "improve support for families through family law reform." I'm wondering why issues like access to justice and maintenance enforcement, for example, don't rate mention, that the only one mentioned is the improved support for families.

Now, when I look at the core businesses of the Justice business plan for 2001 to 2004, obviously one of the directions that the ministry is going in under prosecutions is early case resolution, and the program that they have in place for that – I suppose others would know that as plea bargaining. Specific to pages 259 to 260 I have the following questions. What are the anticipated savings of the early case resolution program? Has the minister considered the possible impacts on community safety of this program of restorative diversion, alternative measures, stepped-up plea bargaining, and the dropping of prosecutions? What has been the analysis around possible impacts on that?

One of the components of early case resolution is "the reduction of unnecessary witness attendance through discussions with defense counsel." I'm wondering if the recent Jaber influence peddling case, where there was just an agreed-upon statement of facts and no witnesses were called at all, is an example of this reduction of unnecessary witness attendance through the early case resolution program. I myself was in the courtroom for the sentencing and noted, again, that the judge indicated a concern about the lack of any witnesses. I'm wondering if the minister has had any other feedback on other cases from the judiciary or other concerned parties about this method employed to achieve early case resolution.

Under the courts and access to justice, which is a very keen interest of mine, and particularly access to justice for women. There have been a number of reports and documents produced over the last 10 years documenting the difficulties that women have in accessing the justice system. I'm wondering if the minister or any of his staff are aware of the project being done out of Calgary by Women Looking Forward, which is exactly on women's access to justice, and if they've had an opportunity to review this. I think at one point I did in fact table in the House an early outline of what that program was going to be. What specifically is around this? What measures are in place in this budget to improve access to justice for women in this province?

It continues to be an issue, I know, for many of us that are dealing with constituent concerns, and of course I end up hearing a lot of maintenance enforcement cases in my office. It certainly appears to me that women just get beaten down by the system. They just get hauled back in there so many times. You know, they're working on minimum wage jobs. They're losing money when they're not at work. They're paying for parking and baby-sitters. They just can't afford it, and they give up. In doing so, they are giving up their opportunity to achieve justice for themselves. The system is just stacked against them. It's still very much a culture of men, where things like parking and baby-sitters just aren't an issue. What work has been done there?

Still on access to justice. Given that the access to courts and other dispute resolution processes is now one of the only four core businesses left after splitting off with the Solicitor General side of the Justice department, could the minister explain why it is that the estimates for court services decreased from the gross comparable 2001 preliminary actual figure of $100.7 million to $84 million in this budget 2001-2002? I'm wondering, since the 1999-2000 figure was at $83 million, why it was not maintained at this higher actual figure that's coming from the 2000-2001 budget year.

Now, looking under goal 4, "improve access to civil and criminal justice," which is found under the key performance measurements on pages 263 and 325, we're talking about median elapsed time from first to last appearance in provincial criminal court. I'm wondering why the target in recent years has been raised to the Canadian median. Why, in a province that prides itself on being first, biggest, best, fastest, and funniest, have we chosen a Canadian median here and not attempted to aim higher? I'm wondering also why this is the only measure of improving access. Is anything being looked at about elapsed time in the Court of Queen's Bench, criminal, or the provincial civil court and Queen's Bench civil matters? What about family court, traffic court, youth court, and the Court of Appeal? What are the measurements for their elapsed times? I'm not seeing anything about that in there, but perhaps the minister can enlighten me.

Certainly in this House we have seen something of the issue of replacing court reporters with tape recorders. I know that we had court reporters in here and were introducing them and questions were asked. I'm wondering how much money has been saved thus far by replacing court reporters with the tape recorders?

MR. BONNER: What's the efficiency of it?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, what's the efficiency of it? Exactly.

With any new system like this, there are bound to be bugs that have to be worked out. What has the minister or the department staff received as feedback from the judiciary, court clerks, litigants, the bar, or anyone else that's involved with this process?

Was there a cost comparison done prior to the move to this? It did seem to be a fairly sudden move to this in the last fiscal year, and I know it caused a great deal of upset. What made the ministry believe that this was a good way to go? What kinds of other programs have they looked at in other jurisdictions that told them this was going to be a good idea? I have found before that this government says it's consulted and looked at other things, and once the program is already implemented and we go back and look and double-check, in fact there was no evaluation done. So we're past the fact now. I'm going back and questioning the minister on exactly what it was they were looking at or consulting with that made them determine that this was a good idea.

Moving on to legal services to government and sticking to the Attorney General functions. This is an area where the Justice department lawyers are acting on behalf of other departments. Under goal 5, providing "effective legal services to the government of Alberta," a key performance measurement is client ministry satisfaction with legal services. We have a target of 95 percent, but how is this measured? Is this an opinion poll of ministers who've used Justice lawyers? If other ministries are so satisfied, then my question is: why does the use of outside counsel keep expanding at ever increasing costs? If everybody is so satisfied, why aren't we handling more matters in-house? But we're not. We're having more outside legal counsel and more expensive outside legal counsel. So what's with this target of 95 percent? If we're that satisfied, why aren't we using it?

I know that one of the other members is covering the Auditor General's report on Justice, but I just hooked into this one specifically. In the '99-2000 report the Auditor General recommended "that the Department of Justice enhance its systems for managing and reporting on the cost-effectiveness of legal services, including contracted services." The government noted it in its response to the Auditor General's recommendations on fine collections activity, but it's silent on the recommendation of legal services, and I'm wondering why that is. Why the picking and choosing of responses here? If they were willing to comment on the AG's recommendation on fine collections, why is the department silent on the recommendation on legal services?

I'm continuing on in the same area, which is legal services to government. Has the department been taking steps to review the cost-effectiveness of legal services including contracted services? What steps to review cost-effectiveness have been taken in relation to the services provided by in-house Justice lawyers? Has the department concluded its review of the cost of the outside counsel hired in the Stockwell Day defamation suit? We're told by reliable sources that the Justice department officials attended on the offices of this outside counsel to scrutinize matters relating to the Stockwell Day defamation suit. Have any conclusions been reached by the department about the appropriateness of the legal bill in that case? Are there any plans to have the bill of costs in that case taxed by a taxing officer of the court? Could it be said that the lawyers in this case gave good value for money, or how is that being determined? What criteria has the department used to evaluate that?

Now, in respect to the Legislative Counsel office – and I'm on page 319 here – this being the office in the Justice department that helps draft government bills. In fact, we saw an example of that today where we had Bill 10 coming back in – this was on the Traffic Safety Act – and it was doing cleanup on the amendment act that was passed a year or two ago. At that time it was Bill 24, and it was having to correct a number of inconsistencies and small omissions from that earlier bill.

So when I look at the Legislative Counsel office – and I understand that in this session's miscellaneous statutes amendment bill the government is seeking to correct numerous errors in legislation that has already been given royal assent 18 months ago. Apparently these errors were not picked up until legal counsel for client groups scrutinized the legislation long after it was drafted with the assistance of Legislative Counsel. My question is: does the Legislative Counsel office have sufficient resources to do its job, or does this demonstrate the need for all-party scrutiny of bills in the committee stage, as is done federally and in other provinces?

Certainly this issue contains a number of other issues that I've brought forward before: the need for the Law and Regulations Committee to be meeting, the need for there to be sufficient time from first reading of the bill for opposition members to circulate the bill through stakeholder groups in the community and get feedback from them in time for us to be incorporating that into our presentations back into the Assembly. You know, you just can't do a 24-hour or a 48-hour turnaround when you're trying to contact nonprofit groups in the community or individuals in the community and get them to give you some feedback. What additional support is being considered here for the Legislative Counsel office? I'll admit that I'm not a lawyer, but it sure seems to me like there's a great deal of pressure being brought to bear here, and additional resources may well be appropriate. What is the government's assessment of that? I'd be interested in hearing.

Now, the maintenance enforcement program is a particular interest of mine. I think I'm now in the 14th year of working on this issue. I'll start on some of my questions with that, but I may well have to return later to complete my questioning.

When we look at the performance measurement, "the amount collected on Maintenance Enforcement Program files," this just drives me wild. For starters, why was the target reduced for 2000-2001? We have a target here of $3,025 per file. When you divide that by 12 months, we're coming out with about $252 per month. Now, child maintenance awards have finally come into the real world and are generally much higher than that, more in the $400 or $500 range per child. So when we're looking at an average collection of $252 a month, we're pretty low here. Does the minister consider that this is a low target, or does he feel that this is an appropriate target?

We also have the way the ministry is assessing their success in collecting. We're still not dealing with the fact that a file is considered collected if only a dollar has been recovered into the account in a given month. So we can say that we've got 75 percent of our files having activity in them, which is what tends to be measured here, activity, but that in fact could be a whole bunch of files where there's been a partial payment of a ridiculously small amount. The point of this is that that money is to be going out to the children, and I still feel we're failing the children in our administration of this. I recognize that the minister has come a long way in strengthening what's needed for this program, but it is achingly slow in my opinion.

Now, I went back and pulled the maintenance enforcement MLA review and started going through what had been committed to. I won't go into the legislative side of it, because obviously that was accomplished with the legislation, but there were a number of other issues that I've been bringing forward with the minister over the years through written questions and motions for returns and questions in question period to track what is happening here. I heard the minister say that $1.2 million had gone into computers. I missed the second figure that he mentioned about the grids, pay scales for the employees. The computers: again, that's something I've been asking about for years. When I asked about it in the last session, in fact it came up that the whole computer database package was going to tender. It hadn't even been bought and put in place and implemented and all of that, and that was some two years after the MLA review had recommended that that happen.

So at this point we've got $1.2 million in there. Does that mean that the computer system has been purchased and is up and running? Or what exactly is this . . .

MR. HANCOCK: We haven't approved the money for it yet.

MS BLAKEMAN: We haven't approved the money for it yet. That has not stopped this government from going ahead and spending money. Afterwards, I'm pretty sure that we've had an interim supply bill in front of us and also a supplementary supply bill. So that hasn't stopped the government in the past, although I appreciate the minister's own commitment to not doing that.

So I'd like to know where we are in this process. Are we still tendering this thing? If it hasn't been purchased yet because you're waiting for approval of these funds, how long until we actually have this system up and running? We're now three years after we said we would do this, and we've got all these different databases and computers in there of varying ages and capability which for the most part don't talk to one another, which is a staggering state of affairs in the year 2001 given the capabilities of computers.

I understand I've reached the end of my time. Thank you very much. I shall return again later.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few comments that I would like to make this evening on the Justice estimates, and I would like to thank the minister and the members of his staff who are here with us this evening to try and answer our questions.

In looking over the Justice business plans and without trying to repeat what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has said, I want to first look under these business plans at courts and access to justice. I look at two particular groups that in the past session I had the opportunity to work with. One was the Disenfranchised Widows Action Group, and the other was a number of injured workers throughout this province. Both did not have access to the justice system in a manner in which they could afford representation. They certainly didn't have the resources so that they could pursue their action because they were not getting any degree of satisfaction or timely resolution to their issues. So certainly in looking at these situations, access to justice for all Albertans and all Canadians is a vital issue.

I look at two reports that were done, one by an all-MLA government committee in reviewing operations with the WCB and also one by Justice Samuel Friedman, which certainly indicated that the whole system in the WCB is not a level playing field, that it is tilted in favour of the employers in this province, and that the injured worker, again, is one of those people who doesn't have the resources or the skills, in many cases, to represent themselves, so as a result they end up in a long series of frustrating events tied up in the WCB system and certainly with no access to the courts.

Moving along, then, I had the opportunity last summer to listen to Jesse Jackson. Jesse made a very important point about the poor people in the United States, and I think it's very applicable to what is happening in Canada. He went on to say that in the United States today the poor people aren't our new immigrants who have come to the United States. He went on to say that it is not our seniors who have retired and are living on fixed incomes. The poor in the United States today are mothers with young families. In looking at a number of statements that have been made, certainly this is a group whose incidence in this province is rising and who are having more and more difficulties raising those children.

So in looking at the access to justice, I want to look at what measures are in place in this budget to improve access to justice for women in this situation, for young mothers and their families. As well, what I want to know from the minister when we look at the whole issue of maintenance enforcement – when a mother can pick up a phone, make one phone call and find where her ex is, yet the department that is in charge of maintenance enforcement has not been able to locate this person for four years, then I think we have to have a major review as to the processes that are going on in order to find these people who are not honouring maintenance enforcement and who certainly are putting demands on this province by not fulfilling their own responsibilities.

Now, then, as I mentioned earlier, other people in this province who don't have access to justice are certainly the injured workers, and not all injured workers. There would be a very, very small percentage of them, but there are very severely injured workers in this province and there are workers in this province who have injuries which have left them in a situation where they will never be able to return to the type of work they did before the injury, yet they are tied up in the system in WCB that keeps them there for quite a while.

Now, I know there is a connection here, and that connection is the fact that in many of these cases their issue is not with their former employer, but their issue is with the WCB, whether it be a medical adviser whose opinion differs widely from any panel of experts they have. These are people who have attended programs sponsored by WCB and been injured at those programs, yet they don't have the opportunity to get outside of WCB, to get into the justice system. They certainly aren't in violation of the Meredith principle, which made this a no-fault insurance. So this is certainly an instance where injured Albertans don't have access to the justice system and have been denied access to it by a cumbersome process, certainly a situation I do hope is addressed in the reports that are presently being prepared on the WCB and our appeal system.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre asked a number of questions, and she was looking here particularly at legal services for vulnerable Albertans. One of the issues she didn't bring up that I would like to touch on is this whole issue of legal aid. The support for legal aid, which is found on page 320, is increasing from $22,542,000 to $27,242,000, with the stated goal of (a) making legal aid accessible to more Albertans and (b) establishing a family law staff counsel pilot project in the legal office. So my question to the minister: how much of that increase will be allocated to operating the family law project and how much to the general legal aid fund? As well, what are the expected demands of the family law staff counsel's office, and are there sufficient funds being allocated to that office?

Now, I notice here as well under performance measures the number of eligible Albertans receiving legal aid services. This is from page 263. Why was the 2000-2001 target lower than the 1999-2000 target, and have sufficient funds been allocated to achieve the target of over 10,000 more recipients in 2001-2002? Will the province be participating in the upcoming national review of legal aid?

We also have a strategic objective of "access to justice and cost of administering justice," again very, very key issues. Improving public understanding and knowledge about the justice system is outlined on page 260. What exactly is the education strategy described in the business plan, and when will it be completed? Also, what is the expected cost to the government and to the justice stakeholders? Will this put a strain on the limited resources of the stakeholders?

Now, then, another strategic objective is "support for families." This is found on pages 260 and 261. I do have a few questions here that I would like to ask the minister. My first question is: why is there no performance measure for the family law system? When will the family court initiative pilot project be expanded to other judicial centres in this province? What are the main findings of the Unified Family Court Task Force that has now reported to the minister? Is the minister planning to establish a unified family court in the Court of Queen's Bench or Provincial Court? Isn't it true that the Provincial Court will not be able to handle all aspects of family law, including divorce, making it a less effective forum for a unified family court? If the minister were heading in the direction of a unified family court in the Court of Queen's Bench, does he have an estimate as to how many more federally appointed judges would have to be allocated to Alberta? Does he have an estimate of how much money would be freed up to allocate to family law services with the appointment of more federal judges?

Finally, just a few more questions here on support for families. What form will consultations with respect to family law reforms take? Will they be public hearings? How will the public be able to make submissions? Will the consultations take place over the summer holidays with very little advance notice to interested stakeholders? Again, this whole issue of public input, public consultation, and the public's ability to address the issues as seen from their eyes is certainly a very, very critical point.

So at this time, Mr. Chairman, I would certainly like to close my comments and leave some time for other hon. members here to address these issues when it comes to dealing with the Department of Justice.

Thank you very much.

10:00

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. There were a few other questions that I wanted to get in around maintenance enforcement, and I'm aware that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods also had a series of questions, so I'll try and get in a bit more time now.

The performance measurement for maintenance enforcement was dropped out of the new business plan, and I'm wondering why. There used to be a performance measurement for client satisfaction with the services of the maintenance enforcement program. I've spoken often about using satisfaction surveys as an indicator of performance of the government, and I'm not keen on them. In this case I'm wondering if the reason it was dropped was that the satisfaction level was so low. In '97-98 we were at 54.9 percent; '98-99, 57 percent; and '99-2000, 60 percent. But the entire thing has disappeared now, and I'm wondering why this was changed. In fact, I don't see any performance measurement around maintenance enforcement, but I might have missed it.

I'd like to sort of go through and do an update on the maintenance enforcement program and where it's at today. One of the recommendations was good client relations, and the response from the government or the action that was going to be taken was: customer service strategies being developed. This was in the response in '98 to better respond to clients, and I'm wondering where that customer service strategy is at. I still get very stressed and despondent creditors coming forward who cannot seem to get any response. They're supplying information about where the debtor is working, their licence plate number, their bank account numbers, their tax returns, and still they don't seem to be getting any money or much money coming forward. Where is the department now with that customer service strategy?

The assessment of client satisfaction was to be considered a fundamental measurement to map success, and as I have just pointed out, that performance measurement got dumped. I'm noticing that the response was that feedback mechanisms were to be developed, including an annual client survey and a system to track and analyze complaints. Well, the client survey doesn't seem to be turning up anywhere. If it does exist, could I get a copy of it, please? What is the system that's in place now to track and analyze complaints?

There was a move to better educate people as to what exactly the department did, which I applauded at the time, because I think many people were misled in believing that the primary function of the department was to secure maintenance enforcement for creditors. In fact, I think the primary function was to secure the subrogated arrears or subrogated amounts owing to the government. That's where it started. That was the function of it at the beginning. In fact, for years we had problems where MEP lawyers wouldn't go to court on behalf of a creditor who did not have any part of their arrears subrogated. The lawyers just wouldn't go to court for them at all, and when they did go to court, then they were only interested in securing the subrogated amounts and would often bargain away . . . I'm sorry.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, the noise level is getting pretty high. The chair is unable to hear the speaker. Please tone down. Thank you.

You may proceed.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm delighted that the chairman is so interested in hearing me. I'll try and get a little closer to the microphone to enable him there.

I was talking about the attempts at the beginning to let people know what the department was really capable of doing for people. Certainly for families that are expecting a court-ordered payment of, you know, $500 a month per child and there are a couple of children involved there and they're not getting any money at all month after month after month, this is a very difficult way to live. There is a large number of people, tens of thousands in this province, who are under the maintenance enforcement program who are in that position. They never know when the money's coming, if it's going to come at all, and they're very frustrated. They certainly look to the department staff to be giving them information. So what is happening with that?

There was to be telephone technology with a voice response system providing 24-hour information. There were periodic updates through newsletters and income statements. How many of these things are implemented at this time? There were to be staff development programs to include procedures, technology, and customer service modules. Did that happen? In fact, did that get implemented? Is it still running? What is the evaluation of the success of that? Is the department looking at making any changes in that area? Certainly I had brought forward to the minister a number of times that the staff – I felt they should have been recruited with a collections background to be able to do the job better. I'm wondering if in fact that was implemented or if we were just moving people around from other government positions in other departments. I understand the need, and it's a noble idea that the government would look after its employees, but this is a very specialized area. Where did we get with that?

What happened with the idea that client status change reports would be sent to creditors when there is a change in the payment amount? I still get calls. I've got a case that I'm working on right now. It came in about three weeks ago: couldn't find out when things were happening, wasn't being informed of this, had all kinds of different dates. The dates she gave me turned out to be dates for different things. So it doesn't sound to me like that client status change report is happening. If it is, how successful is it? I mean, I've just gone through five different recommendations from the MLA review that were undertaken by the government. There are a number of areas there that there could be performance measurements taken on. I'm wondering if any or all of these are being anticipated as a performance measurement. Or is it used as an internal performance measurement in the department?

There were to be new communications procedures to quickly deal with complaints. Did that happen? Are results being monitored to improve program effectiveness? I have spoken a little bit about the redevelopment of the mainframe technology projected in three years. Well, we're at the end of the three years and we still don't have the computer in place and the mainframe technology. We're now going into our fourth year on this, and the money is in the budget now to actually install the computer. I asked the questions already about when it is going to be installed and what kind of performance measurement is going to be in place around that.

The staffing levels was the other area that the minister talked about and the physical facilities. Now, were the physical facilities enhanced, or were they able to move to a different place? I know that a few years back they were basically working out of the same offices that they'd been in since the establishment of the program. It had been rearranged; they couldn't count the number of times. It was not a working atmosphere that was conducive to lowering stress, which was a real problem amongst the staff at the time. Have they been relocated? Have the premises been renovated? What is happening with their physical facilities, and where are we with the staffing levels?

The minister spoke very briefly – and I haven't had a chance to look at the Blues – about what was happening with the grid payments. At the time we looked at this, reviewed it, there were a number of staff people that were in part-time and wage positions and temporary positions. There was a recommendation that staff get put into – it's actually in here – full-time positions and full-time salaried positions. I believe most of that happened, but I'm checking on that. How many of the staff are salaried full-time? How many are salaried part-time? How many are on a contract or a fee for service, and how many are on wage? I'd also be interested at this point in how many in biquarterly reports for the last fiscal year were off on WCB stress leave and long-term disability. If the minister can report on those as well.

Now MEP was also to initiate a three-year business plan. We are at the end of that cycle. What does the new business plan look like? I'm not seeing it in these budget books. So if I could have a copy of that business plan, I'd appreciate it. The three-year business plan: we were at the end of the cycle. What's the new cycle? What's the new business plan for maintenance enforcement?

Was the corporate culture of service to clients through training and improved business processes in fact put into place? Oh, yes, there it is. I was looking for the recommendation to convert project and wage positions to permanent positions. That was recommendation 20. It says in my notes here that it was completed on August 15, '98. I'm inquiring on what the current status of that is and whether there's been any slippage backwards.

The special unit. What has been the evaluation of the special unit that was established to handle particularly difficult or chronic cases? I'm wondering if we are deeming that a success. Is it useful? Is it cost-efficient? I had great hopes and expectations around that unit. Have they been met? What is the department's evaluation of that? There was some talk about referring difficult cases to private-sector collection agencies. Is that being done currently? If so, what is the cost to the program of doing that, and how many cases are being referred out to private collection agencies?

I understand and I share concern – I hope I share concern with the minister about this program. It's one that's vital to mostly women and children, but certainly there are some men who are creditors, and anything we can do to improve that program certainly has the support of this member.

I would like to say to the minister and his staff that overall I have found the business plans put forward by this department to be the clearest that I have read, and I commend the department on that. I think this was certainly the easiest estimates that I read. They were clear and had good explanations of where we were going. The truth is that in many ways this department is going in the direction the Official Opposition would like to see them go in. Many of the concerns that have been raised by my predecessor the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, who was the previous Justice critic – and she certainly pushed hard in a lot of different areas. The ministry has stepped up to the bar on that one. I do want to make that clear to the ministry, that I think they're doing a good job. Of course, I'm always going to ask them to do better. I think for the most part we're dealing with some interesting problems that are difficult to attain. In fact, our crime rates are dropping, but the perception of crime by people continues to rise. So how do we as a government and as legislators deal with that difference in perception?

I'm aware that others are waiting to speak, so I won't go on much longer. The other areas of concern, of course, generally are activity around gang problems and the prosecution. We had that huge gang case that came up and then was withdrawn and then came back again. We built an entire courthouse for it. Just as an individual following this in the paper, it seems to be a huge schemozzle. What has been learned from that? Where can we go in the future to do it better? What kind of money did that entail for the department? Is there additional money in this year's budget to deal with anticipated other cases that are coming forward there?

So my thanks for the opportunity to speak to this budget again. I look forward to the written responses from the minister. I know he's got a good reputation for timely and full responses to questions. I will relinquish the floor to my hon. colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Two things. One, after the complimentary remarks of my predecessor I'm almost afraid to offer any criticism or ask any questions, but I will. The second thing is that I intend to introduce an amendment, and I thought I would do that at the conclusion of my remarks. It's available for distribution.

I would like to ask a few questions, one about performance measures. We've been in the business of formulating business plans for almost 10 years. Given that, I guess my question is: why is there such a paucity of performance measures in the Department of Justice? The number that we have in this business plan is down from what we had previously, and a number have been dropped. I wonder if we could have some explanation.

The public perception of safety as a performance measure has been dropped. That was an important measure except that it was given on a global, provincewide basis, and I think to have meaning to residents, it somehow or other had to be broken down. I say that from experience in my constituency, where the perception is that it has a high crime rate, given some recent gang activity, when in fact the crime rate for the constituency is the second lowest in the southeast part of the city. So the public perception of safety I think is an important measure, and it's one that has to get out to citizens.

I noticed that somewhere at the beginning of the preliminaries of the business plan there was talk about putting material on a comprehensive web site, but I just note that the city of Edmonton police department has a web site with crime rates for different districts in the city. It's obviously not being accessed by a very large number of people, or the perception that stays out there that crime rates are high and rising in a particular constituency and are a matter of concern wouldn't be there.

I wonder about the performance measures. The victimization rate was dropped as a performance measure, and the crime rate was dropped as a performance measure. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated, the client satisfaction with the services of the maintenance enforcement program was dropped from the department. So it's a bit of a concern.

To go back to the crime in our constituency and the problems we've had, one of the things that struck me – and maybe the minister has some suggestions – was the lack of any one place the community could go to for help. They met with the federal Minister of Justice. I know they contacted the minister's office. The community held town hall meetings. There were a number of efforts. They have met continually with the police department. Yet there didn't seem to be any kind of leadership that came forward from the provincial government that would help them in terms of dealing with the problem within the community, that would point them to some resources and would even provide resources. I wonder if that's being considered by the department as something they might legitimately become involved in?

There are a great number of questions about the performance measures. Some have been indicated already. The Auditor General was a little testy in one of his recommendations. He's indicating that he's been asking for performance measures in a particular area since 1994 and 1995, and those measures still haven't been forthcoming. So those are very brief comments and don't do justice in any way to the ministry and the work that's before us.

There is one line item that I find really very difficult, and it's the one I would like to make an amendment on, Mr. Chairman, if I might. I'd like to propose an amendment to the Committee of Supply.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll refer to the amendment as amendment A1.

DR. MASSEY: Has it been distributed, Mr. Chairman?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: No, it hasn't. Once you move it, it will be distributed.

DR. MASSEY: Okay. I'd like to move:

Be it resolved that the estimates for the standing policy committee on Justice and Government Services under reference 1.0.7 of the 2001-2002 estimates of the Department of Justice be reduced by $95,000 so that the operating expense and capital investment to be voted is $193,564,000.

I'll wait a minute while that's being distributed.

Mr. Chairman, that is the amount of money that's in the budget for the standing policy committee, and I think the standing policy committees have caused enough difficulty and should at least be reviewed by the government. First of all, only government members sit on those committees. I've attended a number of the policy committees, and I guess I am appalled at the way some presenters are treated. Some are treated rather shabbily. Some are even treated in a hostile manner by government members. I'm also concerned that it's used as an opportunity by some government members to chastize various interest groups in the province. This is a committee being paid for out of taxpayer money, and I find it inappropriate.

I have long held that feeling, and I know it's been shared by a number of my colleagues over the years. I think it was really reinforced this last July, when the former Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner made some comments in the local press about standing policy committees. That member indicated two things if I remember correctly, Mr. Chairman. The gist of his remarks was that the standing policy committees are make-work committees for government members. The second thing he said, and I guess more important, was that he indicated that the committees had absolutely no power. I think that coming from a committee member and a government member is very, very telling. That's why I have moved this amendment to have the money for the standing policy committee removed from the budget.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Anybody else on the opposition front who would like to speak to the amendment? Okay. Anybody else who would like to speak on the amendment before we call the vote? Okay.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Does anybody else wish to speak further to the estimates before I call upon the hon. minister to close debate? The hon. minister to close debate.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should have risen to speak to the amendment, I guess, but perhaps you'll allow me the indulgence. I was going to reply to some of the questions that were asked tonight, and I hope to get to a couple of them. We will table responses to the questions in due course. But I couldn't let the amendment go by, because the comments about the efficacy of the standing policy committees are really, really inaccurate and must be corrected on the record.

Standing policy committees provide a very, very important function in this government. For one thing, ministers such as myself have to take a business plan through the standing policy process for critical review and analysis in the drafting and formative stages before they're brought forward to the House, which is a very, very useful process, and have to take our annual reports through the standing policy committees on that basis as well. So those are very, very good opportunities for members of the standing policy committee to address issues.

Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, it's unique, I think, in the parliamentary system where budgets go through an in-depth review process before the Treasurer is able to table them. That's, in effect, what the business plans are here. The budget is a compilation of all of the business plans of all of the departments, and the estimates are brought forward in those business plans. They're not just something that the Treasurer stands up and delivers in this House. They're something that goes through a significant process before they get to this House and a significant process which could only be done in the context of a standing policy committee made up of government members because of the traditions of the parliamentary process. Nonetheless it is a very effective scrutiny of those estimates, and a lot of work goes into those estimates before they actually get to the House. So a very important role.

The standing policy committees also play a very important role, Mr. Chairman, in terms of development of government policy prior to going through the process of bringing legislation to the House. Legislation doesn't just appear out of thin air. Legislation comes from policies which are scrutinized, developed, brought through the standing policy committee process to cabinet through caucus and then back through the legislative process. Again, most of our members participate vigorously in that process, and I know that I participate vigorously in that process in many areas not in my own department but in other departments of government where I have an interest as an MLA and want to get a hand in on what government policy is. So I couldn't let the comments about the standing policy committee go by unchallenged. They're a very effective, innovative way for government to develop and deal with policy.

I do appreciate the comments from Edmonton-Centre on the effectiveness of the Department of Justice and the way in which it carries out its business and develops its plan. I appreciate those comments very much.

I'll start off by commenting on the question of performance measures that Edmonton-Mill Woods brought to the table and just would relate to him that we've had a fairly significant change in the department just over the past month, which is to separate out the Solicitor General functions. Many of the performance measures that he's looking for I believe he'll find in the Solicitor General's business plan. We have undertaken to develop more specific performance measures which relate to the Justice role. So I think that would deal with most of the questions.

With respect to the role of the provincial government in terms of the issues that he raised relative to Mill Woods, we're in an interesting position there. Policing and the cost of policing is a municipal issue, and the police response is on a municipal basis. But there is an opportunity for communities. I should really leave this to the Solicitor General to respond to, but the question was raised here, so I can take the opportunity. The Solicitor General has crime prevention grant programs which allow community organizations to come together to promote concepts which are good for their own communities. I really encourage that. I think the Dickinsfield project is an excellent example of what can happen when the community comes together, gets some seed funding where necessary from the Solicitor General's department, and comes together in terms of taking back ownership of their own community. So I just wanted to mention those two things.

I'll use the rest of my time, Mr. Chairman, to deal with the question of maintenance enforcement, because most of the questions that came forward today dealt with maintenance enforcement.

Perhaps before I get to maintenance enforcement, Edmonton-Centre raised a question about access to justice for women, probably a very important question, but I would suggest that she be much more specific on that. If she would be more specific about the types of issues that she thinks need to be addressed, we'd be able to provide some answers. I think that from a maintenance enforcement perspective there's clearly been a lot of work done in terms of making sure that access is there. The domestic violence court in Calgary is a good example.

All the rest of the good things I had to say will have to wait for another time.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Justice, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $193,659,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Chairman, in light of that, I move that the committee now rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. MARZ: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following departments.

Gaming: operating expense, $217,363,000; lottery fund payments, $1,015,949,000.

Justice: operating expense and capital investment, $193,659,000.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of Supply on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:35 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 8, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/08

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. On this day let us be guided by Your eternal wisdom and confidence that You believe in all of us. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Karl Ohs, Lieutenant Governor of Montana. Accompanying him are Senator E.P. Ekegren, Senator Glenn Roush, Representative Edith Clark, Representative Carol Juneau. Our friends from Montana have come to Edmonton for the annual meeting of the Montana/Alberta Bilateral Advisory Council. Alberta and Montana have a long history of working together in many areas including agriculture, tourism, water management, transportation, and border stations. Our relationship truly stands out as an excellent example of a province/state friendship that has benefited both sides of the border. This morning's meeting was a tremendous opportunity to exchange ideas and discuss many areas where we can expand our relationship with Montana. I would ask that the entire Montana delegation please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the 50th anniversary year of AADAC. It's my pleasure as the chairman of AADAC to introduce to you and through you the members of AADAC. They're sitting in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. First of all, our vice-chairman is Allen Dietz of Galahad. Other members are Dr. Philip Bryant of Drumheller, Thelma Crowther of Calgary, Ed Knox of Coalhurst, Peter Kossowan of Edmonton, Dan Martel of Edmonton, Paulette Patterson of Grande Prairie, Nev Smith of Leduc, and Lou Zaganelli of Calgary. I ask that the members of this Assembly extend their usual warm welcome.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 31 residents of Claresholm, Stavely, and Nanton and 122 residents of the Edmonton area. The petitioners are asking the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government to introduce legislation to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also stand today to present a petition signed by 700 Calgarians. The petitioners are asking the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government to introduce legislation to allow Alberta health care professionals to opt out of medical procedures that are in conflict with their moral conscience, the principles of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1 and 2.

I'm also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

Thank you, sir.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Bill 11

Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 11, this bill being the Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001.

What it does, Mr. Speaker, is put into legislation the regulations agreed to earlier this year regarding maternity and parental leave.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Bill 208

Alberta Official Song Act

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Alberta Official Song Act.

This bill is to establish a nonpartisan Alberta official song committee. The committee's function is to solicit from the Alberta public and review submissions of possible lyrics and music for an official song of Alberta and recommend it to the Alberta Assembly and the government in time for the celebration of 2005.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the appropriate number of copies of the Victims Programs Status Report 1999-2000. The report details the Alberta Solicitor General funding for programs and services that assist victims of crime. Funding increased 35 percent in '99-2000 to almost $1.3 million. The report details the Alberta government's growing commitment to programs that assist those who fall victim to crime.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of my responses to the additional questions raised in second reading of Bill 3, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001. The reason there's such a quick response is the reasonable questions asked by the opposition and the hard work by our government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise before you today to table five copies of a magazine entitled The School Administrator. This is a magazine that is published out of Virginia and goes to all administrators in North America. For the first time this magazine chose to concentrate on one school jurisdiction. That school jurisdiction was Edmonton public.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the Report of the Minister's Committee on Employment Leave for Parents, that was submitted to me in January of this year by Sue Evison, chair of the committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table 336 letters addressed to me as the MLA for Calgary-West which were written by constituents residing in the expanding communities of Signal Hill and Richmond Hill. The letters are from parents expressing their support for the construction of a core elementary school at the site of the Battalion Park minischool, which has an actual enrollment projected at 98 percent utilization by September 2001. I am tabling five copies of these letters, as required.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission as a Crown agency of the government of Alberta reporting to the Minister of Health and Wellness contributes in a major way to the health of individuals, families, and communities in the province. Today it's my pleasure to table the 2001 to 2004 business plan of the commission, which lays out the plans of the commission for providing alcohol, other drug, and gambling problem prevention, treatment, and information services to the people of Alberta over the next three years.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the appropriate number of copies of 48 letters dated March 19, 2001, to the chair of the public school board in Calgary. These letters outline the concerns of parents regarding the recommendations to close Glenmeadows elementary school. The closure would effectively eliminate Glenmeadows' before and after school and summer school programs for 75 children.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a petition to the board of trustees of the Calgary board of education signed by 75 petitioners. It is against the closure of Glenmeadows school and Glenmeadows' before and after school and summer school programs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a copy of a letter that's addressed to the Minister of Learning by a concerned parent in Medicine Hat, Mrs. Renee Seitz. By way of this letter she is indicating her concern to the minister about her children's school being triple graded next year, in her judgment, because of underfunding of schooling in the area.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly several guests who are with us today. Grant Lakeman, Elizabeth Lakeman, Robert Park, and Marc Lamoureux join us from Montage IT Services Inc. The company, which helps other Alberta companies harness the power of the Internet, was the successful bidder on a silent auction item to have lunch with me. I might add that it wasn't a fancy lunch: plastic cutlery and paper plates. Most importantly, proceeds from the auction support the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, a most worthwhile cause that provides funds for the very best in diabetes research. I am pleased to have these four representatives of Montage and these four supporters of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation in the members' gallery today. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to recognize a former member of this Legislature who served our province well over many years. Sitting in our public gallery, ladies and gentlemen, is Mr. Percy Wickman.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you 30 grade 6 students from the Delton elementary school and their teachers Mrs. Michelle Korchinski, Mrs. Kathy LeBlanc, and parent Mrs. Grace Fedyszyn. They are sitting in the public gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure also to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of the Assembly 30 students from Hardisty junior high. They are grade 6 students. They are accompanied today by their teachers Mrs. Sharon Lougheed and Mr. David Kehler and also by parents Rev. Sam Drew, Mrs. Pat McPhee, Mrs. Val Dickau, Mrs. Lucille Emo, Mrs. Struck, and Mr. Gordon Daniher. They're in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise. But before that, I'd also like to note that teacher Mrs. Sharon Lougheed is the always gracious spouse of the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Now I would ask them to please rise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing 26 students from the Rosemary school in Rosemary, Alberta. They're accompanied by seven adults: Mr. David Blumell, who is the principal of the school, Fern Nickel, Kathy Gette, Wanda Doerksen, Marlene Retzlaff, Annette Baerg, and Perry Dixon. They have come all the way from Rosemary to visit us in the Legislature today. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, to you and through you I'd like to introduce two very special visitors in the members' gallery today. One of them is my trusted and very dedicated, hardworking general manager at the constituency office, who's been with me for seven years. Her name is O.J. McLean. Accompanying her today for the first time in the Legislature is our STEP student, Ms Sarvir Hothi. I know that her mom and particularly her dad, Harmej, are very proud of her accomplishments, and so am I. Please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Conflict of Interest Legislation

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent court case involving a government official found guilty of accepting money to influence government decisions highlights the lack of conflict of interest guidelines in this province. My questions are to the Premier. Why are officials who work with agents of the Crown and deal with public money, such as the Alberta Gaming Commission, not covered by the province's conflict of interest legislation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the heads of those various boards, authorities, agencies, and commissions, they are subject to the rules of conflict of interest. Relative to the members, in many cases these members are volunteers who receive nothing more than a per diem rate, and it seems to be unreasonable to subject these volunteers to the same rules that govern paid heads of organizations or agencies, boards, commissions, and authorities.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, my question was: officials who work with the heads of these departments. Mr. Premier, why are they not covered by that legislation? They have just as much influence as the people who are appointed as those heads.

MR. KLEIN: The whole issue of conflict of interest guidelines was examined over a period of time. The act was debated at length in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. We have an Ethics Commissioner in place now to adjudicate allegations of conflict. There are rules and guidelines. The rules – and I believe that the Liberals were onside at that particular time when this particular bill was debated – apply to those people who can exercise influence; in other words, who are in a position of leadership, starting with the politicians, going then to the deputy ministers, and, I believe, the ADMs. I don't know how far down the ladder it goes, but it has to stop someplace. Certainly very significant conflict guidelines are enacted into law to prevent those who have the power of influence from using that influence to gain a benefit or an advantage.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is this not a good illustration of why we have to have the implementation of all of the recommendations that are in the Tupper report, so that all of these individuals who have a chance to influence decisions are actually covered by our legislation?

MR. KLEIN: A number of steps have been taken, and I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that when the offence took place, there were no conflict of interest guidelines. There was no Ethics Commissioner at that particular time, Mr. Speaker. That all has happened since, and I can take the hon. member through the number of initiatives that have been taken since that particular time.

First of all, to point out that the events in this case occurred in 1992, nine years ago. Since that time the Tupper report – and he alluded to the Tupper report, Mr. Speaker – has been brought forward, with government accepting almost all of the report's recommendations. Of the 27 recommendations in the Tupper report 24 were accepted by government. Two – only two – were not accepted, and one was deferred.

Further, Mr. Speaker, specifically since 1992 the government has strengthened the Conflicts of Interest Act, introduced a revised code of conduct and ethics for employees and government appointees, required all senior public service employees to provide a full financial statement to the Ethics Commissioner on an annual basis. I would remind and quote from the Ethics Commissioner in commenting on our revised conflicts act. The Ethics Commissioner said in his annual report in 1997: "The new standards [of the act] reflect what the public wants and expects from its elected Members and are an important element in public accountability."

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Conflict of Interest Court Case

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The agreed statement of facts in the Jaber case states quite categorically that Mr. Jaber did not contact or have any discussions with any elected official or any other official or employee with the Government of Alberta or the Alberta Liquor Control Board concerning this issue.

Yet yesterday the Minister of Justice and Attorney General was unwilling or unable to stand behind this statement. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Why will the minister not stand behind that statement that's prepared for the courts?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted that the question has been asked, because I had hoped to rise later in question period and clarify the answer that I gave to that question. I should have at that time indicated that the evidence given in the preliminary inquiry stated clearly that each of the officials that were involved testified under oath and indicated that they had not in any way been influenced. I took the question in a broader scope, and after reading Hansard and discovering that it was specifically directed to that, I spoke with you earlier today and indicated that I might wish to clarify that particular statement. The context in which I answered the question was, as I heard it: did the particular individual ever influence any government official? That was the question which I responded to, but I'm pleased to have the opportunity to clarify.*

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of

Justice and Attorney General. Yesterday when the minister indicated he could not give assurances that anybody else lobbied with regards to this case, was the minister saying that it's possible that someone else lobbied the government on behalf of Mr. Jaber?

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Speaker, I'm not saying that at all. What I would say in this case is that the police have had an investigation, with co-operation from the special prosecutions branch of the government, have pursued this case, have put forward a case, have achieved a conviction. It's still before the courts, so we can't discuss the details of it, but if there are any other aspects of the case that continue to need investigation, I'm sure the appropriate authorities will be doing that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: are you not making a good argument for a lobbyist registry when yesterday you said, "There are a lot of people that have been in this government, and I don't know all of them even personally, much less know who's talked to them" or who they're talking to from time to time?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier has already indicated that the Minister of Government Services is reviewing what's happened in other jurisdictions with respect to their lobby registries to determine whether or not they have had any effect and whether they're worth the cost of putting them up and the bureaucracy around them. I expect that we'll see the result of that review and will be able to make a determination as to whether in fact a lobby registry would be a useful tool in this particular province.

The bottom line, though, is that Albertans contact this government, both members of the government side and members on the opposition side, on an ongoing basis about issues of concern to them. Some of those are with respect to broad public policy issues, and some of them are with respect to narrow personal interests. That happens whether it's paid lobbyists or unpaid lobbyists. I think we should not from that take any opportunity to cast aspersions on any member of this House in terms of their ability to discern between private interest and public policy.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Establishment of School Districts

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new government policy with respect to the establishment of school districts in the province has raised serious questions. My first question is to the Premier. Why has the government embarked on a divisive policy that potentially puts the two publicly funded school systems at loggerheads?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that that was the intent at all, but to explain the situation as it now stands, I will have the hon. Minister of Learning respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. For those of us who have experienced either as a citizen, as an MLA, or as a constituent the 4 by 4 process for formation of the Catholic school system, everyone here knows how divisive that whole process can be. I've come from a community that five or six years ago went through that vote and is still suffering the consequences of that vote. I'm not talking about the two school systems. I'm talking about people in the community. Quite literally, in communities like mine you have people that will not darken the door of a certain business because of the way they voted during that vote.

The process that is before you today in Bill 16 was something that was put forward to the Alberta School Boards Association roughly a year ago. At that time they went forward to all of their boards. There was a vote taken by the boards, and the vote was agreed upon by the Alberta School Boards Association. Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker, the vote actually passed in the Alberta School Boards Association.

The other thing that I will say, Mr. Speaker. I do not have Hansard in front of me, but I do believe that the hon. member across from me who just asked me the question actually said in the Legislature that if there is anything that would improve the 4 by 4 situation, he would support it one hundred percent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Learning. Why did the minister change the policy without the agreement of those school boards most affected? That was the agreement I said I'd support.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, as I stated, the Alberta School Boards Association, which is the association made up of 64 school boards, went around to their various school boards around the province. They had meetings about this whole issue, and they came back with a solution. That solution is now in Bill 16.

I must remind the hon. member and I must remind everyone in this Assembly what a 4 by 4 vote does to a community. Perhaps the first part of the answer was not heard. For those of us who have been through it, it is absolutely catastrophic in a community. Mr. Speaker, both the ACSTA and the ASBA are in favour of this proposal that is now before us in the Legislature.

DR. MASSEY: My third question is to the same minister. Will the minister delay the implementation of the new policy until public hearings on the change are held across the province?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there have been public hearings on the school boards for the last year, and I would suggest that the hon. member is listening to one element of the School Boards Association, the element that did not get their way in this vote. Who I'm talking about specifically is the PSBA, who did not get their way and subsequently have moved on to another level of lobbying.

Mr. Speaker, this has been agreed to. This is something that everyone agrees with when it comes to the majority. I would ask the hon. member to contact the ACSTA, because I'm sure they would have some very strong viewpoints to give the hon. member on this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is stonewalling and refusing to answer many questions surrounding the influence peddling case concluded last Friday. The fact that one of the most powerful senior officials in the Premier's office in 1992 received a payment under strange circumstances from a most questionable source should have set off alarm bells around the government. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of the province. When did the Minister of Justice first become aware of the secret payment to the former executive director of the Premier's office from the numbered company controlled by Ziad Jaber's wife?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to clarify that this was a long time ago, and it was a different Premier and a different Premier's office.

To answer this question specifically, in November of 1999 I was advised by the Deputy Attorney General that charges were to be laid, and I was given information with respect to the circumstances around those charges.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the taint of corruption that such a secret payment strongly implies, has the Ministry of Justice or the Minister of Justice conducted a thorough review of the secret payment received by the former Premier's executive director, and if not, why not?

2:00

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the RCMP were investigating. They had the full co-operation of the special prosecutions branch. The policy manual in special prosecutions and, indeed, for all prosecutors for the last 20 years has indicated that the prosecutions branch should co-operate with and assist the RCMP and the police in terms of investigations to make sure that cases are put together so that they can achieve convictions on charges. We're partners in the process. There was a thorough investigation, as I understand it, with respect to the information surrounding the investigation which eventually resulted in the charges, and I believe that if there is anything further to come out of that investigation, it will come.

The hon. Premier would like to supplement.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one point. The point is this. On the issue the gentleman alluded to about the $20,000 and the statement the gentleman alluded to, made, about how he obtained the money and the nature of his loan to Mr. Jaber, I would remind the hon. member that that statement was made under oath, under oath in a court of law. Is this hon. member saying that the person he alludes to committed perjury? If he is suggesting that and if he is saying that, then say it outside the Chamber.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister table in the Assembly any reports he has received or that have been done by his ministry looking into the strange circumstances surrounding the payment to the former Premier's executive director, and if not, why not?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe there would be any such reports other than the investigative file of the RCMP and the prosecutor's file, and it would be neither appropriate nor I think possible for me to table that in the House.

Electric Power Supply

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy. On May 2 the minister told the House that power producers who fail to deliver committed power must make up the shortage to the Power Pool, are penalized by the lost business opportunity, and must find a way to meet any supply contracts in place from the Power Pool. But what about consumers not protected by a supply contract? My question: is it not reasonable that producers should replace the power not delivered plus pay a penalty equal to the higher consumer prices caused by their failure to deliver in the first place?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member brings up an interesting scenario with respect to the increase in the Power Pool price that would be created by more power being sought for demand, for purchase if a certain amount of power was not being produced by a generator. If this happens and the supplier must seek additional power, there is then a risk premium attached to that power search. Given that risk premium, that would create an additional cost on top of already the first cost that the member has suggested.

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: would it not follow, then, that any additional risk costs should be borne by the shareholders of the company that own the shares in the company that didn't deliver the power in the first place and not the consumer?

MR. SMITH: That's a good point, Mr. Speaker. In fact, how do shareholders maximize profit? By simply passing costs on to their marketplace, which could then be found in the way of increased prices. I think that it's important that we have a market that functions, that we have a market where the generator is obligated to supply power. If they can't supply power because of normal outages, normal reasons that occur in the course of business – these are mechanical machines; they're not a hundred percent foolproof – they would seek to supply and replace that power in the normal market process.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how can the market benefit from market discipline and consumers at the end receive a better product at a lower price if the producers of the product, this time being electricity, are not affected by normal market discipline?

MR. SMITH: Well, in fact, the supplier, Mr. Speaker, is ruled by market discipline. The issue is that the markets supply the power, and if the power is gone and it can't be sold, there's a punitive effect that will take place there. The member is going right towards where the real issue is, and that is of course to increase generation, the kind of generation that we've been seeing announced over the last two or three months. That's important. I will be pleased to send a copy of Hansard to the EUB, who's looking at a market review, and as well to my own department, who's also looking at as part of the seven-point retail transition plan a process on pricing in the Power Pool.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Horse Racing Renewal Program

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent Auditor General's report found that slot machine revenues paid to the Alberta Racing Corporation and the racetrack operators were not in compliance with the governing legislation. This included $18 million in revenues that were retained by Edmonton Northlands and Stampede Park. My questions are to the Premier. Given the aggressiveness with which the government pursues recovery of social assistance overpayment, will the government pursue recovery of these funds with the same vigour?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I agree that everything was done in accordance with the agreement reached relative to the horse racing renewal program. I don't know the intricacies of the question that was asked, but I will take the matter under advisement and discuss it with the minister.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. The Auditor General himself said: Short of getting an annual report back from them, you're getting no accountability, and there's no agreement in place at the moment for you to get any more accountability than that. Frankly, I don't think that's appropriate.

What steps has the government taken to make the commission more accountable?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can't be specific as to the steps that were taken, but I do know through conversations with both the former minister and the current minister that steps have indeed been taken to comply with the recommendations of the Auditor General.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the government undertake a full inquiry into this matter as part of the department's current review of gaming policy and regulations?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said in answer to the previous question, the Auditor General has examined this situation and we have complied, as I understand it, with his recommendations and have taken the measures that are deemed to be corrective.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Ranking of Schools

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend the Fraser Institute issued its annual report card on Alberta high schools, ranking schools based on academic performance. My question is to the Minister of Learning. What is the government's position on this report card and the overall ranking of Alberta schools?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would say that a simple ranking of schools based on diploma exams, on achievement exams is just that: very, very simple. There are a lot of different issues that each and every parent should take a look at when they're deciding where to put their children. To be able to say that one school is better than the other purely because they have a particular cohort of students that happen to do well on achievement tests or on diploma exams is an extremely wrong thing to do. Basically, what you should be doing is taking a look at which school fits your child.

MRS. ADY: My second question is also to the Minister of Learning. I have to confess that as a parent of two high school students in the Calgary public school system I took a peek at the list to see where my high school rated, as I think most parents did. Also, as the member that represents 80,000 constituents without a high school my parents have to choose. If studies like this shouldn't be used to compare schools, what tools exist to help parents choose the school best suited for their child?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, there's one other point that I will add, and this is a question that I get all the time on this particular issue. The question is: well, if you come out against these school rankings, why on earth did you do them? Well, the obvious answer to that is that we didn't do them. The report was commissioned by the Calgary Herald and I believe the Edmonton Sun and subsequently published in their newspapers. Yes, we did make the information available.

Mr. Speaker, in direct response to the hon. member's question, there are a myriad of different things that you need to look at when you decide on a school. It could be the school environment. It could be the individual's needs. It could be the absolute location of the school, the fit that the school has to your child. You have to remember that each child is individual, each child has different needs, and perhaps there's a different school for each child.

MRS. ADY: My final question is again to the Minister of Learning. Can the minister explain the kinds of measures that are in place to ensure the accountability of our schools and the learning system overall?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question, and realistically I could be here for another two hours to tell you the accountability, but you're shaking your head. We have a considerable amount of accountability mechanisms built into the business plan that is presently before the Legislative Assembly. Each school has to be accountable to me. They have to be accountable through the democratic process to their ratepayers, to their constituents, and, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member, probably the ultimate accountability is that they must get re-elected each time.

School Fees

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, currently many schools across this province levy fees to finance programs and services. These levies place undue financial burden on many families in this province. My question is to the Minister of Learning. When will this government eliminate the need for schools to levy fees to finance programs and services?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the majority of fees that are actually levied at the school level are for things such as basketball programs. They're for special needs that are for each individual class. The other issue and the other place where fees are levied is for rental of textbooks. As I've said in this Legislature before, that has been a practice that has been on for the last 50 or 60 years, where you actually rent or in some cases buy the textbooks. So that is not different.

The issue about fees though – and there is a very significant issue about fees, and that is what some of the parents are being told about fees and fund-raising, that they're having to raise fees, that they're having to fund-raise for things like textbooks. Mr. Speaker, there is plenty of money in each and every school board's budget to provide for the core funding, for textbooks, for all things that are needed for each kid to go to school.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that program and services fees are really a form of taxation, why does this government continue to place more financial burden on families across this province?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I will not agree with the initial assumption that was put forward. It is not a form of taxation. If my child plays basketball, then I have an obligation as a parent that I should pay for my child to play basketball. If my child takes a cooking class, for example, something that not everyone in the school has the ability to take, then I should be paying extra for that. When they're talking about textbooks and that, absolutely not. Textbooks should not have fund-raising or fees. They have the ability to pay for them through the school board. If any member in this Assembly has that concern, I will gladly take it and personally look into it with each and every school board.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what action has the minister taken to eliminate schools from needing to levy fees?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of actions that I've taken, but probably the most significant action that I've taken is called a 9.8 percent increase last year and an 8.4 percent increase this year.

The other thing that I will add is that in September of this year the Alberta School Boards Association came out with a complete guide on fees and fund-raising that was sent out to each and every school board. That guide includes things like not having to raise fees and/or fund-raise for core educational projects. I'm glad to say that that has been accepted by the majority of school boards.

Again I reiterate my offer. If there is anyone in this Legislative Assembly that has concerns about fees and fund-raising for such basic things as textbooks, tell me and I will personally look into it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Gun Registration Legislation

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Justice. The issues surrounding Bill C-68, the federal government's gun registration legislation known as the Firearms Act, just will not go away. The effects of this legislation are felt by nearly every agricultural producer and gun owner in Alberta, and many of them are in the Wainwright constituency. The Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties discussed this subject in detail at their spring conference. Has the Minister of Justice and his department done everything possible to protect Albertans from the costly, destructive effects of Bill C-68?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the Department of Justice and this government have been very vigorous opponents of the gun registry legislation. We believe that the money that's being spent on the gun registry could be much better spent on dealing with criminals with guns.

Mr. Speaker, members will recall that this government led a charge, which eventually, I think, eight different provincial jurisdictions across the country joined with, in taking that legislation to the Supreme Court of Canada. Unfortunately, the Supreme Court found that it was valid criminal legislation. We believe that it was actually property legislation, but the Supreme Court of Canada found it to be criminal legislation, and that ended our ability to challenge the legality of the legislation. All that's left for Albertans and for other Canadians who oppose that legislation and believe that the resources spent on that kind of registry should be better spent chasing criminals is to lobby their federal government and talk to their federal members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the AAMDC has asked the government to hold a provincewide referendum asking Albertans whether the government of Alberta should participate or assist in the firearms registration legislation in any way, would the minister support such a referendum?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, while the sentiment of the resolution is certainly appreciated, the fact of the matter is that we have taken the position as the provincial government that we will not participate in the gun registry, nor will we enforce the legislation. We do have an obligation to proceed with charges under the Criminal Code. The provincial government and prosecutors for the provincial government on behalf of Albertans prosecute charges under the Criminal Code. We'll certainly – and we think Albertans would want us to – prosecute any charges that are laid in conjunction with the commission of a criminal offence.

MR. FISCHER: Could the minister explain to my constituents why Alberta will not use the notwithstanding clause in the Constitution to opt out of this ridiculous legislation?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've had this question from many Albertans right across the province. We should be clear where the notwithstanding clause is usable. It's usable when the provincial government wants to bring in legislation and there may be a question as to whether the legislation violates in any way section 15 of the Charter. Then the notwithstanding clause is available to ensure that the legislation is operative notwithstanding the Charter. We cannot use the notwithstanding clause to opt out, in essence, of federal legislation, particularly where the federal legislation has been found by the Supreme Court of Canada to be constitutional.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electric Power Generation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier and the Minister of Energy provided some contradictory nonanswers about location-based credits used to pick and choose where new electricity generation will be constructed in the province. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the primary objective stated on the original invitation to bid for location-based credits was to use credits to attract generation units to within 50 miles of Calgary to prevent voltage collapse, why was TransCanada Energy at a site in the Grande Prairie area given credit-rate incentives last week?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have trouble with the preamble to the question, and that is how you can have – what is it? – a contradictory nonanswer. If it's a nonanswer, then it can't be contradictory.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

2:20

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the transmission administrator, as the member well knows, is an independent body that makes its decisions accordingly, and he's free to consult with them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: could the minister explain who will pick up the tab for the estimated $80 million in supplemental payments for those location-based credits announced last week?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, clearly the policy is a matter of record. He should consult the transmission administrator.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time to the Premier. We'll see what sort of contradictions come out now. Why are credits being given to TransCanada Energy to build more generation in northern Alberta when that company last year exported electricity to the value of $3.9 million?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I will defer to the hon. Minister of Energy, who is in a position to provide a more detailed answer.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, as opposed as the Liberal member is to new generation of power in a free marketplace, it is important to note that there is a clearly detailed set of rules and conditions, which the transmission administrator abides by for the purpose of delivering much-needed new power generation into Alberta. I would think that the member, by questioning that, is probably thinking about standing in the way of bringing new power, much-needed power, into the marketplace in Alberta today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Access to Court Documents

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Justice several questions, which he dealt with like the Dickens character the Artful Dodger. One of the things he did say, however, was that we ought to obtain a copy of the transcripts of the preliminary inquiry of a court case involving Ziad Jaber. Well, it was a good suggestion, and we decided to follow up on it. Why was a representative of our caucus told by a staff member of the Justice department this morning that a copy of the transcript would cost over $500 and take up to 10 days to process when previous similar requests had been handled speedily and without cost?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea why an individual might have said that, and I'll certainly be interested in asking that question. What I can tell the hon. member is that court transcripts are produced by independent court transcribers, and they do get paid on the per page basis, so I presume that that's the cost of producing a transcript and paying the court transcriber the fee for her or his work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate whether or not the department has changed any of its policies with respect to MLAs' access to court documents?

MR. HANCOCK: That I can assure you, Mr. Speaker. There has been no change in the policy with respect to access to court documents by any member of the public, including MLAs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to having a copy of the court transcript provided to my office and to any other member who requests it sometime today?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of it right here, and I'd be pleased to make a copy of it and provide it to him as soon as possible, provided that it does not break any of the rules relating to the payment of workers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Summer Natural Gas Rebate Program

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. The government has announced that it is providing a summer natural gas rebate program to specific agricultural natural gas users. Can the minister explain why this program has not been offered to all agricultural users?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct. We have announced today a natural gas rebate program to some natural gas users throughout the summer months. I must point out that all natural gas users received a rebate over the period January to April 30. However, there were certain agricultural users that were unable to benefit from that program because their time of high usage is through the summer months. So today, as we had committed to do to those sectors, we've made the details available as to how the program would work for a four-month period for select users in this time.

MR. GOUDREAU: My first supplementary question is to the same minister. How does the minister explain the difference in rebate amounts from what was offered during the winter months, at $6 per gigajoule, to what is being offered in the summer months, at $3.75 per gigajoule?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, one thing I should have pointed out earlier is that this applies to greenhouses who did not start up until spring, to irrigators, to alfalfa dehydrators, who operate through the summer months. The choice of $3.75 a gigajoule was estimated to give those users the same or a similar benefit as what the $6 a gigajoule gave to the winter users. For example, the average gas cost throughout the winter was from $9.50 to $9.75. If you subtract the $6 a gigajoule, you would get $3.50 to $3.75. We will monitor the prices. At this point we expect them to be in the $7.25 to $7.75 range, but I heard as late as two hours ago that, indeed, the natural gas price could be lower over the summer months. So we'll continue to watch it and monitor it and make sure that the benefit is comparable to the winter users'.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the same minister. Greenhouse operators who were already eligible for natural gas rebates during the winter months: why do they continue to receive natural gas rebates while other winter users don't?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, greenhouse operators who took advantage of the program through the January to April 30 period will not be eligible for this program. This program is specific to those operators who did not begin their operations until perhaps the 1st of April or the middle of March, and I should make it very clear that they are eligible for a four-month period only, the same as the ones who would have accessed it had they started growing in January to April.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Tuition Fees

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Budget 2001 the government has again chosen to ignore the issue of high tuition fees in Alberta. While they have provided more money to postsecondary institutions and money for debt relief and loan remission, that is like dealing with the symptoms and not the disease. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why has the government chosen to deal with operating costs and debt relief but not tuition fees?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, very simply, operating costs are what leads to tuition fee increases. It's operating costs at the universities that allow the universities to set the tuition fees. We increased the amount of money going to universities in Budget 2001 by 8 percent. This is on top of roughly a 7 and a half percent increase last year. The most critical thing – and the hon. member brought it up – in the 2001 budget, though, is the amount of relief that has been given to students. We increased the amount of funding to the students through the Students Finance Board, bursaries, student loans, all this by 22 percent. That's on top of the 22 percent last year, 22 percent this year, and a projected 22 percent over the next two years. A huge amount of dollars that are being given to students.

Just as a point of interest, last year the Arts faculty was offered a decrease in tuition fees. Mr. Speaker, do you know what happened? The students from the Arts faculty at the University of Alberta protested because they wanted their tuition to be as high as everyone else's because their degree would not be valued if their tuition went down.

MS CARLSON: That's not what the students in my constituency are saying.

To the same minister: what instructions has the government given postsecondary institutions with regard to possible future tuition fee increases in the coming year?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a little bit of a strange question, as I'm sure the hon. member realizes that the tuition fee increase is an exclusive domain of the board of governors of each institution. I do, however, contact them in an attempt to keep the tuition down. A good example of that was the projected increase which you saw at the University of Alberta. For September of 2001 they were projecting roughly a 5 and a half percent increase. After talking to them, after giving them money, after telling them some of the things that would be included in the budget, this dropped down to a 3.2 percent increase.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot directly set tuition fees. That is not in my realm of responsibility. That is in the realm of responsibility of the board of governors of each individual institution.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, will this minister review the 30 percent tuition cap and its impact on students, the severe, significant financial impact on students?

DR. OBERG: Well, there are two questions there. First of all, yes, I will review the 30 percent cap. The reason I will review it is because we have two institutions in Alberta who have already reached the 30 percent tuition cap. Mr. Speaker, the reason they have reached it is because they have dropped their operating expenses. As the member obviously knows, the tuition is related to the operating expenses, and if you drop the operating expenses, the amount of tuition that can be charged also goes down. So, yes, we are looking at that.

The other point that I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that I just released an accessibility study late last week. The interesting component of that accessibility study is that, yes, a lot of the graduates, the people in grade 12, did cite tuition fees as being an item that kept people from the universities, but the interesting point is that they overestimated the price of tuition by close to 50 percent. We have to do a better job of getting our communication out there, but a lot of the issues are actually perceived issues as opposed to real issues.

Supports for Independence

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, the provincial government employs social workers, child welfare workers, financial benefit workers, program specialists, and caseload supervisors, all of whom I consider to be valued professionals working on the front lines, giving people across this province a hand up rather than a handout. One of the major challenges experienced by these professionals is helping our supports for independence clients manage their finances in a growing economy in which housing rental costs are skyrocketing and inflation eats away the true value of the dollar. It is extremely difficult for many families to manage when 50, 60, or even 70 percent of their SFI allowance is eaten up by rental costs. To the minister of human resources: will the hon. minister commit to setting up a committee made up of citizens from the business community, social service industry, Members of the Legislative Assembly, and average citizens to review the SFI rates for this province?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have committed in the Speech from the Throne and also, I believe, in the budget document – I'd have to check that – that we will go out and review programs and services that we have for our supports for independence clients here in the province.

The hon. member, though, offered some suggestions as to the makeup of that committee. Certainly I will take that under advisement, but as the minister I will reserve the right to appoint the members to the review committee that I deem necessary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you. To the same minister. Given that the department of education has set aside 6 percent for wage raises for our valued teachers, will this minister also demonstrate his value of these professionals by setting aside a 6 percent minimum wage increase?

MR. DUNFORD: There would be a process problem, Mr. Speaker, with the request or the suggestion that the hon. member is making. Currently we have not done that. We are moving forward with our business plan, and certainly imminently I'll be defending our estimates in this House. But I don't want to be mistaken. Certainly the financial benefit workers that we have within our department are valued members of our staff, but they some time ago decided to bargain collectively through the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, and of course we'll be entering into collective bargaining with that group later this fall. Certainly, then, all of our valued Alberta public service will be looked upon at that time within the context of labour relations.

MR. SHARIFF: My final supplemental is to the Minister of Children's Services. Can the child welfare workers also foresee a minimum increase of 6 percent in their wages?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it's most appropriate that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment respond because all of the collective bargaining in fact is done through that minister, with our participation elsewhere.

What I can advise the hon. member is that for the past several months a provincial committee with union representation from the provincial employees, representation from social workers looking at pay classification rates for social workers and those frontline workers that the hon. member references, has undertaken a painstaking review of every finite detail. Through that review, Mr. Speaker, in March there was agreement with all parties on that.

I'd like to just also add that we have taken very seriously the issues social workers have with education. Last week with a sponsor from the University of Calgary we held a review of what the needs are in social work education, a very successful seminar and workshop attended by some 200 social workers, which I attended. The issues of pay and recognition and compensation for these workers, valued members of our provincial team, were discussed very thoroughly. I would like to assure the hon. member that I'm very confident that when we get into the round of bargaining, he will be satisfied that we have paid our due diligence to all aspects of the employees' needs and will in fact be able to satisfy the issues that will be at the table.

Victims Programs Status Report

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Solicitor General today tabled the Victims Programs Status Report 1999-2000. That report detailed funding provided for programs and services that assist victims of crime. The funding shows this government's commitment to supporting Albertans who fall victim to crime.

Mr. Speaker, I would hasten to add that the grant program is not – and I repeat: not – supported by law-abiding taxpayers' dollars. Rather, it's funded exclusively by victim surcharges paid by those who are guilty of offences in Alberta. Funding to victims' programs increased 35 percent in 1999-2000 to almost $1.3 million. Approximately $1 million was provided to victims' services programs and community-based victims' assistance programs offered by the RCMP and municipal police services. Now there are a total of 106 victims' services units in Alberta. In 1999-2000 they helped more than 38,000 Albertans. More than 1,400 Albertans gave generously of their time last year to help the victims of crime.

Here is the truly startling statistic pointed out by the Victims Programs Status Report 1999-2000: these volunteers donated almost 187,000 hours of their time. That works out to 95 person-years of labour. Mr. Speaker, that is valuable labour, valuable time provided at no cost to Alberta taxpayers. Alberta has a long history of neighbour helping neighbour, and this is truly what these selfless volunteers do in our communities. Victims' programs provide an essential service to Albertans.

Alberta is truly blessed, and crime is down. We have the lowest property and violent crime rates in western Canada. Albertans live, work, and raise their families in safe communities. However, when someone does become a victim of crime, there is a safety net in place to help them, a safety net of dedicated volunteers and dedicated victims' services police units, all supported by the Alberta government through victims' programs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, AADAC, I am pleased to inform the hon. members that the year 2001 marks AADAC's 50th anniversary. The commission's forerunner, the Alcoholism Foundation of Alberta, was created on September 27, 1951.

This milestone is very significant. For the past half century AADAC and its predecessor have positively contributed to the health of Albertans through a provincewide system of high-quality, efficient addictions prevention, treatment, and information services. We've come a long ways in the last 50 years. We opened our first clinic in 1953 with a card table, a chair, and a temporary telephone strung through a window. AADAC now has offices and treatment centres in 38 communities throughout the province. This currently includes 23 area offices in rural communities and 25 community-based funded agencies. Each year AADAC has about 38,000 admissions to treatment, 133,000 admissions to our crisis services, and 180,000 contacts for our prevention and education services.

Today our prevention programs specifically for youth and families have become a priority. Our ongoing resiliency campaign encourages adults to positively contribute to a child's life by providing guidance and friendship, and our youth-at-risk initiative provides community outreach counseling and other services to high-risk youth. Since its inception AADAC has been dedicated to the ongoing health of Albertans.

I would like to thank the hon. members, past and present, AADAC staff, our many community partners, and other key stakeholders for their support of the commission. By continuing to work together towards an addiction-free future, we can make a difference in people's lives to help ensure the future prosperity of our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Immigrants of Distinction Awards

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, on April 27, 2001, the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society held its fifth annual immigrants of distinction awards. My colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort and I had the privilege of attending this event. Several individuals were recognized for their accomplishments, and today I wish to recognize two recipients of this prestigious award.

Dr. Taj Jadavji received the distinguished professional award. Dr. Jadavji is originally from Tanzania and received his primary and secondary education there before studying medicine at the University of Sind. After graduation in 1976 he served a pediatric internship at the University of Calgary in 1980 and a residency at the Hospital for Sick Children at the University of Toronto in 1981, where he also did postgraduate work and received a fellowship in pediatric infectious diseases.

Dr. Jadavji heads the pediatric infectious diseases department at the Alberta Children's hospital and is the director of the international health program in the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Calgary, where he also teaches. He is also head of pediatric infectious diseases at the Calgary regional health authority.

Dr. Jadavji's volunteer commitments include work with Ronald McDonald House helping children and their parents access services. He has been on the board of the Calgary society for children and has been a representative for the child welfare authority since 1990. On a global level he's actively involved with the Aga Khan Development Network, promoting health and education in the developing world.

Mr Speaker, I also wish to recognize the recipient of the community services award, Dr. Vettivelu Nallainayagam. Dr. Vettivelu Nallainayagam was born in Sri Lanka and educated in Jaffa and at the University of Sri Lanka.

To both these recipients I extend my congratulations and best wishes for their service to the immigrant community and Albertans at large.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Inner-city School Closures

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Edmonton public and separate school boards made painful decisions to close several inner-city schools, including Alex Taylor and Sacred Heart schools in my riding of Edmonton-Highlands. These school closure decisions were made against the backdrop of the government's unfair and rigid school utilization formula. This formula requires schools to be 85 percent utilized before the Ministry of Infrastructure will approve capital funding for badly needed new schools in suburban neighbourhoods. The utilization formula does not sufficiently recognize or encourage multiple uses of school buildings. It pits suburban neighbourhoods against inner-city neighbourhoods. It also pits residents of inner-city neighbourhoods against one another as they fight to save their children's school.

With residential redevelopment in Edmonton's inner city there is an opportunity for rising student enrollment at a number of the inner-city schools slated for closure. Implementing the recommendations of the pilot project on small class sizes, which has shown to have clear benefits especially for disadvantaged children, will also help to improve the utilization of inner-city schools. It is only now, after these painful school closure decisions were made, that the government is proposing changes to its rigid and unfair utilization formula.

I urge the Minister of Learning and the government to reconsider its policy in light of the decision to close these inner-city schools. These schools are the heart of their communities and a key to inner-city revitalization. I urge the government to take action preventing at least some of these closures from going forward.

Thank you.

Bill 205 Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate May 2: Mr. Marz]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a privilege for me to rise and speak to Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001. I'm going to speak from the context today of my experience as a municipal councillor, reeve, and rancher on some points that I think are pertinent and relevant to this bill.

First of all, let me say that I would like to commend the hon.

Member for Lacombe-Stettler for her efforts to bring forth this very important legislation and subject to Albertans. Intensive livestock has become a huge problem in Alberta, and I guess most of us are grateful that we have the industry we do that contributes to the base of economic development in Alberta. Although it's not fun to deal with problems, it is a problem that is a result of growth and a result of value added, which we as a people and as a government worked hard to stimulate. From that context, you know, it is something that we need to look at.

I understand the problem that is being faced in many municipalities in Alberta. One of the problems we have, I think, is diversity. To illustrate the point of diversity, may I indulge members in a personal experience? It was my pleasure on several occasions to ride to Edmonton to AAMDC conventions with a municipal councillor from Cardston, a councillor who's no longer with us, having given his life in a serious traffic accident about 10 years ago. Every time we would drive from Cardston, about the time we would get to Red Deer or Olds, somewhere in that area, as he looked out over the fields and saw the deep, black soil of central Alberta and remember all the rocks he had back in Cardston, this councillor would say something like: "I don't know why my great-grandfather stopped in Cardston. Why didn't he move on to central Alberta to farm there?" The point that I think I want to make here is one of diversity. This province is a huge province, has a huge agricultural base, and conditions are very different.

I want to draw on some experiences that I had as a councillor and reeve of Cardston county for 17 years. We do not have in Cardston county the same problems with intensive livestock that Lacombe county has or the county of Lethbridge has or many other counties in Alberta. We do have some intensive livestock development, but it's not to the scale of others. Our county a few years ago adopted the code of practice as advocated by Alberta Agriculture, and I'm going to read some quotes from that code in just a moment. We adopted that code into our land use bylaw, so every time an application for intensive livestock development came before our council, we would ask Alberta Agriculture, Health, and Environment to see that the developer, the applicant, complied with the code. After that was done, we would proceed to hold a public hearing and then at the MPC part of council would proceed with our decision.

Perhaps I could just digress and quote to you from a couple of sections from the municipal land use bylaw of Cardston county. This would be similar to many land use bylaws in other rural jurisdictions in Alberta.

Section 8(1) under intensive agriculture and livestock confinement, says, and I quote: before approving or refusing an application for a livestock confinement operation or facility, the Municipal Planning Commission may request and consider the following information relating to the application: (a) Please note. A decision report from Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, pursuant to the code of practice for responsible livestock development and manure management. Under 8(2)(b), skipping a few paragraphs: there will be adequate provision for waste treatment, temporary waste storage facilities, and arrangements for waste disposal on the operator's own land or any other land in accordance with standards set by Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and other approving authorities.

Going to section 8(5)(b). The information contained in a decision report from Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is favourable to said application and other conditions that: (i) the maximum number of animal units per acre may be a condition of a development permit, and (iii) that periodic inspections by the designated officer may be made to verifying continuing conformity with the development permit.

Before I say some more about that, I would just like to make sure that everyone understands the definition of a code of practice as defined in Cardston county's land use bylaw.

Code of Practice means a document produced by Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development which establishes criteria for the siting, operation and disposal of manures for intensive livestock operations and also defines numbers of livestock which can be accommodated within the development.

Probably, to be honest, Mr. Speaker, I would say that overall Cardston county has not had a serious problem with siting intensive livestock operations, including dairy and hogs. We do not have a large intensive livestock cattle feeding operation, but we do have many hog, poultry, and dairy operations that are intense. The challenge for us has been to ensure continued compliance with the agreed conditions as specified in our land use bylaw and code of practice as adopted by the county. In other words, enforcement has been the challenge.

The technical standards: we've been able to use the expertise of Alberta Agriculture, Alberta Environment, Alberta Health to ensure that we have the rules necessary to protect people, to protect the environment, to protect health. That's okay, but sometimes we've had a challenge with enforcement. So I think this enforcement aspect has been a frustration to many rural municipalities. I think they would probably agree with me if I said that given that challenge and that problem, they didn't necessarily want to give up all control over intensive livestock development, be it land use or be it even all technical control. So that was one of the problems I have with this bill as being purported: it would take local control away from local municipalities. My experience has been that local municipalities understand local conditions, understand the diversity, the nature, the topography of the region, and their input is invaluable in making decisions on land use.

I would next like to just talk about the situation in the context of a municipal councillor who had the privilege to serve as a director of the Alberta Association of MDs and Counties, and who actually served on the original livestock committee charged by the minister to come up with an acceptable code, an acceptable standard for all intensive livestock in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, that was a very interesting experience. I then became familiar and acquainted with the diversity that exists in this province, inasmuch as there was representation on the committee from all segments of the industry and from all parts of Alberta. There were councillors, livestock people, hog people, chicken people, and technical people there, all together trying to resolve this issue, which has been quite a few years now in trying to get resolved. What that experience taught me was that there definitely is a problem, and there definitely is going to be considerable consensus required to solve the problem.

There seems to be a mistrust by some of the livestock people about the municipalities having the right to make land use decisions. A couple of reasons I think were that individual municipalities didn't have all the same standards. One county might have one set of standards. Another county across the road, which one ratepayer may have land in – both counties would have a different code or a different set of standards that he had to live with.

Some people think that municipalities don't have the technical expertise to deal with all the technicalities that exist with manure disposal and other aspects of intensive livestock, which is definitely a very complex problem. I submit to the members that the solution to that is by the municipalities acknowledging that they don't have the expertise. Therefore they will draw on the experience and technical knowledge of Alberta Agriculture, Health, and Environment and adopt the appropriate codes into their land use bylaw so that all people in their municipality know that that's the code they will be governed by and will be applied to and they will have to live with.

If I could for a moment, I would just like to refer to a couple more things that talk about this current situation. May I comment on the Municipal Government Act:

To achieve orderly, economical and beneficial development, use of land, patterns of human settlement and quality of physical environment, Alberta's rural municipalities have been responsible for development control of intensive livestock facilities since the 1950s. To develop their own laws regarding subdivision and development, the municipality writes a Municipal Development Plan (required for municipalities with a population of over 3,500) that describes future land uses within the municipality and the manner in which these uses will be reviewed.

We also come under the control of the Public Health Act and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Those three acts contain considerable technical requirements for development to meet, and some municipalities would argue that they contain enough standards that we don't need a whole lot more.

Most municipalities do follow the code as advocated and has been amended and updated in 2000 and try really hard to satisfy the intensive livestock development. Most of us who sit on municipal councils want development. We want intensive livestock development. We think it's important. It creates jobs. It creates opportunities for family farms to expand, and we think it's important. One of the challenges that we have as municipalities is that sometimes there are people who don't want to experience any of what's called nuisances of intensive livestock, so they don't want any development, not recognizing that this development is very important. I concede that we have to take steps necessary to protect people's health, but all nuisance aspects probably can't be insured forever.

I would like to address one more aspect of the application of this bill to municipalities, and I'm going to use my experience to represent the issues of some of the people that I used to represent as a municipal councillor and now represent as their MLA. In Alberta we have another aspect of agriculture which we refer to as extensive agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Extensive agriculture would be where we traditionally run large amounts of livestock – cattle, sheep, buffalo, whatever you want to say – on larger tracts of land and try as much as possible to not allow those animals to contribute to pollution, et cetera. Under some definitions of the code and even under the definition of the proposed code which we are now using, it is possible that some of these extensive operations at certain times of the year could be classed as intensive livestock operations.

To use an extreme example, recently in southwestern Alberta in the month of April in the southwest corner we had upwards of seven feet of snow in about three weeks' time. Needless to say, it was almost impossible to move livestock very far. There are lots of extensive operations that have several hundred or even thousands of cattle. Normally those cattle would be spread over a wide area, but under certain conditions such as the one I just described, conditions which might exist during spring calving, weaning, and other times, these cattle could be collected in a small 10- or 15-acre field, where you might have enough animals that it would actually bring that operation under the strict definition of the code. Then, you know, taking it to the ridiculous, it could require these people to conform to the code and to create water diversions, build holding ponds, do all manner of practices to stop runoff.

I don't know all about all of Alberta, but I know in the southwest there are hundreds of drainages and they all go into a river or a creek or into a major drainage. My point is that under certain conditions these extensive people could come under the code. They've never been under the code, and 99 percent of the time they don't contribute, in my humble opinion, to pollution, but it could create a hardship on them if they were put under the code.

On their behalf I would say that many of them have a fear of being totally controlled by appointed bureaucrats or technical people who may be charged with enforcing one central code. I think their fear is justified and realistic, although my experience in working with people who work for the department is that most of them are reasonable and exercise common sense most of the time. Most of the people I'm talking about would sooner be judged, if you will, by their peers, for example on a municipal council, such people who are also probably involved in the same type of operation, the same type of agricultural practice. So for them, they would have a fear of being under one provincial code and one set of standards.

Mr. Speaker, although I recognize the need for this legislation and presume that we're going to proceed and get this resolved, I do have a serious problem with Bill 205 inasmuch as it would take all control away from local land use planning authorities, such as MPCs, contained in municipal districts and counties and would put that control in the hands of the provincial government. I think we need to understand that this is a diverse province. Conditions, topography: these things are all extremely different. What may be safe in one part of Alberta may be not so safe in another part of Alberta.

So I'm suggesting that I'm recognizing the need, but what I would really like to see is all municipalities adopt a certain code that would be applicable to their area in their land use bylaws and then have the power to cite land use decisions and even to be involved in the technical aspects and technical application of the code. That may be asking a lot, but I know that would make a lot of the people I represent in the south much more comfortable. The idea has even been suggested in my constituency that if we can't have individual sets of codes and regulations for our municipalities . . . [Mr. Jacobs' speaking time expired]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to put a few comments on record with respect to Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, for a few reasons, first of all because I do have a significant number of farmers in my area. While none of them are necessarily specifically involved in intensive livestock operations, we have had a few discussions around this issue, and on their behalf I do want to raise a couple of points that they've raised with me.

I think we all understand and recognize how important agriculture is to our province, to our economy, to our employment in this province, and farming as it relates to ILOs in particular is a very hot topic out in rural Alberta. I've just had the pleasure of touring throughout Alberta over this last year and a half doing other work, but certainly the issue of ILOs came up time and time again. As I look at this particular act, the amendment as it's proposed, I understand that the gist and the spirit, the nature, if you will, of the bill is to try and make several improvements toward ensuring good public health practices that surround this industry and that there is indeed a good, sustainable growth plan involved with ILO operations, as well as the environmental concerns and the responsibilities that everyone has, including intensive livestock producers, toward that end.

Therefore, as I sort of read through the implications of what's being proposed here by the hon. member, I was struck by the fact that, yes, I would support some clear guidelines being put in place to help govern some of the issues I just mentioned, and if some kind of an application or approval process is necessary to do that, then I can begin to understand what those concerns were that I heard about.

On the other hand, I'm also well aware that our colleague from Leduc has done some incredible work in this area and is a farmer himself. He, too, undoubtedly has some concerns that he'll be bringing forward through the Sustainable Management of the Livestock Industry in Alberta Committee, and I'm looking forward to reading through that report as well. Nonetheless, the idea of codes of practice as enunciated in this bill does merit some additional discussion, and I'm really looking forward to what other members will contribute.

One of the issues that I recall being raised, Mr. Speaker, in this regard was with respect to the different roles and responsibilities that, for example, the municipal or local governments might play versus or perhaps in tandem, in conjunction with the provincial roles – roles of enforcement, of jurisdiction, land use bylaws, issues like that that are so important – not to mention of course the whole issue of standards and how those standards are to be developed and implemented and monitored or enforced. I think those are all very important things which this particular bill has the ability to impact.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I think in the final analysis what we're all looking for is some meaningful way to assist our ILO operators provincewide without interfering overly but sharing with them some of the concerns that have been expressed. I come by these statements very honestly, having grown up in the '50s and '60s in rural Alberta when we owned a farm. We had 45 head of holstein, and while that would hardly classify as an ILO, nonetheless I am familiar with what some of the challenges are with respect to the ILO operators of today. There are also some community concerns that have been expressed, but perhaps I'll leave that to another time.

So with those few comments on behalf of the individuals who raised them with me, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and allow others to contribute to this important debate. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also my pleasure to speak to Bill 205. I first want to say to the Member for Lacombe-Stettler thank you very much for bringing this issue forward. It is a very sensitive issue, and of course it's very important to everyone.

We have to strike a proper balance to allow agriculture producers to change, to expand, to grow, and to be flexible in order to maintain a viable farming unit, and we still have to guarantee the neighbours and all of the residents outside of the farming area that the air and the soil and the water will be protected. Land use affects everyone, and certainly with the scares like Walkerton and the North Battleford water contamination issue, people should be very interested in what is happening with this.

I had an opportunity to attend an ag conference in Delaware a few years ago. It was the secretary of agriculture for each of the states in the U.S. that met for their annual conference. Alberta fortunately, through a lot of good work from our department, gets invited to that particular conference. It was very interesting, when we got down there, that of the many issues they had, the land use issue was by far the one that took over the agenda. At that time I heard many stories – I want to call them Hatfield and McCoy stories – where the feuds between agriculture producers and the public were very alive and real. Each state had different rules, different regulations, and some of their counties had different regulations, but as it turned out, the demographics really dictated what the rules were. I don't know whether or not their system the way they put it together, as we followed it through, had really done what needed to be done.

Some of the areas were already maxed out, so there was no more agriculture production, and it was because of all of the bylaws that were put in place. I shudder to think that in this country we have gotten to that state. I know that in Lacombe the council there feel that we are already very close to that state.

We in the Wainwright constituency of course have had some excitement, if you like, with the Taiwanese sugar proposal in that area, and it certainly has brought forward the issues that go along with land use. Those issues in our area really put a lot of pressure on the local council. They go back, as was mentioned, to the code of practice. The code of practice really, I think, was likely a very good code of practice. People didn't trust it, and they say that there are no teeth in that particular law. So not having experienced or seen some of the things shut down through our environment people and through our health people – and I think each one of the MLAs that have been in this Assembly for a while have dealt with some agriculture projects that have been shut down for the very reason that they are contaminating something. However, this could not be trusted. That was the feeling of the people, so they did not want to accept the project going ahead.

Now, when we talk about Bill 205, this bill is to strengthen and allow the agriculture producers the right to farm and the right to expand and to grow. Whether or not we should pass that bill and give an advantage to that side rather than bring our intensive livestock regulation into place and review it far more thoroughly than what has been done so far – and I know that our Member for Leduc's committee has done a lot of work on that. I look forward to that coming into the House, and I think that every one of us in this House should take a very, very careful look at that, because it does impact people in the cities as well as people in rural Alberta. I would like to see us get into that bill and do some strenuous work with that, because it is very difficult for us to say what is fair and balanced, to come and say that this one needs a right over here and we put some more fear into somebody else on the other side of it. I believe we should look at it more carefully.

I do know that it's a commonly held view that larger operations make management decisions with less concern for environmental stewardship within the community. That's a concern that I believe people maybe shouldn't have. It's really not a proven concern, but it's out there. It's perception, and we have to do something about that.

I did have an opportunity to go on a business trip with a friend of mine down to Mexico awhile ago, and when I did that, I went to a dairy farm down there. This dairy farm was about 20 miles from the city. They had 3,400 cows on it. They milked them three times a day. They had their own processing plant on the farm. They had these cows on 20 acres or maybe 30 acres of land. They cleaned the corrals every day. They had a pile of manure at the bottom end of the lot, and that pile was very small. When you go down there, you couldn't smell it.

So right away I said to them: what are you doing with this, and where's the rest of it? The answer was: "We are treating it. We take the smell out of it probably in the first day or so, and we put it on the land within 20 days." I said: "Well, you don't have any environmental laws down here in Mexico that make you do that. Why are you doing it?" They said: we know it's coming, and we want to be perceived as looking after our environment. That was in a country that doesn't have the laws. I think our industry in this country has the responsibility to see to it that we are looking after our environment and that we show people that we are doing a good job.

With that, I'm going to say thank you very much for the opportunity, and I'll sit down.

THE SPEAKER: I'm going to recognize the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, but just prior to doing that, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of 58 constituents visiting us today from l'ecole Plamondon school. L'ecole Plamondon school, located in Plamondon, is a community school with 450 students. It is a unique school in that it offers three individual programs: Russian, French immersion, and English. The school body is very active in sports and most supportive of their teams, the Plamondon Hawks and the Plamondon Doves.

Today we are honoured to have the grade 5/6 English class visit along with their teachers, Gerry Stefanyk and Mrs. Kathy Duncan, and parent volunteers Stephanie Martushev, Rosaire Ulliac, Charlene Gauthier, Marilee Duperron, Angie Sehn, Palmira Alvarez, and Cory Snegirev. I'm sorry for the ones that I have pronounced wrong. They are seated in the members' gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity to rise and make a few comments on Bill 205.

Mr. Speaker, as other members have commented, the ability for agriculture to diversify in Alberta is extremely important. One only has to look at some of the results. For example, on more than one occasion the highest price for feed barley has been in Lethbridge. Well, why is that? The reason is, of course, the fact that there is so much livestock in the area that it has created that very strong market.

As well, when one looks at the province and looks at the diversity, as the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner talked about, we have in the province a situation where in southern Alberta, from Calgary south, the opportunity to diversify into specialty crops is much greater than in the area from Calgary north. When you really analyze what can happen in the area from Calgary north, the area is very suited to the production of coarse grains and forages. Well, in order to market those, we need to have the ability to process them in that area. One of the ways of processing them, of course, is with livestock. So it is important that we continue to have that opportunity.

Now, when we look at some of the things, particularly with the monopoly that the Canadian Wheat Board has on our ability to sell grains, and when we look at the transportation costs for moving grain out of this province, it's going to be even more important that we find ways of processing. As an example, just this fall off our own farm we sold three cars of malt barley. Well, a third of the initial payment went to pay for the freight. You can't afford to grow grain if a third of the initial payment is going to go for freight. Now, of course, if we were rid of the Canadian Wheat Board and had the ability for a dual marketing system, then we could get away from some of that freight.

I think it is really important that we allow farmers to do what they do best, and if you're looking from Calgary north, it certainly is dealing with the production of feed grains and forages. To really process those, you need livestock.

Now, getting to the points in Bill 205, I had the same experience as the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, having served as a municipal councillor, reeve, and on the executive of the AMDs and Cs, so I know that this has been a big issue for some time within the province. The committee the hon. member mentioned that he served on did very good work, and they issued a very good report. However, there were a couple of things that were, I thought, deficient and didn't answer the questions.

The first one was to deal with the existing operations and how you handle those, and the second was the approval process. Quite frankly, I have a lot of difficulty with the current situation. Really what it amounts to is that we are being asked by municipalities – when I say “we,” it's the provincial government – to have the responsibility for these operations, yet we do not have the authority. That doesn't work, Mr. Speaker.

If anybody doubts that, I wish they would have been with me here about a month ago when I was called to the town of Bentley to a public meeting where I sort of got roasted. The fact was that we did not issue the permit. The county of Lacombe are the people that issued the permit, but they are not taking the responsibility. We are looked at by the people in that town as having the responsibility of governing that facility, yet we did not issue the permit. We did not have the authority to handle it. That is a major problem.

Now, I think that there are some things that we can do and should do that would in fact accommodate some of the comments that the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner made about having local authority. I have always agreed that we need to have that local input, and we need to have local authority, but I think some of that has to be done up front.

When we talk about the agricultural opportunities in the province, there's a lot of opportunity being lost today by the loss of agricultural land. That is in the case where towns, cities, highways, and all the rest of it are paving over agricultural land, and it's lost. But there's even a more major loss occurring out there, and that is the fragmentation of agricultural land. There's where we are going to really start running into a lot of trouble as it relates to intensive livestock operations, because in all of the things that I've seen, all of the experience that we've had with this whole issue, odour is the one thing that causes the biggest problem with the neighbours. Can anyone tell me where we have addressed that issue?

We've talked about setback. Setbacks do not work. That is simply a prescriptive issue, and it doesn't work. We have to look at outcome. How do we address the outcome?

Getting back to the land use issue, Mr. Speaker, I think that what we need to do is – and I think we probably have a responsibility as government – have changes in the Municipal Government Act that would require rural municipalities to zone their municipality where agriculture would be paramount. In an area where agriculture would be paramount, that means intensive livestock operations could be established in that area, providing of course that the environment is protected. By that, I mean the water, the soils, and to the extent possible the air. Certainly some would disagree that the odour is simply a nuisance. I know there are a number that would argue that it is a health problem. Perhaps. I'm not getting into that argument. Currently under any regulation in the health act it's not a health issue. It is a nuisance. How do we address that?

The worry I have is that as we see this fragmentation occurring, we are going to be restricting what can happen in agriculture, not only in the intensive livestock operations but also with other issues that come up in normal agricultural practices; for example, the problem with dust, the problem with noise. Believe me, as a former minister of agriculture I found many times when people were complaining about sprayers . . .

THE SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time set aside for this matter in our Routine today has now left us.

Agricultural Investment Shares

502. Mr. Fischer moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the possibility of increasing investment dollars in agriculture and the agricultural industry through the use of a tax vehicle in the form of flow-through shares.

[Debate adjourned May 1: Ms Blakeman speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to address the Assembly regarding Motion 502. First I offer my sincere congratulations to the hon. Member for Wainwright for this very innovative approach. This motion urges the government to explore the use of flow-through shares as an investment tool to attract capital investment in the value-added processing and marketing sector of agriculture.

The sponsor of this motion is a rural member who has spent most of his life involved in agriculture. In fact, I believe that today his sons are farming, and I'm sure he talks to them regularly about some of the difficulties that he faces. We all know, too, that this hon. member seems to find his way out and about this province and has probably had the opportunity, albeit in a coffee shop or on a golf course, to talk to other farmers and people involved in agriculture about some of the immense difficulties facing this important sector.

Isn't this the province that has looked for the last few years at doing things differently, finding new and innovative approaches, looking for efficiencies, and giving credence to moving out of the old box? This is what I see in Motion 502. This motion, if passed, would be one more positive aspect relative to the Alberta economy, to the Alberta advantage, industry helping industry with government acting in the capacity of willing facilitator. We would be creating a positive environment where the agriculture sector could invest in agriculture, providing a hand up, not a huge handout.

The intent of this motion is to look at the benefits that could be accrued to the offering of flow-through shares. One only has to look at the exploration activity in the oil and gas sector and mining exploration as well to see the immediate effects of this type of initiative. Relevant to mining exploration these shares became popular in the late 1980s because of increased interest in gold and other precious metals. The economic impact of these shares to these sectors has been enormous. Between 1987 and 1991 flow-through shares raised over $2.5 billion for mining exploration. This amount represented 60 percent of all funding raised for mining exploration over this period.

Last week as the introducing sponsor of Bill 205 I mentioned that many, many challenges and issues are facing our community today. Just a few minutes ago we heard other speakers talk about what our farmers are indeed facing. Many Alberta farmers have been hit with a combination of factors over the last several years, factors certainly beyond their immediate control, including low commodity prices, rising input costs, multiple weather-related problems.

We heard just a minute ago about fragmentation of land. In that particular area it is with interest that I point out to the members of the Assembly that I have a gentleman in my constituency that this is probably his number one concern. He was in to see me a couple of weeks ago and told me that the land left available for agriculture purposes in Alberta is 17 percent with soils 1, 2, or 3. To me this is most significant, and it is something that we need to talk about and worry about. This land must be sustainable for the long term, for generations to come. Possibly we should look at land not as a commodity but in fact as a nonrenewable resource. If you think about the urban sprawl and the amount of land that is going for other uses, nonagriculture uses, I think that we need to have a discussion relevant to this.

Farmers are meeting a number of these challenges that they've had to deal with head on. Many, as we've talked about, have diversified, moving away from producing commodities that they cannot sell to producing commodities needed, much sought after in the global marketplace. As such, specialty crops and livestock production have increased dramatically. Our farmers can adapt, and flexible they must be as well, producing those commodities that are marketable and that others deem they will buy.

Many decisions made relative to the farm business's bottom line are no different than those made by the owner of the local hardware store. If the consumer, the people frequenting that particular hardware store, will not buy widgets, why would the owner of the store order widgets, have them on a shelf, and try to sell them? Any business must keep pace with supply and demand. We need to provide our agriculture sector with as many tools as possible so that they, too, can work to becoming self-reliant. I think this is one thing that would be accomplished if we were to vote for and the government were to look at implementing what is in Motion 502.

Motion 502 would attract investment dollars into the industry. Flow-through shares and value-added plants would provide a valid option for farmers and producers and give a much-needed and long-overdue boost to the agriculture sector. The common shares would be purchased pursuant to a flow-through agreement at a premium to the marketplace of a resource company's common shares as compensation for the benefit of tax deductions renounced by resource companies to the investor. That is how it works today, and it would work very much in the same way with the agriculture sector. The benefits of flow-through shares would help many small companies to do with oil and gas and to do with mining exploration, and the same thing would occur with farming. Many of these small businesses without this initiative would never have been able to raise the necessary financing.

The capital raised through the public offering of such common shares in the agriculture sector would be used to finance the construction of value-added production plants around Alberta. It is intended that flow-through shares will attract much-needed investment dollars in Alberta's agriculture sector, offering investor tax incentive opportunities for investment, number 1; assisting with the construction of agriculture value-added processing plants, number 2; and increasing the number of jobs within the agriculture sector.

Many farmers as well as some of the other things I talked about are not making enough today with the uncertain markets to look at replacing machinery. We have heard repeatedly in this House and within the rural areas about the high price of fertilizer as we move into spring seeding. One only has to drive up highway 2 to note the very severe dry conditions of our farmland and the erosion of good soil because of a lot of wind lately. So they do have some difficulty this year meeting many of the demands that will be placed upon them.

I think that offering the agriculture community any type of initiative, any type of incentive, any type of positive ideas as to how they could look at working with themselves and with other sectors within their industry is only good thinking. Again I congratulate the member for spending some time on this particular motion, and I hope that the entire Assembly will look at this. Value-added agriculture is important to Alberta, and the need for processing plants in the various sectors and commodities will only increase over time. We would have such things as processing plants for hogs and chickens. More and more we're getting into food processing as far as potatoes and carrots. So this is something that the farmers themselves could look at, what is needed close to their area, and with these flow-through shares it would be a win/win situation for all involved.

I would ask that others in this Assembly rise and support the hon. Member for Wainwright in this endeavour and that over time the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development might add this to a list of things to look at regarding the agriculture sector that would undoubtedly benefit all.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Motion 502, basically authorizing flow-through shares for the agriculture industry. This is a situation where we have to look seriously at how we go about creating situations to raise money or to allow for capital to flow into an industry. In a lot of ways what we have to do is look at how the market, the structure, the legislation that we put in place affect both the investment dollar and the decisions that surround that investment dollar and how they are put into the different kinds of sectors.

We've all heard about how the idea of flow-through shares have helped in the natural resource area, oil and gas. We've also heard how they're very effective in the high-risk motion picture industry areas as well. We have to look at it from the perspective of what's appropriate and right both in the context of agriculture and in terms of how we deal with defining the relative decisions that are made in the context of creating an environment to direct capital.

When we look at the concept of a flow-through share, basically what we're doing in a lot of cases is allowing the individual who buys those shares to essentially take the write-off of the cost in lieu of the company that they invested in, because that company doesn't have the income to write off the development costs. This basically gives a more rapid deduction against income tax payable, so in effect what we're doing is transferring income tax revenues over on a fractional basis based on the income of the investor. A lot of these investors are in the upper income level, so approximately half of that cost is being underwritten by the taxpayer when we deal with flow-through shares.

