April 9, 2001 to November 29, 2001
and Index

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 9, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/09

[The Mace was on a cushion below the table]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated March 21, 2001, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

THE CLERK: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! All rise, please.
Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

HER HONOUR: Would everyone please be seated.

MR. HANCOCK (Provincial Secretary): Hon. members, I am commanded by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to inform you that she does not see fit to declare the causes of the summoning of the present Legislature of this province until a Speaker of this Assembly shall have been chosen according to law.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Lieutenant Governor and the Premier left the Chamber]

THE CLERK: Please be seated.

Election of a Speaker

THE CLERK: Hon. members, pursuant to the Lieutenant Governor's direction and section 16(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act nominations are invited for the Office of Speaker of this Assembly for the 25th Legislature. Ms Haley.

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Clerk. I can't tell you how pleased I am to be able to rise in this Assembly to participate in the Speaker's election process, a process that here in Alberta we are already taking for granted but which is so rare on a global basis as to almost be nonexistent, and I say global because even though we rarely think about it, we are in fact part of a network of parliaments, a system that is rooted in over 800 years of history.

I am so proud to be able to nominate this gentleman for the position of Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. On April 14, 1997, when I nominated him the first time, I believed that his knowledge of the parliamentary system, his sense of history, and his work as an MLA as well as his pride in being a parliamentarian would serve us all well, and I believe the same holds true today. I believe that our Assembly has been enhanced by his ability to make this marvelous building a place not just for us as MLAs but for all the people.

He has initiated many things for the people of Alberta, such as Mr.

Speaker's Youth Parliament, which just concluded last week, School at the Legislature, the display of the Famous Five, the choirs that now come here at Christmastime, and moments such as the Holocaust memorial service, which serve as reminders to us and to all Albertans that this building belongs to all the people of this province. One of the projects he is currently working on will see a series of plaques that will correspond to each of the elections in the province of Alberta, leaving a reminder to future generations of the role that elected people from 1905 onward have played in the history of our province.

As a historian he has a keen sense of the role parliamentarians play on a global basis. All of us are in fact parliamentarians. He has encouraged many of us to be participants at various times in different parliamentary meetings, whether it is the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, the European Partnership of Parliaments, the Francophone parliamentary association, or as participants in the National Association of State Legislators in the U.S.A. By encouraging us to participate, we not only learn about situations in other countries but pass on what we have learned here in Alberta to others around the world. The purpose, of course, is to remind all of us that we are part of something larger than one constituency or one province and that the more we learn, the better we will do right here in our own Assembly on behalf of Albertans. The more barriers we remove globally, the stronger democracy will be.

I believe that he wants each of us to be proud of who and what we are and that he has tried to instill a sense of dignity and honour into our daily Routine and into our role as legislators. Each MLA, regardless of party, is important here.

When I was first elected in 1993, I was sitting upstairs in my office one day when he appeared at my door. He was just doing a walk-around to say hello to some of the new MLAs in the building. He told me that day that if I ever needed any help or advice not to hesitate to call him. Well, I kind of laughed, Mr. Clerk, because at the time he was Deputy Premier, he was a minister, and he had a number of areas of responsibility not just to one constituency but to the whole province. I really didn't think he'd have time.

Strangely enough, several months later I did have a problem and no comprehension of how to deal with it. I called him, and sure enough, he set aside what he was doing to talk to me. He took the time to listen to the issue and give me his best advice. I truly appreciated it, and since that time I have seen him do the same thing for many in this Chamber. He set an example for me that day, and it's an example that I try really hard to aspire to, not only to be the best MLA in the province of Alberta but to be there for my colleagues when they have a problem.

When I nominated him four years ago, I said that he believes that all MLAs play a fundamental role in our democracy, that this Legislature is truly our home away from home, and that it should be a Chamber of respect, of honour, and of integrity. In fact, it must be an environment in which all of us can function freely on behalf of our constituents. The Speaker has a vital role to play in ensuring that that is what happens here.

It is a privilege for me to once again nominate Ken Kowalski, the Member for Barrhead-Westlock, to the position of Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

THE CLERK: Thank you, Ms Haley.

Mr. Kowalski, do you wish to accept the nomination?

MR. KOWALSKI: Mr. Clerk, I'd be honoured to accept the nomination.

THE CLERK: Are there further nominations? If there are no further nominations, I declare the nominations closed, and accordingly I declare that Mr. Ken Kowalski, MLA for Barrhead-Westlock, is elected Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 25th Legislature. [applause]

[The Speaker, with apparent reluctance, was escorted to the chair by Mr. Klein and Dr. Nicol]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, let me at the outset very humbly say thank you very, very much. I know that the tradition of Speaker dates back to 1381 in the British parliamentary form of governance. This Assembly is the continuation of that, and what we do here is important. This is democracy. This is the highest court in the province of Alberta. This is a place of dignity. This is a place of decorum. This is a place where honourable men and women come together and debate policies and exchange their views on issues. It is a place that can bring great pride to all of the citizens of Alberta and will continue to bring great pride to all of the citizens of Alberta.

You honour me today with the greatest of honours, and I thank you very, very humbly. To the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, thank you so much for the very kind words. They're very much appreciated.

Hon. members, I'm very, very proud to be among you. I'm very, very proud to be one of you. I will not let you down. Thank you very much.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms placed the Mace on the table]

Prayers

THE SPEAKER: I would now like to invite everyone to stand for the prayer.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

Election of a Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 55(1)(a) nominations are invited for the Office of Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of this Assembly for the 25th Legislature. I now open nominations. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to stand in this Assembly to nominate the Member of the Legislative Assembly for Highwood. This member was first elected to the Legislature in 1989. He was re-elected in 1993, 1997, and in 2001. On August 30, 1993, he became the first elected Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. He was re-elected to this position on April 14, 1997.

The Member for Highwood is indeed, in my opinion, an experienced, fair-minded, honourable, courteous, and firm member of this Assembly. So it is my honour to present this member for election to be the Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Highwood, would you accept the nomination?

MR. TANNAS: It's with honour that I would accept this, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, would there be additional nominations? It's my pleasure to declare that Mr. Don Tannas, the MLA for Highwood, is elected Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 25th Legislature.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first would like to offer congratulations to you on being re-elected to the chair, and I would like to express my appreciation to the hon. Member for St. Albert for her kind words and to thank all hon. members for this honour. I will do my best to uphold the centuries-old tradition of this office.

Election of a Deputy Chairman of Committees

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 55(1)(b) nominations are invited for the Office of Deputy Chairman of Committees for the 25th Legislature. The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure and honour to rise today and nominate the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall for the position of Deputy Chairman of Committees. During the mandate of the 24th Legislature the hon. member fulfilled the duties of Deputy Chairman of Committees on countless occasions on a voluntary basis. He demonstrated knowledge and understanding of the House rules and respect for the parliamentary process. Knowing him personally and professionally, I am certain that he will be fair and impartial and that he will be an excellent addition to the highly dignified and esteemed team of Speaker and Deputy Speaker. Therefore, I nominate the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, will you accept the nomination?

MR. SHARIFF: With honour I accept.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, are there further nominations? There being none, then it's my pleasure to declare that Mr. Shiraz Shariff, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, is hereby declared the elected Deputy Chairman of Committees for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 25th Legislature.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to begin by first thanking each and every one of you for entrusting me with this responsibility. I would also like to congratulate you on your election to the position of Speaker, and I would also like to congratulate the Deputy Speaker on his election. Friends, I look forward to serving you, and I will not let you down.

Thank you.

[At 1:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 3 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 10, 2001 3:00 p.m.
Date: 01/04/10

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Welcome.

Father, on this day of a new beginning we ask for Your guidance in the responsibility we have undertaken and Your help in fulfilling our duties. As Members of this Legislative Assembly may we faithfully serve all Albertans and, in serving them, serve You. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join us in the language of your choice.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, while awaiting the arrival of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, I'd like to share some information about the 83 members that make up the 25th Legislature of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. These 83 members, 23 of whom were first elected on March 12, bring a vast wealth of experience and expertise to this Chamber. Many have had experience in more than one occupation.

Sixty-eight have a business and entrepreneurial history. Twenty-four were educators for a period of time. Sixteen are or were involved in the farming and agricultural industry. Thirteen have accounting/financial management experience. Eight have oil field experience. Five have experience in computer technology. Five are lawyers. Five have experience in the real estate field. Four have experience in the construction field. Four are professional authors. We have two members each with experience in police force services, nursing, and the forest industry. We have a single member in each of the medical, floral, television and radio reporting, and social services fields. One is a pastor with the Faith Covenant Church, one is a deacon and elder with the Christian Reformed Church, and one is a bishop with the Church of Latter Day Saints.

Public service by your MLAs can be summarized as follows: 24 are past councillors and/or Reeves, 12 are former councillors and/or aldermen, seven are former mayors, and five are former school trustees.

This great province of ours is a fascinating mosaic of nationalities and cultures as well, and it's indeed gratifying that this diversity is reflected in the makeup of the current Legislature. Based on the information provided, 56 MLAs were born in Alberta and 19 were born outside of this province, representing eight different provinces and territories in Canada. Another eight members were born outside of Canada in the countries of Lebanon, Vietnam, Scotland, Poland, India, Tanzania, and the United States.

Fifty-one years is the average age of our members, and there is an age span of 35 years between our youngest member and our most senior.

For at least two of our members politics seems to run in the family. We have with us in the current Legislature the son of the distinguished former Member for Lac Ste. Anne and Barrhead from 1967 to 1979. We also have the daughter-in-law of the also distinguished former Member for Cardston and Cardston-Chief Mountain from 1986 to 1997.

I would not want to forget to mention that a former executive assistant to a former cabinet minister of the early 1980s has returned to the Legislature Building as one of the 23 recently elected MLAs.

We are indeed fortunate to have members, men and women of integrity, character, and dignity, who will serve the province of Alberta with distinction.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

THE SPEAKER: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, and Mr. Hole, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

HER HONOUR: Would everyone please be seated.

THE SPEAKER: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly have elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfill the important duties thus assigned to me. If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me and not the Assembly, whose servant I am and who through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duties to their Queen and province, hereby claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to your person at all reasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from you the most favourable construction.

MR. HANCOCK (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to declare to you that she freely confides in the duty and attachment of this Assembly to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that the proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temperance, and prudence, she grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow the Assembly's constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Assembly shall have ready access to Her Honour upon all suitable occasions and that all proceedings as well as your words and actions will constantly receive from her the most favourable construction.

HER HONOUR: Mr. Premier, ministers, very distinguished guests, many friends, lots of friends, great friends, to the loyal opposition, to all of you, this is a great time. To you our Speaker, I can think only that you are to be congratulated and that you will do a very, very great job.

May I say before I start the Speech from the Throne that Ted and I were extremely fortunate to get invited to a very special Mass. It was a Mass that was held at St. Thomas More Roman Catholic Church. It was called the Red Mass. Many of you who are Roman Catholic may know what I am speaking of. For those of you that are Roman Catholic and don't know, I will tell you. For the Protestants who really don't know, I will tell you.

We were very fortunate to be invited to this Red Mass. It was very lovely. If any of you ever get that opportunity, don't miss it. It was a beautiful event, but we did not know what it was all about. We discovered that lawyers and judges come to the Mass wearing red robes, and the rest of us pray for them. We prayed quite hard.

It was a beautiful time. His Grace Archbishop MacNeil, who had just retired, was there, a very, very special gentleman, a very nice man, I might add. I just enjoyed him so much. Very Scottish and very proud of his Scottish heritage. He told us a story, and the story goes like this. A woman's son went to college, and this woman decided that she'd better go and see her son, so she went to the college to see her son. He'd been there about three months. She asked him how everything was going. He said, "Fine." She said, "How is it with your two roommates?" He said: "Well, it's not so good at night. The one that sleeps in the cot to the left of me screams half the night. The one that sleeps in the cot to the right of me bangs his head up against the wall half the night." The mother said, "And what do you do?" He said, "I just keep playing my bagpipes." You must remember that His Grace is Scottish. He told the story, and I thought it was very interesting.

head: Speech from the Throne

HER HONOUR: Fellow Albertans, it is my pleasure to welcome you to the First Session of the 25th Alberta Legislature. Once again I have the privilege of delivering the Speech from the Throne.

Today begins a new legislative session with a new group of legislators who have been chosen by Albertans to represent them in this Chamber. Some are returning members; others are new. All have been given a solemn responsibility and a duty to honour the trust that has been placed upon them. As the business of this Assembly is conducted, I urge all members to respect the charge that has been placed upon them, to conduct themselves in a manner that reflects the importance of their undertaking, and to remember that they are here in service to the people of this province.

It was only two months ago that I laid out the government's vision for Alberta's future. It was a vision of low taxes, no provincial debt, a strong economy, new jobs for our young people, sound infrastructure, good health care and education systems, stable agricultural communities, safe streets, and reliable social programs. During the course of the provincial election campaign Albertans learned more about that vision and the government's plan to achieve it. They talked about it with others, they thought about it, and on March 12 they endorsed it with their votes.

That plan still stands. I'm not going to repeat it today because Albertans already know what the plan is. It's the plan they voted for, and it's the plan the government will now carry out, aided by a new configuration of ministries to address priority areas. Today this Assembly begins the work of making that vision a reality.

A Strong Economy

That work begins with maintaining and building on a strong economic base. This government recognizes that a strong economy is not an end in itself. Rather it is a means to achieve the things that matter most to Albertans. A growing and diversified economy supports investments to make our health and education systems the best they can be. It creates good jobs that allow people to provide for their families. It sustains the arts and cultural communities that add so much to our quality of life.

A strong economy begins with a solid fiscal plan. The government pledges that it will stay the course of its fiscal plan, a plan that has brought Alberta away from deficit and debt and into the security and prosperity the province now enjoys. It's a plan to keep taxes the lowest in Canada, ensure that spending is responsible and affordable, and eliminate the debt. It's a plan that will give Alberta's children a gift we all hope to be able to bestow: a future with limitless possibilities.

A foundation of Alberta's economy will continue to be its modern transportation infrastructure. The government will make strategic investments to improve the safety and efficiency of Alberta's roads and highways. This year an additional 35 kilometres of the north/south trade corridor will be twinned, bringing the total number of twinned kilometres to 860 of the 1,200 that will in time make up the corridor. When completed in 2007, the corridor will link Alberta to a continental trade and tourism route through the western United States and Mexico.

The government will continue to provide business and investment programs, especially in conjunction with the 2001 World Championships in Athletics. These programs will focus on the strategic benefits of investing in Alberta and demonstrate the province's diverse and world-class energy, petrochemical, forest and building products, agriculture and food, tourism, and information and communications technology sectors.

Alberta benefits tremendously from its participation in a free energy market. At the same time, the government will take steps to ensure a reliable, ample, and affordable energy supply within the province. Legislation will be introduced this session to put into law a commitment to help protect Albertans from high natural gas prices. This bill will ensure that Alberta consumers have a competitive natural gas service that maintains the Alberta advantage.

The government will work to reduce and stabilize electricity prices by streamlining the approval process to bring new generation projects onstream. The government will continue to address electricity price concerns and other consumer issues with the advice of the newly created government Advisory Council on Electricity.

Stable Agricultural Communities

Maintaining the viability of farms and rural communities continues to be a priority for this government. Recent events like outbreaks of disease and severe weather serve as reminders that safe, affordable food production cannot be taken for granted. Efforts to develop a long-term strategy for the health, sustainability, and growth of Alberta's agriculture industry will be accelerated based on the insights of Ag Summit 2000. Key among those efforts will be the introduction of a new policy dealing with intensive livestock operations and a renewal of efforts to provide Alberta farmers with marketing choice for their wheat and barley. The government stands by its commitment to support Alberta farmers in times of need.

A Clean Environment

Albertans recognize that a high quality of life also depends on a healthy environment. Our province is blessed with clear air, clean water, and a breathtaking landscape that supports a rich abundance of plants and wildlife. The government of Alberta will strengthen its reputation as a leader in environmental issues with a number of new initiatives to enhance environmental stewardship and ensure that economic growth is responsible and sustainable.

A Responsive Health Care System

As important as a clean environment in maintaining human health is a responsive health care system. Albertans are strongly committed to the publicly funded health care system, and the government of Alberta shares this commitment. The government's priorities for health care in the next year will focus on access to health services, illness prevention, and effective regional governance. The government will provide Albertans with a stronger voice in health system management. This fall Albertans will elect two-thirds of the board members of the 17 regional health authorities.

A Lifelong Learning System

Like health care, education continues to be a top priority of this government. Albertans need and deserve a lifelong learning system that provides the best possible start in the early grades, an accessible postsecondary system, and opportunities for job training and retraining throughout one's career.

The government will increase funding to school boards to help improve student learning. Boards may use these dollars to reduce class sizes, enhance literacy programs, or introduce other initiatives so that learning, particularly at the earliest grade levels, can be enhanced. There will also be more dollars for teacher salaries to ensure that Alberta can continue to attract and retain Canada's best teachers. Work will continue on the government's $1 billion, three-year commitment to build new schools and modernize existing ones so our students have a safe, healthy environment in which to learn.

Supports for postsecondary students will be augmented. The number of heritage scholarships will be increased to meet the demand, athletic scholarships will be boosted, the Jason Lang scholarship will be expanded to students in their third and fourth years, and a new scholarship will be introduced for graduate students. Automatic student loan forgiveness and a more user-focused student finance system will also be introduced to make the postsecondary learning system more affordable.

Safe, Strong Communities

Another priority of the government will be to make Alberta communities as safe, strong, and self-reliant as they can be. The fight against crime remains a top priority for this government. This year community groups will receive more than $550,000 in grants for crime prevention initiatives. The Victims of Crime Act will be amended to better support and serve victims of crime by ensuring equitable award decisions and simplifying the appeal process.

Albertans value a caring society where children, seniors, and others who are vulnerable receive the support they need. The government is committed to providing this support, beginning with giving children a strong start in life, particularly those that are most at risk. This year a new pilot program will be implemented in which mobile community teams respond to crisis situations involving children, youth, and families in government care or at risk of coming into care. Another new program will be introduced to provide mentoring to youth leaving child welfare to ease their transition to adulthood.

Support for low-income Albertans will continue to be provided. The government will review income support programs to determine whether they continue to meet clients' needs.

Arts and culture play a vital role in sustaining the high quality of life Albertans enjoy. Recognizing this, the government will extend the Alberta film development grant program to encourage the continued development of film arts in the province.

A Pledge

The government's plan for Alberta's future reflects the values of Albertans themselves, values of community and family, hard work and caring for others, creativity, confidence and innovation, and excellence in all endeavours. These are the values that have guided Albertans throughout the province's history, and they are the values that will continue to guide this government.

These values will shape Alberta's future, beginning with a Future Summit being held this fall where Albertans will help chart a course for the province's debt-free future. The summit will give all Albertans a voice in crafting the vision that will carry this province forward into the future.

The government will ask the Alberta Economic Development Authority to work with the ministers of Economic Development, Finance, and Revenue to plan and facilitate this event. The Community Development minister will also be part of the leadership team in recognition of the fact that the opportunities created by freedom from debt are not only about simple economics. Rather they are about quality of life. They are about the kind of province we want to live in and the kind of province we want for our children and grandchildren.

It is to our children and grandchildren that the government pledges to honour the trust that has been placed in it by Albertans. It will stay the course of debt reduction, fiscal accountability, and continued tax reform. It vows to build an Alberta that provides opportunities for all citizens to share in the province's prosperity and optimism, opportunities that will become limitless once the province becomes free of debt. This goal, once only a tiny pinpoint of light far in the distance, is now firmly in view thanks to the sacrifice and hard work of all Albertans.

It promises to maintain a strong economy and stable agricultural communities, foster science and research, keep our environment clean, support excellent health and education systems that meet all Albertans' needs, and help build caring, safe, strong communities.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we're honoured today to have in our presence the mother of a current member whose father once served in this Assembly. The current member is the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and from 1967 to 1979 this hon. member's father served as the MLA for the constituency of Lac

Ste. Anne and the constituency of Barrhead. In the Speaker's gallery today is the widow of the former member, Hugh Macarthur Horner, and mother of the current Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. I would like this lady to rise and receive the warm welcome: Mrs. Jean Horner.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

Bill 1 Natural Gas Price Protection Act

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act would put into law our government's commitment to protect Albertans from unexpected spikes in the volatile price of natural gas. On February 6 I announced that the government would offer price protection if needed beyond April 30, when current natural gas rebate programs end. Designating this bill as Bill 1 emphasizes the importance our government places on delivering on its commitments to Albertans. Further details of this made-in-Alberta protection program will be made public in the days and weeks ahead after a thorough analysis of gas prices expected for 2001 has been completed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Tablings

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Certificates of Election

THE CLERK: Mr. Speaker, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta pursuant to the Election Act a report containing results of the general election conducted on the 12th day of March 2001, which states that an election was conducted in the following electoral divisions, and the said report further shows that the following members were duly elected.

[The Clerk read the election returns]

Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration tomorrow.

[Motion carried]

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, I move that the Votes and Proceedings of this Assembly be printed after first having been perused by Mr. Speaker and that he do appoint the printing thereof and that no person but such as he shall appoint do presume to print the same.

[Motion carried]

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I move that the select standing committees for the present session of the Legislative Assembly be appointed for the following purposes:

- (1) Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund,
- (2) Law and Regulations,
- (3) Legislative Offices,
- (4) Private Bills,
- (5) Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing,
- (6) Public Accounts, and
- (7) Public Affairs.

In addition thereto, I move that there be appointed for the duration of the present Legislature a Special Standing Committee on Members' Services.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request the Assembly's unanimous consent to waive Standing Orders 49(1) and (3), providing for the establishment of a striking committee to prepare, recommend, and report a list of members, chairs, and deputy chairs to comprise the Assembly's seven standing committees and one special standing committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request the Assembly's unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 38(1)(a) in order to move the motion appointing the chairs, deputy chairs, and members to comprise the Assembly's seven standing committees and one special standing committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the following members be appointed to the Assembly's seven standing committees and one special standing committee:

- (1) Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund: Mr. Hutton, chair; Mr. Magnus, deputy chair; Mr. Bonner; Ms. Carlson; Mr. Fischer; Mr. Knight; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. Marz; and Mr. VanderBurg.
- (2) Law and Regulations: Mr. Friedel, chair; Mr. Herard, deputy chair; Rev. Abbott; Mrs. Ady; Mr. Bonner; Mr. Cenaiko; Mr. Danyluk; Ms. DeLong; Mrs. Gordon; Mr. Horner; Mr. Klapstein; Mr. Lukaszuk; Mr. MacDonald; Mr. Maskell; Mr. Mason; Mr. Masyk; Mr. Rathgeber; Mr. Renner; Mr. Snelgrove; Mr. Vandermeer; and Mr. Yankowsky.
- (3) Legislative Offices: Mrs. Tarchuk, chair; Mr. Ducharme, deputy chair; Ms. Blakeman; Mr. Friedel; Mrs. Fritz; Ms. Graham; Mr. Hlady; Mrs. O'Neill; and Mr. Tannas.
- (4) Private Bills: Ms. Graham, chair; Ms. Kryczka, deputy chair; Mr. Bonner; Mr. Goudreau; Mr. Graydon; Mr. Jacobs; Mr. Johnson; Mr. Lord; Mr. Magnus; Mr. Maskell; Dr. Massey; Mr. McClelland; Mr. McFarland; Mr. Ouellette; Dr. Pannu; Mr. Pham; Mr. Rathgeber; Mr. Snelgrove; Mr. VanderBurg; Mr. Vandermeer; and Mr. Yankowsky.
- (5) Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing: Mr. Klapstein, chair; Mr. Johnson, deputy chair; Rev. Abbott; Mr. Amery; Mr. Cao; Ms. Carlson; Mr. Danyluk; Mr. Fischer; Mrs.

- Fritz; Mr. Graydon; Mr. Hlady; Mr. Jacobs; Mr. Knight; Mr. Lord; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. Lukaszuk; Mr. MacDonald; Mr. Masyk; Mr. McClelland; Dr. Pannu; and Mr. Zwozdesky.
- (6) Public Accounts: Mr. MacDonald, chair; Mr. Shariff, deputy chair; Mrs. Ady; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Broda; Mr. Cao; Mr. Cenaiko; Ms DeLong; Mr. Goudreau; Mr. Hutton; Mrs. Jablonski; Mr. Lukaszuk; Mr. Marz; Mr. Mason; Mr. Ouellette; Dr. Taft; and Mrs. Tarchuk.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 11, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon. Please join me in the prayer.

Father, on this day of a new beginning we ask for Your guidance in the responsibility we have undertaken and Your help in fulfilling our duties. As Members of this Legislative Assembly may we faithfully serve all Albertans and, in serving them, serve You. Amen.

Would hon. members please remain standing. As is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to former members of this Assembly who have passed on since the House last met.

Mr. William Kenneth Ure December 22, 1913, to February 4, 2001

THE SPEAKER: On this day we remember William Kenneth Ure, who passed away on February 4, 2001. Mr. Ure was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in the general election of June 18, 1959, and served until August 30, 1971.

During his years of service he represented the constituency of Red Deer for the Social Credit governing party. During his years in the Legislature Mr. Ure served on the select standing committees on Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration, and Education; Municipal Law; Municipal Law and Law Amendments; Private Bills; Public Accounts; Railways, Telephones, and Irrigation; and the special committees of Commercial Fisheries and Electoral Boundaries.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember Bill Ure as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. McCLELLAND: As always, it gives me great pleasure to welcome and to introduce to you the Member of Parliament for Edmonton Southwest and my friend, James Rajotte.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in the Speaker's gallery today is a visiting parliamentarian from the Yukon Legislative Assembly. Would you please welcome Mr. Scott Kent, MLA, who is the Member for Riverside in the Yukon.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition today requesting that the government put in a system of rent control. This is signed by 125 concerned citizens of Edmonton and Sherwood Park.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm presenting a petition signed by 25 people from the Stettler and Lacombe areas who "support finding out whether taxpayers have to pay for Stockwell Day's legal bills and settlement."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition today signed by 36 Albertans from Edson, Red Deer, and Edmonton. They are urging the government "to determine legally whether taxpayers must pay for Stockwell Day's legal bills."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition today signed by 150 Albertans urging the government "to fully-fund women's shelters and transition houses."

Bill 201 Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001.

This Bill 201 will facilitate the expeditious removal of illegal and nonconforming signs from the sides of Alberta's primary highways.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bill 202 Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001.

The purpose of this bill is to create a genderless-based insurance system where both genders have the right to contract insurance services on equal terms without discrimination.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a letter from the mayor of the city of Edmonton, Mr. Bill Smith, to the Premier expressing serious concerns with respect to the recent actions of Alberta Infrastructure which to him appear to threaten the closure of schools in this city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of an article from the Reader's Digest about the world-famous Alex Taylor community school in my constituency, which is now threatened with closure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table five copies of a petition sent to the board of trustees of the Calgary board of education containing 295 signatures requesting that the Glenmeadows elementary school in Calgary be kept open.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an information brochure on PROP, Protection and Restraining Order Project.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this afternoon for the benefit of all hon. members of the Assembly an Alberta government press release from December 15, 1992, announcing a new, smaller cabinet, 17 members, which reflects Alberta's views about the size of government.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters from Mr. Keith Brown of High River, Mrs. Dorothy Corney of Red Deer, and Mr. Ron Tyler of Didsbury. These Albertans want the government to designate the Bighorn wildland park in David Thompson country and stop further industrial development in this area.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three tablings. The first is copies of an e-mail from Therese Carignan from the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. She is concerned about plans for a coal-powered generator in the Crowsnest Pass and would like to see the government develop wind energy in this area.

The second is copies of an e-mail from Dorothy Dickson of Innisfail. Ms Dickson is concerned about the proposed housing development by Waterton Lakes national park, and she would like the government to do whatever it can to stop this development.

The final tabling today is copies of letters from Mr. and Mrs. Chris and Betty Harvey of Bluffton and Mr. Kevin Lingrell of Fort Saskatchewan. They are requesting that the government designate the Bighorn wildland park a protected area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today four copies of a news release from TransCanada PipeLines Limited through TransCanada Power that announces its fifth Alberta power plant, actually not on the previous lists either, 80 megawatts, of which a certain portion will be used in Weyerhaeuser's Alberta operation with the balance going to a competitively priced, competitively structured Power Pool of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table with the House five copies of the House leader agreement for the 25th Legislature signed by the House leader of the government of Alberta and the House leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the House leader of the third party New Democratic opposition.

As well, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act I table with the Assembly five copies of the following Members' Services orders: MSC 1/00 Constituency Services Amendment Order (No. 6), MSC 2/00 Constituency Services Amendment Order (No. 7), MSC 3/00 Administrative and Constituency Services Amendment Order (No. 1).

As well, hon. members, pursuant to section 61(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the financial statements as at March 31, 1999, of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Copies were distributed to members on November 29, 2000.

As well, pursuant to section 32 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, Revised Statutes of Alberta 1980, chapter E-3, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 23rd annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 1999, and copies were distributed to members on January 2, 2001.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Ms Xiao ni Liu. Kathleen comes from the beautiful coastal city of Qingdao in Shandong province in the eastern part of China, where, in completing three years of university, she achieved the highest mark in the education institution. Ms Liu has specifically chosen Alberta as the best place in the world in which to acquire the educational skills not available to her in China. Her objective is to take those skills back to China and impart them to her people. She is seated in the members' gallery. Kathleen, I would ask you to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two directors of Mirant Corporation. Mirant is about a $17.7 billion U.S. company, and last year Mirant as a large energy marketing company sold over 186 million megawatt hours of electricity. It also moved 6.9 billion cubic feet of natural gas per day. In the members' gallery I'd ask Kim Randle, the director of external affairs, Mirant Corporation, and Suzanne Boucher-Chen, director of regulatory and external affairs, to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Assembly Business

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before the Clerk proceeds to calling Oral Question Period, there are a few matters that the chair would like to address before we do progress in the daily Routine to the first Oral Question Period for the 25th Legislature of the province of Alberta.

From the tablings today hon. members are aware that there was an agreement reached Tuesday, April 10, 2001, among House leaders concerning certain changes as to how the Assembly will conduct certain aspects of its business. In the chair's view it is a very, very positive step when members can agree on how they conduct the people's business. This is why the chair was pleased to acknowledge the agreement. However, hon. members, while the words are important, this agreement like most things in this Assembly relies on the goodwill of members to succeed.

The scope of the agreement will necessitate some changes to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Some will be temporary. A motion to give effect to the changes agreed to by House leaders is required. The wording of the actual motion will be reviewed by the House leaders and the Speaker before it is introduced in the Assembly. Some changes concerning Recognitions, the number of members' statements, and the singing of O Canada may be the subject of a certain request today, so the changes will be in force for the brief period before the motion to amend the Standing Orders is before the Assembly.

There were a few issues that House leaders were unable to agree upon which must be addressed by the chair. One of these issues is the rotation of questions during question period. This aspect of our daily proceedings is fundamentally important to this Legislative Assembly. The book House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 415 states:

The right to seek information from the Ministry of the day and the right to hold the Ministry accountable are recognized as two of the fundamental principles of parliamentary government. Members exercise these rights principally by asking questions in the House. The importance of questions within the parliamentary system cannot be overemphasized, and the search for or clarification of information through questioning is a vital aspect of the duties undertaken by individual Members.

Members will note that our Standing Orders are silent on the conduct of question period. They only say that it shall be in the daily Routine and be 50 minutes long. It is now established practice in this Assembly that each member asking a question is entitled to a main question, which may have a brief preamble, and two supplementary questions, which must not have a preamble. This practice will continue for the 25th Legislature.

The chair has reviewed the practices in every jurisdiction in Canada. Question periods vary in length from 15 minutes to one hour. There is no consistent practice or rotation across jurisdictions. Not all Assemblies allow members of the government caucus to ask many or in some cases any questions. In Alberta members of the government caucus are recognized out of respect for the contributions that can be made by individual members and, of course, their numbers.

In Alberta the Official Opposition has been entitled to ask the first three main questions since 1993. The chair sees no reason to depart from this practice. The third party, which is two seats short of having official party status under the Legislative Assembly Act, will continue to be entitled to the fourth question each day. A private member from the government caucus will be entitled to the fifth question. The Official Opposition will be recognized for the sixth, eighth, and 10th questions and government members for the seventh and ninth questions.

In recognition of the results of the last election the third party New Democrats will be entitled to the 11th question each day. A member from the government side will be entitled to the 12th. The Official Opposition will have the 13th. If time permits, the 14th and subsequent questions would go to government members.

The practice of caucuses submitting lists to the Speaker's office by 1 o'clock of those members wishing to ask questions that day will continue. In accordance with traditions of the Assembly, the Speaker will ultimately retain discretion when it comes to recognizing members during question period.

The chair wishes to remind all hon. members that brevity in questions and answers is of fundamental importance. Although there is no time limit in this Assembly for questions and answers, the chair notes that the House of Commons imposes a time limit of 35 seconds for each question and answer.

The chair will continue to apply the rules of decorum that are expected by the citizens of this province, who have honoured members by electing them to this Legislative Assembly.

On Members' Statements, the House leaders' agreement will increase the number from three to four when this item is called on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Three members from the government side will be entitled to make statements on Tuesdays and two on Thursdays. The combined opposition will be entitled to one member's statement on Tuesday and two on Thursday.

As the decision on the distribution of these members' statements between the opposition is undecided, the chair rules that they will be distributed in accordance with the respected sizes of the two opposition caucuses. For every seven statements by members of the Official Opposition, the third party will have two. In practice, after four members' statements by Official Opposition members the third party will be entitled to one statement, and after the next three statements by members of the Official Opposition the third party will be entitled to another one. Effective tomorrow, April 12, 2001, government members will have two members' statements, and the Official Opposition, two.

The same formula will apply to Recognitions. Members of the government caucus will be entitled to five recognitions on Mondays and Wednesdays, with the opposition being entitled to two recognitions. After Official Opposition members have had four recognitions, the third party will have one. Then after the next three by the Official Opposition the third party will have another one.

In the event these allocations are not being utilized, the chair will use its discretion to ensure that this important chance for members to address the Assembly is not foreclosed. As events unfold during the life of the 25th Legislature, the chair may have to revisit the arrangements that are the subject of this statement today.

I would now call upon the Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to allow Recognitions to proceed Wednesday and the next sitting Monday; Members' Statements to increase to four; and the singing of our national anthem on the first sitting day of the week, as identified in the House leaders' agreement just tabled by yourself, until Standing Orders are formally moved for change.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, prior to recognizing the Leader of the Official Opposition for the first question of question period, I would now like to ask the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to rise for a brief statement.

head: Congratulatory Statements by Leaders

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand on behalf of the members of the Official Opposition to extend congratulations to you, the Deputy Speaker, and the Deputy Chairman of Committees on your elections to the parliamentary posts in this Legislature.

I also take this opportunity to extend congratulations to the Premier on his election victory. We look forward to working with him and his ministers in creating a positive agenda for this province. We will act in the opposition's role to help them make the right decisions for Albertans.

Finally, to all members, congratulations and welcome to this Legislature.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, I am prepared to recognize you if you wish to make a statement.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to congratulate you on your election once again as Speaker of this Assembly. My colleague from Edmonton-Highlands and I look forward to working with you and all of our colleagues in this Assembly in a very positive and constructive manner. We'll be tough in the opposition, but we'll be constructive, as I said.

I also want to congratulate the Premier, members of the cabinet, and all members of this House on this first day of the business of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to add my congratulations to you as well as the acclamation of the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chairman of Committees. I would like to congratulate also the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East not only on his election but on his election as Leader of the Official Opposition and the Liberal Party of Alberta. I had the opportunity of meeting with the hon. member – I think it was yesterday or the day before – and I was very pleased to hear that the tone and the nature of the questioning will come down to issues of policy and to challenge government ministers to be on their toes and be prepared with answers. That's what the parliamentary process is all about.

I'm so happy to hear that there is a commitment from the Liberal opposition that decorum will be respected in this House. Mr. Speaker, I offer you the same commitment, that we will try to maintain decorum and maintain the dignity of this House.

I would like to also congratulate, of course, the leader of the third party on his election in Edmonton-Strathcona. I agree and I understand that the hon. member will be tough in his questioning, but I'm glad to hear also that the questions will be related to the issues. I look forward to this session, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: Well, on this wonderful day of harmony I now call on the Leader of Her Majesty's Official and Loyal Opposition to embark upon the first of his questions in the question period in the 25th Legislature.

Electricity Pricing

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only a few weeks ago Optimum Energy Management Incorporated in Calgary released a study which concludes that electricity prices will remain high for the next few years. In fact, in their summary Optimum Energy states: "It is no longer clear that the prices consumers will pay are going to be lower as a result of deregulation." This comes on the heels of a number of other reports that draw the same conclusion, yet the Premier continues to contradict this industry's statement, saying that prices will soon be lower. My question is to the Premier. What numbers has the Premier seen that he can make his predictions for lower electricity prices?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, a number of reports have been published relative to the price of electricity today and into the future as it relates to a regulated environment or a deregulated environment.

The simple fact is that the price of electricity will never be what it was two or three years ago. That is a simple fact. When I say that the price of electricity will come down, I'm talking about coming down from where it was just at the end of the year 2000 and at the beginning of this particular year. Mr. Speaker, the figures cited are based on the Power Pool prices, which show that the prices being paid today are considerably lower than those prices being paid at the first of this year. If the trend continues, it stands to reason that the prices will be even lower in the year 2002 and the year 2003.

That would have occurred in a regulated environment or a deregulated environment. The simple fact is that the price of power throughout the continent is going up and has gone up considerably, but it will come down. It will never, I don't think – certainly in our term – be as low as it was three or four years ago, and I think people have to come to that realization.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier suggesting, then, that these analysts are wrong when their data show that electricity prices are not going to be lower under a deregulated system than what they would be under the previous regulated system? They're making the comparison between the two types of systems, Mr. Premier, not what it was last winter compared to what it is now.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is citing one report, the Optimum report. I've glanced over that report, and certainly I've read the newspaper accounts, television accounts, radio accounts, and so on of that particular report, but there are other reports that allude to the price of electricity coming down.

I will have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of issues that lead towards an energy discussion of downward pressure on prices throughout North America, and there are just as many reports on upward pressures. But what we do know is that because of a competitive market structure in Alberta we are able to bring forth increments of power without having to plan the entire marketplace; for example, the news release that was tabled just minutes ago announcing 80 megawatts more into the grid. There is also a list of well over 680 megawatts planned to come onstream. We do know that in a competitive market structure, the more supply there is, the more downward pressure it puts on prices on the demand side of the equation.

I'm sure there will be not only this report but much more discussion in many more reports. I would direct the hon. member to Senate testimony from the United States Senate and the appearance of Mr. Simmons at that Senate subcommittee.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier admit that a market-based pricing system, which uses the highest cost last unit input to price product, always gives a higher price than a blended or an average-cost system? We are moving to marginal cost pricing, away from average-cost pricing. That's always higher under a market structure. Is that not correct?

MR. KLEIN: What I will agree to, Mr. Speaker, is that a competitive market, a competitive scenario, brings down prices. Key to this and I think being lost in the messages is the fact that deregulation has provided the incentive and the impetus for new power to come onstream. I think this is very, very important. This will contribute also to a lowering of the price, because there is a simple theory - well, it's not a theory anymore; it's a fact. That is the fact of supply and demand. The more supply you have, the less demand and the cheaper the price.

Mr. Speaker, since deregulation was announced, in excess of 1,200 megawatts are now under construction or coming onstream this year or early next year. In addition to that, another 4,000 megawatts have been announced, ostensibly coal-generated power now that the technology is there to achieve emission standards that should satisfy the environmental community. So there are two factors that are bringing the prices down. One is that overall there is a global lowering of prices because more electricity has now come onstream. In addition, there have been some other factors such as a slowdown in the economy, warm weather. A number of factors have come into play. But as the additional 4,000 megawatts of new power come onstream, we fully suspect, based on the fact and the law of supply and demand, that the prices will come down.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Natural Gas Pricing

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer the Energy and Utilities Board acted to approve the prices of gas to be charged to Alberta consumers for the October to April winter season. That was done without any additional steps being taken to safeguard or guarantee those prices for Albertans. In the end we saw fall and winter prices for consumers rise to unexpected levels as the North American market impacted upon Alberta. My questions are to the Premier. Why did the EUB not act to guarantee this price on behalf of Alberta consumers by requiring either a contract from the marketers or a hedge on the commodity futures market?

MR. KLEIN: Well, historically in this province, Mr. Speaker, and based on conventionally low prices for natural gas, customers in this province have preferred to buy based on the spot market. That has been traditional and historical in this province. We have experienced the anomaly, I guess, not only in Alberta but throughout North America of very sharp increases in the price of natural gas. I would say also that it's not the function nor do I think it's the responsibility of this government to direct the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, which is a quasi-judicial board, to take any particular kind of action other than make sure that the regulatory regimes relative to natural gas are adhered to.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, with the introduction of the Alliance pipeline last fall it was very obvious we were going to be in a North American market. Why did the EUB mandate not have it look at that and provide us with protection on our prices?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think that the AEUB probably took that into consideration. Certainly there was consideration as to how much gas would be able to flow through that pipeline, the impact it would have on the Alberta economy generally, but to provide you with a more detailed answer, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again, the concept of hedging, or the concept of purchasing gas supplies for future usage, is one that is not in the purview of the EUB. Their job is to provide regulatory advice and direct on decisions that are set down by policy from the government. In a five-year analysis of hedging versus the spot price, the five years prior to this fall's run-up in natural gas prices, the difference was that the hedge purchase was at $2.73 and the spot price purchase at about $2.72, so really a 1-cent per gigajoule difference is quite marginal.

Just to comment, the other side is that it wasn't really the advent or the opening of the Alliance pipeline that created an absolutely abnormal spike in natural gas rates. It was a number of factors that contributed to this. The fact is that natural gas is deregulated in its purchase. I would think that we would like to see more competitive market forces in purchasing go on. Certainly low gas storage levels and an uptick in demand in the United States were all a number of factors besides just one single pipeline. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there's very little history that would have ever predicted a price going from $3.35 per gigajoule in September to over $10 a gigajoule in December.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Premier, the minister has just said that it's not part of the EUB mandate to deal with protection of prices for consumers. If that's not part of their mandate right now, why isn't it, and are you prepared to make sure that they look at that in the future? After all, Albertans deserve some protection and some analysis.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board always serves the public interest. The function of the board is to make sure that those people exploring for and processing our energy and those people distributing that energy are fairly compensated at the same time that the customers, the people who consume those products, are reasonably protected. That is the function. I would remind the hon. member that this is a quasi-judicial board. We don't direct the board. We ask the board to do certain things for us. We've asked the board, for instance, to conduct a fairness hearing relative to rising electricity prices, but we have not directed the board to do anything. We expect the board to act properly and responsibly in the public interest.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question for the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's failed electricity deregulation scheme has already cost Albertans over $2 billion in this year alone. However, contrary to government claims high costs will be with us far beyond this year or next year. Because of the government's decision to not allow utilities to recover any corporate shortfalls arising from high electricity costs, Albertans have been forced into a pay me now and pay me even more later situation. My first question is to the Premier. Given this government's decision to not allow utilities to recover their 2001 deferral costs this year, will the hon. Premier please tell us how much it will cost Albertans in the future to recoup those deferral costs?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't have those figures at my fingertips, and I will defer to the hon. Minister of Energy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those deferral accounts will have a certain portion of interest attached to them. That will occur, as it does in any commercial transaction, and that will be the added cost.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the Premier confirm that the deferral account for the year 2001 could be as high as $475 million?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier. Speculation here.

MR. KLEIN: I can't confirm that nor deny it, Mr. Speaker. As I said previously, I do not have those figures or a projection of what that figure might be at my fingertips. I'll again defer to the hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I'd certainly follow the lead of the Premier, that I serve as well as all Albertans, and not speculate as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Given that the deferral account deficit for 2001 could be as high as $475 million, can the Premier confirm that the deferral costs will add an extra $22.75 a month to the average residential consumer's electricity bill next year?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to engage the hon. member in a debate over something that is purely speculative. I don't know if the figures he's citing are right or wrong. I don't have those figures with me today. I don't know if an analysis has been done with respect to deferral accounts. What we're dealing with here is nothing more or nothing less than a hypothetical situation.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm compelled to rise and add to the information of those that would hold the deferral accounts and those that would be involved in financing these projects. For example, Scotia Capital mentioned on February 12, 2001, that the Alberta framework delivers a truly deregulated market with competitive price. CIBC World Markets in their equity research newsletter of January say: we believe that the approach to deregulation in both Ontario and Alberta will ultimately lead to the intended benefits of consumer choice as well as a more responsive and efficient electricity market.

Of course, I know you'd want me to go on, Mr. Speaker, but those are just a couple of comments that indicate that the banking communities, those who hold notes from the utility companies are looking with confidence at Alberta, its market, and its commercial transaction and market structure.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Cited Documents

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister should be aware that I'm withholding my enthusiasm for the full continued response, but I would like the hon. minister, as he has quoted from a document, to be prepared to table the document in the House.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Class Sizes

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 15 Alberta Learning received the final report on small class sizes, but this report was not released to the public until four and a half months later. A PC election document states that the reason that the report couldn't be made public was that the report had to go through the standard review process of standing policy committee, caucus, and cabinet. My questions are to the Premier. Why was there a four-month delay between the final report submission to Alberta Learning and the department receiving the final report if not to keep a lid on the study until after the election?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there was no deliberate attempt to keep a lid on the report until after the election. As it turned out, the report was quite constructive and offered some good advice and some good recommendations. But in this government we do have a procedure that is followed very closely, and that procedure is to take an item through the standing policy committee process, back to cabinet, on to caucus, and this government and all members of the government caucus then decide what to do with the report, what recommendations will be accepted, which recommendations will be rejected, and how the report is to be released and responded to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is again to the Premier. Did the government in fact meet the procedure he has just outlined, to send the report through either the standing policy committee, the government caucus, or the cabinet, before releasing the report publicly?

MR. KLEIN: I'm sorry, and I do apologize, Mr. Speaker. I did not get the question, but if you would allow the hon. member to ask it over again, I'd be glad to try to answer it again.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I would repeat the question for the Premier and rather slowly. Did the government follow the procedure that the Premier said the government always follows when dealing with such reports; that is, to send the report through either the standing policy committee, the government caucus, or the cabinet before the report was in fact released?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Learning respond to the process that was followed relative to this report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What happened with that report was that a verbal commitment from the standing policy chair was made, was given. Cabinet was informed about it. This was a report that we wanted to get out to the public, that we wanted to get out as quickly as we could.

The other comment that I will make is that there were changes made to the document between the November 15 time line and the document roughly received about the middle of February, such changes as what was the class size. This was a document that studied class size, so we kind of felt that it was important that we knew what the actual class size was. Some of the objective findings were missing, such as how these students did on the objective tests that were given to these kids both before and after. These were very important and critical parts of this study that were missing from the study. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I did answer the question.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader, I'm going to permit this briefly.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the answer to my question is no.

Then I ask the final question: was the government in fact telling the truth during the election when it said that the report couldn't be released until after it had gone through standing policy committee, caucus, or cabinet?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. As the hon. minister pointed out, the report wasn't finalized internally until somewhere midway through the election campaign. Needless to say, when you're in the midst of an election, a lot of things are not dealt with, but as soon as we were able to deal with the report, as the hon. minister pointed out, we did. I'll have the hon. minister explain slowly once again.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I already outlined, what happened was: I talked to the standing policy committee chair, gave a verbal report at cabinet, and we wanted this document out. There had been some controversy about this document during the election. We wanted it out with the basic information that was there, and I felt that it was extremely important to get this document out.

As the hon. member knows, the document did not hold any revelations about class size that realistically we didn't know already. There is a lot of good stuff in the document, and I wanted to get it out to the school board chairs. I wanted to get it out to the teachers. I wanted to get it out to the citizens of Alberta so they could in fact see what was being discussed in the election campaign. Mr. Speaker, there was no covert attempt to keep this under or anything like that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education Property Taxes

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. At the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties convention municipalities raised concerns about the delay in receiving education property tax requisitions from the province. Municipalities cannot finalize their local property tax bylaws until they receive the provincial education property tax requisition, and they are becoming impatient. Can you tell me when the province will issue these requisitions?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Members of the Legislative Assembly attended the municipal districts and counties spring convention here in Edmonton. I also attended, and the Premier of course spoke at the convention.

In response to municipalities and the concerns they've raised, I'm pleased to announce that the education property tax requisitions are going to be sent out to all municipalities not within the next 24 days but within the next 24 hours.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you. My first supplementary is to the same minister. Last year the town of Whitecourt set a higher education property tax rate for separate school supporters through no fault of their own. Following the School Act, municipalities have no legal right to blend the tax. How can we be assured that this does not occur in the future?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question. In municipalities that have separate school boards that have opted out of the Alberta school foundation fund, different rates occur because of the changes from year to year in the proportion of assessment that is declared for the separate school boards. Now, Municipal Affairs has encouraged municipalities to blend the rates in the past so ratepayers within the municipality equally share the tax burden. This year Alberta Learning is proposing changes to the School Act to address this issue, but I am pleased to announce today that $135 million of our government commitment to reduce educational property tax requisitions in fact are going to be benefiting all Alberta taxpayers, and that's taking place as we speak.

MR. VANDERBURG: My second supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Learning. Will changes to the School Act ensure that both the public and separate school board supporters pay education property taxes based on the same rates within the municipality, and when will those changes become effective?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can give the hon. member the assurance that that will indeed be the fact: public and separate school board supporters will be paying the same rate.

I will also tell him that that amendment will be brought in this session and will be retroactive to January 1 of this year. So we will look after the changes. I know it has been an extremely difficult issue in the town of Whitecourt, and we will bring the solution into legislation this session.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

School Closures

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton and Calgary schools located in the inner city are threatened with closure because of the government's utilization rate. These inner-city schools have existing buildings, utility servicing, and park/play areas long paid for. Moreover, these schools have proven experience and knowledge dealing with English as a Second Language programs and cultural understanding for children and their families. My first question is to the Premier. When cities are trying to rejuvenate inner-city neighbourhoods and encourage young families to live there, why is the province putting school boards in the position of closing schools like Queen Mary Park and John A. McDougall?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement, but this government is doing no such thing. You know, the closure of schools is unfortunate and as controversial and as emotional as the issue can be – and certainly I went through it when I was the mayor of Calgary and had to deal on the local level with the aspect of school closures in certain areas. There is ample opportunity for school boards to deal with this issue and to find imaginative and innovative ways to put these buildings to use for educational purposes or community services or a combination of both. We are not forcing the school boards to do anything other than come up with imaginative ways to deal with the situation.

Mr. Speaker, this is going to be with us forever. Cities are constantly changing creatures, and inner-city areas that accommodate an older population: eventually you will see a turnaround. The areas in exurbia, the new areas, eventually become older areas. The kids grow up, and there's no longer a need for the schools in those areas. This is a difficult issue that school boards will have to deal with in the future. They're dealing with that issue now, and they've had to deal with the issue in the past.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. My first supplementary question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that the government sponsored a class-size project in which inner-city schools were chosen to take part, why is the government now putting school boards in the position of closing these schools because they have exactly those desirable small class sizes?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, what I will say is that the demographics of the inner city, the demographics of the second ring of inner city have certainly changed over the past 20 to 30 years, and what we are seeing is that the school-age children are now more in the suburbs than they are in the inner city. I don't think anyone in this Assembly agrees with the fact that we have schools that have 15, 20, 25, 30 percent utilization. We all can see that that utilization figure is an extremely important figure and that there's a lot of money being wasted.

MS BLAKEMAN: Aha.

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard the aha over here, but that 70 percent of the school still has to be heated. It still has to be cleaned. There still has to be electricity put to it. These are all extra costs that could be put into the classroom to help with smaller class sizes.

MS BLAKEMAN: My second supplementary is also to the Minister of Learning. What does the government expect as an outcome when it promotes a school utilization rate that pits community against community, neighbour against neighbour? What is the outcome you expect from that?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I will answer on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure, whose department it is to look after that. What we're looking at is learning opportunities for these kids. When you have 15 or 20 percent of a school actually being utilized, the learning opportunities for these kids are much less than if you combine two schools that are, say, 10 or 15 blocks apart or five or six blocks apart. We feel that we can get a larger economy of scale. We feel that we can get more learning opportunities for these kids, and we feel that they will get a better education when they have more of these learning opportunities. That's the reason this is occurring.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Postsecondary Student Loan Program

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are directed to the Minister of Learning. Students in my constituency have expressed concern about the high cost of postsecondary education and the debt load they are facing upon graduation. Many are calling for a reduction in tuition fees. Government recently announced a new program of loan relief payments and additional scholarships for postsecondary students. Would the minister please explain how the new student loan relief program, set to begin this summer, differs from the existing remission program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very simply what is occurring is that after completion of the first year of studies, students will be eligible for the remission. So say, for example, their student loan is $7,500 or $8,000 in the first year, they will receive the $2,500 or $3,000 immediately after the first year. What will be occurring is there will be two times – at this moment two times – when the student will receive remission: after the first year and after their final year. As soon as our computer systems are able to handle it, our students will receive the remission after each and every year that they complete in university or postsecondary education.

MR. JOHNSON: To the same minister: does this loan relief program apply equally to eligible students attending private university colleges like Augustana University College in my constituency and those attending public university colleges?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, this applies to each and every student who is taking postsecondary courses, postsecondary education in the province of Alberta, whether it be Augustana University College in Camrose or whether it be some other university or college in Alberta. This is specific to the student, not to the institution.

MR. JOHNSON: My final question is to the same minister. What is being planned in the way of additional postsecondary scholarships for the coming year?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, student financial assistance is something that this government takes very seriously. Over the past year, in the 2000-2001 budget we increased the actual amount of dollars for student assistance by 22 percent. Included in that and in the upcoming year we're seeing an expansion of the scholarships. We introduced the Jason Lang scholarship for second-year university students last year. We're expanding that to third- and fourth-year university students this year. We brought in a graduate student scholarship because the students asked us to do that, and I believe it's very important to do that. The Jimmie Condon athletic scholarship has increased from $1,000 to $1,800. So scholarships are a very important element of student finance, and it's something that we take very seriously as the government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Medically Required MRIs

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, for nearly eight months the minister of health and his department have been investigating some 30 cases in which Albertans may have been unjustly charged for physician-approved, medically necessary MRIs. The minister initially promised Albertans the investigation would be complete in November 2000. My first question to the minister of health: given the enormous resources that the minister has at his fingertips, why, oh why is this investigation taking so long?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that I recognize that this is both at once a very private and a very public issue. I say that it is very private in the sense of being a very personal issue and that I am not unmindful of the time that it has taken, and I regret the time that it has taken for these 32 individuals who brought their cases to the attention of Minister Rock.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, upon our inquiry into these cases and a number of other cases that have come forward to our attention, we realized that the situation involved much more than simply dealing with 32 cases. I've indicated by announcement earlier this week that we will have a panel that will be looking at not only these 32 cases but all of the other ones that have come forward. The 32 will be dealt with within the next four weeks. That panel will be made up of physicians who will determine on a medical basis whether these cases were in fact urgent and these people did not have an MRI given within an appropriate period of time.

Also, we have increased our capacity for MRIs. It will be a dramatic increase. Two years ago we did 20,000. Last year we did 30,000. This year we'll do over 40,000, and when we put in the seven new MRIs and make them operational later this year, we'll go to a scan rate of 24 per thousand, the highest scan rate in the country, recommended by radiologists that have worked with us, and we'll end up with a total of 73,000 per year, Mr. Speaker, a very good number indeed.

DR. TAFT: To the same minister. Are you willing to publish the criteria by which these decisions were made or will be made?

MR. MAR: It's my intention to have the panel of physicians deal with that, and it will be a very open and transparent process. So, yes, Mr. Speaker.

DR. TAFT: Again to the minister of health, Mr. Speaker. Given the overly long delay in the release of this investigation and given that ordinary Albertans will have been out of pocket many hundreds of dollars each because of the government policy, will the government be paying interest to claimants on the amounts they have been charged for medically necessary MRIs?

MR. MAR: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Hoof-and-mouth Disease

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hoof-and-mouth disease epidemic in Europe has resulted in the slaughter of over a million animals to date and has meant economic ruin for those farmers in that area. If this disease is discovered in Canada, it will cause the same economic ruin here to an Alberta industry that's worth over $9 billion a year and employs over 100,000 people. My first question today is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What steps has the minister taken to ensure that Alberta and Canada remain free of hoof-and-mouth disease?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated, this is a very serious disease, and it is of great concern to the agricultural community in our province and, indeed, in Canada.

We've been working very closely with the federal minister of agriculture and with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency to ensure that we're informing our producers and the citizens of this province of steps that they can take to minimize the risk of this disease coming to the province.

I would say that my office and I personally have been in contact with Minister Vanclief's office as often as three times a week, and my department staff are discussing the issue with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency personnel that are stationed in this province to ensure that we're taking all of the safeguards we can. They have reviewed the procedures at airports. We've had very good discussions with the military bases, and we've done our best to co-operate in any way that we can to inform travelers of how they can minimize the risk of bringing the disease here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Learning. Given that many school classes are planning Easter holiday trips to Europe, where this disease is prevalent, what has the Minister of Learning done to date to inform the students and schools of the risks involved in taking these trips?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. Earlier this month I sent a letter to school superintendents and school board chairs and asked them to share it with the schools and school groups who are planning a trip overseas. In that letter it advised on the precautions that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development just talked about, and I asked them to share that with each and every school group that was contemplating a trip overseas. Some schools, such as the school in Black Diamond, did decide to cancel their trip as their itinerary took them directly through the heart of the issue, where there is a hoof-and-mouth disease outbreak. Mr. Speaker, we did provide them with as much information as possible.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Learning. I would certainly commend all those schools and school boards who did the responsible thing in adjusting their travel plans. However, constituents in rural Alberta are still very concerned about students taking these trips. Can the Minister of Learning assure Albertans that everything possible is being done to eliminate any risk at all of bringing this disease back to Alberta by students traveling to these areas? Constituents are simply asking: why not just cancel these trips?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, what I asked in the letter that I sent to the school board superintendents and the school board chairs is that they reassess their plans, reassess their itineraries, and look and see if indeed they are traveling through the area where hoof-and-mouth disease is endemic. I asked them to use their own judgment on that. I feel that it is not fair to have these students cancel their trips when the borders are still open, when we're having business traffic back and forth, when we're having tourist traffic back and forth. I feel that's an unfair penalty to these students who have worked so hard to travel over to Europe and various other destinations. I did ask them to reassess. I did ask them to look very closely at their itinerary. I can give the hon. member probably a 99.99 percent assurance that our school trips will be safe when it comes to hoof-and-mouth disease.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Logging in Kananaskis Country

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is about to sign an agreement allowing new logging on 4,200 square kilometres in Kananaskis Country. This is an area the size of a 14 kilometre-wide path from here to Red Deer. This agreement is being struck behind closed doors and without public consultation. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. How can the Minister of Environment, the minister seen as the steward of our wilderness and the minister responsible for policy on these issues, permit this logging to go ahead without assessing the environmental impact?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not an issue that requires an environmental impact study, and I would refer it to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As no doubt a number of you are aware, there are a great number of forest management agreements in Alberta that are utilized by various industries. There are also a number of industries that utilize the quota system. There are also other industries that utilize the commercial timber wood program.

There are different ways of harvesting resources in these areas, Mr. Speaker. One of the most stringent is the forest management agreement, and that is exactly what we are negotiating with the Spray Lakes saw mills. The negotiations are no different than what other negotiations have been in the past. There are lots of FMAs established. They're working very well. They're serving the industry very well.

In fact, the forest management agreement does not give the land rights to the FMA holder. Basically, Mr. Speaker, what happens is that actually the companies, once they are in the process of harvesting an area, have to file a plan with local public hearings in the community, and after that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development still has to approve that plan. So when you're dealing with FMAs, they're not transferring land to the company. We as the government and the public have a greater say. The company has also more responsibilities in reforestation, more responsibilities in management of that particular area on a long-term basis, Mr. Speaker, and that's the only way that they are viable.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, is this minister saying, then, to us that he is quite happy in a situation like this to cut the deal behind closed doors without public consultation on 4,200 square kilometres of land in Kananaskis Country?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the company that we are talking about has been in there, I believe, over 50 years already as a family operation and plays a very, very important role in the economy of that particular region. In fact, the forestry sector itself plays a very, very important role in the overall economy of the province. There are over 50,000 individuals working directly or indirectly in the forest industry. It's the third largest industry as far as job creation in Alberta and income revenue for Albertans, so it is a very, very important industry.

Mr. Speaker, these negotiations have been ongoing for a long period of time because the company has requested more involvement in how the reforestation takes place, more involvement in managing the resource on a long-term basis. As a government we are requesting stringent requirements in reforestation, for an example. These companies have to have a longer term security so they can plan their projects and their reforestation programs. Therefore, it is very necessary that negotiations continue in a positive way.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, will the minister then commit to doing what the public is requesting, which is an open process, a public consultation process? Will he work with the Minister of Environment to initiate this full public consultation process, which would include surveys, public meetings, and a cumulative impact study and assessment done, before the decisions are made on this piece of land which is a vital part of our economy from a wilderness and recreation perspective?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, when you're negotiating a forest management agreement, all those other areas the hon. member mentioned are taken into consideration, and they are part of the plan.

In fact, the hon. member has asked in the last couple of days to have a meeting with my department to explain this whole process so she can understand it better. I have agreed to the meeting. Therefore, we are hoping in the next two or three days to sit down with whoever they want to bring from the opposite side and discuss the whole issue. Mr. Speaker, I didn't realize the question would be coming up the same day the meeting was asked for. [interjection] I have agreed. I have agreed to meet with the hon. member, and I'm willing to do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dozens of schools in Calgary, Edmonton, and other Alberta communities are being threatened with closure as a result of the government school utilization formula. Many of these schools are located in lower income neighbourhoods and are attended by already disadvantaged students. In my own constituency of Edmonton-Highlands decisions to close Alex Taylor school and Sacred Heart school could be made within weeks. My question is to the Minister of Learning. How can the minister justify forcing school boards to maintain a rigid utilization rate of 85 percent, including gymnasiums, libraries, and other nonclassroom space, before funds are released for new school construction?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would advise the member that a lot of those questions have been answered. Because this is under the purview of the Minister of Infrastructure, I will take it under advisement and make sure that the Minister of Infrastructure sees this question and responds to the hon. member with his answer.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

My first supplementary to the minister: why did the government undertake a pilot project on small classes, that gave hope to disadvantaged students through such innovations as eliminating split-grade classes, only to force a utilization policy on the school boards that will force them to close some of the very same schools which took part in that pilot project?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the pilot project was on the class size; it was not on the physical structure of the buildings. In some of these buildings in question, as I commented earlier, we have a utilization rate of 25, 30, 35 percent. There are lots of classrooms available in those schools.

The study that I undertook was to look at the effects of smaller class size on achievement, look for the effects of smaller class size on teachers, look for the effects of smaller class size on the whole scholastic environment. As the hon. member knows – and I'm sure he's read the report – there were some very positive things that came out of it. I must remind the hon. member that this study was not to look at physical structure.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the minister: will the minister agree to review government policy on school utilization so that school boards will not be forced to close schools in established neighbourhoods, thereby hurting already vulnerable inner-city communities and families?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was a good question. The Minister of Infrastructure is doing that as we speak. He is doing that at this moment. I'm sure he hopes to have this utilization formula out very soon. Again, I will refer that question to the Minister of Infrastructure, whose mandate it is, and I'm sure he will get back to you on that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Social Assistance

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the past years I have visited many households in the constituency of Calgary-Fort. [interjections] Shall I continue, sir?

THE SPEAKER: Absolutely.

MR. CAO: Almost all are working very hard to make ends meet and proud of their productivity. However, there are a few who could not handle their personal situations because they were outside of their control. They need help. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that the community service organization voiced to me about the social assistance rates, can the minister tell the Assembly about the current situation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have been getting phone calls and letters and e-mails about our current situation, and I just want to reiterate that this government is committed to help those people that are truly in need. We want the Alberta advantage to involve everyone. I would indicate that the throne speech did discuss and talk about how we will have a review of our support systems for people in need.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that Alberta has the largest percentage of people in the workforce, what is the government plan to ensure the equity of the working Albertan relative to the people who cannot work or cannot find work?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, we do believe that low-income support programs should be a matter of temporary assistance, and they really should be a last resort. Not only this government but we believe that Albertans generally believe in a hand up and not a handout, and that, of course, is our philosophy. So we've focused our income support programs on education, employment, and opportunity, and we'll, of course, continue to use workforce attachment as one of our main objectives within our portfolio.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. What can the minister tell the Assembly about a government plan to address the assistance for the so-called working poor and the nonworking poor?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we're going to be working with the department to develop the scope and time frame for the process of a review. Once we begin that, of course, we commit to listening very, very closely to Albertans regarding this matter. We always want to, again, strike a balance between those that truly need our assistance, and of course I have to be a steward of taxpayer dollars and always will remain committed and dedicated to that principle.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six, I believe, members today who want to participate. If all hon. members would look at the Order Paper, it does not identify Recognitions on it, because pending the results of your approval given to the hon. Government House Leader's request for unanimous consent to arrive at it, it couldn't be printed till now. I will begin the process of introducing those people who will participate in recognitions today in 30 seconds from now.

Hon. members, perhaps we could revert briefly to Introductions of Guests. Is that okay?

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mrs. Shelley Brown. Mrs. Brown is a recreation therapist, and she's in the public gallery with nine guests. With your permission I would ask Mrs. Brown and her guests to stand and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in the approval that you gave a little earlier today, there was provision for recognitions on the basis of five and two; that is, five government members and two Official Opposition members. As of this point in time four government members have advised me of their interest. If there's a fifth, please send me a note. Otherwise we're going to proceed on this basis. First of all the hon. Member for St. Albert, then followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, then the hon. Member for Dunvegan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Dr. John Paterson

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago in Toronto Dr. John Paterson was recognized by OISE, the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, with a national honour for his lifelong commitment to the profession of teaching. Nominated by the Faculty of Education at the University of Alberta and by the Alberta Teachers' Association, Dr. Paterson was awarded the distinguished educator award for his exemplary teaching skills and for taking a leadership role in his field throughout his career. I wish today to congratulate Dr. Paterson on behalf of all members here.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alice Tyler

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton artist Alice E. Tyler, probably best known for her creation of portraits of the Famous Five of the Persons Case, died on February 5, 2001. Inspired by the achievements of these outstanding women, Alice Tyler created portraits of the Famous Five of the Persons Case accompanying them with informative plaques drawn from her own extensive research. These works of art have been hung in the Alberta Legislature, the Edmonton Law Courts building, and the Edmonton City Public Library, as well as elsewhere in Canada and abroad.

In 1995 Alice Tyler was the recipient of the Governor General's award in commemoration of the Persons Case. We would like to recognize her contribution to our province and our history.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Junior Curling Championships

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure and privilege for me to rise before this House today to recognize two junior curling teams from Grimshaw and Peace River. Both the junior boys' curling team and the junior girls' curling team won top honours during the provincial curling championships in Red Deer on March 9-11. After considerably more practice and hard work, they went on to represent Team Alberta at the western Canada junior championships in Calgary on March 29 to April 1.

These two teams in the age group of 13 to 18 years old were Alberta's junior curling ambassadors. Both teams represented our province and their communities very well. They curled against the most talented teams from across western Canada, and both teams came back with gold medals.

The junior girls' team is made up of Amanda Swicheniuk, skip, Erin Brennan, Kate Blakley, Charlene Swicheniuk. The junior boys' team is made up of Greg Webb, skip, Daniel Boorse, Rollie Robinson, and Kyle Spacil. They were coached by Al Riewe and Rod Webb. Their efforts and victory speaks well of what our young people can accomplish. The communities of Grimshaw and Peace River are very proud of their eight young adults.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Protection and Restraining Order Project

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize the first anniversary of the incorporation of PROP, the Protection and Restraining Order Project. Although it is one year as an incorporated society, in fact PROP was born from a committee established in 1995, and the project opened its doors in 1997.

In the mid-1990s it was both expensive and took a long time to get a restraining or a protection order. PROP was created to address the problem of women facing family violence or any kind of violence in which they needed to get an order, but they couldn't afford a lawyer or the court fees. With the leadership and vast amounts of volunteered time of committed women lawyers from Edmonton and the help of agencies which gave funds or support, the Protection and Restraining Order Project has, for a $75 charge to people who qualify, made low-cost, more timely orders possible.

I know PROP would like me to acknowledge their supporters: Alberta Justice, victims of crime fund, the centre for wellness, Clifford E. Lee Foundation, the Edmonton Community Foundation, Edmonton Community Lottery Board, the Flora Trust, Muttart Foundation, Status of Women Canada, United Way, the YWCA, WIN House, and other dedicated agencies. And my thanks to Deb, Marie, Ellen, Marlene, Susan, and the other wonderful women.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Heebie-jeebies A Cappella Group

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour and a pleasure to rise today for this very special recognition. The Contemporary A Cappella Society, CASA, has just announced its artist awards for 2001, and I want to offer my warmest congratulations to a local Calgary a cappella group known as the Heebie-jeebies – isn't that neat? – for winning the award for the best comedy album called Heebie-jeebie TV and also for winning the best comedy song called Channel 12.

I am very proud to know these four young men from Calgary, so to Jonathon Love, Ken Lima Kuello, Cederic Blary, and to my youngest son, Chris Herard: well done, guys.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Britannia Junior High School

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great thrill for me to stand to make this particular recognition this afternoon. The day after I was sworn in as a Member of the Legislative Assembly, I had the privilege to officially open the new science lab at Britannia junior high school in the Edmonton-Glenora constituency. I would like to acknowledge the principal, Peter Jonkman, and his staff for the excellent work they are doing to enhance the education of the students. Also, I would like to commend Dr. Emery Dossdall, the superintendent of Edmonton public schools, and his team for approving and constructing the new lab.

Mr. Speaker, it was a special honour for me to be at the opening of the lab and make this acknowledgment today, as I am a graduate of Britannia junior high school.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Is there an additional government member who would like to participate?

head: Orders of the Day

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the items of business normally conducted on Wednesday afternoon entitled Written Questions and Motions for Returns cannot be dealt with today as these items of business have not met the notice requirements of Standing Order 38.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 73(1) to permit second reading of Bill 201 on the same day as its introduction.

Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 201, the Public Highways Development Amendment Act.

This bill will do three things: lessen roadside distractions for drivers, reduce vision overload for drivers, and it will improve the aesthetics of our primary highways in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, along our highways advertising signs have become all too familiar a sight. These signs may be an important way for businesses to advertise their services to motorists, but at what price in safety and what price in aesthetics? Unfortunately, not all of the highway signs comply with existing legislation.

The Public Highways Development Amendment Act provides roadside advertisers with clear guidelines and regulations. Bill 201 would provide the Department of Transportation with the means to deal with signs that do not conform to law or regulation or the signs that have not been approved by the Department of Transportation authorities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is designed to have the following impact on illegal signs in the province. First, the offending sign owner will be sent a letter via registered mail or by hand delivery informing him that he has seven days to remove the offending sign.

Second, Mr. Speaker, when a violator fails to comply with the notice to remove the sign, then the minister shall cause any action to be undertaken that is required to comply with the notice and may direct any person to enter the land for that purpose. This will provide our Transportation officials with the mandate to take those illegal signs down and to store them in a secure yard, with the cost of both the storage and the taking down to be assessed to the owner of the sign.

Third, if a second violation occurs within 12 months of the initial occurrence, the minister can order the removal of the offending sign or object, notifying the owner in writing within 72 hours.

With this in place, department of highways officials will be empowered to officially deal with repeat offenders and the illegal and nonconforming signs that are becoming more and more plentiful.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 provides official agents of Alberta Transportation with protection from harassment. Anyone who obstructs an official who is lawfully acting to remove a sign is guilty of an offence and may be fined $1,000. Enforcement officials from the Department of Transportation may now perform their tasks in an expeditious manner.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 will strengthen the ability of the department to deal quickly with nonconforming advertising along our provincial highways, something it doesn't now have. Eye-catching advertising is distracting to drivers. It reduces their effectiveness, the effectiveness of directional and warning signs, and it reduces the aesthetic value of our Alberta countryside.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that Bill 201 will not restrict legal signage in any way. The bill does not address what is conforming or what is nonconforming signage, as its single purpose is to provide the Department of Transportation the means to expeditiously cause the removal of illegal or nonpermitted signage, whether by the owner or by department officials. There is existing legislation that determines legal and illegal signs. This bill will simply ensure that signs which violate existing law and regulations can be removed more efficiently by Alberta Transportation officials and their agents.

The current enforcement mechanisms have become ineffective in dealing with illegal signs. At present the process involves sending out a number of letters via registered mail to the owner of the offending sign, each with a 30-day compliance request. When that is not met and it is observed that the sign is still there, then a second letter, a third letter, and even a fourth letter, each with 30 or more days in between, will be sent, with the final letter being sent from the Minister of Transportation.

If the owner still does not remove the sign in the time specified by the minister, the minister has two options. He may direct an official agent to remove the sign from the property and charge the incurred expense and subsequent storage fee to the owner of the sign. This is not very often done. Or the minister may lay a complaint with the local RCMP detachment, and the Crown prosecutor will determine if the charges are warranted and proceed accordingly. However, if the owner removes the sign even a day before the court hearing, the case will be dropped because the owner has removed the sign. In the situation where the sign is not removed and the court case continues, if convicted the sign owner, in addition to being fined, is required to move the sign.

The present process has proven to be too slow. It may take up to a year or more, and it is so unwieldy that it doesn't have any real impact on the proliferation of illegal and nonconforming signs along our provincial highways.

Often the department representatives responsible for control of this problem just abandon enforcement action after they've made several unsuccessful attempts to have any sign removed. The department has little recourse should the owner of the offending sign not wish to comply. Often the offending sign is put back up a few months later. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the current system does not work.

There are reasons to bring this bill forward, and foremost is safety. We all know that driver inattention is one of the major causes of accidents, and an important element of that inattention is distraction. More and more signs along our highways translate to more and more distractions to the motorists who drive on them. It is important to note that many traffic and highway accidents are the result of driver inattention or error and that distraction can cause a driver to err.

Bill 201 is designed to help decrease the number of accidents along Alberta's roads. Mr. Speaker, reportable collisions per thousand drivers exceeded the Alberta Transportation rate by a factor of two and a half times, for a total of 44.7 collisions per thousand drivers in the year 1997 alone.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we have a duty as legislators to do what we can, what is possible to make our highways safer. Alberta boasts a spectacular array of sights, from the river valley in the Drumheller area or the Red Deer River to rolling hills, mountain views and the like, forests, and lakes. There is an undeniable beauty and an immeasurable scenic value to our countryside that can be spoiled and obliterated by unlimited numbers of signs if it's to continue. This private member's bill will help to protect the aesthetic beauty and reinforce the province's commitment to maintaining the quality of our environment and ensuring that tourists visiting Alberta will get a chance to see what we truly have to offer. In the absence of this bill we will continue to have a growing visual pollution along Alberta's highways.

Beyond the issue of aesthetics, Mr. Speaker, there's a third reason to support Bill 201, and that's making Alberta's highways as safe as possible for motorists to use. The proliferation of illegal signs may have contributed to many traffic problems including visual overload, as too many signs compete for the attention of the driver so that the impact of the department's regulatory and cautionary and information signs are less effective. Over the last several decades there's been a steady increase in the amount of traffic on Alberta's highways. More and more signage increases the odds that a driver may not see a cautionary or regulatory sign because of the visual overload of this visual pollution of signs.

This bill strengthens a law that frankly, Mr. Speaker, has not been operating as it was intended. Because of the cumbersome and prolonged process of the current enforcement mechanisms, the law has consistently and in some cases rather flagrantly been ignored. This should be unacceptable to Albertans, and it should be unacceptable to members of this Assembly.

Simply put, Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 provides Alberta Transportation the means to fulfill their mandate in providing safe and efficient highways by giving them the effective regulatory means to remove the illegal signs as one small piece in their repertoire of keeping our highways safe.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand and debate Bill 201, Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001. It would've been a little helpful for us if we would have gotten the information, the bill itself, sooner than we did. It's certainly tough to do any initial consultations when we don't get the information until just before we get into the House. I know it's the first day and organizationally it's not always that easy to get things rolling here, but it makes it tougher for us to get some feedback from the communities on issues like this which are, I think, important to people throughout the province.

In terms of the highlights of the bill, certainly we would support any bill coming forward that strengthens the ability of Alberta Infrastructure or any other department to deal with outstanding issues that we see in the province. Certainly nonconforming advertising along provincial highways is something that is becoming a more recurrent issue that needs to be dealt with, and certainly as the process has been described to us, it isn't very effective in terms of getting rid of these signs in a timely fashion.

As we see drivers busier within their vehicles as they're traveling on the roadways, we do need to seriously consider all the various options open to us to ensure that they are driving safely. All of us have seen and certainly some of us will have been guilty of not only reading the signs as we travel down the highways but talking on cell phones and drinking cups of coffee or eating lunch or talking to our neighbours in the car. All of those are major distractions, Mr. Speaker, and I think this brings up for me the notion that we should be taking a look as private members or perhaps on the government side at the kinds of issues and conflicts we have on the roadways now that need to be addressed through the legislative process, and this is certainly one of those.

So we're happy to see that this bill is coming forward in terms of being able to get these distracting signs off the roads in a time span that is much more effective than what we had before. It does raise a few questions for us though, Mr. Speaker, that we're hoping can be addressed, and some of them are questions that are of interest when we talk about roadway signs.

My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods and I were discussing what it looks like when you're driving down the highways here and in other provinces. Particularly, we noted in the province of B.C. that when you drive on reserve land, the signs there are far, far greater in number than what we see along other major roadways. So that raises the question here in this province: will this provincial law apply to reserves? If not, then is there any intent to address that and ensure that we have some conformity on our highways in terms of the kinds of distractions there are? You know, you get used to driving a roadway and seeing a certain number of signs, and when you suddenly hit a stretch that is completely cluttered up, it is distracting, as the sponsor of the bill talked about, and it certainly needs to, I think, have some consistency throughout the province.

We also had a question about the consultation process that Infrastructure does with municipalities on these issues. I personally don't know whether or not municipalities are in a position where they can derive revenue from the placement of signs along roadways. Who gets that money from those signs? Is it the private landowners? Is it in some cases the municipalities, or can it be the province? I think that would be of interest to people in this Assembly, and we would like to know if this change in the rules impacts any of that and who has a say, what is the appeal process, the standard kinds of questions that are asked in a case like this.

Also, I have a question around jointly funded roadways. For instance, here in Edmonton we have the Whitemud freeway, and roadway signs have recently been a hot topic in this city. There are a number of people who don't like the flower beds that are advertising along that freeway and have asked council to have them removed. My understanding is that they are in the process of being removed because people said that they were distractions, or they made an argument for them being distractions, while they were driving along the freeway. Because that was a jointly funded project with the province, I'm wondering who has the ultimate jurisdiction. Does the jurisdiction go back to the local municipality? It must; that's what council decided. But does the province have any say or impact on what happens there? I'm thinking again in terms of consistency of approach.

One thing I think we have to be careful of is that we never cross the line between what is a conforming sign, in terms of size and location to the roadway, and freedom of speech. I know that I see a lot of signs on the highway that have messages that I don't agree with. Some of them I find distasteful, at the very least, and some quite offensive, but there still is a fundamental right of freedom of speech in this country, and we must ensure that any new legislation we bring in does not bar people from participating in that process. Yes to fast removal of signs that are in the wrong locations or don't conform to whatever the standards are, but no to changes that might infringe on a person's freedom to speak.

We also had a concern about public mischief with the changes in this legislation. We've just gone through an election where all of us have experienced what can happen in sign wars. Your signs get moved sometimes by whomever and can go from a completely legal position to one that is illegal. My question is: who's responsible in that case, and what's the process for notifying the department that in fact your sign may have been moved illegally to a place where you didn't want it to be? If you take a look at page 2, under section 32 it talks about how "any person who wilfully obstructs, interferes with or hinders a person acting under section 30(7) or (10) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of $1000."

Well, it's nice to see that in there, Mr. Speaker, and it's wonderful if you can catch the person or find out who they are, but certainly my experience would be that finding people who play games with the signs is not an easy task. "Can you find them to have them charged?" is one question. In the absence of being able to find them and in the shortened time period there is for the sign to be changed or moved, what's the responsibility of the person who owns the sign to be able to, one, know that it's now illegally placed and, two, be notified in a timely enough fashion for them to address the situation? Who incurs the costs of changes that have to be made? I think those are questions that should be asked.

So my major concern with this bill is with changing the requirements here in terms of the notification. Is there going to be enough time for notification of people who have had their signs placed illegally, not by themselves but by others, and what onus of proof will there be on those people to in fact prove that they didn't place the sign in the wrong spot?

This is an interesting bill to come before us at this particular time. We were talking about how we would have thought that one dealing with cell phones would have been perhaps of equal importance, and perhaps that's something this Assembly can address through the various avenues open to us in this next session. Certainly we hear lots of talk in the communities about the kinds of problems that happen with cell phone use in cars in terms of distractions, as we see with these signs, and it's something that I think we need to start thinking about from a legislative perspective.

Insurance rates are very high for people. Many people are driving without collision on their vehicles these days for those reasons. We need to do whatever we can, I think, from a governing perspective to ensure that the risks on roadways are minimized. I think this is one step in the right direction. I think there are many steps that we need to take a look at and that need to be addressed in this Legislature. In fact, we see a number of issues coming forward this session that deal with matters associated with roadways, so what that tells me is that it's an increasing problem, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully the government will see the mood of the Legislature on these kinds of issues, and we can see some more legislation coming forward that will address them in a more comprehensive fashion.

So I think that in summary, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that hopefully those questions I have brought forward will be answered. In general certainly I support what has been brought forward in this bill. I'd like to add to the list of questions. What about mobile signs, the portable signs that we see on roadways though not stuck in the ground? I'm talking about those small ones on wheels but also those larger mobile ones that are semitrailers that are parked in farmers' fields. Do the same rules apply to those? Just a minor question but one that we would hope to be addressed.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those comments I will be supporting this particular bill. I think it addresses an issue that is interesting and important for us to be talking about. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate in support of Bill 201, the Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001, sponsored by my colleague the Member for Highwood. Effective infrastructure is something all Albertans support. When there are problems that impact the safety of our highways, the Department of Transportation needs the mandate to act quickly to prevent any potential harm to Albertans. That is the intent of Bill 201. Its design will simplify the operation of the Department of Transportation so that they may act on behalf of Albertans to remove clutter and distraction from our roadways.

The act does not change the definition of prohibited signs but allows illegal signs to be removed quickly. Currently the long, complicated enforcement process does not provide an effective deterrent to offences. To the contrary, the bogged down enforcement process has tied the hands of enforcement officials to deal with offences to such an extent that the process is often an exercise in futility. The current process draws the Department of Transportation, law enforcement agencies, the courts, and the offender into a protracted situation that may more often than not lead to frustration and stalemate.

We are living in changing times. The population is booming in all Alberta communities. The opportunity to advertise to an enormous audience traveling the highways of Alberta every day is tempting. As the opportunity to advertise increases, so does the incentive to place illegal signs. The proliferation of signs in violation of the Public Highways Development Act has increased the strain on the resources of the Department of Transportation as well as our legal system and the RCMP. There needs to be a commonsense solution to protect the rights of motorists, and a new balance must be struck.

I would like to give a short analogy. If a boy were to stand accused of painting graffiti on a bridge and was caught in possession of the paint, would his rights be so protected to allow him to keep the spray paint until he was properly arraigned in a court of law? Of course not. The paint would be taken from him and would be returned upon proof of innocence.

Another analogy that comes to mind applies currently in Calgary with the bus strike. If I were driving on the streets and parked my car in an illegal spot, I'm sure the car would be towed. If they didn't tow it right away, I'd probably leave the car from 8 in the morning until 5 in the evening and pay a small fine rather than pay the hefty amounts collected by the parking lots. That's not right.

This is perfectly reasonable for most minor legal infractions but is currently not the accepted practice for the removal of illegal signs. This is an issue involving the property rights of the offender and the landowner, so regardless of the fact that these individuals are breaking the law, actions have been allowed to persist. The act's enforcement mechanism needs some teeth, and this is the intent of the bill sponsored by the Member for Highwood, which I support.

Some believe that those who own property adjacent to the highway have the right to place signs exhibiting whatever they choose. Our existing legislation doesn't give them that liberty. The allowable content and level of signage is currently regulated to prevent abuse. Currently we do have safeguards within our legislation to prevent the exploitation of our traffic corridors as a way to market countless products, services, or corporate logos to a captive audience. However, the mechanism to deal with noncompliance is very lax. The people of this province appreciate less clutter, less distraction, and an unobstructed view of the horizon as they drive on our highways, which, I might add, are the very best and the envy of a lot of provinces. The required changes to the legislation are adequately addressed in Bill 201, and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

I wish to discuss some of the implications that will result from passing this bill. To begin with, motorists and their passengers and loved ones will have a safer roadway. This I believe will be the single most important improvement resulting from passage of this bill. The quick removal of unreasonable signs will ease frustration and distraction for countless motorists all across the province. A less distracted driver is a safe driver, and this will most definitely result in fewer motor vehicle collisions in the long run, particularly as our population increases and we have a higher volume of traffic on our highways.

The guidelines for signs under the Public Highways Development Act require signs to be simple, directional, and informative so as to not distract drivers. Anything flashing, floodlit, spinning, or resembling other traffic symbols is prohibited, as is any sign that is considered inappropriate or excessive. The process for the removal of a sign currently takes enormous legal wrangling and can extend over months, and after spending months to resolve the issue, should the sign be replaced, the entire process begins all over again. The people working in Transportation deserve a law that gives them the authority to act against illegal signs in a timely manner.

Bill 201 directs that illegal signs be removed seven days after a written notice of fault is given to the landowner. At this point the sign is picked up and stored pending resolution. In any case, the sign is removed quickly, which will significantly cut down the amount of time and effort in trying to enforce these incidences.

As most of you are aware, our court system is under increasing pressure to deal with an enormous backlog of minor offences and ticketed fines. The time and effort the court system expends in trying to enforce these laws needs review. In the case of an illegally placed or inappropriate sign the threat of a fine is sometimes not enough to force compliance to law. The offender more often than not has a substantial financial interest in the display of the offending sign and will fight a ticket to maintain his or her sign.

To give the Department of Transportation the authority to remove the sign after informing the offending party is a simple and meaningful solution. In this way, the punishment for noncompliance is immediate and just significant enough to substantially deter individuals from pursuing an often unreasoned legal defence and wasting the time of the courts.

The problem the current system is facing is that citing violations of the legal code does nothing to stop the offence. The method of ticketing violators is indirect and does not always provide incentive for the adjustment or removal of the sign. If an individual is in the process of a court battle over a ticket on a sign, he cannot be ticketed for the same offence again. This literally allows him to buy time for his sign in the form of a ticket that may be very small when brought before a judge. By way of this private member's bill any offender looking to abuse our legal process would receive no financial gain in doing so, and that, Mr. Speaker, creates a system that is sustainable, reasonable, and just.

For all the reasons I've discussed this afternoon, I urge my fellow colleagues as motorists to support Bill 201. It will make the Public Highways Development Act operate for Albertans as it was intended to do.

My friends, I also urge you to think about the beauty along our highways and how we should preserve it, and I hope that at the end of this second reading you will rethink your position and support this bill. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to engage in the debate on the Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001, as sponsored by the hon. Member for Highwood. I notice that the hon. member has been very active in pursuit of private members' bills. One act, I believe, that the hon. member is responsible for is the persons in care act. That was a step in the right direction. I initially had a look at this bill, Mr. Speaker, after question period today, and I, too, would like to have a longer look at this before I commit my support to it.

When I think, Mr. Speaker, of the recent election, all hon. members of this Assembly, I think, would have eventually during the course of the campaign had a sign somewhere where it should not have been. I, for one, instructed our campaign to only put signs on private property, not on public thoroughfares, because I consider it a blot on the landscape. I consider it visual pollution. Not everyone else in the campaign in my constituency did that. It is an issue that has been brought to my attention at a public forum. Now, the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar of course is urban, and rural members of this Assembly may have a different view. But when you look at signage, I didn't realize it was such a problem from the point of view of safety. Certainly for visual pollution, as it has been described earlier, that is detrimental. How many of these signs and what size they are, I have no idea.

I think, for instance, in the oil industry we could see rig 36. Mr. Speaker, all signs point from Lethbridge west to rig 36, which is in the Chinchaga region of Alberta. We could have a little sign, I suppose, at each intersection along the way, kilometre after kilometre. Oilfield personnel routinely put these signs up, and sometimes they forget to take them down. Now that things are so busy in the oil patch, maybe they just don't bother. They move on to the next job. The implications of this in the short time that I've thought about it may not be necessarily as beneficial as first thought. There is certainly the issue of public safety. There is the issue of nuisance or visual nuisance, if I could call it that.

I understand there are four letters that have to be sent to the individual landowner. That landowner may not even know. In rural Alberta there's a law. Holdings are so vast. The owner may not be aware that someone placed a sign there. They may not want to phone someone on their cell phone whenever they're driving by to check this out because they may not feel comfortable ringing someone on their cell phone while they're driving.

But we need to look at this and consider all activities before we think of any more rules or any more laws. It's not a burning issue in Edmonton-Gold Bar. The election signs: I realize that's a municipal issue. It's not connected to a provincial highway, but people want a semblance of order during a campaign. They much prefer to see candidates with signs on individual private property, not cluttering roads one after another. Then there's also third-party advertising that pops up. They don't consider that appropriate in southeast Edmonton.

If this law is going to improve highway safety on the provincial highways and it is going to also reduce or limit the amount of visual pollution, then I suppose it would be a step in the right direction.

However, there are some other notes that I have made regarding this bill, Mr. Speaker. It also has to deal with farmers, the construction industry, the oil well, the gas well drilling industry. That would be section 30 and the amendments to it. Now, the amendments to section 30 may be a problem, for instance, in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury. At this time of the year there may be a rig move going on. The access to a controlled highway: there is a public safety hazard there because a lot of times the Hi-Boys have a lot of mud underneath them on their carriages. Then it can be cold at night and this freezes on the surface of the road and it can become a traffic hazard. Now, I don't know if the hon. member has considered this in the discussions of this bill, but it is certainly something that I think all members of the Assembly, particularly those from rural Alberta, should consider.

Now, there are also farmers. Farmers routinely – and I think they do this on controlled highways . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Also farmers. That's good to hear.

MR. MacDONALD: My goodness, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Environment has more to say now than he did during question period.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers routinely – and hon. members can correct me if I'm wrong – usually during harvesttime can sometimes have temporary access to controlled highways to remove their harvest from their fields. The implications of the amendments to section 30 – I'm curious how those amendments will affect farmers and rural landowners.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments at second reading, in the brief time that I've had to read this bill, those would be my concerns. With those concerns expressed, I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak in support of Bill 201, the Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001, sponsored by my colleague the Member for Highwood.

Bill 201 calls for effective enforcement of a law that has already been established in this province. The Public Highways Development Act and the highway development control regulations became law on July 11, 1966. The purpose of the act and its regulations was to govern the construction and maintenance of Alberta's highways, control access and adjacent developments of our roads, and to govern Crown liability for damages and the protection of highways. Specifically sections 25, 30, and 36 of the act contain regulations covering illegal signs, highway advertising, and entry onto private property.

Now, it's important to remember for the benefit of this debate, Mr. Speaker, that these restrictions came into force to prevent the unabashed construction of signs and notices along Alberta's highways. Such signs not only prove unsightly but, more importantly, also pose a potential safety risk to Alberta's motorists and wildlife. As the newly appointed chair of the council on workplace safety, I take a personal interest in this issue as well. The consequences that may result when motorists are not able to discern important information while driving because of distraction from signs that impede their line of sight and ability to focus could be deadly.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of signs along our highways fall under four different categories, as my colleague pointed out: to inform drivers of traffic regulations, (2) to warn motorists of changing road characteristics, (3) to provide information necessary for route selection, and (4) to raise motorists' awareness of temporary hazards such as construction or certain municipal or community events. Now, each of these signs must also meet regulation standards, as they are part of our law that makes driving easier and establishes greater road safety for everyone.

First, the regulatory sign indicates a traffic regulation that applies at a specific time or place on a road. These include stop signs, pedestrian crossings, or vehicle weight, for example. If these important signs are disregarded because of driver distraction or obstruction of view from unauthorized signs, then the driver would be fortunate to get only a traffic violation as his error could easily result in a fatal accident.

Secondly, a similar situation could also occur where a warning sign could be missed as a result of driver distraction or obstruction of view. Warning signs are an essential and required component of highway driving as they inform the public of possible hazards like a slippery bridge or animal crossings.

Now, as most Albertans realize, there's an abundance of wildlife in our province. There's always the possibility of crossing paths with an animal while driving on one of our many highways. This brings up the point that not only could the animal warning sign beside the highway be missed, but the animal itself could also be missed or hidden by an unauthorized sign. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that we have all seen or at the very least heard of various degrees of accidents happening with large moose, deer, or elk because the animal had darted out onto the highway and into the path of oncoming traffic. It is essential that we act responsibly as a government and provide Albertans with a driving environment that is as safe as possible. This has become even more important over recent years as our urban centres have branched out due to population increases.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, there are more highway connections today between Alberta's urban cities and its rural towns than ever before in Alberta's history. As sign laws were developed to decrease the distraction of unnecessary or illegal signs along our highways, it only makes sense to make sure that those laws are easily and appropriately enforceable and to maintain our highways to make them as safe as possible.

The purpose of Bill 201 is to improve the ability of Alberta Transportation to deal effectively and efficiently with individuals who are currently violating the established law. There are no new regulations or restrictions being proposed here. What is being proposed, Mr. Speaker, is an effective means of enforcing the law as it currently exists.

My colleague the Member for Highwood is not proposing a ban on road signage. Currently privately owned signs are allowed with the provision that they are within the scope of existing guidelines. If in fact they are within the guidelines, Mr. Speaker, then the individual would simply require an approved development permit issued by the district transportation engineer.

However, illegal signs are abundant on Alberta's roadsides. The law enforcement officials are obviously having a difficult time regulating their locations and their numbers, or we would not be here speaking about the matter today. The problems that we are experiencing, Mr. Speaker, concern the fact that the time and the effort required to obtain a proper permit far exceeds the current cost of the violation. Prosecutions for illegal signage in this province are extremely rare, and the process is very lengthy. As a result, more and more illegal signs are erected with impunity every day.

The existing system requires that the Alberta Department of Transportation send four letters by registered mail to the signed landowner requesting that the sign be removed, with the final letter being sent by the minister. Now, if the sign is not removed within the time specified in the minister's letter, he may then direct any person to enter onto the violator's land and complete the directions of sign removal contained in the ministerial notice. He could also lay a complaint with the local RCMP detachment and have the Crown prosecutor determine whether charges are warranted.

Mr. Speaker, as I am sure everyone here can understand, this entire process is time consuming and strains an already overtaxed system. Bill 201 proposes that the owners of offending signs will be warned via written letter from the minister to remove the illegal sign within seven days, after which, if the offending party refused to comply with the request within the seven-day period, the material would be removed by Alberta Transportation themselves and placed in storage.

Now, while issuing fines has long been a preferred means of deterring motor vehicle and criminal offences, the option of legally removing the sign will be far more effective and expedient as a solution. This method will provide a meaningful deterrent to the violators.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I must concede that although I'm enthusiastic about the intent of this bill and the many positive effects that it could have on Alberta and its highway driving, I do have some reservations about certain details of the bill. Now, it's a small concern, but I worry about the ambiguity that exists with the current wording regarding the legal means that one must undertake in order to acquire a sign.

While I strongly believe that as government members it is our duty to do everything within our power to deal efficiently with citizens who are in violation of Alberta law, I also believe that this effort should not be taken to the point where it discourages legitimate and legal efforts of enterprising Albertans. We must not forget that the Alberta advantage resides in part on the lack of red tape that frustrates many small businesses, red tape that exists in many other Canadian provinces and jurisdictions. I am concerned that unless some clear direction is given in this bill as to how citizens may quickly obtain permission to place legitimate signs on Alberta highways, this bill may be incomplete.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this bill. Bill 201 will save a great deal of valuable time that our Infrastructure department, our courts, and our law enforcement officers could use to focus on other matters. Let us not forget the most important aspect of this bill; that is, the benefit and safety that our motorists will reap as a result of this legislation. I hope my colleagues will agree with me that the reservation I've just brought forth about this bill is minor with respect to its many advantages. Although there's a risk that this bill may be perceived by some to infringe on the fundamental right of freedom of speech, I believe that it will save lives, and that must take precedence. Again, I urge my colleagues to vote in support of Bill 201.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased this afternoon to have an opportunity to enter into the debate on Bill 201. Now, I've had an opportunity to read through this bill, and I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Member for Highwood. I think this is a well-intentioned bill. I think that the member has identified a legitimate concern.

However, in reading the bill, I'm not convinced that this is the correct process to come about with a resolution that is going to deal with what seems to be a fairly widespread problem throughout the province. When I look at the bill, essentially it can be watered down to two areas. First of all, in the existing statute there are requirements that illegal signs be removed after receiving notice from the minister, and the minister specifies the amount of time that is available for the offending sign to be removed. What we do under the amendment that's proposed by the member is insert in statute a provision that there be a seven-day limit before the sign is forcibly removed.

I'm not convinced and I'm not knowledgeable enough, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, to know whether or not this is a case where one size fits all. I think that there may be legitimate opportunities where the owner of a sign, the owner of the land may find that a seven-day limit is inappropriate. I think that the amendments proposed in this bill make it too restrictive. There is no opportunity for any ministerial discretion. Under the existing statute if the minister wishes to put a seven-day limit for removal, that's within the discretion of the minister to do so. I don't know why it's necessary for us to change the legislation and by statute put a seven-day limit where the minister has that authority to do so under existing legislation.

The other part of the bill deals with an instance – and the member referred to it when he was making his opening remarks – where the process that's in place to remove a sign is successful, the sign is removed, and then shortly thereafter the same sign or a sign very similar reappears in the same location, and the whole process has to start all over again. Again, I don't know that it's necessary to have the heavy-handed approach that is suggested in this bill, whereby should this take place, the minister will forthwith order removal of the sign. I think that, again, we need to look at the existing legislation and determine what the problem is. If we're having a problem with signs being reinstalled after they have been ordered removed, perhaps the existing legislation is deficient in the penalties that are incurred.

I read in the bill, in the existing legislation on page 2 of the bill, there is a provision that it is an offence if he again places or causes to be placed any property, equipment, material or other thing on the land within the distance from the controlled highway prescribed by the regulations.

Clearly it already is an offence under existing legislation to have that sign reinstalled. By adding a provision that says not only will it continue to be an offence, but the minister will automatically have the offending sign removed I think is addressing the problem from the wrong end. If we've got a problem with signs being reinstalled, obviously we don't have sufficient amount of penalty in place so that there is a deterrent to someone to reinstall the sign. I think that that is an area I would like to see addressed in any amendments that would be proposed to this bill.

The other thing I have concern with in this bill is that it seems to some extent to be putting the cart before the horse. Someone is essentially found guilty and then is forced to go to court to prove his innocence. It kind of goes against what principles I understand, where a party is innocent until proven guilty. Under the existing legislation before the amendment is proposed, if there is a disagreement – and presumably if a sign is not removed at the request of the minister, that would indicate to me that there is a disagreement – that disagreement eventually is resolved in a court, and a judge determines whether in fact a sign is offending or not according to statute. At that point there's an order made to remove the sign.

What the member is proposing is that someone – and it refers in the legislation, of course, to the minister, but we all know it's not the minister that is responsible for making the original determination. The minister is the one who eventually signs his pen to paper to initiate action, but someone – we know not whom – makes a decision, an assessment that a sign is offensive and is contrary to legislation and then has the authority to have that sign removed after seven days' notice, stored at the expense of the owner of the sign, the removal and the storage, and then has an opportunity to go to court and argue and resolve the dispute.

Well, that seems awfully backwards to me, Mr. Speaker, and frankly I think that's taking a very heavy-handed approach to enforcement. It reminds me of an opportunity or a similar kind of situation where here we're dealing with relatively inexpensive signs, in relative terms, where the removal costs may not be exorbitant and the storage costs may not be exorbitant. But let's for instance imagine that instead of talking about signs, we're talking about setback provisions in land planning. Instead of having an offensive sign that is being automatically removed and then a court case held to determine whether or not it was proper for that removal, let's assume that someone builds a home on a lot and that home is built one foot beyond the mandated easement that's in place. I would suggest the owner of that home who wanted to dispute and had dispute with the official who determined that that home was one foot over the easement would have an opportunity to have his day in court before the wrecking ball comes along and moves his home.

I'm not suggesting that at the end of the day the wrecking ball still may not come along and remove that home. We all know why easements are put in place. We all know why laws are in place that restrict the signage on highways. We all know why they're there and I hope to a large extent agree with why they're there. But what we don't allow in this province are for decisions to be made by individuals that could potentially cause irreparable harm on the individual.

I recognize the example of removing a building is a bit of a stretch and a bit of an exaggeration over what the Member for Highwood is proposing here by removing the sign, but I bring that forward to make a case and to make the argument that it's a similar situation. We're going to come along, make a decision that the sign that's in place is illegal, is contrary to legislation. We will then remove that sign, store it, send you a bill for the removal and the storage, and then you have an opportunity to go to court and have a judge determine whether or not the original decision was correct and just. I suggest we're going backwards in this particular case, and I would suggest the existing legislation has ample opportunity for signs to be removed.

If signs are being reinstalled, as the member suggests, then we should have a look at the penalty provisions for reinstalling. They are provided for in existing legislation, and for that reason I would suggest to all members that this amendment is not required. There is existing legislation in place to allow for us to enforce our laws. We need to look at our existing legislation and the enforcement provisions of that before we start arbitrarily amending legislation in this House and causing damage that we really don't have an opportunity to envision at this point and place.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members to vote against this bill. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 201. Just in time. As a known advocate of traffic safety I believe that the government should play a role in regulating signs along our highways to ensure that they do not create any undo hazards or jeopardize the motoring public's safety. I applaud any reasonable initiatives to improving road safety and the initiative of my colleague the Member for Highwood for bringing forward such good ideas.

This afternoon several of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, talked about how there is an increasing number of signs along our highways that may distract a driver's attention. I have to agree that some signs may distract a driver and get his or her attention at least momentarily. That is in fact what they are designed to do if they are working properly. Of course, if they distract attention at the wrong time or for an undue length of time at a critical moment, they may be contributing to creating a hazard. Both conforming and nonconforming signs may create this momentary distraction.

The issue of traffic safety is a legitimate and major concern of our society, so we should be aware of the nature of circumstances in which signs should be regulated to prevent accidents. As Alberta grows in population, we must continue to review the laws that guide us to see if they continue to meet our needs. Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity that this bill provides us to engage in such debate.

However, Mr. Speaker – and I am sure you are far more aware of this than I am – rarely does a government have the luxury of debate on something that is obviously good versus something that is obviously bad. If only it were so easy. More often the nature of debates which enter into the political arena is debate between something which is bad in some people's minds against something else which is bad in other people's minds. The only choice before us, then, is: which choice is the least worst? Each choice leaves some people uneasy. That is the very nature of political decisions, and so it is with the decision before us here today.

The debate as to whether or not nonconforming signs are unsightly clutter and should be immediately removed or removed faster – well, that's an easy one to make if that is the only narrow perspective that we have on such issues. Of course they are sometimes unsightly, and of course they constitute clutter, at least to some people, and they may even decrease safety as well. But the debate as to whether or not such nonconforming signs should be immediately removed if they constitute very little additional safety hazard and make a very big difference between a poor family having some decent clothes on their backs or not because they had a sign out offering eggs for sale and managed to sell a few as a result and also had supper on the table for the little ones because of that unsightly sign which caught the attention of a passing motorist, well, suddenly, Mr. Speaker, we are not left with such an easy choice.

It is our responsibility as a government to find this right balance in these types of decisions. It is our responsibility as a government to strike the right balance on the fine line between concern for public safety and overregulation. We must find that balance between clutter and small businesses needing to find a low-cost way to promote a marginal economic opportunity, a balance between a concern for safety against people's need to earn a living and to be able to achieve the pride of self-reliance that comes with success in selling the result of their toil and labours.

Mr. Speaker, in the instance of Bill 201 we need to look very closely at this balance, and I believe that while the bill has good intent, its effect would ultimately harm a very important part of our society: small business and self-employed individuals struggling to eke out a living and finding themselves overregulated and underfinanced. Efficiency in removing clutter, yes, but not effectiveness in promoting improved quality of life for our microentrepreneurs. There's a price to be paid, Mr. Speaker, for the benefits that 201 promises, a price that is too high in my mind.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we must also be very wary of the unforeseen ramifications that upsetting the current balance might produce, and in this I refer to the difficulties that the city of Calgary experienced, which I am quite familiar with. Their attempts to improve the situation, as some saw it, resulted instead in inspiring legal challenges from newly frustrated individuals whose signs had been removed, challenges which were surprisingly successful for these individuals and resulted in exactly the opposite effect from what the city originally intended. They resulted for a time in no regulations at all as bylaw after bylaw was successfully challenged and struck down under Charter challenges involving freedom of expression and the right to free speech.

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if Bill 201 might stir up a similar hornets' nest that might be best left alone. I refer to such cases as R v. 388923 Alberta Ltd., 1995 174AR292 Court of Appeal, and more recently R v. 718916 Alberta Ltd. as examples of the legal difficulties which may arise if we were to start changing the processes that we have in place now.

The Member for Highwood is proposing that the time limit for removing nonconforming signage from view of highway drivers be sped up to seven days only. I believe that the current procedure allows for an appropriate length of time before a nonconforming sign is removed. I do not see the need to move the time limit to a mere seven days, which barely gives a small business proprietor time to react at all, let alone to complete all the paper-intensive process of seeking regulatory approval for the now much more expensive conforming signage.

Mr. Speaker, I have outlined two main concerns with Bill 201. The first is how the quickened procedure will affect the economic development of small business owners and thus the prosperity of small rural communities. My other main concern is how it will infringe upon the rights of property owners and their rights to freedom of speech on their own property and the right to collect revenues from their own properties. And there are other concerns.

Mr. Speaker, we attract thousands of tourists to our province each year, and tourism is a viable and thriving industry in Alberta. Many business owners have gained financial stability by accessing this expanding market. In fact, many small businesses were set up expressly to cater to drive-by tourists. I believe it would greatly affect our smaller communities that currently enjoy economic benefits from tourists passing through, and both would suffer if the removal of signs on our highways was shortened to seven days. The tourists would not be made aware of unique, one-of-a-kind shopping experiences, and the entrepreneurs would be deprived of customers.

As a strong supporter of small business development for the economic viability of our province I am having difficulty reconciling the benefits of faster removal of all nonconforming signs with the damage this would do to these small businesses, who it must be remembered have very limited advertising dollars. As a government we must look at whether this is a fair trade-off.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to point out that our government has made great efforts to support and foster private enterprise. We have been a strong supporter of deregulation and less red tape and the belief that less government involvement allows greater room for small businesses to succeed. The effects of Bill 201 appear to be a reverse of this direction and a reverse of some of the deregulation benefits that we have achieved so far.

In the case of community businesses there is often a seasonal time frame for their product or services. As a province with a large agricultural sector I am sure we are all aware of the aspects of seasonal businesses. There are many small farmers who depend on the ability to advertise by the road for fresh corn or strawberry picking or eggs, as I mentioned earlier. It could be devastating for small farmers to have their signs removed in only seven days on account of their income being so seasonally dependent.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the seven-day time line for private owners to remove their nonconforming signs is just too short. I might find it easier to support Bill 201 if these concerns could be addressed, but I suspect that we are trying to make laws here which are based on a few exceptionally troublesome cases as opposed to the norm, and thus we would be punishing everyone for the transgressions of a very small few, a direction I find hard to support.

I agree that it is important to ensure that our highways are safe within appropriate boundaries, but the improvements being contemplated here are very marginal in my view. There are already sufficient laws to regulate signage under the Public Highways Development Act, Mr. Speaker, and sufficient laws to regulate removal of nonconforming signs under this act.

May I also say, Mr. Speaker, that these regulations are very detailed. Nonconforming signs may be distracting to drivers, but frankly it was also driving me to distraction just reading about all the rules and regulations already required under the act which are necessary to obtain a conforming sign. I'm sure many others feel the same way, and perhaps that is why some people are avoiding trying to get one of these permits in the first place.

The government time line to assess all the details and then issue a permit can certainly be quite lengthy. There are many steps that must be followed to obtain the necessary permits to have a sign deemed to be conforming, and all of this takes time. Busy farmers and harried small business owners do not always have a lot of spare time.

There are alternatives to the course of action contemplated in Bill 201, such as promotion of the successful community business signs program and others. Interfering with the fundamental rights of our constituents and interfering with their initiatives to earn a living on their own does not strike me as the right way to turn on this issue. I do not believe that we need to regulate any further than we already have.

I certainly appreciate the time and effort that the Member for Highwood has put into this initiative and his good intentions in this matter. However, I think we would be going down the wrong road if we were to support Bill 201 at this time. With that, I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to first of all thank all hon. members who have participated in the debate, whether they were in support of the bill or opposed to the bill or maybe just had some comments that offered criticism. Those are all very welcome.

I'll try and answer some of the questions. First of all, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about reserve lands and signs there. No, this and the highways act with regard to signage do not affect them. Urban municipalities are similar. In their case, you're not allowed to use flashing lights and bright lights or lights that might be interpreted as signal lights or warning lights or whatever. I would presume that would also probably reach to reserve lands. However, the bill does not really address what is conforming and what's not conforming. That's elsewhere in the act. We're just talking about really speeding it up.

Freedom of speech and maybe this taking away freedom of speech. Well, I think we all know that freedom of speech is not absolute. For instance, we're all not allowed to speak in here at the same time. There's a time when you're allowed to speak and that kind of thing. It's sort of a little bit like graffiti. Graffiti is a form of expression. You might wish to say that that is the epitome of freedom of speech, yet we don't allow that in some places. You can go in the occasional washroom of certain bars, not that I've ever been there, and see graffiti, and it's welcomed there. The owners put up a great big blackboard to do that. Well, this really doesn't deal with that, but in some senses a proliferation of highway signs is a form of graffiti.

Too short a time, seven days. Well, there are a couple of provisions here. If you look at the bill on page 1, "Section 30 is amended," in (1)(a): ". . . within 7 days of receipt of the notice or any longer period allowed by the Minister." Then there's another exemption here that is put there under (b). There's always opportunity, of course, in committee to expand this to 14 days or whatever.

Mobile signs. Yes, they can be removed in the countryside. That was again from the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

There is an appeal. The appeal to the minister for more time is certainly there in Bill 201.

Edmonton-Gold Bar: rig 36 sign. The example: directional sign for vehicles to turn off the highway. That's certainly allowed, and that can be permitted. If it is strung out along the highway like Burma-Shave, then I suspect that maybe too many signs wouldn't be allowed. Certainly that's a very common kind of thing.

Let's see. There's another one here. Should this bill pass second reading, then amendments for some of the criticisms could easily be accommodated.

I would disagree with the Member for Medicine Hat's assertion that no opportunity for ministerial discretion appears to be there, but perhaps that was partly a function of my not being able to hear him well. I don't really think it's a heavy hand for a second-time offender, but that's a matter of debate.

The example given by Medicine Hat of the building that was one foot over – I happen to own a building where part of it's encroached on another's property and part of their building is encroached. That's more a function of surveyors, but the building has to have a permit to be there in the first place or it will be taken down very quickly. That's a little bit of what I'm trying to deal with here. Without permits some of these signs could be permitted, but they don't ask for permission.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Farm produce is allowed under the current act, not under Bill 201, and for the reasons that you so eloquently spoke about: the poor family that would lose its livelihood. This is not designed at all to interfere with them because the act already covers that, and there are all kinds of exemptions there. If it's a special event in a community, there are permits that you can get for rodeo for such and such a day or such and such a time, real estate signs, that kind of thing. A number of others are there.

Well, I've tried to answer some of the questions. Again, thank you for the support. I think Alberta should be committed to making its highways as safe a place for motorists as possible. This bill is committed to showcasing and allowing the showcasing of Alberta's boundless scenery and tourist attractions. This bill is committed to ensuring that the laws of the province are enforced fairly and justly in accordance with the wishes of the people of Alberta. I suggest Bill 201 will assist us in meeting these goals.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 201 as I believe it is in the best interests of the driving public and Albertans.

Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:17 p.m.]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, okay. The Assembly has before it a division on Bill 201, the Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2001. Now, whenever there's a voice call, a subjective decision has to be made with respect to what one hears. For those hon. members who said, "Yes, there very clearly were more people who were in the affirmative," and for those hon. members who said, "Oh no, there very clearly were more voice calls in the negative," please be advised that there is a speakerphone here attached to the desk of the Speaker which provides for very, very acute hearing throughout the whole Assembly. Some hon. members sitting in a particular quadrant of the Assembly may feel that there are yeas or nays in their particular quadrant, but the Speaker is assisted by this amplifier which provides for a wide range.

For the motion:

Abbott	Coutts	Shariff
Bonner	MacDonald	Taft

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 73(1) to permit second reading of Bill 202 on the same day as its introduction.

Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity)
Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with exceptional honour and pride that I rise to first speak to Bill 202, the Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001. I do not use the term "exceptional" lightly. I say it because this bill deals directly with a violation of one of the principles this province and this country have held as fundamental since the architects of this nation first established the values and laws of this country: the principle of equality.

The intent of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is very simple. It will end the practice of allowing insurance providers to charge young males significantly higher premiums for car insurance than they charge young females, a difference that can equal up to and exceeding $1,000 a year. All this bill seeks to do is address one of the last vestiges of treating the two sexes as fundamentally unequal.

This afternoon I will explain to members of the Assembly who are curious just how a blatant act of gender discrimination managed to evolve over time into an institutionalized part of insurance provision in this province. I will demonstrate that gender bias was slipped in under a clause that allows categorization in insurance provision but that this clause, as in all other laws, is no excuse for gender discrimination.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Next, I'll explain to members of this Assembly how this bill will affect Albertans on a personal level. It was because of several concerned constituents that I felt it necessary to act on this matter. Today I will present their stories to illustrate how seriously this issue is to the young men of this province.

Third, Mr. Speaker, I will point out that portraying all young males as a safety hazard on Alberta highways, as the current insurance structure does, is not only inequitable; it is erroneous. The greatest threat on Alberta roadways is inexperienced drivers of both sexes, and I am certainly in support of any measures that improve the driving performance of this group.

Finally, I will point out that the passage of this bill will not cause the unintended consequence of insurance providers refusing to provide coverage for young males. Such a result would defy the most elementary rule of economics: demand will be met by supply. If one insurance provider does not want to service a particular group under Alberta's competitive insurance industry, there is certain to be another company that sees this as an opportunity and will fill the niche gap.

Mr. Speaker, let me begin by explaining just how the inequitable auto insurance rates charged for young men came to be. In the 1930s, at the behest of insurance providers, legislation was passed in a number of jurisdictions across the country to allow insurance companies to develop a statistical plan. That is, the government allowed insurance companies to divide people into demographic groups such that different rates could be charged depending on the risk associated with each group, a risk determined by statistical analysis of that group's past. Initially, insurance companies chose to break down groups for customers only into business and pleasure drivers. By the 1950s these statistical groups had grown to include territory of the driver, previous accident claims, age, and marital status.

It was in 1957 that gender was introduced as a statistically significant criterion to break down insurance customers. Significantly, males under 25 were placed into a single statistical category, and any person who happened to be in this category was subject to the same hefty fees, whether they were the most irresponsible and reckless drivers on the road or the most courteous and careful people that ever sat behind a steering wheel.

So, Mr. Speaker, you can see that what has become an accepted abuse of gender equality started out as an addition to a law that had good intentions. The law does not demand that this categorization of males persist. It is merely something that seemed to fit the parameters of the law. It has crept in and stayed because no one has felt it a priority to remove it. Well, I'm making it a priority, and I hope you will agree that today is the day to fix this aberration that violates gender equality.

Some members of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, might question whether Albertans are truly moved by the abuse of their rights as individuals. As a member who takes pride in listening to her constituents' concerns, I can assure you that Albertans are upset, and increasingly so, at the way insurance provision works against them today.

I want to tell you the genesis of my introduction of this bill. When our son was graduating from high school, a friend of his was going into the trades to be a millworker. In order to do that, he had to buy his tools, which were expensive. He had to pay some tuition, some costs for his instruction. He had to buy a car, a set of wheels to get him to the work site because public transportation didn't take him there. So he did all of those, paid all of that, and then he had to take out insurance on the old car that he paid $500 for. What he was quoted for insurance was $4,020, something that he couldn't afford to pay. Hence, the reason why I'm here today to speak to this gender inequity is because this young man's older sister was only paying $900 at that time for the insurance on the car.

I have also brought with me, Mr. Speaker, a letter from a gentleman with the same root problem of abusive rates of insurance for young male drivers. With your permission – and I would provide copies to the House – I would like to read a paragraph from that letter. He says:

Although I realize that as a group, young men may have more accidents per driver than young women of the same age, the problem with the present system is that the determination of a driver's rating begins before he or she even gets behind the wheel, and is done so solely on the basis of gender. As you will no doubt agree, there are young men who are extremely safe drivers, and there are young women who are a road hazard. The injustice lies in prejudging a driver as safer or riskier based solely on what gender he or she was born. This must be stopped.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that members of the Legislature can see my point, that it is discrimination, plain and simple, to charge different rates for male and female drivers. Moreover, I hope they can see that this inequity is affecting Alberta's families. It is harming their mobility and in some cases limiting their ability to seek employment and to live a full and productive, honest and responsible life.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it clear that although I am very much in favour of removing inequities in insurance provision, I am also a very strong advocate of road safety. This is not at all a contradiction. I would be the first to say that offenders of our road laws should be punished fairly and expeditiously, but common sense alone tells us that not all male drivers are offenders and not all females are angels or vice versa or virtue versa.

If truth be told, Mr. Speaker, the greatest hazard on the road is young and inexperienced drivers. Driving is a skill that demands building a respect for the wheel, the vehicle, the road, and other drivers. Giving a driver time on the road is one of the most effective ways of building the maturity and confidence that will lead to reduced accidents. A report from the Coalition of Alberta Automobile Insurers, for instance, suggests that drivers with a licence for less than two years are twice as likely to be involved in a road accident.

I am, Mr. Speaker, fully in support of any policies that serve to reduce the hazard posed by inexperienced drivers. I am, for instance, a strong advocate of graduated licensing. For those members of the Assembly who may not be aware, I would like to explain the details of such graduated licensing. The essence of this policy is to turn the process of licence issuing from a sudden, complete process to an incremental process drawn out over time. Drivers are initially given a licence with certain restrictions placed on it that keep the driver away from driving hazard zones. It is a creative policy, nonjudgmental as to gender, and it works.

Ontario, for instance, instituted graduated licensing in 1994. In that time there has been a 31 percent drop in collisions, and the injury/fatality rate dropped by nearly 25 percent. Graduated licensing evaluations in Maryland, California, and Oregon have shown a 5 to 16 percent reduction in new driver crashes. So, Mr. Speaker, it is with great enthusiasm that I would herald Alberta's efforts to introduce a similar graduated licensing program. As it stands, Alberta will be joining almost every other province in Canada this year by enacting a graduated licensing program that will take effect shortly.

The last point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is that in legislating a law that prohibits insurance providers from charging higher rates for males, the result will not be insurance providers refusing to provide insurance for young males. Such a result defies the rules of elementary economics. In Alberta we have a competitive insurance industry regime. That is, any insurance company that meets certain standards is allowed to and encouraged to open for business in this province. This being the case, it makes little sense that all insurance providers would suddenly stop offering any insurance to males.

To support this point, I ask the members of this Assembly to turn their attention to the state of Montana. In 1985 legislation was passed in that jurisdiction which was very much in sync with the proposed legislation today. It unilaterally prohibited the use of gender in auto and all lines of insurance. It did not prohibit the factor of age nor modify its insurance regime in any way that would magnify the effect of simply removing gender as a rating variable. What was the result? Exactly as I have put forward to you today: no auto insurers stopped writing auto insurance for males for reasons other than noncompliance with state solvency laws. Mr. Speaker, this example serves to emphasize that the threat of an insurance provider exodus is merely a myth. It is an unsubstantiated fear that defies both logic and precedent.

I have presented this afternoon at length why Bill 202 is important to me personally and why it is important, I believe, to Albertans. In summary, I have shown, I hope, how provisions to allow for gender discrimination evolved over time, that gender was not always a criterion of insurance provision in Alberta, and that it need not continue to be an aspect of insurance provision.

Secondly, I brought forward the testimony of a number of Albertans to demonstrate that the issue is important to them. The passage of this bill and the efforts it will make in reducing gender discrimination will liberate young males and their families from an entirely unjust financial burden. It is a liberty that is owed to the young males of this province that are conscientious and responsible citizens. It is a liberty that is long overdue.

Third, Mr. Speaker, I emphasized that I am a strong advocate of road safety. My commitment to eliminating inequities in auto insurance premiums does not contradict my duty to this important cause. I believe Alberta's efforts to introduce graduated licensing are well placed, and I believe without a doubt that the new licensing system will markedly reduce traffic collisions on Alberta roads. Graduated licensing is a positive, nondiscriminatory way of reducing road hazards in this province.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out again that it is nothing but erroneous to suggest that the introduction of legislation eliminating gender discrimination in auto insurance will cause young males to be denied access to insurance. Businesses will continue to be eager to meet the needs of the young male market. Evidence from other jurisdictions only confirms this point.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is important for Alberta. It deals with a topic that has not received attention to any great extent in the past decade, not because it has not been important but because it has not had a voice. Some years ago my constituents raised their voice, and I'm here today to ensure that that voice is heard in this Legislative Assembly.

I ask for the support of all here to address this inequity as I have outlined in the auto insurance premium payments.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to address Bill 202, the Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001. I always assumed that I would be the very last person in this Assembly who would speak against eliminating any kind of gender inequities in this province, but I find on this particular bill that I'm really torn in terms of the choices that we have before us. Eliminating gender inequities, whether they're male or female, is something that I have fought for over many years. But in all cases I think it's very important that we take a look at the issues before us and make decisions based on fact and background information rather than just assuming that if there is a bias, it needs to be eliminated.