What happens then is that as the company starts to achieve some economic viability, you end up in a situation where the increase in the value of those shares in that company that you invested in gets converted into capital gains, which in our normal process of legislative review right now of our taxation we're basically increasing the exemption from taxation for more and more of capital gain incomes. So what we're going to effectively do is provide an investment in agriculture funded by the taxpayer of Alberta as opposed to the individual who puts up the money.

When we look at where we use flow-through shares right now, we see them being used in industries where the risk is unbelievably unpredictable in the sense: how successful is a motion picture or an oil well or a gas well? I know that in the oil and gas industry with the new methods of seismic activity the predictability of drilling is getting to be much greater, but they're still in high-risk areas, which have a very broad-based economic spinoff either in terms of the economy of Alberta because of our oil and gas industry or because of the magnitude of the potential return that's associated with the motion picture industry and the entertainment industry.

When we look at agriculture and we're going to put flow-through shares into agriculture, this is a whole different group of investors that we're looking at here. These are not the high-speculative, high-risk investors that are being asked to put up money into these agriculture investments. So what we've got to do is look at where the alternatives are that these individuals would invest those dollars in. It's not going to be in these high-risk investments; it's going to be in other comparable investments to agriculture. What we've got to do, then, is decide: if we look at this as a mechanism we want in place for agriculture, where are we going to take those investment dollars from? What sector are they going to come out of? It's going to have to be a sector where there's approximately the same degree of risk and the same degree of knowledge.

Now, if we were to look at these and say that this is going to be constrained somehow to the advancing technologies, you know, the new bioengineered foods or some of these kinds of areas where there is a high risk and a high speculative value, this may be more comparable to where we're already using them in the economy, and we'll be giving the same kind of risk reward or risk recognition to this. You know, to have a flow-through share go out and get involved in investing in, say, an intensive livestock operation or a traditional value-added activity in agriculture like a flour mill or a pasta mill or some of the other value-added components that are quite common out there, effectively what we're going to do is we're going to distort the market in the sense that the people who have already invested in these value-added areas are now going to have to compete with somebody who has a quick write-off through a flow-through share in another area.

So I would suggest that if we want to look at this in agriculture, we should be looking at it with the restriction that it be encouraged in, quote, the high-risk new investments, the frontier areas of value added in agriculture rather than the traditional areas, because we'll end up distorting that market in those traditional areas where people have conventionally invested here and now all of a sudden they're going to have the option for a flow-through share investment over here.

What we're going to see, too, is that in the context of the way it will work, this will probably be much more attractive to the extremely large-scale investors if we're going to talk about the traditional agriculture sector, you know, the very large intensive livestock operations or the very large type of farm intensive, whether it's irrigation, whether it's extensive in the context of grain production. If we want to look at it from that perspective, I would suggest that we shouldn't be putting in place support out of the public system. Mr. Speaker, I consider a forgiveness of taxation to be the same as a payment of a dollar subsidy. There's no difference in the context of the public's role.

So what we have to look at there is how we're affecting this in the context of the competitive position of respective businesses in our rural communities. I would suggest that unless it's constrained to, as I've said, these frontier types of activities, the frontier type value added, you know, the new bioengineered technologies or these kinds of things, we're going to distort the agriculture market out there both in terms of biasing it toward the extremely large producers and toward the existing producers compared to the new producers.

This to me is not acceptable in the context of what vision I've heard Albertans express in the context of the growth summit on agriculture, where people were talking about the concepts of agriculture and agriculture development that are consistent with the promotion of a community life and a community commitment. What we'll see here is essentially an opportunity for the community to lose its agriculture sector to these very large intensive livestock operations or to other very capital-intensive operations who get their investment through this kind of process.

Mr. Speaker, what you end up with, then, are the kinds of situations where – and it's coming up more and more now with the concept of the intensive livestock. We're creating through this almost a different land use that farmers are now developing into a marketable asset, and that's the asset or the title to dispose of livestock waste. What we end up with is some farmers effectively generating an income flow, even if it's in lieu of an expense, by allowing their land to be held captive by an intensive livestock operation as a waste dump.

That affects the community in the sense that if that individual at some time wants to sell their property, either the intensive livestock operator has to find a new owner in the area to accept the waste, or if they've got a long-term contract, it has to be passed on to the new buyer. That new buyer, then, doesn't have the option to develop a livestock operation because the land base is already committed for waste disposal to an intensive livestock operation.

You know, these kinds of activities are going to affect our rural communities. I would, I guess, encourage the members here to look at this motion very seriously. If it is supported and passed, what we have to look at is: when it comes time to implement this, let's very seriously look at how we target the identification of the different sectors that this investment-generating activity can be used in. When I talk to people in rural Alberta and when I talk to community members, they don't want to see what in essence would be a biased system generated where the large-scale individuals would have an advantage over the smaller community-based operators. So this is, I guess, where we need to go on this and look at it from the perspective of how it is going to promote the kind of development and the focus of development that we want to see in the agriculture sector.

Mr. Speaker, it's really important that we look at how we can develop some kind of capital pool for agriculture, and I think some of the things we might want to look at are maybe some investment types of activities that'll share costs, allow for pooled investment.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 carried]

Electricity Deregulation

503. Dr. Nicol moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to prepare annually a detailed cost-benefit analysis of the impact of electricity deregulation on the utility bills on all classes of customers in Alberta which must be released to the public.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this afternoon to stand and move Motion 503. This is one of the issues that comes up quite frequently as we look at the process we use here to make decisions that affect the economic development and the economic well-being of Albertans.

You know, most of the time we should be doing this kind of analysis before we look at activities, before we look at the promotion of a particular initiative in the legislative arena, and what we would've wanted to have seen here is a real look at the kinds of benefits we expect to get out of electricity deregulation. How will it contribute to an advancement in terms of the competitive position of Alberta business, the relative cost and well-being that comes about with respect to individuals in terms of their own residential use of utilities?

Mr. Speaker, the whole area of electricity and our natural gas becomes complicated when we start to talk about them in the context of our business development initiatives and the direction that we take in dealing with the appropriate role of government. This comes down to essentially electricity having a dual market function in the sense that it is an input in a production process and it's also a utility for residences and consumers. So what we need to do is possibly look at how we would implement a cost-benefit analysis and who is going to get the benefits out of this.

Mr. Speaker, when we debated the deregulation act, one of the things I pointed out – and I've talked about it quite frequently since – is that in the context of what we're dealing with here, we are in a position to effectively go back and look at deregulation and determine whether or not it is going to give Alberta any kind of a true benefit that it would not have had with the continuation of the existing electricity marketing structure, or electricity distribution structure I guess says it better. You know, when you talk about marketing, you imply some degree of choice and decision-making associated with a market, but in effect what we had was a distribution system where price was determined by formula.

If we look at trying to put in place the concept of cost-benefit analysis, we want to be looking at this from the point of view of who the recipients are going to be. One of the big things that I heard about before we talked about deregulation was the relative transfer of value that was associated with the existing structure of our electricity distribution system. We used to have different classes of power, yet we talked about a pool pricing system. Well, you know, what we could have done to get rid of that if we truly wanted a pool pricing system was reduce or eliminate the different class rates.

There was no justification for the class rates other than a specific decision to have the industrial and commercial sectors subsidize the residential sectors in their electricity. That should never have happened if we were really dealing with a pooled system. So as we went away from the kind of class identification we had, we created an obvious benefit to the industrial and commercial sectors at the cost to the residential sector by allowing for a common price.

We're probably also going to further influence that in the sense that we allow for large businesses to go out and buy block amounts, with their peak loads bought on a contingency or spot market basis, but individuals that are in the residential market don't have the option the way a large block business or a combination of block businesses has to go out and buy jointly. What we have to do, then, is look at how that is going to effectively work in the sense that it will transfer the buying advantage to the large users at the expense of the small users. You know, this is why we're talking about who are the gainers and the losers from this. That's basically what a cost-benefit analysis tells you: where do the benefits go and at what cost? In the context of deregulation we have to look at that.

You know, if we look at all the projections that are given to us – and we constantly hear the minister and the Premier talking about our being back down to competitive prices in five years, Mr. Speaker. If we start dealing with net present values on looking at the flow of dollars that is going to occur, in five years the price advantage to introducing a competitive marketing system will have to be unbelievably large to offset the net present value of the five-year interim period where we are so significantly above what would have been the price had we continued with the current market structure and the current market pricing system, even if we took and eliminated that bias that was associated with the user price class system.

So what we've got to do, then, is try to figure that out. It's almost impossible to imagine the degree to which the benefits would accrue subsequent to the time when the price would drop back down to where it might have been if we stayed with the current system.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at it – and it would be really interesting to do an analysis 10 or 15 years into the future and look back on this when we've actually got a historic price path for us to follow. But, you know, we've got to watch here because what we've done in an industry where we have an increasing cost curve: the concept of moving to marginal-cost pricing always guarantees that the market price would be above the price that was associated with an average-pricing system if you stayed with that. We've moved from an average-cost pricing system to a marginal-cost pricing system, and there is no foreseeable new technology that would give us any kind of an expectation of a reduced marginal cost for new generation in the future.

So, essentially, what we've done is we've asked Albertans on into the future always to pay more than they would have had they stayed with average-cost pricing. If we look at that kind of analysis in the context of our cost benefits, you know, actually changing the pricing mechanism as well as changing the structure, what we'll see is that the costs to Albertans are significantly higher than what they'll be able to see in the context of the benefits. Because until we have a downward-sloping supply curve – and that's only going to come when we have a new technology, a new mechanism to provide us with electricity – we're going to have prices that are above the cost that's associated with the former pricing system.

The reason that we're asking for this to be done on an annual basis is to look at it from the perspective of giving Albertans a chance to basically see how they are essentially approaching, if they ever do, this position where, in a sense, their benefits exceed the costs that they've had to experience because of the deregulation process.

You know, I guess by doing it on a tracked basis, what we're doing is essentially saying that we're giving the government a chance to show Albertans that the net benefit to them would be positive at some point in the future. As my explanation that I've just given in terms of this discussion, I don't think that would happen, but that's a challenge, I guess, that we each have to face in the context of: I take a risk that if this is done, I get proven wrong, but also, if the government does this, there's a chance that in the end Albertans will realize that the net effect and the net benefit of their deregulation system is a long ways in the future, if they receive any benefit from it at all. When you go back, then, on an annual basis, you can compare the numbers and do net present value on them. We can see that as of the time we made the decision, there was no rational basis in terms of cost benefit to actually do it.

Mr. Speaker, we could have given our industrial consumers of electricity, who use electricity as a production input, not as a utility, an extreme opportunity to have benefits by just collapsing the price class system that we have and not going to a marginal-cost pricing system.

It's really interesting in the sense that a lot of the discussion that we see now in the context of the potential new generation comes with kind of the proviso that there will be an export market opportunity for that generated power, and, Mr. Speaker, this is a normal process in the context of a business decision. You don't want to make the kind of investment that's necessary to generate electricity in a closed market. We could have developed that flexibility and that incentive for our private-sector generators which we had before. We could have provided them with that opportunity in the sense that we could have given them an option to build a generator, commit a certain percentage of it to the Alberta pool, and then allow them to market the rest of it, either for peak load in Alberta or into the export market. We have an opportunity here because of our coal resources to generate power at a profitable level into the western grid.

But I don't see why we necessarily want to have Albertans subject to the marginal-cost pricing situation that is going to exist in the western grid, especially when large consumers like California create such a mess that they've created in the context of an environment where they're short of supply. We're always hearing now about: well, you know, the price of electricity is now down to $90. This high price that we had before isn't really significant. I think it's now probably around $110 or $112 on the daily blend price. But what's it going to be this summer, Mr. Speaker, when California needs more power to deal with the air conditioning demand down there?

How are we going to deal with that as our power gets bid down into the B.C. grid, the tie lines through B.C. to that western grid where they need that air conditioning electricity? We're going to have to compete with all of the individuals in California for their will to be cool. Instead of coming up and visiting us like tourists, like they should do, they're going to want to stay home and be cool. We're going to have to sell them our electricity to do it, and we'll end up paying for our electricity because of that. This is why this kind of a system where we're going to expose ourselves to basically the improper or the not-well-planned decisions of another jurisdiction – do we want that to travel back and impact on our consumers?

Mr. Speaker, this is extremely difficult for individuals on a fixed income when they look at how they have to proportion their fixed income budget and all of a sudden they find a lot of up and down spikes in their utility costs. We saw it last fall in natural gas. We saw it last winter in electricity. We'll probably see it again this summer in electricity as we deal with basically somebody else determining the price of our electricity. Until we get to a point where the generation capacity in Alberta exceeds the needs of Albertans and the capacity to export, we're always going to be subject to the issue of another place setting the price for electricity here, because we're dealing with that marginal-cost pricing system.

I guess in the conclusion of this, Mr. Speaker, what we want to do is look at how this benefits Albertans in the sense that what it'll do is give them a sense of confidence that there is a kind of a trend toward an increased benefit scenario. Even if we do it without looking at the structural change in the pricing system, the average versus marginal cost, if we only do it in the context of how it is coming through, if we take some of the impacts of secondary benefits through a cost-benefit analysis, what we'll see is that because of the lower price in the structure for industrial commercial users, what we'll end up with is individuals in Alberta seeing that there is additional employment, that there is additional economic opportunity created because the activities and the proposals and the hopes that we put forward by promoting this kind of deregulation actually occurred.

Mr. Speaker, I don't see it happening, but I would very much like to stand up in this Legislature five years from now or write you a letter in maybe 10 years from now and say: "I apologize. I was wrong. Deregulation was good." But until we have this kind of data, I guess I won't really have a basis to be able to sit down and say, "Gee, that's how it happened, and that's how we're going to measure it." So, don't hold your breath because you probably won't get the letter because we won't have the data to deal with it, but, Mr. Speaker, I'd really like to be in a position 10 years from now to be able to write that letter. With this kind of information we could, and I'd also like to be able to admit or to apologize to Albertans and say: "I was wrong on that. You ended up better off because of deregulation." But on that basis, again, I don't think I'll be writing the letter either, because I don't think we'll get to a position where this kind of an analysis will show Albertans are better off because we made the shift than what they would have been if we would have just fine-tuned the system that was there.

So on that basis, Mr. Speaker, I think I would ask individuals to make a commitment to Albertans to provide them with the information that they can use to judge how they're going to benefit from the structural change that we've put into our electricity industry through deregulation. I would ask everybody here to give us that chance or to commit our government to provide them with that information so they can feel comfortable knowing that the decision was made and they're going to benefit from it.

So on that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and allow others to make some comments.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate having the opportunity to rise in the Assembly and address Motion 503, and I appreciate very much that the Member for Lethbridge-East is trying to get more information out to the public about the cost of electricity. I'm pretty sure that anybody getting a bill in Alberta in the last six months knows what electricity costs. What they may not realize is why prices have gone up, and I would like to address that while speaking to this motion.

We've all heard the term supply and demand, and we also know that when demand comes close to the supply level or in fact in peak demand times exceeds that supply level, the price is going to go up. That holds true for all goods and services of all kinds from cars to apartment rentals to commodities, and hon. members and Mr. Speaker, electricity is in fact a commodity.

In a report done in December of 2000 for the market surveillance administrative, the MSA determined that a combination of factors had contributed to high market prices. The report listed many contributing factors such as fuel prices, electricity prices specific to opportunity costs and other regional markets, weather and precipitation, hydro generation and its particular characteristics, operating reserves carried on the system, maintenance, supply growth relative to demand, and technical limitations on the interprovincial interconnections.

The reasons for deregulation in the first place were to make it possible for companies other than the monopolies, which were TransAlta, Alberta Power, and ATCO, to generate electricity inside this province and put their surplus power into the grid. The regulatory framework that existed for years did in fact serve Alberta well for a period of time. However, when it takes over 10 years of hearings to allow one of the monopolies to bring a power plant onstream in Alberta, you can tell that the system is no longer working. In addition to that specific delay, the cost of the last regulated plant in Alberta went up by over $650 million because of all of those hearings, and by the way, Albertans had to pay that $650 million as well.

Even as recently as six years ago it was estimated that we had a surplus of power of close to 20 percent, but while that may have been true, the monopolies for the past six years did nothing, and they did not seem to even notice that we were averaging a growth rate of over 4 percent a year. New people were moving in, new investment was coming into the province, and new companies were opening up here. And, yes, the surplus of power was in fact disappearing. The majors did nothing to address this looming shortage. Incidentally, just computer usage alone has increased power consumption by close to 12 percent. But I digress.

Fortunately for us cogeneration came onstream, over 1,400 megawatts in the past four years alone. Another 600 megawatts of new and cogeneration power will come onstream this year. In addition to this, over 4,000 megawatts of power development have been announced in the past six months. One wonders if the cost-benefit analysis the member wants done would take into account what would have happened if deregulation had not come in. What happens in a growing and booming economy when we've run out of power? If you want to talk about high prices, I wonder what it would be today without the cogeneration that is already in our grid system.

I love that the opposition are always looking for a downside on everything, and it has been easy to take shots at deregulation. I mean, talk about bad timing. Who knew that natural gas prices would go from $2.70 to $16 in a 90-day period of time? Who knew when the power plants were converting from coal to natural gas in the past five years that it would force the price of power way up in the year 2000 and 2001? How many Albertans know that our transmission grid system cannot really handle much more power on the existing lines? Most of the power in Alberta is produced in the Edmonton area, yet much of the demand is in southern Alberta.

Several new cogeneration and stand-alone power plants are being built or planned for in the constituency that I represent. This has created concerns there, as well, Mr. Speaker. However, the truth is that the transmission system that we currently have will not handle the power if it has to come from long distances. We have to build the plants closer to where the use is. Our interprovincial connections will not handle much more power either, yet the big fear now is that we're going to export power.

Well, one day maybe we'll be in a surplus position again and we could export it. In fact, we do during the night export some to British Columbia but not with the transmission grid system we have today. It has a 950-kilovolt limit on it. Billions have to be spent enhancing the existing lines just to get power around the province. We could be buying power from the Northwest Territories and Saskatchewan, but the lines won't handle any right now.

So we sit here talking about yet more reports on the cost of power when we should be talking about how to fast-track projects. We should be talking about building a bigger and better grid system, and we should be talking about how to promote the safe and environmentally friendly use of coal, which we have in abundance here.

For too long we as Albertans have just taken power for granted. It was just there. You flip a switch and the light goes on. Well, they thought that in California too. Their population doubled in the last 15 years, and no one built any power plants. I mean, why would you? The environmentalists were opposed to them. No one wants to live anywhere near one. And what the heck? You can buy it from somebody else anyway.

Well, California did everything wrong, Mr. Speaker. To make it even worse, they've now reregulated their system and put the taxpayers at even greater risk down there. They have to build plants, and it just gets that simple.

Every 100 megawatts that you need to build will cost approximately $100 million, and California needs 30,000 megawatts of power. We are not California. We dealt with higher prices through British Columbia in large part because of their sale of power to California.

Several independent auditors have studied our deregulation model. In fact, it's probably not a perfect system, but the auditors all say the same thing. We are on track for a long-term sustainable and affordable electricity industry. Higher prices would have existed with or without deregulation, and to say otherwise is being less than forthright with Albertans. Our problem is caused by high and rapid growth and high natural gas prices. All the cost-benefit analyses in the world won't change that. We need more power, and deregulation will give us that. The creation of a competitive marketing option in energy is a long-term process certain to undergo bumps along the way.

An annual report that does not emphasize this long-term vision, especially one that focuses on the short-term cost/benefits on electricity bills, would be misleading. The department of resource development has already established a transition plan for electricity deregulation, and the department will be pursuing its own targeted reports on the opening up of competitive market options, reports that will be far more valuable to us than what this motion would suggest.

I urge all hon. members to defeat Motion 503.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure at this time to get an opportunity to participate in the debate on Motion 503, a cost-benefit analysis for the electricity deregulation. The only thing I can say at this time, Mr. Speaker, is that certainly it is about time that a cost-benefit analysis would be provided not only to members of this Assembly but to consumers, whether they be residential or industrial consumers of electricity, the ones that are paying for the mismanagement and the mistakes that have been made by the current government in the handling of this issue.

We are talking about having forecasts and a cost-benefit analysis, forecasts for electricity prices well into the future, for another 20 years. Contrary to what the hon. member has just stated, we've got organizations such as Optimum Energy Management. Their analyses are used, and they have a very accurate analysis for forecasting hourly pool prices. For those analyses to be dismissed I think is just simply not right.

Now, of course, we all heard that electricity deregulation promised to bring lower electricity prices for all Albertans through increased competition, but that certainly has not happened. So far all we've seen are skyrocketing prices due to a number of factors, including a lack of investment in new generation due to the lack of rules for deregulation. The lack of investment is a reflection on the lack of confidence in the current government to administer this deregulation scheme.

Now, if we look back, Mr. Speaker, to the past in this province, we will see that a former government – and I believe it was in 1948; I'm not sure about that date, but I think it was in 1948 – actually held a referendum to bring to the citizens of the province the issue of where the province should go with the distribution and generation of electricity. There were two options in the referendum. The first was a publicly owned utility, and the second option was a combination of both private generators and a distribution system that would be possibly publicly owned. The citizens of this province in a narrow vote chose the second option. We lived with that for 50 years.

All members of this Assembly talk about parliamentary reform. They talk about free votes, and they talk about referendums, but this is a case of a government actually going to the people in conjunction with a provincial election and being bound by the results.

We had this electrical distribution and generation system that, contrary to what other hon. members may think, actually dealt with the economic expansion of the '70s quite adequately. There was a planned expansion of the electrical grid. There were transmission lines installed. Transmission lines, as I understand it, are about 40 percent of the cost of the entire system. They can be up to 40 percent of the entire cost of the system. The system worked. What did this government do? Well, it simply put blind ideology before common sense. The consumers of electricity, whether they're industrial or residential, are paying the price, and they're going to pay the price well into the future.

Now, many industry experts suggest that electricity prices will come down, Mr. Speaker, from where they are currently but do not necessarily suggest that they will come down to where they once were before deregulation. It is interesting that even the Premier admitted in question period in this session that prices may never come down to where they were before deregulation. So, in other words, once all this settles out, we're still going to have prices that are much higher than our sister provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia.

What sort of economic advantage are we going to have? What sort of advantage, for instance, is Lethbridge Iron Works going to have? Unfortunately, the only advantage it's going to have is that perhaps the moving vans that are deadheading to Winnipeg are going to be empty. If that individual unfortunately has to move his enterprise to Manitoba, where electricity rates are cheaper, the move will be less costly. That's the only advantage that I can see in this, because the electricity costs are not going to go down.

An hon. member over there talked about exports, and I do not want to spend too much time on exports, but at this time we have to be very, very careful about getting fly ash in our face because of electricity exports to America, which is going to be hungry for electricity. What are we going to be left with? The pollution?

No one in this Assembly can tell me that CCTs, as they're called, the clean coal technologies, exist that are economically competitive. If someone on the opposite side of the House has a study that can prove that clean coal technologies exist and are economically competitive, show them, because right now all our coal-fired generators in this province are ironically called PC, pulverized coal, units. The CCTs that are claimed to be the wave of the future are still on the drawing board, and I would encourage that perhaps part of the half a billion dollars that's been set aside for research and development in this province could go to that effort. That would be a real good location for some of that research and development money, and perhaps we can develop our own clean coal technologies, because on the research that I've done, we've still got a lot of work to do, Mr. Speaker.

Now electricity exports. There are permits already available for many different producers of power in this province. They've got two choices here: they can have firm permits or they can be interruptible, but it exists. Now, the line capacity doesn't exist, and who is going to pay the benefit of that? I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen this current government all too often proceed with things, whether it's health care privatization or electrical system deregulation, without any evidence that it will work, and this is why a cost-benefit analysis would be so beneficial. To do it on an annual basis – I would almost think it should be done quarterly. As I understand, there are quarterly reports presented to the Economic Development minister on any number of issues. So perhaps if it's good enough for the Department of Economic Development, well, it's good enough for the rest of us.

Now, normally, Mr. Speaker, a cost-benefit analysis would be done before proceeding with something like deregulation, but since the current government has chosen to proceed anyway, we can only gauge and measure how we are proceeding. Right now we just have to think of the $40 a month rebate. That's not a ringing endorsement.

Now, such a cost-benefit analysis needs to look at all classes of Alberta consumers, from the largest of the industrial users to the smallest of the residential users. A cost-benefit analysis would look at the impact deregulation has on all types of consumers, whether it's been positive or negative.

Now, currently the government is taking an ad hoc regulatorylike intervention position in the electricity marketplace. I can't see how the government can talk about free enterprise, because this is certainly not conducive to a free, open, and competitive marketplace. There are still the outstanding questions as to whether electricity is what some economists call a natural monopoly and that's how it should remain.

Furthermore, without a plan for effective assistance for Albertans and without a long-sighted plan for deregulation, everyone in this province is ill served. By developing a long-term plan, one that is well thought out and ready to be executed, all our interests can be served. A cost-benefit analysis helps accomplish . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Bill 12 Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 12, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, the need to harmonize legislation in the prairie provinces has been recognized for the past two decades. Triprovincial meetings have been held to further this end. It is anticipated the passage of this Bill 12 will help move us further down the road in our efforts to harmonize with the other prairie provinces. In preparing this legislation, considerable input through the Farmers' Advocate office was completed. Stakeholder review included 462 Alberta licensed dealers, the Prairie Implement Manufacturers Association, Canada West Equipment Dealers Association, Canadian Farm & Industrial Equipment Institute, and 10 farm organizations including the Alberta Cattle Commission, Western Stock Growers' Association, and the Alberta barley growers, to name a few.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, addresses three key elements: clarification and simplification of definitions in sales agreements, a change in the notice period for failure to perform, and an amendment of the dealer and distributor obligations at termination. The amendments will clarify that a purchaser means a farmer using the equipment for farming use, not other off-farm use such as using a tractor for road construction. It will provide regulatory authority to exempt specific implements from the act like a garden tractor for mowing your lawn. It'll clarify the specific references to tractors in the act under section 4(1) to be completely farm implements. Not all tractors have a drawbar or power takeoff, and legislation already requires the equipment to meet manufacturers' specifications. If the unit has a power takeoff or drawbar, then that power would be listed in these specifications.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, will harmonize our act to be in line with what the other prairie provinces are at or going to. Manitoba's legislation currently specifies, on the notice of failure, to perform 50 hours or 10 consecutive days. This act brings us to 50 hours. However, due to a concern that weather conditions may preclude a purchaser from using his implement during a specific 10-day time frame, we've not made that requirement consecutive.

In addition to keeping the harmonization with other prairie provinces, this amendment will increase the amount payable to the dealer for parts returned with new parts from 85 percent to 90 percent and also clarify that at the time of dealer termination the distributor is responsible for storage and transportation on returnable parts and whole goods. The act will also increase the amount to 100 percent of the current net price where the agreement to terminate is at the distributor's request.

Mr. Speaker, harmonization will allow distributors easier access to all three western provinces by providing standard rules of operation. Without harmonization, dealers and ultimately farmers are not given parity throughout the prairies. This bill will enhance interprovincial trade through clarification and simplification.

Having said this, I ask for the support of members of this House for second reading of Bill 12.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today and speak to the Farm Implement Amendment Act. This I guess has been an issue that has been raised on a number of occasions in the last number of years when I've talked to farmers across the province, and they've wanted to have their legislation brought to some degree of consistency with what is in place for other farmers across western Canada. There are a couple of questions that I would like to raise on this. They're specific to some of the sections in it, and I just want clarification as to whether or not they're really the intent of the legislation or not. I think given the discussions we're having about how legislation is going to proceed, I'll talk to those couple of issues right now rather than waiting till committee, when we're supposed to talk about the specific sections in the act.

I guess the issue here is that when we're talking about a purchaser in the definition section, by adding the specific definition to be farming use, it appears here that essentially what we're dealing with is that a purchaser is "a farmer who purchases a farm implement for his own [farming] use." What about farmers who purchase it and use it in a custom operation? Is that a broad interpretation to be included in this? I can see the benefit of distinguishing between a person who purchases and is going to use what is effectively a farm implement for an industrial or construction use. But to essentially put in a definition that limits the use of this to a farmer who purchases it only for their own farming use, I interpret that to mean for use in your own operational farm as opposed to in the delivery of farming services.

So I guess in the context of that definitional change I would ask that the sponsor of the bill, the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and the department of agriculture look at this and see whether or not that is truly the interpretation they wanted. If not, maybe some clarification needs to be put in there so that we have a clear definition of whether or not someone buying equipment for use in custom operations would also be included in that definition. I don't consider a custom operator as buying a piece of equipment for their own farming use if they're using it to earn an income by farming for someone else.

I guess the other issue here is the amendment under section 5 where they're talking about the change to 50 hours. I guess what's happening here is essentially looking at it and putting in a minimum standard for effectively a time frame or a use frame for warranty work. Then what we should be doing here is essentially putting in a statement that stipulates that a clear definition of a warranty must be provided in the context of some issues, because potentially there are situations where to acquire a minimum standard of warranty creates an opportunity or a hardship in the context of a sales contract. But if we actually say that there must be an expressed warranty even if that warranty is zero, then the purchaser is buying in a situation of awareness; you know, they're fully informed, and they know what they're getting.

As long as there's a clear definition of a warranty, I don't see why we in the Legislature should be telling manufacturers, distributors, dealers, and use purchasers what kind of commitment to service they should be putting in place. This should be something that is negotiated and becomes part of the relative trade negotiation between different dealers and dealerships, manufacturers and distributors. So I guess as we look to truly allowing marketplaces to work and marketplaces to express themselves, to me that essentially legislates into the market some kind of a restriction that effectively should be allowed to be developed by the participants in a sales agreement.

With those couple of comments just on the record so that they can be looked at in the context of the time frame, I would urge everybody to look at this and consider it very seriously, because the farming sector has been asking for this kind of change in the act to satisfy their expectations, I guess, in terms of how they can relate to a dealership and how it will provide them with a degree of openness and accountability when they purchase farm implements. So congratulations to the member for bringing it in. It's been waited for by the agriculture community.

With those couple of considerations that I've brought up, I think we should look at this very favourably. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close debate.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to thank the hon. member for his comments. I appreciate his comments.

With that, I'll close debate.

Bill 13 Farm Implement Dealerships Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 13, the Farm Implement Dealerships Act.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 13, the Farm Implement Dealerships Act, is designed to improve competition and remove restrictions placed on farm implement dealers by preventing distributors from terminating dealership agreements without cause. This bill defines cause, process, and options available for canceling a dealership agreement. I would like to be very clear that we are not for a moment suggesting that distributors cannot and should not be able to decide with whom they would like to do business.

[The Speaker in the chair]

What we are proposing is a process whereby the playing field is level. Both farm implement dealers and distributors are able to make sound business decisions knowing that unilateral impositions will not negatively impact the future direction of their independent businesses.

Mr. Speaker, currently, through strongly worded dealership agreements, farm equipment distributors can dictate the day-to-day operations of a dealership by mandating, for example, the brand of equipment available, the size or number of facilities, and the colour of paint on the floor. It's important to remember that we are not talking about a McDonald's or Tim Horton franchise. We are talking about a family business where the father cannot pass the business down to his son or daughter because the distributor refuses to provide product to a new owner. We are talking about businessmen who have carried a specific line of equipment, trained their service technicians, and have provided quality service to customers for 15 or 20 years now being told that they need to discontinue offering these services and that if they don't comply, they will be shut down.

Mr. Speaker, in many rural communities the local farm implement dealership is the largest single employer. It is imperative that the economic viability of these communities continues to be maintained. Bill 13 goes to the heart of one significant concern for farmers and implement dealerships, which is the availability of products and services locally. Without this legislation we will continue to see closures of dealerships, resulting in greater cost to farmers through increased travel for parts and service. As well, farmers will be forced to carry large parts inventories on-site. When the weather is right for seeding or harvest, time is of the essence. Farmers can ill afford the time required to make a 100-mile trip one way for a repair part. This bill will go a long way to ensuring that manufacturers don't lose their retail outlets and local dealerships and remain in the neighbourhood providing support to the community and its economy.

Saskatchewan was the first province to recognize the need for dealer protection. Manitoba and Prince Edward Island quickly followed suit by passing similar legislation. Bill 13 will ensure that Albertans receive the same standards and function under the same principles as other agricultural operators in Canada.

Bill 13 will support dealerships in carrying a greater selection of equipment and services for their customers. Through this improved opportunity will come greater profitability. Farmers will see competitive pricing, selection, and service.

Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we reap the benefits of strong competition and a business environment with little or no government interference. Bill 13 will ensure that the farm implement industry is granted those same privileges. A dealership's fate will lie in the hands of the market and their own business acumen and not in the hands of distributors.

Since the initial release of Bill 13 on May 7, 2001 – that was just yesterday – response from dealers and rural constituents has been strongly supportive.

Bill 13 will help to support our rural communities and the backbone of Alberta, and that's agriculture.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the support of the members of this House for second reading of Bill 13.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would support the member in saying that this is a good bill, long waited for by the agriculture community in Alberta. This is going to essentially provide some options for purchasers of farm equipment, when we're seeing more and more a concentration of the main-line manufacturing activities. I think we're down now to basically four different significant manufacturers of farm equipment.

We have to look at it from the point of view of: how do we encourage and create competition in the market, and how do we increase the ability of farmers to both be able to shop but also be able to deal with some of the specialized equipment that's out there? We've heard a number of cases brought up in the last few years where main-line manufacturers or distributors have come along and asked dealers to give up short lines even though that short line was not in any way in competition with the pieces of equipment that were being supplied by the major distributor. So what we have to look at then is: how do we encourage that competition? The other provinces in western Canada have had dealership protection legislation in place for a number of years, and I think this is one of the pieces of legislation that will be well received in Alberta.

Again, as I read through this bill, I have just a couple of questions that have come up in the context of some of the particular sections that are there. In section 2(3) we're looking here at some restrictions on price discrimination. I guess the concern there that I would like to raise is some of the issues that might come up in the context of some of the larger dealerships that are able to buy quantity orders from the distributor. Does that not allow them to negotiate volume discounts? You know, we're talking here only about discrimination based on grade and quality, but the issue, then, I guess is that as long as it's the same grade and the same quality, the price has to be the same. But if you're buying a number of them, what we have to do is look at: is that an option? How can we clarify that in the context of section 2(3), and is that the way we want to deal with it?

So I guess the next section there as well, 2(4), is where we're talking about "substantially different contractual requirements related to dealership agreements on different dealers." I know that there are some cases out there where the distributors, in order to sustain a local dealership, have provided significantly different relationships so that they can actually keep a dealership in a region. I think what we've got to do here is look at it and make sure that the wording in this section is such that it doesn't allow a distributor to impose "substantially different contractual requirements" that create a disadvantage for a dealer.

That's, I guess, the way we want to look at it, more than just a blanket different type of a contract, because some of the distributors do provide reasonably beneficial or concessionary agreements to some of their dealers in order to keep them there. If we're going to say that they have to provide that same kind of concession to every dealer, then what we're doing, effectively, is not allowing the marketplace and the commitment to service to show as it could.

Mr. Speaker, I guess as we look beyond the bill here, I think section 2(5) is really the meat of the whole thing, where we have to make sure that a distributor is not allowed to discriminate against a dealer based on their carrying secondary lines or short-line equipment. What this is going to do is help the purchaser have an option, especially when we're dealing with specialized equipment, equipment that could potentially be recognized as unique to their kind of use.

What this kind of a restriction also does is it provides in many ways a real opportunity for a manufacturer of a specialized product or a local manufacturer the opportunity to have their product sold through a dealership that already has kind of the support network to be a dealership. This is really good, because what we've got to do is encourage and provide opportunity for new manufacturers to enter into the market of providing equipment for the agricultural producers. If we can make sure that a distributor can't restrict their dealerships from handling additional product, even if it is a competing product, then what this does is it facilitates the new innovators.

Mr. Speaker, if you look at the agriculture community, I can probably sit here and name off for the rest of the evening the pieces of equipment that you've seen developed by small manufacturers. They've developed them in the context of a specialized need to meet a condition that's either relevant to their area or to their type of farming. Then we end up seeing that piece of equipment later being picked up and the patents either taken under licence or actually bought out and become part of the major distributor's new line or new piece.

So what it does is it encourages innovation and kind of the adoption, because we look back and see how often new equipment, new ideas, new applications occur at the smaller level rather than at the big level where they're just thinking about improving their product or because they don't have the grassroots connection to actually see where farmers have changed their farming practice or have changed their cropping rotation or have changed the way they want to handle the product when it comes out. So they don't sense to the same degree that maybe their piece of equipment is becoming obsolete.

What we end up with here is a chance for small manufacturers to get a chance to put their product into a dealership, allow other farmers to have access to that product, use it for a little while, and essentially give it a chance to prove itself. Then it can be adopted or it is adopted by the major manufacturers and sold through their distribution channels.

So on that, Mr. Speaker, what we've got to do is look at this and deal with it from how it would best serve Alberta farmers. I think the way to do it is to put this in a way with the changes that are suggested through Bill 12 and look at them as a package of bills or two bills here that are going to really send a message out to the agriculture community that we've listened to them. We've heard the concerns that they've raised, and they'll now have farm implements, both dealership restrictions or dealership commitments, that are consistent with the other provinces around here and really also are intended to serve the best interests of the agriculture sector. So we end up with these ideas of innovation that I talked about being made available, and when a farmer goes in, they can also in many cases get a better match between the implement that they want to serve the need that they've got for it yet have it at a local level.

One of the other complaints that comes up an awful lot – but within the context of legislation, I don't think it's our position to get involved in it – is the whole idea of how dealerships are getting concentrated, and we've heard the comments already about the distance that has to be traveled to get equipment and to get to your dealership. We're looking at these now in the sense that within Alberta, especially right now, we're seeing two or three corporations taking over the line dealerships pretty well across the province as opposed to having a series of independent dealers where you really have the competition even within the same product line. This is something that farmers are expressing concerns about, yet within the legislation it's not really appropriate to deal with the idea that amalgamation and expansion in that way are not in the best interests of the system. These are the kinds of things that have to come up in the context of both the dealer/distributor negotiation and the relationship between the purchasers.

In many cases I've seen situations where a farmer will drive past one dealer all the way to the next dealer to buy their product rather than support the one that's closest. Who knows what reason that is, but they do it, and it does in some ways create competition that spurs on the economy and creates price sensitivities that are necessary when we have to deal with how we look at dealerships and competition in the market.

On those comments, Mr. Speaker, I think I'll take my seat and encourage everybody to support this one in conjunction with Bill 12. I think the two of them put together form a good package that will send a strong message to Alberta farmers that we listen to them and that we're acting to make sure that the kind of structure they want in their farm dealership relationship both in terms of accountability in Bill 12 and here in terms of the diversity and flexibility to carry multiple lines through one dealership – these pieces of legislation will really serve their needs.

On that, Mr. Speaker, I hope everybody supports this piece of legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan to close the debate.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First I'd like to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for his positive comments and excellent suggestions. Bill 13 recognizes that farm implement dealers are very important to rural communities, and this bill should help to minimize the erosion of our dealerships in our small communities.

I would like to end our debate and discussion on this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 16 School Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning to move second reading of Bill 16, the School Amendment Act, 2001. I would make a few comments on behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning, simply to underscore what the intentions were or are with this particular bill.

First of all, to clarify administrative and governance processes of the education system. Secondly, as stated in the Minister of Learning's news release, which bears today's date, the School Amendment Act, 2001 introduces a process to ensure that learning opportunities for students will be considered, along with utilization rates and other criteria, when decisions are made on new school facilities (complete criteria has yet to be developed by Infrastructure and Learning).

Mr. Speaker, other proposed changes contemplated under this bill, as introduced by the Minister of Learning, include:

- clarify the process for establishing charter schools and encourage better links with public and separate school boards in order to meet diverse student needs and parental expectations through the provision of alternative programs;
- ensure public and separate school supporters are assessed the same property tax rates;

- clarify the regions governing Francophone education and ensure that students have access to both linguistic and denominational rights guaranteed by the Constitution of Canada; and
- introduce alternatives to the existing separate school establishment process calling for further cooperation between public and separate jurisdictions and furthering the move to co-terminous boundaries across the province.

The bill also will impact school boards, obviously, private and charter schools, and a number of other aspects of our learning system.

Mr. Speaker, on my own behalf and on behalf of many constituents who have been speaking with me over the last several years, I should say, about the importance of continually updating and improving our learning system, I simply want to reiterate that the issue of utilization rates, which will be impacted by this particular bill, has been by far the single largest issue that I've had to deal with in terms of education-related concerns. In particular, the tremendous growth of cities like Edmonton – and by growth I mean expansion out beyond our boundaries – has created a phenomenon that is frequently referred to as urban sprawl, and it is in fact in many of these outlying areas where so many people have brought to my attention the need for new schools to be considered.

In one particular area of my constituency called the Meadows, which is nicely placed east of 34th Street, south of the Whitemud freeway, there is a tremendous need for a new Catholic school, and I've been working very closely with the Catholic school trustees, listening to their concerns on how they plan to address those needs, as well as with a number of individuals that are on various parental committees, particularly out of the Blessed Kateri school. So I'm looking forward to seeing what impact this amendment act will have in that regard, Mr. Speaker.

The other point, very quickly, is with respect to the impact on the Francophone education network in our province. One of the privileges I have in my new portfolio, Mr. Speaker, as you know very well, is the responsibility for le Secretariat Francophone, and as part of that responsibility I will read this bill with great care to see how it may or may not impact the delivery of Francophone education in our province.

So at this stage, Mr. Speaker, I personally will not be passing any judgment one way or the other on this bill. I'll keep an open mind, hoping that it addresses all of the concerns very squarely. I'm sure it likely does, but I will read it through more carefully and at this stage allow others to participate in this important debate.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make some comments about the principles underlining Bill 16 at second reading, and it seems to me that there are some important principles at work in the amendments that we have before us.

I'd like to first start with the mention in the bill of charter schools and a change in the treatment of charter schools under the School Act. It's a change that I think is welcome. The notion is that those schools should be, if at all possible, under the umbrella of one of the elected school boards in the province, and I think that that's a good move. It also is a reflection on what's happened to the public school systems – when I say “public,” I mean both the Roman Catholic separate and the public system – over the last number of years, and that's their ability, their flexibility in terms of responding to a variety of apparent interests.

I think it started with the alternate school programs that were introduced, some of them rather tentatively initially. The alternative school programs under the public system have grown to the extent where there are a wide variety of options and possibilities open to students and their parents in accessing public education. They're able to find programs and to find schools that suit their particular children yet are still under the aegis of a publicly elected board, a board that they can have some influence on, if at no other time at least at election time, a board that they can help have members elected to. Those schools adhere to the principles of public education in the province in that they are open to all, that they're publicly funded through the tax system, and that they are governed by a group of elected trustees.

I think the bill doesn't quite insist that they be umbrellaed, but the preference, I think, is certainly there. It's my hope that the public schools boards in their response will look with friendly eyes on those applications as they come in, because it will serve all of us and serve all children well to have those schools under one of the public boards and the opportunity to have a school that reflects a common set of values, that public schools do. I think that that's in everyone's best interest.

The principles as they affect charter schools I think are sound. It will be interesting to see the charter school applications that come forward that can't find a residence in one of the public systems. Given, as I said before, the wide range of alternate programs that are now available, from religious-based programs to fine arts programs to academically challenging programs like the international baccalaureate to an all-girls school, there is just a whole wide range, a rich range of choices of public schools. Yet we can be assured that those schools adhere to a number of requirements in terms of the teaching staff and the kinds of programs of study that are followed and the security and safety and behaviour of children. It will be interesting to see if any at all are rejected and, if they are, on what grounds.

Just a footnote on this, Mr. Speaker. It's been a growth in the alternate school movement that seems to have had more initial success, at least in this city, than it has in our neighbour to the south, in Calgary, where at one time a board there at election was entirely removed. The issue was the provision of alternate school programs.

The principle underlying this part of the bill that charter schools should be governed under elected school boards is a principle that we support. We're happy to see this provision in the act before us.

I move on to a second principle. I'm not sure that I'm articulating the principle the best way it could be, but it's that the School Buildings Board as such was not adequately reflecting the educational interests of the community. The School Buildings Board acted in a manner that seemed to exclude it from ministerial or school board pleas, and it was almost acting independently. It was, I think, most frustrating for school districts and boards to go to extensive plans in terms of their building and their repair requirements and to set a list of priorities, to send that list of priorities to the School Buildings Board, to submit it, and then to have projects – certainly not priority projects – approved that were five or six down the list or to have projects ignored year after year that they really wanted.

Always there was the spectre of the utilization formula that loomed in any kinds of submissions to the board. The utilization formula doomed many school districts to failure in terms of new school construction even before they made any applications. The whole utilization formula, particularly in large urban areas and in very small communities, was very, very difficult and is very difficult to handle because the percentage of space used in a school is but one measure of the value of that school, even the use of that school in a community. As such, it was I think very, very frustrating for boards and parents and communities to have that formula stand between them and what they saw as sound decisions for their community, primarily in terms of the educational programs that were being delivered but also in terms of the health of the community as a viable neighbourhood or as a viable town or village.

It will be interesting to see, now that the decision-making is going to be moved back to the Learning minister, if there will be more consideration given to educational concerns in decisions that are made. It will be interesting to see what happens to the utilization formula and what kind of weight it is given in decisions. It will also be interesting to see how much of the decision-making the minister will have once this act is passed, how much of that decision-making is going to be passed on to local boards. I think that the plea has been made, Mr. Speaker, that block funding, allowing local boards to ultimately be the decision-makers who decide where buildings will be built, which buildings will be closed – they get to close buildings, but right now they have little influence over where new buildings are built or the kind of construction in terms of their needs.

I guess if there's a disappointment in the bill, it's the provision for local decision-making and allowing the minister to pass that decision-making down to where it properly belongs, and that's with local school trustees. They're the ones that have to answer to the community at election time. They're the ones that best know their communities. I think they are the ones that can best make school building decisions, school program decisions. So while wresting the decisions out of the hands of the School Buildings Board is something that I think is a move in the right direction, I'm also concerned that we will have created in the Learning department a new bureaucracy that will be just as inflexible and just as difficult for boards to penetrate as the one that currently exists. So I guess in terms of the move to the replacement of the School Buildings Board, I'm cautiously optimistic, but I think it's just a first step.

I had some conversations with the minister about this. I hope that he'll see fit if not to move completely to block funding to at least explore the possibilities in some school districts. I know that there are problems in any kind of abrupt movement to block funding because there's a history of districts that has to be taken into account, the kind of building and repair activity they've been engaged in over the recent past. That history would have to be taken into account, so the transition period to block funding might take some time, but at least I think that should be the goal and that should be the target in terms of where the government goes with those kinds of decisions.

I think there's a good provision in the act, and that's in terms of identifying unsuitable teachers. It seems to me that with teachers who have had difficulty in the classroom, teachers who've had difficulty with students, to be able to remain anonymous and to move to another jurisdiction, either in the province or in the country, was a disservice to children and certainly a disservice to the profession. So I'm pleased that those school jurisdictions and charter schools will be charged with identifying those people and making the registrar aware of the kinds of difficulties that individual has experienced and that that record is going to be available to other employing boards so that those teachers are not able to pick up their practice and move and inflict poor practice on another group of children or students elsewhere in the province or the country.

I think we saw a parallel of that just recently in the news with hockey coaches, where a coach from this country turned up in Spain working with another group of young adults. How inappropriate that was, and for it to happen in the teaching profession would be even more inappropriate. So I'm pleased that those unsuitable teachers are going to be identified and something done about tracking them in the system.

I wanted to talk for a few minutes about the principle in the act that will allow citizens to choose to be a resident of a public or a separate school district. We've had a history of residency and residency requirements that is a little checkered. I think if I understand the act – and I have to admit that I had to read it and ask one of my colleagues to read it a couple of times to make sure I really understood that the choice is there. The whole business of residency has been a thorn in the side of boards for a number of years. I remember in the past act that you were deemed to have been born into a school district and to be a member of that district, a resident of that district. While it sounded good in theory, in practice it caused a whole lot of difficulties.

I remember the attempt to have school boards charge nonresident students for programs. So if a youngster with Catholic parents attended a public school, there was the expectation that there would be a nonresident fee paid by that student. The whole problem of that in terms of urban areas is that students would come from out of town, access programs, and claim they were residents of the city by living with a relative and using that relative's address in terms of residency requirements, so the board they were really resident in wasn't charged for their program.

I remember an effort on the part of the public school board at one time to try to determine the religious persuasion of students in a 70,000-student system. Parents were asked to identify their religion, and 10,000 of them refused to do so. So this whole business of where you are resident, what school district you are a resident of, has a history of presenting problems to boards. The act reads now that there's a choice for parents, for citizens to identify themselves as residents of either the separate or the public school district.

Just a footnote in terms of the amendments themselves, Mr. Speaker. One of the pleas we've made in the past is that there be plain-language legislation. I remember back in 1992-1993, when the present government was campaigning, that one of their promises was to come forward with plain-language legislation, and there are some sections of this act that I don't think meet that criteria, to say the least.

So with those preliminary comments – I haven't even touched on the big, important change in that, and that's regarding separate school districts; I'll have an opportunity later to do that – I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 16, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very productive afternoon. I move that we now call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene this evening at 8 p.m., we do so in Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: On the motion put forward by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, would all hon. members in favour of the motion, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. Carried. The House will reconvene tonight at 8 o'clock in committee.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 8, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/08

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. We're going to practise the usual tradition of only one hon. member standing and talking at a time.

head: Main Estimates 2001-2002

International and Intergovernmental Relations

THE CHAIRMAN: We'll ask the minister if he'd care to make a few comments.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be here this evening to present the estimates of International and Intergovernmental Relations. The mandate of our ministry is "to provide leadership in the management of Alberta's international and intergovernmental relationships."

I think it's important to note in the estimates, Mr. Chairman, that responsibility for aboriginal affairs has been transferred to the new Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Our business plan and budget have been amended to reflect this change. Our main priorities and our main goals in the coming year – and our business plan reflects this – are, first of all:

- To secure benefits for Alberta from strengthened international relations [and]
- To secure benefits for Alberta as an equal partner in a revitalized, united Canada.

These two goals support the overarching goals found in the government of Alberta's overall general business plan.

I'd like, Mr. Chairman, to note some of the key initiatives on the international front. In the year ahead my ministry will continue to focus on expanding Alberta's trade and investment opportunities. Since the Canada/U.S. free trade agreement came into force in 1989, the value of our exports in goods has more than quadrupled to approximately $55 billion per year. In the year 2000 Alberta was the third largest provincial exporter of goods, behind Ontario and Quebec and ahead of British Columbia.

As the Alberta economy continues to diversify and prosper, value-added exports have experienced very, very strong growth. Value-added exports include products that are processed or manufactured as well as service exports such as engineering, environmental, and consulting services. Of course, those efforts are backed by the initiatives in other government departments such as Learning, where we are working with a very skilled and capable workforce. Last year Alberta's value-added exports totaled $21.4 billion, up from $16.4 billion the year before. Mr. Chairman, goal 14 of the Alberta government's business plan commits to further increasing the value of these exports to $28.5 billion within the next three years. My ministry will contribute to this goal by promoting greater trade liberalization through international and interprovincial agreements.

At the upcoming World Trade Organization ministerial conference this fall we will convey our province's desire for a more level playing field for all through the elimination of agricultural subsidies and the reduction of trade-distorting domestic support programs. On the domestic front we will press for new negotiations to remove interprovincial trade barriers through the agreement on internal trade. A key concern, Mr. Chairman, for the ministry this year is defending our forest management practices in the dispute over softwood lumber exports. We will work with our legal counsel in Washington, D.C., to prove that our forest management system is market based and that our forestry resources are managed in a sustainable manner here in Alberta.

Our main objective, Mr. Chairman, is to maintain the greatest possible market access for the least cost and disruption to business. In the year ahead the ministry will continue to implement the government's framework for Alberta's international strategies. This strategy document helps internationally active departments more clearly understand how their current activities fit into the broader international framework of the Alberta government. It also provides some opportunities for joint projects and better co-ordination of international partnerships. At the same time, the ministry will continue to play a role in the co-ordination of ministerial missions and planning the intergovernmental dimension of Premier's missions. The ministry will also remain active in developing information programs for foreign decision-makers to ensure Alberta's strengths in international interests are promoted.

The ministry will continue to broaden Alberta's international focus by building economic and cross-cultural twinning relationships with foreign states or provinces. A twinning strategy will be implemented this year with the goal of raising Alberta's profile in key international markets. We will also continue to co-ordinate the provision of public-sector expertise to the private sector through the international governance office.

As a major energy-exporting province we will continue to advance our interests in the development of a continental energy policy by participating along with the federal government in multilateral and bilateral discussions. It's critical, Mr. Chairman, that Alberta be closely involved in any discussions of increasing Canada's energy supplies to the U.S., given the fact that the natural resources are a provincial responsibility.

With respect to overall Canadian intergovernmental activity – and this is something of course much closer to home – the department helps manage and co-ordinates relations between the province and the federal government to ensure Alberta's interests are promoted and protected as an equal partner in Canada. The ministry takes seriously its responsibility for ensuring that federal activities respect Alberta's constitutional roles and responsibilities, including those in key areas such as health and social programming. In this regard we will continue to develop strategies and recommendations on constitutional issues, national policy, governance issues, and Canadian unity.

In consultation with the Premier's office and other departments ministry staff are responsible for setting the agenda for Alberta's participation in first ministers' meetings, Premiers' conferences, and ministerial meetings. In fact, Alberta's leadership on health funding issues at intergovernmental meetings last year led to the federal/provincial agreement on restoration of funding to the Canada health and social transfer. We will continue to provide policy analysis advice and continually work in this area.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, in terms of some specifics. To support these efforts that I've outlined very briefly and these initiatives, we have a strong complement of staff on board in my department, and we have budgeted $6.1 million for the year ahead. It is perhaps a small amount in terms of other departments, but we feel that we will use that money very effectively. The budget for international and intergovernmental activities is the same as last year except for the increase required to offset the negotiated provincewide salary increase.

In terms of staffing, our ministry will have a complement of 54 staff this coming year, a decrease of four from the previous year. The four positions have been reassigned to the Corporate Service Centre, which is part of Government Services.

Finally, a brief outline on our performance measures. Since the ministry outcomes are often long term or dependent on external factors, our data is difficult to present through a series of quantitative examples. Therefore, our overall reporting process is quite unique. We survey, we solicit, we provide an opportunity for our partners in the other departments and other sources to respond to how effective they feel our efforts are being, and our new business plan and budget lays out how we will meet the priorities for our province in the year ahead.

I look forward to working with the dedicated and hardworking staff in my ministry to achieve these goals. We as a department are very cognizant of the fact that our role is important. We know that it is complementary to the rest of government and very important to the overall future of the province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to have an opportunity to address the estimates of International and Intergovernmental Relations. It's been quite a few years that I've been talking about this particular department, and it's undergone some changes in that time. For the most part, I think the changes have been positive in nature, and for the most part I think the initiatives from this department are important and necessary and in many ways have been measurable over the years.

I, too, would like to compliment the minister's staff. I think they do a very decent job. I've had an opportunity to get to know a few of the people over the years and certainly have enjoyed working with them on a few projects and sharing information whenever possible.

Certainly one of those initiatives is PNWER, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region initiative, of which I understand there are some meetings that are being undertaken next week, I think, in preparation for the summer meetings. I think that's an excellent initiative. It's an initiative where this government has participated in all-party participation. In fact, they have been promoters of all-party participation at that level, and I think that's been a very positive step.

I certainly encourage them to take what's happened in that initiative and expand it to other areas of government. Certainly that's a role that International and Intergovernmental Relations could undertake because of the work they do with all departments to see that sometimes including opposition in the workings of government can have positive outcomes. While we're there to be the watchdog and report back on what we see and what people may not like, we certainly also are another set of eyes and ears and ideas and perspectives and I think can add value to some of the decision-making that happens around the table if we have the opportunity to sit at the table. So I would like some feedback on that proposal and ask the department and the minister if they would review that, put it forward to their colleagues, and see where that takes us. On a trial basis, Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to see how that would work. We have established some interesting, positive working relationships with some of the ministers in this 25th Legislature, and I think that's helpful.

I would like to talk about some of the softwood lumber issues that the minister pursued as one of those examples. I'm looking forward to a briefing from the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development in the near future on an update on the softwood lumber situation. When that happens, what happens, Mr. Chairman, is that we see an elimination of what the government may see as frivolous questions in this Legislature because we have more information on which to base the questions that we ask the government and can then ask questions on areas where we disagree. In fact there are many areas where we do agree. I think the government's position on softwood lumber is one of those areas.

I'm very happy to promote the government taking a strong stand on this particular issue. We do not believe that Alberta or in fact Canada has taken a wrong position here. We do not want to see any more duties on Canadian lumber. We do not believe that there has been dumping by Canadian producers and would certainly encourage the department to continue taking a strong stand on this particular issue.

We'd certainly like some information on where the role of Sustainable Resource Development is and where the role of International and Intergovernmental Relations is in this area. My understanding is that this department's mandate is a broad kind of mandate for the province and that Sustainable Resource Development takes a more targeted kind of focus. If that's correct, I would like that confirmed, and if it isn't, then I would like some more information and, at any rate, some more details on the division of labour there: who takes what role and at what point International and Intergovernmental Relations takes a lead role in that particular kind of an issue. Certainly I think they should. They're in close contact with the federal government, who is heavily involved with other provinces on this issue, but obviously there's a role for both ministries. Of course what we want to see is a minimum amount of overlap and duplication in all areas.

Just before I get directly to the estimates for the evening, I just want to talk a little bit about the Auditor General's report. The only comment he made in International and Intergovernmental Relations last year was to the part of this department that is no longer within the department, and that is having to do with aboriginal affairs, the Metis Settlements Transition Commission specifically. While I understand that this is no longer in this department, I would like an update on what happened in terms of meeting the expectations of the Auditor General. In here he had talked about, when he did the review of the ministry's statements, that there was a reservation of opinion. The reasons for the reservation were listed on page 264 of the Auditor General's report and talked about "focus on improved accountability and alert readers that the financial statements are not complete and accurate." So that's a fairly significant reservation, Mr. Chairman.

I'd like to know if before this area left this department's mandate, they had complied with the Auditor General's request, which is that this information should have been brought up to date and that the conditions were met for the performance measurement and reporting, where they recommended that the commission "measure progress towards its core goal 'Good Self-government Practices' and include this information in its annual report." So if we could get an update on that. There may not be time when we get to aboriginal affairs to cover that particular aspect of the AG's report, so I wanted to ensure that we got that done early on in these particular estimates.

One more sort of general thing I wanted to talk about was the social union framework agreement, which, if I understand correctly, is this department's particular mandate. I'd like to know about it in terms of the current impact on federal/provincial relations and social policies. Specifically there, has there been any progress made on minimizing program overlap with a view to a more efficient and responsible government? Now, this is an area where I think that this provincial government is often in conflict with the federal government, yet they signed on to the social union framework agreement, so it would be interesting to find out, Mr. Chairman, how that's progressing. What are the key areas of concern for the department in this area? What progress has been made? What kind of progress are they expecting? When are the next set of talks established? What is this government using as key indicators of progress, and are they benchmarking what's happening there? So if we could just get an update on the social union framework agreement, that would be helpful for me. I would appreciate that.

Certainly the overall services and core businesses in this department are commendable, Mr. Chairman, and we don't have any particular issues with them, I think. Some good things are happening here when they advance Alberta's interests through intergovernmental negotiations and discussions. Seems like the Premier is taking a lead role in that area these days. So I don't think anything that anyone in this province can complain too much about.

"Coordinating Alberta's strategies relating to international and intergovernmental relations" is interesting too, particularly the international relations. I listened with interest when the minister talked about twinning opportunities, and I'm wondering if that is part of the reason why they're going to be spending more money next year. If he could elaborate on that.

I see that there's an increase of 16.8 percent over last year's budget estimates. That's only $880,000, Mr. Chairman, not very much money in the whole context of departments, but certainly for this department I think significant and something to talk about, particularly when we're talking about decreasing the number of FTEs, as the minister talked about in his opening comments.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

With twinning comes a lot of opportunity for travel and a lot of opportunity for hosting delegations here and when delegations are in other countries. So, you know, in terms of promoting Alberta in tangible kinds of measurable outcomes, that's great, Mr. Chairman. We don't have any problem with that, but I'm not sure whether in the past that's been precisely the case in this department.

We have in the past FOIPed some of these hosting receipts and found them to be quite unbelievable in terms of the kinds of expenses that were incurred, certainly beyond the test of what's reasonable and fair. So I'm hoping that this government and this minister keep that in mind as they take a look at the opportunities they have before them with the kind of twinning that's going to go forward. If we could have a list of the countries and cities, whatever, that they're planning on twinning with in the future over not just this year but perhaps some longer range goals they've got – the minister didn't talk about that – if he could give us that information, I would certainly appreciate it.

The kinds of budgets that we expect specifically for travel out of the province and specifically for hosting events: if we could have that information, Mr. Chairman, that would be good. I know lots of work goes into these hosting opportunities, and I know lots of good work comes out of them. We just want to make sure that Albertans are getting a good bang for their buck. I think that's part of the minister's mandate too. So if we could have that information, it would certainly be helpful to me.

The minister talked a little bit about the cross-border trade and that being part of their mandate, to try and facilitate that. You know, that's also very important. Seems like these days we often have better trade north and south with the States than we do between B.C. and the eastern provinces. We still have many, many trade barriers, Mr. Chairman, and it seems like we make very little progress on that from year to year, so specifically I would like to know what's happened in that regard. If we've seen a reduction in regulations or an increase in agreements eliminating provincial barriers, if we could have that information forwarded to us, that would be very beneficial. When we talk to small businesspeople and particularly those in the transportation field, it's one of the largest areas of concern they have. It's a concern that has if anything increased over the years that I've been in this Assembly. I think that's an area where we could take some real leadership. We've just got to get rid of some of these regulations.

I'm wondering, too, if this department is doing anything specific in terms of reducing transportation costs. Certainly it's an area that needs some development. And I'm not talking north/south. We know that some excellent progress has been made in that regard, particularly with the twinning of the highway and the work done there, but east and west is really the issue. If we could see that outlined here, that would be beneficial.

You know, the minister talked about client satisfaction surveys in his comments, and I find those, Mr. Chairman, not really an accurate kind of survey. This is the department of gripping and grinning. Nobody complains about what they do, certainly not on survey results, so I think there has to be a better and more accurate way of measuring the outcomes for this particular department, particularly when most of the outcomes that they're measuring are between government departments themselves or with the federal government. Who's going to complain? Nobody wants to wreck relations. The surveys are not done on a confidential kind of basis, so I'm not sure that they really are accurate reflections of what happens here. Even when they go outside and talk about client surveys that may include businesspeople, who wants to complain about the government when you're doing direct business with them, Mr. Chairman? I don't think that that's necessarily accurate.

If they had an independent company do that – and maybe they do. If they do, then I may have to take back what I've said about that particular outcome, but I don't think we're seeing an independent survey done where the results are anonymous. That would be interesting, if that's happening. I would sure like some information on that if that's the case. Or if the department is in fact thinking of doing that, I think that would be a progressive step for them if they would.

Measuring outcomes, like the minister said, is sometimes hard in this department because they're of a more long-term nature, but I think it's really good, Mr. Chairman, that there is a department in the government that does take a long-term perspective and view on some of the issues that are outstanding for the province. So I don't think that's a problem, but I do think that we could see some more tangible outcomes listed here that we could start to track.

The same with the secondary indicators and the public polling data: nice to talk about it, but let's see it, Mr. Chairman. If they are spending Alberta tax dollars on those, then they should be included in the business plan, and we should be able to track them from year to year and compare the outcomes. They're not in this particular year's business plan, but perhaps they could be forwarded from the minister. I'm sure none of that kind of information is confidential in nature, so I'll be looking forward to getting the information they used for the public polling data that measures the performance of the provincial government. The secondary indicators that track the macroeconomic and sociodemographic trends: if those could be tabled or sent over, that would be excellent.

Also the intermediate outcomes. I'm not sure if we need the entire progress reports in these areas. I can go to the web site and look for some of that information, but if a concise kind of format could be included in this business plan, Mr. Chairman, that would be very helpful for us to, just at a glance, track it from year to year. So if that information could be provided, I would also very much appreciate that.

Now to get down to the specifics. I'd like to talk first of all about the trade policy. Seeing a minor increase in this particular estimate, it certainly doesn't look like that increase is going to be a big problem, particularly as I think there are some pretty aggressive strategies that Alberta is going to have to put forward, particularly in our softwood lumber dispute, in the next year. So I don't think I have a real problem with that. However, if we could have a breakdown of the operating expenses – and we'd like it by components if we could, Mr. Chairman – that would be helpful.

So that's the salary side. When we talk about the permanent positions and the nonpermanent positions, particularly I'm interested in the contract positions and which particular areas they're expecting to contract out in the future. That would be interesting information to have so that we could see where the government is positioning itself and where they go outside of government staff for what I'm expecting to be specialized expertise.

Also, if we could talk about travel expenses, what they're expecting to spend on advertising, hosting, in as much detail as we can get it, and telephone and communications.

Can we also know at this stage how many FTEs are employed in the trade policy for 2001-02? Can the minister provide us with any documents, reports, briefings, or studies that the trade policy has completed with regard to the current U.S. softwood lumber dispute, an area of huge interest for me and of course for all Albertans in terms of its impact on Alberta's economy, and their strategy in response to various possible outcomes? I'm expecting a briefing also from the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. I expect that while there's some overlap there, maybe we could do the briefing together. I don't know how that works between the departments, but however that works out, I'm quite prepared to spend some serious time taking a look at that. Like I said, so far I certainly applaud the government's direction in that area.

Mr. Chairman, if the minister could also provide a list of the private-sector organizations that the department co-ordinates that with, that would help. I've seen some of that activity with PNWER. I certainly don't have any concerns with it, but it's also a part of the lobbying.

I'll have to come back. Thanks.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, have a number of questions regarding the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations this evening.

As I understand the four key services that it provides under its core businesses, Mr. Chairman, it certainly advances Alberta's interests through intergovernmental negotiations and discussions. I have some questions directly to the minister regarding this and highway safety and co-ordinating Alberta's strategies relating to international and intergovernmental relations. Also, I understand that there is a provision to give "strategic advice and policy analysis to Alberta ministries and other clients" and also to obtain, supply, and analyze information for Alberta ministries and other clients. This is in the business plan.

Now, in the time I have I have a lot of questions. I guess I should get started. If the minister does not have the opportunity this evening, certainly if he could respond in writing, I will be patient, and I will be anxious to hear his written reply.

There is an increase in this year's budget over last year's estimates by 16 percent, or roughly $880,000. Now, there's an increase this year of 0.4 percent, or $22,000, over last year's preliminary actual, and it is noted that there's an increase of 16.4 percent, or $858,000, from last year's budget estimates to last year's preliminary actual.

The number of full-time equivalents is decreasing from 58 to 54 due to four full-time equivalents being transferred to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. I know the hon. minister has had nothing to do with that. I think there are 1,100 people now. I could be inaccurate, Mr. Chairman. I don't have the number in front of me, but there's a significant number of people that have been transferred to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. I think that the jury is still out on this initiative. This is another initiative that was put forward by a retired member who certainly left a large wake, so to speak, as his boat went through the waters of Alberta, and that would be the former Minister of Energy.

Mr. Chairman, if the minister could please provide a breakdown of the ministry's gross operating expenses of a little over $6 million for 2001-02 by object for the following components: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, salaries contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, hosting expenses, and dry-cleaning expenses if there are any.

Will the minister also provide a breakdown of the cost to Alberta taxpayers of splitting the department by moving aboriginal affairs out of International and Intergovernmental Relations and into the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development?

What measures or actions have been taken by the ministry to ensure that an overlapping or duplication of services is not occurring between International and Intergovernmental Relations and other Alberta ministries. For example, Economic Development, as I understand it, is responsible for foreign offices, and foreign offices used to attract an awful lot of attention in the media. Mr. Chairman, in years past, because former members of this House would suddenly be getting these appointments. If it wasn't in London, it was in Hong Kong. I just wonder if there's going to be an expansion of that, but I think we'll get to that later on this evening in the debate on the estimates of another crucial government department.

Now, program 1, international and intergovernmental relations. The budget information for program 1 is the same as provided on page 5 of the briefing for the whole department, because there is only one program in this ministry. That's fine. In regard to the 16.4 percent increase that I spoke of earlier, will the minister provide a breakdown of operating expenses for program 1, international and intergovernmental relations, by subprogram – minister's office, ministry support services, international relations, trade policy, and Canadian intergovernmental relations – for the fiscal year 2002-03 and 2003-04? Could the minister please explain why the international and intergovernmental relations budget was 16.4 percent greater than last year?

Now, I'm quoting here the business plan, page 247.

The department continues to be committed to the goals of the Cross Ministry Initiative – Corporate Human Resource Development Strategy. The department is implementing a Human Resource Plan with a priority focus on leadership development and succession planning.

Can the minister please provide a detailed copy of this human resource plan including its objectives, how it will be implemented, and what it will mean for employees of the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations?

Here again on page 249 of the business plan one of the performance measures outlined is client satisfaction surveys. However, no examples or details of these client satisfaction surveys are provided in the ministry's business plan. Why does the minister provide us with no examples of the client satisfaction surveys in the ministry's business plans? Also, can the minister please provide all members of the opposition with a detailed breakdown of what questions are asked, how many people are asked, how the surveys are conducted, how often they are conducted, and also the ministry's targets for these performance measures for the years 2001-02, 2002-03, and 2003-04?

Now, the minister's office. I notice that there is no change between this year's estimate and last year's budget estimate. There is no change between this year's estimate and last year's preliminary actual. There is no change from last year's budget estimate to last year's preliminary actual. Will the minister provide a breakdown of the operating expenses of $300,000 for the minister's office for 2001-02 by object for the following components: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, salaries contract positions, travel expenses again, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses? How many full-time equivalents are employed in the minister's office in 2001-2002?

Also, Mr. Chairman, what benchmarks or targets have been established within the minister's office to meet the mandate of the ministry? For example, New Zealand includes correspondence received from the public, numbers satisfied and unsatisfied. That would be a terrific measure in the Ministry of Health and Wellness, particularly regarding the whole issue of Bill 11.

To the minister: what benchmarks have been established for the number of replies to Legislative Assembly questions, ministerial correspondence, motions for returns, written questions, and reports to cabinet? What time frame or due date benchmarks have been established for ministerial, MLA, and other public correspondence? Again, I would note that New Zealand provides such information in their business plans.

Now, in ministry support services on reference line 1.0.2 the 2001-02 estimate was $1,594,000. The preliminary actual for 2000-2001 was $1.7 million, and the 2001 estimate was the same. There's a decrease this year of 7.4 percent, or $128,000, over last year's budget estimates. There is a decrease this year of 7.4 percent as well over last year's preliminary actual. There is no change from last year's budget estimate to last year's preliminary actual.

Will the minister please provide a breakdown of the operating expenses of the $1.594 million for ministry support services for 2001-02 by object for the following components again: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, salaries contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses? Also, how many full-time equivalents are employed in ministry support services in 2001-02? Can the minister please provide an explanation for the decrease of 7.4 percent, or $128,000, in ministry support services for 2001-2002?

International relations. In 2001-02 the estimate was for $1.775 million, and the 2000-2001 preliminary actual was $1,648,000, and that was the same as the estimate for 2000-2001. This is an increase this year of 7.7 percent, or $127,000, over last year's budget estimate. There is an increase this year of 7.7 percent, or $127,000, over last year's preliminary actual. Now, there's no change from last year's budget estimate to last year's preliminary actual, Mr. Chairman.

In due time will the minister please provide a breakdown of the operating expenses of $1.775 million for international relations for 2001-02 by object for the following components again: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, salaries contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses? How many full-time equivalents are employed in international relations in 2001-2002?

Can the minister please also tell us what trade missions are planned for the coming year? What performance measures have been set to judge these trade missions as a success and worth Alberta taxpayers' money?

Can the minister explain what co-ordination exists between his ministry and that of Economic Development with regards to Alberta's foreign offices abroad in Tokyo, Seoul, Beijing, Hong Kong, China – and that is located in Harbin; in China there's also the China-Alberta Petroleum Centre – Taiwan, Mexico in Guadalajara, the United States in Portland, Oregon, and Germany in Frankfurt? What co-ordination of projects is planned for the coming year between Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and International and Intergovernmental Relations with regard to agriculture in the international arena?

In the ministry's business plan summary on page 307 it states: the Ministry's International Relations budget will increase from $1.65 million to $1.77 million, with its priorities including implementation of the International Strategy Framework and the Twinning Strategy.

Could the minister please provide more information on how International and Intergovernmental Relations will implement the international strategy framework and the twinning strategy in 2001-2002, including a breakdown on the increased funds being diverted towards achieving these objectives?

Now, also, on page 307 of the business plan summary: "Build and maintain alliances with key U.S. federal and state decision-makers and organizations." Can the minister provide a list of which U.S. federal and state decision-makers the department considers key and what alliances the ministry has built with them? Can the minister tell us what joint projects are planned for 2001-02 between the Alberta government and foreign governments? Can he also provide us with a list of what criteria and/or benchmarks the department uses to evaluate the effectiveness and success of these joint endeavours? I was thinking of earlier today before question period, Mr. Chairman, and the fact that a delegation from Montana had been introduced in the Assembly. Certainly those delegations are essential not only to build relations with our neighbours but also to improve our trade and, as a result, improve our economy.

I received, as all members of the Assembly probably have, a letter from the teamsters' union, which represents 100,000 members throughout Canada, and among them are, I understand, 45,000 truck and bus drivers who are strongly opposed to some proposed changes that are occurring with the federal government and, as I understand it, with the provinces. I'm wondering: as minister of intergovernmental relations, has there been any discussion of this problem in your office? It has to do with the fact that the Canadian government along with the provinces is about to adopt the proposed changes in the number of driving hours for Canadian truck and bus drivers, and if adopted, these changes will increase the maximum number of driving hours from 13 to 14 hours per day.

Now, in going through this information, I understand that recent statistics confirm that the growth in the transport of goods to the United States is much higher than it was for east/west traffic. Certainly free trade has changed the flow of goods, in my opinion, from east/west to north/south since it was initiated in 1998. As far as harmonization is concerned, an increase in the number of driving hours to 14 hours per day would mean that on a daily basis our drivers will drive four hours more than our southern neighbours, who drive for a maximum of 10 hours a day.

The author of this letter goes on to indicate that they feel that that is total nonsense, and I understand that there is presently, as indicated in this letter, no scientific data confirming that an increase in the maximum number of driving hours to 14 hours a day would be beneficial to road safety. Now, I'm very curious if the minister or his department has had any discussions with any other province or with the federal government in relation to this issue, because it certainly is very important. I hope I can get some answers on these questions and on other questions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll start by reflecting on some of the opening comments by the minister. I'm especially interested in international relations, that aspect of his department's responsibilities.

He commented at the end on hoping to be working towards the end of agricultural trade subsidies. I think we'd all agree that's a desirable and applaudable or laudable objective to work towards. It would be interesting to know how many resources, what resources are going into that objective and if there is any kind of a plan B should history prove to be the precedent here and we make very little progress in eliminating agricultural subsidies. What is our fallback? What resources is he looking at in developing a fallback position? Likewise with the forest management dispute with the U.S. The softwood dispute is a concern, as my colleagues have mentioned, and the resources that have gone into that or will be going into that to protect Alberta's now fairly well-developed forestry industry.

Probably of greatest concern for all Albertans is the issue of the continental energy policy and how that might play out. It would be useful to know what research the department is undertaking on issues such as cost and benefit of the continental energy policy broken down both by petroleum products and electricity. Reflecting on our visitors who were here earlier today from Montana, I'm sure they would have some useful input for the minister on issues of continental energy policy, particularly as they relate to electricity. Montana has experimented with electricity deregulation with some devastating results, and I know there's a substantial lobby in that state to reverse that trend. At least, I understand that's the case. It would be interesting to know if we have looked at their experience with energy policy and electricity.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

I'll give the minister a compliment here and some good credit, even though I'm not supposed to do that. [interjection] I know. I'm kidding.

If I'm reading the estimates correctly – I'm looking at the intergovernmental relations program – it looks like last year's budget is probably going to come in right on target, which is commendable, and that there's no change between this year's estimate and last year's actuals. So that's a nice, refreshing position to be looking at here.

When we look more carefully at the program on intergovernmental relations and the expenses there, which are perhaps by the overall standards of the government modest but still a substantial amount of money, it would be useful to know in a bit more detail, in really giving an assessment of these estimates on things such as salaries and expenses and advertising and so on, how the budget breaks down in that particular program area. There is always, I think, public interest and concern in departments dealing with international trade that there is room for perhaps what the public might regard as unnecessary frills and expenditures, and the public will always be sharp and keen on looking for those opportunities. The minister, I'm sure, would want to make sure the public is well informed on those.

The whole issue and whole area of intergovernmental relations and trade agreements is one of unusually high interest these days in Canada and internationally with the fallout from the so-called battle at Seattle and the showdowns in Washington with the IMF and the recent riots and problems in Quebec City with the free trade agreement of the Americas discussion. I'm sure the minister is well able to stay on top of this, but I think that as much public information as possible on how the provincial government is approaching these very delicate concerns would be appreciated.

There will be substantial public concern over, for example, the impact of NAFTA, the costs and benefits of NAFTA. Albertans are backers of free trade, but there will be, nonetheless, concerns on issues such as water exports and electricity exports. I heard, certainly throughout the campaign and on the doorsteps, concerns over our natural gas exports, and I imagine that some of the cost-benefit analysis of these deals will involve the minister's department. It might be interesting to have some details on that and on issues around complaints filed under NAFTA. How much concern is expressed by the public on NAFTA and other trade agreements?

I suppose that in these very dry conditions we're facing, we may find the most concern under trade agreements relating to water and water exports. Well, in fact there are talks going on, quietly I believe, in terms of continental water policy. It would be interesting to know what the minister's position is there, who he's getting his advice from, how much he's spending on getting that advice, and what the future may hold for Alberta and for Canada on water exports.

A different area of concern for international trade agreements is trade in services. Historically, trade agreements have dealt with commodities, agricultural products, manufactured goods. More and more now we're seeing a tremendous amount of international trade in services and, with that growth in trade of course, pressure for international agreements on trade in services. These can be of profound concern or implication for Alberta's future and Canada's future, and I would encourage the minister to take a very long, hard, careful, and open look at the impact of international agreements on trade in services on things such as education, health care, in fact all kinds of public services which under international agreements on trade in services may come under those agreements. We may find that we are deeply concerned or in the long term not well served because we haven't put adequate resources into developing our positions on what Albertans want and should get in these agreements.

So if the department, if the program on intergovernmental relations was to perhaps pursue a public consultation process on some of these issues, I would certainly endorse it, and I would be pleased if some of the modest budget of this department went towards that kind of activity.

I think with those comments I will wrap up my own statements on this. Again, I congratulate the minister on bringing in last year's budget, to the extent that he was responsible for it, right on target and drawing the line there and keeping it there.

MR. MacDONALD: He leads by example.

DR. TAFT: He leads by example.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll take my seat.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to finish up some of my comments here on this particular ministry. I'm hoping that if I don't get through all my questions, the minister will take them in writing and respond to them in the future. Yes, he's agreeing to do that, so that's excellent. Thank you.

One of the issues that I didn't get a chance to get to in my earlier comments was the trips in general. We'd like to know how many trips are planned for the year and how many of those are with the use of the government plane and how many are otherwise. When the government plane is in use, who is there, and how are they allocating those costs? I'm assuming that for the most part industry picks up their own costs on that plane, but to have that verified would be important.

I remember the days when ministers used to table their itineraries before they went, not just where they were going but how many would be in the delegation and the approximate costs broken down by expense category. It would be helpful if we had those, Mr. Chairman. We've had some instances in the last session where ministers have gone on what appeared to be junkets or certainly extensions of government business, and the question always was: who pays? So if that information is tabled prior to the trip being taken, then it eliminates the potential for a lot of concern from people throughout the province, including opposition members. If we could address that, I would appreciate it.

In some of the time that I have left I would like to focus on part of what I believe this ministry's role is, which is looking towards collaborative government. For my reference I am taking the article written by Susan Delacourt and Donald G. Linehan entitled Collaborative Government: Is There a Canadian Way? This is, I believe, where this government is trying to go, collaborative government. Talking about collaboration with the general public interprovincially or with municipal levels of government is something where this government has certainly stuck their toe in the water to see how hot or cold it is and have made some steps towards collaborating in areas. Clearly that's because there is a perceived need for this to be happening.

When you take a look at this report by these two people, they talk about the perceived need for engagement. Where they've surveyed the general public on the topic, "The government of Canada must place much more emphasis on consulting citizens," of the general public 87 percent of the people strongly agree with that and of decision-makers, being primarily politicians, 68 percent of them agree with that. If we take a look at, "We would probably solve most of our big national problems if decisions could be brought to people at the grassroots level," of the general public 68 percent say that's true, only 29 percent of decision-makers. So clearly there's a push from the general public to have a more collaborative kind of approach and more input into decision-making. This government has heard that and has started to move in that direction.

Some of the ways these authors would indicate that it's possible to have a collaborative government – is there a way that Canada can move there in responding to change? – are by developing new tools and practices. A lot of those new tools and practices focus on results. Some of the ones they say are very important are ensuring that public services are delivered as efficiently and effectively as possible, ensuring that programs are responsive to client or citizen needs, ensuring that programs and services support the department's strategic direction, and providing feedback to management and staff on the quality and effectiveness of programs and services.

Now, I know this government would say that they're in fact doing that, and I think they're trying to, Mr. Chairman, but if we then go back to the Auditor General's report and we take a look at the top three recommendations that he made in his report for last year, we find that this government is still falling woefully short in those areas.

The number 1 recommendation, which is one that has been in this book consistently for the last few years, is that "the Department of Treasury, in conjunction with other ministries" – so this ministry too – "clearly define the core measures and targets in the government business plan." The second recommendation is to "improve the link between goals and core businesses in ministry business plans," and the third one is to "ensure that all performance measures in ministry business plans include clearly defined targets." So it's not enough, Mr. Chairman, to spend the money; you have to be able to define whether or not that money was well spent. Not enough to consult, but ensure that that consultation process is actually inclusive. You just don't run out there, talk to the people, and do what you want anyway.

We've seen some good examples and some bad examples of that kind of consultation process for which this department would have had some input if not a leadership role. I'm thinking in terms of all the roundtables that were held around the province. We had many, many groups come to us as the Official Opposition and say: "You know, I've been consulted to death. When are they going to listen to me? I've sat on the last roundtable I'm going to participate in. We spend all this time and energy and come up with these really great ideas and then don't actually see them implemented down the way."

However, I can think of one exception to that rule, Mr. Chairman, and that would be when they talked about climate change.

MR. MacDONALD: Climate change?

MS CARLSON: Yeah, climate change. That roundtable presented some surprises to politicians, to government politicians to more precisely define that. I'm not sure that it presented any surprises to people working in the departments, this department and the related departments at that time, being at least Environment and Energy. But certainly the politicians were quite surprised to hear what different leaders from the community, not only business but environmental leaders and citizens, had to say about what was needed and where we needed to go as a province.

As a result of that particular consultation, there was some good work done. Government politicians and ministers were brought up to speed on the issues. I think the bureaucrats always knew what the game was and where they needed to go, but they had a hard time convincing their bosses. That was one roundtable where recommendations came out that I believe politicians took to heart. That was a good example, a process that could work and that met much of the focus on the results that this collaboration talks about. So that's interesting, and I wish we could see more like that.

I'm looking forward to seeing what comes out of this Future meeting that will be happening here in the fall. I hope it takes more of that kind of a mandate. The problem with what happened with the climate change meetings is that we haven't had much progress on that issue since then. I'm not quite sure what the problem is, what seems to be stalling at what level. Perhaps the minister could update me on why we haven't seen more progress and what their particular relationship is in terms of helping departments meet Alberta targets or what they're doing in terms of lobbying the federal government on the Kyoto protocol. I would be very interested in hearing an update on that.

There is no doubt that at some point in time, Mr. Chairman, Alberta and the government of Alberta will have to take some steps in terms of if not meeting that protocol meeting some sorts of measures. No doubt industry sees that. I believe industry is leading in this issue. I think that they are not constrained by the Alberta government mind-set, which is, "We're based on oil and gas revenues, and we'll do what we want because that's where our money comes from. CO<sub>2</sub> emissions don't matter, and we'll fight to the bitter end to establish that kind of a precedent." I don't think that's very forward thinking. I don't think that is where industry is going.

We're seeing industry take a more global context. We see them saying that if we're going to be competing in a global marketplace, we need to be seen by global citizens as being proactive. We see that regardless of where people stand on the issue of CO<sub>2</sub> emissions and the ozone layer, this is where industry is moving as a whole. They need to be leaders not followers, so they are taking proactive steps in terms of reducing CO<sub>2</sub> emissions and finding credits and looking for options. Too bad the government isn't taking the same leadership role. I think they're playing catch-up on this issue. It's too bad, because Alberta has a lot to lose.

Certainly this is an area where we could take some leadership, and I think the leadership is there, Mr. Chairman, in the bureaucracy in the various departments. I don't know what it's going to take to get the ministers and the government as a whole to listen and understand, but it's certainly worth the effort, and I wish they would pursue that.

I think I'm just about out of time, Mr. Chairman, so I would like to talk about the couple of attempts this government has made to manage horizontally rather than in a stovepipe kind of fashion. They're not making very much progress, and we look forward to hearing more information on that.

MR. VANDERBURG: I'd like all your attention just for 15 or 20 minutes here. I'd like to make just one comment regarding the budget of International and Intergovernmental Relations. The minister in his opening remarks talked about the twinning opportunities that our government is involved in. Some 20 years ago Alberta signed an official twinning agreement with the province of Hokkaido, Japan. At the encouragement of our province 10 communities in turn twinned with similar communities in Hokkaido. Presently these communities get very little monetary support from our province, and just the opposite is occurring in their sister communities in Japan.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

It's becoming more and more difficult to compete with these communities in the exchange programs. The students especially are having difficulty raising funds. Has there been any recognition of these local exchanges and the great work that the Alberta twin communities do to promote the great relationships that have been occurring?

Thank you.

9:10

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister for concluding remarks.

MR. JONSON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I did want to just respond to five or six of the points raised, but first of all I would like to make it clear that we'll commit to responding in writing to the other questions that were raised, although I was going to suggest to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that if he would perhaps discuss with his colleague the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who does appear to understand the estimates, that would cut down on our work quite a bit. We will nevertheless reply in writing.

First of all, I'm starting with some of the most recent remarks.

Certainly in the overall priorities that we have for the year ahead, we will be working to be represented in the structure that is being established to look at an overall energy strategy and energy agreement in North America. Those negotiations will be carried on nation to nation, but as I have indicated previously, we have made every effort through our department and working with Energy and Sustainable Resource Development to make sure that we will be represented, as will other provinces, on the working group that will be involved in those discussions.

With respect to the Kyoto accord, there are further meetings planned in Bonn, Germany, and in Marrakech, Morocco, following that, where the goals of the Kyoto accord will be pursued. Alberta, I'm sure, will participate as part of the Canadian delegation going to those particular conferences.

However, I think the important thing I'd like to emphasize – and I'm speaking now about a broad-based effort in government, particularly through the Department of Environment – is that these are long and protracted negotiations, but in the meantime, as was indicated today or the day before in question period, Alberta is taking its responsibility of protecting the environment very, very seriously. The Minister of Environment was pointing out that we have higher standards in terms of drinking water quality in this province than is the case nationally, and we could go through a list of other examples of that type. So we are not being stalled in our efforts and commitment to protecting the environment because the Kyoto process has not come to a conclusion. If it doesn't come to any conclusion, we'll still take that view as a government.

The Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne mentioned the exchange programs, and these were also alluded to in remarks from the members of the opposition. No, we do not have in this budget any particular assistance program for student travel or student exchanges. All we can state at this particular point in time, although it is something that we will see is discussed – we know that these are very valuable activities. It is something that I thank you for drawing to my attention, and I'll commit to discussing this particular topic, although I cannot promise any specific funding at this particular time.

With respect to the whole area of the softwood lumber situation, the investigation there that is proceeding as far as the American government is concerned with respect to their view of our softwood lumber production and trade into the United States from across Canada, we are very active there in assisting and preparing the Canadian case with respect to the softwood lumber dispute. In the written responses that we will provide to the member, we will give a briefing in terms of the status of those negotiations. I would like to assure the Assembly that we are making every effort to present Alberta's case as part of the overall Canadian position, and of course we have major participants in the presence of the British Columbia government. The Quebec government is a big player in this. We are working collaboratively in that regard.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I do commit to providing written responses.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Thank you. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense

$6,104,000

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Economic Development

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: To begin our deliberations, I'll call on the Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Legislative Assembly. Before I begin, I'd like to acknowledge some people that have joined me in the gallery today. With me are my deputy minister, Barry Mehr; my assistant deputy minister, Rory Campbell; my executive assistant, Hazel Cail, who invariably gets blamed for everything; and big Jim Bauer, who is our senior financial officer of the ministry. I would like to thank them for their support this evening, their help over the first two months of this ministry, and for helping me find my way around this building, including to the bathrooms. Thank you very much.

It is my privilege to present the 2001-2002 estimates and the 2001-2004 business plan for the Ministry of Economic Development. [some applause] Thank you, hon. gentlemen.

As you are aware, this department is the lead sales and marketing arm of the government and works with the Alberta Economic Development Authority and the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council to carry out its roles and goals. Today I will briefly report on the state of Alberta's economy and the department's plan to continue to foster a positive business climate that promotes job creation, growth, and investment in our province.

In the year 2000 our real gross domestic product increased by an estimated 6.1 percent. Real gross domestic product growth in Alberta for the year 2001 is expected to be 4.5 percent, the highest of all the provinces. By contrast, real gross domestic product growth in Canada in the year 2001 was expected to be 2.6 percent and for the United States only 2.3 percent.

In addition, Alberta's international value-added exports increased by an estimated 25 percent to $20.4 billion, and we anticipate that the resource-based industries, including oil and gas, forestry, and agriculture, will lead the economic growth of the province with petrochemicals, food processing, and manufacturing also contributing to that growth. Expansion into new economy industries such as aerospace, telecommunications, software development, medical devices and health services, life science, and the information and communication technology field will also play a large role.

Turning to the ministry, Mr. Chairman, we encourage the province's business community to find new opportunities to expand business and create jobs by striving to ensure that Alberta is and is known to be the best place to live, work, and do business in the world. Our mission is to promote Alberta's continuing prosperity. We accomplish this by leading the government's strategic marketing as a credible player on the world economic stage. We perform this function through three core businesses: strategic leadership for economic development policy and planning, market development and investment attraction, and thirdly, tourism marketing and development.

The department has three goals related to these core businesses. We want to ensure that, number one, Alberta has a vibrant and versatile economy; number two, Alberta's businesses, communities, and industry sectors are globally competitive; and number three, that Alberta is a globally competitive tourism destination. But we cannot achieve these goals in isolation. Rather, we will continue to facilitate economic growth in Alberta through our partnerships, partnerships such as the Alberta Economic Development Authority, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, the Travel Alberta Secretariat, business and industry associations, and other provincial departments and governments.

In conjunction with its private- and public-sector partners the department has developed a number of initiatives that are helping to build Alberta's economic future.

Looking at our first goal, ensuring "Alberta has vibrant and versatile economy," a major strategy that guides us to accomplish this goal is Get Ready Alberta. Early last year the government launched Get Ready Alberta: Strengthening the Alberta Advantage, a new six-year economic strategy for the province. The strategy is co-led by Alberta Economic Development along with Alberta Innovation and Science and Learning. Get Ready Alberta focuses on four key directions: unleashing innovation, leading and learning, competing in a global marketplace, and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit.

The early accomplishments of Get Ready Alberta are simply outstanding. Here are just a few examples of this overwhelming success. Employment expanded in Alberta by 35,000 new jobs in the year 2000, including an estimated 4,000 jobs in the information and communications technology field. Now, listen to this, folks. Tourism revenue increased to an estimated $4.4 billion in 2000, up $200 million from 1999.

MR. MELCHIN: Could you repeat that?

MR. NORRIS: I shall repeat that, because it bears repeating. Tourism revenues increased to $4.4 billion in the year 2000. Unbelievable.

Value-added exports increased by $4.1 billion to $20.4 billion. Get Ready Alberta is part of the department's ongoing commitment to keeping Albertans informed and involved as the province moves toward a debt-free future.

Alberta Economic Development will continue to monitor the province's performance against targets established in Get Ready Alberta and will lead initiatives that enable the province to meet those targets. [interjection] That's okay. It gets better.

Alberta international marketing strategies. Moving to our second goal, seeing that "Alberta's businesses, communities and industry sectors are globally competitive," a strategy that targets our efforts to improve Alberta's global competitiveness is the Alberta international marketing strategy, or AIMS. AIMS was developed to coordinate with the Alberta Economic Development Authority after broad consultation with industry stakeholders. A number of government departments such as Learning, Energy, International and Intergovernmental Affairs, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and Innovation and Science were also involved.

The goal of AIMS is to increase exports to and investments from key geographic markets and priority value-added sectors. In doing so, the plan highlights marketing strategies that ensure that Albertans receive the best return on their investments.

Along with promoting Alberta internationally, the department promotes the formation of regional economic alliances across Alberta that allow business and community leaders and local residents to develop long-term economic plans that meet local needs. Mr. Chairman, I will be providing an update of AIMS to the standing policy committee next month that proposes enhancements to Alberta's international representation.

Our strategic tourism marketing plan. Guiding our focus on the achievement of our third goal, ensuring that "Alberta is a globally competitive tourism destination," is the strategic tourism marketing plan, or STMP. Developed by the industry-led Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, the STMP is a three-year plan that provides vision and leadership for tourism marketing in Alberta. The plan sets specific goals for tourism revenue, market share, private-sector investment, client and stakeholder satisfaction, efficiency, and financial management. The overall goal of this three-year plan is to increase the total tourism revenue in Alberta to $5 billion by the end of December 2003, up from its current $4.2 billion in 1999.

Tourism is the fourth largest industry in Alberta and has significant economic spin-offs for the province. In light of the importance of tourism, last year the department reallocated on a permanent basis $2 million from its existing budget to the tourism marketing and development programs. At the same time, our department supports the development of newer tourism products in order to respond to changing market needs that are crucial to the success of the tourism industry and the government's tourism marketing.

Specifically regarding the budget estimates, Mr. Chairman, the budget for this department is $51,455,000. As I indicated earlier, Alberta Economic Development has three core businesses. The structure of the department programs and their budget estimates reflect these three areas and provide 100 percent alignment of our resources to our core businesses.

The first departmental program, ministry support services, consists of the offices of the minister and the deputy minister, finance and administration, corporate . . . [Mr. Norris' speaking time expired] I could go on. I'll close, Mr. Chairman, with letting you know that it's an outstanding department.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Well, it's nice to think that this minister of a whole two months could be responsible for all the good news he's talking about this evening, but we know that isn't really true. Perhaps it's good news to him, but it's not good news to everyone in this province.

Mr. Chairman, this has been one of my favourite ministries since I've been in this Legislature. In 1993, when I was first elected, I was the junior critic for Economic Development. The more experienced critic at that time was Frank Bruseker, and he used to refer to this ministry as the ministry of cookies and pork. I think that aptly describes some of their ventures in those days. Cookies was a reference to investments that this government had made in not just one cookie factory but a number of business ventures that turned out to be less than profitable. The pork reference was a reference that I think all of us are familiar with in politics. He got called to account several times when he made those references. Those were some pretty bad years for Economic Development in terms of the kind of wastage of dollars that there were in different business ventures in this province.

After that time period, there seemed to be a bit of a slump in what Economic Development did and the profile it had in this government, Mr. Chairman. As gambling and lottery revenues took over some of the profile and some of the discretionary funding in the province, I believe we saw the Economic Development department somewhat gutted and changed in its format.

It underwent some changes, and some of them I think were pretty good changes, Mr. Chairman. We see it coming back into a little more prominence in its role in this province, and I think that is both good and bad. If they're successful in their four goals, it's good. But we've seen some very recent examples where they still haven't been able to figure out how to manage partnerships or ventures under their direct control, and that's certainly still bad, Mr. Chairman. I will speak to some of those shortly, when I talk about the comments the Auditor General has made about this department and expect some feedback.

Just a few overall remarks in terms of what the minister had to say here. He talks about this department being the leading sales and marketing arm of the government, and that's good. Certainly that's the kind of role Alberta has taken in the last decade, and it's been a positive influence, for the most part, in terms of the feedback in Alberta. But like marketing arms or sales arms in businesses, they need to make sure that the checks and balances are in place to make sure this kind of department stays in line with what its goals are and doesn't overextend its abilities selling what it doesn't have, investing what it doesn't have, marketing what it doesn't have. So that's a very legitimate concern I bring forward, given its past performance in promoting investment opportunities and working in partnerships.

In caution, I would ask the department to put forward as a filter over all the decisions they make – particularly this is a department that can get carried away with things. They need to ensure that they're benchmarking what they're doing and that the goals they set are both measurable and attainable and realistic and that they are not interfering in the marketplace in any way, shape, or form. So I would ask him to bring that cautionary aspect to his job.

When I look through the business plans and listen to the minister talk, the focus is on international trade, on external kinds of trade, and that's good. Certainly the big growth is there, Mr. Chairman, but I don't want this minister to forget about what keeps Alberta viable and attractive for the tourism he's trying to attract, and that is the small-business sector of this province. I didn't hear any specific references in his opening comments to that, and it seems to me that when I take a look at the goals and core businesses, that seems to be somewhat overlooked here. We're only as strong as the foundation we're working from, and small business is certainly the foundation of this province. We have seen many recommendations come forward from small businesses that would help them with their practices in this province and would build a little steadier foundation for work to be done. Not the least of those is the reduction of regulations. I'm sure that pressure from this minister and his department in seeing that that is acted out and that paperwork is reduced for these organizations would be something very helpful.