I'm not convinced that this particular bill is the answer to this particular situation. I think, to me, at first glance it looks like tinkering around an issue that really calls for overall reform. Certainly there are lots of issues with car insurance that need to be addressed, and the gender bias may be one of them, Mr. Speaker, but I'm a little reluctant to take a look at it in isolation of the rest of the criteria that need to be talked about.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, having a 17-year-old son and a 15-year-old daughter, so both of them are at the stages where they're wanting to be driving, have licences. What do you do about the insurance situation? There's no doubt that it is exorbitant for young men. I'm a single parent, so if my son is insured with my car – he's insured as an independent driver, not as a second driver on one car. The quotes we've had range from $2,700 a year to $3,700 a year. For my daughter, who'll be 16 very shortly, the same quotes come in about $750 to $900, so I see that there are great inequities.

Why are they terrible? I think that's the question that we need to ask ourselves. What is it in the background of these young men driving that puts them in such a higher premium class? I don't think these decisions are just pulled out of thin air. I take a look at my two kids and I see that my son is a very dependable guy. He is an excellent driver, I think, a very reliable kind of kid, a very safe driver, but he's also a kid who can't find the milk in the fridge most days, Mr. Speaker. So what does that say to their perceptions when they're out there on the road? That is a question that I ask myself every time I see him getting into the car of one of his friends. How safe are they really out there? How well are they able to judge the different influences they have as they're driving and able to react to them in a timely fashion?

A couple of years ago I took a defensive driving course put on by one of the local companies where we had a really mixed group of ages and genders. By far the young men under 25 were the absolute worst drivers in terms of reaction time and being able to analyze what they would do in a potentially dangerous situation. There were young women there under 25 too. There were older people. [interjections] No, I don't think that the young women were the distraction in this particular case. Certainly we could see that these young men did not have the reaction time and were not able to assimilate all the information coming to them in any where close to the same kind of reaction time of the other groups. So it leads me to think that there is some justification for the kinds of classifications we have now.

When we take a look at this bill bringing into effect the reduction of a gender bias, the theory sounds really good, but how does it actually work in practical applications, Mr. Speaker? If we take a look at other provinces where this has been brought forward, what we find out is that the responses of the insurance companies are quite interesting. So far in Canada the provinces that have changed their criteria are British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. What happens is that the government insurers in these provinces have chosen to charge less than the risk assumed for young drivers and male drivers and charge more for older drivers and female drivers, so you've got a cross-subsidization happening there. That is obviously going to be of consequence. If we subsidize one group of drivers, somebody else pays the price, so I think that's something that needs to be looked at.

In 1988 the Ontario Automobile Insurance Board proposed changes to their classifications that would have disallowed the use of age or gender or marital status as a ranking criteria, and what happened was that the proposed uniform classification plan was dropped by the government due largely to opposition from older drivers, who would have paid substantially higher premiums.

I don't think we can take a look at this particular bill in isolation of all the other factors that impact on it. I think definitely it's an issue that needs to be studied. I think we need to hear both sides of the story. We need to send this bill out to insurance companies and to other groups who are affected by it and get their feedback on it to find out what people think.

Certainly when we see court rulings about this issue, so far what's happened in the Canadian courts is that the rulings have come down in favour of current practices. They talk in the rulings about how the insurance industry must be allowed time to restructure the classification system in a manner that eliminates all kinds of discrimination in group characteristics and that so far there are no reasonable alternatives to setting these premiums. I agree with that.

I think we need an overhaul in the system. I think that we have a responsibility as legislators to put some pressure on the insurance industry to start to address that. I think there are many different ways that that can happen, but I don't think that we can just tinker with the system in this instance and think that that's going to come anywhere close to solving the outstanding issues.

I say that, being on both sides of the coin in terms of having to pay for insurance for these kids that are going out on the road, and I think we need more information. I think it's true that the greatest problems we have are inexperienced drivers, but also reaction times and ability to process multiple sources of information coming to people is an issue to be talked about. I think we're a long way from being able to bring in legislation that starts to address this issue.

I think that I would be fully supportive of any kind of a review that the government could bring forward on this or any initiatives brought forward by private members on this kind of an issue, but I just don't think that I am prepared at this particular time to support a bill that is tinkering.

So with those comments I'll take my seat and allow other members to participate in the debate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak on Bill 202, brought forward by the hon. Member for St. Albert. The bill proposes that under the insurance system both males and females should have the right to contract similar insurance services on equal terms without discrimination.

Mr. Speaker, as an advocate for equal rights for all I agree that we must try to achieve greater equality between men and women in our society. Allowing young men and women to pay vastly different auto insurance rates is discrimination, plain and simple. We cannot allow a practice that judges whether people are liable based on nothing more than just their gender. Several inquiries have concluded that the Alberta Insurance Act encourages and perpetrates the segregation of people by gender. This is a classification system that gives rise to discrimination of individuals, which violates their protected rights.

Different insurance companies within Alberta have developed several categories of insurance rates according to driver statistics. In order to keep the insurance level fair in each category, they have developed a system that differentiates between things like people who do not have driving experience, the amount the driver will be on the road, and where the driver lives. However, they have taken this categorization a huge step further; they have divided drivers under 25 into male and female categories. This becomes a problem when males under 25 are facing insurance bills $1,000 higher than their female counterparts. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Insurance Act has allowed insurance companies to judge a person and their personal liabilities based on the fact that they are male or female, not personal experience or behaviour.

This bill would eliminate one of the last remaining acceptable practices of gender discrimination. All other classifications currently used for insurance purposes are classifications that the driver can choose to change his insurance rate. A person can decide what vehicle to drive, whether or not to take driver education, or what they use that vehicle for. Gender is something we have no choice over, and it is not fair to group people by it and impose vastly different rates based on this reason.

There are just as many good male drivers as female drivers. It is just that males on the average drive greater distances, which increases their chances for an accident and skews the statistics. This must be taken into consideration. We must judge people based on an individual's experience, not a generalization based on physical characteristics beyond their control, though it is a difficult decision to make in light of the poor statistics against male drivers under the age of 25. I don't believe we should ever discriminate against Albertans based on their gender.

This method of a gender-based system could be seen as over-charging some drivers by the risk they bring to the system. The present system takes a large amount from a small group and only slightly reduces the burden of the many, whereas developing genderless insurance would spread the burden of high cost by taking small increments from the many. When applying the multiple variables such as age and territory for the drivers who happen to fall in more than one high-risk category, it yields unsound premiums for such drivers. Rating with fewer categories merits a plan based more on individual experience. This would better justify the cost of premiums and build individual driver incentives.

The final benefit of Bill 202 is the social gain for individual rights that we will receive for eliminating another barrier. Discrimination based on gender is something that we do not and should not stand for in Alberta, especially as a member of this Assembly. Continued support of a rating system for stereotyping young, unmarried males as bad drivers can produce greater negative economic effects.

Those who are under the age of 25 in our society are usually unmarried and starting to build their earning potential. It does seem unfair to take the disproportionate share of costs from those who are economically incapable or deprived. Moreover, it is unfair to such high-risk drivers to allocate various administrative expenses in proportion to the premium charged. They have no choice under the present system of what category they are assigned to, yet they are also charged extra administrative expenses that match their premium.

By promoting a classification system, people must be judged by statistical risk from the beginning, not after losses are incurred. Thus, rates cannot be assessed on the individual experience, because forecasts of risk can be made only with reference to a group of statistics, and this is something we have to take into account.

To extend an individual rating system to its limits would eliminate the concept of grouping, which is essential to insurance. In any case, the ability to predict the randomness of accidents is not a function of category-based insurance. It is reflected in the fact that some current social science theory demonstrates a preference for the use of statistical groupings over the individual cause in social science or studies.

Discrimination based on age or marital status does not imply socially offensive stereotypes in insurance. Discrimination based on sex taken together with other factors employed permits the separation of low-risk drivers from high-risk drivers. Also, the present system permits a reduction in rate wherever the improved performance of a particular category of drivers is detected, including performance of young male drivers.

Mr. Speaker and fellow members in the Assembly, I would like to say that the cause of rights, responsibilities, and equalities is important to uphold. Yet the whole principle behind categories of insurance premiums is the ability to charge the high-risk customer based on their ability, with or without individual experience. Though it is, again, a difficult decision to make in light of poor statistics against male drivers under the age of 25, I don't believe we should discriminate against Albertans on the basis of their gender. Creating a system based on individual experience would show that as a society we do not support judging people on the differences they cannot control but by their ability.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I rise this afternoon to speak to a private member's bill. It is with interest that I speak this afternoon. I would like to congratulate the hon. Member for St. Albert for reintroducing it, or, in these terms, if you at first are not successful, try and try again. The hon. member introduced this bill in 1999, and here we are this afternoon.

This bill, I believe, would restrict or limit the use of gender as an auto insurance rating criteria. Certainly this whole issue has been discussed in this province before. Of course, we go back – I think it's 11 years, Mr. Speaker, since this issue was dealt with at a human rights tribunal. By the time it moved through the process, the individual who initiated this hearing had gone into another age bracket and had insurance rates that were substantially reduced. But it did go to the Supreme Court of Canada at some point.

The only provinces that currently restrict the use of gender are the government insurers in B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. I believe there's a verdict coming any day now, Mr. Speaker, on the government-run insurance program in British Columbia. I have read extensively about that, and I think the jury is going to release their verdict on that.

The Insurance Act is to be amended, of course, by this bill, and I understand this is to be added after section 294. Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed in the last session of the Legislative Assembly did a lot of work on overhauling the first part of the Insurance Act, which, as I understand it, had not had any extensive work since the First World War, and she worked very hard. She worked very hard with a group of people from the industry, and the bill was so large, they decided to do it in two sections. I'm curious, and hopefully later on in the debate in this Assembly the hon. Member for St. Albert can explain to the House why we need this stand-alone legislation and why we couldn't incorporate any of the further changes that are going to occur, hopefully in this term, with the Insurance Act.

Now, similar proposed changes were discussed in Ontario, I understand, in 1998, but they were dropped by the government due largely to opposition from older and female drivers, who would have faced substantially higher premiums. There's a trade-off here, and contrary to what some government spokespersons may say, we do not have an aging crisis, an aging population in this province. We're one of the youngest provinces in Canada, but at some point in the future another generation, in the years 2016-2018, will have a substantially larger percentage of the population, 14 percent I believe, over the age of 65. If we were to reduce the premiums for one age group, will it unfairly increase them for another? If the hon. member could perhaps address these issues as the debate continues, Mr. Speaker, I would be very grateful.

I listened with interest to her remarks regarding graduated licensing, and I would be curious to know if there have been any studies conducted or perhaps even concluded in relation to graduated licensing and how that makes safety on our highways better and also if it reduces the number of accidents in those age groups.

Now, we're going to go through this legislative process, and we have to consider, when we discuss this bill, what has happened in the Supreme Court of Canada, and we have to look at and respect that the final rulings by the Canadian courts have been in favour of the current practices. We look at the 1992 Supreme Court of Canada decision in Bates versus Zurich Insurance and the 1993 Alberta Court of Appeal decision in Watters versus The Co-operators. The Supreme Court in 1992 upheld the use of age, gender, and marital status as rating criteria, and it was a majority opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I wonder what sort of consultations the hon. Member for St. Albert has had with the Insurance Bureau of Canada or perhaps with Mr. Wood here in Alberta. In response to this challenge, Mr. Speaker, the Insurance Bureau of Canada has examined auto insurance rating practices used in a number of countries and has conducted a detailed actuarial analysis for nine driver-related variables in data collected from all insurers through the current automobile statistics. The findings and recommendations from the survey and the actuarial analysis are concluded in two main points. A better measurement of risk is the best tool to ensure fairness in the pricing of automobile insurance for consumers, and age and gender are actuarially significant variables in the accurate determination of accident risk. Secondly, elimination of age or gender as auto insurance rating criteria would significantly disrupt current pricing as the cost of subsidizing young and male drivers is imposed on older and, again, on female drivers.

There is a relationship between driver age and accident frequency, and that has been well established. Now, young drivers are involved in a greater number of both fatal and injury-producing accidents than their older counterparts. The relative risk facing younger drivers can be as high as 2.5 to 3 times that of older drivers, and the evidence is also clear that female drivers typically demonstrate a lower accident risk than male drivers. The insurance industry recognizes that the higher accident frequency of younger drivers is due in part to their lack of driving experience. However, numerous studies have also demonstrated that because of their lifestyles and outlooks, young drivers still represent a greater risk than older drivers with the same amount of driving experience.

Now, to reduce premiums. If the hon. member's initiative here with Bill 202 is to do that for everyone, well, then I believe we're going to have to take a long look at considering supporting this bill. How the legislation will work in light of the insurance industry's visits previously to the courts not only here in Alberta but also in Ottawa should be considered by this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, we have to look again very closely at Manitoba and Saskatchewan and British Columbia and the different systems that those provinces employ and, overall, at which better serves the consumers. It's fine to think that the insurance industry will appeal to the courts, but I would suggest to the hon. member – and perhaps the hon. member has already been in consultation with the insurance industry regarding this issue – that certainly it's an issue that we all will deal with eventually at our constituency offices. When we look at what the Alberta Human Rights Commission concluded in 1990, that yes, there was discrimination, and at what happened further along in the judicial system, then perhaps the best way of dealing with this is to consult, whenever there are further consultations with the insurance industry and consumer groups in regards to strengthening and modernizing the current Insurance Act.

Now, I don't know the business of the governing party, but certainly the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed did a very good job with the first initial modernization of the Insurance Act. Of course the jury will still be out on that because the consumers are just getting to understand, as is the industry, the implications of the first part of the modernization of the Insurance Act. Perhaps that is where this bill belongs, in the second part of the overhaul of the Insurance Act.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, with those remarks on Bill 202 I shall cede the floor to one of my hon. colleagues. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly pleased this afternoon to rise to speak in support of Bill 202, the insurance amendment act. I will present three reasons this afternoon for why this bill should be given just review and ultimately be passed by members of this Legislature.

First, the bill deals directly with a subject that is fundamental to the existence of this elected body, the principles of equity and justice. It does not take much common sense to realize the current practice of charging different prices merely based on gender is a violation of the most basic sense of equity. This is especially true in face of the fact that there are other accurate measures for determining risk that can be used.

Secondly, I would like to point out to the Legislature that Alberta is not the only jurisdiction that has considered legislation regarding automobile insurance. Several provinces in Canada and the U.S. have passed such legislation. In each of these cases the problems predicted by the opponents of this bill, such as insurance operators refusing to offer insurance to male drivers and massive increases in insurance premiums for female drivers, have failed to materialize.

Finally, I want to add that the idea for this bill was brought forward by a constituent, and passage of this bill will be a demonstration of the effectiveness of this legislative Chamber as being truly responsible to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, gender equity has been a much discussed topic in Alberta and around the world for several past decades. Most often the concern has been that women have been discriminated against in their workplaces, their homes, and their communities. Judicial bodies and legislatures have taken action to address these very legitimate and fundamental concerns motivated by the very basic premise that men and women must be treated as equals and individuals and that any set of rules that violates such a premise leads to an unjust society. Yet as these actions go on, we continue to allow for the existence of a regulation that violates the equity of men. Quite simply, allowing insurance providers to charge different fees for men and women, no matter how it is justified, is an act of sexual discrimination. Merely by being born as a male, a factor that clearly no one can influence, people are subject to higher insurance premiums under current regulations.

According to statements from the Alberta Motor Association there could be up to $1,000 yearly difference between the costs for males and females under 25, even with an identical driving record. If Alberta seeks to achieve the admirable goal of gender equity, it must not allow insurance providers to continue to charge these substantially higher premiums for males.

Opponents to this bill, Mr. Speaker, are sure to have suggested that equity can be justifiably violated in a situation where the group causing the highest loss costs pay the higher premiums. Indeed, the statistics do suggest that young males are more likely to get into an accident than females. The point of this bill, however, is to recognize that it is not all males that cause accidents; it is only a few. Those that do cause accidents should justifiably pay higher premiums. Those that do not are being outrightly discriminated against for their gender. Similarly, not all women avoid accidents. Some are free riding off the relatively reduced rates provided for their gender.

Rather than deciding on rates by dividing drivers into men and women, the equitable solution would be to look at drivers as individuals, to judge their performance as individuals and charge them a premium proportional to this individual performance. For instance, insurance providers could collect such statistics as miles driven per year, previous driving record, and convictions or the number of claims made by the driver. This information is easily obtainable and shows a direct link with the likely future driving record. Most importantly, it looks at drivers as individuals and does not judge them on the gender they are born. Gender equity will only become about in recognizing this very basic point and passing this bill.

The second point I seek to address, Mr. Speaker, is that the evidence from jurisdictions that have made changes similar to those proposed here is that they have not suffered from the negative consequences that opponents of this bill have suggested would occur. Insurance that does not discriminate based on gender exists, and it is working without problems. There are several such jurisdictions in Canada and in the United States.

I would like to refer to the case of the state of Montana. In 1985 Montana entirely eliminated the use of gender or marital status as a legitimate grounds in drawing up insurance rates. In no other way did they modify the insurance rate regime that amplified the effect of simply removing gender as a rating variable. And what were the results? No auto insurers refused to write insurance for young male drivers. There was no exodus of insurance providers fleeing from the state regulation. Indeed, it seems few providers, if any, have closed or moved since the introduction of the legislation in 1985. So despite what some opponents assure us would happen if this bill were to pass, insurance was still available. It is a myth that insurance providers will not continue to have an incentive to provide insurance for young male drivers if gender equity is made the law.

On this note of successful precedence, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make it clear that evidence suggests not only that insurance would continue to be available for young male drivers but that under current legislation insurance agencies would most likely be required to provide some level of insurance. Under the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, it would likely be illegal for the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board not to provide adequate insurance to young male drivers. Of course, as mentioned, the necessity for such judicial intervention would be remote because insurance providers would be perfectly willing to cover young male drivers. I merely mention the point to address the inaccuracies put forth by opponents of the bill.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that passage of this bill would serve to confirm that we in Alberta continue to be responsive to the people that elect us. This bill was brought to the attention of the Member for St. Albert by one of her constituents. She believes in it. She has been passionate about defending the voice of Albertans. It is time that this Assembly recognizes this determination, this effort to make the legislative process do the very duties it was created for. They must see that something which has been fought for this hard probably has some virtues that members may not have previously considered.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, I have brought forth three important points about Bill 202. The first is that despite what excuses may be brought forth, charging a different insurance premium for someone merely because they are born male is simply inequitable. Allowing insurance companies to continue with this practice is condoning gender discrimination.

Secondly, I've brought forth the point that other measures of determining insurance rates in an equitable manner can exist and in fact are being practised. The Automobile Insurance Board in Alberta has said that there exists no obvious surrogate for gender. Well, they are wrong. Other factors such as miles driven, driving record convictions, and number of claims accurately predict a driver's behaviour and can serve as perfectly suitable surrogates.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been brought forth in a manner that represents the best of the democratic process in Alberta. A violation of the equality of Albertans has occurred. A constituent brought an idea forward to their MLA to confront the inequity. The MLA has worked hard to get her colleagues to give consideration to the benefits of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, may I just say that because of the points made, I would urge the Assembly to support this bill and pass it. I now wish to move that we adjourn debate on the bill at this time.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 11, 2001 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 01/04/11
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Government Motions

Easter Recess

5. Mr. Stevens moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
 Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns on Thursday, April 12, 2001, at the regular hour of 5:30 p.m., it shall stand adjourned for three sitting days, until Monday, April 23, 2001, at 1:30 p.m.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

head: Consideration of Her Honour
 the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and privilege to rise this evening and reply to the Speech from the Throne on behalf of the constituents of Banff-Cochrane. I am also very proud to move acceptance of the throne speech presented by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor opening the First Session of the 25th Alberta Legislature on behalf of our hon. Premier, my caucus colleagues, and our government.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne is one of the more important documents that we as members of the Legislature address in this House. It highlights our government's plan for the coming year and reflects the hopes and dreams of Albertans. Our job is to turn these hopes and dreams into reality.

As mentioned in the speech, we are beginning a new session with a new group of legislators recently chosen by Albertans to represent them in this Chamber. We have been given a solemn responsibility and a duty to honour the trust that has been placed upon us by Albertans, and yesterday we were cautioned to respect that trust and to remember that first and foremost we are here in service to the people of this province. I believe we should seriously heed this advice, and I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate each and every member of the Legislature and sincerely wish them well in carrying out their duties. Regardless of party affiliation we all love this province and are committed to its success and its betterment. While our future is full of challenges, it is also full of opportunities, and working together we can find what we as a province are capable of.

Two months ago Albertans were presented a vision for our future which included low taxes, no debt, a strong economy, new jobs for our young people, sound infrastructure, good health and learning systems, stable and safe communities, and reliable social programs. This vision and our plan to implement it have been strongly endorsed by Albertans. They have told us to stay the course and to do so in a balanced manner that is both bold and thoughtful. Alberta is in the rare and fortunate position of being able to respond to many of the public expectations that exist in the fiscal area, in the human services, and in the quality of life domain.

The Speech from the Throne lays a framework for moving forward with confidence as we attempt to successfully turn our potential into reality. After four years of working with the constituents of Banff-Cochrane and their issues, I can respond positively to the speech and the course it sets for the province as we aim to ensure that Albertans benefit from growth and prosperity and from quality, responsive, and affordable public services.

Mr. Speaker, geographically the constituency of Banff-Cochrane extends from the Calgary city limits to the Saskatchewan River Crossing. We incorporate parts of Bearspaw, much of Springbank, the hamlet of Bragg Creek and surrounding acreages, Cochrane, the Tsuu T'ina and Stoney reserves, the MD of Bighorn with Harvie Heights, Exshaw, Waiparous, and the Ghost River areas, Canmore, Banff, and Lake Louise. Without a doubt this constituency represents one of the most beautiful, vigorous, and vibrant parts of the province.

Our greatest assets are our natural surroundings and our people, and most of our challenges are related to growth. Within the constituency we have logging, oil and gas development, big and small industry, a growing number of small businesses, and some of the most spectacular ranching country in the world. We are one of this country's most popular tourist destinations and offer a wide variety of recreation in our many growing communities. All parts of the constituency are viewed as very desirable places to live and visit, and more people are wanting to call it home. Residents are there by choice. They love the mountains and the rolling hills and are passionate about their quality of life. They want to be there. They want to recreate there, raise families, do business and yet be close to the big city with its amenities. It's considered ideal 'rurbanville' with its proximity to Calgary and countrylike living.

But like many other parts of this province increasing demands for expansion do cause us to struggle with growth management, sustainable development, and controversy over land uses. Our growth puts pressures on schools, health care services, and infrastructure. It is precisely these challenges and others that the Speech from the Throne addresses.

Like this government plan Banff-Cochrane constituents recognize that a strong economy is not an end in itself, rather a means to achieve the things that matter most to Albertans. Constituents agree that a strong economy begins with a sound fiscal plan. We know it's our fiscal position that now offers flexibility to Albertans in terms of future choices. A deficit and debt-free Alberta is one of the greatest gifts that members of this Assembly can leave our children and their children. Government's commitment to keeping taxes the lowest in Canada and ensuring that spending is responsible and affordable will lead to a future with endless possibilities.

While the speech touches on a multitude of industries, I would like to comment on tourism. The tourism industry in Banff-Cochrane continues to be among the top economic engines that drive our economy. Locally it is responsible for many livelihoods while at the same time providing a solid base for other ventures. Therefore, I am pleased to see this area highlighted as a priority of the government. Tourism is this province's fourth largest industry and deserves our attention. Visitors to the province last year generated approximately $4.2 billion for businesses and tourism operators, and concerted efforts are needed to retain our competitive advantage as an international travel destination.

Mr. Speaker, the speech speaks of the benefits of our participation in a free energy market and our need to ensure Albertans have access to a reliable, ample, and affordable energy supply within the province. On behalf of the constituents I welcome both the proposed legislation to help protect consumers from high natural gas prices as well as the creation of the Government Advisory Council on Electricity to address electricity price concerns. Acknowledging the public interest in this area with strong action will help us maintain the Alberta advantage.

Agriculture holds a historic and important place in the province. The speech speaks to the viability of farms and rural communities as another priority of this government. With one in every three jobs depending on agriculture, we need to support Alberta farmers in times of need. Safe, affordable food production cannot be taken for granted, and long-term strategies based on the insights of Ag Summit 2000 are critical.

I've had the wonderful opportunity over the last few years to represent and get to know constituents who are involved in agriculture and have learned much about their many challenges. Organizations like Action for Agriculture, which consists of farmers, ranchers, and acreage owners, have kept me informed on issues like the inherent conflict between farming operations and residential development. The loss of agricultural land due to urban sprawl is only one issue, but it becomes larger, much broader, and more complex, particularly as Alberta's economy grows. I'm sure the initiatives set out in this speech to ensure the long-term sustainability of this diverse industry will be received well by these constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I can strongly support the significant part of the speech committing to government's desire to show their leadership in preserving and protecting Alberta's environment and with it Albertans' health and quality of life. A number of new initiatives will enhance environmental stewardship and ensure economic growth is responsible. The government will continue to strike a balance between preserving Alberta's natural heritage and sustaining its use as a contributor to outdoor recreation, nature appreciation and development.

Mr. Speaker, nowhere in this great province will you find residents that better understand the concept of striking the right balance than those of Banff-Cochrane. It is a reality of our daily lives. While we benefit from Canada's first national park, provincial parks, and Kananaskis Country in our backyards, we are also charged with their preservation and good management. We know that both the environment and the economy affect our quality of life. We must not sacrifice one for the other but rather must sustain both in a complementary way. Our success will always depend on how well we are doing that. We can with thoughtful planning and a balanced approach leave a legacy of our children.

Mr. Speaker, as well as a clean environment the speech speaks to government's strong commitment to a responsive and publicly funded health care system. Consistent with the recent expressed views of Albertans, priorities next year focus on health service access, illness prevention, and public accountability. While health care issues are shared across the country, I do believe we have the greatest ability of successfully meeting these challenges. A greater emphasis on home care, environmental health and prevention activities, while ensuring access to needed emergency and medical services, is evident among health regions. As well, we are working with health authorities on long-range plans for continuing care services that will help meet the future needs of aging Albertans in a co-ordinated and versatile fashion.

Like health care, education continues to be a top priority for this government. We all know the greatest returns are made from investments in learning. Albertans expect and deserve a system that will nurture the minds and skills of Albertans of all ages from every part of the province. We have all recently had the opportunity to discuss education issues with many constituents, and I believe support is there for a government plan that involves lifelong learning that begins well before kindergarten and continues long after formal education. The speech lists initiatives ranging from increased funding to school boards for improved student learning to enhancements for a more accessible and affordable postsecondary system. There is no reason why we cannot and should not maintain Alberta's learning system as one of the best in the world.

Over the past two years I had the privilege of serving as chair of the standing policy committee on health and safe communities. I know firsthand the importance of focusing on many variables that support safe and strong communities. We must start with children, youth, and families that are at risk, but we must not stop there. Programs that will protect and enrich the lives of Albertans of all ages and all circumstances will help ensure a high quality of life tomorrow. As a society we are judged by how we take care of our less fortunate, and government must continue to do its part to support the truly needy and create a safety net with more self-reliance.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne speaks to Albertans' ability this fall to participate in charting a course for this province's debt-free future. The recently announced Future Summit will harness ideas and give us all a voice in crafting the vision that will carry us forward into the future. Unlike many jurisdictions we have real options. We have real choices. The opportunities created by freedom from debt go beyond simple economics. They are about choices for the kind of province that we all want to live in, a province where all citizens share in the prosperity and optimism and where opportunities become limitless.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share a quote from the speech.

The government's plan for Alberta's future reflects the values of Albertans themselves, values of community and family, hard work and caring for others, creativity, confidence and innovation, and excellence in all endeavours.

These values have guided us through history and, rightfully so, continue to guide this government. The government plan as presented in the Speech from the Throne bodes well for Albertans. It demonstrates our interest in improving an already strong province and sets the stage for raising our current levels of success. It considers both young and old and provides opportunities for Albertans to enjoy the many benefits of living and working in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to represent the constituents of Banff-Cochrane, I am proud to be an Albertan, and I am very pleased to move that this House accept the Speech from the Throne.

Thank you.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to second the motion for consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech. Yesterday's throne speech reaffirmed a strong, confident direction for Alberta, and I believe this government will continue protecting Albertans through energy rebates, environmental stewardship, a responsive health care system, and a strong education system.

I would like to begin by congratulating all the new and returning MLAs. We're here because the people of Alberta believe in us and have put faith in our abilities to keep this the best province in Canada. Needless to say, I'm honoured and very happy to be part of this government. It is exciting to be a member of this Legislature that will continue to build on the incredibly strong foundation laid down under three decades of Progressive Conservative governance.

I would like to take a minute and introduce you to my constituency, Edmonton-Meadowlark. It is diverse and special. In fact, I think I'm representing the best constituency in the province. The constituency spans neighbourhoods in west Edmonton, from the older communities of Meadowlark and Elmwood in the east to the new, expanding community of Lewis Estates. It is home to one of the wonders of the shopping world and an attraction that draws tourists from around the world, West Edmonton Mall.

The old town of Jasper Place has been a part of Edmonton since the early '60s. It has a long, rich history, and in many ways the old town of JP still exists. The roots go deep. Part of the old town is in Edmonton-Meadowlark, and in many ways the old town has stayed intact, with three or four generations of families still living there. Many of the young people moved out after high school to attend a postsecondary institution, work elsewhere, or visit the world, but they came back and chose to live in the community alongside family and friends. I was reminded of this while campaigning. As I door-knocked my way through the communities, I recognized familiar faces and met again with old friends. I met with second and third generations. It was a great reunion. So many people remembered me as their teacher or their children's teacher. Frankly, it scared me spitless. Thankfully, they remembered me fondly. Do you think it's this ample figure perhaps?

Mr. Speaker, my single greatest passion has been education. I've been at two wonderful schools: Jasper Place and Vic. Many of today's Vic students are from Edmonton-Meadowlark. I've been principal of Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts for 16 years. It's my pride and joy. It has changed from a high school with a tough inner-city reputation that had been on the list of schools to be closed. Today it's a K to 12 school that includes IB and the arts at all grade levels. It is now considered a provincial centre for excellence, and we've been called the Julliard of Canada. Our students receive an education through the arts, but not many will be artists in their own right. They will be the future business and political leaders, et cetera, in this country.

A lot of time is spent on ensuring they understand this global village that has evolved. Just after the provincial election I led a group of 39 students, teachers, parents, and community members to China on an education mission. We traveled to eight cities and visited two schools, building relationships with Chinese students and teachers. China is a second home to me after more than 30 visits since 1984. Some of the people we met there will be visiting Edmonton for the same reason we went to China. At least 60 students will attend summer camps in July here in Edmonton as a result of this visit.

I cannot say enough about the importance of sharing educational experiences and skills with people from other countries. Forging partnerships with other nations can only help young people in Alberta. They learn tolerance and understand different cultures, but they also learn that the world is not as big as they think it is. This government through Minister Oberg's department has done a wonderful job of encouraging and promoting opportunities for students and teachers to participate in international exchanges by providing a large and strong languages program. I look forward to working to continue to further develop these opportunities.

While in China I was reminded of how strong we are at home. On the return trip, when I was preparing to leave from Hong Kong, I was pleasantly surprised to see an advertisement for West Edmonton Mall. Here I was halfway across the world and I was reading about my home constituency. So you see, Mr. Speaker, it's not just about reaching Albertans or Edmontonians anymore. No, I believe we're becoming the world's worst kept secret. The partnerships and programs this government has forged with other nations have made Alberta a force to be reckoned with around the globe.

I believe we must continue our hard work in making Alberta the best place to live, especially in the field of education. Yesterday's throne speech reaffirmed this government's recognition and support for a strong lifelong learning system. Strong education for our young people increases our ability to compete globally in all areas.

As a rookie I'm going to share a little about myself. I'm proud to say that I'm a fourth-generation Albertan. Hard work and opportunity are why I'm here today. I had a mother that was abandoned when I was in grade 5. You know, in the 1950s a young woman from the Sangudo area with about a grade 8 education, raising a family on her own, was a rare thing indeed. I think my sister and I were the only students in our school that were part of a single-parent family.

I was also working before it was legal to do so. I worked at a bakery from grade 7 all the way through high school. When I graduated from Victoria high school, I remember the principal scolding my mother because I was not going on to university. It hurt my mother deeply, but at that time there was no financial support for postsecondary education other than that from the family. Attending university was not an option for me. Mr. Speaker, Premier Klein and this government have ensured that the support is there for all students who wish to pursue a postsecondary education.

After high school I went to work for the Northern Alberta Railways as an executive assistant. That was in the days when males were taking shorthand and typing for senior CEOs and so on. For 10 years I worked at the NAR in the daytime and worked full-time at the bakery in the evening six days a week. It seems like it's much like the life of an Alberta MLA, I'm beginning to think already.

I tell you all of this not as a poor-me story but because my dream to become a teacher had to wait until I was 29 years old. By the time I went back to school to get my education, I had a wife, a dependant, and a mortgage. I am thankful for my university degree as it has enriched my life beyond belief. I have loved every minute of my years at Jasper Place and Vic as a teacher, as a principal, and I've always thought about how proud my principal at Vic would have been seeing me sitting in his chair. I have forgiven his thoughtless comments to my mother.

I started teaching in 1969. You know, when you've heard already baker, railroader, teacher, principal and look at me, I know you are going to find it hard to believe that I've been teaching for 32 years. Through my 32 years of experience I have witnessed many changes to our education system. When I started teaching, it was usually six rows of six and maybe two or three sitting on the windowsill or on chairs in the aisles. I've shared many of the concerns of my colleagues in education, but yesterday's throne speech addressed these concerns with increased funding, including funding to ensure teachers are equitably compensated.

The road to success in Alberta is beating adversity through hard work and opportunity. Premier Klein through his visionary leadership has ensured that Alberta is Canada's strongest province. We have taken advantage of our resources, natural and human, and have made sure not to waste opportunities to build on our success. The Speech from the Throne outlined the Future Summit as a great example of this government's commitment to increase Alberta's potential. I think this is a great way to secure success for our children and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, I will bring my strong work ethic, my experience, and the support of my constituents to this Legislature. I would like to thank the constituents of Edmonton-Meadowlark for the privilege of representing them in this Legislature. I'm excited about the vision of this government and look forward to this first session.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the honour of speaking today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to rise tonight to speak for a few minutes in response to the Speech from the Throne. I promise not to use the full time allotted tonight because we've got a lot of people who would like to get a chance.

I guess the issue is that when we look at this, my first reaction to it was: well, this is kind of a short Speech from the Throne. But when you look at it on a per page basis, I think there were probably more initiatives in this Speech from the Throne than there have been in many of the previous ones. With a couple more pages and the appropriate number of initiatives, we probably would have had a good, rounded agenda for this session.

I guess the thing that we see that's really missing in here the most is the commitment to people in Alberta that are truly in need, that have no united voice that can speak for them. We've got all kinds of options in here to provide for additional remuneration, additional incomes for individuals who are organized in any kind of a number of ways. Yet when we look at individuals that don't have that kind of organization or a voice that can speak for them, we don't see any kind of support for them other than kind of a little comment that we're going to review the basic needs for individuals that are on support programs or fixed incomes.

So what we need to do is start looking at it, and I hope that this will show up by the time we get to the budget on the 24th, that we'll see some kind of a commitment to provide dollars for individuals that are on fixed incomes: AISH, SFI, social welfare. These individuals need to have some mechanism built in so that they can develop long-term plans for their livelihood and basically be in a position where the income that they receive from the public does have a degree of indexing or a degree of equity in terms of their ability to have a sustained living.

Mr. Speaker, as we go through the speech, what I want to do is kind of touch on some of the issues that were brought up in some of the areas. The strong economy section was quite well covered, and we talked about some of the infrastructure needs, but there was no reference in here to the kind of studies that will deal with the role that the public transportation or the potential rail links between cities might have. These are the kinds of things that we have to start looking at now if we're going to deal with long-term growth in our province so that we can have programs that will allow both efficient and cost-effective transportation of goods within our province. We've got a lot of development now that's going on, say, in the corridor between Calgary and Edmonton, and we need to look at ways to service that in a cost-effective and economic way.

I think this comes up, Mr. Speaker, quite regularly. I could tell you that a year or so ago, when I was coming up from Lethbridge, I could go to the airport and get a ticket for about $480. A couple of weeks ago I went out to the airport to get a ticket to fly from Lethbridge up here, and they wanted round-trip $890. Well, I don't see how they can double the price for an airline ticket in the matter of about a year. So we've got to start looking at options that will give good transportation within this province, and some of the high-speed links that are possibly out there need to be looked at as 10 or 15 years into the future.

MR. McFARLAND: Fly Integra.

DR. NICOL: The Member for Little Bow suggested: fly Integra. This is a great airline – two of the owners of it were former students of mine at the university – but they're so full in the morning that if you don't get out there at least three or four days in advance, there's no chance to get on them. When you have to deal with a short-term flight, you have to pay the price.

Mr. Speaker, we want to talk about these kinds of things, and we see that the reference here to the kind of infrastructure that's needed to give us a strong economy is outlined and talked about. The suggestion also at the bottom of the page talks about the commitment to sustainable, reliable, ample, and affordable energy. This basically makes reference to the natural gas program that's coming forward. No reference in here to what we're going to do with electricity. We've got to start looking at how that kind of utility fits in as well, not only the natural gas component. This basically looks at our situation from a really short-term perspective.

As we try and look at the concept that we have now in our electricity market, we're basically going to be subject to the price fluctuations and the stability of the entire western grid. As we export power from this province, anytime there's a shortage somewhere in the western grid, our generators will have the capacity to ship into that market, and we'll be subject to that price fluctuation and that price at our margin or at our spot price, just like we were with natural gas last year. What we've got to do is put in place processes that will allow for a lot of stability in terms of the pricing and the availability for our utilities.

These are the kinds of things that provide a real incentive for our small businesses to come, to establish, and to stay in this province. If we don't have that kind of stability, what we see is that a number of them look at options when it comes time for them to make a major investment. They look at other locations as the best site for them to expand, and if they can go somewhere else where stability of their input costs is predictable, they will look very seriously at doing that. We heard of a number of cases in the past winter where individuals have said they were contemplating this. You know, we have to make sure that kind of stability is here for us so we can actually have a sound basis for companies that want to come in here.

The interesting phrase here is that we talk about in terms of we want to commit to, I guess, the free market for energy instead of a free energy market, as it's written up in the Speech from the Throne, but what we also then have is in the next paragraph we're talking about providing government subsidies, which is an intervention in that free market energy system. We've got to look at how we can support the price or develop a price within Alberta that is competitive and doesn't have market intervention strategies attached to it. This is why we in the Official Opposition are trying to encourage the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to look at the possibilities of dealing with long-term contracts or hedges as part of their approval process when they accept the price regime from the marketers that are providing us with our natural gas. If we don't have that kind of stability, we end up with the kind of crisis that we had this last year.

So I guess the thing we'll have to watch for in the Government Advisory Council on Electricity is whether or not they actually come in with good suggestions and are able to bring us a really stable type of future. If they're going to leave us attached on a spot-market basis to the western grid, anybody new coming into this province will always be subject to negotiating new contracts for supplies that are contingent upon what the generators can get by selling into that western grid. Until we see stability in California – Texas is now talking about deregulation – we're going to see this kind of uncertainty prevail through our electricity sector for as long as it exists. We'll have to make sure also that as we do that – because of that uncertainty and that short-term market potential that exists in those export markets, the generators that do establish here will be calculating a very quick return on their capital investment, which in essence will make our prices here also more costly if that becomes part of the calculation system.

The next section of the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, turns to stable agriculture communities. I think it would be really appropriate if we started to look at the whole aspect of what constitutes a rural community. Agriculture plays a very important role in establishing the economic system for those rural communities, but it's no longer the sole component of those rural communities. We're seeing more and more small businesses being established in rural communities, and they're now wanting a voice, wanting part of that decision process that we see in that rural community as they decide the kind of community they want, when they decide what type of growth, what type of investment activities they're looking for in those communities.

I guess that's why it was really good to see the references in here to the new policy dealing with intensive livestock operations. Mr. Speaker, you know I've been a strong proponent of these provincial-level standards for intensive livestock operations for a couple or three years now. What we need to do is look at also providing the local governments with broader flexibility in their land-use planning and their zoning options so that they can, in essence, deal with some of the conditions they want to incorporate in terms of their siting requirements that are over and above the environmental and minimum distance requirements that are included in the draft proposal that we've seen for intensive livestock. We want to make sure those local communities do have some say and some final control over the kind and the location of the types of livestock enterprises.

We also have to look at how we deal with the issues that come up in terms of the support structures that are put in place for farmers. The agriculture community in the last three or four years has really been faced with a lot of issues between a lot more variability in the weather, kind of a depressed world price being caused by the subsidies in the U.S. and Europe bringing forward more production, which drops the price available to the Canadian farmers because of our basic reliance on a free market, a competitive market, in the delivery of our agricultural products.

So we've got to look at how we can basically restructure some of our programs that provide the assistance. It was good to hear the minister of agriculture on the radio this morning when she was talking about and recognizing that a lot of these programs that we do have in place now haven't probably turned out to be as good as they originally were thought to be in terms of the ability to support farmers when they have conditions that are ongoing. The FIDP program, the farm income disaster program, basically is an excellent program for a one-year downturn in farm income, but when we get these longer cyclical downturns, we're getting into a position where farmers are not being served appropriately by that kind of program, which was designed for one use, and we're trying to put it into application in a different way.

The crop insurance review process, that has been ongoing under the former federal minister of agriculture, Charlie Mayer, I think has brought forward some really good suggestions in terms of how that program can be improved. But what we've got to do is look at: can we bring the crop insurance, the farm income disaster program, and the net income stabilization program at the federal level together and combine them into a single program that will probably provide a service to the farmers in stabilizing their income that is better than each of the programs operated separately?

The next thing I want to do is basically put a little caution out when we talk about efforts to provide Alberta farmers with market-choice for their wheat and barley. The farmers in western Canada vote for a board for the Canadian Wheat Board, and we should be working through those members to bring change to the Wheat Board or to bring openness to the Wheat Board, rather than us as a provincial government trying to create changes in that institution that are not consistent with the wishes of those elected representatives here in our province. If we believe in a democracy, we believe that the people who are elected to serve within an institution should have the ability to have input from their constituents, and we should be supportive of them rather than competitors with them in terms of setting the agenda for that kind of institution, especially an institution like the Wheat Board, that's not under our jurisdiction or our legislative development. So this is just kind of the approach we need to start looking at in that rural community area as we go through it.

The next section deals with a clean environment. What we see here is, I guess, a real lack of a long-term statement of vision for the environment in our province. We've seen some real initiatives that have come up in the past to deal with the economic growth and the stewardship issues, but when we look at how it comes together, I think we see this a little bit again in the agriculture community with the delay that went on with the intensive livestock. The questions we saw in question period today about the Spray Lakes, that there's no real public review of the process for that forest management agreement. These are the kinds of things that we have to start bringing into a more open public discussion. I think the end result will still allow us to have a good, sound tourism industry and also some economic activity that spins off through the industrial sector. But we've got to make sure it's consistent with the kind of programs that the community and Albertans as a whole support.

The next section on health care I think focuses on the right kind of issues: access to health care, illness prevention, and effective regional government. It was great to hear the commitment that two-thirds of the board members will be elected. Still, we need to have a rapid movement on this by the government to get the parameters out where we can see what kind of regulations will be in place, first of all, for developing the wards or the zones within the health regions, how we can get eligibility determined for the individuals that want to run, all these kinds of things, so the people can start planning. When you get ready for an election, especially a new election that doesn't have any kind of history to it, we've got to make sure that both the supervisory agencies and the individuals that want to participate as candidates have the time that's necessary to make sure they can get well versed and well prepared for these kinds of elections.

I guess the only thing that we need to look at in terms of the health care is what kind of targets or what kind of end expectations we have in the context of our health care system. I guess we would like to see some kind of initiative put in place that would give us some target measures that we could use for performance. Mr. Speaker, I'm not asking here that we say: okay, everybody gets, say, an MRI in 24 hours. I think the suggestions that came out with the announcement were quite appropriate in that area, but we've got a lot of other areas within the health care system where we've got to be able to provide a standard so that we can talk about the delivery, so we can measure the delivery, and then we can also get on to dealing with the cost-efficiency and the cost-effectiveness of our delivery. If we don't have any kind of perception of a target or level of performance that we want to achieve, then we don't have the means to deal with cost-effectiveness and to make comparisons, say, within our health regions or between our health regions and between our province and other provinces or other jurisdictions.

The issue comes up in terms of – well, we heard one of the chairmen of the health authorities talk about how much better the American system was. Well, I guess I question the wisdom of having an individual that questions those kinds of alternative systems as being so much better than ours unless they're willing to make specific statements on what it is about them and how we could change our systems to make them better. Just to make blanket statements like that I think, Mr. Speaker, leaves some sense that we need to have a commitment to some kind of target.

I think the education part of the Speech from the Throne is one of the better. The only issue we see in there is that with the advanced education institutions there's no reference in here to the support that might be needed if we're going to deal with potential wage settlements. We make reference to the fact that there will possibly be wage settlement supports for teachers' salaries in the public system.

I guess in this area, Mr. Speaker, what I would do is encourage the Minister of Finance, when she prepares the budget, to make sure these are not put into the departmental budget at the start but are put into a contingency fund, because once you put it into the departmental budget in any of the areas when we don't yet have a wage settlement, what you end up doing is effectively biasing the negotiation process. We can't have that perception from our level. We've got to make sure that the dollars are there, and if we put them into a contingency fund, that doesn't create a commitment that a certain number will be available for any one group that starts a negotiation, but within our debate here and our discussions we will know we've got the money earmarked that we can use to meet those kinds of commitments as the negotiations proceed.

The safe, strong community area is quite good. The crime prevention area, the victims of crime support: these are good initiatives. I think they're really the kind of statement that we as legislators for this province need to make in terms of support for the communities.

I guess the kinds of questions that will come up are, as I've mentioned already once, the reference to the income support programs. These need to be dealt with quickly, need to be indexed so that people can plan their lives.

It's interesting. I know the Member for Edmonton-Centre made a comment on the last paragraph on that page when she said: well, you know, arts and culture is more than just film development. There's good support here for the film development industry, but there's not much of a statement about the rest of the parts of our arts and culture industry. So we need to see basically some kind of commitment to improve our relationship with the rest of the arts and culture community.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, that kind of gives a sense of where I see the Speech from the Throne going in terms of the agenda that's there. In the end I would say that what I want to do is encourage the government as we go through these kinds of programs to make sure that the accountability is there, that we can go out to our constituents and say clearly: this is what we wanted to put the money into, this is how we're going to measure the success of those dollars, and you can count on us to make sure we did it right and did it wisely on your behalf.

This accountability, you know, goes quite well into all the issues that we discuss in our debate on our legislation but most specifically when we start dealing with the budget allocations, because we've got to have measurements that are effective. We've noticed in some of the past years that we continually revise the performance indicators a little bit so that we in essence don't get much of a time series, data on them. I know this is part of refining the series, but we have to be able to make some comparisons on them.

I guess the other thing that's missing out of the Speech from the Throne is any kind of commitment to the conflict of interest issues that are being raised around the province. There were a number of people during the election who asked questions about the process the government is using, who the beneficiaries are, how these people are involved, and I think what we need to do is make a commitment in this session to better outline and have better guidelines because perception is as much of a detriment as actual conflict in itself. We've got to make them strong statements so that we can improve and develop confidence with Albertans that the perception is not going to lead to reality in terms of conflict of interest.

I guess the last issue I want to address this evening is the fact that we have to be open with the discussions that we have. We have to talk about the issues so that they are understandable to Albertans, and we have to be in a position to make sure we relate to them some issues in a way that they can see what's happening.

I'd like to give an example on that, Mr. Speaker. We keep hearing and reading and even constituents out there talk about how they're getting support and subsidies and government input in terms of their energy rebates. But when you look at it, the $40 they're getting on their electricity bill is not a subsidy. It's actually a return of the dollars they already put into their electric bill in past years. We recaptured that when we sold those contracts at auction, and we're returning that to them now. It's not a subsidy. It's their own money. It's not money that came out of our general revenue fund or out of our royalty funds. This is money that came out of selling something that they had already paid for. Yet most Albertans see that as a government subsidy, government support for them. So this is the kind of issue we have to start thinking about in the way we present our issues to the people of this province. We've got to present it so that we're telling them the fact as it is rather than as we want them to hear it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think I would just sit down. We're going to be hearing a lot of the debate as we get into the budget. Some of the legislation that's coming up we'll be addressing. We're going to have a lot of comments to make on the issues of Bill 1 as we get into it, talking about it. I noticed the news release that came out today. It's given me a whole other speaking period that I can talk on, so I'll wait till we deal with Bill 1 rather than make those comments at this point.

As we go on to look at this, I just want to, I guess, congratulate the government on the initiatives they're taking. I hope they listen to some of the suggestions we are making as opposition – some of the backbenchers have already made good comments tonight – and that we deal with some of those issues as we complete this session.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Before calling on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Visitors?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased tonight to introduce someone from Medicine Hat. We don't often get guests from Medicine Hat up here, especially one who sat in the Assembly for so many years. He sat in this Assembly from the early '70s till 1993, held a number of different ministries under both the Lougheed and Getty years. Some of you old-timers, not to insult the Speaker's age of course, will know Mr. Jim Horsman personally. He's a fine friend of mine and well respected in Medicine Hat. He's presently chancellor of the University of Lethbridge. He also sits on the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research and continues to make a very valuable contribution to Alberta. So,

Mr. Horsman, thank you for coming to observe us tonight. Please stand and accept the warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: As it is most uncustomary for an hon. member to refer to the Speaker in any way, shape, or form, let the Speaker just say to the hon. Minister of Environment that yesterday an overview was given of the average age of the citizens in this particular Assembly and the chair indicated that the average age was 51, and the chair also said that the range, then, from the most youthful member to the most seasoned member was 35 years. All hon. members should know that the one that was at the top of the 35-year list was the hon. Minister of Environment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and make some observations on the Speech from the Throne delivered on Tuesday, April 10, at the opening of the First Session of the 25th Legislature of this province.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Speech from the Throne delivered yesterday is very much like the speech that was delivered in February. There is very little that is new in it. This speech and the one delivered in February both, of course, used very, very general and abstract language in defining what this government chose to call its vision for Alberta, the vision of the future of Alberta as the 21st century unfolds before us. The more vague and more general the goals a vision statement may include, the more difficult it becomes to disagree with that. It's a lot easier for everyone to say: yes, I agree. So given the very, very vague and general nature of this statement about this government's vision, it's difficult to agree with its broad thrust.

All of us clearly would like to pay taxes that are as low as possible so long as important social programs are not compromised. We certainly ran our campaign in the last election on orderly pay-down and elimination of debt and providing sound financial support for our social programs. But, like anybody, a government must be judged on its actions and not merely on its words, this being a truism with which all of us can agree, I guess.

Let's ask: what was the first major initiative of this government after the election was safely over? The first major initiative after the election was to significantly expand the size of the provincial cabinet. When the Premier took office eight years ago, he cut the size of the cabinet to 17. Now we have a bloated cabinet of 24. I don't recall the Tories running on a platform of increasing the size of the cabinet during the election. While the members opposite like to claim that the best government is the government that governs the least, this clearly doesn't apply when it comes to the trappings of power like fancy ministerial offices and fancy cars. [interjections] At the same time, Mr. Speaker . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, the long tradition of the House is that only one member at a time is rising and speaking, and when the time comes for the Minister of Environment to speak, we'll all hopefully give him the courtesy that we expect him to give anyone else.

Hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your intervention.

Debate Continued

DR. PANNU: At the same time that the size of the cabinet has gone up by 40 percent, the number of frontline staff has gone down by 30 percent. This is something that we need to ponder over, Mr. Speaker. The throne speech continues to talk about prudence, the responsible management of our affairs, yet the actions of this government taken since the end of the election begin to speak I think a bit loudly about where this government might be headed. The throne speech tries to justify this bloated cabinet by talking about needing a new configuration of ministries to address priority areas. I wonder where this government has been over the last eight years when it felt and claimed that it could do everything that needs to be done, address its priorities and the priorities of Albertans, with a smaller cabinet.

Clearly, the claim that's being made in the throne speech about why the cabinet had to be expanded is just not persuasive, makes no sense. The expansion of cabinet has nothing to do, in my view, with good governance. In fact, it may impede good governance. Do we really need a Revenue minister separate from the Treasury Department? Do we really need a Solicitor General separate from the Justice ministry? At least make the Solicitor General responsible for gaming and liquor board policy rather than having a separate ministry of gambling.

Let's look at a few other elements and commitments in the throne speech. The speech says that the government is committed "to reduce and stabilize electricity prices by streamlining the approval process to bring new generation projects onstream." Well, first of all, let's be clear about what caused the prices to rise: this government's bungled deregulation policies. We have wasted billions of dollars of public funds over the last little while to deal with this crisis created thanks to the policies or lack thereof of this government. Now we are trying to find ways of reducing and stabilizing electricity prices.

Well, isn't this interesting? First we get skyrocketing prices with the government's deregulation scheme. Now we get environmental degradation through lowering environmental protection standards, as being promised in the sentence that I just quoted, Mr. Speaker.

So dividends of the deregulation of electricity are beginning to be paid out: high electricity prices and, most likely, rising air pollution. In other words, the environment and Alberta communities become the latest casualty of the electricity deregulation scheme. By any measure the government's deregulation scheme has been a disaster, Mr. Speaker.

First, Albertans were told that deregulation will result in lower prices. Prices skyrocketed instead, and now even the Premier admits that they are unlikely to drop as low as they were prior to deregulation. Deregulation was supposed to encourage green power, and now the government is prepared to sacrifice the environment in its desperation to lower power prices. But will they come down even if the environmental standards are lowered? Let's wait and see. I doubt it. If it's private companies' profit that drives them in terms of their investment, why would they generate so much electricity that that generation will cause a drop in their prices and therefore in their profits? This makes no sense.

So, Mr. Speaker, the government's bungled deregulation scheme is well summed up by the following quote from Dan Macnamara, executive director of the Industrial Power Consumers & Cogenerators Association of Alberta. Mr. Macnamara said: I could have picked three monkeys from the Calgary zoo, and they could have done a better job of deregulation than this government. By quoting Mr. Macnamara, I by no means want to approve the deregulation scheme. All I'm saying is that even those who are allies of the government are now disenchanted with the manner in which this government has proceeded and risked their industries and their competitiveness as a result.

Another feature mentioned in this throne speech. Specific mention is made, Mr. Speaker, in the throne speech that a new policy dealing with the intensive livestock operations will be introduced. Such a policy – this is dealing with the rural communities and their agriculture – is clearly long overdue. Residents of rural communities directly affected by the intensive livestock operations' growth in the countryside have been speaking loudly and clearly, seeking ways to limit the risks that they see associated with this development. They're seeking assurances from this government that it will put in place regulations, arrangements that will ensure that their health and the quality of life will not be sacrificed in this blind pursuit of the growth of these industrial farms.

This growth of huge hog factories and megafedlots is causing a growing backlash in rural communities. Concerns about these huge facilities have to do both with their environmental impacts and their social impacts. People are rightly concerned about the impact of these huge facilities on rural land and water quality. They are also concerned about the impact of these new industrial developments related to livestock, the impact of vertically integrated hog factories and megafedlots on the future viability of family farms.

Mr. Speaker, in reading through the speech, I noted a certain absence there, not a single reference to the family farm and its future and how the government is committed to developing policies to make sure that the family farm, as an institution, as a hub of rural life, as an important feature of that life, remains sustainable in this province. Not a single word. The term "family farm" is entirely avoided. It is simply not used, and that to me is certainly worrisome.

Another matter related to the growth of these large factory-type operations is related to the agricultural industry in general. The words "agricultural industry" are used by this government in its speech, yet as these agricultural activities take the form of industry, increasingly becoming larger and larger operations employing large numbers of employees, there's no reference here that the time has come for this government to consider the application of employment standards to a certain size, that when agricultural operations move beyond a certain size, they will be subject to the requirements of employment standards. Not a mention of that.

Moving on to the area of health, Mr. Speaker, mention is made, of course, in the throne speech that RHA elections will be held, and two-thirds of the RHA boards will now be elected in the coming fall. This was followed up earlier today with an announcement of a few more details about the arrangements that will have to be in place before these elections can take place. However, many important details are still missing. For example, defining the total districts in which prospective RHA board members will be elected is still up in the air. It is indeed unfortunate that the government has failed to lay out the ground rules for elections that are scheduled to take place only six months from now. It's getting late.

RHA boards should, in our view – and we have always taken this position – not have members only two-thirds of which are elected, but these boards should be fully elected in order to be fully accountable to the residents they serve. By continuing the practice of directly appointing one-third of the boards, the government would appear to want to continue to control these boards and use them at its own will.

In terms of health care and education, I want to remind this government that during the election the government talked about its reinvestment in public health care and public education. The government has no mandate to engage in further privatization, yet I fear that while Bill 11 now is law, this is exactly what Albertans will get: privatization. Just before the election was called, a few days before that, the government took another unprecedented action, and that was to approve a for-profit, postsecondary institution, the DeVry Institute in Calgary, and allow it to sell degrees for profit. This is another, in my view, extremely dangerous step this government has taken without consulting anyone, without any public debate, without allowing this House to have an opportunity to debate this extremely important and significant step. The New Democrats will oppose efforts to expand for-profit involvement in postsecondary education and in our hospital sector. Silence in this throne speech about the government's plans with respect to the future growth of private, for-profit postsecondary institutions should be a matter of worry to all of us.

Specific mention in the speech that the budget will contain more dollars for teachers' salaries: another interesting and, I guess, promising, in a sense, statement. Yet when you look at the statement in the context of nothing being said in terms of a commitment to reduce class sizes in elementary grades, particularly from kindergarten to grade 3, you wonder what the government is pointing to. Is it attempting to play the boards against teachers? You get either a better salary or you get smaller classes or what? I continue to worry about the real intentions of the government on this score, Mr. Speaker.

There's no firm commitment to reducing class size. The government has already spent $500,000 on a study which tells it that it delivers the goods if you reduce class sizes, yet the government is not willing to make that commitment.

The throne speech contains a vague reference that the government will review income support programs to determine whether they continue to meet clients' needs. There's no recognition that there indeed is a problem of poverty in this province, that the policies of the government indeed create conditions where lots of Alberta children live in conditions of poverty. To acknowledge a problem is the first step to addressing a problem. Nothing is said on that. When it comes to reviewing these programs to determine whether they continue to meet clients' needs, Mr. Speaker, the time for review is over. The time is for action. There's no promise in this speech that action will be forthcoming. Existing programs are clearly not adequate. What's needed is action and action now.

Social assistance rates were cut by an average of 11 percent in 1993 and have barely increased since then. Since 1993 the number of child welfare cases has increased by more than 60 percent, Mr. Speaker. Children are poor because their parents are poor. We need to look at a number of measures to reduce poverty levels, not continue to review programs without taking action. Social assistance rates and shelter allowances need to go up. Thereafter we need to develop a formula to link future increases to increases in living costs, but this is not enough. We also need to increase income support for the disabled through the AISH program.

We need to increase the minimum wage to provide a better living for the working poor. Unfortunately, in this growing economy there are also growing numbers of people who are working and yet remain poor. We need to make further improvements to the family employment tax credit program to eliminate health care premiums and to improve health and dental benefits for lower income working families.

Another matter, Mr. Speaker, that I want to put on record, on which I see absolutely no reference made in the throne speech, has to do with the freezing of tuition fees of postsecondary students and ultimately reducing those tuition fees. Silence on that one again.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to conclude, then, by saying that this throne speech is certainly a start. We'll have to judge the government as it takes actions and presents a budget in a couple of weeks.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your kind permission, before responding directly to the Speech from the Throne, I would like to spend a few moments on the recent election in my constituency. For the last four years it has been my honour to represent and my pleasure to serve the constituents of Calgary-Fort. I'm thankful to have received the continued support and solid trust of my constituents and to be back among my hon. colleagues in the Legislative Assembly. You can count on my continued serving of the Calgary-Fort constituents and all Albertans to the best of my ability.

To my new colleagues, my congratulations for your honour of representing and serving your constituents. To all my Legislature colleagues, I have a great confidence in each of you doing your best for Albertans, and may the coming term be the best part of your life.

To our Premier, my congratulations on your election leadership to a greater majority. May your outstanding leadership continue to make Alberta a shining star.

To you, Mr. Speaker, my congratulations and may your exemplary chairmanship continue to guide us in high-quality parliamentary work.

For sure I am here thanks to the valuable help from many others including my family members, friends, and their family members. Our democratic election has taught me to be humble, to be ever alert to who my bosses are. They are my constituents, the ones who sent me here to represent them.

Mr. Speaker, yes, we won a large majority, a landslide by the normal standard. In us Albertans entrust the leadership that works to improve their lives. Also, they entrust the implementation of their aspirations and choices. I never believe that they entrust in us to impose our own views on them.

In defending Calgary-Fort, our team fought off a seven-front attack. Just like in a track-and-field event, our athlete raced in our own lane along with seven others, the highest number in a single riding, and our athlete is by far the fastest. With my track record and our dedicated campaign team we won the hearts of around 70 percent of voters. We received three and a half times the number of votes of the second highest. We won at every poll. Mr. Speaker, do you know why we won the Calgary-Fort constituency? Definitely it is thanks to the solid support from the large majority of voters and dedicated PC teamwork during the campaign.

There is another secret. It is our name, PC, which also stands for pick CAO, and CAO stands for caring about others.

It was a big win, but it was not just my win. Each of our team did their part very well, from casting their votes to carrying out campaign tasks. There were people who participated directly and openly, but there were so many who provided assistance behind the scenes and indirectly, such as making contributions, lending their telephones, telling their friends and neighbours to go and vote. The amazing part is that we did all of this on a voluntary basis, and we had the participation of young children, seniors, and our friends from all walks of life, even the participation of many whole families.

Our Progressive Conservative programs and policies as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne are in good accord with the feelings of a large majority of Albertans. The outstanding leadership and the collective wisdom of our government caucus will continue moving Alberta forward strongly into a brighter future. Yes, it is the truth of a proven leadership for a positive future.

During the years of my first term and over the recent election, I visited many homes and talked to many constituents. I met people from all walks of life in various professions, in different states of health, in various stages of life. Many can trace their roots here for generations, some just arrived from other provinces or other lands, but they all are very proud to be Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, they all need the assurance of the availability of our excellent health care system, learning system, and social assistance system whenever their personal needs arise. They want to live in a safe and healthy environment for themselves and their future generations. They want a continuation of Alberta economic development so they can make their living and show the pride of their productivity, abilities, and skills.

Mr. Speaker, besides the residential areas our Calgary-Fort constituency covers the largest industrial and business park in Calgary. There are a large number of manufacturing businesses, and they contribute to a high percentage of our Alberta economic growth and diversification. Their businesses compete in the global market, enriching Alberta's reputation for excellence and bringing back economic benefits to Albertans. As Albertans are dynamic and progressive, my resident and corporate constituents accept some short-term pains for long-term gains. They are always ready for continuous improvements, but they want the assurance of smooth transitions and assistance during the transition if needs arise, especially in the areas outside their control such as energy costs.

Mr. Speaker, during the recent election some of my constituents asked me: why did you decide to enter politics? To them my honest answer is that I decided to enter politics for a combination of reasons. First, I was brought up in a community-minded family, and I became a community-minded person myself, even during my professional career in my younger time. I'm always motivated and inspired by the ability to assist others. Certainly I have received great support and encouragement from my family and friends.

Thirdly, in my life I've reached a stage where I could do public service without worrying about personal gains or losses. Fourthly, our family had a past painful experience in the old country of standing by and letting others run the country, and they ruined it. My family members, friends, and many others suffered as a result. Lastly, I believe that I can take on any challenge to work giving back to the society that has helped me in the past.

More serious constituents asked me: what do you feel are the major issues and goals for the province? To that I answered that the real, major issue is how to maintain and enhance the Alberta advantage, which keeps Alberta on the leading edge and differentiates it from other jurisdictions. We need to develop conditions and programs that continue generating public wealth and balancing it with the needs and demands of Albertans. Just like in a family, Albertans pay close attention to their health care, education, rising costs of living, taxes, safe communities and so on, and how we can afford those.

A tougher question constituents asked me was: what is your stand on the issues that matter most to Albertans? To which I replied that I will continue to be accountable to Alberta taxpayers, with affordable spending based on Albertans' priorities and needs. I am committed to protect the much valued Alberta and Canadian system of health care, education, social programs, and a safe and healthy environment by encouraging innovative approaches and appropriate and affordable funding. I'm committed to protect Alberta consumer businesses by enhancing the Alberta advantage. I'm committed to a debt-free Alberta with a low tax climate to enhance the Alberta economic advantage and enhance the quality of life for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, in almost all of the cases my constituents asked me point-blank questions such as: what will you do if you win? How will you best represent our riding? These are very meaningful questions. They helped me to envisage what work I plan on their behalf. My answers to that are that I will focus my work on people, prosperity, and preservation. I shall strive for programs that promote Alberta human resource development, early childhood development, early prevention of problems, and equity for hardworking Albertans. I shall continue to be an effective voice for all Albertans, especially seniors, children, people with special needs, injured workers, hardworking families, and businesses. I shall continue seeking out and bringing new ideas from constituents to the government. And I shall continue to promote the vision of Alberta as the best place to grow up, to work, to raise a family, and to retire.

Mr. Speaker, with that, with what I heard from my constituents and what I told them, I am very pleased with the government programs and policies expressed in the Speech from the Throne. They reflect the needs and the wishes of those who elected us. I recognize the priorities of Alberta now and in the future. They subscribe to the fairness of assistance based on priorities and levels of need.

However, I would like to emphasize the realities we must face. One reality is that our public purse is finite and limited to the revenue our citizenry agree, reluctantly if I may say so, for the government to collect. May I say that our public purse is just like a pizza. Pizzas come in different sizes. Regardless of the size of a pizza, a bigger slice for one means smaller slices for the others. If one contemplates or demands a bigger share, one must consider what's left for the others. That's the type of table manners I heard from Alberta constituents.

I wish for a scenario where all those special interest groups who demand a share can sit down among themselves and make their sharing decisions at the same time. Maybe the government should facilitate this scenario to take place.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw our attention to another important point: the notion of surplus in government finance. The so-called surplus amount, if there is one, is already earmarked to be spent 75 on debt payment and 25 on onetime programs, and it is in the law. To me there is no surplus amount to put aside, so to speak. This amount is tied to ever fluctuating prices and sale volumes of oil and gas. We cannot base our important ongoing operational programs on a fluctuating amount.

Mr. Speaker, seeing the growing public expenditure, my constituents worry. As personal and corporate taxpayers we worry about the sustainability and affordability of such growing expenditure. We see that our current majority mandate opens up a unique and necessary opportunity for implementing the vision I call triple E government: efficient, effective, and economical government. I believe it is time we should look further for least cost opportunities: removing duplication, sharing of common services, terminating less effective programs and replacing them with more effective ones. Our canoe would sink if we kept loading new cargo without off-loading some of the existing ones. We can keep the same rowing crew, the same equipment but unload less valuable cargo and replace them with more valuable ones. In order to arrive safely at our destination and with the most valuable cargo, we cannot just fill our limited cargo space with any and every cargo.

The triple E focus should be promoted not only within government services but in all other publicly funded organizations, and I'm more than ready to help in promoting these triple E initiatives. I believe that this triple E implementation of efficient, effective, economical government is the key to maintain a self-built strength and leadership of Alberta internally and externally.

Before I conclude, I would like to extend an open invitation to my constituents, even of different political inclination, to address with me issues of importance to them. Through open dialogue and understanding the problems facing Albertans, we are better able to address the issues most important to all of us. So please feel free at any time to come and talk to me of your proposals and solutions to making Alberta even better.

To conclude, from the bottom of my heart I sincerely thank each of you, my colleagues here in the Chamber and my friends and constituents, for your valuable support in important democratic practices. Your voluntary participation, contribution, and valuable guidance always make a difference for Alberta. May God continue blessing Alberta and Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before taking the next speaker, I wonder if the Assembly would consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly one of our hardworking and dedicated Crown prosecutors in the city of Calgary, someone who has served the government and the people of Alberta well in that capacity. As people in this House will know, Crown prosecutors are at the front of the line when it comes to safe communities, protecting our communities, and making sure the justice system works well. I'd like Mr. Gary Belecki to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and get a chance to say a few words about the throne speech that we heard the other day. But before I start with those remarks, I would like to formally congratulate all hon. members of this Assembly for their election victory, and I would also like to congratulate their family members as well, because I would feel that each and every member of this Assembly had a lot of help from their families in order to be successful. Over the next four years, particularly for those members who are coming to Edmonton from other areas of the province, I would encourage each and every one of you to patronize not only the fine business establishments in Edmonton-Gold Bar but some of the finest restaurants in the city. You're very welcome to just go five minutes east, and you will discover some of the most delightful dining in the entire city.

I would also like to thank the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar for placing their trust in me. It certainly is an honour and a privilege to represent them in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker. I plan to continue to do the job that was given to me on election night by those constituents, and that's to hold the government accountable. It's very important in a democracy that we do not lose sight of the role of opposition in maintaining openness and accountability to a government.

Now, I've heard from media outlets, from hon. members of this Assembly about the extent of the win on election night, and it was a large victory. There's no doubt about that, Mr. Speaker. But I would caution everyone in this province about this victory, because it reminds me of the surface of a slough after the first hard frost, when the ice is everywhere but is very, very thin. That's what I think this large majority is. It's a large majority, but it's a thin majority, and I think we're soon going to see cracks in it. We're going to see cracks in that majority. Lots of them.

We heard from an hon. member across the way earlier about the three Es of this government. One of them was an economical government. I believe that is how it was described by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. But this is a government that has gone on a reckless spending spree. It has reinvented the special warrant, which led to this fiscal problem in the first place. Happy days are here again. The citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar asked me to describe at a recent meeting the new government, and I used two words to describe it: Cadillacs and champagne. Cadillacs and champagne, the best. But, Mr. Speaker, have they worked for it?

Now, I came to the Assembly, my first visit back. I went to my parking spot. I saw in the Annex parking lot in spot 639 a black Cadillac, a new one from Edmonton Motors: two-door, smoked, dark windows. [interjections] No, the expanded cabinet. It had no plates on it, Mr. Speaker, and it is symbolic of this government. It is dark and it is secretive. It is only going to be a matter of time before we discover which hon. member is touring the province in that car. Happy days are here again. We have this incredible sense with the current government that the province is theirs. Well, it is not. It belongs to the citizens. It belongs to the taxpayers.

An hon. colleague of this Assembly who left and went on to greater things in the nation's capital used to wear on his lapel that sweat-soaked loonie. Sometimes I think I would be doing the province a great benefit if I were to take maybe 70, maybe more loonies and give them to each of the Conservative members . . .

DR. TAYLOR: There are only seven loonies in this House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: You will get your turn, I'm sure, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you.

AN HON. MEMBER: Relevance.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, relevance. I'm planning on saving this government a lot of money, but the whole idea of this would be to remind each and every one of you of the sacrifices that were made so that this economy is as robust as it is.

You're all of course going to take credit for the robust economy, but market forces that are beyond the control of this province – and I'm grateful to live in this province; I'm grateful to have the opportunity to raise my family in this province – international market forces that have driven commodity prices high have had a lot to do with the prosperity. The concept that Progressive Conservatives are managers of public money is fiction, not fact. [interjection]

It has been proven, hon. member across the way, that the government is just trying to spend its way out of the problem.

The electricity crisis. To all new members of this Assembly, three years ago we had a debate. The electricity issue was first initiated in 1995, but we had to make amendments with Bill 27, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act. I heard during the campaign from so many sources that you had to elect government members because they would stand up for you. What did one of the most distinguished members on the government side from the city of Edmonton do in the middle of that debate? He stood up and moved closure. That's all this individual had to say on the entire bill. Another hon. member, a cabinet minister who has since retired, stated that we would only waste the Legislative Assembly's time if we were to continue debate on the electricity bill.

What has happened three years later? Three years later we are giving the citizens back their own money – their own money – because of our mismanagement. It's $2 billion, and before five years are out, it will be billions and billions of dollars. I'm sorry, but the voters are going to notice next year when they have to pay a $22.75 a month extra charge on their bill to make up for what they did not pay in election year.

Now, we look at this and the symbolism of the closure on Bill 27, and that was roughly three years ago. A year ago we used closure on Bill 11. Things are just fine in public health care now. Absolutely. But where will they be, Mr. Speaker, in three years' time? Just like our electrical deregulation scheme. It was flawless. In fact, the originator of the bill couldn't stand the heat, so he left the Legislative Assembly. He knew. That cabinet minister, that hon. member, knew the consequences. He did not want to stay here. However, Mr. Speaker, that is just one example of the chaos that has been created by a party and a government that thinks they know what is best always.

We need to look at this document, and it certainly is a light document. We look at the pledges. I don't see a pledge in here to stop reckless spending. I don't see a pledge in here against the special warrants. I don't see a pledge in here to somehow stabilize our natural gas supply. We are looking at a change, Mr. Speaker, in 10 years from a supply that was over a 19-year supply of current production rates in the ground. We've gone from there to an eight-year supply of natural gas. We have gone from industrial facilities in my neighbourhood, which had a reliable, cheap source of ethane as their main feedstock, to an enterprise that is now worried about the cost of that ethane. I ask all members of this Assembly, is that long-term planning? It certainly is not.

One of the greatest follies that any provincial government in the entire history of this country ever accomplished was not so much shipping natural gas to America via the Alliance line. I had no problem with that. But allowing the ethane, allowing the liquids to stay in that natural gas stream was a major policy shortcoming of the past Progressive Conservative government.

We all talk about the rise of political power in western Canada. I am convinced that political power will come as the population increases, and the population will increase as the economy develops and diversifies. But it's not going to develop and diversify if we sell ourselves short by shipping the ethane from the Peace River arch through to Chicago, and that, Mr. Speaker, is unfortunately what we have done. Are we going to see any more petrochemical developments in Ponoka? I don't think so. Are we going to see any more in Fort Saskatchewan? I don't think so, because the ethane is now going south of Chicago.

MR. LUND: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: A point of order has been called. The hon. minister.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, under Beauchesne 482, sixth edition, I wonder if the hon. member would entertain a question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure has asked whether you'd entertain a question. You don't have to give reasons. You just have to say yes or no. If it's yes, we get the question. If it's no, then you continue your speech.

MR. MacDONALD: No, Mr. Speaker, but I do admire the hon. member's persistence. He's been trying.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, we have to look also at medicare. Medicare is a wonderful way of delivering health care for all Albertans. I asked earlier where the medicare system will be in three years, and that is the question. That is why the ice on the slough after the hard frost is so thin. It's because the jury is out. The sky is not falling. The sky is not falling, but where will we be? We have lots of money going into the health care delivery system. Lots and lots of money. We have a shortage of staff. Those staff shortages were identified three years ago. What happened? We mismanaged the study. We squirreled it away in the Legislature Library during collective bargaining negotiations. If the government had acted on that publicly funded survey, perhaps we would not have to spend the money we do now to recruit staff.

The MRIs. The trumpet sounded. The money was delivered. We're going to have MRIs for the citizens, which is fine, but are we going to have the technicians to run the machines? This is another example of the mismanagement, Mr. Speaker.

Now, by the government's own statistics, the number of dollars going into health care is increasing. Monthly the Alberta Human Resources and Employment department releases statistics, and incredibly the number of health care professionals or workers is either decreasing or remaining stagnant. Now, you have to wonder where the money is going. Where will we be three years from now with this government? It certainly will be full of itself, and it will be at the point in its term where it will be looking certainly at getting re-elected. Their centennial year will be coming along, and there will be monuments, so to speak, to be built, Mr. Speaker.

Well, I would like to suggest that for centennial year, if we're going to do this, this city consider building a permanent home for the archives of this province. I think the capital city is a logical location for this. I'm willing to work with all members of this Assembly, and I understand the Progressive Conservative caucus in Edmonton has a caucus chair. I think this would be a worthwhile project. It's just one project. Even if it's just in the planning stages, it would be a worthwhile project for the citizens of this province. [interjection] All sorts of papers could be stored in there. You've got that right.

Mr. Speaker, we're going to have to also show more respect for Alberta's seniors. The cabinet certainly expanded. People asked me to describe it, and the only thing I could think of was that it was a make-work project. One of the things that I really liked, however, was the idea of having a stand-alone ministry for seniors. This is a very good idea, because if we plan now with this Seniors ministry – and long-term planning is not in the grasp of this government currently, but I'm going to encourage them – we can avoid a lot of the problems not only other provinces are having but other jurisdictions.

I would advise the hon. minister to take a close look at what is currently occurring in the nation of Japan. They have a high percentage of seniors, and they are managing very well. It is a financial burden on the treasury because they're not doing that well economically, but they have had long-term planning in place and they're coping. I would encourage the new minister that's responsible for seniors to have a look at just exactly what the nation of Japan is doing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, education is also an issue that was foremost in the minds of the voters in Edmonton-Gold Bar. The idea that class sizes should be reduced was one that they endorsed. The size of a class and the ability of a student to learn, particularly in the lower grades, is increased. The more individual contact between the teacher and the student, the better the education is. In the lower grades, where we're looking at a sound foundation and getting off to a good start, I can't think of a better way to invest in the future of this province.

But, Mr. Speaker, was this accomplished? I don't know. We will have to wait and see. Hopefully the Minister of Learning in due time will take a close look at class sizes and, as the former Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, Mr. Percy Wickman, would say, finally do the right thing. It is very important that we have a system of education that is for all Albertans.

I'm very disappointed that my time has run out, Mr. Speaker, but I'm looking forward to the remarks from the hon. Minister of Environment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and as they say, now for something completely different. First of all, I would like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and the other chair occupants for your elections to the responsible positions that you hold.

As I start this, through you to all of my colleagues here I would like to tell you how very pleased I am to be among you. When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was speaking, he was talking about the area of the city that I grew up in, Jasper Place. I can recall the first time ever that I was in this building. I looked up and thought, "My goodness, what a massive place this is." In my past life as a Member of Parliament, very often I would be driving past this parliament. As often as I went into the Parliament Buildings in Ottawa and as much as I respect and love that Parliament, this is home. This parliament, because I'm an Albertan, is my home. I share with you just how thrilled and happy I am to be here.

I didn't get here by accident. I got here because a lot of people worked very, very hard. The people in Edmonton-Rutherford in the campaign organization accepted me and supported me, and I wish now to publicly thank them, particularly Dick Flis and Cliff Downey, a name that many will remember here, who worked tirelessly in helping me win the election in Edmonton-Rutherford.

By extension, I know that politicians don't always have an easy ride in the media, and sometimes we don't always deserve an easy ride in the media, but behind those of us who are on the front lines, there are thousands of people who work without recognition, without any hope of reward but because they're citizens and because it's the right thing to do. They're the ones that are the reason we're here. I wish publicly to acknowledge that and to thank the people in the constituency association of Edmonton-Rutherford for giving me their support.

I'd also like to thank and recognize the past member for Edmonton-Rutherford, Percy Wickman. Percy and I have been friends for many, many years. He's a friend to many of you in this Chamber. Although we may differ on how to achieve our goals, I think we probably share common values, and that can be said of many of us. So I as the member who will be filling his shoes will keep his legacy in mind respectfully.

The voters of Edmonton-Rutherford entrusted me with the responsibility to represent them in this Chamber, and I take that responsibility very, very seriously. Edmonton-Rutherford is much like many of the constituencies in Edmonton. It has a mix of seniors and of younger people. It has a mix of some people who would be considered to be very well off, and it has quite a number of people who are struggling to get by. I think I have to be particularly cognizant and aware of that.

I know that the people of Edmonton-Rutherford did not elect me to be one more voice. They expected me to represent them, and I will. Sometimes that may brush up against some conventions. I hope my colleagues will understand that anything I say or do is in the intent to represent the constituents who entrusted me with that great honour and in no way should be construed as in any way detrimental to the interests of this great party that I have been embraced by.

So, then, why did I choose to get involved in provincial politics? Why did I leave federal politics to get involved in provincial politics? Well, the answer is because in my experience – and it's been shown to be true thus far – provincial politics is where the rubber meets the road in governance. For instance, in the last two Parliaments in Ottawa when the reductions to transfer payments for health, education, and social services were being debated, it was an academic exercise. We were debating shifts in tax points. We were debating the amount of money that would be cut from provincial budgets, which would cause all provinces to have to live with a much reduced budget. But it was an academic exercise.

At the provincial level, where the services are delivered, it's real. Health, education, and social services, which encompass the most critical and the most important and the most immediate services to our citizens, are all provincial in application. So the new ideas that come in governance to our country are not going to come out of Ottawa. They are going to come from the government that is closest to the people, which may in fact be the municipal governments, but will be embodied here in the provincial governments who are responsible for the municipal governments.

So I think that the opportunity we as legislators have and I as one of this wonderful body have is to provide innovation and new ideas in governance. If these ideas start here in Alberta and find a voice here in our Legislature in Edmonton, it won't be very long until these ideas find themselves in the national consciousness. That's one of the reasons I hoped to get involved in provincial politics.

The debate, for instance, during the election on classroom size. I'm sure virtually everybody in Alberta for the price of a cup of coffee could have come up with a report on classroom size. It would have said that smaller classrooms are better. It's intuitively true. I mean, we all know that to be true. But that's not the answer. That's a gross oversimplification of the problem. The problem is not necessarily strictly classroom size, as the Minister of Children's Services knows so well.

If a certain percentage, let's say 15 percent, of the students in a classroom consume 80 percent of the teacher's energy, 80 percent of the teacher's efforts, and still aren't going to be able to get by because of socioeconomic conditions or fetal alcohol syndrome or any number of things which prevent them from learning, then maybe it would be a good idea for us to address some of these problems. If we were to make that investment in nurturing the next generation, the payoff down the road in one generation is 10 to 1. That's 10 to 1 proven, for instance, with Head Start programs. If we as a province were to decide that nurturing children would be our number one objective and made the investment in Head Start programs, for instance, so that Head Start programs . . . [interjections] Well, wait until I get to electricity. You won't be clapping then. If we were to make our investment in Head Start programs, we would see that investment repaid within one generation 10 times over.

So some of these ideas that would be important to our country nationally can happen here in Alberta. We can do it because we've got that cohesive nature. If we do that, we'll be doing something wonderful for our country. So I hope to be able to contribute along some of these lines.

Now, I just briefly mentioned electricity and natural gas. It's something that has come up quite a lot. Natural gas has pretty much looked after itself. Bill 1 is going to put a legal framework around it, and intuitively we know that as our resource revenue comes in, we have the luxury of being able to shield consumers from spikes in the price of natural gas. It's pretty straightforward, and I think most people understand it pretty easily.

Electricity is a far more complex and far more difficult consideration. When we're talking about electricity, it seems to me that we need to keep in mind three separate and three distinct considerations. They are these. Every decision we make needs to ensure that there will be more electrons in the system, because if there are more electrons in the system, we'll have more supply, and if we have more supply and a constant demand or more supply than demand, the price is going to go down.

The second thing that we need to do is ensure that every decision we make will promote conservation, because conservation, both with electricity and gas, is cheaper and better for the planet. We really have the opportunity here to do something really worth while for our province and for the planet as we're going through this electricity, to really think about the conservation that's inherent with paying a real price for the commodity that we're using.

As we will of necessity move to a realistic price for whatever commodity it might be, it's going to encourage conservation, just exactly the same as the spikes for gasoline caused us all to drive smaller and more fuel-efficient cars. I don't know about you, but you can sure see your breath when you get up in my house. I mean, that thermostat is turned down. If we do that everywhere and are more conscientious, we'll be doing something good for our pocket-books and for our planet.

The third is: will what we do result in the lowest possible price to the consumer? The answer is, in my opinion, yes, if we proceed with deregulation. The reason for that is this. If you give yourself an opportunity and just cast your mind and think about it for a minute, what entity, in anyone's imagination, that is owned by the government, financed by the government, and managed by the government has ever been a low-cost supplier of anything? It just doesn't happen. Energy is so critically important to the Alberta advantage, to our competitive advantage that we have to do what we have to do to get a market discipline into the manufacture of that essential commodity. So if we provide for a market discipline in the generation and the manufacture of electricity, we will end up with a better product at a lower price more consistently. You either believe in the market and have faith in it, or you don't. A market economy has served us extremely well in the west.

Now, if I may, I'd like to just touch on one other issue very briefly, and that is that it's likely in this Legislature that this parliament will be charged with some emotional issues surrounding human rights. I want to be on record right now as saying that human rights accrue to us because we're human beings, for no other reason. They're inalienable, and they accrue to us because we're human beings. Tolerance is a two-edged sword; it works both ways. You can't have one group crying for tolerance and the other group not receiving it no matter which side of the fence you have to be on. So when we're charged with that debate, I'd ask members to remember that there are always two sides to every story and that tolerance is in fact a two-way street.

We are going to be charged soon with the Future Summit, the summit that is going to for at least our lifetimes chart the economic and perhaps the social path of our province into the near future. I'd encourage all Albertans, not just those of us in this room but all Albertans, to participate in that, to have a voice, to be part of the governance of our great province.

I'd like, again, to finish as I started: to thank you and through you, Mr. Speaker, all members here for the great privilege that you have afforded me by bringing me into this marvelous Chamber to be able to participate and in some small way to contribute to the governance of this great and beloved province of Alberta. Thank you very much.

Since I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I move that the House do now adjourn.

[At 10:07 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 12, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, thank You for the life You have brought once again to the Earth. As Your light touches the world, nature blossoms forth. Let this vibrant energy renew our spirits and help us to use this strength for the good of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present on behalf of a number of constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud, Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Meadow-lark, Edmonton-Norwood, Edmonton-Castle Downs, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and Edmonton-Centre petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta "to put in a system of rent control."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have a petition by 24 Albertans to present to the Assembly. These individuals are urging the government to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation [suit] and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly urging the government to determine "whether taxpayers must pay for Stockwell Day's legal bills." This petition was signed by 45 Albertans from Edmonton, Elk Point, and Fort Saskatchewan.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition on behalf of 485 Albertans urging the government "to fully-fund women's shelters and transition houses."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to determine legally whether taxpayers must pay for Stockwell Day's legal bills.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Bill 2 Cooperatives Act

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 2, being the Cooperatives Act.

The purpose of this bill is to harmonize co-operative legislation across the country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act, be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Bill 3 Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 3, being the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001.

The proposed act will amend the definitions, strengthen the manner in which we deal with individuals whose licences are suspended, adjust how fish in captivity are dealt with, and extend regulation-making authorities. The amendments contribute to the province's capability in protecting wild fish, thus sustaining the resource.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Bill 4 Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave again to introduce Bill 4, being the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed act will increase the compensation limit that can be claimed concerning damages from $5,000 to $25,000. This increase will reduce the time and money spent in court by an owner or occupant in recovering damages.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to table two reports and the appropriate number of copies of each. They are the Children's Advocate reports. On September 8, 2000, I released the first report, for '98-99. The second report, made available to me just last week, is the report for '99-2000. It deals with children's rights interests, and the advocate acts on behalf of those children that are in the child welfare system.

Thank you.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I have with me 24 tablings today. I'd like to table with the Assembly the requisite number of copies of the following documents: the 1999-2000 annual reports for all 17 regional health authorities as well as for the Alberta Cancer Board and the Alberta Mental Health Board; also the 1999-2000 annual report of the College of Physical Therapists, the 1999-2000 annual report of the Alberta Association of Registered Occupational Therapists, the 1999-2000 annual report of the Alberta Registered Dietitians Association, the 1998-99 annual report of the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses; and the 1999 annual report of the Alberta Dental Association.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission, I have three tablings. The first is a letter from Susan Horner of Manning concerned about the difficult time rural teachers in this province are having with class size.

The second is a letter from Kim Lambert of Manning to the Member for Peace River also concerned about class size and the effect on children.

My third tabling is some excerpts from the California statutes regarding class-size reductions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from Music Alberta outlining the effect of cuts to Music Alberta by the Alberta Foundation for the Arts.

The second is five copies of a utility bill which is a typical bill for a condominium in Edmonton-Centre, showing a $15,000 utility bill for December and a $34,000 utility bill for January.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a memorandum from the separate school board of Edmonton to the parents of St. Michael and Sacred Heart schools indicating very clearly that the utilization formula is driving the closure or proposed closure of those schools.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly several guests who are with us. Harvey Aarbo and his wife, Elaine, and his children Aaron and Loree have traveled from the Elk Point region to join us this afternoon. An interesting note is that in 1905 Harvey's grandfather, Thor, built a raft here in Edmonton and sailed the North Saskatchewan River starting here. He was on the search for a new home and made it as far as Elk Point, where the river froze, and he had to stop. So that's where the Aarbo family set up their homestead, and that's where it remains to this day. The Aarbo family will celebrate its centennial here in Alberta at the same time the province celebrates its centennial in the year 2005.

Mr. Speaker, with the Aarbo family today are their good friends John and Jean Stewart, who on this very day are celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary. I'm told that both John and Harvey go back a long way with the Alberta Cow Calf Association and that up until his retirement John ran one of the best cattle operations in Alberta.

I am pleased to have all six of these wonderful Albertans with us today. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a large group of grade 6 students, 91 in all, with their teachers Mrs. Debbie McFarlane, Mr. Ray Shapka, Mrs. Evelyn Nixey, student teacher Miss Shauna Gerike, and parent helpers Mrs. Janet Boomer, Mrs. Maryann Arndt, Mrs. Joan Soehner, Mrs. Kelly Wilson, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Walsh, Mr. Van Bostelen, Mrs. Morrison, and Mrs. Yopek. They are seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery, and I would ask that they all please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West-Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly 10 young, upstanding citizens from Edson, from the Yellowhead regional division, with teachers Mrs. Kneteman and Mrs. Darlene Dixon. I'd ask that they please rise now and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly four members of the co-operative legislative working committee. This committee has been working since 1998 on developing replacement legislation for co-operatives. Today they were here to witness the introduction of Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act, 2001, just recently introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. Seated in the members' gallery – and I would ask them to rise as I repeat their names – are Ms Lynn Hannley, principal with Communitas Group; Mr. Rick Frederickson, supervisor for the feeder association with Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development; Mr. Ray Zotzman, senior investigator with Alberta Government Services; and lastly, Mr. Mark Seville, legislative adviser with Alberta Government Services who actually chaired the working committee.

I would also at this time like to recognize the contributions of the three members who could not be with us today. They are Mr. Gerry Metz, corporate secretary of the United Farmers of Alberta co-operative; Ms Kay Robertson, legal affairs manager with Federated Co-ops; as well as Ken Ditzler, director of the Association of Seed Cleaning Plants.

I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

MR. HORNER: Mr. Speaker, if you may forgive the inexperience of a rookie, I'd like to clarify my remarks by adding that my students and teachers are from the Brookwood elementary school in Spruce Grove.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Jannie Edwards. Jannie is a poet, a member of the League of Canadian Poets, and an English instructor at Grant MacEwan College. She is here to promote April as National Poetry Month and to reaffirm the importance of the arts in our daily lives. She brings gifts of poetry postcards for all MLAs to celebrate poetry, National Poetry Month, and the arts. With Jannie are students from Holy Family school, where Jannie conducted workshops. Three of the poems from one of her sessions were chosen to be on the Edmonton Transit system's poetry in motion project last fall. Rhiannon Edwards is one of the student poets with Jannie. Also present from Holy Family school is Eliza Soco. Jannie is also accompanied by students from Grant MacEwan College, and they are Jason Doucette, Pam Sitko, Jordan Millard, and Amanda Carter. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Holocaust Memorial Day

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 19, 2001, Alberta will mark the first official Holocaust Memorial Day following the proclamation of the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. This legislation honours the memory of the 6 million European Jewish people who were annihilated between 1933 and 1945 and millions of others who were victims of systemic violence, genocide, famine, persecution, racism, and hatred.

Last November I was honoured to sponsor this special legislation. It enshrines the spirit of Albertans as tolerant and compassionate citizens who stand against violence and discrimination. I'm proud to say that because Albertans hold such strong convictions on these matters, hon. members of this Assembly ensured that the act passed unanimously. Consequently, Alberta became the eighth province to officially recognize Holocaust Memorial Day, known in Hebrew as Yom ha-Shoah or day of the whirlwind.

I recognize, as does the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act, that many people in different parts of the world have perished as a result of some form of discriminatory violence. Today, however, I want to highlight the Holocaust on this special day of reflection. We all must do more than reflect, for Yom ha-Shoah is also a day for education about the horrors of the Holocaust and how the voices of history can teach our children the meaning of human suffering and how hatred and violence can scar the entire human race. Yom ha-Shoah brings people of the Jewish faith together around the world in remembrance of family members and friends who perished during the Holocaust. As Albertans we must all make an effort to take a moment today to pause and think about what this day means to each and every one of us.

My heartfelt compassion goes out to the Jewish community and indeed to all communities whose members have been victims of persecution and the tragedy of genocide. Victims whose voices fell silent still whisper to us the need to commit to a legacy of remembrance, education, and conscience. For Alberta to continue to be one of the best provinces in which to raise our families, we must be diligent in protecting human rights and encouraging understanding. For the sake of our children we must be diligent in teaching them the cherished principles of respect, dignity, and equality for all. I urge all Alberta families of all races, religions, and political beliefs to make Holocaust Memorial Day an important day in their lives by sharing their thoughts and experiences with one another, particularly with their children.

Mr. Speaker and fellow members, as Albertans and as global citizens we have a responsibility to the past and future generations to maintain our vigil. We have an obligation to remember the unconscionable acts of violence and discrimination as the lowest points in human history and to prevent those horrific crimes from ever happening again. We must teach ourselves, teach one another, teach our children, for each generation must learn anew. We must look within ourselves. We're obliged as human beings to walk this path together. We can draw hope from one another.

We will remember, for we must never forget.

Thank you.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you for the opportunity to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition to the minister's statement marking Alberta's first official Holocaust Memorial Day. The lessons learned from the Holocaust are deeply etched on our souls and should forevermore guide our actions.

As the Official Opposition we were honoured to work with the government to support the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. It underlines for us that as legislators we set the tone. We propose, develop, and pass the legislation which becomes law and by which we all live.

I'm glad that the hon. minister committed to a legacy of remembrance, education, and conscience, and I would add vigilance. History does repeat itself, and we must keep hearing the lesson because we do not always seem to learn it; Rwanda and Bosnia, to name a few examples. In this House we cannot rest. We must be vigilant to ensure that hatred does not flourish, that the seeds of xenophobia do not find fertile soil, that the flames of violence are not fanned.

When I was first elected, I pasted a short poem to my desk to remind me why I was here in this Assembly, and I share it with you today.

First they arrested the communists, but I was not a communist, so I did nothing. Then they came for the social democrats, but I was not a social democrat, so I did nothing. Then they arrested the trade unionists, and I did nothing because I was not one. Then they came for the Jews and then the Catholics, but I was neither a Jew nor a Catholic, and I did nothing. At last they came and arrested me, and there was no one left to do anything about it. That's from Reverend Martin Niemöller, a survivor of the Nazi prison camps.

In closing, I would like to acknowledge the enduring grief of Holocaust survivors and their families and extend our condolences and our commitment to stand on guard today and for the future.

Thank you for this opportunity.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, this is a very important day, and I would now ask that all of us and all of the visitors in the Assembly stand and join together in observing a moment of silence in recognition of this very important day.

Let us never forget.

Thank you. Please be seated.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Pricing

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier remarked that the increase in price for electricity is a continental phenomenon, but it isn't. A quick call and one will find that residential rates for electricity are much lower and stable in other jurisdictions except California, of course. In calls to B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Quebec we find that only Saskatchewan has increased their price in the last year and a half and by a whole 1 percent. My questions are to the Premier. Why is Alberta alone in seeing such incredible increases in the price of electricity?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is the question that was asked during the election campaign, and obviously Albertans accepted the answer. There are a number of factors leading to the high cost of electricity in this province. One is the phenomenal economic growth that has taken place here, which creates a tremendous demand for electricity. Another factor is the whole issue of the Kyoto accord.

As you know, in this province the cheapest form of fuel to generate electricity is coal, and there was a tremendous reluctance on the part of power producers to use coal in light of Kyoto, that would have required emission standards to be reduced by 6 percent of 1990 standards by the year 2010. Electrical power generated by coal is now back on the table because the generators, the producers, are confident now that the environmental standards can be achieved relative to emissions.

Mr. Speaker, another factor that has led to the high price of electricity is that a number of generators were down – and some are indeed down today – at a most inopportune time. Another reason is the extraordinary high price not just in Alberta but North-America-wide of natural gas, and that accounts for, I believe, 30 to 35 percent of all power generation in this province.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's answer just kind of showed that if you're going to deal with marginal pricing, natural gas is our highest cost. Why do we not use an average pricing system to bring down the cost of that marginal price of natural gas by blending it with the coal and the hydro?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm certain that as the new power comes onstream, we'll see a stabilization in prices. When we're talking about average pricing, yes, we look at a high and a low. For instance, I'll give you an example of the latest, April 11, yesterday. The high was $224.43 per megawatt-hour; the low was $58.35. There's a tremendous difference. On Tuesday, April 10, the high was $767.02; the low was $84.35. The list goes on and on. When we talk about the average, the 30-day rolling average for power was $95.07, or 9.5 cents per kilowatt-hour. So there is an average price, and we'll see that price come down as the weather gets warmer. As more power comes onstream, the price will go down even further.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: when you deal with average pricing in the context of a market system, is it not done at a spot time, not over a whole bunch of periods of time? It's done over the time period or the time frame of a contract; in other words, within our power pool on a one-hour basis, because that's what the bids go in with. If we were using average pricing for that, we would look at the bids within that one hour, not over a number of days or a number of weeks.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, when you look at the bottom line, you look at what the consumer pays on the average. Our energy officials base that on a 30-day rolling average, and that 30-day rolling average is in the order of about 9.5 cents per kilowatt-hour, or $95.07 per megawatt-hour.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Power Generation

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Using a competitive pricing system, our generators and the power purchase agreement marketers can sell to any buyer in the western grid. Is it not true that our current power price is determined by what generators get by selling into the western grid?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this is regulated still to some degree by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Relative to the intricacies of how that power is sold into the grid, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would add that the western grid and the markets of the south will have some influence. In fact, as the debate now starts to grow in North America, the debate will centre around an aging infrastructure, fully depreciated assets, a power energy deficiency. The returns of the information technology industry and other industries in the past 10 years were so great that money was not reinvested into both these regulated and unregulated areas of the energy industry. That leaves, Mr. Speaker, an aging infrastructure that's fully depreciated, that now is starting to respond by having a shortage of supply, an increase in demand, and we're going to see higher prices. There's no question. We're going to see higher prices throughout North America. But what will be happening – and of course I know now that the leader of the opposition party will be preparing a brief for submission to the EUB as they do their market review of the electrical industry, commencing sometime in May.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: is it not true that Alberta transmission companies have applied for an additional 1,000 megawatt export line to the south?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't know if that statement is true or if it's not true. Perhaps the hon. minister can shed some light on it.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, that information would be in the hands of the transmission administrator. I do know and can inform the House that there is construction on a line that will bring in an additional 400 megawatts from Saskatchewan so that there is an increased capacity there. Of course, with the competitive market there's also an announcement such as yesterday's with the 80 megawatts from TransCanada as well as numerous other applications being put in place to bring on additional generation.

I think, Mr. Speaker, as we refer to this North American energy grid, one of the things that will make Alberta one of the most prosperous provinces in the country will be its ability to provide low-cost, reliable sources of electrical energy that will come from coal-fired generation, that will come from cogen, that will come from a number of sources that will be stimulated by competitive practices.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at the comments of the interim Leader of the Opposition, we can also note that the population of Saskatchewan today is the same as it was in 1935. The population of Alberta is substantially higher as demand grows here. In fact, I would say that Alberta, by taking this competitive market model, is moving ahead of the North American curve. In fact, we won't be exporting coal. We'll be importing jobs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Before we have any foreseeable reduction in our prices, we must have supply that will exceed demand by at least 1,800 megawatts, this 1,000-megawatt new export plus the 800 that's available now, or we'll have California and the western grid stabilize our prices. Is that true?

MR. KLEIN: Is that true? I don't know if that's true. All I can say is that there will be sufficient supply to meet the demand and also after all the strict requirements are met to allow some of the power producers to export some of the excess power. You know, Mr. Speaker, as I explained yesterday, we have I think in excess of 1,200 megawatts of power in the hopper right now that is either under construction, about to come onstream, or has just recently come onstream, with another 4,000 megawatts announced. That is power sufficient, I believe, to light up another Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Lethbridge.

MR. SMITH: All the Conservative areas of Alberta.

MR. KLEIN: Right. As the hon. minister said, all the Conservative areas of Alberta anyway.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Electricity Rebates

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, this government's assorted energy rebates have from the start been discriminatory by treating Albertans differently based on what type of home they rent or own. Now, the government has partially addressed this discrimination with regards to natural gas rebates but not at all for electricity. Albertans who live in apartments or who own condominiums with shared meters receive different electricity rates and rebates than those in single-family residences. My questions are to the Premier. What criteria did the government use to categorize shared-meter high-rise apartments and condominiums as commercial?

MR. KLEIN: Again, relative to the criteria that was used and the calculations that were put in place and all the intricacies involved in dealing with this very difficult issue, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister reply. Having said that, we appealed – we appealed – to the apartment owners and we appealed to those people who manage condominiums where individual condominium owners are not metered individually to pass on those savings to the customer. We would hope, for the most part, that they did precisely that.

Relative to the intricacies involved in arriving at the formula, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Basically the issue revolved around one meter and the consumption of over 250,000 kilowatt-hours per annum or less. I will, though, take the detailed question under advisement and see if I can table more information.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Given that this member, condominium boards, and individuals notified the government of differential treatment for residential energy prices and rebates, why did the government not correct this situation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we tried to deal with the situation as best we possibly could, understanding that there are different situations relative to various apartment scenarios, various condominium scenarios. I can relate to my own situation here in the city of Edmonton. I own a condominium, and I'm individually metered. Therefore, I received all the benefits of the electricity rebate program as a residential customer. Down the block from me there is another condominium where the condominium is not individually metered, and I would hope that the condominium association would have passed on the savings to the people who own the condominiums. [interjection]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, you know the rule is that you ask the question. You don't answer the question.

Please proceed with your third question.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you for the advice.

My third question is also to the Premier. Given that the government has insisted that municipalities pass on property tax reduction savings, why is the government not monitoring and enforcing that rebates given to landlords be passed on to renters? Why the double standard?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if there is and I don't think there is a double standard.

Relative to our ability to force landlords and/or condominium associations to pass on those savings, I just don't know what authority prevails, Mr. Speaker, if any authority whatsoever prevails. I'll have the hon. minister respond. Maybe he can shed some more light on it.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect – and I'm sure that maybe the Minister of Municipal Affairs will want to be a part of this answer as well – I think that tax money is collected from the citizens of the province by governments and flows in that nature. Rents are collected by individuals and are charged in normal commercial matters.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DeVry Institute of Technology

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 31, 2001, the provincial government gave the DeVry Institute of Technology, a for-profit, U.S. based corporation, the right to grant academic degrees under the Universities Act. This unprecedented decision, which allows the for-profit private sector now to enter the postsecondary education system, is opposed by, among others, the University of Calgary Faculty Association, the Canadian Federation of Students, and the Canadian Association of University Teachers. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Conservative government getting back into the business of business by awarding academic degree granting status to the for-profit DeVry Institute?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the one thing that this government is not afraid to do is to think outside the box. We have the deepest and greatest respect for our universities and for colleges that grant applied degrees, whether they are public or private colleges. We have the greatest respect as well for colleges like Augustana, for colleges like Concordia or like The King's college, that grant degrees. We are not afraid to think outside the box to allow an established academic institution like DeVry, that has demonstrated that it can teach students effectively, efficiently, and competently, to grant degrees in a very specialized area. There is nothing wrong with that. I would think that the academic community would welcome the opportunity for institutions other than universities to open their arms to provide people with education. That's what counts.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, so much for the Premier's and this government's commitment to stay out of the business of business. It says a lot.

My second question to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that now that the for-profit DeVry Institute has been awarded academic degree granting status, it will be eligible for direct government funding on the same basis as private, nonprofit university colleges like Concordia and Augustana?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning respond to that particular question, but I do take exception to the fact that we are back in the business of being in business. We are in no way involved with DeVry other than setting standards to make sure that this institution complies with the highest academic standards that are relevant to its degree-granting status.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make one point, and that first point is that the DeVry Institute receives absolutely no funding from us and will not receive any funding from us.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: How much?

DR. OBERG: Zero. Zero.

Mr. Speaker, the Private Colleges Accreditation Board sits and determines the standards for any degree-granting institution that is a private college, and it sat and decided that the classes, that the courses that DeVry was giving our students did meet the standards, did meet the qualifications.

Mr. Speaker, this line of questioning is going in a very interesting way. I would ask the hon. member across the way to think of one thing and one word, and that is the Internet. There are numerous colleges from the United States, from all over the world that are coming into Alberta, and we have to – we have to – be in a position to accredit them. We have to be in the position to put the standards there, because they are coming, and your people are doing it on the Internet right now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll certainly track the minister's statement on DeVry not receiving any dollars from the government.

My last question to the minister. Will the minister put on hold the thoughtless decision to give the for-profit DeVry Institute academic degree granting status until there has been a full public debate on the floor of this Assembly on whether or not the government should proceed along those lines? [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Would the hon. minister please respond on behalf of the government. We'll ask some of your colleagues just to button it.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The answer to the member's question is no. We have an independent board called the Private Colleges Accreditation Board, that does a tremendous job in determining the standards, determining the quality of courses that are provided to each and every Albertan in this province. Mr. Speaker, they do a wonderful job. The colleges, the universities are in favour of this. So I would ask the hon. member that if he has a problem with the Private Colleges Accreditation Board, then he should take it to them, that he should take it to the university boards, and they will come back to me, because they have no problem with them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Electricity Rates

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past couple of months many of the constituents in Little Bow have contacted me with serious concerns over their power bills, particularly a variety of additional service charges. Although the Leader of the Official Opposition, who just happens to be one of my constituents, wasn't one of those who contacted me, I do believe that we've heard similar concerns from the people in the area. My questions are to the Minister of Energy, and they relate to electrical rates in the EUB. Number 1, minister: are the various electricity rate classifications that are used within the industry subject to the approval of the EUB, or are these rates provided by the wire service provider as a mandate to charge as they see fit?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the utilities that the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board regulates – and these would be the major ones such as ATCO, Utilicorp, and TransAlta - rate classifications are indeed subject to the Energy and Utilities Board's approval. Now, rate classifications for municipal wire service providers such as Enmax and EPCOR are not subject to the Energy and Utilities Board's approval.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the increases were approved for gas and power utilities in order that they might recover previous losses, is the EUB mandated to set current rates based on current costs that reflect the ability of customers to pay, or are they there primarily to guarantee predictable returns to the utility shareholders?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the mandate of the Energy and Utilities Board is to do both, not only indicate that those utility shareholders will have a reasonable rate of return but also that consumers are well-served, and the EUB is acting in the public interest and in the consumers' interests.

In fact, the mandate of the Energy and Utilities Board, Mr. Speaker, is twofold: one, to ensure that rates that consumers pay are fair and the service that is provided is safe and adequate; and secondly, to regulate gas and power utilities in ways that allow them to earn sufficient revenues to recover costs which include a fair return on investment. The energy supply side of this is the part that is determined by the marketplace. More and more as you see the models throughout North America start to move now, there is clear, clear evidence that the competitive marketplace is a far better judge of what a fair return is to shareholders, and in fact the competitive marketplace properly structured is also one that protects consumers in the most fair way possible.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you. The last commonly asked question, Mr. Minister, is: given that in a free enterprise model of business people appear to have the right to go broke, why does the EUB appear to guarantee financial success for the utilities?

MR. SMITH: Well, I would think, Mr. Speaker, that now the interim Leader of the Official Opposition is probably wishing he had contacted his MLA to ask questions.

In fact, utilities do provide necessary services in areas that would not benefit from duplication of infrastructure, such as electrical transportation and wires. But we have to look at the size of the investment that is required and how one was regulated in the olden days, and now today wire services are regulated, as is transmission. Those in fact, Mr. Speaker, are also coming up for renewal and examination. I think that we have used those good facilities, and we've received good and fair regulation from the Energy and Utilities Board, but we are getting to the end of our rope with those facilities, or the end of our wire, if you will, and that is going to require further investments in the North American power infrastructure. But it is important that the Energy and Utilities Board ensure that these utilities are not allowed to use monopoly positions to charge distribution rates unfair to consumers. So that's why these hearings are taking place.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, that's why we're also seeing the Energy and Utilities Board, that has not in prior times examined gas supply pricing because it was against policy for them to receive a profit, is now examining those in new hearings set in April. So, in fact, the Energy and Utilities Board in an open and transparent process with written and full disclosure decisions continues to work in the best interests of Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Medically Required MRIs

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Premier. Yesterday the Minister of Energy confirmed that interest probably amounting to millions or even tens of millions of dollars will be paid to electricity companies on deferred rates owed to them as a result of government policy on electricity deregulation. Yesterday also the minister of health flatly stated that no interest will be paid to ordinary Albertans who are owed money as a result of government policy on MRI fees. My question to the Premier: will the Premier admit that this is a double standard that works against ordinary Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no. There is no double standard whatsoever. You know, the hon. member is comparing apples and oranges and grapes and pears. Other than MRIs are powered by electricity, how you could relate MRIs and the situation that now prevails relative to the review that is being undertaken by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to electrical rates is absolutely beyond me.

We have a situation here as it relates to MRIs where people, individuals, allegedly went to their doctor, they weren't satisfied with their doctor's diagnosis of the particular situation, and sought a private . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I hear the yip-yapping over there about a year's wait. How long did they have to wait before there were MRIs? I mean, there was a time in this country and in this world when there was no such thing as an MRI. The best thing we had was a CAT scan and before that X-rays and before that nothing.

But these people on their own went to privately operated clinics and paid for an MRI to find out that they had something probably more serious, maybe more serious than the doctor originally diagnosed.

Mr. Speaker, we're going to review this. We have no obligation to review this. We have absolutely no obligation to pay those people at all. There are other jurisdictions in this country that are woefully behind Alberta in terms of the provision of MRI services. We are doing this because we feel it is the right thing to do. There is no obligation to do it, and I think that we are being more than generous and more than compassionate as a government in offering this adjudication of MRI services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier, a simple and straightforward question: how does his government justify paying interest on money owed to huge corporations making record profits but not paying interest on money owed to ordinary Albertans often in poor health?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, he obviously does not hear the answer or he won't listen or he's taken too many lessons from some of the veterans over there. Again, there is no obligation. There is no obligation on the part of the government to do this at all. We are doing this because we think it is the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, after the adjudication has taken place – and I don't know how many cases will be examined by the expert panel but probably in the hundreds now – many of those people probably will not get the answer that they wanted and some of them will.

Mr. Speaker, there is no interest paid to anyone who experiences a delay or experiences any other difficulty that might have costs relative to access to the publicly funded system. It has never been done before; it won't be done in the future. We are going to the length of compensating those patients that will undergo an investigation or an examination by an independent panel of physicians. We will compensate those patients, if we can find that there is evidence to prove that they should have had an MRI in the first place. We don't have to go that distance. We are going that distance because we're a government that wants to do the right thing and we have compassion.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, why does the Premier feel an obligation to pay interest to major corporations and no obligation whatsoever to pay interest to ordinary Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I answered the question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta advantage is the envy of every other province in Canada. Our deficit was eliminated years ago, and our province will be soon debt free. That's, of course, due to the good management of this government. However, I understand that an Albertan who is not able to work and does not have other income and needs the support of government can apply and receive support from AISH, the assured income for the severely handicapped program, which has a maximum of $855 a month. Constituents receiving AISH have told me that they are having a hard time living and making ends meet. Meanwhile, their rents and utilities are going up, the general cost of living increases, the bills keep coming. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: does the minister have any plans to increase the AISH benefits?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, currently we provide AISH payments – perhaps I should indicate that AISH stands for assured income for the severely handicapped – of $855 a month, as the hon. member has suggested, to approximately 27,000 Albertans. So when we start to do the math, you can see then that it's a tremendous program.

I would want to indicate to the hon. member that there's more than just the income that is presented. If you are entitled to AISH, you're also entitled to medical benefits, and I'm told that an average client on AISH is receiving medical benefits of about $240 a month. I need to remind all of the members and especially the hon. member who has raised the question that you can still qualify for an AISH payment provided you meet the medical criteria, but you could also have a hundred thousand in assets, you could have your own car, you could own your own home.

So I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, to all the members as a responsible MLA, a steward of taxpayers' money, that the AISH program that we have in this province, which is leading the nation, by the way, is a very credible and a very reliable and reasonable program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is the $855 a month that we're talking about. Does the minister really expect disabled Albertans to live on this amount?

MR. DUNFORD: There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that at $855 a month it might be a difficulty. Let me again remind hon. members that the majority of AISH clients that we have on our rolls also have other income. We have been able, with the reform to the AISH program, to put a situation in place where, if they are able to find work, they're able to go out and work without deduction. If they're involved in a spousal relationship, then there is, I think, an exceedingly generous opportunity for the other partner, you know, to go out and earn money, something in the order, I think, of another $775 month before there are any deductions made. So with the medical benefit and with the ability to turn other income, conceivably you could have a couple that could be earning over $1,900 a month and still gain a dollar of AISH but, more importantly, would still have access to that medical card.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the minister's comments, how can Albertans rest assured that our most fragile and vulnerable citizens are supported?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we're very proud of the AISH program, and I want to again acknowledge all of the members of this Legislature that contributed to the reform of the AISH program, started back in 1998 and brought into place in October of 1999. As a matter of fact, across this country now ministers of social services and including the federal minister responsible have just published a recent report; it's called In Unison.

Actually our AISH program has received national recognition in terms of an effective service to people with disabilities. Part of what was highlighted within that recognition, of course, was not only the medical benefits that I've been talking about but basically a hassle-free process if people have to return to the program.

So AISH is just one of many, many things that we provide for Albertans that truly need our assistance. And I say again not only to the hon. member but to all taxpaying Albertans that we will strike the right balance between the opportunity for Albertans to receive the assistance that they truly, truly need and our responsibilities to the taxpayers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Class Sizes

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Learning through the Alberta initiative for school improvement has approved more than 15 class size reduction projects across the province. The focus of the majority of these projects are on K to 3 students. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Given the results of the Edmonton study, why does the minister continue to selectively choose the students who will benefit from smaller classes through the sponsorship of these research projects?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta initiative for school improvement was something that I talked about extensively during the last session. Under the AISI project there are presently 760 different projects around the province. The way these projects came into being was that parents, teachers, school board officials, and administrators sat down and felt that they would do whatever was the most important to help their kids achieve within their own schools, and they addressed numerous issues.

Mr. Speaker, it's much too numerous to talk to, and the reason I'm saying this is because of those 760 projects, 15 of them dealt with class size. Fifteen of them felt that class size was the number one issue. In saying that, on the class size study that we did in Edmonton, it showed that, yes, some kids did benefit from smaller class size, some kids did about the same, and other kids perhaps even did a little bit worse.

So, Mr. Speaker, the point that I have said, and I have been very consistent in what I have said, is that the school boards need the flexibility to determine through their teachers, through their parents, through their administrators – they need that flexibility to be able to find out what is most important for school achievement in their particular area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister. Why is the minister diverting money to research projects when the results are known and that money could better be contributed to a provincewide class size reduction program?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I will very simply quote what the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association said on CBC radio. He said that no one wants to legislate class size.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Why does the minister refuse to set and fund provincewide targets for K to 3 classes? Why?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, again I will say the same answer. First of all, K to 3 is a very important age group. I don't think there's anyone in this Assembly that would argue with that. I don't think there's any research that shows that K to 3 is not a very important time. Where there is acrimony in the research is exactly what is the best way to effect change in the K to 3 age group. Is it our early literacy projects, where we saw a tremendous increase in results and achievement with these students? Is it by class size? Is it by one-on-one teaching? All of these are very successful alternatives.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in school boards. I believe that they have the best interests of their students at heart, and I believe that they will find the ways to do it. It is my job to give them the resources, and I believe in that as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Rebates

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-Fort covers a large area in Calgary, including the residential communities and a very busy industrial park. Energy consumers, both residents and corporate constituents of mine, have a concern, and the concern is the energy rebate. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the current rebate of $150 per month per residential gas bill will end by the end of this month, what is the government's plan beyond this time?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question is a good one. Of course, as we all know, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act was introduced by the Premier on Tuesday, so I won't go into specific detail as the bill is before the House, saying only that it will provide protection from spikes in gas prices in the future. So that is one arrow in the quiver.

Of course, a real opportunity here that we have is being fortunate Albertans and to be blessed by this resource to be able to use it for protecting Albertans. Any future rebates will go, as the bill will speak to, throughout the land. But right now I think that as well as Easter eggs that are on the horizon, so is another $150 cheque being mailed out to Albertans, their second $150 energy rebate cheque. Also, most Albertans receive a $40 per month electricity rebate, that will continue until the end of calendar 2001.

For the important nonresidential or corporate constituents in Calgary-Fort, Mr. Speaker, there is the 3.6 cents a kilowatt-hour rebate from auction proceeds that will proceed through to the end of calendar 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about the residential consumer, but commercial and industrial business is also important to the Alberta economy, and companies in my area also want to know what the government's plan is for these energy consumers in the industrial sector.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The 3.6 cents a kilowatt-hour that I did speak to in my first answer will continue, as of course the market transition credit will continue to the end of June. Program extensions could occur if needed. We are seeing a downward pressure on the Power Pool pricing from the initial spurt of a new competitive market model that came into being January 1. We are watching it. We're carefully monitoring the situation. Also, the Energy and Utilities Board has embarked upon a market performance review. We also look to advice from the Advisory Council on Electricity.

It's an important issue, Mr. Speaker. As I've said in earlier answers, we believe that we're ahead of a North American curve that's going to require absolutely phenomenal amounts of reinvestment in a whole energy infrastructure that will extend across North America, and Alberta again will be at the lead of this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. Could the minister update us on what is the total rebate up to now, and does the continuation of this violate the free trade agreement?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, it cost $1.1 billion, paid for out of increased natural gas royalties. There is no North American free trade contravention.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Access to Information

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Payday has recently taken on a whole new meaning for Alberta taxpayers. Since Alberta taxpayers have taken over a three-quarters of a million dollars hit on Stockwell Day's defamation suit, it only seems fair that they have access to all relevant documents relating to Mr. Day's claim to the risk management fund. However, FOIP officials have demanded fees of at least $60,000 to process our Official Opposition access to information request. My first question today is to the minister responsible for the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the Minister of Government Services. Can the minister inform this House why FOIP officials have stonewalled our request by demanding fees of $60,000?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current provisions in legislation under the freedom of information act are identified under the freedom of information regulations. There are a few in number and are very specific and narrow in their approach. We find the need for paramountcy in this issue arises primarily because information concerns require increasing confidentiality, and for that purpose the information that is put in place for access to freedom of information is done particularly for confidentiality as well as the proper information that should be put forward for people to enjoy.

MR. MacDONALD: Given that the information in this Alberta government news release dated January 16, 2001, states, "We are releasing this information in keeping with this government's policy of openness and accountability," can the public interests be served by the hon. minister urging FOIP officials to please waive this fee of $60,000?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, there are many requests for information in this province through many departments, and each department is responsible for their own individuals and their own bureaucracy when looking after particular information that is being requested. It is important to remember that all of this bureaucracy being put in place to provide information costs a tremendous amount of money, and it's important also to make sure that frivolous requests for information be restricted because of all the demands for information. So with that, it's important that individuals come forward with proper information requests and make sure that those information requests are concise so that the costs can be kept down. If that would happen by members of the opposition, maybe those costs could be lowered.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given three-quarters of a million dollars in tax dollars, I do not consider it to be frivolous.

My next question is to the Minister of Justice. Will the hon. minister commit to tabling all the information in the Alberta Justice department on this issue? Will the minister table this in the Assembly?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't think I'd ever say this, but I long for the days when we had in the opposition benches people who respected privacy. In fact, one of the reasons why – because I don't know the details of this specific request or the cost estimates for it, I would assume that the reason why $60,000 is required is because it takes an awful lot of work to go through records which involve a lot of private information of private individuals, both plaintiff and defendant in this case as well as others that might have been involved in the case, to determine what type of information is appropriate to be released and what type of information is not appropriate to be released and to respect the individual privacy of those individuals involved.

So the fees that are being charged are not being charged to reduce access to appropriate information that should be before the public but to protect the privacy and to allow the bureaucracy to do what is necessary to go through the documents to determine what is appropriate to be released under the act and at law and what is inappropriate to be released under the act and at law and to protect the privacy of individual Albertans, which is why we have a Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the first of four members today to participate in Members' Statements, let me just apologize to the half a dozen members who advised me that they wanted to participate in question period today. We had only 10 sets of questions. Yesterday we had 12. May I ask all members just to review the rules because when we return on Monday next, you will see further interventions from the chair in terms of speeding up the process so that we can have additional members participate in question period.

In 30 seconds from now I will call upon the first of four hon. members to participate, but in the interim I want to have approval from the Assembly to revert to the introduction of visitors, if we could.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. SNELGROVE: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you and to the members of this Assembly a couple seated in the members' gallery that have worked tirelessly raising their family and running their business in the Vermilion area for nearly 50 years. Their contributions to the community and to the area are too numerous to mention. I have the tremendous honour of being their son. Bob and Margaret Snelgrove are accompanied today by my uncle Maurice Snelgrove, and I would ask them to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon a number of individuals from NorQuest College joined us in the public gallery. They were led by teachers Mrs. Andrea Massing and Mr. Cap Tiege. We had in all a total of 17 very eager students who seemed to have enjoyed question period quite a bit, and I'm very glad they were able to join us. I'm not able to introduce them to you and through you to members of the Assembly, but I would ask the Assembly to please give them the traditional welcome in absentia, and I will send it on in Hansard.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute delight for me to introduce some very special people today. There's an old saying: behind any successful man there's a very surprised woman. In this case, it's my entire family. I would like to introduce to you and through you my beautiful wife, Veronica, and my kids Claudia and Jack, who have come to join us here today at the House. Would you please welcome them.

Edmonton Regional Science Fair

MR. VANDERMEER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pleasure that I rise today to speak about the Edmonton Regional Science Fair, which includes communities from Jasper to Lloydminster, Athabasca to north of Red Deer. This past weekend I had the privilege to attend the award ceremonies where students from grades 4 to 12 showcased their hard work. I was extremely impressed by the quality of their science projects shown at the fair. I saw an interesting range of projects from power of wind and hydropower to laser driven fusion and behaviour based robotics.