One of the things we don't see reflected in this ministry and one of the key areas of concern for businesses moving forward is venture capital dollars, Mr. Chairman. We don't see any references here to them. We'd like to know what the minister's plans are in that area, what avenues there are for organizations that are trying to promote their businesses or to keep them globally competitive, and there doesn't seem to be much of a reference there.

I note in the opening comments of the Auditor General that he talks about government changes impacting the ministry, and one of them is the new tourism framework that the minister talked about in his opening comments. The Auditor General makes a reference to the previous Alberta Tourism Partnership Corporation structure that was discontinued in 1998, the most recent by far, Mr. Chairman, of boondoggles entered into by this particular department. A clear indication there that while the government obviously was looking forward to moving forward on collaboration fronts and by striking a partnership with what should have been an arm's-length operation, the rules of engagement weren't clear. There weren't clear objectives and benchmarks that could be measured and reported back and strategies where, if the benchmarks and the goals weren't achieved by a certain time period, retrenching or reorganizing or disbanding was done at an early stage.

The end result was that lots of money was spent on this Alberta Tourism Partnership with very, very few results and in fact some very hard feelings, particularly in the northern part of this province, in terms of allocation of dollars and the kind of bang they got for their buck. Subsequently the department contracted out over $10 million worth of marketing and tourist information services in the 1999-2000 year. I don't see what we got for our money there, and perhaps the minister can enlighten me on that. I do wonder, as I'm sure northern Alberta tourism departments wonder, what they could have done with $10 million and what kind of impact they could have had in terms of bringing tourism to the north. Certainly in the early days when I was cocritic for this area, not much happened north of Red Deer, Mr. Chairman. It seems like they're still the forgotten cousin in this equation here. We would like to see if this minister has some specific strategies there and, if he does, what they could be.

We see again year after year the same problem here when the Auditor General talks about problems with the minister's financial statements. The very basic and fundamental problem when you talk about Economic Development, where lots of money flows out in expenses, is that their basic controls over management and assets and payments are a problem. In fact, the AG recommended "that the senior financial officer of the Department ensure that key internal controls over the management of assets and payments be complied with."

He goes on to talk about lack of staff and those kinds of issues. We know that there was a significant reduction of staffing components in this particular department over that time period and in fact over the years prior to that, but it's no excuse for not being able to count the dollars, Mr. Chairman. We would like to know what the minister has done to comply here. Specifically, what we'd also like to know is: where were the problems that the AG found? What specific departments and what kinds of dollars are we talking about here? Have they been rectified?

The AG goes on to talk about identifying "the need for improved controls over payments" and identifying "weaknesses in payment controls in the tourism program." Overpayments were made to contractors. One was for more than $141,000. So the department had a problem with their paperwork; the contractor had a problem with his paperwork. It looks like it might have been improved. It doesn't say here whether or not the money was ever recovered. That's a question we'd like answered. I mean, $141,000 is a lot of money. How could this happen is, I think, a reasonable question here.

The Auditor General makes a formal recommendation, recommendation 12, where he recommends that the Department of Economic Development ensure that expenses and assets arising from new initiatives are disclosed in its financial statements based on the substance of the transactions.

That's quite a shocker to anybody with an accounting background, Mr. Chairman, to see that this didn't happen.

In fact, the department sloughed through the reporting of an agreement it made with a contractor to open and maintain a bank account for receiving contributions and payments of expenses for this project. At March 31, 2000 the Department had contributed over $700,000 into this account.

An interesting kind of slush fund accounting when "this amount [was] treated as a grant expense in the Department's financial statements," even though it should have been included "as an asset and the transfer of funds into the bank account should not have been recorded as an expense."

I'm assuming they're hiring qualified people there, and I have to wonder how something like this could happen. Good for the AG's department in finding it. Bad news for this department for having allowed something like this to happen. We would like to know the kinds of checks and balances they have in their system so that this doesn't happen in the future.

You know, they go on to talk about another recommendation, where he says:

We again recommend that the Department ensure that its branch plans encompass all significant activities of the Department's operations and indicate how all funds in the budget are to be used.

So they had branch plans that weren't even including significant areas of operations. Thirty-five percent of the department's budget was not included in branch plans. For example, the regional development branch did not indicate how any of its $3.2 million budget was to be spent. Well, a nice slush fund to have, Mr. Chairman, if you can get your hands on it. It's not the way the government should be spending their money. Interesting to see that this would happen.

International office branches did not include all of its foreign operations. Well, what's that about, Mr. Chairman? We need to know how those dollars are spent. The minister can talk all he wants about what great strategies they have, but when they have no intent to control the dollars and cents and how those dollars are spent, how can Albertans ever assume that they are getting value for their money and that in fact people just aren't off on junkets all over the world having a great time at Alberta taxpayers' expense? We've had examples tabled in this Legislature where this particular department certainly did pursue junkets that did not give value for the dollars spent, and we don't want to see that happening. So we would like a report back on how those significant activities are now being recorded and would hopefully be available for scrutiny by people in the general public.

There are also six delegated administrative organizations within this ministry, and it's always been a problem for us, these DAOs, because lots of times we don't seem to have a lot of input or review processes built in place to take a look at how these dollars are being spent. The Auditor General has some concerns about those, too, and made some recommendations. They followed up the recommendations that they made, and of the six, "Monitoring appears to be strong for four of the six DAOs." Which four are those? Which two have problems still in the monitoring and managing of the relationship between the ministry and the other two DAOs? If we could have that information, it would be helpful to us.

So, Mr. Chairman, for what really is a very small department, the Auditor General devotes a fair amount of time explaining problems and issues in this department. I hope that's going to change with the next Auditor General's report. This minister has only been in the portfolio for a couple of months, so he's got a few months here where he can see if he can't ensure that this department is a little more accountable than it has been in the past.

In his opening comments the minister talked about what they were going to do in terms of tourism, and I'd like to ask him what his specific strategies are for promoting tourism as a parallel industry in resource-based regional economies. You know, I'm thinking particularly of some of the areas that were hit by the closures of coal mines. In the central and northwest sector of this province we have some beautiful, beautiful regions that are not promoted to any great extent from a tourism or an ecotourism perspective. I think there is a huge amount of potential there. They have been resource-based economies in the past. They're in a transition stage or phase. I'm sure they could use some support, Mr. Chairman, and I'm wondering specifically if this minister has got any strategies there. He talks about the big dollars coming into the province for tourism. In order to ensure that those tourism dollars stay here and grow, areas do need to be promoted.

I can't remember the studies I have most recently seen on this, but it seems to me that there's an absolute, direct correlation with regional and provincial promotion to bringing tourism dollars into the province, so we would like to see that continued. I think that's money well spent, although it certainly needs to be benchmarked and evaluated. Particularly I would like to see him spin some focus on the northwestern parts of the province because the southwestern parts are well known, Mr. Chairman; no doubt about that. The Banff and Crowsnest Pass areas of this province have had large exposure in the past and are very attractive areas for tourism dollars and will continue to be in the future, but we have some underdeveloped areas in this province that could certainly benefit from some ecotourism or environmental development kinds of projects.

What is this minister specifically undertaking, Mr. Chairman, on the energy efficient initiative side? We see the direct rebates going back to taxpayers in this province, but we don't see any direct intervention by Economic Development to support alternate energy sources. There are lots of options on the research and development side, lots of options on existing kinds of alternate sources, be they solar or wind. No doubt a small percentage of the dollars that have been invested in oil and gas and coal over the past decades would be well spent if they were put into those alternate kinds of sources, not only from an economic development and a jobs perspective but from an energy efficiency perspective and long-term forecasting of being able to meet the requirements we will have as a province under the Kyoto protocol. So if the minister could identify those strategies, I would be very supportive of that.

You know, something I haven't seen this minister talk about and something which has been an issue for as long as I've been in this Legislature is the pillow tax, Mr. Chairman. I read something recently where the minister talked about options for that particular tax. Of course, what the industry wants is those dollars directed right back into their industry in terms of promotion. I'm sure they would like them redirected back in proportion to the dollars collected per region. Certainly we would support an initiative like that. Exactly where is he going on that issue? We'd like to know. The pillow tax actually is a regressive tax, but people seem to be used to paying it, so there doesn't seem to be a huge degree of discontent about the tax itself or the collection processes for it. Certainly just having that money come in and go into general revenue is something the associations have been concerned about for many years, so we would like to get this particular minister's feedback on that. If he could give us that information, that would be very helpful.

A progress report from his perspective on the economic spin-offs from the Canamex highway would be beneficial. We haven't seen that yet, and I would appreciate that.

I'll be back later, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the budget estimates of the Ministry of Economic Development this evening. I listened with interest to the minister's opening remarks, and I'm astonished that the low rate of the Canadian dollar has had nothing to do with the dramatic increase in the tourism trade in this province. Also, the low rate of the Canadian dollar and the resources that are readily available for, in this case, exploitation have not come into consideration regarding the robust economy of this province.

The robust economy of this province continues despite attempts not only to privatize our health care system and ruin a natural competitive advantage we have there but also with our electricity prices. I will be curious to see what the minister has to say in another couple of years, because if the present trend continues, industries are going to have no choice but to vacate this province for other jurisdictions with more reliable, competitive electricity prices.

Now, understandably the primary focus – and I can understand why the minister gets quite excited about the portfolio of the Ministry of Economic Development – is to strengthen the Alberta economy and support job creation by the private sector, and I wish the minister well in all his endeavours. To achieve the goals, the minister must work closely with other provincial government departments, the Alberta Economic Development Authority, which my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie mentioned, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, the Travel Alberta Secretariat, business and industry associations, and other governments to create a positive economic planning framework.

Now, a core business of the Ministry of Economic Development is strategic leadership for economic development policy and planning. I'm interested in any of the concerns the minister has regarding the problem of the Alliance pipeline. The minister spoke about the petrochemical industry, and certainly we've got to recognize the effect it has on not only our current prosperity but our future prosperity. Where are we going to get the ethane? We're shipping so much of it out on the Alliance line. We need an affordable feedstock for a petrochemical industry, and I wonder if the minister has any thoughts on that.

In the time, unfortunately, that we have allotted here, I'd better get directly to some of the questions I have. There's no information provided in the estimates or the business plan of the Ministry of Economic Development regarding the number of full-time equivalents in 2002-03 or 2003-04. Will the minister please provide information on plans for full-time equivalent levels in the Ministry of Economic Development for 2002-03 and 2003-04? This is on page 134 of the estimates.

Will the minister please provide a breakdown of ministerial expenses by object – the budget here is over $51 million – in the following components: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, wages for contract employees, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting? Will the minister please provide a similar breakdown for consolidated program expenses in 2002-03 and 2003-04? This is in the business plan, page 116.

Also, will the minister please provide a breakdown of other revenues anticipated by the department for 2001-02? I believe that figure is 750,000. For 2002-03 it's also the same and for the next year as well. This is also on page 116.

Could the minister please provide a report on the activities that the executive committee established within the Department of Economic Development to identify areas of policy need, setting priorities for policy development, and approving selection of qualified candidates to fill key jobs within the new organizational structure?

Also, could the minister please describe how successful the Council of Economic Development Ministers has been to date in meeting terms of reference recommended in the July 1997 Coopers & Lybrand report. They have a few points here: to ensure co-ordination across government departments of public policy formulation activities for economic development across the province; secondly, to ensure that government initiatives in economic development policy fully take into account private-sector directions and input being received by AEDA and the private sector; thirdly, to collaborate with the AEDA chair and committee members; also, to ensure that economic development planning takes place in a co-ordinated, consistent manner across all departments; lastly, to ensure effective monitoring of the effectiveness of economic development policies and activities across all departments.

In regards to the Council of Economic Development Ministers, what planning initiatives will be undertaken by the council?

Now, the minister mentioned Get Ready Alberta. Can the minister provide a detailed update on Economic Development's role in the implementation of Get Ready Alberta? [interjection] A boondoggle? Yes. Unfortunately, in particular with this government after 30 years, history has a tendency to repeat itself, and people have said to me: Mr. MacDonald, be patient. I believe they're absolutely right.

Can the minister provide a detailed list including costs and type of projects his ministry is involved in as part of preparations for hosting the 2001 world track and field championships in Edmonton? That would be very interesting. There's a lot of money going into that. Gosh, I hope it's all been spent well. Will the ministry also be doing a study, upon completion of the games, of the effect the games had on the economy and the cost and/or benefits to both the public and private sectors for hosting the 2001 world track and field championships in Edmonton? If so, will the minister commit to making the full details of this report public?

Now, the program spending here in the ministry support services. Mr. Chairman, key initiatives under ministry support services include "enhancing the collection, management, and dissemination of the department's information and knowledge" – hopefully that's going to include question period as well – and "implementing innovative and responsive human resource programs and services to ensure the availability of a highly competent workforce in the department."

In regards to this, how many full-time equivalents are employed under program 1, ministry support services, in 2001-02, and what is the breakdown of the subprogram areas: minister's office, deputy minister's office, finance and administration, communications, and performance management? What are the projections for full-time equivalents in 2002-03 and 2003-04? That was on page 124 of the estimates.

Now, on page 116 of the business plan of Economic Development. Will the minister please provide a breakdown of ministry support services by subprogram for 2002-03 and 2003-04?

The minister's office. It's always interesting to visit the minister's office.

DR. TAFT: You won't get invited there often.

MR. MacDONALD: I'm not going to be invited to the minister's office too often. Well, that's fine.

The gross operating expense of $311,000 represents an increase of $16,000, or a 5.4 percent increase, from the previous year's budget estimate. Now, what is the breakdown of the $311,000 minister's office budget for 2001-2002 by the following components: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, wages, contract employees, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, hosting? Again, hosting and travel: I'll look forward to receiving that.

What benchmarks or targets have been established within the minister's office to meet the mandate of the ministry? For example, New Zealand, again, includes correspondence received from the public. In the opening remarks of the minister, Mr. Chairman, one could only conclude that the public is very, very satisfied and that there are very few that are unsatisfied, but it would be interesting to note.

What benchmarks, Mr. Chairman, have been established for the number of replies to Legislative Assembly questions, ministerial correspondence, motions for returns, written questions, reports to cabinet and Treasury Board? What time frame or due date benchmarks have been established for ministerial, MLA, and public correspondence?

Can the minister explain also why gross operating expenses are up this year by 5.4 percent over last year's budget estimates when the preliminary forecast for last year is $14,000, or 4.7 percent, below the budget estimates for last year? If we didn't need the money last year, why do we think we need it this year?

Now the deputy minister's office. We're going to visit the deputy minister's office now. Could the minister please explain his explanation for the $61,000 increase, or 16.9 percent, in the deputy minister's office budget between the year 2000-2001 budget estimates and the 2001 forecast?

One of the budget highlights I read here in Economic Development after Get Ready Alberta is "service the growing needs of the ICT sector and other advanced technologies sectors through a co-funding relationship with Innovation and Science." Now, the first thing that would come to my mind with this are the CCTs, the clean coal technologies.

Now, it doesn't matter whether the CCTs are concerning the Inland Cement proposal, that is going to affect the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, or the coal-fired power plants west of the city. For the clean coal technologies is the minister's department responsible for some of the funding for this research? These clean coal technologies are going to be essential for the future electricity generation of this province, and I would be very curious to know how much money, if any, is going out of Economic Development and who is getting it and how this research is being conducted. I would be very anxious to receive a progress report on any of this research that's being done. In fact, I would like to if possible visit a pilot plant that is operating. The PCs, or the pulverized coal generating stations, are – well, the only way to describe them is as dinosaurs. [interjection] Someone is awake.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what outputs and outcomes are used to evaluate the performance within the deputy minister's office, and how does it link to the mandate of the ministry?

We're now on reference line 1.0.3, finance and administration. There's just not enough time to go through this budget thoroughly, contrary to what other hon. members at this Assembly may think. How does the minister explain the fact that last year's forecast of $2.507 million is $499,000, or 16.6 percent, less than last year's budget estimate of slightly more than $3 million?

Now, this finance and administration, in my view, is a very important branch. It co-ordinates the records and management activities of the department as well as compliance with the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I visited this office in my role as opposition critic for the pine shakes, whether they're treated or untreated. There was a lot of action back in the early '90s in this department regarding the promotion of pine shakes, and ultimately the consumers in this province paid for that problem.

Now, this branch assists the department also to achieve its business plan outcomes through the management of its employees. Finance and administration also co-ordinates and enhances the corporate management of the department by providing planning and resource management support in the areas of finance, administration, information technology, and business planning.

Now, how much of the slightly over $3 million budget has been allocated to support activities planned in the financial services unit? How much of the slightly more than $3 million budget has been allocated to support activities planned in the administrative services unit? How much of the slightly more than $3 million has been allocated to support activities planned in the information technology unit? How much of the finance and administration budget deals with the development of business planning and performance measurement processes across the department?

Again to the minister: what is the status of the Alberta Corporate Service Centre initiative and the corporate human resource development strategy that's been implemented in the department in the areas of employee skills inventories, job profiles, performance management, and rewards and recognitions? Will the minister please provide further information on plans to implement shared services with other departments in the areas of financing, resources, administration, and information technology services. What role does the government administration play in the Alberta Corporate Service Centre? Now, this is on page 109 of the business plan.

Will the minister provide an update, please, on the continuity plan, the virtual teams, and the coaching leaders program, which is again on page 109.

How does the departmental business planning committee, chaired by the executive director of finance and administration and comprised of senior representatives from each division, assist in the development of the ministry business plan?

Mr. Chairman, what changes have been made to travel policies and procedures, internal controls of the payroll function, and the grant policy for supporting conferences and functions and other sponsorship initiatives?

Will the minister please provide an update on the results being achieved by the following initiatives that have been undertaken by finance and administration over the past three years: development of the core database integrating client-related information for access across the department, implementation of the SMART system to support visitor information centres, enhancement and upgrading of internal and external information systems such as issue management, correspondence, and action requests. The classic AR: we send a letter across, and we can generate an action request. I don't know, in relation to the pine shake file, how many action requests were initiated, but it became a cottage industry. I'm sure with the electricity deregulation and what a boondoggle that is becoming, action requests are going to be a big issue there as well.

With those questions, I'm disappointed my time is up.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a pleasure to address the minister on his first submission, his first budget, one rookie to another. I'll start with some wide-ranging comments here. Something that all the members will realize is a theme that will last for years to come and will be, I'm sure, of particular concern and I expect something of a headache to the Minister of Economic Development is the impact of electricity deregulation. I imagine the minister is familiar with the work of Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters, a very detailed economic analysis of the impact of higher electricity prices on manufacturing in Alberta and the potential risk of up to 31,000 jobs. I note again that we had visitors this afternoon from Montana, and undoubtedly they will have very close experience to provide on electricity deregulation with the minister here.

I am familiar with earlier documents from Economic Development I think – if my memory serves correctly, my own reading of them from 1998 – which actually championed Alberta's cheap electricity prices as a keystone of economic development and diversification. Clearly, we can no longer do that, and I'm sure that that is going to be an ongoing problem for the minister and his department and, indeed, for the entire province.

I also note the minister is responsible for some programs that may in fact be in tension one with the other, for example electricity. If we go into electricity exporting through, say, an expanded tie-line to the United States and generating large amounts of power from those pulverized coal dinosaurs, we may find that we actually end up damaging our environment and working against the interests of our tourism industry. Certainly having some familiarity with the coal-fired plants to the west of the city – the Wabamun plant, the Sundance plant, the Keephills plant, and the Genesee plant – those are not the kinds of things that work well with developing a tourism industry. So the minister will need some care and wisdom in sorting out those contradictions.

I'd also point out to the minister some warnings of the past, warnings of the economic development and diversification initiatives of the later 1970s and through the 1980s. I will make a prediction here that he's going to need to fight very hard to stick to his plans and his budget if we aren't to repeat those kinds of problems in this department and under this minister. We ended up in a situation where subsidies to business in one form or another, direct and indirect, everything from tax credits to direct subsidies, cost this province untold billions of dollars. I express my concerns now that we do not get into repeating those mistakes.

There is much to be said for the diversification of Alberta's economy. I, however, remain a skeptic of some of the claims, for example, that Edmonton's economy is the most diversified in the country. I suspect that if all the economic spin-offs of our sitting on oil and gas were to be tallied up and sorted through the economy, a great deal of our economy and our economic prosperity still relies on the fact we were lucky enough to have huge pools of petroleum in the ground beneath us. Our manufacturing industry, for an example, relies to a very large extent on manufacturing products for the oil and gas industry. By way of that, I think it's an indication that economic diversification in Alberta may not be nearly as advanced as we like to think it is.

I've spent a notable amount of time going through the department's material and estimates and annual reports from before and have quite extensive briefing notes. I'll just deal with a handful of concerns.

I note a curious pattern in the department in which some programs are markedly underbudget and other programs are markedly overbudget. There are some programs in which spending is way off budget, and it makes me wonder and express my concerns that the minister will need to work hard to tighten his control on the budgetary process of the department.

Looking, for example, at the industry development program. There's a decrease of 5.8 percent this year over last year's preliminary actuals. Decreases are fine if they can be justified, but I would like from the minister an explanation of why last year's preliminary actual is down from last year's actual and markedly down from last year's budgeted expenditures. In fact, last year's preliminary actual is actually 18 percent less than what was budgeted. So what was going on in that particular program? Maybe it was good and maybe it wasn't. Maybe there was inactivity there. What was going on that saw the actual expenditure come in some 18 percent less than was budgeted? Was it an error in the previous year's budget? Should we be concerned that that error is being repeated here? What is the explanation? I'd like to hear that from the minister.

Moving on to the area of tourism marketing and development, which has been an area of some controversy within the tourism industry in the last few years, there is widespread concern that the provincial government, which was at one time an exemplary leader in tourism marketing and development, actually took the tourism industry through a pretty tough time and perhaps an unnecessarily tough time.

Looking at the budget now and looking towards the future, there are areas where spending is again significantly out of whack with the budget, and we are seeing real changes in the budget estimates this year compared to what was spent last year. For example, in tourism marketing and development, if I'm reading the figures correctly, the 2001-02 estimate is $19.145 million. Last year's estimate was only $16.9 million. That's a very significant increase. Again, why is this occurring? Why was the actual expenditure for last year in this program more than 10 percent over budget? That's a worrying trend and, again, fits in with the pattern in which the budgets of this department are not reliable indicators of the actual expenditures of the department.

I could go through a series of other examples of that. I'll only go through a handful of others. The regional marketing program that's done within Alberta, which is intended to increase interregional travel by Albertans within the province and to encourage and strengthen the so-called shoulder season travel in Alberta by Albertans, has some rather startling changes in spending patterns. The increase between last year's preliminary actual over last year's budget estimate is over 41 percent, which is really quite a remarkable misjudgment or miscalculation in the budgetary process. Well, it indicates some problem in budgeting or financial controls, that I certainly hope are addressed this year.

It would be interesting to know what exactly is being achieved with these expenditures. So much of these expenditures are intended to leverage private-industry funds. We spend public funds to stimulate and leverage private-industry funds. I'd like the minister to indicate to us: what are the leveraging ratios for the resident tourism marketing program for last year, this year, and the next couple of years? What are they expected to be in the next couple of years? If those ratios are not what they are expected to be, it may indicate that our performance is inadequate in that area.

Shifting from marketing programs within Alberta to international marketing, again we have evidence that last year's budget was a very unreliable indicator of what was being spent, and it makes me concerned about how reliable this year's estimates are. There was an increase of more than 22 percent between last year's preliminary actual and last year's budget estimate. This is a worrisome trend. I'd like to have the minister explain this to the Assembly.

Again on the international side, since these moneys are spent to some extent to stimulate and leverage private funding in different regions of the world, what are the leveraging ratios for the Americas, for Asia Pacific, and for Europe for last year and this year, and what are they expected to be in the next two years? Anybody who has worked extensively in the tourism industry knows that tourism marketing programs take some extended period to come into effect, so we'll be wanting to know what the plans are not just for this year but for the couple of years after that.

Of course, related to tourism marketing is Alberta's image promotion program. Yet again, startling figures on how far the budget was off from the reality last year. This time it's a decrease of 51 percent over the budget estimate. There's clearly some explanation for this. I would like the minister to explain why the Alberta image promotion was so far under budget last year. Was it a breakdown in activity? Was there some shifting of responsibilities? It's a remarkable deviation from the budget plan, and it does make me concerned about the reliability of this year's budget plan.

Again, on the research side we're seeing this year's estimate at $350,000, a decrease of 30 percent from the previous year's estimate of half a million dollars, an exact $500,000. What's the explanation for that? Are we doing less research? Is that wise? Given the importance of research in guiding our economic development and our tourism policy, marketing research is crucial to tourism development.

I'll wrap up, Mr. Chairman, with a handful of comments more generally on issues that certainly relate to economic development but in some ways do not fall directly under its purview.

Investments in education are vital to our economic development. I'm sure the minister will be working with other members of his cabinet to ensure that our education infrastructure, tuition fees, accessibility are well developed. I would go even more broadly to suggest that one of the strongest indicators and attractors for economic diversification and development is a general quality of life. While we all agree there is a good quality of life in Alberta, we should not be taking it for granted. The kinds of things that contribute to a quality life, including an education and health care systems, good roads, and a clean environment, must not be underestimated and should be taken in mind by the minister in his broader view of his responsibility for expanding and diversifying Alberta's economy.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll wrap up with those comments.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, in the four and a half minutes.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to conclude some comments on the Economic Development estimate. Just a few wrap-up comments on budget highlights.

I would like to go back to some of the comments that my colleague made with regard to the growing needs of the ICT sector and other advanced technology sectors through a co-funding relationship with Innovation and Science. We'd sure like some detail on what's happening there. I, too, am very interested, as he is, in the clean coal technology. We've heard the Premier talk about clean coal technology and zero emissions, which would seem to be a scientific impossibility at this time in the world, never mind in this province. So if this minister has any information on this or other advanced technologies in that area, certainly I'd be very interested in talking to him about any information he has, viewing any progress being made in that regard. I certainly look forward to hearing from him on that area.

Good job with the stuff that he's doing with Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I think that department is making some real forward progress in taking a look at the tertiary development of some of our basic foodstuffs in this province and would like a report on exactly what activities they're involved in there but applaud the work that he's doing.

One of the other budget highlights talks about assisting "the film industry to develop a report card on the performance of the film sector in Alberta." I'm not sure that that's all that's needed there. We seem to have gone into these cycles where we heavily support the film industry, then withdraw that support, then try to get re-involved. I think over the 30 years that I have been involved with the film industry in this province, we have seen a great deal of discouragement there. That's really too bad, because I think there was a point in time when we could have been a leading factor in the film industry in this country. I'm not sure that that is still possible, but certainly I would look forward to an update in that particular area, specifically information on how the minister expects us to be competitive just in the Canadian marketplace. With the reduced Canadian dollar we are attractive for film investments, but I think we've missed the boat in terms of competing with B.C. and Ontario and even Manitoba in that regard. So if there are any updates in that area, I would hope that the minister would share those with us.

He talks about the ministry budget including $2 million for strategic leadership for economic development policy and planning. We'd sure like to see some details in that regard. Sure it's dollars well spent, but I'm not sure that this particular department has done a good job of strategic leadership in the past, so details there would be very helpful.

I looked with interest at goal 3, "Alberta is a globally competitive tourism destination," and wondered at some of the growth forecasts, the targets that are here for the next few years. They seem to me to be not very high, Mr. Chairman. Could the minister tell us how he arrived at those figures and whether or not they did a cost analysis in terms of what they could expect the forecasts and targets to be given the amount of dollars they had to invest in the various areas, particularly as they've gotten them broken down between Europe, Asia, and the United States? So if we could get background on that: how they got to those dollars, why the targets are so low. If this is a major push, a major drive for us to increase tourism in the province, it seems like we should be able to achieve higher targets than what we've got. So if he could just give us some information on that.

Then just above that on page 131, where they talk about "the most cost effective location in North America in selected value-added sectors," what I'd like to know is why they selected the ones they did. Were there others in the plan, and if they're going to be the most cost-effective locations, exactly what factors went into determining cost-effective? We have some natural competitive advantages in this province. Particularly I think those have to do with manufacturing and location and taxation. So if he could give us some information on that, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Economic Development, final comments.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to close by very briefly thanking once again my colleagues in the gallery. Thank you for sitting here. I promise you it won't happen for at least another year. I appreciate that. I was told by some of my colleagues that my presentation rated an average of about 8.2. I'll try a little harder for you, but I won't let you down.

I've listened very carefully to all the comments, and I want to thank the hon. members. I will do everything in my power to answer their questions to the best of my ability and as quickly as I can.

Just a few very brief comments, Mr. Chairman, about the direction of our ministry. During the recent campaign I was very, very pleased to try and join Premier Klein's team. I want to let the hon. members know that we're on the right track. Your questions are valid ones. We'll try and make this a better province for all of us, and I can guarantee you that we are growing, and growing in the right direction.

Only one comment that I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman, about the size of my ministry. I was interested to hear the hon. member say that it's a relatively small ministry, but I would remind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie that most great things come in small packages, and she should watch what's going to happen in the next couple of years.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll close now.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Economic Development, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Okay.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $51,455,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

10:30

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very electrifying debate tonight. Most enjoyable. Therefore I would move that the committee rise and report the votes and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following departments.

International and Intergovernmental Relations: operating expense, $6,104,000.

Economic Development: operating expense, $51,455,000.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:32 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 9, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we confidently ask for Your strength and encouragement in our service of You through our service of others. We ask for Your gift of wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House two individuals from my home province of Saskatchewan. Located in the Speaker's gallery are Mr. Jason Vogelsang, who is a master of public administration student at the University of Regina. With Mr. Vogelsang is an old friend and colleague, Professor Garnet Garven, dean of the Faculty of Administration at the University of Regina. Dean Garven and I both go back to the mid-80s, when we were both servants of the government of Saskatchewan. Mr. Vogelsang and Dean Garven are in Edmonton attending the national conference of the Institute of Public Administration of Canada. This national conference, sponsored in part by the government of Alberta, saw more than 400 public servants from across Canada come together to focus on public administration in a knowledge society. As an Edmonton MLA it is a pleasure to be the host city for this national conference. Please join me in welcoming our special guests.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I request that the petition I presented yesterday now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to support legislation to protect the right of healthcare professionals and healthcare workers to refrain from participating directly or indirectly in treatment or procedures that offend against their convictions that human life is inviolable, and to protect equally their right to so refrain without fear of discrimination, penalty, harassment, or dismissal.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 14 Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce Bill 14, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this act provides the authority for the Alberta energy tax refund and makes a minor technical change to the foreign tax credit and the overseas employment tax credit. The Alberta energy tax refund program was announced September 6, 2000, to help relieve the pressures of higher than normal energy costs, including home heating costs, and higher prices at the gas pumps. This program was possible because of the higher than expected revenues from resources and returns $690 million to the pockets of more than 2 million Albertans. The technical component of the amendment will ensure that Albertans who are eligible to claim the overseas employment tax credit and the foreign tax credit receive that full benefit as intended.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Bill 209 Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, 2001

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 209, being the Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act, 2001.

The goal of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to reduce injury, disability, and death related to the 82 percent of children and teens under the age of 18 riding bicycles without the use of helmet protection.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

Bill 210 Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce Bill 210, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (In-Home Care and Dependant Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2001.

Bill 210 will amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act to allow for a greater tax exemption for individuals who are caring for dependent adults or relatives in their home. Specifically, the bill would allow for a nonrefundable tax credit equal to the spousal credit of $12,900 per individual who has dependent adults or relatives living with them.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud today to rise to file with the Assembly copies of a news release announcing that the Alberta government has been awarded the gold medal for innovative management from the Institute of Public Administration of Canada. This award recognizes the government's corporate human resource development strategy, which focuses on learning, leadership, and promoting the Alberta public service as an attractive employer.

I am also tabling a memo I sent to all members of the Alberta public service congratulating them on this great honour and thanking them for the excellent work they do every day on behalf of the people of this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings for the Assembly today. Firstly, I have five copies of the 29th annual report of the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board for the year ended December 31, 2000.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation's 2000 annual report. I also have five copies of that report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter to the Minister of Justice containing the details of concerns of a conflict of interest in the Calgary regional health authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table today for the benefit of all Members of the Legislative Assembly a letter from Alberta Labour dated September 14, 1993. It is signed by Bruce Allen, research and approvals officer, and it's regarding the acceptance of pine shake manufacturers in the province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table in the Assembly a document called Reasons for Judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice E.S. Lefsrud, related to the case between Her Majesty the Queen and Ziad Jaber.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. My first tabling is a letter from Mrs. Gail Duiker making a case for an immediate raise in the basic social services living allowance.

The second tabling is a corporate registry document pertaining to 530376 Alberta Ltd., a numbered company owned by Nawal Jaber.

head: Introduction of Guests

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two very special guests from Chilliwack, B.C. This is their first visit to our Legislature to observe a fiscally responsible government at work. They are very special guests to me: Jim and Lona Peacock. Jim happens to be number one of my six brothers. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two constituents of mine, Louis and Ruth Adria of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying them are Ann Pavelich and Joe Green. Louis and Ruth are with the Elder Advocates of Alberta. They're very active in assisting the elderly and advocating on their behalf. I can attest to you, Mr. Speaker, as many of my colleagues know as well, that Ruth and Louis will not let a matter go if they think it needs advocating, and they will not desist if they believe that there's an elder in need. They do an excellent job of bringing those needs to the attention of myself and my colleagues. They are with us today to observe debate on Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to stand today to introduce to you and through you to various members of the Assembly a family from the Calgary-North West constituency. It's always a pleasure to have someone from our area here. The Heger family: father, Karel; mother, Sheila; their two sons, Tim and Nick. We got to know this great family over the past provincial election. We've got a very enthusiastic young man in Tim, who has a great interest in the government, wanted to come here and observe the political process, got all of his family involved in the campaign. He's 11 years old. He's shown great interest in being one of the future Prime Ministers of this country. So it's an honour to invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature Chris Langton. Chris was a volunteer who spent many hours assisting in the office and door-knocking during my campaign. Chris is very interested in the political process and has offered to serve on my constituency board. He intends to observe our democracy in action as often as he is able. I would ask Chris to please rise and receive the usual and traditional warm welcome of the hon. members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very special honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the very first school from my constituency that I've had the pleasure of introducing as MLA for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. They are accompanied by teachers and helpers Mr. Jacob Van Vliet, Mr. Jim Ferguson, Mrs. June Harrison-Leir, Mrs. Elizabeth Shen, Mrs. Brenda Rawluk, Mrs. Joy Boyle, Mrs. Judy Freehill, Miss Fay Green, Mrs. Kelly McConkey, Mrs. Liz Rice, and Mrs. Barb Redel. We have today with us in two groups – and I ask for your indulgence later on, sir – 150 grade 6 students from Percy Baxter school in Whitecourt. I'd ask my guests seated in the members' gallery to please stand and receive the warm welcome from this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you two very hardworking young women who are here visiting us in the Legislature today. They are Sheryl Burns, who is the director of the Alberta centennial celebrations office, and her very capable administrative assistant, Antonine Bergeron. I would ask them both to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House. We're all anticipating a great 2005 and thank you for your work in that regard.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a friend of mine visiting here from Ontario, Mr. Gord Lang. Gord is seated in the members' gallery. I'd like Gord to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome back to Alberta, because I believe he's moving back.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Conflict of Interest Court Case

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Premier. Will the Premier direct the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission to hold an inquiry into the Jaber case, given that they have the power under section 13 of the Gaming and Liquor Act?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what more there is to look into. There was a police investigation. There was a prosecution, which was a successful prosecution because it resulted in a conviction. What more can be said?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, will the Premier direct the commission to report to the Minister of Gaming on any implications that it may have had under section 31 of the gaming act?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have to admit I'm not familiar with that particular section. I will however have the hon. Minister of Gaming respond, and I hope that he's familiar with the section.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to say that I will take that question under advisement and in due course advise all members of the Assembly as to what that section deals with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question again to the Premier: will the Premier commit to making public to all Albertans any documents that his office, the Ministry of Justice, or the Ministry of Gaming may have that relate to this case?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it – and I'll repeat – there was, I would assume, a complete police investigation into this matter. Charges were laid. As I understand, there was a preliminary hearing, where the prosecution had ample opportunity to produce all the documentation it deemed required to prosecute this particular case. The case went on to trial, at which time there was, as I understand it, an agreed statement of facts, and a conviction was obtained. So I would have to assume that all of the information pertinent to this particular case has already been made public through the court process.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Horse Racing

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the Jaber case it was revealed that a top aide to Premier Getty won $20,000 at Northlands racetrack in one day of horse racing and that no record was kept. My question to the Premier: why is it that no record is kept of winnings of such large amounts as this at Alberta racetracks?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I used to be involved in horse racing a long time ago. As a matter of fact, I owned the back quarter end of a horse, so I know something about horse racing. There's no requirement anywhere in this country, as far as I know, to declare either losses or winnings from a horse race on either the front quarter, the middle, or the back quarter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If no record is kept at the racetracks on winnings or losses, how is it that we know how our public dollars are being spent when that comes into the Gaming ministry on a commission basis? That kind of relationship has to be dealt with.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no law against owning a horse, there is no law against betting on a horse, and there is no requirement under any law that I know that requires a person to declare winnings or losses from bets placed on a horse race.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister tell us whether or not an investigation will be held into why we have such a lack of record-keeping?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that the question is indeed vague, but as the Premier has indicated, there is no place that we are aware of where this type of record-keeping is necessary. I would point out to the hon. member that under the Racing Corporation Act the corporation is the one that is responsible for the control and management of racing in this province, and perhaps he should pursue that matter with them.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Rossdale Power Plant Expansion

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the EUB gave approval for expansion of the Rossdale power plant in the river valley of downtown Edmonton. My first question is to the Premier. Is this what we get when the Premier talks about fast tracking: a power plant built in an environmentally sensitive area, on a historic site, next to a residential neighbourhood?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is a quasi-judicial body charged with the responsibility of conducting a fair and thorough hearing into each and every application, and this was done. I would point out that in the approval of this particular application the EUB set conditions for allowable impacts to air and water quality and put in place strict noise limits.

More importantly, EPCOR, the proponent, is also required to work with Alberta Community Development should any human remains or artifacts be found. Relative to the historical impact and the cultural impact, I'll have the hon. Minister of Community Development supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this particular site and this particular project do have a fairly long history, which culminated with some specific hearings called by the AEUB in January. The upshot of it all is that there was a very thorough environmental impact assessment done on the area. There were also two historical resource impact assessments done on the area. In conclusion, there were some significant finds, of course, discovered.

We are looking right now at how to work through this with EPCOR and see what can be done about further designations, possibly with the low-pressure power plant, which the hon. member I'm sure is familiar with. There's the pump house there, and there's also an administration building.

Relative to the cemeteries that were there for either known or unknown individuals, those, the majority at least, I believe about 200 or so, have been moved under careful ceremonial guidance of the individuals' families that were involved, and they've been relocated under the proper guidelines to proper sites in this city.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Community Development. He has mentioned the dealings with the remains that are on the site, but there are significant historical issues as well. My question is: is this the type of community development and protection and preservation we can expect from this department and the minister when the department had the ability to stop this expansion? Why didn't it happen?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no simple answer because there are a lot of very complex issues involved in this. I would like to tell the hon. member that we do have an interdepartmental committee of deputy ministers that has been struck to help continue looking further into this and see if there are any further requirements that have not yet been satisfied. We are concerned that the architectural as well as the archaeological resources are maintained, preserved, and cared for in an appropriate way.

We are considering a designation right now of the low-pressure power plant as a historic source, and I should also say that the area in question, where some significant finds have been made, is actually at the very, very west end. A very small part of it is on the RD11 site. The majority of the area that has been of some discussion is actually west of that, and it goes underneath what used to be the old traffic circle, where the traffic lights are now. So we've done quite a bit there, and we'll continue to do that. We'll continue to work through this so that the area is given its proper consideration.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the department has given their blessing to this project, what other avenues are available to concerned citizens to appeal the decision other than lobbying Edmonton city council?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: That is a very good question, and I'm glad she raised it, because I intended to refer to it in my earlier answer. There is an appeal mechanism that can be accessed. If the individuals in question wish to do that or if some of the organizations or the neighbourhoods wish to do that, they certainly can give my office a call. I'd be happy to tell them how that process would work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Gaming Licences

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier likes to pretend that the Jaber influence peddling case is somehow in the past. However, Mr. Jaber served as chair of the Alberta Gaming Commission until June 30, 1995, more than two and a half years after the Premier took office. The time period in which Mr. Jaber was chair was a period of unprecedented gambling expansion in Alberta. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the former chairman of the Alberta Gaming Commission has been convicted of influence peddling, has the government taken steps to investigate whether decisions of the Alberta Gaming Commission taken during the tenure of the former chairman, which involved millions and millions of dollars, were free from inappropriate and illegal influence?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there was no evidence at that time of any undue influence or any wrongdoing relative to any gambling activities in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has known since at least November of '99 that a wrongdoing had occurred, has the government investigated whether any illegal activity occurred in the awarding of hundreds of licences covering thousands of VLT machines while Mr. Jaber was chair of the Gaming Commission, and if not, why not?

MR. KLEIN: There have been no allegations of any wrongdoing relative to any gambling casino licences or VLTs or any other activity associated with gambling, Mr. Speaker. All of these applications are thoroughly reviewed by the commission, by the minister, and by the administration. We go to great lengths to make sure that any application is absolutely clean and aboveboard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: in light of what the Premier just said about the successful prosecution and conviction of Mr. Jaber, will the Premier commit to reviewing all of the records of the Alberta Gaming Commission during this time period of Mr. Jaber, that nothing else improper took place? If not, why not? We need to know this.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the offence took place in 1992, and at that time Mr. Jaber, as I understand it, was not involved with the amalgamated Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. He was associated with the Alberta Liquor Control Board.* Subsequent to that, of course, that board was amalgamated with the Gaming Commission to form the AGLC. I don't think there would be any useful purpose served in tabling that information relative to the ALCB, but if he wants it, I'm sure that he can submit a FOIP request or submit a written request for answers relative to the specific questions. But there are not rooms big enough to hold all of the documents that probably exist from the former Alberta Liquor Control Board. You know, it's been around since Prohibition anyway.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Poverty Rates

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently federal and provincial governments released a national report that outlines what governments are doing to reduce child poverty and promote parents' ability to stay in the workforce. The report shows that there are fewer children living in poverty and more parents working across Canada. Would the Minister of Human Resources and Employment confirm that this trend is the same in Alberta?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, I can. What we use as a reference in this matter would be the market basket measurement, that of course we're using as a performance measurement in the Measuring Up document as it pertains, then, to the government of Alberta. Actually, we can notify yourself, Mr. Speaker, and all members here in the House that based on that kind of analysis, Alberta has the lowest poverty rate here in the country. Fewer than 28,000 families are in the supports for independence program, and our unemployment rate, of course, remains below 5 percent.

Again some more context on this. There are 248,000 children in this province whose parents receive the federal national child benefit supplement. Nine out of 10 of these children's parents are not in our supports for independence program, indicating that a strong economy is not only good for Alberta business; it's good for Alberta working families.

MRS. JABLONSKI: This question is also for the minister of human resources. What is Alberta doing for families through the national child benefit?

MR. DUNFORD: This is an excellent example of flexible federalism, Mr. Speaker. When the federal government increases its financial support to families, this allows some savings in our SFI, supports for independence, program, and we can reinvest, then, those savings in programs that do in fact support low-income families. For families receiving supports for independence, we've increased monthly shelter allowances. As a matter of fact, last fall we increased the annual back-to-school allowance to help these families with school expenses. When our families move into the workforce, our reinvestment helps with prescription drugs, diabetic supplies, emergency ambulance service, dental and optical services. We believe that we're helping over 62,000 children this past year.

Perhaps I'd ask the Minister of Children's Services to supplement further on this particular category.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we have reinvested $30 million in families of low income with children. I'd like to point out one additional thing if I may. The low-income family in Alberta, those earning $30,000 per year with two children and a single parent, can expect through their taxes, through their health premiums, through the fuel tax, through the tobacco tax, through all of the other things they may pay, to pay the grand total of $531. The next best province in Canada is Ontario, that pays over $1,700. We do at least $1,200 better for low-income families and for children than any other province in Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of human resources: how can taxpayers be sure that national child benefit funds are really supporting families who need it?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we see the results in the children in our families. Since this program was developed between the federal government and ourselves, we've reinvested more than $30 million in these particular programs. We believe and the feedback is indicating that Alberta children are healthy and they're giving their parents a hand up and support for the world to work, that this is a proper philosophy and proper programming for this area of our population.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Energy and Utilities Board

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy tabled on April 11 in this Assembly a TransCanada Energy news release announcing new electricity generation in Grande Prairie when the project had not yet been approved by the EUB. My first question is to the Premier. When a company like TransCanada Energy is putting out press releases announcing new projects 13 days before the actual hearing at the EUB has been held, does that suggest that the EUB is seen by the Premier and such companies as a routine rubber stamp and not an independent quasi-judicial agency of the government of Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I really take offence to the preamble and the suggestion that the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is a rubber stamp. As I pointed out earlier, it is a quasi-judicial body charged with the very serious responsibility of undertaking a thorough review and investigation through public hearings and other administrative procedures to make sure that all applications for energy projects are in the best interests of the public.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the EUB indicated that it would treat TransCanada Energy correspondence dated February 21, 2001, as a request for review and variance of decision 2001-13, dated February 19, regarding location-based credits, should not formal approval be granted by the EUB before projects are announced?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the details of how the AEUB rendered its decision, frankly I have to admit that I'm not privy to those particular details. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy is, and if he can shed some more light on this matter, I'll have him respond.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, the announcement or the tabling of the TransCanada proposal and the cogeneration project was just that. I don't believe that in my memory that proposal mentioned anything about offset credits or whether the EUB would be awarding through the transmission administrator a fair and open competitive process to grant location credits, that in fact that was mentioned at all in the press release.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: in light of this announcement 13 days prior to the EUB hearings, how can the citizens of Edmonton now have confidence in the decision of the EUB to allow the Rosedale power plant to expand in the heart of the city?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I was just through that relative to the Rosedale plant. I understand that this application was made some two years ago, and since then there has been a thorough investigation not only by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board but certainly by the Department of Energy, the Department of Environment, the Department of Community Development, and all the ministers involved. It culminated in a hearing, of course, before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has rendered its decision with a number of very strict conditions relative to the impacts to air and water quality and relative to noise and relative to all the cultural and heritage components of the project. As I understand it, it's now up to Alberta Environment to further approve the project and set conditions for the expansion to ensure that all components and all aspects of the environment are protected.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Nonconforming Secondary Suites

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Homelessness and the lack of affordable housing is an issue of concern to many and is often accompanied by demands for more government money for projects. Critics like myself, however, believe that one of the main reasons for the lack of affordable housing is overly restrictive building codes and municipal land zoning policies, possibly driven by exclusionary attitudes hiding in a cloak of safety and other concerns, policies which may be making it too regulated, too prohibitive, and too costly for average or senior citizens to be able to build low-cost, affordable, and legal secondary suites in their own homes. My question to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is: considering anecdotal evidence that thousands of people may be living in so-called illegal suites and therefore estimating that there may be, in fact, a large number of nonconforming suites in existence, has a comprehensive review been done recently or a study of the reasons why homeowners might not be complying with the regulatory requirements? Has such a study been done recently?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, under the Municipal Government Act municipalities have the authority to allow secondary suites, or, the term we all know, basement suites, keeping in mind, though, that the affordability in our province is very important to housing. But I want to assure the members of this Assembly that we want to strike the right balance between what is safe, what is affordable, and what is unrestrictive. Presently that mandate of the compliance and the monitoring of the building codes is done by municipalities and done very well within this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: could a new review of building codes be considered to review regulatory requirements and standards that may be creating unnecessary or overly costly barriers to citizens wishing to build legal secondary suites in their own houses?

2:10

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes. In fact, the Safety Codes Council, who I met with just today at lunch, is reviewing this very issue, and I'm looking forward to their recommendation, specifically, again, keeping the balance between what's safe, what's affordable, and also what is unrestrictive pertaining to housing.

MR. LORD: Mr. Speaker, my second supplementary is to the hon. Minister of Seniors. When discussing the issues of house-rich, cash-poor or maybe just lonely senior citizens being able to stay in their own homes, would it be desirable to foster secondary suite formation as one of the win/win solutions?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion it is desirable to encourage secondary suite formations, especially with respect to seniors. It does give them an opportunity for additional income, it also gives them an opportunity for companionship, and it provides a home to those who need it.

Just as an example, Mr. Speaker, my ministry supports the Society for the Retired and Semi-Retired here in Edmonton, who have a home-sharing program currently in progress. How this basically works is that the society promotes affordable housing alternatives where two or more people can share a facility if one of the people is 55 or older. We support this program through the ministry to the extent of some $43,000 per year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Lesser Slave Lake Water Diversion

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Stream flow volumes for many of the important rivers in our province are forecast to be at much below average this summer. Across the province people are already asking where the water will come from if traditional sources are running too low. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. What is the status of the application by the municipal district of Lesser Slave Lake to draw 65 million cubic metres, or two and a half inches, of water off Lesser Slave Lake for industrial use?

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you for that question. I can say that we do have guidelines in place. People have to be licensed for their water supply, and without licences they cannot draw water. In terms of licensing, I would point out to the member that it's the first one on in historical precedence that is on, and it's the last one on that will be removed first. So in regards to this particular case in Lesser Slave, I'm not familiar with that particular case, but I will get the information and provide it to the member.

MS CARLSON: Well, the fee is only $7,800 to remove two and a half inches off the top of that lake.

Will the minister table any studies or reports that his department has about the long-term viability of such massive water diversion projects on this lake?

DR. TAYLOR: Absolutely. Before any water diversion can occur, Mr. Speaker, there has to be a complete study of what the total effect of that diversion will be on that water body, whether that's Lesser Slave Lake or any other lake, and as I say, I will provide that information to the member.

MS CARLSON: That's not what happened when they did this last year.

Do Albertans have any opportunity to appeal this application which is a water diversion that is more than 100 times the annual amount used by the towns of High Prairie and Slave Lake together?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Water licences can be appealed to the Environmental Appeal Board. If somebody is not happy with the granting of a particular water licence to anywhere or anybody or any industry in this province, it can be appealed to the Environmental Appeal Board, and then there will be a complete hearing, a public hearing, a public appeal process that occurs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Schoolyard Cleanup

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's come to my attention that schools are involved in cleaning up the schoolyards. It's an old practice, and it's kind of a tradition. However, there have been cases where there have been things in the schoolyard. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Does the government mandate this activity?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No, the government does not mandate this activity. What happens is a lot of schools and school boards undertake this activity with the students as a form of community service, so it is up to the individual schools.

MR. MASYK: My second question is to the same minister. Since there could be items in schoolyards that are a risk to children, condoms and needles, what policies does the government have in place to ensure children's safety?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you. Well, Mr. Speaker, any policies that are related to school cleanups are policies of the particular school boards, but I would encourage the school boards to ensure that there are not such things as needles and condoms and issues like that. Some schools, for example in the inner city of Edmonton, have janitors go out first and take a look around the schools and ensure that there are no condoms and needles, in particular, so the children could be jeopardized, and then the cleanup is allowed to continue.

This is a very important issue, Mr. Speaker, and I would certainly encourage all school boards to do this as we do not want a student obviously to be exposed to needles or condoms.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. When students are cleaning up the schoolyards, they could get pricked by a needle or pick up condoms. Could the minister tell us what health risks the children who are picking up these materials such as condoms and needles can incur?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I should say first of all that I think the intentions of schools are good in this regard, but there are a number of precautions that should be taken if children are to participate in this kind of activity. The public health nurses from the Capital health authority are working with schools to ensure that children are safe when they are participating in these school cleanups.

Nurses advise the school to have children contact an adult if they do find condoms or needles or other dangerous materials. They also provide written handouts to children on the type of protective clothing that they should wear and the types of precautions that they should take while participating in a cleanup. Children should be told to get an adult to pick up needles. Adults should also of course take precautions to use proper gloves or tongs in picking up such materials. They should also make sure, for example in the case of needles, that they are disposed of in a container that is puncture resistant so that the people who are handling the waste and taking it away from the school are also protected from such danger.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Underground Petroleum Storage Tanks

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Underground petroleum storage tanks have the potential to cause contamination of drinking water supplies, adverse health impacts on people on or near the site, and can be a fire hazard or cause other safety concerns. On Monday the Minister of Municipal Affairs confirmed that cleaning up these tanks is a top priority and a very important issue, but Albertans need information, not confirmation of the problem. My questions today are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Will the minister table any studies or reports that his department has about the effects of the estimated 5,200 leaking petroleum storage tanks on Alberta's drinking water supplies?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say and assure this House that the program is working on a priority basis in dealing with remediation. It's working very well, and the $80 million that was put in our budget to deal with this is something that we heard when we were talking to Albertans. I am quite prepared to deliver to this House information pertaining to the remediation work and the good work of environmental people.

MR. BONNER: Also to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister release a list of the locations of all the tanks identified to date and the planned date of remediation?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the information in front of me pertaining to the sites, but I do know that our officials are working very closely. In fact, it is my understanding at this time that we are still receiving applications, based on the work, of Albertans who are saying: we require help. That is the intention of the $80 million in remediation work.

MR. BONNER: Then, Mr. Speaker, will the minister table a copy of the proposal and program design for tank remediation that was submitted by the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta to the government?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work very closely with many stakeholders, and the information that we collect we believe is very important in this remediation plan. We're going to continue to work with those stakeholders towards this case so that the $80 million is on a priority basis and that it's dealing with the remediation so that we protect the environment, which is the number one commitment of our government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is to the Deputy Premier. During the tenure of Mr. Jaber as chairman of the Alberta Gaming Commission major developments occurred in the gambling industry in Alberta. Mr. Jaber's term as chairman began immediately following the commission of the offences for which he has since been convicted. How many casino licences were awarded during Mr. Jaber's tenure as chairman, and what is the value of them in subsequent profits to those who received the licences?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. I will defer to the Minister of Gaming, who I am sure would more appropriately have that information at hand than I would.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That particular question calls for a great deal of detail, which obviously is not before me today. I'll take the question under advisement and report in due course.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How many VLTs were licensed during Mr. Jaber's tenure as chairman of the Alberta Gaming Commission, and how many licensees does it involve? What profits were produced by these VLTs to the people who received the licences?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, if the question is directed at me, I would say on observation of the first question and this one that these questions might be more appropriate through a request for written questions or motions for returns rather than taking up the question time of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Deputy Premier. Given the fact that the government appointed an individual as chairman of the Alberta Gaming Commission who has been convicted of criminal offences which occurred at approximately the same time as his appointment as chairman, why does the government continue to stonewall demands that his activities should be investigated while he was chairman of a commission which makes decisions worth millions of dollars to those who were given licences? Why should it not be investigated?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I think that this item has been dealt with in many questions over the last week. I believe that it has been made very clear that all requests for information from this government, from ministers of the Crown – all the information that has been requested has been provided. However, to ensure that the hon. member understands this, one more time I'll ask the Minister of Justice and Attorney General to answer more fully.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated numerous times in this House, we have a criminal justice system in this province that works. No one is above the law. Everyone who commits a criminal offence, if there's information available about that – it's investigated, it's brought forward, charges are laid, and the person is prosecuted. That's what happened in this case.

I would assume and I think any hon. member of this House and the members of the public in Alberta are entitled to assume that if the investigating police force, in this case the RCMP, had any indication, any evidence, any suggestion of wrongdoing that went beyond the individual information that they have in this case, they would be pursuing that investigation and they would be bringing forward subsequent information to the prosecutors for charges to be laid. I assume that that would happen.

It is not appropriate, Mr. Speaker, for one to jump off a charge of this nature and to assume that one should then have public inquiries and investigations into a wide band of things. If there is any evidence to suggest that anything further should be done, then in fact we would be more than happy to make sure that that is done. No one is above the law in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Young Offenders

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable concern voiced by school boards, school administrators, teachers, and parents about an element of the new federal Youth Criminal Justice Act. The act allows for but does not require that information about young offenders be shared with school boards. There is some concern that because this information sharing will not be mandatory, both students and teachers may be put at risk. My first question is to the Solicitor General. What is the government of Alberta's position on the information-sharing provisions of the Youth Criminal Justice Act?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, providing our children with a safe learning environment is the government's top priority. We think it's important for schools to be given the information they need about young offenders when there is a real or even potential threat to the safety of other students or teachers. Officials from my department have been in contact with senior officials of the Canadian School Boards Association and the Alberta School Boards Association to discuss proposed changes to clause 125 of Bill C-3.

We support changes that require Justice officials to disclose information regarding young offenders to school boards in order to ensure the safety of staff and students and to facilitate rehabilitation of the young person. We feel this is a commonsense policy, and I have written a letter to Justice Minister Anne McLellan regarding this issue.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Solicitor General. What is currently the policy within the Alberta Solicitor General's office on notification of schools where a young offender may be in attendance?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta we've had procedures in place since 1996 to manage the sharing of information about students with young offender status in the school system. Since September of 2000 my staff have been required to notify school boards of any young offenders under their supervision who commit category 1 offences. Category 1 offences include violent crimes, drug trafficking, sex offences, and other serious offences that could pose a threat to other students and school staff. We feel the exchange of information about young offenders is necessary to ensure the safety of students, staff, and other people involved with the school.

In cases where a youth is under the supervision of the department and a serious violent offender is involved, the department requires that designated school officials be advised, without exception.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the Solicitor General: are there any other initiatives under way that might help prevent youth in our schools from committing violent crimes?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Solicitor General and Alberta Learning have created a joint committee that will explore opportunities to share information. The mandate of that committee goes beyond Justice and Learning issues.

Mr. Speaker, I'll have the Minister of Learning supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Safety in schools has been a prime issue for our department over the past several years. We have launched the initiative called the Safe and Caring Schools initiative, which is something that has met almost universally with a great amount of success. We have a conference every year. We ensure; we monitor. Very briefly, safety in the schools is of prime and utmost importance to us, and we will ensure it happens.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Electricity Prices

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 13, 2000, just a few months ago, the chief economist of the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters made a report to the Alberta business forum on power supply and demand at the Shaw Conference Centre here in Edmonton. The report found that electricity deregulation had led to Alberta's electricity prices climbing from among the lowest in North America to near the highest. The association argued that this was adding significantly to the cost of manufacturing in Alberta and could cost Alberta up to 31,000 jobs lost in manufacturing alone. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Given that this report comes from the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters, presumably an organization he will be very interested in, has the minister reviewed the report?

MR. NORRIS: In a very simple answer, Mr. Speaker, I haven't. But I would like to point out that Alberta is an industry leader with this deregulation movement and that when supply comes onstream, not only will our costs be the lowest in Canada, but our supply will be the envy of the nation.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, has the minister prepared a specific response to this report?

MR. NORRIS: Again, Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen it, but I'd be delighted to. Again, supply is what we're going after. We're going to have a more bountiful supply than anywhere else in Canada. Supply equals industry growth. Industry growth equals jobs. Alberta is the place to be.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering: can the minister name any jurisdiction in Canada where the delivered cost of electricity to small manufacturers is higher than Alberta?

MR. NORRIS: I'm sorry; I didn't hear the question.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, can the minister name any jurisdiction in Canada where the delivered cost of electricity to small manufacturers is higher than in Alberta?

MR. NORRIS: I'll take that under advisement and get you an answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Government Centre Security

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When people come up to the building here, to the Leg. Annex, and the grounds, they expect to be able to come here with some sense of security and safety. It seems that last week there was some discussion about the use by the government of surveillance cameras and whether it was an intrusion on people's privacy and those kinds of issues. I think we have to hearken back to last spring and whether or not we want to see some damage to publicly owned buildings. My questions today are to the Solicitor General. The first one: is the Solicitor General going to change a policy that currently allows for surveillance cameras to be used within and outside these buildings?

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, thank you. We will not do anything to lessen security in the Legislature Building and on the grounds. If anyone has a question about the need for the security measures, they only have to look at the bullet hole by the elevator on the ground floor. These security measures were increased after a man with a gun walked into the Legislature Building intending to harm someone. Security cameras are here for the protection of the people who work in this building, the school groups that visit, and other members of the public who visit and conduct business in the public building.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Member for Little Bow that these guidelines recently introduced regarding the use of security cameras are just that: guidelines. They're not the law. We're carefully examining these new guidelines. A committee has been established with representatives from security operations and from Alberta Infrastructure. The committee is developing a strategy for complying with the guidelines. The Information and Privacy Commissioner will be consulted before it's in place. It appears that guidelines will be satisfied by simply placing signs around the perimeter of the Government Centre indicating that the area is under security camera surveillance.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For those that seem to want to protect the criminal or the vandal, is a camera more intrusive than four or five live security guards doing the same thing? Yes or no?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, this sounds like an opinion.

MRS. FORSYTH: The cameras are less intrusive. All of the cameras with the exception of one are in full view of anyone on the premises. They are large cameras mounted on brackets. The only camera not in public view is in a private office area. Security staff have the ability to monitor the cameras 24 hours a day. It would take a small army of security officers to cover all the areas the cameras cover.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister assure our public that come here and our school groups especially that there will be no reduction in the surveillance that's available here right now?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, for the public record, we intend to continue to use the security cameras to ensure the safety of those who work in and those who visit the building. The Privacy Commissioner quite rightly raises privacy issues. However, there are also security and public safety issues to be considered. All of the cameras are in public areas. People do not have the same expectation of privacy when they are out in a public area that they have when they are in the house. This building will remain a safe place for all those who work and visit here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Electricity Transmission Line Capacity

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been noted by a newspaper in southern Alberta that electricity transmission lines from Pincher Creek wind-powered generation plants are inadequate to carry the full capacity of generated power from these sites. Also, there are many new wind-powered generation plants that are being considered in the area that will put further stress on the existing transmission capacity. My question for the Minister of Energy: is there anything the government of Alberta can do to assist increasing the transmission capacity of these lines?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact the Alberta government has contributed by putting forth a competitive market model that allows the risk of new generation to be taken by the private sector and to recognize that transmission is a very important part of the electricity equation. The government will not put further money into transmission. That money comes through a process of the transmission administrator. The transmission administrator will act as a financial clearinghouse for transmission services to the generators. It sets provincewide tariffs for system access. It interacts with the Power Pool on these issues.

Where we find that there is new, important generation that does not add to any greenhouse gas, such as the great windmill potential that sits in southern Alberta, the wind generation – the transmission administrator is reviewing plans now, to my understanding, and is drawing up proposals that allow for the adequate transmission of new power so that the marketplace generator can take advantage of these market opportunities. For example, with the TransCanada announcement that was referred to in the House and dealt with transmission and offset credits, everything was pending regulatory approval, Mr. Speaker.

So, in fact, the process is that the transmission administrator calls for proposals. They take the winning proposals, which is a competitive process that is open, and then go to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and ask for approval to be granted additional transmission capacity.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the same minister: can the government of Alberta do anything to see that power generated at these sites is not wasted by incorporating new possible available technology?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's been clear in the answers both today and in previous times that the real key to putting further downward pressure on prices is new generation and new generation that's delivered to the marketplace with as little as possible power loss through the transmission lines. That's one of the reasons that we have offset credits: the ability for us to facilitate new generation through a competitive, market-based model, generation that puts Alberta ahead of the curve, generation that has now come into place even since a report, for example, from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that talked about the loss of some 31,000 jobs. That never materialized. Why did it not materialize? Because there's been new generation added. Power prices have dropped 40 percent since the issuance of that report. There's more going on here than there is in the rest of Canada. We're ahead of the curve.

THE SPEAKER: Before the Clerk deals with the next matter that we have in our Routine today, hon. members, I'm going to call on the Government House Leader for clarification of a point. I did this the other day when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked for such an opportunity. I'm doing it as well today.

The hon. Government House Leader for clarification.

Gaming Licences

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in question period, I think with respect to a question from the leader of the third party, the Premier in response indicated that Mr. Jaber was a member of the ALCB. That was clearly incorrect. I think it was cleared up in terms of subsequent questions and answers, but the Premier asked that I clarify for the record that it was the Alberta Gaming Commission, not the ALCB, that he was a member of.*

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Leighann Doan

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday night Calgary's Jack Singer hall was packed for the ninth annual Howard Mackie awards to honour the excellent quality of Canada's university athletes. These awards also bring financial support from the corporate sector in the form of postgraduate scholarships to Canada's top male and female university athletes.

Mr. Speaker, we should all be proud that Leighann Doan from the University of Calgary was selected as the Canadian female athlete of the year. Leighann started her basketball career in Stettler and went on to tremendous accomplishments with the U of C Dinos: four times all Canadian, best CIAU player, and best Calgary athlete of the year to name just a few of her achievements. Leighann's coach and teammates also recognized her as leader and role model both on and off the court.

We all wish Leighann well with her personal and professional goals, which include playing for Canada in future Olympics. This outstanding athlete is an inspiration and role model not only to younger athletes coming up through the ranks but indeed to us all.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Nursing Week

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to acknowledge nursing awareness week and reflect on the essential role of nurses in the Alberta health care system. Nursing is among the most challenging jobs in health care. Nurses carry the daily load of patient care and feel the weight of the pressures that challenge our health care system. Nursing combines community service with the science of health as nurses offer counseling, education, wellness promotion, and patient care. Each of us, I'm sure, has personally experienced the cheerfulness and care a special nurse has provided to us or given to a loved one in a time of illness or injury.

Because nurses are so valued, this government continues to do what it can so that nurses that are already here, those looking at Alberta, and young people considering a nursing career can all share in the Alberta advantage. As our government works towards sustaining our health care system for the years to come, I am assured that nurses will continue to be part of that system and part of the solution. I ask all members of this House to join in thanking Alberta's nurses for their commitment to patient care and to our health care system.

2:40 St. Albert Public Library

MRS. O'NEILL: I am particularly proud of St. Albert Public Library, and today I'd like to recognize several of their services. Library users in St. Albert borrowed over 675,000 books and other items last year. We have a collection in our library of over 137,000 books, including 3,000 books in French, plus we have 8,000 items in audiovisual formats, books in larger print for the visually handicapped, interlibrary loan service, and access through the provincial consortium to a collection of books in over 30 languages. We have 250 magazines and newspapers in print format and several hundred additional magazine titles in electronic form. We also have nine Internet stations for public use, and we have a membership in The Alberta Library, which permits our members to borrow from libraries across the province: public, university, college, and special libraries. We also have programs for children and for seniors and especially those to train them in computer usage.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Foremost Municipal Library

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize this year's recipient of the creative public library service award, the Foremost Municipal Library. The award was presented to the Foremost Municipal Library for its innovative pumpkin festival, a celebration of families and community. Many events are tied to this annual festival, including silent and live auctions of items donated by local businesses, as well as the traditional pumpkin carving contest and much more. This event, which has been in existence for the past 12 years, is a clear demonstration that libraries are vibrant centres of the communities they serve, places where individuals and families gather, find information, and are inspired to learn.

I join my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat in congratulating the Foremost Municipal Library on receiving this award recently presented to them in Jasper by the Minister of Community Development. I encourage all Albertans to visit their local libraries and discover the latest developments in technology and new services offered to their communities. Congratulations, Foremost.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Battalion Park Elementary School

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday, May 3, I was very honoured to participate in the grand opening of Battalion Park elementary school, a public minischool with 149 students living in the Signal Hill and Richmond Hill communities and located in my constituency of Calgary-West. Although it has only been 10 months since the sod turning and arrival of 10 relocatable classrooms, Battalion Park has swiftly become an integral part of a thriving community hub including rinks, a functional storage shed unit, and a soon to be built playground built through community fund-raising efforts and the provincial government facility enhancement program.

Most important, Mr. Speaker, was the evident pride and happiness of the students, who in their Battalion Bears T-shirts enthusiastically sang their theme song, The Battalion Park Bears, for the many dignitaries and parents crowded into the narrow hallway and down around the corner.

Heartiest congratulations go to the principal, Carol Murray, and her staff and to the 40-member devoted school council parents for achieving so much for the young people of these communities.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton Downtown Development Corporation

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the honour of attending the ceremony for the Downtown Development Corporation awards for 2000. This fine organization was formed as a result of a 1984 report, the Mayor's Task Force on the Heart of the City, chaired by Joe Shoctor. Mr. Shoctor chaired the DDC until 1990. The Downtown Development Corporation has a mandate with its unique public/private partnership to lead the way in the developing of a vibrant downtown for the benefit of all citizens.

The award recipients recognized yesterday for projects which contributed to the vitality of downtown were DECA, the Downtown Edmonton Community Association, the Empire Building renovation, the new MacCosham lofts, and Telus Plaza redevelopment. I'd also like to recognize the following nominees: Chance Restaurant, Churchill Exchange Building, Fifth Street Lofts, and the TD Waterhouse call centre. Our thanks to each of you for making downtown Edmonton a better place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Jack McMoran

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an outstanding Albertan. Last month at the United Way annual labour appreciation night Mr. Jack McMoran was presented the Jim Shewchuk award in recognition of his outstanding contributions to union life, the community, and the United Way. Many organizations have been recipients of Jack's hard work and dedication to his community. The Edmonton and District Labour Council, the United Way, and the leukemia society of Canada have all benefited from Jack's skill in organizing people around causes and never giving up until the job is done and done well.

Those acquainted with Jack always make mention of the tremendous energy he brings to whatever project he is involved with. Jack will be retiring at the end of this year from his employment with UFCW local 401. There's no doubt in my mind that for Jack retirement will mean more time to dedicate to his passion, which is helping the unemployed and the underprivileged.

Congratulations, Jack McMoran, and kudos to the United Way for their choice of a most worthy recipient of the Jim Shewchuk award.

THE SPEAKER: The Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order
Oral Question Period Rules

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands asked questions of a nature which I believe violates rules 408 and 409 with respect to oral questions. The type of information which was requested goes far beyond the nature of question period.

I only rise on this point of order because it should not be the purpose of question period and should not be a member's opportunity in question period to ask questions of such a specific nature, of such specific information that one could not possibly have the answer at hand or the ability to answer the question. In other words, a question being asked should be a question capable of being answered by a minister within their capacity and general knowledge of their department. It's totally unrealistic to expect that a minister would be able to answer a question about the specific number, for example, of licences issued during a period of time or the specific value of licences issued at a particular period of time. That, Mr. Speaker, is precisely the purpose for written questions and motions for returns, which have their places on the Order Paper.

I would refer to the House of Commons Procedure and Practice book, which you so graciously provided to House leaders earlier and, in particular, page 438 of that book, which outlines the purposes of written questions and the process and guidelines for written questions there.

My purpose for rising today, Mr. Speaker, is to ask you to indicate to the House and to rule on this situation that it is not appropriate to try and embarrass or to try and ask questions to set up a further question if those questions ask for such detailed information that a person could not possibly have that information for the House at that particular time.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, did you want to participate in this point of order?

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if I'm allowed to take a point of order under advisement. That is reserved for the cabinet, I suppose.

I would say that I certainly accepted the undertakings of the minister to provide that to me later, and I certainly had no intention of embarrassing the government in respect of not knowing those particular points. Other points of embarrassment remain to be seen. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair invites any other participation from hon. members with respect to this point of order, but the bottom line is that the hon. Government House Leader very correctly raised the point of order at the time, dealt with it in Beauchesne 408, and I would like to read it into the record again. It basically advises and cautions hon. members and provides them with some guidance with respect to asking of oral questions.

- (1) Such questions should:
  - (a) be asked only in respect of matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer.
  - (b) not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct.
  - (c) not require an answer involving a legal opinion.
  - (d) not be asked in respect of a matter that is sub judice.
  - (e) not be of a nature requiring a lengthy and detailed answer.
  - (f) not raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with as an answer to a question.
- (2) Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate.

Of course, there's other very, very good reading that hon. members would want to pay special attention to.

The difficulty that the chair has in dealing with this, an intervention in that type of question, is that the chair always is amazed at the ability of certain people in this Assembly to respond to very, very specific questions when they're confronted with such a question and in recent days has noticed with a great deal of personal satisfaction and, shall one say, with almost admiration the way certain ministers may respond to specific questions given to them by having all kinds of specific information available at their fingertips. So today was a situation where a very detailed question was asked, no doubt at all about that, and the chair did stir and wasn't sure if in fact the minister would or would not have the answer. If all hon. members would like to review the questions in the question period of the last 12 or 13 days, the members will see that the chair is correct in his observations. Some very specific questions have been asked to various ministers, and they had the ability to respond very specifically to those questions. So one is never sure when one should intervene or one should not intervene.

However, the point made by the hon. Government House Leader is a very valid one, because in this case the chair absolutely believes that the questions were of a very, very detailed nature, much beyond what would ordinarily be the scope of an ordinary human being to be able to comprehend: the specific number of licences given seven, eight, nine years ago.

So today is unique. Today is unique. Oftentimes it's not a requirement that the chair would dole out a punishment to an hon. member who is found guilty on a point of order, but today is the first time in this session that the House will have the experience of dealing with the resolution of written questions and motions for returns. This hasn't happened yet in this Assembly, so the chair would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to remain in the Assembly for the remainder of the afternoon as the Assembly deals with the disposition of these written questions and these motions for returns to actually get the experience of the milieu with respect to specific questions. It's a positive learning experience and a positive learning environment.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Always a pleasure listening to your rulings, always something to learn.

Proper notice having been given yesterday, it is indeed my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1 and 2.

[Motion carried]

Solid Waste Costs

- Q1. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.
 What is the average cost per tonne for treating solid wastes at the Swan Hills waste treatment centre?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to accept this written question with some amendments. Those amendments would be that we need to add the word "projected" after "average cost," and the second change needs to be by striking out "solid."

Mr. Speaker, as you know, we are always very anxious to provide as much information as possible, and we want to make sure that it's absolutely accurate. Before the hon. member gets excited about the amendments, I think it would be very important that we elaborate on why it is necessary to do this so that we do get that proper information out there.

A little bit of history about the Swan Hills special waste treatment plant. The government did sell it, and it was operated by Bovar Inc. for some time, but last December 31 it was given back to the province, so we have had an operator in the facility operating as a contract operator since that time.

Now, with the question the way it was written asking for the specific cost, I think it could be very misleading when we only have four months of winter operation to go by. That's why we want to put in "projected" so that in fact we can give the information that we used as we were looking at the budget.

There are a few other things that are fairly important. The budget that we put together is based on an estimate of the costs for the whole year, and when you establish that, you also have to put in some projected volumes in order to figure out what the total budget would be. The reason that we have to strike out "solid" is because we did not differentiate between the solid and the liquid wastes that were being treated at that plant, but I think it's also important to point out that there are many factors that come into the cost of incinerating various materials at the plant. For example, the liquid might not contain much heat. It may be a chlorinate type of content. It may require secondary and tertiary treatment, so those kinds of things come into it.

The operational costs, of course, too are going to vary with the cost of energy, with the cost of labour, with the chemicals, with the maintenance of the plant. There are a whole number of factors that come in, and of course the volume that comes to the plant, because there are some fixed costs that are there. So if you get the mass, you can in fact treat the waste at a lesser cost per unit.

So, Mr. Speaker, we will accept the question as amended, and then the question would read: "What is the projected average cost per tonne for treating wastes at the Swan Hills waste treatment centre?"

THE SPEAKER: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hate to disappoint the member, but I wasn't excited by his answer, but perhaps the next one. [interjection] Yes, I know he's crushed; I know.

Projected cost is generally a cost in the future, and it's just interesting to me that the government wants to look at the future costs of this rather than the average cost. Usually when you're looking for an average of something, you would add up the total costs involved and the total of what was produced or the number of units produced or the tonnage of the waste that goes through. You divide the two into each other, and then you have an average cost per tonne. So it's just interesting to me that the government wants to do it in a projected way, but on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie we'll accept that.

I'm less pleased about removing the word "solid" from Written Question 1, because, obviously, if you examine the two questions put forward today, the first was a question on solid waste, and the second was a question on liquid waste, and by removing the "solid" from it, it's removed the specificity of the question. However, we are interested in getting the information, and therefore in anticipation of the detailed response, I will accept the amendment as put forward by the hon. minister.

[Written Question 1 as amended carried]

Liquid Waste Costs

- Q2. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.
What is the average cost per tonne for treating liquid wastes at the Swan Hills waste treatment centre?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, we will reject this question because it is redundant.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

3:00

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes, sir, to close the debate. Well, as I mentioned earlier, I am disappointed because this has watered down, so to speak, these two questions, one of which was seeking information on solid waste and one which was seeking information on liquid waste being treated at the Swan Hills plant. It muddies the water, so to speak. But the first question has been accepted, and we're looking forward to receiving the information. I'll express my disappointment on not receiving the information on the two separate questions. The purpose of these written questions, as the Speaker pointed out, is to get detailed information from the government. I'm always disappointed when we can't convince the government that it's in the best interests of Albertans to be open and transparent and to release information.

Having said that, I will resume my seat. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 2 lost]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to now move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

[Motion carried]

Power Purchase Agreements

- M1. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies and reports prepared by or for the ministries of Energy and/or Sustainable Resource Development or sent to the ministries of Energy and/or Sustainable Resource Development for the period April 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001, regarding options under the market achievement plan (MAP) for dealing with unsold power purchase agreements (PPAs) held by the balancing pool.

MS BLAKEMAN: It's always important for us to be seeking additional information to clarify the activities of the government, and I would ask that this motion for a return be accepted.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we feel that absolute transparency and the ability to clarify is something that is very important. In September of 2000 the Department of Energy did post a discussion paper entitled Market Achievement Plan on the Internet discussion forum. That primary document set out the options for dealing with the balancing pool held power purchase agreements, or the PPAs.

In October 2000 a balancing pool advisory group was formed to provide advice to the balancing pool administration and the government on implementing the market achievement plan. The balancing pool advisory group, Mr. Speaker, was made up of balancing pool and department staff, consumer representatives, market participant representatives, i.e. PPA holders, and consultants – seems that you always need a consultant in this business – retained by the balancing pool to provide expert advice on options and implementation of the market achievement plan. Documents related to the process and implementation of the market achievement plan were updated and then posted on a regular basis on both the department and the Power Pool of Alberta web site.

I must recommend the Power Pool of Alberta web site. It's quite a good one. It details a great amount of information both in today's world and in market information running up to the new competitive market model that sits in place in Alberta today. There is a forum there where you can register for your own stakeholder comments. Of course, this does indicate that the method is totally transparent, and there is great clarification. Simply by dialing into www.power-pool.ab.ca the opposition, the seven Liberal members, can spend a great deal of time going through that. I would recommend they do so, and in fact because of that I would be recommending rejection, Mr. Speaker, of this motion for a return.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take it then – and I'm sure the minister has an opportunity to correct me if I'm mistaken in some way – that all studies and all reports around the matters detailed here are posted on the web site. If that is the case, then we are delighted that all studies and all reports mentioned under this motion for a return are indeed posted on the web site. Given that, I will have to accept the minister's refusal to provide the documents. I understand, then, that everything is to be on the web site and readily available to everyone. We will seek that to ensure that all the ones that we're aware of in fact are there.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 1 lost]

Royalty Tax Credit Program

M2. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies and reports prepared by or for the ministries of Energy and/or Sustainable Resource Development and Alberta Treasury and/or Finance and/or Revenue for the period January 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001, reviewing the operation of the Alberta royalty tax credit (ARTC).

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I did detect from the hon. member in her response to the original Motion for a Return 1 that there might indeed be a dash, if ever so little, of skepticism on our ability to co-operate and deal fair and square with the opposition. In hopes of being able to promote that feeling and to be able to generate a feeling of co-operation in the interests of taxpayers and all citizens of Alberta, I am pleased to accept Motion for a Return 2.

MS BLAKEMAN: Excellent. I'm pleased to see the Minister of Energy setting such a prime example for his colleagues.

[Motion for a Return 2 carried]

Electricity Deregulation

M3. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies and reports prepared by or for the ministries of Energy and/or Sustainable Resource Development or sent to the ministries of Energy and/or Sustainable Resource Development for the period April 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001, evaluating the impact of electricity deregulation on the utility bills of various classes of Alberta consumers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. There are many, many variables to consider when comparing prices in a deregulated market to those of a regulated market. We have, in fact, a new competitive market model structure out there where we've seen prices drop some 43 percent in a very short period. We're seeing a market unfold. We're seeing competition starting to move in other areas, and there are some areas where some competition needs a hand. As the market develops, Mr. Speaker, there is downward pressure on prices.

There have been no specific studies on the impact of deregulation, as it was called then, on utility bills. There are numerous factors, of course, other than deregulation that impact electricity bills. As we know, there's a terrific tie-in with gas prices. As one member so pointedly raised in question period two days ago, there are times when there are power-generating devices that are out of operation, hopefully due to mechanical means. Water levels: we're worried about the snowpack and the amount of water that's available to generate hydroelectric power.

Of course, we've all seen the Alberta advantage at work throughout this period, where there have been increased jobs, increased business formations. We've seen a tremendous amount of profits being generated in both small business and in our oil and gas sector.

Rates, of course, can be compared between 2000 and 2001, and it's no secret that not only have electricity prices increased here in Alberta, but they've increased virtually continentwide. If you were to look at some of the run-up narrative to the impending energy plan coming forth from President Bush and Vice-president Cheney, you would know, Mr. Speaker, that there's virtually an infrastructure, transmission, and electricity generation crisis looming over all of us in North America. So it's very difficult to say that increased rates would solely be the result of one small event. There are a number of other considerations.

I know that the member was getting very eager, was responding to us in this new environment, and thought that this might be an example of a colleague – so I just want, in order to temper that response, Mr. Speaker, to reject MR 3.

Thank you.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I am so disappointed. It was going so well. Further than that, I have to say that I am, well, shocked and appalled that there would have been no studies or reports or cost-benefit analysis evaluating the impact of electricity on Alberta consumers in that entire period of time. That is a truly frightening thought, especially since, as the minister is well aware, I have so many consumers of electricity living in high-rise condominiums and apartments in my riding who are very interested in the effect on these different classes of Alberta consumers.

I am very disappointed to hear that the government has not been monitoring and evaluating the progress of the impact of the electricity deregulation on these utility bills. But, you know, the government has the ability to be open and transparent, and if they're not going to be open and transparent, I will have to accept that.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 3 lost]

Centre for Frontier Engineering Research

M4. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of annual and interim financial statement analyses prepared by or for the ministries of Treasury and/or Finance and/or Revenue for the period January 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001, as set out under sections 5.2 and 5.3 of the loans and guarantees procedures manual pertaining to financial assistance provided by the government to the Centre for Frontier Engineering Research.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance I would like to stand and reject the motion as put forward on the basis that there was no actual analysis prepared during the period January 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001. As well, a subsidiary of the Alberta Research Council has the obligation to repay the guaranteed loan, so no analysis was considered necessary.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, I'm certainly disappointed to hear that there was no analysis prepared during the period which we are questioning and extend my sympathy to the minister that on his very first opportunity to accept a motion for a return, he was unable to do so.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 4 lost]

Treasury Branches Status

M5. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies, reports, background documents, and memoranda other than the CIBC Wood Gundy report prepared by or for the ministries of Treasury and/or Finance and/or Revenue and sent to the ministries of Treasury and/or Finance and/or Revenue for the period January 1, 1999, to April 9, 2001, assessing the feasibility of a change of status and/or privatization of the Alberta Treasury Branches.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I rise on behalf of the Minister of Finance and reject this motion on the basis that the documents on the future of the Alberta Treasury Branches contain policy advice to the minister and the government and do contain sensitive material and commercial information which if released could result in direct financial loss to the Alberta Treasury Branches and the government.

In July of 1999 the former Treasurer, Stockwell Day, announced, following a survey of Albertans that showed they were split on the future of Alberta Treasury Branches, that the government had decided that Alberta Treasury Branch would complete its three-year business plan and that the future of the Alberta Treasury Branch would be considered again in consultation with Albertans in 2002.

The executive summary of CIBC Wood Gundy report was released at the same time, July 1999, as well as information on the survey results.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Finance has received six FOIP requests on this topic from elected officials. The only information released has been the executive summary, the financial sector overview, and a partial table of contents of the Wood Gundy report. Exemption of the rest of the report from disclosure was upheld by the Information and Privacy Commissioner.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a delight to rise to speak on my first motion for a return, and I hope the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is learning from his detention.

I am concerned about the response – and I'm reflecting on discussions, if I may do so, Mr. Speaker, from this morning in the Public Accounts Committee in which it became apparent that there was no business analysis, no business case developed contrasting the accelerated pay-down of the debt versus the taking of that money and investing it. There was no business case done there. I am concerned about the statements from the minister that the future of ATB sounds like it's being determined by political poll rather than by the kind of financial and business case that we might expect from a businesslike government.

I am also concerned that given the value of ATB – it's a very large asset, I believe, for the people of Alberta – the people of Alberta, who are in effect its shareholders, are not being given access to this information. So I certainly speak out to express as a citizen and as a person with an interest in the businesslike operation of public affairs that I'm very disappointed in the minister's response.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to conclude the debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the answer of the minister certainly piqued my interest, and I'm sure that we will continue to seek information on that. It is curious that every study, every report, every background document, and every memorandum is containing policy advice to the government, and there was a second FOIP phrase that he used there. Very interesting that every single study, report, background document, and memorandum falls under that catchment.

Of course, I'm very disappointed on behalf of the minister that he's had a second opportunity to promote openness and accountability to the citizens of the province and is unable to do so.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 5 lost]

Expansion of Government's Reporting Entity

M6. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies and reports prepared by or for the ministries of Treasury and/or Finance and/or Revenue or sent to the ministries of Treasury and/or Finance and/or Revenue for the period April 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001, assessing the feasibility of expanding the government's reporting entity to include universities, colleges and technical institutes, regional health authorities, and school boards.

MR. MELCHIN: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Minister of Finance and reject this motion. Certainly there's been a lot of discussion between the government and the Auditor General over the last number of years on this specific topic. The Auditor General's office has reported in a number of years that certain entities have been inappropriately excluded from the reporting entity. For example, the Auditor General's office believes that regional health authorities, universities, colleges, and school boards should be consolidated in the financial statements of the ministries of Health and Wellness and Learning as well as in the consolidated financial statements of the province. Alberta Finance, Treasury before that, has disagreed with those statements in the past.

The proposed amendment would result in the tabling of excerpts from the Auditor General's September 29, 2000, letter and the government's January 10, 2001, response. Mr. Speaker, this government responded to a similar motion for a return in 1999, Order for a Return 117, by providing a summary paper rather than a series of individual documents. While there has been ongoing discussion between Finance and the office of the Auditor General, little has changed in our respective positions as outlined in the above paper.

I'd like to further outline, though, that there is no common practice across the country and that, actually, this issue has been referred due to the disagreement between the Auditor General's office and Treasury, now the Department of Finance – the public-sector accounting board of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants is actually dealing with and is in progress of developing some guidelines on this topic, on the criteria for inclusion or exclusion of entities in the government reporting entity, and I would suggest that it's more appropriate to wait for the conclusion of that exercise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion for a return cuts to an issue that I am concerned about. It's come up in my particular case relating to regional health authorities. The reporting to the government and through the government to the Assembly on the regional health authorities, particularly on their estimates, has been quite disappointing to me. I've contrasted them to earlier years when, for example, estimates on health care spending included detail on capital expenditures, on staff expenditures. It allowed us to decide whether there was money going towards long-term care, towards for-profit nursing homes or district nursing homes. There used to be much more detail.

I think that probably the pressure the minister is feeling from the Auditor General and through this motion for a return is intended to provide this Legislature with better information for decision-making. I need to express quite strongly my disappointment in this information not being brought to the Assembly through this motion for a return and even more greatly not being brought to this Assembly through such things as more detailed estimates.

So it is with sincere disappointment that I finish my comments here, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 6 lost]

Canada Pension Plan Reform

M7. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies and reports prepared by or for the ministries of Treasury and/or Finance and/or Revenue for the period April 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001, outlining proposals and recommendations developed by the government for reform of the Canada pension plan or options to replace the Canada pension plan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again on behalf of the Minister of Finance I reject the motion because there were no studies or reports actually prepared during the period requested. However, Finance has one study on options to replace the Canada pension plan that was completed in November of 1999, a study by Bill Robson of the C.D. Howe Institute titled Cost-effective Pensions for Albertans: The Economics of an Alberta Pension Plan, which we have provided to members of the public requesting the information. In addition, the Institute for Public Economics of the University of Alberta cosponsored with Alberta Treasury a conference in January 1999 on a separate pension plan for Alberta. The Minister of Finance is willing to provide copies of the Robson study and the report on the conference to the opposition leader if he would be interested.

We also published appendices in Budget '99 and Budget 2000 on CPP reform.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we do appreciate the comments made by the minister that there were no reports made during the period April 1, 2000, to April 9, 2001, and we would welcome his offer to provide us with other information.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 7 lost]

Treasury Branches

M8. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the full report and appendices prepared by CIBC Wood Gundy for Alberta Treasury for the period July 1, 1998, to July 31, 1999, relating to a change of status and/or privatization of the Alberta Treasury Branches.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance again I'd reject the motion for the same reasons as Motion 5 was rejected. The CIBC Wood Gundy report contains sensitive, commercial information which if released could result in direct financial loss to both Alberta Treasury Branches and the government. Furthermore I would say that the exemption of the rest of the report was upheld by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. These are topics of great sensitivity to the ongoing viability and I'd say security for all those who deal with the Alberta Treasury Branches and for such reason reject this motion.

3:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a very brief comment. Obviously, again we are disappointed. I stand to be corrected here, but I believe that CIBC is the bank of record for the provincial government, and I am very concerned about the potential for, shall we say, a failure of a proper arm's-length relationship between the bank of record for the provincial government and the people advising on the future of Alberta Treasury Branches. I would be more comfortable if there were an organization advising, assuming that such advice is going on – and I believe it is – that had no connection whatsoever to any of the chartered banks to ensure that there's a proper arm's-length relationship.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

MR. BONNER: No further additions than what were made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

[Motion for a Return 8 lost]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ridley Grain Ltd.

M9. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the annual and interim financial statement analyses prepared by Alberta Treasury as set out under sections 5.2 and 5.3 of the loans and guarantees procedures manual for the period March 31, 1999, to March 31, 2001, pertaining to the loan between the government and Ridley Grain Ltd.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise again on behalf of the Minister of Finance and reject this motion due to privacy issues. Financial analyses involving third parties cannot be released due to the confidential nature of the economic material being reviewed. In January 2001 the hon. Steve West advised the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund that the government was negotiating a possible settlement to the loan with Ridley Grain Ltd. Disclosing information at this time could compromise the negotiations.

On March 23, 2001, a response was given under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act pertaining to Ridley Grain. The financial analysis and other information was severed pursuant to section 15, "disclosure harmful to the business interests of a third party"; section 16, "disclosure harmful to personal privacy"; section 23, "advice from officials"; and section 24, "disclosure harmful to economic and other interests of a public body." For such reasons we reject this motion.

Vencap Acquisition Corporation

M10. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the annual and interim financial statement analyses prepared by Alberta Treasury as set out under sections 5.2 and 5.3 of the loans and guarantees procedures manual for the period March 31, 1999, to March 31, 2001, pertaining to the financial arrangements between the government and Vencap Acquisition Corporation.

MR. MELCHIN: Again, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance we reject this motion for similar reasons as outlined in the previous one: due to the confidential nature of the economic material reviewed.

[Motion for a Return 10 lost]

THE CLERK ASSISTANT: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. Committee of the Whole.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, we're saved. We can go now.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: You're welcome.

MR. MASON: I've enjoyed the lesson, and I assure you that I've learned my lesson and won't do it again.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 203

Residential Care Housing Committee Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to speak again to this bill in Committee of the Whole. My concerns raised while we were in second reading were around the fact that this bill essentially establishes a committee. It doesn't go any further than that. It just establishes the committee which will look at developing a set of standards covering the level of care and the type of accommodation to be provided and maintained, and the safety and security of persons in care.

It goes into detail about how the committee is formed and who is to be assigned or appointed to the committee from various ministries. We have the departments of Children's Services, Community Development, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, Justice, Municipal Affairs, and Seniors. So eight departments have representatives on the committee plus Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Now, there's not to be more than 20 members appointed in total. It also includes representatives from the regional health authorities under the Regional Health Authorities Act, a representative from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta or the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, and then any number of MLAs. It doesn't restrict it to just one MLA. In fact, the rest of the committee, the rest of the 20 could be made up of Members of the Legislative Assembly.

It does allow for the minister to designate one of the members now appointed to the committee as the chairperson of the committee. It sets out how long the terms are and how the transition between a member with an expiring term and an incoming member, a new appointment, would happen. It does allow for remuneration of the members of the committee, and travel, living, and other expenses incurred in the course of their duties under this act.

All of this is familiar to me as it's very much the same setup as the legislation that I worked under as executive director for the Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues. Very similar. The difference is that the advisory council legislation had in it a requirement that the government had to respond to the recommendations that were put forward by the committee. So whatever work the advisory council did and submitted to the government, we were safe in the knowledge that in fact the government would have to read it and think about it because they were required to respond to it. In fact, the one drawback to that process, I would say, was that there was no particular time line on when they had to respond back. In some cases it was six or eight months before we had a government response to the recommendations made by the Advisory Council on Women's Issues. So when I looked at this legislation brought forward by the Member for Calgary-West, that's immediately what came to mind for me, that it's very similar legislation.

I was quite comfortable with the way it was set up, with a few minor exceptions. I was looking to have additional representatives of the community through grassroots organizations like the Society for the Retired and Semi-Retired, and the Alberta Council on Aging would have been an excellent addition to this and perhaps even something like the Lions centres here in Edmonton or the Kerby Centre in Calgary, all groups that work extensively with seniors in the community. There are additional groups, like the Elder Advocates of Alberta.

So I'm concerned that in the group that's set up here to develop these standards of care, out of all of the 20 possible positions, we're really looking at perhaps one person from the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta being on it, and in fact that could be someone from the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. While there may well be some MLAs who are seniors, that narrows the field of choice somewhat as to who would be appointed to this committee. So that's one of the specific disappointments I have when I look at exactly what is spelled out in this legislation.

The major concern that I was raising was the fact that it's a committee. That's all this bill does: it sets up the committee. It says what the purpose of the committee is, but there's nothing in here that says that what the committee recommends is even going to be responded to by the government or that it will get done. I've heard quite a bit of interest in this legislation out in the community. I've been on radio talk shows. I know other members of the Assembly have been as well. Everybody is talking like this is what this legislation will produce, that it's a done deal: a set of standards of care. In fact, that's not what the legislation gives us. So there's a gap, a jump, a chasm between what is set out in the legislation specifically and what people are hoping and assuming will be the outcome of the passage of this legislation. I think that's a concern.

So this committee that's established develops the standards for residential care and establishes a registry and develops education programs. Now, I'm being very specific with the wording here, Mr. Chairman, because that is the wording that is in the legislation: "develop standards" of care, "establish a registry," and "develop education programs." That's it. It doesn't say that this actually gets implemented.

If I look farther down, the committee can "receive and hear submissions" from various people in the community, they can "provide information to the general public on the purposes of the Committee and matters affecting residential care," they can "access research and data" on these issues that they are charged to cover, and "appoint subcommittees." Nowhere in here does it say that we're going to come out of this with a response from the government or indeed with standards of care. That was developing standards of care but not implementing in any way, shape, or form.

The Member for Calgary-West had asked me if I had an amendment, and I had to keep admitting I didn't know if I'd actually get it ready in time. In fact I did, and I would like now to move this amendment to Bill 203.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, just a moment. If it's an amendment, we will need to make sure that it's received by everyone. We will refer to it as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you can proceed now.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. So the amendment that I'm proposing is adding after section 6(2):

(3) The Minister shall, within 60 days after the annual report has been laid before the Legislative Assembly, make public an official Government response to the Committee's report.

As you can see from my earlier comments, what I'm trying to do is strengthen the legislation by ensuring that in fact there would be a government response to the reports and submissions that come forward from the committee. In other words, I'm trying to make sure that what is obviously the underlying intent, that the establishment of the committee results in the creation of standards of care, the registry, and various other educational proponents, will actually come into being rather than being created by the committee, staying with the committee, and not having an opportunity to go further.

In section 2(3) it would "make its recommendations to the Government through the Minister," which is the process by which the committee can in fact deliver its recommendations or the proposed standards of care or information on the registry through to the government. There's no requirement there that the government ever respond to it. I think this is such a vital issue for so many people in the community, not only for those who are frail, elderly, who are in need of care in a facility that would be covered by these standards of care but for their families.

I'm sure that many of us in this Assembly either are currently or will be shortly dealing with parents who have reached a point in their lives and in their health where they are in need of specialized care. If we're not in a position to be able to care for them ourselves in our own homes, we want to know that they are going to be cared for well. We know that in this day and age if you want that kind of thing to happen, you've got to be specific about what your expectations are.

It's not enough to say that somebody will be fed, but you need to say that they'll be fed three meals a day and that they will be fed according to the Canada food guide. You have to be specific about these things because unfortunately the world and the outcome of various litigation cases have told us that if you don't write it down in the first place, nobody's obliged to follow it. If it's not there, then it may not be followed. So I think it's important for all of us in Alberta to be following through on the excellent ideas that are presented in this legislation.

As legislators our obligation is to provide leadership and to facilitate processes happening in Alberta that make it a better place for all Albertans. I certainly think that's what's possible under this legislation, but it doesn't go far enough. That's why I have done the amendment and proposed it before everyone.

I've worked with a number of groups in the community who feel very strongly that we are lacking standards of care in all institutions. The registry is specific to residential care homes

- (i) that do not receive government funding, and
- (ii) in which 1 to 3 persons receive residential care.

The standards of care that are to be developed don't specify the size or the number of people that are involved in the institution. It merely says standards for

- (i) the level of care,

- (ii) the type of accommodation to be provided and maintained,
- (iii) the safety and security of persons in care;
- (b) to develop methods for monitoring residential care homes to ensure compliance with the standards established under this section.

So part of this is around residential care homes, which are defined in another section: "assistance, lodging, and meals are provided for compensation to persons who are 18 years of age or older who are unrelated." So it isn't specifying how large or how small the residential care home is, the number of people in care. I would hazard a guess and my research has said that it does not cover things like existing nursing homes, extended care, auxiliary hospitals, assisted-living centres, et cetera.

I keep hearing in the community and on the news that this is going to establish standards of care for homes that have less than three people that are receiving this care, but in fact the one to three persons receiving care is specific to the registry, not to the standards of care. The standards of care is just talking about people who are paying, where there's compensation involved and receiving personal assistance, lodging, and meals in a residence. So less specific there.

I would really like to see this legislation succeed. I had spoken earlier of working with FAIRE, which is the group out of Calgary, and I know that the member who proposed the bill had responded indicating that what they were looking for wouldn't be covered under this bill, but I still think there's a way that we can go to strengthen this.

Specific to the amendment is making sure that when all of the hard work of the committee is done and is sent through to the minister, there is a careful consideration and a response and that the response is made public. Because that's the other frustration. I mean, we've just gone through a series of written questions and motions for returns in which information has been requested, and we've been told: no, you can't have it under freedom of information and protection of privacy; there are a number of different caveats that are placed upon the information.

I would encourage everyone to carefully consider the amendment. I hope it will find support in the Assembly. It is certainly brought forward as a companion and as a piece to strengthen the legislation that's been proposed by the Member for Calgary-West. I'm sure that many in the community would be excited to see this pass and have it implemented, and I congratulate her and her committee on the work that was done for it.

With that, I will take my seat and allow any others that wish to speak to the amendment to do so, but I do urge all the members of the Assembly to accept this amendment. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I acknowledge the suggestion that's within the notice of amendment put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Anybody else on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to get up and support this amendment to the Residential Care Housing Committee Act that's proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I think her concerns in this particular case are very, very valid.

In earlier debate on Bill 203 that members on this side of the House certainly viewed this particular bill with a lot of skepticism. One of the reasons for the skepticism was a report, probably one of the more extensive and inclusive reports ever done for this Assembly, completed by a former member, the MLA for Olds-Didsbury. He had put this out on December 10, 1992, and it was a report on seniors titled Looking to the Future. This was a report; it was an action plan. It was to take us to the year 2005. Unfortunately, this report was shredded after all this tremendous work, after consulting with so many, many groups here in the province.

You know, the people that were involved in that, Mr. Chairman, were the general public, including seniors, people who were 45 and older, and the community at large, as well as service providers, including community organizations, continuing care facilities, home care, family and community support services. We had the business community involved, service clubs, media, academics, other levels of government, and related organizations and associations. Again, a very, very comprehensive report done at a tremendous cost to the Alberta taxpayers, and this report was shredded.

Now we have an amendment here that I think adds further strength to this particular bill in that it will result in some action. So I would urge all members of the Assembly to support this very good amendment as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre on Bill 203.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased as sponsor of Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act, to open Committee of the Whole in this Assembly today. Bill 203 was fully debated in second reading by many hon. members on Wednesday, April 25.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, we are on the amendment as it has been circulated. Do you want to speak on the amendment?

MS KRYCZKA: Yes. I will be speaking on the amendment in my speaking notes, Mr. Chairman.

My sincere thanks to researcher Darcy Dupas and researchers for their hard work on Bill 203. My remarks will address the essence of Bill 203, including the amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre today and also the principles that are supported in the bill and will address not only the amendment but other concerns of colleagues.

As noted, Bill 203 promotes the establishment of a steering committee, and it has a cross-jurisdictional approach that would include relevant government departments, MLA representation, and key stakeholders. This committee would consult, develop, and oversee the framework for broad-based standards for residential care homes housing three or fewer people. The main objective of the committee is the development of provincewide standards for residential community care options and a system of monitoring and investigation and also information for individuals looking for residential care options.

Information needs to be collaboratively shared and collected between many government departments as well as appropriate key stakeholders involved in this important issue. To not include representation from all government ministries that monitor children's services such as Justice, Health, housing, Seniors, and Human Resources would really be a grievous error. To exclude key expert contributors in this area of policy development would also be overlooking . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, currently we have before us an amendment. We could have a vote on the amendment, deal with it, and then you could proceed with your speech as you have prepared. But we'll have to deal with the current amendment that's before us.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes. We'll have the vote on the amendment, and then I will continue with my speaking notes.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, to not include representation from all government ministries that monitor children's services such as Justice, Health, housing, Seniors, and Human Resources would be a grievous error, and to exclude key expert contributors in this area of policy development would also be overlooking a major resource.

Also, with up to eight persons on the committee not named, flexibility remains for the minister's discretion. This is the main reasoning for the composition of the steering committee as defined in section 2. Obviously, there must be limitations on the size of the steering committee, and regrettably, some groups familiar with this policy issue area will not be able to be named. However, it is noted in the bill that there must be public consultation with key stakeholders. Therefore, organizations and individuals with an interest in residential care housing would then be able to lend their expertise to the committee, whether it's in writing or in person. Most importantly, the committee will retain a good portion of representation from the government that the people of Alberta elected.

I would like to point out that the first directive of the steering committee pursuant to section (4) of the bill is ongoing consultations which will occur with the individuals most affected by the residential care housing market. It is through the consultations with grassroots stakeholders and citizens that the steering committee will be able to best accommodate the needs and values of Albertans and reflect these elements in the recommendations for the regulations of the residential care housing market. It will be the responsibility of the steering committee to ensure that literally hundreds of stakeholder groups and individuals are heard from and that it is accurately documented. In so doing, their ideas will be discussed and reflected in the recommendations that will result from the consultation process.

Bill 203 is determined to protect at-risk, vulnerable Albertans: seniors, adults with special needs, brain injured, those with developmental disabilities, and adults with mental illness and mild dementia. It would regulate the activities of the residential care provider to ensure safe residential care alternatives and quality services.

That the debate around Bill 203 is primarily focused on housing needs of seniors is no accident, as seniors would seem to be the main beneficiaries of this legislation. However, the bill does not specify that residential care housing must involve a person over the age of 65, as Bill 203 is intended to serve all adult Albertans who may require or do require additional care in their daily living. The focus on seniors is an acknowledgment of the Albertans that will most likely be the residents in these housing units – nothing more. The directive of the steering committee is to develop regulations to include younger adult Albertans who require specific types of care in order to live independently in a community setting.

I am pleased that my colleagues in this Assembly support the general direction of the bill and acknowledge the need for the formation of policy for residential care housing. It is important to act soon on these issues, as the need for residential neighbourhood housing living arrangements will only increase as Alberta's population ages and increases. Regulating the care of our at-risk, aging population is an opportunity to provide Albertans with innovative yet also commonsense approaches to housing options for all adult Albertans who require some assistance with daily living.

The regulation of this housing market will create new opportunities for entrepreneurs in Alberta and facilitate value-added living services for our elderly and our disabled who are paying an operator for accommodation, meals, and defined personal services. The monitoring of this market will create a level playing field that will ensure that standards are met, and this level playing field will foster a competitive market that ultimately provides more quality housing.

It is only through a collaborative effort that we can achieve the positive change that is necessary to have residential housing continue to grow and provide high-quality services. There has to be an inclusive process that takes into consideration the existing market and structure and one which encourages present and new operators to adopt standards of care that should be every Albertan's birthright.

I urge my colleagues to focus on the big picture of residential care housing and to keep clearly in mind those adult Albertans who need it as we debate the specifics of Bill 203 this afternoon. I look forward to hearing and perhaps responding to any existing concerns or supportive comments.

Mr. Chairman, to reiterate, there is a very strong case for the need for Bill 203. It is time for this government to assume the leadership role through a collaborative process and implementation and to move forward by proactively ensuring that at-risk adults have a quality, safe, independent lifestyle within a residential setting.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased to speak to the Residential Care Housing Committee Act. Bill 203 was vigorously debated in second reading by many members and received overwhelming support from the members of the Assembly.

Bill 203 promotes the establishment of a steering committee which would have a main objective of developing provincewide standards for residential care options, a system of monitoring and investigating and providing information for individuals looking for residential care options. Bill 203 would protect at-risk, vulnerable Albertans, seniors, adults with special needs, and adults suffering from mental illness and dementia. It would regulate the activities of the residential care provider to ensure safe residential care alternatives and quality services.

Many groups and individuals have identified a need for standards and monitoring of residential care. The need for care was addressed by this Assembly in 1995 when the then Member for Calgary-Bow proposed the motion which read:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to ensure that health and safety standards are being met in all personal care facilities by establishing regulations and a comprehensive monitoring system.

The motion passed unanimously. As a result of this motion the interdepartmental working group on private care in group homes was formed to identify issues related to private care and group-living options, to determine if there was a role for the provincial government to play.

Their report, the Safety of Adult Living in Residential Care Options, in 1998 made key recommendations that are very valid today and which are an integral part of Bill 203.

Even more recent government reports reinforce the need to pass Bill 203. For example, Alberta for All Ages: Directions for the Future, June 2000, presented a study on the impact of aging population. This document forecast an enormous demand for community and residential care. Also, the document Healthy Aging: New Directions for Care, November 1999, the final report of the policy advisory committee on long-term care review, a report I'm very familiar with, also recommends strongly that Alberta take measures to ensure the private and voluntary sectors expand their range of support of living options available across the province and expand the support of housing to include light- and medium-care cases: people with mild dementia and young people with disabilities.

Also, the report urged the government to set provincewide standards for supporting housing developments. Through a collaborative process this is what Bill 203 aims to do, Mr. Chairman, and I urge all my colleagues to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak before the Committee of the Whole today on Bill 203. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-West for bringing forward the Residential Care Housing Committee Act.

This is an important bill that would rectify gaps in Alberta legislation pertaining to home care. Bill 203 addresses several inadequacies that vulnerable Albertans face in terms of residential home care. Currently no legislative standard of care exists in Alberta for home care operations in residences housing three or fewer clients. Section 2, which would allow the steering committee to develop regulations concerning "the level of care" and "the type of accommodation to be provided" and standards for the health and safety of the residents, will protect all home care consumers from potential abuse.

The steering committee will also work to develop procedures for monitoring residential care homes so that they can ensure that established standards are being implemented. Initially the committee will only monitor those homes that have applied to the voluntary residential care list. Those homes that are accepted onto the list will have met the care, sanitation, and accommodation requirements established by the steering committee. This list will signify to those Albertans interested in residential care service that the providers on the list are of solid reputation and will undoubtedly provide good-quality care.

Mr. Chairman, the steering committee will work towards a goal of standardized home care where eventually all residential care homes with three or fewer clients will be regulated under the umbrella of legislation stemming from the work of the committee. These standards imposed on the operators will serve to protect Alberta's residential care consumers.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the population of Alberta is graying. Now is the time for this government to ensure that the rapidly growing senior population will find that there is adequate care waiting for them when they need it. Not only should they be aware that quality residential home care will be available; they should have the knowledge to make an educated choice of a provider. This is why section 2 of Bill 203 establishes a mandate for the committee to relay information to the general public regarding residential care. Through such an initiative the public will know what to expect when it comes time to choose a home for themselves or for a loved one. Public consultation and education will also apply pressure on home care providers to ensure that their level of care is up to the standards set out by the committee.

Bill 203, section 3, confirms that the steering committee will have a broad spectrum of input from many government departments, Members of the Legislative Assembly, regional health authorities, municipalities, and the Seniors Advisory Council. Mr. Chairman, such a variety of input will ensure that this committee will have adequate representation to make informed and reasonable decisions.

The Residential Care Housing Committee Act is essential for those members of the seniors community who are without the luxury of a network of friends and family who can care for them. This bill will provide a road map for Alberta's elderly when they seek quality, trustworthy, standardized care. This is the least the government of Alberta can do to ensure that those who have made vital contributions to Alberta's success will be cared for when they can no longer care for themselves.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very grateful to have the opportunity to address private member's Bill 203, and I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-West for bringing this important issue forward.

There are, however, some issues that I would like to raise. I think that it would be easy to say yes to this bill. I mean, no one wants the elderly or the vulnerable members of our society to be abused or taken advantage of. I believe that is why a couple of years ago, when Bonnie Laing was here, we passed her Protection for Persons in Care Act. Perhaps this bill is the logical next step.

What concerns me is that there is always yet another step, a step that once again puts government into the mix of personal choices, another step that says that government can just pass more laws to make society perfect – well, perhaps perfect in the minds of people in this Assembly – another step that says that we know best and that you, Mr. and Mrs. Albertan, don't really have to think about things because government is there to do your thinking for you. We will make you safe; you and your family need not take much responsibility or concern about your choices because we're here to do that for you.

There is the likelihood that the formation of a voluntary registry will in fact create a liability for this province. None of us has forgotten the eugenics law. I mean, we are still paying for that one; it was repealed 30 years ago. Recommending or listing housing options for seniors without certification, without licensing or monitoring may put consumers at risk and the government at risk of being sued for contributory negligence.

We raise expectations that we may never be able to meet. There is reason for concern on this issue. I do not in any way deny we are all aware of our aging demographics, and just today in the National Post:

The C.D. Howe Institute, an economic think-tank, estimates that health care will consume more than half of all provincial revenues by [the year] 2040.

I believe it'll be a lot quicker than that.

That will likely increase the tax burden on a shrinking workforce paying for a growing pool of elderly Baby Boomers, he predicts. In 1998, 12% of Canadians were over age 65, yet more than 43% of provincial health care spending went to services for seniors, the report notes.

Yet there is little evidence that more spending meant better care.

I raise that simply because this is yet another layer, and nobody knows what it's going to cost.

We know that within 15 years or less our seniors population will in fact double. We know that we will require more long-term care, more nursing homes, more lodges, more assisted living, and, yes, more residential-type care. So while we all want to ensure the safety and protection of our frail, our elderly, and our vulnerable members of society, I ask all of you to carefully consider if this is the correct vehicle. Our existing legislation I believe is currently being reviewed. There has been extensive work done by the Member for Redwater and a report issued with many recommendations that are currently being implemented, and more of them are coming forward. Bill 203 in my opinion will generate similar recommendations but could possibly forestall government action and possibly impede current initiatives.

Another question that you must ask yourself is what possible incentive there is for a residential housing owner/operator to voluntarily register. Anyone that could be in the least concerned about meeting standards would surely not register their home. What about the sole owner/operator? There are no employees to register a complaint about that person.

Is it possible that the registry could impact upon the cost-effectiveness of good residential care homes? I ask this because the bill does not talk about the cost of compliance. No one knows what the standards will be. Would there be flexibility in standards for different clientele?

Monitoring costs are significant. How many bureaucrats would it take? At what cost? Who pays? And if there's no monitoring, what good is it? Would it be like a Better Business Bureau that you could just phone up and get information from? I don't know that, but if that's all it was, maybe I could support this bill. But then there is a Better Business Bureau already, and maybe we should be talking to them about branching out into this area.

Bill 203 does not address costs or even propose to examine them. The vast majority of people in care home residences are there by personal choice, and we need more of those choices as our population ages. There are advocates out there, starting with family and friends, moving to the AISH caseworkers, home care operators, and RHAs, and of course we have the newly formed Department of Seniors. We have Government Services, and we have municipal housing authorities as well as law enforcement officers. If an individual is unable to report abuse, I'm not sure that another committee will change that.

Once again I would sincerely like to thank the Member for Calgary-West for bringing the issue forward. It is important, but I am concerned when we risk setting up yet another bureaucracy without any idea of what it may cost, without any idea of how many people will be discouraged from opening their homes to help others in this type of situation. They may not open those homes for fear of not meeting some arbitrary standard that may in fact be a moving target.

I for one would be far more comfortable if this issue were coming forward through the Minister of Seniors. That way it would have been thoroughly scrutinized. We would have a better idea of the cost of compliance or the penalty of noncompliance. We would have a better knowledge of the extent of the problem that we're trying to address here and what standards we could actually anticipate. We may have a better understanding through a public consultation process, though, of what really needs to be done and the impact of both the positive and negative aspects of doing something versus doing nothing.

I have to be honest, Mr. Chairman. In eight years as an MLA I have never had a call in my constituency office about this issue. I have had complaints about doctors, about hospitals, about long-term care facilities, but I have never had a complaint about a residential care home. That doesn't mean that there aren't any problems out there. It just means that as a representative of my area I have to wonder why I would want to support a bill that nobody at home has talked to me about. I wish that on private members' bills Standing Orders allowed us to be able to send a bill like this to a minister and ask him or her to spend some time and, yes, even a little bit of money to more thoroughly review the issue, and then have it come back through the process.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, that that is not the case, because without a lot more information about the ramifications and the potential costs of this bill, I am unable to support it. I would ask that all hon. members in this Assembly stop and think carefully about the issues I've raised before we pass into law a bill that impacts 3 million Albertans, most of whom are totally and completely unaware of what we're talking about in here today.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to put my views on the record.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. I would just like to take a few minutes of speaking time to respond, very much in part only, to a couple of concerns raised by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. In terms of creating a layer of bureaucracy, we have at risk our vulnerable adults that we're speaking about here, who for the most part cannot advocate for themselves. We protect children as vulnerable through legislation. Why not vulnerable adults? As the final report on the Safety of Adults Living in Residential Care Options states: this is a collaborative, consultative initiative and process that builds on current initiatives and existing structures in the community and will not necessarily create an extra layer of bureaucracy.

I would be very pleased to provide the hon. member with an extensive list of people that I have consulted with and organizations that support the initiative that this bill sets out to solve. They are large organizations, but they have looked toward the province for leadership.

In terms of a registry it is really a voluntary list to help ensure that individuals are not at further risk while the broad-based standards are being developed. The main intent of it would be to help Albertans who are seeking information as to, for instance, where residential care homes are located, details of those homes, and types and levels of assistance that are offered.

Again, there are many resources and examples, such as the Department of Health in the government of Saskatchewan, who have been working with the Personal Care Homes Act since 1989, and two major regional health authorities, the Capital health authority and the CRHA. As I said, I would be very pleased to give the Member from Airdrie-Rocky View a list of resources, of people and organizations that have been involved in the consultations.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAİKO: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my privilege to speak to Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act, proposed by my distinguished colleague from Calgary-West.

Mr. Chairman, as we all know, our population is aging, and the ability of our health care system to accommodate the inevitable surge in demand for health services is a real concern. This province has consistently shown that we are at the forefront of this issue and that we are committed to taking a proactive stance in order to ensure that all Albertans receive the very best care available.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203 seeks to address the need for long-term residential care. Seniors today are more independent than ever. Most elderly Albertans would prefer to remain in a residential setting even as they begin to require more regular supervision and direct medical care. The opportunity to receive these services in a residential setting and maintain a sense of self-sufficiency is a great benefit to many elderly Albertans.

In addition to the benefits that individual seniors receive, residential care options will serve to alleviate the stress placed on group homes and other care facilities. Residential care facilities are also extremely cost-efficient when compared to more formalized institutional services.

The reason we need Bill 203 is that currently residential care facilities with three or fewer clients not receiving any provincial funding do not have regulatory bodies created specifically to address the issues and concerns of residential care recipients. Mr. Chairman, we must work to protect the citizens who choose this type of care and give them the opportunity to live the best, safest, and most independent life possible.

As stated in section 2(2), the bill establishes a residential care housing committee "to develop standards for residential care" and "to develop methods for monitoring residential care homes to ensure compliance" with established standards. This committee would also develop a voluntary registry system of existing residential care housing providers who do not receive government funding and care for up to three people. This registry will provide the foundation for developing standards and requirements for the operation of these facilities.

Mr. Chairman, the passage of this bill will enable the elderly to receive regulated, properly monitored residential care as an alternative to formalized institutional care. Monitoring residential homes is vital to guide care providers toward better service while at the same time ensuring proper care of dependent adults.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, this bill is a proactive step in the development of a comprehensive system to care for our aging population. It ensures that no segment of our society is denied appropriate health and safety standards for their personal care. It further allows the elderly to choose care options that are the best for them, with peace of mind that the care they are receiving is governed by appropriate regulations and a comprehensive monitoring system.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I enthusiastically support Bill 203 and encourage my colleagues in this Assembly to do the same. Thank you.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Chairman, thank you for providing me with the opportunity to speak to Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act. As I look at this bill, I think it would benefit and protect many vulnerable Albertans. I support the bill out of concern for the elderly, the infirm, the permanently disabled, and the mentally ill. This legislation would help all of those who are in need of constant yet flexible care. It will protect them from many of the crimes that they are vulnerable to.

4:30

At present there are no legislated guidelines that protect these residents from abuse. The law does not set certain standards that these care facilities must comply with. These facilities offer lodging, meals, and personal assistance for one to three elderly persons or adults with extra needs. These facilities are special because they provide care in a residential setting for individuals who need some assistance and cannot live alone but do not need nursing or medical support. They provide a safe environment, support, protection, supervision, and assistance to the residents in that home.

Mr. Chairman, I'm particularly concerned about one factor. There is nothing stopping an operator from opening five, six, seven homes and having three seniors living in each home. What that effectively does is give them responsibility for 20, 21, 25 elderly people with no management or control in place. Currently the department only regulates those facilities which house four or more. Why shouldn't we be doing that for those homes that have three or less in their care?

The specific purpose of the bill is to identify, list, and eventually regulate care home operators housing three or fewer clients. To begin this development, a steering committee would build a voluntary list of private health care providers. That is one area where I'm wondering: why should it be voluntary? It probably should be mandatory. Why let them provide a list on a voluntary basis? I think that should be mandatory.

Then it would use this list to help formulate regulations. The findings of the steering committee will be the basis for standards and regulations that ensure that private care facilities are being maintained at the highest quality level.

On some specifics on a line-by-line basis I'd like to kind of highlight for the mover of this bill a few pointers. As I indicated earlier on, I think that there should be a mandatory registry and not a voluntary one according to section 2. The committee should probably have more resources made available to it so it can carry out the task of visiting the various facilities, talking to the clients, talking to the clients' families, and then providing a report to Albertans.

I notice in this bill that one year after the date this Act comes into force, and every subsequent year on the same date, the chairperson of the Committee shall submit to the Minister an annual report of the activities undertaken by the Committee during the previous fiscal year.

Now, what if that date turns out to be a Sunday? I'm wondering whether such fixed times are required within this bill.

Overall in principle I support it. I think it is needed. I have had many concerns expressed to me about the quality of care received by seniors in small group homes. So I'd like to compliment the hon. member for bringing forward this bill. It may not be perfect in every which way, but I think the intent is right. This is an opportunity for us to bring about amendments if we so choose. I hope the hon. member will take the debate into consideration, and I hope that every member will support this bill.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: We'll call on the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you. I just have a couple of comments I'd like to make on this bill, Mr. Chairman, because I think it's an important bill. I want to commend the Member for Calgary-West for the intent that she brought this bill forward with. However, having said that, I do have some concerns with the bill. I'm not going to go through them all, because some of the concerns certainly were well spoken to by the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

One of those certainly is the whole area of how much government gets into people's lives and people's choices. For those of you who know me from years in this Legislature, you will know that I believe people should have choices. I believe that the less government is in your life, the better off we all are. Having said that, I also believe that there is a vulnerable part of our society that needs protection and care.

Like the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View I would prefer that this had a more thorough vetting with the Minister of Seniors to better understand from my perspective what abuse is out there. Frankly, in 14 years I haven't had a call on this issue, and I do represent quite a large constituency. So I have that concern with the bill.

As I indicated, I respect that the Member for Calgary-West brings this bill with a feeling and a knowledge and a belief that this is important. An aspect of the bill that I do like is that the registry would be voluntary, and I would support that if it were to go ahead.

Again, as people make a choice as to how they want to live when they can no longer be independent in their homes, I would like to see that choice left to persons when you are in what is almost a noninstitutional setting of three or less people. I think people choose that because they do want to be in a more familylike setting. They do need some care but not the care that you would require if you were slated for institutional care.

I feel that way about other areas as well, and I've spoken on them in the Assembly. One of those areas is day care. I think people that choose to put their children in day care should understand that they have a regulated environment, that the factors are all there, but I always wanted to leave it to mothers who want to leave their children with friends or family to make those choices for themselves. For many people that is the better choice. I feel that that's applicable in this as well.

I also have a concern, having some experience in this Legislature, of dismantling committees that have been in place for years that actually didn't function. I was amazed at how many committees we had in place that hadn't met for three or four years. So when we talk about setting up another structure, I wonder if there isn't a structure already existing that can manage some of these things. I'm not in favour of large bureaucracies, and I'm not in favour of large committees, but make no mistake, hon. members, I am in great favour of ensuring that the people who are vulnerable in our society have protection. I just happen to believe that that's available today. I do happen to believe, as I've indicated, that in homes that look after less than three persons, that can be left to the choice.

I wouldn't feel that confident about it if we didn't already have in place a system of very fine care homes for people which are regulated, which are monitored through the social care facilities committee, which has done an outstanding job over the years of visiting those places and making sure that residents are cared for and protected.

There's one other area I just want to mention. There's a group in Calgary that many of us are familiar with, and I'll just single them out: the Kerby Centre. The Kerby Centre has represented seniors over the years and has been a place for seniors who have concerns in those areas to go and have been great advocates for them. Perhaps groups like that can better respond if there are issues on a one- or two-person dwelling. Once you get over three or four, you're probably in an institutional-like setting and government perhaps has a role of monitoring.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chairman. With those comments I support the intent of the bill, but I would not support it passing in its present form.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's also a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to address Bill 203 this afternoon. I, like many others, would like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-West. I think that the intent of this bill is well thought out. I think the member truly does believe that there is a need to address some concerns for the quality of living conditions that are found in some of the residential care facilities throughout the province.

But like the previous couple of speakers, the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View and the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, this is an area that I, too, have not had a lot of calls on. I do hear from time to time complaints with respect to day care, complaints with respect to formalized institutional care settings, but I have not heard specific complaints as they relate to a residential care situation. I'm the first to agree that that does not indicate that there are no problems. I'm not so foolish as to believe that there are not some situations that could be potentially hazardous and create a very poor environment for people who really are not in a position to speak for themselves and to stand up for themselves.

I have concern with this bill. The concern that I have is that this is the type of bill that has very little detail in it. Basically, the bill says that we'll have a committee, that the committee will establish standards, that we'll have a voluntary system, and that the committee will enforce those standards. Then it goes on to say that the government will pay for it all. Like the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View we have no idea how much this is going to cost. In order for it to be done properly, conceivably there would have to be literally dozens of persons who would be responsible for enforcing and visiting each of the various facilities throughout the province.

In addition to costs to government, which I think all of us should be concerned about – nevertheless, we also have to keep in mind that it is the role of government to provide services to its citizens, so I don't think that the cost to government should be the overriding concern when you get into a discussion like this – there are costs to the individuals. In a case where you have care providers providing the services, I have grave concern that not knowing what the extent of the standards are that this committee may or may not develop, there could be some substantial costs involved in upgrading facilities where the committee makes an arbitrary determination that perhaps a certain minimum number of square feet are necessary for a room. There could be any number of standards that are set that would tend to be arbitrary and would tend to be extremely expensive.

Then we run into a situation where we've got this voluntary list of providers that meet, quote, the standards, and you've got another group of providers out there who don't meet the standards and hence would not, obviously, be listed on this sheet. The implications would be that there's an inferior level of care if any provider is not listed on this voluntary list.

Well, it could very well be that the standards that have been established are unreasonable in some circumstances. What is reasonable accommodation in one community may not be reasonable in another, and I'm not so sure that setting some kind of a province-wide standard would be a workable solution in this particular case.

We also would have a situation where the costs that would be borne by the clients may in reality end up being substantially higher for those providers that are providing services under the, quote, voluntary registration, and then we get into a whole argument on the equity of the situation. Those that can afford to go into a voluntarily standardized accommodation will be assured of having the committee and the enforcement provisions provided by the committee at their disposal to ensure that either their loved ones, in the case of a guardian, or individuals are looking after their own affairs. On the other hand, where there is a case where an individual may not be able to afford accommodation that meets the arbitrary standard, they're going to be living in accommodation that is not on the list, that is not going to have access to the enforcement criteria of the committee, and what have we accomplished? We've accomplished nothing. We still have people living in inferior accommodation.

So even if this bill was to be passed and supported, I don't think it would solve the problem that it's trying to solve. I think that we need to think very seriously about this situation.

I agree with comments that have been made. Let's determine if in fact there is a serious problem in our communities around this province. If there is, let's do some broad-based consultation. Let's talk to people who are in fact providing residential care throughout the province, get some input from them, get some input from people who are living in residential care, and come up with a solution that will in fact be a long-term solution. We'll deal with the problem if that problem does exist. Mr. Chairman, I unfortunately feel compelled not to support this legislation at this point.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments that have been made by the last three speakers, and I also, though, feel that I would like to respond briefly to some of their comments. I realize I can't answer them all satisfactorily, but I will do my best to address a few of them.

Looking first to the government and our policies, it's my understanding that we support the continuum of care – and I think it has been mentioned already this afternoon by the Member for Redwater – in terms of health, housing, health needs. The long-term care review report substantiates that, and the aging population study substantiates that. We know that individuals, Albertans, want to truly age in place in their communities. Their first choice would be to age in their own homes, and their last choice would be to be in an acute care setting. But in between we have, happily enough, new models of living around the province where personal supports and help can be added as needed. We have congregate living that's in the private sector, we have lodges that are in the public sector, and there is subsidized housing for seniors.

So we have got some choices in there, but we do know that in many instances we have a housing shortage, and there are waiting lists. I am aware through my research – again, I have done extensive research on this – that there have been organizations in the province that have set up similar minisystems, because they are, in their own way, dealing with this problem that we do not have regulations and standards for people who live in housing. Say, for instance, the one that I'm proposing here that has one to three or less than four residents: there are basically no standards of the sort that would protect, again, vulnerable adults. I'm talking about seniors, for instance, who may be healthy today but not necessarily healthy tomorrow. We all probably know through personal experience that this does happen to seniors. Dementia could be diagnosed or Alzheimer's.

The main thing along with this continuum of care is, I believe, that this type of regulated housing would give us additional housing in the communities. We talk about costs, as did the hon. Member for Medicine Hat. The cost of this housing in terms of bricks and mortar is nil. It is housing that already exists, and it's out there in the private sector. Seniors or persons with special needs would be paying their own way.

Basically, I think the main point to remember is this is another housing choice that we will have for our at-risk adult Albertans, and with the aging population the demand is only going to increase.

In terms of not having complaints or not knowing, I made a statement earlier today that these are vulnerable adults, and probably most of them are not in a position to speak for themselves – perhaps through their families, but some of them do not have families close by or do not have families that can speak for them. So, again, a main reason why this bill is being proposed is at-risk people.

With not having a present registry we don't know how much of this type of housing exists. Again, we have no idea of negligence unless there have been reports such as in the media. These things have happened, and I do have documentation of negligence that has occurred.

I think, basically, the main impact of this too is that truly many, many people will be allowed to age in place within their communities in safe housing and, again, be provided with these personal supports that are necessary.

I tend to have focused on seniors and not on people with special needs. I know that for people with PDD, brain injuries, with mental health problems, their own agencies and their support organizations are working to support them. As an example, one of many examples I've heard, a mother is distraught because her son, who did have an accident and is brain injured, has been living in a long-term care centre mostly with people with advanced Alzheimer's. He has progressed to the degree that this is not a suitable setting for him. So where does he go from there? He even actually does one day of volunteer work a week at the Children's hospital, and he's capable in many areas, but he cannot function without supports in a home. So it's not just the seniors. We are talking about people with special needs.

I say, yes, there are challenges, and I acknowledge the points that are made by the hon. members, but I would like to ask the members of this Assembly to support this bill. I rest my case.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On the clauses of the bill, are you agreed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? The motion is defeated.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:56 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

For the motion:

Abbott	Gordon	Nicol
Blakeman	Hancock	O'Neill
Bonner	Jablonski	Taft
Broda	Johnson	Tarchuk
Cenaiko	Kryczka	VanderBurg
Dunford	Mason	Zwozdesky
Forsyth

Against the motion:

Ady	Jonson	Ouellette

Bill 205
Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection)
Amendment Act, 2001

[Debate adjourned May 8: Mr. Lund speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I noticed in Hansard that as we adjourned debate yesterday, I was in the middle of a sentence. No aspersions on the Speaker; it was just that I was trying to stretch the time. Maybe I should complete the sentence that I had started.

I was commenting on the conflict that we find occurring out in rural Alberta with the fragmentation that's happening, and I was commenting about the number of things that we find that people complain about. I see where I had said that we find that there are complaints about sprayers. I need to clarify that in fact it was the aerial spraying that I got a lot of complaints on when I was minister of agriculture.

I think there's a bigger picture here that we are discussing. Certainly what Bill 205 speaks to is the approval process. I must admit that I did make a lot of comments about those other peripheral issues. Certainly in the whole area of the ILOs I guess that the approval is probably the starting point, where we need to concentrate. I want to take this opportunity to thank the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing this forward, because it is a very, very important issue, one that the committee that toured the province three times came back and quite frankly did not have a clear answer to.

As a matter of fact, what we see happening today is pretty close to what that original committee had recommended, and quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's not working. We have to discuss further how this process needs to evolve and how it needs to work. What's happening out there today are a couple of things. It is dividing the communities. You have local officials being pitted against, in some instances, even neighbours to make a very difficult decision. The emotion runs high, and the first thing you know, there's division. There's that problem.

Then there's the problem of being inconsistent, because what will happen in one area doesn't happen in another. As well, there's the issue that I touched briefly on yesterday about having one body saddled with the responsibility while the authority lies in another jurisdiction. That causes a great deal of concern, and I must repeat:

it doesn't work. We've seen cases in other areas where that happens, where the responsibility and the authority are not in the same arena, and as soon as that happens, you're doomed for failure.

I think that the code that we issued about a year ago on the safe handling and disposal of manure and other operations certainly goes a long way to addressing the issues of operation that are out there. I'm looking forward with great anticipation to a report that will be coming from the most recent committee that toured the province taking information and taking advice on how to solve the two issues, the operational and the approval.

So with those comments I once again thank the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing this forward. It's probably one of the toughest issues that we are going to have to make a decision on in the short term. I believe that this is a good start for the debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 205. As I understand it, the intent of the act is to take away from the local municipal jurisdiction the authority to deal with intensive livestock operations and to have those issues settled elsewhere, particularly at the provincial level.

Now, there are many issues around this, Mr. Speaker. The development of these very, very large-scale intensive livestock operations has produced controversy throughout the province and, I think, rightly so. In general, these intensive livestock operations often pose a threat to local groundwater. I think that's an issue which is of great provincial concern. We have seen increasing questions raised about the state of the groundwater in this province, which is by its nature not the wettest place on Earth and which I think has less open water than most other provinces in the country if not every other province in the country. It is fundamental that we preserve pure and adequate levels of groundwater if the many other activities of this province are going to continue, not just agriculture but in particular, in this case, agriculture.

So the control of ILOs is of very great concern, I think, to everybody in the province. The question then is: what are the other impacts of ILOs? Well, there are economic impacts in the sense that they threaten the smaller family farms with competition that they cannot meet. I think that that's another impact that needs to be considered. Now, I know members opposite take a different view and believe that these are natural evolutionary tendencies and are best left alone and that if the family farm is consigned to the dustbin of history, then so be it, that it's sad, but there's not very much we can or even should try to do about it.

We take a different view, Mr. Speaker. We take the view that the family farm is an institution that's worth preserving in this country and in this province and that the industrialization of agriculture, with all its attendant disruptions to our society and our environment, is not a welcome development. So we have, I think, a difference on that with members opposite or at least with some members opposite.

Then there's the question of local government and local authority. One of the things that local government does, whether it's in the city or in the countryside, is evaluate whether or not different types of land use are compatible. That's a fundamental function of local government not just in Alberta but pretty much everywhere in the country.

What I read in the comments in Hansard by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler when she introduced this bill or spoke to it at second reading concerned me a little bit, Mr. Speaker. It was obvious that what had happened was that the local government there had made certain decisions that certain larger scale agricultural producers found hard to live with, yet those decisions were made through the democratic institutions of local government. Then we had the hon. member coming to this place and seeking approval of the Assembly to override the local decision and in fact take away the power of local municipal governments to make those decisions with respect to ILOs right across the province.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that a number of hon. members on the government side who have a background in rural municipal government have stood up and spoken against the bill and have argued that the local government is in the best position to make these kinds of decisions. I read their speeches with interest as well, and I agree with them. I think that they are correct in saying that local government is in the best position to make these decisions. Whether or not you can satisfy issues of groundwater or pollution and disposal of waste products, if it in fact creates a nuisance for people who live in the country, then it is the local government that ought to be making decisions about which land use is compatible with which other land use.

So on that basis, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking against the bill because I think we should, first of all, protect and enhance local government and its traditional responsibilities. I don't like at all the idea that if local government makes a decision that you disagree with, you come to this place and ask everybody to take away the power of that local government to make the decision. Can you imagine if every time the government in Ottawa disagreed with decisions that were made by this government – and I know they don't have the power, as we do, over municipalities – if every time Alberta exercised its authority in an area and the federal government disagreed with that position, it took away our powers? How would that go down with members of the Assembly? Not very well, I think. So I think on those issues it's clear that the power should go with local government to control these.

Now, there's a broader issue that I think the provincial government needs to be very strongly concerned about, and that is the deterioration of the groundwater of this province, which is perhaps one of our most precious and underrated resources, because of intensive agricultural uses and because of undercontrol in the gas and oil drilling industry, which is causing tremendous contamination of our groundwater in this province. When the groundwater is severely compromised, the economy and the livability of this province will suffer tremendously.

So the government has an obligation, in my view, to take up this question as one of the key questions facing the future of this province and to really address it with a view to preserving the groundwater of this province for all of the purposes that people require it for on a permanent basis, on a completely sustainable, permanent basis so that it never, never is compromised. To not do so would be compromising not just the economy of the province, not just the agricultural sector of the province, but in fact the very livability of this province, Mr. Speaker. I think that the member by bringing this forward raises this issue, and I appreciate having the opportunity to make my points.

I will now take my seat and let other speakers proceed. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on this bill. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn and recess the House at this point, that we call it 5:30, and that we reconvene in Committee of Supply tonight at 8.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly agree with the motion proposed by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 9, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/09

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. We'll begin with the usual admonition that only one person will be standing and talking at a time.

Before we begin our deliberations on the estimates of Human Resources and Employment, I wonder if we might briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure this evening to introduce a visitor from Ontario. She happens to be the grandmother of James Hamilton, who is a page here in the Legislature. Her name is Anne Andrews. I would first of all like to say, Mrs. Andrews, that your grandson is doing an excellent job. We're all very proud of him here, and you can be proud of him as well. Now, would you please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Main Estimates 2001-2002

Human Resources and Employment

THE CHAIRMAN: We'd like to begin this evening by calling upon the minister. Hon. minister, if you could lead us off this evening.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's certainly nice to see a packed House tonight. That's very good. All of the opposition members are in their seats. That's good. I do that because I realize that Hansard . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: They're not all there.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, hey, I'm going to cut them some slack. Maybe they'll cut me some slack. More importantly, I want to give all of them the opportunity to ship Hansard around to as many of their friends and relatives as they can. I know we'll be listening to their remarks with close attention.

Before I begin, we have members of our department here tonight in the members' gallery. Duncan Campbell and Dan Thompson are from Human Resources and Employment, I guess main body, but here representing the personnel administration office are Shirley Howe, Debra Tiffen, and Lorne Saul-Demers. Shelby MacLeod is here, my executive assistant.

I would want to take up just a few minutes of my time and hope that the members would perhaps let me add to this time by just indicating to all of you that earlier today the Alberta government on your behalf received an award from the Institute of Public Administration. I forget what the "C" in their acronym, IPAC, means. We heard the Premier earlier today table the press release. The personnel administration office – and that's our department – received a gold medal from this body because of the corporate human resource development strategy that we have here in the provincial government. So all of our people are to be congratulated for that. [applause] Thank you very much. Hansard will note that there was a thunderous ovation throughout the Assembly.

The ministry that I'm responsible for, Alberta Human Resources and Employment, is becoming known as the people and workplace department. Just to review, it includes the Department of Human Resources and Employment but also the personnel administration office, the Alberta Labour Relations Board, and the legislative component of the Workers' Compensation Board. We spend about a billion dollars of taxpayer's money, so I think it's important that we talk a little bit about how we do that and what we're really trying to do.

If you could visualize our situation: we find people where they're at, and then we try to move them forward. If we find them in social services, people needing temporary assistance on our part, we provide that assistance, but then we want to move them into training and into some sort of career development plan. Again, the philosophy of this government is the fact that our assistance program, the welfare program in Alberta, is one of a temporary nature. We believe very strongly that Albertans feel pride in themselves and in their families, and of course they want to be independent. So it is our task and it's our mandate to then move them toward independence. If we find them in social services need, we move them into training. If we find that they need training, then we'll provide that training and then move them into the workplace. When we find them in the workplace, we want to make sure that we have a safe and an equitable situation in that workplace.

Before going on, I need to clarify one of the items in the estimates that's contained in the supports for independence and the assured income for the severely handicapped. To correct a change in accounting for these two programs, a 13th month of benefits has been included, and this results in a onetime expenditure of $35 million. Again, just to reinforce this one particular item, the basic principle behind Alberta social programs is that resources are dedicated to the people who need them most.

Now what are some of the programs that we have? We have AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, the most generous in the country. We also provide support for the homeless. This year we propose to spend $12.9 million to keep a roof over the heads of men and women who come to Alberta looking for work, people that are already here that might be experiencing mental illness, or people facing addictions. Our supports for independence helps people in need, and it helps them become self-supporting and independent. As mentioned in the throne speech, we will be conducting a review of all of these programs and services that are provided to low-income Albertans. The details of that will be announced shortly.

One of the main areas in the training area is our skills development program. This provides grants to low-income Albertans who are upgrading basic skills. In the year ahead we expect to help 12,500 people in this particular area.

Some of the other programs that we are involved in in terms of labour market supports is one that we're actually very proud of, and that's the Youth Connections program. It continues to expand. There are representatives in this House that have had some experience with this particular program. I want you to understand that the feedback that we get on this program is very good.

The minister's Employability Council has been set up. This is an attempt to move some 20,000 disabled Albertans into the workforce. We have very, very good materials that have been developed to help not only the disabled person that might want to be entering the workplace but materials to help the employer and also to help service providers that are there to support the disabled.

The Alberta child health benefit is of particular pride to us, because in our relationship with the federal government through the Alberta child health benefit program we believe that we've developed a model that fits right in line with this government's philosophy of flexible federalism as it relates to the federal government. It's through that program that we can help with prescription drugs, dental, optical, and ambulance coverage for some 62,000 children of low-income families here in the province.

Employment standards is a part of our responsibility. Again, in that manner we're trying to provide a workplace situation that is deemed as equitable both from the employer and the employee's side. A recent change in that area that you will be familiar with is, of course, the change to maternity and parental leave.

Workplace health and safety is, again, a main area. Of course, Alberta enjoys one of the lowest incident rates of injury on the job, so we should not have to accept any particular statistic in that area. But there are going to be things that happen, and we need to keep them controlled as best we can.

Under the personnel administration office we have a budget of $7.9 million. Again, we're responsible for providing services to other departments that really are involved with 21,000 public service employees across this province in 166 locations. Many of you understand that there are challenges both in attraction and retention in the Alberta public service. Really, as a workforce we are aging, and there are going to be some major challenges for us in that area in the future. This fall we'll be negotiating with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees.

The Alberta Labour Relations Board comes under our jurisdiction as well. Here, again, we enjoy probably the lowest statistic in any jurisdiction in Canada in terms of time lost due to labour disruption. We're very, very proud of that area and very, very proud of all of those functions and the 1,899 employees that I represent here tonight.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to participate in the debate this evening on the budget estimates of the Human Resources and Employment ministry. This is one of these departments that is getting rather difficult to keep one's eye on because it gets shifted here and shifted there, parts of it go to another department and another department further down the front benches. It gets rather difficult and time consuming to keep a watch on the delegated administrative organizations, that were formerly part of the labour department, which was of course amalgamated into this. With all the expansion of the cabinet it was surprising that there still is not a stand-alone ministry of labour in this province. It may have been a small department, but it certainly was a vital department.

Contrary to what the hon. minister has just said, the labour relations climate in this province is certainly in need of improvement. Whenever there was a long and drawn-out strike, what happened? That strike was just excluded from the performance measures. You look at the overall department, and the minister certainly has his work cut out for him, certainly his staff. You see the role that the employment standards office plays in workplace rules for almost 80 percent of the entire workforce of this province. It's a small office, but it enforces the rules that govern the workplace relationship between employers and employees for close to 80 percent of Albertans.

We look at OH and S, occupational health and safety, the law and the regulations. We look, of course, at the Labour Relations Board, the WCB. The majority of the department is devoted financially to programs for Albertans with low or no income. Now, it is quite comfortable, Mr. Chairman, for many to express in their comments on increasing welfare rates, or SFI rates, the notion that these rates produce dependency, unwillingness to find employment, increased rates of drug abuse, crime. That's simply the easy way out.

I would certainly encourage the minister and his officials to have a look at increasing SFI rates. If you look at the cost of energy, if you look at increasing costs that are related to energy, if you look at the time frame since there was a significant increase to those rates, if you look at all those factors plus the idea that was discussed at the growth summit that the clients, the individuals that are directly affected by the rates, would also be included in the discussions on what levels those rates should be set at, then I certainly would encourage the minister and his department to have a look now. If there are figures available, let's see them, and hopefully before the weather turns cold again in the fall, there will be some adjustments made to the SFI rate in this province.

While we're talking about this, there will be further discussions on the use of the claw-back in this province. This is the only province in Canada that claws back money from those people. We need to have a long discussion on that, but, Mr. Chairman, we first need to go through the department program by program.

I'm sure it's not the individuals that are clients of SFI that would be going to an establishment such as Buffet World, which has been a chronic violator of the Employment Standards Code. The minister, to his credit, has certainly done something that his predecessor in the department of labour for whatever reason did not feel comfortable in doing. The minister has shown a willingness to enforce the occupational health and safety rules and regulations. Now, that is a good start.

The accident rates in this province and the death rate on jobsites have been deplorable. Members can stand up and state: "Oh, we are increasing our workforce. The participation rate in the workforce has gone up dramatically, and that's the reason why accident rates have gone up." The number of new claims filed, Mr. Chairman, with the WCB is far greater than the number of individuals that are entering the workforce, whether they're young or old, and that argument cannot be made.

Again I would like to comment publicly on this minister's willingness to enforce the occupational health and safety laws and also to try to improve them. I don't know what the cost is of the occupational health and safety call centre, that provides advice to employees, whether they're young or old, employers, foremen at construction sites, or workers at construction sites. I would like to have a detailed short-term analysis of how successful the call centre has been to date. How many calls have been received? What areas of the province are they coming from? What age groups, if they're measuring how old these workers are that are calling, and exactly what sort of information is the minister's department collecting at this call centre? I'm told that it is successful, and I would be pleased to receive that information.

Now, given that the minister is quite willing now to enforce the occupational health and safety laws, I would like to see the minister do the same with the employment standards office. Case after case is coming to the constituency office in Edmonton-Gold Bar, and they're chronic repeat offenders in my view. I would like to see the minister devote some time and attention to that office, because, as I said before, it's very vital. With our participation rates in unions in this province being very low, the majority of workers depend on that for fairness. Albertans have demonstrated that they're willing to work hard, and I feel that at the end of the day they should be paid. Unscrupulous operators should be taken and let the courts decide what to do with them, and only the minister can do that.

I would certainly hope that the minister continues with the diligence that the department has displayed. Unfortunately, today I read in the paper where there was an explosion that injured six oil field workers in central Alberta. Just by having a quick look at this accident report, which happened at an oil battery, one can conclude that during the vessel cleaning operation that was being conducted, there was an explosion; there were vapours around. It is under investigation. This sort of accident, in my view, is preventable. The minister cannot rest easy.

Now, given the fact that an underage worker, unfortunately, died – and this is not what we think of in Alberta: someone that's untrained and underage working on the construction of a luxury condominium on the south side, almost directly across from us on the other side of the river in Edmonton last summer. This is the most unfortunate of circumstances, and it cannot occur again.

I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to visit the Human Resources and Employment library on the third floor on 108th Street. It is a chilling experience to go and open the files on all the occupational health and safety fatalities. These are reports, Mr. Chairman, that have been done, completed. Some of them, I think, are late in coming – and there are deficiencies in the legislation – because there was a shortage of staff. To go through those is a sobering, chilling experience. They're from all over the province and in all sorts of industries.

There's a family behind each and every one of those files. There's a family that has lost a loved one, in some cases the primary breadwinner. We can't dismiss or diminish the importance of these occupational health and safety rules and regulations to Albertans. We just can't.

Buffet World. I'm looking forward in the next year to seeing the minister tackle those problems.

I'm confident that the minister is going to have some success in reducing our accident rates in this province and the fatality rates, which have gone up 34 percent between 1999 and the recent statistics in 2000. A 34 percent increase in one year is totally unacceptable. Mr. Chairman, this year there were, I believe, 58 people, unfortunately, killed on Alberta work sites. In the year before there were 43. I will not be one to complain if the minister has to increase his budget and somewhere find more occupational health and safety inspectors and investigators.

The Buffet Worlds of this world: those practices cannot continue, because again it's not fair to businesses that abide by the Employment Standards Code. It's just not fair to them. How can they compete economically with someone who is not paying wages, vacation pay, holiday pay, overtime in many circumstance. It's just not fair to the businesses.

When we look at labour relations in this province, Mr. Chairman, we need not go any further than a strike that started on the 1st of April. It's with CEP, the Canadian Communications, Energy and Paper Workers at the Petro Canada refinery. This is the first time that this enterprise has seen a labour dispute of this nature. This is going on now six weeks. I would encourage the minister to use all available powers to see if this dispute can be resolved. There was a similar dispute north of the Yellowhead highway at a drywall factory, and it lasted six months. People were on the picket line.

Regardless, the best agreement that can be reached for collective bargaining purposes is an agreement that's reached freely by both parties, and it's an agreement that both parties can prosper and profit by. Those are the best agreements.

I was astonished. I reviewed Hansard. I review Hansard extensively, and I saw comments and quotes from different individuals who are still in this Assembly and were speaking about not wanting to interfere, Mr. Chairman, with the collective bargaining process. There've been former ministers of education; there've been former ministers of labour; there've been Premiers: "Oh, no, we're not going to get involved with collective bargaining; we're not going to interfere. We're just going to let the process play itself out."

I was astonished, and I don't think this bodes well, unfortunately, for labour relations in this province. Of course, I'm talking about the idea that we're going to make a dedicated line amount in the budget for teachers' salaries. That announcement in the budget is going to come back to make a difference in the labour relations climate and the labour relations adjudication.

The minister will have this summer and this fall – I predict the minister is going to be working overtime, because that was very, very provocative. We need to ensure that everyone feels comfortable with not only the Labour Relations Code but also the Labour Relations Board. By everyone I mean employers and employees and unions and management. Everyone has got to feel that they can go there and be treated with fairness and impartiality. Those last two issues, the issue of fairness and the issue of impartiality, are the cornerstones of a positive labour relations climate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when you think of the issues that will have to be dealt with in this budget by this hon. minister, I don't see a line item specific to any changes that are going to occur in the Labour Relations Code. I heard the hon. minister on two occasions at standing policy committee meetings say that, yes, after the election there will be changes to the Labour Relations Code. I'm wondering if it's possible for the minister to share the changes that are being proposed to the Labour Relations Code with this member and also the other hon. members of the opposition. Perhaps if the minister were to share this information, then these changes, if they are positive, would be much easier to explain and discuss with the labour relations community in the province.

Now, I was at a reception earlier this evening, and that idea was put forward with the Cooperatives Act. The changes in the legislation were discussed with all stakeholders, Mr. Chairman, and that amount of background detail and work is going to result in a very free and easy passage through this Assembly for that act. I would encourage the minister to do the same with amendments to the Labour Relations Code.

The WCB is another area that is under the control of the minister. Now, the minister may not like that description. I'll get back later on to my comments on the WCB, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to ask a few questions about the estimates before us this evening. I was interested in the minister's opening comments. I'm not sure whether he was being cynical and dismissive of the process; I would hope and think not. We're spending a lot of public money in this budget, and we're spending public money on some really very important programs, programs that affect some of the most vulnerable members of our community. So it's an important budget, one that does deserve close scrutiny and one that I think deserves a great deal of attention.

I thought I would, in the limited time I have, try to focus my questions and comments on that part of the budget that is on page 210 of the business plan, which is that "Albertans in need of assistance will receive support." I do it for a couple of reasons.

One, I have a constituency where my constituency office is across from a low-income area. We deal with a lot of people who are dependent upon the government for their income and for their standard of living. Secondly, and probably more importantly, is that I think it's a measure of our society how well we treat the vulnerable. Hopefully, in any kind of measure a society as materially rich as ours would be sharing some of that material benefit with those who are more vulnerable or unable to make their way alone.

As the minister has indicated on other occasions, the caseloads for people seeking and needing supports for independence have dropped dramatically. That's not just an Alberta phenomenon, but that is a countrywide and continentwide, at least in the United States, phenomenon. I looked at the figures given in the business plan, and for supports for independence in 1999-2000 the actual for the caseload is indicated as 31,112. The forecast is that that will go down. I noticed on a sheet from the Internet from the National Council of Welfare that the estimated number of people on welfare in Alberta has dropped from 196,000 to 64,800, a dramatic drop from 1993 until the year 2000. That pattern, although not as dramatic, is repeated in every province, and as I indicated, it's also repeated south of the border, where the nationwide caseloads there are estimated to have dropped by 40 percent since 1994.

So obviously a lot of effort is being placed on trying to decrease individual support on government assistance. I think that's a goal we'd all support, but I think we have to be careful that those figures don't mislead. I look at what's happened south of the border, and I would ask, in terms of our progress here, what kind of information we have on recipients after they leave welfare. What's happening to those people?

I note that the minister said there was going to be a review of the department. I hope that review might look at recipients after they leave the rolls of the department and what happens to them and their families. This interest is one that I think is very important. We should have a handle on what kinds of jobs they find. We should know what kinds of services they're using or continue to use. We should, most importantly I think, have a handle on what kinds of difficulties they face as individuals and families, particularly what those difficulties are in terms of feeding and housing their families.

This is being taken very seriously by a number of American states, which have put in rather extensive programs to find out and to track recipients after they leave welfare. As I looked at some of them, I was interested in the kind of information they were seeking and how they sought that information, the kind of process they used.

A couple of examples. I had one from Massachusetts and one from Kansas. The welfare department in Massachusetts actually paid the recipients who had left their rolls, paid them $25 for the first interview and $10 for the second one, to try to get some information on what was happening after they had left the rolls. It was rather interesting. They posted some of their results. At the time they were interviewed, about 60 percent of the recipients were employed, and of those about 35 percent were employed full-time. They went on to ask questions about how they found their jobs. It's fine to get off welfare, but how did they go about finding a job? Some of them indicated they got them from friends, some from the newspapers, and some by word of mouth. Government sources only accounted for 12 percent in terms of how they actually ended up getting a job. Given all the agencies and all the effort that's put into trying to help people get those jobs, I'd be curious if the same is true here. Some indicated that by just going door to door, by interviewing, they got their jobs.

They asked, in terms of food security, that now that they were off welfare, did their family, did their children have enough to eat? They had a scale. If they had at least one day without food, they tried to give an index in terms of the food supply for people who had left welfare.

They went on to look at a number of other factors, but I thought they had taken seriously the task of trying to find out what happened to these people once they had left the welfare rolls. The one from Kansas had them identify the biggest problems that they faced having left the welfare rolls. Again, 20 percent of them said that there wasn't enough food for their children. Overdue bills plagued over a third of them. Some had been evicted. Some had had their utilities turned off.

So life for the recipients, for many of them, was not easy, and I guess most devastating is that most of them continued to live in poverty. They got off the welfare rolls, but they and their families were still living in poverty. They were asked whether they were better off financially, and almost half, or 42 percent, said much or a little better off, but 37 percent of them said that they were much or a little worse off. In terms of being concerned about the welfare of those individuals, I think those findings should cause concern. As I said at the beginning, it's nice to look at the statistics and say that, yes, Alberta's welfare rolls have been reduced dramatically over a 10-year period, but it doesn't tell the story of the lives of those people in many ways.

Nationally, the States has looked at what's happened, and the big impact in terms of families of people who have left welfare is that they are doing better, but they don't have enough money, and they are still struggling very, very hard to get by. They are facing hardships. They don't have enough money for food or rent, and they indicated that life was a struggle.

There was an interesting project conducted by Human Resources Development Canada and the Social Research and Demonstration Corporation. They identified the problem that seems to plague people who leave the welfare rolls and indicated that our history of social welfare is one of oscillation between efforts to relieve poverty, on one hand, and then our attempts to decrease welfare dependence. There's been a great deal of effort here, and the minister has been involved in massive programs to try to decrease dependence on welfare.

There are a number of strategies that are used. When dependence is minimized by cutting benefits, families who remain dependent on social assistance fall deeper into poverty, and when benefits are raised, we have the problem of people depending on welfare. So they had a demonstration project. I'm not sure of the date on it, Mr. Chairman, but the project was concerned with single parents who had left welfare. They were given additional moneys to supplement their earnings. I know that we don't have a similar program, but for the recipients of AISH there's a benefit that can go to employers if they employ handicapped or disabled citizens. This one was for single-parent families, and they were given money to supplement their earnings.

That's been the problem, of course, with many people who leave social assistance. They get into the job market, but they're in very low-paying, minimum wage jobs, and they live in poverty. The demonstration project "doubles the income of workers who take jobs paying as much as $8.00 an hour." The problem a lot of welfare recipients going to work face is the problem of low starting wages, so during the demonstration project they tried to resolve that by topping up the wages generously, doubling it by as much as $8 an hour.

It was a rigorously controlled project. It wasn't put together hastily. There was a control group so that at the end of the project they can actually make some conclusions that we might trust. But the results, if I could just quote, Mr. Chairman:

A year and a half into the program, eligible individuals had higher rates of full-time employment and earnings, and lower rates of welfare receipt, than control group members.

So they got into jobs, and this initial supplement managed to get them over the initial problem they often faced. The precis of the project indicates that there's some reason for optimism about the project's future relevance and benefit for those who are engaged in the project.

I really have concern about the amount of money. The line item is 2, and it's $752,288,000. That's only part of the money that's paid in supporting families. It leads me, I guess, to another question. I wonder why – and maybe the minister can explain – there seems to be such a limited number of performance measures with respect to social assistance and those programs for the vulnerable. The base structure of the government's business plans rests on performance measures and the business plans themselves, being able to see a number of measures attached to dollars and being able to take those measures and judge whether the progress is being made or whether it's not. It seems to me that the business plan offers very little to the average reader in terms of understanding the progress in terms of social assistance and what's happening to Albertans who are on those programs.

I would suggest that as a minimum we might have information in terms of how many recipients who leave it are finding jobs, what the employment rates are of those people who have left social assistance, and how many of those families are still living in poverty. I guess an important index would be how many of those families and how many of those recipients returned to the assistance rolls. There's a great deal of information that is not here that I think would be useful in gauging the progress of the department and assuring us that the money being spent is being well spent. That goes far beyond the number of recipients and then quantifying the drop in those recipients.

As I've tried to indicate in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I think there is a great deal of work. I read an article recently where there's been sort of this huge push to get people off social assistance. Now people are asking: exactly what have we done? What are the implications of what we've done? Let's start now and put a human face on the figures we're so proud of in terms of the welfare roll reduction.

I think with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude. Thanks very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I had to arm-wrestle to get into line here. Thanks very much.

MR. DUNFORD: Now, remember: I'm your constituent.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. We'll talk about that later.

DR. MASSEY: Did he vote for you?

MS BLAKEMAN: I doubt it. You all are gentle people, most of you.

Now, this is such an important ministry for so many people in Alberta. It really can be their lifeline in many cases. So I'm glad we're able to give it the full two hours of scrutiny today. Let me start with a few questions that have come to me as I go through the business plan, 2001-2004, of the Department of Human Resources and Employment. When I look at the section under Challenges, this is a really interesting section because in fact the department is surprisingly observant about what are the challenges that are being faced by Albertans. They're sort of put out there and then just left. So we can get things like, "Alberta's low-income individuals . . . are finding it harder to meet their basic needs due to rising costs." Good observation. Yeah, great, but then there's no additional assistance there.

So people are having a tough time, and it doesn't go any further than that, which I find really curious, especially with what we know now and what would have been known when the budget for this department was being developed about the pressures people were experiencing around increased utility costs and certainly decreasing vacancy rates, which is something we've dealt with a lot in Edmonton-Centre. You know, the rents are going up substantially, in a lot of cases by a 20 and 30 percent bounce in one notification. The individuals, of course, start looking for another place to live where they could be paying more or less the same amount of rent, and guess what? It's just not out there.

My question around that is: what kind of report back are we going to get from cross-ministry initiatives around housing issues? Everybody seems to pay lip service to it, but we don't actually seem to see movement happening there. I recognize that in fact housing is in a different ministry now – it's been bounced around to about four places in the last two years – and it's not specific to this department. Certainly if we're willing to recognize that people are having trouble paying for food and rent and things like that – to just shrug and go, oh, well, and leave it strikes me as particularly odd.

Ah, yes. The WCB. Right at the very beginning there's a neat little statement that the following departments and agencies are included in this department and then this little sentence:

Since the Workers' Compensation Board is an independent employer-funded organization, their five-year Strategic Plan is not included with the Ministry's Business Plan.

Well, the Auditor General has repeatedly stated that if a minister is responsible under legislation for an agency, then they should be reporting on it. Certainly the minutiae, the fine details of this sort of thing, often escape the public. If they know that this is the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment and WCB falls under it, then they expect to see some kind of reporting from WCB. So I just find it very odd that we don't get that included here, and frankly I think we should.

The Auditor General has been on for some time to have consolidated statements. If the legislation sets up a relationship with the minister, then we should have the reporting out here, where everybody can see it. I know that the minister is well aware of the many problems that people experience with WCB. There's been a number of promises that things are going to get better and that we're going to hear about things, so I'm looking forward to how that's going to happen.

I'm going back to the Challenges again and the supports for independence. I'm wondering if the minister can supply me with an answer about why this government has a policy of discriminating against lower income women. We have an instance where the government is actively encouraging and promoting women from middle-income families. Where there can afford to be a single earner and one person stay home, there are tax breaks and initiatives being put in place. But under supports for independence, where we're obviously dealing with someone in a lower economic stratum, there's an insistence that a mother be looking for work when the child is six months old. So right there we've got a very odd setup. There's an encouragement here and incentives for women to stay home. But gee, you know, if you're going to be depending on the government, no. Better be at work as soon as the kid is six months old. I've asked that question before, and no one in the government has ever been able to explain why they've made those choices. So I'll put it on record again. Maybe I'll be three times lucky.

When we look at the core business of "positive workplace environments and the establishment of professional and workplace standards," there's an interesting thing I'm hearing about from some of the labourers, workers out in the field. With a move to no monitoring at all or to self-monitoring in an industry, a strange thing has happened. We have companies, who I'm sure intended this as a positive incentive, setting up things like, you know, if the team goes so many days without a workplace accident, everybody on the team gets a trip to Hawaii or they all get some kind of merchandise. [interjections] Yeah, oh yeah. What's happening is that in fact the workers, in loyalty to their colleagues, may well get injured but don't want to . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, could you find your seat?
Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much.

So I'm sure without meaning to, we've had what was meant to be an incentive perverted or corrupted. We now have workers that are afraid to in fact go through the process that's available to them to report injuries and have an opportunity for practices in a workplace that are contributing to injuries to be examined. That whole system is being corrupted in that workers are choosing not to report. I know that members of the government would say: well, that's their choice if they don't want to admit that they've been injured. But really they've been put in a position through peer pressure and other considerations where they feel they can't. We have injured workers who are not getting the care they should have. We're also not getting the statistics about where injuries are happening. I'm not pretending that this is widespread or that there are thousands of cases of this, but it is something that has been brought up to me more than once. I'm probably thinking three or four different folks have come in to talk to me about this, and I'd be interested in how the minister plans to deal with that kind of aberration in the intent.

9:00

You know, this government's relationship with workers has always been really interesting. It's almost as though – and this can't be true – the government doesn't really like workers, people that work.

MR. DUNFORD: Not true.

AN HON. MEMBER: Say it isn't so.

MS BLAKEMAN: That's for the minister to say it isn't so, and I'm sure when he gets his opportunity, he will.

When we look at the things we prize in our society, where did they come from? Was this brought to us on high from the truly powerful and wealthy? Did they come up with the idea of public health care? Nope. Did they even come up with the idea of public education? Nope. This came from the workers, who said: this is what we all need to have a better world, a better Canada, a better Alberta. I often find this government's relationship with workers almost destructive. It strikes me at times that the government doesn't want to see any unions at all for anybody, no how, no way.

It's interesting what's going on in question period where questions are being asked about why for the first time ever the government would take out a line item, hold a press conference on it to highlight it, to say, look, this is how much money we've allotted to a given group of people in a collective bargaining situation, highlight that, and then shrug and look innocent and go: "Gee, no, we're not interfering in the collective bargaining process." Huh? Well, yeah. I mean, that sure told everybody exactly how much money was there. That's exactly what was going on.

The words both on and off the microphone that I've heard in the Assembly around unions like the ATA or the United Nurses association, around the AFL, around AUPE or CUPE – it just seems to be a lack of appreciation for the people who really make our world go round, frankly. They're the people that get the work done.

On the one hand, we have the government admitting that we're going to have to find new entrants to the workforce and we need higher immigration to be able to fill all the jobs we have in that working sector, but there sure is a bad attitude from the government towards that working sector. It almost is the idea of being a Mexico north, where workers are all earning low or minimum wages and the manufacturing sector or whatever sector could make mountains of money with very low-paid workers.

This has got to come back on the government. Who do you think pays the taxes? I mean, yeah, the wealthy pay a certain percentage, not as much as everybody else. Some tax money does come from the wealthy, but frankly most of it comes from the working folk. If you manage to make everybody work at minimum wage or slightly above, it's going to affect your bottom line, but that never seems to be taken into consideration by this government.

One of the other things that I'm interested in around labour relations – a couple of things. I'm interested in a discussion around replacement worker legislation. One of the things that I'm glad has been brought to my attention while I've been in this Assembly is the number of strikes we have here that go on for an extraordinarily long time. We're not talking a couple of weeks, six weeks. We're talking six months, eight months, a year, more than a year. Why is that happening? Well, I mean, what incentive is there for an employer to settle, to go into a bargaining situation with workers? What the heck? I mean, they just bring in replacement workers and keep right on going. The transit strike in Calgary. What's the incentive for any employer to settle when they just bring in replacement workers and keep going? You know, the original workers can just be on the street forever, which frankly is coming close to happening in some of these strikes.

I think what's most important in that, if there was only one thing I could convince the government to do, is to have binding contract arbitration on first contracts. That's certainly what happened to the Calgary Herald, and I think that's the most chilling prospect: those people interested in forming unions don't even get a chance to get off the ground. I'd be really interested . . . Oh, I am an optimist at times, aren't I? Well, I'd be really interested in seeing that kind of support from the government for binding contract arbitration on the first contract. I'm an optimist, but you know, I'll just keep working on it. Yeah.

Now, my very favourite: performance measurement. Well, let's have a look at the performance measurements in this department. Please let there not be anything about a survey of satisfaction. Oh, boy. Look under goal 1: "percentage of clients satisfied with workplace and labour market information." Huh.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's a lot of sighing.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, I know.

You know, this is not giving the scrutinizing public the tools to work with. It's not giving the department the tools to work with. I mean, yeah, it's nice to know that people are satisfied. But is that the driving purpose behind everything: people are satisfied? Don't you want to know if they're employed at a job that brings them above the minimum wage or that we have enough workers in sectors where we are short of workers? No. We're satisfied with workplace and labour market information. Boy, that's really going to solve all the problems in the labour market today. People get good brochures. Yup, that'll bring us forward.

A couple of actual specifics. When I look under that, in a number of cases here we've got the actual for 1999-2000, and the targets for 2001 and higher are in fact lower than what the actual was. So Labour Market Information Centre services: 86 percent. I suppose that's 86 percent satisfaction with information. Then we look at 2000-2001 and 2001-02 and 2002-03 and 2003-04, and the target is "85% or higher." So you're actually dropping your standards there. Gee, you know, I would have thought you'd think better of yourself there.

Career information hotline requests. The department is expecting the number to drop because they're expecting people to be using the ALIS web site user sessions. And, whoa, do you ever expect people to be on the Internet there. Is this realistic? What's this based on? You're going from a little less than 400,000 on these user sessions, doubling that to 800,000 for the year that we just passed, for 2000-2001, and then going up to a million in this fiscal year we've got under examination. What's that based on? How are you believing that people are going to do that many hits on this web site? How many people looking for a minimum-wage job do think have computers? I recognize that they can go into the job centres and use them there, but that strikes me as very high.

Now, when we look at goal 2, we have a performance measurement: "percentage of participants employed post-intervention." How exactly did you get these figures? What's this based on? Thankfully, it is not a survey of satisfaction, which makes me a happy person. How are you knowing that in '99-2000 the actual rate was 72 percent? From where did you get these figures? Are you extrapolating based on how many people were receiving training and now how many people are in the workforce, and the difference somehow gives you your number? Or are you actually tracking these people and finding out how many people get employment as a result of the intervention, so-called, from the department? As far as I know, we've asked repeatedly to see if you're tracking where people go once they're cut off social assistance and have to get involved with these job-training clubs and resume-writing sessions, and the government has always said they weren't able to track people. So where are you getting this percentage from?

Interestingly, here's another one where the actual in '99-2000 was 72 percent, and the targets are "70% or higher." How is this a useful working management tool for the department? I think this department is one of the ones the Auditor General's talking about when he says that the departments really have to get useful, realistic targets.

Thank you so much for your enthusiasm.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to be able to participate in the Human Resources and Employment estimates this evening. I'm not sure I'm going to be able to bring quite the degree of enthusiasm that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre did, but it certainly isn't because I don't believe these estimates are very important. While this is a department that sees really a small percentage of the budget dollars allocated to it, it is a critically important department in terms of meeting the needs of people in this province. It is one of those departments that better than others or more than others shows the philosophical kinds of differences between the Conservative governing party and the Liberal opposition.

We see how the government treats this particular department, which now includes advanced education and career development, labour, and family and social services components, as very much a throwaway kind of department. We see them treating these people as not really a part of the Alberta advantage but as people who have needs that they try in the most basic sense to not necessarily meet but begin to address. That's where the difference is in the philosophy for us and from them, Mr. Chairman. We think that this is where we can provide the Alberta advantage for people. With the budget dollars allocated in this department, certainly not only do you give a hand up but you give a guiding hand sometimes, and you give additional support as required to get some people in these areas in employment that is not only meaningful but at a standard of living so they can raise families and enjoy some of the advantage the majority of the people in this province have.

So when we take a look at how the government has managed this department, then we take a look at their past record in part and see how that relates to what they're currently doing. With that I will be spending most of my time this evening talking about the Auditor General's report. It's too bad I have to spend most of my time there, Mr. Chairman. When we talk about a small department in terms of dollars, it's actually got a great deal of coverage from the Auditor General. He's devoted a full nine pages of his report to this particular department, and specifically he devotes it to the parts of the department that talk about people not in the mainstream kind of labour market.

So let's go through some of what he's had to say and find out what the government is doing to accommodate some of the concerns he had and see if we'll be looking at improved performances in the next year to come. I have my reservations about whether or not this is going to be happening. I hope; it would be great to see. We had a bit of a philosophical change in the government in that they started to support these particular areas in a more appropriate fashion, but I'm not holding my breath on this one.

The Auditor General talks about past years where there have been problems with controls over funds spent on training and employment support programs. As far back as '96-97 he was outlining these concerns resulting from inadequate program development and contract definition and contract management. In fact, we had public allegations about the kinds of concerns that were happening there, lots of questions in the House on that throughout that time period. There were deficiencies in performance measurements in employment support programs.

Let's just take a look and think for a moment about what these programs are addressing. These are programs for people who are trying to get retrained or trained and back into the workforce. So who are these people, Mr. Chairman?

These people are people in our society who are very, very vulnerable. They are people who have been at a disadvantage for whatever reason – social reasons, lack of training reasons, emotional reasons, family support reasons – and they're trying their best to get back into the workforce. They go to the government for help. The government says that they can help them, that they've got all these support programs, and then in fact when they're in the programs, they find out that they're not adequately meeting their needs in many, many areas, in fact to such a degree that the Auditor General repeatedly, annually comments on them. So when he got to the '97-

98 part of this report, there was some progress, but there were still instances of inadequate monitoring which resulted in a risk that external providers could receive payments for services not fully rendered. The risks associated with this, then, are that when reliance is placed on external service providers, there are significant problems that can arise from this. They spent a lot of the focus in the 2000 year on taking a look at these skill developments, and there were still significant problems.

What happens then, Mr. Chairman, when there are problems in these programs and, in fact, moneys are not properly spent? We've got situations where the government is not only being ripped off but also the people who are in the programs. If money is overspent in one area in these programs, then there isn't money left for other people coming up through the system who need dollars. I'm wondering if the minister could comment for us on the overall progress that has been made in this regard and if he could tell us what they're using now in terms of performance measures and what's happened with the dollars that have been overspent in the past on particular individuals. Has the difference between that overspending been returned to the department to help other people, or were some people just left by the wayside on this? So if he could answer that for me, we would certainly appreciate that.

When we talk about the ministry financial statements, the Auditor General talked about needing to do a follow-up of the prior year's recommendation that a plan and agreement for the delivery of shared services for Persons with Developmental Disabilities (PDD) boards and child and family services regional authorities be developed.

This is an ongoing problem, Mr. Chairman. Can this minister tell us, please, how this has been addressed?

This seems to be a cross-ministry issue. If we take a look at who he is talking about here, child and family services, and if we take a look at what the Children's Advocate talked about in the '99-2000 annual report, we see that not only are there problems with that particular issue in Human Resources and Employment but the same problem happens in terms of the department of family and social services between child welfare and income support programs, that there's a strong requirement for providing an integrated approach to service delivery. This is point 5 that the Children's Advocate makes in his summary of recommendations in terms of priority issues. So clearly this is an issue that the government has been unable to address. Can the minister tell us what steps he has taken to rectify this and what kind of progress we can see?

These aren't numbers on a page, Mr. Chairman. These are people. These are vulnerable people for the most part, people who come to the government for help and support often as a very last resort. When they can't co-ordinate the services, then clearly that indicates a big problem, and if the government could tell us what they're doing to address that, that would be very important, I think, for us to know, not only on the children and family services side but the persons with development disabilities.

The Auditor General talks about "a review of the systems in place to administer the Workplace, Health and Safety Program." So could we have an update on what's happening there?

He also talks about "audit of claims for federal cost-sharing." This is a piece of work, Mr. Chairman. It's unbelievable if you read through what the Auditor General has to say here, and I'm a little surprised that it didn't come forward as a major recommendation. That's coming up later on. He talks about audit reports on the federal cost-sharing claims where they had some recommendations. In the preparation of claims for federal cost sharing, they recommended "that the Department strengthen its procedures to prepare, review and provide documentary support for claims on the federal government for cost-shared programs." So of course this department has an ongoing responsibility to make sure that claims on federal government programs for certain cost-shared programs are made and are made adequately.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

What happens when the Auditor General takes a look at it, Mr. Chairman? He finds that in the final claim under the Canada assistance plan made over the seven years from 1989-90 and '95-96 they were overpaid by approximately $11.4 million. There were significant errors. How can that happen? You know, when the Auditor General starts to scratch the surface and finds some issues and problems, he keeps going and had to go back quite a few years to figure out just how much this particular claim was out of whack and states here that "the draft final CAP Claim contained large errors."

The federal government had agreed that the Final Claim include adjustments for certain administration costs of Home Care Services for 1994-95 and 1995-96 that had not been included in the CAP claims for those years because of the then unavailability of information.

Well, we know home care has been a big mess, Mr. Chairman. There's no doubt about that. I mean, you've got to wonder with the kind of hassle that people have to go through to get an extra half hour of care in their home and then we find out that the government can't even do its paperwork. What is going on with that? Can the minister tell us what they've done to correct those problems? What kind of paperwork schemozzles do they have now? Is it being done in a timely fashion? Can people expect that this government is going to make adequate reimbursements from the federal government that are accurate?

They "identified errors in the calculation of these adjustments which understated the amount claimed by $1.1 million." Well, how much home care is that for individuals, Mr. Chairman? I would suggest that $1.1 million would have satisfied the needs of many, many, many people in this province. That's absolutely inexcusable, I think, and we would like some comments on how it happened and what they're doing to suggest that that doesn't happen in the future.

The Auditor General "identified errors in the calculations to reduce the maximum limits on the amounts claimable" as far back as 1991-92. That "resulted in an overstatement of the claim of approximately $2.5 million." What happens there? They were corrected, but then also, the Department had failed to retain material to support the adjustments amounting to approximately $6.4 million to the 1995-96 claim for administrative costs incurred by the Province in providing Home Care services.

What happened to the paperwork, Mr. Chairman? Were those shredding machines going full time, or people just didn't submit the paperwork? What kinds of checks and balances are there? How can you have any kind of benchmarking system if the paperwork isn't kept in order? So serious concerns, I think. Has that all been rectified? I think that's an appropriate question to be asking. We'd like some detail on that.

Then we get to the formal recommendation that the Auditor General made, recommendation 24, on the skills development program. He talks about recommending "that procedures to monitor compliance by educational institutions with the terms of the Skills Development Program be improved." It goes on to detail many issues with that particular process, which is quite frightening when you think about the people who are taking these programs put on by the government and supported by the government. In some cases they are expected to come out of those programs with skills that make them employable, that they're not just going through a never ending cycle of programs that never actually result in a job but only result in huge burdens of student loans, eventually plunking them back at the beginning of the cycle somewhat better trained but still back on social assistance.

We see this cycle happening all the time in the constituency office, where people are on assistance for whatever reasons and are asked to retrain or choose to retrain, either case. So they get into these programs, and they're make-work programs. They're not coming out of them with any skills. They come back into our constituency office. They are frustrated with the process, and now they're carrying a student loan. They don't make enough money by any stretch of the imagination to get ahead of the game, never mind even keep on par with what basic living requirements are. Then they're told that they've got to go back for more retraining, and the cycle keeps happening.

These people get worn down by the system, Mr. Chairman, and it's a frustrating process for them. I admire their stamina. A lot of them end up just giving up, and you can understand why. In the very program where we should be providing more support and assistance, what happens is the government falls down in their ability to have compliance in these institutes and falls down in their role to support these people through the process.

In this particular recommendation the government's response has been to accept it in principle. To accept in principle isn't to accept in fact and accept in doing. What they've stated is that a new Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) has been finalized that addresses the risks identified in the audit. The Ministry will develop interim procedures to ensure compliance with the program terms to provide adequate assurance until the new MOU is fully implemented. In addition, the Skills Development Program is currently being reviewed along with other related programs to determine the most effective method for delivering these services.

Well, if they asked people on the ground, Mr. Chairman, we could tell them that they've got to be delivering services that are actually providing useful training. You know, sometimes they're throwing these people into programs where they're expected to sit up at a desk eight hours a day, starting at 9 o'clock and ending at 5, when they're dealing with people who have life-skill challenges. Sometimes there are intermediate steps that need to be taken there, not necessarily the job-skill training. First, they need some life-skill training. They need to know how to get out the door in the morning and show up at the job and get themselves settled and start to work, basic requirements, steps that the government seems to miss. Of course, somebody should have been responsible in the past for teaching those people that, but it didn't happen. They didn't. So now is the chance for the government to fill a gap in the process, and they don't do it. Anyway, those are some comments on that side of it.

The Auditor General goes on to comment on the acceptance in principle, where they talk about ongoing problems as a result of this only being accepted in principle. So there's a whole two, three pages that the Auditor General talks about between that recommendation and concerns that they've got, things like significant overpayments in tuition fees and living allowances. Overpayments here mean underpayments to somebody else.

They talked about how "until the new contract which addresses the present inadequacies is implemented, the Department continues to be at risk." So what's the interim process? What's happened here, Mr. Minister? What have you decided that you're going to be doing between now and then to ensure that overpayments aren't made?

9:30

The Auditor General goes on to talk about how "further audits of educational institutes are necessary, but no audits are planned." Why not? When they found such significant problems, why haven't they gone on to pursue this in more institutes?

The Auditor General talks about:

Results from the pilot audit indicate that there is a significant risk of overpayments. In our view, to address all risks of non-compliance with Programs terms, the Department should audit the remaining (approximately 90%) of educational institutions or establish other interim measures pending the implementation of the proposed new MOU and contract. These audits should include a review of educational institutions' monitoring of individual student academic progress.

They have determined that "on-site audits of educational institutes have not been planned either directly by the Department or indirectly through Alberta Learning." Please tell us why.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to arise to participate in the debate over the 2001-2002 estimates of the ministry of Human Resources and Employment.

The ministry was first established two years ago during one of the periodic reorganizations that the government likes to engage in. Now, at that time the ministry was formed out of the ashes of the old social services department and the old labour department, and the responsibilities of the ministry are as broad as any within the provincial government. The ministry is responsible for income support to individuals and families, for skills development and employment training, for labour relations, for employment standards, for occupational health and safety, for workers' compensation, for personnel administration within the government, and for the office of the Public Guardian. Given these diverse and in some ways unrelated sets of responsibilities, I will try to divide my remarks to reflect the various categories that the department represents.

I'd like to begin with income support to individuals and families, which covers both the supports for independence program, which is social assistance or welfare, and assured income for the severely handicapped, or AISH. Mr. Chairman, let's be clear; social welfare and AISH are income support programs of last resort. They are the only permanent barrier that stands between those not able to work and homelessness or starvation. As such, it is imperative that these income support benefits are adequate to meet the recipients' basic needs.

Now, how do Alberta's rates measure up? Well, not very well. I'd like to quote from an editorial in last month's Edmonton Journal entitled "Alberta's miserly welfare rates." The editorial says:

In 1993, the Alberta government slashed welfare rates as part of its overall budget cuts. Now, eight years later, with the government's coffers full to bursting, this province's poorest and most vulnerable citizens are still feeling the full effects of those cuts.

Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to briefly refer to a report that was done last year by the Inter-City Forum on Social Policy. It was done by a number of people representing 18 urban areas in Alberta including Calgary, Edmonton, Strathcona county, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, St. Albert, Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Lloydminster, Airdrie, Spruce Grove, Leduc, Camrose, Fort Saskatchewan, Wetaskiwin, Drumheller, and Cold Lake. So it is fairly comprehensive, and, you know, it's not just limited to the inner cities of Edmonton or Calgary. It was released by a number of people who work in municipal government, and they worked on it for a number of years.

Here are some of the findings.

Approximately one in five Albertans is poor, a rate that is similar to the [rest of] Canada. There are wide variations across the province however. As expected, the greatest rates of poverty are in Edmonton and Calgary, but Wetaskiwin, Red Deer and Lethbridge also have rates above the provincial average.

Children, youth, and the very old are more likely to be poor. In Alberta urban centres, the highest rates of poverty are among children 14 years and younger, people aged 15 to 24 years, and seniors aged 75 and over.

There are significant gender differences as well in the profile, Mr. Chairman.

On average, the poverty rate for women is 20%, slightly higher than the 17% rate for men. Among people 75 years and older, the poverty rate for women is 17% higher than for men.

Lone-parent families are more likely to be poor than are other types of families.

Some of this is not surprising.

Members of our Aboriginal communities and persons with a disability are more likely to be poor.

There is a direct link between the level of education and poverty.

This is interesting:

Being employed helps in reducing poverty but is not necessarily a safeguard against it. Over three-quarters of the 106,610 poor families in Alberta (77%) were employed for at least part of [that year]. Just under one-half worked full-time (44%). These are the "working poor" who earn the minimum wage or close to it . . . One in five poor Albertans works part-time.

This is interesting, and I think this comes to the point that I want to make in my comments tonight.

Being poor means making choices – difficult choices because the money is rarely enough to meet daily needs. Under Alberta's Supports for Independence allowance, a single parent with two children ages 3 and 7 receives $11,852 a year. The same parent earning Alberta's minimum wage for a 37-hour [work] week would make $15,220 . . . Both of these incomes are well below any of the urban [poverty line] LICO rates for a three-person household. The lowest LICO for a household of three is $20,790, the rate for an urban centre with a population of 30,000 or under.

So it's pretty clear, Mr. Chairman, that whether you are on AISH, on social assistance, or working at or near the minimum wage in this province, you are poor. That amounts to nearly one in five of the people that we represent here in this Assembly, so I think that's something that deserves the government's attention.

We have in Alberta the lowest social assistance rates in the country with the sole exception of Newfoundland. The throne speech gave Albertans some hope that the government might finally give some relief to low-income Albertans, yet even these hopes were dashed when the budget came down and we were dealing with these estimates, because there's no new money in the budget to cover increases in social assistance.

Now, there are those who argue that raising social assistance reduces the incentive to work. I'm sure that that idea has a considerable amount of currency in this Chamber, but it's belied by the fact that the vast majority of those on social assistance today cannot work and are not even expected to work.

My questions to the minister. What is the scope of the review of income support programs? Who will be consulted, and what is the time frame for the review?

Moreover, if the government wants to increase the incentive to work, I would suggest that they look at raising the minimum wage in this province. At $5.90 per hour Alberta's minimum wage is the lowest outside the Atlantic provinces. Does the government have any plans to increase Alberta's low minimum wage? Why doesn't the government link future increases in the minimum wage to a benchmark such as the inflation rate or average weekly earnings? If it's good enough for us, Mr. Chairman, it's good enough for the poor of this province.

I note from the estimates on page 257 that the government is looking at a small increase in AISH rates. Is the government planning to increase the $855 per month rate received by AISH recipients, or is the increase designed to cover rising caseloads only?

I want next to move to the area of labour relations or, as the estimates book prefers to call them, workplace relationships. Albertans belonging to trade unions tend to have higher pay, better benefits, and more job security than Albertans who are unorganized. Despite the clear benefits to working Albertans from belonging to trade unions, we have a provincial government that barely bothers to disguise its contempt for organized labour.

Just last week in this House we had the minister of labour say that the reason Alberta enjoys the lowest unionization rate in the country is because Alberta workers don't want to belong to unions. Well, that's an interesting statement, Mr. Chairman. We would certainly ask about those workers at the Calgary Herald who lined up to belong to a union and went out on a very bitter strike to defend that union and to defend their right to organize. The government turned their backs on them and left them hanging. Let's take also in Calgary another example, the Dynamic Furniture workers, who democratically decided to join a union, yet were unable to obtain a first collective agreement because their employers refused to bargain in good faith.

In the case of the Calgary Herald journalists, decertification was a condition of their returning to work after a protracted labour dispute. Now, why do we have legislation at all governing the formation of unions if an employer is allowed to bargain and insist, as a condition for a collective agreement, that the union be decertified? I think in any other jurisdiction – and I stand to be corrected – this kind of thing would be beyond anything that was permitted under a labour act. So here we have a situation where workers go out on a strike, they can't get an agreement against one of the most powerful employers in the entire province, and in the end the employer makes it a condition for them to return to work that they not have a union. If that doesn't fly in the face of any reasonable intention of labour relations, I don't know what else does, yet that's allowed here in Alberta, and I think it's a real shame.

Alberta's unfair labour laws are a contributing factor to our low unionization rate. In that respect I want to ask the minister if the government would consider progressive changes to Alberta's labour code, such as automatic first contract arbitration in cases where an anti-union employer refuses to bargain in good faith. Will the government abandon plans to ban the right to strike for ambulance workers under so-called essential services legislation? Why doesn't the government acknowledge that banning the right to strike does not prevent strikes but rather poisons the labour relations environment in the place where it's imposed?

I note that the government is proposing to provide a modest increase in workplace health and safety funding. What specific measures is the government planning to undertake to address unacceptably high accident rates? I saw that there was another case today: a number of workers were injured in a battery explosion in this province. We all have agreed in this House that the rate of workplace injury and death is far too high, but without more inspectors, without better enforcement of even the existing laws, Mr. Chairman, we're not going to change that. So it's something that the government has to make a priority in terms of finances and policy as well as just words.

In the area of employment standards the government has a reputation for being quite lax as well. In addition to the minimum wage there's another specific area which I'd like to ask the minister about. It has to do with the blanket exemption from employment standards by the agricultural sector. While there's some justification for this in small family farm operations, we need to recognize that the agricultural sector is changing. We debated this a little bit this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. We're seeing a growing level of industrialization of the agricultural sector where you have massive operations organized very much on the principles of industry rather than traditional small-scale farming. So why do we not then extend the industrial protection to workers into a field in which industrial types of organization and scale are becoming predominant?

The livestock sector particularly is changing rapidly into an industrial style, with dozens or maybe hundreds of employees. What possible justification is there for continuing to exempt employees working for these large-scale operations from basic employment standards and from WCB coverage?

My final question relates to the minister's responsibility for personnel administration in the Alberta public service. Two years ago the Supreme Court ruled in the M versus H decision that continued discrimination towards those in same-sex relationships could no longer be justified. Yet within Alberta's public service same-sex partners of Alberta government employees continue to be denied equal access to employment pensions and benefits as those involved in opposite-sex relationships. When will the minister move to rectify this continued discrimination?

Those are my questions on the estimates, Mr. Chairman.

In conclusion, I just would like to say that all of these areas which come under this ministry are areas in which I believe the government continues to have some significant blind spots. When it comes to workers' rights, when it comes to issues of poverty, the government prefers to believe that the one-fifth of Albertans who live at or below the poverty line simply don't exist. I've heard that before. When I get up and talk about poverty in this House, I get all kinds of comments from all around the semicircle of the government side that it's not really an issue, that it's not really a problem, or that I should prove it and so on. Well, these are real people. There are many, many of them, hundreds of thousands of people, many of them who are old or who are children. The government needs to address this.

The government has lots of money now and is prepared to spend lots of money on lots of different things, and many of those things are good things. Some of them are, in our view, wasteful, but it's not wasteful to do something to get people off social assistance by giving them some encouragement to get into the workforce and be able to earn a living.

That's the last point that I'd like to make. It has to do with the issues that we deal with at my constituency office. The maze of regulations that people face who are on social assistance or some other form, such as AISH, really stand in the way of them getting off welfare. The government likes to say that they don't want to keep people on welfare, but their own regulations make it very difficult indeed to get off. As soon as you begin to earn a little bit of income through your own work by going out and getting involved in the labour force, it's clawed back by the government.

MR. DUNFORD: Not true.

MR. MASON: Well, to a large extent it's true.

I would suggest that if the government really wants to help people get off social assistance, they should provide more incentives for them to do so by allowing them to keep a greater proportion of the income, up to a reasonable limit, and that would really, I think, provide a real, material, and financial incentive to people to get out and work instead of remaining trapped in welfare. The welfare system as it's designed here in this province, Mr. Chairman, is a trap. It is difficult to get out of. The government should make it easy to get out of, not by punishing people who are trapped there but by making it attractive for them to leave and allowing them to retain more of the income that they earn as a result of getting involved in the workforce.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and listen for other comments tonight.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We're making our way through the questions on the business plan. My colleague from Edmonton-Centre had raised questions about goal 1 on page 206 of the business plans. I'd like to pick up where she has left off, if I might, and ask some questions starting with goal 2 on page 207.

Under 2.1 there's an item, and one of the strategies is: "Leading changes to remove inter-provincial barriers to enhance mobility of workers as committed to in the Labour Mobility Chapter of the Agreement on Internal Trade." My question is: what progress has been made on this in the last year, and just what progress is expected in the coming year? There are no details here, and it would be interesting to hear from the minister just exactly what has happened and what they hope to achieve in the coming year.

It's rather curious in 2.2 that one of the strategies is to "develop a multi-year plan to address the demand for scarce skills." I say that it's rather curious because hasn't that been a problem in the province for a number of years? Why now a multiyear plan? Just how flexible is that plan going to be? It is rather surprising to see it here. What are the skills that they're looking at? What kind of people are they looking for? What are the areas that they expect to try to beef up in terms of available workers? So could we have some more details on that multiyear plan and maybe a bit of an explanation why at this particular point it appears in the budget and the kind of resources that they expect are going to be needed to carry that out?

If I could skip over to the performance measures on the bottom of page 207, where it's got the "percentage of participants employed post-intervention," it was 72 percent in 1999-2000, and targets are 70 percent or higher. How long after the intervention is employment measured? When is this index computed, and is it measured again? It refers, I guess, to my previous comments, Mr. Chairman. How often do they intend to take that measure? A year, two years later? How long will the tracking go on?

If I could raise some questions about the supplemental information on page 208, under goal 2 of the business plan. Under the total number of learners by special group type that were employed, the youth 1999-2000 actual was 82 percent employed. What's the explanation for dropping the target to 70 percent? It doesn't seem, on the face of it, to make much sense, Mr. Chairman, that you would have a target that had been reached at 82 percent and it's dropped to 70.

Along the same line, why the rather low target for aboriginals of 60 percent? Can we have a bit of an explanation for that? The total number of learners was 42,166 in 1999-2000 and is expected to rise to 42,400 in 2001-2002. The total budget, the cost for that training and employment support, is $276,206,000. Now, I know you can't do the math this way, but if you roughly divide the number of learners into that budget, it comes to about $6,500 a learner a year. Are we getting that kind of value for the money that's in this budget?

Under goal 3 on page 208, "Alberta will have a fair, safe and healthy work environment," I have some questions under the subprograms. In 3.1 one of the strategies is to complete “the comprehensive review of regulations under the Occupational Health and Safety Act.” Could we have some explanation as to why the review was undertaken and when they expect that that review will be completed? Again, what are the outcomes? What can we expect from the review?

There’s another strategy: “targeting inspections for poor health and safety performers and uncontrolled hazards.” Just how are these targets going to be set? What is the process that is going to be used? Is this going to have implications for other operations like the random inspection of work sites? Could we have some information on that.

A further strategy under 3.1 is “working with Alberta Justice to ensure [that] specialized Crown prosecutors are available for prosecutions under the Occupational Health and Safety Act.” Just what are they looking at in terms of numbers of Crown prosecutors? Could we have an indication?

The last strategy that I’d like to focus on there is the one that indicates: “ensuring the number of Workplace Health and Safety officers keeps pace with the growth of the Alberta economy.” Because the economy is growing and expected to grow in the next few years, exactly how many are going to be hired this year? What’s the budgeted estimate in terms of those officers?

I’d like to then spend a few minutes on goal 4 if I may. I’m sorry; I covered goal 4. I think, Mr. Chairman, with those comments I’ll conclude. Actually I’ve lost my place in my notes, and I’ll pick it up in a few minutes.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this point I would like to continue where I left off initially, and that was in my discussion of the WCB. Now, as part of the business plan here one of the key initiatives is to co-ordinate “interdepartmental responses to the recommendations arising from the two reviews of the Workers’ Compensation Board.” I inherited this job as critic from my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry, and he has been providing advice to me regarding the WCB. That member like myself and like many members of the public is very anxious to see these two reviews in relationship to what the hon. minister is going to do with these reviews.

Now, I described it as the brag book – grandparents have brag books, and so do governments – and this is what I would describe this document as. We’re looking at workers’ compensation premiums here and the Alberta advantage, and they’re quite low. “Alberta’s WCB premium rate remains the lowest among the provinces”, 14% lower than second place Manitoba.” However, I have to ask the hon. minister: how long is this going to continue? Our accident rates are skyrocketing. The files are opening up. I would like to see it continue, but someone is going to have to pay here. If the hon. minister could provide that information, I would be very grateful. If you just go over a couple of pages here in this brag book and you see the natural gas rates and the electricity rates, the accuracy of those forecasts or charts is in my mind highly doubtful. So if the minister could please provide the future premiums for businesses on WCB, I would be very grateful.

In relation to this whole co-ordination of interdepartmental responses, could the minister please tell me what role the Public Affairs Bureau is going to play in this? I’ve come to the conclusion that the Public Affairs Bureau is the control centre of the entire government, if I could describe it as such, and I’m interested to know what they’re doing in relation to these two reviews.

Now, the WCB. It is my view, regardless of whether you’re employed on a farm or you’re employed in industry or you’re employed in a store, that if you’re earning a wage, then you should be covered by WCB premiums. That statement would of course exclude a lot of family farms where family members pitch in and help one another out. That concludes my remarks on the WCB.

Getting back to Alberta Human Resources and Employment and the fact that the department – and I’m resentful about this – demanded a $54,000 fee before it would release information to me. This was in relation to a little better than $300 million that’s come from transfer payments from the federal government. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about this earlier. In his 1999-2000 report, Mr. Chairman, the Auditor General revealed that in the Department of Human Resources and Employment there was a pilot audit of 10 percent of educational institutions that provide “basic education, upgrading, post-secondary and apprenticeship instruction” under the skills development program that “showed significant overpayments” by the department.

The minister, to his credit, after question period at one time tabled one audit, and I was of the impression that there was a second audit. I would encourage the minister to release that audit, look through his files and find that audit. There is a lot of money here. The pilot audit covering the period from October 1998 to March 2000 revealed noncompliance with an unenforceable memorandum of understanding, failure to deal with student nonattendance, failure to report changes in financial status, and failure to properly calculate refunds to the department for tuition fees.

Perhaps I wouldn’t mind paying this $54,000, if I had it, to get all of this information and sift through it, but to be stonewalled by the department was quite frustrating. Now, if the $54,000 was used to alleviate child poverty, then that would be a useful purpose for this excessive fee. But this is totally unacceptable if a government is to be open and accountable.

All government money is tax dollars, but the federal government and what information they have regarding this – and this has been tested through FOIP. It will be interesting to see how open and accountable they are regarding this issue. This is totally unacceptable. As I understand it, there are going to be future programs like this.

Now, I understand that with the Alberta skills development program the department pays a fee per student to educational institutions and in some cases a living allowance to students. The Auditor General had indicated that “the controls in place . . . are inadequate,” that there’s a risk of overpayment of fees and allowances, a risk that record keeping by institutions will be inadequate, that obligations to monitor student progress are inadequate to evaluate the success of the program, and that there are no requirements for the educational institutions to report to the department on a regular basis.

This fee can be $54,000; the federal government charges $5. This is simply hiding inadequacies of the department, and I know the hon. minister doesn’t want to do that. I’m looking forward to the production of that second audit, and I will go through it at my leisure.

I also have in the time left here some other questions, and they concern the child health benefit at this time. We all know that one of the first priorities of any government would be children who are living in poverty and also persons with disabilities. I notice, particularly with the child health benefit – and if you could please bear with me, because I've got to flip some pages here – that the minister in the business plan talks about a roughly 25,000 increase in the number of caseloads for the child health benefit between the last year and 2003-2004.