I can see why Alberta students are high achievers on a national and international level, and activities such as this science fair enhance Alberta's excellent learning system by giving students an opportunity to explore topics in an in-depth way, further their knowledge, and follow their scientific interests. These students are a credit to their parents and teachers, whom I thank for encouraging their scientific efforts. I would also like to acknowledge the Edmonton Regional Science Fair council for their work in organizing last weekend's scientific fair. I really enjoyed the experience.

Congratulations to all the award winners, and good luck to the seven students who are representing the Edmonton region at the Canada-wide science fair. I am confident that these students and their projects will amaze the judges. I encourage students from all over Alberta to participate in science fairs and experience the excitement of scientific exploration.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Class Size

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The release of the Edmonton class size study, confirming research elsewhere that smaller classes do make a difference, was accompanied by an unacceptable spin by the Minister of Learning. With this study was a covering press release that attempted to negate the findings and indicate that the same results could somehow or other be achieved through other means. In later comments the minister indicated class size would not become a matter of legislation.

Through private members' bills and motions in the Legislature the Official Opposition has asked the government to legislate class size in this province. Why? First and foremost, students will benefit, not just those students in school districts that can scrounge the needed resources but all students across the province. Second, such legislation would carry with it the obligation on the part of the province to provide resources so that those smaller classes could become a reality. Third, the province can't be trusted. This is the government that slashed kindergarten, claiming there is no research to support the benefits of such programs, and when parents objected, there was no protection for those five-year-olds to be found in the Alberta School Act. The objections that such legislation would be an unacceptable one-size-fits-all solution and too rigid to work seems not to be the case elsewhere.

The legislation I tabled earlier today is but a sample. Our calls for legislation differ from what has been done in the U.S. We will again ask for class size targets to be set. Our Bill 215 stated setting targets will allow lead time to ensure that there are adequate numbers of teachers in place and classroom spaces to accommodate additional classes. Targets would not be rigid. Classes of 28 students would not automatically be split into two classes of 10. Common sense would prevail. Class sizes will be reduced if not by this minister by his or her successor. Let's not delay one more generation. Let's not deny them the benefits of such class sizes. Let's do something about the situation now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's seniors today are more than 300,000 and growing and are a very vital part of our society. That is only one reason but a huge one why it is such good news that we now have an entire ministry dedicated to serving Alberta's seniors.

The steering committee for the aging population study, which I chaired, recommended that we have an associate minister of seniors within Community Development, and of course I was very thrilled, as most Alberta seniors must be, with the decision to create a separate Ministry of Seniors with the hon. Member for Stony Plain as its first minister.

As re-appointed chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, I am very pleased to acknowledge in this Assembly the valuable role the council fills as a link to Alberta's seniors and the government. The council is unique in that it consults on an ongoing basis with all seniors potentially, and frequently provides advice and recommendations to the government through the Minister of Seniors on areas of concern that are important to seniors.

The council also holds public consultation sessions around the province, and they're planning to hold their next one in Grande Prairie and area in June. The council participates as members on committees that work to improve the quality of life of seniors: the long-term care review, the impact of the aging population study, shelter cost study, and presently on a seniors' centre study. The council has very recently studied and made recommendations in areas of home care, mental health, and older drivers.

The 13 appointed and very capable citizens, I might add, who form the council with myself as chair look forward to an exciting and challenging time as we continue our work with Alberta seniors and the government, all within the new ministry, in the coming months. We will assist the government to address the needs of today's seniors while planning for the future and the impact of the aging population.

On behalf of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta I encourage all members of this Assembly to utilize this valuable . . . [Ms Kryczka's speaking time expired]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Environmental Policy

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the government talks about having a plan that will give Alberta's children a future with limitless possibilities, it is acknowledging that the questions we ask and the decisions we make in this Assembly have effects that reach far beyond this session, this year, and even the next 10 years. When we talk about Albertans benefiting from a decision or a project, we have to ask: which Albertans, and what is the real benefit? Will it be a short-term economic benefit for a particular company and a forest of stumps for the rest of the province? Maybe the benefit will go to larger companies and their shareholders while the local community gets a decimated landscape, falling water levels, and polluted air.

When we look back on the decisions that lay before us, decisions about energy and natural resources, will economists say that we got every dollar we could and therefore it was a complete success? Maybe we'll find ourselves sitting on piles of money and trying to figure out what to do with air we can't breathe and water no one wants to drink. I'm not against economic development or making money from our natural resources. What I am concerned about is that we are not asking the right questions at the right time. The government doesn't seem to really want to look at conservation and alternative energy sources. They pay lip service to these ideas, but their commitment is questionable. They just want to build another coal-fired plant as quickly as they can and keep costs down, but are they really considering all the numbers in their costs? Can we measure clean air and water in cents per kilowatt hour?

The Alberta government cannot continue to use dollars, debit, and deficit as the bottom line. It just isn't sustainable, Mr. Speaker. As members of this Assembly we need the courage and the conviction to ask the right questions at the right time. A future with limitless possibilities means we have some tough decisions ahead of us.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the government to share the projected government business with us for the week that we come back, starting April 23.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the 23rd under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, Bill 1, Natural Gas Price Protection Act; Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act; and address and reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On Monday evening at 8 under Government Bills and Orders, address and reply to the Speech from the Throne and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, April 24, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, as has been indicated, the Minister of Finance will provide a Budget Address to the House.

On Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Motions if the opposition so chooses, that would be their first opportunity for a response to the budget. Under Government Bills and Orders second reading under Bill 3, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001; Bill 4, Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001; address and reply to the Speech from the Throne, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, April 25, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, under Government Motions: in the event that the opposition and the third party choose not to reply on Tuesday night, they would have the opportunity to reply on Wednesday evening. Thereafter Committee of Supply, day 1. We would ask for permission to revert to Introduction of Bills to introduce the supplementary supply bill and thereafter as per the Order Paper. Under Tabling Returns and Reports that day we would anticipate tabling the supply calendar of appearances as per agreement between the House leaders. For the information of the House we would anticipate introducing the interim supply bill that afternoon.

On Thursday, April 26, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for Second Reading, supplementary and interim supply, address and reply to the Speech from the Throne, and as per the Order Paper.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 11: Mr. McClelland]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, I had concluded my comments. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to once again have this opportunity to reply to the Speech from the Throne. I, too, would like, as other members have, Mr. Speaker, to begin by congratulating yourself and the Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees on filling the offices that you have been chosen to fulfill. It's not always easy. We aren't always the easiest group to lead and to stay in our places and do what's expected of us, but I appreciate the work you've done in the past and look forward to four more years of being treated similarly.

I, too, would like to thank the constituents of Edmonton-Mill Woods. This is the third time that they have been good enough to elect me, and their confidence is both gratifying and humbling, Mr. Speaker. Election campaigns are hard, and constituents in Edmonton-Mill Woods ask good questions. They have high expectations of the people they put in public office, and I hope that I can fulfill those expectations.

I would also like to congratulate the new members that have been elected. The election campaign was hard fought, and it's a credit, I think, to your ability and to the hard work that all of you engaged in that you're here today.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I would, however, be remiss if I didn't mention a number of my colleagues who no longer share our work in the Assembly today. I'd like to mention if I could, Mr. Speaker, some of them by name.

I for one will miss the former Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'll remember her particularly for the very powerful speech – I think the most powerful speech I've heard in eight years in this House – that she gave when we were considering the Holocaust memorial bill. It was a speech that I think had members on both sides of this House deeply moved.

I'll miss very much the former Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. That member, Mr. Speaker, had a zest for life and a sense of good humour that made the tasks you worked on with her, in and outside of this House, very easy tasks, and I will miss her.

I'll miss the former Member for Edmonton-Manning. That member quietly traveled the province listening to Albertans and brought their voices back to this Assembly.

I'll miss the former Member for Edmonton-Calder. That member constantly reminded us that we had to write and we had to talk and we had to keep in the forefront of our consideration everyday Albertans. He often spoke of his barber, and his question was: would my barber understand that? Would my barber appreciate that? Lance's barber has a permanent place at our caucus table, Mr. Speaker.

I'll miss the former Member for Edmonton-Glenora as a bright and versatile and an articulate young man whose sense of justice, I think, didn't leave anyone who met him untouched.

I'll miss especially, of course, Mr. Speaker, our former leader, the former Member for Edmonton-McClung. This was an individual who had the option of doing a lot of things. The fact that she chose to become leader of our party and to sit in this House and to serve Albertans I think is a measure of the woman. She brought with her a sense of style that will be very difficult to replace, and I will miss her.

Those are regrets, Mr. Speaker, and we can't dwell, I know, too far in the past, so it was interesting to listen to and to read the Speech from the Throne. I was especially interested, when I was thinking about my former colleagues, in the very last page, where the government takes a pledge. I couldn't help but think that maybe the former Member for Edmonton-Glenora would have something witty to say about the government finally taking the pledge.

But going to the Speech from the Throne, immediately after the election I was questioned by a reporter who said: "What are you going to do now? Your numbers are so much fewer. What are you going to do?" I guess my answer is the answer I gave today, Mr. Speaker, that we as a party are going to go back to our basic principles. We are going to oppose legislation that is brought forward that we think violates those principles and hurts Albertans. We will be offering our own versions of legislation that we think supports those basic principles and makes the lives of Albertans better, and we're going to support such legislation if it's brought forward by the government.

I wanted to talk just a few minutes if I might, Mr. Speaker, about some of those principles. Alberta Liberals believe in Alberta. We believe in only the amount of government that we need, but we insist that we get all the government that we need. We believe in a government that's strong enough to use words like "love" and "compassion," and I was pleased to see the section in the Speech from the Throne that talked about the values that Albertans hold, the concern for community, the concern for family. I was also pleased to see the promise in the speech that those values will be a continuing guide to the government.

We Liberals have an abiding faith, Mr. Speaker, in education to lift the human condition. One thing you'll find that all Liberals, I think, agree on is the value of and the need for the very best education we can afford. We believe that the talented have to be encouraged. We should do everything to make sure that they develop the kinds of skills and interests and abilities that they have to the fullest.

But while survival of the fittest may aptly describe evolution, it should not be the philosophy of a government. Government should fill the gaps that have been left there by chance or by a wisdom that we don't understand. So government has a role, a strong role, in helping the vulnerable and in making sure that the talented and those blessed with talents do make the very best of their abilities.

Alberta Liberals believe that a province that's as blessed as ours, a province that can spend billions of dollars on private-enterprise schemes, ought to be able to help by lowering class sizes, by maintaining women's shelters, by providing homes for the homeless. Surely with all the resources that we have and that we can draw upon in this province, the vulnerable should be looked after.

There was a question earlier today in question period about the AISH payments. Most of us in the Assembly and the new ones will soon be visited, I'm sure, by those recipients of the AISH program. It's painful to find the kinds of life situations they find themselves in, the kinds of limited options that they have in terms of looking after themselves, and for them to feel somehow or other that their fellow citizens are attacking them or at least not stepping up to the plate and providing them with the kind of help that they need. The AISH program is a wonderful program, and it has great potential, but I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there has to be a systematic way built into the system that reflects increasing costs for that group of Albertans, that allows them to live with some dignity so that they don't have to take the very few precious assets that some of them have and dispose of them so that they are eligible for further increases.

The system has to be changed. I think the numbers that were given earlier in the day are disgraceful. When you contrast the way those increases come about periodically with the way we have looked after our own affairs as MLAs, where we have attached increases to our own salary to an index, I think there's something wrong, Mr. Speaker. There's a basic fairness that's missing there in terms of treating the vulnerable.

The throne speech, Mr. Speaker, speaks of values that Albertans hold. As I said before, there are other values, and there are values that the opposition has to be particularly aware of and make sure aren't violated. Those values include loyalty, justice, and freedom. It's our charge as the opposition to make sure that government actions do not in any way lessen or make less relevant those values in the lives of Albertans.

I think, Mr. Speaker, with those comments I'd like to conclude. I look forward to seeing the kinds of legislation that will follow from the Speech from the Throne. I'm left, I guess, with a question, and it is just that I'm not quite sure. The opening pages of the speech speak about: "It was only two months ago that I laid out the government's vision for Alberta's future." It goes on to talk about what that vision for Alberta was: "It was a vision of a strong economy, new jobs." So the vision for Alberta is laid out on the first page, yet on the last page we're told that there is going to be another summit to find out what the future is going to be. It seems to me that there's a basic inconsistency there. Either you have the vision, on the first page, or you're looking for it, on the last page.

With those comments, I'd conclude. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on the election of Mr. Speaker and the Deputy Speaker.

It's an absolute delight and a great pleasure for me to have the privilege of responding to the Speech from the Throne, and I thank you for this opportunity today. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, this is an especially moving occasion for me, given that it is not only my maiden speech as an MLA but as Minister of Economic Development with responsibilities for tourism in Alberta. A month ago I was standing on a freeway freezing in the dark and waving at people. Now I walk through the building and people call me honourable. Go figure. This is a very strange business.

I need to take a very special moment to offer my wife, Veronica, and my two children, Claudia and Jack, all the love and support and thanks that I can give them. It's been a very long year, as everybody knows who has done this process, and I would not have made it without them. I thank you sincerely for being with me. I also want to thank my wife for kicking me out of bed every morning. It really helped. It worked.

I need to thank more than 75 volunteers, Mr. Speaker, who believed in me and worked tirelessly day and night on my campaign. There are times when all of us know how it is to continue on with the process in the face of all the challenges we're met with on the campaign trail, and without those volunteers I would not be standing here today. I need to say to them: thank you. They are the very best.

I would also like to thank the voters of Edmonton-McClung. Those people have put their trust in me to be their MLA, and they have voted for me to help them represent their views inside this government as we work toward creating a positive and exciting future for all Alberta. I am very excited and humbled by their trust, and I am delighted to be here to work for them and the people of Alberta. As I said in my campaign, there is nothing more important than having somebody say, "You have my support," and I will always work very hard to continue earning that trust.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank our Premier, who led this campaign with class and dignity. We never got mired down in any kind of name-calling. We discussed issues. We told Albertans what we believed and where we were going. They believed in that vision, and they voted overwhelmingly for this government to return to this House to lead them for the 25th Legislature. It's been an outstanding campaign, and I am grateful to be part of this Progressive Conservative team.

Our purpose here this afternoon is to address the eloquent throne speech given by the Lieutenant Governor on Tuesday, April 10. Much of what Her Honour spoke of was the same vision I share, a vision of no debt, low taxes, reliable social programs, jobs for our young people, and a strong economy. All of these noble endeavours are why I became involved in politics. I hope it is my belief and commitment toward keeping Alberta the best place to live, work, and do business in Canada that the people of Edmonton-McClung recognized and entrusted me to bring to this government.

The Lieutenant Governor mentioned that this work we are doing toward achieving the vision begins with strong economic and fiscal planning. Nowhere is that more evident and more prevalent than in this province of Alberta. We are one of the strongest economies in Canada, if not the strongest. We continue to grow and prosper despite economic slowdowns faced by other jurisdictions, and we will continue to be the strongest growing economy in all of North America.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, my hometown, the great city of Edmonton, is poised for some of the strongest growth of any city in Canada. We anticipate growth in the neighbourhood of 5 percent, and I look forward to working toward that very, very enviable goal. As development in the north continues, everything from oil sands, gas, and tourism continues to boom, and Edmonton is poised to assist in that growth. It is our responsibility to serve as the gateway to the north and be an invaluable source of business resources and information to those communities. I will endeavour as the Minister of Economic Development to ensure that I do everything within my power to continue that growth pattern.

MR. SMITH: Hear, hear.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Murray. [interjection] What a Chamber.

Across the province we are planning for growth in tourism, and I know that if my colleague from Banff-Cochrane were here, we'd be hearing the same thing. We are planning for growth in tourism, large growth in tourism. Alberta's fourth largest industry is tourism. Our goal, with the help of the very wonderful resources that have been given to us by God, is to take this 4 and a half billion dollar industry to $6 billion by the year 2005.

Aggressive marketing and strong partnerships with the tourism industry and Ivan Strang will help us toward that goal.

Speaker's Ruling
Referring to the Absence of Members
Referring to Members by Name

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I'd just like to take the opportunity to say a number of things to new members. One is that we do not refer to the presence or absence, particularly the absence, of hon. members. You can refer to them but not to the fact that they may or may not be here. They may be in their office or whatever.

We do refer to one another by our constituency names, not our given names.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you for that input, Mr. Speaker. If you've followed my career to date, I've made a habit of putting my foot in my mouth, and today is no different. I will attempt to move on.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's success rate is a result of the hard work of Albertans, many of whom work in small businesses throughout the province, and the great leadership of this government. It is also a result of their trust in government to create an environment that fosters prosperity and investment. As someone who only a few short weeks ago was reliant on a small business to support my family, I can assure you that I have the intimate appreciation of the needs of small businesspeople throughout this province, and I will continue to work to meet their needs.

There is no doubt that growth causes its own pressures, and in Alberta we are faced with some of those pressures due to outstanding and phenomenal growth. I was pleased to see in the throne speech that some of these pressures, such as roads and infrastructure, were going to be addressed and noted that the government will continue to respond with programs such as twinning of the north/south corridor and the $1 billion three-year commitment to build or modernize schools.

Clearly our focus is addressed where it should be, and I am proud to be part of this team. Addressing these types of pressures is important, not only in meeting the immediate needs of Albertans but in continuing to improve our quality of life. We also make the province a more attractive place for things such as trade, investment, and tourism, and that helps ensure our long-term prosperity and continues to make Alberta the very best place in the world to live, work, and do business.

It is that future as a result of our prosperity that Her Honour referred to in her reference to the Future Summit. The Future Summit will give Albertans a voice in charting a course for a future as a debt-free province. I am very pleased to have been asked to be part of the organizing committee for the Future Summit. I look forward to working with the other ministries – Revenue, Finance, and Community Development – and the Alberta Economic Development Authority to make this summit one of growth and vision for all Albertans. [some applause] Thank you, hon. member.

The general theme of the summit is to develop a plan for what a debt-free Alberta will look like. The summit starts from that fiscal perspective, but as noted in the throne speech, a good fiscal plan and solid economy allow the province to address quality of life issues. Therefore, economic development issues will be a vital component of the summit discussions. That will be my primary focus as Economic Development minister. The Future Summit will give our government and all Albertans a chance to hear what people's priorities are for the future direction of this province and its wonderful growth.

Mr. Speaker, those who know me know that I am a family man. Family is no doubt the most important thing in my life, as I'm sure it is in all members' lives. I believe its one's love of family that fosters the love of our communities, and that in turn makes our communities a better place to live and grow. I think this philosophy is something that was taught to me very directly by my father, who also served the residents of Edmonton through public service as an alderman from 1977 to 1986. I believe the citizens of Edmonton were better served for that service. I would also like to acknowledge him and thank him for giving me the gift of public service.

Being an Edmontonian, I can't help but recall the sentiments of Grant MacEwan, who always espoused the very, very simple philosophy that you should try to leave the world a better place than when you got here. Those very simple words I believe, Mr. Speaker, are why we are all here. It is something that guides my actions and activities every day.

As I begin my public service, I want to assure you that I will work to serve all members of this Assembly, the constituents of Edmonton-McClung, and the people throughout the province of Alberta to the best of my abilities. It has been an outstanding month since the general election, and I must tell the members of this House that if you asked me to write a job description for how I'd like to spend the next 10 years of my life, I could not write a better job description. The people I work with are outstanding. The goals and admiration that I have for people in this House are second to none, and I believe sincerely that this 25th Legislative Assembly will accomplish great, great things for the province of Alberta.

I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this privilege of speaking today, and God bless all Alberta.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair would like to apologize to the hon. member for interrupting him in his maiden speech. I hope you will forgive me for that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to start my response to the throne speech by congratulating those who were elected. It's not easy to run for public office. It's very hard work. It's a great commitment from families. I appreciate and I honour all of those who were successful. I also grieve for those who were not successful. We've lost some good people in this House. I miss them dearly, and I would like to thank them for the service they gave while they were in this House. They weren't re-elected, but that doesn't diminish the service they provided while they were here with us.

I join others in congratulating the Speaker on his election and the other officers that we've elected to guide this Assembly. I would also like to make mention of the table officers who join us and who are of such assistance to us at all times: unfailingly gentle, although at times we probably deserve a firmer hand.

Now, here we are at the beginning of the 25th Legislature, and it's interesting listening to the debate that has gone on here over the past couple of days. Certainly I acknowledge that the Progressive Conservative Party has formed the government with 74 seats. That's overwhelming. But I caution my hon. colleagues on the other side that that is not all of Alberta that was speaking there. I think it comes out to about 30 percent of all Albertans, and that needs to be kept in mind. As legislators we have not captured all of those who were eligible to vote, and that's something we all need to work on. What is it that we're not doing that we have such low voter turnout? If only 50 percent of the people that are eligible to vote are voting, we're not doing something right, and we need to look to that.

So we do have a significant portion of eligible voting Albertans who did not support the current government. It's my job as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to hold this government accountable, to raise the issues that the government may not want raised or perhaps doesn't think important, but some Albertans do, and I will raise those issues for them.

I'm not sure what the mandate this government was running on was about because I really didn't hear any policy articulated during the election. I heard a lot of announcements of money, and that's fine. If that's the indicator of what their policy is, fine. I didn't hear that policy articulated specifically, but I did see billions and billions of dollars that were allocated that had not been scrutinized by this Legislative Assembly. I think that is something we need to look to: not approving money much after the fact but approving it before it's spent and scrutinizing it on behalf of all Albertans.

I did hear the platform being put forward about "proven," but I think there are a couple of different takes on that record. Certainly when I talk to the people in my constituency, they talked about it being proof of being back in the business of being in business when they looked at various loans and losses in business support that this government had provided to large corporations here in Alberta like Al-Pac or the Prince Rupert grain terminal, West Edmonton Mall, Bovar, Millar Western. People still remember that, and I think it's a caution that we all need to keep in mind.

A number of people were very, very distressed that they had spoken clearly and loudly to the government with their concerns over the Health Care Protection Act, which at the time was known as Bill 11, and were deeply offended when the government not only insulted them by calling them left-wing nuts but didn't listen and didn't react to what was being said. We need to keep in mind that those people were coming forward with deeply held beliefs. Certainly in Alberta to have people motivated to come out to the Assembly and hold a demonstration speaks very loudly indeed.

I think "proven" also has meant in many cases that it's government behind closed doors, and I've often spoken in this Assembly about that. We have more legislation being passed that has huge referrals back to the regulations, and regulations, as we know, are not passed through the Law and Regulations Committee in this Assembly. I don't think the Law and Regulations Committee has been called probably in my lifetime, which I think is a real drawback. There's a lot to be said for all-party committees working in the Legislative Assembly. It would probably get rid of some of the confusion and high temper that we see in the Assembly at times if that was able to be discussed more openly.

"Proven" has also meant to me less time in this Legislative Assembly. I'm sure almost everyone in here has heard remarks about: "Well, you know, you get holidays for eight months of the year. You're only in this Assembly for barely four months." Again, I question that. I think there's more that needs to be discussed and debated here. This is the citizens' avenue to having their points of view heard and their issues raised. We should be spending more time in this House, not less.

"Proven" also meant more user fees and licences and tariffs, and I've spoken about that in this House previously as well. Yes, taxes have been reduced, but if you had your taxes at a thousand dollars and they've been reduced to $800 out of one pocket but you have 900 bucks worth of user fees, tariffs, and licences that are coming out of your other pocket, you know, you're not really further ahead here, folks. I think we have to be honest. When we look at taxes, we also have to look at all of those other fees that people are now paying that have been put into play by this government.

So I read the throne speech with great interest: what was now being put forward as a policy or as a program to be followed. Certainly the economy takes up the largest single section in the throne speech, and that may well be appropriate. It's certainly a very high priority for this government, as demonstrated in the past. I think the discussion about a diversified economy is excellent. We've been trying to achieve that for some time, I think through the last three different Premiers, and it's been some struggle to achieve it. Obviously, in Alberta, with such a strong resource base in the oil sector, we need to continue to work on that.

It also talks about jobs, and I think we have to be careful here. Government doesn't create jobs. The only jobs that government creates are those in their own bureaucracy. Beyond that, I'm assuming you're trying to give an economic platform that attracts small business to grow and thrive. Certainly we know that small business is the biggest generator of new jobs in the sector, but I think the government has to be very careful about not promising that they are creating jobs. They're not. We have to rely on the economy for that.

I read about fiscal plans. Excellent. I would like to see much more planning on behalf of this government and certainly much more of putting that plan out well in advance so it can be seen by Albertans and debated by Albertans. Certainly we could use an improvement on the past record of those increasing costs with user fees and licences, et cetera.

I would ask the government to please work harder on strong, solid performance measurements, particularly ones that stay in place from year to year. As Albertans and as members of the opposition look at that budget and scrutinize it – and we've all moved to a system where we are looking at performance measurements – there's not much to measure when you're changing your performance measurements every year. You can't go back and compare on how you did the year before. I think we're all missing out on a very good and productive tool here.

Better management overall. I've heard now that we've put more money back into health care than where the system was in 1995, but the waiting lists are still longer than they were before. So there's a disconnect here and still a serious problem. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods would also argue that there's lots of money going back into the school system, but we're still having trouble with results, with literacy, with numeracy, and with the ability for children to move ahead and have a full and productive life. Certainly it's been a concern of mine, and I've already raised questions in the Assembly about the use of the utilization rate in school closures. I really don't think that it moves us further forward to be closing schools in the inner city or putting the school boards in the position of having to do that in order to justify expenditures of new schools in other parts of the city. It shouldn't be playing one off against another.

Also, in the throne speech I see modern transportation, safety of roads and highways. Definitely. I think anyone could support that, and we all know that even the Auditor General was on the government's case for deferring maintenance on highways. Maintenance has to be a regularly scheduled expense. We can't not do it for five years and think you can put the same amount in and end up with the same quality and safety of your roads and highways.

I continue to have a concern about the north/south trade corridor in that it does seem to be set up in a way that it bypasses Edmonton. As Edmonton is still the gateway to the north, I do express concerns on that, and I would be happy to have any member from the other side prove me wrong on that one, but so far that has not happened.

I notice that the government is putting a lot of weight on the 2001 World Championships in Athletics. Actually, they seem to be expecting everything from it. The actual section reads:

The government will continue to provide business and investment programs, especially in conjunction with the 2001 World Championships in Athletics. These programs will focus on the strategic benefits of investing in Alberta and demonstrate the province's diverse and world-class energy, petrochemical, forest and building products, agriculture and food, tourism, and information and communications technology sectors.

Yowza. All of that in 10 days. Wow. They're expecting an awful lot to come from that 10 days.

I think it's a great opportunity for Edmonton. My ongoing concern about that – and I've raised it a number of times with the previous Minister of Community Development – is an expectation that the local professional arts community will be promoted through this. Certainly we would like to see community arts groups involved, but we have an astounding professional arts community here in Edmonton and throughout Alberta, and that should be showcased as well. I note that no money that came from the province was tied specifically to the funding of that, which I think was a serious mistake, but they may well have risen above that, and I look forward to the games this summer.

The energy market and the energy free market. Well, I think the two sides are just going to agree to disagree on this one, although I will point out that even the Premier has now admitted that we're not going to see prices go back to where they were before, so I still question why we got into electrical deregulation. That was supposed to be the point, but I guess we're not going back there.

I have a concern around the promotion of new generation and, particularly, streamlining the approval process, in that in my riding we have right now an application before the Energy and Utilities Board on the Rosedale power plant and potentially having three turbines added to that plant, which was to be decommissioned in the year 2000. Certainly it was not anticipated in any city planning or in the area redevelopment plan that we would now have a new and three times as large power plant in the centre of our city. My concern around this streamlining of the approval process is that there be no interference with the application and the intervenors who have raised points to the EUB around the Rosedale plant. Essentially, how does the EUB, which is a regulatory body, operate in a deregulated marketplace? I think that's something that needs to be clearly outlined. Also, how does the EUB operate with the Government Advisory Council on Electricity? Will the EUB be able to make unimpeded decisions on the Rosedale plant and others?

There have been a number of issues that have arisen around electricity deregulation in Edmonton-Centre. I've already raised the issue of discrimination against those living in single-metered high-rise apartments and condominiums. This has been significant for those people. They both had a much higher rate to pay under a regulated rate option and received lower rebates. They also received lower rebates for the gas rebates. That has been adjusted at this point, and time will tell whether it's been successful.

The second thing that happened around that was there was no competition. These buildings were each told: "Well, that's okay. There are 18 different suppliers out there. You can go and get a competitive bid from all of that, and you'll end up with a lower price to pay for your electricity." Wrong. They were too small a user to be able to attract bids from those 18 different power plants. In fact, they were down to just the two, Enmax and EPCOR, and in Edmonton that meant EPCOR, so now we had a monopoly happening. There was no competition involved in that.

The government has also talked about stable agricultural communities. I'm certainly pleased to see some movement on the intensive livestock proposals. I think that's really important not only for the rural areas but for all of Alberta. I am concerned about a long-term strategy for the agricultural sector, and I look forward to more debate and ideas being shared. If there's anywhere that needs to be thinking outside of the box, I think that would be it.

A clean environment is obviously of great importance to many Albertans. It consistently comes up fourth in a priority for constituents that live in Edmonton-Centre.

Responsive health care. Obviously, I'm glad to see the government keeping to its promise, finally, to elect board members for regional health authorities, and it appears that we are indeed keeping 17 regional health authorities, but I am still concerned about how we address diagnostic queue-jumping other than saying don't do it. We need other things in place. I'm looking for more by way of prevention and more to address the waiting lists, and that doesn't mean more money. That means smarter. That means better management.

That means better planning. Health care is consistently the second key issue for constituents of Edmonton-Centre.

The third key issue is education and lifelong learning. In particular, I'm going to single out postsecondary education. There are a lot of students who live in Edmonton-Centre. They go to NAIT, they go to Grant MacEwan Community College, they go to Alberta College, NorQuest, the university, and these people are really struggling. While I appreciate that there are additional scholarship programs being put in place, those scholarships really only apply to a very small number of people. We are not addressing the overall problem of that intergenerational transfer of debt that has happened onto students' shoulders in this province, and that indeed is what happened. Supposedly we were getting rid of our debt here so that we didn't transfer that debt, but we did it instantly. When we've got students coming out of university programs with a $50,000 debt, that is instant intergenerational debt transference.

As well, I think there needs to be a look at student finance. Certainly the way it's set up now, there's an expectation in the budgeting for student finance that a student would only pay $359 for rent and utilities. I challenge you to find some place that you can stay in any centre in Alberta that has a postsecondary educational institution for $359 including utilities. A lot of students don't qualify for student finance. They have to get it through a regular bank loan, which is, again, the same problem. They end up with a huge debt load.

Under Safe, Strong Communities there's talk about a Future Summit. You know, I really see this as another move to separate people's representation from people. It is separating the Legislature from policymaking, the spending of tax dollars. That disconnect that I talked about when I began this, between people and politicians, widens with this sort of endeavour. We all noticed in the campaign, I think, the number of single-issue campaigns that were running as a corollary to us, and there's a reason for that. It's because people are beginning to question whether they're getting their voices heard in here, and I think that with the reduced hours, with more decision-making behind closed doors, it's increasing that disconnect between people and their representatives. When they have budgeting and financial planning that's done by a sort of mail-in multiple choice and they don't see what they've said represented in that, we are contributing to that feeling that they're not being represented by people.

I'd like to talk now about what's not in this Speech from the Throne. I don't see anything in there about employment standards and labour relations, which are sadly lacking in this province. We need a lot of work on that, including a look at the WCB.

Again, I talk about real support for the arts, not just sort of as a nice thing for the tourists to see when they come to the world games or photo opportunities for tourism brochures but real support for it. That sector is still operating on 1988 dollars and has not even had a cost of living increase. In particular, what I'm hearing now is that the PASOs, the provincial art service organizations, are in trouble. Those are the organizations that took over many of the programs the government used to offer.

So I'm looking forward to an opportunity to bring up the rest of the issues I have.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Next is the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to be able to participate in this discussion today with regards to the Speech from the Throne, and I rise in this esteemed Chamber with pride and,

I must admit, a little trepidation since this is my maiden speech.

I would like to start by first and foremost taking this singular opportunity as a new member of the 25th Legislature, the first Legislature after the first election of the new millennium, to thank the people of Calgary-Currie for their vote of confidence in our party and in me and, further, to thank my wife, Patty, my family, and my invaluable campaign volunteers, who did so much to help me gain that vote, without whom I certainly would not have this position today. It is an important position, that of MLA, and is a privilege and honour and a heavy responsibility indeed all rolled up into one but certainly a privilege and an honour and a responsibility that I intend to take very, very seriously and hope to prove worthy of.

Secondly, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to add my voice to those of so many others in congratulating you on your recent re-elections: first, in your re-election to this Chamber and now, once again, on your re-election to the prestigious office of, in your case, Deputy Speaker. As well, through you, let me extend my congratulations to all of my colleagues here today and to all the hon. members of this Legislature on their recent election success as well. I look forward to working with you and each and every other member of this Legislature. As well, I would like to say that I look forward to working with all the very helpful, exceptionally friendly, and very important support staff of this Legislature: the people who toil so hard in the background on our behalf with so little recognition.

Let me just say that I'm looking forward to working with all of you in the months and years ahead in the service of the people of Alberta, as we look to continuing on behalf of the citizens of Alberta our own local brand of triple E government here in Alberta. I use a slightly different definition than the one that was presented yesterday by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fort, so I guess I am now presenting the third definition of triple E – the triple triple E definition – effective, efficient, and ethical government, government that currently is and will be even more so setting the gold standard benchmark for so many others and governance that is making us all so very proud to be living here in this great province of Alberta.

I like what I have heard in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker. I like the vision, the aspirations, and the ideals that have been so eloquently expressed therein. I like the challenges that such a grand statement places before us all, commitments that are very worth while indeed, and for those I thank Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for her directions and thoughts so eloquently expressed.

I also thank especially our hon. Premier for his guidance and leadership in helping us to develop these aspirations and more importantly for his able direction in putting these thoughts into action as he steers and stays the course towards continuing success and an even more positive future than Albertans have already been able to enjoy to this point.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the messages contained in the Speech from the Throne will be well received in Calgary-Currie, because Calgary-Currie is a riding whose people are familiar with change, since they have seen so much of it, and who understand and appreciate innovation, leadership, straight talk, and more importantly action on the issues. I can say this because I have been working in the riding now for 18 years and can even say that I was actually born in the riding. So I certainly have had the opportunity to get to know and to appreciate and to call my friends a great number of the people living in the area over the years. They are without doubt some of the finest people that you would ever meet anywhere.

I'd like to tell you and all our hon. colleagues a little more about

Calgary-Currie, Mr. Speaker, if I could ask for your indulgence to allow me to brag a little bit. In terms of population Calgary-Currie today is a riding that has one of the highest percentages of young adults living in rented premises in the city of Calgary, young people who are filled with the energy, aspirations, ideals, and high-tech knowledge of so many of our young people today but who also tend to have very little money and are very concerned about things like rent prices.

Calgary-Currie today also has a much larger than average percentage of more senior individuals with their irreplaceable wisdom and the experience and the patience that can only come with the seasoning of many years. But a lot of them, sad to say, Mr. Speaker, also have very little money and are vulnerable in many other ways as well.

We also have just about everything in between, Mr. Speaker, with young and old living side by side, with rich and poor, lots of solid family people and lots of singles, young children and empty nesters, professionals, and salt-of-the-earth folk, all working with each other to build a safer, stronger, and more caring community. It is clear that Calgary-Currie today is an area that is succeeding in the face of all this contrast, succeeding in not just meeting change but capitalizing on it as we move ahead.

Speaking of change and of building, it is truly amazing how fast new building is taking place in Calgary-Currie, Mr. Speaker, particularly on the lands which used to belong to the Canadian forces base, the lands surrounding Currie barracks, from which Calgary-Currie got its name. This area in Calgary-Currie is home to what I understand is the largest urban renewal development project of its type in North America, as these former CFB lands are starting to fill up with all these new families in new houses. It makes for a curious and eclectic blend in the district. As these new constituents look out from their luxurious new homes, some of the most expensive new homes in Calgary, across the streets and across the district are some of the oldest, most famous, and most significant heritage homes in all of Calgary, because Calgary-Currie is also one of the most significant historic districts in all of Calgary, with about 2,700 of our buildings having been built before 1946 and 6,735 of them having been built before 1960.

Now that we are in the new century, Mr. Speaker, looking back at our past heritage and forward to a positive future, it seems that Calgary-Currie has all the necessary ingredients and essentials to fit in perfectly with this theme of old meeting new as a model community in Alberta, a melting pot of bubbling vibrancy and diversity and energy, which it certainly is, filled with thinking people who are passionate about the issues and who come from all walks of life, people such as Paul Jefferies, two-time world champion tattoo artist, Austin Hook, owner of the oldest retail computer store in the world, Peter Papisideris, certainly one of the world's greatest living marksmen, and many, many other interesting, successful, and eclectic people as well. This is Calgary-Currie today.

Now, besides interesting people, we also have some very important institutions in Calgary-Currie. Calgary-Currie is proud to be the location for Mount Royal College, already one of the most important postsecondary educational institutions in our province and certainly an ambitious institution focused on lifelong learning concepts with major expansion plans assuring them of an even more positive future as well and an even better reputation than they already have.

We also have an exciting, fairly new addition to Calgary-Currie with the headquarters of the film industry in Alberta located in the riding, an industry that I have a solid background in myself personally and thus will be taking a great interest in as well. We have a thriving arts and culture environment, a thriving small business backbone in areas such as the Marda Loop, which boasts an attendance upwards of 30,000 people at their increasingly popular Mardi Gras/Summerfest each year, as well as many other attractions throughout the district. In all, we have a lot to build and a lot to build on in Calgary-Currie.

But it isn't all positive news in Calgary-Currie, Mr. Speaker. Crime is a very big concern, as it is a big concern to all Albertans, so I am glad to hear the initiatives mentioned in the Speech from the Throne on this subject. Aging infrastructure, social issues, affordable housing: these are all particularly acute concerns in Calgary-Currie. The greatest recent concern is the announcement in the media that five of the seven elementary schools in the district may be closed this year, including King Edward school, where William Aberhart was the first principal. It is an announcement that has stunned and shocked many people in the riding, myself included, and it is an announcement that has many people wondering what possible reasoning could be behind such a decision, again, myself included.

In the face of all this major revitalization, in the face of this urban renewal, in the face of an estimated 10,000 people moving into the area in the next few years, people are wondering why they're suddenly having to see their schools considered for closure. This is coming on the heels of a lot of other bad news in the riding – it's not bad news, but it is for Calgary-Currie – over the past few years, most recently the relocation of the Children's hospital, currently located in Calgary-Currie, which has been such a pride and badge of honour to the community for the past many years.

I would not want, Mr. Speaker, to give the impression that Calgary-Currie doesn't have a few issues to which my constituents are demanding answers. I know from experience that my constituents can be very loud in their demands, having represented many of them for the past two terms on Calgary city council as their alderman. I am well aware of their expectations of me in this regard, and as their representative I am certainly going to be fighting hard on their behalf to address these concerns. I'm also very mindful of the strong leadership and representation that these communities have had over almost the past century and of the sort of expectations that Calgary-Currie constituents will therefore have for me and for their future as a result.

Mr. Speaker, when I talk about the proud history of this riding, may I just say that Calgary-Currie has had in the past and still has to this day some of the most important political names in Alberta history counted among the citizens who have lived or are still living within the districts bounded by the borders of Calgary-Currie, including many names that are well known in this Chamber to all of you. Beyond politics in Calgary-Currie we're also very proud to have some of Alberta's most important and well-known citizens from virtually every walk of life calling our district home.

I have very big shoes to fill, Mr. Speaker, and a high road to follow, which, I must say, makes the challenge before me all the more exciting and daunting all at the same time, one in which I truly hope and trust that I can rely a great deal on everyone here for advice, for consideration, and for your experienced guidance in helping me to address these and many other issues as well on behalf of my constituents.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, this is an opportune moment to speak a little about what I have worked on in the past and what issues I hope to focus on for my constituents now that I have been given this opportunity to serve at this level of government. During my tenure on city council I worked very hard on a great number of issues, and I like to think that I enjoyed some success at it, as perhaps evidenced by my presence here today. These issues remain of concern and of interest to my constituents and therefore are especially of concern and interest to me. Since there are so many of them, I won't list them all here, but let me just talk a moment about some of them.

Having been a small business entrepreneur my entire working life, signing the front of a paycheck since I was 18, I was often referred to as the voice of small business on Calgary city council, and small business, believe me, needs all the voices it can get. I emphasize the words "small business" too, although since approximately 75 percent of all businesses have five employees or less and in fact 95 percent have 50 employees or less, the reality is that numerically almost all business is small business. The quality of the environment that we create for microbusiness entrepreneurs in this province to start up new companies, to translate their dreams into reality, and to succeed against the daunting odds any new business faces is of paramount consideration in my mind and vital to continually review, if we are to create a better quality of life for all Albertans. There is a lot of work that needs to be done in this area at every level of government.

I also had opportunity, while on council, to work on a lot of high-technology and environmental issues, particularly in introducing high-technology solutions and creative approaches to problem solving, and problem solving is what I like to do most in life. I hope that this government, as excellent as it is, has still left me one or two problems that I can get involved with so that I won't be disappointed there.

Speaking of problem solving, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to let all of you know that I'm also very pleased to be part of a new team here of exceptionally capable, brand-new MLAs. I'm speaking in particular about exceptionally capable six brand-new MLAs who are located on the third floor of the Annex Building. I am very confident that we are soon going to be dazzling all of you with our brilliance and innovative new ideas. You might say a new Department of Solutions, so to speak. We haven't quite decided on the name yet. I am calling us the bright lights on 3, but I am sure that all of you will very soon be impressed; no doubt about it.

And speaking of a better idea from the bright lights on 3, let me just start with one little one here, Mr. Speaker. When I first came into this esteemed Chamber on orientation day, the first thing I noticed, believe it or not, was the 600 light bulbs on the ceiling here, and I remember discussing how difficult it was to change them: clearing the Chamber, putting up scaffolding, and so on. I also noticed that they are incandescent bulbs, not the compact fluorescent bulbs, which look almost the same, give off the same light, but use 70 percent less electricity and last 10 times longer. So I wondered: why aren't they? Better yet, if we were to use the latest light-emitting diode technology, which uses almost no electricity at all in comparison to incandescents and which is expected to last for decades without replacement, it seems to me we could save the taxpayers a lot of money and have the opportunity to show leadership in energy conservation concepts right here in this Chamber.

Now, I may not be the first to suggest this idea, but maybe I could further suggest another idea. We could calculate the savings we could get, including the scaffolding avoidance savings, and leverage these funds even further by awarding the savings in an annual bursary or prize to the student or other individual in Alberta who comes up with the best energy conservation project each year.

So there is an opportunity or an idea for consideration, Mr. Speaker, in an important area for Albertans and this government, energy conservation. In fact, the whole area of energy conservation, ideas, expertise, and technology strikes me as one of the areas that Alberta is perfectly positioned in to develop as a major export. Instead of the past, olden-day ways of just being hewers of wood and drawers of water and drillers of oil and gas, why not really get behind fostering an even bigger transformation from what we are already seeing in this province, a transformation from energy production to full energy management across the spectrum, becoming a hub of the world's leading energy conservationist experts, products, technologies, and ideas?

We already have some outstanding examples here in Alberta; for example, the Alberta sustainable home in Calgary built by Jorg Ostrowski, a home so energy efficient it is almost off the municipal grid, virtually no external energy requirements at all. So we already have a few Albertans setting the pace worldwide. Let's promote this.

I find it an exciting industry to contemplate, Mr. Speaker. I'm one of those who has always looked for the silver lining in the dark cloud, which is why I have always looked at the Kyoto agreement as probably one of the world's biggest business opportunities, if we can just figure out how, and I think I have a few of those ideas. Energy conservation principles are an area in which I was pleased to have played a leading role in introducing to the city of Calgary during my tenure there. The initiatives under way there now are resulting in projects that are going to save an estimated $100 million for city of Calgary taxpayers over the next 10 years and are also expected to allow the city of Calgary to meet almost 50 percent of its entire Kyoto commitments on greenhouse gas reduction, and this is just within city buildings.

When I say that $100 million is a drop in the bucket of what I believe could be done right across the province, I think I can now say that with some credibility, Mr. Speaker. This is why I'm very pleased to have been appointed to serve on the energy and sustainable development committee, where I hope to make a good contribution.

In conclusion, let me just say that I am very proud to be here today. I am very proud of the constituency that has given me this opportunity. I look forward to representing Calgary-Currie and achieving the goals in the Speech from the Throne in a manner which befits the very nature and substance of the great people in my community, a blend of the conservative wisdom of a district with an exceptionally proud historic past balanced against a new, enthusiastic energy that pervades the community as it looks forward to a very positive and progressive future. In short, Mr. Speaker, a Progressive Conservative constituency.

Thank you for this opportunity to speak, and God bless Alberta.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope you will forgive my nervousness today, for I should not be. I have been made to feel truly welcome in this Assembly, and it is with tremendous pride I stand before you today representing my constituency and the people of Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the encouragement and support from my family: my wife, Bev, and all my children. Particularly I would like to mention some of my key campaign organizers. Mrs. Brenda Lee, Mrs. Silvia Solay, Mrs. Sherry Stalwick, along with over 240 other volunteers and 170 different financial contributors made our campaign fun and very successful.

I, too, Mr. Speaker, would like to offer my congratulations to you on your re-election as Speaker of the House. The pride and tradition you bring is evident by your actions as you work so hard to try and integrate us new members into this wonderfully complex Assembly. I know I speak for all the new members when I ask you to convey to your staff, and indeed all the staff of the Legislative Assembly including our assistants, our thanks for all they have done to prepare us for today and the future.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate all my fellow members, including the opposition, for we are all Albertans. Although our philosophies may differ, I know their concern for the people they serve in this great province is genuine. I look forward to working with them over the next four years.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow for the tremendous vote of confidence Albertans bestowed upon him.

The speech offered by our Lieutenant Governor has provided a clear path for the government of Alberta to take. Maintaining and building our strong economic base, coupled with providing responsive, effective, affordable health care and education systems, relevant economic, environmental, and social programs, all combined within a framework of fiscal responsibility: this combination, Mr. Speaker, will make Alberta truly the best place to live.

Mr. Speaker, I have four children, from kindergarten to grade 11. My parents are seniors, and my mother-in-law lives in a senior's manor in Vermilion. I guess you could say that I have more than a passing interest in our province's education and social programs.

Mr. Speaker, I've spent the last 25 years working with my family in several different businesses including farming, the construction industry, and a tourism and hospitality business. I know these sectors are all very important to the Alberta economy. I hope to bring to government my business philosophy. Simply stated: we must be adaptable and efficient, we must be able to foresee change, and we must be able to build strength from diversity. I share the vision this government has put forward in its throne speech, and I look forward to working with my colleagues to attain it.

Mr. Speaker, nowhere is the Alberta advantage more obvious than in Lloydminster, where the incredible oil and gas prices and a booming retail market have the city bursting at its seams. This tremendous growth has the existing infrastructure, in both human services and utilities, stretched to the limit. It is a problem that many cities and towns would love to have, but it still comes with a tremendous cost.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, less than a half hour from the city, many small communities scratch and claw to try and preserve their way of life. The loss of many of our country elevators, the consolidation of our service centres and our machinery dealers, and a grain industry devastated by years of rising input costs and low commodity prices have left many of these communities with no longer the financial capability or the population growth to support even the most basic services many of us take for granted. As stated in the throne speech, economic prosperity depends on a solid foundation. I believe that these rural communities and the populations that surround them are the bedrock of our prosperity. As a province and as a country we do a tremendous disservice to future generations if we let this way of life disappear.

Mr. Speaker, the government recognizes the value of agriculture and of the related value-added industries. However, the ongoing debate surrounding intensive livestock operations must be addressed. There are huge differences in philosophical arguments, emotional reactions, and scientific fact. I look forward to working with the government to develop a set of sound, comprehensive regulations putting both the producer and his neighbours at ease. Also, I believe the Premier showed foresight and understanding when he realigned his cabinet to better reflect the needs of this diverse province.

The Speech from the Throne spoke of the government's commitment to make strategic investments to improve the safety and efficiency of our highways and roads. This is great news for the farmers who must haul their grain many miles now to market or to the people of Lloydminster and area who have truly found that any time and every time is train time in downtown Lloydminster.

The Speech from the Throne also made notice of the forthcoming addition to the north/south trade corridor. We must be careful to remember the importance of the east/west trade corridor that runs from Lloydminster through Edmonton and beyond to Jasper. This corridor provides more efficient access to Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia not only for the people who live in my constituency but for all the people who live along the Yellowhead highway.

I would like to commend this government's commitment to maintaining and furthering the excellence of our education system. This government has provided our learning institutions with the education delivery methods and systems to prepare Alberta's youth for the world of tomorrow. This government's commitment to increase funding to school boards to allow them to address specific issues in their jurisdictions will enhance student learning in all our schools. Mr. Speaker, success in education should not be measured by how much money we spend but by the results we get from carefully targeted spending.

The administrative offices of Lakeland College are located in Vermilion, and at this time I would like to congratulate the chairman of the board, Mr. Bill Kondro, and its president, Dr. Mark Lee, for they have been instrumental in guiding Lakeland College to its current place as a leader in the fields of agriculture and environmental sciences, business and computer studies, the trades and technologies, and many others.

Located near Lakeland College in Vermilion is the Alberta Fire Training School. Under the management of Mr. Don Gnatiuk this renowned institution has earned the reputation of being a world-class facility and has been responsible for the graduation of many well-educated and well-trained firefighters and EMTs. As well, the Alberta Fire Training School has been designated network manager for the delivery of municipal, industrial, and disaster services training for the province of Alberta.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Community Development is currently working with a group in Vermilion to develop an Alberta fire museum and interpretive centre, which will complement both the school and the community. By the year 2005 Vermilion will be able to boast not only one of the world's most advanced and successful firefighting schools but a state-of-the-art, interactive educational fire museum and interpretive centre.

Mr. Speaker, this government's support for agricultural societies and other programs has facilitated the building and operation of many community halls and seniors' and recreation centres, and they are truly the glue that holds these small communities together. Islay and Clandonald are both small communities in my constituency that have recently revamped or rebuilt their community halls, and they are a great example of the partnership that is important in these communities. Last Friday we turned the sod for the new Vic Juba community theatre in the city of Lloydminster.

Mr. Speaker, as the new Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster I have heard many times that I'll be working in the shadow of my honourable predecessor, Dr. Steve West. On the contrary, I feel we are working under the brightest shining lights of the most prosperous province of Canada. Thanks to all the members of the 24th Legislative Assembly and Dr. West. During his long and successful term Dr. West played a key role in making Alberta a stronger province. His term as Provincial Treasurer saw the government of Alberta become more efficient and prepared to tackle the challenges that lie ahead.

Never retract, never explain, never apologize, get things done, and let them howl: the battle cry of the incomparable Dr. West? No. Nellie McClung. I trust that future generations of Albertans will honour the legacy and cherish these accomplishments of a truly decent man, the Hon. Dr. Steven West.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the throne speech has given all Albertans a clear idea of what this government envisions for the future in attempts to provide Albertans with a strong economic base that can provide stable, effective, and affordable government in the future. I for one can hardly wait to be a part of it.

Thank you.

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest of respect and awe that I rise to address this 25th Legislative Assembly, and I begin with my heartfelt congratulations to the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, and the Deputy Chairman of Committees on your elections as Speakers. Already, in the few short weeks I've had to get to know you three gentlemen, I can honestly say that the members have chosen wisely. I was glad to see that Mr. Speaker did not put up too much resistance when the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition walked him up to that big chair.

Now, I'd also like to thank Her Honour Lieutenant Governor Lois Hole for the excellent presentation of the Speech from the Throne on February 12 and again on April 10, 2001. My mother attended the swearing-in ceremony held on April 3, and she commented on Her Honour's kind mannerism and the genuine sincerity that she felt from our Lieutenant Governor at that great occasion as well.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's true.

REV. ABBOTT: Yes, it is.

Now, as I stand before this House on behalf of the almost 30,000 residents of the Drayton Valley-Calmar constituency, I know that they would want me to invite all Albertans to come and visit our beautiful riding. Within our approximately 200 kilometres by 80 kilometres borders you will find a flurry of activity, including agriculture, oil and gas, mining and forestry, retail trade, professional and other services, and golf courses.

We are like a small Alberta within Alberta. We boast a diversified economy that is currently booming beyond our wildest expectations. In fact, the average family income back at the 1995 census was just over $50,000 per year, and it has grown steadily since then under this current government's programs and principles.

Now, because our diverse constituency is so reflective of our entire province, every initiative that this government undertakes will be of great interest and of great importance to us. We are used to enjoying a high standard of living in a province that is determined and built by its citizens, not by its government. We believe in more personal freedoms, in individual initiative, and in financial responsibility.

As was outlined in the Speech from the Throne, we too envision a province with low taxes and no debt, a province that lives within its means and that presents balanced budgets with affordable spending on priority programs and services.

Now, in Drayton Valley-Calmar we, like the rest of Alberta, have a very good population balance of young and elderly, so a good education system and a good health care system will be high priorities for us in this mandate. Like our neighbouring constituencies around us we want to ensure a positive future for our children in a modern and safe school building that is well staffed. We want state-of-the-art technology in our hospitals and long-term care facilities to help our seniors. We want good roads to move our oil and gas and forestry products. We want commonsense government with no waste and no frills.

Now, the farmers of Drayton Valley-Calmar want to be valued and respected for the important work they do. It seems sometimes that farmers in other countries are appreciated more than farmers in our country. We must never forget that farmers are the lifeline to everything else we do as a province, for without food hospitals and schools and even roads are not much good. High input costs and low commodity prices are currently squeezing the farmers of Drayton Valley-Calmar, and we need this government to not only lobby the federal government but also to share the Alberta advantage with those who created it in the first place. Now, I'm pleased to see that the throne speech has addressed this issue by pledging to implement insights from Ag Summit 2000.

Another real issue that we face in Drayton Valley-Calmar along with the rest of the province, I believe, is that of single-parent or no-parent families. We are so blessed to have a good Children's Services ministry and many excellent professionals and employees that serve therein, but now it seems that the rest of the professional sectors are running ahead of any wage or staffing increases to this important government department. During this mandate we envision the government increasing Children's Services' funding as well as continuing to promote and support pro-family and pro-life issues.

As a former minister of a rural church I have seen firsthand the great needs that are facing Alberta families. Some of these needs cannot be fixed by money at all. Some require Albertans and this Legislative Assembly to reaffirm and strengthen our commitment to the family. Like the new Minister of Economic Development, I too am a strong family man. Good families produce good citizens. We need to protect the family and to tenaciously defend Alberta's legal definition of marriage as that of being the union between a man and a woman. We need to value and encourage two-parent families, such as we have recently done with Alberta's new personal income tax exemptions that recognize the true value of having one stay-at-home parent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I recently read – you guys will be interested in this – that Edelman Financial Services of Fairfax, Virginia, completed a national study on the worth of the stay-at-home mother, based on the average North American salary. They compiled a list of the typical functions of a mother, such as financial manager, cook, psychologist, bus driver – 17 different occupations that a mother has. Now, the study reports that since mothers wear many hats and since a mother is on duty 24 hours a day, the typical mother deserves a full-time salary for 17 key occupational positions. Now, based on this conclusion and on the average national salaries for the 17 respective jobs, mothers should be paid just over $508,000 per year. Actually, the editor of Working Mother magazine called the half million figure a little low, saying that many mothers often take on far more jobs than were covered in the Edelman study.

We need to promote strong families in Alberta, but I am not suggesting that it is only stay-at-home moms; in some cases stay-at-home dads are what is best for kids and for families. You see, it is the women of Alberta that have been starting up new small businesses as of late. It is the women who have been creating new jobs for Albertans, and we don't want to stop that. We simply want kids to be valued and cared for by a loving parent so that our province has the positive future that we have been promising.

New jobs, health, education, farms, and families – oh, yes, there are many needs, Mr. Speaker, but since 1971 the residents of my constituency or its predecessors have repeatedly voted Progressive Conservative in election after election because they believe and have been shown that this is a good government that cares and that listens and that exercises a healthy balance between tax reduction and reinvestment into worthwhile programs and services. They have seen this current government keep their promises to Albertans, so we support these new initiatives outlined in Her Honour's Speech from the Throne. As a new MLA I relish the opportunity to help this government continue to build on the best province in Canada, and I will be doing so as I work hard for the best constituency in Alberta.

On March 12 I was both honoured and humbled that the constituents of Drayton Valley-Calmar chose me, an Evangelical Covenant Church pastor, to represent them for this current mandate. I believe they chose me, though, not just because I have lived in the riding for almost 20 years, not just because I have a background in small business and farming as well as in oil and gas and in the professional field. Rather, I believe they chose me because of my love for and understanding of ordinary people and because of my strong stands on pro-life and pro-family issues. I believe they chose me because of my promise to uphold high morals and values and because I am a fiscal conservative with a social heart.

It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to be all things to all people, but I have promised to be visible, accountable, and accessible to the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar. I have promised to work hard to bring forward every idea and concern of our constituents. I believe that this is the time to be bold and, as our Premier said today, to think outside the box so that we can continue to make the best province in Canada even better. This is the time to embrace modern technology without forsaking proven practices in principles of the past.

In my 12 years as pastor I learned that success requires two things: a clear vision and a willingness to change anything but that vision. Our hon. Premier has a clear vision, a grand vision, and he now has 73 other team members to help shape and carry out that vision. We also have nine hon. members in total on the other side of the house to help keep us on our toes and to offer healthy debate and constructive criticism to government initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, let me say in closing that I am not so naive to think that I was chosen to represent the fine people of Drayton Valley-Calmar merely on my own merits. I believe they chose me because of the great work of my predecessor, MLA Tom Thurber, and my wonderful campaign team, my wonderful family, and because I am part of a larger team of PC MLAs with proven leadership.

Ralph Klein is truly a great leader with proven leadership, and the Tory caucus is truly a great family. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the six of us on the third floor of the Annex are fast becoming a family within a family. The bright lights on the third floor: I like it. I look forward to building many more relationships and families throughout this mandate. Alberta is a province that believes in family. Without family none of us would be here. We know that strong families give us a strong province.

Let me close with a quote from our former Alberta Treasurer and the current Leader of the Official Opposition in Ottawa, Mr. Stockwell Day. In his maiden speech to this House back on June 24, 1986, Mr. Day stated:

I am firmly committed to three essentials for a truly great society. These are faith, family, and freedom. I will support and promote all ideas and initiatives from either side of this House which embody any or all of those principles. It is my prayer that the members of this Legislature would be gripped with a desire to do what is right, not necessarily what is expedient; that we would show ourselves to be not civil masters but truly civil servants, for only out of a genuine willingness to serve do we earn the right to govern.

Now I echo those words today, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. Mr. Day ended his speech as I will also end mine. He said, "May it be said of us in this House, 'They came here to serve.'" God bless Alberta. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to rise as the newly elected Member for Edmonton-Calder, and I regard it as a privilege to speak to the Speech from the Throne. Before I comment on the speech, I'd like to join with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and pay homage to the former Member for Edmonton-Calder, a member who served in this Assembly for eight years. Prior to that he served the city of Edmonton for nine years. That is 17 years of public service. I got to know Mr. White throughout the campaign. I regard him as a gentleman, and I'd like this House to acknowledge the 17 years of public service that he committed to this city and to this province.

I'm pleased to succeed Mr. White as the Member for Edmonton-Calder. For those of you who are not familiar with my constituency, it is in the city of Edmonton. It extends from 111th Avenue on the south border to 137th Avenue on the north border, from 109 Street on the east border all the way to the western city limits. Geographically it is a large urban area by size. It is the home of 31,290 constituents and a large industrial base. It is comprised largely of working-class families but has a large percentage of senior citizens.

The history of Calder goes back to the turn of the century. Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, Calder was once a rural community and was called the village of West Edmonton. It was not until 1917 that the village of West Edmonton officially joined the city of Edmonton and became known as the Calder community.

Transportation is the history of the Calder constituency with the evolution of the CN rail yards, and transportation remains a viable part of the Calder constituency. The CN rail yards are in the very geographic centre of the Calder constituency. Moreover, Calder is home to the Via Rail terminal, the Edmonton municipal airport, and highway 2 and the Yellowhead Trail both transgress and transcend the boundaries of the Calder constituency.

I have lived and practised law in the Calder constituency since 1994.

The constituency is proud to host many active community leagues and neighbourhood associations. I'm pleased and proud to be a member of the Inglewood Community League. I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I was not entirely familiar with all of the community neighbourhoods within the geographic boundaries of Calder until the recent electoral campaign, during which I had the privilege of visiting all of the constituents and learning more about the residents of the constituency that I now represent.

I must acknowledge that a majority of the constituents seem to be particularly happy with the way the current government has been performing. Employment opportunities remain very high within this portion of Edmonton. Taxes are comparatively low. Many of the constituents that I met knocking on the doors throughout the 28-day campaign had recently immigrated to Alberta from other parts of Canada, and they seemed to be particularly happy to find the employment opportunities that exist within our province and were especially pleased to find out that this is the only province that has no provincial sales tax. The residents of the neighbourhoods within the Calder constituency are generally satisfied with the record of this government, as is evidenced by their endorsement of my candidacy.

The Speech from the Throne delivered by the Lieutenant Governor a couple of days ago is a statement of the government's commitment to carry on with good government. It is a record of continuing to build on the Alberta advantage. It is a vision of low taxes, no provincial debt, a strong economy, new jobs for our young people, sound infrastructure, a good and sustainable health care system, a viable education system, stable agricultural programs, safe streets and communities, and reliable social programs.

Having grown up in Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker, I can say that Alberta is genuinely the envy of all of Canada. Our majestic scenery, our fertile farmland, our educated and skilled labour force, our forest reserves, and of course our generous abundance of oil and gas reserves give Albertans advantages that are the envy of all Canadians. Thankfully, managing all of this, we have a government with solid fiscal goals which allow all Albertans to pursue their entrepreneurial dreams and enjoy the economic prosperity that living in this province allows.

But there are challenges, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want protection from rising energy prices. I'm pleased that both the throne speech and Bill 1, introduced by the hon. Premier, indicate the government's commitment to provide such protection. This bill will ensure that all Alberta consumers have competitive natural gas prices so that they can continue to enjoy the Alberta advantage.

There are also local issues within the Calder constituency that will need to be addressed by this Legislature. The Calder constituency is home to the now vacant Camsell hospital site. The Calder constituency, as I indicated, has a high percentage of senior citizens. Thankfully, I hope to continue to work with the Ministry of Infrastructure to develop a plan that the private sector is developing to convert the vacant site into affordable housing for senior citizens.

The Edmonton-Calder constituency is also the home of the Inland Cement factory, and the Inland Cement factory, as some hon. members, including the hon. Member for St. Albert, are aware, has recently applied to convert from natural gas to coal in its foundry operation. This, of course, causes some concern for the residents in the surrounding neighbourhoods.

I came to this position with a very simple message to the constituents who entrusted me with their support: put Edmonton-Calder back in government. I'm beginning to form good and solid relationships with the various ministries, the ministers, and their staff, and I'm confident that through hard work, co-operation, consultation all of these issues will be resolved to the satisfaction of both the government and the constituents and most importantly to the neighbourhoods which are so viable within the Calder constituency.

I'm confident and optimistic that as a government member I will be able to bring the concerns of my constituents directly to the government and that the government will be sensitive and responsive. That is the pledge that I made to the residents of Edmonton-Calder, those who entrusted me with their support on March 12. I am proud to be their representative in this House, and I'm proud to occupy this seat in this hallowed Chamber.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't my intention to speak this afternoon in reply to the Speech from the Throne, but having been afforded the opportunity, I couldn't pass it up.

First of all, let me add my congratulations and best wishes to you on your acclamation as Speaker. It's well-deserved recognition of the work that you've put in over the past four years in the previous session of this Legislature and the reputation that you have achieved for fairness and for dealing with all members of this House with equity and equanimity and the enthusiasm you bring to the whole concept of the parliamentary tradition and parliamentary structure. I for one appreciate the reputation that you're building among parliamentarians across this country for the Alberta Legislature and for the work that you do. So I just wanted to add my congratulations and my appreciation for your election as Speaker and for your agreeing to carry on that tradition for the next four years.

I, too, am very pleased to return to this House after the election of March 12. Having experienced my first term after the 1997 election, I can say that there has been no experience in my life which brings greater satisfaction, which brings greater challenges, which I can say is such an honour and a privilege than to serve the residents of Edmonton-Whitemud and the citizens of Alberta in this Chamber and to be considered a parliamentarian, to be considered a member of the Legislature and particularly to be a member of this government under the leadership of Ralph Klein, the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

I believe that it is appropriate to address the two speeches from the throne that we've had this year as Her Honour included a reference to the earlier Speech from the Throne in the speech which she delivered on Tuesday. They addressed many of the issues that are very, very important to Edmonton-Whitemud and to all of Edmonton. This session of the Legislature, I think, is going to be a particularly important one when we address the issues of importance of Edmonton.

I am very, very pleased as well to welcome and congratulate my 10 colleagues from Edmonton who have joined us on the government side of the House for this session and who I know will not only represent their constituencies well but will represent Edmonton well in both government caucus, in cabinet, at the very many policy discussion tables and standing policy committee tables, and the very many places at which we have to bring the personality, the issues, and the perspective of Edmonton to the table as we discuss the future directions of this province. It's particularly a pleasure to have so many additional members from Edmonton on the government side of the House so that we can be so much more effective at representing Edmonton in the context of Alberta's future, not, of course, to pay any disrespect to the concept of the capital region.

The capital region has been a very important part of this process, and the Member for St. Albert, as the chairman of the capital region caucus, has served ably in bringing together the MLAs in the past session from Edmonton and from the capital region to be a cohesive group of individual legislators, bringing forward that whole combination from the capital region, and bringing the enthusiasm and the personality of the capital region to caucus and government.

I particularly wanted to mention that because the capital region of this province has been a dynamic and growing force over the last four years. One of the reasons I believe we were so successful in electing members in Edmonton and the capital region and particularly in Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and other constituencies in the area was because of that dynamic force, because of the optimism that we have in this region, because of the growth that's happening in this region, because of the economic activity that's happening in this region, and because of the quality of life that's happening in this region. Much of that is due to the policies of this government putting in place an infrastructure and a tax regime and a business concept which allow business to grow and prosper, provide jobs to the people of the region, provide economic opportunity to people of the region, and allow us to operate within this district to provide a very, very positive future for our children.

It is sometimes ironic, I think, that much of our time as MLAs is spent dealing with constituent concerns, which are very, very important, providing access for our constituents to government, trying to solve individual problems, and dealing with the issues of the day. That is a very, very important part of our role as members of the Legislature. But the irony is that I think most people really want us to be elected to think about the big picture and the long term, provide a sense of vision and direction to the province. So as we spend a lot of our time dealing with day-to-day issues which are exceedingly important, we must always struggle to make sure that we have the time to stop and think, the time to look at the big picture, the time to think about visionary ideas. As I look at the Speech from the Throne, I'm really pleased that we have in that speech a framework which outlines exactly those concepts.

A clean environment, Mr. Speaker, is very, very important to the people of Edmonton and to the people of this province. As we look at this province, one of the things we are probably the most proud of is our geographics – our mountains, our clean air, our clean water, our national parks and provincial parks – and our ability to enjoy our province and enjoy that clean air and clean water in a climate of sustainable, long-term development, the ability to enjoy the resources that this province provides without polluting, without destroying the province, in fact, as one of my colleagues said earlier today, with the goal of leaving this province a better place than we found it. I think that means from an environmental perspective as well as all other perspectives. So I'm pleased that in the Speech from the Throne Her Honour addressed the issue of a clean environment, made it a priority for this government in terms of where we're going in the future.

But as we talk about the future, as we talk about where we want to go in the future of this province, there can be nothing more important, Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion than education, than talking about how we educate our children and ourselves so that we can embrace the opportunities that have been provided in a global context and we can have the ability to go out and compete in the world. We often hear that in the modern context we will have four or five different jobs during our lifetime. My dad in particular, for example, worked for 45 years for one company. He was the last fur trader to retire with the Hudson's Bay Company, 45 years with one company. That won't happen much anymore.

So when we're talking about education, we have to, I think, make sure that we talk about education in the big context, not as job training but as teaching our children or teaching ourselves how to find information, how to access information – we're in an era where there's more information available to each of us than ever before – how to discern what information is important, what information is reliable, how to analyze it. In short, education really is about teaching ourselves how to think and how to communicate, and that has to be a basis of everything we do in the education system. I think we must be very careful to separate that concept of education from job training. We often think about needing to put more money into specific programs so that we can have more technologists for information technology, or more radiology technicians to run MRIs. Those are important, but we have to think of those two in separate contexts: education and job training.

I think if we want to have the type of province where our children can grow up to have the best opportunities they can have and to go out and compete in the world, we have to value education as a concept. We have to fund education appropriately. We have to provide the resources. I'm not talking about throwing more money at it. I'm talking about looking at what the cost, the actual cost, is of providing an appropriate education, knowing what we mean by providing appropriate education, targeting those resources, and making sure that all of our children have the opportunity to get a good liberal arts education, to learn to think and distill information and communicate so that they can go on to train themselves for whatever jobs they might want to undertake.

That's extremely important, Mr. Speaker, because innovation and technology are going to be the future in this province. We've been hewers of wood and drawers of water, as we've heard earlier this afternoon. We have agriculture as a base industry, and it will be a base industry in this province for a long time. Tourism is a good industry for this province. Forestry is a good industry for this province. Our natural resources have provided a very strong base for this province, but as we move forward, we're going to have to gravitate to an information and technology-based economy. World commodity prices have shown that they're not going to hold up over the long term, and we're faced with the reality that unless we go into value added, unless we can upgrade our resources here, unless we can bring in the industry and the technology which will allow us to employ people here, we will not be able to compete in the long-term economy. So education is the basis to allow our children to be innovative, to be thinkers, and to engage in research and technology and innovation and science.

Biosciences and life sciences I think are going to be for the next 20 years what IT was for the last 10 years. It's a wonderful opportunity for our province and for our people. We have a young, well-educated population now. We can compete with any area in the world in that area. We have to continue to build on that base and provide the education so that we can build on that base.

As we're looking to the future – and that's what we campaigned on, proven leadership for a positive future – we have that positive future. That positive future is going to be there for our children if we invest in education, if we invest in technology and the sciences and provide those opportunities for our children to take advantage of.

While we're doing that, of course, we also have to ensure that the gap between those that have and those that don't have doesn't get any wider. There's a real danger, Mr. Speaker, in our society today, where education and technology are going to be where the jobs are and where the opportunities are, that those who don't have access or can't make it in that kind of an economy will get left behind. As a society and as a government I know we have the values which lead us to make sure that we are always there to protect and to support those who are most vulnerable in our society and who cannot provide for themselves, not in a manner which takes away their ability to have faith in themselves or their ability to strive to be the best that they can be, whatever that might be, but in a manner which ensures that they can live in dignity and that they can participate to the best of their ability and have a decent life in a province where everyone should be able to have a decent life and a decent opportunity.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are the main issues that I wanted to speak to today, issues that are important, I think, to citizens of Edmonton-Whitemud, issues that I heard about on the doorsteps. It does come back to basic issues when people talk to you: issues of how many children are in their classes, what type of computer technology is available in the classroom, how many resources we have. I think those are important issues to be addressed, but, as I say, we need to also think in the bigger picture and the longer term so that we're not narrowed down into those day-to-day issues to the extent where we lose the concept of the bigger picture.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I didn't in my capacity as Minister of Justice and Attorney General talk about safe communities. We talk about the Alberta advantage and we talk about it normally in economic terms, and I don't apologize for that. I think having a strong fiscal agenda, being fiscally conservative, keeping within our means, and making sure that we have a strong economy is the basis for everything else that we do. If we don't have a strong economy and we don't have jobs, then we won't be able to afford the other issues that we want to have.

One of the keys to a strong economy, one of the things that I learned through the course of the last four years in great detail when I had the opportunity to go to an IRDC conference in San Antonio – IRDC being an organization of professionals with corporations whose job it is to look for the next place for their corporation to locate – is that they're looking for a well-educated population. They're looking for a safe place for their people to live. They're looking, in essence, for quality-of-life opportunities, because if families, if spouses don't want to live in a place, then their chief executives aren't going to want to move there, and so it's necessary that we have safe communities, that we have quality of life.

I've spoken about the education side, the safe community side. The family value side is also very important. Safe communities aren't something that we get by hiring more police and putting them on every corner. Safe communities are something that we get when we all take an interest in our community. To use the title of a book that was written on the subject and that has been followed with great interest by the city of New York and other jurisdictions, Fixing Broken Windows, we have to fix our broken windows. We have to look at our community and say that this is the type of community we want to live in, and as citizens we have to take responsibility for the type of community that we want to have and ensure that we fix our broken windows, that we clean the place up, and that we take responsibility for it.

I'm not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that people should go up and tap the local drug dealer on the shoulder and tell him that he shouldn't be doing that, but I am saying that if we know there's something going on in our schools or in our communities or in our shopping malls that is not helping us to have safe communities, then it's our responsibility to let the authorities know.

I am a very strong proponent, Mr. Speaker, of the concept of having school resource officers in the schools. These are police officers who are part of the school team, not to catch criminals but to build that relationship with students so they can work together to take ownership of their community, and I think that's a very important concept. We need to do that ourselves in our communities. So safe communities are a very important concept for us.

Mr. Speaker, I'll close on that note. There are lots of individual issues in particular constituencies, and Edmonton-Whitemud has its own individual issues, even though people think of Edmonton-Whitemud as being a relatively affluent constituency, and it is, a well-educated constituency, and it is.

MR. DUNFORD: Do you have pine shakes there?

MR. HANCOCK: We have pine shakes. Thank you for that.

So there are issues in every constituency of this province that we need to address, and I certainly have assured my constituents that I will be bringing their local concerns to our table for discussion, that I will be pushing for effective resolution of those concerns, that the pine shake issue, which is still so prevalent in Edmonton-Whitemud, will be on my agenda for topics of discussion, and that we will try and find appropriate resolutions to that problem and to those types of problems.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to go into all the details with respect to all the issues that are prevalent in Edmonton-Whitemud, because I want to stop where I started, by talking about the need for us to focus on the big picture and the long term, to provide a vision for this province as to where we're going.

One of the members across the way indicated earlier that they thought there was a contradiction in the throne speech where we talked at the beginning about setting out a vision for our province and at the end about having a Future Summit to talk about the future of the province. Well, there's absolutely no contradiction in that. Our job is to set out a vision and a direction, but it's not our job to ignore what the people of Alberta want. It's our job to constantly – constantly – be asking the people of Alberta what direction they want this province to go, what they want this province to look like, to bring that feedback in, to involve them in the discussion.

One of the most important jobs, in my view, that we can have as members of this Legislature is to go out and foment discussion, to get people in this province talking about the important issues and bring that discussion back in here to provide an update to our vision, an ongoing revision of that vision so that we can go in the direction that Albertans want to go, provide that direction for this province, provide that wonderful future for our children, which our children deserve. As my colleague from Edmonton-McClung said earlier, to leave this province a better place than we found it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I think we've had a very productive and a very interesting first week, and I think all members should be congratulated for their participation and a special congratulations to the new members on all sides of the House who have participated in the response to the Speech from the Throne. I think we've all been greatly enlightened.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are coming to a very important weekend. There will be a lot of people, our members, traveling. We want to wish them a safe journey, and I would respectfully move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn the House until Monday, April 23 at 1:30 p.m.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call the question for the motion, best wishes to all hon. members for a safe journey home and a very happy weekend. Due to the thoughtfulness of the Government House Leader and the unanimous consent of all members, we can now deal with the question of the motion to adjourn the House until Monday, April 23 at 1:30 p.m.

[Pursuant to Government Motion 5 the Assembly adjourned at 4:57 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 23, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/23

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon. Welcome back. Please remain standing after the prayer for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask You, Father, to renew and strengthen in us the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of this Legislature. We ask You also in Your divine providence to bless and protect the Assembly and the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

I now call on Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and would all members and guests please join in in the language of their choice.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several members of the Air Cadet League of Canada, Alberta chapter, who are here today to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the air cadet movement. I'll ask each of them to stand as I introduce them, and then we can receive them jointly with a collective applause at the end: R. Bob Bondarevich, chairman, Air Cadet League of Canada, Alberta Provincial Committee; Warrant Officer Second Class Carolyn Halladay from the 395th Royal Canadian Air Cadet Squadron; Warrant Officer First Class Cole Rosentreter, representing the 504th Royal Canadian Air Cadet Squadron; and Warrant Officer First Class John Veale from the 810th Royal Canadian Air Cadet Squadron.

Mr. Speaker, they have also graciously provided each member of this Assembly with this very beautiful commemorative pin to mark the significance of this very important occasion. I'm confident that everyone here will wear this pin proudly, as will I momentarily. Our guests have all risen. I would ask that everybody in the Assembly please greet them with the traditional warm welcome that this House is so accustomed to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to introduce to you and through you Mr. Krishan Joshee and Ms Noni Heine. Mr. Joshee is well known to members of the Assembly as chairman of the Wild Rose Foundation, and Ms Heine is the newly appointed executive director over the last couple of years with the Wild Rose Foundation. They are joining us today to commemorate also a very special year, that being the International Year of Volunteers. As well, they are here as special guests to celebrate the beginning of national Volunteer Week, which commenced officially yesterday and will run through to April 28.

Mr. Speaker, the Wild Rose Foundation is our focal point for ensuring the strong and lasting legacy of volunteerism of which this province is so duly proud. They work very hard on our behalf, and particularly in this year we're looking forward to even greater things. They have risen, and I would ask the House to warmly welcome our special guests from the Wild Rose Foundation. Thank you.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, as I was rushing in, they were so excited, they handed me one of these special commemorative chocolates, so I'm going to ask the pages to distribute those, with your permission, to each member of the Assembly as well as one of these special commemorative pins, which are on their way.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This summer Alberta will be hosting two world-class events, and at one of these, on July 21 and 22 of this year, Edmonton will host the world at the ITU triathlon world championships to take place at Hawrelak park. Approximately 2,000 athletes, 3,000 family members, friends, and officials from 60 nations will be converging on our city. Economic Development Edmonton has estimated the economic impact to be more than $17 million. These games are going to be here in large part due to the hard work and energy of two individuals sitting in your gallery this afternoon. Sheila O'Kelly, the executive director of this year's world championships, and Brian Hetherington, chair of public relations, are standing in your gallery. Sheila has been a force nationally as a director of Triathlon Canada, and Alberta is fortunate to have these two individuals volunteering and working in our great province. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

MR. HORNER: Mr. Speaker, on your behalf I am pleased to introduce to the Members of the Legislative Assembly four members of the Evergreen Catholic separate regional division who are seated in your gallery this afternoon. They are superintendent Mr. Mel Malowany, deputy superintendent Mr. Larry Hlushak, chairman Mr. Gerald Bernakevitch, and trustee Mr. Alvin Yager. Again, on your behalf I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present to the Assembly today a petition from the Society of Bowness Residents signed yes by 5,459 Calgaryans from all the communities throughout Calgary and also signed no by 31 and no opinion by one. The petition calls for the government of the province of Alberta "to preserve the Paskapoo Slopes from housing development."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition that states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

This petition is signed by over 20 Albertans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by residents of Edmonton, St. Albert, and Jasper asking that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for funds to settle his defamation suit.

Thank you very much.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would ask that the petition I presented signed by 45 Albertans regarding the payment of Stockwell Day's legal costs by the government now be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to determine legally whether taxpayers must pay for Stockwell Day's legal bill.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following the successful conclusion of House leaders' negotiations and the subsequent kind assistance of your office, I'd like to give oral notice of the following motion, but before I do, I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for their co-operation in dealing with issues relating to the procedures of the House prior to this spring sitting and to advise the House that we have as House leaders agreed to revisit questions of parliamentary reform and legislative reform with respect to the rules following this spring session.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to give oral notice, then, of a motion to be dealt with later today.

Be it resolved that to give effect to the April 10, 2001, House leaders' agreement, the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly be amended as follows:

- 1(1) Standing Order 7 is amended
  - (a) in suborder (1)
    - (i) by adding O Canada (first sitting day of each week) on the line preceding "Introduction of Visitors",
    - (ii) by adding "Recognitions (Monday and Wednesday)" on the line following "Oral Question Period, not exceeding 50 minutes";
  - (b) in suborder (4) by striking out "three" and substituting "four";
  - (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):
    - (6) When Recognitions are called on Mondays and Wednesdays, up to seven members other than members of Executive Council may make a one-minute statement of congratulations or recognition, which is not debatable.
- (2) Standing Order 49(2)(g) is amended by striking out "nine" and substituting "eleven".
- (3) Standing Order 80 is amended by adding "directly" before "prays".
- (4) Standing Order 83.1(2) is amended by adding "in order to be" before "read and received".

- (5) Standing Order 114(2) is amended by striking out "February 14, 1995" and substituting "April 23, 2001".

And in accordance with the April 10, 2001, House leaders' agreement be it further resolved that the following temporary amendments to the Standing Orders not be effective past the dissolution of the 25th Legislature:

- 2(1) Standing Order 56(2) through (8) shall be of no force or effect.
  - (2) Standing Order 57(1) through (6) shall be of no force or effect.
  - (3) Standing Order 58(4) shall be of no force or effect, and the following is substituted:
    - (4) The Official Opposition House Leader may, by giving written notice to the Clerk and the Government House Leader prior to 4:30 p.m. on the day following the Budget Address, designate five departments' estimates to be considered by the committee.
    - (4) Standing Order 58(7) shall be of no force or effect.
- 3 The amendments to the Standing Orders in sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on Monday, April 23, 2001.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table with the Legislative Assembly today two reports. The first one is the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report for 1999-2000, and secondly, the report on university animal facilities for the year 2000 under section 52(5) of the Universities Act. Additional copies of these reports are available through my office.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to file four copies of the annual statistics of the Surface Rights Board and Land Compensation Board for the calendar year 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table with the House five copies of a letter that I've written to the chairman of our Wild Rose Foundation, Mr. Joshee, whom I introduced to you earlier. This letter is being sent to acknowledge the foundation board and their staff for their enormous effort and their hard work in relation to the commitment they share for Alberta's volunteer sector. They are a government foundation - we're very proud of that - and we thank them for their work in this regard, particularly in this special year, the International Year of Volunteers.

Thank you.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly this afternoon five copies of the annual report of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission for the year ended March 31, 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first are letters from Carrie Trueman of Drayton Valley and Heather Tarkowski of Edmonton. Both are concerned about development in the Bighorn wildland area and would like the government to designate this area as a protected park.

The second tabling is a letter from Linda Lachance of Condor, Alberta. Ms Lachance would like the government to protect the Bighorn wildland area, and in her letter she included another letter signed by Courtney Clay, Ty Clay, Brooklynn Bystrom, Brennen Bystrom, and Braden Bystrom of Condor. These children are Ms Lachance's grandchildren, and they would like the government to protect the Bighorn wilderness area and "Just keep it for play - don't let 'our land' get wrecked."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from the Integra Co-op in the constituency of Edmonton-Centre in support of keeping John A. McDougall school open.

The second is a letter addressed to the Minister of Community Development from the Elder Advocates of Alberta with a series of suggestions on how to improve the Protection for Persons in Care Act, particularly standards of care.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. My first tabling is a news story from the Edmonton Journal dated March 31, 2001, in which the Minister of Environment is quoted as promising public hearings on the issue of coal burning at Inland Cement.

My second tabling includes letters from five principals with the Calgary board of education critical of larger class sizes.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through you and to you it gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce one of my constituents, Ms Heather Miller. She's in the gallery today. Would you please join me in giving her the warm legislative welcome she so rightly deserves.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 34 students from Archbishop Jordan high school who are here to observe the proceedings in the House. They are accompanied by Yolande Joly and Lucille Belzil. I would like to ask that they please rise so that we could applaud.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 27 grade 6 students and their teacher Mrs. Susan Adam from the Westbrook elementary school in the learned and vibrant constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe and learn about our government and to attend the School at the Legislature. That program has welcomed a number of classes from Westbrook school, and this class has had the good fortune - I hope it's good fortune - to be here while the House is in session and actually see parliament at work while they're studying about it.

They're seated in the members' gallery, I believe, and I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 56 members of Albert Lacombe school in St. Albert. They are here today to spend the entire day at the Legislature and to learn about the functioning of the government and the Legislative Assembly. They are seated in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by their two teachers, Mrs. Tracey Bowes and Mr. Binette, and by six volunteers, whom I'd like especially for us to acknowledge since it is the International Year of Volunteers as well as this specific week is honouring our volunteers. They are Mrs. Edie Pitchko, Mrs. Kathy St. Arnaud, Mrs. Michelle Palmer, Mrs. Susan Bennett, Mrs. Russell, and Mr. Latawiec. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly 12 students who are visiting today. These students are from Japan, and they are part of a reciprocal two-week exchange. There are 170 Japanese students visiting area high schools, and in July 140 Alberta students will visit Yokohama. These students are in the gallery. They are from the Yamate high school in Yokohama, and they are accompanied by a teacher from Austin O'Brien school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Colleen Stepney. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce today to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms Pam Young, who has successfully and very efficiently and very effectively and, I must say, very graciously served the constituents of Livingstone-Macleod since 1993 in our constituency office in Fort Macleod. She is joined today by her husband, Bruce Young, and I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm congratulations of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you a young woman presently completing her first year of social work at Grant MacEwan College. She's been completing the practicum portion of her program in my Edmonton-Highlands constituency office and has been doing a superb job of helping out those constituents who call or come to my office for assistance. I would like to thank her for the work she has done and wish her the very best in the second year of her program. Her name is Mary MacKinnon, and I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Revenue Projections

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Premier. The problem with the short-term approach that the government uses in their budget planning process is that they have no idea if the projections are sustainable and are thus stable. What has the Premier done to determine if the past surpluses are sustainable rather than temporary and just resource based?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Finance will deliver her Budget Address tomorrow, and I hope the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition will be reasonably pleased to know that the items that will be outlined in the budget speech tomorrow are indeed expenditures on items that we deem to be sustainable.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the question was basically formed around the revenue side. Would he tell us how he's dealing with sustainability on the revenue side, stability on the revenue side?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there are built-in cushions. Secondly, we have a good handle. There are still thousands of people who work in both Revenue and Finance who are charged with the responsibility of forecasting as accurately as possible and providing the Legislature and the people of this province with quarterly updates relative to our budget progress. So all of these things are brought into play. None of us are absolutely, for sure, one hundred percent accurate crystal ball gazers, but we do the best we can. Fortunately, our projections have been conservatively estimated, and as a result of that conservative – and I say it with a small “c” and a large “C” – because of that conservative budgeting practice we've been able to generate very significant surpluses as opposed to deficits.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To facilitate long-term planning, will the Premier adopt the Alberta Liberal recommendation of preparing 10-year projections for fiscal and economic trends so that we can see a degree of stability that's coming in our revenues?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any business, any government in the world that uses 10-year projections. Certainly we have a vision as to what this province wants to look like after the debt is gone. We have a vision, of course, of having the ability to invest in priority areas like health and education and solid infrastructure. It has been the policy of this government to embark on three-year business plans, to stick to those plans, and to provide Albertans with a reasonable degree of certainty relative to fiscal planning in this province.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Continuing on that question, Mr. Speaker, when the debt is gone, will the Premier invest the surpluses in the Alberta heritage fund to increase this endowment and give us an income stream that will stabilize the mercurial nature of resource revenues?

MR. KLEIN: I appreciate the question, Mr. Speaker, but I can't even begin to anticipate what we will do and what we will not do relative to the investment of dollars that would otherwise be paid to the banks and where those dollars might go. That will be the subject and the sole subject of the Future Summit to be held in September, later this year, when we will involve all Albertans, including members of the opposition, to work with us to determine where this province should go, where we should invest, where we should not invest in a debt-free province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of the performance indicators are not currently true measures of the outcome of public expenditure, what is the government doing to correct this?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that statement to be true, and since the Minister of Finance is more intricately involved with these matters, I'll have her respond.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Performance measures that are in our business planning process are reviewed every year by our standing policy committees. We try to make sure that we have realistic performance measures on all of the goals that are laid out in those business plans. They're debated here in the House as part of the budget debate, and at that time I'm sure that if hon. members opposite have particular performance measures they don't think are true indicators of success in various departments, they should raise that through the budget debate. We certainly review it on a quarterly basis. We look at a variance analysis, and we publish a quarterly report, that goes out to all Albertans so that they can see how we're measuring up to the performance measures in the business plans.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. We do on a regular basis.

My final question: what analysis does the government do when they put additional dollars in the budget and the performance indicators do not change? For example, more money has been put in health care ostensibly to reduce waiting lists, and in the end the waiting lists do not shorten significantly.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't believe that statement to be true. I think the allocation of more resources – as a matter of fact, I don't think; I know. The allocation of more resources to priority areas in health care, particularly to reduce waiting lists, to increase diagnostic capacity, and to create centres of excellence, these dollars have been properly identified and well used for the intended purpose.

Relative to the specific question, I would like an answer to this because I think the answer is going to be contradictory to the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's assertions. That is the question as it relates to waiting lists, and I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we've made some significant investments in the area of infrastructure to deal with the issue of waiting lists. Some tens of millions of dollars have been put in MRIs. As an example, in the city of Calgary the waiting list for MRIs has gone from an average of 200 days down to 80. The number of heart surgeries that we've done has gone up dramatically and has increased at a greater rate than the growth of the number of people requiring that type of surgery. We've been very, very careful in targeting our dollars for both infrastructure and for investment in people and equipment as well as those areas that are pressure points, and we have responded appropriately.

THE SPEAKER: The third main question. For the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Pricing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 11 in this Assembly the Premier was asked about the anticipated cost of $475 million for electricity deferral accounts. What he said was that it was speculative to talk about deferral accounts. It would be better called planning or foresight, because EPCOR has recently released an interim analysis with first-quarter financial statements for the year 2001, of course, which shows that it already has over a $95 million deferral deficit. That is only one quarter for one company. My questions this afternoon are to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us why he would say that deficit deferral accounts are a hypothetical situation?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that still holds true today. I don't know if $475 million is an accurate figure. This is predicated on what the price of electricity is going to be in the year 2002 and beyond. All we know is that all of our projections show that the price of electricity is starting to come down and to come down quite significantly.

Mr. Speaker, it was the Liberal opposition who predicted that the price of electricity at the beginning of the year 2001 would be something in the neighbourhood of I think it was 20 or 23 cents a kilowatt-hour. Well, the rolling monthly average has been more in the 9 cents range. So, you know, they may be projecting and predicting a worst case scenario. I don't believe that to be true, but perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy has a better handle on things, and I'll have him supplement.

THE SPEAKER: I appreciate all that, but we're not going to speculate too much today.

Please go on with your next question.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. When the Premier said, "I don't know if an analysis has been done with respect to deferral accounts" while EPCOR refers to a regulatory review that will determine the final amounts collectable, is the Premier suggesting that EPCOR is wrong when it includes $95 million in its deferral accounts in its financial statements, that just have been released?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, they also announced a huge profit. Again, I would suggest that like any other company they have to do budgeting on a reasonable estimate of what their analysis is going to show for the years coming. Perhaps our analysts have some different ideas. I don't know. But I will have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of deferral accounts, that has been referenced in the financial statement, is one that's based on a change in business from EPCOR. They have, in fact, purchased more customers through the competitive process. They're a bigger company. They're a different company. Seventy percent of their revenues come from outside of Edmonton now. So one could fully expect that they would do what is in the charter of acceptable practices and state what they have as an outstanding either liability or asset, depending on how you view a deferral account, and would state it accordingly. I'd suggest that the probity of their financial statements is accurate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the hon. Premier tell this House how much the final deferral amounts are expected to be which Albertans will have to pay on top of their already existing bills after the regulatory review is completed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I cannot provide a figure, and that is consistent with the last answer I gave on this particular matter a couple of weeks ago. If the hon. Minister of Energy has any further information on this particular issue, I'll have him respond.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, deferral accounts will change by company, by customer load. What we're seeing is the competitive market process in action, where companies buy other companies, where companies buy customers on the retail side, where they exit from other sides of the business. We're seeing a competitive market unfold.

Just as one of the hon. members from the opposition predicted that prices would increase and advised that EPCOR should in fact remain in city council hands, now they're concerned about the price increase that has occurred creating a difference in revenues. You can't have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. I mean, you predict something. Something does occur. In fact, one of the outcomes of January's move was to put deferral accounts into place. They're there. They vary by the amount of customers that you have as a company and they vary by the amount of customers that you serve across Alberta.

Inland Cement Limited

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the government decided to fast-track environmental approval of Inland Cement's application to burn coal rather than natural gas in its cement kilns in northwest Edmonton. Last month the Minister of Environment promised public hearings on the Inland Cement proposal. It now seems that even these hearings will not take place. To the Premier: why has the government broken the promise made just last month by the Minister of Environment to hold public hearings on the Inland Cement coal conversion project?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, well, first of all, the hon. Minister of Environment has not reneged on a promise. The question here is a question of public hearings versus a formal hearing before or a joint hearing between the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, the Natural Resources Conservation Board, perhaps even the involvement of the federal government through the EARP process, the environmental review process of the federal government.

The extent of the hearings. The hon. minister has committed that there will be public consultations, there will be town hall meetings, and there will be a more informal process to assess and evaluate the environmental merits of this particular project. I'll have the hon. minister respond if he wishes.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we're going to try and move forward.

The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: how can the government justify not holding a full environmental assessment including public hearings on Inland Cement's proposal when converting to coal means that 403 tonnes per day of additional greenhouse gases will go up the stack and daily emissions of such toxic heavy metals as arsenic, chromium, and mercury will go up anywhere between 30 and 80 percent?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, before I have the hon. Minister of Environment comment, I will say this. I will make a comment in response to the comment made by the hon. member, and that is that he does a tremendous disservice to the coal industry in this province and to a highly valuable natural resource that has the reputation certainly throughout North America and worldwide of being some of the cleanest burning coal if not the cleanest burning coal around. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. member that this is a fully public process. Before a company can have its environmental approval changed, it must go through an environmental review process, and this environmental review process is fully public. There are public meetings held. They've already had open houses that my staff was at as well as staff from Inland. There's a meeting this Thursday in Edmonton, I understand, and we will be organizing a meeting on behalf of my office in the affected community sometime in the third week in May – that's the time frame we're looking at – which I will personally attend as well as officials from the Department of Environment.

If anybody is unhappy with the ultimate decision that is made, then of course they have the process of the Environmental Appeal Board. They can appeal to and make their case in front of the Environmental Appeal Board, and that is another fully and totally public process.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, to the minister this time: why does the government believe that company-sponsored open houses are an acceptable substitute for full environmental hearings, especially in light of increased air pollution that will result from burning coal rather than natural gas at Inland Cement? What's next? A wine and cheese for a strip mine?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, quite frankly, we're hearing lots of whining from the other side, so it's not necessary.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, we have not substituted company open houses. I quite clearly stated in my last response, that the member apparently didn't listen to, that that is only one aspect of the public process. There are public meetings. As I said and if he would listen, I will point out that in May we will be having a public meeting, that I personally will attend as well as members of my staff. As well, at the open houses we did have members of the staff of the Environment department there to answer questions. They were very successfully received and answered a lot of questions from the people that were there. As well, the public has a chance to input through letters and statements of concern. If they're still unhappy with the decision, as I pointed out, there is another completely public process, which is the Environmental Appeal Board.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Today the U.S. Department of Commerce decided to investigate unfair allegations made against the Canadian softwood lumber industry. There have been suggestions that the Alberta government hasn't done enough to protect the Alberta industry from these allegations by the U.S. softwood lumber industry. What is the government doing to protect this industry?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. JONSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We do expect that the U.S. Commerce department will formally announce that they will be proceeding with antidumping or countervailing investigations. I'd like to assure the questioner and members of the Assembly that the Alberta government believes that what is required here is a very thorough examination of our forestry practices, because we feel that these allegations and this decision by the United States are really founded upon information that is misunderstood and that they do not fully appreciate the way that our forestry system operates.

We will certainly respond to any allegations that are made. We will be responding to the overall American position. We'll be working with the federal government and the other provinces in making our case to protect the forestry industry in Alberta and all across Canada because this is a national effort. We want, of course, to continue with constructive relations and trade in this particular commodity, but we are certainly going to defend very vigorously our position in this matter. We have been doing so for the last five years, Mr. Speaker, on this particular topic. It is not something that has just been recently brought to our concern, and to this point in time our representations have been effective.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the minister of sustainable resources. Can the minister tell the House what impact the United States' trade action will have on our Alberta softwood lumber industry?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to stress to the Assembly the importance of the forest industry to the province and the overall economic diversification plan of our province. It does create thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in revenue, so it is a very, very important industry. Therefore, the province is fighting the U.S. industry's allegations because we strongly believe that the Alberta government does not subsidize our lumber producers.

The U.S. industry's actions against us are primarily targeting our province's forest management practices. In Alberta we believe that our timber harvesting is definitely sustainable and involves environmentally sound practices. Mr. Speaker, our practice gives consideration to wildlife corridors, watersheds, and fire management practices. The timber dues and other fees we collect together with the significant responsibility we impose on industry ensures a fair return to the province and a healthy, sustainable forest for Alberta's future.

The U.S. actions make a concern for the many small independent operators that are out there providing a strong tax base, jobs for many communities across Alberta. Therefore, we will do anything to defend that industry. It is very important.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. There has been some suggestion that Canada should use the ample energy resource as a bargaining chip in resolving the softwood lumber dispute. Is the Alberta government considering this tactic?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, but of course one should elaborate. The North American free trade agreement has been a very productive agreement for Alberta and for all of Canada. Overall exports from this province to the United States have quadrupled over its life, and to use one part of the agreement which is working well to try and deal with a problem where there is a mechanism to resolve difficulties, which I've outlined as far as softwood lumber is concerned, would I think be counterproductive and totally beyond the intention of the agreement that we have.

We have a good overall trade agreement, Mr. Speaker, an excellent one, which is now being looked at on a continental basis and also with South America. We want to go through the procedures, the steps that are available to us, and to fight this battle with all the information and expertise at our fingertips to make sure that we have a positive result with respect to the overall dispute.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Education Policy

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We must preserve our schools for the sake of our children and our communities. It all goes hand in hand. This is a quote from a parent whose words are being echoed by parents in communities served by small schools across this province. To the Premier: when will policies that attack and harm small school communities be changed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that there are policies that attack and harm small schools. We have as much respect for small schools as we do for large schools. The question comes down to that of quality of learning and the ability of children to get a proper education. The hon. Minister of Learning can certainly allude to the many wonderful policies that are in place to achieve precisely that.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the small schools are very critical to the scholastic environment in Alberta. As a matter of fact, in direct response to the hon. member's question, I am in the process of setting up a curriculum advisory committee for small schools because it became very apparent in talking and visiting the small schools that there were issues there that were not being addressed on the whole. So there will be a curriculum advisory committee for small schools, which will help us address issues such as distance learning, such as areas where there is not an economy of scale. When you have four or five students taking math 30 or math 31, this is a considerably different issue than when you have 25 or 30 students. So, Mr. Speaker, I will be setting up that committee to look specifically at issues around small school curriculum.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure: when will the minister stop hiding behind the utilization formula and change a community-destroying policy?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, there has been no hiding going on, as the member indicates.

I think there are some important things to look at, as well, when you start talking about the utilization of schools. For example, with the cost of keeping the lights on, the heat, and all of those other things, if you have two schools and you can amalgamate them and have them in one, there is the opportunity then to transfer money from those operations into the actual class and use it for learning. Certainly working with the Minister of Learning, this is exactly what we are trying to do to make sure that the most money is going into the classroom, therefore giving a better opportunity for the students to learn, and that's our objective.

MR. BONNER: To the Premier: with at least two ministers present at the sod turning for a new school in Edmonton, will government ministers make themselves available at school closure meetings to explain these destructive policies?

MR. KLEIN: Was it to me? Mr. Speaker, I'll defer to the hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Anytime a school is closed, it's a very traumatic situation for the community, and we will be looking at each specific issue when it comes to a school closure. As I've risen in this Assembly before and talked about, there are some schools that are very logical to close. I had, for example, a school in my constituency that had 10 students, and five of them were from Saskatchewan. So schools like that, it made ultimate sense to close them. But we do look at every school closure. We look at it very closely, and we attempt to make the best decision for all the students, based on learning opportunities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Meningitis

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A father and son from Grande Prairie were both hospitalized with meningococcal disease. These new cases have raised concerns among parents and grandparents in my constituency about the spread of this very serious disease. Could the Minister of Health and Wellness tell us what the province is doing to contain the spread of meningitis in our province?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to indicate and emphasize that we do not have an emergency situation in this case, but as a preventative and proactive approach we announced last week that we are moving ahead with a spring vaccination campaign targeted to Albertans between the ages of 20 and 24 who have not already been vaccinated, and that campaign will commence beginning in May. I want to assure the hon. member that we are continuing to monitor the situation closely. I should note that these are the first cases in the Mistahia region in 2001. In previous years there have been generally two or three cases of meningitis in that area.

With respect to the specific individuals, Mr. Speaker, I am advised that both father and son have returned to their homes from hospital and are recovering well. To help contain the spread locally, the regional health authority of Mistahia has provided medication to family members and to friends who had close contact with this pair. This is the most appropriate medical intervention in this situation as a vaccination does not become effective immediately.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again for the minister: why has it taken so long to initiate the provincial vaccination program?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did announce the program in February and have since that time taken systematic steps to ensure that we vaccinate young Albertans. We have had to order half a million doses of vaccine. Canadian licensing requires that the manufacturer go through a very defined quality control procedure, and that quality assurance program requires time. I'm advised that the half million doses of vaccine which have been ordered will be arriving later this week.

Mr. Speaker, public health staff from each of the regional health authorities are scheduling staff and times and places for this vaccination to take place so that residents can be immunized. Taking the time to prepare a systematic approach will ensure that we are best able to co-ordinate delivery of this important program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: how will Albertans in other regions find out when and where they can be vaccinated?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, regional health authorities are working with department officials from the Department of Health and Wellness, and they are putting in comprehensive plans to let local residents know about the schedules for vaccination and the places. There will be used advertisements, posters, school information, media, and also MLA constituency offices, and I would certainly encourage Albertans to watch those places for information about times and places for vaccination.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Children's Advocate Report

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The most recent report of the Children's Advocate is a frightening document pointing out the government's negligence with respect to children in care. We're talking about a government that is the legal and, we learn, often irresponsible parent of approximately 13,000 vulnerable children. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Why are children still being inappropriately placed in homes and institutions?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge children are not being inappropriately placed in homes and institutions. Every effort is made when intake occurs to provide the most appropriate placement. We look at the child and its needs, and the best interest of the child is always the watchword.

Mr. Speaker, when I look at the Children's Advocate report, it addresses that period up to and before many of the children's services authorities had received their full delegation from our government. They have through 18 authorities worked diligently to provide the priorities and address the needs within their communities, and for the first time, where they are not able to provide those services, those homes, that type of environment for the child, there are ways through their interauthority protocols for addressing other placements for children, which have netted very many successes.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to go further and suggest that the 13,000 children who are under the services of Children's Services through community agencies are not all an increase because of inadequacy by this government. In many circumstances children with handicapped children's services are only newly receiving information because they are learning more about what services are available, and in many of the First Nations communities they are becoming even more aware of the services that they can receive.

So, Mr. Speaker, that number that is cited by the hon. member, while we always look for reductions of the numbers of children that need government care, illustrates the very good and due diligent job in many circumstances in our communities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To this same minister: why are youth obviously still in trouble being dumped from the system at 18 years of age?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we are not dumping children. Please believe that the amount of money that we have committed this year, last fall, $1.2 million for children in transition – we are looking at 15 to 21 year olds – on their advice, in part, to find that best way to mentor them, to provide some bridging and funding so that they can establish themselves in the proper circumstance, to assist them as they find career development and career training that will help them to establish themselves, to look at other adults in the community who may wish to take on a mentoring role or to assist them as they move forward.

Mr. Speaker, many foster parents, because of extensions we do provide, provide additional support to those youths as they are maturing and finding their way around the world.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the minister undertake to report to this Assembly the government actions taken on the advocate's recommendations before the end of this session?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we have, as you know, been reviewing the office of the Children's Advocate to determine whether or not we are serving Albertans in the very best way through this advocacy provision, and I would be very pleased to provide a response to this House about the recommendations that are already under way, that we have taken as a result of that review. I will also be very pleased to provide a response on a number of the issues that we're working on to improve that advocacy role in our society in Alberta for all children. One of the chief criticisms of this office has been that it addresses predominantly the child in child welfare, and many other children do not require intake into child welfare in order to need an advocate from time to time.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of issues that we're reviewing. I believe that there are a number of initiatives that the hon. member would be pleased to know are in place, and I will be pleased to provide that report subsequently.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Adoption Records

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is also for the Minister of Children's Services. There is a large and growing number of Albertans who would like to see adoption records opened in Alberta. Adoption records are open in Ontario, B.C., and recently in the state of Oregon. One adoptee, now 55 years old, told me that the only wish she had was to find her mother before she died. Will the government of Alberta consider opening adoption records with a veto clause for those who do not want their personal records opened?

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1985 the post adoption registry agency was opened in Alberta, and at that time registry with that agency was purely voluntary. On a voluntary basis both the child and the parent could register. Amendments in '94 and '95 opened it up to a registered search agency that could assist in a find for the child or for the parent so that they could locate one another, provided that both parties agreed.

In 1999 our most recent amendments gave an opportunity for a veto to be in place, but in fact if that veto was not in place on January 1, 2000, and for all adoptions heretofore, the child's record will be available for those who wish to seek it. One of the reasons that the veto was in place was to ensure that no child, maybe a nine or 10 or 11 or 12 year old, receives the record and goes forward to meet a parent unexpectedly or in a situation where the parent is not prepared. This is to honour current contractual agreements that were in place at the time of the adoptions, and for that reason, we still hold the veto policy, although I acknowledge that there are other ways that we could look at it, as they do in other places. My colleagues tell me that what did happen previously in those other jurisdictions was often a circumstance that was unhappy for both child and parent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is also for the Minister of Children's Services. I understand that at this time you can release adoption information in special circumstances. To what situations does this policy apply?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Predominantly in circumstances where medical examination has identified what may be a genetic disorder. Then with very careful screening processes the minister under special authority may sign and release certain documents, but it does not always release the identity of the person who was a parent. That, again, is subject to the parent's right for veto. So it's usually when there is a health issue and where extenuating circumstances apply.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the Minister of Children's Services again. How can Albertans at this time access their adoption information?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps one of the things that I should identify is that today very few people take advantage of the fact that the post adoption registry agency is free. It exists for Albertans to go forward and register that they would like to have an opportunity to talk to their parent, or in this case to their child, that there may have been a change of heart. If people, the child or the parent, wish to contact the registry for their free service to see if in fact there is an opportunity to access that name – it may already be registered – the registry can be contacted at 427-6387, and information will be provided.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Social Assistance Rates

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta College of Social Workers recently called on members of this Legislature to debate in this session the issue of welfare allowances. Families on welfare, mostly women and children, are faced with escalating utility rates, increasing rents, and reduced vacancy rates. Further, although the pay for the members of this Legislature increased April 1 to reflect the 3.3 percent increase in the weekly earnings for Alberta, the Minister of Human Resources and Development has put off a review of welfare rates until later this year. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Can the minister assure this House that his department's policy, reflected in Order in Council 5/2001, of assisting welfare recipients with energy costs will continue after April 30?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, thank you very much. First, just to make a comment on the preamble part of the question, if I can. Certainly one of the responsibilities of this government is to provide assistance to those Albertans who truly need the assistance, and we do it on the basis of a philosophy of a hand up and not a handout. So any discussion that would relate around assistance to low-income Albertans will always be within the context, then, the philosophy, that you are better off in the workplace or at school than you are just solely on assistance. So we'll provide whatever programs we have to put in place so that Albertans who truly need our help of course will get it.

On the specific question, of course, we are aligning ourselves with the rebates that other Albertans are entitled to, and certainly it'll be my job as minister to see that that happens.

MS BLAKEMAN: Will the Minister of Human Resources and Employment allow a public review of welfare rates now and not wait until the session is over?

MR. DUNFORD: As a matter of fact, I think the answer to that likely would be yes, although I'm not inside her head to fully understand her agenda. As we speak, we are putting together a review of low-income programs and services to Albertans, and certainly we want to be prepared to deal with that before the next go-round on business plans.

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Human Resources and Employment give serious consideration to the Alberta Liberal proposal to establish an independent committee, which would include welfare recipients, to automatically review welfare rates on an annual basis?

MR. DUNFORD: I think the responsibility that we have as a ministry is to look on an ongoing basis at the types of programs that we offer to Albertans. Certainly we would accept input from any Albertan. This would include not only the member individually, but also, if the Alberta Liberal Party itself wants to provide input, we'll accept that. I think, more importantly, Mr. Speaker, that we have to have someone responsible, and in this particular case the buck stops here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Inner-city School Closures

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This was to be to the Premier, but I'll direct it to the Minister of Learning. During the recent election campaign the Premier talked about the need for more support for inner-city children from disadvantaged backgrounds. He talked about the fact that smaller class sizes might benefit these children, yet the government's utilization formula is threatening to hurt these very same children by closing the schools they attend. To the minister: what steps is the government prepared to take to ensure that the world-famous Alex Taylor school in the Edmonton-Highlands riding is not closed until all avenues have been explored to keep it open, including smaller class sizes and more special-needs and community programs for its students?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The time has come to stop thinking about schools purely on a bricks-and-mortar basis. What we have to think about is learning opportunities for our children.

The Edmonton public school board has gone through a very extensive process on combining schools to increase learning opportunities for these kids. This is very important. Alex Taylor school is one of the schools that the Edmonton public school board is looking at. A decision has not been made at the moment, but I have full and utmost confidence that the Edmonton public school board will be making the decisions based on learning opportunities for their students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister of Learning in response to a question I put to him two weeks ago indicated that the utilization formula will be reviewed, will he now indicate to the Assembly whether or not the review will be completed in time to save Alex Taylor and Sacred Heart schools from closure?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I'll pass that question to the Minister of Infrastructure as that is presently under his mandate.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, once again, this is a very hypothetical question, and I think he'll just have to stay tuned.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, it was a very specific and concrete question.

Will the Minister of Learning undertake to work with parents, communities, school boards, and municipalities to ensure the vitality of inner-city communities and their schools?

DR. OBERG: Obviously, this is a very important concern to government. It is my job as Minister of Learning to work with the school boards. It's the school boards' job to work with their communities on that. I feel that the Edmonton public school board will come up with a very viable alternative to these school closures, and I look forward to working with them in the future. Mr. Speaker, as you know, they will be looking at this issue apparently tomorrow night, and hopefully we will know more after that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Library Funding

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development. Libraries are an integral part of all of our communities, and this weekend libraries, librarians, trustees, and staff will be meeting in Jasper, Alberta, to deliberate and discuss libraries and their future. Many that have talked to me are discouraged and concerned. Before I begin, I would like to say personally that I believe reading is to the brain what walking is to the body. I support, endorse, and use regularly our libraries. Mr. Minister, when will libraries see a much-needed increase to their per capita funding, funding that was cut in 1994 from $4.29 to $4.03 and has not been reinstated nor increased since that time?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, that is a very good question and a very fair question. That's why I began to address it about three weeks ago when I first met with the library representatives, and I will pursue it further again when I meet with them this weekend in Jasper.

I share the member's feelings about libraries. I think they contribute enormously to our overall quality of life, and that's one reason why I've already asked that the issues surrounding public libraries be on the Future Summit agenda for this fall when we talk about specifically the balance between economic and fiscal issues, on the one hand, and issues to do with quality of life, on the other.

I think the more specific answer to the exact question, Mr. Speaker, is that I will look at this issue now, and I hope we can address it in the next round of funding deliberations.

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Minister, why are we utilizing obsolete population figures, three-year-old figures from 1997, when determining our provincial per capita grant?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, it's true that the past couple of years of funding have been based on population stats that go back to 1997. I would tell the hon. member that we now have updated population statistics and that we will be looking at employing those. In fact, the Minister of Finance will be releasing her budget on behalf of the province tomorrow, and one would hope that it will contain some good news for many different sectors of the economy.

MRS. GORDON: Again to the same minister. As all other provincial jurisdictions in Canada except Alberta and Quebec have initiated legislative policies that disallow their libraries to charge borrower fees or membership fees, will the hon. minister consider taking the necessary steps to do likewise here in Alberta?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: It's another issue, Mr. Speaker, that I've discussed with some of the library representatives from across the province and another issue that I'll be addressing again more fully with them when we meet on Friday and Saturday in Jasper for a major meeting of public library representatives.

I would say that the current act that governs this issue goes back to about 1930, if memory serves. Yes, it is time to review that issue, and I will address it, but I do want to say that the act also disallows any public library from charging an entry fee. So people shouldn't go away thinking that just because there are some jurisdictions in Canada that charge for borrower fees or library card fees or membership fees, that fee in itself precludes anyone from entering a library or using the services on-site.

There are specific things that we have worked out with our partnerships at the local level to address this issue, and I will be pursuing this much more aggressively in the next few months, because I, too, am a very large supporter of our public library system, as I know all members in this House are.

Thank you.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six hon. members. The government can actually have five recognitions today. I'm advised there are only four, so there's opportunity for one additional one.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. Joseph Shoctor

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we lost a great Edmontonian, a great Albertan, and a great Canadian. I would like to acknowledge Dr. Joseph Shoctor, Order of Canada, Queen's Counsel, who passed away last Thursday. I believe the Premier said it best when he said:

Joe's contributions to the public and cultural life of Edmonton have left a permanent mark on the city. Edmonton's incredible theatre community owes a great deal to him, as do sports fans and others who work to make Edmonton a better place to live. Great cities are built by people . . . like Joe Shoctor – people with vision, with humour, and with remarkable abilities. He will be missed, and he will be remembered.

I would also like to personally pass along my condolences to his wife, Kayla, and his children, Ian, Marshall, and Naomi.

The world is a better place because Joe was in it.

Thank you. Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Volunteerism

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize that this is national Volunteer Week and also the United Nations year of the volunteer and to celebrate the Alberta volunteers who make so many things possible. Just think of all the things that would not exist or would be greatly diminished without volunteers: community leagues offering amateur sports and other programs and always there to watch over and ensure the safety and integrity of the area; recreational and cultural groups developing programs for people's leisure time, offering instruction and enlightenment, and many times putting in the sweat equity to build or expand facilities; youth groups like cadets or Baseball Alberta or the Youth Emergency Shelter or block parents. Social service or helping agencies could not operate without the assistance of volunteers. Think of Meals on Wheels or the Mennonite Centre for Newcomers or the Sexual Assault Centre.

Volunteers give us the Alberta in which we want to live. They make things run, they make things fun, and for many, many agencies they make it possible. Thank you very much to all the volunteers in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week takes place April 22 to 29, 2001. Organ and tissue donation saves lives, restores health, and gives hope for new beginnings.

Unfortunately, the need for organs and tissues for transplantation is far greater than the available supply. Last year in Alberta 32 people died waiting for donations. Everyone should consider themselves a potential organ and tissue donor regardless of their age. It is the health of the individual and not their age which is the deciding factor.

One critical reason why waiting lists are so long is that families do not know the wishes of potential organ donors. It is crucial to become an organ donor and that the family makes the final decision regarding donations. Less than 50 percent of Canadians are not aware of their family members' wishes regarding donations.

The green ribbons we were all given today symbolize the promise of lives that may be saved and improved through organ and tissue donation. The Canadian Association of Transplantation, the Kidney Foundation of Canada, the HOPE program, and the Comprehensive Tissue Centre have been promoting public awareness of donations through the distribution of green ribbons across Canada since 1997. We hope all Albertans wear them proudly, especially during donor awareness week, April 22 to 29, and talk to their families to show their support of the greatest gift of all, the gift of life. Remember, transplants work. Between 80 and 95 percent of recipients are doing great one year after surgery. Please make a life-giving decision for nearly 3,500 Canadians waiting for transplants.

Speaker's Ruling Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, as the subject being responded to by the hon. Member for Redwater was of such importance and significance, the chair chose not to intervene. The hon. member went way beyond the one minute allocated for this particular part of the Routine. One minute. As there are only four government members today who've indicated – and the government actually can have five – the fifth one will now not be recognized.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Clear Answers

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 23 is Canada Book Day, a day when we pause to celebrate the writing of Canadian authors, so it seems an appropriate day to recognize the writings of a recently elected member of this Assembly, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Clear Answers: The Economics and Politics of For-Profit Medicine is the best-selling book the member co-authored with Gillian Steward, published by Duval House, University Press, and the Parkland Institute. The book has been shortlisted by the Alberta publishers association for their Alberta book of the year award, having been selected from an initial list of about 40 nominees.

Given that the emphasis of Canada Book Day is on giving books as gifts, members of this Assembly may want to keep Clear Answers in mind as they purchase books for presentation to individuals and groups in their constituencies.

I am sure all members of the Assembly will want to join me in recognizing the writing talent of an Albertan, a Canadian, and one of our own, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Thank you.

Volunteerism

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to recognize volunteers in Alberta communities during national Volunteer Week. In collaboration with Volunteer Alberta the Wild Rose Foundation encourages organizations to host volunteer appreciation activities or promotions that focus on our volunteers.

Each year the number of communities participating in national Volunteer Week increases. This year 123 Alberta communities representing more than 2 million Albertans are participating. In fact, Mr. Speaker, for the International Year of Volunteers the number of participating communities has reached an all-time high.

While Volunteer Week beckons us to honour local volunteers today, we have a responsibility to do this year-round. An estimated 74 percent of adult Albertans have volunteered within the past year, so I urge all members of this Assembly to proudly applaud them for their important role in building strong communities, for delivering programs and services that make the Alberta way of life the highest quality of life anywhere and for helping to ensure a strong and lasting legacy of volunteerism.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Air Cadet Program

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to salute Canada's air cadet movement as it celebrates its 60th anniversary this year. Canada's air cadet movement was started to train young men to fly in defence of freedom and to prepare them to become air crew members in the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Approximately 1 million young Canadians have participated in air cadets, a program that maintains its military structure, although the youth remain civilians, under no obligation to serve in Canada's military. Today's movement focuses on citizenship and leadership with an orientation towards aviation, where young people between the ages of 12 and 19 learn initiative, self-reliance, discipline, teamwork, and leadership.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta boasts 42 air cadet squadrons, and approximately 2,917 young men and women proudly wear the air cadet uniform. In partnership with the Canadian Forces and local citizens air cadets provides wonderful opportunities for Alberta youth. Last summer six provincial cadets served as goodwill ambassadors in Europe, Asia, and the U.S.A.

I extend congratulations to all air cadets, past and present, and commend and thank the Canadian Forces, the Air Cadet League of Canada and officers and instructors, parents, and sponsors for helping these young Canadians.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to move the Notice of Motion for which I gave oral notice earlier.

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. Government House Leader. The process would be that first of all you're going to have to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 38(1)(a) in order to move the motion. After receiving unanimous consent, then we can go to the motion.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I seek unanimous consent of the House to deal with the notice of motion for which I gave oral notice earlier.

Changes to Standing Orders

14. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that to give effect to the April 10, 2001, House leaders' agreement, the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly be amended as follows:

1(1) Standing Order 7 is amended

(a) in suborder (1)

(i) by adding O Canada (first sitting day of each week)" on the line preceding "Introduction of Visitors";

(ii) by adding "Recognitions (Monday and Wednesday)" on the line following "Oral Question Period, not exceeding 50 minutes";

(b) in suborder (4) by striking out "three" and substituting "four";

(c) by adding the following after suborder (5):

(6) When Recognitions are called on Mondays and Wednesdays, up to seven members other than members of Executive Council may make a one-minute statement of congratulations or recognition, which is not debatable.

(2) Standing Order 49(2)(g) is amended by striking out "nine" and substituting "eleven".

(3) Standing Order 80 is amended by adding "directly" before "prays".

(4) Standing Order 83.1(2) is amended by adding "in order to be" before "read and received".

(5) Standing Order 114(2) is amended by striking out "February 14, 1995" and substituting "April 23, 2001".

And in accordance with the April 10, 2001, House leaders' agreement be it further resolved that the following temporary amendments to the Standing Orders not be effective past the dissolution of the 25th Legislature:

2(1) Standing Order 56(2) through (8) shall be of no force or effect.

(2) Standing Order 57(1) through (6) shall be of no force or effect.

(3) Standing Order 58(4) shall be of no force or effect, and the following is substituted:

(4) The Official Opposition House Leader may, by giving written notice to the Clerk and the Government House Leader prior to 4:30 p.m. on the day following the Budget Address, designate five departments' estimates to be considered by the committee.

(4) Standing Order 58(7) shall be of no force or effect.

3 The amendments to the Standing Orders in sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on Monday, April 23, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: It's my understanding, hon. Government House Leader – and please just nod if it's so – that all hon. members have been provided with the motion as well, so they should have it in front of them.

Now, this is a debatable motion.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1

Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act.

It's an enabling piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, that does allow Albertans the ability to benefit from the ownership of their resource, and that resource in this particular case is that of natural gas. Natural gas is a commodity that has been developed in Alberta over the last 50 years. It comes in a variety of states. Of course, it has had the benefit of a very sophisticated infrastructure that has created a great deal of jobs for Albertans and a great amount of benefit for Albertans.

One of the benefits that does accrue to Albertans, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that this commodity is traded on a continental basis. It is traded throughout Canada, east and west, and also traded north and south, and it is the benefit of the free trade agreement, of the NAFTA agreement, that has allowed Albertans to prosper from this commodity, from this heating source.

Mr. Speaker, it is in the last two or three years with the advent of additional pipeline capacity, the ability to take away gas from Alberta, that has created a tremendous surge in continental markets. In fact, if we go back to pre-election days, pre-March 12, 2001, there was a time when natural gas would continue along at an acceptable rate of around, oh gosh, $2 to $2.70 a cubic foot or a gigajoule, the difference being a gigajoule is the metric system of heating and the mcf being the imperial measure. But there was a constant price, a price that in Alberta was in many cases lower than what it was throughout the balance of Canada and the United States.

Then basically with the Clinton administration in the United States we saw that natural gas became the fuel of choice for the United States, for markets in air-conditioning, for markets in heating, and created an increase in demand for natural gas. This increase in demand started to put upward pressure on the prices. The producers, by initially sponsoring a pipeline called the Alliance pipeline and by the good works of TransCanada PipeLines and Foothills pipeline, being able to meet demands and take away gas, started to export more and more gas to the United States. Then of course the price of natural gas has been deregulated in Alberta since 1985, and we started to see upward pressure on gas prices.