Now, could the minister explain the expense on page 218, the roughly $18 million, an increase from $11 million? Is that going to be adequate to cover that child health benefit? What exactly is included in that child health benefit? Is it premium-free coverage for prescription drugs, optical and dental services, emergency and ambulance transportation, and diabetic supplies? Does it also include the shelter allowance and school expense benefits for families in the supports for independence program, the SFI? How much of this money is coming from the federal claw-back, if any, in this program? I would be very curious to find this out.

Also, I understand that the department is reviewing the widows' pension programs. When will this be done, and will the minister table this, or if the House is not in session, will the hon. minister have one of his department officials phone me and say, "Mr. MacDonald, come on over and pick this up"?

MR. DUNFORD: Hey, will you make a note? Get his number; will you? Give him a call. Can we call anytime, Hugh? Can we pick the time?

MR. MacDONALD: That's the spirit. I like to see that. The minister can certainly pick the time.

Now, I have one more question regarding the Workers' Compensation Board, and it's the settlement that was made with the widows. Now, as I understand it, there have been previous settlements made in other jurisdictions, other provinces, and those settlements were exempt from taxes. I want to know why the settlement that was agreed to last year in this province, as it has been explained to me, is not exempt from taxes.

10:10

MR. DUNFORD: Ask your federal cousins. They're the ones doing it.

MR. MacDONALD: Now, I already hear that the federal Liberals are getting blamed for this.

I would be very curious as to why in other jurisdictions it was not. If this is a so-called political decision, perhaps the minister can work and co-operate with the federal government and resolve this issue and resolve this issue in favour of those who waited years and years and years for compensation that is rightfully theirs. I would appreciate it if the minister would stand up and be counted on this issue again and work for a successful resolution to this, because it is my view that all compensation from the WCB should be exempt from taxation, and that's as I understand it.

We also have to look a little further, Mr. Chairman, at the business plan and see how the performance measures are going to work.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the time has expired.

Hon. minister, any closing remarks?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank all of the members that participated in the debate. We had a wide-ranging field of questions. Some of it was on topic. In any event, staff were here tonight listening, making notes. We will have written answers provided as soon as possible.

MRS. NELSON: By tomorrow; right?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, not by tomorrow, no, but certainly within a reasonable time.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Human Resources and Employment, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$1,092,777,000
--	-----------------

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again another time.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following department.

Human Resources and Employment: operating expense and capital investment, $1,092,777,000.
--

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed. Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am refreshed by a very enlightened evening, and I would move that we now stand adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[At 10:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 10, 2001
Date: 01/05/10

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Bill Pr. 3 The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company Act

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford I beg leave to introduce Bill Pr. 3, being The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company Act.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a first time]

Bill 15 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001

MR. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 15, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill effectively lowers the single-rate tax from 10 and a half percent to 10 percent and increases the value of some tax credits, lowers the fuel tax on railway fuel from 3 cents a litre to 1 and a half cents a litre, and exempts tax legislation from the provisions of the Limitations Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 15 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bill Pr. 1 Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill Pr. 1, being the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bill Pr. 2 Burns Memorial Trust Act

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill Pr. 2, being the Burns Memorial Trust Act.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Bill Pr. 4 Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill Pr. 4, being the Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As part of this government's commitment to openness and accountability and in accordance with the Legislative Assembly Act and the Conflicts of Interest Act I would like to table five copies of the report of selected payments to members and former Members of the Legislative Assembly and persons directly associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly. This report is for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2000.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to table five copies of the report detailing every payment made by government in the form of grants, supplies, services, and capital assets. The report of the general revenue fund, better known as the blue book, is also for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2000. This report is another example of the openness and accountability of this government.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, a letter from Kim Bouwmeester of Edmonton, who is calling on the Premier to abolish health care premiums because in his view they are causing huge, unnecessary hardships for many, many Albertans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a letter from Mr. Robert Bouvier, president of Teamsters Canada, dated April 30, 2001, urging the provincial government not to support the extension of driving hours of truck drivers and bus drivers to 14 hours a day.

My second tabling is the statement of claim in a case involving Mr. Ziad Jaber.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to table the requisite number of copies, being five, of the Alberta College of Optometrists annual report for the year 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to table for the information of the Legislative Assembly a letter from 1994 from Alberta Labour signed again by Bruce Allen, research and approvals officer, regarding the certification of pine shakes.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you. On behalf of Mr. Speaker I would like to introduce to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon guests from the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. Seated in the members' gallery are nine grade 11 students from the Covenant Canadian Reformed school in Neerlandia. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Henry Stel, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon guests from the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. Seated in the members' gallery are 12 grade 6 students from the Busby school. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Nancy Zeise and Claire Stitsen and parents Beth Andersen and Mary Ann Isaacson. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

MR. VANDERBURG: Again on behalf of our Speaker I would like to introduce to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon guests from the Barrhead-Westlock constituency, my neighbouring constituency. Seated in the members' gallery are social 30 students Jill and Erin Holub, Adele Little, and Karli Wurm from Swan Hills. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Cora Ostermeier, and their vice-principal, Nadine Marchand. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to see that so many guests from your constituency have joined us in the Legislature today. I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce a number of guests from my constituency. I'm very pleased to be joined by a representative of students, teachers, and parents from two different schools in Medicine Hat that are in Edmonton over the next couple of days. Unfortunately, the one group will not be able to get into the Legislature until tomorrow, but I would like to acknowledge that St. Louis school has a delegation in Edmonton today and will be visiting with me tomorrow.

Today joining us in the Legislature I would like to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a large group of 89 students representative of Crestwood Elementary school in Medicine Hat. Accompanying them are teachers David George, Kathy Western, Jackie Sehn, Karen Shaw, Wade Lawson, Gary Ziel, and Mark Traber. Also accompanying them are parents Ron Hill, Don Milne, Cheryl Noble, Sharon Pudwell, and Mark Klautd. I would ask them, being seated in both the members' and the public galleries, to rise at this time so that they may receive the recognition of all Members of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly five students and seven adults from the Rosedale Christian school. They are seated in the public gallery and are accompanied by teachers and group leaders Mr. Roger Klassen, Mrs. Lisa Klassen, Mr. and Mrs. Murray Loewen, Linda Wohlgemuth, and Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Klassen. I would ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a number of members of the Alberta division of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada. They are the people who provided us with the reason for wearing white carnations today. Their names are Darlene Cavanaugh, the chair of the MS provincial board; Glen Lavold, a provincial board member; David Johnston, president and CEO of the Alberta division; Howard Riddel, executive director of the Edmonton chapter; and Kim Cassidy, social action manager. These people are found in our members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon Leader of the Official Opposition.

Gaming Licences

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As more details of the Jaber case become public, there are more unanswered questions. Court documents show that the head of the ALCB had correspondence with a minister of the Crown regarding a liquor lease. My questions are to the Deputy Premier. Can the Deputy Premier tell us how often a minister of the Crown becomes directly involved with the granting of a liquor licence in the province of Alberta?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier certainly couldn't tell you that, but I can tell you that ministers of this government come in contact with people on inquiries several times a day.

This line of questioning has gone on for a couple of weeks. It appears that most of the issues arise out of court documents and court proceedings. I want to remind all hon. members that these matters have been investigated and charges have been laid where warranted. I'm not sure of the value of conducting these separate reviews or inquiries.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Deputy Premier tell us what effect a minister of the Crown's involvement in the granting of a liquor licence may have on the success or failure of that licence application?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister most appropriate to deal with this issue is the minister who would be responsible for overseeing that department and would know all of the procedures of how licences are granted, and I would ask the hon. minister to respond.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time the AGLC is responsible for that particular process. There is a process that is followed relative to the granting of all liquor licences, and I can tell the Speaker and all members of this House that I do not get involved in that process. I have not been involved in that process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the Minister of Gaming: when can we expect a public review of the openness of those kinds of applications and the process so that Albertans know who's being involved?

MR. STEVENS: I believe that the hon. Minister of Justice should supplement my answer on this, but the fact of the matter is that the workings of the AGLC are very open and transparent. We have an annual report, which is tabled with this Legislature. We have audited financial statements. The fact is that there is no incident, no evidence which I am aware of that would warrant any investigation into the matter referred to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to supplement in order to clarify some of the suggestions that have been made and put them into an appropriate context. It's clear from the exhibits and the testimony at the preliminary inquiry, which have been provided to the opposition – the testimony has been provided to the opposition; I'm not sure if the exhibits have as yet. The memo that's being referred to clearly deals with and the conversation between the chairman of the commission as he testified in that was that he was concerned about the government policy relative to privatization and whether that should be taken into account before any determination about determining a new site. So it's very clearly an appropriate time for the chairman of the commission to consult with the minister on whether there was going to be a change in government policy relative to the privatization of liquor stores prior to determining a specific site lease. That must be put into that context.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Farm Income Assistance Program

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Bill 1 the government requires vendors to pass on the user rebate on natural gas to the actual user of that natural gas. My questions today are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why is it that in the agriculture acreage payment program the ministry didn't require the registered operator of the land to pass on the acreage payment to the current operator of the land? In all of your news releases you talk about this being a payment to cover this year's high costs.

MRS. McCLELLAN: No, I don't think that we talk about it being this year's high costs, because costs started rising actually even before last year. However, it's very clear that this payment is made on the year 2000 acres, and I think I was clear on why. The federal government offered to be part of a cost-sharing program, and their criteria was on the year 2000 acres. We had an option of participating in that program, which we chose.

Now, if the hon. member is saying that we should have split this out and written a cheque for one year and then a cheque for another year, I don't think that that type of administrative activity would have been helpful to farmers. What farmers told me is that they needed some help and they needed it now.

Yes, prices are increasing even more this year. However, I have had a number of calls to my office, as you might expect, on this program. Generally, they are extremely favourable, and generally they indicate what we indicated: it's a help; it's probably not enough. But they're most appreciative that this program is very specific. It goes to the actual producer, to the person who is farming the land.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the minister talks about passing this on, why couldn't you allow new operators of the land this year, say, a 30-day appeal period where they could apply to the government to have that title and the acreage moved to the new operator, away from the old operator, so that it actually goes to the people who are experiencing the high costs this year?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated in my first answer that the federal government made an offer to all of the provinces in Canada that have grains and oilseed production and, I suppose, others. The criteria was very clear from the federal government that it was on 2000 acres.

Now, as I indicated, I guess we could have administratively separated that out. It didn't seem to be in the best interests, one, of keeping administrative costs down, which, I will tell the hon. member, on this program are very, very, very low. The very large majority of this money is going directly to farmers.

Secondly, the application forms were able to be in their hands in a very short time. I announced the program about 20 after 12 on a Friday, and by 12:58 we had our first applications. So I think that speaks to the urgency of the program and also the need to make a turnaround.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: why is a farm operator able to receive the payment on privately leased land, yet they don't get a payment on land leased from a public owner, from the public?

MRS. McCLELLAN: I think the program is very clear on what this covers, and it is for land that's under a cultivation disposition. That's a very simple way to say it.

Now, we do have Crown lands that have improvements on them, that have been seeded to hay maybe five years ago, maybe 10 years ago. Maybe this year somebody is adding fertilizer to it; maybe they aren't. This program was very specific to cultivation disposition. But to protect the producers who in their management practices deem it a good practice to seed their land that they have under private cultivation to hay or to a forage, we ensured that it covered those crops.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's appropriate, I think it's practical, and I think it would have been very, very difficult to try and deem what public land that had tame forage seeded on it would be eligible.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Alberta Hospital Ponoka Sewage Lagoon

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last May, an entire year ago, the Official Opposition brought to the attention of the minister of health the health and environmental problems with a landfill at Alberta Hospital Ponoka. No real answers were given to our questions, so now we'll go back and see if they have answers this time. My questions, of course, are to the minister of health. When the department of health was made aware of the health and environmental concerns of the garbage dump, why did it order the contractor to keep working rather than stop work and fully consult the Environment department?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, a year ago I was the Minister of Environment, and although this is some time ago, to the best of my recollection the Ministry of Environment was involved in an evaluation of the particular site in question at Alberta Hospital. It was found that the materials that were found in the landfill site were in fact safe for the contractor to continue to operate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that the Battle River periodically has dramatic floods, how can the minister be sure that contaminants from the dump have not been flushed by these floods out of the dump site and into the surrounding watershed?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly review this matter with my colleague the minister of environmental protection, and I will undertake to do so. But to the best of my recollection, again, the Department of Environment did conduct such an evaluation as to the safety of being able to operate within this area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to complement what the minister of health has had to say, last year the Ministry of Environment, as the minister has recollected correctly, began an investigation of that site. We are just finishing that investigation, writing up the results of that site. I can assure you that we bored holes in that site, a number of holes, and there is no evidence of any toxic waste, no evidence of any contamination. What is there in that dump: things that were put in the dumps all around this country in the 1960s. What we found is that there are bricks, glass and that type of thing, and some building materials but no evidence of any contaminated or toxic waste.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess to the minister of health: given that people have experienced repeated frustration in obtaining government reports, will the minister release all reports and studies related to the sewage lagoon project at Alberta Hospital?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to consider that request. Again, I do not know what documents would be within the control of the Department of Health and Wellness and which would be under the Department of Environment, but I will undertake to review that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Conflict of Interest Court Case

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the government continues to stonewall the Jaber affair, the questions simply multiply. In the statement of claim against Mr. Jaber, which I tabled earlier today, it is revealed that on or about March 27, 1998, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission was carrying out its own investigation into the prior business activities of Mr. Jaber during his term on the Gaming Commission. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. How comprehensive is or was this investigation, and did it focus only on Mr. Jaber's lobbying efforts on behalf of Mr. Naqvi, or did it investigate all aspects of Mr. Jaber's activities while chairman of the Alberta Gaming Commission?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The tabling today is something that I have seen for the first time. The hon. member referred to the allegations contained in this statement of claim as if they were fact. The fact is that a statement of claim is nothing more than a series of allegations which may have some foundation in part or in whole or not at all in fact, and that is what is important about this particular document.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, then, commit to look into whether or not his department has conducted an investigation into these activities and table the results of that investigation in the House?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the hon. member that I will take a copy of this tabling and discuss it with the AGLC.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, what I would request of the minister, then, is that he will undertake to report fully on this investigation to the Assembly, including the results of the investigation.

MR. STEVENS: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that this matter has come to my attention. It may well be that there is something here to report on; it may well be that there isn't. In any event, I have undertaken to the hon. member that I will conduct appropriate inquiries of my officials.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Drought Assistance

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we know, the lack of precipitation around the province this spring and the leftover dry conditions from last fall and the winter have caused significant concern with the province's farmers and ranchers on how they will manage this year. Of particular concern right now is the pasture situation for our cattle producers. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister advise us what options are available for cattle producers dealing with no pasture and in many cases no water or limited water and herds to feed?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, this is a particularly dry year, and unfortunately it's continuing on into the spring much longer than any of us had perhaps anticipated and/or hoped. One of the things that is most remarkable about this dry period is the extensiveness across the province. It isn't limited to any one area. I understand that the city of Edmonton hasn't recorded as dry a period in 121 years of records. So while we don't like to talk about drought the first week in May, we understand that this has already caused some severe problems in the pasture and water conditions.

Members would be aware that we provided an acreage payment on pasture for farmers. It was $3 an acre. Those cheques are going out. Many of them have. Many producers are making arrangements to move herds to other areas. That's not the best solution, but it's one that's possible, particularly to the west country. We've announced the program on pumping water where that's appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, the challenges that these producers are facing are many, and we're certainly talking with them to look at what solutions we might be able to support them with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Specifically again to the minister: could you advise us on what kinds of options are being assessed right now?

2:00

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we're working very closely with Alberta Environment, with the PFRA, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, in both the monitoring and looking at solutions. I would say that ultimately right now our most pressing concern is water needs of the cattle producers. We're monitoring that and talking to producers about what type of assistance would be most appropriate to help them.

Water pumping is great if you've got a source to pump from, but if you don't, that doesn't work. Water hauling is another option. Again you have to have a source. Unfortunately, it's a large intake of water for beef cattle especially, and it's an ongoing, daily job, and when you're done, that's exactly what you've got. You've put in a few months of hauling.

We've been talking with the federal government, as I indicated earlier, about tax deferral if a producer has to reduce a herd significantly or indeed sell out. That is not a preferred option, especially with the demand for the quality beef that we provide in this province.

I just want to assure the hon. member and all hon. members that Alberta Environment and Alberta Agriculture will continue to work closely and quickly to look at what we can do to respond to this serious situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the minister of agriculture: again can the minister please advise us – she referred to it quickly – as to the time frame that we're looking at in terms of acting on any of these options?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the very short answer is just as quickly as we possibly can. I'll again repeat the commitment. Alberta Agriculture and Alberta Environment will continue to work hard on this with our federal partners, the PFRA, and try to bring some options forward as quickly as we possibly can.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Young Offenders' Programs

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 1999-2000 report of the Children's Advocate chronicles the poor treatment of some young offenders who have child welfare status. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. What is being done to prevent young offenders who have child welfare status remaining overly long in closed custody due to lack of community placements?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there are several things that are being done. We have in fact improved considerably the number of placements and the residency of children once they have been apprehended for any reason either under temporary or emergency situations. We have been able to expand our placements by agreements with various agencies so that there is additional capacity. We've also been able to ensure that one of the previous practices, which was a fairly costly practice, a fairly ineffective practice of putting these types of individuals in hotels, has been discontinued and that we have other secure placements for them where they are properly managed and cared for.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that over the last two years each child and family service authority has made considerable advances. If you look at that report and cite the number of times that there are references from individual children as opposed to a recommendation that perhaps identifies the outcome of certain measures that have been taken, it would be hard to read that report and evaluate that children are being protected in a less desirable fashion than they were previously.

DR. MASSEY: This is about the young offenders. Why do those young offenders often lack access to optical and dental services that they need?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any being denied access. I have not had any complaint to my office, and I would appreciate it if in fact the hon. member has any knowledge that they are or individual cases that are – references of incidents that happened previously are the very things that we are driving so very hard to overcome.

If I could remind the hon. member that when I was first given the privilege of being Minister of Children's Services, the expenditures were $467 million. If you look at the record of this year's budget, the addition of almost 400 frontline workers, the addition of at least 30 percent plus on the front lines in our budget, you can see that there have been dramatic improvements, and to suggest that things may not be improving is to ignore the obvious.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done to improve the planning between child welfare and the young offenders' system?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are numerous things that are being done. Currently I've met with the Solicitor General, and I've also met previously with the Minister of Justice. We have talked about ways we can collaborate and improve the system, ways that we can train staff so that they are fully cognizant of things that are being done in each other's shop. We engage in a number of workshops, including times where we discuss how we combat circumstances with fetal alcohol syndrome or deal with the neurological disorders that are appropriate. So we do a number of different cross-training purposes. As well, I'd remind you of the Alberta children's initiative, which continuously, vigorously approaches those issues that we may have in common. This year our special emphasis is on youth.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Orthopedic Surgery Waiting Lists

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Albertans, especially seniors, who are in need of knee or hip replacements are suffering while waiting for these medically necessary operations. Can the Minister of Health and Wellness advise the House and Albertans as to what is the maximum waiting time for these operations?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that I can understand the difficulty that it can create waiting for health services. One of our greatest commitments in health care is to reduce waiting lists. Under our six-point plan for the health care system we have put in some $55 million a year for the purposes of addressing waiting lists, and we are making good progress. Last year the number of hip and joint replacements went up by some 10 percent. Emergency joint replacements are done within 24 hours. The Calgary health region advises me that the waiting time currently for a hip replacement would be between three to nine months after a specialist has made a decision that the joint replacement is required. While we are doing more replacements than we have ever done before, the list continues to grow significantly. Regions are making every effort to ensure that there are the appropriate staff, operating space and equipment, and acute care beds required to continue to do more of these types of procedures.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since one of my constituents has been waiting 18 months for a knee replacement, does the minister believe that 18 months is a reasonable time to wait for a hip or knee replacement?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the blunt answer is no, I don't think that's reasonable. We have set a target time of four months for hip and joint replacements. Currently, individual circumstances may result in times taking perhaps more than that. We are concerned about the length of time that it takes for people to get this procedure done. I think those individuals who have the need for hip or knee replacement should stay in close contact with their physicians. If their condition worsens, they can certainly advise their physician, who can pass that on to the specialist, because specialists do prioritize their own waiting lists and schedule patients according to the urgency of their need.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Health and Wellness aware of any CRHA rationing of operating rooms in order to save money and that specialists are only allowed to use operating rooms five times a month?

MR. MAR: Well, the answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. The CRHA is not limiting times and is in fact offering additional time to specialists. The operating rooms that the CRHA has at its disposal right now are being fully utilized, and in fact at the Peter Lougheed centre they are putting in place plans to open and staff three new operating theatres for the purposes of providing more such services. It will take some time to reach the desired levels of service that we want in this area, but I expect that there will be improvements, particularly in this specific service of hip and joint replacement.

As well, I should say that the recently released report on the western Canadian waiting list project will be an important step in standardizing and co-ordinating wait lists for selected services like hip and joint replacement, and the next step of this project is to look at the recommended wait times for each particular procedure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

2:10 Coalition of Power Companies

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A large block of electricity generating companies in Alberta – included in this coalition are such industry giants as Aquila, ATCO Power, Duke Energy, EPCOR Utilities, TransAlta Utilities, and Fording Coal – appears together routinely before the EUB. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Would the minister agree that this coalition has the potential to become a cartel?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister. Seeking an opinion here.

MR. SMITH: Opinion, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: what measures have been taken by the Department of Energy to ensure that the coalition does not become a cartel?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no discussion about whether the coalition is or is not operating with oligopolistic power or disproportionate economic power. There is in the marketplace through the Power Pool Council a market surveillance administrator that looks very closely and carefully at market actions and reports back through the Power Pool. Of course, there's also the other avenue of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, that has the ability to, as it is doing now, conduct a marketing review.

I think that as desperate as the opposition member is to avoid competition in free market activities and would much prefer a socialist environment, as he's expressed on many other occasions, we think that competition will provide a number of opportunities for businesses that are owned in Alberta, public corporations that have shareholders in Alberta, and, in fact, over the long term, Mr. Speaker, will benefit all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: what measures are there in the Department of Energy to deal with the concerns about another block in Alberta called the Firm? The Firm is made up of associations representing municipalities, consumers, and large users of electricity who expressed concern to the EUB in December with the degree of collaboration in the coalition, noting the volumes of net supply that the coalition now controls.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, the hon. minister did stand up when the question was asked. Please proceed.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's difficult for me to remember that far back to the original question, but scaling my memory as I reviewed the second part of the member's question, there are the safeguards of a market construct that certainly promote competition at the wholesale level. It is early in the new competitive market model, but we do know that prices have come down some 40 percent since January 1 of this year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Energy Rebates

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past couple of weeks my constituency office has been kept extremely busy dealing with calls from constituents about the Alberta energy tax refund. The people in my constituency are extremely frustrated and many are angry over problems that they are experiencing in receiving the second installment of this $300 that was to be paid to all Albertans by the provincial government. As we all know, the federal government is responsible for issuing these cheques, and my constituents have a number of questions that they have asked me to pass on to the Minister of Finance. I would like to do that at this time. Why does it appear that there are inconsistencies between withholdings on these cheques that were issued in November as compared to the cheques that are currently being issued?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I've tried to go through the difficulties with administering this program a few times in the House. This is a good question from the hon. member, because there does need to be some clarification as to why there were no difficulties with the November cheque for $150 that people received and the cheque that they did or did not receive in April.

When the program was announced in September, we approached the federal government, in particular the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency, who administers income tax collection and refunds, to put the cheques through their system for us. We did that so that these cheques would not be taxable, to run it through the program. By using their system and because we didn't give them much notice that we wanted to access their system – that's why people had to have filed a 1999 tax return, so we knew they would be on the CCRA system – there was not an opportunity at the federal level for a crossover between outstanding debts for income tax to be deducted off those fall cheques.

Now, I know you're asking me to move along, but I think this is important. We have an agreement with the federal government for tax administration and tax collection that allows them to withhold payments if there are outstanding taxes on an individual's file. In the situation of November there was not the time frame to be able to cross-check between systems. On April 1 the federal agency did do the crossover, and that's why they held some of these cheques back: to deal with outstanding debts on accounts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second question I hear most often is: why is it that people who were organized enough to file their income tax return early and delay payment until the end of April, which they were entitled to do, are being penalized by having cheques withdrawn or reduced, yet people who were not organized enough to file their taxes until the end of April or in fact didn't file their tax return at all are receiving their cheques with no deductions?

THE SPEAKER: Let's get to question and answer period, not debate back period.

MRS. NELSON: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, again it goes back to the original answer. The time frame involved between the first cheque and the second cheque gave the federal tax collection group an opportunity to crossover their systems or to link them together, and for those that filed early or even through the Internet but subsequently sent a cheque, the debt for the tax owing was sitting on the books as of the date of these cheques being released.

I said last week in the House that we have been in touch with the federal minister. Our deputy has talked to the deputy of CCRA and asked them to correct this and mail back to Albertans the $150 if in fact people have paid up their taxes for the year 2000. It's my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that that cheque run will be made this next week and will be sent out to Albertans to rectify the situation.

MR. RENNER: Final question: who will be responsible for paying the additional costs for Albertans who will now receive two separate cheques, each amounting to a total of $150?

MRS. NELSON: Well, it's my understanding, as I said before, that the cost of the two program runs is $1.25 per cheque for the November and the April cheques. This additional run that we've requested will be at the expense of the federal agency because of the holding back of debts or current tax obligations on something that was supposed to apply to the 1999 tax year.

Class Action Legislation

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, an Albertan recently wrote: it is our view that there is no good reason why Alberta does not pass class action legislation; this is an access to justice issue. Who said it? It was the Calgary lawyer the province has just hired to represent it in its lawsuit against Servier, the French pharmaceutical giant. Both the Alberta Court of Appeal in '98 and the Law Society of Alberta in June 2000 called for quick class action reform, as did the Law Reform Institute in a report to the Minister of Justice. My questions are for the Minister of Justice. Would the minister please advise this House as to the status of his review on this matter?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, we're always looking at ways to make the access to justice and access to the courts and dispute resolution more effective and more efficient for Albertans. There are jurisdictions which allow class action suits, and we've looked at them as well as looking at the reports that have been brought forward by the Law Reform Institute. People do have concerns about class actions as to whether they promote litigation, so we've looked at the question as to how class action legislation might be brought forward in such a manner as to deal with those types of concerns, and it's a matter of ongoing review.

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, would the minister please explain why he's dragging his feet on reforming class action legislation? It would have been very helpful to Albertans who were suing over involuntary sterilization, pine shakes, silicone breast implants, or residential schools. Why dragging the feet?

MR. HANCOCK: I don't recall, Mr. Speaker, indicating that I was dragging my feet on the particular question but that we were doing a thorough review, examining all aspects of it to see how it could be brought in most appropriately. When we're ready to proceed with a proposal, we'll be prepared to bring it forward.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, in the meantime, then, Mr. Speaker, what other remedies does the minister offer to Albertans?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, anything that can be brought forward in a class action can be brought forward in an individual action. In some cases when it's appropriate, things can be brought forward in a representative action. I certainly don't disagree that it would be more efficient, more effective, and more appropriate in certain circumstances for Albertans to have access to class action suits. They can, of course, join class action suits on some of those issues in other jurisdictions where class actions are being brought forward, but certainly in some of the areas that were mentioned that are specific to Alberta, it would have been appropriate, and that's one of the reasons why I'm very interested in looking at the issue and finding out if there's an effective way that we can deal with the concerns that people have and still provide that opportunity for Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Code of Conduct and Ethics

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Jaber affair has raised serious questions about how and how seriously the government goes about ensuring that senior appointed officials act appropriately at all times. Its blanket refusal to require senior appointed officials to file a public disclosure statement is just one example of the government failing to ensure that strict standards are set for senior appointed officials. My simple and straightforward questions today are for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Are all government officials required to acquaint themselves with the code of conduct and ethics for the public service of Alberta?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, there has been a Conflicts of Interest Act since 1992. It was reviewed, I believe, by a committee of this Legislature. I may be wrong on that, but nonetheless a thorough review was reported I believe in 1996 and amendments to the Conflicts of Interest Act brought forward in 1997. In addition, there's a code of conduct under the act which governs the public service. Its name I can't recall just at the moment. All senior public service officials should review the code of conduct under the terms of their employment pursuant to that act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be a little more specific this time. What procedures are in place to acquaint senior public officials with the code of conduct and ethics for the public service of Alberta?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, that may be a question that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment may want to address further, being the minister responsible for the PAO, which stands for personnel administration office, as to what policies he has in place to make sure that senior officials do review that code of conduct. I can't specifically speak to that, but I would hope that any senior official of government would acquaint themselves with the rules of their employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, just the fact that we do have a program in place for senior officials, and we believe it stands the test of reasonableness and natural justice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is again to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Given that the statement of facts agreed to by the Crown states clearly that Mr. Jaber has no recollection of the code of conduct having ever been brought to his attention, how can Albertans trust this government to enforce that code of conduct and ethics?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, the enforcement is obviously clear in the results of the case, Mr. Speaker. If there is someone who violates the code of conduct or violates the criminal law, they'll be prosecuted.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that two children are born every day in this country with either fetal alcohol syndrome or another alcohol- or drug-related birth defect, resulting in significant human cost and cost to public services, which I find disturbing. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. What has this government accomplished in addressing this devastating and I believe preventable condition?

MR. MAR: This is a very costly issue, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that our efforts in this regard are an example of where you can spend money in order to save money in the long run. Since 1998 there has been a fetal alcohol syndrome cross-ministry initiative involving partners across government and outside of government as well. This committee has been championed by AADAC and the Department of Children's Services and has worked with departments like the Ministry of Health and Wellness, regional health authorities, child and family authorities, also the Alberta Medical Association, Health Canada, and many others.

The purpose of this initiative is to initiate multiple strategies of training service providers, providing funding for communities, and public information to raise awareness of fetal alcohol syndrome. Mr. Speaker, I should say that there are a number of recent accomplishments of this initiative: a public campaign to raise awareness of fetal alcohol syndrome among professionals like teachers, physicians, corrections workers, social workers, and of course the public, women of childbearing age and their partners. Also, our partners have included the Alberta Restaurant and Foodservices Association, the Alberta Liquor Store Association. Members may be familiar with the Born Free program, where a number of restaurants provide free nonalcoholic beverages to pregnant women.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the initiative has introduced a priority for treatment at AADAC treatment centres for pregnant women. There has been funding provided to community associations. A fetal alcohol syndrome awareness program is being provided to all new young offenders in the province during their orientation process at young offender centres. Also, clinical practice guidelines have been established for physicians to increase their knowledge about the effects of exposure to alcohol during pregnancy.

This is a complex problem, Mr. Speaker. There's no single solution, but I believe that we are taking a number of initiatives across a number of different government departments and with nongovernment organizations as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You mentioned one of the partners being Children's Services. I'd like to direct my second and last question to the Minister of Children's Services. What are your government's future plans to address fetal alcohol and drug-related birth defects?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member. Just last week with the hon. member who was engaged in the responsibilities of the Youth Secretariat I attended meetings in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, with members of the prairie fetal alcohol northern partnership. It's a wonderful group of ministers and officials from Winnipeg through to the Yukon. We talked about how we could collaborate and publish best practices, three per province, to initiate some further discussion within provinces so that we're not all reinventing the wheel.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of the people that are most likely affected by fetal alcohol or people who would engage in drinking while they are pregnant or intending to be pregnant don't read the literature, and you have to find other ways to get to them. We've talked about spending time in consultations with community members, and through the Minister of Learning we're looking at the school curriculum. In the announcement made last fall in commitment to action, we announced $48 million in the area of risk management. A good part of that funding will go for fetal alcohol syndrome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Trucking Regulations

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. CRASH, Canadians for Responsible and Safe Highways, has some serious concerns about the proposed plans to allow truck drivers to drive up to 84 hours per week. The teamsters' union, which represents 100,000 members throughout Canada including 45,000 truck and bus drivers, is strongly opposed to these changes. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Does the minister support increasing the maximum number of hours that truckers can drive per day?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, our position in the department is that we will follow up, on further consultations, in reviewing the numbers of hours that our truck drivers operate. I wish to point out to the hon. member that our proposal that we have will actually look at a reduction in the total number of hours. However, I want to advise this House that we took on these public consultations with the clear understanding that the federal department would also work along with us and all provinces to ensure that we have a clear, concise policy that is harmonized across this country. To date, Alberta is the only province that has conducted public consultations with the industry and all of our stakeholders.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister table copies of any reports or studies that the government has on the effects, both on personal health and public safety, of truckers being behind the wheel longer?

MR. STELMACH: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I believe – and I stand to be corrected – we are the only province in Canada that is jointly funding a research project with the position of looking at fatigue management. We know some of the issues with respect to truckers: issues of perhaps poor diet, overweight, maybe having a little heavier neck, not getting the kind of oxygen that's necessary as they're driving, all of these. I'm not pointing fingers at you, Mr. Speaker. I will say that these are all very important areas of review. At the end of the day, with the review that we're doing with the fatigue management team, with our department, and also all of the stakeholders, the goal is the same, and that is to ensure the safety of the traveling public.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the minister support the replacement of logbooks with onboard recorders to enforce driving limits in commercial vehicles?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, this province, I believe, today is further ahead of other jurisdictions in a number of key areas. In fact, we have a project going together with the Minister of Learning and the minister of human resources to look at a program that would be similar to an apprenticeship program for truck drivers, covering a number of areas like fatigue management. The other area, of course, is to look at the new technology that's coming forward every day in the truck driving industry, and part of this may be global positioning rather than just simply logbooks. I do know for sure that there's a group of larger freight companies called Partners in Compliance, and they are very eager to work with the government to ensure, once again, that the integrity of the trucking industry remains intact.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before moving to the next item, let me just indicate to all hon. members that today is the anniversary of the birth of the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, and tomorrow is the anniversary of the birth of the hon. Minister of Transportation, who will hit five zero tomorrow and this afternoon is offering hamburgers to anyone who wants one.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. This month alone 80 more people in Canada will learn they have this disease. Canada has one of the highest rates of MS in the world, with Alberta having the highest prevalence in all of Canada. Though MS is still deemed the mystery disease as the cause is unknown, its course unpredictable, and its cure is yet undiscovered, tremendous strides have been made. Today there are four therapies approved in Canada for treating relapsing-remitting MS, and one is approved for the treatment of secondary progressive. For those of us with MS this is very, very good news.

The MS Society continues to be a leader in funding MS research in Canada. For instance, earlier this year the MS Society approved nearly $3.3 million for 14 research projects and 46 research scholarships. Half of these projects focus on how myelin can be repaired or regrown. Myelin is the vital protective covering of the central nervous system damaged by MS. The MS Society of Alberta is strong. Many individuals willingly volunteer their time and energy towards service programs, fund-raising events, and public awareness campaigns. Many events will be held across the province this month or next to raise dollars for research and programming: bike tours, walking tours, and of course the MS carnation campaign.

Having been asked by the central Alberta MS chapter to be their honorary spokesperson for their seventh annual bike tour on June 23 and 24, I encourage each and every one of you to participate at such an event in your own community. I'm very pleased that I can announce that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has willingly agreed to participate and will be biking in the bike tour in central Alberta.

Only through working together and understanding this debilitating disease can a cause and cure be found.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Edmonton Emergency Response Services

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to express a heartfelt thank you for the brave efforts of the Edmonton emergency response department's fire rescue branch with regard to the fire that nearly destroyed Fulton Court, a 70-unit seniors' condominium complex in Edmonton-Gold Bar. Fire stations 1, 2, 3, 6, 9, 11, and 15 were involved in assisting residents out of the building and in fighting the persistent fire. Thankfully, none of the residents of Fulton Court were hurt or injured as a result of the fire. Without the tireless and quick efforts of the fire crews and police I am certain that we would have seen even more property loss and possible loss of human life.

In addition, I would like to commend those individuals and organizations who were also involved with the rescue and relief efforts, especially the two unidentified young people who alerted the emergency response department to the blaze, as well as the Fulton Place Community League for temporarily housing the displaced residents of the condominium complex.

I wish to point out that although the population in Edmonton has grown by approximately 8 percent over the past 10 years, the number of firefighters serving this city has not kept up with that pace of population growth. Firefighters continue to work hard to protect all of us. Their efforts do not go unnoticed. I would ask that all members of this House as well as the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar join me in thanking those individuals.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Rogers Sugar Ltd.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and recognize the significant contribution of a major business in my constituency. Rogers Sugar Ltd. operates a sugar beet processing plant located in Taber, Alberta. The plant is the last remaining sugar beet processing facility in Canada. Over the past three years the company has invested over $50 million to upgrade and expand the processing capacity of the factory.

Rogers Sugar is one of the largest employers in southern Alberta, with more than 380 permanent and temporary employees on the payroll, which totals more than $8 million annually. Each year contracts are signed with approximately 450 southern Alberta growers to plant 45,000 acres of sugar beets. Close to 1 million tonnes of beets are harvested and processed each year. Company payments to sugar beet growers total more than $30 million each year. Another $12 million is spent on operating and packaging supplies.

The factory is also a significant consumer of natural gas. For the 2000-2001 processing campaign nearly $11 million was paid for gas and electricity. Soaring energy costs are a threat to the future viability of this plant. The end of this campaign also marked the completion of the 50th year of operation for the plant in Taber, a remarkable achievement considering the vagaries of the world sugar market. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Assembly I offer congratulations to the administration and workers of this plant.

Thank you very much.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our House leader I would ask the Government House Leader for the projected plans for the business of the House for next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For Monday, May 14, under Government Bills and Orders in the afternoon, Committee of Supply, day 1 of lotteries, and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply with the main estimates of Finance and Energy, and as per the Order Paper.

Tuesday, May 15, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 8, Bill 11, Bill 14, Bill 15, Bill 16; in Committee of the Whole, Bill 1; and as per the Order Paper. Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, the main estimates for Executive Council and Government Services.

Wednesday, May 16, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, the main estimates of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Community Development and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, May 17, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, as designated, the main estimates of Seniors and as per the Order Paper.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance I would like to move for third reading the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001.

The details have been discussed in second reading and Committee of the Whole, and I won't prolong debate by going into them other than to say that this bill is necessary to complete the finances for the last fiscal year. I'd ask the House to pass it as expeditiously as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Regarding Bill 5 and the fact that there is significant money for the departments of Children's Services, Infrastructure, and Learning and also in reference to schedule B, in light of the time, at this time I would like to adjourn debate.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move on behalf of the Minister of Finance Bill 6, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, as you're well aware and as the Members of this Legislative Assembly are well aware, we're in the process in Committee of Supply of dealing with the estimates of the government, which will be dealt with in the appropriate appropriation bill at the appropriate time. The interim supply bill really is just that. It allows the operation of the government in the interim until main supply is passed. Thus, all the numbers and all the amounts that are being proposed for expenditure under the interim supply bill are actually going to be superceded by the main appropriation bill when it's introduced after Committee of Supply is completed. Therefore I would commend this bill to the House and ask for immediate passage.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, in regards to Bill 6, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the meeting to order.

head: Main Estimates 2001-2002

Children's Services

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Children's Services to open debate.

MS EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I'm very honoured today to present the estimates for the Ministry of Children's Services. I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce in the gallery some of the very key members of our staff that are here today accompanying me and listening to the remarks that would be made in the House this afternoon. First of all, we have our deputy minister, Paula Tyler; my director of finance, Bryan Huygen; and Nancy Reynolds, who is the executive director of partnership and innovation. I trust that there may be others that will join us, but presently we're delighted to have them here.

Mr. Chairman, I have on a number of occasions cited critical things from our business plan, both in response to members across the way as well as our own members, and I'm going to try and make this digest relatively succinct so that it affords me some opportunity later to make some brief concluding remarks.

If I may, this ministry, as you know, is new, but the work of the ministry has gone on for many years. We're engaged in child protection, adoption, services for children with disabilities, early intervention, day care programs, family violence prevention, help to children involved in prostitution, and those affected by fetal alcohol syndrome, and you're very familiar with our work through family and community support services. We do a number of initiatives such as co-ordinating the Children's Forum, and the Task Force on Children at Risk commitment to action was a good part of our endeavours in the past year. More recently the amendments to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act resulted in an act that is unprecedented anywhere, I would suggest, not only in North America but worldwide.

Our partnerships are well known, but another honourable mention today – Born Free – the Great Kids awards, work we have done on raves, and advocacy that we have done generally in this province to elevate the profile of how people can serve the children of the province better. The Yellowhead Tribal Services Agency created a milestone this year, for the first time having a pilot project placing First Nations children for adoption with First Nations families. This has never been done in Canada, and the work that was done complements Justice, the ministry of aboriginal affairs, and many other partners that we're proud to have.

According to Statistics Canada there are about 760,000 children in this province between zero and 17 years of age. Many of these children are healthy and well cared for by responsible families in communities, and their parents do work hard and spend time with them. Mr. Chairman, last year, though, was a sore point when I heard in fact that a thousand youth that attended forums in Alberta said the one thing they wanted more of from their parents was time. What a sad statement on behalf of the people of this province that our children ask us simply for time, time to be spent with them, and those that cannot afford to or do not spend time with them more frequently result in issues which are creating work for Children's Services.

Mr. Chairman, we're challenged, too, by a number of the outcomes of society in general. Our handicapped children's services expands its mission every day in part because of an excellent health care system that enables our frail children and those that aren't as well to be served within the system as they grow. It results in many more programs and challenges for our department. Mr. Chairman, our caseloads have grown 60.7 percent since '95-96, from 8,800 in '95-96 to 14,207 in 2000-2001. Lest you think we are alone in this, this is a North American phenomenon in large part, I believe, symbolic of other issues that are surrounding us in society.

Government is the permanent or temporary guardian of 53 percent of these children, approximately 7,900 overall. We also estimate that the child welfare caseload may increase by 5 percent in the current year. The children with disabilities program helps families meet some of the extraordinary costs. Handicapped children's services' caseload has increased, and the cost per case is also increasing in large part because of new approaches and technologies.

Mr. Chairman, our ministry is a major contributor to the aboriginal policy framework, which is a tool outlining collaborative efforts in the development of services for aboriginal children and their families. We have delivery agreements with 16 child and family services on reserve agencies, that provide services to 37 First Nations. We're also working closely with our Metis population.

Because our ministry is only two years old, still at a developmental stage, we have operational challenges: reliable performance measures, fiscal accountability, and addressing concerns of the Auditor General, to cite just a few. We believe that in this business plan we are addressing our priorities; namely, aboriginal services, permanent living situations for children, better outcomes for children in care, youth services, and building effective partnerships.

Our core businesses differ slightly from last year's plan. We have reduced our core businesses from six to three, articulating better, we hope, those key areas which impact significantly on children's lives. We continue to work, as other ministries do, through the Alberta children's initiative to identify those performance outcomes that can be most meaningful. Our corporate strategies and partnerships are enabling us to create effective human resources and to improve our strategies in caring for children.

In our new initiatives we have increased our budget by $2.9 million for the treatment and protection of children involved in prostitution, quite specifically for treatment centres, and have added $2 million to programs working to prevent fetal alcohol syndrome. We have received $20 million through the Canada health and social transfer for early childhood development strategies that were identified through the forum and the Task Force on Children at Risk. We will focus on healthy birth outcomes, ongoing supports to parents, and optimal early child development. A total of $6 million has been budgeted to initiate a home visitation program directed at parents of newborns, particularly those in high-risk situations.

For FCSS, a very important program in over 260 municipalities of this province, we have increased the budget by over $4 million and look to further expanding our initiatives. We have Dr. Bruce Perry, an internationally renowned child psychiatrist who'll be working on contract with ourselves and with the ministry of health through the Mental Health Board on creating even better strategies dealing with children at risk.

In conclusion, I know that I'll be well able to address the questions that the hon. members have both in follow up and hopefully some at the very conclusion. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that I am delighted that the hon. members chose to conclude debate in order to enable a maximum time to hear the issues that they may wish to address. I believe there is absolutely no more important ministry in this government than Children's Services, because we address the beginning of our future society in Alberta, and we can make them better with a collaborative effort.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I concur with the minister: there is no more important ministry in the government than Children's Services and Learning. Without those there wouldn't be a concern for agriculture or some of the other ministries.

Because I'll have an opportunity several times in the next couple of hours to speak, I wanted to spend my first opportunity asking some questions about the report of the Children's Advocate. I've asked in question period several questions about the report of the Children's Advocate, and I keep getting the feeling that the advocate's report is dismissed as no longer applicable to children in the province, yet if you look at that report and you read it and you read on the back page the disposition of previous reports, this seems to be a pattern: the Children's Advocate is ignored.

I know there have been a couple of reports, and the government has those reports under review, but I think if the Children's Advocate is to be the tool that Albertans expect that office to be, then that office has to be taken seriously. I think certainly the matters that are raised are serious. I know in response to my question earlier this afternoon, the minister indicated that there had been some improvement in the placement of children, but it's been a recurring theme in the reports of the Auditor General that there is a shortage of placement and resources and insufficient spaces for secure treatment. They also indicated that there is a lack of mental health resources to help those youngsters. So placement remains a problem. I would like to know exactly what it is the department is planning to do to make the matter better.

The report goes on to indicate that there's a "lack of consistent permanency planning." Some children weren't even aware that they had a caseworker, some had never seen their social worker, and many were unaware of the plan. That seems to be very damning, Mr. Chairman. Certainly you'd think that youngsters in care would at least be aware of their social worker. It may only be a few children, but still these are children under the care of this government, and they deserve better.

The report raises the problem of "refusal to provide support" to older residents and refusal to support them to adulthood. I'd ask what is being done on that. What are the plans in terms of overcoming that criticism?

A number of youngsters in care have behaviour problems. We know that those problems don't go away on their 18th birthday, so what kinds of bridging mechanisms could be put in place to help these youngsters make the transition to adulthood? Some of them even indicated that they had to fight for support to finish high school. You'd wonder how that could happen, given what we know about the importance of completing high school on future success occupationally for all children, let alone children who have suffered some trauma or some problems in their childhood.

I indicated earlier today and the minister did say that there was greater co-operation between the Children's Services department and young offenders, children who are under the Young Offenders Act, and I think that's a positive move. It seems incredible to me that there would be children in care in an institution that wouldn't have access to dental or optical care. Certainly the Children's Advocate report indicated that there are a number of children who were suffering because of that, so I hope the discussions the minister indicated she was having with the Solicitor General result in that no longer being a complaint in future reports of the Children's Advocate.

The lack of mental health services I mentioned before. Again there's a question as to the timeliness of mental health services that are available to them. The report indicates that often that kind of care is not there, and the root of the problem, according to the Children's Advocate, is the lack of resources. There's the problem of children who suffer abuse while in the care of child welfare. That seems to outsiders to be an incredible state of affairs, but it happens. Those individuals lack adequate support for legal representation, so it seems that the very children the government is charged with caring for are becoming victims under that care, and I think that's a state that's not tolerable in this day and this age.

The court delays of course are a problem, and it's not the Children's Services department that has direct control over those delays. But when rulings on guardianship do not occur, then plans for youngsters are made more difficult, particularly trying to put in place permanent plans for youngsters becomes very difficult. So there's a need again for the ministry to work with the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice to make sure that the court system accommodates children in care quickly, with the best interests of the youngster and not the court system being paramount.

Custody/access. For young people in care sometimes access to siblings is denied. For those not in care who are the subject of custody disputes between separating or divorcing parents, there's nobody who independently represents their interests, and that would seem to be tragic. I wonder what plans the minister has to try to accommodate those cases.

The advocate went on to say – and this is not a new recommendation – that in terms of child death review, “There is need for an independent, comprehensive, multidisciplinary body to review the deaths of children to try to reduce the incidence of childhood fatality.” There have been a couple of cases in the news recently, Mr. Chairman, that I would think would make this recommendation even more important to be acted upon, and I would ask the minister and the department exactly what kind of leadership they’re going to be taking in this area.

In terms of the system itself there don’t seem to be adequate mechanisms in place for the young people who are in the system to have any influence over it, to be offered feedback in terms of their treatment, leading to a feeling of powerlessness and again the notion that they are somehow or other being victimized by the very system that’s supposed to be working in their best interests.

There are problems with gaps in the education system for young people who have been neglected, who have suffered abuse. Many conventional school programs fall short, and there’s a need for alternative programs and for flexibility in educational programs. So again some gaps in the education system. There’s much to-do made about partnerships and working with other departments, and I’d be interested in terms of how this particular criticism is being met by the department.

The boundary issues between regional authorities and the creation of the regional authorities are not unlike what’s happened with some of the health authorities. Maybe it’s only in the early operation of these divisions that we’re going to find these problems, but the pressure for resources has led to disputes between and among regional authorities. Again the people who suffer are the children and young people in care when those disputes start to govern what happens to them, and I’d like to know what mechanism the department has in place for dealing with those disputes when they do occur.

I think one of the worst kinds of criticism in the report was the charge that children are being warehoused and that they’re “being kept in short-term care facilities for long periods due to a lack of suitable alternatives.” The term “warehousing” has been used elsewhere in the care of children, particularly in the school system where special-needs children have been warehoused, according to some recent reports, put in classrooms with no suitable programs. So I can’t imagine what happens when a special-needs child in government care needs a program if the charges from the special education community and the charges of the Children’s Advocate in this report are true. It seems we’re asking for future difficulty when we don’t address those problems, and it seems incredible that in this year we would be talking about children being warehoused because there are not appropriate services or placements for them.

The concerns raised about the medication of children in care, the “inordinate use of medications as a behaviour management tool.” That’s a charge that has been laid to the school system too. The Ritalin generation is a reality, and we’ve raised it in the Legislature on a number of previous occasions.

Along with the lack of opportunities for children in care to give any feedback on the system, there’s the charge that youth are treated with disrespect, that they are sometimes confronted with punitive attitudes, and, again, that they lack any kind of meaningful input into the decisions that are going to affect their lives. I would think it would be a charge that the department would want to take seriously, and I’d be interested in measures that are being undertaken to make sure that that doesn’t happen.

The budget announces money for new positions. I think I heard the minister indicate that 500 new workers would be put in place to help with handling the needs of children and youth. The problem with staff turnover is a problem not just here but in systems elsewhere. It results, of course, in discontinuity of care for young people, and the need for stable relationships for many of them is very, very great. So I’d be interested in knowing what kinds of programs the department has in place or is considering to reduce the amount of staff turnover.

The last concern is the extreme lack of services in northern Alberta. The resources are not there for children.

I took the time to highlight those issues that were in the report, and I hope they aren’t just dismissed as being last year’s or that was the system before the new system was in place criticisms, because having read previous reports, having talked to a number of constituents who spend some time in our office, I know that’s not the case, that many of these are problems that still plague the system. I think to disregard them is to disregard children, so I would hope there would be some response from the minister in terms of the recommendations. My preference has been – and I think the minister indicated it would happen – that before we adjourn the spring session, there would be some response from the government on the Children’s Advocate report, and I hope that that is still the case.

The advocate went on to identify the issues of greatest concern, and they were more limited. The top of the list again was placements, and the report chronicles the placement problems of some young people.

The second greatest concern was the delegated First Nations child welfare agencies, the kinds of problems that this delegated model has and the kinds of problems that are faced in this area.

A third area is services to older youth and the transition to adulthood, and it would seem to me again, Mr. Chairman, that this is an area that really begs some action. We can’t simply wash our hands of youth once they reach the age of 18, yet I know it’s fraught with difficulties.

Another issue is the disrespectful treatment of youth as being one of the areas of greatest concern. There is direct control, and something can be done immediately about the problem. There’s no excuse for this being an issue in a report from the Children’s Advocate.

Another concern and a concern for all of us – and I’ll ask some questions directly about this later, Mr. Chairman – is the child and family services authorities. I have some questions about the funding of those authorities, the kind of money that they asked for in terms of carrying out their mandate and the kind of money that was actually allocated to them.

So those are the comments that I had based on the Children’s Advocate, and I would like to move in the next few minutes to a question. In the business plan there’s the promise of a number of performance measures that are going to be developed. I would like to spend a bit of time talking about the child and family indicators and the kinds of indicators that are going to be put in place, but seeing you’ve indicated that I only have seconds left, I’ll save that for later this afternoon.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Chairman, it’s a pleasure to participate this afternoon in the estimates debate for Children’s Services. Certainly from my perspective I would like to commend my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods for his diligence in pursuing the issues and keeping not only the minister but the entire government accountable on this. The whole series of questions that the hon. member has asked regarding the Children’s Advocate report has been enlightening for this member. I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly if they have not yet read that report to do so over this weekend or the long weekend. It is my estimation that it has not yet been read by some members of this Assembly, and they certainly need to do so.

I see there's an additional $105 million to be spent over three years to support children at risk and respond to the recommendations of the Alberta Children's Forum and the Task Force on Children at Risk. There's also funding for the child health benefit program. There are to be increases there of $1.3 million to $16.8 million in 2001-02, and this is, I understand, to accommodate increased demand for health benefits for children in low-income families.

I would at this time ask the minister if any of that funding is possibly coming – and I certainly hope it is not – from the federal claw-back. Alberta is the only province that's initiating that. I certainly hope the minister's answer is a straightforward no on that. I don't know for sure, and I would be grateful if the hon. minister could please provide that in due time.

Now, I see here also that the province will invest in the health and wellness of children with $9.3 million towards the children's initiative aiding early childhood development and the prenatal program. In regards to early childhood development I hope later on in this debate to address some specific questions I have regarding day care, day care workers, and the day care industry in the province.

It is understood that the ministry has four pillars that it bases its work on: community-based service delivery, the integration pillar, the aboriginal pillar, and early intervention pillar. Now, when you look at the four pillars and you look at the trends and issues that we're going to be facing here, whether it's an economic issue of families continuing to come to the province who need economic support, the difficulty of the agricultural sector – commodity prices and weather patterns have contributed to this decline in the agricultural sector. This, as a result, has created stress on families in rural areas.

We look at 1996: "45% of Aboriginal people in Alberta had a total household income of less than $25,000 compared with 26% of the non-Aboriginal population." The aboriginal unemployment rate was over 17 percent; the nonaboriginal population unemployment rate was slightly less than 7 percent.

If we look at Social Trends, we see that "alcohol-related birth defects are a widespread problem" for families in Alberta, and aboriginal people represent close to 40 percent of the total inmate population. Four percent of aboriginals had a university degree at that time. There certainly is a need for culturally appropriate and accessible services.

Now, I understand from the budget that the child population will decline after December of this year and that more children will be moving into the teenage bracket. I note that between 2000 and 2011 the aboriginal population will increase by 22 percent versus 12 percent for the rest of Alberta's total population, yet one-third, or 33 percent, of children in care are aboriginal.

Another trend is the regional trends that are occurring. We look at suicide, family violence, incarceration, low income, unemployment, education: all these trends are being felt by aboriginal children, youth, and families, especially those receiving services through handicapped children's services and the transition to persons with developmental disabilities.

Now, in the ministry goals, core businesses, "Promoting the development and well-being of children, youth and families," I have the following questions for the minister under line item 1.1.1. Certainly it is quite appropriate if at some time, if not today, the department officials get a chance to have a look at my questions, and if they could provide written answers on behalf of the hon. minister, I would be very grateful.

Regarding this line item, what programs – and this is specific to on-reserve early intervention and prevention programs – is the ministry developing, what is the cost of each of these programs, what accountability mechanisms are in place for each program, and how will the performance measures be calculated? I had a discussion earlier today with one of my colleagues regarding performance measures. I'm very interested to know how these performance measures are to be calculated. Another one of my colleagues said that it was a very useful tool of management. It was a very enlightening exchange between those two colleagues regarding performance measures.

Now, on line 1.1.4 there is discussion on best practices: "Ensure that best practices for early childhood care and education settings are being shared, implemented, monitored and evaluated." Again to the hon. minister: what best practices have been put in place for early childhood care, who is monitoring and evaluating the education settings that are being shared, and when will the final evaluation be made public? I don't know if this is an appropriate time to bring up the Cleland report, but hopefully I'll get an opportunity later to express my concerns about the Cleland report.

On line 1.1.5 there's again a discussion. We're going to "initiate a new home visitation or mentoring program for parents of very young children and at risk families." I have five questions in regards to this. Who is taking responsibility for the new home visitation program? What will the budget for the program be? How many families are expected to take part in the program, how will families at risk be identified for the program, and what educational training programs are being developed for mentors involved in the mentoring program?

Now, further along, on line 1.1.6, initiatives are being examined "to improve the quality of child care programs." I can only assume that somewhere in there would be the Cleland report. I'm very anxious to see that document tabled in the Assembly. We all know that child care programs for all Alberta families are very, very important, but what are the new initiatives that will improve the quality of child care programs? What is the budget for these new initiatives? What new performance measures will be or are being developed to measure the quality of the programs? How many children and families are expected to take part in these programs, and how many are single-parent families that will take part in the program?

Now, further along on line 1.2 there is a statement: "To provide a continuum of services to support and promote the well-being of children, youth and families." Again I have two questions for the minister, please. Why is "Families assessing Handicapped Children's Services report a positive impact on their families" to be a short-term goal rather than a long-term goal? Why is the performance measure those families "who report the services are having a positive impact on the family" rather than a measure of an increase or decrease in the quality of life for children and the family members?

On line item 1.2.2 there is the statement: "Continue to enhance and implement a comprehensive inter-provincial . . . intervention, care and support of individuals with Fetal Alcohol Syndrome/Fetal Alcohol Effect." I have three questions for the hon. minister, please. What measures are being used to enhance the fetal alcohol syndrome/fetal alcohol effect program? Will the minister provide reports regarding the plans for interprovincial intervention, care, and support of fetal alcohol syndrome and fetal alcohol effect individuals? Finally, what is the cost to enhance and implement this program?

Now, again further along, the statement on line 1.2.5, and this is to “complete a Handicapped Children’s Services complex case review to ensure that children are receiving supportive and high quality services.” I have three questions. Firstly, who will participate in the complex case review of handicapped children’s services to ensure that children are receiving supportive and high quality services? Secondly, will the minister provide details of review processes for the case reviews? Thirdly, how will the ministry ensure that privacy of the individuals is maintained?

The next reference is 1.2.6.

In conjunction with the Youth Secretariat, work in partnership to enhance supports available to youth making the transition to adulthood, including transition to adult services such as those provided by Persons with Developmental Disabilities.

I have three questions. What mechanism does Children’s Services have in place so that children enter the PDD system with no transition problems? Certainly all hon. members of the Assembly are well aware that there have been problems with this in the past. What mechanism does Children’s Services use so that children’s files are not held up when moving into the PDD system? What are the protocols used to ensure smooth transition from one system to another?

3:30

Now, moving along to 1.2.7:

Collaborate with other ministries to provide a range of integrated health and related support services to children with special needs (Student Health Initiative).

I have at this time, Mr. Chairman, four questions, again to the hon. minister. What are the other ministries that are helping to provide integrated health and related support services to children with special needs? What programs are available to children with special needs and their families that provide a range of integrated health and related support?

Included in that would be speech therapy. What programs are available for students who need speech therapy in the early grades? I would like to start in kindergarten, grade 1, grade 2, and grade 3. If those children are enrolled in a public school system, what support can they expect? Then again, for instance, if they were to go to a school like the Tevie Miller school, what exactly could the parents of those students who for whatever reason perhaps don’t have the money – what support is available for them to ensure that speech therapy could be provided? Certainly it is my view that intervention at the early grades could possibly prevent a lot of problems as the child becomes a teenager and later on as an adult.

Again to the minister, please: what mechanisms does the ministry use to inform families about the programs? How is the ministry making the programs user friendly?

Mr. Chairman, on line 1.2.9 the discussion here is:

Collaborate with Child and Family Services Authorities to initiate mobile Community Response Team pilot projects to assist children, youth and families in crisis.

That seems to be quite an interesting initiative. I have five questions for the minister regarding this pilot project, the first one being: how many mobile community response team pilot projects will be carried out in the province? What authorities will the projects be carried out in? What are the professionals that will be part of the community response team? What is the budget for the pilot project? I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there is now only one pilot project for the entire province. When will the reports of the response team in this case be presented to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta?

Under goal 1.3: what mechanisms will the department ensure that “children in out-of-home placements stay connected to their family and community”? Because stable homes and ongoing nurturing relationships for children and youth in care are very positive. There’s no doubt about that.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Now, reference line 1.3.4:

Develop the Custom Care and Adoptions Initiative in concert with First Nations agencies and Child and Family Services Authorities to improve permanency for Aboriginal children in care.

I have three questions at this time for the minister, and hopefully I can get them in in the time that I am allowed. Who is responsible for developing the custom care and adoptions initiative with First Nations agencies and child and family services authorities? Secondly, what is the budget for the custom care and adoptions initiative program? Thirdly, what is the vision, mission, and values for the custom care and adoptions initiative?

Mr. Chairman, I’m certainly anxious to get some more time to participate in the debate later on this afternoon, and I will hopefully get a chance to talk about child care and subsidy programs regarding all Alberta families. With those questions I will cede the floor to one of my hon. colleagues.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The Member for Edmonton-Glen-garry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again I’m honoured to be able to speak here today in regards to Children’s Services. I want to thank the minister and her staff that have shown up here, particularly on Thursday afternoon, our last working afternoon in the House, to answer many of the concerns that we have about perhaps some of the most vulnerable people in our society, and that is our children. In doing so, I know that it is a huge, huge responsibility, and I also know that this minister takes that responsibility very, very seriously. So we are, I think, being very well served in this province. Certainly this is one of those areas where no matter what we do, there’s always more that can be done.

My comments today and my questions to the minister will certainly focus around these needs. Particularly I’d like to note that some of these comments that I’m going to pass along are comments made to me by constituents of Edmonton-Glen-garry.

We were extremely happy when Ma’Mōwe was opened in Edmonton-Glen-garry. It’s a much-needed resource for the people not only of Edmonton-Glen-garry, but surrounding regions of Edmonton-Glen-garry as well as regions outside of the city limits now can make good use of it. Certainly it is there for the use of all and much easier for them to access than having, for example, to travel down to 107th Street here to get to the main location. These types of satellite centres are a great, great step in the right direction.

What I’m going to refer to first here is a survey done by the Alberta Children’s Forum: Uniting for Children. This is the paper Poverty & Physical Needs: 3 Good Ideas. It was done by the Edmonton Social Planning Council. I don’t think that even in our great days here in this province – this was quite current – that things have changed that much for a number of our people. So what we are looking at here are certainly a number of issues – and two of those are poverty and physical needs – that face quite a few children in this province.

Of course, when we looked at it, we found that when people were surveyed, their number one concern and their number one issue of the problems that Edmonton children face is poverty. It was quite an eye-opener for me, Mr. Chairman, when I was at the National Conference of State Legislatures last summer in Chicago and we had an opportunity to listen to Jesse Jackson. Jesse went on to say that the poorest people in America today are not the new people that have moved to America, and it certainly wasn't the seniors who are trying to survive on a fixed income, but it was mothers with young families. I would think that those are the same challenges so many young mothers in this province face, and it's certainly one that I know as a province we must address. Certainly we all know the statistics that a dollar spent today will save us seven down the road. So in looking at this, as I said, poverty certainly is the number one issue.

After this I looked then at the ministry's goals, and they are admirable. I would hope that we could attain all of them, and certainly it is a goal to work towards. But I do have some questions for the minister when we get to performance measures.

Now, I also notice that a number of the performance measures in the 2001-04 Business Plan are considered new measures and as a result there is insufficient baseline data to establish meaningful targets.

So when I'm going through this, I will pay special attention to those, realizing that that data is not available to answer questions at this particular time.

Performance measure A: the "percentage of childcare centres that meet critical standards." Now, these are given in percentages. When we are collecting data, certainly we would like to know the numbers. How did you arrive, for example, at an actual in 1998-99 of 95 percent? Were all child care centres surveyed in this? If so, how many of these child care centres were there? If it was a sample, then how many were used in the sample? Also, from what parts of the province was the sample taken? Is this truly a representative sample, or is it focused on the major centres, where I think, as a generalized statement, the majority of poverty would be centred? What exactly does 95 percent for the year 1998-99 mean?

I see that in the fiscal year 1999-2000 we have an estimated amount of 96 percent. I'm very, very happy to see that our target for 2001-2002 is 100 percent. So if the minister could just enlighten us on how that information is going to be gathered and who all is represented and from what part of the province that is.

Then, as well, performance measure B. Now, again this is one of those new measures, and this will be measuring the "percentage of families accessing handicapped children's services who report the services are having a positive impact on their family." Again, if the minister could provide what data is going to be used to reach this particular performance measure.

I notice here that another new performance measure is going to be the "percentage of children residing in a stable, long-term arrangement within 12 months of permanent guardianship order." The same questions would apply there.

Now, performance measure D: "percentage of children who stay free from abuse or neglect while receiving child protection services." Again, a huge, huge challenge for people in this province who are dealing with this type of child who is under protection services. Certainly I'm very, very happy to see that our target for 2001-2002 is 100 percent. Again, if the minister could please just outline how they determine, first of all, whether children who are in protective services are free from abuse or neglect and, secondly, the number that they looked at for this. I certainly will be interested to see how the actual compares to the target of 100 percent.

Now, then, performance measure E:

Percentage of respondents to a public awareness survey who indicate that they are aware of activities undertaken by the ministry and its partners to address issues affecting children involved in prostitution.

Again, this will be quite an interesting statistic, particularly with the passing of Bill 1, the child prostitution act, and when we see these statistics which have been compiled since '98-99 and see how this act is going to influence the number of minors that are involved in prostitution, then what I would like rather than a percentage are the actual hardcore facts of the number involved. It will certainly give us a much better idea to track just how effective the bill has been and how effective we are in this society at stamping out child prostitution.

Now, then, in performance measure F, we're looking at the "number of municipalities participating in family and community support" and the target is to "maintain or increase number of municipalities participating in family and community support services." We have here in 1998-99 an actual number of 278. I see that this decreased slightly – and this again is an estimated amount – in the year 1999-2000 to 272. Could the minister provide why we had a slight drop here of six communities?

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

As well, what in the business plans and what in the budget is going to raise that amount to a projected number of 281 in the year 2000-2001, and I see that we also have that as targeted for the year 2001-2002. How does this number compare against all municipalities that could or should be participating in family and community support services? Give us a little bit better idea of the level of participation compared to how many could be participating.

Performance measure G is the "percentage of aboriginal children receiving foster care services from aboriginal foster homes", and I see that this measure supports the short-term outcome of delivering services to children that are appropriate to their culture, and the objective of improving services to Aboriginal children.

I fully agree that certainly the best people to provide foster care services to aboriginal children are in the aboriginal community, but once again I see that we are using percentages, and percentages do not give us a total picture of what is taking place.

Now, then, I also see here that we have in the neighbourhood of 31 percent projected for 2000-2001 and again our target of 31 percent for 2001-2002. That is to me a very, very high number when we're looking at roughly three out of 10 children that fall into this category. So could the minister please indicate in the estimates what programs we are looking at in order to reduce that number? As I said, that does seem like a very, very high number, and we would like to certainly see that cut down from the standpoint of children not requiring it. So if the minister would please provide more information in that regard.

As well, I see that two other new measures here are performance measures H and I, H being the "percentage of respondents reporting awareness of services provided by the office of the Children's Advocate." Again the Children's Advocate is certainly a very, very needed position in this province, and it will be one of these performance measures that I will be following closely. It will be quite interesting to see how the role of the Children's Advocate is going to play out and the important role that it will fill.

In looking at performance measure I, the "percentage of survey respondents who access selected ministry services that indicate that they participated in decisions that affect them," I see:

Consistent with a community-based service model and the objective of meeting the needs of the children and families being served, this measure will assess whether recipients of Ministry services are provided opportunities to participate in decisions which affect them.

Again I have to agree with the minister on this particular issue. This is a very, very important performance measure. With the goal of recipients participating in decisions which affect them, it is certainly one of those types of measures – when we give people ownership of a situation, then we expect the success rate to climb. I have to commend the minister for this. Could she please let us know what steps and what decisions are going to be made on this particular performance measure which would allow those people to make their own decisions? In other words, how are we going to get people involved to take ownership and to be part of this worthy performance measure?

Now, as well, in looking at the core business plans, I want to focus at the start of my time here today on core business 2: “Keeping children, youth and families safe and protected.” To do this, I want to look at goal 2.1: “To protect Alberta children from abuse and neglect,” an extremely, extremely needed goal, because we do have too many children today who are suffering from abuse, who are suffering from neglect.

I think what we have to do to highlight this particular problem is to look again at the number of students who go to school hungry. This is a basic goal and a basic need of all students. We look at people that are living in poverty and see that 73 percent say that they cannot afford to feed their children enough fruits and vegetables, 58 percent say that they cannot afford enough meat for their children, and 41 percent say that they cannot afford enough dairy products. What this means as well is that parents – and probably it’s mostly single parents that find themselves in this situation – are going without food themselves to feed their children. It was quite interesting in the survey that I quoted earlier that 46 percent went without food for a day or more, and 18 percent of the parents say that their children are missing meals because there is not enough food.

To start my questions on goal 2.1, “to protect Alberta children from abuse and neglect,” my first question to the minister would be: why is “children in care stay free from abuse and neglect” only a short-term outcome? My next question to the minister would be: when will the minister consider keeping children in care free from abuse and neglect a long-term goal? Again, we certainly have to look at this worthwhile goal from a very short-term perspective initially and make it a long-term goal that all children can grow up in safe environments where they are free from abuse and neglect.

So, Mr. Chairman, with those comments I will cede the floor to another member. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to spend 20 minutes commenting on the estimates of the Department of Children’s Services. I want to start by acknowledging the sincere interest that the minister responsible for this department has in the welfare of families and particularly of children.

While she is working hard to bring about changes, to muster the resources needed, what we need to do here is look closely at the proposed course of action as embodied in the business plan of the department, the highlights of initiatives as summarized on page 59 of the year 2001-2002 government and lottery fund estimates, and look at the budget operations by program. So the departmental operations by program and the budget allocations are something that I’d like to pay some attention to.

While we do this, I want to spend a few minutes talking about the overall context which gives rise to and produces the need for our extensive children’s services in the province and services for families. That context certainly is multidimensional.

There are all kinds of reasons why families and children get into difficulty and need help and services. But the one broad condition that produces the need for these services is, of course, the condition called poverty, so we should pay some attention to the incidence of poverty, its distribution across Alberta’s population. Who are the poor? Why is that the case? What kinds of services are needed in order to alleviate those conditions if we are really concerned about taking action and undertaking programs that are as much committed to prevention as they are to providing relief after the problems have occurred?

I’m looking at an executive summary of a report that is called No Safeguards: A Profile of Urban Poverty in Alberta, produced by a group called the Inter City Forum on Social Policy, representing about 18 municipalities in this province. According to this document, the incidence of poverty is quite high in this province based on 1996 statistics. They’re subject to change by now; I would certainly acknowledge that. They count that about 1 in 5 Albertans is poor. The greatest rates of poverty are in Edmonton and Calgary, but Wetaskiwin, Red Deer, and Lethbridge also have rates above the provincial average.

Children and youth are more likely to be poor. The highest rates of poverty are found among children 14 years and younger, people aged 15 to 24 years, and then of course seniors. More women on average are poorer than are males. Lone-parent families are likely to be poorer than other types of families. In particular, members of our aboriginal communities are the most serious and the largest in percentage terms victims of poverty. Among the aboriginal population the incidence of poverty is about 62 percent. This is the figure for Edmonton. Compared to other places such as Cold Lake or Leduc the poverty rate goes down, but Edmonton has the largest concentration of aboriginal people, and 62 percent of them live in poverty.

Persons with disabilities are another group, of course, who are subject to conditions of poverty. The rate is quite high in places like Wetaskiwin. Their rate of poverty, according to this report, was 32 percent. Red Deer was 35 percent, whereas Strathcona county and Spruce Grove had the lowest rates, at 10 and 12 percent. So that’s another group.

Being employed helps in reducing poverty but is not necessarily a safeguard. There are lots of working families in Alberta that find themselves living in poverty. Over three-quarters of the 106,610 poor families in Alberta, almost 77 percent, were employed for at least part of the year for which statistics are taken, yet just under one-half worked full-time. These are working poor who earn a minimum wage or close to it. So a low minimum wage causes hardworking Albertans to experience poverty and live under those conditions which produce the problems that this ministry then finds itself addressing.

Mr. Chairman, this is sort of a very quick, brief background against which the adequacy of services and the need for them is to be assessed.

Looking at the initiatives and the highlights for the years 2000-2004, there are several initiatives being taken here. Many of them, if not all of them, are well called for, deserving of special attention, but very little is indicated here that would suggest that we are dealing with the symptoms and the consequences as well as the causes of poverty and children’s difficulties and troubles and crises, which are issues that are at the very heart of the minister’s efforts and certainly a raison d’être for the existence of this department in the first place.

The poverty issue is not discussed as to how to deal with the problem of the growing numbers of the working poor in the province, and no linkage seems to be acknowledged between that and the growing numbers of children who are falling in the care of this ministry. We all acknowledge a rather radical increase in the number of children and the growth in the percentage of children that are coming in the care of the government. I don't need to repeat this. Headlines in papers made the story very, very well known across the province: a 60 percent increase since 1995. One has to ask: why is that the case? Is it just the case that there are more incompetent parents in Alberta? Or is it because more and more parents and families find themselves living under conditions of poverty in spite of their hard work, which leads them to then either neglect their children or fail in delivering the services that they need, and they would then become the responsibility of the government?

One other minor matter I was trying to look for through the budget to see if there's any change there, and that's the vision section, page 58, Major Areas of Emphasis. It talks about "better outcomes for children in care," and reference is made there to the critical role of the Children's Advocate. Again, looking at that commitment on one hand and then seeing if there is any action indicated on what's recommended by the Children's Advocate's latest report, Working for Youth in Care, I am disappointed to find no evidence here which indicates that the recommendations made by the Children's Advocate are being taken seriously by this government. Certainly there's no indication in the vision or in the three-year business plan that the government has.

Having said that, I also find in the business plan that of the nine performance measures that appear on pages 60 and 61, five are new ones. So there's no benchmark at this stage to make any really good judgments about how things may be moving for the better.

The one indicator that I have some questions about for the minister is the one that deals with the number of municipalities participating in family and community support and the targets that are set. The target for this next year, at least, is the same as for this year, with 281 municipalities that are participating. Then there's some indication that some increase in this participation is expected or sought or targeted but very, very small: one municipality to be added to the numbers already there over the next two years, so an annual increase of one.

I wonder: how many municipalities are there altogether? The minister will obviously enlighten me on this. Of the 281 that are participating now, what percentage are they of the total number of municipal jurisdictions? That will give us some idea as to why we are seeking such a slow increase, if it is a slow increase. Maybe the total number is 283, and the minister will hopefully answer that question for me.

On the next page, statement of operations by program, I notice that there are some areas where some considerable funds have been added for the year under discussion, the year 2001-02, where I find increases very minimal in light of the fact that the caseloads are increased enormously over the last five to eight years, from 12,783 cases in '92-93 to 22,905 in the year '99-2000. With this enormous growth, almost an 80 percent growth, the increase at least this year that I find in the child welfare part of the program expenditures is 2.4 percent. Is it adequate at all? It doesn't seem to be. That's a question that was raised by the Children's Advocate in his report as well: the inadequacy. Money may not be the answer to every problem, but in this case in the judgment of the advocate money is an issue. Financial allocations are an issue, are important.

Similarly for children with disabilities: in actuals in 2001 it is $54.6 million, and the proposed 2001-2002 estimate is very slightly increased, maybe less than 1.5 percent, over last year. I certainly question this and ask the minister: how come? Is she satisfied there are enough resources there already? I question that very seriously.

Day care: 4 percent increase. That's an area where we need to pay very serious attention if prevention is our goal. If children are to receive proper care when they're very young if their parents work – and most of them want to work and are working – the day care area of the ministry's responsibility certainly needs a lot more attention. Low wages for day care workers is a chronic problem. There was some talk during the election even from the government side that it may receive a review. I'd like to ask the minister if she has any initiatives on that score. You cannot get qualified workers to provide quality day care at that rate. It's less than $10. We proposed in our alternative plan that the minimum be set at $10 an hour, if not more. The low-wage problem for our day care workers is a very serious and chronic problem. Unless that is addressed, we will not be able to achieve a better quality in the provision of day care in our province for our children who badly need it.

The fact is that there are no direct operating allowances given to day care centres. The government therefore has lost the ability to enforce any provincewide standards. It's very difficult to do that when you don't pay money, when you pay the subsidies directly to families, who then use that money to pay for their day care bills. Also, the level at which families qualify is set too low to be able to access those subsidies. That means that the cost of sending children to day care becomes a major issue for low middle-income families. Consequently they find shortcuts. They send their children to day care facilities which may be cheap and that they can afford, and that means sacrificing their concerns about the quality of day care. I wonder what the minister has in her budget plan to address that issue.

I notice that the early intervention commitment has been strengthened, but the problems caused by the withdrawal by this provincial government over the years in that area have led to an enormous increase in the number of children in the care of the government, so I'm pleased that there is a clear indication here of investing in early childhood intervention in this budget. I'm pleased to see that.

Mr. Chairman, this will be my last point. The caseload for social workers and the ratio of supervisors to social workers is again important in reducing the ratio, making it more reasonable if quality children's services are to be provided by appropriately qualified social workers and child care providers.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll take my turn again when the time arises.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to reinforce some of the comments of some of my colleagues and add a number of concerns and issues of my own.

The first particular point I'd like to make would be concerning the first goal, 1.1, under core business 1 in ministry goals, which has to do with "on-reserve early intervention and prevention programs." I think all of us here are aware that we need to be paying particular attention to the conditions on reserves for families and children and early intervention. In fact it came up, perhaps just coincidentally, in question period today concerning an issue that's certainly not limited to reserves but is found on reserves, fetal alcohol syndrome, and the value of prevention in cases like that. So I would reinforce the ministry's efforts when it comes to on-reserve early intervention and prevention programs and would be delighted to learn more about what the ministry is doing in those regards. What are the costs? What are the trends in those costs? It would be interesting also, though I know it's difficult to quantify prevention, to get a sense of whether the costs we are spending now will be saving us money in the future. I realize that's difficult to do, very difficult to measure, but certainly worth examining. So that's one area of particular interest to me.

Another area I raise partly because I know a number of constituents of mine are involved in handicapped children's services and have particular and, of course, very close involvement with that because it's their own children who may be requiring these services. Some of the cases are unusually complex and difficult, very demanding on the whole family, and it seems to me – and I think the research would support this – that family breakup and divorce and so on is more common in families which have handicapped, especially severely handicapped, children in them. So support services that keep those families together, keep the children at home without making them an unmanageable burden on the family, certainly would have my full support. Information to us on those kinds of programs would be of real interest to me.

I know from professional work, oh, 25 years ago that at that time it was very common for handicapped children to be institutionalized. Frankly, some of the conditions in those institutions 25 years ago were simply intolerable by today's standards. So the whole philosophy of shifting those problems – and they are problems – those burdens, and opportunities for sharing love, too, in these families and keeping those children at home will be very important.

So those are a couple of areas that I think my colleagues have mentioned and I reinforce.

Shifting to core business 2, "keeping children, youth and families safe and protected." The issue of family violence, child abuse, and neglect comes up in various forms under this core business area. Under goal 2.1 in the core business, "to protect Alberta children from abuse and neglect," a goal that I'm sure all of us would endorse and support, it seems to me it should be something that has a long-term outcome to it rather than simply a short-term outcome.

I'm also noticing under goal 2.2 this initiative: "to reduce family violence and address its impact on children, youth and families." I do notice in my travels through Alberta that there are, for example, billboards or bus ads and so on about services for children to combat family violence. I found myself thinking, as I went through the business plan there, about women's shelters and family shelters, and it brought to mind a particular case that's come to my attention and the attention of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre. It's a case involving a women's shelter that suggests that there are risks even in these days of expanding government spending and that funds to women's shelters, through the department and through the child and family regional authorities, may in fact be in some cases being reduced. It goes to questions of immediate service and justice to people who are seeking protection, and it also goes to the issue of trying to break the cycle of family violence that we see played out generation after generation in the same families.

If I could talk for a few moments about this kind of a case. It concerns a satellite agency in a smaller town in Alberta, at least a women's shelter that began as a satellite shelter and initially began providing a maximum of seven days of shelter. They quickly found that was inadequate and, probably working with the department and with local authorities, expanded to I believe a full-service women's emergency shelter which then allows them to provide shelter for 21 days. It allowed them to expand to provide the kinds of preventive and intervention services that I believe in the long run will create a much better situation. For example, they were able to hire a part-time child support worker and eventually increase the child support to full-time and hire a part-time outreach worker working on family violence prevention, going into schools, doing education programs for the public.

They noticed, as they got into this, that after a couple of years they were actually seeing a marked drop in the number of repeat clients.

So they were able to take clients in, provide them with short-term emergency service, and then move them out into the community and support them there while they went back to school or perhaps relocated in a different town where they were away from the violent situation. So it sounded like it was on the way to a real success story.

Then in the most recent round of budgeting they find that apparently they're facing funding cuts. As it is, of course, provincial funding doesn't cover the full operating expenses of women's shelters and family violence shelters. They cover the basics, as I understand it, for beds and food and crisis counseling for the moment. But in terms of longer term support and any enhanced services, these agencies rely on the community, and probably all of us have donated from time to time to various women's shelters. Certainly the shelters are not opposed to that sort of fund-raising, but the core funding, when it's reduced, means that some of the outreach and support services that allow them to break the cycle of family violence get eliminated. Then we take a step backwards, and we see an increase in repeat clients and an increase in family violence, certainly in the long run, and a decrease in people's ability to escape from those problems. So I would encourage the minister and the department to ensure that family violence remains a high priority in their department and in the activities of the regional authorities.

Continuing on through the business plan, again I'll settle on a few of the areas that I saw as particular highlights. I return, partly in my role as critic for aboriginal issues, to core business 3, "promoting healthy communities for children, youth, and families," and goal 3.2, "to support Aboriginal people to plan . . . implement, monitor and evaluate services in consultation with their communities," and, related to that, the goal of supporting "the development of a culturally effective training model for First Nations delegated agencies." Again, reflecting on the experience I had professionally many years ago, the whole challenge of delegating family and children's services to native and aboriginal organizations is one that is, shall I say, a great challenge.

There's a cultural conflict there between our own needs as a government to manage closely and be very careful and follow standard corporate procedures, as it were, for managing money and personnel and at the same time recognize that cultures such as a First Nations culture may have a different approach to those expectations and those issues. So it's a difficult and challenging area, yet of course we realize and groups on both sides of the issue realize that it has to be addressed and resolved if we're going to move ahead.

So I'd be interested to know, for example, how the ministry is planning to "support the development of a culturally effective training model for First Nations delegated agencies." How is that going to be done? I'm sure it's being done on the basis of now many years of experience. I'm sure we're learning from our experience, and if we evaluate that experience and move ahead, we will hopefully be improving each year that goes by. I'd be curious to know what training models have been developed for delegated agency personnel. Again, recognizing the cultural differences between maybe a very European-based model for providing children's services and an aboriginal model, how do we sort those out and mesh them, hold accountability yet delegate authority? I'd also be interested to know, along this line, what policies the ministry has in place across all children's authorities, in fact, to provide leadership in developing and implementing those training models.

So certainly anything related to aboriginal issues, the unusually high number or proportion of aboriginal children who form child welfare caseloads and aboriginal families who are needing support, speaks to our need to be very attentive in those areas. Of course, those same issues arise for areas that go beyond the scope of this department – areas of poverty, issues of education, issues of justice – so it's certainly a multidisciplinary concern.

I also share my colleagues' concerns that seem to persistently emanate from the office of the Children's Advocate. Report after report of the Children's Advocate identify ongoing problems, and I'm prepared to concede that, with some of these problems, the best we can do is manage them; we cannot solve them. But I'm not convinced that some of them we can't solve and that others we cannot manage better. I'm frankly a bit skeptical that the department is responding as enthusiastically as it might to the reports of the Children's Advocate. We are, after all, in a position of enormous responsibility when we take on the role of looking after people's children. We are their surrogate parents, and we need to be their advocates. We need to ensure that everything possible is being done to support them, to break the kinds of patterns that see children growing up to repeat the same mistakes as their parents. So it echoes my earlier comments. I'd really like to know more about the department's efforts in these areas.

What recommendations will the ministry be implementing for the review of the Children's Advocate office? That issue, the Children's Advocate report, has come up in debate and in question period, and it's not something we're going to let go of. It's a high priority for us. It's a moral responsibility all of us share as legislators: to be devoted guardians of children in the care of the provincial government. I'd be interested to know how soon after the Children's Advocate's annual reports are released the ministry will be acting upon the Children's Advocate's recommendations. It would be interesting to know details about the activities of the office of the Children's Advocate, the number of families who are connecting with that office each year. So those are some of my particular questions around the office of the Children's Advocate.

I could go on with my concerns about this department. There was a time when I actually had extensive personal and professional involvement working in these kinds of areas. I know the sometimes grim realities of the cases that these authorities encounter and that the minister will be no doubt aware of and how insolvable they at times seem, yet what a moral responsibility they place on all of us. It's an area that I think I and our caucus will be watching very closely, so we'll be back again next year to see what has happened.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Because I may not get time to get to them later, I'd like to start, if I might, with some specifics about the budget items. In particular it's item 2.3 in the estimates, the financial support to child and family services authorities, and 2.3.1 through 2.3.18 have the allocations for the various authorities.

There's a discrepancy, Mr. Chairman, between what some of the authorities asked for or estimated they would need to serve their area and what has been allocated to them in the budget. In some of them the differences are very little, but in some of them the differences are quite notable. I start with Sun Country. I believe $28,899,000 was their estimate of need, and they've been allocated $25,474,000. Now, that's a fair slip in terms of the amount of resources they have to work with, and I wonder why they put in their estimate and then it was reduced to what it was.

That holds true for a number of regions. Calgary Rocky View asked for $135 million, and the allocation is $132 million. West Yellowhead asked for or estimated their need would be $15,296,000, and they were allocated $13,632,000. That's an almost $2 million shortfall in their estimate and fairly significant, I would think, in terms of the delivery of services. The amount in the budget of the Capital region is about – if my math is quick here – 8 and a half million dollars less than the amount that they estimated they were going to need to conduct business. There are a number of others on the list. As I said, most of them are fairly close to the estimate of the authority, but there are some discrepancies that, on the face of the figures we have, would seem to be fairly significant in terms of the operation of the authority.

So I have those specific questions about program 2.3 and would appreciate some information on why those decisions were made or why those figures appear to be the way they are in the budget.

I wanted to turn, if I might, Mr. Chairman, to performance measures. It's been sort of a constant theme as we've gone through the estimates for 2001-2002, and that is what seems to happen to performance measures. The Auditor General has put a great deal of faith in those measures as the basis for the business plans of the province and has made some cross-department recommendations. It seems to me that for a number of departments those recommendations have been ignored. If the performance measures are as intrinsic a part of the government's financial planning as they seem to indicate, it would seem to me that ignoring those performance indicator warnings from the Auditor General puts the whole process in question.

I know that this is a new ministry and people are still feeling their way around and there is a need for some new measures. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry has already made some specific comments about the percentages and the way the measures are being put in place, but I do have a question. There are a number of new measures that are being asked for, and baselines are being developed. But if I couple that, the development of those new measures, with what I hear from people working in the system about the heavy workloads, I wonder if adding the performance measures aren't going to add to the workload that some of them find very, very difficult already. I think there was a parallel, for instance, when the postsecondary system went to key performance measures at the local level with the kinds of complaints I heard from institutions then in terms of the amount of time that it was taking to develop the measures. Is that a concern, or are these developed elsewhere? Are there special groups that will be charged with developing the measures?

That said, Mr. Chairman, I may be evidencing the fact that I'm a newcomer to the area and to the ministry except for what I've been able to read in past budgets. But I've been doing some reading, and looking at the business of child and family indicators, I wondered if the department has considered or will be considering developing a comprehensive set of child and family indicators. I was interested in terms of what kinds of criteria might govern the development of such a set of indicators. We've always had a profound interest in families and children both nationally and provincially in terms of what is happening to them. It seems to me that a comprehensive set of indicators that was initiated by the government itself would be very useful.

It would also eliminate the kind of constant warfare that seems to be engaged in between agencies that are developing indices and putting forward claims based on those indices, only to have them rejected by the government as not being relevant, not being comprehensive enough, or not having been developed properly. I think of the disputes there have been over poverty, over how many Albertans are actually living in poverty and how many children are in poverty.

I think a comprehensive set of indicators that was done under rigorous development methods with standards that are very high could alleviate that, but more importantly they could be a very useful tool as we try to track what's happening to children and families both across time and in making comparisons with various groups.

Indicators could be useful for a number of purposes: providing descriptions of groups and subgroups within the population. They'd be useful in terms of monitoring. That's exactly what the performance measures are intended to do, to help us in terms of monitoring progress of particular groups. They would allow us to make some comparisons. We'd be able to see if conditions were improving or were deteriorating or even holding steady across a time period.

A comprehensive set of indicators would be useful in focusing activities across agencies and government departments. They would be useful in trying to develop strategies for dealing with problems. I think that indicators could be used to hold agencies and managers and even the government itself responsible for outcomes rather than focusing, as we do so often now, on the inputs into the system.

It would also help us in terms of evaluation. We've had, for instance, programs for pregnant teenage mothers for a number of years in the province. I have no idea what's happened in terms of those programs or how they have progressed. There are programs to prevent teen pregnancy. What has been the impact of those programs over time? Have the rates actually been reduced with the introduction of those programs in schools? So I think a comprehensive set of indicators could be very useful.

There was a set of criteria established, as I indicated, for developing those indicators, and one of the criteria would be that it is comprehensive. The performance measures that we have in most of the business plans are very selective, but it seems to me that this is one ministry, children and their families, that would benefit from a comprehensive set of indicators, as well as some other departments, but particularly this department. A comprehensive set of indicators would be very useful in terms of looking at youngsters from birth through adolescence and the transition into adulthood.

Any set of indicators I think would have to be clear and comprehensible. I think that's a given. It would fit into some of the performance measures here that are aimed at trying to make sure that programs are easily understood by the public. Any such set of indicators I think would have to make sure that they were open to common interpretation, and they would have to be geographically detailed. I think in our province that would be useful. Because the province is so diverse in terms of the needs and the social life of citizens, that would be useful.

I guess I would make the argument and ask if the department has considered the development of a more comprehensive set of indicators, and that would in no way detract or take away from the specific performance indicators. I think it might help formulate those indicators and put them into a context that would be useful as we try to consider the progress that we're making as a province.

I'd like to move, then, if I may, Mr. Chairman, to the matter of caseworkers. As I indicated before, the minister has announced some measures to get more people into the system, to help with the caseloads. Again, I have to confess my ignorance on the matter, but I wonder: are there minimum standards for case-related activities? I was looking at a set of such standards developed elsewhere and was really quite surprised that jurisdictions do have workload standards that caseworkers use as a guide and also the number of cases that a worker could be expected to address given the kinds of activities that they were engaged in.

Just for a couple of examples, one of the problems here has been the permanent placement of children and youth. Under the standards that are used at least in one American state, the monthly workload for each of those cases is determined to be about two and a half hours or two and a quarter hours per case, and the maximum caseload for a worker who was exclusively working on placements would be 54 cases. That seems to me to be awfully high. I wonder: are there similar standards in our province? I compared that to the standard, for instance, for a worker who was screening or on a hot line or on intake activities, where they devoted about half an hour a month per case. They were expected to be able to handle 322 cases, which again is a little mind-boggling. My question is: are there similar standards in our province that are used for caseworkers? If there are, who determines those standards? Is it done by the profession, or is it done by agreement? How do they come about?

I've had, as we've all had, Mr. Chairman, information from caseworkers from across the province lamenting their inability in some cases to do the job as they see fit. Their concerns seem to be with more time: more time to do the job the way they would like to do it, more time for contact with families, more time for finding resources, more time for working with service providers, more time to properly prepare plans for court contests, more time for assessments of parent and child relationships, more time for face-to-face contact with clients, for training relatives as required to be foster parents, to facilitate parent/child visitations, for conducting case management in order to reduce placement moves for children, and adequately inputting information into the system itself. So a whole host of areas where they indicated they needed more time, and that wasn't all of it.

Those seemed to be the more important reasons for needing more time, but they also needed more time for documentation and for writing required reports, for conducting more thorough investigations than what they felt they were able to do. The collaboration with other agencies is a time-consuming activity, and they needed more time for preparing children for adoption, for working with parents, preparing children for separation, for reviewing client history, for educating adoptive parents, for co-ordinating with public health and other agencies, for working with long-term guardians. As you talk to or hear from caseworkers, the conclusion you come away with is that there's a very heavy, heavy workload, and many of them are feeling frustrated in their ability to deal with it.

With that, given that I have a one-minute signal, I'll conclude, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

4:50

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I understand I have only a few minutes left. I have a couple of quick questions.

I notice some anomalies in the budgets of some regional child and family services authorities, and I thought I'd just ask the minister to perhaps address that. I notice that on page 82 for the Metis settlements child and family services authority there is a very dramatic drop in the budget from last year to the year for which we are debating on the prevention of family violence. I looked at the other budgets in other authorities as well, and although the money budgeted last year in many cases was more than was in fact spent, the money budgeted for this coming year has not dropped so dramatically as is the case for this. So you might want to address that. On page 72 I compared it with the West Yellowhead case, for example, and there was no such serious drop there, so I wonder why it happened.

The second very specific question has to do with the board of governance budgets. For the Capital region the budget for governance is much, much smaller than the Calgary region authority budget for governance. The difference is almost three, four times.

Calgary is spending three, four times more on governance than is the Capital region, and I wonder if that is something that you can explain for the benefit of the House and for my benefit.

Thank you. These are the two specific questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I have some specific questions for the hon. minister regarding child care in this province and in particular on the Cleland report. This report, as I understand it, is going to look at family income, is going to look at the number of children that are in child care that are under the age of seven and before grade 1. There is to be also a look at the number of hours of child care per child each month. Also, there is to be a study of special-needs children.

More importantly, I think we need to address the issue of compensation for child care workers, and hopefully this is going to be addressed in the Cleland report. Many of the staff that are involved in that industry in this province are living certainly below the low-income cutoff. Their compensation packages are a little bit more than $1,000 a month, if that, and as a result of that, there's a high staff turnover rate. When we think of caring and nurturing and educating the young children of this province, it is perhaps the most important job, after parenting, that can be done to ensure that the next generation is well looked after while they're in their formative years.

We have money in this province for risk management funds. We have money for generous subsidies to industries. Certainly there is money somewhere to ensure that the child care workers of this province are adequately compensated for what they do so that there will be some stability in the workforce, so there won't be this high rate of transition, and so we can attract young Albertans into this very important field. Now, one only has to discuss this whole issue with the professionals at Grant MacEwan College to get a firm handle on exactly what needs to be done.

At this time I will conclude my remarks, and I will look forward to hearing about the Cleland report from the minister. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: Would the committee grant consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be remiss as the MLA for 27 schoolchildren that were in the Assembly earlier this afternoon, who came and went during question period, if I didn't make note that they were here so that I can send them a copy of Hansard. This afternoon we had 27 students from the Lacombe Christian school here with teacher Mr. Tim Van Doesburg and parent helpers Mr. Norm Noordhof, Mr. Henk Rypser, Mr. Henk Kassies, Mr. Otto Schermers, Mr. Henk Bos, Mrs. Gea Bos, Mr. Roger Young, Mr. Harvey Doornbos, Mrs. Karen Doornbos, and Mrs. Annette Wiersma. I thank them for coming. That was the Lacombe Christian school from Lacombe.

Children's Services (continued)

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Children's Services to conclude debate.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I want to start by just thanking the hon. members opposite, all of them, for what I believe have been thoughtful, sometimes provocative comments and I think in many respects well-researched questions. I particularly want to cite the ministry critic, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who has a long and distinguished career in looking after the young people of this province. I value his opinions and his impressions, and I will certainly commit to doing my level best to getting all of the responses prior to any conclusion of our spring session that I have indicated previously, as well as, as much as we can, to provide a framework of response on those issues raised by the Children's Advocate report. So that would be my first comment.

The second comment. I'm not going to use the full privilege of five minutes, but I want to just provide some food for thought to all members in the House, and that is this. Yesterday I met with Dr. Fraser Mustard and discussed the issues that he very adequately expressed on brain development and the work he had done with Senator Margaret McCain. He suggested that far too frequently people who care for children are assumed to be baby-sitters and are assumed to be some sort of less than honoured, less than valued professionals.

I want to assure the hon. members opposite that I do value the people that care for children. It is the most important type of effort that we can make to ensure brain development and the full nurturing and development of the child, and wherever possible, when the child is not being parented or nurtured by their own family in an adequate fashion, we should do our level best to ensure that the most excellent people are in touch with that child. If we do not do that, we're going to pay as a society in the longer term, and pay and pay and pay. So we do have, I think, not only a trust but a duty to honour those people who work for and with children. I am happy that our government is working in that direction, albeit I will concede that we're not there yet, but we must collectively work to be there.

When the hon. members have cited these questions, I look forward to providing them a full written response without being dismissive with a cursory response, and I commit further to meeting with the minister's critic to discuss those responses at a later date.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Children's Services, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense	$643,866,000
-------------------	---------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following department.

Children's Services: operating expense, $643,866,000.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

[The following bills were read a third time and passed]

5	Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001	Nelson
6	Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001	Nelson

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the progress we have made today, I now move that we adjourn.

[At 5:06 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 14, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/14

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome back. At the conclusion of today's prayer please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask You, Father, to renew and strengthen in us the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of this Legislature. We ask You also in Your divine providence to bless and protect the Assembly and the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and all of our visitors here today, please join us in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce a good friend and a former colleague. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly the hon. Gary Filmon, the former Premier of Manitoba. I would ask Gary to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you a very special guest that is sitting in your gallery this afternoon. She is a great athlete and a friend, and we have trained thousands of kilometres together. Yesterday in Ottawa Sandy Jacobson became the first Edmonton member of Team Canada for the Worlds to be held in this great city in August. She'll be running the marathon for our country. Sandy accomplished this great feat while doing a full-time job, being a good mother and a wife, as well as guest lecturing on sports psychology across this country for Running Room Canada. Sandy is certainly made of all the right stuff. Joining her today is her mother, Eloise Leckie. I would ask both of them to please rise and receive the warm congratulations and warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly members of the CCAF international fellowship program. The fellowship program is sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency and implemented in collaboration with the office of the Auditor General of Canada, the office of the Auditor General of Quebec, and the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation.

Seated in the Speaker's gallery is Alberta's Auditor General, Peter Valentine, who is hosting the group as part of their visit to western Canada. Also hosting is Mrs. Donna Bigelow, program coordinator, international affairs, office of the Auditor General of Canada.

Joining them is Mr. Leonardo Etcheverry from Argentina; Leonardo is a supervisor in the office of the Auditor General of Argentina. Mr. Horacio Vieira from Brazil: the court of accounts in Brazil has nine ministries and three deputy ministries, and Horacio is the head of the office of one of the deputy ministries. Ms Ximena Mura Alvarez from Chile: Ximena supervises and participates in financial audits as well as audits of special projects financed by the World Bank and the Interamerican Development Bank in the sectors of education, health, economy, and environment. Mr. Bato Ali from the Philippines: Bato is a state auditor of the Philippine Commission on Audit. Ms Nafy Keita from Senegal: Nafy has worked for the government of Senegal for 20 years in various fields and positions; since 1998 she has worked as a senior inspector in the office of the inspector general. Mrs. Jaruwan Ruangswadipong from Thailand: Jaruwan is the director of the human resources development section in the office of the state auditor of Thailand.

Mr. Speaker, I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 92 individuals living throughout Edmonton, Calgary, and Sherwood Park. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly "to urge the Government of Alberta to put in a system of rent control."

Thank you.

Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petition I presented on Tuesday, May 8, be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Bill 17

Insurance Amendment Act, 2001

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 17, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill amends the unproclaimed Insurance Act in two respects.

Firstly, it will amend the licensing requirement for staff adjusters in the Insurance Act, placing the onus on insurers to be legally responsible for the claims and settlement activities of their employees. It will also include a provision to enable the Finance minister to compel the attendance of witnesses to give evidence on hearings and appeals under the Insurance Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 17 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 18 Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill will allow us to resolve some technical issues which were raised during consultations with our stakeholders prior to proclamation of the act.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two letters, and I'm tabling copies of these letters in the House. They are both addressed to the Premier. The first one is from Mrs. Susan Higgs of Harvie Heights, Alberta, urging the Premier to not proceed with the Spray Lakes sawmills forestry management agreement signing in order to preserve the ecosystems in the area.

The second letter is from Mr. Dean Novak of Calgary, again addressed to the Premier, strongly urging him not to sign away Alberta's precious heritage to Spray Lakes sawmills.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, today I have one tabling. It is a letter from Ms Janet Pringle of Calgary, concerned with poor working conditions of rehabilitation workers and the low level of AISH benefits rates.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling today the appropriate number of copies of TransAlta's corporate code of conduct policy, which requires that TransAlta employees avoid "real, perceived or potential conflicts of interest."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have letters today from Mr. Lloyd Lohr of Erskine, Ms Karen Blumhagen of Tofield, and Ms Margaret Coutts on behalf of the Red Deer River Naturalists. They all want the government to designate the Bighorn wildland park as a protected area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today the appropriate number of copies of a presentation by Lieutenant Colonel Dave Grossman, who is one of the world's foremost experts in the field of human aggression and the roots of violence and violent crimes. He's also authored the book Stop Teaching Our Kids to Kill: A Call to Action Against TV, Movie and Video Game Violence.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly here today 70 visitors, or thereabouts, from Blessed Kateri school, one of many fine schools in the area that I'm privileged to represent. They are here today visiting the Legislature and listening and learning about the legislative system, including participating in the mock Legislature system. They are accompanied today by some very hardworking teachers, including Ms Brigitte Berube, Ms Cathy Bereznicki, Mrs. Moira Lintz, and some equally hardworking parent helpers, Mrs. Dawn Finnigan, Mr. Len McMurrer, Mrs. Nancy Coco, Mr. Lou Caputo, and Ms Trish Burke-Dodds. I would ask all of them to please rise at this time and receive the very warm welcome from all members of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two former colleagues and friends from Fort McMurray, the oil sands capital of the world. It's my opportunity today to introduce the deputy mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, the largest municipality, geographically, 68,000 square kilometres. With us today we have Maggie Lent as well as the city and regional manager of the regional municipality, Mr. Dave Putz. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly today two very capable young people who are administering the constituency office of Calgary-West this summer. Keith Marlowe, who's a management student at the U of C, is my office assistant, applying his previous experience as a summer student at Calgary-Mountain View and, of course, with additional responsibilities. Zaria Hamer, my summer student, is a political science graduate from the University of Calgary who volunteered on my recent provincial campaign in Calgary-West and will be certainly learning about politics from the grassroots perspective. I'd like this Assembly to receive them and give them the usual warm welcome as they stand there right now. Keith and Zaria.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very special constituent from Edmonton-Glenora. She is the wife of our hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. We are little able to accomplish anything in political life without the support and help of loving family, and I'd ask that Marcy Hutton please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Conflict of Interest Court Case

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Jaber case still raises many questions in Albertans' minds, and this government has done nothing to answer those questions. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister tell us how often an entire case is argued in court based purely on an agreed statement of facts?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not a usual occurrence, because in most cases before the criminal courts the facts are not agreed, and in fact one of the main purposes of the court, particularly at the provincial court level, is to prove the facts. However, it is a standard practice where facts are agreed, and in approximately 50 percent of the cases of this nature across the country agreed statements of facts are used. Two of those cases, including one involving a Senator, went to the Supreme Court of Canada on agreed statement of facts. It is an appropriate way to go in appropriate circumstances where facts are agreed.

I'd go on to say, Mr. Speaker, that we encourage our Crown prosecutors to save court time where possible, and in fact the courts admonish prosecutors from time to time to save time where possible by agreeing on facts where it is possible to do so rather than use the court time to prove them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that ministers of the Crown are referred to in the court documents and that thousands of dollars were paid to a senior government official and that continuing public unease surrounds this case, why is the government so reluctant to call a public inquiry to clear the air on the matters involved?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that a public inquiry has already been held. First of all, there was a complete and thorough police investigation of this particular case. The evidence was taken to the Crown prosecutor. Charges were laid. A preliminary hearing was held at which evidence was given ostensibly by the prosecution. Enough evidence was gleaned to have the judge send the accused to trial. There was an agreed statement of facts. There was a conviction and a fine of some $161,000 levied. That, indeed, is tantamount to a public inquiry. There was a full investigation and an open and public court hearing relative to this particular case.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Don't you think the public deserves to know some of the answers to the questions that go beyond the strict legality of this case: how the government was involved, the degree to which they were involved, the frequency of this kind of activity within the government? These kinds of questions need to be asked.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat. If the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, the hon. member of the third party, or any other citizen in this province has any evidence or allegations that could be substantiated in any way, shape, or form or even deserve investigation, bring them forward, and I'm sure that the hon. Justice minister and Attorney General will make sure that these matters are thoroughly investigated by the police and that if charges are to be laid, appropriate action will be taken.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Access to Court Documents

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday a member of our staff made a routine inquiry at the courthouse for documents relating to the Jaber case. Within 40 minutes of being at the courthouse, our staff member received a call from an official at Alberta Justice who said: I understand you're looking for copies of court exhibits in the Jaber case. This individual had not been involved in any of our previous contacts with Justice or with the court system. My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Is Alberta Justice alerted as a matter of course when requests are made for access to court documents?

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Speaker. The hon. opposition leader will know that one of his own colleagues had requested by letter from our office copies of the transcripts, which I had previously indicated I would provide to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and they also requested exhibits. That request went to the department, and I presume that when the clerk's office made inquiries relative to what should be done with respect to the request for exhibits, those inquiries crossed paths.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Justice: why was Alberta Justice almost immediately alerted to the fact that one of our staff members made a routine request for documents in the Jaber case at the courthouse last Thursday when that individual had not been involved in the case and the call was to that person by name, individually?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, what happened in this particular case is that exhibits in preliminary inquiries are not routinely released without the consent of both the Crown and the defence counsel on a case. In this particular case, members of the media had been requesting copies of the exhibits to be released, and in fact there was consent given to release copies of the exhibit to members of the media. That being the case, when the inquiry came from the Official Opposition with respect to their being able to get copies of the exhibit, the person in question at the courthouse contacted the communications department of Justice to determine what to do in that circumstance, seeing as exhibits had already been released to the media under that request.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Justice: how many court cases are currently under watch by your ministry?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, we watch of course, in fact more than watch. We participate in all the criminal ones, and I presume we have a significant interest in a significant number of civil ones, but I wouldn't have the answer to that.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Conflict of Interest Guidelines

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. Can he confirm to the Assembly that no senior managers of his department are significant shareholders or have immediate family members who are significant shareholders in companies that contract with his department?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I trust that our senior officials in the Ministry of Transportation follow very closely the guidelines that are set forth by this government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Can he confirm to the Assembly that no senior managers of his department are significant shareholders or have immediate family members who are significant shareholders in companies that contract with his department?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, certainly there are conflict of interest guidelines for all senior officials, and the officials in my department would be following those very closely.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that government guidelines typically would preclude this kind of event, can the minister of health explain to the Assembly why his department tolerates senior managers of the CRHA and their immediate family members being major shareholders in companies that contract to the CRHA?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this is a very well worn path that leads exactly to nowhere. Health authorities are required to have conflict of interest bylaws that are based on those that apply to all MLAs, including the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The Health Care Protection Act requires full ownership disclosure of all private facilities seeking a contract with a regional health authority, and reviewing that ownership information is part of the contract review process.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I had the opportunity to review each and every one of these 34 contracts, including the one that the hon. member is asking about, the Auditor General of this province assessed our approval process and found it to be appropriate. An international company based out of British Columbia also reviewed our approval process and found it to be appropriate. The contracts were reviewed by an independent consultant in the province of British Columbia, and the policy and legal experts in my department also conducted their own review.

Mr. Speaker, this is a tiresome, tiresome line of questions, and it has been asked and answered on a number of occasions in this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. You have been recognized.

Conflict of Interest Court Case (continued)

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The agreed statement of facts in the Jaber case alleges that Mr. Jaber did no lobbying in exchange for the $200,000 which he received . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, will you please take your place behind your desk. I have no idea where you're going. If I see a twitch from the Sergeant-at-Arms – he carries a sword.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The agreed statement of facts in the Jaber case alleges that Mr. Jaber did no lobbying in exchange for the $200,000 he received for that purpose from Mr. Naqvi. My question is for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. If Mr. Jaber took $200,000 from Mr. Naqvi for the purposes of requesting that the ALCB approve his lease but did nothing for it, why was Mr. Jaber not charged with defrauding Mr. Naqvi?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the prosecutors are in the habit of working with the police to develop the most serious charges that they can and dealing with the serious charges of the public interest. If in fact there was a concern between Mr. Jaber and Mr. Naqvi as to whether or not anybody got value for money, that is their particular issue. What the Crown is interested in doing is making sure that ethical conduct by senior officials is held to the highest standard, and that's why they prosecuted on the most serious charge that they could, I presume, and achieved a conviction in the case.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, was the minister briefed on the decision as to which charges the government would proceed with against Mr. Jaber?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I was advised prior to the charges being laid that charges would be laid. I wasn't briefed on which charges would be laid or what counts would be laid but merely advised that charges were being laid and that they would be laid I believe it was within the next day or so.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, was the minister or any other member of the government involved in the decisions as to which charges would be brought against Mr. Jaber?

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Catholic School Board Boundaries

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. During this session the minister has talked about the establishment and the expansion of Catholic school boards. This is a topic of great interest to many school boards and especially our school boards in rural Alberta. Will the minister please clarify the position of the Alberta School Boards Association on the proposed changes?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What the Alberta School Boards Association did was convene a committee roughly a year ago to take a look at the whole 4 by 4 process. They then asked their school boards to have a vote on it and pass the vote on to me. What I must clarify today is that there was no commitment one way or the other to support or not to support. This was quite simply a vote by the member school boards of the Alberta School Boards Association.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you. With the differing views between the school boards on this issue, what are the benefits of making the proposed changes? For example, would the expanded boundaries provide additional sparsity and distance and transportation funding?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've spoken in this Legislative Assembly before about the 4 by 4 process. It was put in in roughly 1900 or 1901. Quite simply, that process has become antiquated as a way to expand Catholic boundaries. In many situations the number of electors that would be required would be three or four or five.

Just to alert the Assembly as to the extent of this issue, during my term as Minister of Learning, which has been roughly two years, I have personally signed 80 different 4 by 4 proposals. Eighty different 4 by 4 proposals have been put in in the province of Alberta in the last two years. The legislation that is before this House will put an end to that. It will bring forward a solution to the expansion of Catholic boundaries, of separate school boundaries that will be a much better process. It will be a process that will involve consultations with everyone, not just the Catholic electorate. This is a proposal that has the support of the ACSTA.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the minister. Is it true, then, that with these changes a person of Catholic faith will not be able to serve as a member on the public school board?

2:00

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as the system is today, that is exactly what happens. A member of the Catholic faith, where there is a Catholic school board, will not be able to serve on the board of a public school system. What will happen under this legislation is that a person will be able to elect whether or not he is a public supporter or a separate supporter. So you could have a Catholic who is a public supporter serve on a public school board, but on a separate school board the elector or the school board trustee must be Catholic.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When discussing power deregulation with the Edmonton Journal editorial board in February of this year, the Premier looked up from his detailed briefing notes with a shrug and said, quote: I have no idea what all this means. End of quote. I hope the Premier can answer my questions regarding approval of electricity exports last fall for TransAlta Utilities. My first question this afternoon to the Premier is: while the Senior Petroleum Producers Association expressed concerns about export approvals coming while Albertans suffer through higher electricity costs, does the Premier not acknowledge that approvals for electricity exports may adversely impact Albertans by committing them to an increasingly higher price for electricity in places like California?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member wasn't in that editorial boardroom, so I don't know on what basis he makes the allegation that I looked from my detailed notes in bewilderment to the editorial board. He wasn't there. If he was there, then tell us how he got in. Or was he listening at the door? Was he eavesdropping? Did he sneak in? [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The Premier has the floor.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the export of electricity, certainly a number of the major power producers or at least the power producers who hope to bring on major megawatts of new power – and we're talking in excess of 500 megawatts – are looking at having an excess of power in this province. They're looking at the opportunity to export the surplus. But the rules are quite clear. First of all, power companies, as I understand it, must be committed to provide the needs of Albertans. Secondly, they must leave a certain amount of the surplus in this province. Then it is the surplus on the surplus that under certain conditions they can with prior approval export to other jurisdictions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how will the Premier respond to the submission made to the National Energy Board by the Industrial Power Consumers & Cogenerators Association of Alberta that noted a lack of confidence in the market surveillance administrator's function because of legislative deficiencies?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm unaware of any deficiencies relative to the function and the role and the job description for the market surveillance administrator. If the hon. Minister of Energy has any further information he might wish to share, I'll have him respond.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the department is doing an industry restructuring review. If there are times when we can make this market function better, this market function more effectively, then of course we will. Although I did note today at noon that power prices were down to $95.90 per megawatt hour, so we're starting to see progress.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier please review legislative deficiencies especially concerning the possibility that the Competition Bureau cannot review some matters because of the existence of the market surveillance administrator?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would have to take it that there is an assumption of a deficiency in the legislation. Certainly we don't mind looking at the legislation to see if, in fact, what the hon. member says is true or if, in fact, there is a deficiency. I haven't examined in any detail whatsoever the legislation as it pertains to the market surveillance administrator. Perhaps, again, the hon. minister has more information he may wish to share.

MR. SMITH: We are examining, Mr. Speaker, the dynamics of the market. If there are legislative deficiencies or market deficiencies or something that has to be changed in the construct of a market, then certainly, with the full input of stakeholders and consumers and those involved in this business, we intend to do so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Drought Assistance

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of drought has been a hot topic in the news and in this House. I noted that many of my constituents are very concerned about the effect a drought would have on their livelihood. Programs like the recently announced emergency water pumping program have assisted some farmers in accessing water supplies to their livestock, but many of my constituents are prohibited by distance from benefiting from that program and have to haul water supplies of up to 2,000 to 3,000 gallons every second day. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister advise what the government is doing to assist farmers who have to haul water in from alternative sources in order to provide for their livestock?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, as we have discussed in this House over the last weeks, this has been a particularly dry year. Alberta farmers are not strangers to drought conditions, but ordinarily it's a regional matter. Unfortunately, this year it seems to be widespread across the province. The member indicated correctly that we have the emergency water pumping program, but in fact many producers do not have a source from which to pump.

I've spent the last several days talking to farmers and ranchers trying to understand what indeed we could do to respond that would be appropriate for their situation. One of the things that we've talked about is solar pumping, but if they can identify a well in a lease, there may be a very high cost to bring power in. We have talked about the opportunity for more dugouts, but that's not going to help right now unless we have a very high rainfall. We're hoping that some of the $10.29 an acre that we've got coming out to farmers will help them with those hauling costs, but we're going to continue to talk to them and try and find some way to respond in the very short term.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. There is the PFRA program to assist farmers, but my constituents say that it takes up to six months to get approval for projects. Does the minister have any plans to help farmers develop these projects sooner?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is an alternative, and we are having discussions between Alberta Environment, the PFRA, and Alberta Agriculture. Certainly I know that our field staff are there and are prepared to help any farmer or rancher with program forms. I think that probably more appropriately we're right now addressing options that can meet the emergency water requirements that producers are facing, and I expect to be able to report back on that very soon.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: No final question, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Court Fines

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following on his '94-95 and '98-99 recommendations, the Auditor General in his '99-2000 report again stated that the Department of Justice should report the results and costs of the collection activities for court fines, which bring in about $85 million a year. The Auditor General further stated:

In 1999, the Department advised us that an action plan would be developed to implement my recommendation. However, as at the end of August 2000, this plan has not . . . been produced.

To the Minister of Justice. My first question is very simple: what is taking so long? It's been six years.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, everything that deals with the question of tracking of payments and those sorts of things involves the redeployment and regeneration of technology. We have a number of priorities for the deployment of technology in the department, and we're systematically dealing with those issues. Maintenance enforcement was deemed to be of a greater priority, and we proceeded with technology in the maintenance enforcement area. We've proceeded with technology with respect to, for example, the JOIN project, which is a question of scheduling and sharing of information. So there are a number of very serious issues relative to information gathering and the use of technology which deploys information. Technology is of course expensive, so we have to prioritize those in the course of which ones we do first.

2:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. At this time can the minister give us a date as to when he expects the recommendations of the Auditor General to in fact be implemented?

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Speaker. We do take the Auditor General's recommendations very seriously, and we want to look at how we can best implement them, but we have to do that in the context of the whole need for technology within the department and how we deploy it and the full information technology plan for the department. I can't give an answer today as to what exact date we'll have the system in place to be able to collect the information necessary.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, with fines coming in as large as, for example, the $160,000 from the Jaber case . . .

DR. TAFT: How much?

MS BLAKEMAN: A hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, let's proceed with the question.

MS BLAKEMAN: With no apparent controls or results or costs on all of these collections, has the minister considered that this program may be perceived as open to abuse?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, one must differentiate between the question of fine collection and how you track certain fine collections. There are default provisions in place so that if people don't pay major fines, they go to jail. Warrants are issued. There's not a problem from that perspective. The area that the Auditor General was looking at is more the collection of the smaller fines, out-of-province fines, those sorts of things which are really on the periphery of the process, not the significant fines that are in the centre of the process. There's significant jail time attached to larger fines.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The softwood lumber agreement came to an end on March 31, 2001. Now, this has worried some in the industry including a large forestry products employer in my riding. I'm happy to say that currently business has not been adversely affected due to the booming Alberta economy and high Canadian demand. However, the economic forecast is not good if the U.S. restricts volume or adds costs to exported forestry products. My first question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister provide an update on U.S. actions against the province's softwood lumber industry and how long it will take to resolve this situation?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think it's first of all important to note that the complaints are brought by the softwood lumber industry of the United States. They bring these complaints to their government officials, and they examine them over a period of time. It is correct that on April 23 the U.S. regulatory authorities did decide that from their point of view there was the basis to initiate formal negotiations and investigations. These allegations are currently under examination. In Alberta the allegations are focused on our forestry practices, and of course we are defending that very rigorously, because we feel that we have sound forestry practices designed to provide for a sustainable harvest over the life of a particular forest.

I'd like to also note here, Mr. Speaker, that we've had some success in our debate thus far with the authorities in the United States, and a number of the contentions have been dropped. We expect the process will not be completed until the end of this calendar year. I think I should also point out to the member and members of the Assembly that there's also the possibility of a further appeal and a further process under the World Trade Organization structure. So the only specific date that I can give to the hon. member is the end of this year as far as the Canadian process is concerned. It could go on longer through international discussions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess my next question, then, would be: who is involved in this process? There have been reports that special envoys may be appointed to resolve this dispute. Can the minister tell the House what the province's and Alberta lumber companies' roles may be in these appointments?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, through the federal government there has been proposed the idea of a special envoy or a special mediator being appointed as far as this particular dispute is concerned. Initially, as I understand it, the federal authorities in the United States were opposed almost automatically to that particular suggestion. However, I understand that there's been some change perhaps in the attitude towards such envoys, and we'll just have to see if this particular type of approach might be looked at more favourably.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. My last question is to the same minister. What is the province's role in funding the softwood lumber defence?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the funding for the defence falls into two areas of responsibility. As far as the specific case, the specific practices of particular forest companies, they have to pay for their legal costs in that regard. When it comes to defending the overall policy, the regulations, the measures that the government takes, government at the federal level will be co-ordinating that and providing support.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Board Boundaries

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new government policy with respect to the establishment of school districts continues to raise some questions. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that the minister has implied the support of the Alberta School Boards Association, will the minister table documents confirming that support in the Legislature?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I believe I clarified that position in an earlier question this period.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Given that Catholic minorities enjoy certain school rights, why are there not similar rights for Protestants when they are a minority in a community?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, there are under the Constitution rights for the minority religion to have a separate school board. Those rights would still be implied.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given a court decision to the contrary, how can a provincial law give minority-faith members the right to be recognized as supporters of the public system?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, under this legislation, as I stated earlier, a person who is of the minority faith can be a public supporter if he elects to or a separate supporter if he or she elects to. That is what is included in this, because that's what the people around Alberta asked me for.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Inland Cement Limited

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's decision in March to fast-track environmental approval of Inland Cement's application to burn coal rather than natural gas in its cement kilns at its northwest Edmonton plant means that there will not be a full environmental impact assessment done, nor will the project be reviewed by an impartial tribunal like the NRCB. Instead of a comprehensive review, the government is holding a public meeting tonight. Given that converting to coal at this plant will mean that 403 tonnes per day of additional greenhouse gases will go up the stacks and that daily emissions of such toxic heavy metals as arsenic, chromium, and mercury will go up anywhere between 30 to 80 percent, how can the minister justify not holding a full environmental assessment, including public hearings?

2:20

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the assumption of his first question was that there's not a full public hearing. I can assure you and all members of the opposition that there will be a full public process. That process begins this evening with a public meeting. Once an application is received from Inland – and we do not yet have that – then there will be a full environmental review process, which also allows for public input.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, then, act on the public concerns raised by area residents about the Inland Cement proposal? Or is tonight's meeting designed to make it appear that the government is listening when in fact the decision to fast-track its approval is final?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, there are about three or four questions in that one question, and I'm not quite sure which one to answer. We are going to the public meeting tonight to listen to the people. We will have several presentations there by people outside government – a scientist from the University of Alberta, a scientist from the Alberta Research Council – to provide input into this public process.

The idea of fast-tracking is totally inaccurate. An environmental review process is not a fast track. It is a total environmental review, just as it says.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, then, confirm that a fast track is not on?

DR. TAYLOR: Absolutely. We will go through a full environmental review process, Mr. Speaker, as I've already told the member opposite.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Climate Change Central

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The two major oil sands production plants now in operation in Alberta are reportedly the fourth largest source of carbon dioxide emissions in Canada now. With the National Energy Board predicting that 70 percent of Canada's total oil production will be coming from Alberta's oil sands deposits by the year 2025 and with an astounding $38 billion worth of expansion plans already announced since 1996, it is clear that Alberta, which is already one of the major bull's-eyes on the world map for greenhouse gas criticism, will be coming under even more severe worldwide and federal government scrutiny and pressure in the near future, unless substantial success is achieved in reducing our CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. Last week a relatively new organization called Climate Change Central opened in Calgary, and my question is to the hon. Minister of Environment, who I understand co-chairs Climate Change Central. Given the significance of the whole climate change issue to our economy in Alberta, could the minister explain what is the primary mission of Climate Change Central?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify an initial statement there about Alberta being in the bull's-eye, Canada produces about 2 percent of the world's greenhouse gases, and Alberta produces 25 percent of that. Ontario produces more greenhouse gas than Alberta. But that does not mean that we can be inactive in Alberta.

Climate Change Central was established with the mandate of creating in Alberta a zero-emission society and making Albertans aware of zero emissions and what zero emissions mean. It is not just a government organization. It is an organization that consists of the private sector, it consists of NGOs, and it consists of government as well. In fact, the co-chair of the organization is Mr. David Tuer of PanCanadian. He's the senior executive at PanCanadian.

One other thing I would say is in regards to funding. The provincial government is committed to this organization. We have provided a total of $7.5 million over the next two years to fund that organization. The private sector is committed as well, Mr. Speaker. For some of the projects that they're doing, their average is: for every $1 of Climate Change Central money that comes from the provincial government, they have $4 of private-sector money.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how does Climate Change Central intend to get their mission or plan off the drawing board and into action in a practical way in the province?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I appreciate the word "practical" there, Mr. Speaker, because this is a very practical organization. One has to recognize that the organization really just got under way. It did come out of a roundtable on climate change, and it will carry out the recommendations of that roundtable. The chief executive officer was just appointed last fall, and we just opened the office about three weeks ago, so they are on the way. They are just getting up and operational, and you are going to see great things coming out of Climate Change Central. In fact, I was recently at a ministers' meeting, and the rest of the country, including the federal Minister of the Environment, Mr. David Anderson, is excited about what Climate Change Central can do and is excited about Alberta being a leader in this area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given that, figuratively speaking, entrepreneurial vision usually consists of looking for and finding a silver lining in a dark cloud, is the minister confident that there is any real possibility of Albertans being able to turn the dark clouds of Kyoto into black gold instead; in other words, taking this problem we're faced with and turning it into an opportunity?

DR. TAYLOR: Oh, I think there's a huge opportunity. When we look at climate change, we already know it's happening, so we have to look at it from two perspectives. We have to look at it from the perspective of emissions. We also have to look at it from the perspective of adaptive technologies: what are some of the adaptations we can make? There are two quick projects I might refer the Speaker and the House to. One is the . . . [interjections] You know, Mr. Speaker, if the members opposite would like to hear what we're saying and hear some good news, they could be a little quiet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister has been recognized. We're now five minutes into this exchange.

DR. TAYLOR: I'll give you just one, then, Mr. Speaker, one example of a project, and that's a CO<sub>2</sub> sequestration project. The biggest greenhouse gas we produce is CO<sub>2</sub>. What do we do with the CO<sub>2</sub>? There's considerable research being done on how we handle CO<sub>2</sub>, how we can sequester it in underground storage capacity.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a Learning department study 70 percent of postsecondary students indicated that tuition is a major barrier, and many students believe that it is impossible financially to attend a college, institute, or university. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will the government review the tuition policy that allows tuition to continue to rise in this province?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, what must be made accurate in what the hon. member said – yes, indeed, there were 70 percent of the people that thought tuition was too high. The other interesting point is that they thought the average tuition was $5,800, when in actual fact it was $3,800. So there actually is a perception issue there as it comes to the cost of adult education, the cost of postsecondary education.

I will be looking at the tuition policy not just because the hon. member has asked me that. As you know, the existing tuition policy has a cap of 30 percent on it. We have a couple of institutions in Alberta that have already reached that 30 percent cap, and that was not by raising tuition fees. It was by lowering expenses. The cap is there as an element of the amount of expenses. By lowering the expenses, they reach the cap earlier.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given that regardless of student perception, tuition costs still deter high school students, what will be done about the government's tuition policy?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that I just answered that question. We are taking a look at the tuition policy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given that students with marks in the 65 to 80 percent range are ineligible for many scholarships, what tuition relief is available to them?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's almost impossible for me to answer on each individual student that is out there. There are student loans available if they so need it. Our student loan program is by far the richest in the country; it went up 22 percent this year.

On this line of questioning I must just say one thing because I feel it is imperative that I say it, and that is that on average around the province students pay 23 percent of the actual cost of university.

The other 77 percent is picked up by the government and other funding institutions.

2:30 Bottle Recycling

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I've been hearing from owners of bottle depots and many of my constituents in Calgary that they are being shortchanged on their deposit when they return some of their beer bottles and cans for recycling. I strongly support recycling, and I'm concerned that people will not continue to recycle if they don't get all of their money back. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Do beer bottles fall under the recycling regulation in the province, and if so, why are some people not receiving the full amount of their deposit when they return some of their bottles for recycling?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister. We're not looking for legal interpretations.

DR. TAYLOR: I see you want a short response, Mr. Speaker, so I'll give you one. As you know, in Alberta when you buy almost any drink product, you have to pay a recycling fee. In 1972 Alberta brewers were excluded from that fee. Voluntarily some pay. Some don't, and that cost to Albertans is overall about $4 million a year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is again to the same minister. What, if anything, is Alberta Environment going to do about this situation?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're working to change the system in two ways. We're working to change it so that Alberta brewers will have to pay, like any other drink container manufacturers have to pay, and we're working to change it so that Albertans will get their full deposits back.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to hear that response.

My final supplementary question is for the same minister. When can Albertans expect to receive the appropriate deposit back, and I mean 100 percent back?

DR. TAYLOR: As I said, we're just working on this, and Albertans can expect to receive their full deposit back on their beer bottles within the next few months.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Driver Licensing

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of recent media attention regarding the impending implementation of graduated licensing in Alberta, a number of questions have arisen. While most people who have talked to me are pleased with the direction the government is taking, some, particularly professional truck drivers, are concerned that not enough attention is being paid to classifications of drivers. My questions today are to the Minister of Transportation. Was consideration ever given to reviewing the existing structure of licensing beyond the proposed changes for new drivers?

MR. STELMACH: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was consideration given following a fairly complete survey and polling of Alberta residents. However, to do anything with this particular area would require a change through neighbouring jurisdictions, and as a result we weren't able to proceed with it.

MR. RENNER: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why is it that additional road tests are required for truck drivers and not for drivers of large recreational vehicles such as motor homes and fifth wheel trailers?

MR. STELMACH: The hon. member raises a very good point. In consulting with various stakeholders across the province of Alberta, we know that we have very strict rules for class 5 drivers and up, especially those that are driving larger trucks in the province. The position taken by many of these people was that a person with a class 5 driving a small car can then, of course, buy a larger motor home and tow a boat or a car behind without any additional training or education. That has led to some degree of concern amongst the traveling Alberta public, especially during the summer season, when we have more of the motor homes on Alberta highways. We are working closely with the RV manufacturers and suppliers to see how we can come up with an education/training program and looking at reviewing how we can also put in better driver awareness, having them sit in a vehicle that could be in excess of 60 feet in length.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thank you. My final question to the same minister. Given that restrictions are placed on probationary drivers under the graduated licensing, is the minister contemplating any restrictions on probationary drivers respecting the operation of large recreational vehicles?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, not at this time. Again, if we were to do something different from the neighbouring jurisdictions, it would mean that we would have a unique set of rules for our jurisdiction. As a result, we wouldn't have consistency and harmonization across all jurisdictions, meaning not only our neighbouring provinces but many of the neighbouring states in the United States, from where we have ever increasing numbers of travelers holidaying in the beautiful province of Alberta.

Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

SummerActive 2001

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to recognize national Try It Day, which was launched on Friday, May 11, as part of the official SummerActive national program. Last Friday the Minister of Alberta Community Development joined with local schoolchildren, seniors, and others to launch this important campaign, which includes a number of physical and fun-oriented activities. SummerActive 2001, which runs May 11 to June 22, is a cross-government initiative to increase awareness and promote active living. Alberta joins with federal counterparts and local community partners in this campaign to encourage Canadians everywhere to become more physically active for the benefit of their own health.

The message throughout Alberta and Canada is simply to get active and get healthy. All it takes is 60 minutes of light activity accumulated throughout the day. Therefore, I encourage everyone to try it and to become more active, not only during this period but throughout the year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Vaisakhi Day

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize Vaisakhi Day. On March 29, 1699, Vaisakhi Day, the 10th Guru of the Sikhs, Sri Guru Gobind Singh Ji, baptized five Sikhs belonging to different castes and created the Khalsa order. Immediately afterwards he asked those very Sikhs whom he had baptized to baptize him. By this act he at once removed the caste distinction among the Sikhs as well as the distinction between the Khalsa and the Guru.

The Khalsa completed 302 years of its creation on Vaisakhi Day, April 13, 2001. This is a very special and historic day for the Sikh nation, a nation which focuses on the values of equality, justice, peace, strength, and purity. This day is celebrated each year with a cultural program and youth award ceremony, held this year on May 5, and by a community parade, held on May 12. We would like to recognize the Sikh Federation and the Vaisakhi Celebrations Committee for their commitment and contribution in enriching Canadian culture.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Alberta College of Art and Design

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask my Legislature colleagues to join me in congratulating the graduating class of 2001 of the Alberta College of Art and Design. In acknowledging the valuable support and encouragement from their families, my recognition also goes to the faculty members and board of governors of the college.

Their convocation this year was very exciting since the first-ever bachelor of design degrees from Alberta College of Art and Design were awarded. Out of the 155 graduates 36 were awarded the bachelor of design. The students have pioneered the program, one of only three in Canada and the first in Alberta. This year seven graduates received an award for their excellence from the board of governors, and one outstanding graduate received the award from the Governor General of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, during the convocation reception I met a number of graduates. It is a great feeling to witness the dynamic attitude and the confidence of Alberta students. Financial wealth is needed at times, but what lasts in human civilization is the wealth of culture and art.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Alberta Crime Prevention Week

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May 11 to 18 is Alberta Crime Prevention Week. Crime prevention needs to exist on many different levels: personal, household, community, and through civic, provincial, and federal governments. On Friday I attended along with the federal Minister of Justice, colleagues from the Assembly, and others a seminar sponsored by the Edmonton Police Service and featuring Lieutenant Colonel Dave Grossman. Lieutenant Colonel Grossman had an interesting perspective on preventing youth crime and, possibly, adult crime by suggesting that all of us, including the three levels of government, work together to reduce young people's exposure to violent movies, videos, and electronic games.

He feels strongly that this is the conditioning and where young folks are programmed to believe that violence against others is okay and, even more, to practise it through the games. He pointed out that we should be putting as much time and care into violence prevention in schools as we do into fire prevention in schools. His three-point plan of educate, legislate, and litigate against offenders was a good kickoff to Alberta Crime Prevention Week.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

2:40 Stephen Gibbings

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to acknowledge this afternoon a great Albertan, an educator who has been awarded the province's highest teaching honour. Stephen Gibbings is one of 22 teachers in Alberta to receive a 2001 excellence in teaching award. Specifically, Mr. Gibbings is receiving the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta's excellence in teaching mathematics and science award.

Mr. Gibbings has been teaching at Cardston high school in the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner for the past four years and has been acknowledged by his colleagues as being committed to his students and to providing them with the best learning environment possible. He is married with two children and is an important member of his community, having been involved with both the scouting movement and the Alberta Summer Games. I would like to congratulate Mr. Gibbings on his prestigious award and thank him for his ongoing, selfless service to our youth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, today is May 14, and you know, there are still two hockey teams in Alberta participating. So now for the first of the two hockey recognitions, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer Rebels

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased and proud to announce that the Red Deer Rebels of the Western Hockey League have won the President's Cup as the WHL champions. On Saturday, May 12, the Rebels, who were ranked number 1 in the Canadian Hockey League for the last 11 weeks of the regular season, were led by their owner, general manager, and head coach Brent Sutter to this championship.

The Western Hockey League champions earned the right to represent the WHL in this year's Memorial Cup by defeating the Lethbridge Hurricanes, the Calgary Hitmen, the Swift Current Broncos, and finally the Portland Winter Hawks. During the play-off season the Red Deer Rebels' goaltender, Shane Bendera, set a new Western Hockey League record for most shutouts in one play-off season, with four shutouts. Coached by one of the very best goaltending coaches in the WHL, Andy Nowicki, Shane is a very deserving winner of the most valuable player award of the WHL play-offs.

On Thursday the Red Deer Rebels will travel to Regina for the Memorial Cup tournament. They will battle with the host team, the Regina Pats, Val d'Or of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, and either Ottawa or Plymouth of the Ontario Hockey League.

Congratulations to the Red Deer Rebels. We wish them the very best of luck in representing all of Alberta and the WHL in the 2001 Memorial Cup.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Camrose Kodiaks

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Camrose

Kodiaks hockey team defeated Flin Flon Bombers 5-0 in the finals of the Royal Bank Cup national junior A championships in Flin Flon, Manitoba. The Kodiaks became the 2001 national junior A champions by going undefeated in all six games of the national tournament. This is an especially impressive achievement as the Kodiaks are only in their fourth season in the Alberta Junior Hockey League.

Special congratulations go out to all Kodiak players including Erik Lodge, Dan Day, Tyler Bullick, Matt Ponto, Richard Petiot, Mark Robinson, Greg Prusko, Kevin Croxton, Jason Kenyon, Dalyn Fallsheer, Brett Osness, Darrell Stoddard, Brad Wanchulak, James Willis, Craig Perry, Mark Masters, Taggart Desmet, Doug Auchenberg, Jordan Chomack, Mike Melnyk, Mark Szott, Rory Rawlyk, Ryan Edwards, Scott Galenza, Joel Williams, and to the Kodiak coaches and staff: Garry Van Hereweghe, Boris Rybalka, Steve Gotaas, Darrell Heck, Ken Miske, Angie Weddeburn, Dr. Greg Ninian, Jeff Mingo, Dalton Reum, Robert Bettger, Daryl Mills, and Colin Christenson. Our special thanks to all of them.

Congratulations to the Camrose Kodiaks, 2001 Canadian junior A champions.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good afternoon. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Lottery Fund Estimates 2001-02

THE CHAIRMAN: We are considering the lottery fund estimates, and we have a list of various departments that are receiving funds from this source. A reminder to all members that this is not governed by the House leaders' agreement of some weeks ago. It's governed by the regular process. The chair is in the hands of the committee as to whether we want to have various ministers going and have questions back and forth, or would you just like to start at the top and go through? Do we have any direction at all from either side?

MR. STEVENS: I thought I would make a few introductory remarks, if I might, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. So it's the Minister of Gaming that's rising. Yes, make your remarks.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks very much. I'm very pleased this afternoon to present the 2001-2002 estimates for the Alberta lottery fund. As you know, the Alberta lottery fund represents the government's total portion of revenue from slot machines, lottery tickets, and video lottery terminals. The Ministry of Gaming co-ordinates payments from the Alberta lottery fund and administers a number of lottery-funded programs. Each year revenue from the Alberta lottery fund is invested in Albertans and in their communities. The fund supports over 8,000 charitable, not-for-profit public and community-based initiatives. These funds help build hockey rinks, playgrounds, and community facilities. They also help fund various health initiatives, cultural events, and volunteer programs.

Through our web site, which can be found at www.gaming.gov.ab.ca, and various other means we inform Albertans of the good works of the lottery fund in an effort to create awareness and a clear understanding of how lottery fund revenue is collected and distributed. We're achieving that goal through our commitment to openness, transparency, and disclosure.

Gaming revenue for 2001-2002 is forecast to be approximately $1 billion, an increase of $62.6 million from last year. Revenue for the 2001-2002 period is projected as follows: $547 million in VLT revenue, $308 million in slot revenue, $154 million in ticket revenue, and $6 million in interest revenue – once again, for a total of approximately $1 billion.

Increased gaming revenue means a direct increase in dollars going to the Alberta lottery fund, which means a direct increase in dollars going to Albertans and into their communities. In keeping with the recommendation from the 1998 gaming summit, no gaming revenue was allocated to the general revenue fund. Instead, all gaming revenue continues to flow exclusively into the Alberta lottery fund.

In addition to supporting community-based projects and programs, the Alberta lottery fund also supports special projects and initiatives administered by the various government ministries. The Alberta lottery fund summary of payments outlines how lottery revenue is to be allocated. Funding for the 2001-2002 period includes: Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development, $11.6 million; Children's Services, $1.2 million; Community Development, $108.5 million; Gaming, $196.5 million; Health and Wellness, $84.1 million. Now included in the Health and Wellness figure is the amount of $45.7 million, which is an operating grant to AADAC, which includes $3.7 million specifically for problem gambling programs and services. Infrastructure receives $345 million; Innovation and Science, $90.8 million; Learning, $52.2 million; Municipal Affairs, $12 million; Transportation, $70 million; and Finance, $44 million.

Lottery funding to individual ministries is over and above annual ministry budgets and is used for things such as infrastructure projects, school renewal and construction, community facility upgrades, strategic research, and health facility construction.

In addition to ministry allocations, a number of foundations and granting programs also receive their funding dollars from the Alberta lottery fund. Allocations for the 2001-2002 period include: community facility enhancement program, $25 million; community lottery board program, $53.3 million; Foundation for the Arts, $21.1 million; Historical Resources Foundation, $5.9 million; human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism, $1.1 million; Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation, $15 million; and Wild Rose Foundation, $6.6 million. These foundations and grant programs are directly responsible for the administration and granting decisions within their mandate.

The Ministry of Gaming is responsible for the community lottery board grant program, which is a program that provides funds for the lottery fund to enhance and enrich project-based community initiatives throughout the province through 88 local community lottery boards. The Ministry of Gaming is also responsible for the community facility enhancement program, which is a matching grant program that provides funds to enhance, expand, and upgrade various community-use facilities throughout the province.

Besides administering these two grant programs – once again, that is the community lottery board grant program and CFEP – Alberta Gaming also allocates lottery revenue to several other initiatives. Through Alberta Gaming the Alberta lottery fund provides funding to the Gaming Research Institute of $1.5 million, which is overseen by the Gaming Research Council. The institute has numerous projects under way, including research into gambling and its relationship to addiction and personality, preventing relapse in former gamblers, and prevention of pathological gambling. The institute's second grant application process is currently under way.

The Ministry of Gaming also allocates lottery fund revenue to major fairs and exhibitions of some $2.7 million throughout Alberta. These events provide opportunities for agricultural and trade exhibits across the province. Edmonton Northlands and the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede also receive lottery funding to help support various community programs and events throughout the year. Each of those organizations receive $7.1 million.

Alberta Gaming also allocates lottery revenue to support the racing industry renewal initiative in support of Alberta's horse racing industry in the sum of $17.9 million. Horse racing is an important, agriculturally based industry in our province. It supports numerous small businesses throughout rural Alberta, and thousands of Albertans depend on a viable and competitive horse racing industry for their livelihood.

A portion of the lottery revenue is allocated to other initiatives, which enables government to support new initiatives or merging projects that are deemed to be community priorities. The amount of that particular item is $11.1 million. Alberta Gaming also allocates lottery fund revenue to lottery operations, a necessary expenditure that represents the cost of managing lottery and gaming network and services throughout the province.

As you can see from the Alberta lottery fund summary of payments for the 2001-2002 period, we are continuing our commitment to maintaining a clear distinction between lottery revenue and other government revenue. Albertans can clearly see where their lottery revenue is invested: in our communities and on projects that enhance the quality of life for all Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my opening remarks, and I look forward to the comments, questions, and insight of all members. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity this afternoon to review the lottery estimates. Our expectations for this afternoon are that we will have some questions for the ministers and that they will be responding to those questions at the end of the duration of the time that we'll be talking. We were asked to address agriculture and rural development first, so I will make some opening comments, and then we'll specifically ask questions of that minister.

So I begin. This is an interesting department. It's changed quite a bit over the years, Mr. Chairman. Certainly since the Lotteries Review Committee was undertaken back in 1995, we've seen a huge change in the way lottery dollars are administered in this province. Our concern with lottery revenue funding becoming a cornerstone of provincial funding is that it's gambling revenue and it's used now as a major revenue source for program funding for this province. That is, in fact, quite different from what the original mandate of this particular committee was.

You know, we've had Alberta Lotteries for many years; we've got records back on them from 1994 certainly. In the '95-96 year there was a review done. The Lotteries Review Committee was held in response to the increasing amount of lottery dollars that were being received by the province. The government sent out a committee where they did some fairly extensive consultation. What they had at that time was 462 presentations. They received over 18,500 written responses in the form of letters, discussion papers, and petitions. The government responded to those recommendations in December of 1995, Mr. Chairman, and what they did was confirm at that point in time a fundamental change in the way lotteries and gaming operated in Alberta and ensured that the primary beneficiaries of regulated gaming in Alberta would be charitable organizations. So that's the commitment they made back in December of 1995.

Have they kept that commitment, Mr. Chairman? We would say no. This is a discussion that we have every year, and in fact this department has moved a long ways away from their commitment of ensuring that the primary beneficiaries would be charitable organizations. In the '95-96 year the total revenues generated during that time period were, I believe, almost $71 million. When we take a look at this current year, the fiscal year that we're discussing now, the 2001 year, what's being received now is a ministry revenue of almost $1.5 billion, a lot of money, a significant increase since that '95 year. My first question to the minister is in fact: why have they moved away from the original mandate of the committee, and why are they ignoring the recommendations of those huge numbers of people who were consulted and felt that they had something to say? In fact the government confirmed that they would be doing what the majority of the people requested in that process. So that would be my first question of this minister.

The second question in relating to what goes on here ties into the business plans. When I try to relate what was talked about in the '95-96 year to the key strategies and goals of this year, I find that there is little commitment made to this original statement. If we take a look at core business 2 and the key strategies, the first key strategy is: "Review the disbursement of the Alberta Lottery Fund proceeds to ensure all funds are being allocated and expended according to policy and intended use." Yet we don't see laid out in these business plans an explicit policy unless I'm missing it. Could the minister point out where I see the exact policy and intended use laid out? They make general references. What this really appears to be, Mr. Chairman, is a slush fund. They feed whatever particular nonprofit organizations hit the list of the year, it appears, and then go to whatever ministries need or want money for whatever reasons and fund those.

So the question for me is: what is the original intended use of these funds? Is it to be a slush fund? That's not what was talked about as a result of the review that was done in the '95-96 year, yet it seems to be what has evolved in terms of how the lottery funds are allocated throughout this province. So if the Minister of Gaming could answer that for me.

Interestingly enough, too, in those years this department was operated quite differently from now. What we got were partners in Alberta lotteries back in those years, and it was really a division of economic development and tourism, a really small sidebar to that particular department. Now we have a Minister of Gaming. What's that about, Mr. Chairman? Why does the government feel that we need a whole ministry dedicated to slush-fund funding for this government? So if the minister could tell us exactly what his job description is and why the government deemed it necessary to set up a separate ministry with business plans and so on, I would appreciate having that information too.

You know, it says here in this minister's mission statement, Mr. Chairman:

To ensure integrity, transparency, disclosure, public consultation and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries to achieve the maximum benefit for Albertans.

Well, what we've seen unfold here in the House in question period and certainly in the Justice department over the last few weeks is quite a different story when we talk about gaming and what happened with the Liquor Control Board.

The way this department was designed and in fact acted out, there was a maximum benefit for a very select few people in this province, according to the court records, one for sure, possibly two, perhaps three, and that seems to be where the maximum benefit is. Perhaps the minister could tell us in some detail what's happened since those years that he feels he can in fact carry out the mission of the department at this time. Integrity, transparency, and disclosure certainly don't seem to be the pillars that one would think they were when you talk about this particular ministry.

There's no integrity in backroom deals, in commissions paid out to a variety of people, in wheeling and dealing to get special preferential treatment. The only transparency in this situation is to the extent that the court documents allow transparency. We've been stonewalled by the Premier for the past two weeks when we talk about any kind of a public inquiry which would in fact give us both disclosure and transparency and to some degree some accountability. So far it seems like only one person's been held accountable in this department, and that person's paying a fine. It sure puts a cloud over the operations of this ministry and the government's operation. So perhaps the minister would like to enlighten us in terms of some of those concerns. It would be very helpful.

Particularly we'd like to know step by step what kinds of processes are in place now to ensure that this particular mission statement can be carried out, because what we've seen in the actual acting out of the ministry would appear to be something quite different, Mr. Chairman. So if he could address that, I would appreciate it. You know, it's a lot of money we're talking about here, over a billion dollars being disbursed in lottery payments, and that means that they have become a mainstream source of revenue for this government. So we have some concerns about that. Was it always the intention of the government to fund programming on gaming revenue? If the minister could answer that.

One other point from his opening comments I would like to address. He said that there was a $62.6 million increase in revenues from the prior year to this year. That's nearly as much as the total revenue collected in the year that I talked about, the '95-96 year, when they did the public review. That's a huge increase. My question around that is: does the department do any particular studies to find out what kinds of choices people are making when they choose to put their dollars in lottery revenues? Is there any kind of social study or revenue choice study that this department is undertaking to find out the kinds of choices people are making? It seems to me that when I take a look at my constituency, the choices people make for putting gambling revenues on the table is the choice between basic necessities – food, clothing, shelter – for their kids.

We have heard many times from the different studies that we've seen throughout the province that for every dollar you collect in lottery revenue, you pay out three in social costs, be it through social services, through the justice system, through corrective programs for kids who then are disadvantaged at home because there isn't enough cash in the family to meet the basic necessities. My question is: are they doing any studies to track that?

With the significant increases that we're seeing year by year in lottery revenue funding, we know that there's only one taxpayer. We've heard the government talk about that a lot of times. Each taxpayer has one paycheque. That paycheque has to meet a number of requirements, and if they're choosing to take a large percentage of their revenue and apply it to lottery funding, then I'm thinking that the government, who is responsible for collecting this money, should be studying the impact of that.

I know the government in the past has talked about this being disposable income. If we take a look at the average taxpayer or the average citizen in Alberta, we're seeing a higher percentage of revenues being generated by this department than would seem possible from a disposable income perspective. This isn't a case where high wage earners are spending more money. This is an across-the-board kind of case where more money is coming in lottery revenues.

So, number one, does the minister do any studies to find out which socioeconomic group the increases in yearly revenue funding are coming from and what impact that has on their lifestyles? What percentage of disposable income is being paid in lottery funding and what percentage of nondisposable income, that which ekes into the basic necessities of life? How much is going there?

We hear repeatedly from frontline workers, be they social workers or be they schoolteachers or be they church groups, that we are seeing an increasing number of kids that go to school without mitts, without boots, without lunches, without breakfasts. We see an increased social cost in terms of conflict in the family when the paycheque gets gambled away on Friday night and there's nothing left over to pay the rent.

I consider myself to be a frontline worker in this instance, because in our constituency office we are dealing with a number of issues and concerns from families who are in direct conflict within the family and within various organizations including school systems because of lack of funding, and a lot of that is directly related to gambling problems within the family. In my constituency there have been three suicides that I know about that have been directly linked to people with gambling addictions.

So while we heard the minister talk in his opening comments about increased funding to deal with addiction problems, I would like more information on that. I'd like to know what stats they have to indicate that the increased funding is necessary. I agree that increased funding is necessary, but what is he basing those decisions on in terms of concrete facts? If we could have that information, it would be very helpful to us.

We've seen a significant change, I think, in addictions over the past five or six years, perhaps 10 years, as gambling has become more prevalent and more accepted and more mainstream in our culture. Can the minister tell us a little bit about what AADAC or other studies have found in terms of the percentage of change, both in terms of the kinds of addiction problems and how much gambling has increased? There must be a percentage on that in comparison to drug and alcohol abuse.

Also, I would like a breakdown, a socioeconomic breakdown if we can, in terms of the dollars being spent but also in terms of age groups and gender. I've seen reports cross my desk in the past talking about the increased problem gambling as an addiction is for young men and how it becomes a bigger problem for women as they age. So if we could get the current information available on those issues, that would be beneficial. I'd certainly like to see that.

We've seen a consolidation of AADAC in the past perhaps two years I think it is. They have moved more of their facilities downtown. There were concerns in the past about that, Mr. Chairman, that a number of people who were using the excellent facilities of AADAC did not want to come downtown where they could be seen and recognized, that they wanted some degree of anonymity out in the communities. Does the minister have any direct information, feedback from people in the organization in terms of whether or not that has helped or hindered the participation levels? Did they see some people fall off in terms of participation? Did it fall off for a little while and then come back to general standards? Feedback on that information.

I don't see those AADAC reports coming across my desk to the same degree as what they used to in terms of some of the real key issues that were talked about and addressed, and I'm wondering why that is. It was good information, Mr. Chairman, and certainly I appreciated it. So if the minister could respond to that, I would also appreciate that.

I know that the minister of agriculture and rural development had some other commitments, and I was hoping that we could address some of those issues first of all. Since that particular minister is getting some dollars from this program, in fact $11.62 million, I would like to put those questions on the record while she's here and hopefully get a response to them this afternoon. I'm wondering if the minister can provide a more detailed breakdown of which initiatives and for what purposes these funds will be allocated. What we see here is a lump sum line item, and it doesn't really give us a great deal of detail in terms of what that money is going to be spent on. It just says agricultural initiatives, and we'd like to know the projects, how much money is assigned to each of those. That would all be helpful.

My second question with regard to that, Mr. Chairman, is: are these initiatives going to be in need of ongoing funding? It's a concern for us, when lotteries are deemed to be onetime funding, that there may be an ongoing need. If so, we would ask if it's not better to have these funds go through the general revenue fund rather than lottery funds.

Could the minister provide the criteria by which it's decided that particular programs should come from lottery funding rather than just the general revenue fund? We still don't grasp the way the government is making their decisions in terms of how these dollars are allocated, so it would be helpful if we had that kind of information. I'm sure the minister will be able to provide that information to me.

Thanks. I'll come back a little later with more questions.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I'd be pleased to just speak very briefly to the lottery fund estimates for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. As was indicated in the estimates, the ministry receives $11.62 million. That figure is unchanged from last year, and it's divided into two elements: ag society operations and the ag initiatives program. The member asked more specifically about the ag initiatives program, but before I respond to that, I'd like to say that the bulk of this money, $8.67 million, goes to ag societies, all ag societies that are in good standing. There are some 289 of those ag societies in the province.

The way they use the money is determined in their communities, and the guidelines are fairly flexible. They are allowed to use that money in a way that benefits or enhances rural life and projects that the ag societies themselves might support. The ag societies are certainly made up of local community people. I believe they have to have 50 members to register, if I remember correctly. So I don't think that there's much question about community involvement in how those dollars are used.

The ag initiatives program, which was more the subject of the hon. member's questions, is $2.95 million. It's project based. It's a grant-matching program. It supports, I would say, agriculturally focused, not-for-profit organizations, and they receive both capital and operational assistance for programs and services that contribute to the improvement of agriculture and rural development. So that would be the broad base of the guidelines.

I'd be pleased to supply the hon. member with the grant criteria in its fullest. I'm surprised that that hasn't been made available to their offices.

The program has been very well received. You would not apply to that same program for the same project for ongoing years normally. The whole of this money can be used to support agricultural marketing, for promotions, extension programs, which are very important in rural areas. It can be used for livestock shows and sales, demonstration plots, applied research. I'm giving very broad ways that it could be used here just to help the hon. member understand the breadth of the program. It can also be used to assist strong industry associations. It can be used for leadership development and training through support of 4-H and agricultural scholarships. It can be used for board and staff and volunteer training opportunities. So those are some of the areas I can speak to that I know it's used for, but I'd be pleased to give the hon. member more information. It is my understanding that at the end of the program year the lists of who received the money through that ag initiatives grant and what the program was for are available.

I think this is a small amount of support that goes a long way in rural communities so organizations can respond to the needs of the communities they serve. Most of all, all of those moneys, in my view, are dedicated to improvement of those communities.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll pass that information on, and I'll certainly review Hansard to see if there are any other questions that require an answer.

3:20

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for her comments, and I appreciate, certainly, the information that she's going to be sharing with us.

Just a couple of quick follow-up questions on that. The ag societies and the approximate $8 million: is that ongoing funding? Where did the money come from prior to it being funded through lotteries? On the project base, with the matching grants, where do the other dollars come from? Are they self-generated within the committees themselves?

So those are my questions for this minister, and then I'm looking forward to the Minister of Gaming responding to my other questions.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to do in writing how ag societies are funded, because they are funded by size and activity, so there is a variety of funding levels. It is an annual funding, and as long as the ag society is fulfilling its mandate in the community, they receive their funding.

On the matching grants I'm not sure I totally understood the question, mainly because I just didn't hear some of the words, but it is matching money. The community can use donated labour and equipment and so on, which helps a lot in some of these projects. I will review Hansard and make sure that the hon. member has all of the information required from her questions and probably a little more too.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay.

The chair would like to just ask a question here. Are we going to take these individual votes and vote them as the process goes along, or do you want to leave them open till the end? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It was not our expectation to vote them individually. It was our expectation to talk about them generally and to try and highlight some of the ministries first or later but then vote everything at 5:15.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, I can confirm that my understanding is the same, that there will be a vote at 5:15 this afternoon after a series of questions and answers.

With respect to some of the points that the hon. member has raised, firstly, from my perspective the lottery estimates are constructed in accordance with the recommendations coming out of the '98 gaming summit. The recommendation was that the funds from gaming not go into the general revenue fund but go into the Alberta lottery fund – and that is in fact happening – that these moneys go into areas which are clearly above and beyond the basic budgets of departments and that they be spent on things which enhance our communities. Each of the ministers will this afternoon be able to address the specifics relating to their own ministry.

I'd like to just spend a moment going through the matters that specifically deal with the Ministry of Gaming. I think that all members are very familiar with the community lottery board grants. They've been in place for a while now and seem to be receiving some measure of success. The major fairs and exhibitions have been receiving these funds, once again, for some time, and the program has been very effective and has been well supported. I might add that when the hon. member talks about what has been going on over the last five or six years, the matters before 2001-2002, which are before the Assembly this afternoon, either are, in the case of 2000-2001, matters that can come before Public Accounts or, in the case of the years prior to that, are matters which have come before Public Accounts for inquiry by members of the Assembly and so have received scrutiny there. It seems to me also that as it relates to the lottery fund itself, these are matters which are audited by the Auditor General. In many cases there are programs of due diligence which require an explanation by the groups that receive the funds of how they in fact are spent.

Both the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede and Edmonton Northlands are significant in their own communities, and both receive these funds for programs and events on an unconditional basis. In the case of the $7 million and in the case of the $100,000 conditionally to support agricultural events throughout the year, there hasn't been any change with respect to those items in the budget.

The community facility enhancement program has been around since October of 1988, some 13 years. We are going into the third year of the fourth iteration of CFEP. This particular three-year program was approved at $75 million in April of 1999 and has been working well. Most members of the community are supportive of it, and I'm sure the members are aware of the conditions that go along with CFEP funding. I note that in all cases the constituencies of all members of the Assembly are beneficiaries in some measure or another over the past year or two of CFEP grants. So I'm sure that each and every member in this Assembly has some personal experience with that.

The Alberta Gaming Research Institute and the Alberta Gaming Research Council once again go back to a commitment arising out of the '98 gaming summit to ensure that there is research into the social and economic aspects of gaming. This project started in 1999 and in general terms is fairly early on, with something just in excess of $1.5 million having been placed in funding and with another $1.5 million in funding going forward.

The line item with respect to Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission lottery operations relates to the core businesses of the AGLC. There are three core businesses: license and regulate liquor activities, license and regulate charitable gaming activities, and conduct and manage provincial gaming activities, which are VLTs, slots, and tickets. The lottery operations cost of $70,689,000 supports the cost of the lottery and gaming operations and activities of the AGLC. It does not involve any funds towards the liquor side of the core businesses.

There are increases in the budget there of $16.1 million to meet certain specific costs, and I'll share with the hon. members what those are. There are electronic games, new ones, of $6.3 million. These are gaming terminals. They're available by leasing and will replace existing owned equipment. There's other gaming equipment of $0.9 million. There is $4.3 million for operations, which means salaries and benefits, cost increases, and repair and maintenance of equipment.

The ticket lottery network and the system are receiving an additional $2.8 million. The ticket lottery network and system upgrade was done in conjunction with the Western Canada Lottery Corporation, the WCLC, as all three provinces that are part of that particular corporation were involved in the upgrade of the system, which was completed last year.

There's also some additional funding for First Nations, anticipating that in fact there will be a successful application under the First Nations' gaming policy later this year once the gaming policy review has been completed and all of the rules are in place. Those additional funds are $1.8 million for casino slots.

3:30

I think it's worth noting that the AGLC services and operations are fully integrated, and by that I mean that licensing, for example, deals with both gaming and liquor activities as do inspections, investigations, revenue, and so on and so forth.

There were a number of questions that the hon. member raised, and they were interesting and far reaching. Certainly I will review Hansard to determine what they are, and to the extent that they are relevant and within the scope of inquiry this afternoon, I will get back to you with written answers.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for his further comments and appreciate that he is going to be providing further information for the questions that he didn't answer at this particular point in time. Specifically, I would like you to include in that some detail on what your policy is in terms of funding. I want to compare it to what the outcomes of that review were back in '95-96.

In your comments you made some reference to dollar amounts for prior years really being the purview of the Public Accounts Committee, which I know very well, Mr. Chairman, having sat on that committee for a long while. But the minister knows that these decisions are not made in isolation, that some of them are cumulative in nature, that we have certainly seen some gambling revenue creep over the past few years, and all of that is relevant to decisions that are made now. In fact, he referenced a series of years on CFEP grants. When we bring in information from prior years, particularly financial information, it's because it's relevant to what has happened over the course of the history of the ministry, and we would hope that they take those questions seriously and with that intent in mind when they answer them.

Those are my questions for the time being, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to ask some questions about the Gaming estimates this afternoon. I wanted to start off, if I might, with some questions about something that hasn't been covered as far as I can tell in the estimates, and that's on-line gambling and the on-line casinos. I wondered: what information do we have about the impact of on-line gambling on Albertans? Is that part of the information that's gathered, or is it so new that that kind of information wouldn't yet be factored in when we're looking at problem gamblers?

I noted that on-line wagers on the continent make up about $13 billion worth of revenue, which is a sizable amount for a rather new industry. I was even further interested in trying to access some of the research on on-line gambling. The access to at least one research site has been hijacked by a casino. When you go onto the Internet to find a particular research study, instead of getting the research study, you get an advertisement for one of the on-line gambling casinos. So my question is: in terms of on-line gambling where is Alberta? Do we offer a licensing of on-line gamblers?

I'm not sure of the legal framework that governs on-line casinos, and I would appreciate any information the minister might have with respect to that. My information is that at least 25 countries offer on-line gambling licences. Again, is that a national or is that a provincial concern in terms of issuing licences? So just some information, if we might, about on-line gambling.

It seems to me that it's going to be very, very difficult to control underage gamblers in any kind of on-line system. I'm not sure how you would go about it. In fact, if there are any regulations governing on-line gambling, how would you go about enforcing them successfully? It seems to be an area that's fraught with difficulties. So I would be interested in receiving information about on-line gambling, Mr. Chairman.

I wanted to ask just a couple of general questions, and then I wanted, if I might be given the opportunity, to address my questions specifically to the lottery funds that have been addressed to education with the minister having the opportunity to answer those questions. In terms of the ministry's office has the result of the creation of the ministry just been the addition of $1,504,000 of administration to the tax bill? Is that the impact of this ministry in terms of creating a separate ministry and the minister's office? If that's not true, then where did the money come from to create the office?

Within the office itself there's $192,000 budgeted for communications, and I'd like to know exactly what that communications budget includes. Communications is found throughout the budget estimates. I'm not sure what the total would be if we added them all up, Mr. Chairman, but it would be considerable. I'd be interested in how much replication there is in ministry offices. Is there any kind of co-ordination over all those communication groups, or just what is the status of a communications department or arm within a ministry?

The number of full-time equivalents has increased from 29 to 32: I guess some detail in terms of what is being bought with those additional employees. I've got a couple of other questions, but I can come back to them after, Mr. Chairman.

I'd like to turn to the amounts in the estimates that are allocated to Learning specifically. I start with the Infrastructure program, where there's $150 million set aside for school facilities and where for postsecondary facilities there's another $60 million set aside. Those are under Infrastructure. In Learning there's a total of $52,200,000 that's going to be spent on technology upgrading, some achievement scholarships, Learning Television, transportation subsidies, and high-speed networking. So a fairly substantial piece of money from the lottery fund is being allocated to education. I guess I would question the wisdom of education being funded out of lottery funds.

Looking at some of the research, as I indicated earlier, lottery funds are still a problem for government. The morality of lottery funds and using lottery funds has been problematic right from the beginning. A number of places have had great public debates before they went into the lottery business. I know there are still a number of American states considering entering the lottery field who are having some fairly heated discussions even at the present time.

One of the strategies used by governments and used by this government to take the heat out of the moral or ethical question is to earmark the funds. That's a strategy that's being used elsewhere and used here, but unlike elsewhere, the most common area that funds have been earmarked for is education. We see in our province that it's becoming increasingly the case that more and more education is being funded from the lottery funds. I find it alarming, and I wonder if we could have some indication from the government in terms of if it poses a similar concern for the government.

Studies elsewhere indicate that where lottery funding is used for education, there is seldom a net fiscal gain for schools. As lottery funds are used for education, nonlottery funds are diverted to other spending. In some states the amount of funding for education out of general revenues has actually dropped as the use of lottery funds has grown.

So it's a concern of mine in terms of relying increasingly on lottery funds for education. Are we setting up a situation where less and less of the budget will actually be allocated for education? That may not be a problem now while lottery funds are plentiful, but I think that, as has been indicated elsewhere, lottery funds are a poor fiscal instrument and tend to promote unsound public policies. I think it's agreed that it's really a poor choice for governments that are wrestling over budget choices.

Is there a concern within government with using lottery funds for education in particular? That would apply to a lesser extent to some of the other areas. I worry that tying school facilities and postsecondary facilities so tightly to lottery funds is going to cause some problems down the road. I know full well, having said that, that those funds are going to be welcomed by boards and universities and institutes that have been so cash strapped in the last number of years. Questioning that money may not be popular, but I think it's a wise thing to do at this point.

I go back to some of the research that indicates that those states that earmark funds out of lotteries for education – and I think there are close to 20 American states right now. It really has in the end not helped education. As I said before, it just frees up other tax dollars to be diverted to other programs, and when lottery funds decline, there's a reluctance on the part of taxpayers to pick up that difference and to adequately fund public education.

Using lotteries as a revenue source for education is being seen as an unstable source. It's also seen as an administratively inefficient way to get revenue, and it's also seen as a form of a regressive tax. So there are many objections to the use of lottery funds for educational purposes.

I'm not sure how that would be borne out in Canada, but certainly south of the border the states that don't have lotteries actually spend a greater percentage of their budget on education, and in those states that do have lotteries, the funding for education has actually decreased. A Saint Mary's College at Notre Dame study concluded:

Regardless of when or where the lottery operated, education spending declined once a state put a lottery into effect. This study indicates that states without lotteries actually maintain and increase their education spending more so than states with lotteries.

I think that's a fair warning to citizens who look at the lottery as relief for education funding in our province. They shouldn't be misled, and like the lotteries themselves, their odds at coming out ahead in this game are rather meagre.

I guess the other thing that happens is the misconception that is left with people that lottery funding looks after education and that the job has been done once those lottery dollars are available. That, again, leads to some difficulty should those lottery funds ever dry up or in any way be curtailed.

I had a number of other questions about the Gaming Commission itself and the control of lotteries. I watched some of the lottery ads, as we all have, I suspect, the odd time on television and not paid too close attention to them. My questions are: what control is exercised over lottery advertising? Is there control that's exercised? Again, the criticism of lottery advertising from elsewhere is that it overemphasizes the chance of winning, that people come away from those ads with the feeling that they actually have a chance, but they don't. The advertising is designed so as to disguise the real odds of winning in one of the lotteries, and they're left with the false notion that somehow or other there's skill involved in taking part in a lottery. I did see an ad to this effect, that somehow or other they'll regret not having played if their numbers come up. So there's this notion that you shouldn't miss playing because you're going to be unhappy if your numbers come up and you haven't placed your bet for that week or bought your lottery ticket.

There is a great deal of information about the impact of lotteries on different segments of our population, and we've had some of that information from the ministry and from AADAC and other agencies, but indications are that there's targeting – and aggressive targeting – to market lotteries to the poor. My question is: is there such targeting done here? The information is that some lotteries time their advertising, for instance, at the time when there are going to be social assistance cheques coming out, when there are going to be pension cheques distributed, or when it's going to be the end of a month or at a time when a number of employees are being paid, again, a specific targeting of lottery advertising to people who are experiencing living in poverty.

Maybe this is not the place to ask that question, but if it's not, I'd appreciate hearing from the minister in terms of where it should be asked. I think it's an important question, given the role that television plays in our lives.

[Ms Graham in the chair]

Just a couple of other questions, if I might, Madam Chairman. I wanted to go back to the Alberta Gaming Commission. The members of the commission are listed, but can I find out how appointments are made? How do you end up being on the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission? What are the legal requirements of appointees? What kinds of background, what kinds of rules and regulations govern their behaviour? There's been some discussion in the Legislature in the past week or 10 days about commission members, but I still don't think it's widely publicized in terms of who those are and how they become members and, in particular, the links with government. Is anyone precluded because of previous involvement with ministries, either as employees of the ministry or consultants to the ministry? So information on the appointment of the commission itself would be of interest.

I think that just about concludes what I had for this first round, Madam Chairman. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, and I thank the hon. member for his questions. I'll try and address some of those questions now if I might.

He started with a question with respect to on-line gaming or Internet gaming: where is Alberta on that particular issue? I can tell the hon. member and all hon. members that Internet gambling continues to be illegal in Canada under the Criminal Code of Canada, although it's not specifically referred to. I understand that the sections of the Criminal Code that relate to that particular matter are sections 206(1)(a), 206(1)(c), and section 206(4), and obviously the enforcement of Criminal Code offences falls within the mandate of police agencies.

The hon. member is right that there are many such sites outside of Canada. The information I have is that it's estimated that there are more than 1,300 such web sites that offer some form of on-line wagering on the worldwide web, so it is something that is proliferating outside of Canada. It is illegal in this country. Internet gambling is an emerging issue for all provinces, and the AGLC is going to continue along with the Ministry of Gaming looking to the Gaming Research Institute, the Western Canada Lottery Corporation, and the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation to provide update information about the various aspects of Internet gaming. So that is something that this jurisdiction and other provincial jurisdictions in Canada are continuing to monitor and to continue to understand better. At this point in time it is illegal in Canada, so it does not exist.

There were some questions relative to the Ministry of Gaming with respect to communications and things of that nature. The Ministry of Gaming provided its estimates a week ago, and that would have been the appropriate time for those particular types of questions to be asked. I know that many were, and we're in the process of providing answers to those.

There was a series of comments and perhaps questions with respect to the issue of gaming continuing to have a moral aspect to it, and I think that's fair. We have a society that has mixed emotions about this; there's absolutely no doubt about that. But I think the one thing that sets Alberta apart from other jurisdictions in Canada is the fact that we use a charitable model for our gaming. We all know that in another province today there is a plebiscite going on, and in that province the revenue associated with gaming in its entirety goes into the general revenue fund of that province, whereas here that is not the case. All of the gaming proceeds that go to the government, in fact, go into the Alberta lottery fund.

I think what's also important to recognize as part of this is that not-for-profit charitable groups, in addition to the money that they receive pursuant to various grant programs under the Alberta lottery fund, are also the beneficiaries of some approximately $160 million as a result of being recipients of licences for casinos or bingos or raffles. That is roughly the amount that we can anticipate some 8,000 or so charities receiving in addition to the moneys under the Alberta lottery fund.

The hon. member raised some questions with respect to lottery advertising, and I think there were references to potential problems of misleading advertising or advertising that is targeted to particular groups. I'll look into that further. I'm not aware of that. I haven't had a complaint about it. I believe that the majority if not all of the advertising relative to lotteries per se will be controlled through the Western Canada Lottery Corporation, which is responsible for lotteries in the three western provinces, and that would be Alberta, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan. So it would be there that the advertising is found, and as I said, I will make some inquiry into that, but I'm not aware that that is an issue in this jurisdiction at this time.

With respect to appointments to the board of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, I can advise the hon. member that the appointments are done by order in council. The members of the commission are citizens at large of Alberta. They are not stakeholders or representatives of liquor or gaming or any aspect of liquor or gaming. They are what I would call normal Albertans, who bring their skill set and their experience to the table to do the business of the board.

With respect to the behaviour governance – and I use those words because I think those are the words of the hon. member – there is a policy in place that deals with that. It's an extensive policy, and it is a policy that applies to all members of the AGLC and is something that I can provide some additional information on. There is a code of conduct and ethics for the ministry that is contained within the policies and procedures manual of the Ministry of Gaming. That particular document was last issued in its entirety in May of 1998. It has received amendments from time to time, and there was a form of it prior to that point in time. But it goes through a number of areas providing advice with respect to matters such as delegation of authority and general conduct, some instruction relative to sensitive matters like sexual harassment, and in particular it has a provision dealing with conflict of interest. That is very much a part of the rules of the AGLC.

It contains very strict provisions.

For example, you will find that one of the provisions is that employees must not accept gifts, favours or services which could be viewed as influencing a business or enforcement decision. This includes accepting gifts, travel, accommodations, [et cetera] from any supplier to the AGLC, licensee or agent.

So there is that kind of provision.

There's also a specific provision that says that employees who could be placed in a conflict of interest situation due to the nature of their duties and responsibilities and employees in the Executive Manager and Senior Manager classifications will be required to disclose their outside business interests and financial holdings, on a yearly basis, in writing on a form approved by the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer.

So there is an annual process that is in place and which has been followed relative to this issue.

The AGLC has established a very extensive code of conduct and ethics, and that code of conduct and ethics deals with a number of issues, including the issue of conflict of interest. All employees are made aware of this particular policy, and it is very much in place and operational at this point in time.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Yes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Madam Chairman. I was just going to ask if the Minister of Learning intended to respond at this time.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. I'd be pleased to respond at this particular time. First of all, with the lottery funds that we have before us, there are a couple of specific things that deal with Learning, Madam Chairman. First of all, what I would talk about are the scholarships. What we see is that this year the scholarships have increased from $1.7 million to $3.1 million. This is in keeping with the budget that was tabled previously. I feel and I'm sure the hon. member across the way feels that scholarships are an extremely important element. This one in specific, I believe, is the Jimmie Condon athletic scholarship, which was increased in value.

The second point that we are looking at is $8.1 million for Learning Television. Madam Chairman, I think that you know and that everyone in this Legislative Assembly knows the great effect that this has had, going through Learning television, where we have actually been giving courses over the television and will continue to do so. Another important component is that we expand this, and this $8.1 million will be to expand.

The third component of the $52 million, Madam Chairman, is the roughly $40 million that is a transportation subsidy. This is in keeping with transporting students around the province and, indeed, taking them to school, where their learning can take place.

The last component is $1 million for high-speed networking. This will pay for the high-speed lines that are going into each and every school in this province, according to the Supernet component. The $1 million is the start-up amount on this and hopefully will be expanded over the next few years. What we plan to do with this $1 million is that each school that has the Supernet will be funded to a capacity of 10 megabytes, Madam Chairman. This is what these dollars will be used for. Again, it's extremely important that these things occur.

In general, that's what the dollars will be used for from the Learning budget. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, and I thank the minister for his comments, but they weren't in response to my questions. So maybe after the minister has had an opportunity to review Hansard, some of those questions might be answered, Madam Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I have a few comments and observations and questions that I would like to put forward in our lottery fund estimates here today. I would like to start by looking at the ministry business plan summary. I see here where the vision is:

A province that strives to balance choice and responsibility in its gaming and liquor industries, uses revenue derived from these activities for the benefit of Albertans, and provides opportunity for competition and enhanced services in its liquor and gaming industries.

We look here particularly at core business 1: "Develop provincial gaming and liquor legislation and policy, and regulate the gaming and liquor industries in accordance with legislation and policy." So again I look under core business 1 and see that the goal is that "Alberta gaming and liquor policy achieves a balance between social responsibility and economic benefit to Albertans." I see that our first key strategy here is to "monitor the gaming and liquor industries to identify emerging issues and trends, such as potential growth, and develop policies to address these issues." When we start to talk about this particular key strategy and look at the vision, where we have "a balance," where does that balance occur? Does this balance occur in regards to the amount of dollars that we're taking away from the public in this type of a situation? Is it a percentage of, say, the average income of Albertans that we gauge this balance on? Just what is our determining factor where the balance does occur in the gaming and liquor industries?

When we look at potential growth here, again where is that growth coming from? Is it growth because we are currently in boom times in this province, that there is more money around, the fact that our population continues to expand each year? Or is this potential growth in certainly trying to expand on an individual basis the number of dollars spent per person in the gaming and liquor industries? So if we could have some more clarification as to what is meant here by balance.

Continuing along this line, I notice that we are looking at emerging issues and trends here. When we look at trends, one of my questions would certainly be: in the statistics gathered by the Gaming and Liquor Commission across this province, do they see any sort of trend in those southern communities which are very close to the Alberta/Montana border, any difference in the amount that they are spending on gambling in Alberta as opposed to, say, communities farther away from any bordering state or province where gambling may occur, if in fact there is a difference there?

Now, as well, in moving along here and looking at performance measures, I see that one of first performance measures in core business 1 is the "percentage of Albertans surveyed who are satisfied with the conduct of the liquor business in Alberta." Again, what we see here are the results tabled in percentages. I also notice that the target for 2001-2002 is 70 percent and the target for 2002-2003 is 75 percent, or an increase of 5 percent, of Albertans who'd be satisfied with the conduct of the liquor business in Alberta. I was wondering what strategies the department is going to be employing in order to increase this satisfaction level. What are going to be the measures to do that, as to how that would be achieved?

Now, then, when we start using strictly percentages, it also invites many questions as to how this figure of 70 percent was arrived at and how the figure of 75 percent is going to be arrived at for the year 2002-2003. Some of my questions in regards to the use of percentages, whether it be in performance measure 1 or whether we look at performance measure 2, "percentage of Albertans surveyed who are satisfied with the conduct of legal gaming entertainment in Alberta" – again we do see that percentages are used in the second performance measure and also that we do have an increase of 5 percent for the year 2002-2003 over the current year, 2001-2002.

So when we are using these statistics – and the minister can certainly provide these in writing later – how big is the sample that was used in order to determine these percentages? Who was surveyed? What were the guidelines used? Like, did we make certain we had new gamblers or young gamblers and a balance of older gamblers and senior gamblers? What steps were taken to ensure that our sample was not a biased sample? In other words, how many people were interviewed? Where were these interviews taken? Was the sample widespread across the province? You know, how are we certain that this was a representative sample and not a biased sample?

So those are a few questions that I have in regards to core business 1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie certainly discussed core business 2, so I'd like to skip over here to core business 3, which is to "support leading-edge research on gaming and liquor issues in Alberta." In looking at core business 3, "the Ministry is a partner in leading-edge gaming and liquor research," I see their key strategies here are to "support research into, and inform Albertans of, the social and economic aspects of gaming" and also, in partnership with the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission and the gaming and liquor industries, "ensure consumers of alcohol and gaming products are aware of prevention and treatment programs for problem gambling and alcohol abuse."

Again I see that there is a potential conflict when I look at this performance measure and I look at the key strategy in core business plan 1, where we are looking at such things as potential growth and developing policies to address these issues. So they don't seem to be compatible, these two performance measures, where we're looking at treatment in one case – in doing so, we are recognizing that there is a significant problem with those who are addicted either to the gaming or the liquor aspects – yet at the same time we are looking at seeing how this industry can potentially grow. So my question to the minister would be that in achieving balance between a growth industry and an industry that certainly realizes and looks at the problems some Albertans are having in these two areas, how is this balance achieved?

Also, I look here at both of the performance measures in core business 3: “the percentage of partners who are satisfied with level of support and cooperation for research prevention and treatment programs”, and the second performance measure, the “percentage of Albertans surveyed who are aware of prevention and treatment programs for problem gambling and alcohol abuse.” We have in this province and have had just some tremendous work done by AADAC over the years. I would think that when we are looking at a target for 2001-2002 in both of these particular areas, we certainly would have been able to establish some type of a baseline and look at being able to establish from that baseline a performance measure which would increase over time and fulfill both of these performance measures.

Now, as well, a question that I think has to be asked at this particular time. There seems to be a great increase in attention being focused on a sport lottery in this province. At this particular time it's focusing, as we understand it, on our two professional hockey teams, the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames, realizing that both of these franchises do play against teams from the United States and certainly have to take into consideration the fact that they are paying their salaries in American dollars and collecting their moneys in Canadian dollars. There were indications in this House, from questions by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to the former Minister of Gaming, that indeed studies had been undertaken as to the possibility of there being a sport lottery in this province for the purposes that I have discussed. So what I would ask the minister is: if in fact there have been studies, when were those studies carried out?

A second question, of course, would have to be: if those studies have been in fact carried out, would it be possible for him to make those available to us? If in fact these sport lotteries are a serious consideration of this government, would the moneys that are derived from there be going just to the professional teams, or would they also be shared with amateur hockey programs in this province? Would they be shared with all amateur sports groups in this province? What would be some of the ways that the dollars from this would be disbursed?

As well, I have some general questions that I would like to ask the minister. We look at the gaming business plan on page 167, to “review the disbursement of Alberta Lottery Fund proceeds to ensure all funds are being allocated and expended according to policy and intended use.” So for the minister: could he please tell us exactly how this review takes place, what is done when funds are found not to have been allocated according to policy, and what sort of follow-up occurs to ensure that any infractions that have occurred don't occur again? Also to the same minister: can the minister tell us exactly how many funds in 2000-2001 were not “allocated and expended according to policy,” and what sorts of steps his department took to rectify this situation?

Now, as well, a general question. A number of community groups have certainly taken advantage of the program, the lottery dollars that have been available. Unfortunately, some of those groups have had moneys that members of the organization have stolen and spent. These community organizations have worked so hard for those dollars, and their volunteers certainly don't have the opportunity to get these dollars back easily. So with this seeming to be an ever increasing situation that nonprofit groups are encountering, what has the department done in order to assist these community nonprofit groups in handling their finances in such a manner that it makes the possibility of these funds being stolen much more difficult?

As well, other general questions that I do have for the minister. Will the minister provide a detailed breakdown of exactly how much of the lottery funds for 2001-2002 are going to programs specifically for people with gambling addictions? Again, certainly a very critical area when we look at this whole issue of gaming, because these are the things that destroy families, that rip them apart, and for the people who do have the addictions, it certainly is a very, very destructive force on them too.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

As well, can the minister provide us with any reports or studies his department has done on the use of lottery funds in other jurisdictions? I see in the core business plan that certainly they have looked at other jurisdictions, and they “monitor gaming and liquor policies in other jurisdictions and develop and implement benchmarks and best practices” for that. So if he could please provide us with that.

Could the minister provide us with a listing of lottery fund grants and expenditures by town or city for the 2000-2001 fiscal year? Again, so many nonprofit groups do require these types of grants and expenditures to fund projects in their communities. Otherwise, they could not have any real hope of accomplishing that feat in a realistic period of time.

Another general question I'd like to ask the minister: what are the goals and performance measures with respect to the lottery fund and its administration? Are they simply those applied to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission with respect to collection, distribution, and efficiency, or are there other areas as well?

As well, can the minister explain what role the increasing lottery fund revenue this year, which is over a billion dollars for the first time, plays in his department's current review of licensing and regulations?

Finally, my last general question for this time is: can the minister explain what sort of performance measures are used in assessing the use of lottery fund money for government projects?

So, Mr. Chairman, with those questions I will take my seat, and if the minister wishes to respond to some of those at this time, that would be fine. I realize that some of the other questions might take some time, so thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: I wonder if the committee would grant consent for a brief reversion to Introduction of Visitors.

Introduction of Visitors (reversion)

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Chairman, I have great pleasure in introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly Her Excellency Ms Geetha de Silva, high commissioner for Sri Lanka. Sri Lanka is about one-third the size of Alberta and has a population of 16 million people. Sri Lanka means the land of wealth. Alberta is home to some 2,000 people whose origin or ancestry is from Sri Lanka. The first female ever to be elected to any parliament was from Sri Lanka, the former Prime Minister Sirima Bandaranaike. This is Her Excellency's first visit to our beautiful province. She attended the annual Sri Lanka banquet in Calgary on Saturday, May 12, and will be meeting with Edmontonians of Sri Lankan origin today. This morning she met with the Calgary Chamber of Commerce and has had courtesy visits with the hon. Speaker and the hon. Minister for International and Intergovernmental Relations. I request Her Excellency Ms Geetha de Silva to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Lottery Fund Estimates 2001-02

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the hon. member for his wide-ranging perspective on this matter. I think, like the previous member who was making comment, many of the questions may properly have been asked last week when the ministry plan was under consideration. Of course there were many questions asked at that time. Those answers are in the process of being addressed, and we will be responding in writing. I can tell the hon. member that those questions that are responsive to the matters before us today will be answered to the extent that I don't answer them verbally here.

With respect to the issue of growth, generally speaking the growth of revenue from gaming has kept pace with the growth of revenue in government, generally at 4 percent annually. The things that I note, without knowing what the details may be, are that our province's GDP has been growing annually and the number of people who have been coming to this province because of the Alberta advantage has been growing annually. So I would imagine it's a combination of those two factors in large measure, but we will give further consideration to that particular question of the hon. member.

In terms of a balance, I think that can be answered in a number of ways. But one can go back to the '98 gaming summit and the comments and recommendations that came out of that, and I think one has to have those present in their mind. The hon. member is undoubtedly aware that the AGLC is currently conducting a gaming licence policy review. That was basically announced, I believe, in late '99 and started in early 2000 and is ongoing. The fact is that that particular policy review is in large measure going on because Alberta's gaming industry has grown and matured, and there is without a doubt interest within our community at large in expanding gaming in this province, but there's also definitely an interest in assessing the social and economic costs and benefits of gaming.

So those are the kinds of things that one has to take into account in the context of balance when considering a gaming policy. This particular review is ongoing. It is anticipated that it will be completed sometime this summer. Obviously, matters are going to remain in status quo until we get that policy in place, and it will dictate where we go from here. It seems to me that a balance of the various interests within our community on this issue will be part of that process.

There was a comment and perhaps a question with respect to the proposal for a sports lottery or an NHL lottery. That is an issue that has been raised from time to time by the NHL teams that we have in this province, the Calgary Flames and the Edmonton Oilers. As the hon. member is aware, those are small-market teams. As you pointed out, they pay salaries in U.S. dollars, and the exchange rate is not favourable to us at this time or for some time. I believe both teams continue to lose money on an annual basis, notwithstanding what appears from the outside to be a prudent approach to managing their teams' budgets at the low end of the scale in the NHL hierarchy. So it's not like they're big spenders – I think they're at the other end of that particular scale – yet they're having difficulty.

This is a proposal that they put forward. It is something that we have said we will take a look at. We are looking at it as a work in progress, and it is something that accordingly is not finalized. We don't know what it may look like in the end result, other than the fact that what is under consideration at this point in time is something like a 50-50. The hon. member is undoubtedly aware that those types of raffles are held at many sporting events, whether they're baseball or football or hockey. But this would be on a provincewide basis and would typically see the winner receiving half of the amount and the other half being available for distribution to the NHL teams and perhaps some aspect of amateur sport, net of expenses associated with this, and it would be done on, say, a weekly basis. It would be an ongoing thing.

The NHL teams in Alberta have indicated that they are looking to surviving in our marketplace for another three years, so they can get to the year 2004, when I understand the players' collective bargaining agreement comes up for renewal. At that point in time they will be able to address perhaps some of the fundamental issues which have created the situation they find themselves in. But it's a work in progress at this point in time, and when I know more about it, the hon. member will also.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was going to have the rest of my remarks relate to the Ministry of Health and Wellness. They'll be short remarks. I just want some more detail on the information that's provided for us here. So I'll go through them quickly, and if we can get the minister to respond, that would be excellent. We see a fair amount of money being dedicated to Health and Wellness. In this particular instance what I'm looking for is a bigger breakdown of the dollars that we have here.

There's a decrease in dollars to Alberta Wellnet this year, so if the minister could explain to us why the decrease when there's been fairly consistent funding from lottery funding over the past couple of years in that area.

In the health innovation fund we're seeing the funding cut in half, so if we could have some details on what the dollars are being spent on and the rationale for the decrease in funding there, it would be helpful.

In the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission we're seeing a significant leap in funding there. If the minister could provide a more detailed breakdown of the funds going to AADAC, specifically what we'd like to know is how much of the funds are being targeted towards initiatives and projects dealing with the effects of gambling addictions. So hopefully we can get that in writing at some point in the future, that degree of detail and the projects they're working on. That would be helpful.

Aboriginal health strategies. We see an increase in funding there. Once again, specifically what are those dollars for?

The wellness initiative significantly decreased over the prior year. Why? What's happening there?

The practitioner services is quite interesting too. That's an increase in funding there. Last year was the first year that funding came from lottery fundings there. So if we could get a breakdown of those dollars and if we could get some information on what the alternative compensation strategies are and how the funding breaks down for each one of those, that would be helpful.

Also, the federal nursing stations and seeing an increase there when in fact less dollars were spent than had been budgeted in the prior year. So more information on that. If he could give us a rough overview of that, that would be helpful at this point.

MR. MAR: Mr. Chairman, I will, as requested by the hon. member, review this and provide her with written responses to be able to provide the more detailed parts of my responses to her questions. In broad terms I can say that good money is being spent from lottery funds to provide good programs within the Department of Health and Wellness. I can outline some of them in broad terms.

For example, Mr. Chairman, on the issue of Alberta Wellnet some $13 million is being allocated. The hon. member asked why that was a reduction from previous years, and of course the program is in a different stage of development right now. I can say that a key direction for the current fiscal year will be to continue to work on some things that have been initiated already, such as delivering information technology solutions that support the department and health system partners to improve effectiveness of population health programs such as newborn metabolic screening, breast cancer screening, cervical cancer screening, and pathology lab reports.

We are working on the preparation of a new strategic plan to fully integrate telehealth into the health system. Also, Mr. Chairman, we are piloting the pharmaceutical information network. That is to build active medication profiles for patients, and that will be piloted in selected physician clinics, pharmacies, and health facilities starting late in 2001.

On the issue of alternate compensation strategies, some $12.35 million, those have been allocated to the alternate compensation plan for physicians. Those funds are provided to encourage physicians to develop and implement innovative and comprehensive multi- and interdisciplinary methods of delivering health services. Examples of this, Mr. Chairman, would include the Associate Medical Centre in Taber and the community-based women's health services for women at risk.

On aboriginal health strategies, Mr. Chairman, some $3 million. Examples of projects that are being funded under the aboriginal health strategy project fund are the creation of a mobile urban street team to provide service and support to street people in downtown Lethbridge in addressing issues that affect their quality of life and also the continuation of an aboriginal liaison worker to work with RHA staff on such preventative initiatives as discharged patient follow-up, Head Start programs, and suicide prevention initiatives. Also, there is support for an aboriginal diabetes wellness program. This program is designed to offer the choice of traditional or western methods of wellness and provide information to help aboriginal people live and function well with diabetes. Also, annual funding of $200,000 is provided for the aboriginal health careers bursary.

The federal nursing stations, Mr. Chairman. There are three stations, located at Hay Lakes, Fort Chipewyan, and Fox Lake. Lottery funds in the amount of $2.66 million are provided to federally operated nursing stations. This program reflects the costs incurred by Albertans in receiving medical treatment at these nursing stations serving remote northern communities.

For the health innovation fund, Mr. Chairman, the total allotted for the fund in 2001-2002 is $10.8 million, of which $5 million is supported by lotteries. These funds are provided to health authorities and help other providers to seek new and innovative ways of maintaining the health of Albertans and in delivering health services in the most effective and efficient ways possible. To date I can report that there are some 48 projects that have received funding, and of this total the Capital health authority has been sponsored for 13 projects and the CRHA for eight projects.

Some of the projects for the innovation fund I think are notable. First of all, the formation of a child asthma network to improve the system of services available for children and their families affected by asthma. Also, the development of a partnership between public health nurses in the Calgary region and social workers from the Calgary Rocky View child and family services authority. Also, Mr. Chairman, a community-based project to provide physician-supervised, pharmacist-managed service to prevent blood-clotting disorders such as stroke. Also, a project to demonstrate the potential in using companion animals in the treatment of individuals with mental illness. Another such project is the provision of outreach services to serve the needs of individuals with fetal alcohol syndrome, their families, and the communities in which they live. Finally, another example is a pilot project to provide prescription drugs and education at no cost to the homeless and working poor who have little or no access to prescription drugs.

The Alberta wellness initiative, Mr. Chairman, some $1.85 million. These funds will be provided to regional health authorities for child health initiatives. The funds can be used within the following parameters: to enhance initiatives to improve the health of children and youth, and to support collaboration of partnerships relating to children and youth that the regional health authority or other organizations are already involved with. Examples include school health initiatives such as Safe and Caring Schools; initiatives to reduce adolescent risk behaviours with partners such as schools, municipalities, and AADAC; and prenatal and parenting programs such as partnerships with the Canadian prenatal nutrition program and the community action program for children.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, or AADAC. Some $45.699 million of lottery funds in that amount are directed to support the operations of AADAC. AADAC is a nonprofit Crown agency that assists Albertans in achieving a life free from the abuse of alcohol, other drugs, and gambling through residential and nonresidential treatment and education/prevention services. I think the good work of AADAC is well known to members of this Assembly. Examples of the programs offered through AADAC include problem gaming programs, youth programs aimed at prevention and treatment of addictions, and intensive day-treatment programs. In 2001-2002 there will be an emphasis on youth and the development of innovative partnerships.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I will review the Hansard for further detail that may be provided.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister. I've one follow-up question. Some very interesting programs and initiatives and strategies outlined there. I'm wondering if the minister could share with us what the criteria are for evaluating these strategies and initiatives and determining success or progress and whether or not funding would be ongoing in some of those areas.

MR. MAR: Well, I think that, in general terms, Mr. Chairman, we are always interested in results and not simply reporting on activities and programs. All such programs will be evaluated for their success, as are all programs provided by the Department of Health and Wellness. With respect to the specific measurements from various programs, I'll be happy to provide that by written response.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. I'm hoping that those progress reports or the criteria by which you evaluate them would individually be available after the fact. To the extent that you can share them with us, I would hope that we would see them being tabled or otherwise provided to members in the future. So those are my comments for Health and Wellness.

I'd like to move on to Transportation now, Mr. Chairman, if I could. Just a few questions here. We see in the water management infrastructure that the same number of dollars are being expended from lottery funding this year as last year. So if the minister could explain to us how this $20 million relates to the goal of the fund to support charitable, nonprofit public and community-based initiatives, we would be very grateful, because it doesn't seem to fit into that particular mandate. We'd like to see it funded better, I think through sustainable general revenue funds. So if he could comment on that, and particularly exactly what's being accomplished there would be important for us to know.

We see an original $50 million coming from the Canada/Alberta infrastructure program. We'd like to know, once again, how this fits with the mandate of the organization and also exactly what's being done there. I'm sure the minister has some information that he'd share with us on that particular area.

Interestingly enough, there is no funding this year for the north/south trade corridor. If I'm correct, I don't think that's done yet. So how is it being funded? If the minister could share that information with us, which is also the case for the Alberta cities transportation partnerships. I didn't know that that was onetime funding being allocated last year. I must be incorrect in my assumption there, so if the minister could talk a little bit about that, it would be helpful to us.

Now I'd like to go to the Auditor General's report, Mr. Chairman, if I could, for some general comments on gaming. The Auditor General last year I think made an interesting comment and a significant comment in his report when he talked about this ministry facing "a number of significant risks" in terms of the balancing act that they have to do and the broad responsibilities facing them in terms of "monitoring compliance with liquor, gaming and tobacco laws and agreements." What he recommended was that the Commission improve its administration of bingo, casino, and pull ticket licences [and that they] assess the effectiveness of its Gaming Licensing Division by linking business objectives to measurable targets and indicators. These recommendations were accepted and [his] staff continues to monitor the Commission's progress in this area.

So if the minister could comment for me in terms of the progress that they are making. Will we see this listed again as an area maybe not of concern but certainly of interest, necessitating review by the Auditor General? That would be helpful to us.

I want to spend just a couple of minutes on the racing industry renewal initiative and find out from the minister what progress has been made there. We see some interesting comments being made by the Auditor General last year when he talks about the responsibility the government has to regulate horse racing and how it "has been delegated to the Alberta Racing Corporation" and some concerns in terms of legislative noncompliance. He talks about the agreements under the casino gaming terminal program and "amounts paid to the Alberta Racing Corporation . . . and racetrack operators in excess of normal retailer commissions" and that these "do not comply with legislation." Has that been brought up to date? What in fact has been done to solve that issue for the future? Have any of those funds been recovered? I guess that's the extent of my questions there.

We do see that the Auditor General last year came up with a major recommendation, recommendation 15, where they recommended an appropriate accountability system to determine whether public resources provided to the horse racing industry have been spent for the intended purposes and have achieved their objectives.

That's a fairly significant recommendation and is certainly a reflection, I think, on how this particular industry spent their dollars and their lack, I would believe, of due diligence by the ministry in seeing that this industry actually spent the dollars in accordance with practices that were not in compliance. So could he comment on that and what's happened?

The AG goes on to talk about contractual framework not providing adequate accountability, that there wasn't a "clear agreement on the terms of the grant program," and that there are "several problems that the agreements to date have failed to prevent or rectify." So an update on that is important. Have they developed new agreements, and do they address previous weaknesses, Mr. Chairman? If he could talk about that.

There's another major recommendation in the AG's report, and that's number 16 where they talk about the ministry taking "appropriate steps to hold the Alberta Racing Corporation accountable for the performance of its delegated responsibilities." So, once again, pretty significant. He goes on to talk about: the accountability to the Assembly "is partially met through the filing of the Corporation's annual report." It's interesting that some of these other matters weren't met. There seems to be some conflict there in terms of the corporation resisting "attempts by the Ministry to direct how it should spend the resources." Have those been resolved? Could we have those detailed? Are there any issues still outstanding on that? Why is this corporation's business plan not public information when they're getting dollars from the government? Why isn't it updated annually for changing circumstances? We hope that that's not the case now, Mr. Chairman, and that the minister has undertaken and in fact has been successful in providing changes in that area.