Last September, Mr. Speaker, natural gas was about $3.35 an mcf, and it was creeping up through the year. But then as an effect of cold weather and an effect of low storage levels in great caverns around Alberta and in some parts of the United States also at low levels, from the period of September to just past Christmas of the year 2000 gas prices went from approximately $3.35 an mcf, or $3.35 a gigajoule, to a high of $12.60 a gigajoule at Christmastime. That particular spike, which was something of an anomaly or something of a phenomenon – and we don't know if it will be a continuing anomaly in future prices – created a real price spike to Albertans, who live, as we all know, in a relatively harsh climate during the winter months. That created what we call a double impact of, one, the price escalating due to increased demand and a shortage of supply and low inventories coupled with the second impact of severe winter heating conditions. So not only did Albertans' bills go up as a consequence of the cold on heating systems, but Albertans' bills also went up because of the almost quadrupling of natural gas prices.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, there was a good program put in place by the Alberta government that delivered a number of energy rebates reflecting the ownership of the resource. Of course, everybody here would be the recipient of the $150 cheque that was issued last November, plus another $150 cheque that should be coming the members' way as well as all Albertans' way in April of this year, this month. That was also coupled with a price per household rebate of approximately $150. Depending on how the gas distributor billed the rebate is how it showed up on the bill. That covered the price increase for most Albertans for that period. There was also a commercial aspect to the cost protection side in that the costs were shielded from the consumption rate to the tune of 5,000 gigajoules as a maximum, and there was a rebate of $6 per gigajoule.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, and continued strong prices in natural gas pricing, it was deemed to be prudent that the government of Alberta would put in place a program that I'll call shelf ready, a program that would allow the government of the day to be able to react to violent price swings, also noticing a potential increase in volatility of natural gas prices, at the same time being mindful of a program that should be cognizant of market forces, a program that should not tamper with the normal market process of buying and selling natural gas, and one also that reflects the fact that natural gas belongs to all Albertans.

So Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, is one that will focus on enabling the provincial government to be able to react to spikes in prices, to be able to react to giving Albertans a period of certainty and price protection during times of high consumption, which is primarily of course, as we all are familiar with in this House, the winter months, when we all want to put our feet close to the fire and keep our doors shut and practise good conservation practices and use the least amount of gas possible to extract the maximum amount of heat.

As with any other bill, Mr. Speaker, the regulations will reflect the type of program that we will be embarking upon for the benefit of Albertans. I look forward to debate from all members on this bill as to how that program should be appropriately constructed. It is one that we want to ensure shields Albertans from violent price spikes, ensures that there is a payability, if you will, by citizens of Alberta and some certainty as to what they can expect to pay for natural gas in months where heating costs are higher than what they are in normal summer usages and summer volumes.

The legislation is primarily enabling. It does not interfere with market signals. It allows the producers to continue with the free-market buying and selling of gas. It's one that also recognizes, Mr. Speaker, that in Alberta today there exists a great deal of credits, a carryover from the program past, from January to the end of April. So it's one that we would envisage as certainly not being beyond the capability of the government of Alberta to pay, one that does not become an embedded subsidy if gas prices in fact do go down to traditional rates, and it gives us, again, the affordability of reasonable gas prices in the heating of our homes.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's a bill that will allow us to develop regulations that put in place certainty, some protection, and recognizes that the resource properly belongs to Alberta, which is the result of a hard-fought battle, an eight-year battle by former Premier Brownlee, who worked very hard in this Assembly and in Ottawa to ensure that Albertans would be able to benefit from this rich resource that lies beneath their feet, that resource being, of course, natural gas and all its constituent parts as well as crude oil and other resources.

As a matter of fact, if I can just move for a second into that, Mr. Speaker, that resource ownership puts us in an absolutely unique position to reflect upon this new continental energy plan that President Bush and Vice-President Cheney are working hard on. It's a program that we would be more than pleased to share with other provinces who are starting to develop their gas reserves now, such as Nova Scotia and Sable Island, Newfoundland and the Terra Nova field, and other areas like that, as well as being able to work with important partners in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

So it's a bill that has simplicity as its guideline, has enabling as its principle, and is one that will have regulations developed in accordance with the general procedure of bill passage and bill discussion in this House. We look forward to debate on this bill, and it's a real privilege for me to be able to move this motion – or this bill. You can tell I'm just back, Mr. Speaker, after being gone for a while, but it is a delight to be back. It's a delight to be able to move this Bill 1 in this Assembly today.

Thank you.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to what the Minister of Energy had to say this afternoon initially regarding Bill 1. My first response is that this government has come dangerously close to the gas fireplace. They've gotten quite comfortable, and I believe they have fallen soundly asleep.

I see this bill and I think that we must start at the very back, Mr. Speaker, with the Natural Gas Rebates Act, which is to be repealed on proclamation of this bill. This certainly is an indication that this bill is all about public relations and has nothing to do with consumer relations or consumer protection, particularly for consumers, whether they are commercial, residential, or industrial, of natural gas or its derivatives in this province. This bill, from my view, is unnecessary legislation. I have reviewed thoroughly this past weekend the Natural Gas Rebates Act, and I cannot understand why there is a need for this piece of legislation.

Initially when I entered the Assembly four years ago, I used to hear many hon. members talk about how there was no need for the Assembly to meet because if it did meet, it would pass laws, and the laws would be accompanied, of course, by regulations, and this was not in the best interests of Albertans. Albertans wanted to be free, free from all legislation, and here we are with a piece of legislation that was initially introduced in 1974, Mr. Speaker.

I believe we have to understand our history before we continue into the future, and in this case I don't see that this government has reviewed the recent history. This is only 26 years ago, and there may even be an hon. gentleman up in the gallery this afternoon that was part of that government. My history may be a little bit lax, but there's a gentleman that I see up there who – I'm not sure – may have been part of this discussion going back to 1974, when the whole issue of natural gas and provincial rebates was discussed and, I must say, discussed very thoroughly in this Assembly.

Now, we look at the title of this bill, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. Well, to further explain how a government can become comfortable and fall asleep, I was amazed to find in my research that this bill as described, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, first came to the attention of the public in this province in a Calgary Herald May 4, 1974, editorial. Now, this editorial talks, Mr. Speaker, about Alberta's gas plan in 1974. This is the gas plan that was put forward – of course, it's the Natural Gas Rebates Act – by the then minister of utilities and telephones. This is just one quote:

It probably should be called the "gas price protection plan" instead of "rebate plan," but whatever the semantics Albertans received the details of a good deal yesterday.

Now, this is from an editorial many years ago in the Calgary Herald.

Am I to assume, after a promise by the Premier during the height of the election that there had to be gas protection for consumers, that a diligent researcher on the government side looked this editorial clipping up and thought to himself, "This is going to save a bit of work," and away they went, and here is the result of that, this bill? So I say that this bill is a reflection of a government that has certainly lost its way and is trying to get the consumers of the province to look in another direction. When you look at this Natural Gas Rebates Act, you can see that there was legislation already in place.

Now, when you look at this enabling legislation, as it's been described, it already exists. Perhaps hon. members from across the way can during the course of the debate explain to the House and explain to Albertans why this bill is not good enough. What's in this little document that's not in the current legislation? With all the rebates that have been given out, millions and millions of dollars that now total over billions of dollars in rebates, there was no mention of this existing act. I can only assume – I believe it's interim supplementary supply No. 2 that's going to come forward – that this is where the dollars and cents will be accounted for for our massive gas price shielding or subsidies.

There's so much in this bill. When you compare it to the Natural Gas Rebates Act, I just cannot understand why it is necessary to have this. I think the existing legislation is far stronger. It is far stronger unless there's something in here now. We're certainly going to have regulations. There are lots of regulations in this new bill. The minister in his remarks talked about an embedded subsidy and the fact that this bill is not going to interfere with market signals and price protection. We have to look, Mr. Speaker, at section 2 on price protection and what exactly the minister can do, and it is quite clear that there can be market intervention.

We look at other issues, and we look at the fact that history tells us that in 1973 the Energy Resources Conservation Board was to conduct a field price hearing on the price of natural gas. This was a new move. It was a change in direction from all previous administrations. Prior to that time the Energy Resources Conservation Board had not been involved in the question of price. Now, this is interesting. We are certainly going to continue this direction with section 2 of this bill.

The government in 1974 I believe had the interests of all Albertans in mind. They were focused on diversifying the economy, but they seemed to feel that Albertans' fuel costs would be the lowest in Canada. They also thought that Albertans through their government would start to receive a fair value for natural gas taken out of this province, which is fair enough, and I'm very grateful for the fact that this was accomplished.

They also seemed to think that Alberta's economy would become more competitive with the rest of North America and that it should improve job opportunities for our citizens if the natural resources of this province were prudently managed, not only for gas producers, who were keen to ship out of this province and in most cases out of this country, but also for Albertans and Canadians. The government seemed also concerned at the time that Albertans would and should have improved prospects of finding the yet undiscovered new gas reserves in this province, and they felt that it was an asset for all people.

Now, with the development of natural resources and the policy surrounding it, the government of the time had this in mind: that sufficient resources are conserved for the future requirements of Albertans and their children. Earlier today during question period, Mr. Speaker, we were talking about a 10-year plan, and it was a novel concept to some of the hon. members across the way. Yet this government was talking in 30-year time frames and from one generation to the next generation. Long-term planning: that's what that's called, long-term planning, not getting by lurching from one election to the next, not lurching from one energy crisis to the next. We're fortunate that we have billions of dollars in royalties so that we can buy our way, but we must start by going back and looking at past governments and some of their sound, long-term policies and some of the strategies they developed.

The government also said that the resources should only be disposed of at a fair commodity value and with adequate return to the owners of the resources: the people of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, over this term of the Legislative Assembly hopefully we're going to have an opportunity to have a discussion on what that fair rate of return is to all Albertans, particularly with the raw natural gas streams that are being exported from this province. The Alliance pipeline is one project that comes to mind rather quickly.

Also, the past government was very keen to see the development of resources and keen to see that it was directed towards processing in Alberta to the extent practical to expand job opportunities for our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, what is Bill 1 going to accomplish here? We look at the rates of rebates. We have no idea what's going to happen. This is all going to happen behind closed doors. Citizens will have no input. It is, in my view, unacceptable.

Now, we also have to look at what occurs when a government seems to feel that you can naturally have market intervention when you want. You can call it anything but price protection. You can call it rebates; you can call it shielding. But what you need, Mr. Speaker, is to have a good, close look at exactly what could happen with a rebate program that may go wild. I look at this Bill 1. This could wind up costing us billions of dollars. What criteria will determine who gets a rebate? Who is going to decide if gas used for industrial purposes, including the petrochemical industry, is to be included in Bill 1? Gas used for power generation: are the rebate payments going to be for generators of electricity? How are the coal-fired power plants going to feel about this if there's a massive subsidy to the gas-fired generators?

AN HON. MEMBER: Is that equitable?

MR. MacDONALD: I don't know. The hon. member is questioning whether that's equitable. Hopefully my concerns regarding this will be discussed during the debate on this bill.

Now, we look at natural gas used as a fuel or for hydrogen generation and other purposes in connection with the upgrading of crude bitumen, and we know with the Athabasca tar sands there's further development there. How much money could be used by those enterprises out of Bill 1? These are very critical questions, Mr. Speaker. I think they certainly deserve an answer.

Is the so-called Natural Gas Price Protection Act going to subsidize compressor fuel for gas pipelines. I would view that as a subsidy to a compressor station. Gas also used as a plant fuel and to compensate for plant shrinkage: is that going to be included in Bill 1? These are all industrial gases, and the volumes of these would be really high. Also gas used for miscible floods in oil fields: there are large volumes of gas used to sweep through formations. Is that going to be part of Bill 1? Albertans are going to pay for this. It's already cost in excess of a billion dollars, rebates that Albertans received. We have to be very, very careful here.

Now, consumers deserve shielding, and they can be adequately looked after with the existing legislation. We don't need this legislation. It's simply not needed. There is an existing statute there. I would encourage the government to come to their senses, realize that this bill is not necessary. My research indicates that the regulations in the existing Natural Gas Rebates Act lapse in March of 2000. I can only assume, as I said earlier, that interim supply is going to take care of our natural gas rebates.

You could strengthen existing legislation. Perhaps there's something in this Bill 1 that has been overlooked. Perhaps an amendment could be put forward.

Now, when we look at the objectives, we have to look at what's not in Bill 1. Is there a mechanism in there to do audits of those companies who are handing out the rebates? Is it the vendor? There's not even, I believe, a definition of a vendor in this bill. There's certainly one in the Natural Gas Rebates Act, but there's not one in the new Bill 1.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, when a government, when a tired government has to go and fish through 27-year-old newspaper clippings to come up with a new name for what is essentially watered-down existing legislation, I have to become very, very cautious about supporting this bill. I do not think it is necessary. I think of what people told me when I entered this Assembly and how it shouldn't meet because every time it meets, there's legislation created that stops business and puts unnecessary regulations on all Albertans. When I see this bill, I just have to quietly laugh to myself because there's already consumer protection for Albertans under existing legislation. This is just a bill to promote a gas rebate process that probably is not necessary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, might I ask the privilege of the Assembly for an introduction?

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE SPEAKER: When World War II ended, millions of Europeans were on the move, and in the rubble that occurred, millions left Europe and moved to various parts of the world. One of those individuals who left Europe in 1945 as a refugee made his way to the Northwest Territories in Canada and worked in the mines and ultimately made his way to Alberta and ultimately became a Member of this Legislative Assembly. He was the first immigrant to have been appointed to a cabinet in Canada in post World War II times, and he's here with us today. In the public gallery is the hon. Dr. Horst Schmid, who probably is the best-known representative of this Assembly throughout the world other than one or two individuals in our history. Dr. Schmid, please rise.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 1

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had hoped to be pleased to speak in second reading on Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. I really was looking forward to what the government's plans were going to be, as revealed in this legislation, and I think I was expecting to see some policy put forward. I was expecting to see some process put forward, and I am sorely disappointed. I was looking in this bill for a plan, and I don't see a plan. What I see in fact is a blank cheque, something along the lines of: trust us and we'll do something, maybe, but we're not going to tell you what it is we're going to do.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think the idea of this bill is of great interest to Albertans. Certainly I'm sure that many of us heard this issue raised many times when we were at the doors during the election, so I anticipate a fairly keen interest in this bill. I'm sure that many Albertans would like to be involved in the discussion through their representative in this Assembly. Unfortunately, it's going to be darn hard for Albertans to figure out exactly what it is they're discussing because there is very little specific in the bill. It's essentially not legislation but a plan for legislation. I'm a very keen promoter of plans, and I would keenly urge the government to actually come up with legislation that tells us something about under what circumstances and against whom we are in fact going to protect individuals or companies with natural gas prices.

I think that one of my major concerns when I look at this bill is the list of circumstances that cabinet may make regulations for, two-thirds of this bill. So it's all about: we'll make regulations on things. We may make regulations on things, but nothing is actually put out as to what is going to happen, even whether or not there is going to be any rebate at all. In one section it says: well, in the opinion of the minister; and, yes, we might do it; and maybe cabinet will authorize it through regulations. So we don't even know if in fact anything is going to happen. Later, sometime, maybe cabinet might do something, but we don't know what, we don't know how much, and we don't know under what criteria. Nothing is laid out in this bill. I mean, how are Albertans to give feedback? Or has this already all been decided by cabinet, and they're eventually going to let Albertans know?

When I examine a bill, I'm looking to see whether I think this is going to be for the benefit of all Albertans, and I'm looking for several things. I'm looking as to whether the proposal creates stability. Is it sustainable? Does it promote growth? Is it good management, or is it encouraging good management practices and processes? Of course I'm always going to be asking: who benefits? Is this an equitable arrangement that's being proposed? I'm struggling to find answers to any of those questions in this bill.

The crux of what we have before us is the distribution of rebates, stabilization of natural gas prices for Albertans. As I said, I certainly had a lot of constituents expressing concern, because even then there was a lot of concern expressed around the imperfect process that the government had put in place with natural gas rebates from January to April.

Interestingly, I had a number of constituents who really were suffering because the rebates were not enough. With many of the older houses and the two-by-four construction you can only get so much insulation into the walls of those houses. Even if they had the money to put forward, to put new windows in, to do the caulking, to upgrade the furnace, to have the energy efficiencies that one can put into a dwelling now, there was only so much they can do with some of those old, sort of square box stucco houses. So for them the natural gas rebates were not enough. They were looking at increases from around a hundred dollars into the $500 range. That's a significant hit: $400 for one household to take. So the $150 rebate, while appreciated, wasn't helping people. They still had a lot of money to take out of their own pockets and out of other parts of their lives and other areas where they would spend money.

Interestingly, I also had constituents who were laughing because in fact they could afford an R-2000 house. That's where they were living, and they were basically putting that $150 rebate straight into the bank because their utility bills didn't amount to very much to begin with. So they were making money on this scheme. So my question about who benefits is a very real one.

What is the underlying philosophy behind this bill? If we're starting with the assumption that all Albertans own the natural gas resources under our feet, and I believe I heard the minister say that – I'll have to check the Blues later, but I was sitting here and I'm pretty sure I heard him say it – then the revenue, the benefit from it should accrue to all Albertans, not specifically to a corporation or through usage, but all Albertans get some sort of benefit from this.

Okay, that's fine. That's one way of doing it. It's possible in fact to go through and classify it by age. Certainly the $150 cheques that were mailed out as a program called the energy rebate program, I think – one was mailed in November, and the second one is due later this month – was based on over 16 years of age and having filed a 1999 tax return. So there were limits placed on it, but essentially it accrued to all Albertans, just not those under 16, but we presume that they're being looked after by parents or guardians.

The other way to do it is to classify by family or by household, because I had a number of people contact me and go: "Why on earth is the government giving my next door neighbour's 16 year old 150 bucks for the utility bills when I as a single person living in my home don't get that kind of assistance? It's just me and my $150 to try and hold down these gas prices, whereas my neighbour, you know, gets a cheque and she gets a cheque and the 16 year old gets a cheque. So how is this fair?" So already there was a perception of inequality happening there, but that program was supposedly based on the fact that everybody got this. I think that was supposed to be the gasoline refund. Everybody got it, but then somewhere along the line the government changed the way they were talking about that program, and it turned into this energy rebate thing. I think that's where people started to wonder about the equality of it.

If we are going to say that these rebates are given based on usage, then we're into a different system, but this bill doesn't indicate any of that. It doesn't say every Albertan is going to benefit from this because it's under our feet and we all own it, so everybody is going to get a piece of it. Nor does it say we're going to do it based on the fact that it's for consumption, so anybody that consumes more than X amount gets such and such a rebate. People in Alberta, individuals though they are, are very perceptive about perceived inequalities and discrimination.

On a number of times, both inside and outside of the House, I've raised the discrimination that's happening with high-rise buildings and energy prices. Specific to natural gas energy, I think any MLA in here who's got a high-rise apartment building or condominium must be aware by now that those people are being discriminated against in the way these rebates are given out, because the rebates of $150 per household off your utility bill from January to April that was happening for single-family dwellings: that's not the way it worked in these high-rise apartments and condominiums. They were classified as industrial or commercial, and they were subject to the industrial rate of $6 a gigajoule. Well, some of the condominiums that I had got their pencils out and their calculators and figured out pretty quickly that this was a significant difference. If they had been receiving a $150 per unit in the apartment building versus how much they were going to get on the $6 per gigajoule rebate, for one apartment in particular it was $14,000 difference a month. This really starts to add up. It also makes people mad when they think that they should be receiving a benefit and they're not receiving the benefit.

I was looking forward to the debate on this bill so that I can send the Hansard out to all of those people that have been communicating with me and say: well, here's what the government is proposing. Do you think this is a good idea? Would you like to see it? Does it work for you? Do you see it as being equitable? I can send this out to people, but none of that is nailed down in this bill; none of it. I mean, it doesn't even indicate whether or not there is going to be a rebate. Well, we can decide maybe in cabinet, behind closed doors, and then a page and a half of what might be decided by regulations.

I think the third method here is by looking at how the rebate is given out. If these payments are given based on a utility bill payment, then in essence they become a subsidy for the natural gas users. I think that should give us cause for concern. If the program was to allocate payments to gas consumers, whether they're residential or business, the program cannot be an equal payment to everyone, because it is essentially based on usage. When it's coming directly onto the utility bill, it doesn't even pass through their hands. You get a utility bill; it's already been deducted off.

So I think what I'm going to have to look to do is to bring forward the Dickson memorial amendment, requesting that any regulations . . . [interjections]. I am serious; I stand in this House in all seriousness and in recognition of the enormous amount of work done by the previous Member for Calgary-Buffalo in attempting to bring this Assembly to account, in that regulations that are formulated or put forward or proposed by cabinet should indeed be referred to the legislative Committee on Law and Regulations, where there's an opportunity for all members of the House to discuss the regulations, where it's in Hansard so our good citizens in Alberta can check the web site at www.assembly.ab.ca, follow along with the discussion, and give us all input on what they would like to see us doing.

I think that's critical, given what we've seen in this bill. I mean, four pages long and no specifics in it at all. We don't know whether the plan is to give a rebate to every Albertan. We don't know whether the plan is to give it based on usage, per household, per family, per usage of a certain amount of gas. Nothing. Nothing is spelled out in here.

One of the other issues that came up around rebates and discrimination for my constituents during the election was the concern about rebates that were received by a landlord being passed on to the constituents. I notice that in fact there is a clause that relates to that here that does state quite clearly that if a rebate is made to a vendor for the benefit of the consumer, "the benefit of the rebate must be passed on to the eligible consumers." That's wonderful. That's exactly what I've been asking for in other areas, but it doesn't say how that's going to be monitored, and it doesn't say how it's going to be enforced, which was the failing in the electrical rebate program and the failing in the existing natural gas rebate program.

There's no monitoring in effect and there's no enforcement in effect and there's nothing in here that says how it's going to be monitored or how in fact it would be enforced. It's actually in the legislation but with no process with which to make it happen. Therefore, I wonder how great the intent is that in fact it should happen. I don't see how it can here.

There are a lot of people that live in apartments. I think every single member in this Assembly must have an apartment building or two in their riding now. So to dismiss this as a concern of the downtown areas or the centre of the metropolitan areas that we have in Alberta doesn't fly anymore. I'm sure members have constituents that are indeed watching them to see how they're going to deal with rebates for them and the discrimination that this government has put in place as far as people living in high-rise apartments and condominiums.

I keep seeing references in here to "as the Minister considers appropriate"; the Lieutenant Governor in Council may decide to do things. Nothing is clear from what we've got in front of us. I listened carefully to what the minister's opening remarks on the bill were – it all sounded really nice – about why they wanted to do this but nothing specific that I could glean from his comments either. So I do invite him and encourage him to continue to respond to the concerns that are being raised and to outline with specifics what the government's intending. If we have constituents that do want to go on-line and read Hansard or perhaps go to the library and get the Hansard out to understand what's being discussed here – we have in the past been able to rely on comments and remarks made by ministers as they bring forward and propose bills so that after a time you can go back and say: "Yes, but you said in your remarks here that it was intended to do thus and so, and it's not doing that. So what are you going to do to make that better?" We have nothing to run on here.

Let me take a step back. This government with some innovation did put in place key performance indicators in their budgeting process. Now, for all the concerns I have about what the key performance measurements are – and I think many of them are inappropriate – nonetheless they were there. So how do we measure this bill? What are the performance indicators for this bill? How do we look back a year?

Let's go a year into the future and look back and say, "How do we judge whether this was successful?" We can't, because there are no standards in here. There are no benchmarks in here. There's nothing that says something will happen. It says: might happen, maybe happen, if we get around to it, possibly, perhaps. But even then it doesn't specify exactly what it's supposed to be. So there's no way to determine, and I'm wondering if this is just an interesting process of the government, that in fact they can never be judged on what they're putting forward and what they're proposing on behalf of all Albertans. I don't think that's a sign of good management; I don't think it's a sign of good planning.

Let me go back to the criteria that I talked about at the very beginning. Does this bill create stability? Well, hard to tell. I don't think it does. Is it sustainable? Well, again there are no specifics in the bill to indicate what it's doing to create sustainability. Can these rebates go on ad infinitum? Do they go on forever? Do they only go on if we have a surplus? Do they only go on if we have resource revenues above X dollar amount? Nothing is in there. So it doesn't look like it's sustainable either.

Well, then is it promoting growth? I don't know how it could be promoting growth. It's not outlining any way that companies or Albertans can be moving forward based on sure knowledge of what is going to be available to them in the rebates. How about good management then? Could we find good management? If I use a criteria of good management, can I find it in this bill? No. There's no information in the bill. There are no key performance indicators in the bill. There are no measurements of any kind in the bill. It doesn't say at all what it's going to do.

I'm looking forward with great zeal to continuing my debate in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 2 Cooperatives Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 2, the Cooperatives Act.

In general the Cooperatives Act 2001 replaces the current Cooperative Associations Act, which has not been reviewed since 1946. The Cooperatives Act 2001 is part of a movement to harmonize cooperative legislation right across this country. Generally, this bill provides co-operatives with better access to capital financing and meets the needs of new-generation co-operatives and other types of co-operatives. It also provides flexibility while not imposing complex rules on small co-operatives. In essence this bill will allow co-operatives to compete and grow efficiently in the new millennium.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to say a few words about the Cooperatives Act. As has already been explained by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, this is modernization, and it certainly replaces co-operative legislation that was initiated here in this province in 1946, as I understand.

Now, the government in this draft - it's so different from the previous bill, Bill 1. This bill certainly, I think, is useful. The groups, the affected stakeholders that are referred to, are pleased. They're not only pleased with the diligent work of the hon. member but also the consultation process that existed that led to the drafting of this legislation.

It's quite a comprehensive bill, and I'm cautious about dismissing it casually in second reading, but we have to look at how this will affect new-generation co-operatives, Mr. Speaker. New-generation co-operatives are value-added processing, closed-membership co-operatives. Now, this particular group, members of the Official Opposition, have had no direct consultation with them that I'm aware of, nor have our research staff. They first emerged in North Dakota and Minnesota and during the last decade in neighbouring states and provinces. They were formed by producers involved in niche markets such as bison or beans or dairy, corn or soybeans, just to name a few.

They differ from other co-operatives in several ways, Mr. Speaker. There is a restriction of membership. There is a higher level of initial equity investment, transferability and opportunity for appreciation or depreciation of delivery rights, and delivery rights are tied to the level of equity invested.

Now, the shares have three distinct features. First, shares usually represent a high level of initial equity investment to which delivery rights are tied. Secondly, shares embody those delivery rights within contracts which define both rights and obligations of the producer and the co-operative. Shares are transferable or tradable and can appreciate or depreciate in value.

From a rural development perspective the new-generation co-operatives are not a silver-bullet answer to increasing rural development and to decreasing the decline of prairie communities. I think school closures, regardless of how many children are in the schools, have more of an effect on the decline of prairie communities than anything else. This is certainly an issue that's not recognized by this current government.

These new-generation co-operatives are another tool that can stimulate value-added ventures in Alberta. Investment in a new-generation co-operative is much greater than a traditional co-operative. We'll just have to see how this works, but many, many different individuals have been consulted, Mr. Speaker, as I understand.

In closing I would like to congratulate the government in this case for a legislative review that certainly is endorsed by many, many different people who are associated with co-operatives. Co-operatives have been a fundamental basis for operating businesses in Alberta for decades and as such are part of the economic and social fabric of our province. We in the Official Opposition support the efforts that will improve the operation of the co-operatives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 11: Mr. Hancock]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have lived most of my life in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. I went to school there, to Youngstown elementary and Britannia junior high school, and my children go to school in the community as well. My roots run deep in Glenora.

When I was elected on March 12, I was deeply honoured. It was because of the hard work of 126 volunteers. I would like to name a few of those today. They are Sasha Angus, Judi Kendall, Heather Klimchuk, and Cliff Tetzlaff. They were with me every step of the way over the period leading up to March 12.

I was not born in Canada; I was born in Scotland. My parents chose this country, and they chose this province. They came to a place called Violet Grove - and I believe it's in the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne's riding - and ultimately moved to the town of Jasper Place, which now is in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, once it amalgamated with Edmonton.

I am enormously proud to be here as the representative for Edmonton-Glenora. I have always loved my province and my community. I've considered it to be a very positive and influential part of Edmonton, full of new growth and vibrancy with roots that extend back in time to when it was the old town of Jasper Place. The west end is diverse and prosperous. It has a diverse and prosperous business community as well as a vibrant social network of people who feel strongly about their community, as I do.

While building strong ties to the great metropolitan area of Edmonton, my constituents have kept the small-town feeling of community. The community leagues throughout the area are vital links between these diverse and dynamic people. The local business associations of Edmonton-Glenora represent and promote their local members vigorously and draw in new residents as well as new customers and clients.

To name a few of these outstanding organizations. The West Edmonton Business Association has grown to be one of the largest organizations of its kind. Likewise, the 124th Street Business Association has spearheaded new growth and attracted new development to the area. In the heart of Stony Plain Road the Jasper Place Gateway Foundation incorporates community leagues, businesses, and individuals to make positive strides in the development of west Edmonton community experience.

As set out in the Speech from the Throne, safe and reliant communities are an area of great importance. Through community organizations individuals can work together for a positive change, and with some assistance from the Alberta government our community leagues are providing a place for people to come together in sport and leisure and at the same time build ties in their communities.

Speaking of sport, I'd like to take this opportunity to mention a sporting event that will take place across the river from Edmonton-Glenora in Hawrelak park. On July 21 and 22 of this year thousands of world-class athletes will be coming to take part in a sport widely recognized as one of the most difficult sports ever, the triathlon. I was fortunate enough to be a member of the world triathlon bid committee and worked as the tourism volunteer for the first couple of years leading up to the 2001 ITU world triathlon championships. It is one of the most prestigious sporting events that this city can host. I am certain that Edmonton is prepared to offer its best and, as is usually the case, set a new standard of excellence. The event may not be as big as the 2001 world track and field championship, but it is nevertheless a great honour to be chosen as a host. It is also an opportunity once again to raise the profile of Edmonton and Alberta on the world stage, and I am enthusiastic about witnessing Edmonton once again outdoing itself.

I'd be remiss to not mention some of my new colleagues. As a recently elected member I have the pleasure of joining five other rookies on the third floor of the Annex. I would like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, and the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

I would also like to take this time to respond to the Speech from the Throne by saying that I look forward to respecting the charge placed upon me and conducting myself in a manner that reflects the importance of our undertaking. We have a great deal of business to take care of over the next four years, and I am prepared to take that task with devotion and propriety.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. KNIGHT: Mr. Speaker, it is with honour and respect that I rise this afternoon among seasoned legislators and newly elected colleagues to follow a great tradition and deliver my maiden speech in this Assembly.

I would like to extend my congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, on your reinstatement. Your capabilities are well known and are considered to be ones of a true parliamentarian. We in the province of Alberta are indeed fortunate in that this government has always carried out the affairs of the province with the dignity befitting a people of proud heritage. You, sir, have been and, fortunately for us, will continue to be a mainstay in that process. It is for this reason that your guidance has earned respect and loyalty from every member of this House.

I would also like to take this opportunity to recognize my predecessor for the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituency, the hon. Walter Paszkowski. All of you who sat in this House in the 12 years of his service would know that Walter was a man of great honour, an excellent representative of our constituency, and a very capable minister. I'm sure his presence will be missed, but his legacy will stand in all the work he accomplished in his presiding years.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, our constituency changed during Mr. Paszkowski's tenure. His term began in 1989, serving the constituency of Smoky River. The representation divisions changed during his service in '93. It is, therefore, my honour to stand before you all today to deliver not only my maiden speech but the maiden speech on behalf of the constituency now known as Grande Prairie-Smoky. It is with pleasure that I take this opportunity to formally introduce to this House the constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky.

The fact that there has been a change in the electoral divisions attest to the change in growth that our region has seen over the past decade. The Grande Prairie-Smoky region is exceptionally active. More jobs are being generated, and the growth rate is accelerated but manageable. Our population has increased by close to 10,000 in 10 years, and our economy has more than quadrupled the capital investment being placed in development in the same 10 years. I urge you all to come and visit. The area is dynamic both in terms of people and economics. Though we still maintain the same rural values and charm, we have a lot more to offer people.

Lieutenant Governor on April 10 dealt with many wide-ranging issues dear to the hearts of all Albertans. There was also in my view a real commitment to uphold the vision that was directed from the preceding speech in February. This government has maintained its commitment to providing its people with a high standard of living through some difficult times and is able to celebrate its productivity in prosperous times. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it is incumbent on each and every one of us to practise and promote responsible fiscal management.

The growth we have experienced in the past decade has been due to the diversity in our region. Our location gives us the unique ability to access all the major commodities which Alberta has to offer for export and national consumption. We have oil and gas, agriculture, forestry, and tourism. It is an exciting time for Grande Prairie-Smoky, one that will produce even greater benefits for Albertans if we take hold of our potential.

It is from this note that I would like to comment on the commitments of this government to Alberta and how Grande Prairie-Smoky would contribute to the growth of this province in the coming years. It is a concern of my constituents that their voice continues to be heard by the government on issues that are important to them. It pleases me and my constituents that there has been a commitment to the vision of greater economic growth for everyone. The continuation of a sound fiscal plan will maintain the economic benefits that this government has achieved in the past few years. A deficit- and debt-free Alberta is an important factor enabling Albertans to gain maximum benefit through a flexible fiscal plan. We are pleased to live in a province where a commitment to keeping taxes the lowest in Canada is a priority.

The throne speech outlines some important visions for our province to base our priorities on for the coming year. The visions include many key areas that are important to achieving development goals in Grande Prairie-Smoky, important visions for health, agriculture, energy, and education. Along with defining what is necessary to obtain greater achievement in these areas, Grande Prairie-Smoky would like to point out that the forest industry is an important and viable economic resource in our province. The people in my constituency would like to remind the government that it is imperative that we direct a vision for forestry as well and urge our government to continue to pursue a vision for renewable resources.

Albertans would benefit a great deal by aggressively supporting our forest producers in their endeavour to maintain market share. It is important to pursue this market in such a manner that unfair and unfounded economic damage is not incurred.

Grande Prairie-Smoky produces a major amount of wood fibre for domestic use and export. In the Grande Prairie region alone the forest industry generates in excess of $400 million annually, and there are approximately 3,000 jobs provided in direct and indirect support to this industry. This does not include the thousands of students who have funded their postsecondary education through seasonal work. It is a viable industry and one that has been part of Alberta's heritage from the beginning and continues to make a big impact on a good number of our communities.

The annual forestry show held to gather all those involved in the forest industry and those who would enjoy learning more about it is coming up on May 11 in Grande Prairie. The show demonstrates the importance of the industry to our economic viability and, as well, allows those involved to share ideas, products, new information, and gives recognition to those companies who have given back to the community in many different ways, companies like Ainsworth, Canfor, and Weyerhaeuser, who have supported the community and its young people by sponsoring the development of a new residence for Grande Prairie Regional College. They support the communities they are involved in, and often you see them giving back to the people by funding things like community recreation centres and libraries.

Alberta has an extremely high environmental regenerative standard to protect the future viability of our forests. These standards are readily enforced and expected to be upheld within the entire industry.

Fire suppression has been extremely successful in Alberta since the 1950s, and it's an important concern for the residents of Grande Prairie-Smoky that the government utilizes all new information being generated about fire suppression. With the amount of energy stored above ground in the form of mature timber, government and industry must look for ways to prevent huge fires like the disastrous one in Virginia Hills. This is a great concern to the people of my constituency especially because of the current situation where there has been very little precipitation so far this year.

Using the methods of sustainable development and responsible harvesting to ensure our future is also important to our agricultural industry, which is echoed in the words of our Lieutenant Governor. The agriculture and food sector is a critical part of Alberta's economy, and it pleases my constituents that we have promised to continue to value its importance by making agriculture a priority. A significant portion of Alberta's land base is used for agricultural purposes. This means that the agricultural industry also has an impact on a majority of Alberta's communities. It is a highly developed economic sector in our province providing a large amount of revenue. In order to maintain agriculture as a viable business in many of these communities, we must continue to focus on the small farm, especially when trade barriers are being dismantled on a global scale.

Mr. Speaker, we have said repeatedly to Albertans that we will not fail our rural communities. Grande Prairie-Smoky is committed to making a positive contribution to maintaining effective and efficient agriculture alongside our government. It pleases the people of Grande Prairie-Smoky that the government has chosen to actively pursue these goals by using recommendations from last year's Ag Summit 2000 where our farm communities would benefit through investment in value-added production. With continued support of proposed value-added investment and continued assistance in times of unforeseeable disaster, Alberta's farmers are sure to benefit from greater economic stability in the coming decade.

With some of our traditional agricultural pursuits under increasing pressure, our innovative agriculture entrepreneurs have turned to alternatives such as bison, elk, deer, boar, and game bird ranching. I would be pleased to see this government address regulatory concerns to assist these farmers in their efforts to be a viable sector of Alberta's rural community.

Water management. A comprehensive water management strategy would be another very positive step and another benefit to future Albertans. Our water is becoming increasingly important in North America, and an in-depth study leading to a strategy is not only desirable but necessary.

Energy concerns are not on the forefront these days. The energy business appears to be quite healthy. They have healthy profits, but I must say, Mr. Speaker, that these profits are being reinvested to replace reserves that are being produced. The energy sector is not a hot item on international markets. There is still a perception of instability and rapidly fluctuating prices. Recent comments with regard to North American security of energy supply should help to refocus investment and support in this extremely important sector of our economy.

Infrastructure is also an important factor in the development of our communities. Better highways and roads enable the trade process to be efficient and bring greater safety to drivers and the general motoring public who are accessing communities along these highways. A project which has received tremendous support and will bring greater efficiency and safety to the Grande Prairie-Smoky region is the twinning of highway 43, the north/south trade corridor, which is to be completed by 2007.

As the Grande Prairie region grows, each year the concern for keeping the fabric of our community strong becomes more challenging. The people of my constituency are proud of their ability to maintain the importance of community throughout our past decade of rapid growth. The outcome is quite apparent. We are committed to helping our children with the most beneficial tools we are capable of providing them. This is why Grande Prairie-Smoky highly supports the scheduled plans for the Alberta Supernet. We believe that this cutting-edge project is an excellent tool to link all of Alberta to limitless opportunities and give even the most outlying regions of the province the ability to access the world.

Further in education in the Grande Prairie-Smoky region, from Grande Prairie Regional College comes a new housing initiative, a program enhancement, and they are in the process now of looking at the funding formulas that have been laid out for secondary education. They have a concern that there are shortfalls in qualified instructors, and the availability of alternatives provided by this government such as the high-speed Internet will certainly help in this area. Northern Gateway school division also must be commended for their effort in pursuing quality education linked with responsible infrastructure utilization. The Valleyview K to 12 campus initiative linked with community-shared facilities is just such an effort.

Alberta's tourism is a large economic generator. Many smaller communities in our province have benefited from the rise in ecotourism in the past decade. Smaller businesses have realized their earning potential by accessing this market. We have been fortunate to grab the attention of visitors and tourists who wish to access the wonderful recreation prospects we are surrounded by. Grande Prairie-Smoky has a lot to offer visitors, and all the information is available to our guests in a friendly and beautiful multi-use facility, Centre 2000, built to mark the new millennium. We will also be proudly celebrating Alberta's centennial in 2005 with an incorporated museum, which is already 90 percent completed. It is an exciting time for Alberta, one which we are happy to contribute to and to share with pride in the celebration.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, I see a bright future for this province. We are fortunate to have a wealth of resources available to us for our use. We have a unique position in Alberta, where every community is different from one another. Grande Prairie-Smoky believes that this province will continue to flourish, and we will work together to ensure that the concerns of our province are continually met with a fair address and responsibility. Our strength as a province depends upon our ability to work together and to have our voice heard. Our concerns as an entire province should be met within our country.

The Alberta advantage is not just about money. It's not just about our people or just our resources. It's about this land itself. Grande Prairie-Smoky, like all of Alberta, is a place that binds its people to the land, and a deep, positive commitment ensures our future and that of other generations. Whether you are a native Albertan or come to participate from other parts of Canada or the world, Alberta pride soon envelops you, and that is our greatest advantage. The combination is the key, a key we have custody and responsibility for, a key we must hand over untarnished to the next generation.

On a lighter note, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to work with the Super Six, although I prefer to refer to the third floor of the Annex as the Three for All.

Mr. Speaker, I have a volunteer story that goes along with volunteering and goes along with the business of becoming an elected member. We had a great commitment from a large, large number of people, of course like all folks that have been through this have had. One particular story I'd like to repeat to the members here. We had a gentleman taking care of signs for us. He had a little difficulty sleeping because we didn't have signs where other folks had signs. At 4 o'clock in the morning he wakes up thinking: what's he going to do about this? Can't sleep. He gets up, goes out in his pickup truck. Driving down highway 43, not the twinned part but highway 43, he stops and discovers he's got a really good place to set up a sign. So he gets out and he's driving metal stakes in the frozen ground. Another pickup truck pulls up behind him. Two gentlemen are in the truck. They roll down the passenger-side window. A fella says, "Have you got trouble?" "No," he said. "What are you doing?" "Well, I'm just putting up some signs, election signs for my candidate." "Well, can we give you any help?" His reply was, "Is either one of you guys a psychiatrist?"

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my pride to this House in being chosen as the representative for Grande Prairie-Smoky. It is my honour to serve as the voice of such a hardworking and community-driven people. I see a bright future for my region based on the visions and the commitment of those who live there. We have a lot to offer the province of Alberta, and we are proud to be part of the whole community and look forward to giving our best to achieve the visions and goals of this province.

Thank you.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, first allow me to extend my congratulations to all the recently elected members of the 25th Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. We've all worked very hard to become Members of this Legislative Assembly, and now is our opportunity to demonstrate to Albertans that we can and will provide the leadership necessary for a positive future.

Myself, I'm following in the footsteps of a man who has a track record of approximately 30 years in serving his constituency, namely Peter Trynchy, the former MLA for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. He has left some large shoes to fill, and I feel honoured to have the chance to accept this challenge.

Mr. Speaker, it's with the utmost pride that I stand today on behalf of my constituency of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. This constituency represents a large geographic area of west-central Alberta and at its widest point is approximately 80 kilometres wide by 180 kilometres long. Within the boundaries of this constituency there are some 30,000 citizens who on March 12 declared their confidence in both myself and the PC government by electing me to represent them as their Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. This, of course, was the result of the tireless efforts of my campaign team. We all worked very hard, first for the nomination selection and then for the provincial election. Teamwork has put all of us into these seats, and it is at this time that this same type of teamwork will carry this government well into the 21st century.

Personally, my election as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta is a pinnacle of something learned at my father's knee. My parents are both from Holland, and after surviving the horrors of World War II, they emigrated to Canada and settled in Whitecourt, Alberta, in the late '50s. They knew firsthand about having their freedoms and privileges taken away from them and so raised their three children not only to respect freedom but to cherish it.

My father became known as Mr. Red Cross for his devotion and endless work as a volunteer with the Red Cross, whether it was coordinating blood donor clinics, providing disaster assistance, providing health aids, or fund-raising. This was his way of demonstrating his tribute to an organization that provided many forms of relief to the citizens of Holland during the Second World War. His example is undoubtedly what influenced me to become an active community volunteer, and I have done so my whole adult life. I have served as a coach of minor sports, president of the Whitecourt Chamber of Commerce, town councillor, regional board member for the Stony Plain-Lac Ste. Anne health unit, and until this election served as mayor of the town of Whitecourt for the past nine years.

Now is my opportunity to acquaint you with my constituency. Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is fortunate enough to have two major highways running basically east and west through the length of it: highway 16 towards Jasper national park and highway 43 to the north. Over the years these two highways have been extremely important in the development of agriculture, forestry, and the petrochemical industries. These industries and the resulting spin-off services required by them have created some communities that are totally dependent on a single industry to drive their economies. Meanwhile, these same two highways have also generated great tourism opportunities in this constituency.

Besides living in the best part of Alberta, residents of this area have long enjoyed outdoor recreation, whether one likes to fish, hunt, camp, bird-watch, snowmobile, riverboat, cross-country ski, golf, trail ride, or attend rodeos, and I can go on and on and on. In recent years Whitecourt-Ste. Anne has been well known for its outdoor opportunities and now is host to visitors from all around the world seeking some of our sports and challenges.

In my constituency and throughout the province each industry has its own unique challenges that continually require this government to provide leadership and assistance. Investigating and adjusting our own rules and regulations to fit not only the problems of the day but also with an eye to the future could hopefully deal with many of these challenges. For example, the softwood lumber agreement affects our forest industry, large operation or small. Our agriculture sector is faced with low commodity prices and consistently increasing input costs. The resource industry, expanding at record rates, has to deal with environmental pressures, lack of a skilled workforce, and short time lines. Tourism and industry in my constituency will both reap the benefits of highway 43 being twinned.

For many years highway 43 has been known as the busiest highway in Canada for tonnage, second only to the 401 in Ontario. Currently it's known to be the busiest two-lane highway in Alberta, carrying the largest truck traffic volumes ever experienced. At the same time, many sections of this highway are famous for high accident and death rates due to the fact that it is only two lanes and that much of this highway has little or no shoulders.

Meanwhile, the twinning is well started, but completion needs to be accomplished as soon as possible. Land acquisitions along the route have definitely slowed this process down. It's my hope to work with the Minister of Transportation to try to achieve a more streamlined but still cost-effective method to advance this process. A shorter completion date would also help to accomplish the north/south trade corridor from Alaska to Mexico. A lot of people in my constituency call this the Canamex highway.

My constituency is composed of a sprinkling of many small villages and towns, generally situated on, near, or in between highways 16 and 43. Some of the more familiar names are Evansburg, Wildwood, Niton, Peers, Whitecourt, Blue Ridge, Green Court, Mayerthorpe, Rochfort Bridge, Sangudo, Cherhill, Glenevis, Darwell, Rich Valley, Alberta Beach, Gunn, and Onoway. Many of these communities and some that have fallen by the wayside were settled near the turn of the 20th century. At that time this area was all part of the North-West Territories and land was very cheap. This was part of a great scheme to populate and civilize the wild west. The sweat and toil of these pioneers resulted in Alberta becoming a province in 1905. Their descendants also worked diligently, and all this effort has resulted in Alberta becoming the innovative, vibrant, and prosperous province that we all enjoy today.

This constituency also enjoys a rich cultural and ethnic diversity along with unique languages and traditions. Perhaps best known is the annual Lac Ste. Anne pilgrimage that sees aboriginal and Metis people come from mainly western and northern Canada every summer to participate in religious ceremonies. Lac Ste. Anne is a rather special area. During the summer months the local population spirals as many summer villages are filled with people who prefer to leave the city and live near the lake. This results in a flurry of summer activities for all to enjoy.

Whitecourt-Ste. Anne has a very high senior population, so proper accommodation and health care are important to all of us. Good geriatric care becomes very important, but at the same time, seniors prefer to remain in or near their hometowns. I'm very proud that our government has recognized the need for new, innovative health facilities in a town like Evansburg and appreciate the importance of the new facility that is scheduled to be built there very soon.

Mayerthorpe is home to an alfalfa plant that is one of the major employers in the community. Like many other alfalfa plants in this province, they are struggling to keep open in spite of the fact that utility costs and other input costs are outstripping revenues. The former Whitecourt-Ste. Anne MLA and the former agriculture minister worked together to help this industry survive. It is my hope that I can carry on this cause through the standing policy committee on agriculture, to which I have been appointed.

Onoway citizens have related to me the fact that they wish to preserve their school building, which has stood since the early 1900s. Hopefully I can achieve this with some assistance from the province.

I have municipalities in my constituency that are concerned about inadequate supplies of safe drinking water. Others are faced with aged infrastructure that needs new capital. All this puts an ever increasing pressure on the municipal tax roll. I do have to commend our government for reducing the education tax burden on the municipal tax roll by 10 percent this year. It is my hope to convince all of you that we must continue to reduce this education tax burden on local property tax rolls.

I do have concerns about inequities in the property tax roll. Under the present regulations in the School Act municipalities that wish to blend their school taxes are in contravention of the act. Mr. Speaker, I'll use the example of the town of Whitecourt, where two identical homes, side by side, one owned by a Catholic ratepayer and one owned by a public-school supporter, would pay a difference of $200 in their school requisition. I'm pleased to hear from the Minister of Learning that he is well aware of this situation and in many municipalities across our province. It is my hope that through the Department of Learning, with the support from all of you, we can resolve this inequity soon.

More generally speaking, I am very aware that many of my constituents are very concerned about the cost of gasoline, natural gas, and electricity, and there are ongoing concerns about the costs and directions of both health care and education.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned just a few of the many challenges that I know our government will help to resolve to make a positive future for the constituency of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne as well as for the province of Alberta. I'm excited about working closely with all of you over the next few years. I'm also looking forward to working alongside my colleagues on the third floor of the Annex. We Super Six rookies are all energetic and dedicated and will do our very best not only to maintain but also to enhance the performance and direction of this government.

I will end by again thanking my campaign team as well as the 7,579 voters of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne who all worked together to put me in this seat. I also want to thank my wife, Liz, and our two sons. They were my champion supporters. To all the constituents of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and to all of you in this Assembly, I promise to work honestly, with integrity, and to the best of my abilities.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am truly honoured to be able to speak to this House today responding to the Speech from the Throne. It is especially an honour this afternoon because this is my maiden speech. It is the first opportunity to voice concerns on behalf of the people of my constituency, Edmonton-Norwood. On behalf of all Albertans let me say right now that I hold this elected position to be a very special privilege, and in all my actions in the upcoming months and years I will do my very best to listen, to learn, to develop, and to implement ideas that enhance the quality of life in this province.

Let me begin by congratulating all my fellow MLAs on their successful election and re-election. I have not had the chance to meet everyone yet, but from those I have met, I have come to see that we have a strong team that has been sent to Edmonton for this 25th Legislature. I look forward to working with all of you in achieving effective results over the next few years.

I'd also like to make some very important thank-you's. First, I'd like to thank all the people of Edmonton-Norwood for putting their faith in me. I'm especially grateful because I know that Edmonton-Norwood faces many unique challenges and needs a particularly strong voice in the Legislature to bring those concerns forward. I want it to be known that I regard your vote of confidence very seriously and will not fail you. I want all residents of Edmonton-Norwood, including those who may not have supported me during the election, to know that I am approachable and open to ideas. As well, I would like to thank the hon. Lieutenant Governor for her clear and eloquent presentation nearly two weeks ago and the hon. Premier for setting Alberta forth on such a positive agenda and for steering Alberta towards an agenda with tremendous vision and ability over the next few years and in years to come.

Before I address some points from the throne speech directly, I feel it is important to bring some attention to the unique aspects of Edmonton-Norwood. Perhaps the most striking characteristic of my constituency is a visible history. Edmonton-Norwood is not a new area. It's been home to some of Edmonton's most vibrant businesses, cultural centres, and schools almost as long as Edmonton has been a city. A tour of the district would enthrall all visitors with the elaborate architecture of such buildings as Edmonton-Norwood's elementary school, Spruce Avenue school. Just over 25 percent of the buildings in my district predate World War II. It's truly a beautiful district to tour both because of these man-made structures and also because of the many parks that have been put in by city planners over the decades.

A second noticeable characteristic of Edmonton-Norwood is the particular ethnic diversity. Edmonton-Norwood is home to many of Alberta's earlier immigrant populations and their descendants. By this I refer to the significant populations of people of Ukrainian, German, and British origin that reside in the constituency, but Edmonton-Norwood is also home to a newer wave of immigrants that have arrived in past decades, including many people of Chinese and Asian descent. In addition, Edmonton-Norwood has a sizable aboriginal population. All of these diversified backgrounds make it one of Alberta's most culturally active constituencies.

A final feature of Edmonton-Norwood that members of the Legislature might find especially interesting is that Edmonton-Norwood is close by. The boundaries of this constituency being not more than 12 city blocks from this Chamber means at least two important things. First, it means that it would be rude of me not to extend an invitation to all my fellow members to join me one day and tour the district, perhaps over lunch or during a break. Second, though it stresses how much Edmonton-Norwood is at the heart of Alberta, the geographic proximity of my constituency serves as a demographic barometer. If Edmonton-Norwood, not a hop, skip, and jump from the Legislature, is facing a problem, then surely the problem is widespread throughout the province. My constituency, then, is worth keeping a close eye on.

What I have said so far, Mr. Speaker, does paint a picture of much of everyday life in my district, a district made up of hardworking people who care about one another. Yet daily life in Edmonton-Norwood is not without significant challenges as well. I'd like to address some of these challenges as they relate to the vision expressed by the throne speech.

In the speech, Mr. Speaker, much attention is given to building safe, strong communities. One of the unfortunate aspects of Edmonton-Norwood is that in many ways it is not safe. This is particularly clear in the prevalence of prostitution that continues in my district. Prostitution brings problems with not just one criminal element. It results in condoms and needles and related drug abuse being left in school grounds. This is disgusting and dangerous and is not an environment in which we should be letting any children in such a prosperous province as Alberta grow up. Prostitution and its associated crime are complex issues that demand innovative solutions.

Certainly the fact that Edmonton-Norwood has such profound difficulties with these issues is related to one superlative ranking that, quite frankly, Edmonton-Norwood would rather not have. Edmonton-Norwood has the lowest average household income in the entire province, standing at just $31,900 per year. This is a challenge, then, that demands innovative and dramatic solutions, at least one of which I would like to mention here.

The Alberta Avenue Business Association is striving hard to revitalize 118th Avenue with support from the city of Edmonton government, small local businesses, and other stakeholders. The idea is that improving the esthetic looks of that area will attract a line of consumers with different width and depth than current clientele. By changing the demographics of the average consumer, the idea is that the entire atmosphere will change, that a cleaner look will arrive with more reputable businesses, causing amongst other things those who perpetrate the prostitute trade to move on. This is not to say, Mr. Speaker, that this will resolve the issue of prostitution. Prostitution is the world's oldest profession. Its root causes are complex, as are its solutions. Support needs to exist to offer people alternatives to getting into prostitution, and support needs to exist for those who have gotten into it.

Yet the effort on 118th is one step towards improving the community. It is clear, though, that much more is needed to be done to improve the safety of Edmonton-Norwood. Provincial funding for crime prevention initiatives and mobile community teams responding to crisis situations, as suggested in the throne speech, needs to be given to local police services to target these areas. This must be a priority followed through on.

Another principle stated in the Speech from the Throne was education, that it continues to be a top priority for the government, and that the government will increase funding to school boards to help improve student learning, particularly at the early grade levels. Edmonton-Norwood is one constituency that could benefit enormously. By following through on this commitment, one place that funding could go would be to reinforce and expand the hot lunch programs at schools. Common sense tells us that a child who is hungry simply will not be able to concentrate, and other efforts are wasted on them if food is not provided. Unfortunately, there continues to be many students in my district whose families simply cannot afford to feed them properly. This is an ideal opportunity for the government to step in and make an effective difference.

Another place funding could go would be to reinforce or expand funding for the DARE program. This drug abuse resistance program provides children with the information and skills that they need to live drug free and violence free. It's been proven it makes a difference, but as I've been told many times by my constituents, with a little more funding it could do so much more.

The third point addressed in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, was to continue to help protect Albertans from high natural gas prices. Well, there is one group in particular in my riding that needs that support, the support to cover energy price increases in general. That group is seniors. Many are living on a fixed income that they earned by being hard working and contributing to Alberta all their lives. Now they are faced with energy bills that have the potential to inflate substantially while their incomes remain fixed. To say the least, we owe our seniors something for what they have given to this province. In the name of equality I suggest that special action be taken for the most vulnerable group.

So crime prevention programs; improve education at schools; protection, especially for seniors, from energy price spikes: these constituent priorities articulated in the throne speech need to be followed through in my constituency.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, a little information about myself. Perhaps my outlook on life and my vision of how Alberta might better itself in the coming years is best expressed in a little information from when I was young. I grew up on a small farm outside High Prairie. We farmed little by little. We picked roots and drove tractors and did the whole thing. The machinery we used was older stuff, and eventually we upgraded. When I was 18, I kind of had enough of that and went to work for a fella. I worked for him all summer long. I didn't take any wage. I was driving a Kenworth truck. We kind of had a plan that I was going to own this truck eventually, so slowly I started putting new tires on it, as I was driving for him, and getting this fixed and that fixed.

Fall came along, and he wanted $25,000 for the truck. I had saved $10,000 of my own throughout the years, and I already had $10,000 in equity built into this truck from not drawing wages all summer. So I came home one day with this truck, and I'm peeling off the other guy's name from the door and putting mine on. My dad comes to me and says, "What are you doing?" I said "Well, I'm changing the name on this truck to mine." He said, "Well, you can't do that." I said: "Why not? I own it." "Geez," he said, "you can't just drive for a couple of months and go into business on your own like that." I was 18 years old at the time. I said, "Well, why not?" He said, "You should have come home so we could discuss these things." I said: "Dad, I don't have time. I've got to work in the morning in Red Earth. We have a lease job to pack." He said, "Well, man, what if this? What if that?" I said: "Well, you know, I don't have a choice. I'm definitely not going to farm any longer. I like this trucking thing."

So that's how I started in it, slowly of course. You know, sometimes you can't buy a job, so I wanted to see what everybody else was doing. This guy had a hoe. Well, okay, how do you get a hoe? Of course, you get into debt and so on and so forth.

Anyway it's a lot about risk, it's a lot about management, it's a lot about planning ahead, and that's what attracted me to the government, how they plan ahead. Different hon. members have told me that the government's vision is 25 to 30 years of planning. That is so important. I mean, that's how you build a province, and you can see the fruits of it. We're coming in halfway through the profits of hardworking Albertans, the hardworking Alberta government, and it's good to see. It's a little bit easier. The momentum is there. You know, that's how we carry on as a government and as a province.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest a new area that this government has not yet touched on so far as I know but is a particular interest of mine and the direction I would like to see the government go in. I'm not trying to bring legislation in, but it's my belief the government should be assisting young people with home ownership. There are many, many hardworking young families that are responsible for paying rent on time. They find it very, very difficult to own a house. It seems like when they save a few dollars, either the insurance is due or it's Christmastime. There's always something chewing away at their little $2,000 or $3,000 nest egg. I think we could somehow see a way in the kindness of our hearts and our purse strings to assist these young people with home ownership.

One initiative: if the payments are made on time over a period of 10 years, forgive 5 percent. It's only $5,000 on a modest home. Forgive it, and the children can go to and from school saying: yeah, this is our house. The parents can go to and from work saying: this is our house. The benefits would be so enormous that you really couldn't put a dollar figure on it, because social life and social aspects – you really can't put money on those things. It just carries on forever and forever.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, I would just like to thank everybody. I hope that God will be with us all. We continue to seek His guidance and His direction, and with the Almighty looking upon us, we cannot make a mistake.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a new member of the 25th Legislature I'd also like to rise on the floor and give my maiden speech, or my maiden address, as a response to the throne speech. I was very impressed when the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor gave the throne speech, because I also felt her sincerity, which has been remarked upon many times in here. I think the part that touched me the most was as she headed towards the end of her speech, when she said, "Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and God bless you all," and then she said, "God bless Alberta." For a moment she was choked up, and that really struck a chord in me, because I thought: she loves this province. And you know what? I love this province. It touched me because I realized that the vision was built upon loving a province, and I thought: what an important thing to have in a Lieutenant Governor. How proud I was at that moment to be in this Legislature.

I'd also like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and your colleagues for the wonderful job that you do. As I was considering who we should pick for Speaker, I was reminded of the thousands of basketball games that I've attended as a mother of four teenage boys and the many times I've tried to, you know, act with decorum and not get out of control at those games. Then we had an interesting thing happen in our family. My children decided that in order to earn extra income, they would become referees themselves. So they went to referee school, and they learned to be referees. I learned what a different experience it was to sit in a gymnasium as the mother of the referee rather than as the mother of a player and how much I resented those parents who couldn't seem to control themselves at that time. I appreciate the decorum that you guys exhibit in this House and how you help and aid us in trying to get the work done in this House, so thank you very much for that.

You also mentioned in your response to the throne speech that there were two members of this House that were not the first generation to enter this House, and I'm really proud to be one of those. I am the daughter-in-law of the former hon. Member for Cardston, Jack Ady, who was in this House for 12 years. [applause] Thank you.

As you can imagine, on our family vacations the conversation was perhaps a bit different than other people's family vacations and Christmas holidays. As Jack served in this Legislature, many times he would talk about the vision of this Legislature, particularly after the first four years, and how concerned he was with the debt and the deficit that were growing in the province and how he was worried for his children and his grandchildren, whether there would be a future in this province for them and whether they would be able to turn over, you know, the kind of future for them that he was hoping for.

After four years in the Legislature he and his colleagues with vision and, I think, courage advanced an idea and a plan where this Legislature would become fiscally responsible. I think that took courage. A lot of people say today that Alberta is in the position that it's in because they've had high oil and natural gas prices, but I'm here to say that when they began that plan, it was not that way. It was during tougher times. We were just coming out of an energy recession in this province, and I remember it very distinctly, because we were just coming out of university ourselves. I was impressed that they had the courage to stand tough and to do the hard things that needed to be done in this Legislature in order to create the kind of future that Alberta has today. Jack would often say that he was worried and wanted to be able to pass on things to his children and his grandchildren. I particularly was thankful for that since he was talking about my children. I think they've done a fabulous job of that, and I commend the past Legislatures for the position that this province is in today.

Part of the Alberta advantage I think is synonymous with the Calgary-Shaw constituency, and the reason that I think it's synonymous – and I know many of you have stood and talked about how you've come from the best constituency, but I know it's because you've never visited Calgary-Shaw, so I go ahead and let you be a little ignorant in that area.

I'd like to describe to you the Calgary-Shaw constituency. I was reading the maiden speech of Jim Dinning, who was the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw back in 1986. At that time he described the Calgary-Shaw constituency as three subdivisions and a cow pasture. Well, I'm here to tell you that we've come a long way, baby. At this time the Calgary-Shaw constituency is the largest in the province.

Now, I know I have rural colleagues in here, particularly from Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, that will tell you that they're large. Well, physically they are large. I always say that it only takes me 15 minutes to drive across my constituency from one end to the other, but if you were to drive across that constituency, you would go past 80,000 constituents. When you think that the average size of a constituency is 30,000 people, we're pretty large down south of Fish Creek these days, and we have come a long way, baby.

There are now 15 subdivisions south of Fish Creek park, and if you looked at the city of Calgary and imagined a large provincial park that stretched from the east to the west, we're everything that is south of that park until you hit the city limits, 15 subdivisions with two new subdivisions just being brought on line at this time.

At this point in time, because of the Alberta advantage, this particular constituency has grown by 40 percent since the last election, 40 percent in four years. That's a lot of growth quite quickly. As I was going to the doors of those some 80,000 people, it was amazing to me how supportive they were of this government. In fact, in this last past election – and some say it's because I have the most people that we were the highest in the province, but we also had the highest percentage of voters that supported this government. As I went door to door, they expressed the same concerns as I've heard in this House before. They wanted there to be strong health care. They wanted a good education system. They wanted there to be a future for their children. But the main concern of the Calgary-Shaw constituency – well, there were three. They were infrastructure, infrastructure, infrastructure, all three.

If you were to come to the Calgary-Shaw constituency, you would see wonderful subdivisions and strong families in those subdivisions. You would see very productive people, but they lack just a few things. They lack roads. If you were to come to the Calgary-Shaw constituency, we have basically two major feeders in. One is the Deerfoot and one is, of course, highway 2, or we call it in the city of Calgary the Macleod Trail.

Now, the Deerfoot is on the east side of my constituency, but if you were to come to the west side and see what Macleod Trail can become in the morning, you would understand what gridlock looks like. Basically, we have the problem that we're trying to transport all our kids to school across that park and all the workers across the park with only one major feeder across at this point in time. It's of deep concern to us because – and I always say this – if you were to start to have your chest tighten and your arm go numb at the wrong time of day in the Calgary-Shaw constituency, you would have difficulty trying to access help.

One of the things that's happening to us at this point in time is that they're extending the Deerfoot Trail, which we thank government for, and they're also extending the LRT, which is also very helpful. But at the time they decided to extend the Deerfoot Trail, they thought, well, it would take all the trucks off highway 2 as it headed through the city. By the time that Deerfoot Trail expansion is complete, the same number of cars will now be traveling up Macleod Trail because of the growth. In those subdivisions that I'm a part of, we now have four building caps in place because there is not the infrastructure in place in order to build the homes. So while a lot of people are moving to access the Alberta advantage and the homes are there, we don't have the infrastructure, and it's a deep concern for the residents of Calgary-Shaw.

Another concern, of course, is schooling. If you were to come to Calgary-Shaw – and let's compare it to something like a city the size of Red Deer. We're about 20, 25 percent larger than the city of Red Deer. We're like a city unto ourselves south of Fish Creek park. We have basically seven public schools in that area. If you were to go to Red Deer, I think they have 18 public schools with 20 percent less people in them. So you can begin to see the problem that we're experiencing. We can't all move to Red Deer, so we have to deal with the situation down in Calgary-Shaw.

Basically, at this point in time we have almost 2,000 high school students that are now trying to get to high school. Now, some would say that a lot of kids ride the bus to high school, and that's true. It is true, but the reality for our kids is that some of them are on those buses – actually, they take a bus, a train, and a bus to get to their high schools now – for almost an hour and a half. [interjections] It does, and some would say that, well, in rural Alberta people travel far. It is not the distance that we're traveling in miles or kilometres. It's the amount of time it takes to get through traffic that you have to consider when you look at south of Fish Creek, and it is taking these kids a long time. In fact, that's on the good days. On the days when we have a snowfall or we have, God forbid, an accident on Macleod Trail, we're finding that most kids cannot get to school in the morning. They're basically having to turn around and go home and wait till afternoon, as well as those people trying to access employment. We go to immediate gridlock in south of Fish Creek, so again infrastructure problems.

Now, I do have some good news. I do have some good news: they are about to announce an emergency ward down in south Calgary and also, hopefully within the next two months, a site for a new hospital in south Calgary. I'm reminded of a firefighter that I spoke to in Calgary-Shaw who talked about a child who was choking on a hot dog – it plugged the throat – and trying to get up to the Rockyview hospital during heavy traffic times. The child would gasp and gasp and froth at the mouth until he'd pass out, and basically then it would clear the airways enough that he could come to, to choke again as he went on trying to get to the Rockyview hospital. The firefighter said that they were driving the wrong way up 14th Street, anything and everything to try and access help.

The difficulty is not distance. It's the idea that we now are a large city, and there are a lot of people living south of Fish Creek. I again remind you: 80,000 people.

The people that live in Calgary-Shaw constituency are also marvelous people, and I just want to give you three really quick examples. I think of Wilf Mack, not the most patient man – he's 74 years old, and he's often been known to write letters to this Legislature, sometimes not even very complimentary letters – but a man that deeply cares about this province and about government. I think of him because I spent almost eight weeks door-knocking, and he would at 74 years of age door-knock with me up to seven hours a day. It didn't matter if it was 30 below. It didn't matter if there was ice on the roads. Even on those days when I'd say, "I don't know if we can do this," he'd say, "You can do it; we can do it," and he'd pull me along. I'm hoping that at 74 I can walk an hour, let alone seven hours. So Wilf Mack is a great example of the kind of people that live in Calgary-Shaw.

Next I think of the children of Janet Johnstone school, which I visited last week. Seventy-five grade 6ers. They grilled me. They had 22 questions, and if I dared step out of line on those questions, they let me know right away. As I was reading the letters that they sent me afterwards, I thought: you know what? The future of this province is in good hands. These were bright, capable children, very interested in what we're doing in here and wanting to know what lobbying looks like and those types of questions. As one boy wrote and told me: thanks for teaching me about lobbying; now I'll be lobbying my mother for more allowance. So they're very bright, quick children.

The final example of the Calgary-Shaw constituency that I'd like to point out today is the South Calgary High School Committee. It's a committee that's been working for two years trying to bring a high school to south Calgary. They've spent countless hours. I remember some 1,200 letters coming into Infrastructure last year from people in the Calgary-Shaw constituency. In particular, this high school committee has put in countless hours, many of whose children will never see the high school, but that's not why they do it.

They do it because they think it's important, and they value their community and want to see the Calgary-Shaw community thrive.

I would be remiss if I also did not mention my colleagues on the third floor of the Annex. Now, some likened us to bright lights on the third floor. I don't want to say that I'm the 100-watt lightbulb on the third floor and they're 60s or that as the only female amongst five male colleagues I am the thorn amongst the roses, but I do want to say that it is with deep pride and, I have to say, it has been a lot of fun to be able to work with them as we try to figure out our way around here. We've been able to be very supportive of each other. I call them colleagues, and I am proud to be a member of the third floor of the Annex. Thank you.

Last, I'd like to just return to something that my father-in-law said to me about two weeks ago. We were returning home from the swearing in, and I said, "You know, Jack, I've been up there for about three weeks now, and as I've been wandering the halls, I have been just so surprised at how many of my colleagues and the staff of the Legislature truly admired you." I said, "You know, you really left a good name behind when you left the Legislature." I thought he would, you know, joke, as Jack is often wont to do, but he looked me in the eye and he said: "That's right. I left a good name. See that you do the same." I must say that at that moment I felt the mantle come down on my shoulders.

It is my hope that I will be able to leave a good name in this Legislature, and I look forward to working with you as my colleagues in trying to advance this Alberta vision. I am thankful for the opportunity to stand on this floor today, and I'd just like to echo the Lieutenant Governor when I say: "God bless you all. God bless Alberta. God bless Canada."

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:08 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 23, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/04/23

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that a humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 23: Mr. Stevens]

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to rise for the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and give my maiden speech in the Alberta Legislature on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-Bow. Now, many other members have risen in this Assembly to state that their riding is the most beautiful in Alberta, and Calgary-Bow is certainly a place of great beauty, but I'll come back to that later.

Right now through you I wish to inform the hon. members that Calgary-Bow has the most warmhearted, hospitable people in Alberta. During this last election I knocked on about 10,000 doors, and that's nearly every home in the constituency. From Valley Ridge on the outskirts of Calgary, through Greenwood meadows, through Parkdale, through Briar Hill, through St. Andrews Heights, through West Hillhurst, through Hounsfeld Heights I found hospitality. I found people that sometimes did not agree with me, but they unerringly were polite and hospitable and kindhearted. So many times I went away just feeling incredibly warmed by these people.

In the centre of Calgary-Bow is the old town of Bowness. Though it was swallowed up by Calgary many years ago, it has retained its small town identity. Mr. Speaker, Bowness is still a town where even the rural members of this Legislature would feel at home. Like with many rural communities the young people sometimes move away to the big city of Calgary, but they find their way back to Bowness to raise their own children. Third and even fourth generation Bownessians are very common.

Bowness is bounded on one side by the beautiful Bow River and on the other side by Paskapoo Slopes. Paskapoo Slopes is a name you will be hearing again in the next while and, I hope, far into the future. Paskapoo Slopes is an expanse of wilderness that we can raise our eyes to from our kitchen windows, from our backyards, from our front yards, while we're walking down the street. That strip of nature enriches our everyday life with its clean snow of winter, its first gentle blush of green in the spring, its lush green followed by its breathtaking, flamboyant display of yellows, reds, oranges, and greens in the fall.

Mr. Speaker, those hon. members who represent rural constituencies and thus have the advantage of being surrounded by nature as a common occurrence may find our passion for our few remaining wild places near our homes difficult to relate to. Those hon. members from Edmonton, who have wisely protected most of their river escarpment, may look down upon Calgary, raise their eyebrows and say: well, duh. For the daily quality-of-life issues alone these slopes would warrant protection. Paskapoo Slopes are best appreciated from Montgomery, Bowness, Greenwood village, and Valley Ridge, but they're also viewed from Scenic Acres, Tuscany, Arbour Lake, Ranchlands, Silver Springs, Hawkwood, Varsity, Country Hills, Patterson Heights, Strathcona, and Artists View, and by all travelers entering or leaving Calgary by the main western access on the Trans-Canada highway.

For all these tens of thousands of people Paskapoo Slopes is like a park in the sky enriching their everyday life, but Paskapoo Slopes is also an accessible wilderness park right within the city. It's a natural area that includes ravines, gullies, streams, springs, glades of aspen, balsam poplar, dogwood, and riverine tall shrub. The slopes are also home to deer, small mammals, coyotes, and a large variety of migratory and breeding birds. Not only is it a home for the animals, but it's also a key wildlife corridor within the city.

Mr. Speaker, most of us members here are familiar with Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, which is UNESCO's world heritage site. At last count there have been found more than a hundred archeological sites similar to Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump on the Paskapoo Slopes, right within the city of Calgary. These archeological finds date back as far as 8,000 years ago. I just checked the historical time line and found that the first habitation at Stonehenge was only 5,000 years ago. The 8,000-year-old relics at Paskapoo Slopes are quite literally older than the pyramids. What an incredible treasure.

Now, imagine a series of nature trails winding through the trees, bush, ravine, and grasslands of Paskapoo Slopes. Intersperse these trails with discreet interpretive centres that take the visitor back thousands upon thousands of years into Alberta's past: days of the mighty buffalo and of whom and what? We don't know all the stories that these archeological sites will tell. These interpretive centres could display archeological evidence from the very spot that a person was standing upon.

Mr. Speaker, our esteemed Premier Ralph Klein is an honorary chief of both the Siksika and Tsuu T'ina Indian nations on the edges of Calgary. For these peoples the Paskapoo Slopes are more than just a heritage to be proud of. They are much more personal. These slopes can provide the clues to tell the long-lost stories of their ancestors. To ravage these sites would be a personal affront to their very identities.

Time is of the essence. On December 5 Calgary city hall approved residential development on 164 acres of Paskapoo Slopes. Development has not yet proceeded. Can we afford to provide the day-to-day quality of life that Paskapoo Slopes gives to tens of thousands of surrounding residents? Can we afford to provide the wilderness experience to people right within Calgary? Can we afford to continue to provide a wildlife corridor within the city? Can we afford to respect the history of our native peoples? Will the additional tourist dollars coming into Alberta from all over the world balance the equation? These are some of the questions that we will be asked to address over the next few months, and I believe that the members of the Alberta Legislature will say yes. The Paskapoo Slopes is Alberta's heritage, a pride to us all.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, it has been an honour to deliver my maiden speech to this Assembly, and I look forward to further opportunities to bring forward to this body the issues of my constituents and the concerns of all Albertans.

Thank you, all hon. colleagues and Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for this opportunity to respond to the throne speech and to address the Legislature for the first time outside of question period.

I'm delighted to serve as MLA for Edmonton-Riverview. There are many people to thank for my election. I'll begin in an unlikely way by thanking the Premier for taking a keen interest in my political views and personally encouraging me to run as an MLA. In 1997, in response to the success of my first book, Shredding the Public Interest, the Premier announced to the media that if Kevin Taft thinks anyone supports his views, he should try and run for office. Well, it turns out that many people do support my views, and as a result I stand here today.

My election success owes a great deal to an amazing band of campaign supporters who worked on my behalf in Edmonton-Riverview. Close to 500 people actively supported my campaign with time and money. People from every corner of the constituency came forward, many of them working every day of the campaign, some of them taking time off work, many of them complete strangers coming together to work in the common cause of democracy, forming friendships and establishing commitments that will last for years. I owe them more than I can say. They placed a trust and confidence in me that is humbling, and I will not betray that trust. I also want to thank Linda Sloan, the Liberal MLA for Edmonton-Riverview these past four years, for representing the constituency so well and making my election easier.

I can think of no greater privilege than representing Edmonton-Riverview in the Legislature. It has been my home for 40 years, since before there was a Whitemud freeway or a Fox Drive, since the time when the University of Alberta farm was truly out in the countryside. I know parts of this constituency with the intimacy that comes from childhood back-alley games of hide-and-seek and family picnics in the river valley.

Edmonton-Riverview is truly a remarkable constituency. At its heart is the valley of the North Saskatchewan River, which flows through the centre of the constituency. On the banks of the river are some of the loveliest urban parks anywhere and, of course, the University of Alberta. The U of A is one of Canada's elite universities, and I can say from direct experience, as someone who has studied both there and at one of Britain's top universities, that the University of Alberta holds its own on the international stage. On my street alone there are three U of A faculty members who are national winners of the 3M teaching excellence award, Canada's most prestigious award for university teaching. The University of Alberta is a great resource to this province, and I will be working hard to strengthen it further and ensure that it's accessible to all deserving Albertans, regardless of income.

Not to be overlooked is Grant MacEwan College, which has a campus in Edmonton-Riverview and makes a great contribution to the lives of Albertans.

Edmonton-Riverview is also home to some of Canada's pre-eminent hospitals, including the University of Alberta hospital, the Cross Cancer Institute, and the Stollery children's centre. These facilities and their terrific staff serve all of northern Alberta and often far beyond and are frequently in the news for their groundbreaking research.

The voters of Edmonton-Riverview live mostly in neighbourhoods that define the notion of healthy urban communities. Peppered with schools and community halls, parks and shops, Edmonton-Riverview is a place where people care deeply about each other, their community, their city, their province, and their country. These voters supported me for a reason. They want a strong voice of opposition in the Legislature, opposition with a capital "O," strong, tough, and pointed. They want good questions asked, questions that reflect their concerns and values.

For the past several months I've been listening carefully to what people in Edmonton-Riverview and people across Alberta have been saying about politics. Here are some of the things I have heard, messages which will underline my approach to serving as an MLA. For example, the sum of Alberta is greater than the 3 million people who live here. Alberta is more than an economy; it's a society. There can be too much government, and there can be too little government. The marketplace can be endlessly productive, but a market economy cannot look after everything, as we are learning so clearly with electricity deregulation. Albertans believe in free enterprise with heart. Good government is well within the realm of human capability; it is not a contradiction in terms. It's better to outthink than to outspend, as my colleague Dr. Massey has said.

Alberta's democracy is not a gated community. The processes of the Legislature are here for reasons and should be respected. For all its shortcomings the Legislature is a better place to conduct public business than backrooms or boardrooms or barrooms. Blowing up hospitals after one election and building new ones just before the next is stupid. Starve-and-binge funding is a perfect way to keep public services in constant crisis and a guaranteed way to waste resources. If some people choose to spend a hundred dollars for one loaf of bread, as you can in Edmonton-Riverview, it's their privilege, but if children are going to elementary school hungry, it is our problem, and it must be corrected not because it's a good investment in human resources but because it's the right thing to do.

Women and men are equally valuable. Health care workers are as important as investment bankers. School teachers can change the world, and they often do. By helping each other, we can all be better off. Alberta's not a food chain. It's not a real-life version of Survivor. At the end of the day we want every Albertan to be here to survive and to flourish. These statements signify some of the most important values that I believe the voters of Edmonton-Riverview want me to bring to the Legislature.

In an Assembly where the government members hold such a large majority, well earned, the opposition members have a special responsibility. It's a great responsibility and it is also, I think, a noble one, the essential responsibility of parliamentary democracy, the responsibility to hold the government accountable, to speak for the large number of Albertans who did not vote for this government, to make the Premier and his cabinet ministers uncomfortable by asking the genuinely difficult questions, and ultimately to put our shoulders to the wheel of change to bring a fresh start and even a new government to Alberta. As the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview I am proud to stand with my colleagues and embrace these responsibilities. We will make a difference. Just watch us.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to address this Assembly for the first time. I congratulate you on being re-elected as Speaker of the House. I commend your initiative in taking steps to inform new members of the proceedings of this Assembly. It has been extremely helpful. It is with admiration that I observe the manner in which you conduct the challenging role of being Speaker. Your office's contribution to the enlightenment of students through Youth Parliament and the manner that you raise pertinent issues has great impact on the citizens of Alberta. I appreciate your valuable input.

Mr. Speaker, it's always a pleasure to be in the presence of a wonderful lady, Her Honour Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor of this province. The eloquence and the sincerity with which the Speech from the Throne was delivered was inspiring. The throne speech reflects issues that Albertans expressed during the recent campaign and gives confidence that this government intends to address their concerns.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to praise our Premier for his commitment to the people of Alberta. His ability to stay on task despite formidable pressure is a sign of a strong leader. Our Premier understands the direction that Albertans have given and will guide us towards a positive future for Alberta.

Congratulations to the new and returning MLAs who sit before me. We come from different backgrounds, different places, and have differing views, but we're all driven by a common mandate of making Alberta a better place for all. I am excited to be part of this process and honoured to have the opportunity to work alongside each and every member.

Mr. Speaker, it is important for me to also recognize and thank those government members who represented the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency before me, the most recently retired, Mr. Paul Langevin, and the late Mr. John Drobot, who was also my neighbour, both good men who gave many years of excellent service to their community and this great province.

Mr. Speaker, by way of introduction I would like to give some personal background. I am a third-generation Albertan of Ukrainian and Romanian descent. I farm the land that my grandparents relocated to in the 1940s, east of Stony Lake, situated between Elk Point and St. Paul, bordering the North Saskatchewan River. My first language was Ukrainian. Together with my wife and three children I operate a cow/calf, grain, and forage farm. With two children presently in university and one who lives away from the farm to play hockey, our family life is in transition, and the future of our generational farm is ever present on our minds.

My children are appreciative of the opportunity they had growing up on the farm. To witness the rebirth of life every spring is a heartwarming experience that brings us in touch with nature. The responsibilities and the hardships that are incurred with this lifestyle are excellent training and character builders. Our ties to the land are very strong. The legacy of stewardship of the land was instilled in me through my grandfather. Treat the land with care, nurture it, and it will take care of you. Respect the land; it cannot be fooled.

Living in a rural community has offered us unique opportunities. Our family benefited through involvement in 4-H and minor sports. I enjoyed coaching junior and high school basketball and minor hockey. My interest in youth was expanded during my tenure as a school trustee. My commitment to the rural community increased during my years as county councillor. My focus is now expanding beyond the borders of that county.

I would like to highlight my constituency, Lac La Biche-St. Paul, Mr. Speaker. I believe I am not alone in stating that I represent the best and most unique constituency in our province. It takes three and a half hours to drive from Frog Lake First Nation on the southeast, close to the Saskatchewan border, to the community of Owl River, north of Lac La Biche on the northwest boundary.

The constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul are a diverse group of people, rich in culture and broad in occupational scope. Fostering and preserving cultural heritage is very much alive through the region, as exemplified by various cultural celebrations and museums. Although the region is diverse, the ability to work together has proven successful to the benefit of the communities that take the initiative. Many recreational and cultural facilities have been built with community co-operation and volunteer labour. Ambulance service is maintained through municipal co-operation and support.

Volunteers staff the fire departments that serve our towns and rural areas. Communities work together to enhance the quality of life within the region.

Mr. Speaker, health care and medical services are essential to the residents of rural communities. Opportunity for quality health care should be accessible to rural people, as it is to urban people. The burden of transportation and accommodation for patients who need to travel great distance needs consideration. Keeping our senior citizens in their home community is a priority. The waiting list at Sunnyside Manor seniors' lodge in St. Paul is currently 68, even though additions were made only two years ago. The residents can move elsewhere in the province, but this means that they will be isolated from their families. Distance is a detrimental factor.

Education is very important to the constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul. In 1994, when the Minister of Education announced that the structure of school boards had to be changed, St. Paul region led the way. Protestant, Catholic, and county school boards united to form a unique governing board in Alberta, St. Paul education regional division No. 1. Cultural and religious identities are determined at the individual community school. Sparsity and distance funding are major concerns in our rural schools. There is also a continuing demand for modernization and upgrading.

Blue Quills First Nations College and Portage College provide upgrading and postsecondary education in our area. Recent initiatives involving collaborating programs with other postsecondary institutions are taking positive strides in accommodating student needs.

There is a demand for skilled labour in this constituency. The gas and heavy oil industry continues to expand. The largest salt plant in western Canada is located at Lindbergh. The logging and forestry industry is strong in the northern part of the constituency. Alberta-Pacific is a major industry that employs and subcontracts a significant labour force. They are leading the industry in techniques in extraction and reforestation.

Agriculture continues to be the prime industry in the region. Livestock generates the largest revenue of various farm enterprises. There are over 1 million cattle in northeastern Alberta. Resourceful alternative livestock farmers are visible in the area, with bison and elk being prevalent. The challenge to us as politicians is to support the development of value-added products. The agriculture centre of excellence in St. Paul conducts research on grains, pulse crops, and herb and spice varieties.

Historically the area has been a significant grain producer. The first wheat grown in western Canada in commercial quantities was at the Lac La Biche mission. Foreign subsidies, rising transportation and input costs threaten grain production in the area today. The abandonment of rail lines, the closure of prairie elevators, and the prolonged drought have put tremendous pressure on the grain farmers and farm communities. The landscape is changing. Stewardship of the land must be managed to control the infestation of noxious weeds and rodents. As my grandfather said, "Take care of the land."

With the trend towards factory farms, environmental stress will increase. The recent closures of railways has increased pressure on the highways. Industrial activity needs to be supported by strong infrastructure. Transportation routes continually need upgrading due to increased traffic transporting heavy oil, logs, and agricultural products. Road safety continues to be an issue to our residents.

Although the loss of the railway causes considerable grief, something quite positive has arisen in the tracks from Heinsburg to Elk Point. A 34-kilometre Iron Horse trail was started with a delegation of snowmobilers, cross-country skiers, walkers, horse-back riders, wagon trailers, ATVs, and adjacent landowners. In conjunction with the municipality an association was formed to manage and maintain the trail for recreational use. Other groups are working with the municipalities and adjacent landowners to extend the trail west to Waskatenau.

One of the most attractive features in Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency is the multitude of lakes. Commercial fishing and recreational angling are active pursuits. There is a concern about the depleting fish stocks due to various contributing factors. One area I feel needs to be addressed is the control of the cormorant. Incentives such as the Vincent Lake working group are making sure people who live and participate in recreational activities around the lake are working together so that the future generations will have a healthy lake to enjoy. It is an approach that symbolizes a major strength in my constituency: people working toward a common goal for the community at large. The residents of the area have showed they're willing to take a proactive approach to protecting their environment for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency has lots to offer in the way of tourism. There are lakes, campgrounds, trails, rodeos, agricultural fairs, jamborees, and cultural events to be enjoyed. Plan to sample our community's hospitality in the future, and I guarantee you will be impressed.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the residents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency for their support and their faith in my abilities to represent them in the Alberta Legislature. I am truly honoured to be here, and I thank you all.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening on behalf of constituents of Edmonton-Glengarry and provide some thoughts and insights with respect to the Speech from the Throne. Each year we look forward to the proposals put forward by the Lieutenant Governor in that document. Albertans also look forward to the throne speech. They look at it in terms of being a very important document setting the direction for our province for at least the next year and often for much longer terms than that. They look for thoughts and ideas that will reflect some of the issues important to them. There is also an expectation on their part that the speech will provide some leadership from the government in terms of some of the new direction and provide some new ways of addressing challenges and a plan for achieving their success.

The throne speech talks about the government's vision for this province. All Albertans are happy to see that as a province we will soon be debt free. This part of the vision is good. But I was also struck by the corporate focus of this budget and the lack of a social focus on certain segments of our population. I also noted that great attention was placed on economic development in this province. There was not a strong emphasis placed on the protection of our environment. The problem is that with their attention to the economic and corporate agenda, they are not dealing with the job that government in this province or any other province has the responsibility to deal with.

Mr. Speaker, there are sections in this throne speech that imparted some of the concerns that I have identified. I don't think it is a conscious effort on the part of this government to neglect people, to see the differences and distinctions, to see the divisions grow larger despite our positive economic situation. I think it has happened to some extent because they tend to think that while the province is experiencing good times, all of its people will share equally in that success.

All Albertans want to share in the abundance of Alberta. Recent announcements indicate that our provincial surplus could reach $10 billion this year, allowing us to pay off the debt sooner than we had expected. If we are to take full advantage of our windfall profits while they last, then the plan must be set now and not only talked about in vague terms in the throne speech.

I recently had the opportunity to attend the AAMD and C convention in Edmonton. In one of the sessions participants were divided into groups and asked to identify their greatest concerns. The number one concern of all groups was the protection of our air and water quality in this province. These people fully realize the importance and long-term advantages of a healthy environment. In the throne speech under the heading A Clean Environment I read that the government of Alberta will strengthen its reputation as a leader in environmental issues with a number of new initiatives to enhance environmental stewardship and ensure that economic growth is responsible and sustainable.

I refer back to my earlier statement on differences and distinctions. On further examination of the above quote is the distinction that our environment in this province will be considered only after the economic growth and sustainability is considered.

Recent announcements continue to support the notion that our environment is not a priority of this government. We see the province indicating that more coal-fired generating plants will be brought on-line within the next five years. We see where some industry would like to switch their gas-fired plants to coal-fired. We hear of applications by electrical transmission companies to build export lines to the south, yet we do not see a plan or commitment for the conservation of energy in this province.

I welcome the commitment by the government to introduce a new policy dealing with intensive livestock operations. On a recent tour to southern Alberta we had the opportunity to visit a number of intensive livestock operations, and I was quite struck by how those operators realize the importance of the environmental concerns in the operation of their feedlots. Also at the AAMD and C convention, Mr. Speaker, they want to see regulations concerning the intensive livestock operations in this province, and they also want their local governments to be in control of land use and planning.

In the Speech from the Speech, Mr. Speaker, I was also quite struck by our continued commitment to the north/south trade corridor. Now, one of the great advantages of this corridor will certainly be a safety aspect, that we will have a twinned highway all the way to the north. This will also facilitate the movement of exports to the United States and Mexico, and I think we should also note that our exports to Mexico from 1996 to 1999 increased a whopping 640 percent, from $8.9 million to $66.1 million. As well, the twinning of this highway will increase the amount of tourism to the north, and we have to respect that since tourism is our fourth largest industry in this province. Yet it still outlines the great problem that we do have in tourism, and that is getting tourists who enter our province at gateway locations to travel north. For example, for someone that enters at our southern border, it would take them roughly 12 hours of driving to get to Peace River. Certainly one of the hurdles we can help our northern providers of tourism with is to have affordable flights in this province.

Another thing that we have here in this province, Mr. Speaker, is the development of a large greenhouse industry. Now, we know that energy costs are certainly eating up those profits, and this is one of the hurdles that this industry will have in continuing to grow in this province. As well, one of the drawbacks of this huge north/south trade corridor is the fact that cheaper products from Mexico and the southern United States will be able to come into Alberta, thus putting much pressure on these already sensitive markets because of their high energy costs.

Another area that I want to refer to in my speech this evening, Mr. Speaker, is health care in this province. I was very happy to see in the throne speech that we are going to have a commitment to access health services, illness prevention, and effective regional governance, but I still want further clarification in this city of the Legislature on what this government means by access to health services. Is this access to private facilities paid for with public funds? Does that mean that under this particular plan we are going to see more and more private health care facilities in this province? We have seen from 1993 to 1999 a 10 percent increase in the use of private facilities in this province, and I don't see anything in this throne speech which tells us we are going to continue to provide our public health care system with adequate funding to keep it operational, and this is totally not understandable when we currently have hospital beds and operating facilities in our public facilities which remain closed at this time.

I want to continue on the throne speech and talk a little bit about education. We had certainly a number of recent announcements which indicated that we are going to have an increase of funding in education. This is certainly welcome news and a long time coming. Increased funding will certainly allow us to decrease the size of classes in this province, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately, we still have what is called a utilization formula.

Now, in northeast Edmonton we have a booming population. We have a huge amount of residential development. Our schools in that sector of the city are well above the 85 percent utilization rate that has been set out by this government, yet we have areas of land which have been set aside for school development that continue to remain vacant even though the need is there. Certainly I would like to see in this session of the Legislature that we at least modify the utilization formula so that when we have overcrowded schools, such as we have in the northeast sector of Edmonton, we can use the utilization rate as a sector formula and not one for the total city.

As well, we have in this province, Mr. Speaker, a shortage of teachers and health care workers, but this is because of lack of planning. It is not something that we didn't know of. All the indicators were that we were in this position. What disturbs me most about this is that we see where recent raises in this province to our health care sector workers and anticipated raises to our teachers are coming in, and what is going to happen here is that we have the Premier saying: well, these raises will allow us to attract teachers and health care workers from other provinces. Why was the planning not there five years ago so that we opened up our educational institutions to train the necessary people to run those facilities in this province? We had a huge announcement about an increase of MRIs in this province, yet we don't have the trained personnel to operate those. I say that when we have those types of situations happening in this province, it certainly is lack of planning on the part of this government.

As well, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, this speech certainly does raise distinctions and divisions in this province, and I can't think of any other group where these are raised and where the divisions are growing than with the people that are the most vulnerable. We talk about people that are on AISH. We talk about our seniors. I read through the throne speech on many occasions and certainly didn't see any programs directly related to our seniors. I also didn't see any legislation or any mention of how we are going to set standards in all nursing homes that cater to our seniors in this province.

Now, then, something that we hear in this Assembly quite often in this new session is that we have to think outside the box. I think that is a very good statement, but I think when we think outside the box, what we have to do is look at who is going to benefit. Certainly I think that we have to return more to a social agenda where we can help these people who are the most vulnerable in our society.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are some of the challenges that I think we face as legislators in this 25th session of the Legislature. I hope that over the course of the next four years we will be able to reduce the divisions and the distinctions between all members of this province.

In closing, I would like to thank the constituents of Edmonton-Glenarry for once again giving me the opportunity to represent them here in this Legislature. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask that we adjourn debate on this particular item for this evening.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that we have such a heavy agenda tomorrow, when we're going to be hearing the address from the Minister of Finance and the budget for this province, and the need to prepare ourselves to digest it, I would move that we adjourn for the evening and return at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[At 8:46 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 24, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/24

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to present a petition signed by dozens of Edmontonians from every constituency in the city urging the government "to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation" suit.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you have one?

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday to this House regarding Stockwell Day's defamation litigation now be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would ask that the petition I presented yesterday regarding Stockwell Day's defamation litigation be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) I'm giving notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, April 25, I will be moving that written questions as well as motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

THE SPEAKER: The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm giving oral notice of motion.

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the current sitting of the First Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Be it further resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the fall sitting of the First Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 203

Residential Care Housing Committee Act

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Residential Care Housing Committee Act.

Bill 203 will ensure the protection of vulnerable and adult Albertans living in residential care homes.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table with the Assembly today five copies of the 1999-2000 annual report as prepared by the Alberta provincial board that is responsible for persons with developmental disabilities, or PDD as we so frequently refer to it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today five copies of a letter from the Opposition House Leader pursuant to the House leaders' agreement wherein she designates Health and Wellness for Wednesday evening, May 2; Learning for Thursday afternoon, May 3; human resources for Wednesday evening, May 9; Children's Services for Thursday afternoon, May 10; and Seniors for Thursday afternoon, May 17, as the designated departments for supply consideration on those days.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an article from the Globe and Mail dated April 24. This article is by Sinclair Stevens, the minister of regional industrial expansion in the Mulroney government. This article is titled A Police State in the Making, with the disturbing conclusion that "the police action in Quebec City, under orders from our government, was a provocation itself – an assault on all our freedoms."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from the Alberta Craft Council giving a number of statistics underlining the funding deficit that the organizations in Alberta are under regarding funding from the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, a very well-written letter.

The second tabling is from a constituent, Mr. Bill Daly, who is striving to provide some alternatives for seniors regarding taxes, and he has done up a graph.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of 152 letters received from people across Canada and the United States who want the provincial government to protect the Castle-Crown wilderness area in southwestern Alberta from industrial activity and motorized recreation.

I would also like to table a copy of a letter written by Nancy MacBeth to the Castle-Crown Wilderness Coalition responding to their letter-writing campaign and supporting a review of all industrial and commercial development in Alberta special places.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this national Volunteer Week I'm pleased to introduce on your behalf, Mr. Speaker, special guests who are seated in your gallery this afternoon. As you know, within our Legislative Assembly ceremonial and security services and visitor services branch we have volunteers who assist with school groups, educational programs, train new recruits, and work special events. Our guests today are Jean Yates with nine years of service, Doreen O'Callaghan with seven years of service, and collectively with three years of service are Myrna Grimm, Rita Alfrey, and Jeanne Siu. I'd also like to mention two individuals who are unable to be here this afternoon: Clive Lomax with six years of service and Pat Foster with three years of service. I'd ask those that are in your gallery now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you a fine constituent of Calgary-Buffalo and a friend of mine. Mr. Bob Lang is a respected consultant in the oil industry in Calgary and is also president of the Cliff Bungalow-Mission Community Association. I'd ask Bob to stand and the Assembly to provide a traditional warm welcome to Mr. Lang.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce today a very special lady who actually has traveled from Halifax, Nova Scotia, to be here today. She certainly calls Alberta her second home, but she's here to listen to the budget speech later on this afternoon by the Minister of Finance. She is an educator. She has a very active part in Alberta as well, but it also just so happens she's here to verify that I was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and tell my father. My sister is here today, and I'd like to introduce Debra, who is visiting from Nova Scotia, and to say: yes, Dad, I am in the Alberta Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a delight for me to introduce a number of guests to you and through you to the House. The first guest I'd like to introduce is a wonderful constituent of mine. His name is Rabbi Ari Enkin. He is a spiritual leader to a congregation of over 500 people. He is a very active and positive force in our constituency. He also happens to have a great sense of humour. I'd like him to stand in the gallery and be welcomed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 56 students from Meyonohk elementary school in Edmonton-Mill Woods. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Pei and Mrs. Rother and parent helpers Mrs. Hynes, Ms Schenk, and Mrs. McGregor. They are in the public gallery, and with your permission I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

MR. NORRIS: With apologies, Mr. Speaker, I have two more. Not many, just two more. I'll be brief.

I would like to introduce to you and through you two guests of mine who are seated in the members' gallery. They are constituents of mine, Victor Horseman and Paulette Neigel. Both are labour market program directors for the Oteenow human resources aid and training society. They are involved with aboriginal urban labour market employment services. Would they please rise and be recognized.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to my hon. colleague from Wainwright, it's an absolute delight to recognize two gentlemen who just slinked in, my brothers Tony and Mike, who are a fine economic driving force in the Wainwright area. I'd like them to stand up and please be recognized today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all of my colleagues in the House two gentlemen who are seated in the public gallery observing today's proceedings of the Legislature. They are Mr. Kenneth Heathfield, now retired, former publisher, and Mr. Alex McEachern, a former Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and now a much-valued resource person volunteer to our caucus. When Mr. McEachern is not spending time assisting our caucus, he is busy attempting to best Mr. Heathfield on the tennis courts. I would ask both of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Robert Fisher. Mr. Fisher is a former constituent of Edmonton-Glengarry and has advocated on behalf of many Albertans in regards to social issues. He is seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I would ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise before this Assembly and recognize Dr. Lou Francescutti, director of the Alberta Centre for Injury Control and Research. Dr. Francescutti and his organization play a vital role in injury prevention and awareness in the province of Alberta. Over 1,300 Albertans die each year from injuries, and 360,000 visit emergency rooms to have their injuries treated. In an effort to combat these statistics, the Centre for Injury Control and Research has launched a provincewide advertising and promotional video to raise awareness of injury in Alberta, which we are pleased to be supporting by funding this important initiative through our regional health authorities. I would ask Dr. Franciscutti to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child and Family Services Authorities

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Sakaw-Askiy child and family services authority March newsletter indicates that that authority is in a deficit position and will have to institute cost containment strategies. For a government to run billion dollar surpluses while authorities serving children are forced into deficits is an appalling state of affairs. My questions are to the Premier. With the government in a billion dollar surplus position, why are children's authorities forced to curtail services to children and families in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I thought our surplus position was better than a billion, but we'll see later this afternoon.

Relative to the specifics of the question, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The child and family services authorities are not allowed to run deficits. Simply put, when we come to the year-end, where some have shortages and others may have surpluses, according to the funding allocation the children's authority co-chairs and CEOs sit and determine with ministry staff how reallocations can be made. We make every effort to ensure that the best interest of the child is maintained.

Over these past two years we have found a significant increase in the number of handicapped children's services that are delivered throughout the province. We are working very hard to make sure that that funding allocation for each authority recognizes both the demographic as well as the very specific needs of every child. Mr. Speaker, in doing so, we're also working with a number of partners in the community, the Ministry of Learning, the people that are at the field level who are working in schools and with school boards, and with municipal councils through family and community support services.

Mr. Speaker, this is still relatively a new ministry, with local authorities doing their very best to make the allocations and develop the interauthority protocols that recognize not only what the children's and communities' needs are but how we can best serve those communities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how many children and families needing help will be rejected when cost cutting is a major criterion for workers?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are no children that are rejected. There are no children that are given a no services approach. We are not cutting anybody to the extent that there cannot be services delivered for children. We're trying to get a cost-effective administrative structure in place in all the authorities. We're working with the agencies that have been assigned delivery of service. The answer is: no child will lose. We will have to make reallocations. We are doing that, and we have added significant additional funds since the formation of this ministry. I'll be pleased to discuss that more fully after the budget is tabled later today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister might want to read the newsletter.

How is the department's responsibility to children served when limiting the number of children and families served and cutting services to clients become the goal?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of this House something that I find a bit of a dichotomy but very interesting. When I was first elected in 1997, there were 42,000 children born in Alberta, and at that time there were considerably less children that were part of the child welfare system. There were probably somewhere between 8,000 and 11,000 given certain months. Today with 36,000 plus but not 37,000 born last year, we have over 13,000 children as part of the child welfare caseload.

As such, we've added staff. We've improved conditions and workload standards. We've added considerable support at the community level, where they need it. We are meeting our challenges. We are not reducing. In fact, if anything, with the growth of handicapped children's services we are identifying and assessing the needs of those children, putting them in touch with the agencies as needed.

Mr. Speaker, although from time to time a newsletter may stress some of the things that are not working as well as they might, provincewide we are doing better than ever to look after our children in need.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Child Care Workers

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question this afternoon is to the Minister of Children's Services. Will the minister confirm, please, that she has recently received on her desk an important KPMG report, prepared by Mr. Jordan Cleland, a former executive assistant to the current Minister of Learning, which finds among other things that day care workers in Alberta are the lowest paid in Canada?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, from time to time information comes out in a fashion that does not serve anybody as well as it might. Simply put, what we have been attempting to do is find out just what the state of the art is in terms of the dollars that are paid and the issues that are created in communities with climbing enrollments in day cares and issues that are created where there are higher costs, such as in Calgary and in Fort McMurray.

Mr. Speaker, much of what is used as the baseline data is from a You Bet I Care study in 1998, that cited that our child care workers were among the lowest paid, but it also failed to note that although we have a 44 percent turnover rate, there was a 40 percent vacancy rate in the day cares in Alberta. Simply put, some of the day cares were not operating in an economic fashion.

Many of the day care providers tell me that training programs are important for beyond level 1, which we do mandatory training for, to training programs for level 2 and level 3, that if in fact we are going to look at some of the solutions which are being brought forward in co-operation with the child care network and day care providers, we cannot simply look at one circumstance to aid and approve the conditions for children in day cares.

Mr. Speaker, beyond that, one of the things that I suggested when we were discussing this with the group is that if we are going move in terms of any type of additional return to the day care provider, we have to be sure that it would be targeted in such a way as to achieve the results that we want for children and to provide for strong workers and strongly trained staff.

MR. MacDONALD: Will the minister, again, table the Cleland report for the benefit of the entire Assembly? Thank you.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, this is interesting, because I have day care workers on that committee that do not believe that the time is right to table that until such time . . . [interjection] Excuse me.

That report is not yet finished. That report has not yet been viewed by some of the day care providers themselves. That report has not been viewed by my colleagues. That report is still in draft form, and although I personally wanted to see whether we could release it, they cautioned me that to do that would not be wise until they were absolutely confident that it should be released. In due course that report will be released.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. Given that all hon. members of this Assembly since 1995 have received a 13 percent pay increase, does the minister agree that child care workers in this province deserve a compensation increase now?

Thank you.

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's talk about the child care workers. They are workers that are employed by employers that are businesspeople that run their own establishments. They are private agencies. This government is not in the position of supplementing private businesses. We are in the position of trying and doing our best to improve the lot for children and high-risk children that are in day care, but that does not preclude us looking at other options rather than looking at supplementing salaries of day care workers.

THE SPEAKER: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Postsecondary Student Housing Costs

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents are students living at the University of Alberta, and they are concerned about reports that they may be facing a 15 percent increase in student housing costs. This is of course in addition to increases in tuition costs. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister confirm that student rents at the U of A residences are going up to cover the increased costs of electricity, even though the government has issued utility rebates to the U of A students' housing services?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I can neither confirm nor deny the member's detailed question, but I'm more than willing to accept a letter or piece of correspondence from him asking any questions that he may have with respect to anything that would be appropriate to the Ministry of Energy.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the Minister of Learning. In principle is he in favour of low-cost housing for university students?

THE SPEAKER: Hold it. The question period is the time for the seeking of information with respect to government policy, not for the seeking of opinion.

Hon. member, please proceed with your third.

DR. TAFT: Okay. Will the minister take steps or is he planning to take steps to ensure that university student housing costs do not rise faster than inflation?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The university housing costs are something that are run on a cost recovery basis. As the costs go up for the particular student housing, the university assesses the costs and builds the fees in accordingly.

In response to the first question with regards to the energy, there are energy rebates that have been made available to the universities. There are continuing energy rebates for the universities. The universities have more than the ability to utilize them for their own buildings as well as student housing buildings. How they pass that saving on to their students is up to the autonomous board of governors of the University of Alberta.

MR. SMITH: I did want to add to the Minister of Learning's comment about how the students as individuals will also be receiving the second installment of the $300 energy rebate cheque.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Coal-fired Power Production

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The throne speech under debate in this House states that the government will try to get a handle on electricity prices by streamlining the approval process for new generation projects. The government's deregulation scheme first brought Albertans skyrocketing prices. Now it may lead to more strip mining and more air pollution. In recent months three new coal-fired generating plants have been proposed for the Wabamun, Genesee, and Brooks areas. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister please explain what parts of the approval process will be eliminated in this mad rush to bring new coal-fired generating plants onstream? Is it the requirement for full public hearings, or is it the requirement to conduct a comprehensive environmental impact assessment?

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. I'd like to assure the member and all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, that no part – no part – of the process will be eliminated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister assure Albertans in clear language that any new coal-fired electricity generating plants will undergo a full review, including public hearings with funding for affected intervenors, and a comprehensive environmental impact assessment and that no parts of the approval process will be short-circuited?

DR. TAYLOR: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the member and all Albertans that the process will be fully public, with opportunities for public input either in written form or at public meetings.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Premier. Will the Premier make a commitment that a joint federal/provincial panel will be asked to review and hold public hearings on the proposed coal-fired generating plants given their impact on transboundary air sheds and interprovincial waterways?

MR. KLEIN: No, I can't give that commitment because I don't know whether there will be appropriate rationale for the federal government to become involved in this particular process, Mr. Speaker. If the federal department of energy sees fit to become involved for some reason or other, I'm sure that they will notify our officials, and appropriate steps will be taken to make sure that their involvement is recognized.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Pasture Insurance Program

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the drought situation in various parts of the province created difficulties for many Alberta producers. In the past livestock producers were able to use pasture insurance programs as a risk management tool, but last year that program was no longer available. Earlier this year the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties passed a resolution, presented by the county of Smoky Lake, calling for the reinstatement of the pasture insurance program. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister tell us what is happening with pasture insurance and if this option will be available again?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. We did have a pasture insurance program in place, and any rural members that were involved will remember clipping cages, placements of clipping cages, measuring, weighing of product. The program was complex. It was designed to respond to the needs, but the take-up from the producers was very small, I think probably because of the complexity, so it was decided to cancel the program.

However, because of the changes in our weather and our climate and particularly the drought that has occurred in the southeast part of the province, under the crop insurance review this issue was raised again, and there was a recommendation made that we implement at least a pilot to see if we could establish a pasture program that would be responsive to producers' needs. That has been established with selected risk areas in the southeastern part of the province. It will use the latest technology, GPS, or global positioning satellite, information. Through that pilot, Mr. Speaker, we hope that we can establish a provincewide program for the next year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question, again to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: can the minister advise whether or not the producers in the constituency of Redwater and the Smoky Lake area will be able to participate in this pilot project?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we have, as I indicated, established the pilot projects in some selected risk areas in the southeastern part of the province. One of the purposes of having those projects in place is to determine the relationship between pasture yields and the pasture vegetation index generated by satellite imagery. Unfortunately, we do not have sufficient information for the majority of the province, including the Smoky Lake area. So for this year and for this pilot project it was not feasible to include that area.

MR. BRODA: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: will the minister tell us the cost of running this pilot program and what the plans are for the future of pasture insurance?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the provincial costs associated with this program or with this pilot are less than $1.5 million. They include the costs of the satellite imagery data and the administration of it. As I indicated, if we're successful – and we're hopeful that we will be – we will be looking at implementing this program province-wide in 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Rossdale Power Plant Expansion

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. In Alberta's current state of electricity deregulation, Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Energy and Utilities Board has a strange role. It provides regulations for a deregulated industry. Residents of downtown Edmonton or any person interested in our river valley wonder what that means for them and their city as they try to work through the EUB to stop the expansion of EPCOR's power plant in Edmonton's river valley. My questions are to the Premier. While there are mechanisms such as the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, does the EUB have any real authority now to stop the power plant expansion in Rossdale?

MR. KLEIN: Interesting question. Do they have authority? Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure of the process relative to the adjudication of the environmental worthiness of this particular project, whether that project is before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board or whether it's through the Natural Resources Conservation Board or whether it is a matter for a joint hearing by the two boards. Perhaps the Minister of Energy can shed some more light on this matter.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Environment will have an important role in this, and maybe the Minister of Environment might like to comment on it. Specifically to the EUB, they would not have a specific regulatory application in the EPCOR plant.

MS BLAKEMAN: Again to the Premier. Well, since it's unclear what role the EUB has in this matter, who then should these Albertans be approaching if they want to oppose the expansion as responsible citizens?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there's a two-pronged question here. One certainly is a matter for adjudication by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and that is the whole issue of electricity supply. The other issue, of course, is protection of the river valley and what steps are being contemplated to ameliorate the environmental impact. That would be a question for the Minister of Environment on the power side. On the supply side that would be a question for the Minister of Energy. So I'll ask these two ministers to respond.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Premier, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the member. There is a fully open process that one has to go through with these approvals and with these plants. It's a fully public process. It could either be an environmental review or an environmental impact assessment. If the public that she's referring to is somehow unhappy with the decisions out of that fully open process, fully public process, then they can appeal to the Environmental Appeal Board. That is a separate board, that is independent and receives appeals of this sort.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. This last question is to the Minister of Community Development. Given that Rosedale is the site of the proclamation of Alberta's provincehood as well a key site for First Nations people and early settlers, what has the minister's department done to urge the abandonment of expansion of the plant?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. I'm very pleased to receive that question because it is a very important issue. I think the hon. member and her constituents would be happy to know that after we heard about the proposed expansion, we did require the EPCOR group to undertake two historical resource impact assessments. There have been some significant finds, as you're well aware, of an archaeological nature that go back centuries literally. There have also been some discussions with respect to the low-pressure plant building and which parts of it could and should receive historical designation. So we're reviewing that right now, in fact literally, in our department. One of the issues that we're also looking at is the response that we're expecting back from EPCOR and from the EUB in that regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Rural Electricity Costs

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans generally have been very appreciative of the energy rebates they've received so far to offset rising energy prices. However, there are still many small businesses using over 250,000 kilowatts of electricity, such as intensive farmers, greenhouses, and retail businesses, whose electricity costs are still double after receiving the rebate. These extra unexpected costs are threatening their economic future, and the expected market development of electricity has still not occurred in rural Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What is the Minister of Energy planning to do to encourage competitive electricity market development in these areas of the province?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, if you look at the broad electricity market in Alberta since the introduction of the new competitive market model, we've seen a 48 percent drop in price off the market side. We have seen progress made in the market developing itself, and we've seen progress made in the 80 percent of the electricity that is bought and sold and used and contracted outside the Power Pool market.

There is absolutely a recognition that we have to do more on this particular aspect, this particular market segment, where we are moving to look at competitive issues inside this marketplace. We have as one device, Mr. Speaker, a retail issues subcommittee, formed in the Department of Energy, that will be addressing this specific question. Members of that committee are consumers, such as the independent Senior Petroleum Producers Association of southern Alberta, the city of Calgary, and of course Jim Wachowich from the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we will identify barriers to a more active retail market in this part of the market. We will develop recommendations to encourage competition, and of course the key towards offering service and offering low-price power is more power.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given that there's currently a maximum of only one market choice outside the default rate, which seems to be more of a monopoly than any market choice, when can rural Albertan businesses expect to have real market choices in electricity?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I would expect from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, he went right to the heart of the issue and examined it critically. We do know that smaller businesses currently have limited market options and that retailers focused on larger firms in the initial months of deregulation. In fact, when I look at the market behaviour of the large retailers that did sell customers to other retailers, they did it at a time when they needed more market knowledge out there, and I think that they've got to pull up their socks and be more responsive to their customers. We want to put that forward not only here in the Legislature but outside in the marketplace. Those customers are the key to their prosperity, and they have to respond to them.

Mr. Speaker, I just now picked up 22 registered retailers that are available to sell power in the province to all users. We think that their attention will start to focus on the smaller businesses as this industry matures, and I would like to table this with the House.

From the consumer side, Mr. Speaker, small businesses also are good conservers. When a product becomes a commodity, two things happen: innovation and conservation. I'd like to compliment the businesses of Alberta who have taken their own hand in encouraging new conservation practices for power consumption.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, it's good to table when one quotes from it, but there need to be the appropriate copies to meet the rules of the House.

The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question, again to the same minister: what kind of support can small businesses in rural Alberta expect from this government until such time as real market development does occur?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you. It was the surprise of the question, Mr. Speaker, that prevented me from having the appropriate copies, and I do apologize.

Mr. Speaker, the rebates program as it's structured, of course, is the electricity auction rebate of 3.6 cents per kilowatt-hour that is funded from the proceeds of the power purchase arrangement through the auction. The rebate continues to the end of this calendar year. They will also have in default customers, those who do not have a retailer, the market transition credit. This market transition credit is not being used now because of the low price of power in the pool, at 10.5 cents, but can be worth up to 4 cents per kilowatt-hour.

This, again, will help facilitate action and will be reviewed prior to the end of June. Again, the impact of the rebates does help cushion higher electricity prices, and we're reviewing these prices as the market starts to unfold.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, it would be remiss of me not to mention that there are over 600 megawatts of new electricity generation expected to come on-line this year, as we have noticed with the announcement from TransCanada of 80 megawatts and last week, while we were on break, another 80 megawatts from PanCanadian Petroleum.

Youth Justice System

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I met recently with concerned members of my community who have a number of questions arising from recent incidents of violent crime. They have been told that only 18 to 20 percent of young offenders are responsible for over 80 percent of the youth crimes in our community, and they are concerned that repeat, serious, violent, and high-risk young offenders are being released back into the community without adequate supervision and support. My questions are to the Minister of Justice. Given that the administration of youth justice in this province is his responsibility, from the hiring of sufficient numbers of provincial Crown prosecutors and the decisions made by them to the sentencing guidelines for judges, would the minister please tell this House why his department supports a philosophy that just does not do enough to stop these young people from falling back into their destructive habits?

MR. HANCOCK: That was an incredibly long question, Mr. Speaker, but on a very important subject. The subject is how we ensure that our communities remain safe and how we provide appropriate sanctions and atonement for youth in our community who commit crimes, but more importantly how we deal with the underlying root causes of those crimes. It's important that we look at justice not as just a matter of police and the courts but as a matter of how community embraces the problem of crime in our community.

In New York, Mr. Speaker, Mayor Giuliani did a good job of cleaning up New York by dealing with what we call the fixing-broken-windows theory. That's a theory which suggests that it's not just a matter for the courts and for the police, although they are a very important part of that component, but it's a matter for the community itself to embrace the whole question of why youths join gangs, why they get involved in criminal activities. It's a question of ownership of the community. It's a question of making sure that there are appropriate recreational opportunities and leadership opportunities for our kids in our communities. It's a question of proper supervision by families in the community. In short, it's a matter of our whole community embracing the problem of youth and their proper place in our community and making sure that there's proper, positive, appropriate activity for those youths to be involved in. Of course the justice system through the courts and the police will play their appropriate part.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, since young offenders have a better chance than adult offenders to be rehabilitated and become law-abiding citizens, why aren't these young offenders receiving the necessary treatment and programs to change their behaviour and return safely and successfully to the community? This is a major concern and feedback this minister has received from the community.

THE SPEAKER: And I appreciate all of that. I just want to remind hon. members this is question period, not debate period.

MR. HANCOCK: And I won't debate that question, Mr. Speaker. It is important that we properly treat young offenders so that they can be returned to the community and the communities can be safe. It does absolutely no good, in my opinion, to keep people in jail for 48 days, which is the average length of stay in our provincial correctional institution, if we don't deal with the alcohol addiction, the drug addiction, and the mental health issues. That's precisely why this government has moved – in fact, in the last fiscal year $10 million by way of supplementary estimates was put forward to cooperate with the Alberta Mental Health Board. A recent announcement that a new head for the program was coming in from Texas, a well-respected psychiatrist to deal with children's mental health issues, is one major step forward in that very issue of dealing with the root causes of youth crime and dealing with the problems behind youth crime, including one of the major ones, which are mental health problems, but also moving forward on the other areas of alcohol and drug addiction issues, which are also root causes in the area.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, what is the minister specifically doing to provide adequate supervision and support to ensure that these young offenders do not go back to their previous patterns of behaviour? We haven't had that information shared with us this afternoon.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my enthusiasm to answer the questions, I was remiss, of course, in not pointing out that it's actually the Solicitor General who's responsible for corrections and correction procedures in the province at this stage.

However, I would answer the question anyway and then invite the Solicitor General to add appropriate responses, because we're working very actively, as I indicated, in the treatment of mental health issues, in terms of the domestic violence project in Calgary, the court project in Calgary – it's now called HomeFront as of yesterday – and other issues which are at the root cause of why children get into trouble in the province. Again, I would suggest that on the crime prevention side, the community needs to reach out and embrace crime prevention programs, which include proper activities for children after school, proper ways for children to be involved in a meaningful way in their community so that they're not encouraged to join their other family, the gang.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

National Pollutant Release Inventory

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A new web site has come on the scene which is causing a lot of canola producers some heartburn. This web site is called PollutionWatch, and it uses data from the federal government's national pollutant release inventory to compare pollution releases in their communities. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. How reliable is the data used from this national pollutant release inventory that is being used on this web site?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, I'll invite you to respond if it is within the jurisdiction and the responsibility of Alberta's Minister of Environment. If I understand the question, it had to do with a national web site.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, and because it does apply to Alberta and Alberta is affected by the web site, I would reply, Mr. Speaker.

It is important to realize that the web site and the inventory provides that from a positive perspective, industry does account for and report on the pollutants they release. However, it does not recognize or attempt to measure the quality of the environment, Mr. Speaker. For instance, it does not demonstrate the effects of these releases on the environment. It does not demonstrate how these releases are handled. If I might use the example of asbestos: asbestos, when it's decommissioned, is put into very specific landfills that are very safety oriented, designed specifically for asbestos. Yet this web site includes those as industrial releases into the environment, when in fact the asbestos is not released into the environment. So in fact to be kind and charitable, it could be said that it's a bit misleading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do apologize for not being specific to Alberta in my first question.

The second question that I have is: bearing in mind the information that this inventory produces in relation to Canbra Foods in Lethbridge, processors of Alberta canola oil, does this information indicate that they are emitting more N-hexane into the atmosphere than any other company in Canada?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. A very good question because it does affect canola producers, Mr. Speaker. This question in fact gives a clear indication how a simplified web site like this and a simplified inventory can oversimplify complex issues. What they don't tell us on the web site is that Canbra Foods errs on the side of caution. They have to provide an estimate of their emissions. Now, erring on the side of caution, they overestimate what they will emit. In fact, this year Canbra Foods will not probably come close to emitting what their estimates are. So that's one thing that doesn't show up on the web site.

The other thing is that in the worst case scenario, if they did release as much as they estimated, they would still be far under the most stringent releases for N-hexane in Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you. To the minister: what is your department going to do to ensure that Alberta's air and water continue to be protected from industries whose emissions are high or web sites whose information is inaccurate?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the member and all Albertans, quite frankly, that our rigorous environmental approval and monitoring is one of the most rigid, not just in Canada but in North America. We have some of the most stringent requirements in North America. Not only do we have these requirements, but we monitor these requirements. So if somebody doesn't live up to the conditions of their environmental approval, they are monitored, and if they still do not live up to them, they will be fined. Last year there were almost a million dollars of fines placed on companies in Alberta that did not live up to their environmental approvals, and we will continue to do that.

But it's not just a matter of fining, Mr. Speaker. We constantly work with companies to improve their environmental quality, to improve and help them improve their environmental emissions so that they do meet these stringent standards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the pleasure of introducing Mr. Robert Fisher to members of this Assembly. There are approximately 10,000 Albertans in the Edmonton region receiving AISH. Mr. Fisher brought it to my attention that people receiving Canada pension plan disability payments and AISH face claw-backs of their provincial benefits when the federal government increases its allowances for Albertans who are unable to work because of a disability. My questions today are to the minister of human resources. Why does this province have a dollar-for-dollar claw-back policy?

MR. DUNFORD: One of the responsibilities, I believe, that any elected official has in Alberta is to be both cognizant of the needs of the people within their community but also to be stewards of taxpayers' money. In that situation, then, we have a juxtaposition of a federal disability program and a program that we have called assured income for the severely handicapped. So the way in which we have traditionally dealt with this matter is that we want to see that people like Mr. Fisher are provided with income in order that they can try to get by, then, with their everyday needs. So there is a combination, then, based on what the level of Canada pension plan is, and of course we will then supplement that with AISH.

We're very proud in this province of our AISH program. I would remind all members and perhaps inform them for the first time that, as a matter of fact, the federal government and through the provincial ministries in their In Unison document, where they look at all of the programs across this country, has specifically indicated the benefits of the Alberta program and see it as leading this nation.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to Nonmembers

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to go forward with his next question, I'd just provide a caution. The naming of names in this Assembly can lead to some interesting scenarios. It is not uncommon for the Speaker to receive correspondence and letters from individuals who are saying: "Well, a Member of the Legislative Assembly raised my name in this Assembly, and I did not give that person the right or the privilege to raise my name. I'm quite surprised my name was raised. What are you going to do about it?"

The chair has no mechanism of dealing with it other than to provide caution that one should deal with a great deal of caution in raising individual names in this Assembly, because those individuals are not in a position to provide any information to members of the Assembly or to correct anything if there's any misunderstanding with respect to the naming of their name, and in particular, for individuals dealing with private files under the laws in this Assembly, that this Assembly passed. I want you to be quite cautious when dealing with particular cases and examples.