We see also that the AG talks about their critical success factors not reported and that "key results are not presented in relation to measurable targets." That particular issue is not solely the mandate of this area. We see this same kind of problem in many of the ministries. Nevertheless, it's a big issue, and we would hope that that has been corrected and would expect an update from the minister on that.

Also, are the activities of the independent appeals tribunal now being reported? They weren't in the past, and the AG said that they should be.

So if the minister could address those accountability issues and we get some feedback on Transportation, I think that will conclude my questions for today, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the last series of questions relating to the Alberta Racing Corporation, I'd like to make a couple of comments at this time. The hon. member, as have other hon. members in asking questions about this matter, has referred to the Auditor General's report, and in particular they've referred to the comments that the Auditor General had regarding his concerns regarding the racing industry renewal initiative.

It is true that the Auditor General has made those statements in his report. What never seem to be included in the hon. members' comments are the full comments of the Auditor General which deal with the corrective action that was taken by the ministry. I would have thought that in being fair about this, hon. members would want to be more inclusive of their comments regarding what the Auditor General had to say, but they have not been. So I will take the opportunity at this time to correct the record, because as the hon. members often say, there are many people in Alberta who are listening to us as we speak here. Of course, there are those who don't get the opportunity to listen, who spend their evenings reading Hansard in detail, and I'm sure that they will have some good times reading this debate.

The Auditor General specifically had this to say in his 1999-2000 report at page 114. This, once again, is captioned: "The Commission has taken several steps to address my concerns." So it seems to me that this is pretty clear.

The Commission has since taken the following actions:

- Effective September 11, 2000, the agreements with the Alberta Racing Corporation and the racetrack operators were terminated.
- New agreements are being negotiated with the racetrack operators, providing them a commission rate of 15% consistent with the rate paid to all other operators of slot machines and video lottery terminals in the Province.
- Future payments to subsidize racetrack operating and capital costs and to supplement horse racing purses are to be made to racetrack operators from the Lottery Fund through an annual appropriation approved by the Legislature.

The Auditor General then goes on to say after making those very, very specific comments, and I think this is a very salient point that the Auditor General makes:

I am satisfied that these actions will bring future payments under the Racing Industry Renewal Initiative into compliance with the provisions of the Gaming and Liquor Act.

Those things were available to the hon. members if they had turned from page 113 to page 114 to see that in fact some things had been done.

With respect to accountability, I can advise the hon. member that in September of 2000 the agreements that were the subject of some concern were terminated, and new agreements were entered into. As a result of those new agreements, a new set of accountability with respect to the proceeds is in place. So accountability has very much been addressed. To my knowledge, the Auditor General and his staff are satisfied with what the commission is doing with respect to the concerns that have been raised regarding the racing industry renewal initiative. There were some other questions that the hon. member raised relative to this, and we will review Hansard and provide some response.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess I'd start with taking exception to the comments of the minister about the work of the committee and in fact our work in the Legislature in the evenings. I think that most Albertans may not be listening to the debate or reading Hansard, but that doesn't in any way mean that they aren't interested or mean that they don't charge us with the task of scrutinizing these budgets and these estimates. I think we've heard this now from two ministers, the same kind of demeaning comments about the Legislature, and I think they're unworthy of a minister.

I'd like to, if I may, ask two questions specifically of the minister. One has to do with costs. Is there any estimate of the costs incurred by policing in the province with regards to the regulation and policing of lotteries, and are there costs that are incurred by the Attorney General's office that can be attributed to gaming or to the administration of lottery regulations and laws? We see the costs of the gaming control board here. Are there other costs that aren't being accounted for and could be attributed to the lotteries in the province? So that's one question.

The second one is the attention that is paid to underage adolescents as they are involved in the lottery business. I ask that question given, again, some information that has come out of the States showing that a high percentage of underage adolescents actually play lotteries and that lottery retailers in many American states are very relaxed in terms of enforcing age regulations. There was a case of an operation that saw a 16-year-old girl who was successful in purchasing lottery tickets from 49 of 50 Illinois lottery retailers. In Massachusetts there were minors as young as nine years of age that were able to purchase lottery tickets, and that occurred 80 percent of the times that they tried it. A sting operation in Massachusetts found that 6 percent of minors were able to place bets on games there. One further one in Massachusetts, a study of 2,000 minors, found that 47 percent of seventh graders have already purchased lottery tickets.

I wonder if there is any monitoring of adolescents' involvement in lotteries and their purchase of tickets and if that information might serve as a need for education programs or some preventive work before it becomes a major problem. So those were sort of two questions addressed to the minister.

I have some specifics in terms of the Department of Innovation and Science, and I thought I'd like to ask those while the minister is available to answer. In particular, there's a line item under Innovation and Science that has $8,588,000 going to the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute. I can understand why that's there, but why just the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute and not the Alberta Energy Research Institute or the Alberta Forestry Research Institute? Why is that specific institute drawing funds from the lottery fund at this time? Are they included under one of the other line items, the research investments program or the strategic research initiatives? If the minister could clarify that point, I'd be interested.

The $50 million, of course, into the Alberta Supernet is a major investment. I've had, thanks to the minister's goodwill and kindness, a bit of a conversation in his office about this program and agree with the intent to try to wire the province as being a good project. But I wonder why it's being funded out of the lottery fund. Is it just because it's seen as a onetime spending item? Given the state of technology and communications technology, I can't believe that this isn't going to be an ongoing expense. Does it legitimately belong as a lottery fund disbursement?

Could we have, from the same minister, the look ahead in terms of the Alberta Supernet? I think we touched on this in a previous conversation. He was confident that what was being done was the right way to go. I think we talked briefly about wireless technology and where it may be taking us. Is the minister still confident that the investment in the Alberta Supernet is going to be a good investment five and 10 years down the road, or will the evergreening problem be one that we have to face?

There are a number of items that are listed: the strategic research initiatives and the research investments program. I wonder if we could have a bit of a description of what those two programs involve as far as lottery dollars are concerned.

So those are my questions about Innovation and Science and the lottery fund allocations to that department, Mr. Chairman.

I wondered if I might ask, then, some questions about the lottery funds allocated to the Learning department. The minister earlier this afternoon spoke briefly about the achievement scholarships and how worthy they are. I couldn't agree more that those scholarships, that money is needed and is of benefit to Albertans, but my concern again is having that fund, having those dollars set aside in a lottery fund as a onetime investment. The experience with other scholarship programs in the province like the heritage scholarships is that they are long-term investments, that they have to be well financed over a long period of time, and that they certainly don't fit the onetime funding category. So, again, I'm not questioning the money for the scholarships, but why in this part of the budget? By placing it here, does that relieve the department from putting those sums in their budget proper and on an ongoing basis?

The Learning Television money, the estimate before us, is for $8.1 million, a good piece of money. Is this again seen as long-term funding that will come out of lottery funds? What are the projections down the road in terms of where Learning Television is going given the advancements in the Internet and other technologies? If we could have some explanation of what the $8 million buys. It's not a lot of money when we compare it to some of the other technology investments the government has in this budget.

The Transportation subsidies are rather interesting. The 2001-2002 estimate is $40 million. The 2000-2001 preliminary actual was $20 million, and the 2000-2001 estimate was $20 million. I guess I seek some explanation as to why there's a 100 percent increase in funding from the lotteries over that time period. I guess I would wonder why there's such an increase. Again, what is it being used for in terms of transportation that warrants it or would support it being a onetime request of the lottery fund?

I have a couple of questions, Mr. Chairman, about Children's Services. There are two items there. There's a million dollars set aside for the fetal alcohol initiative. We've discussed this in the Legislature. It's been the subject of question period in previous years. It's money I think that's, again, well budgeted and sorely needed, but again the question remains: should it be here, or should it be budgeted out of the Children's Services budget proper?

The second item is the permanency planning for children in care. We had the Children's Services department estimates up last week, and there was a considerable amount of time spent on permanent placements for children in care and the criticisms from the Children's Advocate that indicated that this is an area that has been a constant problem: finding permanent, adequate placements for children in care. If it's been a problem that's perennial, why would we see this money here. Again, I'm not saying that the $200,000 shouldn't be supported, but I do question financing it from a fund that is not supposed to be ongoing in terms of those projects. It's badly needed, if we're to believe the Children's Advocate that planning and the placement of those children is really extremely important. So I support it, but again I question why it's here.

I had one further comment, but I can't locate it in my notes right now. So with those comments I'll conclude. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to make a couple of comments. The hon. member raised a couple of issues with respect to what I would call the general issue of gaming integrity. I can tell all members that the AGLC has an active enforcement program and prosecutes all criminal activity at licensed gaming venues. In doing this, there is the involvement of others, and that is because illegal gaming activities at licensed gaming venues are the responsibility of the AGLC. Illegal gaming activities outside licensed gaming venues are the responsibility of the police. So illegal poker clubs, for example, Internet gaming, unlicensed raffles, and things of that nature are the responsibility of the police. The AGLC works in co-operation with the police to exchange information on illegal gaming. So there is that overlap with other organizations.

In fact, for example, you have a situation where the RCMP are also involved in some cases because the RCMP are responsible for enforcing the money laundering act. There are some rules relative to the purchase of $10,000 or more of chips at a casino within 24 hours that brings in the application of that act, so there is a relationship between the investigation group at the AGLC and the RCMP. There is an overlap and there is close co-operation between those groups. I'm proud to say that the integrity of the Alberta gaming industry is without question on a very, very high level.

There was also a reference to youth and gaming problems. I noticed with interest that the hon. member referred to an American report. If the member has any information with respect to a problem here in Alberta, I'd like to hear about that, because it has not been brought forward to my attention. We will provide some specifics relative to this issue in addressing that question more fully when we provide a written answer.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the time is 5:15.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the proposed lottery estimates, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Okay.

Agreed to:
Agriculture, Food and Rural Development	$11,620,000
Children's Services	$1,200,000
Community Development	$108,544,000
Gaming	$196,451,000
Health and Wellness	$84,065,000
Infrastructure	$345,000,000
Innovation and Science	$90,838,000
Learning	$52,200,000
Municipal Affairs	$12,000,000
Transportation	$70,000,000
Finance	$44,031,000
Total Lottery Fund Payments	$1,015,949,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, from the lottery fund for the following departments: Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, $11,620,000; Children's Services, $1,200,000; Community Development, $108,544,000; Finance, $44,031,000; Gaming, $196,451,000; Health and Wellness, $84,065,000; Infrastructure, $345,000,000; Innovation and Science, $90,838,000; Learning $52,200,000; Municipal Affairs, $12,000,000; Transportation, $70,000,000; Total Lottery Fund Payments, $1,015,949,000.

5:20

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 o'clock p.m., at which time we reconvene in Committee of Supply.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that the Assembly do now adjourn until 8 this evening and that when we do meet again, we do so in Committee of Supply. All those in support of this motion, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. Carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:21 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 14, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/14

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order. Would everyone please take your seats?

head: Main Estimates 2001-02

Finance

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to be here to present the Ministry of Finance's budget for 2001-2002.

Mr. Chairman, with us in the members' gallery we have some officials from the Ministry of Finance, and I'd like to introduce them, if I might, to committee members. We have our deputy minister, Peter Kruselnicki, who is with us. Many of you have met him through Public Accounts. We have Bonnie Lovelace, who's our senior financial officer. Richard Shelast is the director of budgets, along with my executive assistant, Tim Wade. I'd ask them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that if hon. members have questions throughout the course of the term, these are the people to contact to get answers on the financial structure not only within the ministry but questions of finance throughout the government. They work very hard across government departments and would certainly either get you information or be able to steer you in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman, Budget 2001-2002 reflects the split that has taken place from the former Treasury Department. Before we hear from the members opposite, I'd like to give the Assembly a brief fiscal overview.

If you'll refer to your budget documents, Alberta Finance's deficit for 2001-2002 is projected to be $410 million, which represents a reduction of $210 million, or 33.3 percent, from fiscal 2000-2001. Much of the improvement to the ministry's bottom line is attributed to the shrinking debt load. The reason for an operating deficit is because the Department of Finance is responsible for the debt servicing costs for the government's accumulated debt.

The department's 2001-2002 revenue is projected to be $80 million, about 9 percent lower than 2000-2001 because of a reduction of $122 million in the estimated contributions from the lottery fund and a $49 million reduction in the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation investment income. This is partially offset by an $87 million increase in investment income on surplus funds earmarked for debt retirement.

The 2001-2002 revenue has increased by $104 million, or 15 percent, from the 2000-2001 budget primary numbers due to a $107 million increase in debt retirement investment income and a $37 million increase in net profit of Alberta Treasury Branches. This is partially offset by a $45 million decrease in Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation's investment income.

The program expense for the Department of Finance is expected to decline by $39 million, or 7.6 percent, from the 2000-2001 preliminary actuals. As a result, expenses are down $290 million from the 2000-2001 preliminary actuals, primarily due to debt servicing costs. It should be noted, Mr. Chairman, that the $290 million is partially offset by corresponding decreases in revenues.

The department's voted program expense has increased by $1 million, or 5.1 percent, over 2000-2001. I ask hon. members to note that major Treasury revenues like taxes and the heritage trust fund have been moved to the Revenue ministry from this ministry. As a result, 2001-2002 revenue for the Department of Finance is projected to be $80 million lower than 2000-2001 preliminary actuals. Also, ministry capital investment has increased by $3.2 million over 2000-01 preliminary actuals.

I'd now like to outline some of the details of the estimates for the Department of Finance's 2001-2002 budget. Program 1 expense. The minister's office estimates increased by $107,000. This is mainly due to the former Provincial Treasurer's office being divided equally between Finance and Revenue as part of government restructuring. The deputy minister's office estimates also increased by $153,000. This reflects a lower comparable base budget resulting from the former Deputy Provincial Treasurer's office being divided between Finance and Revenue. The increased funding has been largely offset by a reduction in the department's capital budget.

Our corporate services operating expenses increased $264,000 over 2000-2001 due to salary adjustments, upgrades to computers, and an increase in manpower costs due to the termination of the shared service agreement with Human Resources and Employment. Our capital investment of $125,000 is for the purchase of two computer servers and system management development tools. The communications funding increase of $75,000 is primarily due to the production of two budgets in one fiscal year.

Program 2 expense. The operating expense of the office of budget and management increased by $9,000 over 2000-2001 but decreased by $47,000 over 2000-2001 budget. Even though we have an increase in salary adjustments, we were offset by reductions in special projects and advertising for the new tax plan. The financial management operating expense increase of $460,000 is largely due to salary adjustments. Capital investment of $350,000 is for the development of a new pensions benefit information system and for network servers and software.

Overall the ministry has decreased its full-time equivalent employment by four.* After factoring out transfers of 32 full-time equivalents to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, the Department of Finance alone has a reduction of six full-time equivalents. This is due to the termination of the shared service arrangement with Human Resources and Employment. Alberta Pensions Administration has increased its FTEs by nine in order to backfill for staff assigned to the development of their new pension administration system. The Alberta Insurance Council has an increase of one due to increasing appeals activities.

Mr. Chairman, this is really a very quick overview of Alberta Finance's budget estimates for the fiscal year 2001-2002. I do look forward to comments from the members opposite, and I will make the same commitment other ministers have, that if we don't get the opportunity to answer the questions this evening, we certainly will be back to you very quickly with full written explanations of your questions.

I welcome comments and questions from the opposition. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure and stand and address the issues of the Department of Finance. I guess the start of the discussion has to be focused on the issue of the division of Finance and Revenue: why that occurred and what efficiencies were being gained by doing that. We've read a lot about the expected benefits or the need for this kind of split. I guess what

I'd like to ask for is some degree of focus on the long-term, ongoing benefits of this kind of split in the context of how it'll contribute to government efficiency and government effectiveness and how it'll provide for a measure of sustainability in the development of policy and process that deals with the issue of the collection of revenue and the control of the budget in the context of how the government sees this kind of fitting together over the next, say, five to 10 years.

In my sense, it would be kind of advantageous for us to have, you know, the actual collection of the revenue and that associated with the same type of operation that gets involved in developing the policy and developing the legislation that outlines that collection process so that we don't have to have effectively an intermediary communication channel that goes on to deal with – like, now that we've made this decision, let's take it out. You've got an interdepartmental communication there that's necessary to make sure that those kinds of things actually get carried out. So that's kind of the justification I'd like to see there, because I didn't see – although, Mr. Chairman, it's obviously an outsider's view – a real lot of difficulty in the way it was operating before in the context of how we were getting our materials pulled together. So if we could just have that.

I want to spend a little time at the start talking as much about the business plan as anything. We want to look at how it relates to the defined set of goals that is outlined for the ministry. There are a couple of individual questions that come up with the line items, but I'll deal with those as we get there.

I guess the main thing that we want to look at in the context of the business plan and the performance indicator section is the fact that we don't see any kind of performance indicator or any kind of real measure, Mr. Chairman, that's going to deal with the accuracy or the effectiveness of both the projections and the development of the budgeting processes. We've been very fortunate in the past four or five years that our projections have always been a little bit under realized factors, especially on the revenue side. When the revenue goes up, we seem to have a creeping sensation that comes into the expenditures as well, but we want to make sure that maybe what we're doing is looking at some degree of measure that tells us, especially in the revenue areas, how we deal with those and how we deal with the issues of accuracy and explainability when we look at the differences.

The next item that comes under the mission statement deals with fostering "an effective accountability framework." Here, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask the minister to either document for us or explain some of the methods that they've got in place to deal with accountability and the direct performance indicators for some of the arm's-length institutions that operate kind of as extensions of the government. They file their own business plans; they undergo their own audit through the Auditor General. How do we deal with some kind of measure of their effectiveness?

In that context, we had some interesting discussions with a couple of these groups as I've traveled the province in the last little while. One case came up dealing with one of the children's services regions. They were talking about how within the region almost all of their expected performance measures had not been met, yet the CEO had received a very significant recognition of performance by getting a bonus at the end of the year. Is there some degree of monitoring that goes on between the ministry and these groups – the health authorities, the school boards, the children's authorities: all of these groups that work kind of at arm's length and have their own accountability processes built up – or even some degree of control that comes from the Ministry of Finance to deal with how those kinds of performance measures are actually a reflection of the wishes of the government and the direction of the government when it looks at how things get measured and who gets rewards for it?

The business plan goes on to talk about the objective or the goal of being in a sustainable financial position. I would ask the minister to explain that a little bit, because when you look back at the performance indicators, I don't really see anything that talks about a measure of sustainability, where they're projecting, say, five or 10 years into the future. I know five- and 10-year plans are at best very rough approximations, and the further you get into the future, the less confidence you can put in that. But by having those kinds of projections, long-term estimates, you give analysts looking at the province's decision-making and people in general just a sense that the government knows where it's going or where it wants to go or where it would like to go. In essence, it sets a benchmark vision for Alberta to judge the actions of the government, but when we're dealing with, you know, basically three-year business plans, those are all within the framework of what is considered to be a very short-term, almost a crisis management type of policy framework as opposed to a long-term strategic plan, where we're looking at the factors that deal with the growth and the contribution of these kinds of activities to the well-being of the province.

Further down under the goals there's an issue where we talk about fostering "confidence in Alberta's registered pension plans." The question that comes up here – and I've had it raised by a number of individuals that are involved in some of these pension plans that are joint province and employee funded – is the idea of the unfunded liability that exists there. In looking through all of the government documents here, we don't really see that showing up as an obligation of the government. We see the interest and the annualized payments, but it would be interesting to see some kind of a net present value calculation or even, you know, a simple summed total obligation that we have to those. I know they're legislated and that they fit within the operational parameters of the budget, but when we look at it in the context of obligations that we have from the province, we need to at least have reported a measure of the total obligation that we as the people of the province owe to that particular aspect of our long-term financial plan.

The same thing comes up, Mr. Chairman, in the context of how we deal with the capital ventures that are out there in terms of the funding for schools and the funding for health care facilities, the other aspects that come under some of the municipal debenture programs so that we can look at it in the context of a real sense of where we fit and look at, then, also how it might work out in the future for us to be seriously looking at an ongoing capital asset investment expenditure rather than the idea of debenture funding for some of these kinds of investments.

The main point here that we want to look at is making sure that Albertans have a true sense of where we stand. As we go through and look at this, Mr. Chairman, the interesting thing is that I've checked out a few other provinces in the context of how they do their reporting, and they're basically following much the same pattern as we are here in Alberta. I think it would be an area where we could step out and make a difference in reporting, you know, the total financial obligation that's held or that's faced by the people of Alberta. We keep talking about our debt and how it has to be paid off, yet when we end up with the legislated payment schedule that we have for debt repayment, that's no different than the legislated payment schedule that we have for the pension funds or for the retirement of the capital debentures or bonds. You know, it would seem that what we would want to do is look at making sure that those measures are reported as well.

I guess the next thing that it goes through in the business plan is the highlights. As we go back to the line item discussion, we'll get into more of that. The main thing here is that there's a very concise summary of the different line item expenditures. What would be useful in that area, Mr. Chairman, would be the expected relationship to the existing performance indicators we could look at to see whether or not the government is on track in the context of dealing with the particular line item issues that are there or the overall performance of the government.

You know, when we look at a lot of the line items, these are really administrative overheads that are associated with all of the issues of revenue and expenditure policy development and monitoring. It would be interesting to see something that would, say, measure these kinds of expenditures as a percentage of our total budget so that we could see how much goes to administration and how much effectively gets at least out of the Ministry of Finance as a frontline service provider.

The next thing that we wanted to look at was some of the major performance indicators and why they're reported. Again the thing that came to my attention when I first looked at this is that there's no real relationship other than the first one, which talked about the accumulated debt and the retirement of that debt. There's no real relationship here to the performance of the goals and the objectives of the ministry.

The taxation load is a reflection of the relative performance, I guess if you want to call it that, of our tax structure on Albertans as compared to other provinces. It would be interesting here to have a time series chart that looked at the change in tax burden over time. Are individuals paying more? Are they paying less? You know, one of the things that this would show very astutely right now would be the fact that in the last couple of years the tax burden faced by individual families has been going down. The thing we want to watch there is to make sure that we always have a stable or a declining tax burden being faced by the families of Alberta. The issues we see there in effect would be some good measures that would show some of the kinds of things that talk about the relative overheads in the departments to administer the service loads provided, how we'd deal with it. I've mentioned already that it would be useful to see some kind of a comparison within the ministry.

When we look at the performance measure on page 182, where it talks about public awareness, how much of this is useful in the context that a lot of that awareness, especially in the last few years, has been created by outside agencies that have talked about the financial position of Alberta, the fact that we were deficit free to start with? Now people have been monitoring our debt position. This, I think, is in itself a mechanism that has helped to make Albertans aware of the government's financial position. But what we want to do there is look at how our performance indicators respond relative to actual activities undertaken by the government, activities that will talk about or show the government's performance in a way that Albertans feel adequately and accurately reflects their well-being.

Mr. Chairman, I bring that up right now because, you know, one of the things that a lot of people have asked about this year in the context of the current budget is the sustainability issue, yet in our performance indicators here there's nothing that gives a sense of sustainability or an indication of whether or not Albertans even think the budget is sustainable. All it says in here is that they're aware of our financial performance, and the fact that we do have a balanced budget and that we are reducing our debt in itself is not, I guess, all that significant.

Mr. Chairman, just a couple of other points before I get finished here. As I looked through a lot of the budgets, I've kind of flicked through a number of the web sites that the departments have and that the government has under the gov.ab.ca format, and in those web sites we see an awful lot of links or references to private-sector agents, private-sector information sources. As I've looked through here, in a lot of the departments where I've seen actual references to those outside the government links, we don't see any reporting revenues or any reporting documents that show how those are put in place and how departments refer to that.

What I'd like to ask the minister to do is to provide us with some information on, first of all, how many departments within the government actually do have external links associated with their web sites, how they go about identifying who gets the link and who doesn't. Is it a competitive bid process based on some information that needs to be provided or some supporting evidence or supporting documentation for a government policy? Are there revenues associated with these? If it's a matter of a commercial choice for someone looking at the government site, why is it that there isn't an open availability for anybody that wants to link into that site that provides that similar service? Just as an example, under Finance if you link out to one of the banks or one of the financial institutions, why don't you link to them all? If you do that, how are those links negotiated? How do they get put in place? What service is being provided to the government in return for that link, or is there a financial return?

So those are some of the questions that come up there, because, you know, we've got to make sure that as we deal with this, there's a degree of objectivity in the government.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll let someone else have a chance.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise this evening to participate in the debate on the Ministry of Finance budget estimates. I listened with interest to what my colleague the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East had to say. I understand that the major goals of the department are "a strong sustainable financial position" and "open and accountable government" and "a fair and competitive provincial tax system."

Off the top of my remarks the first thing I would like to encourage the minister to do – now, I'm sure this can be handed off to the Minister of Revenue. First off, I think the entire Treasury could be under one portfolio, and I'm quite confident that the hon. minister across the way could fulfill all the duties in that old portfolio. This notion that somehow it was necessary to have 24 cabinet ministers is another example to me of a family that is quite anxious to spend its inheritance. In this case, it is our natural resources and the short-term revenue that they're providing to the government.

To the Minister of Finance. I believe that the $9.5 million that's collected annually in propane tax should be eliminated. The propane tax in this province of 6.5 cents a litre should be eliminated. I think she should do the right thing and eliminate that tax, particularly for the part of the trucking industry that's involved in the delivery of goods in the major cities. It would help air pollution. Whenever you think of a government that was so quick to spend $800,000 from the risk management fund on the Stockwell Day defence, that's 10 percent of the revenue from propane fuel just in one expenditure.

So I think it can be done. I think they can find the money there somewhere, and I would encourage the minister to do that. Quebec eliminated its tax on propane as a fuel. I would really encourage the minister to have a look at this, and I would be quite willing to share with the department any of the research that I've done. I was very disappointed, to say the least, to get a letter from the government indicating that this could not be done. I think it's good for the environment and it's good for the trucking industry. I can't understand for the life of me why in Alberta a person, whether they're driving a truck or a car or a half-ton, should be paying more for their propane than people in Toronto. It amazes me. In Toronto they were paying less for propane than in Edmonton-Gold Bar at the Mohawk. I just don't understand that.

Now, another goal of this department is to "foster confidence in Alberta-registered pension plans." Recently many hon. members of this Assembly probably heard of a private-sector pension plan that had some difficulties, and all this of course was public information as the result of a FOIP request. I would be very curious to know if there are similar pension plans in the department that are facing shortfalls. If the minister could share this information, because we certainly need to ensure that everyone has confidence in our registered pension plans.

Another goal is to "foster confidence in, and encourage the availability of comprehensive, reliable, and competitive financial products and services." That is, to say the least, a noble goal, and we would not know how successful the minister or the department is until there was a significant financial collapse in a company that does business in this province and consumers were left holding the shortfall, so to speak.

Now, we go through the usual listings here on N.A. Properties, the statement of operations, and we go through to Gainers. It's just a subtle reminder of past performances of this current government. When you think of what was spent, the list is endless. We can even think of Swan Hills. We can go to Northern Steel. We can go to the telephone. There's no end to this. To see this here, Gainers and N.A. Properties, is just a subtle reminder of a not-so-illustrious past. Hopefully we're going to learn from our mistakes, and this loss of tax dollars will not be repeated.

Now, I saw also over here the Alberta Treasury Branches. I understand that we're the only jurisdiction in North America with a state-owned bank.

MR. MASON: We like it.

MR. MacDONALD: Some people like it.

Under the Alberta Treasury Branches we have investment income. We have provision for credit losses. If the minister in due time could elaborate on the provision for credit losses, I would be very grateful.

Now it's time to have a look at the department here. There is a decrease this year in the operating and capital investment to be voted. There is a decrease this year, Mr. Chairman, of 8.6 percent, or a little over 9 and a half million dollars over last year's budget. There's also a decrease this year of 8 percent over last year's preliminary actual. Now, if we move further along, we see the same sort of trend in program expenses and also in debt servicing costs. In capital investment now there's a decrease. Can the minister explain why capital investment last year was roughly 72 percent, or $809,000, below budget?

Now, the full-time equivalents, which the minister discussed earlier in the opening remarks. Could it be clarified? I could not hear. Is there a transfer of employees to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre? [interjection] Okay. That would be 38 employees or full-time equivalents.

Will the minister please explain why the Finance business plan does not provide a three-year expense profile by program and subprogram as last appeared in the 1995-1996 through to the 1997-98 Alberta Treasury business plan? Will the minister please assist readers of the business plans and estimates books to compare gross operating expenses by program and subprogram vote within the ministry over a three-year time frame, 2001-02 to 2003-04, by providing a three-year spending profile of operating expenses and capital investment of the department by program area for the years 2002-03 and 2003-04? Also, it would be very useful for the opposition to have a breakdown of departmental expenses by object for 2001-02, 2002-03, and 2003-04 for the following: the salaries for permanent positions, the salaries for nonpermanent positions, salaries for the contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses.

Will the minister also please provide a breakdown of premiums, fees, and licences for 2001-02, 2002-03, and 2003-04 by type of premium, fee, and licence? This is on page 161. Also, could the minister please provide a breakdown of other revenue for 2001-02, 2002-03, and 2003-04? Could the minister also explain why internal government transfers are increasing by 720 percent, from $44 million to $361 million? That's also on page 161 of the business plan.

Now, could the minister also explain why financing to local authorities is decreasing by a little over 14 percent, Mr. Chairman, from 350-plus million dollars in 2001-02 to $305 million in 2003-04? I note here that this is a 30 percent decrease from 1999-2000 to 2003-04.

Will the minister please explain why the financial assistance to farmers and small businesses is decreasing by 50 percent, from $1.6 million in 2001-02 to $800,000 in 2003-04? This again is a significant decrease.

How many full-time equivalents are employed under program 1, ministry support services, in 2001-02? What is the breakdown by the five subprogram areas: minister's office, deputy minister's office, corporate services, communications, and standing policy committee on economic development and finance? What are the projections for full-time equivalents in 2002-03 and 2003-04? Could the minister please provide also a breakdown of ministry support services by subprograms for 2002-03 and 2003-04? What performance measures are being developed to evaluate the effectiveness of the program service delivery of ministry support services that would justify a 9 percent increase in operating and capital expenses during the upcoming fiscal year? Can the minister explain the decrease of 59 percent, or $180,000, in capital expenses this year over last year's preliminary actual? Will the minister please explain the discrepancy between the $525,000 in capital investment budgeted for ministry support services in 2000-01 and the preliminary actual of $305,000?

Now, can the minister explain why the minister's office budget is increasing, Mr. Chairman, by $107,000, or 66 percent, this year over last year's budget estimates? Will the minister provide a breakdown, again in the office, of the $270,000 in operating expenses by object for 2001-02 for the following: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, salaries contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, hosting expenses, and dry cleaning?

Will the minister explain what quality indicators and performance benchmarks have been established within her own office to measure outcomes? For example, the New Zealand Treasury business plans include performance measures of correspondence received from the public: the number satisfied and the number unsatisfied.

What benchmarks have been established for the number of replies to Legislative Assembly questions, ministerial correspondence, motions for returns, written questions, and reports to cabinet and the Treasury Board? What time frame or due date benchmarks have been established for ministerial, MLA, and public correspondence? Again I would note that the New Zealand Treasury provides this information in their business plans.

The reason I would ask about dry cleaning from the minister's office is that I note that as you go inside the door to this room called the Confederation Room, there's this dry cleaning there to be picked up. On the rack there is all this dry cleaning to be picked up – [interjections] yes, it's true – I assume by various cabinet ministers. I've been watching this. I see the tags on it, and I think: is this coming from taxpayers' dollars? I'm curious to know. That's where I'm coming from with that.

Now the deputy minister's office. Can the minister explain why the deputy minister's office was over budget by 16.9 percent, or $25,000, last year? Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not want the current government and any of the current ministers that are involved in it to just become obsessed with Cadillacs and champagne, and I'm afraid that's what might happen.

Mr. Chairman, can the minister also explain why this year's budget . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, the noise level is getting very high, and somebody is whistling. Could you please tone it down? The hon. member is speaking.

Hon. member, you may proceed now.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you.

Again, Mr. Chairman, can the minister explain why this year's budget is 88 percent, or $153,000, higher than last year's preliminary actual? This would be the deputy minister's office again. Will the minister please provide a breakdown of the $270,000 in operating expenses by object for 2001-02 for the following again: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, salaries contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, hosting expenses . . .

MR. MAGNUS: And dry cleaning.

MR. MacDONALD: No. No dry cleaning, because I suspect they pay for their own.

What are the outputs and outcomes used to evaluate performance within the deputy minister's office?

Now, with corporate services there's an increase, and then on the next line there's a decrease. My questions for the minister. Please, will the minister describe the activities planned by corporate services to justify the 6.5 percent, or roughly $220,000, increase over last year's preliminary actual? Will the minister provide a breakdown of the $3.6 million in operating expenses, by object again, for 2001-02 for the following: salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, salaries contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses. Again, what outcomes, outputs, efficiency measures, and quality indicators have been established for corporate services in this fiscal year?

Will the minister please provide further information and the reasons for the $125,000 capital investment planned under corporate services?

Okay, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much for your patience.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I once again remind members: please, the noise level is getting high. Control yourselves. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will be briefed than the previous hon. member, and I will be speaking about more pressing matters than the dry cleaning.

Mr. Chairman, I don't know if we'll find any new wrinkles in the government's budget, but I certainly want to talk about just two things tonight. One is the additional costs caused by the splitting of the department. There are, as I do the arithmetic, at the ministerial and the deputy ministerial levels another $470,000 of expenditures as a result of this. I realize that the budget has to accommodate essentially the decision made by the Premier after the election to redivide a number of ministries and create more ministries. This, incidentally, means that in the third party we each now have 12 ministries that we're responsible for instead of 10, so I have an interest now in smaller government, Mr. Chairman.

I think we should be applying to government expenditures the regular litmus test that the government is proud to talk about all the time. What is it that we get? What is it that the public and the taxpayers get for these additional expenditures? How does the government justify an additional nearly half-million dollars to create two departments where there once was one? What financial benefits or efficiencies or improved levels of service does the public get? I'd like the minister to please respond in as much detail as she can with respect to what the citizens and the taxpayers of this province receive in exchange for this additional half million dollars of expenditure for these two departments.

The second thing that I'd like to speak about, Mr. Chairman, is what appears to be a steadily declining level of financing to local authorities in the budget. This is on page 184 of the estimates. We've seen a decline over the past three years in financing to local authorities, and my question really is: why is this taking place? Are we not expanding the role of municipal government in this province? Is there not an increase in population? Are there not increased demands for capital projects on the part of municipal authorities? I find it curious that this would actually be declining in a period of such rapid growth, both economically and in terms of the population growth of the province. So I would appreciate it if the minister could provide us with details of the major expenditures made under this program in terms of the financing to municipal governments in this province for various capital projects. That's something that I find quite curious, and surely we should be increasing the level of expenditures at this time in the province's history.

The last point that I want to deal with, Mr. Chairman, has to do with the Alberta Treasury Branches. This is contained on page 192 of the estimates. I would like to commend the government for the fairly remarkable turnaround at Alberta Treasury Branches. It used to be a repository for very questionable loans to friends of the government, and the Treasury Branches have in fact turned that around and gone after some of these really questionable – well, I won't mention their political affiliation. But generally they've gone after some very high-profile recipients of government largesse through the Alberta Treasury Branches, and I hope that continues.

That, of course, makes the Treasury Branches more profitable, more desirable, and it raises the specter of the privatization of the Alberta Treasury Branches. We believe on our side that this has been a very valuable asset to the province of Alberta, a very important institution for the people of this province notwithstanding some of the abuses that took place in the last few years. We would like to know what the government's plans are for the future of the Alberta Treasury Branches, and we hope that they haven't followed the standard pattern of having the taxpayers clean up all of the expenses, cost overruns, bad loans, and so on, only to make the thing a primary target for privatization.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat, and maybe there's another hon. member that will get a few minutes to make some comments.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Various kinds of comments this evening coming out of this. In the six goals that are presented for the Ministry of Finance, I'm particularly interested in the first four.

1. A strong sustainable financial position.
2. Open and accountable government.
3. A fair and competitive provincial tax system.
4. Minimize borrowing and financing costs subject to acceptable risk.

As I read those goals, goal 1, "a strong sustainable financial position," jumped out at me. I remain concerned, as I think all Albertans and the minister do – the minister and I discussed this briefly in Public Accounts – about the long-term sustainability of Alberta's economic development and the need for that goal to get particular attention, with a long-term view to our oil and gas production, revenue, exporting, and consumption. A concern I have, in fact, is that the gas bubble we're riding through the current boom is going to burst on us.

I'm also concerned and interested in goal 4 in particular, to "minimize borrowing and financing costs subject to acceptable risk." I think it would be worth examining a different way of putting that goal, which would be: to maximize our net worth as a provincial government. It's just a basic business premise that sometimes it's more fruitful and more lucrative to invest rather than pay down debt. I'm concerned that we haven't necessarily weighed out the full cost of rushing our debt pay-down and have not balanced that and done a sufficient business case analysis to compare paying down the debt in a hurry with investing that money in revenue-generating instruments. Those goals are very important. I'm sure they'll be followed and studied carefully, but I think they need to be thought through further.

Turning to a few comments from the Auditor General and something that's come up repeatedly in discussions with various people such as the minister of health. The Auditor General's opinion, with which I would concur, is that we need to include RHAs, school boards, and postsecondary institutions within the consolidated financial statements. They are, after all, largely dependent on provincial revenue and in some cases almost entirely dependent on provincial revenue for their survival. The fact is that if an RHA, for example, were to run a sizable debt, it's the provincial taxpayer who comes forward and covers it, as has happened in recent years.

I think if we are to have a full sense of where we stand provincially in terms of finance, we really do need to incorporate those kinds of organizations in our consolidated financial statements, and indeed I'd like that to be done with some detail. It would be interesting to know what impact consolidating those kinds of bodies would have on the consolidated surplus and the net debt of the province. Whether it would put it up or put it down, it would be interesting and important to know that if we want to have a full picture and live up to our goals.

Also, we're always careful about watching for how much gets spent on consultants and what consultants are hired to do and how much they're paid. It would be useful if the minister would provide a breakdown of any consultants retained by individual project and by the fees provided for each of these through this budget year and through next budget year as well. [interjection] We could have a consultant registry; sure.

There are places with precedents, other jurisdictions where that kind of detail is provided, and it relates back to goal 2, I think it was, "open and accountable government." How much are we paying to consultants for what kind of work, and who are the consultants? [interjection] Yes. How is their work evaluated? That's right. How is it judged?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands made some reference to Alberta Treasury Branches: a huge asset, a huge operation, very important to the financial functioning and welfare of the province and to the provincial government. I'm wondering if the minister has ever considered or would reconsider perhaps having the president and CEO of the Treasury Branches appear with her at the Public Accounts Committee so that ATB operations could be discussed at that time, again fitting in with the intention of having an open and accountable government. Certainly the Alberta Treasury Branches touch the lives of a large number of Albertans, and we want to ensure maximum accountability there.

Also in the Auditor General's comments is something to look for in the future, an assessment of tax expenditures, an assessment and more detail on the programs that are handled through adjusting tax collection or tax breaks: tax exemptions, tax credits, preferential rates, incentives. Those things can have a direct cost to us. If we give up revenue, it's very much the same as spending money. I haven't seen anything in the estimates for this year that addresses that, and it would be something that I would really encourage the minister to work towards in the next year. It would require, I'm sure, the full co-operation of cabinet, but undoubtedly she can arrange that.

Now, the kinds of things that could be listed if she were to take on such a project and perhaps hire one of those consultants to which I referred. The state of Oregon has a tax expenditures report that might be worth looking at as a precedent, including a list of expenditures, the statutory authority for each one, the estimated revenue loss for the current and upcoming year, whether the tax expenditure is the most fiscally sensible way of proceeding, and of course an evaluation of whether that tax expenditure achieved its purpose. So if there were some indication of that and the activities planned in this year's budget, I would be thrilled and delighted.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm glad to be able to get in in the last few minutes of this debate. Just a few questions that I wanted to raise with the minister. The first is from the government and lottery fund estimates, page 195. This is regarding Gainers. I'm wondering what the circumstances are in which there was no budgeted expense or revenue noted for Gainers, yet in fact it shows a revenue of $523,000 and an expense of $520,000. I note that there's a budgetary note underneath saying:

This entity is a commercial enterprise or Crown-controlled corporation. Accordingly, the entity's net revenue . . . appears on the ministry consolidated statement of operations as revenue only.

In fact, that's not the case here. We have both a revenue and an expense, so I'm wondering what happened.

When I look more specifically under revenue, it's saying that we have two choices, again, on the sale of real estate - no, that's not where the amount appears. It's under "other." What is this? Where did this revenue come from? When I look under expense, in fact $20,000 of it shows up under operations costs and expenses, and once again this is unbudgeted. Nothing was budgeted in this category, yet these are still showing up. I'm wondering what was so extraordinary that it wasn't anticipated by the minister. So under expense we've got $20,000 under operations costs and expenses, and then we've got $500,000 under income taxes.

Now, I'm sure the minister will correct me, but one government can't tax another government, so who was this tax paid to and by whom? Is this some sort of transfer back or a refund? What on earth is this? We end up with a net revenue out of all of this of $3,000, which I note was then transferred to the general revenue fund, which is appropriate. Since this was entirely unexpected, I'm wondering: what are the specifics of that? I look forward to hearing from the minister on that.

The second point I wanted to make was around recommendation 44 from the Auditor General's report, which can be found on page 267. I'll just quote:

Ministries continue to be unable to provide the Ministry of Treasury with year-end information by the required deadline for the Province's consolidated financial statements. In my opinion, generally there has been no improvement in ongoing financial reporting processes compared to the prior year. This is troubling because quality reporting throughout the fiscal year is a key element of good financial controllership.

Good point, and it relates directly to goal 2 of the ministry, which is "open and accountable government," but more specifically "facilitate sound fiscal planning and decision making," which I admit would be a little difficult if you're not getting the figures in from the various departments that the minister is trying to oversee. So I'm wondering specifically what has been done or what is going to be done in this fiscal year to address this specific issue. I'm sure the minister has done something in the previous year to deal with this. What's happening in this year?

Finally, just a couple of points about performance measurements. I really have an issue with a performance measurement that is in some ways a survey of satisfaction. I don't find that is a helpful or realistic performance measurement which becomes a good management tool and from which good decisions can be made. This is really about a popularity contest, which I don't support as a management tool. To give the minister credit, a number of the performance measures and targets are in fact very good ones, but once again that nasty little word "satisfaction" keeps showing up.

I'm looking at her goal 2 on page 155 of the business plans. We've got "satisfaction of deputy heads with the government's accountability system; target: all satisfied or very satisfied." Oh, please. Then we have a number of performance measurements that are "to be developed." How can that possibly be? I mean, if it's a performance measurement, you're trying to measure something. How can you have something under goal 3 where you're going to develop the performance measure?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but your time has elapsed.

Does anyone else wish to speak before I recognize the hon. minister to close debate? The hon. minister to close debate.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the comments from the members opposite. I probably won't go into details of answering a lot of them at this point.

Clearly, one of the ones I wanted to talk about was the splitting of the department and the benefit to it. As you'll notice, the revenue is recorded under the Revenue department. The Revenue department is not only charged with the collection of revenue but also with looking at the investment of, in particular, the heritage trust fund, which is a very important part of the financial well-being and stability of this province. Tax policy issues and fiscal issues and economic issues and budgeting, of course, stay within the Ministry of Finance.

One of the things that's going to be beneficial as we move forward to a debt-free province is: what is the next step? One of the key aspects of the responsibilities under the Ministry of Revenue, of course, is to come forward with a framework on investment that can be presented at the Future Summit to talk about postdebt and what happens with our revenue base. It's going to be very key. I think it's also very important.

As you know, we've talked many times in this House about the difficulty of projecting revenues, and if you have a blended portfolio in which you include the heritage trust fund plus other secure investments, one of the things that gives you is almost a hedge on what your revenue forecast can be. It's a very important aspect within the fiscal framework so that you can have some certainty in projections.

I was a little bit surprised, I have to admit, by Edmonton-Gold Bar being concerned about why we didn't spend as much money in this budget as we did in the last budget. That's good. As the Finance ministry we encourage ministries to spend less, and that's good. We don't want ministries to spend more; we want them to spend less. In this department, quite frankly, one of the performance measures I have is that it's necessary to come in under budget, not over, because there's no room to go over. You must live within the fiscal framework or the minister probably gets a little annoyed. We like to keep within our budget. In fact, it's mandatory, particularly here. So don't be upset if we don't spend or budget for this year as much as what we did in the last one.

I know the Member for Edmonton-Centre asked about Gainers. Well, there weren't any revenues or expenses shown because we're presumably out of there. That's final. There is some litigation that is outstanding, but there won't be anything flowing through, so last year was the last year for that showing up on our financial statements. We do show the comparison so that you have consistency with financial presentation, but that's why there's nothing showing up in this year. [interjection] What was what? There's nothing there. Zero from zero is still zero, so it's not going to be there. We're finished with that. We do show the comparative between years to show how it's phased out, and you can see the decline in that, so we're not into that any longer.

The rest of the questions, Mr. Chairman, I think we'll pick up from the Hansard, and we will get back to the committee members opposite very shortly.

I did make an error in my opening presentation. I said that we had decreased our FTEs. We've actually increased them by four, not decreased them, so I do apologize to committee members for making that error.* I hope I haven't misled you on that. We did actually increase them.

So with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I do commit that we will get back to members and answer their questions fully. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Finance, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

*See page 555, right col., para. 5

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$102,245,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$95,422,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Energy

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister to open debate.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know I can report that the active desk-thumping means that there is a great deal of attention being dedicated to the examination and study of these estimates and this budget.

I also know that it's actually desk-thumping in advance for the good comments and good questions that all members will ask as I see them poring assiduously through the estimates, whether it be a discussion about coal and the coal opportunity that exists in the constituency of West Yellowhead or the conventional oil and gas industry that sits in the constituency of the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor or the tremendous oil sands potential that sits in the constituency of the Member for Fort McMurray or the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake – although I know he has other pressing duties as deputy whip, he still finds time to support a very strong constituency – or even if it's the area of Pincher Creek and the areas down there that are home to vast amounts of wind power, that have absolutely no environmental impact at all other than perhaps the visual impact of new transmission lines to move that power out, or perhaps even the new methane opportunities that sit in the rich constituency of Brooks and the biomass potential that could power new fuels as well as, it has been rumoured, Mr. Chairman, some coal.

So we've seen power opportunities from places as large as perhaps the constituency that garnered the most votes for a Progressive Conservative in Alberta, Calgary-Shaw. We can take a look at the strong petrochemical complexes in Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan or in Red Deer or for the Member for Lacombe-Stettler. Knowing that these are important issues whether you are from Grande Prairie or from Paddle Prairie or Manyberries, these numbers are going to be important to you. Knowing that and knowing how diligently the opposition has worked to bring forward questions, I don't want to take any more valuable time of the House but to say that I will commit actively to respond orally, and if I can't answer the vast amount of questions that will be asked in the estimates time, I'll certainly be able to table a written response at a later time, Mr. Chairman. Knowing that members put this time to good use, I am going to sit back, and I'm going to listen carefully.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a department that is certainly not without its controversies these days. Alberta consumers, whether they be residential consumers of electricity or natural gas or industrial consumers of electricity or natural gas, are keeping a very watchful eye on the minister and on the department because, of course, of the high cost of energy in this province. It's startling that we have gone from a province with a well-regulated, well-managed electricity generation and distribution system and now have costs that – well, power prices are surging. When you think of the past history . . .

MR. SMITH: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister on a point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Standing Order 23(i), on false motives. In fact, the Power Pool price has dropped today. It was $95.90 at noon today. It's lower than it's been since January.

9:20

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, the argument that you have presented does not constitute a point of order. It's a statement of facts. I hope that by clarifying that issue, it has been taken care of.

The hon. member to proceed.

Debate Continued

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. I can recognize the sensitivity of the minister, but the reality is our electricity prices in this province. If we were to compare ourselves, for instance, to Montana – and whether it's unfortunate or fortunate that we don't have a tie-line to Montana, that would not be the question. Montana has had to lay off workers in one of its primary industries, and that's the industry that deals with mineral exploration and exploitation and eventual sale. It's one of the largest industries in Montana outside of ranching and farming. At the beginning of the year 2000 one mine in particular was paying about $26 a megawatt hour. That was up from $19 the year before. Last year a megawatt hour cost this company $320.

Now, at nearly the same time a deregulation bill, the Electricity Utility Industry Restructuring and Consumer Choice Act, was introduced, a year before this Assembly dealt with Bill 27. When the legislative session was over, lawmakers, most of them farmers and ranchers and businessmen, approved it hastily. Mr. Chairman, in this Assembly we used closure. This member in particular was accused of wasting taxpayers' dollars by wanting to debate Bill 27, and now we know what sort of waste has resulted in this deregulation scheme. Prices have gone higher and higher, and they spiked for Montana consumers at $680 American and then have settled back down to the $200 to $400 range. This has had a significant impact on the consumers of Montana. Montana is one of our neighbours, and if we understand what's going on in the neighbourhood, we'll have a good idea of what's going on in our own home.

Now, we get to the end of this article. This is an article that appeared in Sunday's New York Times. I'm quoting here:

"Montana held the four aces of cheap power," said former United States Representative Pat Williams, a prominent critic of deregulation. "And a corporate-lackey legislature demanded a new deck of cards."

That is the story in Montana, and we have to be very, very careful that this does not happen here.

You look at this department, and hopefully the minister is going to put to good use the course that I understand was taken and completed in London two summers ago. There's going to be a need for an able display of management in this department to ensure that campgrounds, homes, businesses of all sorts will have an electricity supply that is not too much of a burden.

Now, there's a lot to say on this issue, and unfortunately there's very little time. I would like to know if the ministry has had any studies done on solution gas. Solution gas is gas that's produced in oil batteries. Have there been any studies done to see if this could be harnessed in a way to produce electricity in an environmentally friendly manner? If these studies have been done, could the minister please share them with Albertans?

Now, I think that's where the solutions lie. We have to look at sources of electricity generation other than subsidizing natural gas fired generators. Time and time again in this province we have heard this figure of 33 percent of our electricity-generating capacity coming from natural gas. I just can't understand how that number is that high. If the minister could clarify that 80 percent of Alberta's electricity supply comes from coal-fired generation, 15 percent from natural gas, and the remainder from hydro and other sources.

The minister also, in relation to coal, talked about coal as a wonderful source of electricity generation. Has the department had any studies done on the clean-coal technologies? My studies on this issue indicate that the technology so far has been inconclusive. [interjection] That is true. Are studies to prove their economic viability? There's no denying that they exist, but the viability of them economically has yet to be proven. If the minister is sitting again on any secret reports regarding this, I would be very, very grateful because all Albertans would benefit from the diligent research that has been conducted by the department or that perhaps has been done by the department of science and technology, I believe it's called.

The coal royalty is $3 million less, roughly, in estimates than it was last year, and I understand that there's going to be more coal used. Is there a reduction in the royalty?

Now, the synthetic crude oil. There is a significant reduction in the amount of money that the hon. minister is going to receive through the department from that. I believe there's a 1 percent royalty, Mr. Chairman, taken on the production of synthetic crude. Then after that – and this is off the top of my head – there is another 25 percent after capital costs are retired. If synthetic crude oil production is increasing dramatically, why is there a decrease in the amount of royalty that's been collected? If the minister could answer that, again I would be very grateful.

Also, the key performance measures. I'm going to go back to the key performance measure, the percentage of industry compliance with established standards. The target is to be developed.

The EUB will review HVP (High Vapor Pressure) pipeline safety and integrity with external stakeholders, then identify and incorporate measures into the EUB's regulatory framework that assures public safety by April of next spring. Now, is there a significant public safety factor here with pipelines that are, let's say, 20 years and older? In a lot of situations these pipelines, these gathering systems may have changed corporate hands, and they are maybe being used for another purpose.

I'm wondering also if there is a detailed study regarding this that the department could share with all Albertans and particularly landowners in rural Alberta. I certainly wouldn't want to have, say, a sweet gas line adjacent to my property that was being used for a high-pressure sour gas line. I certainly hope that this sort of activity is not going on. There was a dispute in central Alberta, west of highway 2, in regards to this matter, and I'm sure that this is what this performance measure target "to be developed" is concerning.

Now, staff retention. We certainly know that the EUB – and it was an amazing example of peoplespeak. It was described in terms similar to this, Mr. Chairman, as regrettable staff turnover: the EUB had a number of regrettable staff turnover years. I read that, and I was astonished. But there are efforts being made to increase the number of staff in the EUB. The majority of the staff, I think, would have significant qualifications, and if it's like anything else, the minister's department, the EUB, or the headhunter will have to work very diligently to find those people and to have compensation packages that are suitable to attract people, because private industry certainly would be active in recruiting individuals with those technical backgrounds. I certainly wish the minister and the department the very best in their pursuit of these individuals, because in light of the current work that the EUB is doing and will have to do in the future, a stable workforce is of great importance.

Now, I have other questions here. This goes back to what I believe is a fundamental policy flaw of this current government. The introduction in the business plan summary: "Albertans own their oil, gas, and mineral resources." That statement comes as a surprise to me, because as much as we have developed economically in the last decade in this province – and it is a significant achievement – I don't feel that the current government is the steward of the resources that they should be.

I look at ethane. I have expressed reservations about the export of our ethane in the Alliance pipeline. I have no problem with exporting natural gas, no problem with that. But we have to be very careful that there is ethane so that the town of Fort Saskatchewan can grow and prosper. I want to see that prosperity continue. I'm sorry; with the major policy shortcoming in regards to ethane I don't see how that is going to be possible over the long term.

Ethane is going to get so high in price that we're going to have to compete with naphtha gas. There are facilities in the Gulf coast that can change over to naphtha gas, but I do not believe, for instance, that Dow can do that without a major capital expense. These are issues of long-term planning that I'm afraid have been neglected. It is paramount that the government stand up and protect these resources not only for this generation but for the future generations that are going to hopefully reside and prosper in this province.

The issue of Bill 1. The EUB would not have any say in this, but certainly the minister and the cabinet would. In the newspaper over the weekend there was a discussion of a possible . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Coup?

MR. MacDONALD: No, not a coup. Worse than that: bid rigging going on the eastern border of California, where natural gas prices were in some cases 3000 percent higher than they should have been.

This was to fuel, again, natural gas fired electricity stations. How could this be? I thought to myself: here we are in this province with billions of dollars of subsidies for our own consumers – and our consumers have to be protected – but who is watching? We're tied into this continental market, which sets the price, and I'm beginning to wonder if market forces are setting that price. It's fine if it is to be just exclusive market forces, but what is going on when we're hearing that prices for this gas have just gone up 3000 percent? Is that competition, or is it collusion?

When we're looking at our own price here, I think we would be much better served if the government were to devise a plan and stick by it. We have a two-tiered system with electricity prices. Why we can't have one with natural gas is beyond me. We do have a two-tiered system with electricity prices. There's no doubt about that. We have to have long-term planning, and we have to ensure that the resources are for Albertans.

We look no further than the Viking and Kinsella areas. I understand that this is before the EUB. Now, I'm not going to comment on something that's before the EUB. I'll leave that for others. We're selling the gas field in a part of Alberta which has seen its production rates of natural gas decline significantly in the last decade, and I just don't think it's prudent at this time for that gas field to be sold, particularly in that area of the province where there has been a production decline. Now, others may have different views, and that's fine.

Also, we see in Brooks that Fording Coal, I believe, was going to have a significant investment in a coal-fired generating station. Coal-fired generating stations are not eligible for any of these location-based credits, these subsidies to locate power generators in Calgary or in Lloydminster or in Grande Prairie. There is a lot of talk about whether subsidies should be provided by the government, because we all were told that the government was out of the business of being in business.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

This whole idea that perhaps in the calculation of these location-based credits a portion of the formula is going to deal with natural gas prices – now, the minister is in a much better position to know the fine details of this than I, but I certainly hope that we're not going to be subsidizing the natural gas feedstock that's going into these power stations. It would be just a complete reversal of everything the government has said about getting out of the business of being in business, Mr. Chairman. We need to ensure that there is a level playing field.

This gets back to the Fording Coal power plant in Brooks. The coal-fired generators feel left out by the Department of Energy here, because these subsidies or whatever you want to call them are just to the natural gas fired generators and not to the coal-fired plants. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm sorry, but I hope to get an opportunity a little later, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

9:40

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Just briefly I want to raise some concerns about the performance measurements that are shown in the department's business plans from page 119 on.

Sorry. Before I start that, I just had a question about core business 1: "Secure Albertans' share and benefits from energy and mineral resource development." I'm wondering if the government has considered at all a plan or a scheme similar to the Alaska permanent fund, whereby they are paying dividends directly to their citizens. It's different than what we're doing, but I'm wondering if there's been any evaluation of it as far as equity or fairness. It strikes me that given what we're looking at in Bill 1, in which nothing is outlined in the actual bill about how revenue would be rebated or refunded to citizens, it's not clear whether that bill is building on a concept of equity: the resources are owned by all Albertans; therefore all Albertans would be gaining or would be involved in a rebate. This Alaska permanent fund is developed with that concept, so if the minister or the department could comment on that one for me, please.

Under core business 2, "Ensure the competitiveness of Alberta's energy and mineral resources," could the government please elaborate on one of their key strategies, which is:

Work with Aboriginal communities, resource developers, stakeholders and other levels of government to create opportunities for Aboriginal people to participate equitably in the resource economy of Alberta.

Now, this is a cross-government initiative, but I'd like to see some details on what this particular department is anticipating implementing in this fiscal year.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I'd ask the hon. members to be quiet, please.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks.

Now, to get specific on the performance measures, I am shocked and appalled, yes, indeed, because as I go through looking not only at the department's performance measures but even at the agencies that report, there's a real problem with performance measures. In almost every goal there are performance measures that are saying: well, we'll develop it. How can you expect a year from now when you're trying to evaluate your performance in this year we're considering, when you in fact have no target, no performance measurement against which to measure – and indeed, when you're two years out and you go back to see whether you are progressing in your three-year plan, you don't have anything to measure yourself against for year 1 of your three-year plan, which actually means that year 2, if you actually get around to developing it, is the first time you have a target against which to measure yourself.

Frankly, it's appalling, and the Auditor General has commented generally, not specifically to this department but generally, on this lackadaisical approach to performance measurements, where it's sort of: well, we'll develop it when we get there; yeah, we're working on it. This is not good enough, especially since this is one of our more important departments in all of government and certainly both a revenue source and a point of pride for all Albertans.

I look at goal 2: "Advocate for the removal of barriers to the development of energy and mineral resources in Alberta." How are we going to measure that? Well, "approval of mineral development strategy" by the end of the fiscal year we're examining. "Further performance measures will be explored for the next business plan." What? How are you supposed to measure against that in years to come? "Well, we'll figure it out as we go." That's not the point of a performance measurement.

Let's look at goal 3: "Advance the competitiveness of Alberta's energy and mineral resources." Performance measurement? We'll "complete competitive commodity analysis" by the end of the fiscal year we're examining here. Well, that'll be really helpful. I mean, it's a valuable tool, but that should have been completed before now. You're going into a three-year business cycle. You shouldn't be deciding one-third of your way into the business cycle what your measurement is going to be.

What's the other performance measurement that's listed here? "Subsequent performance measures to be developed." Why don't you just put TBA under all of this because that's what you . . . [interjection]

Okay. Let's look at goal 4, "Provide strategic research direction to achieve long term energy and mineral development goals." And what are your performance measurements? "Priority areas identified by Department of Energy" by the end of the fiscal year. Excuse me. "Further performance measures will be explored." You don't have performance measurements for any of your goals here.

What else have we got? "Leveraged research funding from industry and federal stakeholders." Okay. This is the beginning of a performance measurement, but how much? How are you going to measure yourself against this? What's your target? How much are you looking to leverage in research funding? What percentage? Are you comparing yourself to other provinces or other countries? Have you had resource funding from industry and federal stakeholders in the past? Can you measure yourself against that?

You know, you've got to get specific on this stuff or it's not a useful management tool. When this government talks about being a good manager, I'm sorry but I have to laugh. I mean, this is the poorest business planning I've seen in a long time, and I've been around five years now, so you guys are hitting a record here.

MR. MAR: So did you.

MS BLAKEMAN: I did indeed. Thank you so much; I'm very proud of my record.

Now, let's look at core business 3, goal 5. [interjection] I'm sure if the Minister of Health and Wellness is truly interested in participating, the chairman can arrange for an opportunity for him to speak.

Goal 5, "Prepare a long term energy outlook for Alberta that secures supply and benefits and positions Alberta within a broader North American energy marketplace." Okay. How does that relate to the core business of "develop and communicate energy and mineral resource policies"? Could I get the minister and his staff to outline how they see this as a linkage or how one flows from the other?

Let's look at the performance measurements that have been put up. Well, they'd like a "consultation completed, energy policy developed for the Minister's consideration by the end of 2001-02." Well, you can't measure against that. What are you going to measure yourself with here, that you got the consultation completed? That's going to be enough to be using as a management technique? What are the other performance measurements listed here? "Subsequent performance measures to be developed once policy approved." You could go three years and never get this. What is going on in this department? Where is the fiscal management? Where is the measurement?

AN HON. MEMBER: Where is the minister?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, yeah. That's another story.

Goal 6: "Inform Albertans about the opportunities for a continuing supply of Alberta's energy and mineral resources from conventional and non-conventional sources." Under the key strategy it's talking about:

Enable public awareness of resource extraction management practices (e.g., sour gas, clean burning coal, etc.) and the importance and economic significance of the energy and mineral sector.

Could we have some elaboration and some detail on that please? Exactly what is being anticipated? In implementing that, what are the specific strategies flowing from that?

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MS BLAKEMAN: I look at the performance measurement target: "To increase their understanding by 2003-04." Well, okay. That's the end of your three-year plan here. How are you planning to do that? Well, look. In the fiscal year we're examining, we're going to establish the baseline. So once again you don't have a target to be measuring yourself against for this first year, which means you in fact are not able to do any useful measurement or have a useful management tool until the end of your second year out of a three-year plan.

All right. Let's look at your target, then, for the second year of this plan. Well, we're going to increase over time. What? There's no percentage here. There's no target amount that you're trying to hit. There's no number of Albertans. There's no real measurement of what you're trying to do here. This is appalling. I mean a first-year business student could do better than this. This department has millions of dollars worth of resources and staff underneath it to be able to develop these. Is this so that we can't judge this? How does that fit into open and accountable government if this department in particular can't even judge its performance because it hasn't established anything to judge itself by? I guess it can just keep going: aren't we fabulous; aren't we wonderful. We'll just have to take your word for it. But then again you've got a huge communication budget plus you've got the public affairs department to be going out there and doing all of your spin control for you, because there's nothing in here that's giving any real management tools for you to use.

Performance measurement for goal 7, "Performance measures on gas and electricity price to be developed." Okay. Well, let's look at goal 8 performance measurement target then: "80% by 2003." Well, this is interesting, because when I look at what you're trying to do here, you've got a survey year of '98 and again in '99 in which the increase in satisfaction went up by 4 percent, from 75 to 79 percent. So one year, 4 percent increase. When I look at your target for 2003, which is four years' difference from your baseline if you're going from '99, you've got a 1 percent increase. So you had a 4 percent rise in one year, and you're only expecting 1 percent in four years? Have you perhaps inverted the figures here by mistake? Is this some sort of typo?

Well, let me look at the EUB then. I'm hopeful that perhaps as a Crown agency or somewhat independent from the department they might be doing better, and in fact they are a little better in their targets. They're actually specific. When I look at things like goal 3, "Timely and efficient application and hearing process," they've actually got things like "% of decisions issued in less than 90 days from the end of the hearing." They're looking at 90 percent, 95 percent, 100 percent. Okay. "Application Turnaround Time – Target: 3-3.5 working days (average) for routine facility applications." Okay. That's something you can measure against. Were you actually able to accomplish that? How far were you off? If your average was five days, then you've got something to work with here.

But then, no. I'm to be disappointed again. I look at some of the other ones. Performance measurement under goal 1. We're going to "improve the percentage of objections resolved." Well, by 80 percent to 85. You know, what are the specifics under that? We've got, "Percent of Incidents Resolved Related to Existing Facilities – Target: 87%." Then we've got, "% of incidents resolved to the satisfaction of the complainant." Again, this is essentially a survey. It's a popularity contest when you are using a subjective survey like satisfaction. Well, in comparison, satisfaction to what? If they didn't get anything resolved the previous time, they're going to be a bit more satisfied that something got resolved at all, even if the end result wasn't what they wanted. So this department has got to move away from these sort of nonexistent, we'll get there, we'll develop it, uh huh, sort of performance measurements.

Goal 2, "Further performance measures are being developed." Goal 4 under the EUB: "The Percentage of Industry Compliance with Established Standards – Target: To be developed . . . The Adequacy of Emergency Response Plans: – Target: To be developed."

It just goes on and on. I mean, I don't need to take any more time. I think I've made my point here. I'm glad some of the members opposite are recognizing that this is a critical point, that this department in fact has not given itself anything by which it can evaluate its performance, nor can the public evaluate its performance. Yet that is a stated goal of this department: to have better public understanding of what it's doing and how well it's doing. Based on what we've got here, nobody can tell, not even the department.

I know that others are anxiously awaiting to speak, and I will make way so that they are able to raise some additional points as well. Thank you very much for the opportunity.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to the estimates of the Department of Energy, which is in my view probably one of the most critical departments in the government and certainly a department that has more impact and more influence on the economic prosperity of the province in the short term and in the long run than any other department. It's clear that energy in this province is the motor of the economy. When it's running well, when everything is going well and there are high prices, the whole economy is affected very dramatically. In a way it has an impact that no other sector of the economy has, so it's of critical importance.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, as it is the motor of our economic prosperity, it is probably the most chronically mismanaged department policywise of any in the government. I don't single out this minister. I think that this mismanagement goes back decades in the Alberta government.

I'd like to use the analogy of a car with a great big powerful motor. People are very happy that it can go 60 miles an hour, or 100 kilometres an hour, on the highway, and they don't stop to check whether that motor could be producing dramatically more power and dramatically less fuel consumption than it is. They don't ask the question whether or not the oil needs to be changed and whether or not that motor is going to be good for a long time to come or whether or not it's going to fall apart within a month or two. Those are really the kinds of issues that I think we're faced with in this province through our energy policy.

Now, the first thing that I want to talk about is the issue of natural gas. I want to talk a little bit not so much about prices – it might surprise some members – but about our supplies and about our reserves. I'm looking at a graph here which shows the supply of natural gas. It takes into account both the level of production and the discovery of new reserves. Back in 1983 we had proven reserves for 31 years. As of 1999, two years ago, there had been a steady and dramatic decline to the point where there were only proven reserves for eight and a half years. Now, if that trend continued in the last two years, for which I don't have the figures, we're probably at the point of six or seven years of proven reserves.

The fact of the matter is that we've been able to sustain high economic output through this industry precisely because we are playing against the future of the province. We are spending faster than we are taking in money, if you want to look at that way of looking at the reserves, and we are exporting and consuming energy, particularly in the natural gas area, far faster than we are able to find new reserves. The result is that within this generation Alberta will virtually be depleted of natural gas, and the money that is being brought in now will be reinvested all over the world and may or may not provide any long-term benefit to the citizens of Alberta.

Now, I want to talk a little bit also about the question of ethane. It used to be the policy in Alberta that valuable by-products of natural gas such as ethane would be retained here in the province because these are the building blocks of a petrochemical industry, the building blocks of a pharmaceutical industry, and it really is a source of jobs. The government has changed the policy, particularly with the development of the Alliance pipeline. We now send, according to an article on Dow Chemical, which is entitled Dow Chemical's Alberta Advantage Disappearing, in the May 9 issue of the Edmonton Journal – it says that 1.3 billion cubic feet of raw gas are shipped daily to Chicago, where they strip out the ethane there instead of here in Alberta. So they can build a petrochemical industry based on Alberta natural gas in Chicago. This policy amounts to nothing more than the export of Alberta jobs into the United States, and it needs to be changed. It's absolutely not in the interests of the people who own the resources.

I want to come next to the question of price, because by creating now a North American market for Alberta natural gas, they've ensured the profits of the producers – that's for sure – and there is certainly an indirect benefit to many, not all, people in Alberta as some of those profits are reinvested in Alberta. But there's no guarantee that those profits will be invested in Alberta if there's a better opportunity somewhere else, and it has meant higher natural gas prices for all consumers in Alberta because we are now, of course, competing with the American market for our own natural gas. The benefits Albertans receive are diminished as a result of that, because we are seeing a dramatic increase in the export of natural gas outside this province and outside this country. The result is that we are benefiting in the short term but we are sacrificing the interests of our children and our grandchildren in the long run.

I'd like to come to the question of royalties in the same spirit, Mr. Chairman, because the overall rate of royalties paid for both natural gas and oil in Alberta are amongst the lowest in the world. Even in comparable American markets they charge higher royalties for their natural gas and their oil, and it really leads me to wonder if we value our own natural resources the way other people do. I see again in the estimates that the royalty tax credit is continued, and I would like to ask the minister to specifically identify what benefit Albertans receive from the royalty tax credit. That is, in our view, something that is simply unnecessary and simply a drain on the revenues of the province and is a gift to oil companies for which nothing is received by the people of Alberta in exchange. So I would like to request a detailed report from the minister on the royalties that are charged in Alberta and a comparison with comparable jurisdictions in Canada and the United States. They might want to take a look at places like Alaska, for example, with respect to that.

Now I want to talk a little bit about the EUB. We've been quite critical of the EUB and consider it to be no longer a tiger protecting Albertans but a toothless tiger that is more interested in facilitating the development of oil and gas in this province than in protecting consumers or landowners. I'll give one example: the approval of the sale of the Viking-Kinsella field, which will result in a substantial increase in rates for natural gas paid by consumers in northern Alberta because it's sold off, of course, to an American company. They'll be able to increase production, but its overall impact will be to increase the prices in northern Alberta and to take away the advantage northern consumers have had because there has been some ownership of natural gas fields and supplies by the gas company itself.

I've dealt with a number of cases of people coming to me because they feel that their property rights have been overrun by drilling activity and they haven't got any help from the EUB, cases where water, the strata, has been contaminated as a result of drilling and there doesn't seem to be very much the EUB is doing about that.

I'd like to also talk a little bit about power supply and power rates in this province. One of the things that has become apparent to me in my research of why deregulation of electricity does not work is that you never can achieve sufficient competition on the side of generation. There always is an element of monopoly or of oligopoly. The players simply have too much market power, and they can, and have, jack up the rates by reducing supply. It's very easy in that system, and it's why we say that electricity production remains really a monopoly and should be a regulated monopoly as opposed to trying to enforce competition in a sector where it doesn't really work.

So the question I have – and we've certainly asked questions in the House about why there's a shortage of supply of electricity. Always on the other side amongst all the various reasons that are given for this is that, well, you know, there are power units down. Right now – and the Premier said it three or four times in the House – there's this unit down or there's that unit down. So my question, really, to the minister is: how can we ensure that power companies have not increased the amount of time that major units are down as a way of increasing prices in the province? I know it couldn't happen here or it shouldn't happen here, but it has happened in other places. I'd like some assurance that the government is making sure that the rates with generation being down have not increased since we've entered the deregulation universe.

The other point I'd like to make relative to this is the lack of commitment by the government to reducing consumption as a primary strategy to deal with the shortage of supply in this province. All the focus seems to be on getting new plants, coal-fired or otherwise, on stream in order to meet the increasing demand for energy, but there seems to be little emphasis, if any, on reducing the amount of energy that's consumed. A number of years ago – I believe it was 1993 – the government eliminated the energy efficiency branch, and I would like to see that restored. I'd like the minister to please respond as to whether or not they've looked at restoring the energy efficiency branch and what opportunities exist in this province to reduce the consumption of electricity, because a kilowatt-hour saved is the cheapest way to generate new power. If you save that from some other use, it can be used by someone else, and it doesn't have an increased impact on the environment. So it's certainly the best way to go.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to talk a little bit about a North American market for power because I've heard some mention of that lately. I'm actually quite horrified by the talk from some members of the government about creating a North American energy market, because if you look at what happened to natural gas prices when a North American market was created for gas, we had a four or five times increase in our natural gas rates. Now, if they're going to propose burning coal here in order to export power to the United States, I think they're making a very, very serious mistake. The result will be not only higher levels of CO<sub>2</sub> but, in fact, permanent high prices in electricity rates in this province. If the government is heading down that path, then Albertans need to know that permanent high electricity prices are the price they're going to have to pay as a result of that government's policy.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about Mr. Bush, south of the border, and the energy policy they're expecting to announce soon. We have in our offices over in the Annex a headline from one of the newspapers saying that Bush has a plan to keep Canadian natural gas flowing into the United States. My question is: why was the government so prepared to fight against Ottawa and eastern Canada when they tried to get hold of our natural resources, yet when the Americans are doing it, they're being welcomed with open arms?

MR. OUELLETTE: Because they're willing to pay for it.

MR. MASON: Well, they're willing to pay for it, but the fact of the matter is that it's going to deplete the reserves of particularly natural gas in Alberta and leave future generations with no natural gas. I believe and we believe that a continental energy policy is not in the best interests of Albertans. It certainly may be in the best short-term interests of energy producers, but it is not in the best interests of the world's environment or the future economic prosperity of generations to come here in Alberta.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat, and maybe someone else would like to speak.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll begin with just a comment in reaction to the minister's interjections earlier on the pool price. I've been checking on the web the hour-by-hour price, and he was right: it's stuck right at $95. It's been there for it looks like hours.

MR. SMITH: What is it now?

DR. TAFT: It clicked over. It's still at $95.

One of the things to note though. I also did a little checking, and that power four years ago probably would have sold at this time of day at about $15. It's selling in Saskatchewan at about – well, what's happening here is about two and a half times what's happening in Saskatchewan. So it all is a matter of perspective, isn't it?

One of my reactions to the way the material is presented from the Department of Energy is that it's a mistake to combine so many different kinds of energy into one category called "energy." Electricity is so fundamentally different from the fossil fuel sources of energy that when we talk about goals and businesses and so on and simply use one sweeping term "energy," it makes it almost meaningless because it is so general. The issues and concerns we have around electricity are so different from those around, say, conventional oil that when I read through the material and just see the word "energy" used, it reduces all meaning from it.

For example, a core business is to "ensure the competitiveness of Alberta's energy and mineral resources." It's so general, sweeps so many things into one category that I can't really interpret what it's intended to do. "Ensure Alberta consumers have a choice of reliable and affordable energy": well, that could be everything from choosing from different gas stations to choosing electrical retailers. Certainly we're seeing very, very different patterns in those two areas. So I would encourage in the future the estimates to be presented with more detail, breaking out in particular issues relating to electricity from issues relating to fossil fuel or to other energy sources.

I again will hop around a bit. Because of the fine work of my colleagues, my opportunity to speak is rather limited, but I do note that the expenditures, as I read it, for the Energy and Utilities Board are jumping dramatically, something like a 57 percent increase, which I assume is a result of having to hire more staff, which is a kind of irony given that if they are involved in regulation, which I imagine many of them are, in a deregulated system we're ending up with more regulators.

That does get me to one of the questions I had. I would like to know from the ministry the trend from this year and back three years on the number of regulatory agencies involved in the electricity industry. We have the market surveillance administrator and we have the Power Pool and we have a whole list of bodies. It would be interesting to see how that number compares to what there was, say, four years ago. As part of that, how many people are actually involved in regulating it? Now, I have a concern, which undoubtedly the minister would share, that we may have backed ourselves into more regulation than we used to have. Certainly that's a comment I've heard from senior officials in the industry.

The core business that says: "Ensure Alberta consumers have a choice of reliable and affordable energy". Certainly many of us get frustrated when we go to fill up our gas tanks. It seems there's very little meaningful choice, and we'd like more choice there. At least there is very little meaningful choice in terms of price because the prices sometimes don't vary much. At the same time, I heard very, very little consumer demand for more choice when it came to sources of electricity. Now, the one exception to that would be the big industrial consumers who were looking for more choice, and look where it got them. In terms of the number of ordinary consumers, residential and small business consumers, who were demanding more choice in terms of power suppliers, I wasn't hearing it. I remember talking to one extremely well-informed specialist in the area who said that the number of consumers demanding more choice in Alberta could be fit into a phone booth. So if there is evidence that consumers were really driving this demand for choice, I would like to see that.

I'm also noticing under key performance measures: "Stable, affordable energy for Albertans." I'm on page 143 of the estimates, at the bottom of the page. I think the target is, we would all agree, essential: "to increase investment in new power generation in Alberta." In some of the reading I've done, historically the most volatile resource commodity traded has been natural gas. In the last year or two the most volatile commodity traded now is electricity. In fact, we see that played out every day, where the price of electricity in Alberta might go up and down easily 400 percent. It's a highly volatile commodity. So it will be interesting to see how the department intends to achieve stable, affordable energy for Albertans when, in having deregulated, we're dealing with I think the most volatile commodity that you can actually trade in. There are some examples of how to deal with that. In fact Medicine Hat might be one, yes.

I'm going to run out of time here. The last thing I would like – I would really encourage this for all of us – is as complete a picture as possible made as widely available to Albertans as possible of our oil, gas, and natural gas, conventional and nonconventional oil reserves and production, giving Albertans as complete a picture as they can have of the nest egg or the resource wealth that we have in this province, where it's been and where it's going.

So with those comments I will take my chair. I think the time is up. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the hon. minister to close debate, is there anybody else who wishes to speak?

The hon. Minister of Energy to close debate.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think, again, the avid desk-thumping is for the quality of attentive listening by members of government who talk to me on a daily basis and ask keen and quite insightful questions. Their days of the estimates are 365 a year. They're on the job 24/7, and for their diligence I'm much humbler and also much more informed.

In fact, I would turn to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands and ask him to perhaps have a coffee with the Minister of Innovation and Science or the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, who chaired an important ethane committee and can talk widely and with great knowledge about ethane in Alberta, one of the true building blocks of a strong petrochemical industry.

I do want to comment to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands that it sounded to me, Mr. Chairman, like he was making statements nearing the allegation level of suppliers of power who jack up prices by reducing supply. If he has evidence of that, that's very important information. We are looking into it 24/7. We're looking into it every day. If he can gain any of that knowledge, I'd be more than willing to work hard with him to root out any type of gaming or anticompetitive behaviour that occurs in the wholesale energy market today.

I do want to just comment on the wise and sage remarks from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. When talking about putting together the basket of energy, Mr. Chairman, in fact more and more people in the energy industry today are talking about convergence, where natural gas is linked to electricity prices and so on and so forth. So I think the department has made the right commitment in its organizational structure.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, I do want to thank the official critic from the opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I do accept his best wishes. It's kind of him to put those forward in the House. I know that we will be working hard to get the information he needs out to him on a timely basis and an ongoing basis. We certainly welcome his comments informally as well as in the confines of the House. In fact, perhaps the Member for Edmonton-Riverview might want to chat with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who talked about the regrettable man-years in the EUB. And the Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about the increased expenditure at the EUB. Well, of course that is exactly what it's for: to continue to get good, qualified people working in those areas.

Mr. Chairman, as much as there is excitement from my colleagues to continue on in the department that is a custodian and a steward of the resource since 1930, when Premier Brownlee moved it through, I will undertake to answer these questions in writing, in detail and with completeness.

I'd now ask to move the estimates of the Department of Energy.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Energy, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $103,416,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. MARZ: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following departments.

Finance: operating expense and capital investment, $102,245,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $95,422,000.

Energy: operating expense and capital investment, $103,416,000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:27 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 15, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Representative Max Black of the Idaho House of Representatives and president of the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, of which Alberta is a member. Accompanying him here today are Representative Jeff Morris of the Washington state House of Representatives, the vice-president of PNWER, and Mr. Matt Morrison, executive director of PNWER. They are seated in your gallery.

They have come to Edmonton today to meet with Alberta's PNWER representatives and discuss the upcoming Pacific Northwest Economic Region meeting to be held in Whistler, British Columbia, this coming July. This will be a joint meeting with the Council of State Governments – West, which Alberta joined last year. PNWER's commitment to promote regional collaboration and to remove trade and transportation barriers provides Alberta with a valuable forum for strengthening our transboundary relations. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Stanley Soko, director general of the province of Mpumalanga, South Africa. I would like to welcome Mr. Soko and his colleagues: Mr. Dube, head of the Mpumalanga finance department; Mr. Tshoba, chief director of macropolicy in the office of the Premier; and Mr. Ben Nkambule, director of intergovernmental relations and chief of protocol. Our friends from our sister province in South Africa are visiting Alberta on their first official visit under phase 2 of the CIDA-funded South Africa/Canada provincial twinning program. This project encourages the development of democratic governmental institutions in South Africa, and Alberta is working with Mpumalanga to build capacity in the areas of business planning, financial management, and performance management. Mr. Speaker, I would now ask our honoured guests, who are seated in your gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 3.

I'm also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter from Ms Jeanette Smith, board chair of the Parkland school division. The school board has concerns regarding some sections of the School Amendment Act.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies, being five, of a letter from the board of trustees of Sturgeon school division No. 24 opposed to some of the provisions of Bill 16.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a booklet written by Miranda Ringma commemorating the efforts of the Edmonton December 6th committee in commissioning and erecting a statue on the 10th anniversary of the Montreal massacre.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today five copies of a letter from the Sherwood school Parents Advisory Council in Edmonton to Premier Klein outlining their concerns for education in the areas of infrastructure, resources, and parent fund-raising.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the benefit of all Members of the Legislative Assembly copies of Alberta's market surveillance administrator's 2000 annual report to the Alberta Minister of Energy. This was submitted by the Power Pool Council.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first one is a letter from Mr. Ray Welsh of Vegreville in which he expresses deep concern about the government's indifference towards public education and hostility towards teachers.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, summarizes the findings of a Canadian Teachers' Federation survey taken recently which indicates that teachers on the average in Canada contribute out of pocket close to $600 per teacher because of underfunding of education across Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Mr. Malcolm McIlroy of Red Deer addressed to the Premier expressing his opposition to Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act. He has two serious concerns, that it is intended to benefit a small number of Lacombe-Stettler constituents rather than all Albertans and that Alberta Agriculture, being the promoter of the bill, is in a conflict of interest situation and cannot be relied upon to provide accurate and unbiased information.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly two gentlemen who are seated in the members' gallery and who are very involved in promoting the aviation industry in the capital region and indeed throughout the province. Visiting the Assembly today are Scott Clements, CEO and president of the Edmonton Regional Airports Authority, and John Craig, who is the director of real estate services with the airports. Scott and John are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask all members to offer them the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure and my honour, as this is the first school from my riding to visit during question period, to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly 29 students from Thorsby high school. They are in the grade 10 class, and they are chaperoned by one teacher, Mr. Al Bratland. Al has assured me that even though his last name is Bratland, the environment in which he teaches is nothing of the sort. I would ask if the students would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 17 guests from the Devon Christian school. They are 15 students from grades 4 to 9, accompanied by teachers and group leaders Mrs. Margaret Sloan and Mr. Brian Wallace. I would ask them to rise and extend to them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

1:40 Conflict of Interest Court Case

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the scrum the Premier asked for reasons to call for a public inquiry into the Jaber affair. My questions are to the Premier. According to the court documents, Mr. Jaber was also involved in the relocation of a liquor store to Westmount Village mall in 1991. Why not call a public inquiry to answer the question of what Mr. Jaber's involvement was in this move?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat what I've been saying all along. If there are specific allegations related to this or any other incident involving this particular gentleman, then I would ask the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition to bring those matters, those allegations to the attention of the Justice minister and Attorney General, and I'm sure that he will take whatever action he deems necessary to have these matters fully investigated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why not call a public inquiry to answer the question of whether or not Mr. Jaber was involved in any other government deals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again this is a fishing trip, nothing more than the opposition asking for this government to go on a fishing trip. If there are any specific allegations and any evidence of any wrongdoing, then bring the evidence forward, and it will be dealt with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why not call a public inquiry to give an answer to what other activities Mr. Jaber was involved in that would lead Mr. Naqvi to believe that Mr. Jaber could help him?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the question is the same.

MS CARLSON: No, it isn't.

MR. KLEIN: Well, it's almost the same. I just heard from across the way that it isn't the same question. I believe it is the same question. Notwithstanding what the question is, the answer is the same. If there are specific allegations or evidence of any wrongdoing, bring it to the proper authorities, and it will be investigated.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Premier, why not call an inquiry to give an answer as to whether or not any other government officials have been approached on this issue?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same. If there are allegations that are specific or evidence that is specific to any incidents or any suspicion of wrongdoing, bring the information to the proper authority, in this case the Justice minister and Attorney General, and I'm sure he'll take whatever action is deemed to be appropriate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Premier, why not call a public inquiry to allow Albertans to hear from Mr. Jaber himself?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was one incident in which Mr. Jaber indeed was heard. Well, maybe two incidents. One was the preliminary hearing, and I don't know the facts of the preliminary hearing, whether he was called to give evidence or not, but certainly he signed an agreed statement of facts relative to the trial. That was all made public. Relative to that incident, as I've said earlier, this case proves that the system does indeed work. A complaint was investigated, charges were laid, a conviction obtained, punishment rendered, and it was all done in public. All the documentation associated with the trial and the conviction, all of that information is public information. It was done in an open courtroom.

You know, Mr. Speaker, people can raise questions all they want, but the fact is that all aspects of this case have been investigated by the police and charges have been laid where warranted. The proceedings of the case are available for public scrutiny, so there has been nothing concealed in this matter. It is all there for the public to see.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Premier, the issues that I've just raised, are these not more than enough so that a public inquiry can be provided so Albertans can understand what happened?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, sir, again if the hon. member has specific allegations, if he has anything specific, any allegations or any evidence of wrongdoing, please, please, I beg of him to bring these matters to the proper authority, in this case the Justice minister and Attorney General, and they will be properly investigated.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Premier's Flight to Prince Rupert

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last July there was a public outcry over Edmonton city councillors accepting a flight to Calgary on ATCO's corporate jet for which they did not pay. The Premier was quoted in newspapers as disapproving of this, explaining:

You're in the area of optics. Often, I've been offered the opportunity to go golfing or to go fishing, but unless it's to my own lodge, it's dangerous to do those kind of things (for business purposes). For pleasure, it's doubly risky.

Last fall the Premier's office confirmed that the day before making these comments, the Premier returned from his private fishing lodge north of Prince Rupert on the Syncrude corporate jet. His office also indicated that the Premier paid for this flight. To the Premier: can the Premier tell Albertans how he made his arrangements to fly on the Syncrude jet?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I didn't make any arrangements to fly on the Syncrude jet. They were probably made through my executive assistant. Payment was made, and it was made quite appropriately to Syncrude. We have a policy that if we go on a private plane – and this wasn't even on private business. Well, yes, it was on private business; it was my private business. The lodge is a business, my private business. There are ways of dealing with this kind of business. I wasn't on government business. I was on my business.

If the hon. member wants to pay the price, he is welcome to come up to the lodge. It's about $3,000 for three nights and about $3,500 for four nights, exclusive of airfare. If he wants to add in the airfare, he's certainly welcome to do that, and I'll make the arrangements for him to come up.

DR. TAFT: I appreciate the Premier's generosity.

Did the Premier pay for this flight with personal funds or with government funds?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this was paid for with personal funds. Now, I am paid by the government; right? The party keeps a small account for me, as I'm sure they do for the Leader of the Official Opposition, if they have any money left. So, yes, it is my money. I have an interest in a business which is my business.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier table the receipt for his payment, a canceled cheque or a credit card stub, in the Assembly before question period tomorrow?

Speaker's Ruling Allegations against a Member

THE SPEAKER: If the hon. member has a charge or an allegation he chooses or wishes to make against another hon. member, he should make that charge in this Assembly, and this Assembly has procedures for dealing with that. But if it's going to be a suggestion that reeks of innuendo and a series of other things, well, I don't think that that's the purpose of this question period. I don't think that deals with the decorum of this Assembly, nor do I believe that it deals with the rules of this Assembly. If the hon. member – and I repeat – wishes to make a charge against another hon. member, make the charge.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier in comments in the House was heard asking why Mr. Naqvi, the briber, wasn't charged, and he later said in response to questions: I said that if you have a bribee, you must have a briber, so why weren't charges laid? My question is to the Premier. Is the Premier standing behind the implication he left yesterday in this House when he offhandedly accused a private citizen of bribery in a case in which he was never charged?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I didn't accuse anyone. I said that if there is a bribee, one has to assume there's a briber. You know, I'm wondering why no questions have been asked in this regard. Now, if the hon. member wants to ask the question in this regard, feel free.

MR. MASON: In a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Why did the Premier say that a deal had been made in exchange for not charging Mr. Naqvi when the preliminary hearing transcript clearly states that there was no deal?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, perhaps "deal" was unfortunate. I've since consulted with the Attorney General. As I understand it, an arrangement was made.

MR. MASON: Enlightening, Mr. Speaker.

Given the Premier's eagerness to ask the questions rather than answer them, my question to the Premier is this: why wasn't Mr. Naqvi charged?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea. You know, it was a gratuitous remark across the hall, not on the formal record in any way, shape, or form. I'm curious and I'm sure that members of the opposition are curious. All I'm saying is that if a bribee has been convicted of accepting a bribe, one has to assume that there is a briber. If there wasn't, well, I guess there wasn't.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Beauchesne 411 says:

Some further limitations seem to be generally understood. A question may not:

- (1) [seek] a solution of a legal question, such as the interpretation of a statute.

Beauchesne 410 clearly states that a question “should not seek a legal opinion or inquire as to what legal advice a Minister has received.”

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Sex Offender Registry

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans are horrified and saddened by the recent tragic events in Lethbridge and other similar incidents that have occurred in the past. Children are Alberta’s most precious resource, and we have to do everything we can to protect them. There is a point when we have to say: no more. One idea that has been proposed is a sex offender registry. My question is to the hon. Solicitor General. What steps are being taken to develop a provincial sex offender registry in Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, on behalf of the government of Alberta I want to clearly state that this government is committed to protecting children and to keeping Alberta’s communities a safe place to live and raise our families.

Mr. Speaker, today I have met with officials from my department to discuss the provincial sex offender registry. Since 1998 the Alberta government has lobbied the federal government to establish a national sex offender registry. Sex offenders move from place to place, and we believe a national tracking system would be the most effective. While that’s our first preference, a provincial registry would go a long way towards helping track these predators.

Mr. Speaker, with that in mind, my department has already begun to move forward on a provincial registry. My department is in the process of setting up a working committee made up of representatives of the police service, Alberta Justice, and my department. I’ll be reporting back to cabinet in two weeks. The Premier has already committed to raise the issue at the upcoming Western Premiers’ Conference this month and at the annual Premiers’ Conference later this summer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Solicitor General: what are the benefits of a sex offender registry in the province of Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister. If it’s not an opinion.

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, a registry will allow police services to track the movement of sex offenders in Alberta as they move from place to place and to warn communities that these people may pose a danger. It will add another mechanism to those already in place. For example, in Alberta the public is notified when an offender is released into the community if the chief of police or the head of the RCMP K Division feels the public is at risk of significant harm.

Mr. Speaker, Ontario has put in place legislation, and B.C. is in the process of establishing a similar system. By moving ahead with the registry in Alberta, I believe we will be putting additional pressure on the federal government to put in place a national registry. We want to send a clear message to sex offenders in Alberta: do not touch our children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Solicitor General: who would be able to access a sex offender registry?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The registry would primarily be another tool for police agencies. It will give police firsthand knowledge of the principal residence of a sex offender. The registry would not be intended for public use. In other words, if someone has suspicions about their next-door neighbour, they would not be able to contact the registry to find out about the person’s criminal record. However, the intent is that organizations that involve children interacting with adults would be able to access the registry through the police.

Surplus Land Sale

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, we have another issue for this government that does not pass the smell test. The province deemed greenbelt land on 10th Avenue as surplus and conveniently forgot to follow due process in notifying the city that it was available for sale. This circumvented the only process local residents had to be notified that the province intended to sell land committed to agricultural and recreational use. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. When I requested the information on this issue, why did the minister state in his reply of January 25, 2001, that the city had received proper notification of this current land sale?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, as far as I recall in reading the briefing – of course, this was on January 25 – it’s my understanding that the city was notified.

MS CARLSON: Not the case.

To the same minister: why did the province lift the restrictions on caveats on this land so that adjacent landowners would not have to be notified of impending sales?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is the common practice that we first notify the jurisdiction in which the land is situated, and then it is advertised. If they do not want the land or have no use for it, then in fact it is put on the market in a wide-open process through the real estate.

MS CARLSON: Not what happened in this case, Mr. Speaker.

What is the minister’s justification for selling this piece of land in a sweetheart deal which included a record-breaking closing time, below market pricing, and lack of proper notification to the city and local residents?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don’t believe that there was anything done that was not following procedure. Certainly the property, it is my understanding, was advertised for some length of time, and it is not common practice to notify everybody locally. There’s certainly the opportunity for people to become aware of land that is for sale when it’s listed with a real estate agency, and that, in my understanding, is what happened.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Canada/Alberta Farm Income Assistance Program

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the Canada/Alberta farm income assistance program, which has been very well received by producers of agricultural products in Alberta, I have subsequently had a number of comments expressed to me about the misunderstanding or possible confusion on the application form. My questions today are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Madam Minister, could you please tell myself, the Assembly, and constituents why a simple photocopy process like was used last year in the permit books wasn't used in this particular program?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of reasons why the permit book wasn't used this year. The first one is that it probably would have delayed payment to the farmers. Secondly, the permit book information is often outdated. In fact, about 40 percent of the information that we got off the permit books for the first farm income assistance program was wrong. We think that the current permit book would be more accurate, thanks to the last program. However, it is still a factor. The other thing is that that permit book information is not broken down in many cases into quarters so that specific land can be identified. It doesn't always include the full 160 acres.

Mr. Speaker, it was our feeling that the important part of this program was the immediate need of farmers, the ability to get those cheques in farmers' hands as quickly as possible. We expect the first cheques to start flowing either late this week or the first of next week – my staff will hear that, I'm sure – and allow them to be processed as quickly as possible. So that is the reason: the permit book information was not accurate, we couldn't be assured that it was accurate, and we did not want to delay payments to farmers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the landowner who rents on a crop-share or a cash-rent basis does have a financial interest in the land, I think we need an explanation why the guide itself specifically states that landlords who have no financial interest in the year 2000 crops are not eligible. Could you please respond?

2:00

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we made it very clear when we announced this program that this program and the intent of this program is to compensate the producer, not the landowner. The program defines the producer as the person who is responsible for the day-to-day management of the farm. This responsibility would include input costs and working the land. A landlord whose only interest in the crop is that of ownership of land is not affected by the changes of the price of commodities or input costs. So if these landlords are compensated by a set cash payment, they would not have, in our opinion, a further financial interest in the land in the way of input costs or working the land. Again, I will repeat that this program was clearly outlined, was clearly stated that it was intended to help the producer, the person who is working the land.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the case where there's no written reference to government programs in a rental contract, who will resolve or decide the allocation of the funds on the per acre assistance basis to the renter or to the landlord?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, that could occur in a crop-share rental agreement. That is correct. Again, I'll repeat that the intent of this program is to provide assistance to the producer. We encourage applicants on a crop-share basis to have a discussion with their landlord, if you wish, to negotiate a fair sharing. However, if the parties are unable to resolve their dispute, they can submit their information to the program administration and a review committee will make that decision for them.

Surplus Land Sale (continued)

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, in March surplus land from the Solicitor General's college in southwest Edmonton was sold to a developer. Adjacent residents who expected it to remain a park are left wondering what happened. My first question is to the Solicitor General. What process did the Solicitor General's department follow to sell off the surplus land?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to pass that on to the minister responsible, the Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, when a department has land that is excess to its needs, the Department of Infrastructure handles the sale of that property. The answer to this question would be very similar to the ones that we had just a moment ago. The due process is followed, and it's unfortunate if people thought that there was going to be a park there, because that was not the case.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. To the Minister of Infrastructure: will the minister confirm that this 10-lot piece of land was offered to the developer for approximately $58,000 in exchange for the developer building an adjacent road?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, that is a very detailed question, and I don't have those numbers at my fingertips. I would urge the hon. member to put it on the Order Paper as a written question, which is the normal process for questions that are in that kind of detail.

MS BLAKEMAN: My final question to the Minister of Infrastructure: why are developers allowed to buy government-owned land at prices far below market value for residential lots?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. If that member has information that this is happening, I would ask her to talk to our department, and if it's necessary, we will take the appropriate action. Clearly, under the act the land has to be sold at not less than market value, and it's put on the market as an upset price.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Motor Vehicle Safety

MR. LORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciated the earlier comments about children being our most precious resource. Those comments are very appropriate because May 18 to May 24 is National Road Safety Week, and collisions are the leading cause of hospitalization for injuries and the leading cause of death and injury for children in this province and across Canada. In fact, it's been reported that the average 400 traffic fatalities, 20,000 injuries, and 70,000 property-damage collisions caused by traffic accidents in Alberta each year are estimated to cost Albertans directly and indirectly upwards of $3.5 billion annually. It is said that if you have a dangerous road, you can either fix the road or build more hospitals. Thus my question to the hon. minister of health: is there information available or collected by your department about the cost to society and to our health care system due to vehicle collisions and the resulting injuries and fatalities?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can provide a partial answer to the question being asked by the hon. member. In 1996 an amendment was made to the Hospitals Act that allows the province to recover health care costs arising from the result of motor vehicle accidents. That recovery is done through an annual direct payment by insurers to the province, and the insurers in that industry find this to be a much simpler and less expensive way of dealing with it than through individual claims.

In 1997 the automobile insurers negotiated with Alberta Health, at that time, and agreed to pay Alberta Treasury some $35 million for estimated health care costs, and this amount was based upon adjustments that were made annually. For the year 2000 the estimated costs are in the range of $50 million.

The portion of the question that I cannot answer, Mr. Speaker, relates to the exact costs to the overall health system and society as a whole. It has been estimated by the Alberta Motor Association that the societal cost to Albertans is in the range of $3.8 billion, but I cannot verify that myself.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: in light of the large number of injuries and costs to our health care system as a result of collisions, are there any preventative strategies that the province is involved in?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are involved in a number of strategies, and perhaps the Minister of Transportation may wish to supplement. The main strategy that the Department of Health and Wellness is involved in is the funding for the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, which is funded by the Department of Health and Wellness and operated out of the University of Alberta. That centre works towards reducing injury rates in the province through initiatives that involve research, surveillance, evaluation, and information-sharing and education. Also, the province does provide funding for a program called the Alberta occupant restraint program, which tickets drivers for not having their children properly buckled up in vehicles. Drivers are given the option of paying a fine or attending an education program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Transportation. I'm wondering what initiatives your department is involved in to ensure that the very best road design standards and practices and the very best technology available are being used in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the collision experts, 90 percent of accidents in the province are due to driver error. As a result, we are focusing on driver safety programs and some of the traffic safety initiative awareness programs and education programs.

With respect to leading-edge technology, the hon. member represents a constituency in Calgary, and I'm quite sure he drives up and down highway 2 on a regular basis. We have introduced in Alberta an intelligent transportation system. These are the signs across the highway that will send messages in terms of conditions of the road, advising people as to some perils ahead, maybe slower traffic. We also introduced in Alberta rumble strips on the edge of the highway to ensure that if people are dozing off, they'd be awakened by the sound. We've also implemented some rumble strips on the centre line of the highway. As a result, that has provided additional safety for our traveling motoring public.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Electricity Exports

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When discussing power deregulation with the Edmonton Journal editorial board in February of this year, the Premier looked up from his detailed briefing notes with a shrug and said, quote: I have no idea what all this means. End of quote. My first question today is to the Premier. Does the Premier acknowledge that electricity exports out of Alberta are impacting the pool price and therefore adding to what Albertans pay for their electricity?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how it affects the pool price. I do know, as I said yesterday, that certainly the producers of major power – and I would say in excess of 500 megawatts – are looking for export licences and the means to transport that electricity, but as I explained yesterday, the rules are very clear. The needs of Albertans must be satisfied and, I would assume, at a reasonable rate. There has to be a certain amount of surplus power left in Alberta, and as I understand it, only the surplus on the surplus can be exported and again probably under very strict conditions, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister?

The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: does the Premier agree with the Power Pool of Alberta when it states in a recent discussion paper that exporting Alberta generation will impact the Alberta pool price, which, in turn, affects what Albertans, whether they be a residential consumer or industrial, pay for their electricity?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, the question period deals with government policy, not opinion.

Hon. Premier, if you want to talk about government policy, that's fine but not an opinion.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, you took the words right out of my mouth. The hon. member is asking me to make some assumptions, and I can't assume how it will affect the Power Pool, but perhaps the hon. minister can shed some light on it.

THE SPEAKER: The same applies.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely an excellent opportunity to indicate that new exports, exports over time, once the Alberta situation comes into balance – we're again seeing a drop in the pool price today: 9 and a half cents a kilowatt-hour. So what we're starting to see is a balancing occurring in Alberta, but if you want to encourage more generation and you want to increase a larger market and you want to make those moves, then in fact future exports may have the impact of driving the price down.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy. While the Premier yesterday would not answer, will the minister please explain his department's concern and what policy direction they're going to take concerning the issues that have been proposed by the Senior Petroleum Producers Association, which indicates that they have a great deal of concern about the impact of electricity exports on domestic prices, especially considering Alberta's own Power Pool now has that same concern as the petroleum producers?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I think the best response would be the fullness of time. In the fullness of time we will see what will unfold with respect to lower power prices in Alberta, lower power prices that we've seen today and we saw yesterday, the fact that there is new generation coming on, the fact that the oil sands development leads itself to natural cogeneration opportunities, the fact that in Alberta you can start any electrical facility today and you have a built-in customer to sell it to. In fact, you can talk about oil sands, conventional oil and gas, the pulp and paper industry all presenting energy-producing, electricity-producing activities in a deregulated market with a customer that will buy it at the Power Pool. We're going to see more power, we're going to see lower prices, and we're going to see ourselves ahead of the situation that exists in North America today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Inland Cement Limited

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the minister of environmental protection tried to turn a big public meeting, called to hear the concerns of citizens with regard to Inland Cement's application, into a carefully stage-managed public relations exercise with no less than five government MLAs and 20 departmental staff present. However, the minister failed to convince those present at the meeting that he was not fast-tracking the approval process. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier please stop the Minister of Environment from fast-tracking this important decision?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment is not fast-tracking the process. I think that he answered the question fully and honestly yesterday relative to the process that will unfold relative to this particular application. I take offence to the assertion of the leader of the third party that this was nothing more than a PR exercise on the part of the minister. I saw the minister on television last night. I thought he did an outstanding job. I also saw the leader of the third party. I can't say as much for him; I'll tell you that much.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, a series of public meetings are being held so that the public, the people directly affected, especially can ask questions of Environment officials, can ask questions of the officials from Inland Cement, and can of course hear the opposition registered by the NDs – I don't know if the Liberals have any to register – and anyone else, for that matter, and can take those concerns into account as this application proceeds.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier seems to be rather oversensitive about the questions, I mean seriously, to ask him to intervene. Will the Premier order a full environmental impact assessment as opposed to what the minister is offering, which is environmental review only?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I need to know what the hon. member means by a full-blown environmental assessment. You know, there are different processes to assess the environmental worthiness of a project. Certainly some by legislation are required – absolutely required – to go through a full public hearing either through the AEUB, the NRCB, perhaps the environmental assessment review process relative to the federal government, or a joint process of all three, depending on the nature and magnitude of the project.

Other projects, Mr. Speaker, could be the subject of less formal public open houses, less formal public hearings. All processes have to have an environmental impact statement; in other words, a document showing what the impact on the environment is going to be.

So, Mr. Speaker, it was deemed that this project, which is a conversion from gas to coal, should undergo a certain process. If at the end of the day, as I understand it, the people are not satisfied, they still have a very open and very public process, and that is an appeal to the Environmental Appeal Board.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Premier. Will the Premier guarantee Albertans and Edmontonians that public hearings will be ordered so that presenters can be cross-examined when they present evidence, scientific and other, to the hearings?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I assume the process to which the hon. member alludes is a full-blown environmental impact assessment, involving hearings before the Natural Resources Conservation Board. The legislation is quite clear relative to the kinds of projects and the magnitude of projects that are subjected to NRCB and/or AEUB hearings. This obviously is a project that is deemed not to be significant enough to be subjected to that kind of review. However, the minister has said that he will make sure that the public has ample opportunity for input into this process and that indeed appropriate and proper environmental impact statements will have to be prepared and that the appeal process through the Environmental Appeal Board is available to any person who has an objection or has grounds to launch an appeal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Maintenance Enforcement Program

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My office continues to be very, very busy with calls regarding maintenance enforcement. I realize that you've had that issue in the Legislature on a number of occasions previously, but I also know through my discussions with the hon. Minister of Justice that we have approximately 43,000 cases of maintenance enforcement ongoing in our province at any one time. Quite frankly, I continue to believe that we need to acknowledge the sensitivities of all family members when maintenance enforcement becomes necessary in their lives, which is why my question today is to the hon. Minister of Justice. What is the minister doing to assist children and family members who are affected by debtors that refuse to pay spousal taxes that have been ordered in their court-ordered maintenance?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to have the question because the maintenance enforcement program is indeed a success story. The maintenance enforcement program is there to assist children in Alberta and to assist families to get the maintenance which they deserve and which is ordered by the courts. There's been a very real improvement in that program over the course of the last year. Since the program was launched in November of 1986, monthly collection rates have increased significantly, and the program is now collecting $11.5 million per month.

During the two years since the Maintenance Enforcement Act was amended in 1999, the ability of the maintenance enforcement program to make collections has been dramatically improved. They've been given much-needed teeth to take a wide variety of enforcement actions including the ability to cancel drivers' licences, the right to report defaulting debtors to the credit bureau, and the ability to go after moneys transferred to third parties. I'm pleased to report that the program collected more than $138 million last year on behalf of Alberta's families and children. That's an increase of $11 million over the previous year.

A couple of other minor items, Mr. Speaker, but not so minor to the people who access the program. The delay in people getting access over the phone has been reduced from a 15-minute holding time to less than five minutes. That's a significant improvement in service, and we're continuing to try and improve that service to the Alberta public.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the same minister: what is the program doing to accommodate debtors, who are primarily men, that cannot afford to pay?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are always two sides to every story. There are many people who are registered with the program and are in situations where they can't pay or haven't been able to pay. While we make every effort to collect on behalf of those who are entitled to receive payment and the maintenance enforcement goes through a series of processes including default hearings and where we can't find people or can't get satisfaction any other way, by posting pictures on the web site, the program is not without a heart. If somebody cannot pay, if their financial circumstances are such that they can't make the payments, they can meet with program personnel to discuss the problem. The program cannot vary a court-ordered payment, so they will advise people to go back to court and get the payment varied, if that's appropriate. They can make arrangements with respect to the amount to be paid on arrears, and they will do that in appropriate circumstances.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my understanding that the court-ordered obligations are enforced through the Internet and, as well, through state-of-the-art phone systems, and I'm interested in hearing from the hon. minister what the results of that enforcement are.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, we have two processes involving the special investigations unit, that was set up in the past year and a half, and also a compliance unit.

The special investigations unit has collected more than $5.7 million on about a thousand files. Those are files in which money was not previously being collected, so it's a significant improvement to the program and to the people in particular who are awaiting their maintenance payments. The compliance unit was created to bring files to default hearings more quickly and to deal with the challenge that was faced by many families – and in some cases is still being faced – in terms of getting to a default hearing on a timely basis. Docket courts have been set up in Edmonton and Calgary to handle the process, and as a result the wait for a hearing has dropped from more than seven months to three months.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to advise the House that there has been significant improvement. There can always be more improvements made. We're certainly working to make sure that in a very, very tough job our maintenance enforcement people are always polite with the public and deal with the public in a reasonable manner. The program is working very well for Alberta families.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton Meadowlark.

Water and Wastewater Grants

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Albertans get ready to head to cabins and summer villages, water quality and quantity is on everybody's mind. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Will the minister table copies of any studies or reports his department has on the adequacy of water and wastewater infrastructure in summer villages?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, our department is always open with any kind of reports and studies that we do in co-operation with the various municipalities, including summer villages, in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the same minister: what is the status of the waiting list for funding under the water and wastewater grants?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered this question a couple of weeks ago to the same hon. member.

The budget will cover all of those applications where the water quality and supply are at risk. We're working with other applications that are coming forward, but they're rated according to need, and we will look after the most urgent needs in the province of Alberta to ensure the safest quality of water for those residents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the same minister. Planning for water and wastewater infrastructure must be done with significant lead time. Will the minister table a copy of the specific projects being funded this year under water and wastewater grants?

MR. STELMACH: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Gasoline Pricing

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the price of gasoline at the pumps rose to 72 and a half cents per litre, a price increase of 9 cents a litre over a two-day period. My question is to the Minister of Energy. My constituents would like an explanation for this rapid rise in gasoline prices.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a province where the most pickup trucks in Canada are sold each year and for good reason, it's an important question. The price of gasoline is affected by a variety of factors. For example, the cost of crude oil, retail marketing, transportation, distribution costs, taxes, local market conditions, and seasonal considerations all play in this. However, world markets also play a part in crude oil prices.

Now, what happens from a seasonal perspective, Mr. Speaker, is that during the winter supplies of gasoline are drawn down and then replenished in the springtime in storage facilities. The demand for gasoline at the pumps in the spring often starts to increase before these inventories can be replenished. So as soon as springtime demand and increased supply start to match up, we do see a bit of a return to normal levels.

However, I can report to the member that today in Edmonton – and I would direct members to web sites using computer technology available right here in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker. The lowest price of gas in Edmonton happens to be two blocks from the Legislature; on Monday at 2 in the afternoon it was 68.9 cents. A high price of 72.5 cents. This compares to a price of 75.8 cents at the Pioneer station at Wellington and Dufferin in Aurora, Ontario, and a high of 78.9 cents at a station at Ravenshoe and Woodbine in Keswick. So we're still much cheaper than what we see in other jurisdictions.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, my first supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister indicate whether the province benefits from the higher retail prices of gasoline?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta charges 9 cents a litre on fuel at the pump no matter what the pump price is. So the higher spike in the price at the pump does not directly benefit the provincial coffers that we look at. However, just so hon. members will know, the federal government also charges 10 cents a litre at the pump no matter what the pump price is and, in addition to that, charges Canadians 7 percent GST. So as the price at the pump goes up, the one government jurisdiction that benefits is the kissin' cousins of those guys in Ottawa.

MR. MASKELL: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister indicate whether the province has any plans to alleviate the sudden rise in gas prices?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province, as everyone in the House knows, does not interfere with the marketplace and has no part in setting retail gasoline prices, although I would say that in Alberta there is a bit of a golden fleece in the cloud in that every time the price of oil moves up a dollar, the royalty bank, the royalty pool, increases by up to $153 million. That money, again, is distributed throughout Alberta on a reasonable basis through the Assembly in estimates, which we're covering now.

I also just want to mention before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, that the last installment of the $300 energy tax rebate, the onetime refund of $300 that was paid in two equal installments, is arriving and has been arriving, and I think this can also help with gasoline costs in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Members' Statements

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure as chairman of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee to announce that this week marks the 25th anniversary of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. On May 19, 1976, the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act was given royal assent. The heritage fund was created because oil and gas prices were at an all-time high and the government was collecting record amounts of nonrenewable resource revenue. The government set up the heritage trust fund from a portion of oil and gas revenues to be used as an investment fund.

The heritage fund has benefited Albertans very well. In the late '70s and '80s the fund was used to invest in capital projects such as irrigation rehabilitation and expansion, renewable energy research, Pine Ridge Forest Nursery enhancement, Alberta Family Life and Substance Abuse Foundation, applied cancer research, and much, much more. These projects provided lasting benefits to Albertans.

This government surveyed Albertans in 1995 about the future of the heritage fund. Albertans told us not to use the fund for capital projects but to focus on providing greater returns for long-term investments and to use the income that the fund generates to help pay for the current priorities, Mr. Speaker. With the new focus the government brought in changes to strengthen the accountability of the fund in 1997. Now the heritage fund is worth $12.3 billion and has earned about $1 billion a year for the past three years.

The heritage fund will be a huge benefit for future generations of Albertans. Alberta is a very different place than it was 25 years ago, Mr. Speaker, and the future of the heritage trust fund will be discussed again at the province's upcoming Future Summit this fall.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Town of Raymond

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town of Raymond is pleased to celebrate its 100th birthday on July 1, 2001. Raymond has risen from the vision of Utah industrialist Jesse Knight to a thriving community of 3,500 people. It has an agricultural background; farming and ranching have been the basis for its economic growth. Light industry has assumed a major role within the community in recent years. Raymond has long claimed the honour of being home of the first stampede, in 1902, conceived and implemented by Jesse's son, Raymond Knight, for whom the town was named.

The town of Raymond has played a major part in the development of irrigation in southern Alberta and is a community noted for its strong work ethic and sense of fair play. Family, education, religion, and sports have played a big part in the daily life of Raymond's citizens. It has been said that Raymond's major export has been our young people seeking to make a contribution to the world's larger stage. These youth have excelled in science, medicine, education, business, cultural arts, and many other areas. Wherever you go, you find someone from Raymond. They are proud of their heritage and look forward to returning to their roots.

In this year of their centennial the town of Raymond invites everyone to come home and celebrate with them, remember the past, be a part of the present, and look forward to the future as we share the great pioneer heritage that we enjoy and of which we are so proud. Mr. Speaker, I offer congratulations to the town of Raymond and its people on their 100th birthday.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Social Assistance Rates

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is far too comfortable for many to express the notion in their comments on increasing welfare allowances that welfare has produced dependency, unwillingness to find employment, drug abuse, and crime.

Today I urge the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to immediately increase the allowances to the approximately 30,000 Albertans, mostly women and children, to reflect the real cost of living. The Ministry of Children's Services recently reported a relationship between income levels, including families in receipt of SFI, and the growing number of children in care with the government as their legal parent.

Have we forgotten Alberta's children when we adopt the attitude that welfare is a program of last resort? To ensure that recipients are not better off than other low-income Albertans is to ignore the well-being of many children and their immediate families.

The Alberta College of Social Workers has stated that, quote, another consequence of the principle of least eligibility is that Alberta Human Resources and Employment claws back other funding received by Albertans receiving welfare. For instance, while the federal government has taken the step of introducing the national child benefit as its contribution to help reduce child poverty, Alberta Human Resources and Employment eagerly claws back the full amount of this federal benefit targeted to help infants and children of parents on SFI. Directly or indirectly these federal funds intended for the poorest and the youngest of our fellow citizens become part of Alberta's annual budgetary surplus. End of quote.

In Alberta a single parent with one child under the age of 11 years receives a standard allowance for two persons from the government amounting to $305 a month. This allowance amounts to $4.92 per day for the child. Each of us in this Chamber receives $100 per day when we travel this province on official business. I urge the minister to increase SFI allowances immediately in order to reflect the current cost of living in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Glendale Elementary School

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday, April 24, 2001, I was very honoured to attend and speak to a special assembly of students and staff and parents at Glendale elementary school in Calgary-West, special in that the student body proudly honoured their principal, Lori Pamplin, winner of a 2001 PanCanadian students' choice award.

During the past three years, Mr. Speaker, with Lori Pamplin's leadership Glendale elementary school's students, parents, and staff have together developed a truly remarkable sense of pride in their achievements. The enthusiasm that day was truly infectious. Lori has been a very effective and highly involved administrator in the LEAP process in Calgary. Also, Glendale is the first school in the Calgary board of education to be working with the Galileo Educational Network, and it is working so well for the children.

At this special school assembly, Mr. Speaker, I heard many words, spoken and in songs, expressing appreciation which are important to share with this Assembly today. All students actively participated from ECS to grade 6, including many with special needs and handicapped students. Their love for Lori as a friend and leader was expressed many times over. Lori was described as absolutely exceptional and fair-minded. Lori was credited with creating a wonderful learning environment, and there were the ultimate tears of happiness, especially from Lori, as predicted.

Mr. Speaker, I highly commend PanCanadian Petroleum Limited for their students' choice awards program. One of the goals is to encourage educators to continue to learn and improve as a result of positive recognition and professional development funding. The program, as I observed, truly works in that it encourages students to notice the helpfulness of their educators and to express appreciation for their insight, dedication, and skill.

I congratulate Lori Pamplin and Glendale elementary school's students, parents, and staff on their achievements and wish them continued success as they continue to work together to reach their goals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, prior to going to Orders of the Day, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to introduce school groups when they come, particularly, almost a six-hour drive from the breathtaking constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. I would like to introduce 17 students and parent helpers from the Rocky View Christian school in Pincher Creek. They are led today by Mr. Don Esau, who is accompanied by parents and helpers Mr. Galen Unruh, Mr. Merle Unruh, Mr. Ron Boese, Mrs. Lola Boese, Mr. Jerry Toews, Mrs. Wilma Esau, Mrs. Lorraine Unruh, and Mrs. Wendy Toews. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

MR. LOUGHEED: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a couple of young ladies, one visiting from Vancouver for a few days and the other back in the area from her summer work placement. They are my daughters, Allison and Kimberly. I'd ask them to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 205

Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate May 9: Mr. Stevens]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and a special thank you to the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing forward Bill 205. This is an incredibly important issue in Alberta right now, one that many in fact are totally unaware of.

Here in Alberta, in a province that prides itself on being business friendly, we find ourselves losing business to other provinces. And not just any business, Mr. Speaker, but value-added agribusiness. Particularly now, with high input costs and low grain costs, one would think that the higher end value-added would be incredibly important to us. It is not that many years ago that agriculture was the number one business in this province, and while it no longer holds that esteemed position, it is still one of the top three industries in our province, with over 115,000 people in Alberta employed directly or indirectly in agriculture from both the primary production and further up the food chain to the food processing and value-added areas.

Over $22 billion in our gross domestic product is because of agriculture. Our farmers can and do compete with anyone in the world, and when we say Alberta Best, everyone here knows what we are talking about. Even from my understanding of an article in the newspaper this week, they know what it means in New York, too, when they talk about Alberta Best and the best beef that they can sell. It's a major attraction in New York restaurants now. Alberta beef, our poultry, our pork, our wheat for pasta, some of the finest in the world, our potatoes for our plants down in southern Alberta. We have sugar beets. We have vegetables, rye for whiskey, and malt barley for beer. We have value-added crops like canola, flax, and oats for cereal, as well as some of the finest oats in the world, that are shipped out to Venezuela where they know that for their racehorses these are the best oats anywhere in the world.

We can do all of this, yet we rarely think about it until someone wants to raise some more hogs or some more cattle or some more poultry. All of a sudden we're willing to say: "Well, gee, wouldn't you like to do that someplace else, you know, maybe like a thousand miles from here, maybe in Saskatchewan or Manitoba?" We really don't want any more intensive livestock in Alberta."

One of our major exports is beef. I believe it was somewhere around $5 billion worth last year, yet we don't want to let any more feedlots be developed. In some cases it doesn't seem to matter if they meet all the requirements of the scientific community or not. We seem somehow to find ways to change rules or find ways to just simply delay the project in the hopes that it will go away. This is a situation where rural and urban are not seeing eye to eye on process. I would like to remind this Assembly that much of Alberta's wealth is generated in rural Alberta, and we have to guard against putting the brakes on development and industry in rural Alberta. Agriculture, industry, even our oil and gas are sometimes in question because we've decided to do other things with rural Alberta. It is something that seems to be occurring with greater and greater frequency.

We have many areas of our province that are being subdivided into acreage developments. Now, I think everyone understands why people would want to move out into the country. I mean, it's beautiful. It gives everyone a greater appreciation of our desire to have our own little piece of heaven, and it's right here in Alberta, just on our back step. However, when we do that, we have to remember that industry, development, agriculture still need to be able to carry on creating the goods and products that we all depend upon, in fact that we all derive our income from. We depend on our farmers and our ranchers to produce the very goods that sustain us. We want them to be of high quality and at reasonable prices, yet we are making it more and more difficult for them to do that.

One company here in Alberta has purchased land only to find after they met all – all, Mr. Speaker – all of the requirements for a hog operation, that the MD changed the rules on them. It's three years now and millions of dollars later, and still no hog operation is being allowed. Surely this is not how we do business here. We have to find a solution to this situation, and the Member for Lacombe-Stettler has presented her version of what needs to be done.

However, Mr. Speaker, we do have an intensive livestock committee working on a report that may also have some solutions. I really think at this time we should be waiting for that report to move through our process and have the opportunity to review it, to finish whatever consultation needs to be done, and change the legislation to be able to ensure that intensive livestock operations can operate here and help us to further develop our value-added goals.

So, Mr. Speaker, on that basis I would like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 205, Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001, be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 205, Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now have filed copies of that motion with the Clerk.

THE SPEAKER: The Assembly now has before it an amendment. The amendment is very clear in terms of what the hon. member indicated, and such an amendment is debatable.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the amendment before me yet, but I'd like to make a few comments. When we see the government bring forward hoist amendments on private members' bills, it doesn't seem to be an appropriate thing to do. The appropriate manner to handle a bill like this is to . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, for clarification, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View moved the amendment, and my understanding is that the hon. member is not a member of the government. She is a private member as well.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The appropriate thing to do on a bill like this is to put it before all the members of the Assembly to vote on, either to support it or to not support it and defeat the bill. To hoist it six months hence I don't think is in the spirit in which the bill was brought forward, and I wouldn't mind hearing from the sponsor of the bill on this particular amendment.

THE SPEAKER: There is a question before the House at the moment. I gather no other additional members want to participate.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Bill 206

Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. Yes, on behalf of the Member for Lethbridge-East I would like to start the discussions on Bill 206, which is the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act. We have a number of concerns about conflicts of interest legislation in this Assembly, and certainly it isn't just limited to RHAs, but that is particularly what we would like to be able to discuss in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

Regional health authorities have changed in format over the last few years, and we are particularly concerned that matters are brought before them that have issues of conflict involved in them. We have a number of concerns that talk about them.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Here we have what we believe is an undermining of the public health care system that we'd like to talk about. In general we'd like to talk about reducing public confidence in the health care system when conflicts arise. We've seen a number of those instances occur in this Legislature over the past few years, certainly during my experience in this Legislature. We have concerns that conflict of interest in the public health care system doesn't correspond with accepted practices in the private sector or even in parts of the public sector. Once again, we've seen several references to that occur in the past few weeks here in this Legislature.

We could state that it's the most important service that government provides: health care. We need to ensure that it is crystal clear in terms of the mode of delivery in this province. Albertans need to know beyond a shadow of a doubt, Mr. Speaker, that conflicting interests play no part in the health care delivery system. We see that with a lack of uniform conflicts of interest legislation before us in this province, certainly applicable to all RHAs, we have very grave concerns about the ability to monitor and deal with conflicts, potential or otherwise.

It will be interesting to hear, Mr. Speaker, what other members of this House have to say on this bill. I'll take my seat at this time.

[Dr. Nicol rose]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, you will have your moment to close debate. Under Beauchesne you'd be the last speaker to close the debate.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak to Bill 206, the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act. Let me just preface by saying that I applaud the intent of this bill. Crystal-clear regulations on potential conflicts of interest and a systematic mechanism to enforce these regulations are essential to the smooth functioning of any government-related authority. Government authorities, appointed or elected, are bestowed with a unique trust, the trust of the people of this province. When there is a failure in this trust, the damage is not just in terms of lost dollars or in terms of forfeited efficiency. Rather, the damage from a conflict of interest in government-related authorities is a betrayal of Albertans. It is a trust forsaken, that cannot easily or potentially ever be rebuilt.

Building up a strong trust of the people of this province is especially crucial in the field of health care. Health care makes up the single largest area of expenditures for this province with a budget expected to approach $7 billion this year. Health care often involves decision-making on a daily basis by professionals with information that only experts can understand, and these decisions have immense impact on the lives of Albertans. Most importantly, health care decisions are very often made for people when they are ill or otherwise vulnerable. For all these reasons the standard that the government sets to eliminate conflict of interest must be raised to its absolute highest in the case of health care.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I am not at all opposed to the intent of this bill. Instead, I am deeply concerned about the process implied by this bill. I wish to bring forth this afternoon two reasons why this legislation is unnecessary and potentially a danger to its intended cause of ensuring high quality of health care in this province.

First, Mr. Speaker, I will reaffirm that current legislation and guidelines to deal with conflict of interest problems in the health care field are thoughtfully designed and tested. I will emphasize that current legislation is comprehensive, systematic, transparent: all the standards necessary to be appropriate and efficient.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I will demonstrate that Bill 206, for all its good intentions, has the potential to do harm to the very cause it purports to seek improvement with: the delivery of quality health care in this province. It will take away valuable resources from critical health care areas and place them in areas where they are likely redundant. Moreover, the structured system of checks and balances as it exists today with clear accountability and authority may become a bungled mess. Overlaps, inefficiencies, and abdication of responsibility could ultimately lower the standard of conflict of interest regulations in this province.

Let me begin by explaining a bit about how current conflict of interest guidelines in health care work in this province, how the system as it stands is systematic, offering an unambiguous mechanism for resolving conflict of interest disputes, how it's comprehensive, complete with legislation for all participants in the health care field, how it is transparent, open to a reasonable level of scrutiny, and how it is understandable such that all those affected by the regulations are aware of their obligations.

The most direct legislation that deals with conflict of interest regulation in health authorities in this province is the Regional Health Authorities Act. As members of this Legislature we are well aware that the Regional Health Authorities Act, which came into effect in 1994, divided Alberta into 17 health authorities, each endowed with the responsibility of budgeting and delivering health care in their respective geographic regions. Section 6.1(1) of this act clearly states:

A regional health authority shall make by-laws governing conflict of interest in respect of members of the authority, agents of the authority and senior officers and employees of the authority.

It further states that each of these sets of bylaws must be "approved in writing by the Minister" of Health and Wellness. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, each and every one of Alberta's 17 health authorities has completed these guidelines or is in the process of completing them.

The Calgary regional health authority, for example, has adopted what it terms a conflict of interest bylaw. In it you will find reference to regulations governing members of the authority and agents of the authority. In it you will find reference to abusing the public role and the full disclosure of private interests. These are phrases and concepts that are literally duplicated in sections of Bill 206. These bylaws already exist and have the reach and the depth that Bill 206 claims it will introduce into Alberta. The regulations suggested by Bill 206 are already in place.

A second measure by which conflict of interest is currently regulated is through the Health and Wellness department itself. Yes, each of the separate authorities has a distinct code of ethics, but ultimately each and every board member and each and every employee of the regional authority is responsible to the Minister of Health and Wellness. The Calgary regional health authority's conflict of interest bylaw, for instance, concludes by noting that this bylaw does not preclude the minister from making such decisions and taking steps to enforce conflict of interest procedures.

So, Mr. Speaker, a second layer of enforcement prevails. Not only has each regional health authority written up a set of regulations, but the Minister of Health and Wellness continues to take ultimate responsibility for whatever actions are taken by the authorities. The minister is, of course, subject to the already existing Conflicts of Interest Act. This means that all aspects of the Health and Wellness ministry, including the regional health authorities, are already subject to a very thorough set of regulations.

This also means that regional health authorities are subject to the scrutiny of the Alberta Ethics Commissioner. I note this point because Bill 206 places quite an emphasis on utilizing the Ethics Commissioner to enforce conflict of interest regulations. By virtue of the way this government has structured regional health authorities to be accountable to the minister, the Ethics Commissioner already plays a role.

A particular point raised in Bill 206 is in regulating conflicts of health authority board members. This fall, as I am sure all members of this Assembly are aware, Albertans will be going to the polls for the first time to elect two-thirds of the members of their respective health authorities. The remaining one-third of the positions will continue to be appointed by the Minister of Health and Wellness. I can see why this change might cause special concern. Indeed, I would hope all members would be interested in the new challenges this system will present to conflict of interest guidelines in health care.

Vastly more people are now going to have a say and an influence in the process to make up regional authority membership. There will be different groups of health professionals, companies that provide health services, nongovernmental organizations, and individuals seeking to have their concerns addressed by candidates and implemented by the various authorities.

This conclusion of a wide body of interests and groups in composing health authority membership is by no means necessarily detrimental to health care delivery in this province. Indeed, this level of involvement is a part of how democracy works. It will help make health care providers more responsible on a local level, which was the intention of this government. Yet in allowing more people into the process of the health authority composition, the scrutiny that can be placed on each and every person involved is inherently diluted. The resources that were previously used in a very focused method when regional health authority board members were chosen by a method of selection must now be spread across a wider spectrum. This means that conflict of interest guidelines need to be especially comprehensive, and they need to be especially well understood. The absolute necessity that proper ethics be followed is heightened once again.

These new challenges presented with the election of regional health authority boards, Mr. Speaker, are partly why this government tabled Bill 7 this session. This government has considered the new challenges posed by elected health authorities and has extended and tightened up conflict of interest regulations in this area to pre-empt any potential flaws at this time. Once the amendment is enacted, specific guidelines in matters of conflicts of interest will be applied to the election process for regional health authorities. Rules for disclosure of contributions will be more specific, rules for candidate finances will become more firm, and rules for relationship between candidates and employees of the regional health authority will be clarified. In other words, yet another level of accountability will be introduced into the effort to enforce a strong conflict of interest policy.

Mr. Speaker, there are more regulations still. Doctors and nurses are subject to stringent conflict of interest guidelines governed by their respective professional bodies. These guidelines not only place strict limitations and stern punishment on matters of money but also in matters relating to the ethics of being a health professional, a career that involves a very unique relationship with patients. There is an enormous amount of responsibility falling into the hands of the caregiver and an enormous amount of faith on behalf of patients. Self-regulation inside the profession ensures that the strictest standards are maintained.

So, Mr. Speaker, you can see that there already exists an elaborate and elegantly designed framework for regulation of conflict of interest. There are the regulations that each of the 17 regional authorities are writing up as stipulated by the Regional Health Authorities Act. There is the ultimate responsibility of the Health and Wellness minister and the involvement of the Ethics Commissioner in overseeing all services provided by the provincial government, including health care. There's internal monitoring provided by the professional bodies that many people in the health care community belong to.

I have established, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 206 is redundant. I also wish to point out that excessive legislation can be dangerous, and in the case of Bill 206 the potential of danger is great. First, the enforcement of this new legislation could be costly in terms of time and money. For instance, if the Ethics Commissioner is expected to fulfill a wider range of duties, then the resources and effectiveness of this office will be stretched beyond its current capacity. Almost certainly more resources will have to be allocated to the office of the commissioner. These are resources that could've been placed in a number of areas including the delivery of health care.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, overlapping legislation causes harm because it confuses responsibility and confuses honest efforts at fulfilling duties. With the new layer of governance that would be implied with Bill 206, which code is of the highest authority? My concern is that people might not know the answer to this question, and that accountability would be compromised.

Mr. Speaker, I understand and strongly agree with the goal of making watertight conflict of interest legislation governing health care provisions in this province. We need a mechanism that is systematic, comprehensive, transparent, and understandable. I will not pretend for a moment that the system we currently have is perfect, but I disagree that passing this bill will bring us any closer to achieving that perfection. In fact, by creating duplicate legislation, it will undermine the efficiency of the current system. Governance over conflict of interest in Alberta health delivery already exists. There is a framework of legislation emanating from the health care authorities act, and there is the discipline imposed by professional organizations involved in health care.

I urge all members this afternoon to vote against Bill 206. In doing this, Mr. Speaker, members will be recognizing that our government has a clear plan with respect to health care delivery in this province and that we have been especially stringent and proactive with respect to conflict of interest legislation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise and join the debate on Bill 206, the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act. Over the last 50 years this province has experienced a successful evolution of health care governance. The Department of Health and Wellness and this government have implemented years of comprehensive planning to ensure that ours is the best possible health care system.

Health care is very important to Albertans. Health-related issues will continue to arise as Alberta's population ages. One important way we are proactively increasing the effectiveness and efficiency of our health care system is by removing a layer between RHAs and the electorate. The move to electing two-thirds of our regional health authority board members has been a long and complex process and one that I feel has already dealt with the concerns brought forward in Bill 206.

The 17 health authorities will continue to operate under the Department of Health and Wellness, and the board members will continue to work under a stringent system of checks and balances. Along with answering to the Minister of Health and Wellness, most members of the 17 health authorities will also answer to the electorate.

Mr. Speaker, conflicts of interest will not be a problem under our new system. I'm confident that our RHAs will operate with conviction while maintaining focus and achieving their goals. I am confident that the best decisions will be made for setting a vision and direction for their region. Board members and senior staff will work together to develop a large vision for as many services as possible. I'm confident that the best decisions will be made for developing a business plan, including making the tough budget decisions, and I'm confident that the RHA board members will be talking to community leaders, families, and individuals about health issues in their region. Those who are elected from the people and by the people will be accountable to the people.

Mr. Speaker, people have asked: why elect two-thirds of our RHAs? Why elect 126 members and appoint 63? Well, the idea of combining elected and appointed RHA boards comes as a result of years of planning and numerous meetings with all stakeholders.

In 1995 this government released Selecting Regional Health Authority Members, a discussion paper and survey. Feedback from constituents told us to create a framework to elect members for Alberta's 17 health regions while maintaining accountability to a broader vision of health services for the entire province. An election gives people living in the region a direct role in selecting members but also encourages constituents to voice concerns and supply feedback to help their RHAs make the best decisions possible.

One weakness of the current situation of appointments is the perceived bias that exists in the selection process. Elected members will add a unique voice and fresh ideas for the future of health in this province. An election process encourages Albertans to get involved. More Albertans involved will mean more diversity. More diversity will mean more ideas. More ideas will create better solutions to issues relating to health service delivery.

We had very specific reasons for retaining a portion of appointed members. Feedback from stakeholders including health professional associations and health providers advised this government to appoint members, allowing them to focus strictly on health issues rather than on constituent concerns. Stakeholders were concerned about maintaining a balance among the board members such that boards would be accountable to the whole region, accountable to all demographic groups, and accountable to the province. Appointing members prevents the threat of turf protection and encourages cooperation between regions. Also, through appointments the Minister of Health and Wellness can ensure that each board has the expertise to successfully initiate health proposals and business plans.

Health providers were concerned about elected board members' ability to make controversial and essential decisions, especially regarding policy and budget issues. Other stakeholders agreed that appointments reduce the chances for single-interest candidates and their possible inability to work as a team with other board members.

As we move toward our new system of elected RHAs, this government has reduced the very possibility of conflicts of interest. This is why I cannot support Bill 206.

I also question the use of the office of the Ethics Commissioner to monitor RHA boards, which is another thrust of Bill 206. The Ethics Commissioner already monitors MLAs, including the Minister of Health and Wellness. I fail to see sufficient benefit for regional health authority members to answer to him as well. I'm worried about extending the responsibilities of the Ethics Commissioner. Each region has unique issues that are best resolved at the local or regional level. The commissioner will have limited resources to monitor the more than 200 RHA board members scattered throughout the province. Therefore, Bill 206 is advocating either one of two things, either an increased bureaucracy or a remarkably less effective office of the Ethics Commissioner. I find either option undesirable.

I'm worried that the availability of the office or person of the Ethics Commissioner could deteriorate for MLAs or government officials. Up until now the office of the Ethics Commissioner has been exclusively used by members of this Assembly and senior government officials. We cannot add to his responsibilities without either increasing the resources available to his office or even increasing the number of commissioners.

Mr. Speaker, let me give you a humorous analogy. Our Ethics Commissioner is a shepherd of a group of sheep. The shepherd makes sure that the sheep eat the right kinds of grass and do not play near cliffs or near the dark woods where the wolves lurk. What Bill 206 proposes is that the shepherd be responsible now for a much larger field, leaving a portion of his flock of sheep to fend for themselves. Members of this Legislature and senior government officials rely on the guidance of our shepherd, the Ethics Commissioner. To restrict or to remove or to dilute his availability to this government would be nearsighted and ill advised.

The RHAs are separate, smaller flocks protected by the steep mountain ranges called RHA codes of conduct and bylaws. Why would we want to extend our shepherd to already regulated flocks which have no need of the Ethics Commissioner, only to leave the sheep here in this field unprotected?

Well, let's keep this issue in perspective. The Minister of Health and Wellness has the final say and the final approval for RHA decisions. Each RHA's responsibility includes managing their region's resources and allocating funds, but they are ultimately accountable to the minister. He in turn is already accountable to the Ethics Commissioner. This is the system we have in place, and this is the system that works. I have confidence that our board members will be responsible and ethical while acting under the framework of existing codes of conduct and bylaws.

This government continues to improve our health care system and to improve our conflict of interest guidelines for our regional health authorities. I would like to point out that Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001, which sets the RHA election process in motion, requires disclosure of all records relating to election finances, and it ensures that the rules set out for regional health authority candidates are the same as the rules for MLA candidates.

Another amendment from Bill 7 gives government the authority to make regulations regarding who makes contributions, the timing and manner of making contributions, the maximum amount of contributions, and penalties for violation. Mr. Speaker, these are very thorough amendments that specifically preclude conflicts of interest and ensure fair, efficient RHA election financing.

Bill 206 would not adequately improve regulations and principles for regional health authority members to justify the expense and the duplication that it would entail.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I agree in principle with the intent. Conflicts of interest are completely unacceptable, especially in health care. However, I cannot support Bill 206 as it stands. To include RHA board members as an additional responsibility of the Ethics Commissioner would reduce the availability of his office and person to MLAs and senior government officials. Also, the potential for regional health authority board members to be in a conflict of interest situation is, by the nature of the division of responsibilities of the authorities and the Minister of Health and Wellness, limited. The Conflicts of Interest Act already governs the Minister of Health and Wellness, who in turn is ultimately responsible for the regional health authorities.

So I urge all members of this Assembly to vote against Bill 206. Although it has the best of intentions, it duplicates existing guidelines and dilutes the office of our Ethics Commissioner.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to be able to speak to the first of the Official Opposition's private members' bills being introduced in this spring session of 2001. Specifically, that's Bill 206, Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act.

Now, this legislation applies comprehensive and uniform conflict of interest rules to all regional health authorities, board members, and employees, as well as to the contractors and independent health service providers that have a contractual relationship with a regional health authority. I think this legislation is important for a number of reasons, firstly because it addresses current and future conflicts of interest outlined by providing a conflict of interest definition and a mechanism by which conflicts of interest can be investigated. The bill also requires that reoccurring or ongoing conflicts must result in either the termination of the relationship with the RHA or the divestiture of the asset causing the conflict. We certainly have examples, which I'll come back to later, that give rise to the need for that.

Secondly, we're looking at Bill 206 applying a uniform standard. A number of the other members have commented on how there are two or three or four or five different ways already in place where conflict of interest could be perceived. But that is two or three or four or five different methods in different levels of government, different agencies in the community where someone is supposed to fumble around and figure out which one applies to them, or maybe they can just pick the one they like the best and decide that it applies to them.

Bill 206 is providing a uniform standard of conflict of interest rules for all regional health authorities, and that's an important point because right now we have checkerboarding in place. Each regional health authority can decide on its own conflict of interest regulations. So if you're in one area and you don't like the conflict of interest rules, well, go to another one, because the next-door RHA may well have a set of conflict of interest rules that you like better, which really allows people to sort of shop around, go conflict of interest shopping to find which one you like best.

I think it's important with something as vital to Albertans as the delivery of health care services that we have legislation that overrides them all. We don't have a health act that in fact is 17 different health acts. We have one health act that's overriding for provision of health care throughout Alberta. Ideally, you are attempting to provide the same kind of health care in any outlet for it. That's not, strictly speaking, always possible. Obviously in a full service hospital you get different things than in a walk-in medi clinic. But the idea is there, that we have one overriding goal and legislation to provide health care services in Alberta, and I think we need to have one overriding conflict of interest act that covers all regional health authorities in the province.

So the first is that it does provide a definition of conflict of interest and a mechanism by which this can be investigated. Two, it provides a uniform standard for all regional health authorities. Three is about restoring public confidence in Alberta's health care system. Any kind of perceived inequity I think is going to be damaging to the health care providers, certainly to the regional health authorities, even to the legislators. It damages all of us if there is a weakening of belief in the system, and conflict of interest I think is quite integral to Albertans' belief in our system.

A number of members who've spoken previously have mentioned that there were already these various other levels of conflict of interest regulations in place. I think it's important to point out that none of those is as strong as what's being proposed in Bill 206. They're addressing different components of it, but even together, even if you took all different levels and put them together, we would not be successful in making it as strong as what's being put forward in Bill 206.

One of the members did bring up – and I think it's important to underline it – that we need to get these conflict of interest regulations in place prior to the elections of regional health authority members in conjunction with the October municipal elections. I think it's important that people that are considering running for these positions know what they're getting into before the fact.

There's one particular incident that was before the courts, is now completed by the courts, and has been discussed in this House a number of times, which is the Jaber case. That's involving conflict of interest, and it keeps coming up. Constituents keep asking about it. People are really concerned when they perceive that there is a conflict of interest out there. So it's important that we put this in context and try and provide the very best that we can for Albertans.

Now, I find it interesting why there is such resistance on the part of government and government backbenchers to doing something that's better than what we have. But that seems to be what's going on: no, no, no; we like our sort of patchwork; we like our different multilevel ones. Why the resistance to doing something right, to doing something well, to setting the bar high? I thought that as Albertans we wanted the best, so why on earth wouldn't we want the best conflict of interest legislation possible? But no, no, no. What I'm hearing is no, no, no; we don't want the best conflict of interest legislation possible; please, no, we don't want to go there. So why the insistence on the status quo? I find that really interesting, and I invite those other members that are, I'm sure, going to be speaking to this bill to explain that to me, why there's an insistence on being second or third best here. I'd be interested in hearing that.

The government finds questions on conflict regarding the Calgary RHA as tiresome, but I don't think Albertans regard it that way. I think that for Albertans perception and actuality of fairness is really important. They want to know that nobody is getting a better deal or getting something that is not available to others because of that first person's position, and that's what we are trying to address in Bill 206.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Albertans also don't like overregulation. You know, there are these interesting sort of Orwellian flips that this government gets involved in, where they will stand up with one piece of legislation and talk about, "Well, we want to simplify things; we want to sweep away everything else and just have one set of rules here," and then they get up and protest a bill that's proposing to do exactly that, to put forward one clear set of conflict of interest rules which overrides all of these other various levels in various divisions that are in existence now. So here's an example of where the government is struggling mightily to maintain a multilayered, fractured set of conflict of interest regulations that frankly are very difficult to wade through and confusing. I mean, I heard government members list at least three different schemes by which conflict of interest could be determined. Why don't we make that simpler? Let's make it one, and let's make it the best. Let's set the bar absolutely high and do the best we can here on behalf of all Albertans.

I was interested also to hear about how we should be delegating the obligation for conflict of interest to the professional organizations. Well, we don't do that in any other area. Why on earth would we choose the health industry, that most precious of our public social programs, to do a test-drive on this one? What the professional organizations' codes of ethics are about is their members' conduct in relation to patients. So if we're talking about the nurses, the doctors, other health care workers, it's about their conduct with their patients. It is not about delivery of the system as a whole. So why on earth would the government decide they're going to throw that one into the pot too?

Now we'll have 17 individual RHAs' conflict of interest rules. We'll have some conflict of interest rules from the department itself. Let's throw in the minister's ability to make regulations through cabinet, to make additional rules that people – oh, wait. Let's throw in the professional organizations too. Let's make them do it as well without even looking at what is the real purpose of that professional organization. So talk about interfering in the way other people do business; that's a prime example of that one.

Now, I think with conflict of interest what we are most interested in is that the rules need to have three parts to it. One is the legal principles of the fiduciary trust; two, the rule of law; and three, fairness. Fiduciary trust is referring to the responsibility of public officials to act on behalf of and in the best interests of the public. The rule of law argues that democratic society needs unbiased judges and administrators who provide impartial decisions. If public officials exercise . . .

Electricity Deregulation

503. Dr. Nicol moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to prepare annually a detailed cost-benefit analysis of the impact of electricity deregulation on the utility bills on all classes of customers in Alberta which must be released to the public.

[Debate adjourned May 8: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on Motion 503, as proposed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. Before speaking specifically about the motion itself, I want to emphasize that the whole idea or the principle of deregulation is about finding the natural dynamic balance between supply and demand.

Going back to the motion as proposed, an annual cost-benefit analysis of the impact of electricity deregulation on the utility bills of all Albertans, being a fan of economic studies, I commend the hon. member for the notion of a cost-benefit analysis. This sort of analysis can be very helpful when considering certain issues.

However, I do not think this sort of a report would really capture what is happening with deregulation across Alberta.

What Motion 503 basically proposes is taking a once a year snapshot of the entire ongoing process of deregulation and then comparing that to a series of guesses of what might have happened in the same time frame in the regulated system. Mr. Speaker, would this analysis be able to show the advantage to the marketplace with increased choice for consumers? Would it demonstrate the impact of improved services as a result of competition, or would it show the benefits of increased usage of alternative energy sources? What about the increased use of environmentally friendly generation like wind and solar power? Can it really calculate the benefit to our environment? I don't think it would.

I'm concerned that such an annual analysis based on a series of assumptions would also miss the big picture of the entire deregulation process. The big picture is that Alberta's utilities market is still in a period of transition from being closed and regulated to being open and competitive. New players are entering the market. Current players are retooling operations and repositioning to compete more effectively and efficiently, and consumers are preparing to weigh their options over which provider might be best suited to meet their particular needs.

An annual cost-benefit analysis could not capture this momentous shift, Mr. Speaker. It could not give a proper account of the metamorphosis and all the intangible aspects of deregulation. This report could not show Albertans how deregulation is gradually reshaping the province's utilities, industries, and marketplace.

When this government first introduced the Electric Utilities Act in 1985, it marked the province's departure down the open road to a competitive utility market. The act was not meant to have an overnight impact on Alberta's utility market. The act was a long-term strategy to eventually achieve a market-driven utility industry. This system brings the benefits of competition to customers by providing them with choice over their retail supplier of power, the types of services they receive, and how they participate in the market. As more suppliers come on-line, competition for consumers will increase, and that will work to bring prices down over the long term. This is the process that began with the Electric Utilities Act and was furthered with the introduction of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act.

As I said before, competitive marketplaces do not unfold overnight. Mr. Speaker, the one that will benefit Albertans is emerging even as we speak. It is this new and open setting that will become more and more competitive, and that will mean more choices for Albertans. That is the long-term goal of this government.

There are other benefits to deregulation, Mr. Speaker. The new electric industry structure will help open up markets for green power and renewable energy sources. Wind power, small hydro, landfill gas, and biomass sources will have an equal opportunity in the new generation market. Consumers will have the chance to choose from a green power package that includes power from solar-powered wind generation.

In addition, the new deregulated electrical industry structure is expected to bring other environmental benefits to the province. The new structure encourages cogeneration at industrial plants, and this tends to reduce the overall amount of fossil fuels that are burned to generate electricity throughout Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, by reducing our use of fossil fuels, we are also reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and providing Albertans with cleaner air to breathe. This kind of power is very much the way of the future. The deregulation of the utilities market in Alberta is encouraging that growth of green power. As more providers of green power enter the marketplace, they will be among the cutting edge of environmentally friendly power generation. Alberta entrepreneurs who have learned the ropes of competing in an open market with green power in Alberta will be ideally positioned to compete in a steady stream of jurisdictions across Canada and around the world that are moving towards deregulation.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, in my Calgary constituency an electricity consumer can subscribe with utility suppliers to buy green power. There are environmentally conscious consumers who do just that happily, even at a higher premium rate. Albertans are very smart. I disagree with any notion that underestimates Albertans' knowledge and understanding. When it comes to their quality of life and benefits, Albertans do not just focus on a dollar-and-cents comparison of their utility bills.

This government has made a commitment to preserving our environment for future generations of Albertans. Deregulation not only benefits the provincial consumer, but it encourages the development of generation of more environmentally friendly power. Giving green power producers a toehold in this new market shows the government's commitment to preserving our beautiful province's environment. Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that this government will continue to promote the use of green power to the benefit of all Albertans.

There is one thing that a cost-benefit analysis would reveal to be the same in a regulated and deregulated Alberta. Regulations still exist in regards to transmission of power and the utility companies that own the high-voltage lines that bind the grid together. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, as new generation comes on-line, our existing grid will have to have the transmission capacity to deal with it. The government will work with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and the utility companies to ensure that Albertans receive the power they require.

Mr. Speaker, the yearly cost-benefit analysis proposed by Motion 503 would not do justice to the ongoing evolution of Alberta's utility market. Such an analysis would provide a shortsighted view of the impact on the industry and on Albertans. Deregulation is an evolving process that cannot be revealed by a yearly snapshot for comparison.

But my question is about the comparison itself. To compare what with what and what for? Scientifically speaking, we can only compare reliably one existing thing with another existing thing in the same environmental condition. Economically a comparison without the capability to make change is a resource-consuming and wasteful exercise. I do not want to exaggerate here, but I wonder if this kind of comparison is like an exercise to compare the ways of the dinosaurs with the ways of the nimble creatures of today.

I acknowledge the good intention of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. However, considering the practicality and the usefulness, I urge all members of this Assembly to vote against Motion 503.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 lost]

Prosperity Dividend

504. Mr. Yankowsky moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to investigate the possibility of creating a prosperity dividend payable to all Alberta residents that is similar to the Alaska permanent fund dividend program.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise to introduce Motion 504 this afternoon, which advocates that the government consider a sound option in managing surplus revenue responsibly. Motion 504 urges the government to explore the possibility of implementing a dividend fund similar to the Alaska permanent fund. Learning from Alaska's successes and errors in managing their surplus revenue will help us manage our funds wisely in the emerging era of prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, the state of Alaska has implemented a fund of surplus resource revenue which pays direct dividends to all its residents. Their fund, the Alaska permanent fund, or APF, has been very successful and holds assets of more than $42 billion Canadian. Every year the fund distributes earnings from its diverse investments, and just last year each Alaskan received more than $3,000 Canadian.

The dividend can be collected by anyone declaring their primary residence to be Alaska, demonstrating residency, and not having served a criminal sentence over the year of application. Children, with the sponsorship of their parent or guardian, can also apply and receive the same dividend as permanent Alaska residents.

The resource revenue placed into the principal of the fund cannot be withdrawn without the consent of the majority of voters, and none of the resource revenue placed into the fund is paid out in dividends. All of the money paid to Alaskans comes from earnings on investments purchased with resource revenues on an ongoing basis.

In this way, growth of the fund is sustainable and quite amazing really. It is no wonder that Alaskans are so proud. The sound investment of resource revenue has achieved and maintained for Alaskans a sustainable return on their investment. Because the Alaska permanent fund was established in 1976 and allowed to grow and prosper through the good times, the fund continues to serve all Alaskans in spite of their declining resource revenues. By sending dividends straight to all Alaskans, including children of all ages, the program is not only a way to fairly distribute resource earnings to current and future generations. It will act as a source of income long after revenues from oil and gas are exhausted.

There are several advantages to the APF. The fund achieves its three goals of providing an annual dividend to Alaskans, providing revenue for program spending, and achieving constant growth. It is a distinct advantage of the APF that it is designed to only pay out half of its yearly earnings on the principal. When the interest from each year is allowed to continually compound itself, along with the annual contributions from the oil and gas revenue the fund can grow at an amazing rate.

Another advantage of the Alaskan model is that it pays dividends to all of its residents. Alaskans take great pride in their fund, and this income raises everyone's standard of living. Even the children are given the dividend through a parent or guardian, as we all know that raising children can be very costly. This equitable distribution enables families to grow and prosper in Alaska regardless of their background or income aside from the dividend.

Along with paying dividends, the fund also contributes to Alaska's general revenue. This income has allowed the state Legislature to eliminate several taxes. This is done through an appropriation of undistributed earnings. Last year alone $1.23 billion of surplus earnings were spent on government programs and services. When we consider that the population of Alaska is less than that of Calgary, it is truly amazing that they have built a fund of such strength and potential.

This fund has served Alaskans extremely well. Although the current payment is relatively modest, just over $3,000 Canadian, that dividend will continue to grow regardless of future resource revenue being put into the fund. The dividend paid out to Alaskans has grown fivefold since 1986 mostly due to resource revenues added annually but also because of outstanding returns on investment. On average over the past five years the dividend has grown by 9 percent each year. According to that growth rate the dividend doubles every eight years. If this rate of growth is maintained, the fund will be able to supplant the average income of an Alaskan before the year 2040. That, Mr. Speaker, is a very conservative estimate that accommodates for inflation. The fund has a value of just over $35,000 per Alaskan resident and has earned over $20 billion over the life of the fund.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta would have equally good fortune through implementing a dividend fund. Alberta has a proven track record in the sound and productive management of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and it goes to reason that we would experience similar success with a dividend type of fund. For the sake of future generations we must consider setting aside resource revenue and providing Albertans with an asset that will do much more for them than depreciate or require maintenance, as would a building, a bridge, or a road.

The Alberta heritage savings trust fund was founded in 1976 as it was determined by the government of that day that some amount of oil revenue should be set aside for future generations. We have profited greatly from the fiscal prudence. The Alberta heritage savings trust fund has provided over $20 billion to scholarships and research grants as well as to government programs and services. This contribution is a legacy of the assets saved in the wealthy days of the 1970s energy crisis when oil was more than $40 per barrel. It is important to note that $40 is in nominal terms; inflation adjusted, we would be looking at $180 a barrel oil in today's dollars.

Although oil is not nearly as valuable today, we again find ourselves flush with resource revenue. Clearly this is because of the fiscal discretion of this government, but in any case, a standard and stable mechanism of returning resource royalties back to their rightful owners, Albertans, is the next logical step.

There are many benefits to a prosperity dividend, and I think it's extremely important that the government consider the Alaska permanent fund as a model of investing surplus revenue. Through a permanent fund we would be investing in the infrastructure of the future and in the lives of future generations of Albertans. Revenue must be spent very wisely indeed, or we will be abandoning the trust which Albertans have in us. I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is possible through a permanent fund to both reduce taxes and provide a dividend to all Albertans in a sustainable fashion.

I support the commitment we have shown in promoting the growth of the provincial economy through lowering personal and corporate income tax. These actions have brought new investment as well as new talent into the province. However, Mr. Speaker, investment into the economy of today should be balanced with consideration for the future. The Alaska fund model would provide a sustainable solution and ensure that our surplus in future years is not squandered on spending that is not cost-effective.

I certainly want to leave a legacy to my grandchildren and their grandchildren, as everyone would like to leave a legacy to their grandchildren and to their grandchildren. While our governments in this country and abroad are burdening their future generations through deficit budgeting, I would propose that this government do the very opposite. Setting aside resource revenue into a fund that will work for Albertans and not fade away would establish a legacy for all the people of Alberta to take great pride of ownership in. I know that it is an initiative that Albertans will fully support.

Alberta is a leading economy in Canada and all of North America and has grown at a pace of 4.6 percent per year over the past five years. This growth is truly staggering. If we can maintain our growth on average at just 4 percent per year, the size of our economy will double in 18 years. If the prices of gas and oil stay high, it is a strong possibility that the size of our economy will double in just 15 years. With such outstanding prospects for continued prosperity in Alberta we should form a sound and responsible way to manage our surplus revenues after we retire our debt.

The strongest point in favour of a permanent dividend fund for Alberta is that it allows us to take our time in evaluating the direction of the province. Instead of spending excess revenue just because it's there, we can save the money until a time when it is needed. This government has held the firm policy that spending should not be for the sake of itself but rather to answer an express need. A dividend fund would be a method of saving unexpected revenue for the future, providing income to the province for programs and services, and then providing resource dividends to Albertans.

The Alaska permanent fund does have some drawbacks, and these should be considered if Alberta is going to construct a similar dividend fund. Motion 504 does not propose that we investigate the possibility of creating an exact duplicate of the Alaskan model but that we create a made-in-Alberta solution to manage our prosperity. Mr. Speaker, what I am suggesting is that we establish a dividend fund so that we can manage Alberta's growth and prosperity with stability and a greater degree of predictability.

In closing, I want to say that resources will run out. They are by definition nonrenewable. Motion 504 proposes that we at least consider the possibility that a portion of our current revenues be converted into assets that are renewable and will continue to provide the province with prosperity for many years to come.

I urge everyone in this Assembly to support Motion 504.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take this opportunity to speak to this motion, an Alberta fiscal dividend program. I listened intently to what the sponsor of the motion had to say and was quite interested to see that he brought forward a motion that is a sit-on-the-fence motion, and he supported that with his remarks. What this motion does is simply "urge the government to investigate the possibility of creating." It doesn't actually advocate or push for one.

In the first part of his comments he talked about pushing for a model like the Alaska model, but in the last half of his comments he stated that he also wanted to support lower taxes. It's a little tough to have both, Mr. Speaker, so it would be nice to know exactly where this member sits on this issue.

Of course, the major downfall with the Alaska model is that with dwindling oil revenues, the amount of the dividend gets reduced. When we take a look at Alberta, where dwindling oil revenues are also the case, then we see a potential problem in terms of cash flow. Certainly we support any possibility of how we can better manage our funds and resources, and we've brought forward some options here.

It's our position that if the Alberta heritage savings trust fund were bolstered with excess oil and gas revenues and not dividended out at this time and not syphoned off into general revenue funds, as it's currently being done, if we built that fund up to about $30 billion, which wouldn't take very much time at the current rate of production, then we would be in a position where we truly could do what this member says he wants, which is to protect future generations. That would be by completely eliminating personal income tax in this province. You can build the fund up to an amount of money where the interest revenue off that could go into the general revenue fund, and we could completely eliminate personal taxes, which is really the best stimulator to the economy and the best rebate back to Albertans, not for just this generation and the next one but for many decades to come. The best way to do that is to immediately stop syphoning funds off the heritage savings trust fund, to not go to any kind of a dividend plan but to take the surplus revenues we have, while we have them, and build that fund up.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments we will not be supporting this motion.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. How many people and how many Legislatures in the world would love to be debating something like this? I mean, can you imagine? It's not every day that Legislatures are debating: what do we do when we've got our debt paid off? How do we go about investing or divesting ourselves of the excess funds in our Treasury without creating some of the problems that people with excess funds are bound to have, like jealousy, like overheating local markets, like overspending, setting up a legacy of spending that can't be sustained? We all know that sooner or later the well is going to run dry and we're not going to have these windfall profits, which we have been blessed with through some good management but mostly good luck. I think we all recognize that.

Certainly, I'm sure the majority of the members in this Legislature recognize the fact that we have a responsibility to future generations and that we have to carefully consider the decisions that are made. Although it is a nice problem to have, it's still a problem. When the debt is paid and when we have the opportunity to reinvest the profits that come from our resource well, we're going to have to be very, very careful, Mr. Speaker. We don't want to create a honey pot that's going to attract every fly in the world. We don't want to create a honey pot that's going to create and attract the enmity of other levels of government that might be tempted to take their hands from their pockets and put them in our pockets. [interjections] I hear other members saying: who would do that? Well, I think the who that would do that are probably located about 1,700 kilometres east of here, and we would be wise to keep that in mind.

Part of the debate in the Future Summit is going to be: what do we do, and how do we reinvest our resources? As members know, the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the anniversary of which is being celebrated this year, was our attempt in 1976 to address essentially the same problem. The Alberta heritage savings trust fund, as I recall, did provide for the Legislature to have a fund that we could put excess revenues into. It also, as members will recall, had the very negative effect of making Alberta a target of other orders of government. I think that probably led to the national energy program, and it led to a real schism in the relationship between Alberta and the central government. So we've got a difficult management problem ahead of us, a nice management problem but still a difficult management problem.

The intent of this motion is to say: well, if we're fortunate enough to have these resources, the bulk of the money should be dispersed to Albertans to be invested by Albertans individually. I think underlying that premise is the fact that most people assume that individuals are able to invest or to utilize money more efficiently and more effectively and more pragmatically than governments are able to do on their behalf. I think also underlying the premise of this motion is that we philosophically – and when I say “we philosophically,” I'm speaking of those of us on this side of the House – believe that government should have as little to do with managing the economy as possible, and that includes managing the excess resources, that we should give that responsibility to individual citizens, who should be able to make those decisions wisely in their own interest, understanding that a good portion of it as well stays in the common pot for the common good down the road.

It's a combination of trying to get the best of both worlds and at the same time not having a situation where we in Alberta are disproportionately better off than other Canadians, which then could have the potential to create divisions and enmity, that we just don't want to see and don't want to see again. So the underlying premise of this motion I think is very laudable, and I would recommend that others join in this debate to give their considered opinion as to how and what we should do with this resource wealth that we're blessed with.

The Future Summit to begin next fall certainly is going to centre on this issue, but we don't want to get to the Future Summit without having given some thought to a position to bring to the table. To my knowledge this is the first real effort that has been made to deal with the resource revenue that will be available to Albertans and to governments of Alberta after the debt has been paid off.

Now, the motion as presented is:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to investigate the possibility of creating a prosperity dividend payable to all Alberta residents that is similar to the Alaska permanent fund dividend program.

Alaska's permanent fund dividend has had some comment here already today, and there are pros and cons to that fund. Over the last 25 years or so that it has been in effect we've had the opportunity to learn from what they have done right and what perhaps what they have done wrong. I would like to move an amendment to the motion so as to make it less closely attached to the Alaska permanent fund dividend. So, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make the following amendment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Do we have copies?

MR. McCLELLAND: I have the amendment, but we do not yet have the copies. Just a second. I'll ask the page to make copies. Mr. Speaker, may I have your guidance on this. We need five copies?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We theoretically need 83 and then five for the office, including the original signed one. Normally if you had enough to give everyone a copy, that would be okay, but we still need five for the table, including the original signed one.

MR. McCLELLAND: All right.

Mr. Speaker, your guidance again. So I sign the amendment, get the copies made and distribute the signed copies, and then give the chair the original. Is that correct?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Essentially. When I say signed, it's not only the mover that signed it, but also Parliamentary Counsel has signed it, presumably.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your bearing with me here.

We'll make the amendment as soon as we get the necessary copies to distribute, which does, then, give me a bit more time to extol the virtues of this very timely and worthy private member's motion.

For those that are listening in on the web, I do want to draw the distinction between a private member's motion and a private member's bill. A motion doesn't hold the government to a specific course of action, and that's what this is. It's a motion which merely asks the government to consider. Once the provincial debt is eliminated, if oil and gas prices remain high, there could be an opportunity to return a portion of resource revenue to Albertans. A dividend fund similar to the Alaska permanent fund would allow Alberta to invest surplus resource revenue and distribute the fund's earnings to Albertans in times of high and low resource prices and production.

I point out that it is our intention to move an amendment to strike out that which indicates that it would be similar to the Alaska permanent fund. Just for further clarification, all we want to do is to get the debate on the floor.

In recent years Alberta's provincial debt has been substantially reduced by applying larger than expected oil and gas revenues. In the 1998-1999 fiscal year the government surplus equaled $1.103 billion, and in the 1999-2000 fiscal year the government surplus equaled $2.802 billion. The record debt repayment of $4.5 billion in 2000-2001 reduced the debt to $8 billion. That's the accumulated debt, and coincidentally the $8 billion is the approximate value of this year's projected surplus, which provides the possibility of Alberta being debt free by the beginning of the 2002 fiscal year.

There are, of course, considerations on the other side of the table, because there are those who feel that it may not be best to establish a fund such as this. It may not be in the best interests of the province, especially if it were modeled exactly after the Alaska permanent fund, because the Alaska permanent fund is inflexible, as earnings from the fund can only be used for dividend payments. It can't be drawn down to finance expenditures on people's priority programs like health care or education. [interjection] Well, we just can't do it. We want more flexibility.

Investing Albertans' money on their behalf for future consideration distorts the free market economy, and it takes away individuals' rights to manage their finances and risk.

I've been informed that the amendments are here. They're being distributed. I'll need one to move the amendment, so I'll just wait until it gets distributed to me.

The strength, of course, is that by creating a prosperity dividend fund now while resource revenues are high, as is assumed under Motion 504, that would supply Albertans direct and lasting benefit independent of future resource prices. Motion 504 would maximize the value of Alberta's resource revenues through prudent long-term investment and produce income to the benefit of all generations of Albertans. A savings fund acts as a hedge against the boom and bust cycle of the energy industry.

So these are all considerations that need to be brought to the table, need to be considered, and this certainly is the forum to do so so that when we arrive at the growth summit, we will have a firm foundation in this area from which to proceed.

So, Mr. Speaker, now, hopefully, we've done this correctly, and I move the following amendment, that the original motion be amended, the original motion which reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to investigate the possibility of creating a prosperity dividend payable to all Alberta residents that is similar to the Alaska permanent fund dividend program.

I move that that motion be amended by striking out all of the words that follow "Alberta residents," being "that is similar to Alaska's permanent fund dividend."

Mr. Speaker, I will seek the guidance of the chair once again. The notice of amendment which has been circulated includes the words "that is," and the amendment was to strike out the words following

"Alberta residents" but don't include "that is." So I would ask the advice of the chair.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The advice of the chair would be that if that's your intent in your motion, "that is similar to the Alaska" is removed there, and what you have at the end of the present Motion 504 is "to all Alberta residents."

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All right. So then I have made that motion, and with that, I would invite others to join the debate on the amendment.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 as amended carried]

THE CLERK: Motions Other than Government Motions. Motion 505. Mr. Herard.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is the Assembly willing to give unanimous consent to move to the next item of business?

[Unanimous consent denied]

Palliative Care

506. Ms Kryczka moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to identify palliative care as a core service in each regional health authority to ensure the availability of a coordinated continuum of care and support services for end-of-life care with access to palliative community services (palliative home and hospice care), acute care, consultation services for physicians, staff, and patients, and tertiary care.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak today to my motion on palliative care. As I don't have any formal documentation in front of me, I will do my best to speak to the topic. Actually, in preparation for this motion, which has been described by a board member from one of the regional health authorities as not being a sexy topic, such as cardiovascular surgery is, I would like to start off my speech today by saying that we should all be interested in palliative care because we will all die. Not all of us will be impacted by heart problems, but end-of-life issues are what this motion is all about and the role of the Alberta government in this issue.

I'm very proud to say that in the health care system that we have today, we've certainly given due attention to beginning-of-life issues, and that is very important. This government has and is very recently addressing the need for proper continuum of care for the aging population, and that is certainly not an easy task. I feel that since I've been in the Legislature, since 1997, definite progress has been made, but I think that what we really have to keep in mind with many decisions that government makes now and in the future is the fact that we do have an aging population.

The implications of an aging population are many. To start with, we know that the numbers are going to increase. For people who like to work with numbers and facts, I would like you to just focus for a moment on the fact that 10 percent of Alberta's population now are seniors, and in 20 to 30 years it'll be anywhere from 20 to 25 percent of our population. That is very much of a significant increase.

For me and the work I have been doing and I hope will continue to do certainly in this term, it will be to urge the government to move in the direction of accommodating so many more seniors in the future. I think that if we definitely take the position of planning toward the future, there will be some things happening in this next term and, I hope, in future terms that will advance us so we are ready when, for instance, 20 to 25 percent of our population are seniors.

It is easy for us to put off today and say: well, you know, that's tomorrow. I mean, we do that in our lives all the time; right? Procrastination is easy to do, and this is not really staring us hard in the face today. But, I will recall, for instance, 10 years ago – I can hardly believe it was 10 years ago – when I met my present husband.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: You're lucky you remember.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes, and I am lucky that I do remember those days. My time may come when I may not remember those days.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Well, then you'll need palliative care.

MS KRYCZKA: The hon. Member for Leduc is trying to suggest that I'll need palliative care, but I hope that I will have many more years of remembering and healthy living before I will need palliative care. Now I must be serious about this topic because my message is really a very serious one.

In the time that I have, I would like to really summarize what my research has found to date. Actually, palliative care has been addressed and defined as a core service back to 1993 in the Department of Health and Wellness. I would urge the minister, though, to actively support the government taking the leadership role in what is already evolving in the province as core service but to embellish the definition of what core service really means, an active definition, an updated one. Although the document that I did read back in 1993 is an excellent document – and many people from regional health authorities agree that it is – my suggestion would be that this is not really a today, living document, since we have really defined the urgency of looking after our aging population especially into their longer, frailer years.

What I'm going to try and describe to you as best I can is what I have found in my active research with regional health authorities. The larger regional health authorities, meaning the Calgary regional health authority and Capital health authority – and there are others that are smaller – are really to be commended for playing within each region a leadership role in envisioning what palliative care looks like. They are moving in a direction, and they have got what I would like to repeat is a vision. The smaller regions actually are coming aboard and being part of this vision, but if you live in a rural community and you find that geographically your health care resources are very sparse, the vision has to be more than just regional, and there has to be a team approach.

Definitely one of the key pluses in doing research is that the regional health authorities are talking to each other in this whole area of palliative care, and there are certain levels of agreement. We talk about team work, and again I'm pleased to see that it's happening. I thought there was more of perhaps a territorialism that existed between the regional health authorities but certainly not evidenced at all in this area.

With the movement to community care, we know that people are definitely saying that they want to age in place, in their own home, whether that be a house on a residential street or it be in a long-term care centre or it may be anything in between in terms of types of living models. Actually, more and more people are saying they really would prefer not to spend their remaining time in a long-term care facility. They want to be at home with caregivers, with home care support, but it's not as easy to implement these wishes.

So what's happening, as I found out, if I were to quote from either Edmonton or Calgary regional health authorities: there is a real team situation that exists where there are many specialists that are trained in geriatric care, and their job is to go out and first of all train and then offer support to GPs that are out at the community level, to nurses at that level, to families. So it's really more of a holistic direction that we're headed into. I guess what I would say is that I would have to give them a huge amount of credit for the work they have done to date. I've said they have a vision. They have a goal. It is not only these two large authorities that have taken the initiative.

[Mr. Speaker in the chair]

In a way it's an easy job for government to just come in and acknowledge what is there, but we need to work with them saying: you know, as government we support this. Maybe in terms of dollars they will come ultimately and ask for support, but I don't think that is really all that is necessary. I think acknowledgment first of all of what is happening. That can happen through individual MLAs; that can happen through the minister of health. I would look first to the minister of health to become more involved and knowledgeable in what is going on. As I said earlier at the beginning of my comments today, it is not . . .

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. member. I hate to interrupt, but the time allocation for this matter of business has now left us.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 8

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill implements reductions to corporate income tax rates and the elimination of the capital tax on financial institutions as announced last fall in response to recommendations made by the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee. These are the first steps in this government's aggressive business tax reduction plan. The bill also incorporates the amendments contained in Bill 22, which was introduced into the Legislature last year but not passed, and some technical amendments resulting from changes made to the federal Income Tax Act.

The specific changes to corporate income tax rates effective April 1, 2001, are that the general rate is reduced from 15.5 percent to 13.5 percent, the manufacturing and processing rate is reduced from 14.5 to 13.5 percent, the small business rate is reduced to 5 percent, the amount of income eligible for the small business deduction is increased from $200,000 to $300,000, the capital tax on financial institutions is eliminated, and the capital taxes paid to other provinces are not deductible for taxation years beginning after April 1, 2001. The business tax plan also announced further tax reduction steps. These will be implemented in future years in future bills, based on affordability.

The main components of amendments introduced as Bill 22 last year and being reintroduced in this bill are the introduction of rules to prevent tax avoidance transactions, some elaborate scheme called the Quebec shuffle, and again amendments which result from paralleling changes made to the federal act, which we generally try to keep in sync with, a course of action which benefits taxpayers and our tax administration by keeping things as simple as taxes can be kept simple.

Planned amendments to the Alberta royalty tax credit program, the ARTC program, will not proceed at this time. I will be bringing in an amendment during Committee of the Whole to address this.

Finally, there are a number of sections meant to close a tax avoidance loophole. The loophole results from the ability to elect differing amounts for Alberta, Ontario, Quebec, and federal tax purposes because the three provinces administer their own corporate income tax. The scheme is quite complex but basically involves using relieving provisions intended to permit a tax deferral to completely eliminate provincial capital gains tax. Ontario and Quebec have fixed their legislation, and we're now doing ours.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this bill is mostly about cutting corporate taxes. When our plan is fully implemented, businesses large and small will pay about half the tax they do today. I see members of the New Democratic and the Liberal parties raising their arms in glee.

MS CARLSON: No.

MR. McCLELLAND: That is not glee? That is angst? I'm sorry. I thought it was glee.

Bill 8 will help ensure Alberta businesses remain in a strong position not only nationally but also on the world stage. Making it easier for businesses to invest and operate in the province helps strengthen our economy, create jobs, and make Alberta attractive to outside investors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have a chance to respond at second reading to Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001. In general, we support this particular bill. It looks to me like mostly housekeeping, bringing in line recommendations made by the Alberta Tax Review Committee, the Alberta royalty tax credit program. We see some issues related to the tax-deferred disposition of property, eliminating capital tax, and paralleling some amendments with federal legislation.

We do have a few concerns, so we'd like to put those on the record. Hopefully, we can get the questions answered when it gets to committee so that we can see a fairly speedy passage of this bill.

We believe that in general right now corporate tax rates and the manufacturing and processing rate are competitive with other provinces. We feel that it's more important for the business sector at this time to stabilize electricity and natural gas prices in the province so that businesses can operate profitably. There are lots of ways to ensure profitability that have nothing to do with tax cuts, as small businesses who often don't make any money know very well. They would like to have the opportunity to share in tax cuts, but first they have to be profitable, and increased electricity and natural gas prices are eating into those profits considerably. So we're seeing with this a decrease in taxes on the corporate side but on the personal side a shifting of more of the tax burden onto middle-income Albertans through the flat-tax scheme and also through user-fee charges. We continue to be concerned about those.

We support the decision to reduce the small business tax from 6 to ultimately 3 percent. It's been our position for many years. We've called for that reduction since 1994. In fact, it was one of the very first policies that I worked on and asked to have implemented. It's taken this government over six years to act on our recommendation, but they did act on it, so we would like to thank them for that, Mr. Speaker. According to the CFIB, of the people employed in Alberta during 1998, 74 percent of businesses employed less than five people. So small businesses are a big deal, and we're happy to see some support for them.

In terms of the legislation that parallels changes to the Income Tax Act as set out under federal bills C-28 and C-72 with respect to the transfer pricing and the cost of tax shelter investments, the assessment and reassessment, and penalties there, it's good to see those parallel changes are going to be made.

We see here in this legislation that loopholes are closed that allow corporations to avoid paying provincial taxes by transferring assets to another province before disposing of the property. I think that's a small issue, but it's been a pretty significant loophole, so we're happy to see that happen.

Changes to the ARTC program result certainly in a more focused and effective program targeted at small and medium-sized producers. We've been a strong supporter of the ARTC because we realize that it offers significant tax policy stability to many sectors, to the energy sector, particularly small producers, so that's good. But we would like the minister to explain how these changes to the ARTC as outlined in Bill 8 will assist in addressing the concerns of the Auditor General about the government's failure to state specific goals, expected results, and the development of performance measures to evaluate the ARTC. So if they could address that. That would be the AG's report '91-92, pages 32 to 33.

We think that one way to measure the effectiveness would be to tie the credit to the level of reinvestment. Perhaps the minister could indicate whether the department's audit functions have the ability to do this. I think that's an excellent question that would be well addressed in committee.

We've asked for studies conducted on behalf of the government relative to the ARTC's impact on job creation and increased drilling activity. Perhaps the minister would now be willing to release those studies that benchmark the effectiveness of the ARTC.

We've been supporters forever of greater co-ordination in the area of tax collection in order to reduce the paperwork burden on the private sector and the elimination of duplication and overlap in the area of tax administration. Bill 8 goes some way in doing this. It's designed to reflect this objective with the federal amendments. We were not supporters of the province collecting their own tax and having separate tax returns there. We continue to reflect those concerns. Streamlining is a big deal, and cutting down on paperwork for a small business is also a very big deal, so we'd like to have that once again put on the record. I think we'd also like to know if the minister could indicate whether there are any plans to further harmonize the collection of corporate taxes as a means of reducing the compliance costs for industry.

With those questions, Mr. Speaker, we will rest our concerns on second reading.

4:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 8, which makes a number of changes to the corporate income tax regime in this province. Some of these changes are those that we can support, and others are those that we must oppose.

The first change that is supported by the New Democrats involves a reduction in the tax rate of small businesses and an increase in the threshold at which businesses qualify for the small business rate. The first installment of a three-year plan to reduce the small business tax rate from 6 to 3 percent and to double the income threshold qualifying for the small business tax rate from $200,000 to $400,000 is something that we think may have a positive impact on small businesses.

We're pleased to support small business in this province. We are quite aware of the role of small business in the creation of jobs in this province. Most jobs that are created in this province are created by small business, and they also provide a means of making a living for a very significant number of Albertans who are the owners of small businesses. We think that these changes will be particularly helpful to smaller start-up businesses. The threshold to qualify for the lower rate has not been increased for many years, and even with the increase proposed, it's not at what we would consider a reasonable level.

There are some troubling aspects of the bill, to be sure, and those involve the major corporate tax changes which are being sought through Bill 8. It looks like the New Democrats will be the only party at this stage opposing this direction, and I think that's too bad. The government is proposing in this act a reduction on profitable large corporations from the current 15 and a half percent to 8 percent, virtually cutting their taxes in half. I know that's being cheered on the opposite side, but we wonder if the government has actually done any detailed evaluation of this in terms of what it will produce in terms of new investment, what it will produce in terms of new jobs, and what it will do to the province's finances in the long term, particularly if resource revenues do not remain at the same levels they are today.

We are concerned that the government is significantly eroding the tax base with which it has to meet the needs of Albertans, and they're doing so at a time of fiscal euphoria caused by high prices for natural gas.

MR. NORRIS: Caused by good management. Caused by outstanding management.

MR. MASON: Well, the hon. minister over there would like to take credit for the high oil prices that exist in this province. He would like to take credit for the high natural gas prices in this province in the same way that previous governments believed that the oil and gas was put in the ground for the benefit of Social Credit. Well, it just isn't so, Mr. Speaker. It's easy to be good managers in these kinds of conditions, and the government has not shown that they are good managers of the . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, right now recognized for participation in the Assembly is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I would only be too happy to call on other hon. members to participate once the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has concluded his remarks. So I look forward to a long speaking list.

Debate Continued

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I know that my views don't accord with the hon. minister's. We've seen that. Nevertheless, my views do represent the view of a number of Albertans, and I appreciate the opportunity to put them forward here. The difficulty is that if the high energy prices are not sustained, this province could find itself in the unenviable situation of having to continue with its planned deep cuts in corporate taxes and to make up the shortfall by increasing personal taxes or to cut spending further on important programs.

Corporations will benefit immensely from a healthy and well-educated workforce as well as from spending on public infrastructure like roads and highways. Asking them to pay their fair share towards sustaining these important programs is only fair and reasonable.

My final concern about Bill 8 involves the changes made to the Alberta royalty tax credit program. While a government news release issued upon first reading of Bill 8 claims that it is implementing the recommendations of the Alberta business tax review, it's not really accurate when it comes to the royalty tax credit program. The Business Tax Review Committee recommended that the royalty tax credit program be phased out. It doesn't involve the kind of tinkering around the edges that is being done through Bill 8.

The Business Tax Review Committee quite rightly points out that the royalty tax credit is a selective program and provides benefits to a specific industry, conventional oil and gas production. The program runs counter to the general approach of supporting broad-based low tax rates for all industries rather than targeted tax credits or other forms of government assistance: these aren't my words, Mr. Speaker. They're the words of the Business Tax Review Committee, which was commissioned by this government.

At a time of record high oil and gas prices there can no longer be any justification for keeping this corporate welfare holdover from the 1980s on the books. Let's simplify the corporate tax system and axe the royalty tax credit. On balance the changes to the corporate tax system contained, in our view, more bad elements than good elements. That's why the New Democrat opposition will not be supporting this bill at second reading. We believe that the long-term interests of the province are not served by massive tax cuts for the wealthiest corporations in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Bill 11

Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure and honour to move second reading of Bill 11, the Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2001, on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

On February 7, 2001, the maternity and parental leave regulation came into force. It provides parents whose children were born or adopted on or after December 31, 2000, with up to one year of job-protected leave from the workplace. For many Alberta families this was great news. These changes were done by regulation because the government wanted to ensure that parents could inform their employers that they intended to access the new federal employment insurance benefits that also came into effect on December 31, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 does one thing and one thing only. It transfers Alberta's maternity and parental leave provisions from a regulation into the Employment Standards Code. Right now if Albertans look at the Employment Standards Code for the province's maternity and parental leave provisions, they cannot find them. Including these provisions in the code will give all Albertans greater clarity and assurance that their rights in the workplace are being protected.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with the Assembly some of the work that went into developing the maternity and parental leave regulation. Last December the minister struck a committee to consult with Alberta employers, employees, unions, social advocacy groups, and parents. The committee heard from over 5,000 Albertans and held a one-day symposium before developing the eight recommendations designed to strike a balance between meeting the needs of families and meeting the needs of Alberta's employers. All of the committee's recommendations were accepted by the government and form the basis of the maternity and parental leave regulation and will now be enshrined in legislation through Bill 11.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 gives parents up to 37 weeks of parental leave. For birth mothers this means they are able to take up to 52 weeks of unpaid leave from work, made up of 15 weeks of maternity leave and up to 37 weeks of parental leave. Fathers may now share in parental leave. The 37 weeks of leave may be taken entirely by one of the parents or shared between them. Adoptive parents can also take up to 37 weeks of parental leave. Adoptive parents can take parental leave regardless of the age of their adopted child. This change recognizes that adopted children, whether they are newborns or school aged, need time to bond with their parents.

Maternity leave can begin at any time within 12 weeks of the estimated date of delivery. Parental leave can begin at any time after the birth or adoption of the child and must be completed within 52 weeks of that date.

Mr. Speaker, the government recognizes that these extended leave provisions present a challenge for employers in terms of finding and training replacement workers. Bill 11 contains the strictest notice requirements in the country for employees going on and returning from maternity or parental leave. This will give employers the time they need to recruit and train replacement workers.

The changes to notice requirements are significant for two reasons. First, they extend the amount of notice an employee must provide before taking employment leave. Second, they spell out clear consequences should an employee not provide the required amount of notice.

Employees going on maternity or parental leave must give their employers six weeks' notice, up from the previous two-week notice period. Birth mothers who are unable to give the required notice will still have to provide a medical certificate within two weeks of stopping work. Parents who are unable to give the required notice for medical or custodial reasons will have to provide written notice as soon as possible. Employees now have to provide at least four weeks' written notice to their employers to either return to work or change their return date, and employees are required to provide at least four weeks' written notice if they do not intend to return to work when their leave ends. These provisions give employers greater certainty in scheduling necessary staffing changes, and employers are under no obligation to reinstate an employee who does not provide the required notice to return to work.

Employees, whether they are full-time or part-time, must have worked for their employers for 52 continuous weeks before they are eligible for this maternity and/or parental leave provision.

Bill 11 gives legislative force to the province's maternity and parental leave regulation and further demonstrates our commitment to working parents and our children. It is an honour to move second reading of Bill 11. I encourage all members to join me in supporting this bill.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I thought I'd seen it all, but I haven't been in this House long enough I guess. We're now moving legislation to verify regulations. I never thought I'd see the day.

MS CARLSON: They're going to repeat it again in Bill 14.

MS BLAKEMAN: I guess so.

The member started with the reminder that in February of this year in fact the government of Alberta had announced a regulation that was extending unpaid maternity or parental leave from its position of 18 weeks, and Mr. Speaker, such backslapping, such self-congratulation. I can hear the popping of champagne corks, and I can just imagine in my mind's eye the blue and pink streamers cascading from the ceiling. Such excitement everyone has over this bill.

AN HON. MEMBER: Blue and orange.

MS BLAKEMAN: Blue and pink. Oh, blue and orange. I suppose that would be more . . . yeah, yeah. Okay.

I think: well, my goodness, all this over something that Alberta is one of the last two provinces to do. My goodness, what would it be like if they were actually a leader in this? Boy, that would really be a party.

In fact, after the federal government increased their parental leave to 50 weeks at the end of 2000, all of the other provinces except for Alberta and Saskatchewan came along right away quick, but we did manage to get a regulation out of Alberta in February. Now in May we're all warm and fuzzy because we're getting around to passing the legislation that reaffirms the regulation. But it's nice to see this happen.

So is this a good bill? Yes, of course. I mean, lots of people have given input. We've heard lots from this government about how important it is to keep families together. Yes, indeed. Do I support this? Of course I do. I would have supported it if the government had done it six months ago, when they should have done it, when it really would have been leadership, rather than late and behind everyone else, but I'm happy to support it now.

One of the things that is curious to me, though, is why the government continues to discriminate, to differentiate between different kinds of parents and between the genders. As we move towards understanding that we want both parents to be equally involved, barring the actual physical necessity involved in some of this, we wanted parental leave to be available in an equal number of weeks, and that's not what's happening here. In fact, the pregnant employee could qualify for 52 weeks because they're getting the 15 weeks of, strictly speaking, maternity leave plus the 37 of parental leave. In the case of the nonpregnant parent they only get 37 consecutive weeks within 52 weeks of the child's birth. Why aren't we being a bit more equal about this?

Worse, I think, is only 37 weeks for adoptive parents, and that is too bad, because once again, we're making a difference here. At a time when we need to be moving towards an understanding that parenting is parenting, that we're not distinguishing between birth children and adoptive children, what does this government do? Yuck. It takes one huge giant leap backwards about two decades.

Well, I still have hope. The legislation is being brought forward, but I really had hoped that the government was able to move beyond this distinguishing and doling out of different amounts of time to people. I would have thought that they could have moved beyond that, but that's not the case. [interjection] Well, probably. There's a suggestion that there might be an amendment through miscellaneous statutes in the next session. I'd certainly be willing to look at that if it came forward. I'd be in support of that then because I'm in support of it now, and I would have been in support of it six months ago. Nonetheless, the government has actually come through in verifying their regulation with legislation.

You know, I thought when I got elected that the legislation came first and then the regulations fell underneath the legislation. But no, not in Alberta. In Alberta we're going to do the regulations first, and then we're going to pass the legislation for it. It truly is an Orwellian experience here. We do have three bills drawn up that way. We've got bills 1, 14, and 11. All three bills are sort of after-the-fact, better get it in quick legislation.

So I'm happy to support this bill. I'll certainly be encouraging by colleagues to support this bill. It would be nice if we could see an amendment brought forward that would straighten out some of the discrimination. I don't know why this government feels it needs to discriminate between people, but it really seems to be a visceral urge. Gotta, gotta make everybody different and treat them different. But overall I'm glad to see this.

There's been a process followed for this. It in fact did start in the fall session of 2000, brought forward as a private member's bill. At that time I spoke in favour of it and thought it was going to pass, but fall sessions in Alberta are very short lived. Boy, you've got to really move those bills through, or bingo, two weeks and we're out of here, and it just didn't make it in the cut. [interjection] The Minister of Finance is saying that life is tough, and that's certainly the way it is in the Alberta Legislature. You've got to move fast or you're out of here. Two weeks for a fall session, three weeks for a spring session. Boy, on we go.

There was consultation. An invitation for consultation was issued at the beginning of the year. There was consultation with a number of different labour groups, nonprofit agencies, government departments, and I think if you were really quick, members of the public could have been involved with this as well.

So it's a fine thing. Its time is long past. I'm glad to see it, and I'm more than willing to support it. I look forward to the further debate. I'm sure there are many members of the government who are just raring to get up and debate on this. [interjection] Right, and I'm sure that's going to happen another day.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 14
Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 14, being the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides the legislative authority for the Alberta energy tax refund and makes a minor technical change with the foreign tax credit and the overseas employment tax credit.

The Alberta energy tax refund program was announced September 6, 2000, to help relieve the pressures of higher than normal energy costs, including home heating costs and higher prices at the gas pumps. This program was possible because of higher than expected resource revenues, and it returns over $690 million to the pockets of more than 2 million Albertans. Highlights of the bill related to the energy tax refund include establishing program eligibility and refund amounts, ensuring the refund meets the criteria of an overpayment of provincial income tax so as not to be taxable at the federal level, and establishing criteria to redirect money to creditors, in particular in the case of maintenance enforcement debts. It also is ensuring that the province can recover amounts paid to individuals who are later found to be ineligible.

Mr. Speaker, while this program was put in place while this legislation was coming forward – it was introduced earlier – our commitment as a government, however, is to deal with the reality and make sure that we care for Albertans. While this bill is coming after the fact, it is still an important element.

The technical component of the amendment, Mr. Speaker, will ensure that Albertans who worked overseas in the year 2000 and earlier years are eligible to claim the overseas employment tax credit and the foreign tax credit. This change will ensure that affected Albertans receive that full benefit, as was always intended. This deficiency was rectified for the year 2001 and subsequent years in the new Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

Those are the very basic principles of the bill, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to debate but move second reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 14 in second reading, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2001.

An interesting bill once again. Like my colleague from Edmonton-Centre talked about, this is a bill where we see the legislation coming before the Assembly after the regulations have been put in place and in fact, in this case, after the money has been spent.

This is a companion bill, I think, to Bill 1, and it's an interesting process and an interesting precedent that the government of this province has established in this particular year. We heard some nice motherhood and apple pie statements from the minister in introducing the bill, and that was a very clever way to talk about putting the cart before the horse. We have issues with the way that that is done. We'd like to see the legislation brought forward in the Assembly and have it debated, put out to Albertans for review, and then come back and be passed.

MRS. NELSON: Yeah, and then we would have frozen to death.

MS CARLSON: Well, the minister says that we could have frozen to death. Mr. Speaker, in fact if the government had had the foresight to see what was coming, which pretty well all of industry and most Albertans did, they would have anticipated the issues and I think been able to bring forward legislation in a timely fashion. We certainly think that something needed to be done, no doubt, but this wasn't something that happened overnight. We all saw it coming, so it's too bad that it happened in the way it did.

We'll be supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker. It's sort of silly not to when the money is already spent, but we have some points that we feel are important to be made. I'm happy to have the opportunity to make them when we're speaking to the principle of bringing in legislation that is really shielding legislation and really is minor, of a technical nature.

We think that the $300 rebate under the Alberta energy tax refund program is helpful to Alberta consumers as a onetime measure, Mr. Speaker. It still was a crisis-based reaction by the government to the impact of higher energy prices. Not rocket science to figure out where prices were going and not rocket science to be able to figure out what their participation was in this. So it's too bad they decided to close the barn door after the horse had left.

In fact, it's one step, but we want to know what the next steps are, Mr. Speaker. Albertans really need a realistic plan to shield them from the sustained impact of energy prices over the medium term. This was clearly designed to shield the government's mismanagement of energy deregulation we think, not necessarily to shield

Albertans from the impact of higher energy prices, and we've had some of those discussions and debates in Bill 1. Certainly they've been followed up through question period, the media has had a hold of the issue, and lots of people have had lots to say about it. It's nice to know that the government did react fast enough to do some damage control. That's a good step, but they shouldn't be in a position where when they have the information available to them, damage control is where we go. They should have had some process in place for sustained shielding, which didn't happen.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

We saw this government, Mr. Speaker, attempting to introduce a long-term plan for providing Albertans with relief from the high natural gas prices with the introduction of Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, but this bill really was a blank cheque bill. It had no details, certainly lacks substance, and leaves every major decision regarding the government's plan for price protection to regulation.

So we're really no further ahead now than we were when the government first introduced its energy rebates. We still don't see any sustainable plans to shield the impact of energy prices, and we're still in the dark in terms of what this government's plans are. We're hoping that we see that. Maybe one of the reasons why the government wants out of session so quickly this particular spring is so they'll have an opportunity, over what remains of the spring and over the summer, to talk to Albertans and figure out where they're going and what kind of sustained shielding we can see in the future, because once again it isn't rocket science to figure out that prices aren't coming down, Mr. Speaker. They're going to be staying up there very high in the medium term and certainly higher than what we saw in the past in the long term, so I think it's important that the government talk about how we can be industry leaders in providing low-cost energy sources to Albertans and to worldwide consumers, hopefully, in the long run.

I think there are lots of options that we could be taking a look at, lots of developments happening on the research and technology side. Certainly there are options available in terms of solar power, wind power. I'm not sure that energy cells are going to be that productive in the long run, but work is being done. One good idea leads to another, and I'm sure that we have some excellent solutions to this problem on the near horizon. We need to see government supporting them in a substantive way. When they underwrite energy costs like they have with this kind of a bill, they put up barriers to supporting other alternatives and they put up barriers to existing energy companies finding innovative new solutions and better ways to deliver the product at lower costs.

So we're looking forward to seeing where the province is going to go in terms of support on those kinds of issues, and certainly we hope that there's going to be some good news coming up in the future. Certainly there may be some outcomes out of the Future Summit, that we're going to see in the fall. We'll be able to discuss those, I'm hoping, when we get into the fall sitting and talk about the kind of direction that this government is going in.

But before that, it would be helpful to industry to have some information on what kind of support they can see from this government on alternate sources. Also, for consumers there are lots of options that are very doable in the very short term and would be quite accepted, certainly by the Official Opposition, for them to move forward on. One of those is retrofits, Mr. Speaker. We could certainly support the government in assisting individuals and companies and organizations looking at retrofits of their existing buildings to make them more energy efficient. That isn't an alternative energy source, but it's certainly a short-term kind of measure in terms of doing two things: lowering the cost to people and business but also being more efficient in the way that we consume energy. It's much more environmentally friendly to take a look at that.

What are some of the ways that this government could take a look at in terms of supporting retrofits? There are two that are being widely talked about right now throughout the province. One of those is providing grants to people up to a certain level to provide the retrofits. I don't think that goes along very well with this government's philosophy, although the payback to the government through lower energy costs, lower consumption, and a greater spending ability by taxpayers would be significant and I think would be worth looking at. It doesn't seem to follow this particular government's philosophy, but what we could take a look at is loans to consumers for retrofits that were tax free that the government could in fact set up.

It would be a great initiative for the new Minister of Economic Development to take a look at because it would be a great stimulant to companies throughout the province who would provide the services for the retrofits. It would lower average costs to consumers so they would have more disposable income to get out there and spend, spend, spend, and it would be looked on very favourably by people who were able to access this. It provides a real incentive for lower income Albertans or middle-income Albertans to take a look at something that they may think is not possible right now in terms of costs. Evaluations for average retrofits for a bare, basic kind of system are running somewhere around $1,500. More significant ones average around $3,000, $4,500, up to $15,000, so out of the realm of possibility for many families.

I would encourage the Minister of Economic Development to take a look at that as an option, something that he could bring forward to his cabinet meetings and really be seen as a leader and perhaps develop a protocol that other provinces would be willing to support. So we look forward to further information on that and hope that we can see some announcements coming forward prior to the fall session.

Now, we have some concerns, Mr. Speaker, on how this government shows a lack of respect for the legislative process when the government introduces a bill authorizing a plan which they announced over eight months ago and have already finished implementing. It's thumbing their nose at the democratic system, and it's a concern for us in terms of the process that this happened. It looks like cheque cutting to cover up some of the bungling that happened on electricity deregulation, and we have serious concerns about that. We would like those to be addressed.

Yes, I hear the murmurs from the other side. It isn't completely the government's fault, Mr. Speaker, but certainly there is an aspect of this that has to do with the lack of planning that came in with deregulation, and that responsibility falls solely on the shoulders of this government. They need to fess up, own up to their responsibility in this and tell Albertans what role they had. They had some role in this. They're certainly not responsible for global prices. I never indicated that they were, but certainly they have a responsibility to anticipate where prices are going in a global marketplace and do what they can to provide other alternatives for Albertans. In terms of the aspect of this, it's the responsibility of deregulation that falls solely on their shoulders, and they need to be tagged with this particular issue.

So now let's talk about these refunds themselves. They said that the first refund would be provided in November of 2000, would not be applied to existing debts. Well, we know there have been all kinds of problems with the streamlining of that. In fact, people aren't getting their money. We're hearing that in the constituencies. We know that government private members have had those issues. They've been brought up here in question period. So not exactly a smooth process. That's what happens when you plan on the run: problems are encountered. So that's an issue.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are some people who still didn't get their cheques. I've got a couple of young people in my constituency who filed their returns prior to November of 2000 and haven't received the first or the second cheque. So some issues still around that. Perhaps if they don't come by the end of this month, I'll be taking it up with the minister's office to find out what the problems are, because they should have got them I think by this time.