The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for those wise words. I can assure all members of the Assembly and yourself that Mr. Fisher and I did have conversations and that I did have permission to use his name here today.

MR. BONNER: My second question is also to the minister of human resources. Given the minister's acknowledgment in this Assembly that living on $855 per month would be difficult, when will the policy requiring a dollar-for-dollar claw-back be changed?

MR. DUNFORD: As far as our AISH program is concerned, those items that we consider to be exempt from deduction and those items that are partially exempt and then the ones that of course are fully deductible, as is being discussed here today, are under review on a periodic and timely basis. As a matter of fact, we will be announcing in a more formal way a discussion about programs and services for low-income Albertans, and certainly this would be one of the programs and one of the services that we'll be looking at. So I congratulate the member on his question and the timeliness of it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Does the minister not see an inequality when MLAs in this Assembly receive a review of their salary annually but AISH recipients do not?

MR. DUNFORD: I simply want to point out to the hon. member that in October of 1999 we increased the AISH payment, if my math serves me correctly, by about 16 percent, but we certainly can check that.* The hon. member in the question, Mr. Speaker, is asking whether or not there will be an annual review of these payment levels. I'm going to leave that to the discussion that we'll be currently having as we review all of the programs and all of the services for low-income Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

2:30 Crown Prosecutors

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past few months 14 Crown prosecutors have left the Edmonton and Calgary offices, forcing prosecutors to shoulder an even higher workload than they are today. We all know the old adage of justice delayed is justice denied, and that is exactly what could be happening if the government doesn't take action. My question is to the Minister of Justice. Why has the government failed to complete a pilot project, that was part of a response to the all-party committee on justice, that would address court delays?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually this one is my department, so I'll be pleased to answer that. In fact, the question raised is an important one. First of all, we do have a situation happening where Crown prosecutors have left the service of the provincial government and the people of Alberta over the last six months in both Edmonton and Calgary, and we are dealing with that. It's my understanding that most if not all of those positions have been filled to date. But it does speak to a longer term issue that we have to deal with in terms of making sure that we keep people within the employ of the department so that we build that experience that we need to deal with long-term manpower concerns when some of the senior Crowns begin to retire. So it's a very, very important issue for us.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to an all-party committee. I assume he means the subcommittee of MLAs to the justice summit. The justice summit was more than an all-party committee, of course. It was a consultation with a wide range of Albertans about their concerns about the justice system, which was set up and conducted by my predecessor, the hon. Jon Havelock, and a very successful consultation process, which we have turned into an ongoing process that formed the basis of the Justice business plan last year and will again this year.

We've taken the steering committee from that justice summit and asked them to continue on as the Justice advisory committee, and the members have done so. They provide an ongoing monitoring and ongoing report card with respect to the recommendations coming out of the justice summit and how we're proceeding in terms of making justice accessible to all Albertans.

Now, specifically with respect to the pilot project, I presume that he's referring to the pilot project that we had in Edmonton with respect to the new case screening unit. That pilot project has indeed been concluded, was concluded very, very successfully. It's now been expanded across the province. We've hired seven Crown prosecutors specifically for the new case screening unit, and it means that we are able to deal with those cases which should be dealt with early in the process quickly and appropriately, with appropriate recommendations being made to the court, which allows the time to trial to be shortened for the court cases that have to go trial.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm referring to the all-party committee set up under Minister Havelock and chaired by the Member for Calgary-North Hill. I would like to know why the government did not address the issue of Crown prosecutors' pay or workload in its response to that committee?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the committee that he refers to is the subcommittee of the justice summit, and in fact we did address the questions that he referred to. They may not have been addressed directly with respect to a written response to the justice summit, but they were addressed by a review of prosecutors' salaries and in fact an increase of prosecutors' salaries. I might say that we do that on an annual basis now. We review salaries to make sure that prosecutors are appropriately paid in comparison to their compatriots across the country. We're doing a review of salaries now. We were last year in midrange with respect to prosecutors' salaries across the country. We have a bit of a concern about it now, because some of the provinces, particularly Ontario, have had recent raises, so we're going to have to deal with that issue in the short term.

With respect to the workload, we did have a problem in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, in terms of our case file load being one of the highest in the country. We responded to that by hiring 11 new prosecutors, as I said earlier, seven of them being dedicated to the early case screening process so that we can take those cases out of the system early that are appropriate to take out of the system, leaving those cases which need to go to court appropriate lead times and appropriate preparation times.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, how can the minister give such a vague answer when our prosecutors earn anywhere between 58 and 72 percent of the income of Ontario Crown prosecutors? How does the minister plan to attract new graduates to the Crown prosecutors' office to replace those moving to other positions?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a valid concern in terms of how we attract and keep good Crown prosecutors. We're going to do that as we always have, by continuing to look at the workload requirements and the salaries, by making sure that working for the government of Alberta and for the people of Alberta in the Crown prosecutors' office is a profession and an occupation that people aspire to.

It will always be a bit of a training ground for those who want to get into private practice, and we'll have some turnover in that area, but there will always be people who consider being a Crown prosecutor to be an avocation and who want to do it. One of the things that I was proud to do shortly after being appointed Minister of Justice was to award a 20-year service award to one of my classmates in law school. We have Crown prosecutors who stay for a long period of time. We have good prosecutors.

I took the liberty of giving the answer that I did now because I answered this question previously in anticipation. We do monitor the salaries of Crown prosecutors. We understand that Ontario's salaries have gone up recently. We're going to have to look at adjusting salaries in this province. I'm not going to prejudge what that process is going to be, but we are committed to paying our Crown prosecutors fairly and to keeping good Crown prosecutors in place so that we can achieve the goal of Justice and the goal of this government, having safe communities.

THE CLERK: Members' Statements.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we move to that particular item, a bit of clarification just arising out of the question period. I'm going to recognize the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment for a correction of a number.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I said 16 percent. Upon sitting down and doing the math, it's 6 percent.*

THE SPEAKER: In 30 seconds from now, hon. members, I'll call upon the first of four hon. members to participate in Members' Statements. Prior to recognizing the first hon. member for Members' Statements, I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for an introduction.

(reversion)

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a very patient group of 40 students from the Kitscoty elementary school. They're accompanied here today by their teachers, Mr. Kim Aitken and Mrs. Eleanor Parr, and teacher's aide, Mrs. Cindy McCormack. I would like them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary-Fort Election Campaign Workers

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our democratic election has taught me to be humble and to be ever alert to the fact that my constituents are my bosses. They sent me here to represent them. In us Albertans entrust the leadership and the work to improve their lives, and also they entrust the implementation of their aspirations and choices. I do not believe that they want us to impose our own views on them.

During the last election there were many people who participated directly and openly, but there were many more who provided assistance indirectly and behind the scenes. On our campaign team we had the participation of young children, seniors, our friends from all walks of life. The amazing part is that we all did it on a voluntary basis.

We had participation from whole families, such as the Tennenhouses, the Fergusons, the Campbells, the Argotas, the Poiriers, the Trangs, the Reimches, the Snashalls, the Has, just to name a few. We had participation from seniors, such as Ted Sawkins, Ken Calder, Bill Hopkins, Loc Dang, Chinh Vo, Derek Spooner, Don Smith, John MacDonald, Ron Lachica, John Brown, Gerry Bautista, Shirley Boyce, Chuck Libbey, and many more. We had participation from young children such as the Poirier brother and sister, Daniel and Cecilia, seven years of age; the Tennenhouse brother and sister, Aaron and Tracey; the Trang brother and sister, David and Julie; the Reimche brothers and sisters, Jonathan, David, Amanda, Bonnie, Tamazene; and young individuals like Uyen Nguyen, Shaun Unger, Candice Campbell, just to name a few.

Mr. Speaker, additionally I want to take this opportunity to recognize a number of individuals who spent their own effort and time in the democratic process. Eleanor Art, Kim Hoang, Sandy Wilson, Sandy Matthews, David Gaskin, John Brown, Vinh Nhan, Lorne Gogal, and so many more.

The outstanding leadership and the collective wisdom of our government caucus will help Alberta to move strongly into an even brighter future. Yes, it is the truth of proven leadership for a positive future.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Two-minute time limit. The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Bruno Engler

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with regret but with many fond personal memories that I stand today to remember a longtime Banff-Cochrane resident and local icon, the late Mr. Bruno Engler. I recently had the opportunity along with hundreds of family and friends to celebrate his life and his immeasurable contributions to this province.

Born in 1915, Bruno was a man of many qualities with a contagious capability of sharing his zest for life with the world. He was a respected filmmaker and photographer, an experienced mountain guide, an accomplished skier, a storyteller, and a genuine romantic, who touched the lives of many who lived in and visited the Canadian Rockies. In the 1940s he taught survival and mountain warfare with the Canadian army and in the 1950s was hired as a photographer for the province of Alberta. For over 40 years Bruno worked in Banff as a freelance cinematographer and film consultant on some of the most popular and famous films ever made and became well known to two generations of Hollywood stars.

He shared his passion for skiing and climbing with many, teaching them to love the mountains and enjoy them as he did. But his passion for the mountains was shared best through his ability to capture what he saw and felt through the eye of the lens. His images span more than half of the last century, depicting both the pristine beauty of our landscape as well as our history. Bruno's accomplishments will be more than remembered; they will be cherished. We will never forget his lively warmth and easy smile and his joie de vivre.

Bruno will be missed by his wife, Vera, his family, his many friends, and the mountains. He charmed everyone he met into believing that we should enjoy each and every day simply by leading through example.

Your life will be celebrated, Bruno. You have forever changed the lenses through which so many people see, and for that we thank you.

Please join me in remembering a great Albertan and a wonderful man, Mr. Bruno Engler.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

National Day of Mourning

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to mark the National Day of Mourning, which this year falls on Saturday, April 28. This is the official day observed every year to commemorate workers injured, killed, or disabled on the job or those who suffer from occupational illnesses.

I know that we all share a deep concern at the number of lives lost as a result of accidents in the workplace. Our heartfelt sympathy is with the families and friends of the victims, although no words can take away their sorrow.

We continue to strive for a safe and healthy workplace. According to the Department of Human Resources and Employment's most recent figures, in 1999 there were 35,000 workplace injuries and diseases serious enough to have workers miss at least one day of work. According to the WCB's own figures, every four minutes a worker is injured on an Alberta worksite, and 27 workers a day were injured in their first six months on the job.

I wish at this time to commend the current Minister of Human Resources and Employment for his recent efforts to help prevent workplace injuries and fatalities, from the hiring of six additional worksite inspectors in December to the establishment of a new call centre in January for information about safety standards, to report accidents, or to lodge complaints. I hope these efforts make a difference in the workplace statistics that have become far too common in this province.

I would also like to recognize the WCB's recent Heads Up safety awareness campaign directed at inexperienced workers and their employers. Unfortunately, young people are the most likely to be killed or injured on the job. We must continue to make our young people aware of occupational hazards and hazardous working conditions. We must inform them of their rights and encourage and teach them to work safely. Young people are the future of our society, and a healthy society needs healthy workers.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Camrose Kodiaks

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the hockey focus at the provincial level centred on the outstanding Oiler/Dallas series, my constituency and Albertans following the Alberta Junior Hockey League are now focused on the Camrose Kodiaks. The Camrose Kodiaks junior hockey team recently defeated Drayton Valley in the Alberta Junior Hockey League playoffs to capture the Alberta championship. As Alberta's representatives they are presently competing for the B.C./Alberta Doyle cup on their way, hopefully, to the Canadian championship in Flin Flon. Indeed, we are proud of the accomplishments of our Kodiaks. They are only in their fourth season in the league, and they are already number 1.

The Kodiaks are owned and operated by the Camrose Sport Development Society, a nonprofit community organization whose purpose it is to promote and develop a strong sports program in the community. The development of junior A hockey in Camrose is our first project. The Camrose Sport Development Society stresses the importance of combining a successful education with sport. This is no doubt paying off, as eight of this year's Kodiak players are receiving scholarships to various universities and colleges.

The Kodiaks are proud to be members of the Alberta Junior Hockey League, a league of 15 teams including Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Bonnyville, Lloydminster, Brooks, Crowsnest Pass, Canmore, Olds, Drayton Valley, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Fort Saskatchewan, and two Calgary teams. The Alberta Junior Hockey League started in the 1960s with only five teams and now provides a high level of hockey for many Alberta players at a very high level of competition. The league itself encourages further education for all players. The AJHL should be commended for its work with players and for its success over the past 40 years. To president Kim Marsh and chairman of the board Bob Clark I say a heartfelt thanks.

Congratulations to the Camrose Kodiaks, head coach Garry Vanhereweghe, and general manager Boris Rybalka, the Alberta Junior Hockey League champions.

Bill 202 Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate April 11: Mr. Jacobs]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have no further comments. I've concluded my comments, so I would pass to the next member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak against Bill 202, the Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001, which is sponsored by my colleague the Member for St. Albert. Regrettably I cannot support this amending legislation for a number of reasons, which I will describe, and in doing so, I would urge all hon. members not to support this legislation. While it is well intended, I do believe that it will result in worsening the very situation that it is meant to cure.

This bill would amend the existing Insurance Act as well as the new Insurance Act, yet to be proclaimed, by adding a section which reads as follows: "No insurer shall provide automobile insurance with a premium, tariff, rate or condition of coverage that discriminates on the basis of gender."

Now in our insurance legislation there is no such prohibition, but the sponsor of this bill has proposed this legislation because, as I understand it, she wants to stop insurance companies from charging higher automobile insurance premiums to young males under the age of 25 than what young females under the age of 25 are charged. She argues that it is both unfair and discriminatory to treat the two sexes under the age of 25 differently based on gender despite the very obvious evidence of a vast disparity in claims rates experience between males and females under 25 and the amount of the damage caused in these collisions. So in effect, Mr. Speaker, the sponsor of the legislation, by virtue of this legislation, wants us to tell insurance companies how to determine premium rates for auto insurance.

At first blush, Mr. Speaker, the proposed legislation by the hon. member, as it is described, eliminating discrimination does sound very persuasive. As we all want to attempt to eliminate discrimination wherever we see it, as I say, at first blush it seems very persuasive. However, the matter is more complicated in my respectful submission and, when taken to its eventual conclusion, will not achieve what the hon. member I know would like to have achieved.

I know the hon. member is a very fair-minded and well-meaning member. However, when one looks at the likely impact, it becomes evident, I believe, that Bill 202 will in fact cause premium inequities for all drivers and possibly will even result in young male drivers paying more, paying higher auto insurance premiums than they do now, which was the very so-called mischief that this legislation I know is intended to eliminate.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, when one analyzes the change which would be brought about by this legislation against the existing system of automobile insurance rating criteria, it is clear that the differentiation based on gender as it exists now for drivers under the age of 25 years is both reasonable and justified.

Just to pursue that concept at this point, there have been a number of court decisions, one from our own Court of Appeal in 1993, which have looked at the question of whether or not gender discrimination or gender differentiation is in fact discrimination and whether it is allowable in the calculation of auto insurance rates. In every case all of the final decisions have held that while it is discriminatory to do so, the discrimination is both reasonable and justified because of the claims experience relative to young male drivers under the age of 25. To do otherwise would discriminate and transfer the burden to young female drivers under 25, which is not justified based on the actuarial and evidentiary evidence. So we have in this country plenty of jurisprudence which would say that this type of so-called discrimination is justifiable.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, following along from that and which was part of the reasoning, that in all of these decisions it is a basic principle of the calculation of premiums for insurance of any sort. It is based on a measure of the risk, and that can include a lot of different variables depending on the type of insurance. But when it comes to auto insurance in this province, the way it is done right now is by way of the driving experience and the claims/conviction record of the individual. Both age and gender are used as criteria for drivers under the age of 25 years, that is for primary drivers. After age 25 or at the age of 25 and over the use of the vehicle becomes the prime rating criteria.

So that is our existing system, and our Canadian private insurers believe that groups of drivers with lower risk should pay less for car insurance, while those with higher claims should pay more. The evidence is pretty clear, Mr. Speaker.

I can quote from some statistics provided by the Insurance Bureau of Canada, which is the organization that operates in this province representing 85 percent of the insurance companies involved in the provision of property and casualty insurance. Their records indicate that when you compare the number of claims per 100 vehicles for males 16 to 20 years of age, it is more than three times higher than drivers over the age of 25 years. Young female drivers between the ages of 16 and 20 are just over two times higher than drivers over the age of 25 years. So a substantial difference there. They also indicate that the amount of the collision claims are 20 percent lower for young females under the age of 20 than for young males. Similar statistics apply for individuals from age 21 to 24, although the figures are not quite as stark.

So that being the case, if this legislation were implemented and insurance companies were legislated and required to charge the same premium rates to all individuals, male and female, under the age of 25, the effect would be very serious, very negative for young female drivers. It is estimated that approximately 24,000 young male drivers in the province would enjoy a 27 percent decrease in their premium rates, but by the same token almost the same number of young female drivers, 25,000 to be exact, would suffer a 45 percent rate increase due to this change, and this is in the 16 to 20 age group.

This would just be the initial bump in premium rates that would be experienced by young females. In my submission that would then happen would be that there would be more young males on the road, because price is a determinant of the number of drivers on the road. If they can afford the insurance, they will be out there, so we will have more young male drivers out there. Based on their driving pattern, there will be more accidents and there will be more accident claims, and insurance companies, because this is the only way they can cover their costs, will have to increase the premiums. So over time not just young female drivers will experience increased rates, but each and every driver on our roadways and highways in Alberta will end up paying more. That is just the simple result, Mr. Speaker, of this legislation, which sounds like it will do a very good thing but in fact will have a negative consequence in the final analysis for all drivers in Alberta.

I've been advised that our insurance rates here in Alberta are amongst some of the lowest in Canada, that is auto insurance, but there is a lot of pressure for insurance companies to start increasing those premiums for all of us. So I don't think that we as a Legislature would want to give a reason for insurance companies to start raising premiums. I would submit that we certainly open the door to that very thing happening.

I think it's fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that there hasn't been a great deal of consultation in preparation or as background work for this amending legislation. There has been a six- or seven-year consultation under way on the rewrite of the Insurance Act. For the four years that I was involved in that, not once was this proposal brought forward, albeit this aspect was not the subject matter of that initial consultation, and there may well be a consultation in the future dealing with insurance contracts. Nevertheless, there hasn't been, as best as I can see, a thorough consultation. But we have been advised, all of the members in the Legislature, that the Insurance Bureau of Canada and its member companies – which, as I mentioned, are 85 percent of the property and casualty companies operating in the province – are very much opposed to this legislation, which would bring about a fundamental change in how insurance premium rates are calculated.

So having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I believe we all share with the hon. member, the sponsor, the desire to see auto insurance premiums kept at a stable rate, kept low for the benefit of all of us. I would submit that that is where our energies need to be directed and that there perhaps are creative initiatives that the insurance industry together with legislators could devise which would help to make young drivers better drivers so they don't have accidents and so premiums can be kept down.

It is my information that a graduated licensing system has proven to be effective in this regard in other jurisdictions, where collisions have been shown to be reduced overall by 30 percent after the implementation of graduated licensing. We here in Alberta are slated to see that come into effect in January of 2002.

So these sorts of things, Mr. Speaker, I believe are a better method, a better way to achieve what we all want to achieve, and that is better drivers, lower collision rates, and therefore lower claims and therefore lower premiums. This is not something that you can legislate into effect, because it just will not work.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members in the Legislature to defeat this bill. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to make a few comments about Bill 202, the Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001. I started off looking at the proposal, and my first inclination was to compare the proposal for the insurance industry to our health care system. I think it's accepted, then, in health care that everyone will pay the same premium, and it's done in order that those who have to access the system more frequently than others will not find themselves in a financial situation that is untenable.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

But the more I thought about it, the more the differences between the two systems I think became clear. Health care is an essential service. It's something we have no control over. It's a combination of genes and health practices and a lot of other factors that go into the state of health that we enjoy. That is in sharp contrast to driving an automobile and, of course, what goes along with that, seeking insurance to cover that driving.

It may not seem so these days, Mr. Speaker, but driving an automobile really is a decision that we make and one that is not a necessity, particularly for most very young drivers. So it's optional; it's something we choose to do. I think the argument that can be made is that being that it's something we choose to do, then it's something that we should be responsible for ourselves.

There are a number of assumptions under the act as it is here, and of course the basic assumption is that there is an unfairness, an inequity in the rates that are charged and that that inequity is based on age and on gender. That's a powerful assumption, and it's usually enough to persuade members on this side of the House that something should be changed. However, there are some other assumptions that I think come into play.

There's the assumption that performance is unrelated to the kind of insurance premium you pay, that regardless of your behaviour on the road, that should have no impact on the rates that are levied for your insurance, and I think that's an assumption that many of us find difficult to accept. We spend a lot of public dollars trying to convince young people in driver training courses and in schools to be responsible for their actions and that there is a price to be paid for not being responsible, and in the case of young male drivers that seems to be the case.

The other assumption, of course, is that those rates that are charged the under-25 male drivers are discriminatory, that they shouldn't be charged, that it's not fair to levy that kind of a fee.

One other and I guess final assumption is that the accident rate of young males is irrelevant or should be irrelevant in terms of their insurance rates. That's a hard assumption to support when those drivers are responsible for two and a half to three times the number of accidents and deaths on the highways compared to older drivers.

They have a very high accident rate, and some of the investigations into their behaviour raise questions. It's not often the ability. They're young in their ability, but they're skillful drivers in many ways. It has more to do with the kind of age group they're in and the kind of ethos that pervades that group. There's a need to find attention in a group of peers in terms of being a risky driver. There's a feeling that they're invincible, that nothing can happen to them no matter how they drive, and that makes them, I think, a risk to themselves and to all of us that has to be recognized.

When you look at the proposed bill and ask yourself, you know, who gains and who loses, I think a number of other speakers have already indicated that males under 25 would obviously gain and I think would wholeheartedly applaud the bill. I'm sure we've all been aghast at the rates being paid by some drivers under 25, particularly those that have been in accidents, in more than one accident. Their rates really do skyrocket. So they would certainly gain under this, but more importantly – and I think it has been pointed out – safe drivers, people who do drive responsibly, particularly older drivers and young female drivers, would be the losers should this legislation pass and be instituted. They would pay more, and they would pay more not on the basis of their performance but on the basis of someone else's performance. There's an unfairness in that that I think can't be overlooked, Mr. Speaker.

When you look at the insurance industry, they've tried to address the problem. I think they've looked, as I understand it, at all of the aspects of driver-related risk and tried to come up with some measures of risk, and those measures aren't as simple as age and gender. I think they would be the first to admit that. The number of years that you've been licensed is related to the risk you are on the road. Certainly the age range you find yourself in is related to what kind of a risk you are. The kind of driver training you've had has an impact on how risky you are as a driver. The kind of vehicle that you use – there are some vehicles that are more prone to accidents than others – and the age of the vehicle and also what the vehicle is used for, if it's used for pleasure or if it's used for business, has some impact on the kind of risk you are on the highway.

They also indicate that another measurement of risk is the number of claims you've had in the last six years – I think many of us have experienced that with our own rates, having had an accident that broke an accident-free period to find our rates in the years subsequent are raised and reflect that accident – and of course the number of years of claim-free driving.

So there's an array of risk factors that the insurance industry has looked at, but they come back, I think, to the basic ones, and that's age and gender. The insurance industry here is not alone in that. I think, if my information is correct, that throughout most of the United States insurers are permitted to use age, gender, and marital status to determine the price of car insurance. There are some of those states that restrict the use of those categories by insurers, but for the most part all of the American states find themselves using age, gender, and marital status as a determinant of the insurance rates.

So to look at the bill itself, Mr. Speaker, I think as imperfect as using age, gender, and marital status is, that's really all we have at this point. I think the previous speaker remarked on the kinds of difficulties that this legislation could pose if it were to be passed and implemented and that, on balance, those difficulties outweigh the advantage that would be gained by passing this particular bill. I agree.

I think the mover of the bill is to be commended. I think it's consistent with that member's seeking of fairness and justice and I think reflects the basic beliefs of the member that discrimination of any kind, no matter where you find it, should be eliminated. Unfortunately, I don't think I can support this bill. I think in this case, until there's a better identification of risk factors and until some other actions are taken, the use of age and gender is an appropriate practice and one that shouldn't be interfered with.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to support the concept of this bill, and I would ask, certainly, that the members move it to committee. There may be some parts of the bill that need working and that, but let's be sure to give it a chance.

I want to think back, Mr. Speaker, to when the Insurance Act was started. There is no question that the collection of the data to determine the rates and that was compiled much differently than it is today. Obviously the groups and that that were used to develop these rates had to be based on gender numbers and larger numbers and probably weren't as accurate as we could be now with on-the-spot Internet communication and records of your history.

Mr. Speaker, I'm saying: why would the insurance companies want to keep these rates like this? Not because there is a sinister plot out there to charge young males more, but because it's easy. They don't have to look into the driving records or the individual patterns of a young man or young woman when they can prorate them 200 or 300 percent without question. So it's an easy way out.

Things are changing. In the last 10 or 15 years the numbers of women entering the workforce and starting out on their own would probably bring these rates into order by themselves, but I'm not sure that we'd like to wait that long. And, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that just because I have four sons doesn't mean it's influencing my speech.

I really believe, Mr. Speaker, that an insurance premium you pay should be based on something that you have a direct bearing on. Simply being male or female does not make you a good or bad driver automatically. I think the focus from the insurance industry should be: what has this young person done? Have they had their learner's permit for the required time to learn to drive adequately?

My nieces are in the States. They're required to keep a learner's permit logbook that shows the driving time they've had, that guarantees they've spent time with an adult driver. They are not allowed to go beyond this point until they've filled in their logbook, much like a large trucker's logbook. I think that's a great idea, and it shows commitment to the learning process. Now, maybe that's not addressed in this bill, but it certainly will change the focus of what the insurance company looks at to set the rates. I think it's very important that all young people take the proper driving, defensive driving, and prove to the insurance companies that they can be good drivers.

Now, we very simply say here that we sentence all of the other good young men drivers to a 40 or 50 or 200 percent increase in insurance without question. Well, good young men drivers probably don't like that much either and where we're not willing to say all the people in that age can bear the brunt because of some bad male drivers, I don't think that's too fair either. I think bad drivers, male or female, should pay the premiums they have earned. I think good young male and female drivers should get a break, and until they've at least got a demerit or done something wrong, I think they should certainly get the benefit of the doubt.

Our hon. member has said that we're trying to make accidents and driving records irrelevant, and completely to the contrary, Mr.

Speaker, I think that makes it completely relevant. What you have done with your driving record is what should count. I would like to think that it's not gender that makes the insurance company want to have you or not have you as a customer; it's your driving record.

I don't want to take a lot more time on this, but I really think we have to look at this seriously, as seriously as we would look if it was an age discrimination or gender or any physical disability. It should be what you present on the road that costs you, Mr. Speaker, and not what figures from history have proven to be. I don't dispute the figures from the insurance industry. I agree. There are a tremendous number of irresponsible young male and female drivers, and I believe they should be targeted and they should pay. Generally I believe young people should all get a good, clean slate to start.

I think we should move this bill to committee, and I would really ask for your input and your support to do it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to rise to speak to Bill 202, the Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001. I have always respected the work of the hon. Member for St. Albert, and I do want to make a few comments and observations about this bill. As I understand it, the main purpose of this bill is to restrict the use of gender as an automobile insurance rating criteria.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, as a parent who has a son and two daughters, this certainly is an issue that we discuss around the kitchen table from time to time, and I can tell you that when my son's accident rate comes up in comparison to the sum of both daughters', the daughters do smile. I'm not trying to cause any family problems here, but I think that is the reality of this whole situation.

As well, we know that the insurance industry is based on risk. If I were to ask the hon. Member for St. Albert if she and her son went to apply for life insurance at this particular point, would they pay they same rate, of course we know that this is not true.

Now, we also heard a speaker a few minutes ago that referred to the collection of statistics. Certainly the insurance companies who represent some of the bigger companies in the world and some of the most established and long-lasting companies rely heavily on statistics, and they certainly rely on their ability to gather those and to make certain they're accurate. As well, when they are gathering statistics, they are looking at probability and measuring that probability as to an event occurring or not occurring, and those people who fall in the higher categories certainly do pay more. Those who fall in the lower risk categories are treated more favourably.

What they do when they gather these statistics is that they group the people. Age is one of the criteria they use. Others certainly are gender and marital status. Over time this has been challenged. It has been challenged in many of the courts here in Canada; the Supreme Court, for example, and provincial courts. What has happened is that in all cases this system, although it is not a perfect system, has been upheld by the courts when human rights have been looked at in this particular issue. Now, then, when we look at insuring people and we take two individuals, certainly we have to consider these statistics and these records in assessing their rates, and what the courts found was that it was quite all right for two different individuals to be charged differently when it comes to rating factors.

The insurance industry, Mr. Speaker, also is constantly looking at ways that it can restructure the way it does business. It wants to look at its classification system in a manner that will eliminate discrimination of any kind to any particular group. Now, then, when we look at what is happening in the insurance industry today, we certainly look at this from a winner and loser standpoint, and if you are the parent paying those rates or your child is paying those rates, you certainly at that point hope you have daughters, because they are much cheaper to insure.

What we have to also look at here is: what is the long-term effect on this? If we were to eliminate gender as one of the criteria in insurance rates, then premiums for young female drivers would increase approximately 45 percent, and premiums for young male drivers would decrease initially by about 27 percent. This information, Mr. Speaker, was supplied to me by Royal & SunAlliance insurance agents, and again this is information that to the best of my knowledge is correct. I can table copies of this if the Assembly would like.

Now, then, the males in this situation are being charged premiums which are as appropriate to their risk of collision as are young female drivers, and certainly the young males do get into more accidents, as statistics do point out. As well, the courts have acknowledged that due to this the present method of rating drivers is fair. In the interest of fairness and consumer pricing we find that insurance rates do provide a certain degree of fairness when we look at the three criteria of age, gender, and marital status. As well, we do take in other situations that the insurance companies look at, and certainly one is a driving record, but we can look at those things later as well.

I also notice that there are some provinces that do restrict the use of gender when we look at insuring young males and females. These, of course, are British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, which tend to charge less for young male drivers and charge more for young female drivers and older drivers. Now, then, I certainly don't think that anybody here or the mover of this particular bill is suggesting that Alberta get into the insurance business, but I cannot see independent, privately owned insurance businesses getting into this situation.

Now, as well, the industry recognizes that the higher accident frequency of younger drivers is due in part to their inexperience. Numerous studies have also demonstrated that because of their lifestyles and outlooks young drivers still represent a greater risk than older drivers with the same amount of driving experience. It is also well established, Mr. Speaker, that women drive less and under different conditions than men. Studies have shown, however, that female drivers represent a lesser risk than male drivers in similar situations.

So, Mr. Speaker, before I close, I think what the Member for St. Albert here definitely was attempting to get at was certainly a system that would be fairer to young male drivers, and it would eliminate a type of injustice that unfortunately does exist in the way we look at how rates are determined. What we would like to see certainly is a system where all inequalities in this business could be eliminated, but unfortunately I think the present system, although it certainly isn't what we all would desire, is the best system, and therefore I would have to say that at this particular point in time I could not support Bill 202.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have about one more minute to consider this item on this day. May we have unanimous consent to go to the next item of business?

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Second Language Education

501. Mr. Johnson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to make the learning of a second language a compulsory component of a high school diploma by the year 2006 and to increase the opportunities for Alberta students to participate in national and international student exchange programs with a second language component.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to move Motion 501. I find it fitting that the first motion brought forward in this Legislature's First Session is about educating our youth, is a motion about investing in the future of our children and the future of our province, but it is a motion whose focus goes beyond our provincial borders. It is a response to the realities of globalization and the importance of being prepared as Canadians and as individuals to better take advantage of opportunities in the marketplace of the 21st century.

There are essentially two complementing parts to Motion 501. First, it addresses the importance of being able to communicate effectively through use of a second language for our students. Secondly, in recognizing the value of national and international exchanges for the education of our students, the motion urges the government to increase opportunities, making it possible for more students to participate. Student exchanges can be particularly helpful in the learning of a second language, especially for our Alberta students who have limited opportunities to practise second language skills in day-to-day conversations.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is in support of Alberta Learning's business plan. Under goal 3, entitled Well Prepared Learners for Lifelong Learning, World of Work and Citizenship, Alberta Learning has included a strategy of creating learning opportunities to "help Albertans see their place in a global society." One specific project identified is to develop a marketing promotion plan in collaboration with partners to communicate the benefits of learning a second language. Further, under goal 3 Alberta Learning has developed a draft international education strategy of which the first goal is that Albertans will have opportunities to obtain second language skills to participate in international learning opportunities. Possible actions include promotion of second language learning and expansion of education exchange programs.

Unfortunately, today fewer and fewer of our Alberta students are graduating with a second language. Currently only 23.5 percent of Alberta grade 12 students complete a 30-level second language course, which reflects an overall decline of 9 percent between 1995 and 1999. In 1973, 75 percent of our high school students were enrolled in a second language.

Alberta Learning's second language project plan, entitled Enhancing Second Language Education in Alberta, puts forward several reasons for the declining enrolment. First of all, the noncore or optional status of second language courses makes them appear as not important. A second language was once required for an advanced senior matriculation diploma. Secondly, the dropping of a second language requirement for entrance to Alberta postsecondary institutions. Many faculties at various institutions previously required a second language. The third reason: students have competing interests and have more courses to choose from. For example, compulsory career and technology studies and expanded science course offerings are consuming more of students' time. Whatever the reasons, we have seen an overall decline in second language learning in our schools, yet in these times of globalization it is increasingly important for our people to be conversant with those of other cultures and economies.

This trend and our handling of second languages is no doubt the reason for the Alberta Chambers of Commerce recommendations to the Alberta government in 1999. Among the recommendations are the following, and I quote: that the Alberta government establish a new language education policy for Alberta which will reflect the reality that the workforce and society of tomorrow will need to communicate effectively in more than one language; secondly, that the Alberta government create an environment in which alternative language education is perceived as valuable and desirable not just by students and schools, colleges and universities but by parents and the community in general; and finally the fourth recommendation is that the Alberta government develop a language education strategy based in part on linkages between alternate language instruction and changing trade and market opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, as Alberta companies increasingly seek out customers across the globe and international investors come to see Alberta as a wise place to do business, there will be a growing demand for people who can converse in a second language and who have visited foreign lands. There is ample evidence that knowledge of a second language and international travel and experience pays off in the world of business and employment. As we consider the increase in north/south hemisphere trade, this knowledge is certain to be of even more importance in the future, particularly as we consider more opportunities to learn the Spanish language in our schools.

In 2000, Mr. Speaker, 38 percent of Canada's gross domestic product was composed of exports to other countries. By comparison, only 12 percent of the United States' gross domestic product was composed of exports and a mere 9 percent for Japanese exports. Granted, many of these exports were going to the English-speaking United States, but the areas of growth where the greatest number of jobs will be in the future are no longer just in the United States. For Alberta between 1993 and 1998, while trade with the U.S. grew by a modest 52 percent, trade with our other partner in the North American free trade agreement, Mexico, mushroomed a whopping 256 percent. Meanwhile, trade in Asian nations like Japan, China, and Korea has held strong.

The point, Mr. Speaker, is that Canada and Alberta are unique in the degree of international interaction that composes our economies. With the signing of trade and investment deals with the Americas, Asia, and across the world, this interaction promises only to grow. The result will be more jobs that demand a familiarity with different cultures and second languages. Canadian businesspeople are aware of this point and have in fact advocated for increased second language and cultural familiarity. A 1997 report from the Conference Board of Canada entitled Employability Skills Profile cites amongst its most desired skills an employee who is able to, and I quote, understand and speak the language in which business is conducted and write effectively in the language in which business is conducted.

But beyond the world of economics and trade second language education in primary and secondary schools improves the overall quality of a student's education. Tests have shown that students who have taken a second language for a period of several years performed better on tests of both verbal and nonverbal reasoning. Through enhanced listening and memory skills that evolve from studying a second language, students are better able to perform tasks, from reading to language arts to mathematics. Simply, students of a second language have an improved development of learning strategies and an increased ability to transfer skills to other areas.

In an ongoing study being conducted by the Edmonton public school board, the marks of students who participated in any of its six bilingual programs are being compared against students in the regular track by means of looking at standardized test scores. Thus far there has been a very distinct mark differential in favour of the bilingual program students. This even follows for students in special-needs programs. The more years students participate in the bilingual program, the more pronounced their superior performance has been on the standardized tests.

It is clear then, Mr. Speaker, that increased second language education and the promotion of cultural exchanges would also serve the very basic function of improving the learning process itself. Supporting this motion thus would be a demonstration of Alberta's continued leadership in providing better, more creative ways of providing education.

Beyond the very real benefits that interaction with international cultures and languages has in improving career potential and affecting overall education performance, a familiarity with different languages and places leads to a wider understanding of the world. It leads to a population of informed critical thinkers. It leads to an increased appreciation of different customs and ways of looking at the world.

I'm always amazed at how quickly young people of different cultures and languages learn from one another even though they may not always have a common language with which to communicate. Student exchanges provide wonderful opportunities to increase greater knowledge and understanding of one another and of our cultures and way of life. It improves us as citizens of our province and country, and it makes our world just a little bit better.

The National Commission on Excellence in Education, a government body that reviewed the status of education across the United States, concluded that second languages belonged with the other basic disciplines that schools should teach: mathematics, computer science, social studies, and natural sciences. The power of a second language is a universally recognized force.

Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1999 language services and the curriculum standards branch undertook a study of 29 school jurisdictions from across Alberta to determine, among other things, factors affecting enrolment in the second language courses and their recommendations for improvement. Two conclusions relevant to Motion 501 are as follows. Number one, they conclude that the fact that second languages are not required for high school graduation or university entrance has greatly contributed to enrolment decreases. Students focus on core subjects to improve their marks, or they choose other options that are less demanding and less time consuming. Secondly, they conclude that student exchanges and tours and other efforts to make various cultures and languages visible to the school community helped to increase interest and consequent enrolment in second language programs. I conclude that the optional nature of a second language program is having a negative effect on second language participation and that exchange programs are having a positive effect.

The same study addresses second language mandatory programs, and I quote from their conclusions. It states: respondents highly recommended having a second language mandated by the province, the jurisdiction, or the school. The school boards' recommendation coming out of this particular study is as follows: to make second languages as a part of basic education for at least some part of the 12 years of schooling: in grades 4 through 12, grades 4 through 9, grades 7 through 12, grades 10 through 12, or in at least one of the elementary grades.

The long-term strategy of Alberta Learning's project to enhance second language education in Alberta mentions the key elements, which include discussing university entrance requirements and reviewing the high school diploma requirement. Motion 501 will be timely input as Alberta Learning and all stakeholders review the role that a second language will have in our curriculum and what role it will have in our high school diploma.

Motion 501 is worded to provide for wide flexibility and application. A compulsory second language component could mean a course or courses such as a minimum 10-level course under the present one high school diploma plan, or it could mean the equivalent of a 10-level course taken in elementary, junior high, or high school. For example, B.C. has a grade 5 to 9 compulsory language component, and I would assume that that would be at least equivalent to a grade 10 course. It could mean a part of an international study high school course involving trade and culture in addition to language, or it could mean a 30-level course for a special type of high school diploma, such as a language-enhanced diploma that could be considered in the future. And there are other possibilities that Alberta Education and various stakeholders will no doubt be exploring.

The point is that until a second language is given compulsory status in some form, it will not be considered for the importance of time and effort that it surely warrants.

I'd like to add to this point, Mr. Speaker, that international exchange programs especially are strengthened by the involvement of government. Many countries are more receptive when exchange initiatives are taken in a co-ordinated manner. While the efforts of individual schools, districts, and businesses in the past have had some great successes, a strong and consistent provincewide campaign is crucial to maximizing the benefits of these initiatives.

Indeed, government involvement has been the keystone of some of the most successful programs set up to promote exchanges. Certainly the governments of Japan and New Zealand and Australia and several other jurisdictions have actively been involved in creating and co-ordinating exchanges. These are examples of some of the best programs. In a province of exceptionally high standards it only makes sense to consider some of these very successful international programs.

Mr. Speaker, I presented to the members today many good reasons why they should support this motion to make second languages a compulsory component of our education system and to increase the opportunities for Alberta students to participate in international exchanges. First, it makes economic sense. Alberta is becoming truly engaged in the global economy. Investing in second language programs and exchanges will pay off by assuring that Albertans have the skills needed to remain competitive players in the world economy. Secondly, second language education has been proven to improve the cognitive abilities of students, impacting their overall performance. Learning another language such as French, Spanish, German, Japanese, or Mandarin leads to accelerated intellectual achievement, and surely this is a worthy goal. Thirdly, languages and exchanges promote a higher level of cultural awareness. Students get to see what unites human beings across the world, a process that leads to increased global harmony and understanding.

For those who doubt that government involvement is needed to promote what are clearly positive objectives, they need only look at the levels of participation in second languages while they are voluntary. Not only do disturbingly few students take these courses, but attendance is declining. As well, passing Motion 501 will serve to strengthen international and national exchange opportunities for our youth.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope it's now clear to all members of this Assembly that increased exposure of Alberta students to language and culture will be immensely beneficial to Alberta, and I urge them to vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before we call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to join in the debate on Motion 501, may we have consent from the Assembly to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a former member of this House, Shirley Cripps, who was the MLA for Drayton Valley, I believe it was. She was here before I got here in 1982. She served as associate minister of agriculture. I believe it was from 1982 to '86, or somewhere in that area. I would ask that Shirley rise and we give her the warm welcome of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased this afternoon to be able to speak to Motion 501, the second language requirement that's being put before us this afternoon, and to support that motion. I think it has a great deal of merit, and I'd like to spend a few minutes indicating why I think that's true and also to point out some reservations I have about putting into practice this compulsory language requirement for high school students.

The bill indicates, and the Speaker elaborated a bit on, the reasons for having a second language requirement. It's interesting if you look back historically at the reasons why second languages have been included in school programs. In the Middle Ages the requirements were in schools so that the Scriptures could be read. At that time, of course, the language requirement was Latin. Throughout the years, various schools and various learning systems have made arguments for the inclusion of a second language.

I think one reason that permeates or abridges all of the reasons given is the notion that to be an educated individual, to be truly educated, you will be able to express and to learn in at least a language other than your native language, that a mark of being educated is being able to speak another language, and that is a consistent reason, I think, given in all proposals for including a second language. In the case before us, I heard the Speaker talk about the economic reasons for having our students be fluent in another language. Given the change in how business is being conducted and the involvement in parts of the world remote from Alberta, it's a great benefit to our students to be able to carry on commerce in a language other than their own. I agree with that.

I think it's interesting to put against that argument the counter-argument, however, that English is fast becoming the universal language of the world and that the Internet is hastening that. Attempts by other governments, governments where languages other than English are spoken in their countries, have tried to take action to stop the march of English. The government of France, I understand, has an arm that's particularly devoted to trying to make sure that French is preserved and that the number of English words being incorporated into the French language is limited. They had trouble, for instance, with the space program. Being an American program and the French adopting all of those space and space-science words into the language, they went about trying to get some translations and ensuring that at least government departments in France used the French descriptions and not English.

There's that sort of notion that somewhere down the road in the future you may not need a second language to do business elsewhere, that we will all be speaking in English. However, I think that's a while in the coming, and in the interim this is a good idea.

One of the problems – and I look back, as many of us must do, to our second language experiences. I'm afraid mine weren't always with fondness. I'm not quite sure what I learned from three years of high school French and how proficient it made me. I certainly wouldn't dare try to do business in another country with the kind of French that I learned there. Nevertheless, I think it probably did serve as a useful basis, and I was able to squeak through an exam at university to get the second language requirement out of the way based on what was done in high school.

The proposal opens the door to a whole host of issues that would have to be addressed. Certainly in my case, in my high school experience, teaching and the quality of the teaching that would be available: are there teachers available to make this kind of proposal a reality? I think it would be a question that the Department of Learning would have to struggle with.

I think the value of a second language program has long been held by Albertans. I look at my experience here in Edmonton with the Edmonton public school board and the heritage language programs that saw Ukrainian, Cree, the Arabic program, the Mandarin program being introduced. In fact earlier this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Pei from Meyonohk school and her Mandarin students were introduced to the Assembly. They're a group of students who are receiving Mandarin instruction at the 6th grade level, and that will continue.

So I think that there's a great deal of support amongst Albertans for learning language programs for a number of reasons. A lot of it is heritage. There are many of those Albertans born elsewhere or whose parents were born elsewhere who desire the language that they were raised in, their family was raised in, to be perpetuated. So they argue from that perspective that a second language is needed.

One of the difficulties, of course, they've had is maintaining the class enrollments of those programs. They start off with great enthusiasm, and then it's my understanding that it takes at least a student body of 60 or 60-plus students to have a cohort that will see it through until 12th grade. It's very difficult to maintain that kind of a cohort, particularly once they hit high school and the pressures to take other courses and the pressures to keep their marks up become more evident. So maintaining those language programs has been a problem. I know at one point the Cree program had to be discontinued for just that reason. I think it's being reinstated again, but keeping those programs in place is difficult.

One of the things this motion would do is that by making the language requirement compulsory, it would stress the importance of the language, but it would also mean that there was a reward for those students who stuck to it in terms of getting their high school credentials. They would have contributed to that by taking a language program throughout their school career.

One of the other concerns I have about motions like this that come before the Assembly – and I'm not sure I've been guilty of it, Mr. Speaker, but I may have – is the notion of curriculum tinkering. That is taking something like second languages, even though we all say it's great and of huge value, and adding that to an already burdened program of studies without stepping back and saying: what are we doing to schools? What are we doing to students when we make these kinds of proposals?

One of the proposals we had and have put before the Assembly is the need for a review of K to 12 education in the province, much like the review that was done in 1971 by the Worth commission, an opportunity to stand back as they did at that time and to look at the program of studies, to look at the kinds of goals they thought were important, and then to come up with a comprehensive plan. Since that time we haven't had that kind of overview of education in the province. I'd still argue, Mr. Speaker, that's really a necessary thing to be done and probably a prerequisite to something like this. However, I still support this and am desirous that it be put in place, even if we don't get that kind of review.

The other concern I have with it – and maybe it's a department-specific problem – is that I look at the difficulty that the students have experienced with mathematics programs lately, the applied math and the pure math in high school, and I worry a little bit about the government's ability to implement this kind of a change or any kind of a change, given the kinds of things which seem to have happened to students with that program being implemented with little regard for students in the 65 to 80 grade range bracket.

So I have some reservations. Those reservations aside, I have some more things I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, but I think at this time, with permission, I would like to adjourn debate on Motion 501.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: In order to allow adequate time to prepare for the Budget Address by the Minister of Finance this afternoon, the House is recessed until 4:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:59 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.]

Transmittal of Estimates

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! Please rise in the galleries.

THE SPEAKER: The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2001, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

12. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

Tablings

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table certain budget related documents. In February, when the House was not in session, our government published its 2000-2001 quarterly budget report. Now that the House is in session, this document is being tabled to comply with section 8 of the Government Accountability Act.

On behalf of the Minister of Revenue I am also tabling the Alberta heritage savings trust fund quarterly report also published in February. This complies with section 15 of Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act.

Mr. Speaker, I am also tabling the third-quarter activity report, which describes the government's major achievements during that period.

Mr. Speaker, before moving Motion 13, I also wish to table the 2000-2001 supplementary estimates, No. 2. When passed, these estimates will ratify the special warrant passed in March as permitted by section 6 of the Fiscal Responsibility Act. This special warrant was based on the quarterly budget report, which served as the revised consolidated fiscal plan as required by section 8 of the Government Accountability Act.

Mr. Speaker, I am also tabling the Legislative Assembly estimates and the government and lottery fund estimates.

In addition, I am tabling the consolidated fiscal business plan as required under section 4 of the Government Accountability Act. Budget 2001 also includes business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of this act.

head: Budget Address

13. Mrs. Nelson moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, several years ago Premier Klein stood in this Assembly and said: given the choice between the past and the future, Albertans will choose the future every time. On March 12 Albertans did just that. They chose a positive future. They chose the proven leadership of our Premier, and they chose a proven team to help lead the way.

By putting their trust and confidence in our government, Albertans sent a clear message: stay the course, get rid of Alberta's debt, spend what we can afford on things that count most, and when the debt is gone, reduce our taxes again, and leave more money in our pockets. We heard the message loud and clear, and all 74 proud members of the Ralph Klein team are here today to make sure the job gets done.

Mr. Speaker, budgets are complex. They're a mix of plans and ideas, economic forecasts and fiscal realities. Budgets take our dreams of tomorrow and match them with the dollars we have today. This year's budget is about meeting priorities and sharing benefits. It's about keeping our eyes firmly focused on the future.

Before I get into the details, Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the simple question most Albertans have, and that is: what does this budget mean for me and for my family. This is what Albertans and Alberta families can expect. They can expect to live in the first debt-free province in Canada, and with the lowest taxes in Canada they can expect more money in their pockets this year and every year. If they own a small business, the income taxes they will pay will be cut in half over the next three years. The combination of lower taxes for businesses, large and small, plus Alberta's well-known reputation as a place that's open for business, means they can expect more jobs, highly skilled, well-paying quality jobs, for themselves and for their children.

With this budget Albertans can expect quicker access to essential health services like MRIs, transplants, and major surgeries. With new seniors' lodges there will be more choices and hundreds more places for seniors to live. With Budget 2001 Alberta's children will continue to be at the top of the class. With added funding their school boards will have more flexibility to meet important priorities like reducing class sizes and providing more support for children with special needs. Young Albertans and people with sons and daughters at college or university will see automatic remissions on student loans, more scholarship opportunities, and no big jumps in tuition fees.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government may not be listening to western farmers, but we sure are. We'll provide urgently needed support to Alberta's farmers and ranchers. If we face droughts this spring, they can count on us to respond.

For people living in our small communities and rural Alberta, more funding will be made available for RCMP. That will mean more active policing and safer communities.

Thanks to onetime accelerated investments Albertans will be able to travel on better roads and highways. Older schools in many communities will get the renovations they so desperately need, and more money will be spent on leading-edge health facilities and equipment.

Albertans have our guarantee that we will step in and take action if energy prices soar again in the future.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Albertans can expect to live in a province that's alive with energy and activity, a place that's leading the rest of the nation in economic growth. Almost everywhere you turn, there's positive news on the economic front. Alberta is the shining light in Canada's economy, and we're determined to keep that light shining brighter than ever.

Those are just some of the benefits we can share with Albertans, benefits that are a direct result of this government's careful fiscal plans and our determined agenda to create a positive future for our province.

If all goes well and as planned, Mr. Speaker, thanks to Alberta's strong economy we'll take in close to $22.7 billion in revenues in 2001-2002. We'll spend the majority of those revenues where it counts, on top priorities like health, education, and onetime spending on infrastructure. We'll set aside a cushion of $817 million to protect us in case oil and gas revenue drops, and at the end of the year at least three-quarters of that cushion will go to the bottom line, paying down Alberta's debt.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans understand that predicting provincial revenues is a Finance minister's nightmare. Last year a combination of strong oil prices and unprecedented increases in natural gas prices put the province in an outstanding financial position. We used that exceptional boost in revenues wisely: to pay down debt, to make onetime payments on improving infrastructure, and to shield Albertans from the full impact of spikes in natural gas and electricity costs. But the reality is that we simply don't know what might happen to oil and gas prices tomorrow, let alone three years from now. No one does. Every time the price of oil goes up or down a dollar a barrel, the province gains or loses $153 million. Every time natural gas goes up or down by 10 cents an mcf, the province gains or loses $142 million. So depending on whether you're a wild-eyed optimist or a hard-nosed pessimist – and believe you me, I've heard from both – the impact on forecasts for the province's bottom line is huge.

If you listen to the positive forecasts, three years from now we could take in $8 billion in resource revenues. If you're more convinced by the lower forecasts, we could get half of that. That's a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. The $4 billion difference between the highest and the lowest predictions comes close to what we spend on basic and postsecondary education in a year, and it shows the problems we can get into by pinning all our hopes on forecasts that may or may not come true.

Budgets aren't about pinning your hopes on forecasts. They're about acting responsibly. Forget the wild-eyed optimists. Take the responsible course and count on reasonable revenues. If we're wrong, Mr. Speaker, if oil and gas prices are better than we expect, no one will be happier than this Finance minister to be able to stand here next year and say to Albertans: "We've got great news. We're taking another giant step to our goal of a debt-free province."

We've taken the tried-and-true conservative course since 1993,

Mr. Speaker. So what have we got to show for it? Well, we have a fiscal record that's unmatched in Canada: seven consecutive years of balanced budgets, our debt reduced by nearly two-thirds, and $750 million in permanent interest savings to spend on Albertans' priorities.

Mr. Speaker, oil and gas prices may be uncertain, but there's one thing we can say with absolute certainty: if oil and gas prices stay higher than we expect, at least three-quarters of that extra money will go directly to Alberta's debt. That's the law in Alberta. The higher the prices, the quicker we'll fulfill our promise to Albertans to create Canada's first debt-free province.

This year we'll also take a close and careful look at the longer term future for the province's revenue picture. We'll examine our investment and revenue frameworks to give us a better idea of what we can expect in the longer term, particularly after our debt is retired, and we'll use that information to help guide our budget decisions in the coming years.

Mr. Speaker, let me turn from the big picture to some of the details, especially in four key areas: keeping taxes low, continued growth in Alberta's economy, spending on Albertans' priorities, and creating a debt-free province.

Let's start with the best news first. Mr. Speaker, in 2001 Albertans will pay over a billion dollars less in personal income taxes to the provincial government. That's over a billion dollars less. Basic and spousal exemptions will be the highest in the country. In every income group people will pay less. In fact, 200,000 low-income earners will be removed from the tax rolls entirely.

On the business tax side Alberta's taxes may measure up to the rest of Canada, but when you look beyond our country's borders, we simply are not as competitive. In today's world of highly mobile businesses, people, and capital, it's simply not good enough to be just among the lowest in Canada. Thanks to the work of the Business Tax Review Committee, we're taking major strides to put Alberta in a solid competitive position with the rest of the world. The first cuts began on April 1. Income tax rates for all businesses have been cut. Capital gains taxes were reduced. The railway fuel tax is being reduced, and we're the only province in Canada to eliminate the financial institutions capital tax. Mr. Speaker, in the next five years the combined effects of cuts to both personal and business taxes will add $4.3 billion to Alberta's economy.

Mr. Speaker, when you look around the province, the economic picture is truly breathtaking. In the last year, Alberta's economy grew by 6.1 percent, leading the rest of Canada and ranking right up there with leading economies around the world. We're looking at $31 billion in major new construction projects on the books and ready to go, a sure sign that Alberta's economy is rapidly on the move. Alberta today is a much different place than it was 10 or 15 years ago. Unlike the past, our economy is no longer tied completely to the fortunes of the oil patch. The oil and gas industry now shares office towers in downtown Calgary with high-tech companies, thriving telecommunication industries, and new companies providing business and financial services. Gone are the days when Edmonton's fortunes were tied to the growth of the public sector. Today people are putting Edmonton and Calgary at the top of the list of cities that will lead the country in economic growth.

On top of growing grain and raising livestock to ship to markets outside the province, Alberta's agriculture industry is increasingly looking at ways to produce new products and add value right here in the province. The same is true for the forestry industry, for petrochemicals and a whole host of new business ventures that are adding strength and diversity to Alberta's economy.

This new and exciting economy is transforming the traditional image of Alberta from a producer of raw materials to a producer of new ideas, new products, and new ways of doing business. The result is an economy that continues to fire on all cylinders. Spurred by tax cuts, we expect Alberta's economy to grow by 4.8 percent in 2001, far outpacing the rest of Canada. In the medium term we're expecting a healthy and sustainable pace of 3.2 percent per year on average. But perhaps the best news for Albertans is that solid economic performance should translate into over 150,000 new jobs in the province by 2004. Thanks to a strong and vibrant economy with more Albertans working than ever before, we're in a good position to target spending where it is needed most.

Mr. Speaker, when we decide how much to spend, it's not much different from a regular Alberta family. We start with how much we're likely to earn not just this year but for the next three years. Right now our earnings are at a peak, but we expect they will go down over the next few years, so we can't let ourselves get caught with spending more than we can afford. We have to look carefully at where we spend our money and make sure it's on top priorities like paying off the mortgage. We have to assess how much we spend on big-ticket items when we have cash on hand. Can we afford to buy a new car, fix the roof, or add a garage? In the province's case it's the question of paying for roads and highways, fixing schools, or building a new health centre.

The numbers, Mr. Speaker, in the province's budget may be bigger, but two key questions are the same. First, how do we take the money we have, pay our bills, and build a better life for our family? Secondly, are we better off to pay down the mortgage as fast as we can, spend money to meet pressing needs, or do a little of both?

In this year's budget we're doing a little of both. We'll spend over $18 billion on priority programs, we'll invest more than $3 billion in onetime spending to meet pressing needs, and we'll plan to make a major payment on the mortgage at the end of the year. By far the biggest proportion of this year's budget goes to Albertans' top two priorities, health and education.

In Health and Wellness base spending will increase by 13.5 percent this year and a total of 28 percent over the next three years. By 2003-2004 spending on health will make up 35 percent of the province's total spending. Mr. Speaker, Albertans can expect to see direct benefits from this spending in the form of more funding for provincewide services such as transplants, heart surgeries, and kidney dialysis; better access to MRIs, with the highest per capita rate of MRI scans in the country; a provincewide meningitis immunization program; more funding for drugs used in treating cancer; and an enhanced program for breast cancer screening.

In Learning, spending will increase by 7.7 percent this year and 19 percent over the next three years. With additional funding Alberta school boards will have the flexibility they need to meet their students' needs. The achievement of Alberta students ranks right up there with the best in the world, and our continuing investment in education will make sure it stays that way. To put the budget increases for basic education in perspective, in the year 2000-2001 budget the province provided every school board with over $155,000 in total funding to support the education of a class of 25 students. By 2003, funding for the same class of 25 students will increase to $180,000. That's an increase of $1,000 per student.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economy and the success of young Albertans depends directly on their ability to get the education and training they need to pursue their career goals and dreams right here at home. With Budget 2001 colleges, universities, and technical institutes will be able to add 1,200 more spaces each year for the next three years in key areas such as health, business, teacher education, and information and communications technology. We will also add spaces in the apprenticeship programs to meet the need for more skilled workers. Starting this school year we'll provide targeted funds to attract and retain the best faculty members in critical areas such as medicine, computer science, engineering, and business. By next school year this targeted funding will increase to $40 million a year.

Mr. Speaker, as a parent we all know that one of the growing worries about postsecondary education is: will we be able to afford it for our children? Well, this government will not allow cost to be a barrier to postsecondary education. It's too important to our province, and it's too important for the future of our young people. With $70 million in this year's budget, steps will be taken to automatically reduce the debt load of student loans for eligible students after they've successfully completed their first year and even further when they've completed their studies. On top of that, scholarship programs will be increased by 43 percent over the next three years. That will provide a direct benefit to about 20,000 Alberta students annually.

I want to quickly mention a couple of other areas where Albertans will see direct benefits from Budget 2001. New funds are being added this year to address problems of children at risk. Albertans will see expanded outreach, treatment, and prevention programs for children involved in prostitution, children with fetal alcohol syndrome, and troubled teens. At the other end of the age spectrum additional funds will be provided for Alberta seniors' benefit programs. We'll increase funding for the AISH program by 18 percent over the next three years, and we'll provide targeted funding to address the problems of homelessness. Mr. Speaker, these commitments are a sign of a government that cares not just about the bottom line but truly cares about the people of the province and especially those who need our help.

On top of ongoing funding for key program areas Budget 2001 continues our commitment to a number of onetime spending programs. During the recent election campaign Premier Klein and my colleagues, especially those from rural Alberta, learned firsthand about the growing challenges faced by Alberta's farmers and ranchers. Whether it's the threat of disease sweeping through their herds, the very real possibility of droughts, high input costs, or market conditions beyond their control, farmers and ranchers across all of western Canada face uncertain and very trying conditions.

For those of us who spend most of our time in the cities, it's easy to forget how difficult things can be for farmers and ranchers, but we made a commitment that we would not forget. With Budget 2001 we will add to the base budget already in place for farm safety net programs. This spring we will provide support to producers across the province to help meet urgent needs, and we'll continue to pressure the federal government to take the plight of western Canadian farmers to heart.

Mr. Speaker, our government is also taking action to protect Albertans from high energy costs, which includes individual Albertans, businesses, farmers, nonprofit organizations, municipalities, schools, postsecondary institutions, and health facilities. Our Alberta government will not stand by and let high energy prices cut into the strong Alberta advantage for individuals and businesses.

In fact on April 10 Premier Klein introduced new legislation to protect Albertans from high natural gas prices. Budget 2001 commits $125 million to cover the cost of this protection program. If prices are higher than our forecast, further assistance will be provided. Each year we'll reassess the situation and decide if rebates are needed.

The final area of onetime spending is infrastructure. With the additional revenues available we will double our regular spending on upgrading Alberta's infrastructure. In fact, from the year 2000 to the year 2004 we will have spent a total of over $8 billion on roads, highways, and public transit, on new and renovated schools, on expanding our postsecondary facilities, building two new health centres of excellence, one for cardiac care and one for bone and joint care, providing support for water and wastewater facilities, and, of course, on Supernet. Supernet is the new high-speed Internet network linking 420 communities across the province and bringing the world literally to our doorsteps.

Mr. Speaker, those are the highlights of our spending plans for Budget 2001.

Let me turn from spending to saving, specifically to our bold plans to make Alberta the first province in Canada to be debt free. As the Speech from the Throne pointed out, the dream of a debt-free Alberta was once only a pinpoint of light on the horizon. Now it's in full view, and there is a very real possibility that Alberta's debt will be completely gone sooner rather than later.

However, we're taking a cautious approach. We can't and we won't make promises on debt retirement that we might not be able to keep, not until we have the money in the bank. But here is a promise. If prices stay high – and many think they will – we won't search out new ways of spending taxpayers' dollars on new spending programs. Instead, every dollar we can spare will go to pay down Alberta's debt. That's our promise to Albertans, and nothing would make us happier than to burn the mortgage before Alberta celebrates its 100th birthday in 2005. That's my goal and that's our Premier's goal.

Mr. Speaker, that's an overview of Budget 2001. It's a budget focused on meeting priorities and sharing benefits, reducing taxes and leaving more money in Albertans' pockets, spending what we can afford on priorities, and maintaining our promise to wipe the slate clean, to eliminate Alberta's debt once and for all. It's the kind of responsible budget Albertans have come to expect from this government, and we have never let them down.

Mr. Speaker, giving a Budget Address is a humbling experience, and I have a long list of distinguished predecessors to follow. Each of them put their own stamp on budgets, and I thought: in my first Budget Address what would be my stamp? What is it I stand for in presenting budgets to the people of Alberta?

In my personal and family life I've lived by one model, and that is to thine own self be true. I've come to realize that this is what Alberta is all about. It's definitely what budgets are about, telling things like they are, not beating around the bush, doing things in our own unique way, tackling problems head-on, trying in spite of all odds to do the right thing while building an even stronger future for ourselves, our children, my son, and our great province.

Winston Churchill once said, "There is only one duty, only one safe course, and that is to try to be right." Mr. Speaker, who am I to disagree with Winston Churchill? I firmly believe this is the right budget for Alberta. It's a budget that makes no promises we can't keep, a budget that keeps us on a steady course to the brightest vision we can imagine: a debt-free Alberta, a proud and thriving province with jobs, opportunities, and an undying spirit that says to the rest of the world that there's no stopping Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:12 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 24, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/04/24

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 23: Mr. Coutts]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to offer my comments on the Speech from the Throne. I found it a very interesting document, and I would like to relate it this evening to the campaign run by the government party in the past election.

We looked very carefully, of course, during the election at what the government party, the Progressive Conservative Party, was saying in the election, and it was very difficult to discern a clear and coherent program that was being offered to Albertans. To my knowledge the government party never issued a comprehensive platform document, and they certainly never issued any kind of clear policy plans. This is contradicted in the Speech from the Throne, which says: "Albertans already know what the plan is. It's the plan they voted for." I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans did not know the specific policies and programs that the government intended to use to run the province of Alberta over the next four years.

So the closest thing we could come up with in the throne speech of the government's vision was a vision of low taxes, no provincial debt, a strong economy, new jobs for our young people, sound infrastructure, good health care and education systems, stable agricultural communities, safe streets, and reliable social programs.

Well, that's all fine and dandy, Mr. Speaker. That's all fine and dandy. Even the New Democrats could support that kind of vague, feel-good program. But, as they say, the devil is in the details. If the government didn't want to give exact details about its plan in the election campaign, I have to ask myself: is there a real mandate here for the few specific policies that are mentioned?

Now, there are a few specific issues in the speech, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I need to take issue with the proposal to streamline "the approval process to bring new generation projects onstream." I've made the point before that the EUB has been turned into a toothless tiger by the policy of this government. I suspect that the government is about to gut further the ability of the EUB to protect environmental and consumer interests. It seems that the next victim of the government's disastrous deregulation scheme is going to be green power and the environment. When deregulation was begun, one of the arguments for it was that it would open up access to the market for producers of alternative power. As it turns out, the prices have been driven up so much that producers and consumers are forced to switch to the cheapest form of energy, which is of course coal.

Second, the government has made a major announcement regarding MRIs in the public sector. Normally one would expect a party to put these kinds of plans out in front of the public for scrutiny and debate. Not this government. So while the new public MRIs are welcome and in fact overdue, we're still stuck with a policy that gives a $3.2 million bailout of public dollars to private, for-profit providers. This is a government, Mr. Speaker, squarely in the middle of being in business. Although the government says that this bailout is only a onetime deal, I have absolutely no faith that this is the case. At every turn the government has made it priority number one to cut the private sector in on Alberta's health care system.

Thirdly, I would like to make some comments regarding the government's plan to offer protection to consumers for rising home-heating costs. Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that there's a bill on the Order Paper dealing with this and which was in fact already passed at second reading, so I won't try to delve too much into the details of that. I just want to make a few short comments.

We in the New Democrat caucus have put forward many times a way to protect consumers from rising home-heating costs by adjusting royalties to a slightly higher level to fund the cap. In that way you're not using general revenue to protect consumers. The government, by funding its program from general revenue, is letting the oil and gas industry off the hook. Now, remember that for every $1 in additional royalties the government collects from higher natural gas prices, the industry collects three additional dollars in windfall profits. In my view, it's only fair to expect industry to participate in protecting the consumers from higher prices.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk a little bit about what's not in the speech. We could talk about what the government ignored in the election campaign and what they have again ignored in the Speech from the Throne. First of all, rising tuition fees get absolutely no mention in this speech, even though they are one of the most difficult problems faced by youth and Alberta families today. Within the space of 10 years Alberta has gone from the third lowest tuition fees to the third highest, and there's no end in sight. How can this government be serious about building a successful economy for the future when the doors to education are being closed to many promising young people?

The throne speech also does not address the shameful state of our social assistance rates nor, might I add, does today's budget speech. We are currently competing with the Maritime provinces for the distinction of having the lowest social assistance rates anywhere in Canada. I was listening the other day to the comments made by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, who stressed the importance of family in the 21st century, and I couldn't agree with him more. One way that we can build healthy families is by increasing assistance to those who need it the most.

I know that one of the major issues the hon. Minister for Children's Services is dealing with is the increasing number of children in the care of her department. By far the biggest reason that those numbers are increasing is that the parents of these children are unable to provide the necessary care. By boosting those social assistance rates, we can provide a solid foundation for the children and their families. The minister said today, Mr. Speaker, that the number of children in care has gone up to a very high level, and I would see very clearly a direct correlation between the number of children in care and the level of poverty in this province, which is absolutely shameful. One in five Albertans lives at or below the poverty level, and Edmonton is amongst the highest.

The minister over there might be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta municipalities just a year ago released a comprehensive report dealing with poverty levels in families in communities, over 21 communities in the province of Alberta, and found that between 15 and 23 percent of families in various communities lived at or below the poverty line. Those are facts that any member of this House can research and find out for themselves. There's no question that under this government the rich are getting richer and that even the middle class is doing very well as long as oil and gas prices remain high. As long as the economy based on energy remains booming, this government can look good when it comes to the high-income and even middle-income Albertans, but I tell you there are many, many thousands of Alberta families that are worse off than they were before. They're paying higher rents, and their income has not gone up.

Now, take the social assistance rates, Mr. Speaker. They were cut dramatically a number of years ago, and there has not been one attempt by this government to restore even an iota of the level of support, notwithstanding the fact that food prices have gone up, notwithstanding the fact that rents have skyrocketed in a number of Alberta communities. This government has turned its back on those people. They're not on the government's radar screen at all. There's a very significant number of people in that boat. As I said, up to 20 percent of Albertans are in that boat. I would challenge members opposite to come up with their own reliable estimates of the extent of poverty in this province. I've made the offer before, in my maiden speech, that they could come and I would take them on a tour of my constituency, and they could see it firsthand. There's plenty of it out there, and there's plenty of it in Small Town, Alberta, too. It's just a little bit less visible than it is in the big cities.

Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to make a short speech this evening. I want to indicate that while it was difficult to find a clear direction in the government's election program, it is also difficult to find a clear direction from the government in the Speech from the Throne. It is an abbreviated, feel-good document that has no specific concrete proposals to better the lives of Alberta families, and I think that the government could do much better.

Thank you very much.

8:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you for the opportunity to speak in the Legislative Assembly, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour and privilege for me to be here today, elected by Edmonton-Castle Downs in a fair and open process, endowed with the duty to bring forward concerns of my constituents, and empowered with the means to take effective action on these issues.

I have the utmost respect for the democratic process and take my duty to listen, to become informed, and to take action always in the interests of Albertans very seriously. My respect comes in part from experiences I had when I was younger, growing up in Poland. There I witnessed how self-interest, closed-door deal-making, and absence of a mechanism to hear the people's concerns could lead to many dark and dangerous results, ranging from denial of educational and economic opportunities to denial of basic human rights.

As I understand it, I am the first Polish-born person ever elected to a provincial or federal level of government in Canadian history. I hope this allows me to make a unique contribution to this Chamber in many ways, but especially I hope that one of those ways is to serve constituents as a reminder of how important democracy is and how important people's voices are in this democratic process. It's a privilege not to be taken lightly.

Before I address some of the points from the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say thank you to a number of groups and individuals for the contributions that they have made in the past months and years. First, thank you to everyone who helped me get elected in Edmonton-Castle Downs. I feel especially privileged to be here today because I know how hard-fought the campaign was. There were a number of excellent candidates, and I want everyone to know that their efforts were appreciated. Also, I want to thank all of the constituents who voted. Whether you voted for me or not, your participation in the electoral process strengthened the community simply by being aware and taking the responsibility. I would encourage all constituents, no matter what political stripe, to be comfortable in approaching me with whatever concerns they may have over the next few years.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think gratitude is owed both to the hon. Premier for providing this province with clear vision and strong leadership and to the hon. Lieutenant Governor for the grace and dignity that she has brought to her office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to introduce my fellow members of this Legislature to the constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs. The first thing to note about my constituency is that it is mostly a residential area. As a result of this, Edmonton-Castle Downs has a strong sense of community spirit.

A large number of the people that compose the residential population are directly or indirectly employed by the Canadian armed forces. One of the most striking landmarks adjacent to my constituency is the Griesbach military base. This base has served the Canadian military for many years. Over the next five years, however, this base will be shutting down step by step and be turned into more residential space. It is estimated that homes for over 2,300 families will be made from this space, a very exciting development that will bring the need for more schools and infrastructure but will also strengthen the community with new homes and neighbours.

Another noticeable aspect of Edmonton-Castle Downs is the rich ethnic diversity. So many nations are represented within the constituency—Arabic, Italian, Ukrainian, Polish—amongst the many varied religious buildings that have been built. Edmonton-Castle Downs, Mr. Speaker, can soon boast being the home of the largest Buddhist temple in Canada. This diversity results in a strong community spirit, making Edmonton-Castle Downs a shining model of the society and the harmony that we have in Canada.

Now that I have acquainted my fellow members with the Edmonton-Castle Downs constituency, I would like to address some points of the throne speech directly. I want to draw on some of the aspects of the speech that relate directly to my constituency and others that address concerns of all Albertans that I consider especially important issues to maintain prosperity and a high quality of life for future generations of Albertans.

First, allow me to address education. The throne speech indicated that education continues to be a top priority for this government and that Albertans need and deserve a lifelong learning system that provides the best possible start in the early grades. I could not agree more. To give every child a fair chance at pursuing their potential is surely the most important duty any person or any government could pursue. Surely if we do not care enough for our children, we have to re-evaluate our values and visions for the future. As well, looking after our children is an investment. Studies have shown time and time again that when people are well cared for at the early stages in their lives, they have greater opportunity to become hardworking, contributing members of our community. Mr. Speaker, they will demand less time and resources of justice, education, and health care in the future.

One way in which Edmonton-Castle Downs would be well served to create better opportunities for its young people is through the establishment of a new high school. As I mentioned, Castle Downs is enriched with a growing residential population that promises to grow only larger in the next few years with the conversion of CFB Griesbach. I am pleased to see that funding is going to such effective targets, programs in general classroom size reduction and early literacy initiatives, the $60 million program begun in 1998 to provide better opportunities for young people to achieve basic literacy.

Yet even with these very positive and effective programs, the government needs to keep the basics of education important, and having access to a high school when there is a looming demand is key to keeping with the basics. It will be a top priority of mine and I hope of this government to help get a high school in Castle Downs over the next few years.

Education is important to bring up children right, but it is not the only area that this provincial government can and should become involved in. I strongly believe in the role of Alberta Children's Services programs and the impact they have in breaking cycles of family violence and shielding children from the effects of abuse, violence, and poverty, that prevent some children from becoming strong, sound individuals. I am encouraged that the budget for Children's Services has increased nearly 9 percent over the last year to allow for a greater number and more comprehensive programs. I believe firmly that this is an area that the government must continue to support in its mission to provide for a fair and strong future.

The throne speech also proclaims that Alberta values a caring society, where those who are vulnerable receive the support they need. Sadly, seniors very often end up being the most vulnerable members of our society. Often they are subject to a fixed income when costs such as energy increase dramatically, causing them to have income difficulties. Often they are merely neglected after committing their lives to being hardworking employees, mothers, and fathers. Seniors deserve our attention and protection through whatever means may be available to the government.

One of these means is to find a way to provide affordable housing. I am pleased with some of the initiatives that have been taken in this direction over the past few years. Seventeen projects were selected last year to receive funding for supportive housing units or modifications to existing projects to accommodate the aging in place of low- and moderate-income seniors as part of the seniors' supportive housing initiative program. As a result, 630 new supportive housing units will be available to Albertans. I know this is a step in the right direction, but I also know from many seniors I have met in my constituency that more is needed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I trust that my background as an educator combined with the strong support of the constituents that I have will allow me to positively contribute to the future and strength of this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

8:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. VANDERMEER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pride and honour that I rise today to deliver my maiden speech as the new MLA for Edmonton-Manning. I'd like to start by congratulating the new and returning MLAs to the Legislature. I would also like to thank the great people of Edmonton-Manning for giving me their support. There are just under 40,000 dynamic people living in the constituency, so there is a lot of work to be done.

I would also like to thank the volunteers of northeast Edmonton who helped me throughout the campaign and up until the election on March 12, 2001. From the beginning of the campaign I had a large number of volunteers who worked very hard. There were dozens of junior and senior high students who were very curious about government and the election process and looking for ways to help.

It was great to have the excitement of the youth in the office. You could feel it as soon as you walked in the door. I would like to thank those students for making the election more enjoyable and for working so hard on the election. I would especially like to thank my wife, who not only worked on the campaign but kept our businesses and our household running as well.

Mr. Speaker, I know the constituency of Edmonton-Manning very well. I was raised in Edmonton-Manning, and I still live in Edmonton-Manning. I was raised in Belvedere. Later as a teenager my family moved to Steele Heights, and after Trish and I were married in 1985, we moved to Horse Hills, all in Edmonton-Manning. Our first home was a mobile home, 564 square feet of luxury living. We paid $250 a month rent and $6 for the phone, which was a phone still on a party line. I said to Trish: "We should live here five years. Think of the money we could save." We almost made the five years.

In 1987 we started Vandermeer Construction, and in 1988 my first son, William, was born. In 1989 our daughter, Charlene, was born. We were quickly growing out of our humble home, and it was time to build our home. I was going to say our first house, but in a sentimental way it may just be our last home. Kind of boring you say, living in one area all your life. Not really. Edmonton-Manning is a great place to live.

Edmonton-Manning is located in the northeast corner of the city. Our little pocket in the north is very diverse. Along with the dynamics of Edmonton-Manning district is the farm community on the outskirts of the city. I have the challenge and the pleasure of meeting the needs of both rural and urban issues. I am honoured to represent the small farming community in Edmonton-Manning. During the campaign I enjoyed talking to farmers and listening to their concerns. One of the biggest issues facing farmers not only in north Edmonton but in all Alberta is promoting the idea of value-added products for the farming industry. There are rich farmland and market gardens that would benefit from a shift toward value-added products. We need to work with the federal government to give farmers the flexibility to create more value-added products.

I believe the race for MLA in Edmonton-Manning was very close, as it was a reflection of the diversity in the area. I look forward to proving to the constituents that they made the right choice to create a better future. People in Edmonton-Manning are excited about Alberta's success and look forward to thinking in a new direction.

I feel this government must reflect on the past as today is budget day. Many provinces have natural resources and a growing economy. The difference in Alberta is that we have had a courageous government, a strong-willed populace, and a natural leader who have all worked very hard to make Alberta the best province in Canada. We streamlined funding for services and restrained ourselves from squandering our fortunes. Now the rewards seem endless. Our past success was due to the simplicity of this government's direction.

I believe in a less-intrusive government. The people of Alberta are a responsible people and don't want a government looking over their shoulder, telling them what they can and what they cannot do on every minute situation dealing with their personal lives.

We must remember our roots in these prosperous times. Even though we are in the middle of an incredible economic upswing, we still need to exercise a safe level of fiscal restraint. We must also be on guard from interest groups. Rewarding people who sacrificed in the government services is necessary; however, as a government we must decide which groups want money from those who need money. Taking care of those less fortunate should take precedence. For example, the assured income for the severely handicapped is an income support program for adults who have permanent impairment that substantially limits their ability to earn a living and who have few resources. This program is offered through Alberta Human Resources and Employment, and I believe it should receive more funding. I'm glad to hear in the budget speech today that there will be more funding for this program.

With Alberta's strong economy we need to look beyond the issues of the day and solve other problems that do not get much attention. Complacency is a dangerous thing. Alberta's surpluses will not necessarily last forever. We must focus our attention on paying off the debt and lowering taxes as much and as soon as possible. These actions directly benefit our constituents.

Too much government spending may eventually worry Albertans. The government of Alberta and Albertans have invested years of hard work that could be undone by losing our perspective and allowing government to expand into another unmanageable, ineffective bureaucracy. Sustainability is a word we hear a lot lately. We know that economies go up and down, and knowing that, we need to make sure that our programs are indeed sustainable in good times and in bad.

I agree with this government's goal to reduce taxes in Alberta. There is one more Alberta tax that should be dealt with: health care premiums. Health care premiums, in my opinion, are a tax that is a huge load on Albertans. If we can afford it, and I think we can – we say that taxes are going down. This is the first tax we should eliminate altogether because it is simply the right thing to do. It also reminds us of past governments, who were always looking for new ways to tax and create new revenue. We are not like that anymore, nor should we ever be like that again.

I share concerns regarding the education system with the constituents of Edmonton-Manning. Increasing funding should improve the condition of schools and resources for teachers and students. We need to learn to work together to make sure that we see results in excellent and well-educated students. We need to continue the tradition of staying the course of the mid-1990s. We must maintain fiscal responsibility and a positive vision for the future. We need to be compassionate and disciplined with Alberta's surplus, fair and understanding toward different views and perspectives, as well as honest and accountable to our constituents.

I am confident that this government will earn the respect of many more constituents of Edmonton-Manning very soon. I will show them my passion to this government and especially my dedication to Edmonton-Manning, to their concerns and issues. There is a great deal of work to be done, and I look forward to the future of Alberta.

One thing that I'd like to share with you too. I told you a brief history of the beginning of my life with Trish and our marriage. Two years ago we were also blessed with Samuel, our youngest boy. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I'd like to move that we adjourn debate.

head: Government Bills and Orders

Bill 3

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to move second reading of Bill 3, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This act strengthens our ability to protect and manage provincial fish resources and is consistent with promoting the Alberta advantage in sustainable natural resources. This amendment act brings with it changes that deal with administrative and technical issues that have arisen since the Fisheries (Alberta) Act was proclaimed into force in November of 1997.

The existing act does not have provisions to license and regulate fish derbies and tournaments. The Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001, will establish those provisions, Mr. Speaker. The derbies and tournaments can potentially reduce the health of our fish population, and they can lower the available harvest of traditional recreational anglers. Regulating derbies and tournaments of course will lower their impact on the overall fish resources of our lakes.

The Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001, will also establish provisions and operating standards for guides and anglers.

Changes to the act will also allow us to appropriately regulate game fish that are held in aquariums or other contained waters. These changes, Mr. Speaker, will require game fish from all sources to be kept only in licensed and approved facilities.

In addition to focusing on sustainable resource management, a number of revisions to the act are in support of Alberta's commitment to enforcing these laws. Anyone who does not pay a fine under the Fisheries (Alberta) Act or the Wildlife Act will be suspended from sportfishing until the fine is paid up. This new authority will allow items used in the offence against the act to be seized by the fisheries officers.

This amendment also aligns this act with the federal Fisheries Act. An amendment will create a clear exemption to protect employees who, while performing their duties, are in violation of the act. Conservation officers use these authorities when enforcing the Fisheries Act. Through this amendment, Mr. Speaker, these new authorities will be incorporated into the Fisheries (Alberta) Act.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to speak.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the hon. minister's introduction to Bill 3, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act. The first thought that occurred was the discussion I had last night with the 161st Scout troop from Forest Heights. They were questioning me on the role of an MLA and the new government, and I told them that the government had grown so large, the cabinet had expanded to 24 portfolios. I said that the only thing that is not there is a minister of fisheries. I believe, after listening to the hon. minister's comments, that this must certainly be part of his portfolio, minister of fisheries.

Now, we have rules here, and the highlights of this bill concerning competitive fishing tournaments and derbies will be brought in under regulations. We also see here, Mr. Speaker, that a person convicted of an offence under this act will have his or her fishing and hunting licence revoked until the fine is paid. The hon. minister talked about penalties, and if not in this bill, I wonder if this is not the appropriate time to deal with the whole issue of poaching in Alberta. There are certainly cases where freshwater fish in the lakes here are winding up in commercial establishments, restaurants. [interjection]

Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister assures me and other members of this House that this has been dealt with, and I am very pleased to hear about that because it should be fair for everyone. If the product is coming, for instance, from fish farms, well, then that's fine, but what sort of controls are there in place to ensure that is exactly what is going on whenever the product comes to market?

There are some changes to definitions of types of fish and the rules for keeping fish in captivity here, and this appears to be developing as pay-for-what-you-catch private commercial fishing opportunities. I hope I never see the day in this fine province where individuals can buy or lease the fishing rights along either side of a stream or river. I certainly think that would be the wrong message to send, particularly for those who enjoy the sport of fly-fishing. In committee I believe I will have some comments regarding that.

I have questions regarding the definitions in this bill, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully we can get a clarification on what will be defined as a fish-handling facility, particularly whenever this concerns fish-farming. What exactly is a fish-handling facility? What are the anticipated differences between fish and game fish? I'm assuming this is all going to be explained, and hopefully it will deal with fish-farming. The definition of sport fishing: now, I'm curious about that. Also, will fishing with a bow and arrow or spear be allowed in all lakes, and how will this be monitored? Will sport fishing guides be regulated by the Alberta Professional Outfitters Society? Will all the tournaments and derbies require a licence, or will certain ones be exempt? As I understand, there are different derbies and different tournaments in the north end of the province and in the south, in the foothills. We all know the importance of the bull trout not only to the sport fisherman but also to the Liberal caucus. That is a very, very important fish in the ongoing history of our caucus.

In closing, I have one final query for the minister, and I look forward in due course, Mr. Speaker, to his answers. What does the minister anticipate the fees will be for a tournament licence?

With those comments on Bill 3 at this stage in second reading, Mr. Speaker, I will await in due course the response from the minister and I will cede the floor to one of my colleagues.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak briefly on Bill 3, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001. The truth is that I did try and contact the great white fisherperson in our family, which is my father, to find out whether he had any knowledge of what was being proposed in this bill, because I'm sure he does. He seems to belong to every club, the trout fishing club and all of them. But I didn't get back to him, so I guess I'll have to rise and speak to this again in Committee of the Whole once I hear back from him.

This strikes me as a very reasonable bill. It seems to be addressing problems that have been raised over a long period of time, both on the sportfisher side of things and somewhat on the environmental side.

Now, the part that I was interested in was whether the minister has addressed the recommendations from the Auditor General's '99-2000 report on the fish management system. Obviously, there has been some back-and-forth around fish stocking management. The AG report also reviewed this in '93-94 and has been watching it for some time. There is a specific recommendation in here about "regional and area Action Plans used in the planning process" not being completed on a consistent basis. "There are 17 areas covering the Province for which Action Plans are prepared by the Department's Natural Resources Service." He goes into quite a bit of detail about what's happening. Essentially these plans are "to recover collapsed and vulnerable populations and to sustain stable . . . ones." That's a quote directly from the Auditor General's report. So the department is able to prioritize the activities to make sure that it is helping collapsed fisheries to recover and being able to keep the viable ones viable.

I'm wondering what the minister has done, seeing as this bill is about fish management – is anything that the Auditor General has brought up repeatedly being addressed through this bill? It's a little hard to tell because once again – you know, I'm beginning to think that if I had a magic wand, the word I'd remove would be "regulation," because I see far too much of it appearing in proposed legislation from this government. Everything gets referred to and defined in the regulations, and the regulations are established by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is really the cabinet, which really means that the good decisions, the ones that people really need to know about and would probably like some input on, are all decided behind closed doors.

Once again in this bill, as I looked through it, there are a number of things that are being defined in the regulations, including what a competitive fishing event is, competitive fishing event participant, fish handling facility, which again is part of what I was addressing with the Auditor General's concerns. Then the bill goes into adding some different kinds of fish that weren't covered by the act previously.

Essentially we have a bill that is trying to put in rules around competitive fishing events – fishing derbies is what I would have known them as – deal somewhat with how people that are convicted of an offence under the act are actually dealt with, change these definitions, additional types of fish that are added in, and rules for keeping fish in captivity, which is where my primary source of interest was, what the department had done to address the requests and concerns brought forward by the Auditor General. I'm sure that the minister can address those for me when he speaks again on this bill.

As I say, I haven't heard back from the great white fisherperson, but I'm sure I will. As far as I'm concerned, at this point I have no problem supporting this bill. I know there are others who may well wish to speak to it at a later date, so at this point I would like to adjourn debate.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4

Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased tonight to move second reading of Bill 4, the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill will increase compensation to landowners or occupants facing damages. This is for areas of their property not covered by leases to energy companies or included in the right-of-entry orders. This bill will increase the amount of compensation that can be dealt with by the board for damages, raising it from $5,000 to $25,000. Surface rights legislation is administered by the Surface Rights Board. This is a quicker and more efficient channel for dealing with compensation than the court system. Currently section 33(2)(b), the amount of compensation claimed by the occupant concerning damages, cannot exceed $5,000.

Mr. Speaker, this limit has been in place since 1983, and it is generally outdated. The amount is too low to effectively deal with damage claims at this time. Unless the limit is raised to $25,000, landowners must apply to the courts, a process which can be expensive and time-consuming for everyone. By proposing an increase in the compensation, this bill will reduce the time spent or court expenses of an owner or occupant in recovering damages and allow an owner or occupant to receive full value for damages.

Let me just take a moment to tell you how compensation arrangements are made at this time. Should negotiations between the landowner or occupant and the operator for a surface lease fail, the operator may apply to the Surface Rights Board for a right-of-entry order. Once the right-of-entry order is issued, a compensation hearing is scheduled to determine the amount of compensation the landowner or occupant is entitled to. The landowner receives annual rent or a onetime payment for leasing the land. Additional compensation is rewarded if land not included in the surface rights lease or right-of-entry order is damaged as a result of the energy company's operations.

There are three ways that section 33 of the act provides compensation for damages. Damage to land off the right of entry: a good example is contamination off the right of entry. Trespassing by energy company employees on land not covered by the lease. Another is the loss of livestock and the owner's time and expenses in recovering livestock; for example, if the energy company leaves a gate open.

By increasing the compensation amount and allowing the Surface Rights Board to continue administering compensation, landowners and occupants can receive full value for damages in a quick and affordable manner.

Thank you.

8:50

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few brief comments this evening on the Surface Rights Amendment Act, Bill 4. It looks like it's quite similar to what was proposed by my colleague from Lethbridge-East, the hon. Dr. Nicol, in the last session, and it's certainly, I think, necessary.

The minister recently concluded his comments and said that it's 1983, I believe, and $5,000 went a lot further in 1983 than it does now. This is quite a logical step, I believe, from $5,000 to $25,000, as the maximum level of appeals for surface rights compensation claims. The Surface Rights Board is certainly going to have its work cut out for it in the future as our urban communities grow larger and grow closer to producing oil and gas fields. It is necessary for the government to have legislation that's reflective of this, and I believe this document goes in that direction. At this time I generally am supportive of this legislation, but the mediation process, as I understand it, between the affected landowners – the Surface Rights Board is in the middle, and the oil companies or the petroleum companies are on the other side.

I represent a constituency certainly that would not be nearly as affected by this issue as some colleagues from other centres across the province, but there are people in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar who own land, and they are affected by this. They've had problems in the past. I don't know if this is specifically going to be able to address their problems. Their problems were to deal with water, contamination of surface water, and also air and noise pollution from the activities on the leases themselves, but that's to be dealt with in another statute.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I think I would be in support of this bill, but I will have to wait and hear back from some officials of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Landmen.

At this time again, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to one of my colleagues. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I am glad to be able to speak in second reading to Bill 4, the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001. Once again a fairly straightforward bill, very simple, very short – I think it's a whole two pages long – and obviously something that's been negotiated and coming for a long time.

As my colleague made note, in fact the first time we saw this issue raised was in Bill 229 in 1999, brought forward by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. So interesting how all the good Liberal ideas end up getting taken, but my compliments to the government side for indeed flattering the Liberal caucus by implementing the bill ideas that we do indeed bring forward, almost an identical reading of the bill.

If the landowner and the company that wants to do exploration or drilling or whatever can't come to an agreement on the amount of compensation, then they end up going to the Surface Rights Board, and obviously the amount of money that was in the legislation previously just doesn't hold up in this day and age. I mean, $5,000 is the existing amount of money, and that just doesn't go very far in 2001. I don't know if that's a good comment on how expensive litigation is getting or not, but certainly it seems reasonable for damage or water contamination and various other issues that are being raised that $25,000 is a more appropriate amount of money to empower the board to be administering.

One issue that's been raised with me is not so much around surface rights. Well, no. It is, because it's around noise, and it's around damage from almost an earthquake effect. Some of folks are buying acreages in these small developments on the edge of cities and smaller centres, and they start up these little acreage communities. Then you end up with a drilling rig pulling in across the road. They don't get a lot of warning. There's not a lot of time where they get given any notice that this is about to happen. So if you did know it was going to happen, you could maybe arrange to be taking your holidays while the particular work is being done so it wouldn't be so troublesome to you. But they're also complaining about that sort of shaking affect that you get when somebody is not too far away and moving large amounts of dirt around and drilling into the ground.

AN HON. MEMBER: Vibrations.

MS BLAKEMAN: Vibrations, thank you.

It does affect you. I think if any of us have ever had any kind of construction done nearby to where our homes are, you certainly feel it. It comes right up through the foundation and starts shaking the dishes that are on the walls and in the cupboards, and there can certainly be damage from it, never mind the sort of nuisance factor. I'm not sure if this sort of thing is covered under what the board can look at or compensate for, but maybe it should be. I know that issue has been raised with me. I've been asked to bring it forward. I've brought it forward.

I know there are a lot of new members in the House with us, and I think it's important that it be outlined that being in opposition doesn't mean that we automatically oppose everything. If we've had enough time to have a reasonable look at the bill, to be able to contact some stakeholders and get some feedback and it appears to be a reasonable thing that has been a long time in coming, we're not going to oppose a bill. We're going to speak briefly to it. Certainly in second reading we're speaking to the principle of the bill, and I have no problem supporting the principle of what this bill is putting forward. However, I do realize that there are others who may well wish to speak to this on another day. So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 4.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

9:00

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: For the benefit of the new members, this is called Committee of the Whole, and I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. It's the informal session part of the Legislature. People are able to remove their jackets and indeed are able to move around and visit quietly with others, so there's no need for long-distance conversations. We have the convention that only one person is standing and speaking at a time. Although you can move around, if you wish to speak to any of the issues before the committee, whether it be in Committee of the Whole or in Committee of Supply, you are obliged to speak only in your place. That's where you can speak from and be recognized. So if somebody is moving around, they hopefully are moving purposely from the place where they had just been sitting to another place where they'll wish to sit.

Bill 1
Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE CHAIRMAN: We would call upon, then, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar first of all to offer any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to Bill 1.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this time I am anxious to enter into the discussion at committee on the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, that, I believe, as I said earlier in second reading, is largely symbolic, is unnecessary. But a person has to take a bad thing and try to make the best of it. Hopefully, at some point we're going to get the opportunity to make amendments to this bill.

Certainly if we look at the existing Natural Gas Rebates Act, that came into play in 1974, Mr. Chairman, if hon. members were to read that bill, they would certainly agree that this bill is not necessary and that it is a public relations exercise. There are so many things that are in the old legislation that are not in this legislation. Anytime that legislation comes forward – and we look at supplementary estimates. We see that there is, I believe, $403 million or $406 million in here that is to be spent on gas rebates. That is a substantial amount of money. There are mentions of the definition of industrial raw material in this bill that we have to examine very, very closely, particularly whenever you think of ethane and its value to the petrochemical industry in this province.

You look at price protection. Naturally it is an interference in the free-market system whenever you talk about price protection. We have to examine this very, very closely, Mr. Chairman. However, when you look at this legislation as it exists, this slogan piece, this public relations exercise, we're discussing rebates to vendors, yet we are not going to have a definition of what a vendor is or is not. In this case a vendor could turn out to be a natural gas electrical generating station.

At this time I would have to question: is it in the best interests of the taxpayers of this province to subsidize a natural gas fired generating station? How are the coal-fired generating stations to feel about this? We know there is a certain economic advantage. Also, how do people who are concerned about conservation feel about this, Mr. Chairman? I think it is very, very important that the whole idea of who a vendor is is made clear. Certainly in section 3 there is no discussion of a definition of a vendor.

Now, who is going to be eligible for the gas rebates? This is very interesting. What sort of control is going to be on the money? How will we know it's to be going where it was programmed to go? The calculations of rebate payments, the applications for rebate payments, the point at which rebate payments are made: these are all vital questions whenever we're considering spending millions and millions and millions of dollars.

People in the province of Alberta are of the impression that these are just short-term rebates, but when you look at the gas supply in this province, perhaps citizens are right whenever they conclude that there is no shortage of natural gas. My question to all members of the Assembly is: if gas is so plentiful, why are the Americans currently spending $75 million on an engineering study to bring gas from Alaska down through Alberta to Chicago and to distribution points south of Chicago and throughout the continental United States? It makes sense, if there is so much gas in Alberta, to develop it here and save the billions and billions of dollars that these pipelines are going to cost to build. But no. They seem very determined to get at that gas, because they realize that in the western sedimentary basin the supply is not endless. We obviously have to be concerned.

In America the weather conditions are the reverse of this province and our country, Canada. Natural gas is used to generate electricity, and in America in the summertime air conditioners run more often than our heating systems in the winter here. The idea that it's not a heating season and the price of natural gas is going to go down to levels of 18 months ago – I don't believe that is possible, particularly not this summer. There are rivers that are used to develop hydropower. They have very low levels, unfortunately, so the natural gas price is going to stay high.

Mr. Chairman, I realize we're debating Bill 1, not the supplementary estimates, but we are talking in the budget of spending a very modest sum, whenever we compare it to previous rebates, of a little over $100 million in natural gas rebates. The whole idea in section 4 of who is going to be eligible for these rebates has to be clear. It can't be left to the regulations in section 7.

Now, the civil remedies in section 6. I note that there is no dollar amount for an offence or a penalty. In the legislation that I prefer, the existing legislation, there is a figure, and it is $10,000, Mr. Chairman.

If we're going to look at power generation – and this is where I'm afraid we're going with this – what kind of subsidies are we going to wind up paying with this bill? Obviously, unless it is fixed, unless the repairmen come along with amendments, there is going to be the potential here for unlimited subsidies. Now, power generation comes to mind, as I said earlier. Mr. Chairman, who is going to decide the degree of sheltering if it is necessary? We look at this: the minister. The minister is going to do this behind closed doors.

If this natural gas rebate is to be used for feedstock or a fuel source for power generation, there are many studies that indicate that gas-fired plants are better for the environment, but we have to have a detailed comparison of the economies of existing gas- and coal-fired plants. This is very complicated because of the differences in ownership – some of them are public; some of them are private – the differences in accounting procedures, the age of the plants, the mechanical condition of them, the load factors of the plants, and there are many, many other factors including location.

Now, I really don't think it's fair. For instance, there is, I believe, a 275-megawatt gas-fired generating station being built on the outskirts of Calgary. It's gas-fired. It may even be larger than 275 megawatts. It's owned by a large American corporation. If this bill, this slogan bill, this public relations exercise which has nothing to do with the consumers of the province, were to be lining the pockets of the developers of this at the expense of Alberta consumers, I would be very, very disappointed. But, hopefully, it will be not necessary to provide rebates.

I have my problems with this electricity scheme that has been developed. I have problems with losing control of an essential natural resource like natural gas, that I think has gone on in this province. Earlier I discussed this, Mr. Chairman, and during this term I intend to discuss this at length. When we look at this bill and the improvements that can be made to this, I think it's time to get started.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was novel for me to read Hansard from past legislative debates. It astonished me that when the hon. member Mr. Farran introduced the Natural Gas Rebates Act, the Premier of the day, Mr. Lougheed, participated actively in the debate. I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly, if they want a quick lesson in the history of this province, to review that discussion that occurred in Hansard. It's remarkable, and it's not that long ago. I think all members need to have a look at this.

Mr. Farran provided all members of the House with a draft copy of the regulations, and I know that I'm not going to get a draft copy of the regulations of this bill or any other bill from this government. Now, maybe they're going to surprise me, Mr. Chairman, and do that, but this hon. member Mr. Farran back in 1974, so that all members of the Assembly could understand the regulations, so they could have a better understanding of the technicalities of the application of the rebate bill, introduced the regulations and circulated them with the members before they were debated in the Assembly, as I understand it.

Now, I don't have a problem with the objectives of gas shielding, as it's called. The objectives of the system would be to shelter the residents and commercial establishments from the effects of significant gas price increases.

Of course, we can say that this is a North American phenomenon. But we can look at the Alaskans and what is not only going on in Alaska but in the U.S. Senate. I've heard an argument put forward that: oh, goodness, we can't protect the resource for Albertans because of NAFTA. Well, that doesn't seem to be bothering the state legislators in Alaska. It doesn't seem to be of any concern to the U.S. Senators. A number of them have cosponsored a bill. It is very interesting. This bill is to protect the energy and security of the United States and decrease America's dependency on foreign oil sources. Well, guess who that foreign oil source is? It's Alberta. Collectively it's Canada, but it's Alberta.

Now, getting back to Bill 1 here, Mr. Chairman, should we be sheltering industry from the escalating price of natural gas? Small industry is landlocked in Alberta, it stands to reason. But they've been forced to compete at disadvantages as compared with industries in central Canada and the continental United States, and naturally they should have the benefit of the resource here.

I don't believe this bill is the long-term solution to this. Now that the horse has escaped from the barn, our economic position is not what it used to be when the Natural Gas Rebates Act was discussed and debated in 1974. We suddenly find ourselves with a diminishing supply of a product, natural gas, which we rely on. I find it unfortunate that this has occurred, because we're going to have to have a very public discussion on how much further we're going to allow the resources of this province to be shipped out unprocessed.

In conclusion, I would remind all hon. members again of the Calgary Herald editorial from May 4, 1974. They discussed that instead of the rebate plan, this bill could easily be called the gas price protection plan. That is essentially what this bill is. So when you think that this is the flagship piece of legislation from this government, I have to caution the consumers of the province and I have to caution all hon. members of the Assembly: we cannot accept this bill in this form. It is a blank cheque. It's like giving the government a credit card with unlimited spending: here; go for it. Anything could happen here.

Policies must be designed to produce maximum returns to Albertans, and this doesn't do it. I don't believe this is the right way to do it. I don't understand why the last legislation was allowed to lapse in regulation. It was certainly needed this winter. The concept of gas rebate programs is not bad.

We all understand that natural gas prices are strongly influenced by supply and demand, but this is beyond reason, Mr. Chairman. You know, the consensus forecast is that natural gas prices in Alberta – we discussed this before – are going to remain quite high. We look at the take-away capacity and the opening of the new pipelines. The situation, if anything, may get worse, and this blank cheque is not the long-term answer.

So I think we're going to have to try to improve it. It's the only thing we can do, and the first thing is to find out the whole concept of what a vendor is going to be. Is a vendor going to be someone who is going to be generating electricity with this natural gas? We also have to find out if a vendor will be someone that is going to be using natural gas for other industrial purposes: a fertilizer plant, gas used for fuel or for hydrogen generation or for other purposes connected with the upgrading of bitumen. These are very, very important. The volume of gas could be huge, and the rebates to these outfits could cripple the Treasury.

Gas used as compressor fuel. Hopefully we're not going to be subsidizing the fuel gas for a compressor that is rocketing our natural resources, including the unprocessed gas to Chicago. This could possibly happen, and there are no answers in this. Now, perhaps hon. members across the Assembly are going to allay my fears here, but somehow I doubt it.

Gas used for municipal floods in connection with the secondary recovery of crude oil. We have to look at this, but at this time I hear the bell. My time, Mr. Chairman, has run out.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, yes it has.

MR. MacDONALD: I'm looking forward to pursuing debate again in committee on this slogan bill.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On Bill 1 I've consulted a number of esteemed economists and businesspeople. There are some serious concerns with its implementation. It looks very much like it's a system that will disrupt completely the market signals that can be successfully achieved in a workable market for natural gas. Rather than allowing price and supply and demand to determine the consumption of gas, the risk with Bill 1 is that through a mismanaged rebate system the true price of gas will never be known to consumers.

Gas is unlike electricity in that it does function well as a commodity. Electricity does not function as a commodity, as we are seeing in the electricity deregulation business, but gas has characteristics that allow it to be a more successful commodity. Gas, for example, is storable. It can be stockpiled, unlike electricity, so that at times of low price stockpiles can be built up, and at times of high price those stockpiles can be released and the price brought down. Electricity, of course, doesn't function that way.

There are also many reasonable substitutes for gas. In households, for example, gas is primarily used for heat. Of course, you can simply turn down the heat and wear a sweater. You can switch from gas to coal or to wood heating, as some people are doing in their homes, so there's a substitution there. On the other hand, of course electricity is much more difficult to substitute for. You cannot power a microwave without electricity. You can't power a computer or a cash register without electricity. Electricity does not respond to market signals, so it's not a commodity, while gas is more of a commodity. Another difference, of course, is that with natural gas there are large numbers of wholesale suppliers, which is necessary for a successful market. In electricity there are not, and there's no sign of that developing in Alberta.

One of my concerns with this bill is that it in fact violates all the rules of the free market, which is a bit ironical coming from a free-market government. It is a double standard, and as a result, of course, we're going to get into yet another mess, kind of the flip side of the mess we're in with electricity deregulation, which should not be turned over to the free market.

At the same time, of course, I recognize that the fluctuations of a free market can drive the price of natural gas up to punishing levels, so I am not in principle opposed to some kind of transitional sheltering for consumers of natural gas. I'm not reassured on that account in Bill 1 because there are, in fact, no time constraints in Bill 1. This bill goes on and on indefinitely in contrast to the bill that is in place that was introduced 25 years ago, which laid out a time limit to its applicability. This, without any time limits, clearly is not intended as a transition but could become a permanent and a kind of addictive program which could have a profoundly negative impact on our Treasury.

I would also point out, as my colleague has pointed out, that this bill is unnecessary. There's a bill on the books now that does everything this bill does and indeed more. It does it well and presumably is the authority under which the current rebates have been provided. So this bill seems very odd as a flagship bill, being really redundant, unnecessary.

I'm also concerned that it emasculates the Legislature. Literally half of this bill is regulations. There's almost no substance to the bill that the Legislature is being asked to approve. All the substance will be in the regulations, which will not be debated in the Legislature. As a result, that removes a substantial and important power from the Legislative Assembly.

Finally, I would express my concern that the bill risks discouraging responsible conservation of an important resource by disrupting market signals. If the rebates are tied, for example, to consumption – the more you consume, the higher your rebate – then there is a risk, especially if it's a permanent kind of rebate or a long-standing rebate, that people won't bother conserving because their price will be subsidized. That, of course, is a dangerous precedent to set.

I would say that it may well be that the intent of this bill is good. I'm not opposed to transitional sheltering for Albertans as they face higher natural gas prices. I'm also not opposed to the idea of sharing Alberta's wealth from its natural resources with all its citizens. If this bill were to achieve that, it might be commendable. But I am very concerned that the execution of this intent is very poorly presented in this bill and that indeed, as I've said, the bill is unnecessary because there's an existing piece of legislation on the books.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 1 in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

9:30

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes. Thank you. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 1.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

head: Government Motions

MR. STEVENS: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to withdraw the sessional adjournment motion brought before the House earlier today under oral notices and substitute in its place the following motion:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess each sitting of the First Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We'll just take a moment, hon. Deputy Government House Leader, to distribute these to both sides.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly once again, in this case to waive Standing Order 38(1)(a) regarding one day's notice to allow for the consideration of the sessional adjournment motion just brought before the House by oral notice.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a few comments regarding this motion. The first one. I'm interested in the fact that the previous motion as it was circulated in the Assembly this afternoon used the word "current" sitting of the First Session. It read: "Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the current sitting of the First Session of the 25th Legislature." I will stop there. This motion states, "Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess each sitting of the First Session of the 25th Legislature." I have a bit of a problem with that. I would prefer to see the word "current" used instead of "each" sitting.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, if you would do us the honour of moving the motion. We've asked for permission, but we need to now move it. Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar can continue with his comments.

MR. STEVENS: I'd be pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Adjournment of Session

16. Stevens moved:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess each sitting of the First Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm disappointed that this motion is going to be for "each sitting of the First Session of the 25th Legislature." In the past I can recall where we at one point had a special sitting to deal with the whole issue of Quebec and the unity issue and the issue of Quebec within the Confederation of Canada, and each member of the Assembly had an opportunity to express their views. That was sort of a special sitting of the 24th Legislature.

I don't agree certainly with the word "each" in this specific motion, because I think it should be just the current sitting of the Legislative Assembly. The motion we have now for the adjournment of the spring session should not follow through to the fall or any other sittings of this First Session of the 25th Legislature that may be necessary.

So I'm disappointed in the wording of this, and I'm also disappointed with the speed with which this motion has been presented to the Assembly. The election is over. We've just received the budget. There are billions and billions of dollars. It's going to take time to scrutinize this. I know the legislative agenda is light. I see, you know, the slogan bill, Bill 1. This is a light, light legislative agenda, but we have issues to be discussed here. I can only question: where's the fire? What's the reason for the hurry?

With those few comments and particularly the caution about the wording of this motion – I would have much preferred to have seen the word "current" in there instead of "each" sitting. I'm very disappointed in this motion, but that's life. You can't always get what you want, as the Rolling Stones would say. With that I will cede the floor to anyone else who has comments regarding this motion.

Thank you.

9:40

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am very disappointed in the nature and the intent of this motion. It's my first day in debate here, and I'm already finding myself debating a request by the government to facilitate adjournment of the session. It's only the fifth day of the session. A large number of members have not had a chance to speak at all, and I think it's very disappointing that the government is in such a hurry to hustle along and facilitate adjournment. I think it also reflects poorly on the state of democracy in this province that we're in such a hurry to rush through with the debates.

So with those comments I would just really strongly register my concern that this is disappointing, and I'm sure my constituents would share that concern.

[Motion carried]

[At 9:43 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 25, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/25

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome. Please join me in the prayer.

O Lord, on this day we pray for those taken before their time and those who have suffered through workplace tragedies. We reach out to the families and friends most immediately impacted. Life and health are precious. When they are lost, all of us are impacted. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a gentleman who has had a life of high adventure and who has given great and good service to his country and to the cause of freedom. He was first commissioned into the Coldstream Guards in 1939. The second Earl of Jellicoe fought with distinction in special air services regiment and with the special boat section. For his brave and gallant conduct he was at various points during his wartime service awarded the Distinguished Service Order, the Military Cross, Legion d'honneur, the Croix de Guerre, and three times Mentioned in Despatches.

In the postwar era he was a diplomat and in a subsequent career a minister of the Crown. He was Lord Privy Seal and Conservative government leader in the House of Lords from 1970 to 1973. He is now dean of the House of Lords.

Earl Jellicoe addressed Edmonton's Sir Winston Churchill Society at their memorial banquet last night and will deliver speeches to the Churchill societies in Calgary and in Vancouver in the next few days.

Earl Jellicoe is accompanied today by his wife, Lady Jellicoe, and by Mrs. Alana Dunne and Robert Dunne, president of the Churchill Society in Edmonton. Mr. Speaker, our visitors are in your gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the petition I presented yesterday from 40 Albertans requesting that no public funds be used to settle Stockwell Day's defamation litigation be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 6 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 6, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 7

Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 7, being the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill will allow contribution limits to be established for candidates for election in regional health authority board elections, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Medicare Protection Act

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Medicare Protection Act.

Bill 204 fulfills a commitment I made to my constituents to repeal the government's Bill 11. It does much more. It replaces Bill 11 with real health care protection legislation, including enshrining a patient bill of rights, ending queue-jumping, and banning private, for-profit hospitals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to table the requisite number of copies of a calendar with respect to the Committee of Supply designating the dates on which certain estimates of certain departments will be considered before the Committee of Supply of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table a petition I previously presented to the Assembly under Presenting Petitions. The petition is from the Society of Bowness Residents, which calls for the government of the province of Alberta to preserve the Paskapoo Slopes from housing development; 5,459 Calgarians from all communities throughout Calgary signed yes to preserve, 31 signed no to preserve, and one was of no opinion. I'm tabling five copies of this petition as required.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings. I've got five copies of a letter from Mr. Don Wales of Red Deer. He is concerned about the impact of logging and industrial development in the Bighorn wildland park area by Nordegg. He would like the government to put a moratorium on all development until this area is protected in legislation.

The second tabling is five copies of a letter from Trish Evans.

Trish and her family live near the Strachan gas plant, and Trish is concerned that she's been unable to get any help from the Member for Rocky Mountain House to help her deal with her children's health problems that she believes are being caused by the gas plant.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, both e-mails from constituents. The first is from Brian Blair – this is dated April 11, 2001 – expressing concerns over a double standard the government has with MRIs and also expressing concerns about the government putting school boards in the position of increasing teachers' wages or decreasing class sizes.

The second e-mail is from Linda Pushor expressing concerns about business tax revenues decreasing, personal tax revenues increasing, and this is around subsidization of big business with the rebates.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time for the convenience of the Assembly I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Ottewell community patrol program open house program, which myself and the Hon. Gene Zwodzesky attended on behalf of all members of the Assembly. In here for the interest of the Assembly are the statistics on the crime prevention program that works so well in the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter that I received from Ms Perdue, president, Calgary Society of Bowness Residents, asking the government of Alberta to preserve the Paskapoo Slopes from housing development.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table five copies of the program for the sixth annual Kids Kottage breakfast, which was held this morning. Kids Kottage is located in the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry and provides a 24-hour crisis nursery, supporting families and preventing child abuse and neglect.

Thank you.

1:40

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature two bright, young people seated in the members' gallery along with their mother. Both worked in my office as STEP students at different times, and both aspire to be medical doctors. I would like to introduce to the Legislative Assembly Ryan and Farrah Yau and their mother, Helen, and I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to other members of the Legislature it gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce a group of 53 students and two teachers led by Mrs. Pat Smith and Miss Gina Paron from the Sweet Grass elementary school. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce a group of wonderful young Albertans and their teachers joining us here today: Miss Monica Murphy, Mr. Umberto Miceli, and Miss Hilda Schroeder, who acts as an interpreter, as well as their parent helpers, Mrs. Rowles and Mrs. Brandingen. These are all students at St. Martha school. I've had the pleasure of joining them. They're brilliant young Albertans. I would like you now to join me and ask these people to rise and receive the welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a family from the Wainwright constituency. Mr. and Mrs. Chris Pfisterer, daughter Paige, sons Ryan, Kurt, and Derek. Chris is the owner of Meatco, the meat processing plant in Wainwright, and his wife is a nurse in the Wainwright hospital. They also are my family and my grandkids. I ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and through you to all colleagues in the Assembly one of my constituents, John McCoy. He is a second-year political science student at the University of Calgary and has plans to go into law in the future. He is here today to observe the proceedings of this Legislature, and I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

National Day of Mourning

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Saturday, the 28th day of April, is our National Day of Mourning for Canadian workers who have been killed or injured on the job. We honour those victims by remembering them and by renewing our commitment to safer workplaces.

Workplace accidents injure not only the worker. They also leave lasting scars on families, friends, coworkers, and employers. On our National Day of Mourning we need to think about the families of workers who did not come home safely at the end of the day. We need to think about the human cost of workplace accidents. This will always remind us that all accidents are unacceptable and all accidents are preventable. On April 28 we must think about preventing future accidents and about the health and safety of our families and those around us. By learning from the past, we can help to make this a safer world.

Ceremonies honouring our fallen workers will be held in communities across the province. I would ask that all members of the Legislature take some time today and of course on Saturday to reflect on our losses and to commit themselves to improving workplace safety.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to take this opportunity to mark the National Day of Mourning, which this year falls on Saturday, April 28. All members of the Official Opposition share a deep concern at the number of lives lost as a result of accidents in the workplace. I am pleased, as are all Albertans, to hear of the renewed commitment to safe workplaces by the hon. minister. Our heartfelt sympathy is with the families and friends of the victims. Although no words can take away their sorrow, we continue to strive for a safe and healthy workplace.

In addition, work-related accidents are very expensive to our economy. Nationally, compensation paid to work accident victims or their families is about $4.65 billion each year. Adding indirect costs, this amount doubles to about $9.3 billion. These figures do not take into account the pain and suffering of the victims and their families, which are beyond measure.

Prevention is the cure is the theme of this year's North American Occupational Health and Safety Week. This week happens to occur between May 6 and 12 this year.

In Alberta there were 118 workplace fatalities in 1999. Unfortunately, the deaths on the work sites bring to focus to all Albertans an immediate snapshot of the dangers that employees have to work under and with. There are as well, unfortunately, many workers in this province who are exposed to chemicals or radiation that can and do have some long-term implications on the workers' health, and although it is not instantly reported that it is a workplace death, we know in the long term that there are many unfortunate workers who have succumbed to such intrusions into their health.

Again, I call on all members of the Assembly to join in marking the National Day of Mourning. Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: The first Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2001, unveiled yesterday, includes about $3.2 billion of onetime spending. My questions are to the Premier. What policies or guidelines has the government given to departments to accommodate this onetime spending into their three-year business plans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the direction given to the various departments involved in onetime spending programs is really quite simple: the money is to be spent on priority areas. Those priorities have been identified not only by the government but, I would suggest, by members of the opposition, who have encouraged us over the years to spend more money to upgrade our schools, more money to upgrade our hospitals, more money to build sound and meaningful infrastructure. Those are the priorities that have been identified, and that's precisely where the money's going.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, how does the government's policy of onetime spending accommodate the continuing costs of maintenance and upkeep into the ongoing budgets?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is all accommodated in the three-year business plans. We aren't about to embark on any onetime spending that can't be sustainable through appropriate operating moneys.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: would it not be more appropriate to take the additional dollars when we have a high revenue, put them into an endowment, carry that money to a time when the economy is not quite as robust as it is now, when prices are not so high as they are now so that we could make better use of our dollar and help to stabilize the economy rather than contribute to a possible overheating of an already robust economy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's a good idea in theory, but it doesn't work that way. The simple fact is that we have got to accommodate the phenomenal economic growth in this province. We need, for instance, to complete the Canamex; that is, highway 43 as it leads to highway 16 and highway 2 and the upgrading south of Lethbridge to the U.S. border. There are safety factors, and there are factors relative to the safe movement of goods and products.

We know that we're experiencing pressure on our school systems and we have to put in new schools, new postsecondary institutions, upgrade classrooms, and we know that we have to do the same thing with our health care facilities. I've often said that economic growth and economic prosperity are great, but they create some challenges. Fortunately, in this province through prudent fiscal management we're able to provide the funds to accommodate that economic growth and prosperity.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In yesterday's budget a new policy of the government was implied. My question is to the Premier. Is it now government policy to intervene in the collective bargaining process, as is implied in the separation of the teachers' salaries component in the budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any details in the budget that allude in any way, shape, or form to the government becoming involved or interfering in the collective bargaining process. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance can shed some more light on this matter.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd be delighted to. In the budget this time there is a line item under the Department of Learning that identifies a salary line that has a salary picture of 6 percent over two years. In addition to that, of course, there is in that budget a 6 percent increase in base funding for base instructional education. Those two lines certainly give our local school boards the flexibility they need to deal with at the local level. They are going to have the flexibility to deal with the priorities within their own school jurisdiction.

There is absolutely no way that the government is going to get involved in the collective bargaining process at the local level. That will be left up to the bargaining unit, which is the local school board and the local ATA.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. If you didn't want to be involved in the collective bargaining process, why did you not roll those two line items together so that the true choice is left to the school boards at the local level, where they're dealing with the ATA locals? By putting a cap on it, it creates a message out in the public that that is what you expect settlement at.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, people may speculate as to what that means, but I have to reiterate what the Minister of Finance has already stated, and that is that it does give the school boards, the local school jurisdictions, the authority and the flexibility to deal with these matters.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is: by putting in this cap, is it now government policy to move from local to provincial bargaining for teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is not in the books.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Premiums

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government figures indicate that the department of health expects to generate some $700 million in revenue from health care premium tax. My questions are to the minister of health. Given that an Alberta family earning $12,620 will pay $816 in health care premiums each year and given that a family earning $80,000 or even $800,000 will also pay $816 in premiums each year, will the minister confirm that health care premiums are a regressive tax on middle- and low-income earners?

MR. MAR: I'll not confirm the same, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, you're recognized.

DR. TAFT: Okay. Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister's department wrote off 76 percent more in unpaid health care premiums last year than they expected, exceeding $50 million, is the minister finding that more Alberta families are having difficulty paying health care premiums?

MR. MAR: No, Mr. Speaker.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Premier, given that yesterday in this House the Member for Edmonton-Manning in an eloquent speech called health care premiums a tax that is a huge load on Albertans and said that this is the first tax we should eliminate altogether, will the Premier allow a free vote in this Assembly on the elimination of health care premiums?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, that's a health policy. I would imagine that this item, this matter, will be an issue for discussion at the Future Summit in a postdebt environment in the province of Alberta. Certainly we heard that they would like to see a reduction or an elimination of premiums, and it's something that might – I know there's danger in using that word "might" because we all know that in politics yes means yes and maybe means yes and no means maybe – come up for discussion at the Future Summit.

THE SPEAKER: The leader of the third party.

Supports for Independence

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's provincial budget contained some good news for children at risk who are in government care but nothing at all for children living in poverty. The Minister of Children's Services is doing her part by more adequately resourcing the child welfare system and putting more resources into early intervention. However, the minister of human resources has failed to effectively address woefully inadequate monthly rates for social assistance and AISH recipients. Children go hungry and live in substandard housing because their parents are poor. My question is to the Premier. Why does the government think spending up to $400 million on Alberta centennial projects is a higher priority than providing even modest increases in the woefully inadequate monthly allowances provided to families who are forced to rely on social assistance?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the expenditures relative to centennial projects are not frivolous by any stretch of the imagination. Indeed, all of them are legacy programs, programs that will leave in place a legacy for Albertans to enjoy and to appreciate for many, many, many years to come.

Relative to the situation with respect to SFI, supports for independence, and various programs relative to children and children at risk, I'll have the two ministers respond.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addressing the question again, we've talked here in the House previously about supports for independence being a program of last resort. It's also a program that is considered temporary in nature. I would want to point out to the hon. member that when he focuses on the cash numbers that are provided to various people that are on our client list, he is ignoring a number of other benefits that are provided. We certainly want to point out that there's a national child benefit that these people are entitled to. Of course, there are tax credits that are available. Should the client be working then and have children, there are employment tax credits. We of course have a GST credit. They were entitled to the energy rebates with no deduction. So when we take everything into consideration, then of course we have felt that we're providing them the proper support for Albertans who truly need our assistance.

Now, I would remind the hon. member that in the Speech from the Throne there was a reference made to the fact that we will be reviewing all of the programs and services that we provide for low-income Albertans, so whatever input he would like to make certainly would be appropriate when that is announced.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The inadequacies of social assistance rates are well known. They don't need any more reviews. My question to the Premier: how can he justify not addressing this urgent need in yesterday's budget? That's the real question.

2:00

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I disagree entirely with the hon. member. Everything that we do in government is subject to review, and that's precisely what the minister plans to do: to review not only the levels of payment under SFI, supports for independence, but all other things associated with SFI.

I think that the hon. minister has done a good job in spelling out some of these added benefits: the GST credit of about $400 a year; financial support for clients and their children for prescription drugs, optical care, dental care, ambulances, and other health needs; full subsidy of health care premiums, premium-free Blue Cross; energy rebates, that are available to all Albertans but certainly meaningful to low-income families, of something like $1,100 a year; the Alberta family employment tax credit of up to $1,000 a year; funds to cover $100 worth of school expenses per child; emergency assistance for expenses such as baby-sitting, day care, special dietary needs, and unforeseeable circumstances that put a client at risk; and supplementary benefits are available for those with special problems, Mr. Speaker. In addition, there is the ability for a person receiving SFI to enter the workforce and, I believe, earn up to $125 a month before any penalty is assessed.

So, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister pointed out, this is not a permanent program. Certainly to those in society who truly need our help and cannot work we will give that hand up, and we will provide sufficient resources to sustain that person or their family. But SFI is, as the minister pointed out, a temporary program that is designed to support people in need but also give them a hand up to get off welfare, now called SFI, and into the workforce.

Speaker's Ruling Brevity in Question Period

THE SPEAKER: We've now spent over six minutes on these last two questions, yet that's double the time we spent on the first three sets. Now, the question period is the question period, not the debate period.

Please proceed.

Supports for Independence (continued)

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that Alberta's woefully inadequate assistance rates are at least partly to blame for the huge increase in the number of children in government care, what actions is she planning to take to convince her cabinet colleagues that increases in these rates are long overdue?

MS EVANS: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the assumption the hon. member has made. Many people try to associate the number of child welfare cases as a direct correlation with poverty, and it leads society astray to believe that in fact those people with resources are not contributing to the child welfare caseload.

I'd like to just add one simple comment to the supports that we provide for families and children who are attending day care as one example of places where we do provide additional supports. Two parents with two children who are earning less than $44,000 a year receive a partial subsidy so that the children can attend day care with that kind of support and provide extra service to them.

Mr. Speaker, there are numerous areas in which we are adding dollars for the child in need program and other programs that can sustain children who may be living in impoverished situations.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, this government has been very proud of the Alberta advantage and how this province is leading the rest of the nation when it comes to fiscal responsibility, low taxes, and debt pay-down. During the last provincial election Albertans told us to stay the course. To the Minister of Finance: can she explain why, then, in Budget 2001 government spending has increased by 22 percent?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I certainly can. This year we looked at two elements. Our ongoing program spending increased in the budget by 6.3 percent. That meant that the programs that continue year after year after year increased by 6.3 percent. In the out-years that drops down to 4.3 percent. However, in this year, because of the banner year in revenue that was created from oil and gas, we were able to look at the list of priorities that had been left there in infrastructure that hadn't been dealt with.

We made a choice to blend together program spending and look at the onetime funding requirements that were sitting on the table: things such as the extension to the Deerfoot Trail in Calgary, things such as the completion of Anthony Henday Drive here in Edmonton, things such as the start of the new Children's hospital in Calgary. We felt those were priority areas that needed to be dealt with, and because we had the additional cash flow, we felt we should deal with them now, because we don't believe that in the next year or the year after the revenue base will be as strong as it has been. So we've made the determination to deal with those elements today because next year we likely won't be able to.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can she tell this House why the government is embarking on what I understand is several billion dollars in onetime spending when the province still has debt on its books?

MRS. NELSON: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very good question. We made choices this year. The $3.2 billion in onetime funding, the decision to use that this year was because in fact we were in a position to be able to do it. It's called catch-up. A lot of these projects have been on the table for a very long time. In fact, when I was elected in 1989, I heard about the difficulties with the Anthony Henday road here in Edmonton, and I'll be very pleased to see that project finally completed.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the Premier said earlier that there was a report done and work done quite some time ago, as we were looking at different forums such as the growth summit, that we were behind on our infrastructure, and we were. We, quite frankly, were behind. So we made the decision, again, to play catch-up. Some of the things we're catching up on are the modernizations of our school facilities, of our postsecondary institutions. These things need to be done, and we're in a position this year to look at doing them now. But let's keep in mind: our ongoing program spending stayed at 6.3 percent. This is onetime spending.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Finance tell us when Albertans can expect their province to be debt free and why we hear two to three years on one hand and then up to 14 years on the other?

MRS. NELSON: That's an excellent question as well. Mr. Speaker, as Albertans will remember, we put in place a legislative framework that put our feet to the fire to clear the debt in this province. Our goal is and will be to have the first debt-free province in Canada. At this point in the 25-year plan we are nine years ahead of schedule on our debt retirement scheme. That should send a clear message to all Albertans that the goal of our government and our Premier is to see that debt cleared off sooner as opposed to later. So we have accelerated our debt retirement payment. Now, in saying that, we have a goal to have that debt fully retired before the 100th birthday of this province in 2005.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Municipal Financing

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has announced long-overdue changes to education property taxes in Alberta. It is wonderful to see the government finally moving towards the opposition's suggestion that K to 12 education should be funded 80 percent from provincial revenues and 20 percent from education property taxes. They are not there yet, but they are getting there. However, if we look at the government's track record on municipal financing, they cut $335 million in grants to the municipalities between 1992 and 1999. We see that this tax cut is really just tinkering at the margins. My questions today are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Will the minister explain why this government continues to tinker at the margins rather than committing to a new partnership with Alberta's local governments based on clear definitions of roles and responsibilities and sufficient sources of revenue to meet those obligations?

2:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you very much, and I thank the hon. member for his question. He raises a good point. This government, Mr. Speaker, has always taken the approach that we can do better, and we are taking that approach in terms of dealing with municipalities and school boards. I'm pleased to say that he has brought up the fact of a reduction in the $135 million in education tax. I know from the mayors and councillors I've spoken to that municipalities are very pleased with that initiative in working with them in partnership, and we're going to continue to work with them in partnership.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can this government on one hand rail against the injustices of program-specific federal grants and on the other hand have no problems making our local governments jump through hoops to receive program-specific provincial funding?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government and our ministry are working very closely with municipalities. We are always collecting feedback from them. I just recently had the opportunity to attend the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, where we were talking about important partnerships. That's going to continue. We're not there yet, but one thing for certain is that we're listening to municipalities, we're taking their feedback, and we're acting on the input from them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to working with our local governments, starting today, on a responsible plan for long-term funding arrangements that will provide our communities with predictable, stable, and equitable municipal financing and infrastructure planning?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, sustainable, long-term certainly is something this government will continue to work on with not just municipalities but with all aspects of our government. We're doing it, and we're going to continue to do it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Inland Cement Limited

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are about an issue that has been brought to my attention by a number of my constituents. They are very concerned about Inland Cement's plans to switch from using natural gas to coal in its Edmonton plant. Specifically, they're concerned that this proposal will not be subject to an environmental impact assessment by Alberta Environment. The perception in the neighbourhoods and in the community is that this project is being fast-tracked and that the proper environmental review is not being done as a result. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why isn't an environmental impact assessment going to be done on Inland Cement's plans to burn coal?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I assure you I understand the member's concern and the concern for his constituents, but what we have to recognize in this case is that Inland cannot automatically change and go to burning coal without a complete environmental review process being done. They have to have an environmental approval. To get that environmental approval, they have to have an environmental review process, and this environmental review process will look at all aspects of the project and its cumulative effects on the environment. We only do an EIA, or an environmental impact assessment, if we go beyond the jurisdiction and expertise of our department, and this proposal that is coming forward from Inland is one which falls within the purview of the departmental review and departmental expertise and departmental jurisdiction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Inland Cement is inside the Edmonton-Calder constituency and that the neighbourhoods are directly downwind of the plant, when Inland is planning an increase in particulate matter emitted by the plant, my constituents are very concerned about the impact on the environment and human health. Accordingly, what is Alberta Environment doing about controlling particulate emissions coming from the plant?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. We do not anticipate that in this particular case particulate emissions, or dusting, will be a real problem. The reason I can say that is that dusting only occurs when certain equipment shuts down that's called a precipitator. When the precipitator shuts down, then you have the dusting. We have already had discussions with Inland to indicate to them that they have to provide technology, that if the precipitator does shut down, they have to have technology in place that will prevent dusting. So in fact we expect that there will be fewer opportunities of dusting with this new technology and the new proposal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is for the same minister. I'm wondering what the next steps will be. Before we have an answer on whether or not Inland can switch to using coal, will the public have an opportunity to be heard on this important issue?

DR. TAYLOR: As I have said before in this House, Mr. Speaker, the public certainly will have an opportunity. We still do not have a formal application yet from Inland, but once that formal application comes in, there will be advertisements placed in the newspapers telling the public what is happening and giving the public a response period of about 30 days, which is normal. When the public responds in various forms, we will review those comments, and we will be consulting with Alberta Health and Wellness as well during this whole environmental process. So the public process is quite clear.

There have been two open houses. There is a public meeting that is happening tomorrow night, organized by the constituents of Edmonton-Calder, in the constituency there. With the Member for Edmonton-Calder we will organize a meeting that I will attend and my officials will attend. There is opportunity for public input anytime during this process through either statements of concern or statements of support for the project. So I believe there's lots of opportunity for public input.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Children's Advocate's Report

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report of the Children's Advocate indicates that many of the problems of the formerly centralized child welfare system still exist. What is happening to some children under government care is absolutely unacceptable. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. How is it possible for a young person in care to be unaware of their case plan and to have never seen their social worker?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to serve notice today that if any member in this House ever has information that pertains to the best interests of the child, where they are not immediately contacting our office to make sure that we do follow up – if there is such a situation that children and their caseworker or that people are not getting the proper attention, I would like to know. I would be very much a welcoming minister and a welcoming ear to hear people tell me if there are ways that we can do things better. We work very hard through these decentralized authorities, all 18 authorities, to make sure that the caseworkers, the supervisors are there to address problems.

If you will notice in our budget tabled yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we have over the past year added 396 staff positions to look after the commitments to the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, to make sure that we have the right number of staff in place to look after the needs of children, and we continue to work at improving our practices with the teams that are out there in the communities. So if in fact there exists a child today that has needed care, needed access to a caseworker and that has not been provided, I'd like the details at once so we can follow up and find out why.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why are young people being warehoused – that is, kept in short-term care facilities – for long periods of time?

MS EVANS: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I do require more detail. My hon. friends on this side of the House are yelling, "Where?" I'd like to know as well. Where are they being warehoused? We've made every effort, for example, in the capital region to move children from facilities such as hotels, that were not the most appropriate place for them to be placed, to look for additional facilities outside the city if necessary. We have looked all over Alberta where we could find proper placements for children. We are adding treatment facilities, for example, for children who have very special needs in co-operation with our partners in AADAC as well as with facilities that are currently in existence. So, again, if I could receive some specifics from the hon. member, I'd be very happy to follow up.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, the specifics are in the report that she was given.

My question is to her – and I repeat a question that I previously asked in the House – will the minister undertake to report publicly the action that the government has taken on the advocate's recommendations before the end of this session, not about the advocate but about his recommendations?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, of course I will report. I indicated we would report previously, and we will report whatever we can as soon as possible. We have consistently tabled in this House the annual reports and the business plans of the child and family services authorities, and I'll be very pleased to respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

North American Energy Working Group

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a recent speaking engagement in the city of Calgary the Prime Minister of Canada announced that he had created a task force of senior federal ministers to address issues related to what has been referred to as a continental energy policy. Further to that, at the conclusion of the Summit of the Americas held last weekend in Quebec City, our Prime Minister together with the Presidents of the United States and Mexico announced the creation of a further body, the North American energy working group. I think it is critical that the province of Alberta, as the owner of our natural resources, be involved in any discussions taking place about our energy resources; namely, oil and gas. My first question, then, is to our Minister of Energy. Can the minister please inform the members of this Legislature whether or not the federal government has indicated any role or participation for Alberta on this task force of federal ministers?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member alluded to the principle of Alberta resource ownership and that has, of course, also been confirmed by the Premier publicly and been on record about not being able to be included. It's impossible not to include this government as it is the owner of the resource and acts as custodian for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, there's been great interest in the continental energy plan since the election of President George Bush and subsequent appointment of Vice-President Cheney. This has spilled over to indicate a whole new level of interest from our federal government in the province of Alberta, and of course we're responding gladly and warmly to the overtures that they're giving us.

With respect to a specific role being played in either the cabinet committee that's been created by the Prime Minister or, secondly, the North American energy group, there is at this stage no formal role offered to the province of Alberta. However, in the first minutes of the North American energy working group, the working group has been told very clearly that the work will respect the energy policies and jurisdictions of participants: federal, provincial, and state. So it's clearly embedded in the initial minutes of the first meeting. We have started to speak with Minister McClellan and the Alberta connection . . .

MS CARLSON: This is a speech.

MR. SMITH: It's not a speech as much as it's a very important part of the energy policy of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and the recognition of the importance of the resource ownership issue that the Liberal opposition seems to want to neglect in this discussion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that no formal role has been offered to the province of Alberta, I'm wondering if the minister and/or his ministry has initiated any steps to ensure that Alberta in fact does play a role on this new task force.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you. In fact, on April 5, Mr. Speaker, we were able to adjoin in a conference call with all ministers in Canada to talk about these issues: the opportunity that is represented to resource-owning and resource-producing provinces and also the tremendous role that Alberta can play as a processor of natural gas that can be piped down from both Alaska and the Northwest Territories and the fact that we can now capitalize on this very important petrochemical and natural gas infrastructure that exists in the province.

On the international front, Mr. Speaker, I was very fortunate to be able to meet briefly with the ambassador of Mexico to Canada, who was here in town to express regrets to the Premier for President Vicente Fox's inability to arrive here. There are companies now working in Mexico on developing gas projects: Precision Drilling, Paramount Resources, and Canadian Hunter. That's going to indicate a tightly knit co-operation not only between Canada and Mexico but also in the entire NAFTA area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister advise whether Alberta will have a role of any sort in the North American energy working group created out of the Summit of the Americas?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that is of critical importance to Alberta. As the Premier has stated and I have followed up with written communication to the federal government, we very strongly have indicated our desire. Our obligation we feel as a province is to be part of this overall process.

Now, we understand that Alberta will be included as part of the Canadian delegation to the working group that will be working with the overall initiative, and we will of course commit all necessary resources to make effective representation on this very, very important topic.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Swan Hills Waste Treatment Facility

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past 12 years Alberta taxpayers have forked over $441 million to support the Premier's hazardous waste treatment plant located in Swan Hills and are on the hook for an additional $22 million in cleanup costs. On July 28, 1995, in reference to turning over Swan Hills to the private sector, the Premier said, and I quote: it's the philosophy of government to get out of business; the plant is moving now into a commercial stage, and as of December 31, 2000, Swan Hills is back in the hands of the government. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister explain why the government has broken the terms of the Financial Administration Act by not getting the approval of Albertans before getting back into the business of hazardous waste?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll ask the Minister of Infrastructure to respond to the question.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, I think that when you look at the history of the treatment of hazardous waste within this province, the Swan Hills plant has played a major role in that. As a matter of fact, when you look at what's happened in Canada, there is no plant in North America that can meet the standards of the Swan Hills plant. So we believe that it still has a very important function to play within the province, particularly as the petrochemical industry is further developed and, also, there is some waste that will be generated from other economic drivers within the province. It's extremely important that that plant be here to protect the environment.

You know, I get a kick out what the Liberals continually do. They pretend that they want to protect the environment, yet when we've got a plant within Alberta that is capable of destroying even the most hazardous of wastes in Canada, they want to shut it down.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, given that the terms of the Financial Administration Act have been broken, will the Minister of Finance commit to bringing any deal made for the purchase of the Swan Hills waste treatment centre before this Legislature and Albertans before going ahead?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, this plant has a very important role to play in environmental protection within the whole of Canada, never mind just within Alberta. So we will be working to involve the private sector as much as we possibly can, but once again, this plant is critical to Alberta.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, one more time to the Minister of Finance: will she please explain why they broke the terms of the Financial Administration Act, and will she commit to bringing that information before the Legislature?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Infrastructure has clearly identified that this plant has had tremendous benefits for the province of Alberta. We have put in place . . . [interjections] Well, if the hon. member opposite will keep quiet for a minute, I will go through this program. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, ignoring the chitter chatter from across the way — we have answered this question several times. We will be dealing with the private sector to put a new arrangement in place. When that is completed, we will bring it forward and let the members of the House and Albertans know what it is.

Clearly, this facility has been instrumental in cleaning up the environment and some very, very bad hazardous wastes in this province, and anyone who thinks it would be worth while to shut this facility down is absolutely mistaken. I'm going to give one example, Mr. Speaker, of something I know that occurred this last year in the Nanaimo secondary school district. The high school in that community, which services all of central Vancouver Island, it was discovered, had blue asbestos. The only facility in Canada that could take the hazardous waste and dispose of it effectively was in fact this facility. It got that hazardous waste out of the community, off the island, and disposed of. So people from other jurisdictions have also been able to clean up their environment.

For this member to stand up one day and plead the environmental case and then the other day to want to shut down the facility is ludicrous but typical of that side.

Speaker's Ruling Improper Inferences

THE SPEAKER: The chair is going to review some of the words used in that last series of questions. Suggestions have been made by an hon. member that laws are being broken. Then that hon. member has a responsibility to pursue that matter by way, I suspect, of a privilege point or a contempt point, and the House will have to deal with the matter. Words should not be taken lightly unless they can be followed up on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is continuing to play shell games with the people of Alberta in its budgetary practices. This year they are predicting a surplus of $817 million. What they aren't telling Albertans is that they have funneled $2.3 billion of future infrastructure spending into this year's budget to make the surplus lower than it would seem otherwise. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Why did the government pour $2.3 billion of future spending on infrastructure into this year's budget if not to underestimate the size of the surplus, which was really over $3 billion?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, sometimes the zingers come across the room here, and that's got to be one of the best zingers I've heard. Let me go through this one more time. Please pay attention on the opposite side or in the third party.

The projects that are being funded under the onetime spending element, $3.2 billion, have been on the table for a very long time. Just to make it perfectly clear, one of the projects that this hon. member, who was a former city council member, should be abundantly familiar with is the completion of the Anthony Henday Drive ring road. I've heard about that since 1989. So that wasn't something forward; that's something from the back. I can tell you that right now.

Then we look at the redevelopment of the Royal Alexandra hospital in Edmonton to add 160 beds. We've heard from these members opposite: we need more beds. Well, here's coming 160 beds. So we're going to move on that project for your community. You should know about that; you've been complaining about it for years. Then we get into another one. Oh, here's another one that he should be familiar with, the University of Alberta in your own community. We're going to look at the connecting construction of the engineering building here at the University of Alberta, something that's been asked for for a long time. Now, let's get into the rest of Alberta and get into the list of things that are going on. We're going to look at the construction and the design of the Children's hospital in Calgary. That was announced last year.

As you can see from this list, Mr. Speaker, some of these announcements were made a year ago, some of them six months ago, some of them five months ago, some of them 10 years ago. This is called catch-up. So to suggest that we're looking at things to eliminate a potential surplus from this year is ludicrous.

MR. MASON: Why is the minister not answering the question which was put to her, which is: why is $2.3 billion worth of spending which will be spent in future years being put in this budget?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. minister, as I understand it, the schedule for the next number of months – two, three, four, five, six – has a lot to do with time allocated for the debate of the budget. This is the question period today, not the budget debate period, so I'm really having difficulty. Questions have to be pointed rather than leading to debate, so let's go on to the third one. I really suspect that between now and probably September or October – we'll probably still be sitting here – we'll be looking at certain aspects of the budget.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope this one goes better. [interjection] On the members opposite, I mean.

Why is the minister abandoning modern and accepted budgeting practices in favour of hiding money under the mattress?

THE SPEAKER: Well, it's pretty much the same type of question.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

School Transportation Guidelines

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents in my constituency have expressed concerns about how far children are expected to walk to and from school on a daily basis. I understand students who live within 2.4 kilometres of a school are not eligible for transportation funding. My constituents would like to see this policy changed to 1.6 kilometres, 2 kilometres, and 2.4 kilometres for elementary, junior, and senior high school students respectively. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister consider changing the distance formula to better recognize the age and needs of students?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is an excellent suggestion. One of the issues that we're up against is that this particular suggestion would cost us $75 million to do. At this present time I felt it more important that the $75 million be directly into the classroom. However, I will undertake with the hon. member to take a look at perhaps expanding the high school distance even more in order to have the elementary distance even smaller. So I will undertake to work with the hon. member to come up with a cost-neutral solution to this problem.

MRS. JABLONSKI: My second question is again to the Minister of Learning. Computerized maps are used to calculate the route with the shortest distance. The computer does not consider the safety of a route; it merely calculates distance. The computer does not recognize that walking next to the river or on a trail through a wooded area may be unsafe. Would the minister consider adding a clause to the urban transportation grant to ensure that the route is calculated based on distance and safety so that students are not walking in unsafe areas?

DR. OBERG: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is again for the Minister of Learning. Can parents in Alberta expect to see changes to the distance requirements for transportation funding by September of this year?

DR. OBERG: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the answer for that one is not as simple as the last question. As I've said, what we have to take a look at is the cost neutrality of this, and I've committed to sitting down with the hon. member to ensure that this is indeed cost neutral.

As I stated prior to this, the original question asked for around $75 million in transportation grants. I feel that that $75 million could be better used within the classroom. However, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will sit down with the hon. member, and if there is a cost-neutral way we can do this, we certainly will, and it would be effective by September 1.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate in Recognitions. Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly approximately 50 parents and students that work with the School of Hope. Now, this school is based in Vermilion but truly teaches students throughout every part of Alberta. They are accompanied today by Mrs. Helene Prediger, Mr. Brian Prediger, Mr. Chuck Marple, and Mrs. Claudia Evans. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you two residents of Whitecourt in my constituency. First of all, Town Councillor Willard Strebchuk, a fellow colleague for 10 years; and a very successful businessman and a great local volunteer, Don Guenette. I'd like you all to welcome these two individuals to this Assembly today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour and a privilege to rise today to recognize a former member of this Assembly, who was first elected, I think, if my memory serves me correctly, in 1979 and re-elected in 1983, I believe, and was the first representative from the riding of Edmonton-Glengarry after it was created in a redistribution, and if I might put in a fairly partisan comment, the best member that that particular riding ever had. He held that riding for the Conservative Party for those two terms. I'd like to ask Mr. Rollie Cook, a friend for many years, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often I get the pleasure to introduce a guest, so I would like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly today a very good friend, a fine fellow, former law partner, Mr. Peter Pastewka. Peter is sitting in the members' gallery. If he would please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven to participate.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Pat and Alice Smith and Family

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to commend the Camrose county for their yearly farm family of the year award and recognize the 2001 award winners. The farm family of the year award serves to raise awareness of the agriculture community and was created to recognize outstanding community involvement and the family's role in agriculture.

The winning family is that of Pat and Alice Smith of Bittern Lake. The Smith family spans four generations, and all have been active in their community through numerous organizations such as 4-H, recreation, co-ops, and the church. Family farms are of vital importance to the communities of Alberta. They are food producers and community builders. Family farms provide our communities with the enthusiasm, dedication, and open arms that make Alberta such a wonderful place in which to live and raise our families.

Congratulations to the Smith family of Bittern Lake, their eight children – Donald, Joseph, David, Charlotte, Sharon, Annette, Anita, Janette – and their extended families.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Cadet Honour Band of the Prairie Region

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday evening, April 21, I had the honour and the pleasure of attending the cadet honour band of the prairie region's Salute to Canada's Peacekeepers performance at the Northern Alberta Jubilee Auditorium. The program performances included a swing band, a symphonic band, a stomp group, and a pipe band, and they were indeed entertaining. Four of my constituents were some of the performers: Flight Sergeant A. Fleming on the flute, Flight Sergeant R. Lawrie on the clarinet, Petty Officer Class 2 E. Hunt performing with the trumpet, and Warrant Officer Class 2 M. Duffley on the French horn. It was a wonderful evening, a terrific salute to our peacekeepers and indeed a very enjoyable evening performed by very talented young people.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Erik Pedersen

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to recognize Mr. Erik Pedersen, who celebrated his 75th birthday on April 22 of this year. His accomplishments are many. He immigrated to Canada from Denmark in 1951, and in October 1952 he successfully cofounded a weekly Scandinavian program on a volunteer basis broadcast over CKUA radio.

The first program aired on October 26, 1952, and the last program was broadcast on December 31, 1994. The format was music and news from Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, 20 minutes to each country. Mr. Pedersen's program was the longest running ethnic program in the world.

In his distinguished career at Woodward's he turned customers into lifelong friends with his courteous and cheery manner.

Mr. Pedersen lives in Edmonton-Gold Bar with his lovely wife, Therese, and has a son, Paul, and a daughter, Anne-Marie, and two grandchildren, Mikella and Madelena.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Wentworth Manor

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am proud to recognize in this Assembly Wentworth Manor, a wonderful facility built for seniors in Calgary-West in 1996 by the Brenda Strafford Foundation Ltd. and which due to a recent major expansion truly offers over 200 Calgary seniors a safe, supportive environment to age in place.

Last Friday, April 20, the Premier, myself, local dignitaries, and residents celebrated the grand opening of Wentworth Court. Now there are four distinct levels of living for seniors: independent retirement; private assisted living with four levels of care contracted on a private pay basis; third, designated assisted living, which is 40 beds contracted with the CRHA; and, fourth, a traditional nursing home care level with 73 beds also contracted with the CRHA.

Wentworth Manor under the leadership of visionary and humanitarian Barrie Strafford, chairman and COO of the foundation, is truly an example of an innovative, supportive living facility that brings health care services to seniors through a business partnership. My congratulations to you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Portage College Sports and Education Dinner

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to recognize the first sports and education dinner which was held at Portage College on Saturday, April 21. The college's mandate is to stretch out into the community and meet educational and training needs within the region. They accomplished this with their main campus in Lac La Biche and 12 service centres reaching 1,600 students.

President Bill Persley stated at the dinner that the purpose of the event was to raise awareness and money for scholarships for students enrolled at Portage College that demonstrate a financial need. Attendees had the privilege of hearing guest speakers Walter Gretzky and Henry Gizmo Williams.

The dinner raised approximately $20,000, and I would like to congratulate all those involved on their successful efforts and the commitment shown to those constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul who will access the scholarship. A great effort, a great cause, a great job.

Thank you.

Kelsey MacMillan

MR. FISCHER: It is my pleasure to recognize a very talented young lady from the Irma 4-H beef club who recently won the provincial 4-H public speak-off on April 7 in Wetaskiwin. Kelsey MacMillan, a grade 11 student from the Irma high school, won over 13 others from regions across the province. She had short notice to prepare her six-minute speech on what she envisioned rural life to be in the future. She will be competing in the national speak-off in Toronto in November of this year. Also she will be master of ceremonies for the 4-H provincials next year in Calgary. Kelsey has been a member since grade 5 and feels 4-H has been an excellent influence on her life.

I've had the wonderful pleasure of being neighbours of the MacMillan family since 1937 and knowing well Kelsey, her mom and dad, her grandparents, and her great-grandparents, who are 1906 homesteaders.

Congratulations, Kelsey. We are all very proud of you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Ann Nicolai

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Ann Nicolai, the former co-ordinator of the Beverly Towne Community Development Society. Ann Nicolai's contributions to the communities of the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands are many. The large number of groups, associations, coalitions, and societies that Ann has been involved with know her to be a hardworking and dedicated person who put much time, energy, inspiration, and practical ideas to work improving the areas they call home.

Ann Nicolai was a key person in the development and implementation of Beverly's redevelopment plan. Everything from the development of the Beverly Towne farmers' market, the annual spring cleanup, a couple of community gardens, and the Beverly Towne job fair owe their births to Ann.

I would like to add my personal appreciation to Ann, who was a very valuable resource to me in my service as city councillor in ward 3. Ann resigned from her full-time position at the Beverly Towne Community Development Society just this past March and is now working part-time with another wonderful association, that being the Candora Society of Edmonton.

I know her colleagues and associates along with the neighbourhood she served in in her capacity as Beverly Towne's co-ordinator will join me in applauding her commitment and contribution to their communities and wishing her the best in all that she endeavours in the years to come. Ann has been able to join us today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: All hon. members, the time allocation for that particular segment of our routine is one minute.

Now, today is also the 63rd anniversary of the birth of the hon. Member for Highwood and the Deputy Speaker.

Bill 202
Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity)
Amendment Act, 2001

[Debate adjourned April 24]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to be able to address private member's Bill 202, presented by the MLA for St. Albert. While I appreciate very much her desire in bringing it forward and empathize with the reasons for bringing it forward, I don't actually agree with the bill. There are a lot of reasons for that, particularly from my perspective. We live in a province that does not have government-controlled insurance, unlike British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. We have private insurers that take the risk along with the rest of us when we all have to have insurance for our vehicles. The only way to accomplish what the hon. member is trying to do is to in fact raise the rates for other people who have proven that they have a lower risk level.

Insurance agents or companies currently employ many factors when pricing automobile insurance coverage; however, the use of the three criteria, which are age, gender, and marital status, have in fact been challenged by human rights commissions. At issue is the practice of providing similar insurance coverage to two individuals but at different prices due to one or more of those rating factors.

To date all final rulings by the Canadian courts have been in favour of current practice, including the 1992 Supreme Court of Canada decision in Bates versus Zurich Insurance and the 1993 Alberta Court of Appeal's decision in *Waters* versus Co-operators*. A leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was denied in that latter case.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

In addition to that, the relationship between driver age and accident frequency is well established in Canada and a number of other countries as well. Younger drivers under the age of 25 are involved in a greater number of both fatal and injury-producing accidents than their older counterparts, and the relative risk facing younger drivers can be 2.5 to 3 times higher than that of other drivers.

The evidence is also clear that female drivers typically demonstrate a lower accident risk than male drivers. As the mother of two sons, while I would love for them to have lower insurance rates, I do in fact understand why there might be a difference between my sons and someone else's daughters.

Presently insurers are permitted to use a variety of rating criteria, including age, gender, and marital status. In most Canadian provinces and territories for the principal operators in the range of 16 to 24 years of age insurers typically charge a premium which decreases with increasing age, the premium level being lower for female or married principal operators. Many insurers also use the same pattern of premium reduction with increasing age for principal operators 30 years of age and over, with premium levels for female principal operators being lower than that for males.

What would happen today if we were to pass this law would in fact be a decrease for male drivers on a short-term basis of about 25 or 27 percent and an immediate increase of up to 45 percent for our young female drivers. Further, the Insurance Bureau of Canada indicates that while that would be the initial reaction, it would in fact go up again in a very short period of time because one of the side benefits of having lower insurance rates for young male drivers is that we would in fact have more young male drivers on our roads. With the accident rate still being 2.5 to 3 times higher than that for young female drivers, we would have the risk of having more accidents on our highways, and there are enough accidents now, Mr. Speaker.

The only Canadian provinces that restrict the use of age, gender, and marital status as auto insurance rating criteria are in fact British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. I was living in British Columbia back in the '70s when they got rid of all the private insurers and brought in British Columbia insurance. I was out there when the people voted en masse because insurance was going to be so much cheaper for everybody. There was an amazing experience, because in about a year insurance rates were as high or higher than they had been when the private companies had been there, but the government got to own it and run it. That's not actually what we do here in Alberta.

By comparison, in 1988 the Ontario Automobile Insurance Board proposed changes to the auto insurance classification plan that would have disallowed the use of age, gender, and marital status as a rating criteria. Insurers were required to make costly modifications to their computer systems in preparation for those changes; however, the proposed uniform classification plan was dropped by the government due largely to opposition from older drivers who would have faced substantially higher premiums. I think that we would have exactly that same scenario here.

Canadian insurers establish the price of car insurance to reflect the risk of an accident, and the truth is that these young men do have a higher risk of accidents. It's sad, and I feel bad for them. I feel bad for my sons as they struggle to pay for their insurance, but at the end of the day we've made it to the point where they're 23 and 24 now, and with my help and some help from their father they've been able to make their insurance payments and learn that you cannot fool around in your car. You have to take this as a very serious responsibility, and all in all it's not been a totally bad experience for them to have to realize that their peers, members of their sex in their own age group, have created this scenario.

I'm hoping that all drivers will take their privilege of driving seriously, including our young male and young female drivers. When the young female drivers have as many accidents and get as many speeding tickets as their male counterparts, I'm pretty sure their rates are going to go up correspondingly. It's not what I would wish to have. As somebody who's on the highway on a nonstop basis, I would prefer everybody to take it seriously. So I'm not going to support 202, and I would urge this Assembly also to not support it.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have the opportunity to rise in second reading and speak to Bill 202, the

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2001. This is an interesting bill for me. I think what's brought out in this at first look is that, well, this is a bill about fairness or about equity or about human rights, and I think that is inaccurate. This is not a bill about human rights. This is about what one does, not who one is. It is performance based, not identity based. It's not about identity. It's about a disparity in conduct, essentially.

It's interesting for me to note that when we look at the early Charter challenges that came forward under section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, a number of them in fact were not based at all on what we would typically call human rights. But I think that was part of the process of sorting that all out, because one of the ones that comes to mind for me was a group of duck hunters who wanted to go up against the bear hunters because the duck hunters got a shorter hunting season and felt that this was discriminatory and wanted to apply it under section 15 of the Charter. Of course, it did not take very long, but it did take us a while to sort through all those cases to come to a better understanding about what the issues are around human rights and what the dividing line is when we look at fairness and equity regarding people and their activities.

Human rights is not about treating everyone the same; it's not. That's why we have the subsection under section 15 which allows for programs that ameliorate conditions of the disadvantaged. Human rights I think are about fundamental participation in institutions. In this province we had the Vriend decision that went to the Supreme Court, and that was about an individual's ability to access the Alberta Human Rights Commission, to hear their case heard. That was of course a government agency, and that government agency refused to even hear the case. So that was about access to and participation in a government agency or service. In fact, the Supreme Court did rule that basic human rights had been denied there, and the province was given instructions on how to handle that.

In this case we have a question of whether able-bodied young males are a discriminated-against minority. Under the criteria I've just outlined and certainly the criteria that have been put forward by the Supreme Court – and the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View very thoroughly outlined what some of those cases are, so I won't repeat that information, and I thank her for bringing it forward – these young men are not considered a disadvantaged minority, so this is not a human rights issue. So what is it?

Well, the next question is: is driving a right or a privilege? I think we've already answered that question in society. Driving is a privilege. Driving is not like boating. It is indeed a privilege that is earned, frankly. We demonstrate that already by licensing some people and not licensing others. For instance, we don't license the blind to drive, and there are other people, based on medical conditions, who are not granted a licence to drive.

Indeed, we take away licences from people in this society. Chronic defaulters on maintenance enforcement payments can lose their licences. So we as society have the ability to pull the privilege, to revoke the privilege that has been granted. Obviously, driving licences are also revoked as a result of criminal charges. For example, drunk driving often comes with a provision in the sentencing that the driving licence is removed from the person for a period of time or forever. I mean, essentially we do not supply a driving licence in every 16-year-old's birthday cake. They have to go out and earn it, and they have to pay for it. We have even gone further in this province and recently instituted graduated driving licences. So on the question of whether driving is a right or a privilege, I think it's quite clear that it in fact is regarded as a privilege here.

The question that we're really looking at is that we have a group of individuals who are assessed a risk factor by their conduct, which has a cost attached to it. The question is: do all people share in the costs that are incurred as a result of the behaviour of those individuals, or do we assign that cost and the risk to the individuals who are in fact exhibiting the behaviour? Thus far the insurance companies – they're the assigners of risk – have certainly said: no; we charge the individuals based on their behaviour.

Now, I think what some people could argue – and perhaps it's true – is that in assigning it to the entire group, we do capture some young males who in fact are very good drivers with a good driving record who always obey the rules, stop at the stoplights, are careful and considerate drivers. They are caught in this as a result of being a young male, and they have to pay the higher rate as well. I think that could be argued.

How do we separate out those good drivers from the others that are causing the problems and are raising the cost for all involved? I think there may well be ways, in this day and age of computers and the ability to store vast amounts of information and to sort through it, to collate and analyze that. There may well be ways for the insurance industry in fact to be able to be more specific in how it's assigning that.

Now, I think the answer that comes out of it is that we prefer that the group that incurs it pays it. Certainly in the other provinces where this has been challenged – in one province there was enough of an outcry from the individuals who would have had to share in the cost, that being older drivers and young female drivers, that the government of the day pulled the bill or did not institute the program.

I appreciate that the member who proposed the bill was doing so in all good faith and was trying to correct an imbalance as she saw it, but this is not an issue of human rights. The unfairness that is inherent in this system is unfair because of the behaviour and conduct of a certain group. That behaviour and conduct is voluntary, as is the kind of behaviour they're engaging in; in other words, driving.

So we have that driving is a privilege, that you have to earn the right and to conduct yourself carefully. Hopefully the insurance companies will begin to take that into consideration and be able to bring those rates more into line and more specific to the individuals who incur them.

I'd like to leave enough time for the proposer of the bill to speak to it, and I will close my comments with that. I do not support the bill, and thank you for the opportunity to comment on it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming in the two or three minutes left.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and say a few words with respect to Bill 202. At the outset I would like to say that I'm very much in agreement with the comments made on this matter by the hon. members for Calgary-Lougheed and Airdrie-Rocky View.

It seems to me that the principal argument here is that basing premiums on gender is discriminatory. That is definitely a true statement, just as it is to say that premiums are based on age or marital status, but the fact is that those are the bases of establishing a premium in most of the jurisdictions in North America. The fact is that in each of those cases there is a measurement of risk that is statistically valid. The fact is that in our society we do recognize discrimination as being valid if it is for a valid purpose. That is recognized in the Constitution Act of Canada. The fact is that much of the legislation that we pass is discriminatory in some nature, but the reason it stands the tests of time and of our courts is that there is a rational purpose for it.

I think most people that I have talked to intuitively understand that there is a reason for looking at age and gender for the determination of insurance premiums. What I would like to do is just refer to some statistics in Alberta which establish that that intuitive reaction to the validity of using age and gender for determining a premium is in fact valid. It's a comparison of the 1999 third-party liability Alberta claims results. In the category of 16- to 20-year-old females – and these are females who were the principal operators of vehicles – there were some 24,839, and they had 2,188 claims. Compare that to the same age group for males. There were in fact fewer males, 23,998, but they had more claims, 3,023. More importantly, the frequency of accidents per 100 vehicles for males was 12.6 compared to 8.8 for females. That's a 43 percent increase over females. Here's the real statistic that makes sense as to the reason for the difference. There was almost $25 million in total claims paid on account of females and $43 million, almost $44 million, on account of males. That's a 75 percent increase.

So I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the statistics relative to Alberta experience clearly justifies that there is a reasonable basis for treating young males differently than young females.

Thank you, sir.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Standing Order 8(5)(i) provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate. The time has run out for other members to participate, so we'd invite the hon. Member for St. Albert to close debate on Bill 202.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. I'd like to take this opportunity to ask everyone in this Assembly, through you, Mr. Speaker, to consider why we vote for something in principle. That's why I believe the second reading of Bill 202 is what we have before us for consideration right now.

What is the intention of Bill 202? The intention is to eliminate a discriminatory practice by virtue of gender designation with insurance premiums for car insurance. What I'd like people to think about right now and what I would ask the members of the Assembly to consider is the aspect of group consideration here, which is what the insurance industry is doing with this discriminatory practice.

For instance, the best example I can use is taken from my teaching experience of years ago. Many of us will recall being asked to work on a project as a group. Often there are people who don't pull their weight in a group, and do we appreciate those people who don't pull their weight? No, because some of us are penalized through marks; some of us are not given adequate acclaim for the work that is done. I say to everyone here that my concern is that we understand what is the feeling of the young male drivers right now who feel that they are discriminated against because they are thought of as a member of a group.

In this day and age, it's also my understanding, we're going to ask individuals and young people to consider what it is like to take responsibility for their own actions, yet we acquiesce and accept insurance premiums being delivered to them and asked of them that are unequal because they have to pay according to the group that they belong to.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I urge everyone in this Assembly to vote in favour of the passing of the second reading of this bill so that you can speak for the young males in this province who don't like to, don't appreciate, and don't want to continue to pay for, if you will, the sins or the misadventures of other members of their group, a group that they cannot freely dissociate themselves from. So that's why I say that it is not something that is discriminatory by virtue of

– we're not talking about human rights. We are saying, as one of the members mentioned earlier, yes, this is based on behaviour and conduct, but these premiums are high because they're based on the behaviour and conduct of a group, not of an individual. It's the individual whom I'm asking everyone in this Assembly to give acknowledgment to.

I'd also like to make reference, Mr. Speaker, to the insurance industry's response to my proposal of this bill. Many of them have written us, and I know they've written other members of this Assembly, and their response is what I call a ledger response. They have said: if we're not going to get this amount of money, then we'll just put it onto somebody else. Quite frankly, I think that's simplistic. I think it is unfair, and I think what they are doing in response to it is an easy way of making sure that their industry stands up for what they want, and that is the bottom line. I say: don't accept what the industry tells you. What they've done is they've made just a ledger calculation right across the board.

So, quite frankly, I ask everybody here to speak to, vote for what I consider is against a discriminatory practice and for the right of the individual male to have access just as the female does to the same equal rate for their auto insurance. Let the intention of the bill determine how you're going to vote now, because this is second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion lost]

Bill 203

Residential Care Housing Committee Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak today for the many overlooked voices in Alberta. We all have constituents who need supports in their daily living, and these individuals are not always able to advocate for themselves. I'm here to bring the concerns of many of our vulnerable adults – the elderly, the infirm, the permanently disabled, and the mentally ill from well-to-do to lower income – regarding their need for flexible, reliable, and appropriate housing options.

Currently there is an unregulated market operating in Alberta, a market where the consumers are people at risk of being taken advantage of. Many of our disabled and elderly are finding themselves paying for substandard living conditions with no assurance against abuse or neglect, and the housing is provided by owners or operators who are not required to be trained in any way whatsoever.

Many residential home operators are often well-intentioned individuals sharing their home with a person or persons in need of special care in their daily living activities. However, other operators are not as philanthropic or compassionate and exploit the elderly, clients of AISH, and the permanently disabled who really have nowhere else to turn.

Municipalities and other key stakeholder organizations have contacted me as an MLA asking for help to deal with residential care homes that operate without standards. Currently the operators of these homes are doing nothing illegal, so municipal authorities can do nothing to prevent them from taking in people in need of supports for living. They are therefore seeking a solution that provides safe and appropriate housing options that are community-based outside of institutions. Bill 203 addresses this need directly.

A new trend of demand for care in the community is emerging, care in an environment that deals with the whole health and wellness of the individual, going beyond acute care. Medical and health care needs are important, and this government has recently done and continues to do an admirable job of providing quality home care and institutional care to Albertans. However, the concept of wellness also includes a strong component of supports for daily living to maintain the health and independence of those who need it. A segment of this market is not being assured of standards of care and safety in their daily lives.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 has the specific purpose to identify, list, and eventually regulate residential care homes which house three or fewer clients who are unrelated to the operator and which are homes that do not receive government funding. The process outlined in the bill entails the creation of a residential care homes steering committee. One key task of the committee will be to identify existing unlicensed care providers with the purpose of creating a voluntary list. This list or registry will serve to help the steering committee formulate regulations that will best maintain stable, high-quality housing for the elderly and disabled in Alberta.

The steering committee members will represent key stakeholder groups including the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, regional health authorities as well as representation from the Legislative Assembly, from the government departments of Children's Services, Community Development, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, Justice, Municipal Affairs, and Alberta Seniors. The steering committee will be chaired by an appointee of the Minister of Health and Wellness and will be provided with adequate staff support during its four-year mandate.

Mr. Speaker, the issues to be addressed by the steering committee are broad, and the policies they are intended to formulate will be equally so. There needs to be a system of consistent, broad-based standards in place to ensure quality care. As I have said earlier, there are currently no standards for or monitoring of residential care homes with three or fewer clients. Operators have been able to dance around the existing gaps in the laws by appointing clients as building superintendents or resident managers when municipal authorities try to enforce current legislation such as the Protection for Persons in Care Act, which regulates facilities receiving government funding, and the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, which is designated to only regulate care facilities of four or more tenants.

Bill 203 will bring an end to this lack of provincewide standards in this area and bring accountability to providers who are currently operating beyond the pale of good reason and good conscience. The lack of law has left many of our society's at-risk citizens unprotected, and that is something I find very troubling, Mr. Speaker.

The elderly, a segment of the population which is both aging and rapidly expanding, must have more quality housing options, ones that provide them with safety and the necessary supports needed for daily living. There is a shortage of appropriate housing in most of Alberta's urban centres and rural areas, particularly for housing that provides some level of support. There are many fine lodges and institutions throughout the province. I don't dispute that. But many aging Albertans, for example, want to maintain their independence and also have the option of living in a house or home in their community and near their loved ones. Larger urban facilities do not always provide this preference in choice. This bill helps our need to address the realities and needs of rural communities.

Mr. Speaker, this government has always made a point of respecting the dignity and importance of personal choices of Albertans. We have respected the rights of people while at the same time ensuring the choices they have are safe and viable. The Latin phrase, though, caveat emptor, or let the buyer beware, has always been a fundamental tenet of free-market economics. I would submit that this principle does not operate soundly when one party is consistently in a position of need and has extreme difficulty serving his or her own best interests in the marketplace.

Such is the condition of many of the people who choose to live in residential care homes, and they need protection from exploitation that is enshrined in law. The difficulty for these people is their vulnerability, that they cannot just pick up and move out of a residential care situation on their own. They are captive to their frailty or to their disability. They may have psychiatric conditions, brain injury, or high needs, such as the frail elderly. Presently the general market does not have to provide competitive standards of service but, rather, a minimal level.

Mr. Speaker, there is also very little stopping the care provider from abusing his clients, be it financially, emotionally, or physically. As I said, it is hard for the client or resident to change or to escape from an undesirable situation when there are no guiding principles in law for these clients. I would like to remind everyone that even bed-and-breakfasts are regulated in this province and others in order to meet standards of care and cleanliness for their customers. Why is it not the case for residential care homes which house society's frail and vulnerable citizens?

Yes, we are talking about at-risk or vulnerable adults in society who require help to take care of many things the rest of us take for granted. Many residents are bedridden and need health care and personal supports to be turned, cleaned, fed, and treated with decency. There are reports, for example, of residents being removed finally from residential care facilities with bedsores or suffering from malnutrition because there were not minimal staffing requirements nor any enforced standards of care. There is also no assurance in this province that residential care home operators maintain a standard of basic cleanliness for their clients, nor that it is their responsibility to even facilitate social activities so important to basic mental health.

The CHA, the Capital health authority, and the Calgary regional health authority have established their own personal care homes systems of standards, which include a registry with specific qualifying criteria such as fire inspection, liability insurance, single-room occupancy, and food handlers. A database posts vacancies and lists homes. Indications are that families truly value this approach. However, these are limited to health and home care supports and are not provincewide.

There is a profound need and right, Mr. Speaker, for all at-risk citizens to live a clean and dignified existence, and when they cannot provide it for themselves, they may turn to a residential care home. Also, I think a very significant point is that many citizens may not yet be frail or vulnerable but still choose to not live alone, preferring a more social atmosphere that provides critically nutritious meals with a room. It is true many seniors or disabled persons could be placed in a lodge or an institution such as an acute care hospital or a nursing home, but many people in this province want their home to feel like a real home, and they also want to have their individuality and independence preserved to the greatest extent possible. We must respect this wish, which is so fundamental to a person's wellness. The elderly and those with special needs must be treated with respect and dignity.

Mr. Speaker, these are problems that Bill 203 seeks to solve. We are looking to act right now to serve the best interests of many vulnerable people seeking residential care housing options. By providing them, their families and caregivers with information about the market, knowledge of resources available to seniors and the disabled when they're seeking a residential care home as well as a mechanism to listen to the concerns of clients, we will eventually provide vulnerable or at-risk Albertans with quality, independent, community-based living.

Through an intensive public education component Bill 203 sets out that Albertans should be informed of the choices they have in residential care, such as where they are located and which services are provided. I would also like to point out that the voluntary registry is only a temporary measure until the framework for licensing and monitoring is in place. Also, the need for education and representation is very urgent. We should not wait one more minute to act.

Mr. Speaker, voluntarily registered home operators will not be recommended by the steering committee without first demonstrating good faith in caring for their clients. They and other key stakeholders will be consulted in this process on the best ways to ensure quality service in this industry. Care home operators who try their best to provide good value and service to their clients welcome this legislation. For too long they have been competing with residential care providers who cut corners, provide substandard care, and treat their clients like a commodity.

It is important we realize that residential care homes do exist in Alberta, homes that receive no direct government funding and are paid directly by the client and which house three clients or fewer. Further, they operate without the benefit of accreditation, monitoring, or even acknowledgment of any authority. Their clients are typically on a fixed income such as AISH, CPP disability, or Alberta seniors' benefits, and their limited resources often restrict their ability to advocate for themselves. This condition, which has persisted in Alberta, must be ended.

Would it be the intent of this Assembly to have neighbouring provincial jurisdictions know that we are content with these types of housing conditions for our elderly and those with special needs? Would you be proud to say that Albertans have more regulations to protect tourists than the elderly in residential care?

There are two trends in Alberta that greatly affect the need for legislation like Bill 203. First of all, there is our growing aging population, which affects more than seniors. There are recent recognized studies that address this issue including the well-respected Healthy Aging: New Directions for Care report, better known as the Broda report, and also the Alberta for all Ages: Directions for the Future report, better known as the aging population study.

I also want to quote – not directly quote but refer to – some recommendations in the long-term care review such as that it is important to shift the focus so that the first priority is for people to remain in their homes and other types of supportive living arrangements; expand home care services substantially and also encourage the private and voluntary sectors to expand the range of supportive living options available across the province; expand supportive housing to include light- and medium-care cases, people with mild dementia, and young people with disabilities; set provincewide standards for supportive housing developments and also unbundle other services such as personal care and food services and housing arrangements; give people a choice in the specific package of services they need to meet their assessed needs wherever possible; bring services to people rather than requiring them to move into facilities or travel to where services are provided.

Also, I would like to refer to Housing Alberta's Seniors in the Next 30 Years, by the Urban Futures Institute 1999, who reported that the demand for seniors' accommodation in Alberta will increase faster than the population as a whole and the seniors' population itself. Also, the demand for collective dwellings will increase by 129 percent, and the demand for private dwellings for seniors will increase by 136 percent. As our elderly population booms, we must plan for a positive future by developing innovative solutions to housing with some value-added services and assurance of safety.

The second trend I have to acknowledge is that innovative housing solutions to housing and health needs are occurring. I talk about a specific area within housing. Basically, it is unreasonable and certainly not desirable to relocate massive numbers of aging Albertans into long-term care centres or acute care hospitals only because they require a home with a greater degree of personal security and assistance. Albertans deserve and want to have accommodations that facilitate their independence and their well-being within a community setting, regardless of their age or station in life.

Mr. Speaker, institutional living does not necessarily serve the best interests of all individuals, nor is it their first choice, so we must work to provide safe housing options for all Albertans. There must be more than the conventional institutional health care system. Many elderly and handicapped Albertans do not have a safety net of friends or family to support and care extensively for them. Bill 203 would provide a trustworthy option for their housing and health needs.

If vulnerable Albertans cannot find community-based supportive living that provides for their independence needs, their wellness can't really be assured. Take into consideration a few of the most common illnesses of older Albertans: depression and dementia. People with these common conditions want a smaller and familiar home setting, but they should really not live alone unassisted. They need someone to facilitate recreation, social activity, transportation, and ensure proper diet and exercise. The depressed or those suffering from dementia often need help remembering to take medication or just someone to motivate them daily and remind them of important personal goals.

Mr. Speaker, these are the kinds of services that would be ideally serviced by a small residential care home setting. Keep in mind how common the illnesses of dementia and depression are for the elderly. Also bear in mind the potential cost if the wellness of these individuals is allowed to slide. Then remember seniors will increase from 10 percent of today's population to 20 percent or more in just 20 to 25 years. If we just assure the quality of residential care facilities for Albertans, the free market will provide a housing solution of much lower cost than that of our nursing homes, lodges, or hospitals. If we do not provide a structured market, we are restricting the housing options for Albertans and continuing a system where many Albertans are treated unfairly and without dignity.

Bill 203 is not looking to impose an enormous enforcement and monitoring system upon Albertans. The steering committee can and will facilitate an efficient free market, working collaboratively within existing structures. It will also bring information to potential residents so that they can make informed decisions, and operators will be forced by standards and the market to give good value for money.

The alternative is very bleak, Mr. Speaker. If we persist in providing limited housing options with no standards for our at-risk Albertans, we can expect them on our doorstep. If we choose a responsible course and provide the leadership role in developing regulations for safe, quality housing options, we can then expect them to enjoy their lives, living with a dignity so well deserved. I encourage all members of this Assembly to support Bill 203.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the work that the Member for Calgary-West has done to bring forward this Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act, and her very nice introductory remarks.

Essentially, my issue and my concern with this bill is that the proposal here is to create a committee and that's all. It's outlining what the committee would do in that it would develop standards of care, establish a registry, and develop educational programs, but there's nothing in the legislation that then says what will happen with that. So potentially we can have a group of people come together, do this work, and after four years it's over. Nowhere in here does it say that this will be implemented. It just says that they'll report to the minister. It doesn't say that the minister has to do anything with this. So that's my disappointment in the bill.

There's been a lot of work done here, and it's work that needs to be done. It's acknowledging and opening up an area that we have neglected here in Alberta and an area that needs attention to it, frankly, and needs some regulation and some monitoring and some enforcement. But all this bill does is give us a committee that's going to have meetings, which is fine. That would be a nice thing, to have a committee, but I wish for so much more, and I think it's possible to do so much more. So I haven't decided whether I'm going to support the bill at this point in time. I'll listen to the rest of the debate around it, but my initial reaction to it is that we have a committee established here that doesn't have to go anywhere or do anything. They can just meet for a bunch of years and talk to each other and then it's over. This is an issue that could use a lot of work and a lot of attention.

It was first brought to my attention by the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who had started to work with a number of groups out of Calgary and specifically the group called FAIRE, Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare. I also started to work with this group and have referred people to them and have great respect for the prodigious amount of work that they have done. In essence, Sessional Paper 976/99 is, in effect, all of the standards of care that it's possible that this proposed committee in Bill 203 would, in fact, come up with. They're done; it's here. They have gone through all the legislation across Canada. They've looked at all the issues that are arising from the family members and from the individuals themselves who are in care. They've done all the work. It's right here.

So you can understand my impatience, then, when I hear that there's going to be a committee that's going to look at examining developing standards of care when I know that, in fact, it's out there already. It's out there in more than one place, because the previous Member for Calgary-Buffalo working with the previous Member for Edmonton-Manning in fact proposed a bill in the fall session of 2000. [interjection] Yes, because the Liberals continue to bring forward really good ideas which the Conservatives are kind enough and smart enough to recognize and take advantage of.

The bill was entitled Bill 224, the Seniors' Care Enhancement Act, 2000, and is very thorough in what is being proposed: amendments to the Protection for Persons in Care Act, quite specifically, but also going beyond that and talking about standards, staffing standards, licensing for employees. In order to get a licence, they have to ensure there are sufficient employees on duty, that those people are trained, that their responsibilities are in conjunction with their training, staffing patterns, ratio of care staff to residents, that care staff will not be required to provide other duties such as food preparation or housekeeping or laundry. If they are an individual care attendant, that's what they do. They don't mop the floors and peel turnips. They look after the individuals that they are supposed to, and other people that are doing those support service jobs are not included in the ratio of staff to patient care. Very appropriate.

We've got nutrition and food services standards. This is something I've always found really interesting, where we do bother to mention it, and I'm not speaking specifically to Alberta at this point. Often where we do see it, it says: well, you know, patients or people in care have to be fed. Uh-huh, but I think we have to go further than that and actually put things in like fed from the Canada food guide or adhering to the Canada food guide, because when we just say, well, they have to be fed, you can in fact get away with feeding them bread and water, and there are people who do. If we want to be really responsible and lay this out in a very clear fashion which is able to be monitored and enforced, then you do start getting very specific with standards of care.

So this Bill 224 went through nutrition and food services standards. It's very specific. Fruits and vegetables: a 225-millilitre serving of vegetables. I mean, they actually get down to detailing that kind of thing, and frankly I think that's the level of detail that is needed here. I mean, we're talking people's lives, and it's too easy to just slough it off, and frankly down the road you see people who have been quite abused as a result of it.

Bill 224 also talked about oral health. It talked about having a residents council, having social activities, and recreational planning standards. It talked about administration of medication and, lastly, a task force including gerontologists and members of seniors' advisory groups and board members that would review these provisions and make recommendations on the standards. It talks about confidentiality, telephones, accessibility, room temperature, privacy, visitors, reportable investigations, neglect and abuse, restriction on the use of restraints – which is a really important area for us to be looking at – emergency restraints, monitoring, reassessment of standards. So all of that work has been done in Bill 224, which is certainly available for the Member for Calgary-West and in other places.

Earlier this week I tabled Sessional Paper 62/2001, which was from the Elder Advocates of Alberta group with recommendations about the Protection for Persons in Care Act and the Dependent Adults Act and what could be done there to strengthen the acts. They talk about an Alberta-wide registry. Now, they're specifically talking about a registry that's listing abusers, and Bill 203 is talking about a registry of accommodation that's available, but it's been raised before. This is dated January 2, 2001. They're quite specific on what abuse means and detail it in great depth. They put forward that abusers have to be held accountable and disciplined for their actions as does the care facility in which these people work. They're recommending that the act states proposed penalties, that they publish reports on this.

One interesting thing I picked out of their document was that complainants who are persons in care, shall not be subject to alteration, interruption or discontinuance of services to which they are normally entitled, because of a report of abuse or neglect.

Very good point, yet we do that in many other areas of social care. When we're not sure what's going on and we want to investigate something, all service stops until the investigation is complete, but for somebody who is frail or vulnerable, that can be devastating.

So there are three documents that I've now referenced, all of which have done work on standards of care. I'm frustrated by the idea that we're going to set up a committee that's now going to look at developing standards of care when so many people have already done the work. Yet do we actually see standards of care implemented as a result of this bill? No. We see a committee that produces a paper. It doesn't even insist on that actually. It just says that they'll develop these things but not what else happens with it, how much further it goes.

One of the other issues that I have with what's being proposed here is 20 members being proposed for the committee and nine of them being directly accountable to government. Now, there's sort of an open category of Members of the Legislative Assembly. It would be interesting to see if an opposition member got appointed to this, but something tells me no. I don't know why. There are also members from the departments of Children's Services, Community Development, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, Justice, Municipal Affairs, Seniors, and the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta or the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, both of which councils have completely government-appointed people sitting on them. So that's nine of the 20 positions potentially, and I'll note that it's Members of the Legislative Assembly, so there could be more than one member that's appointed to this. But a minimum of nine of these 20 are government employees or directly responsible to government, in effect.

Then they go on to suggest a regional health authority, Urban Municipalities Association, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. Those are the three additional agencies that they suggest, so that's taking us to 12. Now we're left with eight people; we're not sure where they come from.

It is allowing for members of the committee to be eligible for remuneration and expenses and also is appointing another government person to be the executive director of the committee. So I'm wondering why there isn't something in here that says that there'll be somebody from the Alberta Council on Aging or there'll be somebody on here from the Kerby Centre or from the Society for the Retired and Semi-Retired, all recognized, well-respected groups that advocate for and deal with seniors.

I'll stop here and note that it actually does not specifically say that we are talking about seniors in this bill. It doesn't designate that, and though I notice that the member proposing the bill spoke at length about seniors, frail seniors and vulnerable seniors, in fact the bill talks about "a residence in which personal assistance, lodging and meals are provided for compensation to persons who are 18 years of age or older." So this is meant to capture more than seniors or seniors needing assistance obviously, but according to the mover of the bill it's obviously intended specifically for seniors. So I'm questioning in that case why there isn't some attempt to capture the expertise that we have in the community through those very well-established and well-respected organizations.

One other issue around this. I heard the member saying that these were for private residences, but one of the interesting situations that's arisen recently is that we have a situation certainly in Edmonton – and perhaps it's different in other centres. When you have subsidized housing for seniors, it's a situation where both the individual and the location have to be subsidized, have to be approved, and we're short of seniors' housing right now and for the foreseeable future. We have a situation where there are some other nonprofit organizations and even private providers who would like to be offering services that are in demand, particularly for individuals who are requiring assisted care. In other words, they'd like to be living independently, but they can't quite live totally independently. They might well be in an apartment, but they're needing significant home care or assistance to get going or feed themselves, dress themselves, get out and about.

Those individuals, even if they qualified for subsidized housing, can't take that subsidy and go to another nonprofit agency or go to a private provider and take that subsidy with them. It's only attached to the building, and I think that's an area we need to look at. I think there's some flexibility that is necessary there at this time. I would be uneasy if this were to become a permanent state of affairs, because I think that where you have private corporations offering service, I get uneasy when there's public money going there. But certainly where we know that there is a gap in housing for seniors, where we know that there's housing available, I think there could be a shorter term plan worked out.

Certainly in my constituency I have people who want to go to a certain facility, and they can't because if they leave their current residence, they will lose their housing subsidy. With seniors on a fixed income, that is absolutely critical; it is life or death; it is do or die; it is eat or not eat. Those subsidies are really important to them.

If we're going to be talking about flexibility, if we're going to be talking about care, if we're going to be talking about opportunity for different kinds of housing, I agree very much with the Member for Calgary-West that it needs to be carefully scrutinized. We don't want vulnerable people in a place where they can be taken advantage of, and if we're in a position to put in place regulations and particularly standards of care, we should be doing that. The onus is on us to show the leadership to do it.

I look forward to the rest of the debate on this bill. It's caused me some hard thinking about whether to support it or not. I think I will and that I support the concept that's there. I just truly wish that it had gone far enough. The committee is not enough. Nothing in the bill says that what the committee produces is going to go anywhere, and that's my disappointment.

So thank you for the opportunity to speak to the bill. I'm aware that some of my colleagues also wish to get involved in this debate. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to speak to Bill 203. I believe our focus on this issue has been a long time coming.

Bill 203 would benefit and protect many vulnerable Albertans. I support Bill 203 in concern for the elderly, the infirm, the permanently disabled, and the mentally ill. This legislation would help all of those who are in need of constant yet flexible care. It would protect them from many of the crimes that they may be vulnerable to right now in private care facilities.

In recent years there have been a lot of developments in residential options for individuals who require nonmedical care. These facilities provide constant care outside a hospital or institutional-style group home. This is a great step in the direction of providing people with a more family-style residential care and helping these residents remain in a community and retain a sense of independence.

At present there is a problem facing the residents of some of these facilities. The system of care they have chosen to live within is not protecting their safety or providing them with the standard of care they were promised. These individuals may be abused, neglected, and stolen from.

As more personal care facilities become available to a greater number of people, our government must react in order to ensure that people in our communities are getting the responsible care they deserve. There are currently no legislative guidelines that protect the residents from any possible misfortunes. The law does not set certain standards to which these care facilities must hold. It is the objective of Bill 203 that the province recognize certain standards for these small care facilities in order for them to be considered fit for providing people with safe living conditions and proper care.

These private care facilities and residences are also privately owned homes. They offer lodging, meals, and personal assistance for one to three elderly persons or adults with extra needs. These private care homes are special because they provide care in a familylike setting for individuals who need some assistance and cannot live alone but do not need nursing or medical support. They're operated on a fee-for-service basis that should provide a safe environment, support, protection, supervision, and assistance in relation to individual needs of the residents in that home.

Currently the department only licenses those facilities which house four or more adults. There are no licensing requirements if care providers keep their client base under four, nor is there approval for program standards. While residence owners have different written guides which are available to them, they can only be encouraged to follow the guidelines.

Mr. Speaker, the Guide for Private Care Home Operators is one such guide that addresses issues like the training necessary to be a caregiver, environmental and building requirements and safety standards, food preparation, and selection of residents. Also suggested are the rights and privileges of residents and other concerns. But this book is only a guideline. Operators have the choice not to follow the book, which has no legislative standing. These types of books also help to guide individuals and their families to choose which type of facility is best for their needs and to make informed decisions. It educates seniors and those in need of extra care to help them avoid potentially harmful situations.

These guides fill the need of educating seniors and others to make a better decision, but the problems facing our seniors have not adequately been addressed. There needs to be an enforcement of these guidelines by appropriate regulations. The current situation holds no obligation except the moral decision to uphold the standards listed in the guides. People are being fooled into the standard of care they are going to receive because they have no way of knowing how they will be treated inside each private residence.

The specific purpose of Bill 203 is to identify, list, and eventually regulate care home operators housing three or fewer clients. To begin these developments, a steering committee would build a voluntary list of private health care providers. Then it would use this voluntary list to help formulate regulations. The standards and the regulations that ensure private care facilities are being maintained at a high quality would be based on the findings of the steering committee.

Mr. Speaker, the committee would be made up of a number of representatives of departments from within government and others who have a key interest in the direction of the committee. They would play a direct role in developing the framework that would become the regulations and standards in private care facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the main reason we should pass Bill 203 is the problem the lack of standards is creating. As stated, there are no legal standards to protect those living in private care facilities, leaving operators to run their businesses outside the bounds of any regulations. This leaves a large segment of our society extremely vulnerable.

The main concern is the possibility of abuse of any sort, be it financial, physical, or mental, which can occur because of a lack of accountability. Clients who want residential care are faced with the fear that their need for care would lead to horrifying experiences that they cannot control. These vulnerable persons, because of some sort of disability, may have difficulty expressing or acting on their wishes and ascertaining or exercising their own rights. These people need regulations to protect them, because in many cases they are unable to protect themselves. Mr. Speaker, when individuals with any kind of disability rely on others for their safety and well-being, they should have the right to be protected from abuse. I believe it is time we take responsibility to ensure the safety and protection of residents in these homes.

It is an unfortunate truth that there are a number of residents in these care facilities in our province that are subjected to these abuses. Being in a vulnerable state, they do not have the ability to up and leave the situation they are in. Families may not even be aware of the suffering and cannot help them because of the lack of ability to communicate. When signs of any sort of abuse surface, it is already too late, and a vulnerable resident has already suffered its effects.

The lack of standards to regulate these new types of services in our province is perpetuating the abuse of its consumers. Bringing forth the necessity for standards these services must provide would educate its consumers about its hazards and who is rightfully acknowledged as a regulated care provider. Providing the consumer with a list or a registry of monitored caregivers gives them the ability to make an informed decision about the care that they will be receiving. Residents will no longer have to rely on the possible moral standards of their operator. But to ensure that the care they receive is of a high standard and their rights are protected by law, it is important in this situation for them to know that there is a system in place which will watch out for them.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, there's a great deal of work that needs to be completed before the long-term effects of Bill 203 are to be felt. By weeding out those who do not meet prescribed standards of care for their clients, legitimate care providers will no longer have to compete with substandard facilities. Furthermore, those that are left will provide the steering committee with a true framework for developing licensing and monitoring policies. The client would be provided with a measure of care that they can trust in a market that could be overwhelming and easily misleading. It is unfortunate that those who are being taken advantage of in this market are those who are vulnerable and in need of constant care.

The process of finding someone that can be trusted to provide for their needs is a difficult task. This type of personal care at one time would have been provided by the family, but we must face the truth. The rapid growth of these facilities shows that there's a definite need for this type of care. The development of personal private care facilities has broadened the choices which are available to our loved ones now and for all of us eventually.

Not everyone has needs which are suited to a more medical-based facility and not everyone likes the idea of living in a large group home. Yet at the moment those places hold the security of knowing that there are standards of care which are necessary to provide for its residents. The development of personal care facilities came out of the demand for more of a need to move away from the conventional system of care.

A study of the change in family demographics would also prove that the trend towards an even greater demand for such places will soon be upon us. Increasingly more people have chosen to only have two or less children, which places the large burden of aging parents on a small family. People work, and there is often no one to look after the full-time needs of an aging adult. Many aging adults have personal reasons for not wanting to depend on their families for full-time support. Whatever their reason the creation of more residential facilities will alleviate the problem of going into an institutionalized-style home for care, which isn't always necessary.

Also, there has been a greater amount of community support for those who are handicapped. More people are gaining confidence in having a style of life that was never an option for them before. They are able to live in a home which better provides for their needs and gives them the freedom and independence they want to have. If our province does not step forward and provide these people with a system that they can trust, then the progress that they have made in living a life of independence will be degraded.

In future the results of the steering committee would help our government provide our citizens with a valuable tool by listing the names of the facilities that have proven to the committee that they meet regulated standards. It will provide consumers the information and education they need. It will help residents make an informed choice about the place that will be caring for their needs and what grade of standards they should be expecting from this care.

I urge all my colleagues here to support Bill 203. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to have an opportunity to discuss Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act. I'm somewhat torn in my thoughts about this bill as we see it before the House. On the one hand, it's a barely there kind of bill. It scratches the surface of where we need to go. On the other hand, I know from experience in this Legislature that the more times we bring these kinds of issues back to the floor of the Assembly the greater chance there is that the time that a bill that deals with an issue like this is passed comes closer.

This is, in fact, the third time in very recent history that we've had some opportunity to discuss and hear about the kinds of needs and requirements there are for people who are in residential care housing. Of course, I'm talking about the Broda report that came out in November of 1999, which was really, I think, the first concrete position that the government took on this issue in terms of the kinds of needs there were for standards as a fallout of some of the feedback, I'm sure, that MLAs have heard in their constituencies, and certainly I have lots of those stories too. It was a start there. We would have liked to have seen something that was a little more concrete in terms of an implementation strategy for bringing standards in place.

Then, of course, our former colleague brought forward Bill 224, the Seniors' Care Enhancement Act, 2000, which we felt was a fairly comprehensive review of the needs of seniors in residential care and talked about the issues that were outstanding at that time and continue to be outstanding to this day, Mr. Speaker.

So now we have before us another private member's bill, Bill 203, that certainly takes this forward in terms of where we need to be going. It's very important, I think, that we make some progress on this issue. Like my colleague from Edmonton-Centre I'm a little frustrated by the prospect that what we really get here is the establishment of a committee to develop some standards. While there are some strict rules for how long the committee should sit and how many members should be on the committee, there are no strict rules for what happens with those recommendations or, in fact, that they come forward as recommendations or something that could be incorporated into government policy and passed. We would hope that that's where this would go. It would be beneficial if that were stated in the bill. It's great to set these benchmarks in place, but if we're not actually measuring the success after they've reached the benchmark, then what? It goes nowhere, and we don't accomplish anything. It doesn't take very much time or effort to go the extra half a step and complete the process, and that would have been really good to see in here.

It's a little discouraging to see this come forward as a private member's bill, Mr. Speaker. It would have been really nice to see this kind of legislation being brought forward by the government at this time. It is progressive in nature. It is a step in the right direction, and it's certainly an area that needs to be addressed.

I know that in my constituency there are a number of small residential homes, the unlicensed kind, and they provide a great opportunity for people to operate businesses, Mr. Speaker, but a great opportunity to operate a business isn't necessarily also a great opportunity for those who are receiving the services, those who are in care. We are dealing with people who are vulnerable for whatever reasons, and we need to be especially mindful of the responsibility we have as citizens and particularly as legislators in that regard. We need to ensure that people are taken care of in all aspects, not just meeting the basic needs of a roof over their head and being fed and clothed but compassion in how they're dealt with and humanity in terms of what happens within the households.

I think particularly of two of these homes that I'm aware of. One is specifically for mentally challenged young people, and to me the folks in the home, those in care – it would seem that things are really great there. It seems that they're happy and that all their needs are being met, but if you take a look around the building, you see that one of the residents is housed in a bedroom that hasn't got a window and doesn't have a closet door. Well, maybe that's not a really big deal, but I think that if you're paying for care, those are minimum kinds of standards that should be met. The families like this operator, and they're willing to put up with some inconvenience for their family member that's placed in that house. I don't know if that's reasonable or not, Mr. Speaker, and I think those are the kinds of issues that we should be talking about.

The other home that comes to mind right off the top of my head is a mixed home. It has some seniors and some other people in the home who have other kinds of interesting challenges that they face on a day-to-day basis, and they aren't very mobile. The operator again in this instance is a very compassionate person and tries to do an excellent job, but there are some issues in that home too, and a lot of them have to do with the ability for the personal care attendants to actually be personal care attendants and not turnip peelers, as my colleague for Edmonton-Centre talked to. Somebody's got to clean those bathrooms, Mr. Speaker, and when you talk about the ratio of staff to people and the kinds of expectations there are, I don't think that we're actually meeting the requirements of most people in most instances.

So what are we going to do with this bill? A committee gets struck, and they talk about the kinds of standards that are needed. We have had lots of talk about the kinds of standards that are needed, Mr. Speaker. I have before me today two documents that were tabled in this Legislature at points in time that speak specifically to the standards that have been talked about and are needed. One went to the Minister of Community Development in January from the Elder Advocates of Alberta, which talks about some very specific requirements that are necessary and that they are recommending. Very, very good stuff. Zero tolerance regarding elder abuse. It's very important that something like that be done.

The registries that we've heard some discussion about, that care facilities and its officers must be held accountable for the care performance within the facility, the basic kind of assumption that people are making is happening, that isn't always happening. Some specific recommendations with regard to sections of the act being rewritten, really excellent recommendations, things like defining time lines for investigations to be held and access to medical and financial information, which I think is also very important. Then they deal with a section on dependent adults, which is very important. A short document, not very hard to incorporate into regulations that can come forward, but something that needs to be addressed.

Another document I have in front of me is entitled An Initiative Addressing the Needs and Rights of Alberta's Nursing Home Residents. This, Mr. Speaker, is much more substantive in nature. It's organized by FAIRE, Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare, and it goes into very specific uses. The use of sanctions, which is something that needs to be talked about. How reporting of unusual occurrences should be addressed. Once again, access to personal records. Notices and posting of information. I'm talking about a residents' council where it's possible to have that.

Standards for dietary services, as my colleague had mentioned. In those, things like not only food production but how it's handled and stored and minimum standards being met in terms of them being able to eat well, where food isn't rationed and where it does meet Canada's food guide needs.

Resident care. The personal hygiene care of them in terms of dental care, skin and nail care, communication and sensory function, and cognitive and intellectual stimulation. If you've been in these homes, you know that people have different needs and can really require a wide range of abilities from those who are taking care of them.

So an excellent document that outlines staffing responsibilities, restraints that can be used, conditions under which they should be limited, the nursing care aspect of it in terms of dispensing medical care and medicines, and a bill of rights. What a great idea, Mr. Speaker, to have a residents' bill of rights. So very, very good ideas.

What I am concerned about is that if we just call the committee together and they are to redo all this work, then perhaps some of this really good information isn't brought forward and sifted through and there isn't a genuine outcome here that will be beneficial for the province. I'll support this bill, Mr. Speaker, because I think it's one step in the process of where we need to go here. But I'm hoping, if it gets passed by this Legislature, that it doesn't reinvent the wheel, that we see it compiling the really good information that is out there, that even if all they can do with the information that is compiled is put in their final report just those issues there is consensus on, then on those issues there is a recommendation made to the government that they adapt them through regulations or through bringing in a bill or whatever process the government wants to do, and that there is some concrete action called for within a specific time frame.

You know, it's a real problem, I think, that some of the information we see developed through the various vehicles the government has access to we don't get timely reports and subsequent action on. The Broda report of November 1999 is a good example. We're in April 2001, and nothing's happened with that. Why is that? It was a good report, something that we supported at the time and continue to support. What we need are not just the recommendations but time lines on when they'll be implemented, at least a time line when the government will report back on what it is from those recommendations that they can implement.

I would suggest that we can't waste any time. We're talking for the most part about people who are in need of assistance from us, be they seniors or be they mentally challenged people, seniors who are needing some form of assisted living or people who fall in between that area who want to live in a secured environment. We need to ensure that their needs are met in a timely fashion. The clock is ticking day by day, and I don't think that we should be trying to waste any time on this. So while I will support this bill because it is a step in the right direction, I hope the real outcome here is some concrete action taken by the government.

Now we've heard from private members on both sides of the House, Mr. Speaker. Good for those people who have brought these issues forward. Excellent work done on the Broda report but not nearly far enough, certainly not anything concrete that we can take to these people and say: here's some security for you to ensure that your lives are going to be enhanced to the best of our abilities. So I am hoping that we will see some action from the government in that regard and that this is just a small step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to enter the debate on Bill 203, which has been proposed by my colleague for Calgary-West. I am also very pleased to pledge my support for this bill. By passing Bill 203, the members of this Assembly would let vulnerable Albertans know that we have their best interests at heart. Bill 203 recognizes that Alberta is in dire need of a legislative framework concerning residential care facilities that house fewer than four patients and receive no provincial funding. It also calls for the establishment of a voluntary registry system of care providers. From this registry we can develop standards to protect all Albertans who are dependent upon the care of others in order to lead a quality life.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 follows the precedent set by Motion 505, which was passed unanimously in 1995. Motion 505 called upon our Assembly "to ensure that health and safety standards are being met in all personal care facilities by establishing regulations and a comprehensive monitoring system." Bill 203 is calling for the Assembly to live up to the sentiment of Motion 505. This Assembly must make the safe care of at-risk Albertans one of its fundamental concerns.

In this province we have a history of caring for others in times of duress, and many laws do exist that make the care of the vulnerable an aim of our government. For example, the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act and the Protection for Persons in Care Act do protect vulnerable Albertans – seniors, disabled adults, and adults with mental illness – but this protection only extends to those who live in facilities which care for four or more patients. The question is therefore rather obvious. Are Albertans living in facilities which provide care to three or less patients less deserving of being cared for via provincially regulated standards? Of course not. This is why Bill 203 is so important. It says to Albertans in a voice loud and clear that no matter who provides care to you or a loved one, they will be held accountable to firm standards designed to protect the dignity and self-respect of their patients. Bill 203 would therefore seal over the loophole left by the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act and the Protection for Persons in Care Act.

Imagine just for a minute if you would, Mr. Speaker, a person in the care of a facility that did not feel that it should follow rules to protect the dignity of its patients. We've all heard horror stories about patients who have been starved or physically and mentally abused in facilities in which they were supposed to receive care or heard reports of patients whose cries of pain have gone unheeded, and this in facilities in which they have paid to receive care. Yes, we've even heard stories of patients who have not received help for something as necessary as going to the washroom, only to be left with the shame of having soiled themselves. When we refuse to help and protect people in such vulnerable straits, we are effectively telling them that they are less than human. This is simply not right. By passing Bill 203 we take seriously the precious government role of being an advocate for those who are truly in need of our assistance.

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta is not the first jurisdiction to consider this sort of legislation. In Saskatchewan, for example, care providers are bound by the Personal Care Homes Act, which binds all care facilities, no matter how many patients it holds, to a firm set of standards. That legislation was enacted in 1989, making this initiative long overdue. How long will Alberta have to wait before we get it right?

Mr. Speaker, while the intent of Bill 203 is surely not going to be contested, there may be a few logistical concerns. One of these is whether or not smaller care facilities will have any motivation to sign up for a voluntary registry. Some will argue that they have no motivation at all. I disagree, for when I think to the future and consider that I may one day find myself in a care facility, I'd want to feel and my family to feel certain beyond any doubt that the facility follows standards that are safe and that are considerate of my needs. If I did choose to enter a smaller care facility, perhaps because such a facility would be the most comfortable for me, it would be more reassuring to find myself in a home that is registered with the province than one that is not. I would bet heavily that most Albertans feel this way and that this is motivation enough for small care providers to get on board.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not pass Bill 203, we will be robbing peace of mind from Albertans who do enter smaller care facilities. As citizens of this province, our aging population is entitled to first-rate care regardless of where they choose to receive it. Passing Bill 203 not only provides Albertans with the comfort of knowing that the care they receive will be excellent but also gives them the true freedom to choose where they will receive quality care.

There are undoubtedly other concerns, but we must not forget that the dignity of Albertans is at stake, and the dignity of the people of this province must not be forsaken under any circumstances. Further, Mr. Speaker, if logistical concerns are a primary focus, let us consider another matter. It is no secret that Alberta's population is aging. Soon more and more care facilities will be needed to take care of our growing senior citizen population. By passing Bill 203 right now, we'll put ourselves ahead of the game and make progress towards ensuring that Albertans can age with the same grace and dignity with which they made our province prosperous.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have to remind this Assembly that this is a bill with the best interests of Albertans at heart. We have always been a province with citizens that have taken pride in helping each other. By extending the standards of care to facilities with three or less patients, this bill merely continues that tradition. I therefore endorse Bill 203 and would strongly urge the members of this Assembly to do so as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise today and speak to Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-West. There are a number of issues and a number of comments and observations that I would like to make today about the bill. I think the reason we have this bill coming forward at this time is that there are many, many complaints and there have been many investigations of maltreatment in homes where we do take care of seniors, where we take care of people that are mentally handicapped, where we take care of people who have been brain injured or have serious physical disabilities.

Now, as well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill because we are speaking about protection for the most vulnerable people in our society. These are the frail and dependent Albertans. What I see as I glance through this bill is that again we are gathering information. We have had many, many reports not only in this province but in this country that have dealt with this very issue. I look back at the annual report of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. This was the report that ended the year March 31, 1996, and I'll quote from here: "However, concern continued to be expressed about the lack of provincial standards and the resulting potential for abuse of the elderly." Now, we're not only talking about the elderly here. We're talking about all individuals who require assistance. We're talking about people that do have pride, they do have dignity, and they certainly want to live as independent a life as they can. I know that all members of this Assembly and all Albertans realize that the goal of this particular bill is that there is zero tolerance and that people that do require this assistance will be treated with the utmost care and concern.

Now I'd like to make a few comments about the bill, first of all. Glancing through it, I see that we're going to have a registry system here that's going to be operated on a voluntary basis, and this will include those residential care homes that do not receive government funding. It will also be those residential care homes in which one to three people receive residential care. So, again, we have situations here where this bill will not cover those vulnerable people. We heard the comment earlier: why don't we have an Alberta-wide registry? Why don't we have any residential care home that is providing these types of services? Why are they not all compelled to join this registry?

MS BLAKEMAN: No commitment: if, maybe, possibly.

MR. BONNER: Yes.

Again I see here in the bill that we also have to develop education programs for residential care operators. Now, what I think we need here is not to develop programs as much as we need regulations that are enforceable and will make these people accountable to someone.

Now, then, I see again in section 4 of this particular bill: "In carrying out its purposes, the Committee may . . ." Again, this lacks commitment, this lacks enforceability, and it certainly lacks where we do need protection for vulnerable people. So in carrying out their role, it says that they may "receive and hear submissions from individuals and groups respecting the views and concerns of persons living in residential care." So does this mean that they again get to select who they're going to receive submissions from? The submissions from all cross sections of this society are not going to be included.

It also says that they may "provide information to the general public on the purposes of the Committee and matters affecting residential care." Once again, when I read this statement, what happened to openness and accountability? All members of any family are very concerned about any members that may be in these types of facilities. So why is this not an open and accountable reporting?

Again, they may "access research and data on which to base studies and make recommendations on matters of concern to persons in residential care." As a number of hon. members already have mentioned, there have been many, many reports and many, many reports right here in this province that have provided much research, but it seems that we're going to reinvent the wheel and go through it again with a new committee.

It also indicates here that this committee may "appoint subcommittees consisting of members of the Committee and other persons." Now, again, this doesn't seem to be a very timely procedure after all the work that has already been completed.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre certainly made many very good observations about the selection of committee members, where they are from, but I think one of her major observations here was that other agencies that should be included or have some representation on this committee were certainly forgotten. These are people that are directly on a daily basis involved with people who will be filling these residential care homes. I won't spend any more time on the makeup of this committee, Mr. Speaker.

Since we have identified that this is a major problem in this province and in this country, I look at the bylaws and meetings, and I see that "the Committee shall meet at least 2 times in the year this Act comes into force and at least 4 times in each of the following calendar years." Now, I would think that we require certainly much more involvement by this committee on this issue that is of grave importance to so many Albertans. If we have to meet only two times in the first year, again, what is the importance that we are placing on people that are in these facilities who are presently being abused? We have identified that as the issue as to why we require a committee, yet we are doing nothing about it. We are meeting only twice in the first year.

I also note here, Mr. Speaker, that there is an expiry date, a sunset clause: "4 years after coming into force unless it is continued for a further period by the Lieutenant Governor in Council," this act will expire. Again, does that mean, hon. member, that after four years we are still going to be back to where we were in the annual report of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta for the year ended March 31, 1996? That is going to put us, if this does come into effect – and, again, we still have no guarantee that anything is going to be implemented as far as standards in this province – so that we will be to the year 2005 and we still won't have these after a nine-year effort to get some standards in this province.

As well, there are some other very important issues to be discussed here. We did have projections as to how our demographics were going to be affected as the years progressed, and certainly these statistics that I'm quoting here, the population projections of seniors in Alberta – they start in the year 1995, and at that time our senior population only was 9.7 percent. In 2001 we have a total number of seniors projected at 311,635. I would assume that with the influx of people into this province over the last four to five years, this number would be higher, but certainly the overall percentage would not be greater than the 10.4 percent that was forecast at that time.

We must also note, when we look at these statistics, that compared to the rest of Canada, this figure of 10.4 percent is very, very low. If my memory serves me right, we do have the lowest percentage of seniors of any province in Canada. So we don't have a great problem as far as the percentage of seniors. Our big problem is how we treat seniors and others who are in the care of these residential caregivers.

Now, then, as we go through here again, it has been said and pointed out that there has been a tremendous amount of work done by many, many different people. Of course, one was the former Member for Edmonton-Manning, who introduced Bill 224, the Seniors' Care Enhancement Act. This would have been a bill which had many, many excellent recommendations for the vulnerable and frail persons in care in this province.

MS BLAKEMAN: If they would have actually implemented it instead of just talking about it.

MR. BONNER: Yes, and I agree fully with the Member for Edmonton-Centre that many, many of these recommendations in here, if they would have been implemented at that time instead of just talked about, would have enriched the lives of so many in this province.

Now, I think there are some critical questions, Mr. Speaker, that we have to look at when we are dealing with public policy. Certainly we have to look at some of the assumptions that underlie this position or this policy. Again, as I said, we have in Bill 203 only the start. We don't have a commitment to actually do anything about this problem. We have also left guidelines in here that allow this process to continue for four years, for the entire length that we will be sitting in here until the next election, and still no commitment. So if this is such a critical problem in this province, if we do require legislation to look at this, then certainly we would assume that there would be some commitment, there would be some enforcement of these regulations, and we certainly haven't had these.

I would love to have seen in this bill some strategies as to how the recommendations of this committee were going to be implemented. This is a very time-sensitive issue, Mr. Speaker, and many of the findings of this committee are going to parallel those findings that the hon. Member for Redwater found in his report. So I think we have to certainly take a look that there are too many assumptions in this bill. I think, as well, that we have to look at the assumption of what is happening to people who are in resident care, in facilities where there is only one to three people, and that any guidelines that are implemented will not affect these people.

As well, I think what I would love to see in here, again, when this committee is meeting, is that if in fact people are in violation of the standards that this committee would find, there would be some type of penalty that would be imposed. This is how we as a province could certainly provide protection to some of the most vulnerable members of our society.

As well, we have to assume that abuse is happening. We have to assume that this abuse occurs in many, many different areas if in fact we are bringing legislation forward. So we assume from this legislation, then, that residents of these facilities are undergoing emotional or psychological abuse. We know that any behaviour that produces debilitating emotional stress, fear, or mental anguish is a form of abuse. We make the assumption, Mr. Speaker, that there is, as well, financial or material abuse. We do know that for people who are in these facilities, quite often when the family gets to visit, it is not uncommon for articles of clothing or personal items or little things that they might have in their room to have gone missing. Again, this is not a knock on the staff in these facilities. I think more than anything it is because of the type of person who is inhabiting those facilities, whether they are suffering from Alzheimer's, dementia, or mental incapacities, that in many cases these things go missing.

Now, then, I think as well that what we have to do here is to look at whose interests are served by this particular bill. I don't know whose interests are served by this bill, because again we are doing work that has been done a countless number of times in this province and in this country. Again, what are we going to gain by one more committee doing the same work that has been done on countless occasions before? Is the interest behind this policy just to create work for people? Are those who are going to gain by this those people who do sit on a committee? I do believe they get remuneration. Is that correct?

MS BLAKEMAN: Possibly through the bill, yes.

MR. BONNER: Possibly through the bill, yes. I can't see why people who are benefiting in this manner at taxpayers' expense here in the province do not have the authority to implement their findings.

Now, then, I think, without looking too hard at what all could be improved in this bill, we do have to look at who are going to be the people that gain from this bill as well. We would certainly hope it would be those people in these facilities who presently are undergoing this abuse. We would certainly hope that their families, many of whom cannot visit on a regular basis because of living in different locations or having been transferred or whatever reasons, would gain.

So in closing I just want to say that I don't know whether I will be able to support this bill or not. It certainly doesn't go anywhere near far enough. I know that the people in this province would love to see some type of strategy that includes not only the implementation of these standards but also their enforcement. I look forward to hearing this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, comments from other members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak in support of Bill 203, the Residential Care Housing Committee Act, sponsored by my hon. colleague the Member for Calgary-West. Before I start, I want to congratulate the Member for Calgary-West for the work that she does on the Seniors Advisory Council. I think she's chaired this committee for some time and has done an outstanding job. She chairs it with compassion and with care. I also know that when this hon. member speaks on behalf of seniors, she is well researched, has done her homework, and knows what she's talking about.

Having listened to the debate that has taken place today, I find it rather interesting that you can listen to debate and have some members stand before us starting off with "I support Bill 203." With other members you must wait until 19 and a half minutes of debate to find out if, in fact, they do support the bill because, I'll tell you, the dialogue and discussion that has taken place is not indicative of it. I think that some of the votes on this bill will be strictly for political reasons. I heard time and time again about how many reports have taken place regarding this issue and all of the work that has been done.

One motto that I live by is that today is the first day of the rest of your life. I live in the present and look forward to the future. I applaud the Member for Calgary-West for having the tenacity to once again bring this forward so that we can progress and move forward on the issue and deal with it, hope that it passes in the Assembly, that it is proclaimed, and that at long last we can see some implementation.

The statement was made by members opposite that it is very discouraging that this is being brought forward by a private member. Private members are supposed to bring forward ideas from their constituents, ideas from their professional backgrounds, bring forward their expertise, and again I applaud the hon. member for doing so.

It's a well-known fact, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta's population is aging rapidly. I think back to the day when you talked about the average age in this Assembly as, I think, 51 years. We are baby boomers that are moving quickly.

AN HON. MEMBER: Say it ain't so.

MRS. GORDON: Except for the hon. member right behind me.

As a result, we must be proactive as a government in how we deal with the need for long-term, assistance based care. It has been widely acknowledged that there is a need for consistent housing standards for care homes in Alberta, especially in those with three or fewer adults.

My hon. colleague from Red Deer talked about how we don't have a problem with five or more. She is right. So why do we have a problem with three or fewer adults? For community living to be effective, there have to be basic standards for supports and services. These are the very characteristics that make up Bill 203. Currently there are residential care homes that are not covered by comprehensive legislation, and this has resulted in circumstances where Albertans have to live in intolerable situations with intolerable abuse. Thank goodness these cases are few and far between.

As the population in Alberta continues to age, we must pay attention to the projected demographic changes and what effects these will have on our elders. Thus, Mr. Speaker, it is very important to examine how the aging population will affect provincial government programs and services. We're seeking the government to be more involved in the provision of care and housing. In 1997-98 Community Development initiated a governmentwide study of the impact of the aging population. This program assessed the impact of the aging population on provincial government programs and services and recommended policy directions, strategies, and program changes to assist government in meeting the changing needs of Albertans as they age.

As a result, Alberta developed a strategy, one that entailed an annual increase of $23 million in financial assistance for people eligible under the Alberta seniors' benefit and special needs assistance programs. I believe government should be proactive in this regard, as I said earlier, passing, proclaiming, and implementing Bill 203.

It has been said by several members of the opposition that there are certain things they would like to see changed. If this bill is not voted on and accepted in second reading, we will be denied amendments that could be brought forward in Committee of the Whole.

Talk about a registry within this piece of legislation: the government can develop a framework within this registry that would protect Albertans who are dependent upon others to care for them. I say all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, because currently the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act and the Protection for Persons in Care Act only regulate facilities with four or more clients, government-contracted facilities for handicapped adults, and residential care homes for seniors. I strongly believe that it is essential that government not only maintain but increase our interest in the well-being of Albertans who are living in residential care housing. Our ability to react proactively is what will ensure the safety of these very individuals.

One of the areas where government has been working to effectively anticipate the needs of Albertans is in protecting those who are most vulnerable. Throughout the latter part of the '90s, Community Development led a working group to implement the Protection for Persons in Care Act. The scope of the act is to better protect the health, safety, and well-being of adults who receive services in facilities governed by specific Alberta legislation. These facilities include approved hospitals, nursing homes, lodges, government-funded group homes, vocational skill development facilities, and women's shelters. Bill 203 proposes to take this issue a step further, a step into the homes of those which are currently not governed by such provincial legislation. Bill 203 will help raise awareness for the Protection for Persons in Care Act. Though it is true that there are a number of Albertans who are aware of the act, there are an equal amount of Albertans who are not.

In accordance, for example, Community Development promoted and operated a toll-free telephone line for reporting abuse and for obtaining information on the act. During the three months of operation in the latter part of 1998 the department collected and forwarded an appalling 190 reports of alleged abuse to the appropriate provincial government departments for investigation. To further its involvement with abuse, an elder abuse strategy was developed to focus on educating seniors, seniors' families, and service providers about the Protection for Persons in Care Act. Community Development also worked very hard to promote amendments to this act to include protection for all cohabiting family members. As a result, seniors can now use this legislation if they are experiencing abuse at the hands of family members.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is still not enough. The safety of individuals in residential care settings that are not currently governed by provincial legislation must be maintained. We must ensure that all Albertans have access to the support that they need to live in a secure and dignified way as independent and contributing members of society.

Bill 203, Mr. Speaker, would protect the health, safety, and well-being of adults who receive care in small, unfunded – that's unfunded by the province – residential homes through the development and implementation of broad-based standards in co-operation with key stakeholders. But perhaps education is the most important portion of Bill 203. Albertans who are well informed about programs and services available to them from the government and community have a much better opportunity to live independently, more safely, and with a greater sense of well-being.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to restate my support for Bill 203. In my opinion, residential care and community living are essential to the well-being and quality of life of aging and vulnerable Albertans, regardless of where they live. However, for it to be truly effective, there must be a set of mandatory rules, regulations, and standards. I urge all of my colleagues in the Assembly to support this essential piece of legislation. I look forward to further debate if and when we move into Committee of the Whole, and possibly we will see some amendments that will further enhance this particular bill.

I thank again the hon. Member for Calgary-West, and thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take a few minutes to make some observations on Bill 203, Residential Care Housing Committee Act. The bill is essentially about striking a committee and setting it up and outlining what the committee will do. I do want to commend the efforts of the Member for Calgary-West for bringing the bill forward.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Two or three issues that I want to comment on have to do, first, with what the committee is charged to do. I was looking at section 2. The bill does specifically mention that the committee will be struck

- (a) to develop standards of residential care governing
  - (i) the level of care,
  - (ii) the type of accommodation to be provided and maintained,
  - (iii) the safety and security of persons in care.

When I read through this third line, what came to mind was what was missing. In my view, what's missing here is some assurance, some responsibility that the committee takes to make sure that we specifically address the question of the residents being treated with dignity and respect. I think that mentioning those words is very important. Physical security and safety are important, but so is the whole issue of the dignity and respect with which the residents must be treated, keeping in mind that the residents of such facilities are dependents. They very much depend on those who provide the care, the caregivers, and it's a trust relationship. So the whole issue of dignity and respect is something that needs to be addressed explicitly in the bill.

Lots has been said and some very good points have been made by my colleagues across party lines here, so I just want to focus on things that I think need a little more attention. I am concerned about section 2(2)(c), which states that the registry will be established "on a voluntary basis." I think that's a serious shortcoming in the bill. Anyone who wants to enter this area of business and wants to have one to three residents, I guess are covered here, must be obliged – it should be mandatory for such operators of businesses to register themselves and have the information available on a provincewide registry for them. So the voluntary part is something that I think needs to be fixed.

The second point that I want to make has to do with the reciprocal obligations between the minister and the committee. The committee is obviously required to report to the minister once a year, but I think we need to strengthen the implementation part related to the recommendations once they're made by the committee. I think what will help in strengthening the role of the committee in getting the recommendation implemented is if the bill provides for an obligation for the minister to report within a specified time both to the committee and to this House as to the status of action taken by the minister on the recommendations. Without this kind of accountability mechanism provided for in the bill, the bill loses its effectiveness as presently proposed.

So I will be certainly recommending to the member to make note of it, and hopefully she'll come forward with some amendments to this effect. But the minister must also be obliged within a six-month period, in my view, to report back to the committee and to this House as to the recommendations and their status.

The next point that I would like to make has to do with the composition of this committee. I notice that there are 12 different categories of persons or organizations or departments from whom the membership will be selected. The membership is made up of 20, so there's a fair bit of room for a particular category of persons to be appointed in numbers which are more than one. I'm concerned about the fact that we haven't specified a reasonable number of representatives from two groups that are mentioned in part (f) of that section 3(2), "the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta or the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities."

In my view, the presence on the committee of these two groups needs to be increased and the numbers should perhaps be specified. I think these are the two groups that would be recipients of the care and the recipients of the quality of services, and these are the people to whom we owe guaranteeing quality of service that's acceptable and that these services are provided under conditions of dignity and respect to all of them. Their presence needs to be strengthened here. The way the composition of the committee is outlined here doesn't give me confidence that that will happen. What we need to do – I would hope that the member will consider this – is to strengthen the presence in terms of the numbers of these two groups for whom the bill is designed to give some assurance and guarantees. So that's the second point I want to make.

Another related point in terms of membership composition has to do with one category here of seniors. With the exception of seniors, all other membership categories are fairly specific in that these are organizations or departments. It's easy to see how a person could be appointed as representing a department of the government or an organization such as the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta or the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. These are identifiable organizations, and they can either nominate their own members or the minister can appoint from the organization.

But the one category of seniors, a very broad one, a very unspecified category – there are tens of thousands of seniors. Simply to say that seniors will also qualify to be appointed I think is not enough in my view, and this point is related to the point I made earlier, that the representation, perhaps, of the Seniors Advisory Council should be strengthened in terms of numbers. Maybe that's a way of addressing this. But I would like to see certainly more seniors appointed to the committee and more persons representing the persons with disabilities appointed.

So these are some of my comments. I hope these are helpful to the Member for Calgary-West, who is the author of this bill. As we go through the bill, I'll have perhaps a few more things to say.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak in support of Bill 203. I think it's very important that the Member for Calgary-West brought forward an issue which is extremely important to Albertans.

Governments, in my view, should do very few things. We need governments to do things on behalf of all citizens in the area of education, obviously, and in the area of health care, but one of the primary things governments can do is to help protect those who are in need of protection, help protect those who are infirm or unable to care for themselves.

We find in our society from time to time very unfortunate situations where people are taken advantage of, where people are treated inappropriately and are not in a position to care for themselves or to protect themselves from predators essentially. I'm not a big proponent of regulation, particularly where regulation is not necessary, but it is important to put in regulatory frameworks, to put protections in place so that those who can be preyed upon by others and who are not in a position to defend themselves can be protected. That's one of the essential roles that we as government I think play. So I am very pleased to see the proposals being brought forward by the Member for Calgary-West in Bill 203.

I don't wish to speak to the details of Bill 203. I think there may be all sorts of items that could be discussed in committee, if it should get to committee, with respect to how the process could be improved if people have concerns about that. But in second reading we speak to the principles of the bill, and I think it's extremely important that in speaking to the principles of the bill, we recognize that elder abuse is a problem in our society, that people do take advantage of elderly people, do take advantage of infirm people, and that happens all too often in our society. It's something that we don't talk about enough, it's something we don't shine the light on enough, and it's something we hide away and pretend doesn't happen, but it does happen. It is particularly insidious, Mr. Speaker, because it happens to people who can't care for themselves. So again I go back to the principle of the bill, which is that governments have responsibility to take care of those who can't take care of themselves.

In particular, this bill deals with a very small portion of that whole subject. Some could argue and I think I would argue that it doesn't go anywhere near far enough in terms of the whole range of elder abuse and the range of concerns that we have with respect to how elders are treated in our society. But it does deal with a very important corner of that equation, and that's the situation where people are providing accommodation, housing, providing care, if you will, to people in small settings outside the normal process which could be reviewed, what we'd normally know as institutional care or institutions, away from the light.

I certainly don't want to cast aspersions on those many good people out there who are doing it, doing it well, providing good accommodation, providing a wonderful living situation, a good quality of life for people, but there are circumstances where that doesn't happen. We don't want to encumber unnecessarily the operations of those people who do a good job and who do it well and who do it fairly and get fairly compensated for it, but we do in fact need to have rules and regulations in society for those people who do not willingly follow what we would consider to be good moral guidance or who are prepared to take advantage of people in order to make a dollar or who in fact go further. Mr. Speaker, there are many cases in our communities where it does happen, where they go further, where they abuse seniors, where they treat seniors in a manner which is totally disrespectful, totally harmful, and they do it because they can, because nobody is watching, because there aren't any rules in place.

I would commend the member for bringing forward this particular bill. It's one small piece of a puzzle. Perhaps with a bill like this we can have more public discussion about the areas of elder abuse. In fact, it's something that does happen all too often in our society. One instance is more than enough, and, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage members to support the bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Justice, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-West to close debate on Bill 203.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would first like to close debate by thanking all the government speakers today who spoke and supported the essence of this bill, even an additional member, Calgary-Buffalo, who was sitting here ready to speak when we ran out of time. I appreciated his willingness. We could have heard from this member firsthand his experiences in his past career with this situation as we've been discussing today.

What I heard was that all members in this Assembly who spoke today agree on the need. I won't go into that. I think basically we do all agree, and the facts are out pretty much on the table. But I do feel that the discussion around the process itself, you know, whether the glass is half empty or the glass is half full – that is your choice. I feel that some of the members across the way decided to look at the glass – i.e., the process as outlined in the bill – as being half empty. However, it was designed with all care to set out and provide guidelines for this committee and that it would be comprehensive, specific, and provide, again, the structure in order to reach the goal as set out in the bill.

A couple of points around the bill itself. It's definitely a multidepartmental committee and includes also, though, key stakeholders. We all know that people who are vulnerable, not only seniors, at-risk younger adults – and we have many of them in society who are also aging, and their parents are aging way ahead of them, obviously. This has to be a collaborative effort from start to finish, from the committee structure to the consultation out in the communities. If you look carefully at the bill, you'll see that as part of the bill structure. As one other member across the way, though, also did point out wisely, 20 positions is the maximum. It could be less. I think it was 11 or 12 that are specifically designated, and the remaining are at the minister's discretion, so this bill allows not only structure but flexibility for the minister.

I want to just make a comment about FAIRE. I feel that FAIRE certainly has identified a major problem within our long-term care centres with adults who suffer from advanced dementia. The hon. Member for Redwater and myself and I know a minister have met with FAIRE. I have attended their workshops. I do identify with their concerns, and that is probably that we need more training and more staff in long-term care centres for people with advanced dementia. I just want to make it clear today that this government has certainly listened to their concerns, but I do feel, again going back to the content of the speakers, that Bill 203 addresses more mild dementia and certainly the other groups that were mentioned and not the one that FAIRE refers to.

Demographics and an aging population are very important

Canada-wide. Everybody knows Alberta has a young population, but we are going to age. It's just that we're going to be a little behind the others. So we would be very wise to listen and hear from other jurisdictions, including Scandinavian countries, as to how they address housing options and how they have already looked after, say, the aging population concerns.

I just want to say again that there is a real history with this government having identified this need, and I really feel it is time that we addressed this need. It's time that we acted and planned positively for the future. I just say that it's time for this Assembly to commit by supporting this bill so we can move forward in planning towards a positive future. The time is now, not down the road.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5:18 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 25, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/04/25

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

Committee Membership Changes

15. Mr. Stevens moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that the following names be added to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices: Dr. Pannu and Dr. Taft.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Being that it's the first evening of spring, there seems to be a certain levity in the air.

Members will note that there is a new person at the table this evening. Ms Tan McAra will be assisting Parliamentary Counsel during this session. She's a lawyer who was formerly Deputy Chief Legislative Counsel for the province of Alberta before moving to New Zealand, where she was the chief law drafter for the Inland Revenue Department. She has recently moved back to Alberta, and we're extremely fortunate that we'll be able to rely on her many skills and abilities. Please join me again, then, in welcoming Tan McAra.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 24: Dr. Nicol]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure tonight to start the debate on the budget for the year 2001-02. One of the interesting things. I guess everybody had a little experience as they picked up their package and the little black book fell out. It's kind of a question as to whether or not this is a signal that it's a little black book talking about our future or should it be a nice bright, spontaneous, cheery colour that talks about our future.

I want to just begin by congratulating the Minister of Finance on her first budget. With the revenue opportunities that our province is experiencing right now, from many aspects this was quite an easy budget to put together. On the expenditure side probably it was a little harder, mostly with the idea that we had to look at how to limit expenditures on a lot of programs where individuals and groups were asking for more money. So it was kind of a balance, and in the end the budget that was presented I think addressed a lot of the issues in health care, in education, in some of the areas that we heard during the campaign where Albertans were asking for more support and more involvement financially by the government.

Tonight we'll begin our debate – and this will probably last over the next few weeks – on the budget. What we'll be dealing with tonight is a general overview as we talk to this motion, and then we'll get into the specifics of each of the departmental budgets and the line item issues as we go into Committee of Supply.

I want to start tonight by just outlining to everyone here kind of the criteria that I want to look at and that I suggest we look at as we deal with the budgets and look at them to see whether or not the budget fits the needs of both Albertans and those of us that are participating in the House as legislators. First of all, I think the main thing that we have to look at is whether or not the budget is sustainable, whether or not the expenditure patterns that we're putting in and the revenue projections we're making are consistent with a long-term degree of sustainability. We have to look at that specifically in the budget from the fiscal sustainability aspect, but when we look at how the programs are being developed and how the dollars are being spent, we also have to look at the social and environmental sustainability that comes from these programs. You know, are we contributing to the long-term viability and sustainability of Alberta?

The other thing that we want to look at and which becomes a real issue as we look at the large revenue future that we had last year, whether or not it's going to be continuing on, is how the budget promotes stability. This is: basically, is the budget contributing to both economic stability in the context of its opportunities for individuals and the businesses in the province and also is it creating stability for the decision-makers? Is it giving long-term plans for those administrators and those decision-makers that are dealing with specific programs and specific activities and services that are being provided for the province?

We also have to look at that stability type of an issue specifically as to how it affects Albertans. One of the things that we heard about a lot in the election campaign was how some of the actions of government and some of the actions of the economy were really causing some concerns for low- and fixed-income Albertans. They were seeing some of these actions that we were experiencing as being really destabilizing for their decision-making, for their livelihood, and for their ability to look to the future and feel comfortable and confident.

The next thing that I want to look at is also the equality of opportunity that's provided by the budget. This again is in terms of looking at it from the perspective of individuals. Do they have access to the programs? How are they treated in the context of the programs? Do the programs build to promote and encourage their confidence in us as legislators and in the government as a provider of those services? When we look at it also in terms of the business community or the economic aspects, you know, how is it dealing with the equality of opportunity for the different sectors of the economy, the different opportunities of trade-offs that occur there? Are some individuals or some parts of the economy getting a competitive advantage by the new legislation or the new expenditures? Are others becoming disadvantaged?

I guess that's kind of from the economic point of view, but the thing that I'll be looking at and I'm sure almost all of us will be looking at is the compassion that comes out of the budget, the compassion that comes out of the programs that were put in place. Are we really directing our dollars to the benefit of Alberta and to provide services for those who are in need, who really want to help themselves to grow and to become vibrant participants in our economic system and in our social and cultural communities?

Mr. Speaker, another thing I want to look at is: are the proposals being put forward in the budget and the particular programs consistent with good government? That I'm looking at in terms of: are they built around proper planning? Is the process that goes into the decision-making open? Is there an accountability component in it? Can we figure out whether or not the dollars are being truly spent well on behalf of Albertans? Are the performance measures truly showing a response to the investment by the government, or are the performance indicators just actually reacting to other factors in the economy or in our social system?

The final thing that I'm looking at in terms of good government is basic consistency. Are we sticking with our plans? When we do change, do we have a rational reason and a viable reason in the context of sound economic development and sound business programs or business planning to look at why those changes have come in?

I guess that as a start outlines where we're going and how I plan to look at the budget.

Then as we get into some of the specifics of the Budget Address by the Minister of Finance, I guess the thing we have to look at is her kind of reflection at the start, that it's, you know, kind of easier to budget when there's lots of revenue, but there's also a real responsibility that comes with that to make sure that we're not just spending money to spend money.

With that in mind, I just wanted to raise a point that she brought up on page 6. The issue that she pointed out there was that the $4 billion difference in the revenue, depending upon the resource price projections – you know, there was a real range of price projections that the government considered. I think that we all have to be really cognizant of this and thank the Minister of Finance for pointing this out to us. We do live in an economic system here in Alberta where resource revenues are really volatile, and they do create a real issue for us as we look at planning our budget and trying to balance our revenues with our expenditures.

The next thing that we looked at basically comes up on page 9, where I had some concerns that I wanted to express, the analogy that the minister used when she talked about the Alberta family, where she started off with, "We start with how much we're likely to earn." Mr. Speaker, I just want to put a caution with that statement. What it does is it basically reflects the idea that if you've got money, you can spend it.

Now, included in that spending component is the possibility of saving, but I think from a government perspective what we should be looking at is dealing with how we can put together a budget that is based on service rather than on available revenues, and to do this, what we've got to do is start and describe our programs and services that we need to deliver. We need to develop costs for these programs which look at the effectiveness and the efficiency with which they're delivered. Are we making sure that we in Alberta are delivering our programs on a cost-effective basis compared to other jurisdictions as a standard? We should be at the top of those levels because of basically our flexibility, our ingenuity, and the observed ability of Albertans to make the best of situations. So we should be really able to deliver our programs in as cost-effective way as anybody else.

The next thing we have to do is basically compare to our revenues the cost of those services that we have been legislated to provide. That's where the balancing part comes in. As I've said before, this year that's quite easy because we have a very rosy and a very positive revenue situation to look at. If our cost of those programs is less than the revenues, that doesn't mean what we should do is just go off and find other ways to spend those revenues. What we've got to do is look at what is in the best interest of Albertans as we do that. Should we pay down the debt? Should we return the surplus to taxpayers? Or should we put it into an investment in current expenditures for future activities?

We saw some of that in the budget where we're talking about the onetime expenditures basically being put in place this year instead of in future years. We're advancing those investments to this year. What we need to do when we're going to make that kind of decision is really look at it from the perspective of: is it cost-effective to basically move those investments ahead in our long-term plan? We end up, then, dealing with approximately $3 billion in this year's budget which were classed as onetime expenditures.

What we have to do is look at them within the context of their validity as a current year expenditure, and then they just become infrastructure. You know, given the situation, the demands that are on our infrastructure this year, we see it as important that we actually invest in those infrastructure improvements this year rather than delay them. There's nothing wrong with moving ahead an infrastructure investment if you see that there is now a valid need for it to occur this year rather than a year later. The other option, you know, that we have when we deal with these is basically that if we have the extra revenues to create an endowment for infrastructure, move the infrastructure dollars to the time when it is best to schedule the upgrade of that infrastructure.

Now, in question period today we heard the minister and the Premier talk about how circumstances had changed and it was now more appropriate to invest in those infrastructure activities this year. Then we shouldn't call them onetime investments. Those should just be justifiable expenditures in infrastructure this year because they're needed this year. The fact is that we don't necessarily need to expect to be investing the same number of dollars every year in infrastructure, because it is a capital activity not a service activity or an ongoing cost of operation. So it doesn't necessarily have to be as consistent to sustain service as what we see in the service-based type programs.

We also have an advantage if we take that approach in that we will be able to schedule our infrastructure activities to basically be part of this stability component of our economic activity. If we're going to be accelerating expenditures in infrastructure in a downturn in the economy, we get two benefits from that. It basically provides economic activity to sustain an economy that's slowing, but it also gives us as investors of the public dollar the chance to acquire those infrastructure projects when there is less price competition from the private sector that's currently ongoing in a very robust economy.

So I guess what that's all leading to, Mr. Speaker, is that I think that in the context of the debate on the budget I would appreciate the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Infrastructure providing us with justification for why we are doing them this year. If they are cost-effective this year, then let's not call them onetime expenditures; let's call them needed infrastructure dollars for this year. We can deal with them, then, in the context of appropriate decision-making based on need, not based on revenue, as the implication is in the presentation on page 9.

I guess as we get into looking at the rest of the document that was presented to us as the budget presentation, the minister then gets into some of the specifics that deal with specific departments. We look at some of them, and one of the areas that we talked about was health care. This section of the speech threw out a bunch of numbers about what percentage we're talking about, the percentages in growth. It concluded with the fact that in this budget health care expenditures are 35 percent of the province's spending. Mr. Speaker, I would just suggest that it's more important to talk about the delivery of services.

We saw the critical area services like health and education make significant jumps in terms of the proportion of the provincial budget in the periods when a lot of the other departments were being reduced significantly, because we as a society or as a Legislature on behalf of Albertans were making decisions about what kind of activities the province should be involved in. When we cut out all of the involvement in business, when we cut out a lot of our expenditures that are not directed to basic services, that automatically increases the proportion of the budget that's required to serve those given basic services because the other expenditures have been cut out.

This also happens when we see some of the less innovative, less demographically related budget items basically increasing at no more than, say, the cost of living, 2 or 3 percent per year. When we get into things like education or health care, where we are looking at both a demographic and a technology change – and we all recognize that technologies are costly and the implementation of those technologies is costly – we end up effectively changing the level of service. We get better health care out of it, and we're then having to put more dollars into it, and that is by choice. If it's not by choice, then it shouldn't be approved by this Legislature. In effect, the kind of debate we need to be having is in terms of what constitutes appropriate service definition, not what percentage it makes up of the total budget.

As we went through the rest of it, we talked about a number of places in the budget where references are made to increases in the specific departments. Yet when we investigate the actual level of delivery, it's constant, and the dollars that are being added are only enough to cover demographic change, not any different level of service. With this talk about percentage increases rather than holding the line in delivery per capita or holding the line in delivery per service recipient, what we in essence do is create expectations for Albertans that have to be met through explanations to clarify what's been said.

One example that I want to bring out is on page 11, where there's a reference to the AISH increases. When people called in and we talked to some of the individuals or when we had one of our research staff in the technical briefing and this was brought up, what we found is that in the context of the increase in the AISH budget it's basically demographically driven, not the level of payment increasing. So nobody is going to get any more, yet when they heard in the budget that there was going to be an increase in the AISH budget, they expected that that meant they were going to get an increase in payment.

All I'm saying here is that we've got to be sure that when we talk about what we're doing, we talk about it in a way so that Albertans are better able to anticipate the impact on them directly. We should have been able to say that there's going to be an 18 percent increase over the next three years in the number of recipients of AISH dollars, but there'll be no increase in the level per recipient. That's basically what is in the budget. That's the way it was explained to us in the technical briefing. So, in essence, people on AISH don't get extra dollars. There are just a lot more people who are going to be coming on to the AISH program, and that's where the increase is.

So that's basically, I guess, a comment or a suggestion or a request that as we continue to develop our budgets and the releases that go out and the debate that's carried on around the province, we talk about it in ways so that the individuals who are involved in the different programs truly understand the impact that that budget change has on them rather than the impact that it has on us as decision-makers in the context of the allocation of the total revenue. We have to meet the needs of Albertans, not those of us that are in this room. We understand the process, we understand the implications of it, and we should be facilitating their understanding as Albertans rather than trying to deal with that.

I guess the other comment that I want to make is with reference to page 12. The government here again refers to the fact that they're going to protect Albertans from high energy prices when in actual fact under Bill 1 and under the items in the budget they're protecting Albertans from the potential for high natural gas prices, not energy. Many people encompass into the term "energy" both their gas and their electricity components.

Mr. Speaker, we have to be up front with Albertans. We have not provided them with any protection from the increase in electricity prices in the last year. What we did was provide them with a $40 rebate on money that they had already paid into it, and we called it support. That's not true. This is giving them back the money that truly belonged to them in the first place. We had them pay full cost for their electricity. We've got to make sure that when we talk about these kinds of things, it's out there in a way so that Albertans truly understand what the implications of the issue are.

I guess as we go through some of the other aspects that come up in the budget, a question that has already come to me, not so specifically in the role in which I stand here tonight but in one of my critic responsibilities, in agriculture, is: how much is in this for drought payments? Well, what we're able to find out by talking to individuals – and maybe the minister is now listening – is that directly, right now, there are no dollars in the budget for drought. The additional dollars in agriculture are a supplement to the farm income disaster program, not in the context of the drought, other than as it affects the farm income disaster program. Farmers are expecting payment on a drought program based on comments made by the Premier over the past month.

I would hope that in the near future there is some clarification, because farmers are, at least in their own minds, experiencing a drought even though the technical definition has not yet been clarified for them. So what we've got to do is basically talk to them about it and make sure they understand the kinds of things that are in the budget for them and how they'll have access to them. I know the minister is working hard on this, and we all wait enthusiastically for some additional clarification.

The other thing that I wanted to put on the record here are some concerns that come up with the additional infrastructure dollars that are out. It's really great to hear that we'll be looking at renovating and improving and upgrading some of these schools in Alberta. One of the things on which we've had consistent concerns raised over the past number of years by school districts, by parents, and by people involved in the parent councils is: why is it that the government doesn't follow the priorities set by a school district when they send them in to Alberta Infrastructure? Why is it that their number X priority all of a sudden becomes the number 1 priority? It gets the funding and not the number 1 priority that was sent in by the school district. That process needs to be clarified for them.

If nothing more, Mr. Speaker, we have to give them a rationale for why we at this level pre-empt their local priorities and superimpose on it one of ours. I can imagine cases where there are reasons why a priority change might happen, but we owe them an explanation for it. All I'm saying is that we owe them an explanation for why we ask them to go through all of the time-consuming activities that are associated with preparing their priority list, and then we pre-empt them. So we have to look at that in terms of how we deal with it.

I guess the other issue that I want to come up with – I'm getting to the end, Mr. Speaker; I don't have a lot more. As we get to the end, we're talking about the $817 million cushion that's going to be built into the budget. Here there was a reference made to the fact that if we're going to be dealing with this money in the context of the budget, three-quarters of it would be directed to paying down the debt. Well, I would suggest that if they get to the end of the year and there is a surplus in the budget, under the Financial Administration Act all of it goes to pay down the debt unless in the meantime we have made choices in the first, the second, the third, or the fourth quarter to increase expenditures in some line item or in some ministry, and we utilize those dollars.

Within the context of past practice and my understanding of the act that $817 million is fully available because it's a cushion defined in the budget. It is fully available for additional expenditures, not only 25 percent of it. It's not treated like, quote, a surplus would be treated in the context of an estimate at the end of the first, second, or third quarter. So, in that context, I would ask for some clarification so that this poor little old farm boy can better understand what's going on in the budget, whether or not I'm actually really having to deal with this from the perspective of the issues that come up in terms of how we explain the expenditure of that $817 million dollars to Albertans.

The other thing I saw in the budget was what I see as a real issue, I guess, for some hope in the sense that on page 6 there was talk about preparing a study for the long-term revenues of the province. I think we have to look here very seriously at the role the heritage savings trust fund could play if we used it now as a source of putting away some of our excess revenues. In the future the interest earned on that can in essence be a substitute for higher income tax or higher any kind of tax.

We have to look at the fact that under today's standard, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is very, very, very competitive in the context of Canada in both personal and corporate tax structure. We have one of the lowest income taxes, in fact the lowest income tax in Canada, and no sales tax, thank goodness. So what we've got is really from a tax perspective one of the greatest advantages of any jurisdiction in Canada.

So if we end up with resource revenues that are very erratic, unpredictable and if we were to take the surpluses from those high years and put them into our heritage fund, over the next 15 or 20 years, when our natural resource revenues are going to decline because we've depleted that resource, we will have a source of funding there that we don't have to increase our taxes. We won't have to look at the issue of: how do we substitute for the lost natural resource revenues? We will have an endowment that will provide us with an interest income that will replace that natural resource.

So as we get into that long-term review of our revenues, I would hope that that is one of the things we look at. You know, we've had a number of studies in the last year, year and a half which have talked about the idea of using the heritage savings trust fund as an endowment to generate interest for us in the future so that at some point in time, if properly managed, we could even be income tax free in this province. Well, that's probably a long-term objective. What we've got to look at right now is creating a situation where at least we don't have to raise our income taxes, and then we can deal also with the possibility of sometime in the future maybe not being in the position of having to raise our tax situation. I don't think any Albertan wants to see that, so if we can use this erratic and unpredictable part of our resource revenue to create that cushion for the future, I think it would be a good thing for us to consider.

I guess as I go through this, to the Minister of Finance, there's one question that comes up in the context of our very exciting economy, our fast-growing, robust economy. On a daily basis almost we hear information that possibly the U.S. economy is not performing as well as people think. I would just ask: is the government looking into the degree of dependence that we have on the U.S. economy. You know, if the U.S. economy really does experience some troubles, how susceptible will we be to a kind of kickback or a fallout, a second round effect from that? This is something that we have to look at, because we are basing our budget and our budget projections and our three-year business plans on fairly optimistic and fairly positive rates of growth in the area of 4 percent for next year, 4.2, 3.4 over the intermediate term. That is very, very positive and very good for Alberta, but we need to be looking at some of the other things that are going on and how they may impact back on us.

Two more final comments before I finish. The concern that I heard the Premier express today and also the Minister of Finance in a previous conversation where they were talking about how they're concerned that people are talking about, you know, a 24 percent increase in the budget this year when in actual fact they've got a number that they're using that's much lower than that. What we're getting into here is a kind of definition situation in the context of how we look at base budgets. You know, this is one of the issues that comes up when we increase expenditures in response to surpluses at the quarterly level. Technically and administratively those are supposed to be onetime expenditures which disappear out of the budget at the end of that fiscal year. That's how they were supposed to be put in, because they were not supposed to create an ongoing obligation for the government.

If you use that, then the actual base of the budget that we use to compare this year with last year and over the forecast for this year is what was in the budget at the time of the debate last year, and that reflects, I think, the 23.6 or 24 percent increase. If we use the budget that is projected as being the experienced level of expenditure for last year, which incorporates all these quarterly additions, then we're looking at a 12.5 percent increase from last year to this year.

So what we've got to do is make sure that when we talk about the budget, we know and we use a common set of bases and a common set of projections so that when we do go out and talk to Albertans, Albertans don't become confused. We want to be able to go out and say: from last year's budget, this is the increase, or from last year's actual expenditures, this is the increase. They're quite significant. Now, if those quarterly expenditures are truly just onetime issues, or nonrecurring expenditures, last year's actual budget should be an irrelevant figure when we're talking about what is the comparison, because we're talking about the decisions that we made in the context of an ongoing, sustainable, stable budget, which was the amount passed in the debate at the beginning of the year. So all we have to do is kind of come to a common agreement here as to what we're going to use in the context of terms so that we can deal with the issues up front and in the open for Albertans.

I guess my last comment is a reflection of the fact that I don't know whether we should celebrate this year or whether we should all feel, well, not quite ashamed but really concerned, and that is the fact that for the first time this year we're projecting in our budget a billion dollars of gambling income. This is basically a reflection of the direction that we've gone in our province both in terms of entertainment and in terms of reliance on support. We're in the process right now of a review of gambling in the province, the role of VLTs, the role of slot machines, and sometime supposedly in the near future we'll be seeing that report come out.

I guess one of the things I would like to suggest in the context of looking at this is that if the government is undertaking a serious review, we should be looking at how the dollars are proportioned between the government, the operators, and the charities that are out there, in the context of how those dollars get allocated. There's a lot of concern in the context of how the VLTs, slot machines, the casino group are taking away from the community-based options like the bingos, you know, the things that the communities get involved in to deal with supporting their community activity, and we should be looking at that.

One of the other things that's come up and is quite evident: I've had a couple of businesspeople – in fact, Mr. Speaker, more than a couple – who have approached me with concerns about how the possession of a licence for VLTs or for a casino effectively becomes an extreme income generator, which gets translated into a wealth factor. You look at that in the context of how this comes out, and effectively what we're doing here is basically using legislation to create a new, quote, property concept that then becomes tradable at a market value based on its income-earning ability, and this basically gives us a real ability to create wealth generation through legislation.

What we've got to do is look at whether or not that concept is the appropriate way to be generating wealth in our province. We've got to look at it from the perspective that this is an activity which we as a society have agreed to have publicly supervised. Should that supervision in effect translate into licences which become capitalized and create wealth for the individuals who get them? Or should the excess revenues that get capitalized into that wealth be captured back by us as the society that licensed them? This is some of the debate that needs to go on in terms of how we deal with the transferability of those licences, the access to those licences, and how they in effect share the revenues that are involved.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very complex issue. We look at the access to the VLTs or the slot machines, the bingos, whatever, in the context of small rural communities. If there isn't sufficient revenue generated by the owner of the licence, then what we end up with is that it's not available unless people are willing to travel the distance. So, you know, there has to be some kind of mechanism there to deal with it from the perspective of providing fair and equitable access, again based on the assumption that this is the kind of province we want. More and more now we're seeing individuals say that maybe they don't want that.

What we've got to do is create an opportunity where, you know, a business that makes a choice to basically invest in a licence doesn't get a competitive advantage over the business which, because of their community commitment, chooses not to, and they can't compete with each other based on service in the direct delivery, but they have to compete in a different way, because one basically has access to that VLT licence or the other gambling licence components than what we're looking at.

Mr. Speaker, that's basically the end of my comments. What we'll be doing in mostly the coming evenings but over the next four weeks is dealing with the individual departments. I have the privilege of standing and speaking to the Agriculture, Finance, and Revenue budgets as the critic. So I'm sorry; you're going to hear from me some more yet before the end of the budget debate. In the meantime I'll give someone else a chance.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the New Democratic Party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to enter the debate on the budget. I have only 20 minutes at my disposal, so obviously I'll have to be very selective. A comprehensive review of the budget is simply impossible during this very limited time, but I want to make a few general comments first.

[Mrs. Fritz in the chair]

There is some difference of opinion on whether or not the 21st century started last year or this year. I prefer to think that it started this year. So we are in the first year of the new century, we are in the First Session of the 25th Assembly in the life of this province, and this is the first budget; therefore, the provincial budget of the 21st century. I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance as a new minister in this position for doing her hard work and presenting the budget, but my congratulatory tone will stop very soon at this point because there are major differences in the way she sees what the priorities of the province are and what I think they should be. Given the fact that this is a new century, a new minister, a new Assembly, there is some hope and expectation that the government will attempt to make some sort of new beginning, but I think Albertans will have to wait for that.

There's no indication in this budget that there is an attempt to forge a new vision, forge a new path into the future, into the 21st century. Much of what's being presented here is more of the same. It's consistent with this government's policies and positions that it has developed over the last eight years. Clearly there is a commitment on the part of the government to continued rapid and high levels of economic growth, but there is a difference between achieving high levels of economic growth and striving to achieve a shared prosperity. Merely high levels of economic growth should not be equated with prosperity for all. There is, certainly, economic growth, and there are beneficiaries of this process of growth, but there are many, many Albertans who are left out, who don't share in this prosperity. So there is no goal set here in this budget, if this budget is to be set in terms of its vision, its goals, for a kind of social future that's compassionate, that's more just. There is no such indication that this is a budget designed to achieve the goal of shared prosperity.

Social investments are still in many ways seen as expenditures rather than as something that we are investing in our future that is a savings in the future. So the language of these expenditures is still very much prevalent as if we are wasting money, and we need to stop doing that.

In terms of this particular budget and the numbers, total revenues are estimated to be $22.7 billion, down about $2.6 billion from the most recent 2000-2001 forecast, and total expenditures are estimated to be $21.6 billion. Now, while at first blush it looks like the government is ramping up spending, I must note that over $1.5 billion of this additional spending is for capital infrastructure expenditures this year, which should be seen as an investment, not as a new line item in the budget. So essentially what the government is doing is setting aside money this year for spending on hospitals, schools, and roads that will take place over the next three years, and I must say that it couldn't have come too soon. It was badly needed, so I'm supportive of the infrastructural part of the budget, the commitments made there.

All I'm saying is that it seems to give the wrong impression, that Alberta is moving down the path of spending and spending and spending. If you now add to this the adjustment for inflation and population increase, then the overall budget increase looks even smaller, more modest than it appears on the surface. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation is worried that the government of Alberta is beginning to spend and spend and spend. I think they're mistaken; that's not the case. The expenditure side, the total overall budget, doesn't seem to indicate to me that there are any new, bold commitments being made in terms of investing in our children's future and the future of our youth or in any other forms that will benefit us down the road in the long run.

On the revenue side, a few observations. Other than a reduction in the railway fuel tax from 3 cents to 1.5 cents per litre, there are no further tax cuts in this budget. The flat tax, in my judgment, is an unfair way of taxing Albertans on their personal income. There's no change in that. No reduction in health care premiums, much less any sign that they will be scrapped very soon or soon. The hotel room tax stays, and there is no cut in fuel taxes for average families. There is no increase in cigarette taxes, as was being suggested only a short while ago by the minister of health.

The previously announced $248 million cut in corporate taxes and the $135 million cut in school property taxes are mentioned again. The capital tax on financial institutions is also being eliminated on April 1. Those eliminations were announced last September, so that's not really new either.

On the expenditure side now, Madam Speaker, health spending is forecast to rise about $737 million compared to last year's forecast. About half will go for remuneration increases, mainly for doctors and nurses, and the rest to arrange for the announced initiatives. It remains to be seen whether this increase will ultimately lead to smaller waiting lists or any lowering of pressure in our hospital emergency rooms.

Education spending is forecast to rise by about $340 million for a very large system, both K to 12 and postsecondary. Interestingly, provisions for increases in teacher salaries are at 4 percent this year and 2 percent next year, for a total of 6 percent over two years, much less than what teachers were expecting and much less than what teachers were given to believe by the Premier just a short two weeks ago. I suspect there will be a great deal of tension in the negotiations that are forthcoming. That's unavoidable. There could be labour strife. I think it was a shortsighted decision by the government not to include the teachers among public servants who should be paid fairly and who should be compensated for the sacrifices that the Premier himself acknowledged they made willingly over the years in order to assist this government to eliminate its deficit and pay back its debt.

In addition to these increases, modest as they are, the basic per pupil grant will go up 3.5 percent and 3 percent over the next two successive years, from which school boards will be expected to reduce class size and address other priorities. I'm sure school boards are going to find themselves between a rock and a hard place trying to help their teachers remain satisfied and committed to the work that they're doing and to reduce class sizes at the same time, especially when you look at these increases in light of the rate of inflation, which cuts into the real value.

Also, look at the increase in the number of students in the system. There is a great deal being said by the government side about how the growing economy is attracting tens of thousands of Canadians into our province, which is true, but when they come, they also bring their children with them, thereby increasing the demand on our already overloaded education system. So the increases in the budget must be seen in light of these increasing demands and the impact that inflation has on the ability of school boards to purchase the goods and services they need in order to provide quality education to their students.

So I don't think these increases are adequate. They certainly are not adequate if there's any commitment anywhere to decrease class sizes on the part of this government. There is lots of rhetoric and talk that small class size is necessary, but we're going to leave it to school boards to accomplish this task. But unless this government is willing and prepared to give the resources to school boards, it's a goal that will not be achieved. The budget certainly has no evidence in it that this government has any real commitment to the achievement of that goal or commitment to partnering with school boards to achieve that goal.

In terms of postsecondary education there is $28 million allocated to faculties like computer technology, medicine, and engineering. The rest of the faculties are left to their own devices. If they lose leading scholars to other universities, which they are doing, then so be it. Who will be the losers? Our young, our students, the vast majority of whom enroll in faculties that are being neglected and ignored as a result of this targeted funding that this government is simply channeling in the direction of a few faculties at the expense of liberal arts and humanities.

Funding for scholarship programs is being increased to some extent, though there is no new money to put a brake on tuition fee increases. That must be a major disappointment to our postsecondary students who in the tens of thousands signed petitions to this government over the years, particularly last year, to give a message to the minister that he must commit himself and work hard on their behalf to convince this government and convince his colleagues in the cabinet that tuition fees should not only be frozen, but it's about time they be rolled back given the resources of this province. The tuition fees in this province are the second or third highest in the country, and this province claims to be the richest, on the other hand, amongst all the provinces in this great nation.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So that to me is another great disappointment. It's shameful that we are not able to reduce the burden of tuition fee increases on our students, which is within our reach, within our capacity, but we need to have a minister who really has his heart into doing this, has a real commitment to this goal, and unfortunately we don't have that here. [interjections]

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, minutes are just whizzing by, and I don't need a minister and another member here to be telling me what to say. I would ask them to be patient and listen while I'm speaking.

Moving to another matter, Mr. Speaker, while there is money provided to accommodate increases in the number of cases of AISH recipients, there are no increases in monthly allowances for AISH or social assistance recipients of any real, genuine magnitude. That means that these recipients will be condemned to living in growing conditions of poverty and scarcity.

Government spending on natural gas rebates announced before the election was $1 billion for the first four months, January to the end of April, the end of this month, approaching fairly soon. However, in this budget only $125 million is budgeted for natural gas rebates for all of the year 2001-02. This translates, Mr. Speaker, into $8 per household, $8 a month. So it's obviously not a terribly significant promise that's contained in the budget and will not relieve the anxieties and the financial pressures that most families are experiencing as a result of the large increases in natural gas prices and electricity prices.

So, Mr. Speaker, what does it tell us about this government's commitments? Where is it going? Where does it want to go? It's clear that it really does not have a very good idea of where it wants to go except that it wants to keep going where it's been going before. Nothing new. Nothing imaginative. Nothing very creative. No promise of charting a new course to show the adventurous spirit that Alberta is known for and to say to Albertans that we are now thinking of a postdebt era, and in this era there are new things that we are going to do, and here are those things, here are the resources, and here is our plan to accomplish those things.

Talking about debt freedom, Mr. Speaker, I heard this phrase repeated again and again and again by the Finance Minister yesterday in her speech: freedom from debt. Well, it's a good idea, but we have been free from debt, not to underestimate the need to be free from debt. We have $12 billion in cash assets in the heritage fund. We have – I don't know – $4 billion, $5 billion, $6 billion, $7 billion of debt. So we should be talking in terms of net assets, cash assets, rather than net debt. When you really look at the balance of this strange accounting, when you have $12 billion in the bank and you owe $7 billion and then you say that we have $7 billion in net debt, it's difficult to understand the logic. This is not to justify that this government should undertake new debt obligations. The point is that we should be frank and honest with Albertans about the real fiscal situation of the province. If freedom from debt was the goal to be achieved, we have achieved it.

I think we need to set new goals: freedom from poverty, freedom from child poverty, freedom from excessive tuition burdens on our young Albertans, who are going to be the source of prosperity in the future for this province. But none of those ideas are permitted to enter the language of the pages of the budget documents as I see them, and that must be a serious disappointment to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the health care premiums. I want to speak a bit about that. There were attempts made, I guess, at the last Tory convention by some members – there were some motions or resolutions passed there advising the government that it's time to consider scrapping health care premiums. Well, there's no such hope. The government hasn't listened even to its own rank and file on that one. Health care premiums are not only an unfair burden on those families that pay from their own pocket. They can't even use this expenditure for tax purposes. It's not a tax deductible expenditure.

On the other hand, for employers it's a payroll tax, and this government is committed to making business easier for people who want to set up business in this province. Yet it doesn't see the health care premiums as an unnecessary, unfair burden on employers whose costs go up because they have to pay as part of their fringe benefits to their employees these health care premiums on their behalf. On the other hand, the employees who receive this benefit have to pay taxes on it once again. So it's a strange situation, makes no economic sense, yet the government has not moved an inch on the issue of scrapping or reducing or eliminating in a staggered way these taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I know that time is running out. I would like to conclude my comments by saying that it's regretful that the government has squandered a major opportunity at the turn of a new century, at the beginning of a new Assembly to chart a new course. We are living in a time of immense economic growth. I hate to call it prosperity because it doesn't really trickle down to everyone, and markets never are a good mechanism to allow it to trickle down to everyone. The government had the chance to undertake some truly bold and meaningful and innovative steps to leave a legacy for the people of Alberta. They have failed in their task.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2000-01
General Revenue Fund, No. 2

THE CHAIRMAN: First of all, hon. members, before considering the estimates this evening, the chair would like to clarify that the April 10, 2001, House leaders' agreement is silent on the subject of supplementary supply estimates, and that is what we're dealing with tonight. Accordingly, the only limitations on speaking are those found in the Standing Orders. As this is the only day allotted for consideration of these supplementary supply estimates pursuant to Government Motion 11, which the Assembly passed yesterday, then under Standing Order 59 they must come to a vote no later than 11:45 this evening.

So with that, we'd also remind hon. members that, again, in committee you're allowed to move around, which many of you are taking liberal advantage of, but we still want to have only one person standing and talking at a time. If we could all observe that, that would be helpful.

Learning

THE CHAIRMAN: This evening we're going to start the supplementary supply estimates off with comments by the Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. What we have before us tonight is a supplementary estimate for $33 million. Quite simply, this is to reimburse the Department of Learning for the tax cut of $135 million that was applied to January 1 of this year through the Department of Municipal Affairs as it applies to the education component of the property taxes.

Mr. Chairman, $33 million is roughly one-quarter of the $135 million, and that is the reason for the supplementary supply, so that the Department of Learning's budget would not have been cut by $33 million, that we would still have the same amount to spend as was ordered in the previous budget. I'm sure that the opposition members would not want my budget to be decreased by $33 million.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to stand and support the appropriation that we have before us, because I have been one of those individuals who has advocated adequate funding for public school boards and have made a plea that the underfunding be discontinued. So any move that keeps the boards at least even and not in a less favourable position, I guess, is one that we eventually have to support.

The requisition, however, raises a number of questions about the financing and the operation of school boards across the province. Although they weren't directly involved in this transaction, they could have been had this requisition not been made and the payments put in place. I think that so often in the last half dozen, eight years the boards have had things done to them and have not been partners of the government as the financial plans and planning for school districts and schools have unfolded. What the requisition does is call into question the kind of planning that's been done, and what is the use of three-year business plans if an expenditure like this could come along and, had the minister not had the support for this requisition, could have totally wrecked school board budgets and put them in a very difficult position?

The whole notion of planning and trying to plan long-term when these kinds of things occur is very, very difficult. It would be interesting to have a performance measure in the budget plans that gave some indication of the government's success in putting forward a budget plan and sticking to it. I think some of my colleagues are going to spend a few minutes talking about that particular aspect of the budget process.

Boards in general, I think, have had a very difficult time, and there have been changes that really have weakened them and made them very vulnerable. If this had gone through and they had had their budget cuts, they would be in a position to do little about it but to cut programs or teachers, and that stems back to the loss of their taxing authority. They no longer have the freedom to make up deficits like this to respond to the unforeseen because they have had that taxing authority removed from them, or if they do tax, as in the case of some of the Roman Catholic school districts, their grants are reduced to an amount equal to the amount raised by that local taxation. So they have really no recourse to deal with the unexpected except to cut programs, and they are not alone in this. We're going to see this when we look at the budget requisition for Children's Services. Boards there are caught in exactly the same lose/lose situation.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

A second factor that's making life very difficult for school boards is the earmarking of funds, and as worthy as many of those projects are – the literacy program and some of the other initiatives, the school improvement program – they take control and flexibility away from local boards and make them less able to respond.

I think a third factor that has weakened local control has been the consolidation of a number of the boards. The geographic areas served by some of them are almost impossible.

So I think that over the last number of years boards have been weakened and are at the mercy of changes like this that come from another department or come from a group of other departments. I think that an implication or the curtailment of local authority has resulted in the centralization of authority in Edmonton, and it's a centralization that's unfortunate given the nature of our schools. I think boards are becoming more and more remote from citizens and less and less able to respond to local needs. This is, I think, just a warning flag in terms of how vulnerable our public school boards and separate school boards are to moves by the government, and they have little recourse to moves such as this.

I think that the reorganization that's occurred over the last number of years has minimized local boards. The K to 12 system now finds it's grouped and competing with the interests of advanced education in one department, and the latest move was the split-off of Infrastructure, meaning that now, according to some superintendents that I talked to, the boards are forced to deal with two departments. To make a plea for their building funds and their program funds, they have to first make the case with Learning and then make the case with Infrastructure. So all that's happened with that particular reorganization is that boards have had their work doubled and, again, their authority minimized and life made more difficult for them.

I think boards are made more remote through the chronic underfunding that has been imposed upon them. Local schools have certainly suffered as a result of that underfunding. It's evidenced in the kind of parent fund-raising that goes on. I was talking to a parent yesterday who was here with a group of students from a local elementary school about the fund-raising efforts of their school, and she was indicating how happy she was that they had finally received consent to conduct a casino. My question to her was: what are you going to do with the proceeds from that casino? She said, "Well, you know, we're going to be buying some computers and some software." I said, "Well, I thought some of those were mandated by the province." She said, "They are, but the school can't afford them." Then she said, "We're going to be buying some books for our school." I think that that's unfortunate, that the parents are now forced into fund-raising for basic instructional materials and resources, and their role as the fund-raisers for the special event or the special field trip has been dramatically changed.

I think some of the underfunding has led to the loss of librarians. A teacher librarian in this province is a rare individual. That is a dramatic change from the past when the expectation was that every school library in the province would have if not a full-time then at least a part-time teacher librarian, someone who was schooled in library science but also in pedagogy and instruction and could help children and teachers utilize library resources to their advantage.

I think they've been weakened in other ways in terms of some of the interagency agreements. Some of the boards, I know, have gone willingly into these agreements. I think particularly of the health initiative. I would hope that sometime in the future we're going to have a review of that initiative and find out exactly how children have been served. Certainly the level of speech pathology, speech therapists, occupational therapists, the kinds of services that school boards in the past rendered themselves – and they were able to do that because, again, they had access to some local taxing authority – are minimal. I know the agreement between Capital health and the two local boards exists more in the minds of those two agencies than it does in the classrooms and in the offices of schools. The kind of therapy that's available for children needing help with speech is minimal, to say the least, and – I think the situation still prevails from last year – is discontinued at third grade, which is hardly the way to deal with speech problems, which are often very, very long term.

So a number of factors. The measure before us I guess I indicated I'd support. It's needed. I think it points out the weakness in planning, and I think it certainly points out the vulnerability of schools and their ability to respond to unforeseen, changing financial circumstances. I think it's unfortunate that they have been put in that position. They will continue to be if the upcoming budget is any measure, where we see the encroachment into collective bargaining on a large scale by the provincial government, really a situation where the bargaining has been done publicly by the Premier through the budget documents that are tabled. Again, I think that that's unfortunate. It takes away the authority and the power to act from local school boards and the power to set priorities in terms of the kind of teachers that they can hire and they can set as a priority.

I look at boards who had in the past some forward-looking personnel policies. One board, for instance, had a policy of hiring the best-qualified teacher available. Having to take a policy like that and set it aside because of the nature of the funding, they have to hire the teacher that will cost them the least. It's hardly the criteria that that board would like to use when they're trying to find teachers to take over in their classrooms.

So it's a series of events that keep chewing away and eroding the authority of local boards, and you wonder if there isn't some grand design behind this to make local boards redundant and make the move, as some other provinces have, to eventually do away with them. I'm not usually that suspicious, Mr. Chairman, but it does leave one to ponder when you see the kinds of moves that have been made.

I think that with those comments I'll conclude and look forward to further comments on the requisition.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's always difficult to follow the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on any debate around Learning because his knowledge and experience is so in depth, but there were a couple of issues quite specific to Edmonton-Centre that I wanted to raise around this issue.

I understand that the $33.3 million is to replace the January to the end of March loss that the department would have suffered as a result of the change in property taxes. That also makes me question why this was a surprise. I mean, if the government departments are all talking to one another, then this decision and the implementation of it shouldn't have come as a surprise to the Department of Learning, where they would need to be getting supplementary estimates to achieve a zero mark by the end of the fiscal year. I find the entire purpose of the supplementary estimates very bizarre, coming from the nonprofit sector, the thought of being able to present a budget or financial statements back to your board in which you said: "Whoops, went over in X area, but gosh there's a good reason for it. So can we just take money and put it backwards into it?" I don't think anyone would last very long in that sector if they followed the example that's put forward by the government.

I guess when I hear about things like this, I always go back to the Auditor General's report to see what advice he was giving any department prior to this happening. Was there advice given that, if followed, would have reduced the need for additional funds to be put in or would have helped in the management? When I look at the Auditor General's report that led into the year that is under scrutiny here, there are two points that are being raised. The Auditor General is making it very clear that he's issuing an adverse audit opinion on the financial statements of the Ministry of Learning mostly because the school jurisdictions and public postsecondary institutions are not consolidated inside the financial statements of the department.

I also note that he's saying that the link needs to be improved between strategic planning for the delivery of basic education and long-term capital planning for school facilities. Now, this issue keeps coming up. Certainly I've been charged by the constituents of Edmonton-Centre to make it very clear in this Assembly how unhappy those constituents are that they are now facing the closure of one complete school, that being Queen Mary Park, and the partial closure of another school, that being the high school of John A. McDougall. These are community schools. They are deeply tied into their communities; they are very important to the communities. These are inner-city communities.

Now, inner city doesn't mean necessarily poor, down-trodden, or shabby in any way. Certainly those two communities have been working hard to rejuvenate, to attract young families moving into the areas, to get programs in place that would enhance the community and the families that are living there now. So to have a utilization rate that is put in place that supersedes the school board designation and prioritization list of which schools can be expecting infrastructure money – we now have this secondary list that's produced by the Department of Infrastructure about who's in what priority position and for how much money, and the two lists differ in many instances. The entire idea of the utilization rate is deeply offensive to many of the constituents and community members in these communities. The other amenities that the school offers, the fact that they are both keystones in their communities is not counting for anything, yet it counts very much for the people in those communities.

So, you know, once again I'll raise that issue, but I hope it stands as a warning for others who might be thinking smugly that they're fine. Don't be smug about it. It, too, can happen to you, especially if this utilization policy remains in place.

The second point that's raised by the Auditor General is:

Better systems are needed to ensure capital project proposals demonstrate cost/benefits, to manage scope changes and to evaluate contractor performance.

Oh, sorry; that's specific to the University of Calgary. But he does expand that to a number of other systems that cost benefits need to be demonstrated: "manage change orders" and "evaluate contractor performance." Pretty straightforward, basic information to be considered with any kind of capital project. Now, at this point we have the Department of Learning, and we also have the Department of Infrastructure. That was raised by the previous speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, that school boards and schools themselves are now having to deal with two different government departments, where it used to be one.

The other issue that I wanted to talk about briefly was envelope funding. I found it really interesting to see that in the February throne speech there was a plea from the government to the federal government to please not give them money in envelope funding, or targeted funding, yet the government has no problem in turning around and doing that to a number of agencies that they work with, like school boards. That really contributes to a chronic underfunding in certain areas. It takes away the flexibility of the school boards and individual schools to offer programming and support specific to what their needs are. We should be able in this day and age of mass communication and computers and number-crunching and all to be much more flexible than I see this government being, especially around assistance to local schools.

The amount of fund-raising that is possible in some schools in this province is simply not possible for the schools in Edmonton-Centre. These are working parents, and they just don't have the time. They are working both day and night jobs, and they don't have the time to be able to go and work a casino or a bingo or to go door to door selling chocolates or Christmas cards or Christmas wrapping paper or any of the other things I've seen happening.

There isn't additional fund-raising for these schools. I know that the teachers and the support staff have run some fund-raising schemes in order to assist the school and gain equipment and supplies that they're looking for, but essentially these schools just have to do without. I know that the minister feels this is not a problem, but I can tell him that it is. I heard a librarian – one of the few left in Alberta – say that there were something like only 139 librarians left in the province, which again is an issue for the schools that I represent, and I know this must be the case in some of the other metropolitan areas as well. I don't need to belabour this point. I just wanted to raise a number of issues around funding of schools and planning for funding and my surprise that this government wasn't talking between departments so that it was known that it would be an issue and that this money would need to be injected backwards into the Department of Learning as a result of the changes in the municipal property tax structure.

So I'm not going to object to this money, obviously, besides the fact that it's futile because it's already happened. You know, once again we've got taxation essentially without representation in that we're debating this in April. This happened six months ago; it's a done deal. So I think a basic course or a refresher course in democracy might be in order here.

With those comments, I look forward to listening to other observations on this supplementary estimate for 2000-2001. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to respond to the supplementary estimates. Before I speak specifically to Learning, I would like to make a few comments about the supplementary estimates in general. In reviewing the information that is available to us and contrasting that with prior years' supplementary estimates, there are some interesting points for us to take a look at and take under consideration.

The Minister of Finance has brought in, in total for this year, supplementary estimates of $1.422 billion. We can compare that to what other Treasurers have brought forward within their mandates. The very interesting thing to see, Mr. Chairman, is that if we take a look at former Treasurers Stockwell Day, Jim Dinning, and Dick Johnston, we find there isn't a single one of them that has brought in supplementary estimates as high as what we have seen in the 2000-2001 year. The closest was Stockwell Day, Mr. Chairman, and that was in the '99-2000 year, when he brought in supplementary estimates of $1.416 billion. Dick Johnston, who took a lot of heat in this province for the way he managed the budget, never even came close. The very highest year he ever had in special warrants was $507 million, almost one-third of what we see brought forward in this particular year.

What does that tell us? I think there are a few things we can learn from that. One is that this is the absolute worst government we have seen since the 1986-87 year in terms of being able to budget and forecast, the worst in terms of any kind of planning, the worst in terms of being able to establish any kind of rolling budgetary process where benchmarks and performance indicators can actually be tied back to the dollars spent and the dollars projected to be spent. I think that's very interesting.

We have forever lived in a province with cyclical revenues. Some years are really good and some years are not so good, and governments spend accordingly, but not like this government. It's like a free-for-all out there with the money. It's literally falling off the wagon. They can't spend it fast enough, and they certainly can't plan for that spending. I think that is what we see when we take a look at the kind of spending that's happened in this past year. Clearly a record for dollars spent. Clearly not something to be proud of, Mr. Chairman.

I believe there are ways to account for surplus years, and they come to what we see as being the key fundamental issues when you talk about revenue projections and planning and forecasting and providing wealth for a province long into the future. Those are issues of stability and sustainability and equality. If we take a look at those independent issues here and apply them to how this government is spending, we find there are some huge deficits.

If we talk about stability, there is nothing in the way this government spends when they just earmark specific funds and dump them back into the system without any thought for tomorrow or the next year or the year after that. There is no stability in that kind of spending. What that means is that those people receiving those funds and other areas that would like to have funds have no stability in their funding, Mr. Chairman. So that's an issue we need to talk about and think about. What would provide stability in the system?

If we had a government with vision, what we would have is a government that would try to equalize the moneys coming in into a revenue stream that would be sustainable over the long term. That is where we need to be. How do we get there? There are many ways to get there, to level out income streams in a province that is resource based. How you do it is change the resource base of the province. We don't have to be dependent on resources in this province. We're a smart province. There's a lot of knowledge here. That means we have many opportunities when it comes to such areas as technology or education.

We can be talking about value-added. I know that we hear that buzzword in this Assembly, and there has been some good work done. Organizations like the Alberta Research Council are working on issues like that. We see lots of work happening in agricultural areas. It's all good news, Mr. Chairman, but not enough to stabilize the kind of revenue stream we have now, so that's an issue that needs to be addressed. That's part of it. That isn't an easy solution, and it doesn't happen overnight; it takes a long time for that to happen. It's something that the government should be promoting at every possible availability, and we don't see that happening to the extent that it could.

What's another way of leveling out that income stream? You build up another major source of income quickly. Well, we have an excellent framework set in place right now, and that's the heritage savings trust fund. Those of us who've been around for a while recall that between '93 and '95 Albertans were asked what they wanted to do with that fund. What they said, Mr. Chairman, was that they wanted to keep it, that in fact they saw value in that. So why don't we build on that value?

I think that's something we could have been taking a look at since we started to see the surplus years hit, which was about 1995. We could have done a few things. We could have taken a look at the debt repayment schemes that the government has entered into and kept with their original mandate, which was to pay that debt down over a longer period of time. What that would have given us was more excess funds that could have been put into the heritage savings trust fund to build it up. It doesn't take long in these kinds of years to build up revenue streams where we could be adding to the general revenue fund in the years when we don't have high resource revenues.

Instead, what has the government done? They have chosen to make it even optional if that fund will be inflation proof. To date, every year except for this current year we have seen that fund at least inflation proof. So what that means is that we're not losing any value in the fund except potentially for this year, but it isn't increasing either.

What we also could have seen was the government not choosing to stream off the interest income into the general revenue fund in surplus years. That's what's been happening so far. Had they used that to build up the fund, we would have seen it in a position where, when we did hit one of the valleys in this peak-and-valley kind of revenue stream we have, we would have had more interest revenue generated from that fund because the fund would have grown. So I think that's an easy solution to try to level out the fund and help sustain the kind of program funding that could be very helpful to this province.

So those are my comments on that. I will go specifically now to the Learning supplementary estimates, that are under discussion at this point in time, and I think we can talk about the same issues here.

When we have a government that does its planning in such a short-term manner as this government does – real-time budgeting, we would call it in the corporate world – there's no opportunity for people who are affected by the budgeting system to react. That is a problem, I think. It's a very paternalistic way to manage a revenue stream and a budgeting process. It certainly does nothing to empower other organizations that are directly affected by the decisions that are made.

Who in this case is directly affected, Mr. Chairman? Certainly school boards are. When there's a reduction in the provincial property tax as we've seen here, who doesn't have a say in that? School boards. Who doesn't have a say in that? Municipalities. Who doesn't have a say in that? Ratepayers. All people who are stakeholders in this particular process but who had no say in what happened there. The government just came in and said: "This is what we're going to do. Too bad for any discussion on it or any feedback or any ability to participate in the process." So then what happens? School boards think to themselves, "Where's this money going to come from?" The government is promising to give the money back to them, which is what we see happening here, so that's a good thing. They needed to be brought up to par in terms of what they had expected to get in revenue. But what it takes away from them is any management abilities or any ability to ensure that they've got stability in their planning process. How can you expect school boards to make good decisions if they have no stability in the process? How can you expect school boards to feel like equal partners in this organization if they don't have a say in the process?

MR. DUNFORD: Are you sure you want to do this?

MS CARLSON: Yes, I am sure. Would you like to help me with my comments? Anybody else?

So if we take a look at sustainability and how it affects these decisions, it's impossible to sustain this kind of planning process when we see this ad hoc kind of decision-making happening. That's a real problem and a hardship for the province, and I think certainly that's something that should be taken into consideration when these kinds of decisions are being made. So it's good that they got the money back, but what about what else they need?

If we take a look at what is needed in Learning, there are a lot of things that are needed. We all heard them at the doors during the election. You know, everybody in my community is still doing fund-raising for basic services. They're not fund-raising in my constituency or at my kids' schools for field trips. They are fund-raising for some of the basic necessities that we feel are necessary, fundamental tools for our kids to have. What would those be? Textbooks. In a major high school in this city every student does not have access to a textbook, and some of those textbooks are held together with duct tape, Mr. Chairman. Now, is that the kind of system we should be supporting in education? How do we expect our students to excel, to be . . . I see there's more than one kind of book that's held together or should be held together with duct tape, even in this Assembly. Well, that's too bad, and it's the kind of thing we should look at correcting. Certainly it's a real problem in the school system when the kids don't have enough textbooks or when they have to fund-raise for them or when they're using textbooks that are missing pages or are unreadable because of the graffiti and notes in them or, literally, bindings are falling apart.

The schools in my constituency are fund-raising for computers. I think the Supernet, that the government talks about, is a great idea, but where are those computers, Mr. Chairman? They're not falling off the government money tree; that's for sure. People are having to go out and fund-raise to be able to put them in the schools, and there aren't enough computers for the kids to use. Computers these days are not a luxury. They are a fundamental way of people being able to access information that is critical to their learning, to their succeeding, and to them exceeding any kinds of expectations we would have for them. It isn't happening. They don't even have enough computers, and let's talk about the computers that they do have.

Evergreening, in terms of keeping those computers up to speed or compatible with other processes that are available, is something that people aren't even talking about. It's an impossibility. There is just not enough money in the system to take a look at that kind of process. They've got computers in lots of these schools that are nothing more than word processors, that can't even be hooked up to the Internet because they don't have the operating capacity. So those are real issues. You know, even when you hook up every school on this Supernet highway that we hear being talked about . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: They only run that to the outside of the building.

MS CARLSON: That's exactly right. As my colleague said, they only run that to the outside of the building. The school is responsible for bringing it in, for finding the computers that are compatible to hook up to the system, and for evergreening and ensuring that the students have computers that are workable and are up to standards.

That becomes an issue in the classroom, because then what we see on the classroom side of it is teachers who are not now accepting assignments that aren't computer generated. There are lots of schools who won't take the assignments if they're handwritten. They have to be typewritten or word processed. Well, if you don't have a school that has enough computers, if you don't have computers that have reasonable printers, if the files on the computers are backed up and the kids can't get their stuff printed off or if they can't get access to the computers, how are they supposed to get their assignments in?

Not everybody has a computer at home. Certainly in my constituency it just isn't the case that everyone is at the technological level where the kids can come home from school to a computer. We have many people in my constituency where the kids come home to no food, never mind to no computer. So those are issues that aren't being addressed and that need to be and things that we need to take a look at. If we're taking a look at properly funding these schools, then we need to take a look at doing it in a much more appropriate way than what we have seen with just a little dumping of money in supplementary estimates where the minister sees appropriate. The issue is much broader than that.

Education was, for sure, the number two issue in my constituency during the election. In many households it was the number one issue. The interesting thing that happened there was a change in this election from the last two elections. When I asked people and they said that education was an issue, I said to them: is it an issue for you for K to 12 or postsecondary or both? In previous elections the majority of the people – I would say more than 80 percent of them – said that the issue was from K to 12. This time way more people said postsecondary, but even more than that, the vast majority of people, well over 90 percent, said both. They're seeing it as an issue at both levels.

It is nice that property taxes saw a reduction, nice that the government decided to ensure that school boards had the same amount of dollars, and that's where we see these dollars coming in, but it doesn't address the systemic problems in education that we're seeing that have grown from K to 12 issues to also include postsecondary issues. Those are some issues that we really need to see being addressed in a systemic way, in a way in the budget process that we can actually track and monitor through performance indicators, Mr. Chairman, that will reflect what it is the department can do and should be reporting on.

There is a real problem, that I will discuss more fully when we get into the budget estimates on Learning, with the performance indicators and the way in which the government has been benchmarking what they've been doing. We have the overall problem with that in that you can't benchmark short-term envelope funding. It's impossible to do because it's onetime funding, and there is no consistency to what happens with those dollars or any sort of reporting capacity. It's just in and it's out, and that's it. There is always a ripple effect when you envelope-fund something. There are implications for that envelope funding. If you do all your funding by envelope funding, which is the direction this government is going in, we find other problems occurring.

One of those problems is that the expectation from organizations and everyone receiving the funding, be it school boards, municipalities, organizations, nonprofits, whatever, becomes that that funding is going to be there forever, and we know in this province that that is not sustainable in the long run. So what we need to do in all these instances is determine exactly how much money it is we need to operate an effective system. That hasn't been done in Learning; that's for sure. All these problems that keep cropping up, all the alternate ways people find to find income indicate that there are still basic systemic problems in the funding proposals, so those need to be addressed.

We need to understand what those problems are, find out how much money it's going to take to fix them. It is not always more money, Mr. Chairman, but smart money. The issue here is not how much money you spend. It's how much value you get for the money you spend. I don't think that's a criterion being used to evaluate how this government spends money. It could be. That could be a benchmark put in every single business plan in these government departments. How much value are you getting for the money? Are you getting more value than you got last year for the same dollars spent? That's the question. You can't tell, that's for sure, in the way that these systems are implemented and the monitoring process that this government has put in place. But that is how the corporate world evaluates systems, and that is a system that this government could use, too, that would be very effective.

I'm out of time. Too bad.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Seeing no other speaker, would the minister like to make any concluding remarks? Okay.

After considering the supplementary estimates of the Department of Learning, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment                      $33,309,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Children's Services

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much and good evening. Previously this ministry requested a special warrant in the amount of $3.8 million, and tonight I'd like to once again explain why this special warrant is necessary.

During the last quarter of the 2000-2001 fiscal year the funding provided to the child and family services authorities was reallocated between those that had deficits and those that had surpluses. Because of the cost and caseload pressures, however, there just wasn't enough funding to go around to all the authorities, so we were not able to accommodate all the deficits that were not anticipated previously but were reflective of increasing caseloads and several issues such as handicapped children's services and the cost increases there.

First, the grants provided were not increased prior to March 31 of 2000, and it was felt that the authorities would have sufficient funds to follow through and complete their year without any reallocation. Second of all, because these funds could not be transferred after March 31, the amount that was remaining within the department or the ministry was deemed a surplus. A surplus cannot be transferred to the authorities because the ministry's funds are seen as a part of the government's general revenue fund, and of course with the child and family services authorities this is not the case. They are separate agents of the Crown. All surpluses therefore must be returned to that fund. As a result, the authorities had a deficit. A special warrant was required so the ministry's surplus could be transferred to the child and family services authority fund to which the services and the funds belong. The child and family services authorities needed this funding for their March month-end expenses.

With that, I would just say that removing the recorded deficit allows us to provide a more accurate, complete overview of our 2000-2001 accounts. I hope this explanation satisfies your need for discussion on the special warrant.

I could just add one other thing. Principally the deficit that was covered in that amount of $3.8 million was for Ma'Mōwe child and family services authority.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to make a few comments about the supplementary requisition we have before us in Children's Services and pleased that the mechanism is here to rid the authority of a deficit. I know from personal experience how difficult it is for board members who have deficits that they have to deal with to eliminate those deficits. I'm pleased for the Capital region board that this is being handled in this way.

But I think what it does is raise a number of questions that have been raised before, questions that have been raised by the Auditor General in particular about the operation of Children's Services and, in particular, these authorities. The minister just indicated that there are other authorities that were having trouble and that they had to make some adjustments among authorities. Some had surpluses and others were running deficits, and there had to be some bookkeeping done to eliminate those. I guess the question it raises is: are we going to see more of this in the future? I know it's a transition time for the children's authorities, but I wonder if we aren't going to see more of this in the next number of years. I say that because of the questions that have been raised about the financing of the authorities.

One of the problems the Auditor General raised was the problem of interauthority agreements, and I wonder if the minister can indicate to us whether those interauthority agreements have been resolved. The problem, as I understand it, is one that was faced by school boards and particularly large urban boards, those that are located in Edmonton and in Calgary, in attracting an inordinate number of cases of children sent here to remain in care of an authority so that they could access education or health programs. I know school authorities billed the home school district of those youngsters to try to recover some of the costs, and that wasn't very successful because what they did was end up eventually claiming residence in the city.

For children with the authority of course that's not the case. They are under government supervision, so the home authority is easily identified. The child's home authority is easily identified, but the result was that a number of the authorities found themselves being billed for costs that they hadn't realized were being incurred and had no control over. So the Auditor General was rather clear in pointing out the necessity for that kind of interagency agreement to be solved and for there to be clear guidelines in terms of how those costs are going to be determined and how the home authority is going to be able to accommodate those costs.

The second problem – and the minister referred to it in her remarks – is the status of the surpluses. There was some question as to who this surplus belonged to, and if there was a surplus, what was to be done with it. Now, the minister has just indicated that the surpluses were taken, I take it, from some of the authorities and then redistributed to authorities that were in a deficit position. I think that if I recall the Auditor General's comments, he indicated that there is some confusion and that some of the authorities took those surpluses and used them. In some cases the authorities thought, as the minister has just indicated, that those surpluses belonged to the department. I think that that kind of confusion can lead to what we see before us, our supplementary requisitions.

I think one of the questions we have to ask is: would we see this kind of a requisition if we were confident that the allocations to the authorities were done properly and competently? Would we have before us this requisition if the planning model was in place? Again the Auditor General, at least in his last report, indicated that the department didn't seem to have the systems that they needed to adequately forecast costs. If that's the case, then it puts, I think, the authorities in the rather untenable position of having to work with budgets that there's little confidence will actually work out. It's an issue that I think has to be addressed, or we're going to see more requisitions such as the one we have before us this evening.

The authorities themselves are really caught in terms of the situation they find themselves in. If they incur unexpected costs, they have little freedom to operate. I'm not sure that they are allowed to budget contingency funds for such occasions. They, as we heard, can run deficits that have to be covered. They can reallocate resources, and I think that's an option the Auditor General has mentioned as a possibility for deficit situations, that resources be reallocated. But in the case of Children's Services that's often very difficult, and the authorities to some extent have their hands tied because they are not allowed to refuse service to a child or to a family. They must provide the service, and that service has to be rendered, again, regardless of cost.

So the authorities really are in a vulnerable position in terms of unexpected costs, and they're in a vulnerable position given the kind of planning and the forecast systems that they have to determine their allocations. I think that's probably a function of being early in the operation of the authorities, but certainly it's an issue that I think will come back time and time again until adequate systems for forecasting costs are in place and the resulting budget allocations are reflective of the kinds of problems and situations that the children's authorities are actually going to be dealing with.

It goes back to one of the very difficult situations that boards such as the children's authorities find themselves in, and that's the problem of having no independent resources to draw upon. They are dependent almost entirely on the government for their funding and really have limited options when it comes to trying to respond to the unforeseen, other than what we see before us this evening, appealing to the Legislature for a special budget allocation to cover the costs.

So I think there are a number of problems that the requisition we are looking at tonight raises that I'm sure the department has been working on since the last Auditor General's report. I'll be looking forward, Mr. Chairman, to the next report of the Auditor General to see just what kinds of changes and what kinds of judgments the Auditor General makes about the authorities and the department and their ability to deal with some of the issues that the requisition we have before us raises.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll be pleased to support the requisition when it's voted upon. I think it's one that's a responsible request for funds and one that the Legislature certainly has to honour.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. Just a couple of comments that I want to make on this supplementary estimate 2000-01, No. 2, specific to Children's Services, a couple of points here. What's not being brought out is why there are these surpluses. The minister did a quick job of sort of explaining that some of the new regional children's authorities had surpluses and some had deficits, and the money was all sort of put in a pool and everybody was sort of evened out, but it didn't quite even out and this money has to be transferred backwards into the fiscal year in order to make it all come out even.

Again, I question that method of accounting in that I think it disguises what the real problems are, because nothing ever shows up on the books as actually being over budget or under budget, and therefore the questions that should be asked by department employees, ministers, cabinet, other MLAs, and the Auditor General don't necessarily get asked. The whole thing is disguised.

I think there are some serious questions to be asked here. There was certainly trepidation coming into the children's authorities about how this was all going to work and if it was really in the best interests of the child. I am horrified that there's a $3.8 million accumulated operating deficit for the Ma'Mōwe region, which is how it's described in the supplementary estimates figures. What is that deficit from? Were they not given enough money to operate the programs in the first place when everything was transferred under their authority, or did they not anticipate some operating expenses? If they didn't, why wasn't the government giving them the advice that would tell them that's what they needed? If something totally untoward happened, then what is that? Why did it happen? Is it going to happen again? All of those questions need to be asked and answered.

I'm looking forward to the Auditor General's report for the 2000-2001 period, which will come out this fall, which will be examining the financial numbers that we're talking about now, because again I think there's a real problem with long-term planning and incidents of planning that this government suffers from. Close scrutiny needed to have been done with these children's authorities, and I sure hope we learn carefully, because we're playing around with kids' lives here.

There are two other issues I want to talk about in connection with this and what is happening with the children's authorities. One is an issue I've brought up repeatedly, and I will keep bringing it up until it's resolved. That is the differential in salaries and fee-for-service fees that are available to those working in the nonprofit sector and those that are contracted with the regional health authorities versus what the going rate is in the government.

There is still a significant differential here. It is really causing problems in that sector. People are leaving those jobs, and we need good people looking after our children, especially when you start looking at vulnerable children, children in need, children under handicapped children's services. I know that there was some attempt made to inject additional dollars to bring those salaries and contract fees up to an equivalency with the government positions, and before that was even implemented, there had been another agreement with the government employees and they were out of whack before they ever got equalized. I believe that that has since happened to them again, so now there is even more of a differential between them.

In addition, there's increasingly becoming a wider gap between those that are on a salary working for an agency contracting through Children's Services and those that are operating under a fee for service, in the way those organizations are budgeting those two figures. We really need to look at that. This is something that's been brought up by the Auditor General. It's been brought up by PAO and a number of other interested parties.

You know, in the budget that's just been released, we're talking about 1,200 new positions in government. That's great, but those are new positions, and we're losing the people out of the positions that we've got. So that's one of my major concerns around this.

The second is an issue that I've also raised before, and that is the funding for women's shelters, which falls under children's authorities. I still object to them being funded under children's services authorities when it is mostly women that we're dealing with, because exactly as I forecasted, the women themselves become important only in the context of children. I know this causes workers in the area of abused women and operating battered women's shelters some concern. I can't say that that would be everybody, but I know it's certainly causing some people concern.

Truly, a woman without a child will be hard-pressed to find space, because of course the spaces go first to women with children. But eventually what's happened is that the number of spaces are only calculated on those women coming into the shelters with children, and they're just not calculating for the space that's needed for women that come without children, single women.

The funding for the women's shelters has never covered all of the operational costs and programming costs. That continues to this day, where we have women's shelters that are out there trying to raise dollars to pay for core services. I am going to keep talking about that one because it's really critical to us. We haven't even started to talk about services for men, and I don't even think we can get there until we manage to sort out our underfunding of the women's shelters. They need to be funded for the full programming that they are offering now. If they want to fund-raise beyond that for additional things like field trips or something, fine, but to have to be out there fund-raising for outreach programs and counseling programs is unacceptable to me.

So those are the three things I wanted to raise under this supplementary estimate for Children's Services. Thanks very much for the opportunity to speak to it, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I also have a few remarks regarding the additional $3.8 million that are going to be provided to Children's Services to eliminate an accumulated operating deficit from the 1999-2000 fiscal year in the Capital region.

Now, it's obvious that there is a dire need, Mr. Chairman, for this funding. One only has to look at an annual report that was recently released, the Children's Advocate 1999-2000 annual report. It's pretty hard to say no to this special warrant. I have a lot of problems certainly with special warrants, which I will address later in my remarks. But when we look at the recent report, there is a significant list of what we could call deficiencies. This $3.8 million in the Capital region could go a long, long way perhaps to finding solutions to some of the most pressing problems. The hon. minister has to take these reports to heart.

When we look at placements, for instance, the report indicates that there is "a general shortage of placement resources and insufficient spaces for secure treatment." With respect to secure treatment, the lack of mental health services is also involved in the shortage.

Mr. Chairman, there are also permanency planning issues here.

The lack of consistent permanency planning has a negative effect on young people of all ages, but especially on very young children. Some young people are not aware of a case plan; some have never seen their social worker.

Now, hopefully some of this money will be used to make a difference with these young children.

10:20

The "refusal to provide support to older adolescents and refusal to support their transition to adulthood" was clearly outlined in media reports, but a number of adolescents find their services terminated if their behaviour is less than perfect. Many seeking an extension of care and maintenance have to fight the system to continue support while they finish high school.

Now, these are all points that are listed in the Children's Advocate report. I'm not asking for the hon. minister's promise, but she needs to ensure not only the members of this House but the public that this is going to occur.

There is lack of support to delegated First Nations Child Welfare agencies and lack of monitoring of service provision. Alberta operates on a model of delegated child welfare authority. The Ministry must ensure an adequate delivery capacity and support agencies in their development.

Again, how much of the $3.8 million will be utilized in that as people come from different regions to the Capital region, Mr. Chairman?

Now, the adoption of First Nations children is pointed out here, and this is a very important issue. It reflects on families throughout the province.

The lack of mental health services for young people. How much of this money is going to be used to perhaps correct that? Now, the report goes on to say:

Children and youth may come into the child welfare system unnecessarily when timely access to mental health services may have allowed them to remain with their family. Young people in care needing mental health supports often cannot receive help in a timely fashion due to limited resources.

Young people who suffer abuse while in the care of child welfare lack adequate support for legal representation.

Is this problem going to be addressed with this special warrant? Court delays. The report indicates:

Overburdened courts and procedural delays contribute to a lack of permanency planning again. When rulings on guardianship do not occur, the ability to make permanency plans for young people is severely impaired.

The issue of custody/access is addressed here and the child death review.

Now, hopefully this would never have to be used again, but we understand there are not adequate mechanisms for young people who have experienced the child welfare system to provide feedback for improvement.

Young offender services. The report indicates:

Incarcerated youth sometimes lack access to required medical, optical and dental services. There is a need for improvement in joint case planning between the child welfare and the young offender systems. At times emotionally fragile young people are provoked by residential care staff and then charged when they rise to the bait.

This is within the Children's Advocate annual report, and it is astonishing.

Now, the boundary issues between the regional authorities. It's like the regional health authorities. There's no difference. There are issues between various jurisdictions.

The placement of young people from out of province.

There are noticeably more placements from other provinces, for example Nova Scotia, where there has not been a request for supervision by Alberta authorities. This contravenes inter-Provincial protocols and leaves young people in a vulnerable position.

Now, how much of that is going on in the capital region, Mr. Chairman?

The warehousing of children. The report indicates here that "young people are being kept in short-term care facilities for long periods due to a lack of suitable alternatives."

Now, we have an accumulated operating deficit here. Is the minister indicating perhaps – and I question her – that the short-term care facilities in this instance may be motels or hotels? I'm very curious about this. Where are these hotels, and how much are they charging? Surely not, but I'm very curious about this. It was a sensitive subject this afternoon in question period when my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods described warehousing of children. Members opposite were shocked and appalled, but it's the wording from the Children's Advocate annual report: "warehousing of children."

Now, another issue is in regards to timely access to legal aid. We've all heard stories of American prisons where, Mr. Chairman, it is cheaper to use drug therapy to control prisoners than it is to hire jail guards. We see here that the report outlines the medicating of children in care: "Inordinate use of medications as a behavior management tool." This certainly is in need of investigation, and hopefully this special warrant of $3.8 million, hopefully part of that money, a sum of that money, will be used to investigate that. I would urge the hon. minister to certainly investigate that.

The report goes on to say – and this is again quite distressing:

Disrespectful treatment of youth. Young people in care may be confronted with punitive attitudes by some child welfare workers and more often lack meaningful input into decisions about their care.

Well, if you don't have continuity, if you don't have a staff that's stable, then perhaps this is what you're going to get. And, sure enough, the next item of concern in this report is staff turnover.

They go on to say here, Mr. Chairman, that "excessive turnover of child welfare workers translates to increased instability and discontinuity for young people in care." Now, not only are the children not satisfied, but the staff are also not satisfied. How much of this special warrant could be used or would be used for an increase in the compensation levels of those workers so that there is not this high staff turnover rate?

There is an extreme lack of services in northern Alberta, and now we have this special warrant to eliminate an accumulated operating deficit in the Capital region. That indicates to me that citizens are coming from all over northern Alberta to access services in the region. When we look at special warrants – I think at this time there's no way that a person, after having a look at this report, could refuse the $3.8 million. I realize it's going to the Capital region, but I think it's essentially going to be used by all the citizens of northern Alberta.

The special warrant is not a habit that I would encourage. A little bit of history for all of the hon. members of the Assembly. Mr. Johnston had a great deal of interest in using special warrants. The only positive thing about this was that there was quite an amount less spent than there was authorized, but there was a significant total here of $2.1 billion.

Now, the next individual to operate as Minister of Finance, or Provincial Treasurer, was Mr. Dinning. Again we have special warrants of over $600 million, and that just doesn't roll off the tongue very easily, Mr. Chairman.

The next gentleman to operate as Provincial Treasurer between 1996-97 and 1999-2000 was Stockwell Day. Before I rose in the Assembly here to make my remarks, I was watching the national news, and the same individual, Mr. Day, was the lead story, as they say. In that time Mr. Day had $2.9 billion in special warrants. Now, there's a big difference between the hon. minister's $3.8 million and Stockwell Day's $2.9 billion.

Dr. Steve West in Bill 28 last year had close to a billion, but we can say $980 million in appropriation supplementary supply.

We have the current Minister of Finance coming in with a modest $443 million. But that total is already $1.4 billion. When you add it together for that fiscal year, it's $1.4 billion, and that's way off target in my view. But when I think of the children in the capital region and the use of this money to hopefully fix some very serious problems, Mr. Chairman, you couldn't say no, and I can only encourage the minister to work diligently, to persevere and correct each and every one of these items that's listed in this report. It's unbelievable that in this province we have these problems. I think that the majority of them can be solved. I again encourage the minister to take this money and work very, very hard not only in this region but in the other regions across the province, because it's probably the same sort of situation there.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind all members of this House that special warrants are not a good habit. The special warrants may seem appropriate at the time, but long-term planning and strategic management are very important. You look at the current government, and you look at the expansion of the cabinet and the different portfolios that now exist, and one by one there is always money needed. I have to question the management as there is this transition.

In closing, I will say to the hon. minister: take the money; take the $3.8 million; spend it wisely; spend it on the children. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Seeing no other speakers, would the minister like to make any concluding remarks? Thank you.

After considering the supplementary estimates for the Department of Children's Services, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense	$3,800,000
-------------------	-------------

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Infrastructure

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Last fall and into the winter there was a real sharp increase in the price of energy in all forms. In order to protect Albertans from these extremely high prices, there was a decision made to rebate a royalty that was obtained from natural gas and also to refund to consumers of electricity money from the Power Pool sale. So out of our department we spent $406 million, and we need approval tonight in the supplementary estimates for that $406 million.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not going to talk about the special warrants, but this is the largest one. Of course, it's $406 million. That's $406 million? Yes. That's an astonishing figure again. I believe the hon. Minister of Infrastructure described it as a real sharp price increase. Well, I don't consider the electricity policy that was devised as real sharp, and I certainly don't consider that the management of our natural gas resources has been real sharp.

I looked back at Hansard – and I said this earlier in the Assembly this week – at past Conservative governments and how they stood up for this province, how they stood up to protect the natural gas resources and the unprocessed derivatives that were in that natural gas resource. Here we see the government of the day with a rebate program.

Now, we all know that the natural gas spot prices have gone up in the North American marketplace, and we must be clear on that, Mr. Chairman. It's a North American marketplace. I don't even know if we can include Alaska now in the North American marketplace. They seem to be going off in their own direction, and it's a direction that has been initiated in their state Legislature, and it has been encouraged by the citizens of Alaska.

We look at this and where we're going to go. Where's the next stop with this 400-plus million dollar special warrant? Bill 1 is certainly going to be debated, and I can't understand why we need that. We've got a natural gas rebates law already, but do we all know about storage levels? Not only in Alberta but also in the U.S., in the eastern and western states, there are a lot of underground storage facilities. In order that this does not happen again, that we're going to be in here maybe in the fall with another special warrant for who knows how much because we forgot to replenish the underground storage facilities, we have to take gas out of the distribution system and leave it there for a future date.

Now, what price you pay when you inject this gas into the underground storage facilities is the question. It's unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that in the process of debating this $400 million figure tonight we could not have some discussion on the prudent use of hedging of natural gas. Hedging: buying when the price is low, storing it in the caverns, and releasing it gradually into the market as prices may spike.

We need to guarantee a supply of natural gas to meet the demand and the prospects for a cold winter in 2002. That's maybe eight or nine months down the road, and in some circles that would be considered extreme long-term planning, but we have to make sure that Albertans' needs are met. Price shielding for this province is not a new concept, and I do not believe that an Alberta consumer should pay the same price for natural gas as a consumer in Illinois. I am concerned that this is not a temporary figure.

We look at what is happening. I'm assured that there's lots of gas in Alberta, but on the north slope of Alaska there's a 100-mile stretch from the Yukon border going west about 30 miles inland. It's a plain. It's probably as level as this floor, Mr. Chairman, and there are ample reserves of gas according to the U.S. Geological Survey. There are trillions of cubic feet of known reserves. Now, if there was so much gas in Alberta, wouldn't it be more prudent to use all the gas in Alberta and save the $7.5 billion it's going to cost you to build this pipeline?

We have to be very careful that this $400 million does not become an habitual expense, a routine. This $400 million in natural gas and energy rebates is 40 percent of the gaming revenue that's projected. Forty percent. You know, the VLTs and the slot machines are going to be like the gas meters, going around and around and around. The consumers are going to put their money in the VLT machines, then they're going to go at the end of the month and get a cheque in the mail and pay their gas bill. That dial, that meter, that's going around too, but we have to ensure in this climate that we have a source of fuel to heat our homes and heat our hot water tanks that is affordable. If we're going to look at this as the long-term solution, then I don't think we are going in the right direction, Mr. Chairman.

Now, any proposal to shield Alberta residential and commercial consumers from high natural gas rates for the winter season is fine, but when you look at what we use our natural gas for, to heat our homes, our neighbours to the south are using air conditioners in the summer. Air conditioners consume a great deal of electricity, and that electricity is more and more being generated by natural-gas-fueled generation stations.

The cost of gas, as I said before, is determined by the North American marketplace. Since 1985 Alberta has had a policy that allows the marketplace to determine natural gas prices. Sixteen years ago we had a policy. We've never had to use the existing Natural Gas Rebates Act, to my knowledge. In fact, some of the regulations I believe expired in March 2000. But suddenly after 16 years we need a rebate program. There was an election looming, and the cheques were in the mail.

Now, the cost of gas on the monthly bill is calculated in a number of ways. A utility can charge customers this way. It is based on the utility company's projection of the cost of purchasing gas from suppliers for the winter and summer gas seasons. We've all read the reports in the newspapers and listened to the radio about applications that are before the EUB. Utility companies forecast what they will pay to natural gas suppliers for the coming season. Utilities are not permitted to make a profit on the supply cost of gas. There is supposedly no markup to the cost of gas. It is a flow-through cost that is passed on to consumers.

The EUB, as I understand it, has established an accounting mechanism to ensure that customers ultimately pay only the actual cost of natural gas that the utility company pays. I get lots and lots of complaints at the constituency office not about the rebates themselves but how they're administered, the cost of gas. Consumers are getting very, very skeptical about utility companies. It never was that way before, but it certainly is now.

We get into the whole idea here of the deferred gas account, and you can almost call this a deferred supplementary appropriation or a deferred special warrant. There's nothing wrong with comparing the two, Mr. Chairman. At the end of each season any balance in the deferred gas account is carried forward, as I understand it, to the next season and recovered from or credited to the customers at that time.

While most natural gas contracts between utilities and suppliers are indexed to changing market prices, even after the gas cost supply recovery rate is set by the EUB, actual gas supply costs may vary significantly from those projected by utility companies. A utility company, as a result, may apply to the EUB for a midseason adjustment if the variance is above $2 million or plus or minus 3 percent of the forecast balance. Now, there are also delivery charges. There's the municipal franchise tax. ATCO collects the goods and services tax, GST, and remits it to the federal government.

There are probably other proposals for an Alberta gas rebate program. Everyone has an opinion on this, but when we look at this $406 million, Mr. Chairman, one of the issues that's been discussed surrounding natural gas in the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar is this whole idea of allowing ATCO to sell the Viking field. It's in excess of $406 million. It is not in the best interests of the consumer. Now, this rebate is certainly going to help consumers. Natural gas is such a vital commodity for our economy. We heat our homes. It's used for an industrial feedstock. We derive derivatives that are used in the petrochemical industry.

Where does that lead us? Where will we be next year? I'm not convinced that the price of natural gas is going to return to historic levels. I believe that in the budget it is itemized at over $5 a thousand cubic feet, but earlier today I believe it was suggested at the media availability that it could go as low as $2. I don't think that's going to happen. That is not going to happen, or many people who are planning on financing pipelines either through to the Mackenzie Delta or up the Alaska highway are going to have difficulty raising construction financing. Spot prices I think will probably stay in the average of $5, maybe $5.56 per gigajoule; that's close to the metric conversion for the thousand cubic feet. But we have to ensure that what gas is discovered in Alberta can be utilized.

Now we're going further and further away. Lease roads are expensive to build. You've got seismic surveys to conduct, and we're going deeper with our wells. Naturally they're more expensive, so there's cost recovery there for the expense of drilling the well. At the price of $5.50 or so I believe there will be significant investment in exploration and, as a result of exploration, in the development of new fields. There could be as a result of this up to 30,000 natural gas wells drilled in Canada in the next three years if this price level were to be maintained. If that were to happen, could we support a shielding program for consumers? I hope so. I think so, but not in this manner.

I believe the funds should be set aside and they should be set aside in the existing Natural Gas Rebates Act. There is legislation there. There is part of that legislation which will allow for the accumulation of money in a fund, and if the fund grows large and the money is not needed, then I believe it can be directly transferred to the general revenue fund, as I recall. I don't have that legislation before me, but when I had a look at it, that was my understanding of it. Why it's not useful to us anymore is just beyond me, Mr. Chairman.

There certainly are benefits for the Alberta economy when producers can command higher prices for their natural gas in the United States and the eastern Canadian markets, but we've got to make sure – and this is the government's role – that there is enough left behind in this province not only for our use today but for future generations. I'm talking 30, 40 years down the road, and I don't think that is that far in the future.

Budget 2000 projected a natural gas price – and this is very interesting – of $2.50 per thousand cubic feet and natural gas royalties of about $2.3 billion. Now, each 10 cents per thousand cubic foot increase in natural gas brings in an additional $160 million to the Alberta Treasury. If this trend were to continue for the balance of this fiscal year, it is very possible that with natural gas royalties we can plan for consumer shielding, but to come in and just say that there has been a really sharp price increase and we need $400 million is astonishing, to say the least. It's a good program, but I don't know if this is the way to pay for it. I really don't.

When we think of what would constitute a good rebate program, I think we would have to consider the following factors. I believe the government should provide . . . Oh, I was just getting into this. I'm sorry my time is up.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Speaking in the supplementary estimates 2000-2001 for Infrastructure, the $406 million, as stated by the minister, is to cover the "natural gas and home heating propane/fuel oil rebate initiatives and the Market Transition Credit for electrical consumers".

Just one issue that I want to raise here, and that is once again the discriminatory rebates that were offered to high-rise condominiums and apartments. With the natural gas rebates essentially apartments were offered $6 a gigajoule versus the $150 a month that the single-family, single-metered houses got, and that's a significant difference when those figures are actually worked out. Now, you know, over the last several months, starting back in the fall, many individuals, condominium associations, myself, and other members raised this issue with the government through letters and phone calls and here in the Assembly, that the government was discriminating against people based on where they lived. If they happened to live in a high-rise condominium or apartment, they were paying a higher rate and they were going to get less of a rebate.

That's what's happened here. This is affecting people across Alberta. We have high-rise apartments in every riding in this province. That may not be true for high-rise condominiums; that will be affecting fewer ridings. But certainly the high-rise apartments exist everywhere. So I have yet to get a satisfactory explanation as to why the government feels it's all right to discriminate against people based on where they live.

I recently brought this issue up again in question period, asking for an explanation of the criteria the government used to determine that these residential buildings would be classified as commercial and therefore would be subject to different rates of costing and different rates of rebating and was not able to get those criteria brought forward. This has certainly affected people in my area, and I'm going to keep raising this until the government is willing to quit discriminating against people.

It has particularly affected seniors in my area. For many of them, who had sold their homes and moved into condominiums expecting that they were going to have a fairly stable rate of condominium fee, this has been very bad times for them. I've had people calling me in tears. I've had their neighbours calling me and saying that seniors are breaking down in the elevators, they're so upset about what's happening to them. Condo fees have been doubling and tripling as they try and cope with the increase in the utility rate, offset by a lesser level of rebate than people are getting that have as their primary residence a single-family dwelling.

It's affecting apartment renters as well, because although the government asked nicely that apartment owners and managers pass the rebates on, there is no way to determine that and no legislated mandate to make sure it happens or to monitor and enforce it if it doesn't happen. Now I'm getting reports of people that are getting their rents going up from $500 to $750. I had one the other day from a person on AISH whose rent went from $695 to $900.

It's not as though people can just go, "Oh, well, I'll move to another apartment in the same area." We have almost a no-vacancy rate here, and I don't think Calgary is much better. Now, I'm not sure what's happening in Grande Prairie and Lethbridge and Red Deer and Fort McMurray, but I have the feeling it's the same story. So people are stuck here. They can't really move to another location that's perhaps a little less expensive but still safe for them. They're having to look at substantially reduced living circumstances in order to cope with this.

For those on a fixed income, I can't begin to comprehend how they're coping with this. For someone on AISH, they don't get more money because their utility rate is going up and that's affecting their apartment rental fee. For someone on supports for independence or any senior on a fixed income, whether that's through the Alberta seniors' benefit and the federal benefit programs or whether they're just existing on a pension, this is a serious, serious problem for people. I cannot understand why the government is willing to stand there and discriminate against these people when they know what's going on.

That is specific to the natural gas rebates. The same thing is going on with electricity. I know that condominium associations have approached the government. I've been receiving copies of their correspondence. I forwarded copies of the correspondence. I've asked questions in question period. I've tabled copies of electricity bills from condominiums in my riding, and I know I'm not the only one.

With the electricity rate, again, we had people in single-metered high-rise condominiums or apartments paying a higher price for the electricity and getting a lower rebate as well. It was based on a lesser rate per kilowatt-hour, and the single-family homes were getting a $40 a month rebate directly on their bill. Well, that didn't happen. When there's only one bill that's coming into a high-rise apartment or condominium, that's what the rebate was being based on. They were being judged as a commercial building, making them no different than Earl's Restaurant or Dow Chemical or Syncrude, and they were having to pay that same rate.

This is unconscionable, in my opinion. It's captured inside this $406 million. I'm still looking for an explanation as to why this government willingly discriminates against Albertans, and I will continue to ask the question until I have a satisfactory answer that can then go out to all Albertans that are experiencing this. Thank you very much for this opportunity to bring this issue up yet again. This needs to be resolved.

I know that there are plans to continue the rebate program through natural gas, although I notice that in the budget not a word was said about electricity. Those rates are really a concern for people. There are a lot of folks out there that have housing they simply can't upgrade enough to make it R-2000 and have a low bill. The houses just won't take it. They've got two-by-four structure. You can only put so much insulation into it, and they are paying very high utility bills. It's almost the people that have the least well-constructed houses that are paying the highest in electricity and in natural gas. When I'm seeing people that have got utility bills that are literally doubling and tripling, in some places quadrupling, this is a serious concern for people, particularly those on fixed incomes, who are also seeing no relief through any other section of the budget.

Specific to what's going backwards here, where we're now putting $406 million backwards into last year to make it balance, that money was put out in a discriminatory way with people, and it should be fixed. Thanks very much for the opportunity to bring that up again.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to be able to respond to supplementary estimates in Infrastructure. The Minister of Infrastructure knows that he's one of my favourite ministers in this House, and he has come up tonight with the understatement of the session, I'm sure, that what happened here with these energy rebates was a real sharp price increase. That has got to be the understatement of any statement that a minister in this Assembly is bound to say. You should get that framed, I think. Put it in your office. That would be a real good idea.

What a mess. What a mess this has been. Another $400 million to try and fix a problem that they had every opportunity to fix many years ago, starting back in 1995, when they started to talk about deregulation. It's really a nightmare when we talk about the $406 million that is being assigned here to deal specifically with energy rebates.

One of the problems with what we have here is that we haven't seen any breakdown on the specific costs or other information for each of the energy rebate programs. It's a lot of money, over $400 million, and I think the Assembly is entitled to see that kind of detail.

MR. MacDONALD: What sort of auditing do we use for that?

MS CARLSON: That's right. What sort of auditing do we use for that? I'm hoping it is something the Auditor General will respond to when we see the next report come out.

This is a completely bungled scheme, particularly when we talk about electricity deregulation, and it's interesting to see that a lot of people in the province think that. They were happy to get the different rebates or subsidies, whatever you want to call them. I think what they should most accurately be called is a debatable point, particularly if these subsidies are going to continue on into the future. I'm hoping we'll get some actual definitions from the minister at some point.

It's interesting to note that many people in Alberta are still puzzled about why we went the deregulation route, and people who I am sure are strong supporters of the government are included in that group. Today our leader was talking to the Alberta Chambers of Commerce on issues, and the issue of deregulation came up, a question from the floor asking about why we needed deregulation and what it has really accomplished, what the problems are with it, and what are the windows out. Concerns for those people, Mr. Chairman, were things like stability in the pricing.

It's really hard for businesses and organizations to forecast their own operating expenses in the short term or the long term when they don't see any stability in prices. It's hard to understand how these companies will be sustainable over the long run when they can't adjust their prices accordingly. One of the big questions they had was why we didn't have a made in Alberta price, particularly for both gas, which we export, and electricity, which we export through the back door to B.C. so that California can buy our electricity and in fact set our prices. That's an appalling situation that is occurring right now and I think is something this government needs to address. What are they going to do about ensuring that Albertans get the first benefit, not the backhanded benefit? What we need to see is not the administration costs of subsidies. We need to see lower prices. It's made here. It's available here. It's exported out of this province. Why are we paying premium prices? You wouldn't with any other kinds of goods or services. So I think that's an interesting question that should be addressed, and I'm hoping that at some point we will see that happen, Mr. Chairman.

What I really want to focus on this evening, though, in terms of the bungling that's happened here is how having subsidies or rebates actually interferes with the marketplace. There's a cost to what the government is doing here when they give out these subsidies and rebates, and it actually distorts the marketplace. What happens is that when you open up a system for deregulation, the idea is that prices will come down because people can negotiate where they buy their gas or their electricity.

There are a couple of problems here. The first problem is that because the government wouldn't come forward with what the rules were going to be in this deregulated market, companies didn't build extra capacity, so we're in a short-term supply shortage. That drives prices up. So the government started by distorting the marketplace by not setting out what the rules were going to be for deregulation five years ago or four years ago or three years ago or two years ago or one year ago, when it would have been a better time for the marketplace to respond and ensure that there was going to be adequate supply available so they could compete and consumers, be they individual consumers or corporate consumers or institutional consumers, would have some flexibility in where they went for their power, and that would start to drive the price down. So there's a distortion in the marketplace by not setting the rules out.

There's a distortion in the marketplace by giving the rebates, because what happens is that when you continually suppress the price, you're not giving incentives to organizations, institutes, or individuals to look for alternative power sources. We know that there are other options out there. There's green power that you can buy into. There's research and development happening on all kinds of fronts: methanol, ethanol, fuel cells, all kinds of options. If we continue to suppress the prices, as is happening with these rebates, there is no incentive for companies to invest money in research and development to the same extent that they would otherwise. There is no incentive for them to look for alternative sources, and there is little incentive for them to generate their own electricity. There is no incentive for consumers to take a look at other options. At the prices we're at right now for electricity, options like wind power are price competitive right now. If we didn't have the rebates, they would be at a huge advantage. Solar power is also competitive at the prices we're at right now. Why would the government want to do that? Why would they want to continue to interfere in the marketplace by creating price distortions?

Well, I think that is an issue that hasn't been fully expanded in the discussions we've heard about deregulation and is something that should be brought forward. Either they're in the marketplace or they're out of it. There aren't these half measures. They're not sustainable in the long term. They completely distort the marketplace, and they create a problem for us in terms of our long-term sustainability and stability for people, for planning, and for bringing on new kinds of energy generation. So I am hoping that those are the kinds of issues my good friend will be taking a look at before we see another round of subsidies come through this Assembly in terms of supplementary estimates.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chairman. I will take my place.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Seeing no other speaker, would the minister like to make any concluding remarks?

MR. LUND: No.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates of the Department of Infrastructure, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$406,000,000
--	---------------

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to move that the committee rise and report the votes and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of the 2000-2001 supplementary estimates No. 2 for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2001, reports the approval of the following estimates, and requests leave to sit again.

Children's Services: operating expense, $3,800,000.

Infrastructure: operating expense and capital investment, $406,000,000.

Learning: operating expense and capital investment, $33,309,000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Bills to allow for the introduction of Bill 5.

[Unanimous consent granted]

11:20

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

[At 11:21 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 26, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/26

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Pawel Dobrowolski, ambassador of Poland, on his first official visit to Alberta. The ambassador is accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Ludwika Dobrowolska.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important visit. Alberta and Poland share many things in common, including strong agricultural sectors and success in public-sector reforms. In addition, there are over 126,000 Albertans who trace their ancestry to Poland, the sixth largest ethnic group in our province. The ambassador's visit is an excellent opportunity for us to learn more about each other and to explore ways to expand our relationship.

Mr. Speaker, they are seated in your gallery, and I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present with your permission a petition signed by 39 individuals from Cochrane, Calgary, and Edmonton petitioning the Legislative Assembly "to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation."

Thank you.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I wish to present to the Assembly today a petition signed by 20 Edmontonians and Albertans. The petition calls for the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is a copy of a news release from the Alberta Federation of Labour showing that workplace accident rates have doubled in the past 10 years in Alberta and immediate action is needed to make the workplace safer.

The second tabling is a copy of the May Week Festival calendar of events taking place in Edmonton from April 27 to May 9.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling today a letter from the National Post, the contents of which may be in violation of the province's fair trading legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the information of the Assembly a report from the Pembina Institute for Appropriate Development entitled A Smart Electricity Policy for Alberta. This is an interesting read because it stresses energy conservation and efficiency. It is one of the cheapest sources of new electricity supply in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from Mr. Eduard Zambo, a resident of Edmonton-Rutherford. Mr. Zambo is concerned about how the government determines the number of moose allocations in the province. I'm also tabling copies of replies Mr. Zambo received from the former Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, Mr. Wickman.

My second tabling is five copies of A Smart Electricity Policy for Alberta: Enhancing the Alberta Advantage by the Pembina Institute for Appropriate Development. The report is authored by Andrew Pape-Salmon in collaboration with Robert Hornung, Rob Macintosh, and Tom Marr-Laing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to attend the annual general meeting of the YWCA of Edmonton last night, and I'd now like to table five copies of their 2000 annual report.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a program for volunteer appreciation which was held last night and which I attended at Rosslyn Place seniors lodge.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 61(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the financial statements as at March 31, 2000, of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner.

head: Introduction of Guests

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Dean Lien, the Alberta Farmers' Advocate. The Farmers' Advocate has a long and proud history as a resource for farmers in our agricultural community in our province. Mr. Lien is seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 23 special guests from the Milo community school. They were up long before many of us were awake this morning to get on a bus to be up here. Three of our 23 guests today are from our colleague the Minister of Learning's riding in the Siksika Nation. By the way, our Premier has an honorary title with the Siksika Nation, Ootsqui Piks, which means "bluebird." The other 14 are from Milo community school, and with them today are their teacher, Miss Branigan, and helpers from the community, Marianne Armstrong, Yvonne Umsheid, Sheryl Sletto, Mrs. Twyla Thompson, and Mrs. Dorothy Way, who is also the town administrator. I would like them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce 46 students from Win Ferguson school in Fort Saskatchewan. They're accompanied by teachers Miss Joanne Hadley, Mrs. Pat Sprague, Ms Erin Bascello and also helpers Jennifer Kakoschke, Irene Freeman, Mark Parrish, Linda Sarchuk, and Cindy Houghton. They're in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and through you to all the Members of this Legislative Assembly some longtime friends. There's a couple here named Ray and Lynda Enarson. They operate a turkey farm. It's actually in the riding of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. With them are three very special students. They are kind of being rewarded today. They are in the enrichment class of the Rosebrier school, grade 7. Their names are Madelyn Enarson, Adrian Tinis, and Gregory Johnson. I'd ask if the five of them would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, it's indeed an honour to introduce to you Ms Halina Madey, who is accompanying today the ambassador of Poland and sitting in the members' gallery. Ms Madey is the vice-president of the Canadian Polish Congress, representing approximately 100,000 Albertans of Polish origin. I would encourage you to extend your warm welcome to Ms Halina Madey.

Thank you.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to introduce to you and to all members of the House a longtime friend of mine and a constituent who is seated in the public gallery today. When I'm out door-knocking and meeting folks in my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona, many times I'm joined by Anita Kamal. She and her husband, Ted, are hardworking, dedicated volunteers, and I'm delighted that Anita is able to join us today. I'd ask her now to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Leone and Paul Cardinal, who are in the members' gallery. Leone and Paul are longtime residents and very strong and spirited community members of the city of St. Albert. Mr. Cardinal is also the owner and operator of two Dairy Queens in Edmonton, and certainly it's summertime, time to think about their treats. With that, I'd ask them to please stand, and if everyone would give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Admissibility of Questions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the Leader of the Official Opposition, I'd like to make a brief statement with respect to the rules governing the admissibility of questions during question period.

Over the past few days the chair has had to intervene on a number of occasions in the Oral Question Period because the nature of the question posed has either violated or come close to violating the rules of this Assembly. In these early days of this session the chair would like to ensure that the First Session of the 25th Legislature begins on the right tone.

The chair would like to highlight for all members the following guidelines for question period. They're outlined in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice at pages 426 to 427.

A question should not

- be a statement, representation, argument or an expression of opinion;
- be hypothetical;
- seek an opinion . . . legal or otherwise . . .
- make a charge by way of a preamble to a question.

The chair would also like to refer members to Beauchesne paragraph 409(3), which states that a question "must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations."

In recent days there have been a number of questions which have been hypothetical. There have also been questions which have made charges based on legal interpretations. It is clear that questions which seek legal interpretations are not permitted. To use preambles in questions that contain legal interpretations which in some way require the rebuttal or confirmation of that legal interpretation is equally objectionable. In other words, members cannot seek to do indirectly that which is not permitted directly.

Once again the chair would caution members in the way they frame their questions and encourage members to review my memorandum of April 11 and the guidelines for Oral Question Period which are outlined in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice at pages 424 to 431 and Beauchesne paragraphs 407 to 414.

The chair realizes that question period is the time when the Assembly receives most of its attention, and this simply underlines the importance of members observing the rules of this Assembly to ensure the dignity and respect of this institution are maintained.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Supplementary Supply

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the second year in a row that supplementary supply has topped the $1 billion mark. The Auditor General has pointed out that additional funding leads to increased expectations by departments of further funding in the future. My questions are to the Premier. What steps has the government taken to factor in such increases and to prevent those expectations?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, this government is committed to three-year business plans, and all expenditures are commensurate with the details outlined in those plans.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. The question dealt with: what are you doing to prevent the expectations of additional funding leading to a continued expectation that those supplementary supplies, the additional dollars, will be an ongoing type of process, part of your planning process?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to supplementary requisitions there was an anomaly this year, in 2001, as there was in 1997. Simply we had to requisition those funds to pay the bills in the absence of a budget. Now that we're down to the normal four- or perhaps five-year mandate of this government and the ability to bring in a budget year after year, the ability to bring in three-year business plans and update those plans, there shouldn't be a need for supplementary requisitions in the future, at least not as long as the mandate of this government runs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: given what you just said, that we should not be expecting these kinds of increased supplementary expenditures or increased requisitions, why do we have an $813 million cushion in the budget this year?

MR. KLEIN: Well, it's been the practice of this government through prudent fiscal management to budget for cushions to accommodate the unexpected, Mr. Speaker, so we won't have to do precisely as the hon. member alludes to, and that is come back and ask for a special warrant, or a special requisition.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Energy and Utilities Board

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions again are to the Premier. The Premier has had two weeks since the past question on the role of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board in protecting Alberta consumers. Has the Premier asked the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board why they did not act to protect Albertans from the risk of high price increases last fall?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll defer to the hon. Minister of Energy, but indeed I did receive a briefing on the situation vis-a-vis the responsibility of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to assess a particular application from two perspectives: one is to make sure that there's a reasonable rate of return to the corporation and, secondly, that there is reasonable protection for the consumer.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. SMITH: Thank you. The matter, Mr. Speaker, is before the board now. They are hearing final arguments and will be bringing forth a decision reflecting the pricing differential of last year in due time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Are they prepared to table

this report in the Legislature and distribute the results and the impact to Albertans so they can understand why that failure happened?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, all decisions of the AEUB are made public. They're available on the web site, and if it helps the Assembly and the opposition, I'd certainly personally bring a written copy here and table that report.

DR. NICOL: Again to the Premier, please, Mr. Speaker: given the failure of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board last fall, should Albertans forget about the AEUB protecting their interest and enter into their own risk management in the future?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is set up to provide a reasonable amount of protection for consumers and a reasonable rate of return for the corporations involved in supplying energy, whether it be electricity, oil products, petroleum products, or natural gas. That will always be the function of the board. I think the hon. minister has pointed out that the board takes this responsibility very seriously on behalf of both the suppliers and the consumers.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Swan Hills Waste Treatment Facility

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1996 the Premier said that the government was out of the business of loans, guarantees, and investments to business . . . From now on if any one of these kinds of deals are to be made, they must be made right here in the Legislature and before the eyes of the public.

Section 49.1(2) of the Financial Administration Act states that the government may not "purchase shares" or enter into a joint venture or partnership unless that transaction . . . [is] specifically authorized by or under

(a) an Act, or

(b) a subsisting regulation that was in force . . . before the commencement of this section.

My questions are to the Premier. Does the Premier stand by his comments from 1996?

1:50

MR. KLEIN: Yes, I stand by those comments. I think I know where the hon. member is heading on this particular issue. She's probably going to allude to the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. The situation relative to that plant is somewhat different, Mr. Speaker, and I can assure the hon. member before she asks the question that we're working as diligently as we possibly can to find a buyer for that plant.

MS CARLSON: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, will the Premier confirm that the government's involvement with that plant is not exempt from any of the terms of the Financial Administration Act?

THE SPEAKER: It was just a few minutes ago that I made a statement with respect to legal interpretations. Please proceed with your third question.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, then, will the Premier table the copies of all documents relating to its reacquisition of the plant and finally bring this deal before the members of this Assembly and the people of Alberta and include in that tabling the information about the compliance or noncompliance with the Financial Administration Act?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would have to consult with the hon. Minister of Environment, but I can't see why that information ought not to be made public. That is the information relative to why we got the plant back and why we're in the position that we are today. I will have that discussion with the hon. Minister of Environment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Negative Option Billing

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently my family received a letter from the National Post newspaper stating that starting next month $10 per month would be deducted from my wife's bank account for a newspaper subscription she did not agree to pay for. I tabled that letter earlier today. This appears to be negative option billing, which is prohibited by the province's Fair Trading Act. To the Minister of Government Services: what steps will the government take to put a stop to this example of negative option billing?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands is stating the facts in this case. After the documentation that he provided in his tabling earlier today and the courtesy call that he gave to me and my department giving us a heads-up on this particular issue, we have determined already in a call to the National Post and to the Edmonton Journal – the Fair Trading Act in Alberta is in effect, and it would appear that this is a case of negative option sales and that there would be offences under the Fair Trading Act of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table for the Assembly and for the information of all members of the Assembly as well as the public the Fair Trading Act and what it has to say about negative option billing and negative option sales.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please. It was this Assembly that passed the act. It's really not required to table the document in the Assembly.

Please proceed.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister please indicate how widespread this kind of marketing practice is – and I appreciate very much his response – and how many companies are engaged in it?

MR. COUTTS: This is the first indication that we've heard, Mr. Speaker, of this particular case of negative option billing, but let me tell you that we could hear more of it in the future. Let me point out that sections 20 and 23 of the Fair Trading Act say that it is not an offence to provide goods or services to consumers as part of a free trial offer but that it is an offence to offer goods or services to a customer when they do not request that good or that service. So anyone that receives this letter is not liable to pay at this particular time. But it does make it an offence to supply goods and services to a consumer using negative option practices, which are laid out.

So as assurance for the people out there, our consumer services branch will be continuing to investigate this issue and will be meeting with the Journal and the National Post to try and resolve this situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the minister's satisfactory response to my questions I don't need my third supplementary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Drought Assistance

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have had a beautiful winter. That's not an opinion; that's a fact. I think I had to shovel my driveway only about three or four times all winter. Unfortunately, what is welcome to one is not always welcome to another. The farmers of Alberta are facing a possible drought in the year 2001. My question is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Hon. minister, Alberta is currently experiencing very low levels of precipitation and ground moisture. Farmers entered the fall of 2000 with dry soil and empty dugouts, and the lack of snowfall this winter has many of them very concerned with how they're going to provide enough moisture to their crops and livestock. My question to the minister is: have you toured the potential drought areas and seen the severity of this situation, and if so, what steps is the government taking to help farmers who are facing potentially one of the worst droughts in decades?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely correct. We had relatively low snowfall in most of the province this winter. We've had very low rainfall, again in most of the province, this spring. We were fortunate some two to three weeks ago to get a very heavy snowfall in the mountains, which helped our reservoir levels somewhat. It didn't bring them even to a minimum level but did help.

Have I toured the area? Actually, Mr. Speaker, I live in it, so I drive through it quite often. Living where I do, I can take many routes to the city, and I often do. However, the issue is more widespread than the south, and there are areas of northern Alberta that have problems. We have a lack of moisture now which is affecting dugouts, in some cases wells on groundwater depletion. To respond to that, about March 29 we made an announcement reducing the rates for a water pumping program that we have in place, and because it was before the Assembly came together, I have provided some copies that I'll table with the Assembly.

As for the continuing concern of weather, Environment Canada tells us that we're going to have perhaps above normal precipitation. We'll wait and see.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the water pumping program will help some producers, but many of the farmers in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar as well as in neighbouring constituencies are telling us that the water pumping is not a viable option for them because of a lack of surface water available. My question to the same minister is: what is the Alberta government doing to assist farmers who cannot take advantage of the water pumping program?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that we can do to assist and are doing. We do have the PFRA, which has a long history in this province in water management, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration. They have some programs of assistance, and we are certainly putting people in touch with them. Our district offices have specialists who can work with producers on means of conservation and utilization of the best practices for conserving water.

One of the other things that we're fortunate about in this province is that in some areas we've had water co-ops develop. We have reservoirs and systems that we can pump from.

We've been working with Alberta Environment, Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and PFRA to look at an overall drought strategy, because Alberta is subject to these changes in weather. I would encourage any producers here who are having those specific problems to contact their district offices or indeed our office or the MLA offices, and we'll put them in touch with the people that are able to help them.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please, no preamble.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question, again to the same minister: I understand that an irrigation fuel rebate is being planned, but how is drought assistance specifically dealt with in Budget 2001?

2:00

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there is of course the opportunity for irrigation farmers to use the rebate on the fuel or natural gas for pumping purposes over the four months of the pumping time. Budget 2001 has some drought alleviation initiatives in it. One is the crop insurance, the safety net program. One is the water pumping program.

It's very difficult to forecast in April a drought. So, Mr. Speaker, the commitment of this government is that we'll monitor this situation, and we'll respond accordingly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

School Utilization Formula

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An arbitrary space/use formula imposed by the government is forcing the closure of schools across the province. In some cases the loss of a school may mean the loss of a community. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given that the Minister of Learning tells us there now is money to reduce class sizes and thus more classrooms will be needed, will the utilization rates of districts with small schools now be adjusted?

MR. LUND: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the government does not close schools. That is a function of the board. That is the jurisdiction of the board. The reason that we look at the utilization, as I mentioned once before in this House, is that it is extremely important. If there is an opportunity to increase the utilization of a building, your percentage spent on things like operation and maintenance and utilities is much lower, and therefore you can put more money right into the classroom so that the children have a better opportunity to learn. Really, that has got to be our primary objective, that we increase the opportunity for young people to learn.

DR. MASSEY: I'll try it again, Mr. Speaker. Given that reducing grade 1 classrooms to 17 students could require one new classroom for every three or four that are now in operation, has the government asked school boards for class size reduction space needs? Have you asked them how much space they're going to need to reduce class sizes?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that we've recognized that some of the formula that is currently being used for capacity needs to be revisited, and we are doing that currently. I personally would like to see us move from looking at so many pupils in a classroom to, rather, a certain amount of space for a student. Of course, that's going to vary depending on whether it's elementary, junior high, or senior high. So that, in fact, would address some of what the hon. member is talking about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the government truly respect local decision-making by allocating school boards block funding for school construction so that they can make the decisions?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what he means by block funding. I think it's extremely important that we work with school boards and we will work with school jurisdictions to make sure that we are, in fact, using taxpayers' dollars to the best advantage. As I said earlier, it's really important that we look at the function of the school and how it is affecting the ability or the opportunity for children to learn, because that has to be the end that we are aiming at: how do we get the best for the child?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

School Funding

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Learning. This week the Alberta government infused an additional $848 million over three years into education. In addition to the 3.5 percent increase in the basic instruction grant, this government also gave school boards an envelope of funding to address teachers' salaries. Can the minister explain the rationale behind targeting funding specifically for teachers' salaries?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As everyone in this Assembly knows, we just went through a rather long and extensive consultation process with Albertans called the general election. I'm sure everyone in here heard very similar concerns from the people of Alberta about class size, about classroom issues. As a matter of fact, the Alberta Teachers' Association even put out $250,000 for an ad campaign to raise the issue of class size and classroom issues. Budget 2001 addresses that.

The other concern that I heard during the election campaign as well is that the people of Alberta, myself included, wanted teachers to be compensated fairly. Mr. Speaker, we have put $135 million into compensating teachers fairly. We put in another $115 million the first year – the first year – to ensure that boards had the flexibility to deal with classroom issues such as class size, such as literacy, such as numeracy, all these other issues that I heard, that you heard, that everyone in this Assembly heard throughout the last election campaign.

MRS. ADY: My second question is also to the Minister of Learning. Can the minister explain what the basic instruction grant dollars can be used for?

DR. OBERG: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker. In the basic instruction grant we increased the grants by 3.5 percent. This makes it roughly $115 million this year, $225 million next year. These dollars allow the school board to deal with issues such as I just mentioned – class size, literacy, numeracy – but they can also use these dollars for teachers' salaries. The bottom line is that they can use these dollars for what they feel are the most important needs in their school jurisdiction.

MRS. ADY: My final question is again to the Minister of Learning. In this Assembly the minister has spoken about programs such as the Alberta initiative for school improvement, or AISI. Will and can we count on the AISI grants being continued in spite of this increase in spending?

DR. OBERG: The short answer to that is absolutely yes. The Alberta initiative for school improvement program has been an incredibly successful program and continues to be an incredibly successful program. We have 760 different initiatives around the province on how to improve schools. The $68 million per annum will continue, those dollars will continue, and I look forward to great results from the AISI.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the minister of health's parallel private/public system of MRI service delivery physicians determine whether a patient's need for an MRI is urgent or not. If the physician determines the case is urgent, then the public system will pay for the MRI, but if the physician determines that the case is not urgent, the patient may face a long delay and be encouraged to pay out-of-pocket costs at a for-profit clinic. To the minister of health: will the minister ensure that private MRI clinics charge no more to private customers than they charge the public system, thereby eliminating any possible incentive for physicians to direct patients to their own for-profit MRI clinics?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think that it's appropriate that physicians make decisions on a medical basis, not based on anything else.

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that by December 2001 the province of Alberta will be going to a scan rate of 24 per 1,000. That will be the highest scan rate in the country. That will represent roughly 73,000 scans. That compares with the 20,000 we did three years ago, the 30,000 we did two years ago, some 45,000 that we're going to be doing this year. So it will be a dramatic increase brought about as a result of working with radiologists, working with physicians to determine that this is an appropriate scan rate and the appropriate investment by the provincial government in purchasing new publicly funded MRIs.

2:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the minister's unclear answer, perhaps, I'm wondering once again if his department will take safeguards to ensure that there are no financial incentives for patients to be steered to for-profit clinics.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we have a great deal more faith in physicians than the hon. member does.

DR. TAFT: Would the minister, then, confirm that there is a possibility of for-profit motives entering doctors' decisions on patient care?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the same answer as to the previous question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Costs

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, much has been said about the increase in electricity prices in Alberta. This morning a report was released by the Parkland Institute comparing the costs of electricity in Alberta and B.C. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Economic Development. Has the rate of business failures increased in Alberta as a result of increased electricity costs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My dear mother always told me that when somebody criticizes you, consider the source, and knowing what I know about the Parkland Institute, that's about as much respect as I'll give that question.

However, with regards to the question about electricity affecting business, I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we are concerned about that. The Alberta advantage is paramount to our business plan, and when anything impacts the Alberta advantage, we look at it very closely. As all hon. members know, part of the cost of any supply is the demand for that supply. We're victims of our own success in that Alberta has a white-hot economy, and demand for the supply has gone through the roof. As a result we are looking at that very closely. But I must tell you that Calgary, the great city to the south, has been rated number 2 for growth in all of Canada, and Edmonton, the great city we are currently in, has been rated number 1.

In answer to the hon. member's question, electricity supply and the cost of it are very important to us, but it doesn't appear to be affecting the economy. In fact, it seems to be much better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. What evidence does the minister have of increased business activity in spite of increased electricity costs?

MR. NORRIS: Thank you for the question. I have a lot of very substantial evidence, Mr. Speaker, of outstanding growth. Certainly 5.6 percent growth in the year 2000. There's another prediction of 4 and a half percent GDP growth in the year 2001. The number of business incorporations is significantly up. The number of business incorporations as opposed to bankruptcies is now at a 17 to 1 ratio, which is the envy of the nation.

I can tell you that I was very fortunate just recently, an hour and a half ago, to be at a function where a company – am I allowed to mention the company, Mr. Speaker? – by the name of YottaYotta had a grand opening. That company, I am very, very pleased to report, chose Edmonton over five other cities, four of which were American cities. They chose Edmonton – I had a wonderful chat with the president – because of Edmonton's and Alberta's outstanding vision and growth. It's a wonderful place to do business.

I'd like to turn it back to the hon. the Premier.

THE SPEAKER: No. We don't work that way.

The hon. member.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. Does the minister know the estimated impact of electricity deregulation on Alberta's economy?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, we do know that a competitive marketplace occupies now an efficient marketplace for 75 percent of the electricity sold in Alberta. We know that there are consumers that make up the remaining 25 percent we're working with. We need to move and find new and easier solutions that drive down the rates of power.

Mr. Speaker, one is, of course, more power: more power like the 80 megawatts announced last week by TransCanada; the 80 megawatts announced by PanCanadian Petroleum; the over 600 megawatts that were announced for 2000 in distributed generation and cogeneration; the tremendous jobs; the investment that that creates.

I think that when you compare the investment profile of this province to the investment profile of the province next door that's going to an election, there's a tremendous amount of difference. This province has surpassed the gross domestic product of that province with 700,000 fewer people, Mr. Speaker. There are 25 percent less people.

To talk more about the specific differences of government, there are others that are going to comment.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Supports for Independence

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To quote Delbert McClinton: many people worry about being rich and skinny but wind up poor and fat. Unfortunately, the poor in Alberta do not have that luxury because of our low SFI rates. My first question this afternoon is to the Premier. Why is the Premier forcing the poorest of the poor in this wealthiest of provinces to have to wait until the budget year 2002 before they will see even a pittance added to their welfare rates?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, "a pittance." First of all, there's no such thing in this province as welfare rates. We have as a matter of policy a change in name from welfare to supports for independence, and it means exactly that. We've always said in this province that we will do what we possibly can to protect those who truly need our help in society, those who cannot work. We have Aids to Daily Living. We have assured income for the severely handicapped. We also said that for those who want a hand up rather than just a handout, we will do all we possibly can. We will provide a reasonable degree of subsistence. We will provide numerous additional programs to get people back into the workforce through skills upgrading and job retraining. We will offer subsidies for education and subsidies for day care. We will look after the essentials of life such as health care premiums and Blue Cross premiums and other unexpected expenses. But the philosophy of this government – and believe me, most jurisdictions believe in what we're trying to do philosophically and from a policy point of view – is to get people away from the dependence of welfare and back into the workforce and to become productive citizens.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Given that a key issue identified by the social economy sector at the Alberta growth summit in 1997 was to improve our quality of life, Albertans must have an active and meaningful participation in the decision-making process. Will the hon. Premier please allow recipients of SFI, or welfare, to be part of the review of the very rates that they depend on for their family income?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'd be surprised if they weren't part of the review. The hon. minister is not with us today to respond, so I will take the question under advisement and provide the hon. member with a response.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Given that natural gas rebates are to expire any day soon and energy costs are so high, can the hon. Premier, please, instead of waiting until next year to increase SFI or welfare rates, do it whenever the weather turns cold again, perhaps as soon as September?

Thank you.

2:20

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not true. Yes, the current rebate program, the rebate program on natural gas that provided each and every household consumer with $150 a month from January through to the end of April, comes to an end, and the $6 a gigajoule program that provided relief to farms, institutions, businesses and so on, that comes to an end, but as of July 1 a new program kicks in that is geared to the anticipated price of natural gas. As you know, the electricity rebate goes until the end of this year. At that time, it will be reviewed.

This gives me an opportunity to also comment on the Parkland Institute study. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: You'll have to find another opportunity.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Judicial System

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The long delays in Alberta courts are causing unnecessary hardship to victims and their families and are creating the risk that charges might be dismissed because of the delays. Underscoring the seriousness of this problem, Justice Gary Cioni made the following statement in a Calgary courtroom last week: there's going to come a point where charges are going to be dismissed because of institutional reasons. To the Minister of Justice. Does the minister share Justice Cioni's concern, and will he outline what these institutional reasons are or might be that are responsible for these delays?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, we would always be concerned if charges were dismissed because of institutional delay or for any other reason other than an appropriate hearing within an appropriate time. We would be concerned about that type of delay and that type of a reaction to delay by the courts. In fact, we've seen the length of time to trial in our provincial courts being reduced year over year, so we don't anticipate that type of a problem.

We're certainly trying to improve the time to trial by bringing in new programs, such as our early case resolution program, which was the subject of a very successful pilot project in Edmonton. We've shortened the time to trial. One of the ways we're doing that is by hiring seven new Crown prosecutors to look at files early and determine what files can be taken to an early resolution. We have an early resolution court, and that project has been expanded across the province. All of these are administrative processes that we're taking into account, which are aimed directly at getting cases to trial that need to go to trial as early as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for taking the questions seriously, but I have a serious concern here. In his own business plan there is something stated here which I hope that he is aware of . . .

THE SPEAKER: Let's get to the question, hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The business plan says that the department is trying to match the national median time with its delays. The national median time is 84 days. Our median time in 1999 was 80 days. Is the minister in agreement with the business plan?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please recognize that we're having a debate on the budget as well and the business plan. This is the question period.

MR. HANCOCK: With that admonishment, Mr. Speaker, I would say that this is something that would be appropriate to be discussed during estimates, and I thank the hon. member for pointing out something which is a very appropriate concern to raise.

We try and have appropriate standards to measure success, but some of our statistics are quite frankly too old; 1999 numbers are not appropriate anymore, so we're working very hard to be able to get statistics and across-country statistics which are more current. At our last meeting of ministers of justice in Nunavut in September we addressed this question and asked – I forget the name of the institute, but it's the national institute which deals with criminal justice statistics – if there couldn't be a process whereby we could have the crime rate earlier, have the rates across the country earlier for comparison purposes. So one of the reasons why we're aiming at the national median, which is lower than what we already have, is that we expect the national median to be much lower than it currently is in those old statistics.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I just want to seek the assurance of the minister that he will recommend that his department drop the national median as a guide if the national median happens to be higher than the provincial median.

MR. HANCOCK: We're only aiming to get better, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Organized Crime

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent gang-related murders, shootings, and firebombings in southeast Edmonton have prompted concerns among all Edmontonians and all Albertans about their safety. They fear for themselves and for their children, who might tragically end up in the line of fire. My question is to the hon. Solicitor General. What is being done to protect innocent Albertans from these gang members who seem to have so little regard for human life?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, let me say clearly that these shocking crimes have no place in Edmonton and they have no place in Alberta and actually they have no place in Canada. We as a government will not stand idly by and let these criminals steal our sense of peace and well-being. We believe our communities are safe places to live, they're safe places to work, and they're safe places to raise our families. Alberta has the lowest crime rate in western Canada.

There are three ways the department is going right now to keep Alberta safe. First, we are targeting organized crime; secondly, we are addressing serious and violent crime; and thirdly, we are playing a strong role in encouraging the federal government to toughen up youth justice legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These recent shootings are a visible indication of the growing problem of organized crime in Alberta. Outlaw motorcycle gangs are now established in Alberta along with other crime organizations. Through you to the hon. Solicitor General: what is being done to fight the serious threat of organized crime in Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government takes the threat of organized crime very seriously. Under the provincial organized and serious crime strategy the department provides $2.4 million annually to the Criminal Intelligence Service, commonly known as CISA. Since 1998 CISA's joint-force operations have resulted in numerous criminal charges against key figures in organized crime, one of which I was a part of two weeks ago, Operation Shadow, which was a very successful operation in Calgary. We remain confident that the police are doing everything they can to investigate these crimes and bring justice.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, without a preamble this time, please.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because of these recent shootings and the increasing gang activity and organized crime in general, many Albertans feel less safe. What does the Solicitor General have to say to these Albertans?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, the crime rate in Alberta is decreasing. Again, Alberta has the lowest property and violent crime rates in western Canada. There has been a drop in youth crime. While it's good to see that the crime rates are going down, we can't become complacent. The Solicitor General will continue to work with partners in policing, the judicial system, and the communities to reduce crime in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Water Quality Testing

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the key concerns expressed by municipal officials at the recent convention of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties was the sustainability of the quality and quantity of Alberta's water supply. An important part of protecting water quality is the government's support of water quality monitoring and testing. In May of this past year the government was approached at the standing policy committee on agriculture, environment, and rural affairs to get out of the business of being in the business of water testing. My questions today are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What is the status of the government's plans for increased private testing of Alberta's water supply?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises an important issue, I believe, that's important to all Albertans in terms of the quality of water that we all enjoy and certainly we don't take for granted. But both my colleagues the ministers of Environment and Agriculture, were working in partnership on this important initiative, and I wish to inform this House that as soon as we get our findings back, we'll be reporting back to this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What level of increased costs should municipalities be budgeting for in the face of more responsibility for water testing?

MR. BOUTILIER: Again, the prime objective here is safe drinking water, and we will not in any way jeopardize that principle of safe drinking water. Working again with municipalities, we are endeavouring to ensure that, number one, that principle is achieved, which it is being achieved, but also the importance of working together with our municipalities, which I'm very proud to say is continuing each and every day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Will the minister make a commitment to Alberta's local governments that they will not face increased costs for testing their public water supply?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, the member raises an important point, and it is that of the partnerships. Really a partnership is about: what can we do for you that you can't do, and also, how do we work together in helping each other? We're endeavouring to do that. I'm going to be meeting with municipalities across this province, and as we continue to do that, I'm going to be listening very closely to what municipalities have to say and their feedback.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Courthouse

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Increasingly I am questioned by various people working in the judicial system in Calgary, including constituents of mine in Calgary-Lougheed, about the progress of the long-awaited consolidated courthouse in Calgary, which has been in the works for as long as anybody can remember. The fragmented system of courts has 54 courtrooms found in six separate buildings spread out over downtown Calgary. With ATCO trailers soon to be used for criminal proceedings and the Court of Appeal Building shut down recently due to toxic mould, there is no room for expansion. Technology is outdated, and there is duplication and inefficiency and inconvenience and confusion caused to the users of the courts. Clearly, Calgarians are not being well served. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Justice. In that one of the core businesses of Alberta Justice is to provide Albertans with access to courts, can the minister advise if there is a commitment by this government to proceed with the building of a new Calgary courthouse?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been working very diligently with Infrastructure, which of course is responsible for building. Justice and Infrastructure have been working very long and hard with the courts, with the stakeholders in the Calgary community towards a resolution of the problem. It is a serious problem when we have six different facilities. We have duplication in prisoner handling services and duplication in law libraries, duplication in services. More importantly, as was pointed out by the justice summit, access to justice and access to the courts by Albertans needs to be simplified. There needs to be a straightforward process, and access needs to be improved.

So, yes, we're working very diligently on resolving the problem. It's not a simple problem. Because of the process and the way the courts have built up over the years in Calgary and the way it's developed, it's not an easy problem to resolve. It's not a quick resolution, but it's one that's in the works. It's one that we're working on, and it's one that we're working with the stakeholders to resolve.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS GRAHAM: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Given that the minister acknowledges the obvious need for this new facility, why is it that the project appears to have reached a complete standstill?

MR. HANCOCK: Appearances are deceiving, Mr. Speaker. The project is not in fact at a standstill. There has been ongoing development in it. There have also been ongoing problems. As the hon. member pointed out, the Court of Appeal problem surfaced in January of this year, and the Court of Appeal had to vacate the building they were in. That created some problems. We've got problems with respect to renovations of the existing building that's being used for the family and youth court in Calgary in terms of the ability to do renovations within the existing code and those sorts of issues. Those types of issues have come forward to cause some problems in the process, but we're working very diligently with Infrastructure, with the stakeholders to take this project forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. Given that even if construction for a new courthouse began today, it would take several years before the courthouse was finished, what is the minister and his department doing to solve the immediate problems of the Court of Appeal Building that's closed and the overcrowded Provincial Court?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're attempting to work co-operatively with the Court of Appeal and the Court of Queen's Bench in Calgary to provide appropriate interim accommodation for the Court of Appeal. We're hoping that the facilities within the Court of Queen's Bench can be made available for courtroom facilities. We'll obviously have to locate the Court of Appeal in terms of office space elsewhere from the existing Court of Appeal Building in the interim, but we're hopeful that both of those will be interim solutions and that the long-term solution will be in place as early as possible. We're going to have to work co-operatively with all three levels of court in the interim period of time.

We're going to have to ask for some out-of-the-box thinking, quite frankly. We may have to ask for some accommodation in moving around the court sitting times, for example. We have court facilities, Mr. Speaker, that sit empty in the summer. We should be able to use those court facilities at other times by other levels of court. We need to look at how effectively we're using our courts. The Court of Queen's Bench is being used very, very actively, and it's very, very difficult to ask them to accommodate the Court of Appeal. But I think if we all get together and use our heads and look for the opportunities, we can provide an interim accommodation and do that on a basis which will be entirely satisfactory until the final project is completed.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members. In a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today, but first of all, just a brief comment with respect to one section of our Routine today, and that is the section known as Tabling Returns and Reports. It's not required that two members table the same report in the House. One tabling is quite sufficient, and I'd ask members to perhaps listen to see who has tabled what so that the next member doesn't stand up and table exactly the same report. That's simply a waste of time of the Assembly.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a distinct honour and privilege to introduce a member of my constituency who is a former page of this House. She is seated in the public gallery. I'd ask her to rise and for us to give the traditional greeting to Erin Gurnett, who's with us this afternoon.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you three young ladies from the wonderful constituency of Calgary-Shaw. They are grade 6 students at one of the few schools in the Calgary-Shaw constituency, Midnapore elementary, which also has the distinction of having my own children present at it. Their names are Jessica Berry, Heather Casson, and Alanna McInnes. They are seated in the public gallery. I would like to ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

Excellence in Teaching Awards

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak about Alberta's teachers and Alberta's 2001 excellence in teaching awards. Alberta teachers are highly motivated, dedicated, and the best trained in this country. Their constant focus on improving student achievement shows in our results when compared nationwide. Alberta teachers are some of the most generous citizens in this province in giving their time to the life of their school outside of their classroom assignment. Their commitment to cocurricular and extracurricular activities and the exceptional amount of time they volunteer to their community is invaluable. I believe it is most appropriate to recognize their contributions during Volunteer Week and on the eve of Education Week.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the creation of the excellence in teaching awards program by this government in 1989, students, parents, colleagues, and community members have been given the opportunity to recognize outstanding teachers. Since the inception of this recognition program nearly 5,500 teachers have been nominated. Anyone who has ever been nominated for an award knows how appreciated and valued one feels. This year 445 teachers have been nominated across this province. From that group 131 finalists have been selected. Twenty-two teachers will be honoured with provincial certificates at a dinner and awards ceremony in Calgary on May 5, next week.

I want to congratulate all of the nominees, finalists, and the provincial certificate award winners. They are fine examples of what the teaching profession is all about. I want to thank all of the teachers of Alberta for their dedication to the education of our children.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not point out to the hon. members why Edmonton-Meadowlark is Alberta's premier constituency. Edmonton-Meadowlark has four of the nominees. These outstanding teachers are Zenia Nemish at Meadowlark, Bob Nerenberg and Shawn Peterson at J.P., and Magdalena Tundak at St. Justin Catholic. Finally, three of the finalists are from Victoria School of Performing & Visual Arts, a school that I've had some association with for a number of years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bulk Removal of Water

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Council of the Canadian Federation of University Women represents six CFUW clubs in the province with a combined membership of over 400 university women graduates who are active in public affairs including health, education, environment, peace, justice, and human rights. They are affiliated with 124 additional clubs across Canada with a total membership of approximately 10,000 university women. Membership concerns led them to passing a resolution and establishing a policy that urges the government of Canada and the provincial and territorial governments to take all measures necessary to prohibit the bulk removal of water from any ecosystem.

The Canadian Federation of University Women, Alberta Council fully supports this policy and wishes to express their concerns regarding the need to protect Canada's fresh water. They do not use the word "export" as they do not condone the sale of water as a commodity. As the world's population and industries continue to grow, demand for fresh water will escalate. They believe that the transportation of water could cause a shift in the global water balance, affecting not only local, regional, and global ecological integrity but also the health of Canada's people and would endanger our communities for future generations.

Their resolutions are as follows: they urge all levels of government to

1. be an advocate for and support legislation at all government levels that prohibits the bulk removal of water from any ecosystem.
2. co-operate with other levels of government and reopen negotiations on the Canada-wide Accord of Environmental Harmonization . . .
3. seek amendments to NAFTA that include a more comprehensive definition of "natural state" as it pertains to the description of water. The existing lack of clarity in NAFTA could provide a loophole through which parties could access Canadian freshwater resources. Should this occur, Canadians could find [themselves] obliged to honour long term contracts when detrimental to Canadian interests.

This issue is a serious concern for their members, and they urge all levels of government to protect the freshwater resources for all Canadians and future generations.

Calgary Courthouse

MS GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, further to my questions earlier today to the Minister of Justice, I rise again to speak about the pressing need for a new consolidated courthouse in Calgary to bring Calgary in line with the integrated courthouses in other Canadian cities, including Edmonton, and many other towns and cities in the province of Alberta. In doing so, I hope to raise awareness about the inadequacy of the existing system of courts and why this government can't continue to delay taking action.

Mr. Speaker, proper court facilities are central to the successful administration of justice in any community and the preservation of order in any civil society. They are an important symbol to the public and inspire respect for our whole administration of justice, and they should not only be functional but should have the dignity that is appropriate to them.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, we are coming perilously close to losing the confidence of the public in our system of courts in Calgary. The facts are – and I highlighted some of these earlier. The courts are fragmented. They are overcrowded. There is duplication and inefficiency happening in the administration, and the users of the courts are not being served. It is very inconvenient, and it's very confusing. As long as I can remember – and I've been in Calgary for going on 16 years – these problems and the same situation have been existing, and it is only getting worse with the growing population being experienced in Calgary.

For a number of years there have been committees representing all three levels of court and government meeting year-in and year-out devising various concepts for improving the system. In June of 1996 a formal report was submitted for a new facility, and here we are and nothing has changed. I urge our government to give the people of Calgary a proper court facility.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

International Day of Mourning

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sixth International Day of Mourning will be observed Saturday, April 28. April 28 is recognized by the United Nations and by more than 70 countries around the world as a day to remember workers killed, disabled, or injured in the workplace and workers afflicted with industrial disease. In 1991 the Parliament of Canada designated this as a national day of mourning for all those workers.

Shocking statistics released yesterday by the Alberta Federation of Labour show that workplace accidents have nearly doubled in the past 10 years and that last year alone 118 workers were killed at work. These statistics would indicate that in Alberta workplaces are becoming more dangerous and more hazardous year after year. Injuries and illnesses that occur at our places of work are a serious matter, and making these places safe is a goal that is attainable.

Employers need to know that they cannot get away with infractions to health and safety laws and regulations. Political will has to be there to prosecute employers who break the law. It's crucial that government employers and labour unions work together to eliminate death and accidents in workplaces in this province.

I will be attending a memorial service at Edmonton City Hall this weekend to show our respect to those workers who are no longer with us. I trust some other colleagues will also be there. These Albertans deserve to be remembered.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Government House Leader to share with us the projected government business for April 30 to May 3.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, April 30, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading we would anticipate dealing with Bill 3, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001; Bill 4, the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001; and Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001. Time permitting, Committee of the Whole on bills 1 and 2 and address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, day 6 of 10. Monday evening at 8 under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply as per the schedule tabled earlier with the House, day 1 of the main estimates and the estimates for the departments of Sustainable Resource Development and Municipal Affairs.

Tuesday, May 1, 2001, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, second reading as per progress Monday and as per the Order Paper. Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders again in Committee of Supply as per the schedule tabled, the estimates for the departments of Infrastructure and Transportation, and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, May 2, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply, day 3 as designated pursuant to the House leaders' agreement, the main estimates for Health and Wellness; address in reply to the Speech from the Throne; and thereafter as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 3, under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply as designated, the main estimates for Learning; Committee of the Whole in supplementary and interim supply on bills 5 and 6; address in reply to the Speech from the Throne; and as per the Order Paper.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on this Sunday, April 29, our Clerk will celebrate his 56th birthday.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 24: Mr. Vandermeer]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

2:50

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure, pride, and excitement that I rise today to respond to the throne speech by Her Honour the Lieutenant Government and give my maiden speech in this House.

Before I begin, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you on your acclamation as Speaker, and also to the Deputy Speaker and Deputy Chairman of Committees my sincere congratulations. I would also like to congratulate the hon. the Premier on his leadership to a resounding victory for our party as well to all members in this House on their election.

I would like to say a few words about the election we've just passed. The hon. Minister of Justice made a very interesting comment in his address to the House a few days ago. He mentioned that residents looked at the progress of the province and the local economies as a benchmark from which to judge the history of this government. The hon. member mentioned that Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert benefited from this election, from this amazing economic activity, and indeed that is correct.

However, Mr. Speaker, the good people of the riding I represent also wanted to be a part of our team and the leadership which we had to offer. I would be remiss if I did not mention the fact that over a hundred volunteers from the riding worked very hard to see this day. They spent countless hours door-knocking with me, on signs, on mailings, and on the phone, listening and talking to the people of the riding of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. I wish to publicly in this House thank them for all of their fantastic support.

For the riding that I represent, Mr. Speaker, it was a time for change, from representation in opposition to representation in government. The citizens of the riding I represent made a clear choice, and I am humbled by the trust they have placed in me.

The walls of this room have seen and heard many things in the history of the province, and upon entering here for the first time as an MLA elect, I was struck by the enormous responsibility which each of us in this room bared to the people of this province and to our constituents and our children. This is where we will be making laws that may very well affect every citizen of this great province. We must bear this responsibility with integrity, wisdom, common sense, and a desire to do what is right for this province. What we do here may well affect our children's children, and that is a responsibility that I commit to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to all members of this House, that I will never take lightly.

The residents in the riding of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert elected me to represent them here in this House and at the caucus table, and this I will do. I am aware that expectations are high and challenges exist. I would like to speak to you a little bit about what I heard before the campaign, during, and some afterwards.

Mr. Speaker, energy and energy costs are on the minds of Albertans, and my constituency is no different. Her Honour's throne speech said that the government will work to ensure long-term energy for all Albertans. I spoke during the campaign about that and asked the constituents who they thought could best handle this problem. I said that the Conservative Party and its leadership was the right choice to ensure long-term, stable energy for all Albertans. Based on the results of the election, I would have to say that they agreed with me. I know that they are also happy that this was in the throne speech. We have many family farms which depend on a reliable source of energy at a reasonable cost. Farmers know about the economies of supply and demand. They understand that supply must exceed demand in order for prices to drop. We still have challenges in small businesses and in groups who are looking to us to help them through this period of a demand crunch.

It's no easy task and we know that, Mr. Speaker, but we are not shirking away from it. We will face it head-on, as is the history of this government and this leadership. This government is a government that recognizes the problems and puts forward solutions. It does what it says it's going to do, and that's what Albertans wanted.

The throne speech references Bill 1, which will formalize the rebate program on natural gas, something that Albertans said to me over and over that we should do. Albertans trust the government and this leader to do what is right for our energy problems, and you need not look further than the results of March 12, 2001.

Another major concern for my constituents is their health care. It is their health care, Mr. Speaker, not this government's, not the federal government's. It's about service to them and the ability to continue to do that in the future for generations to come. I was told on many occasions that health care must be reasonable, accessible, timely, and, very importantly, sustainable. There is general agreement that our frontline staff need help. They need to be a part of the team, and we need to address the issues of morale, staffing, and service.

It was on many occasions which I stated my commitment to our publicly funded health care system, and I have no problem in saying that, because I believe in this government's commitment to that system. The throne speech says:

The government's priorities for health care in the next year will focus on access to health services, illness prevention, and effective regional governance.

Mr. Speaker, we have some major challenges in health care as well. The world's advances in technology and treatment may be moving further ahead faster than we are able to debate the social and economic issues they create. We're living longer, and that's a wonderful thing, but like all wonderful things it brings about further issues.

One of those is long-term care and the expanding demand our healthier aging population has. In my riding, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue. Boundaries for long-term care are an issue, one which I and my colleagues want to find solutions to working with the RHAs. The people in my riding do not want me to complain about one level of government or authority. They expect us to work together as a team. We know what the problems are. We want to find the solutions.

Another key issue of concern for my constituents is education, and I could spend a great deal of time talking about this issue, because it took a great deal of time during the campaign. I know, Mr. Speaker, that all of my colleagues had the same experience. I also know that there is not one Albertan that I have ever met that said we wanted a poor education for our children and not one Albertan who ever said to me that we want to export our best and brightest out of the province.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents want the best possible education for their children, for my children. They want it to be measurable and applicable while also preparing young Albertans to face a global world. No one in this room would argue that grade level K through 3 students on average would do better in a smaller class size. However, other factors are also important at these levels.

We as citizens of this province have elected representatives to school boards who we have given the responsibility to make the decisions on how best to deliver this education to the students. Now in the recent budget we have ensured that funding levels allow flexibility for these boards to do just that. But is the measure of success we want to use that we spend the most or that our students are prepared to meet the world that is fast coming up to meet them?

I support smaller class sizes, but all five of the boards in my constituency do not want this government to legislate class size to them. My goal, Mr. Speaker, is to work with these boards as a partner and try to achieve the common objectives that we all have. We need to communicate with the parents that we are doing this, what is possible, what is achievable, and what the constraints are. As everyone agrees, the education of our children is critical to us all, to our history, to our future.

One other note on education, Mr. Speaker, and then I will leave it. I have heard many times that we need to bring more wellness education into our system. We need to teach our young people how to live a healthy lifestyle and to enjoy the benefits that go along with it. This will benefit all Albertans, and I would like to see an increased emphasis on the physical education and well-being of our students.

Mr. Speaker, I represent the best riding in the province. Why? Because it is as diverse as the province itself. Within the boundaries of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert constituency we have an entire city plus a third of another. There are two counties, Parkland and Sturgeon; five school boards; three health authorities, Capital, Aspen, and WestView; and the First Nations reserve of Alexander. The riding encompasses just about every economic activity in Alberta, from oil and gas to grain farming, hog operations, and high tech. In fact, we have world-renowned experts in the field of alternative panels for construction materials. All of this in communities such as Calahoo, Villeneuve, Riviere Qui Barre, and Alcomdale.

As my hon. colleague from St. Albert knows, the city of St. Albert began in 1861 and is the oldest successful farming community in Alberta. As the oldest nonfortified community in the province it has a strong cultural history with the influence of the Catholic mission of Father Lacombe in its early years, as well as the Metis influence, which started the settlement. Now a city of 55,000-plus and, as we found out during this week's week of the volunteer, it has a population involved in volunteering at the 50 percent rate: a caring, responsive, forward-looking community concerned about their quality of life and the proper development of their economy.

Spruce Grove, Mr. Speaker, is the gateway to the west, if you will, another strong, vibrant community that wants to grow but grow wisely. From its humble beginnings as a trade centre for the agricultural community to the west of Edmonton in 1907 it has grown into a beautiful city to raise a family. No longer simply a service centre to agriculture but now a centre for economic development. The residents of Spruce Grove want the government to act as a catalyst for development. The residents of Spruce Grove have serious concerns about infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, rapid growth and development in all of my constituency mean that transportation demands grow as rapidly. We need additional transportation investment, school investment, and tourism and economic development, and that is why they elected me to push for these things.

Growing up on a farm and, in addition, my pre-MLA life as a marketer of agriculture products internationally, agriculture holds a very strong place in my heart. Our agriculture community employs, directly or indirectly, one-third of this province, Mr. Speaker. It pumps close to $14 billion into our economy, and most importantly it feeds us.

The riding of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert contains some of the best farmers and farmland in the province. As my rural colleagues will agree, farming is no easy task. It is very difficult to compete against subsidies which we could only dream of, but they are doing it, Mr. Speaker, and we need to step up to the plate when we need to. We need to ensure that our small rural communities maintain their viability, their water safety, and their rural infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, on this my maiden speech in this hon. room with these hon. ladies and gentlemen around me, I want to say that I am committed to serving my constituents, representing them in this House and government, not the other way around, and working as a team member to do what is right for Albertans and Alberta.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, in March of 1968, 33 years ago, my father rose in this House to give his maiden speech, and he spoke passionately about good government and representing his constituents. I am not the only one in this House who is carrying on a family tradition of public service, and I know that they feel as I do right now. I am tremendously proud and blessed to be in this House today. It is very difficult for me to express the vast amount of emotions which I feel right now. I pledge to my constituents to do what I said I would, and to my colleagues in this House I pledge to give you one hundred percent commitment to my duties and to this Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I've been given the great honour of making my maiden speech. As we live in a time when growth is changing the face of Alberta, it's a privilege to play an exciting role as a member of this government. I would like to thank the electors of Calgary-Buffalo, who have shown great wisdom, independence, and a sense of adventure in their selection of an MLA. It's a great honour for me, the choice that thousands of Calgary-Buffalo citizens made when they chose me as their new MLA. Calgary-Buffalo had been a Liberal riding for 15 years, and the constituents knew that Alberta was going to continue to prosper. They chose a new representative with a fresh perspective in the Legislature for proven leadership and a positive future.

The makeup of Calgary-Buffalo constitutes a wide array of cultures, the most in any one constituency in the province. It's also home to young families, single moms, postsecondary students, young professionals, a large gay and lesbian community, seniors, and, last but not least, a number of homeless. The residential concerns span from homeless shelters, low-income units, rental apartments, and single-family homes to million-dollar condominiums. This constituency is home to Calgary's largest arts and theatre community, which adds a unique vibrancy and culture to the inner city. We are also home to the second highest number of corporate office headquarters, with a downtown skyline that is one of the most beautiful in Canada if not in North America.

During the throne speech on April 10, 2001, the Lieutenant Governor touched on many issues that Calgary-Buffalo constituents are concerned about, issues regarding health care and the provision of more efficient and effective service. I agree with this government in electing regional health boards as a top priority, ensuring the community's voice in the delivery of health care. As a board member myself for the past seven years, I know the task ahead for newly elected board members will be challenging and trying, combining the future model of health care with new medical technology.

This government's direction for education is equally important. All public education, from kindergarten through high school, will receive a great deal of support in the coming years. The Minister of Learning will not only focus on building new schools, modernizing existing ones, and classroom size, but also the role skilled educators play will be important in this delivery model which is valued highly by our government.

From door-knocking during the election I quickly learned that there are a great deal of postsecondary students living in Calgary-Buffalo, and this number is growing. They were happy to hear that the scholarships will be increasing and financing will be updated to offer student loan forgiveness and a user-focused student finance system. Postsecondary students will also be encouraged to hear more details about the Future Summit that will focus on improving the opportunities for young Albertans after their education.

Mr. Speaker, my skills as a police officer will serve me well as an MLA. These two positions share several characteristics. As we all know, being an MLA in the province of Alberta will be very challenging as we pay off the debt and watch as our taxes decline. The future goals that we have as legislators must be fine-tuned with a strategic plan in place. Basic issues can be incredibly complex as the different layers are torn away and more concerns and ideas must be considered. Issues have to be weighed against human desires, the willingness of the groups involved, and the resources of this government. Through the art of problem-solving and proven leadership we will reach the ultimate goal of a vision of a positive future for all Albertans. There are a myriad of complex challenges emerging for the community that will demand effective responses as well as lasting solutions now and over the next few years.

Part of the allure of being an Albertan is the fine tradition of pioneering and the regard for individualism by people of the province of Alberta. Albertans are the backbone of effective change. They will create opportunities, and the value of individualism as part of a tradition in Alberta is a very strong foundation for a healthy and vibrant society. Valuing individuals and emphasizing the importance of their contributions builds strong character and leadership and supports our coming together in groups to determine responses and solutions to the challenges of today. To me it is the individual dreams, aspirations, and actions which come together that are instrumental in building healthy communities like Calgary-Buffalo.

Strength, commitment, hard work, and an unwavering stance regarding my personal values are the qualities that support me in all my endeavours. As maturing people we go through many changes in our roles, our daily lives, our responsibilities, and our outward experiences. The only thing that ever remains the same day to day is our personal framework of values. This perhaps more than anything else forms the essence of who we are. Like you, I am not the same person I was 10 or 20 years ago, but still I hold on to my personal values, which will remain with me forever.

Over the years I've come to realize that the challenges I have faced in policing are not negative experiences but have been opportunities for growth and to become stronger and more experienced. Experience teaches us. Optimism is the key to turning problems into opportunities. The most significant value which helps us succeed in the challenges of a career and life is optimism.

As a police officer I often spoke from the heart on issues of social conscience and the harsh realities of policing: domestic violence, youth violence, child prostitution, and the release of dangerous offenders into our community. When I was knocking on doors during the election campaign and speaking to citizens' groups, I took every opportunity to get the views of constituents on a wide range of issues and community priorities. Listening is essential if I am to effectively represent the residents of Calgary-Buffalo.

I was honoured recently when the Solicitor General appointed me to the policing review committee. What are the challenges for policing emerging in the new millennium? One very significant challenge is the transformation of the way we deliver policing services. For many years police agencies were able to unilaterally decide the best approach to delivering police services, with no involvement from government or the community. For many years police car patrols were effective. Youth fought with fists rather than guns. Racial tension existed in smaller groups, and domestic violence and child abuse were hidden in the home. Domestic violence and house break-ins would not have made the top two priority items, as they did in Calgary in the mid-1990s. This has changed.

Social awareness and working conditions for policing are very different today. The demands of today require a broader focus going beyond law enforcement. The public no longer wants the traditional crime control measures. They want and demand crime analysis, detection, and prevention. They want to live in their homes and walk through their neighbourhoods without the fear of violence. They don't want to risk the lives of their children on our roadways. Police services across the country and here in Alberta are now asked to provide direction not directly related to law enforcement and policing. It is not uncommon for police services to be asked to participate in evaluations of neighbourhood revitalization projects as well as complex social issues and problems, building partnerships with regional health authorities and corporate partners like the Alberta Motor Association. We must expand to build safer communities in the future.

Policing today faces tough questions which require answers to contribute to peace and wellness in our community. For example, what should society do with children who murder and with youth engaged in shoot-outs in public places? How do we ensure the sharing of opportunity? How do we work together to break the cycle of violence which begins in the home? How do we protect public safety when dangerous offenders are released into our communities? What are the resources that are required?

A good beginning to cope with the impact of changing demographics, technologies, and economies is to acknowledge that we are quite capable of managing the challenges of change. As community leaders and legislators we are responsible for creating a vision for policing. We know that we need communities' and stakeholders' consultation if we are to create that vision. It is a fact that if policing fails, people live in fear, economic success in our community is jeopardized, neighbourhoods regress, expenses from vandalism skyrocket, health care costs rise, and the Alberta way of life falters.

As a Progressive Conservative government we must do everything we can to not let this happen. The four key elements of community policing are consultation between police and communities about problems, policies, and priorities; adapting strategies that fit the needs of different neighbourhoods; mobilizing all the resources of a community, including police, citizens, government, and private sectors; and solving problems with our community partners by studying the conditions that lead to calls for service, then drawing plans to connect with these conditions and taking the lead in evaluating and taking remedial action.

The large seniors' community in Calgary-Buffalo shares the same public safety concerns as the general population: assaults, robberies, personal safety at home and in our neighbourhoods. Within these broad categories of crime concern are the special interests of our senior population. Some of these are unique to seniors, such as financial and emotional abuse and personal safety. Stereotyping based on age and gender can be harmful. We know that to be a senior does not mean to be physically weak. However, there are those who specifically target the elderly because they believe they are easy prey. Seniors in particular have a feeling of vulnerability at a time when they should be enjoying personal freedom and peace of mind. It is our commitment as legislators to create an environment free of crime where all law-abiding citizens can feel safe and secure.

Strengthening community relations and supplying community-based policing will ensure that seniors have a voice that is heard by their police service.

I would briefly like to touch on two concerns particularly relating to seniors; that is, financial scams and elder abuse. Financial abuse has many forms ranging from theft by caregivers to telemarketing scams and rip-offs by unlicensed trades. Crafty con artists are using old and new tricks to steal from trusting seniors, and it is important to raise awareness of this situation. Domestic abuse is another area where seniors fall victim to crime. The abuse of seniors refers to a range of behaviours where family members or caregivers attempt to control a family member. This can include verbal insults, refusal to provide the necessities of life, and limiting access to social contacts and medical help.

There is tremendous community support and involvement now on domestic violence and abuse issues, including public awareness and education initiatives in this area. The Kerby Centre, located in Calgary-Buffalo, is a facility for all Calgary seniors. It has taken a lead role in providing shelter for seniors. It is a one-of-a-kind facility in North America, and I was fortunate enough to have been a member of the steering committee in its development.

With the projection for an increasing number of seniors as part of our province, policing agencies must work collaboratively with other social service agencies and regional health authorities to re-examine the issue of senior abuse on a continual basis. I am confident that policing agencies serving Albertans are on the right path to significantly reduce domestic abuse of all forms, providing timely and meaningful assistance to all victims. I value the special relationship I have with seniors and seniors' organizations in my constituency and appreciate the assistance and partnerships I've had with them in the past, and I look forward to building on those strengths in the future. A continuous and open communication process is the best way to ensure Alberta's policing services continue to be among the nation's leading policing agencies, providing excellence in service delivery.

The core values I believe in as a former inspector of the Calgary Police Service are honesty, integrity, ethics, respect, commitment, fairness, compassion, and courage. Respecting these values, I will represent Calgary-Buffalo through hard work, with a passion for their issues.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to again express my thanks to constituents of Calgary-Buffalo in choosing me to represent them as their voice in this wonderful, historic 25th Legislature.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 5
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move for second reading Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001.

The Committee of Supply dealt with the subject of the bill last evening in some detail, so I won't dwell on the bill at all other than to say that the people of Alberta were well served by the expenditures made pursuant to it, there now being actual approval with respect to the rebates on their natural gas and their energy costs over the course of the winter and the particularly high costs of energy that we felt at that time.

As well, we are particularly well served, Mr. Speaker, by the reduction of education property tax, which necessitated the need to replenish the Learning budget from general revenue.

Mr. Speaker, I won't say anything more about the bill, and I commend the bill to the House for swift passage.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to take a few minutes to make very brief comments on the second reading of Bill 5.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, this is the second supplementary bill for the past budget year before this Assembly. During last fall's sitting almost one billion dollars in additional spending was approved. Bill 5 adds almost another $433 million in supplementary spending to what was already approved last fall.

In his last several annual reports Alberta's Auditor General has repeatedly drawn attention to the government's overreliance on onetime spending. The Auditor General's concern is that overreliance on onetime spending makes it hard to hold the government accountable for its spending decisions. Despite the fact that the government claims to operate under three-year business plans and on three-year budget projections, onetime spending strongly suggests that these documents aren't worth the paper they are written on and that in reality the government has no clear plan.

In making these remarks, I'm not in any way questioning the fact that the programs being funded through Bill 5 require additional resources. Sometimes the unexpected happens, and money has to be expended after the approval of the budget. However, when funding shortfalls happen year after year in core government programs like Children's Services, Infrastructure, and Learning, it shows serious flaws in how the government does its budgeting. Increasingly, the provincial budget that we approve in the spring sitting bears no resemblance to reality. Instead of fully meeting the fiscal needs of important programs in the spring budget, the government underestimates what's actually needed and then has to come back later in the year with supplementary estimates.

Based on a review of this week's budget, I feel that history is about to repeat itself. One example is social assistance rates. Instead of providing for an increase in the rates in the spring budget, the government tells us it wants to have a review done first, perhaps making it necessary to bring supplementary appropriations later in the year.

Going back to the question of accountability, Mr. Speaker, these supplementary estimates, especially when they come before this House after the money has been spent and the budget year has already gone – it reduces this exercise near to meaningless. The Legislature is the appropriate place to hold the government accountable for the moneys that it plans to spend, and the time for the opposition and for this House to scrutinize the government's budgetary commitments is before the approval of the budget, not to give approval after the money has already been spent and the House has no recourse but to simply accept the expenditures already made as a given. So what this means in terms of the role of this Legislature in the process of examining the budget, approving the budget, is that the Legislature increasingly is being marginalized. Its role is being reduced and made less and less effective, and that's what should be a cause of concern to all members of the House, not just those of us who sit on opposition benches.

So I would like to conclude by saying that it is a practice that needs to be stopped. It's a practice that mustn't be allowed to become a standard practice. Otherwise, these debates on bills such as the one that we are debating now are more like closing the barn doors after the horse has left. In other words, that reduces us to a meaningless chatter in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to the supplementary supply appropriation bill, Bill 5, coming now on this date, April 26, some 26 days after the fiscal year-end and after the time that these dollars have been spent.

If we take a look at a supplementary supply bill, we need to question the purpose of the bill, Mr. Speaker. I think that what we should be remembering in appropriation bills that are supplementary in nature is that the purpose of the bill itself should be to deal with only the most unanticipated or extraordinary expenses that have come up in the year. So that's the test that we should use when we take a look at the dollars for which confirmation is asked. Did they meet the test of being both unanticipated or extraordinary? Later on, then, we can talk about how we measure whether or not the government made good choices in terms of whether they should have been unanticipated.

The first question we need to ask is: were these unanticipated or unexpected? So we go to them in terms of the separate areas that the dollars are asked for.

In Children's Services these are replacement dollars for a particular authority which had some funding issues. You would think, first off, that that isn't a problem, that that could happen, that it could be unexpected. Certainly caseloads in child welfare cases could vary. There could be issues to deal with there. But we're asking for quite a bit of money, given the context of what it is that we're talking about: $3.8 million. You don't spend that in a month or a day in child welfare, in the particular authorities. That's an accumulation of dollars, so there is some expectation that this was an issue, a problem that the minister had some warning about, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, we know that to be true. This particular authority has had ongoing issues throughout the year.

Now, I'm not suggesting for a moment that those dollars weren't well spent. I think that all dollars spent on children have great value, and in fact the authorities by law cannot refuse to help these children if they come to them in need. The question here is: was it anticipated, and therefore should it have been in the supplementary supply bill? I would challenge that. I would say that these were dollars that were anticipated, that the minister saw the overruns coming, and there were other avenues that they could have used to adjust accordingly. Such a large amount of money, $3.8 million in this case, indicates to me that there are some real problems in terms of how Children's Services is funded.

If we then lift our heads up and take a look to other indicators in the community, we see that to be true. In fact, to read through the Children's Advocate report recently is really quite a damning criticism of how this government has handled children. Caseworkers are overloaded, are not dealing always with the best interests of the child as their primary criteria. A lot of that is related to budgetary issues. It looks like they don't have enough money to do their job.

It looks like they don't have enough co-operation amongst departments and organizations and different authorities to do their job.

So those are big issues, Mr. Speaker, and issues I'm hoping the minister will address. I know she takes her work very seriously and is trying to do a good job, but what else is missing there in terms of getting the kind of support she needs? Why doesn't she have the support of the government on this? When we have multiple billion-dollar surpluses rolling into the province, this government should be able to plan for the kind of money that is needed to help children.

These are kids who are asking for help, young people who want to be able to succeed and excel in this province, and by what we've seen in that report, it doesn't look like that's happening. It also doesn't look like the minister has organized the resources properly in this particular authority. What were her options, Mr. Speaker? She could have come to us in the fall when the last supplementary supply request came in and told us that this was going to be happening, that they felt that it was worth while to put the additional dollars in to do whatever they did with them, whether it was minimize caseloads, assess kids, handle greater volumes, or whatever. I think that the Legislature should have had a heads-up on that. So I think in this particular instance these expenses could have been anticipated.

Are they extraordinary expenses? It doesn't look like it, Mr. Speaker, so that criteria also doesn't apply here. These are the day-to-day expenses of trying to get these kids through a variety of crises in their lives.

Let's take a look at the next department, being Infrastructure. That's the big one: the rebates. Does it fit the purpose of supplementary supply estimates? Were these rebate dollars unanticipated or extraordinary? I think in this case, Mr. Speaker, they meet both criteria by government standards. I think the high costs were somewhat unanticipated by the government, not a reflection on their ability to forecast. In fact, that's a condemnation of what happened here. They should have anticipated that the way they moved forward with deregulation, there were going to be horrendous costs passed on to consumers and they were going to be expected to respond in some format. That's in fact what we've seen with these dollars here. So both extraordinary and, only in the government's eyes, unanticipated. I think everyone else in this province clearly understood that there were going to be some significant financial consequences as a result of the way they proceeded with deregulation.

What about Learning, Mr. Speaker? Did they fit this particular criteria? Are the dollars requested there unanticipated? Not at all. Once again the government full well knew what their plans were in terms of reducing the education portion of property taxes. The only thing they didn't do was give school boards a mechanism to recover that money somewhere else. So poor planning is what we see in this particular instance. That could have been forecast and put into last year's budget, and we wouldn't have had to see these dollars come out at the end of the year. Had they done that, school boards would have had some sense of security in terms of what they were expecting for the rest of the year and wouldn't have to wait on tenterhooks until after the budget year for this to be approved.

Is this an extraordinary item? I guess in some ways it fits that criteria, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about what is now going to be an ongoing occurrence – the specific rates that they can collect on the taxes – but it was the first year that it happened. I guess it could qualify as extraordinary in that circumstance.

One thing we can do when we talk about supplementary supply is ask the question: has the government done their job in needing these funds and approval for these funds after the fact of the year-end?

That's, I'm sure, a matter of great debate on both sides of the House. We certainly would hope that we can see some participation from government members defending their position in terms of the government having done their job and asking for these dollars.

What we need to take a look at when we analyze them having done their job is: do the dollars reflect the government being able to meet their benchmarks in the business plans? If we take a look at the business plans in each of these areas, in fact we don't find the reasons why this additional money was requested to be benchmarked at all in the government business plans. So that raises a whole series of questions and issues in itself, Mr. Speaker. Why aren't they there? How can it be that the government is not measuring its performance on issues that it's actually spending dollars on? What are the benchmarks doing in the business plan, how effective are they, or why were they not?

When we've already established that for the most part none of these dollars requested hit the extraordinary category, then there should have been benchmarking done in the various business plans so that we could measure how effective the use of these extra dollars is in terms of meeting the government's actual goals and objectives. They can't do it, because they don't exist. The only thing that comes close are some references in Children's Services where they talk about the authorities. The Auditor General has made extensive comments on the problems surrounding how the authorities have established their goals, objectives, benchmarks, and performance indicators. Certainly when we get into that specific ministry under budget debate, I'll spend some time talking about that, because they are significant in nature, Mr. Speaker.

I see the lack of benchmarking for the supplementary dollars to be a major omission on the government side. I'm hoping that the Auditor General will take a look at that and will bring forward some comments at some point. Perhaps before his report is ready, it traditionally being ready in the fall, it would be interesting and I think helpful to the government to have his feedback on that.

Another question we need to ask ourselves when we take a look at supplementary estimates is: do they contribute to the long-term benefit of our province and the people in the province and the objectives that we have for ensuring that Alberta continues to be an excellent place to live? What measures do we use if we talk about contributing to the long-term welfare of the province? I think we can talk about equal opportunity, we can talk about stability, and we can talk about sustainability, Mr. Speaker. I think those are good frameworks to take a look at the dollars that are asked for and see if they contribute in some capacity to reaching those objectives.

When we talk about equal opportunity, I think that the dollars spent in Children's Services significantly contribute to that, Mr. Speaker, and I do congratulate the government on that. This is an authority that has had some issues, some problems, has needed extra support, and rather than shutting the door on the kids that came after the dollars ran out, the minister allowed that door to remain open, and those children continued to be helped. We could talk about the degree of help they got. Perhaps it wasn't enough, and maybe some people didn't get the access they needed, but in fact when we're talking about children in need and children at risk, then I think it is very important for the government to ensure that they provide the opportunity for those kids to get that help. Clearly, they at least made an attempt to do that by spending the extra dollars, so I think that's a good move on behalf of the government. Certainly I would like to applaud their efforts in that regard.

Overall review needs to be done of how those authorities are managed and whether or not children are being helped in an appropriate manner. Certainly we saw kids in crisis in this particular area, and the government tried to do something. That's a good first step. We look forward to seeing many more progressive steps in that regard.

When we talk about equal opportunity, I'd like to talk about how government has not met that criteria when it asks for the additional funds in Learning. They denied the school boards the equal opportunity to participate in the decision-making on how revenue sharing should be done by just arbitrarily deciding what the percentage would be and how it would be changed. I would like to suggest that the government should re-evaluate how they operate that particular process and look to a more participative model, Mr. Speaker. What we see in the actions of the government is a dictatorial kind of style that does not give everybody at the table equal status. In fact, I would suggest that in this particular instance many people who should have been at the table weren't there, and those would particularly be school boards.

I would like to talk a little about municipalities and the direction they were given from the government in terms of being told that they could not use up that additional room in the property taxes that the government reduced the education tax by. While none of us like to pay more taxes, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that municipalities have felt tremendous downloading by this government in programs and expectations for what they should be delivering to ratepayers. They haven't seen a corresponding increase in the dollars that they have received in transfer payments from this province. Once again, there is someone who is not at the table in decision-making. So what we have is a government who can behave like Santa Claus handing out candy bags whenever they dole out the money, yet at the same time they're starving municipalities of much-needed funds. This is a wealthy province, with the kind of surpluses we have. I would urge this government to take a look at treating municipalities not as a poor cousin but as an equal participant at the table of discussions and negotiations and decision-making in terms of where dollars should be spent.

Let's talk for a moment about stability and how that relates to these particular areas. Is what the government is doing in having spent this extra money contributing to the stability of the province or the people within the province? If we talk about that in terms of Children's Services, the answer there is likely yes. While we have a rocky kind of situation with how the authorities are operating themselves, did the additional dollars help the end user, which in this case is the youth who are using the services? The answer there is likely yes. I'm sure that my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods will also address that and let me know whether or not my assumption here in this case is well founded or whether there are some causes for concern in that area. But it seems to me at first glance that this is an area where the government has contributed to stability.

Has it contributed to stability for people in the province with the energy rebates? In the very short term the answer there again is yes, Mr. Speaker, because they've helped them to level out the energy costs that they're experiencing. In a climate of great instability they have helped flatten out the peaks and valleys a bit for individuals. The problem with what they've done is that it isn't sustained, which is an issue, I think. It's very short term in nature. The time has already passed for which we have received those subsidies, and what about the future? It doesn't matter too much to anybody in this room, but to many people in this province who are low income or working poor, it matters a great deal. It doesn't just matter when those huge bills come in wintertime. It matters to them in the spring, when we see fluctuations in the weather in the fall, and of course they're going to get significantly hit this winter. There's no stability in not knowing whether those rebates are going to be forthcoming again.

What we need from the government is some information as soon as possible about how it is they're going to implement the process. We would have thought we would have seen that in the upcoming debate on Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, but in fact it's not there. Why? Because that is a shell of a bill. It is a licence for the government to write a blank cheque on anything they want to do, because all the decisions are going to be made by regulations. The problem with making all those decisions by regulations is that nobody knows what the regulations are going to be until after the government has decided. There's no opportunity for input. There's no opportunity for people to get a heads-up in terms of what they can expect so that they can plan their lives.

I would suggest that many people choose not to live day by day, that they like to do a little planning in their lives and in their forecasting for the kinds of expenses that they're going to see to operate their homes and how they're going to manage their budgets in the next year. When you don't know if you're going to see additional costs of $200 or $300 per month in electricity costs, it's very hard to do any long-term planning. How can you plan to put money away for the kids' further education, for the education that they're in right now, for their sports programs? How can you pay down the mortgage or even renegotiate your mortgage when you don't know what your monthly expenses are going to be? How can you plan holidays, clothing expenses, any of those kinds of things? Serious issues, Mr. Speaker, that the government needs to look at.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take the opportunity, as we examine the supplementary requisition this afternoon, to look at the requisition in the total context of budgeting and the kind of framework that jurisdictions and, in particular, school boards have to work within and how changes like those detailed in the requisition might be seen and might fit into that funding framework.

The government had a review that was reported in May 1999 of the framework for funding school boards. I'd like to dwell on that framework for just a few minutes because the items that were raised in that by the boards that took part and by that study group I think are important when we consider something like the requisitions before us this afternoon.

The concern of school boards of course – and it has been a concern right from the beginning of the changes made by this government in '93 and '94 – is the amount of flexibility that they have to deal with the problems they face and the lack of flexibility, that there has been a narrowing of their ability to respond to the needs of their particular citizens. They've even gone so far, Mr. Speaker, in terms of being unhappy with the flexibility that they have as to suggest that there should be a separate funding block for them set aside just to meet local needs. As a former school trustee who worked with a board that was able to levy local taxes at one time, this plea seems to be a far cry from those days of looking for a little piece of money in their budget that they can use to respond to local needs.

They look at programs that are introduced by the government and are concerned that often those programs come with no funds, no support for start-up costs. We know that when new programs are introduced, like the literacy program or the school improvement programs, those programs just don't come fully operational from the provincial government. School jurisdictions across the province have to spend a great deal of time and money trying to get those programs started up and staff in place to conduct them. There is no accommodation in the present funding framework for those costs to be accommodated.

The notion of flexibility is also part of the basic instruction grant and based on a per student basis. I think that the plea there is that all of the instruction grants should be consolidated into a single rate because many of those grants don't reflect the actual costs. So it doesn't make much difference if they come in a separate package. They don't cover the costs of the package, and all they do at this point is add additional administration costs for school boards. The notion of having the grants consolidated into an instruction grant is one that I think was recommended by and considered by the funding framework committee and one that still has to be, I think, seriously considered.

Related to that, of course, is the problem of earmarked grants. As welcome as the programs that those grants often cover are, again the amount of flexibility of boards is curtailed when the funds that come to them are earmarked. It also is a way of the government taking what might be boards' priorities and changing them into priorities that the government has set. Again, it takes away flexibility. It takes away local autonomy in terms of boards trying to respond to the needs of their citizens and their ratepayers.

There have been some things that the government has done that I think are healthy: taking the cap off the number of students that could be identified as students with severe behaviour problems. That cap was artificial, and the government in its wisdom removed it. I think that boards applauded them for that.

The restrictions in terms of transferring money between blocks is a restriction that the boards find, again, restraining. I think the point is made and was made in the funding framework that if the grants were adequate in the first place, then transfers wouldn't be required between blocks. Actually, the plea at that time – and I think it is still there – was that restrictions be removed and that they be replaced with guidelines for school boards, and that would allow them some flexibility in terms of moving funds from one area to another. Really, I think again they made the argument that the local boards are in the best position to know where the funds should be spent, and if anything, the government should not be restricting it at the front end but holding them accountable for the results. So don't restrict us going in, but at least measure us by the kinds of results that we receive.

I think that if you look at the number of boards that actually ended up transferring funds between blocks, the majority of boards don't actually end up transferring funds. It's impossible politically. There's great pressure because all of the blocks are underfunded. At least, in the funding review report they indicated that they felt under great political pressure to not transfer funds. Usually if they did it, they ended up in political hot water. They, again, were very clear in their complaint that there were insufficient funds in the first place, so transferring funds from one block to another was really problematic.

The flexibility in terms of the payments to boards. I think, again, that the government made some changes to give school boards some greater flexibility by making sure the payments were made to boards in a more timely fashion than they have previously been made. Again, I think that has allowed boards more flexibility, something that is, as I've said, a very major concern.

One of the complaints that the funding review brought forward was the whole business of local decision-making and how boards feel unable to respond to their local communities, that in many cases the board members feel they are but flow-through conduits for provincial government money. The more earmarked the funds, the more those restrictions are applied, I guess, the greater that's going to be felt by boards.

I think it's really unfortunate with the kind of public negotiating that's been going on through the budget and through comments of government members about teachers' salaries. I'm sure school board members are sitting out there wondering exactly what's happening and how they're going to behave at the bargaining table given the context that's been created by the provincial government, by the Premier and his 10 percent comments, and by the budget with its 6 percent provisions.

Again, it goes back to the kinds of things that boards were highlighting in the funding framework review, and that is that they're being left out, that their flexibility is being curtailed, and that in fact they are exercising less and less control in local communities over school affairs. They feel – and I think rightfully so – that this is not in keeping with the history of this province, where school boards were the very first form of municipal government. Certainly in this city and in most parts of the province school boards were formed before there was any thought of a municipal government. I think that that close association of citizens with their schools through those boards is something that's being lost. Boards are becoming more and more remote from citizens, given the kind of control that those boards have over school affairs.

I'd like to spend a few minutes, if I may, Mr. Speaker, talking about the complexity of budgeting. Instead of being a simple, straightforward operation, the government budgeting process has made it more complex and therefore more costly and more difficult for boards to render the services to local schools that they're expected to. In the funding framework review boards overwhelmingly thought that there had to be some streamlining, that the kind of framework that's in place right now is much too cumbersome and needs to be changed. I've mentioned a couple of them before, and that is the notion of taking away restrictions. Instead of a long list of laws that must be obeyed or regulations that must be obeyed, take those restrictions away, replace them with guidelines, and then hold boards accountable for the results. I think that there is wide support among boards for that approach.

There are some specifics, like moving the ECS funding to the basic instructional grant and at the high school level eliminating the credit enrollment unit funding because of its administrative complexity. We've seen some of the problems with that over the last number of years and some questions about the use of that system and how effective it really is in getting money to the boards for services rendered. Again, a plea to reduce the complexity by reducing the number of conditional grants. A number of the boards were more than frank about the amount of time that's being spent and the amount of paperwork that's being created in trying to access grants and earmarked funds that just seem to be wasted money as far as they were concerned.

The other one that came in for consideration and criticism was the amount of paperwork for funding for special-needs students, the kind of paperwork and the kind of work that has to go into getting their funding, how time consuming it was and how it had to be done time and time again and was really very wasteful of resources that could be better used to serve in programs for those students.

There were complaints about the transportation formulas being too complex, and again reporting the requirements for mild and moderate special-needs students was seen to be unnecessary and cumbersome. So the whole notion of complexity.

Again, they were concerned with the number of grants and earmarked funds, and I go back to the earmarked funds for just a minute. We heard earlier in question period this afternoon a question on whether the earmarked funds or funds for the school improvement program were going to be continued. I think it bothers most boards that there aren't sunset clauses in place to automatically have those programs come to an end, because they are mechanisms of control exercised by boards, and when they are perpetuated, that control is perpetuated. So a number of boards are concerned with having a sunset clause – that seems to be, I would think, a wise recommendation – on earmarked funds to make sure that periodically those programs are reviewed so that the kinds of problems they present to boards, when they are programs, really, in perpetuity and not rolled into the basic instructional grant, could be eliminated.

The concern about funds that are initiated and then withdrawn. I think the technology funds are an example. The boards scrambled to get those funds and relied upon them, and then they were withdrawn. Well, I guess that whole notion of earmarked funds is something that adds to the kind of complexity that boards face, and I've mentioned that a couple of times.

The budget. I think there are some additional concerns that are indirectly related to the budgeting process. We get an opportunity when we look at the estimates in more detail to talk about some of those.

The funds in terms of adequacy. I think it's generally agreed across the province that the basic per pupil instructional grant is inadequate, and it's an issue that in my preliminary look at the budget I don't think has been addressed but one that I think is going to have to be. It's going to become more acute. It's chronic underfunding, and I think it's starting to raise some problems in the system that could be eliminated were the funds different.

I think parent fund-raising, school fund-raising is a huge issue that government, I know, has been trying to get a handle on, I don't think very successfully. It's a difficult problem. Some parents refuse to report the amount of money that they raise for schools, indicating that it's none of the government's business or none of the local school board's business how much money they raise. There are issues about the morality of using gambling funds to finance schools. We heard the bishop in Calgary issue a fairly clear directive to residents there in terms of not using gambling funds for school purposes.

I think the framework was designed to make more equitable the amount of resources available to each child in this province, yet the fund-raising has worked to introduce a whole new set of inequities as some school districts and some schools are able to raise thousands and thousands of dollars through casinos and bingos, and other communities where parents have other concerns don't have access to those same mechanisms, so huge variations across the province in terms of the additional moneys per pupil that are being raised by school boards.

User fees are now being incorporated and expected in terms of budget planning, in the budget process, and I go back to our notion, the idea we have in the province of a fully funded public education system accessible to all and how that ideal is being . . . [Dr. Massey's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to another opportunity to speak on the budget.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My comments will be relatively brief, unless you'd like me to go the full 20 minutes. In regards to Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2001, I'm sure in fact that my concerns are probably shared by many of us here. It is worrisome adding over $400 million of approved expenditures to last year's fiscal year. We are, I think, setting a one-year, all-time record, if I'm correct, for supplementary expenditures, shattering all records of the late '80s and early '90s, which for years concerned us all, with Alberta's fiscal performance. It's a worrisome trend. The previous record I think was held by the fiscal year preceding the one we're discussing. So the last two years have been suggesting a dangerous trend for Alberta's fiscal management, that is, I'm sure, a concern for us all here. It suggests a drift into short termism, that is dangerous for any organization and particularly a large provincial government with a great deal of money in its pockets.

It also worries me that we are consistently now perhaps degrading or debasing the budget process. At one time I recall that budgets by the provincial government were taken extremely – extremely – seriously. I'm concerned about the way spending announcements are handled now, the scale of special warrants and such, that the budgeting process in fact no longer has the credibility it once had, and that budgets are not taken with the seriousness they once were taken.

In looking at the specific items in the bill, my eye is drawn of course to far and away the largest item: Infrastructure spending $406 million, which is, I believe, for energy rebates. It's not clear at all from the bill whether the rebates are for gas or for electricity. The detail simply is lost in this, and gas and electricity rebates are combined in a price tag of $400 million, a huge amount of money. I'm uneasy. I very much feel like this bill really must separate the expenditures on these two areas.

The energy rebates on natural gas may well be justifiable. We are enjoying record prices, record revenues from natural gas sales. It's our wealth, and one way or another it should be shared with all Albertans. On the other hand, if a sizable chunk or indeed any of this money is going to electrical energy rebates, I simply could not support that, or I'd be very concerned and very interested to see what the amount is. Our electricity crisis is of no benefit to any Albertan except the shareholders of a few companies. It's a self-induced crisis. It is not happening in other parts of Canada, and if we are voting here on a bill that is trying to lose the detail of that in the general line item, I am very uneasy.

I would remind all colleagues here that certainly Alberta's economy is strong, but demand for electricity actually grew at more than double the rate that it's been growing in the last few years in the 1970s. It grew in some years more than 10 percent a year, whereas currently it's been only growing at 4 or 5 percent, yet the old regulated system was able to manage that growth without any crisis at all, without any surge in costs or rolling blackouts and so on.

So I am very concerned that the $406 million line may conceal a substantial amount of spending on electricity rebates and we will never know the full cost of our misadventure into electricity deregulation.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will wrap up. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

Bill 6 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure as well to move for the consideration of the Legislature this afternoon Bill 6, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001.

I won't say much about this bill because we'll be spending the next month on the estimates in Committee of Supply, on the full budget that was tabled by the Minister of Finance just this last Tuesday. But in anticipation of the usual discussion on interim supply, might I just say that the numbers are as large as they are because many of the payments that are made by government are made in the first quarter of the year, so grants that are given out to various organizations and government structures, et cetera, aren't done on a per diem basis equally across the year but quite often are paid out in bulk at the beginning of the year, or a good chunk of them are paid out in bulk.

So when you do an interim supply, there should be no surprise that one sees large numbers in interim supply. It doesn't mean that we want to in any way reduce the discussion that's going to happen over the course of the next month in Committee of Supply, in discussion on the budget itself. The full details of the budget have been tabled. All the business plans have been tabled. This bill really begs no discussion whatsoever, because it's really just to allow the government to continue to operate as we conduct the ordinary business of the House over the next month and discuss the real budget.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was an interesting tale that we just heard from the Government House Leader, but I'm not buying it, and I don't think too many other people would either.

DR. TAYLOR: I did.

MS CARLSON: Well, I think we've got two on the front bench, Mr. Speaker, but the rest of you guys are a little smarter.

AN HON. MEMBER: No, no. Three.

4:10

MS CARLSON: Oh, well, I knew that one was coming.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to be able to speak to Bill 6, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001. You know, traditionally on this side of the House – and that'll apply to you guys too – we support these bills because we don't want government to grind to a halt. But we're always concerned about the lack of accountability when the government rolls in with a big money bill at the very beginning of the budgeting process. I think the concerns for us are around whether or not the government can then say that they are good stewards of a province when they need to ask for interim supply dollars.

There are other options. We know what the provincial year-end is. The government can count, and they can count backwards too, Mr. Speaker. So when they know what the year-end is, they should be able to count backwards and figure out how many days we need to talk about the budget, bring it in at that time so that we can have this all over and done with before the year-end and we don't have to talk about interim supply at all.

MR. HANCOCK: I knew you'd rather not have an election, but we did have one.

MS CARLSON: Well, you had some flexibility when you called the election too, you know. I like door-knocking in January. That's a great time to be out there. We could've done that and been back in here.

I think that's always the concern for us, Mr. Speaker, that when you bring in a big budget like this, there's a concern that the government isn't acting as a proper steward and that we have a lack of accountability in the reporting of what's happening and that there isn't really an opportunity to debate. Yes, we've got the paper in front of us, but that's not the same as being able to sit down, send that stuff out to stakeholders, get their comments back, and talk to the ministers and department staff and find out just what it is that's going on and what the expectations are for the next year and actually debate. That is supposed to be the purpose of this Assembly, to debate issues and not to rubber-stamp them.

Certainly one of the reasons why we have an Official Opposition is so that all expenditures of the government can have a sober second glance and that decisions can be made based on comment and feedback from everyone in the province, not just those who agree with the government but those people who feel that they aren't represented by the government or who occasionally have differences of opinion with how things are brought forward. So I think that's why it's very important for us to understand that scrutinizing these budgets is important, on a line-by-line basis, on a basis to be able to take them out to the community and get the feedback and then discuss them. I think that's something that gets missed.

Certainly when we see the way the expenses are now being presented under appropriations – operating expense and capital investment, nonbudgetary disbursements, and lottery fund disbursements – they become meaningless in their representation when we see that the government is moving to have the ability to transfer money between programs and within ministries as well. It looks like it's a move to combine these operating expenses and capital expenses in single votes so that we can avoid coming back to the Legislature for approval of supplementary estimates, one more way of removing the scrutiny of the people of the province from the operations of the government, and that's a concern. I think that we need to be talking about these dollars. What happens when you do that is we see a reduction in transparency, and it certainly isn't fiscally accountable, and I think that it isn't what people expect of this government.

If I have been listening to the Premier over the last eight years or so, transparency is a theme that he likes to talk about, and that reduces, in fact, if not eliminates, a large degree of the transparency that should be here and I feel has been committed by the Premier. So I would like to see us move in that direction.

We've seen the Auditor General, Mr. Speaker, and the Financial Review Commission recommend the separation of these operating and capital expenses. You see that in all organizations outside of government agencies. It's an important tool that can be used in measuring performance, in measuring the strength of the government, in measuring their long-term capabilities and the potential for shortfalls or concerns in the near future, not just in terms of scrutiny by the opposition but in terms of strengthening the way the government itself reports and measures their performance, particularly in terms of being able to evaluate the effectiveness of programs. We see a lessening of that happening when we see operating expenses and capital expenses collapsed into a single vote. It's a dangerous direction to go in, Mr. Speaker, and I'm hoping it's the only time that we see this happen. I think that's a real problem.

We have to ensure that we do everything we can in this Legislature, regardless of which side of the House we sit on, to ensure that openness and accountability and transparency and strict fiscal discipline is imposed on the government, the Premier and the ministers, those who operate these large budgets, to ensure that the people get their money's worth, Mr. Speaker, and that the dollars spent are accounted for and that there's good value there, the basic premise of good accounting principles, certainly a theme that the Auditor General likes to talk about and one that we should be supporting.

Another concern I have is the amount of dollars that are asked for in this budget. You know, we've seen the dollars being asked for in interim supply gradually creep up on this government. The first years I was in here it wasn't that much money. We were talking 10, 12 percent, something more appropriate to one month's operation of the Legislature. What we saw last year was 25 percent requested for the operating expenditures. [interjections] Well, I hear some chirping from the other side.

If we take a look at these budgets line by line, we can see that there are disproportionate amounts being asked for from different ministries. It would be nice to find out from those ministries why it is that some require a large amount of funds at this stage. [interjection] I think it is very relevant that we have that information and we know how the operations of the various departments are functioning and why and when they spend their dollars. I think that's a very appropriate request.

Last year in the interim supply budget we saw requests for 25 percent of the annual budget. This year it's up to 36 percent. What's the difference for, Mr. Speaker. We don't see an explanation coming from the Finance minister or her representative today on this particular issue. We're talking about an 11 percent increase in the number of dollars that are asked for in the first six weeks of this budget year, and that's a big change. Thirty-six percent. We're creeping up toward that 50 percent amount, and it's a serious concern.

This government likes to say that it operates very much like business does, but you sure don't see business operating like this. You know, we hear from the Premier all the time that expenditures are linked to outcomes. Well, how can that be when 36 percent of the money you're requesting is asked for in the first six weeks of the budget year? We don't see any outcomes for that. I don't see anything in this bill that tells me what the outcomes are going to be for that kind of an expenditure of money, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's a reasonable expectation that we should have that kind of information.

In fact, when we get into the detail of the budget, we'll see that the outcomes, as the Auditor General is quite fond of saying, don't often match up to the expenditures or the performance indicators as he sees them. So I think that's also a concern that needs to be talked about.

What we have when we see a government coming in and asking for this much money in an interim supply bill is, I think, an erosion of public confidence in the ability of the government to manage those dollars that they have been entrusted with. It isn't fiscally responsible. I ask anyone in here if they spend 36 percent of their annual paycheque in the first six weeks of the year. I don't think so. You can't manage like that. How does the government think they can?

What that premise is based on, then, is that we're going to see windfall revenues again. I say, nothing wrong with windfall revenues. We're a lucky province to have those, but when you start to incorporate those into the base operating costs of your budget process, you set yourself up for failure. We've seen time and again the kinds of peaks and valleys that the Alberta economy has had because we are so dependent on oil revenues. If we tie expenditures to those peaks, then they follow us into the valleys, and we end up with these huge deficit years, which are, I think, a real problem.

The inability to debate the amount of money that we're talking about today is a concern. The amount of time we've had this afternoon is less than an hour of debate on big dollar amounts and areas that cross many ministries, Mr. Speaker. I think that that's a problem. When you're talking about 36 percent of the dollars put in, we should be talking about an ability to fully explore this information and get the feedback and information. [interjections] I hear more chirping from the other side. I hope those ministers get up and respond, Mr. Speaker. We'd certainly like to hear from them.

I think that when we see this much of a budgetary request in interim supply, we also have questions around the integrity of the process. If you're asked to spend the dollars before the detailed questions are asked and answered, then why go through the exercise of business plans at all? Are the business plans just window dressing, or do they have some purpose?

Business plans are tied to the expenditures. As the money goes out, the government should be meeting the goals as outlined in the business plans. It can't happen when more than 25 percent of your budget is expended in the first six weeks and the dollars are asked to be supported at that time. So I think those are issues that need to be talked about here.

We see that some of the expenses voted here in interim supply are really interesting. Agriculture: they're asking for 51.9 percent of their budget. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? That's a lot of money up front. There are a few of these particular ministries that are up in the 50-percent-plus category. Another one is Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Maybe that minister could respond and tell us why they need 58.1 percent of their dollars up front. One other one that I saw is really high. Environment, 42 percent. What are you guys going to be doing over there? It seems like you're underfunded. I don't disagree with that at all, but that you're going to spend most of your money in the first six weeks of the year is interesting. There can be reasons . . . [interjection] Well, I think that would be an interesting explanation to see you stand up here and give. Let's talk about that.

Finance: how can they be spending 48.5 percent of their budget in the first six weeks?

Infrastructure, 68.5. That one's a little more explainable. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we've heard the Premier talk about the dollars that they're going to be spending on expanding the Canamex highway, and that isn't all that bad an idea. So you can see that in that particular instance we've had some work-up to the reasons why the dollars are going to be spent and spent quickly and spent early.

What about an explanation for the rest of these categories? It's certainly justifiable to ask for that information and quite appalling that the government isn't prepared to do that. So, you know, that's a good question that needs to be answered.

Some of these are under budget, but Municipal Affairs also is asking for 43.6 percent. Sustainable Resource Development. This is pretty good, you know. Environment and Sustainable Resource Development are getting a whole whack of money before the first quarter of the year is up. I hope that means that they're going to be coming back for supplementary supply dollars later in the year. Those are two of my favourite areas, two that I think are completely underfunded, and we would like to see that there's a little bit more money spent there. So I'm looking forward to seeing what happens there.

There's one other issue that I'd like to talk about before I take my seat, Mr. Speaker, and that's the business plans themselves and the problem that this government has really with the effectiveness of program delivery. You know, what we're seeing is a government that's committed to measuring performance – or they say they are committed to measuring performance – but in fact has missed 264 of its performance measures in the past four fiscal years, enough for the Auditor General to dedicate a serious portion of his report to and something that I think we as Albertans and legislators have to be very concerned about.

What are they doing with this information that they can't meet these performance measures? Is the premise that they're building the performance measurements on incorrect? Are they not measuring the things that they can actually deliver as a government? I think those are the kinds of questions that we have to talk about.

We've long said that input should be tied to outcome. That's a basic business premise, and it's the reason why they went to these business plans in the first place. Somehow it just doesn't happen and particularly doesn't happen in interim supply. We see no performance measures tied to the dollars that are spent here. So that's a question, because they're spending so much of the money in the up-front part of the year, and it's something that needs to be done.

We see that we don't have any programs specified in these ministry votes, no means for us to measure progress in the way that they are identifying their goals. That's a concern for us. When you just come out and ask for the money like this, we don't see objectives, we don't see strategies, we don't see benchmarks, and we don't see targets, all clear deficits of this particular process, Mr. Speaker, and something that I think needs to be addressed in the process of how interim supply requests come through.

The biggest concern for me certainly is the percentage of the budget that they're asking for, not the number of dollars, even though $7 billion is a lot of money and is probably larger than the entire budget for a year for some of the territories that we have in this country. A lot of money, but that's not the question here. It's the percentage of the budget that they're allocating in the first six weeks of this particular budget year that is cause for concern. It means that they're not being accountable, and it is not supporting prudent financial management and fiscal responsibility.

Fiscal responsibility and prudent financial management require the establishment of mechanisms within the budgeting process that do a few things, Mr. Speaker. They protect the fiscal bottom line, something that this government is quite happy to talk about, but also sustain other investments. When we see the kind of drop funding that happens with this government, then what we don't see is a move towards a social or a fiscal balance that helps us support a very healthy community in the long term.

Those are the kinds of concerns we have. We think we bring up those concerns on behalf of many people throughout this province, and certainly I welcome the opportunity to have added my comments.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to have an opportunity to comment on Bill 6, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2001.

I'd like to restrict my comments, if I might, to the kinds of issues that were raised by the Auditor General in his most recent report, because we come to this request for money out of the context of the Auditor General's last review of budgets. He made a number of recommendations that I think were important recommendations, and by passing this particular bill this early in the legislative session, the opportunity to try to make some judgment about whether or not the Auditor General's recommendations have actually been followed is somewhat curtailed.

He did make a number of important points in his report, and one of those was that the performance objectives in the business plans of this government are really a contract between the Legislature and the public. He went on to further state that when those performance measures were not clear and were open to interpretation, that contract was not being honoured. I think as you read through the report, the different departments and his comment on them, you can see that performance measures are still a problem for the government as far as it concerns their business plans.

Having adopted the performance measures paradigm or strategy for budgeting, I think it is incumbent upon the government to at least do the best with that model that can be done. It's a model that I think has been rejected in other places as being inadequate and supportive of values that don't always make people comfortable, but having adopted it, I think the obligation is to make sure that it works and works well.

The Auditor General did indicate that the Treasury had a responsibility to work with all of the government departments to make sure that those performance measures were ones that were useful and, again, honoured that contract between this Legislature and the people of the province. The Auditor General indicated that targets weren't being set by departments, that a lot of the measurements and a lot of the targets were not appropriate, and that they didn't in fact have targets for all of the measures that were in the business plans that had been prepared. There was often failure to indicate the year in which the particular target was supposed to be met by a department. I think the charge was that a lot of departments had targets and objectives that you couldn't measure, and they didn't have any kind of measure. They would have statements that included things like "increase over time" or there will be "continuous improvement."

The Auditor General was very critical of those kinds of measures in business plans. He again made the point that if the government is going to be held accountable for the budgeting, those targets had to be precise and they had to be quantifiable. They had to be measurable if they were going to be of any use. That's a refrain we've heard from the Auditor General for a number of years, that those performance measures are still, for a number of reasons, in some cases not well written and not very helpful in terms of examining the budget.

The Auditor General looked specifically at each of the departments, of course, and each of the departments is included in this bill for funding. Departments, for instance, like Children's Services: are we assured in this budget and in this request for money that the Ministry of Children's Services can really determine whether the funds they have spent have been spent economically? In the last report the Auditor General made the statement that the department really couldn't determine that and that $32 million was being spent by that department where that was the case. They didn't know whether or not and couldn't tell whether or not they were spending that money economically.

It's a department that depends a great deal on support services, and services to children and families require a lot of association with suppliers and support services. It's a major worry as we pass this budget that that is in fact being looked at and has been rectified, and I'll be interested in hearing the minister when she presents her budget and makes comments. I'd be interested in her remarks as to the accountability in terms of support services.

Other comments about the accounting in Children's Services that were less than flattering. There are a number of difference practices in terms of financial reporting occurring among different children's authorities, and there are different understandings within those authorities of the kinds of procedures that should be followed.

Again, a large number of concerns raised by the Auditor General about the accounting practices in Children's Services and what was being done with money in Children's Services.

One of the specifics that he talked about was that the money being allocated and actually spent by authorities differed greatly. He saw that there were some real difficulties with the basic funding formula. I know the funding formula is under review and is being changed. There is a process in place for adjusting it. It still remains a problem that the department still doesn't have a handle on the funding formula. They are taking measures to enhance it, and I think we'll be interested in hearing what those measures are.

The Auditor General also talked about the financial statements. It doesn't concern us at this point as we look at these estimates, but it is something we'll be looking forward to as we look at the larger budget.

One of the major concerns in the Learning department and now Infrastructure was the lack of any long-term plan for capital planning for school facilities. This, again, has been a problem that's been with us for years; that is, there's no long-term planning for Infrastructure. We had the freeze on infrastructure followed by some doling out of some money, but the whole business of school buildings is still causing many communities a great deal of agony.

Those new communities that don't have schools: each school in those communities seems only to be gained by a great deal of citizen participation and lobbying of local boards and provincial government. We saw the agony of the residents surrounding the Alex Taylor school recently on television as those citizens lost their school. That hardly seems to be the way to run an infrastructure program, when one community gets a school at the expense of another community losing theirs.

Again, the Auditor General's recommendation that there be a long-term plan I think is one that would be echoed by school boards and by citizens across the province. They would at least know what the rules are going to be that they're playing by in terms of school facilities. I think it's because the government hasn't addressed some basic problems. Do they believe in neighbourhood schools? Is that something they value and will support with resources? It seems at this point that that whole notion of neighbourhood schools, at least in urban areas, is being rejected.

I think it is even more acute in rural communities. I have a file folder of letters and e-mails from citizens across the province who are alarmed at the state of their local school and the money needed to upgrade it. That's in the context of the fact that they might lose the school completely by closure. Some great worries in terms of what that does to their community. Many of them in that file predict that if the school is lost, the community itself will be lost. I think that's really very unfortunate because we can do much better as a province. Again, the Auditor General, in looking at the budget and reviewing the budget, made just those observations, that there has to be a strategic plan for infrastructure or for schools in the province.

A couple of other comments. The Auditor General devoted some parts of his report to graphing or charting the number of recommendations he or other Auditor Generals before him had made over the years that were just repeat recommendations, year after year. I think when we are looking at these appropriations, it's an opportunity to revisit them and to see what they are.

Some of the ones for Children's Services have been repeated at least twice in the Auditor General's reports. One in particular is that "we . . . recommend that each Authority develop an appropriate number of performance measures to monitor the effectiveness of services." There's been difficulty with performance measures being unrealistic. I think the comment was made that there were so many performance measures that there was no chance they were going to all be measured, that some of them were vague, and that some of them were actually inapplicable. So that's a persistent theme through three of the Auditor General's reports about the Children's Services department and the state of the performance objectives they use as the base of their operations.

He's asked that the Department of Environment put in place some system for monitoring the delegated administrative organizations. That's been lacking, and again it's been the subject of a couple of Auditor General's reports. When we look at these estimates, we do it in a vacuum, not knowing whether that kind of attention has been given to this request for money and that that money has been spent within the context of the Auditor General's recommendations.

The health department has had a number of recommendations repeatedly from the Auditor General, according to his graph. One of them has been "that the Department of Health and Wellness and health authorities implement a . . . strategy for improving the implementation of . . . business plans." So we spend all this time in the authorities putting together business plans with a great deal of work and with a great number of resources brought to bear on it, and how well they work is in question. Some of them actually have to be changed quite dramatically if they're going to be really useful in delivering health services to the public.

The reporting of costs of key service outputs by health authorities has also been the subject of at least three Auditor General's reports. The need to make sure that those costs are actually determined with some accuracy and are helpful in terms of budget planning seems to fall on deaf ears.

Another related recommendation in terms of the department of health concerned the utilization and costs of health services. Without that information, the allocations of funds to help authorities were very chancy. If you don't know what it actually costs to render a service, then how do you actually prepare plans that have targets that involve those services? It seems it's an impossible task, or it ends up being a paper task that has no bearing to the reality or to the operation of health authorities.

The Department of Justice: a recommendation that they "report the results and costs of its fines collection activities." We'll be looking forward to looking at the budget to see where that's accommodated in the business plans and the measures that are there.

A couple more in terms of the Department of Learning. It's again going back to the recommendation about capital funding. I guess this recommendation now is directed toward the Infrastructure department, and the chart has been in at least the last three Auditor General's reports, that there be some long-term planning for school facilities and that that be in conjunction with the strategic plan for the delivery of education, and, again, that some of those decisions be made in terms of how we are going to deliver students' programs in this province both in urban and in rural areas.

There were a great number of recommendations that were related to the operations of the University of Alberta. The Auditor General had a wide range of questions about the university and its financial operations, and I believe that that's something we will be looking at very closely as we examine the larger budget estimates this year.

So the appropriation bill is before us, Mr. Speaker, and it's before us without a lot of justification or input by ministers in terms of amounts that have been spent, certainly very little airtime in this Legislature in terms of that money and how it fit into the goals and aims of the particular departments. I think that that's unfortunate.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude and look forward to the full budget debate when we get into the estimates. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

Bill 7

Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 7. Bill 7 is the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 7 will change the Regional Health Authorities Act to allow us to set limits on candidate contributions and require an accounting of contributions in this fall's regional health authority board elections. It will also amend the Local Authorities Election Act by removing some unnecessary provisions relating to regional health authorities and outdated provisions relating to hospital and nursing home district boards. My colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs has responsibility for the Local Authorities Election Act, and I'm pleased to present these particular amendments to Bill 7 on his behalf. In all, Mr. Speaker, the limits, restrictions, and requirements we propose will be based on those that govern our own campaigns for membership in this Legislative Assembly. Those requirements ensure the perception as well as the fact of independent and nonpartisan campaigning.

The health authorities elections are fast approaching, and the nomination process has already begun. We need to ensure that all the rules are in place so the election process is uncompromised. We want to set the structure that will permit us to make those rules so that we can move forward and focus on the important matter of the election itself. Bill 7 is a necessary step towards creating this structure.

The first amendment allows us to require the disclosure of all records related to election finances. This process is similar to the provision applying to our own records as MLA candidates.

The next amendment is really the crux of what this bill is all about. It amends the Regional Health Authority Act to give government the authority to make regulations regarding the contributions themselves.

I would like to stress that the amendments I propose simply allow these rules to be established. With the approval of these amendments by this Assembly we will set out the rules that will govern who may make or accept a contribution, the timing and manner of making contributions, maximum amounts of these contributions, and penalties for violation. Also, we must address the holding and disposition of surplus contributions and how to act on contributions made in contravention of the regulations. We must define how contributions should be held and accounted for. Other regulations need to specify how election finance records should be kept and identify consequences of an elected regional health authority member failing to submit audited financial statements of election finances. I repeat: establishing the rules to effectively govern candidate contributions in these elections is essential to the integrity of the process. With the changes I've outlined in Bill 7, we will have the authority to make those rules.

Having said all this, I ask the support of members of this House for second reading of Bill 7.

4:50

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Happy to stand one more time this afternoon, this time to talk on Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act. There's no doubt that this is a bill that we have been waiting for for some time, and it's nice to see that we finally have it before us and in a time frame where we can take this bill out and show it to Albertans, have some discussions with them, and look forward to their feedback before it actually will be passed in this House. So we're happy to see it printed and having been presented for first reading and now second reading. I'm sure that when we get to the committee stage on this bill, there will be a great deal to say about it, because it's been a discussion that Albertans have been having for some years in this province.

At least what we're seeing here are regulations with respect to the election finance rules, but I have to say that, even so, I do have a few concerns, just in the first cursory glance I've had at the bill, that I would like to talk about. Let's talk a little bit about the background of this bill before we get there.

We've seen this government promise RHA board elections since at least 1997, and there was lots of discussion about that before that time period in this Legislature. I can remember some of our good friends and good friends I think on both sides of this House – Nick Taylor, Bettie Hewes – talking about how important those kinds of elections would be in terms of increasing the efficiency and the ability of the hospital boards to be able to operate. So I think that's a good step.

We were told at that time that we were going to see these RHA elections in 1997, and of course as we all know, that didn't happen. There was some kerfuffle throughout the province at that time, lots of interesting feedback from people about the lack of actually putting those elections on the table at that time and some discussions about how the government would be prepared to move forward in the future.

It's nice to see that we're going to see those elections this fall. We're at the end of April. Those elections happen early this fall. It isn't very much time to get all the rules in place, all the candidates in place, and to ensure that we'll have accountability, transparency, and no conflict of interest in those elections and with the people who are running in those elections. So it's a little bit of a concern to me to see that once again we have what is in effect quite a flimsy bill for the kinds of issues and rules that'll have to be reviewed when it comes to putting these elections in place. That is one concern that I would like to put on the record.

There are many issues, we think, that are outstanding surrounding the impartiality of the election process, and that's going to be a key feature of the outreach we do to people throughout this province when we ask them to comment on this bill.

You know, one of the most important things that we can ensure in a democratic province and country is that there is impartiality in the election process. A concern that I have when I take a look at this bill, right off the bat, is when we get to section 4, where it talks about who can and who cannot run in this particular election. Mr. Speaker, we are talking about elections for the regional health authorities, where it looks like the government already has changed the rules about who can run. Now it looks to me that people who were specifically excluded before are now going to be allowed to run, so we're going to be for sure looking for clarification on that.

If we take a look at that section, it talked before about who was not eligible to be nominated as a candidate. Those were: if "in the case of a district board election," a person or their spouse

- (i) is a physician and a member of the medical staff,
  - (ii) is a dentist and a member of the medical staff or dental staff,
  - or
  - (iii) is an employee
- of a hospital or nursing home in respect of which the election is being held.

So good news. Previously those people were excluded from running to run the regional health authorities because, you would think right off the bat, there was a huge potential for conflict of interest here, Mr. Speaker. Certainly that is a situation that nobody in this Legislature should even consider in their wildest expectations would be reasonable to support. So that's something that we're going to be getting lots of feedback on, I'm sure, and certainly some legal opinions on what kind of eligibility there should be or restrictions on those people if they happen to be elected.

You think about the regional health authorities and how they're operating now. If you put key people on the board, one or more who have a strong vested interest in the running of any kind of medical services within the community, we could see all kinds of problems perceived and real coming up that could be serious conflicts of interest. So I think that's something that's going to require a great deal of information on and discussion about before that particular part of this bill can be passed. Quite likely it's a situation where we will see an amendment coming forward from this side of the House.

Sometimes what's happened in the past, Mr. Speaker, a very good thing that's happened, is that we've talked to the government about parts of bills that we don't like or that we are finding that the community is finding problematic. Sometimes government members will go home to their constituencies and find out that the people they're talking to have the same kinds of concerns, and a discussion begins around how to eliminate that particular concern from the bill so that there can be otherwise general support for the bill. Sometimes we've seen that rather than us bringing forward an amendment which inevitably is defeated in this Legislature, the government will draft an amendment of their own that will delete or change the specific section in the bill, which will make it a lot more acceptable to us and to other people throughout the province.

So I would like to raise a red flag right now on section 4 and ask the minister to take a look at that and to get some feedback from people that he knows, not people who want to be sitting on these RHA boards but people who are concerned about the optics both true and perceived of having someone with a vested interest in the community participating at a board level in the RHAs. I think that's something that he can take a look at. There'll be some time to think about that before we get into the final stages of this bill. Certainly it's something that we're going to be running past any number of people to see how it sounds to them and whether or not they have concerns about it and whether or not we should be pursuing this in the form of an amendment of our own in the absence of an amendment from the government. So we'll see how that proceeds, but heads up on that because it's I think going to be a concern for us.

Also, this election only applies to two-thirds of the board members, Mr. Speaker, not what was originally discussed by the government or by us. So that's something that we'll be talking about, too, as this bill proceeds, that fully one-third of the members of this board are still appointed by the government.

Once again, the issues of conflict of interest, lack of impartiality, of concerns around transparency are all issues that we see when the government appoints these members. In addition to that, we've got the minister holding the exclusive right to appoint the all-important chair of each board, so many people would say that what you're putting in that chair is a puppet. So how could the minister eliminate that kind of a concern, Mr. Speaker? That's our question for him, and I'm hoping that he will address that.

Those are my opening concerns on Bill 7. I look forward to participating in the debate when it gets to the Committee of the Whole stage.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to Bill 7, Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001. which is going through – well, we just started, I guess, in second reading. I'm pleased to join the debate and make some preliminary observations.

Since it's a bill that amends an existing piece of legislation, it's rather light on detail, but the general principles underlying it are the ones that I would like to address at the moment. The first main concern that I have about the bill is that although it now will enable regional health authorities to have some members elected, at least one-third of those who will constitute a regional health authority past next October will still be appointed and appointed by the minister. I wonder why this departure from the established practice in this province which applies to school boards, which applies to municipal councils, and which says that all members of local government bodies such as school boards and city councils will be elected. So when we elect all of those members, I wonder why the departure from this practice in this case.

Why does this government not trust elected members to do the business of RHAs, all elected members of the RHAs, and be able to do their work in the same way that our city councils and school boards, which have all members elected by the electorate, do their business? This causes me serious concern about the real intention of the government's insistence, expressed in this bill, to be able to handpick a substantial number of the board members of RHAs. One can only speculate about the real reasons why the government has chosen this route, a route that departs, as I said, dramatically from the established practice and experience of Albertans to rely on fully elected boards to get the services and hold these boards accountable if those services are not appropriately delivered. Why is the government trying to introduce this new practice whereby it will appoint one-third of these members?

I guess we know the record of this government on its position on the future of the public health care system in this province. We know that this government rushed through this Legislature, against widespread public opposition, a bill called Bill 11, presumably to protect the future of health care. Albertans did not trust this government on that. So one of the reasons why the government is perhaps proceeding the way it is, by way of this bill, to ensure that it can handpick one-third of the RHA board members is to ensure that it can secure an overall composition of these RHAs which allows it to continue to proceed with its agenda to gradually dismantle the public health care system in this province and implement its agenda of privatization.

I am trying to fathom the reasons. I had hoped that the minister would stand up and justify and comment on this concern. I'm sure he will. He's a good minister. He's a minister that I can expect to respond point by point and seriously to the issues, the concerns, and the questions which, as the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona and the leader of the Alberta New Democrats, I'm posing to him as he sits and listens. I know he's taking notes, which is very good.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections] The minister is obviously very popular with his backbenchers. It's a good thing to know. I'm sure he'll be able to convince them that some of the points I've been making need the serious attention of the Tory caucus. So it's a good sign that he has the support here of his colleagues in the caucus.

The government, Mr. Speaker, will continue to appoint the chairs of the RHAs. That's the second outstanding feature. I am again curious and Albertans are curious why the minister has taken such awesome responsibility when he has so much work to do as it is. He's running one of the biggest departments in this province, with more than, I'm told, a $5 billion budget that he has to look after. Why is he adding to his responsibilities?

Another onerous one is to handpick the chairs of these RHAs, which in the first place are diminished by the fact that he's going to be appointing one-third of them with his own executive authority. That surprises me again. Why? Again the question is: does the minister or do his cabinet colleagues insist that he retain this government control over these RHAs and give them, however, the appearance of being elected, yet be able to set the terms, set the agenda, through his handpicked members and the chair, of what these RHAs should be doing? That is not the way, Mr. Speaker, to practise democracy in the province.

There's nothing wrong with following the practices that we have established in this province, long-established practices of allowing elected bodies. First of all, let these bodies be elected one hundred percent, have all members elected. Secondly, allow them and put in legislation that they will be responsible for electing their own chairs of the boards. Not to do so is to cause concern. Not to do so is to raise questions about the real intentions of the government. One of those apparent intentions that comes to mind would be to be able to manipulate behind the scenes what these RHAs do and make sure that the minister has the ultimate power to make them do what the minister and his cabinet want them to do.

Mixing elected members, who have legitimate authority backing them in terms of the votes they received from the electors, with appointed members who have no such authority, who enjoy no such legitimacy is to invite the possibility that there will be difficult relationships between the elected portion of the RHAs and the unelected ones, the ones who will be appointed by the minister. One should be able to anticipate, one should be able to foresee some of these potential difficulties and tensions across these two groups, the small 33 percent appointed by the minister and the two-thirds who will say: we are here because we are elected by the voters, and we're here to represent their voice. The voice of the citizens will be set against the intentions of the minister or the deputy minister, whoever is responsible for running RHAs. Not a good start, Mr. Speaker.

So this bill is terribly, terribly flawed. It is disrespectful of existing practices which have worked for us. It denies us the opportunity to try the tried-and-true practices that have been in place and replaces them with practices that will in my view cause difficulties and at the moment are causing a great deal of concern and suspicion about the real intentions of this government, given its record on the future of health care in this province.

There is much potential for conflict here that's built right into Bill 7. The appointments of the appointed portion of the RHAs will take place after the elections have taken place. This will give ample time for the government to assess the track record, the public commitments made by the elected members on each RHA. Thus the minister will have the opportunity, if he so chooses – and I'm not suggesting that this minister will definitely go that route, but the legislation before us gives him the powers to do so – to appoint the rest of the members in such a way as to balance the proclivities, the commitments of the elected members to neutralize any serious opposition that the department or the government or the minister may perceive may arise to the government's own plans to continue to privatize the health care system.

This feature again causes me to wonder, and I'm sure the minister will be replying to some of these concerns that I have. This ability to survey beforehand the composition, the makeup, of the elected portion of RHAs certainly suggests that the government is interested in ensuring that there's a progovernment net balance in these RHAs. That doesn't speak well for this government's own plans and certainly doesn't speak well for this bill. The government is afraid of losing control of the boards because poll after poll of people in Alberta show they retain a major commitment to universal public health care, and they could very well lose control. The government could very well lose control if they had fully elected boards.

I will conclude my short comments here, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure I'll have an opportunity to say more in the later stages of the debate on this bill.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments on Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001, at second reading. Of course, at second reading we are supposed to confine our comments to the underlying principles of the bill, and I think that if you look at some of the principles that underline this bill, you can't argue with them.

The principle that seems to be embedded in this, at least partly, is that citizens should have local control over health affairs in their communities. Given the state of the health care system the last number of years, that's a principle that should be heartily endorsed. Citizens have been faced with hallway medicine, with long waiting lines, with services that are rendered to them in other communities rather than their home community, a whole host of problems that the central health authority hasn't seemed to have been able to deal with. I'm sure that citizens will feel much more comfortable knowing that there are local representatives who have some control over affairs and whom they can go to. These will not be remote figures in Edmonton for the most part. These will be local individuals known in the community and approachable by citizens with their concerns.

So I think that whole notion of more local control is one that has to be applauded. But – and it's a big but – the notion of limiting it to one-third and two-thirds is really very difficult to understand. It's like the government doesn't quite trust democracy to work as far as regional health boards are concerned, and they want to make sure that they have at least some control over the actions of those boards. It's a rather curious sort of ratio that they've come up with, and I look forward, I hope at some point, to hearing an explanation as to why that one-third/two-thirds ratio was the one that was chosen. You know, it really does sort of put a caveat on the whole notion of democracy and local control over health affairs.

There are some underlying principles concerning conflict of interest on boards that are rather interesting given the changes that have been made, and I think the changes are healthy in terms of some of the individuals. I found it hard to understand why an employee of a long-term health care authority would be excluded from sitting on a board. Having had some association with one of those facilities now for the last couple of years, I think the same rules should apply to employees of the health care system as apply under the Local Authorities Election Act to teachers who run for school boards. I know that that has been raised as an issue by some across the province, but in terms of faith in democracy and allowing citizens the widest opportunity to exercise themselves as citizens, I think that in the long run the few people that would be excluded from running under those kinds of rules have not been worth the kinds of problems that they've raised. So I'm pleased that it's been changed and that the eligibility has been opened up to the full range of citizens and that there aren't particular groups being excluded on the basis of their occupation and their association with the health system. In fact, in terms of the case of school boards, teachers who are on those boards I think have made some valuable contributions when you look back at various school boards across the province and some of the innovations that they've been able to undertake. The insider knowledge is, I think, often very useful to boards.

It's going to be interesting in terms of how the appointments will be made, and there's an opportunity here, I think, for the government to soften some of the criticisms of the appointment pressure by taking and appointing an independent body and having people who would be appointees apply to that body and have that body responsible for health board appointees. It's one that we've suggested, for instance, for boards of governors for educational institutions, and I think that kind of mechanism could be put in place fairly quickly.

MS CARLSON: Tell us how it works. I don't know.

DR. MASSEY: Well, I think the notion is that if I were interested in being appointed to a health authority, there would be an independent board that I could apply to, much as if you want to be appointed to a board of city council. There's a group that overlooks those appointments. You make your application. That group then has an opportunity to compare applicants and their suitability for serving on such a board and to make the recommendations on merit rather than having those appointees serve under the cloud of having been appointed because they are a friend of a particular member of the government or have expressed political views that are consistent with the government's views which makes them a candidate for those reasons rather than because they have certain skills that they can bring to the board that are needed in terms of the kinds of decision-making.

MS CARLSON: Who would sit on that committee to decide if they could apply?

DR. MASSEY: I'm not quite sure.

I was trying to think of what it might be like to serve on a board where a third of the members were appointed, and I think it would be an interesting experience, reflecting back on my experiences as a trustee, having had a third of them appointed would have caused additional friction. Often boards serving local interests act in ways that are inconsistent with the way the government would have them act, and that kind of independence I think is going to be hampered by having members that are government appointees. The chances of one of those boards standing up and actually taking an independent stand is going to be compromised. It's going to be much less likely to happen with government appointees on it, and maybe that's the purpose of having the government appointees on the board in the first place. I think it's going to be an interesting experience to sit on a board that is set up in just that way.

5:20

I think those three principles, the notion that local citizens should have control over health affairs in their community, the principles underlying conflict of interest – the principles concerning democracy itself are embedded in this bill, and I think it would be interesting to put the kinds of experiences that other boards in the province have had against what's proposed for the health authorities and look at the experience they've had and then to try to make some predictions as to how well these boards are going to operate. It'll be also interesting to see what kinds of regulations the government makes in terms of the provisions for the elections that are out.

Some packages were delivered to our constituency offices outlining some of the details of health board elections. It's interesting that the information coming out is that in some of the regions, at least to this point, there hasn't been a full slate of people come forward saying they're willing to serve. That may be partly because of the short time lines and the fact that there hasn't been a great deal of public discussion in terms of the responsibilities and the duties of people that are elected to these particular authorities. What are they going to do? I look back on my own experience on the school board, again having gone into that with little knowledge of what was expected. I suspect that that is what's holding up a number of people in terms of putting their names forward.

That poses an interesting question. What happens if there's not a full slate of candidates for the board? What actions will be taken? Will the list of appointees be expanded? What accommodation has been made should there not be a full slate? I think it's a concern that may have to be faced.

The new boards, of course, are going to face some pretty horrendous problems, given the state of health care in some parts of the province. I think we can look forward to the same kinds of difficulties that the children's authorities have had in terms of the different regions working with each other and the kinds of agreements that are going to have to be made when citizens move or are served in one health authority and are resident in another. I think that those will be problems that we can anticipate, will be some of the very first problems that those authorities have to deal with, that whole notion of boundaries and the kinds of problems that those boundaries can present in terms of the delivery of services.

I think we can gain from the experience of the children's authorities. There are going to be some interesting questions in terms of the allocation of resources to the health boards and on what basis those allocations are going to be made. I think we can expect – because many of them will be new boards – there'll be some of the problems that children's authorities have had with reporting and the financial affairs of the authorities. Those will be growing pains that these new authorities will have to work through. We do have some experience now with the children's authorities that they can benefit from. I enumerated some of those earlier in the afternoon, Mr. Speaker, when I looked at the recommendations of the Auditor General. So I think that there's experience that these boards can learn from.

[At 5:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 30, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/04/30

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome back. At the conclusion of the prayer would all hon. members please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please join in the singing of our national anthem in the language of your choice, and we'll call on Mr. Paul Lorieau.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you five esteemed members of the Junior Chamber JCs. I would ask that they please rise as I mention their names. Mr. Georges Bouverat from Switzerland is the world president of the Junior Chamber International. Mr. Bouverat is in Edmonton to consider this fine city, the capital of this province, as a possible location to host what is referred to as area C conference. This conference is scheduled for May 2003 and will include Junior Chamber representatives from 21 different countries including the U.S.A., Canada, and South America, to name but a few. It expects to attract up to 1,500 delegates. Mr. Bouverat is joined by Mr. Tracy DesLaurier, Canadian Junior Chamber national president, who coincidentally resides right here in Edmonton. Also joining them are Mr. Duane Vienneau, Canadian Junior Chamber national vice-president, who also resides here in Edmonton, and Mr. Andrew Woolley, past president of the Edmonton Junior Chamber and bid committee chair for the 2003 conference of the Americas. Mr. Justin Dahlen, president of the Edmonton Junior Chamber, rounds out our guests this afternoon. Missing from the delegation is the man who helped arrange all of this, and that's a good friend of mine and of the Assembly's, Mr. Mike Hodgins, who is senator of the JC movement and a past-president related thereto.

We wish the Edmonton bid committee every success in their efforts to attract this important international conference to our provincial capital in this great province. Would all of you please join me in extending an official warm welcome to these special JC guests.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chairman of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I request leave to present the following petitions that have been received for private bills under Standing Order (93)(2):

- (1) the petition of the congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer for the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer Amendment Act, 2001;
- (2) the petition of the Royal Trust Corporation of Canada for the Burns Memorial Trust Act;
- (3) the petition of the Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company for the Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Company and National Trust Company Act; and
- (4) the petition of ING Western Union Insurance Company for the Western Union Insurance Company Amendment Act, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present to the Assembly today on behalf of the Member for Rocky Mountain House constituency a petition signed by in excess of 3,000 people from Rocky Mountain House and surrounding area who are concerned about bed shortages in the continuing care facility to be built by the David Thompson health region. The petition calls for the government of the province of Alberta to make a commitment to ensure that the number of beds, 70-plus, will become a priority issue. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition today which is urging the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to "ensure that maximum penalties are enforced for all crimes committed with weapons and that all youths involved in weapons related crimes be tried in adult court," signed by 92 people throughout Alberta.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the petition I presented last Thursday signed by 20 Albertans calling for the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented on Thursday, April 26, be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to file with the Assembly copies of a letter I sent earlier today to Mr. Steve Penikett of Kenn Borek Air Ltd. The letter congratulates the pilot and crew of Kenn Borek for their successful mission to the Antarctica to rescue a physician. The letter expresses the pride that I know all Albertans feel that an Alberta-based company earned such international praise for its heroic work.

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to attach and table five copies of the requisite annual reports for the Municipal Affairs delegated administrative organizations. The organizations are the Alberta Boilers Safety Association, the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association, the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta, the Alberta Propane Vehicle Administration Organization, and the authorized accredited agencies.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table my response to the questions raised in second reading of Bill 3, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the last day of the grace period for employers to comply with Alberta's working-alone regulation. I would like to table five copies of Working Alone Safely: A Guide for Employers and Employees, which we mailed to 110,000 employers across the province, and five copies of the ad that we ran in daily and weekly newspapers to remind employers of the April 30, 2001, deadline to comply with the new regulation.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a brochure on the St. Matthew school open house and family wellness symposium, which was held last Thursday.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, all on the same theme. The first is a letter from Avenwood Corner pointing out that their electricity rate has quintupled and they are not receiving the 11-cent rate as they are considered a commercial user.

The second is a letter dated March 29 from the Condominium Advocate Association pointing out and asking the government for a review of power rate classification and rebate programs for high-rise condominiums.

The third is also a letter from the Condominium Advocate Association dated April 5 pointing out that after the rebates and the differential rates, high-rise condominium owners are paying substantially more for the same amount of power.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from Mrs. Judy Bethel, president of Hostelling International, Northern Alberta. She's concerned about the negative effects of skyrocketing electricity prices on the financial stability of their organization.

The second is five copies of two letters from Dr. Tracey Henderson of the Bow Valley Citizens for Clean Air. Dr. Henderson and her group are very concerned about the negative impacts on air quality from Lafarge's Exshaw fuel flexibility project. They believe the original submission by Lafarge contained calculation errors and want the government to conduct a full environmental impact assessment on this project.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the benefit of the entire Assembly the program from The King's University College graduation ceremony, which occurred Saturday, April 28, at the West End Christian Reformed Church here in Edmonton.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a report by a Calgary organization of parents known as SPEAK advocating effective quality public education. The report, titled Report to Calgary School Councils and the Calgary Community with Recommendations to the Calgary Board of Education and the Government of Alberta, recommends immediate reduction in class sizes and greater support of public education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 109 I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 12th annual report of the Legislative Assembly Office for the calendar year ended December 31, 2000. This report presents the audited financial statements for the 1998-1999 and 1999-2000 fiscal years and the fourth annual report of the Alberta branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

Hon. members who were here in the year 2000 may not be surprised to learn the following. In 2000 the average number of sitting hours per day rose to 6.16 hours, the highest in the history of this Assembly. The Assembly saw an unprecedented 22 requests for recorded votes between midnight and 2:15 a.m. and received a record number of petitions at 431. Nearly 133,000 people visited the Alberta Legislature and Interpretive Centre in 2000. A copy of the report is being distributed to all members.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to table the requisite number of copies, being five, of the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee 1999-2000 annual report.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm performing this introduction on behalf of the hon. Member for Highwood. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a young guest who is with us today and I believe is in the members' gallery. Well, maybe in the Speaker's gallery. There she is. During a time when most people her age were enjoying the first warmer days of spring in High River, Melissa Mathieson spent her free time volunteering on the election team for the Member for Highwood. What makes Melissa's story stand out from that of so many other election volunteers is that she's not even old enough to vote. In fact, she won't be old enough to vote in the next election either. Eleven-year-old Melissa has a passion for politics and is a shining example of the strong values of community volunteerism and citizenship that Alberta's young people demonstrate across this province. The Member for Highwood is indeed fortunate to have this talented young woman in his constituency and on his team. Melissa is accompanied today by her father, Larry Mathieson, and I ask that they rise to receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 48 students from Our Lady of Perpetual Help school. They are here during Education Week celebrating the world of opportunity in the Legislature. They are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Fortin, Mr. Girouard, and Mrs. McCauley. Would they please stand and we could give them a round of applause. I believe they may be in the public gallery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Henry Kostyniuk and Miss Jaylene Kostyniuk, his daughter. These folks are here today to experience the Legislature, and they're part of a home schooling program. I'd ask them, if they are in the Assembly right now, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we celebrate Education Week, whose theme is A World of Opportunity, I'm indeed delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 44 students from St. Elizabeth Seton school, which is located in the constituency that I'm honoured to represent, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The students are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Herbert and Mr. Boyechko as well as parents Mr. Marion, Mrs. Stotyn, and Ms Langstrom. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would like them to rise at this time and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Todd Herron. Todd is a very longtime friend of mine, and he and his wife, Avril, and sons Aidan and Mason live in Winnipeg. He is coming to Alberta and visiting with increasing frequency and is often heard humming the tune Alberta Bound. I'd ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is Education Week, and our public education system is facing a number of critical issues. My questions are to the Premier. How can a school board follow your 4, 2 two-year teachers' salary guide when for most school boards 2 percent is taken up for grid increments each year?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the budget provides flexibility for school boards to deal with all of these issues: the issues of class size, teachers' salaries, the myriad issues that face educators today.

Relative to the specifics of the question I will take the matter under advisement and discuss the question asked with the minister.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how can a school board settle nonteacher salary raises out of this budget when they normally follow teachers' salary increases on a percentage basis and make up about one-third of salaries in each district?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I previously explained, the budget, while it identifies a line item vis-a-vis teachers' salaries, also goes on to provide the flexibility for school boards to deal with all issues relative to the delivery of education, including class size and teachers' salaries.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the school boards deal with this issue when they're being given the money for teachers' salaries based on their '99 teacher employment rather than their 2000 or projected 2001? Why are they getting the money proportioned back two years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that refers to a detailed line item in the budget, and I'm not entirely familiar with the intricacies of the situation. I will take the question under advisement and discuss the matter with the minister.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Before recognizing the hon. leader for the second main question, I would like to point out as well that on today's Order Paper the chair notices that on May 3, day 4 of the Committee of Supply discussions, the Department of Learning has been designated and is called as the department before the Assembly.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, how can a school board make the appropriate decisions to reduce class sizes when the 3.5 percent budget increase is going to be mostly needed for salaries? How can the school boards properly deal with their functions?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Finance minister supplement my answer, but I do believe that there is flexibility in the budget, as I stated previously, to deal with all of these issues. I don't know if the percentage figure cited by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is indeed the correct figure or whether that figure was given in its absolute total context. I don't believe it was.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd be delighted to supplement. In the budget this year there are two things. One is a new line item that says salaries – it's clearly there – 6 percent over two years, but in addition to that, the base instructional grant was also increased 6 percent over the two.

It's not the province's role to intrude at the local level of the school district. We leave the bargaining process up to the local school board to deal with the local ATA. There is enough flexibility within the budget to deal with the pressure points, whether it be all on salary or on classroom sizes or the priorities within each school district. So there is flexibility, Mr. Speaker, within that budget to deal with all of the elements and the priorities that are laid out by the local school board, not by this Legislative Assembly.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: how much flexibility do the school boards have when they get a 3.5 percent base, 4 percent for their teachers next year, when 2 percent goes to increments? They have to deal with their staff. They also have to deal with the costs of increased utilities, which are not being met by the subsidies that are there. How do all of those get built into those two components: a 3.5 percent base and a 4 percent salary?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the issue of the subsidies – and I'll address that issue specifically – I think that this government has been more than generous, particularly on the natural gas side, both through the program that ends as of today and the new program that will be in effect, I believe, July 1 of this year. Relative to electricity, we have gone some distance to ameliorate and alleviate the cost with respect to the high cost of electricity.

Relative to the line items in the budget, I do believe that those items and the amount that we have budgeted provide a reasonable degree of flexibility for the school boards to deal with the matters alluded to by the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the Premier looked into the possibility of how much class sizes may have to increase in order for the school boards to get the money to meet these other financial obligations that are coming when they don't have the option to truly alter those financial needs?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have to budget based on reasonable assumptions, and the assumption in this particular case is that the amount that we have provided for basic education in the primary and the secondary systems is sufficient for the school boards to find flexibility within those dollar figures to provide the services that are deemed to be adequate to educate our kids.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government has decided to change the rules with respect to bargaining with teachers in this province: first, a specific line item in the budget for teachers' salaries, then provocative statements by the minister, and now a media campaign that does nothing more than provoke teachers. My questions are to the Premier. Has the government set out to deliberately provoke job action by teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I take offence to that statement, to the preamble in particular, especially the statement relative to this government going out and provoking confrontation with the teachers. It was the ATA at Mount Royal College sometime in the midmorning of a day last week that held the news conference that prompted the reaction from the minister of education. The first and opening salvo was fired by the Alberta Teachers' Association without a full examination of the ability of the school board to fully assess the impact of the budget and how they are going to find within those budget dollars the flexibility to deal with precisely the concerns that were brought forward by the ATA. It was the ATA and not this government that fired the opening shot.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: were the radio ads that have been playing placed before last Tuesday's budget?

MR. KLEIN: I'm sorry; I don't know the radio ads to which the hon. member alludes, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that we have made statements that we want our teachers to be fairly and reasonably compensated. The hon. minister has alluded to our teachers in many cases, depending on the school district in which they teach, already being the highest paid or amongst the highest paid in Canada. We want our teachers to be well paid, but we also want to provide the various school districts – and I believe there are about 62 or 63 – with the flexibility to deal not only with teachers' salaries but with all of the other issues that are so intricately associated with the delivery of education in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: having lost the confidence of teachers, what action does the Premier plan to rectify the situation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if we've lost the confidence of teachers. I believe that we do have the confidence of teachers. As a matter of fact, there are probably about 13 teachers in this caucus, and they feel very confident with this government or else they wouldn't be here and they wouldn't have run for our government. There may be a problem with the teachers' union and the leadership of the teachers' union. But amongst the teachers, the profession of teaching, I don't believe there is a problem, because they are committed to the education of our children, as we are committed to the education of our children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is playing cruel games with Alberta teachers, raising expectations of a well-deserved raise before the budget and then crushing their hopes with a measly 6 percent raise over two years. The double standard, backtracking, and hypocrisy on this issue are truly breathtaking. My questions are to the Premier. Why don't teachers deserve a raise that's comparable to the pay raises that nurses and doctors received prior to the election?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is not a comparison to be made here because the dynamics are different today, as they were different three or four or five years ago. I'll remind the hon. member that teachers have received on average a 17 percent increase over the past I believe it's four years plus another 6 percent over two or something in that range, depending on how the school districts deal with the particular issue.

The hon. Minister of Learning, as I have already pointed out, has stated that in many school districts in this province teachers are already the highest paid in the country on average, and basically we have said that we want all of our teachers to be fairly and adequately compensated to ensure that our children are well educated. Mr. Speaker, this is not forsaking the wonderful profession of teaching in any way, shape, or form. This is fulfilling our commitment to excellence in education.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the Premier justify a 6 percent increase in teachers' salaries over the next two years when private schools have been given 40 percent more funding over the same period? Why this double standard, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again the hon. member is comparing apples and oranges and grapes and peaches and watermelons and mangoes and bananas. The situation vis-a-vis private schools is totally different. Private schools receive no capital funds. They receive no funds for equipment. They receive no funds for transportation. We subsidize up to 60 percent – it was 50 percent – of the basic instructional fee, and that's as far as it goes. As much as the hon. member hates and despises and loathes alternative education and the parent's right to seek alternative means of education, on the whole and generally across the board the grade average of children attending those schools is at least comparable to if not higher than it is in the public systems.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think supporters of public education should really start worrying about the future of education in the Premier's hands.

My final question to the Premier: why is the government cynically driving a wedge between school boards and teachers by forcing the boards to choose between teachers' salaries and other important priorities like class sizes?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, school boards have always been challenged within budget envelopes to deal with these issues, and year by year by year we have been increasing funding to allow them even more flexibility to deal with these issues. We have said as a government that we want to achieve excellence in education, but like health or like any other issue, you don't achieve excellence by simply throwing money at the situation. You provide reasonable resources.

I'll remind the hon. member that we are spending now on public education, because he alluded to public versus private education, in excess of $4 billion a year. I know that he doesn't think that that's much – I mean, my God, it would be the philosophy of the socialist NDs to borrow and, you know, drive the province into bankruptcy at any cost, Mr. Speaker – but $4 billion is a huge amount to spend on public education. This government is willing to put in the resources necessary to provide the school districts and the school boards with the flexibility to achieve quality and excellence in education in this province.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, would you please familiarize yourself with the preamble rule for tomorrow, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Long-term Care

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have recently been informed of a situation that is somewhat due to a growing and aging population that highlights the need for an increased focus on long-term care. The situation is that of a senior couple where the husband requires 24-hour care. His wife, also a senior, can no longer provide the level of care her husband needs. Since there is a shortage of long-term care beds available in their home community of Strathmore, this couple is faced with the possibility they may have to live in different communities after 47 years of marriage. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the government doing to ensure that the people of Strathmore have the long-term care services and facilities they need?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that I understand it is very difficult in cases where families are separated from their loved ones, and I want to assure Albertans and the people in this Assembly that we are working hard at creating a culture and a system of supports that allow seniors to live as long as possible in their own homes. Last year the regional health authority in the area that was referred to by the hon. member received some $6 million to build 50 new long-term care beds that will replace existing facilities within Didsbury. It's my expectation that there will be a study that is being prepared for a long-term care addition in the area of Strathmore, and I will be pleased to review that proposal in the context of other capital projects received from around the province.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to this, regional health authorities are preparing and submitting continuing care service plans to me later on this year. Those plans will identify long-term care, home care, and supportive housing needs for each region and their respective strategies within regional health authorities on how to meet those needs. When I receive the plan from regional health authority No. 5, I'll be reviewing it and working with them.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this specific case, I am encouraging the officials from health authority No. 5 to work with this particular family in Strathmore to ensure that all the possible options to allow this couple to remain together are explored.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. What is the government doing to specifically address the needs of all Albertans as the population ages and more long-term care services and facilities are required?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government and this department are doing much to support Alberta seniors and their health needs. Regional health authorities have received nearly $40 million over the last two years for long-term care but also for home care. Last year the regional health authorities received onetime funding of $172 million to expand capacity and to upgrade existing long-term care facilities across the province; $42 million of that was specifically earmarked to upgrade or replace rural long-term care facilities and to convert vacant hospital space for long-term care use. An additional $28 million was approved to help rural health authorities implement the Healthy Aging partnership initiatives. All of these initiatives are designed to help seniors stay in their communities with the assistance that they need, and we remain committed to working with health authorities to address these placement issues.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

School Closures

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is Education Week. My questions are to the Premier. How many public school closures can Albertans expect this year?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea. I hope as few as possible, but understanding the challenges of the various local school boards, there likely will be some. How many? I don't know for sure.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: how many public school closures will there be in Alberta next year?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know. This is a matter for the local school jurisdictions to deal with. But I can tell you that we have dedicated something in the neighbourhood of $1.1 billion to build new schools and to renovate existing schools. You know, it's typical of the Liberals: the cup isn't half full; it's half empty. So it's not how many new schools and renovations to schools and improvements to schools we are going to make as a government. It's how many schools might be closed – might be closed – under the jurisdiction of the local school boards.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier, my final question: will Alberta be celebrating Education Week every year with school closures?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question during the first week of this legislative session. School closures have been going on for years and years and years. The whole question, when I was reporting on these issues – I was reporting back in the '70s and the '60s on school closures. When I was the mayor of Calgary, we had to deal with the issue of school closures. It was an issue during the '80s. It was an issue during the '90s. It's an issue now. It will always be an issue, especially in the major urban centres.

As I explained before, cities are creatures, towns are creatures, and they continue to grow. The demographics of those cities change, and the dynamics of those cities change. School boards are always challenged with the issue of where to open new schools, where to close schools, but they're also being challenged with the issue of how to think outside the box and, if a school is being closed, how they put it to another use. That use could be community use. It could be a use involving seniors. It could be a use involving a combination of community and education. Mr. Speaker, that's what democratically elected school boards are there for: to find ways to deal with these issues, understanding that a city and the demographics of a municipality or a municipal district or a county will never be the same. It's always changing, and they have to be up to meeting those changing needs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Protection for Independent Contractors

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the Alberta government has put in place effective provisions to ensure consumer protection against unethical businesses, a number of businesses in my constituency expressed to me their concern with the lack of attention to protect them from unethical customers. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. What has your department done to protect independent contractors from dealing with unethical customers?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we have the Fair Trading Act, which offers regulation and protection for consumers as well as sets a level playing field through standards for businesses. Outside the Fair Trading Act, of course, businesses have access to customer credit checks. As well, they can look at terms of payment as they sit down with their prospective customers.

Within legislation, Mr. Speaker, our department has a prepaid contract business licence regulation where an operator who is licensed and bonded can require an advance payment or a progressive payment in terms of the amount of work that has been done. Within the Department of Municipal Affairs there is also a provision that the hon. member's construction companies may wish to use, and it's called a builder's lien. In short, there are provisions there, and it's a good idea for businesses to get to know their customers and sit down and make the appropriate contracts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the same minister. Given that our economy is growing very competitive, Alberta businesses, especially the independent contractors that I talked about, cannot afford to waste their valuable time and resources in the government's bureaucratic and time-consuming requirements on them in dealing with the small number of unethical clients. My question is: what kind of help can the ethical contractors expect from the government?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are several ways that both the customer and the business can benefit. Under the Fair Trading Act we have a provision where an arbitration process can be in place if a customer files a claim against a business's bond. Now, there are also businesses that have set up within their contracts arbitration clauses, and one of the best examples of this is the Canadian motor vehicle arbitration plan for new car purchases, where the dealer and the customer can set down and through the arbitration clause come out to an arbitration result. As well, Mr. Speaker, in the province of Alberta we have the Arbitration and Mediation Society, that can offer their services too.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. I learned that in Denver, Colorado, there is a type of arbitration board that sends certified inspectors to the work site to review the work and make binding and final ruling between the contractor and the client. Could the minister tell us if there is a similar function in Alberta, and if there is none, what can we do to set it up?

MR. COUTTS: I can reassure the hon. member that there is arbitration and there are other areas where we can look at providing services to businesses as well as consumers. Contractors and renovators who enter into contracts with consumers and take a deposit, Mr. Speaker, are required to be licensed and bonded under the Fair Trading Act. That establishes an automatic arbitration mechanism to which we will appoint an independent arbitrator. As well, as I said, the Alberta Arbitration and Mediation Society can provide services, and the Dispute Settlement Centre, which is operated by the Better Business Bureau of Alberta, is also in place for those circumstances.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, would you please, as well, review the preamble rule?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Classification of Video Games

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a September meeting Canada's justice ministers agreed that each province would come up with its own classification and regulatory scheme for violent video games aimed at young people. At the close of this justice ministers' meeting Alberta's Minister of Justice said, "Protecting our children is a top priority for our government." However, B.C. has now become the first jurisdiction in North America to introduce legislation to ensure that all video games are classified and that youth and children cannot rent or buy video games that are inappropriate for their age. My questions are to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell this House if his department's research has shown any correlation between exposure to media and video game violence and aggressive and violent behaviour or even participation in gangs?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, with respect to the preamble, I don't think it's an appropriate or accurate portrayal of a decision made at the justice ministers' conference in Nunavut last September. What happened at that conference was that B.C. brought forward the proposal and outlined what they were planning to do with respect to the classification of video games. Justice ministers from across the country took that information for information and indicated that, quite appropriately, in most cases it was another department of their government that dealt with classification issues, that we had to consult and do those sorts of things. So, in fact, there wasn't an agreement at that ministers' meeting that all the provinces would get into the classification business.

In answer to the question, I don't believe we've done that research.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Well, can the minister tell the members of this House whether he is planning to follow B.C.'s lead and protect our children and young people from violent video games?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to say that protection of children is a very important concern for this government. We've taken a lot of steps, including the protection of children involved in prostitution, the domestic violence court project in Calgary that we've been involved in, many, many ways of trying to ensure that children are protected from violence in their community.

With respect to the question of classification of video games, I think it's fair to say – and I'd certainly welcome the Minister of Community Development if he wishes to comment – that we're going to monitor what they're doing to see what effect it might have. We're not into building bureaucracies and regulations for the sake of having them. We want to know how effective they'll be, if they can show that there's a correlation. Sometimes it's useful to watch and see what's happening and see whether it's effective before you dive into it.

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister detail to this House any other steps that he has taken since September to explore or to implement this classification and regulatory scheme for violent video games?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, no, Mr. Speaker. I should point out that really the best protection for a child with respect to renting or buying video games is parental supervision. Video games are not cheap; the last time I looked, about $55 for a video game for one of the new play stations. This is not something that kids just get to go out and do most of the time. What play stations, what games the kids are using are really questions for parental supervision and control. But that doesn't mean that we won't look with interest at what's happening across the country and what's happening in B.C. to see whether they can demonstrate that by putting a classification system in yet another area it will have an effect. If it does have an effect, we'll be very interested in looking to see whether it can be used in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Working-alone Regulation

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The working-alone regulation was passed some months ago in response to the tragic murder of Tara Anne McDonald, a young woman who was working alone at a fast-food outlet in my constituency. I would like to ask the Minister of Human Resources and Employment what measures his department has taken to ensure the safety and the protection of Albertans who work alone.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, after that tragic death we decided to have a look at our regulation that was involved in this particular area. We had currently running at that particular time a task force involved in looking at all of our general safety regulations. But I also then put together a committee to look at best practices across North America and listened to their advice. So we made a change, as the hon. member has said, on I think it was October 4, and now today, of course, is the last day for compliance with that.

I did earlier today table the Working Alone best practices workbook, that we sent out to 110 employers. We're now indicating to all employers through the media and of course through questions like this that the time is now at hand for compliance with the regulation to protect any Albertan who is working alone.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done to make sure that employers are meeting their obligations, and what is the penalty for noncompliance?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we have within Alberta a system of safety inspections. We do have the right under the act to inspect any Alberta workplace with or without notice. So what employers can be expecting from tomorrow on is that if they're involved in a routine inspection and if it is determined by the safety inspector that there exists a working-alone situation here at this particular workplace, the employer can then expect to be asked to show the safety inspector how they have complied with the act.

Mr. Speaker, employers can do it very, very easily. They can use our workbook. We've provided templates. We're basically asking them to assess the hazard they have in their workplace, to then provide opportunities to either reduce or eliminate that hazard, to make sure the staff know how to reduce or eliminate that hazard but also to make sure that there's proper communication in place so that if the employee finds himself in some difficulty or in an emergency situation, they can communicate immediately a message of distress.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electricity Costs

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent of mine who's given me permission to ask this question owns a business that employs 14 people by importing raw material from Texas and Kentucky, manufacturing it in Edmonton, and selling the finished product back to the United States. She's seen her electricity bills soar to the point where, in her own words, she has lost the Alberta advantage and there's no reason for her business to stay here anymore. She's contacted every electricity company in the phone book but is unable to get competing bids to supply electricity. My question to the Premier: does he believe that meaningful competition now exists in Alberta's electricity industry?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the competition is increasing as we speak. New power is coming onstream, many forms of power that we've never seen before. We see the advent of small hydro micro-projects generating 30, 40 megawatts an hour. We see a lot of cogeneration now coming onstream. Hopefully, once all the environmental concerns have been satisfied relative to our clean-burning coal, we will see thousands of megawatts of new power come onstream. So the deregulation process has indeed provided the environment for competition, and believe me, as that power comes onstream, the prices will come down.

We recognize, as does the hon. member, that there are problems right now. Admittedly, some of those problems came about as the result of uncertainty over deregulation, but that was not – that was not – the sole problem related to the high price of electricity today. There are a number of other factors, including the extremely high price of gas, the booming Alberta economy, the Kyoto protocol as it relates to coal-fired generation, the fact that a number of generators were broken down. As a matter of fact, even as we speak today, there are, I understand, about one or two plants that are shut down, or at least generators that are shut down, causing a heavy load.

I would urge this businessperson, this entrepreneur, this free enterpriser, to hang in there, Mr. Speaker. There are all kinds of things that offset the high cost of power that go to the Alberta advantage: a highly educated workforce, a good quality of supply, lowest taxes in the country, perhaps in North America. There are all sorts of factors that contribute to the Albert advantage, and believe me, as that new power comes onstream, that will then become the Alberta advantage as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to keep my question brief. To the Premier: given that other western provinces have seen no significant rises in power rates and that Alberta's power rates were stable during the boom of the 1970s, can the Premier tell the Assembly when small businesses in Alberta can expect their electricity prices to return to rates that compete with other provinces?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we are not the highest in the country, albeit we are on the high side of things. We're slightly above Saskatchewan. We're higher than Manitoba, and we are higher than British Columbia. There are factors that contribute to low power prices in those provinces, and they will probably all always have low power prices, unless of course they do as the socialist Premiers are so strangely apt to do; that is, allow their power companies to export it all. You know, they're talking about it certainly in British Columbia. As a matter of fact, they're doing it and they're talking about it in Manitoba.

The simple fact is, Mr. Speaker, that it's a physical fact. It's a matter of physics. It is. The fact is that both of those provinces have an abundance of water – an abundance of water – and they have the ability to create dams. As a matter of fact, maybe even the Bennett dam – and I wonder if the hon. member likes the Bennett dam, that causes environmental havoc in the province of Alberta, but nonetheless it provides cheap power for the province of British Columbia at great environmental expense to Alberta.

DR. TAFT: To the Premier. What has been your government's response to the report of the Canadian manufacturers and exporters, which found that electricity deregulation could cost Alberta's manufacturing sector 31,000 jobs?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how it has cost 31,000 jobs. I read the statistics and looked at the statistics just the other day, particularly for one of our primary industries, and that's the oil and gas industry, where they predict that something in the neighbourhood of 19,000 wells will be drilled this year, compared to – what was it? – 15,000 or 16,000 last year. I look at the phenomenal economic growth that's taking place in the tar sands, or as President Bush refers to them, the tar pits; about $31 billion worth of new construction. I see the phenomenal activity and growth taking place in the information communication technology sector. I see the addition of almost that many new jobs, about 30,000 new jobs, each and every year in this province. I see people moving here in droves. I read about plants closing down in Saskatchewan and in power rich, by the way, Manitoba because of the taxation regime, saying: we've had enough; we're moving to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, relative to our deregulation success, out of the numerous jurisdictions throughout North America that are deregulating, we are ranked fourth in terms of our total success, and that is after being in the deregulated environment for only four months.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Children's Advocate

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since last June the government has been sitting on an important review of the office of the Children's Advocate done by Chan Durrant. Ten days ago the government finally got around to tabling last year's Children's Advocate annual report. Both reports highlight the government's failure to address the serious shortcomings of Alberta's child welfare system. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Why is the government dragging its feet on implementing the important recommendations of the Chan Durrant report, which the minister has had for the past 10 months?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Chan Durrant report is one examination of the Children's Advocate position. Today under the terms of the Children's Advocate position the advocate is available for the children that are part of the system. This new report recommends a much broader horizon for Children's Advocate participation. In other words, we have 750,000-plus children in Alberta. It could, in fact, if you interpret this report, be suggested that we go beyond that child welfare group and advocate for all children. In fact, Schoolworks, a group, has recommended that the Children's Advocate get involved when students are suspended from school.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are numerous things that we have to examine, not only the scope of what that review could mean if in fact the Children's Advocate was always involved when children had concerns, whether they were child welfare clients or whether they were part of the general public. It also raises the question of the role of the school principal in the advocate's situation, of the parent in that situation. We are consulting extensively with the partners that we have through the Alberta children's initiative to make sure that what we bring forward in implementation is the right one and it balances.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate to the House when the government will provide a response to the recommendations, when the government will indicate whether or not it's going to implement some of the excellent recommendations in this report?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we are beginning already. The Children's Advocate has undertaken a review of the public relations or the publicity surrounding the advocate's office, and posters are going to be released very soon that tell children in key places where children gather how to get in touch with an advocate if they wish to. That is one example of several things we are doing to continually implement certain recommendations. The other will be forthcoming as we continue to consult with our partners in Justice, Solicitor General, and Learning principally.

Thank you.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given that the report calls for excellent recommendations like making the Children's Advocate an independent officer of this Legislature rather than a ministry employee and putting in place a credible independent system to review deaths and serious injuries of children in government care, will the minister indicate when we're going to get some concrete decisions on these matters?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we are very close to being ready to come forward on the matter of the review of fatalities of children. We are very thoroughly looking into the process with the medical examiner and with the Minister of Justice. It should not be long before we'll be forthcoming with some recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, on the reporting to the Legislative Assembly, that may take a little longer, but I promise there will be a response.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

School Construction

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard – and I personally visited one – that there are several new private schools in Calgary which apparently have been built new at a fraction of the cost being incurred by the public school boards to build their new schools. The private school that I visited appeared in a number of ways to be a superior building – more energy efficient, more flexible, and so on – and apparently was built for only a little more than half the price per square foot of comparable new publicly funded schools. My question, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure: has there been a comparative study done of the costs being experienced by private or charter schools in their new construction and operating costs per square foot as compared to the publicly funded school boards' new construction and operating costs per square foot?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer to the question is yes, but since this is such an important question, I want to expand on it a bit. The fact is that when you look at the construction and the cost of new buildings, there are a whole number of factors that go into it. So I think it's extremely important, as we look at those costs, that we make sure we are comparing apples to apples, because the type of material that you use, the standards that you are building toward, the durability of the building – and as the Premier mentioned and very rightly so today, we have to start looking at what is the end use. Quite frankly, it could be that if we were only using or planned on only using a school, say, for 20 or 30 years, then we should be sure that there is an end use for it. If you're planning on using it for a longer period of time, maybe it's worth putting more money in up front to make sure that it lasts longer.

I think we have to make sure that we are looking, as well, outside the box, as the expression goes, and looking at how we can partner with the private sector. All of those things are being looked at. The operations are being looked at. I can assure the hon. member that it is extremely important to us because there are only so many dollars, and the more dollars we can save on this side of the equation, the more dollars that go into the classroom.

MR. LORD: My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Is the prohibitive cost of new construction of public schools being caused by outdated building standards, requirements, and specifications that could or should be reviewed?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, it is true that the codes and the standards that we use do contribute to the cost, so when you are comparing, you have to compare what exactly another school is using. Certainly those standards have been established through a lot of consultation with people in the industry, with stakeholders. That is an ongoing process. They are looked at periodically, and we'll endeavour to make sure that they are the standards that are necessary to provide a safe and clean environment for the children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you. My second supplemental question is to the same minister, through you, Mr. Speaker. Is the prohibitive cost of new schools in the public system and the need therefore to raise additional funds the major contributing factor in inner-city school closure requirements?

2:40

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the utilization issue is a very important factor, but I think it's also very important that we consider in this whole discussion the opportunity for the delivery of programs. As we have said on other occasions, if in fact your utilization is low or if you don't have some economies of scale within the school, you are going to have more difficulty delivering the various programs that are necessary for a full education. So there is a whole host of contributing factors that lead to the closure of certain schools, where school boards find it necessary to close those schools, but I can assure the hon. member that we are looking at all of these factors, and we will continue to make sure that they play a role in the decision-making.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of several hon. members to participate.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Motion Picture Industry Awards

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday night in Calgary I was fortunate to be able to attend along with the Deputy Premier and Loretta Fontana, my assistant, the 13th annual Alberta motion picture industry awards. It is a celebration of Alberta's film industry and a recognition of the incredible talent that we have. From script writing to cinematography to computer graphics to post production, there's very little that we can't do right here in Alberta. The evening recognized Leon Lubin's great contributions to Alberta and his retirement from AMPIA. Also recognized was Horst Schmid as a true friend of the Alberta film industry.

Canada's consul general to the United States was in attendance, a reminder that films transcend borders. It is in fact a global industry, and Alberta films are seen around the world. Dale Phillips' documentary, Shadows of War, shows Canada's forensic doctors looking for and finding proof of war crimes in Kosovo. It should be mandatory viewing for all of us. Films allow us to see the horrors that can occur if we don't guard against them. The film people of Alberta remind us of how fortunate we are to live here.

Congratulations to AMPIA and to the Alberta film industry.

Justice Michael O'Byrne

MR. RATHGEBER: Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge the contributions of an Albertan who spent his life dedicated to the service of his country, his province, and his city, Mr. Justice Michael O'Byrne. Justice O'Byrne passed away last Monday, and Alberta is much poorer for the loss.

Justice O'Byrne was born in Seattle, Washington, on September 9, 1925, and grew up in an Irish Catholic family on Edmonton's Victoria Avenue. He attended St. Joseph's high school and was chosen valedictorian of the graduating class. He went on to serve in the navy in the Second World War and retired as a lieutenant. Justice O'Byrne married Eileen 55 years ago last week. Together they raised 11 children, all of whom were university educated. He graduated from the University of Alberta in 1951, the same year that he served as the president of the students' union, and was admitted to the Alberta Bar in 1952. He was a partner in Ogilvie and O'Byrne, renamed Ogilvie and Company after his appointment to the bench in 1967 at age 42.

Not only did Justice O'Byrne dedicate 33 years of his life to serving Albertans on the Court of Queen's Bench, but he also made tremendous contributions to his community. I would like to pass on my condolences to his family and to his colleagues. Mr. Speaker, he will be missed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

J. Percy Page High School

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Education Week I would like to recognize the fine work being done by the staff, students, and parents at J. Percy Page high school in Mill Woods. This school has a long history of attending to individual students and their needs in the pursuit of excellence.

A culturally diverse student body has meant that concern for students, their feelings and relationships with other students, is always a central concern. The house system, designed to help students and staff know each other; the Taste of Page, an annual public sharing of foods from ethnic groups; the outstanding Remembrance Day ceremonies; events like the moving commemoration of the UN declaration of human rights signing; along with a rich extracurricular program, which includes sports, music, and the fine arts, are designed to build a caring and stimulating school environment.

The Page global classroom program puts students in real-time touch with peers and experts around the world. The unique partnership with Industry Canada and Shaw Communications is but one example of the school's ongoing pursuit of the best in programming for students. J. Percy Page, the school's namesake, would be proud of the work that is being done and the strong tradition of excellence that has been established in the school that bears his name.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Community Volunteer Awards

MR. MASYK: Thank you so very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week was volunteer appreciation week, and one of the things that makes our province such a great place to live is the hard work of our community league volunteers. On April 21 I had the pleasure of attending the Edmonton North District Area Council Two Volunteer Appreciation and Awards Night at the Balwin community centre. The volunteers are revitalizing communities in north Edmonton, and I wanted to recognize the president of the area 2 council, Mr. Bill Maxim, and the following award recipients from Edmonton-Norwood: from Balwin Community League, Richard and Viola Kereliuk and Joyce Krachkowski; from Delwood Community League, Wendy Keiver and Dave Palosky. Congratulations to all of these people who have contributed to the efforts of revitalizing communities and strengthening them for our youth and for our seniors.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

St. Matthew Elementary School

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday St. Matthew elementary school held an open house and family wellness symposium in the afternoon and evening. A number of the families whose children attend St. Matthew's experience the same challenges as families whose children attend inner-city schools. This symposium was open to current and potential parents and students. They had the opportunity to explore the school, view student art displays, ask questions about the school, and learn about early childhood services. Display tables were set up in a gymnasium where parents could access free information on a wide variety of topics. Also scheduled throughout the afternoon and evening were guest speakers and presenters.

Mr. Speaker, the dedicated staff of St. Matthew's are to be congratulated for their outstanding efforts in organizing and hosting this symposium. It is another example of the great work being done outside the classroom by our educators and further indicates increasing demands that we are placing on them and that system.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Josephine Nena Timperley

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to acknowledge the life and volunteer service of Josephine Nena Timperley, who died April 21 at the age of 90. Nena's tireless volunteer service to multicultural, humanitarian, and artistic causes earned her the gratitude of many. She was the driving force behind the creation of the Edmonton Heritage Festival, the Edmonton Canada Day celebrations, the Edmonton Folk Arts Council, and several other community endeavours. She also opened Edmonton's first blood bank and helped many refugees come to Edmonton. As an active member of the Catholic Women's League who led by example, she mortgaged her house in 1969 to enable 34 young Edmonton performers to travel to Africa for an international folk festival. For her enormous efforts Nena received numerous civic, provincial, and national awards, the medal of Canada, and was appointed to the Order of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in the words of our Minister of Community Development, who worked with her for 30 years, she was called "Mum" and the Queen of Volunteers. The citizens of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, owe her our profound thanks. May she find the eternal rest she so deservedly has earned.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to acknowledge the recipients of the leaders of tomorrow awards in my constituency. These awards are given to young volunteers in four age categories between six and 21 years of age who have demonstrated outstanding dedication and excellence in their community service and work.

Recently I had the pleasure of attending the awards presentation in Wetaskiwin, where 27 outstanding young people from Wetaskiwin and the surrounding area were nominated to receive leaders of tomorrow awards. Each nominee was given a certificate, and the recipients of the awards in their age categories were Kyle Widdifield, Jesse Houff, Dean Breikreuz, Laura Ruskowsky, and Dawn Werner. These winners were given an engraved plaque to recognize their efforts and a $100 cheque that they contributed to a nonprofit organization of their choice.

I would like to congratulate and thank all the nominees and award recipients for the contributions they have made to our communities and for the important work they do as volunteers. Their service and generosity which is recognized now will make them leaders of tomorrow.

THE SPEAKER: The chair would also like to make mention of the fact that today is the anniversary of the arrival into this world of the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

2:50

head: Orders of the Day

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 26: Mr. Cenaiko]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am truly honoured to be able to speak to this House today responding to the Speech from the Throne. It is especially an honour this afternoon because it is my maiden speech. It is my first opportunity to voice concerns on behalf of the people of the constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and on behalf of all Albertans. Let me say right now that I hold this elected position to be a very special privilege, and in all my actions in the upcoming months and years I will do my best to listen, to learn, to develop, and to implement ideas that enhance the quality of life in this province.

Let me begin by congratulating all of my fellow MLAs on their successful elections and re-elections. I can tell already from the experience of working with a few of you over the past few months that a strong team has been sent to Edmonton for this 25th Legislature. I look forward to working with all of you and achieving effective results over the next few years.

I'd also like to make some very important thank yous. First, I would like to thank all the people of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for putting their faith in me. I am especially grateful because I know Innisfail-Sylvan Lake faces many unique challenges and needs a particularly strong voice in this Legislature to bring those concerns forward. I want it to be known that I regard your vote of confidence very seriously and will not fail you. I want all residents of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, including those who may not have supported me during the election, to know that I am approachable and open to ideas. As well, I would like to thank Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for her clear and eloquent presentation nearly two weeks ago and the hon. Premier for setting Alberta forth on such a positive agenda and for steering Alberta towards the agenda with tremendous vision and ability over the past few years.

Before I address some points from the throne speech directly, I feel it is important I bring some attention to the unique aspects of my constituency. My district is home to an increasingly diverse set of industries. It has significant light and heavy manufacturing with production of products as varied as insulation and piping used in oil exploration. It is also home to some of Alberta's best agricultural land and some of Alberta's most productive farmers, but the industry, I must admit, I most enjoy talking about is the tourism industry and the beaches and lakes on which this industry is founded.

I am proud to boast that my constituency is home to three of the prettiest lake resorts in the province. One is Sylvan Lake. It is amongst the fastest growing communities in the province. In the past five years its year-round population has doubled, and the population multiplies by several times every summer when tourists come out to enjoy the many amenities offered at the lake. The huge amount of interest people have in Sylvan Lake these days is perhaps best demonstrated by the fact that Sylvan Lake has the highest lakefront property prices in the province. Sylvan Lake also has the best known, and successful, summer hockey program in the province. Demand has been so high for this camp over the years that it's been a major reason why Sylvan Lake is now getting a new recreation centre with a swimming pool, a hockey rink, and a curling rink.

Mr. Speaker, Gleniffer Lake, located 20 miles west of Innisfail, is another beautiful lake in my district that I wish to talk about this afternoon. It is known for being amongst the cleanest lakes in the province. It has two very successful RV parks and one RV campground.

The third lake I wish to refer to this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure all members are familiar with because of the unfortunate recent incidents that took place near it, Pine Lake. Before referring to the tragic natural disaster that occurred there last summer, let me say that Pine Lake has long had and continues to have much to offer. Pine Lake is very dear to my heart. It has a beauty that can only be seen hidden away covered in luscious growth, blessed with innumerable sandy beaches. It truly is a gem. Over recent years Pine Lake has seen a large amount of sustainable, positive growth. It now has several campgrounds, condominium developments, and an 18-hole golf course.

One of the achievements at Pine Lake that deserves special attention has been the efforts of the local community to clean up the lake. In the 1980s, because Pine Lake was such an attractive and busy destination, it began to develop a water deterioration problem, as did many lakes in Alberta. The people of Pine Lake, the homeowners and the small business owners, decided to take action on the issue. They bound together and formed a group called the Pine Lake Restoration Society committed to improving the area. My predecessor, Gary Severtson, deserves credit for getting that society going and for what that society has accomplished. Early on, about 12 years ago, this committee began consultations with a variety of stakeholders to determine the most suitable method to clean the lake. Farmers, homeowners, campground owners, and scientists were each brought in to determine their perspective. Ultimately, the decision was made to utilize a hypolimnetic withdrawal system. It was a relatively inexpensive idea involving installing an underwater pipe.

What happened next shows the strong community spirit that existed in Pine Lake even after the disaster. The idea was there, but resources were scarce, so the community stepped forward in a remarkable way. People volunteered thousands of hours, and companies donated pieces of equipment to get the project done. Clean Lake Days was initiated, that fund-raised and informed the public about the project. In 1998 the project was completed ahead of schedule and underbudget. It truly is a remarkable success story.

There's another remarkable success story from Pine Lake that I would like to speak about, a success story that happened amidst a catastrophe. We are all aware of the terrible disaster that occurred last summer at Pine Lake. The tornado that hit Pine Lake left a human tragedy. Lives were lost, many were injured, and millions of dollars of damage occurred, but even with the destruction of the tornado, Mr. Speaker, it was remarkable to see the resolve and strength of the human spirit. The community banded together to help one another, and people from all across the province and the nation provided aid and support. It was truly moving to see the way everyone worked together to deal with the terrible aftermath of the tornado. I would like to acknowledge all of those that showed such boundless compassion and caring to those that were affected by the Pine Lake tornado. Thank you.

I would also like to acknowledge the role this government played in lending invaluable assistance in the wake of the disaster. To all the emergency staff, medical staff, counselors, and to many others that were at Pine Lake to help, I thank you. All of you truly went beyond the call of duty to help the people in this community.

The throne speech, Mr. Speaker, emphasized the need to develop safe, strong communities. I believe the response of the local Pine Lake community and the support received from across Alberta has demonstrated that this province is living up to that goal.

Another goal put forward in the throne speech that particularly relates to the situation in my riding is the goal to develop stable agricultural communities. Mr. Speaker, from what I hear from my neighbours in my constituency I know that agriculture is facing some very serious short-term and long-term challenges. The most pertinent issue is the poor harvest from last year compounded by the bottoming out of certain commodity prices and what looks like is going to be a year with exceptionally little moisture. For many farmers this follows years of poor harvests and years of struggling to make ends meet. The economic and human cost of the situation has the potential to be massive.

I am encouraged by the concern this government has taken thus far in confronting the matter. The Canada/Alberta farm income assistance program, recently reaffirmed with the introduction of this year's budget, is a step in the right direction towards alleviating some of the burden. Now all struggling producers will be eligible for a per acre assistance program.

I am also encouraged by the actions taken to find long-term solutions towards keeping agriculture competitive in Alberta. I am referring especially, Mr. Speaker, to efforts to reduce the risk of letting foot-and-mouth disease enter this province. As many of you are aware, it is a highly infectious disease affecting cloven-hoofed animals. It has the potential to wreak havoc on our agriculture industry if not contained, as it is currently doing in Europe. Alberta's efforts to inform producers how to minimize the possibility of its transfer, along with the other high standards Alberta has developed to keep our industry disease free and competitive, showed this province's determination to keep agriculture as a long-term sustainable industry in this province.

The assistance program and the actions on foot-and-mouth disease, Mr. Speaker, showed that this province recognizes the importance of agriculture, but we cannot lose this focus. More can be done and should be done. Agriculture has been at the heart of Alberta since long before it became a province. Producers play a special role. Their role is not only to provide for themselves through hard work and dedication to their fields and pastures; their role is also to provide sustenance for all people. They are at the root of a healthy province in terms of its ecological health and its economic health.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to the throne speech this afternoon. I hope my fellow Assembly members now have an idea of the immense beauty that exists in my district both in terms of the geographical beauty and the spiritual beauty. Innisfail-Sylvan Lake truly is a scenic district with an increasingly diversified economy, but its greatest strength is the immense community spirit that drives on and has only become stronger in recent years. I also hope my fellow members have come to see that agriculture is important in my district, as it is in most parts of the province, and that in order to strengthen this historical and vital industry, it will need special attention from this government in the years ahead.

I am truly honoured to be a member of this Assembly. The next few years will be a challenge, I am sure, but it will be an exciting challenge. I look forward to working with all of you and doing my best to help strengthen our homes and our communities and to help keep Alberta as the exceptional place it is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is certainly a privilege and an honour to rise on this occasion and speak to this distinguished Assembly.

First let me congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and the Deputy Speaker on your respective elections. I have been pleased with the manner in which you handle your responsibilities. I also wish to congratulate all my colleagues in this Assembly for their willingness and commitment to serve the people of Alberta and on their re-election or election.

May I also congratulate our Premier on his election and acknowledge his leadership in putting Alberta in the enviable financial position it is in today and the positive leadership he has provided. I realize that he had help from the cabinet and other MLAs, so I thank you all and also those who helped that may not still be sitting in this Assembly. We as Albertans need to be grateful and appreciative of your efforts and appreciate this great province.

I am the second MLA to represent the newly amalgamated constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. The first was Ron Hierath, who decided not to seek re-election. I would like to publicly thank him for the service he rendered. He worked hard and is well known for his frankness, honesty, and integrity. He represented us well, and again I thank him for his service and dedication and wish him well in his future endeavours.

I also, Mr. Speaker, wish to compliment Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for the warm, gracious manner in which she presented the Speech from the Throne. I sensed her sincerity and commitment to Albertans and thank her for her service.

Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to represent a very interesting constituency. Many of my colleagues have said that theirs is the best, which of course is debatable, but what I can truthfully say is that Cardston-Taber-Warner is the most southwesterly and may well be one of the most scenic. It includes Waterton park on the west, the towns of Cardston and Milk River to the east, and Warner, Raymond, Stirling, and Magrath in between. It also includes all of Cardston county, the county of Warner, and part of the MD of Taber.

Agriculture is the mainstay of the area, but natural gas and oil production is also increasing. Agriculture consists of ranching in the foothills, grain and oilseed farming on the prairies, and irrigated crops of sugar beets, potatoes, vegetables, corn, hay, and specialty crops. The production from these farms and ranches is the backbone of the huge intensive livestock industry that has developed in the south and also provides the production necessary for the value-added industry that is developing in the area. These industries in turn provide employment for many people and provide much economic benefit not only to our local economy but to all of Alberta.

Although our farmers and ranchers are industrious and independent, they have been challenged the past year by severe drought conditions, low grain and commodity prices, and high energy costs. The family farm, which has done a remarkable job of providing food for Albertans at a very low percentage of their disposable income, is under severe stress. When one considers that consumers in this province work on average only 40 days a year to buy their food and that about 10 days of that work goes directly to the producer, one has to admit that farmers and ranchers, most of which are family farms, have been very efficient in providing good, quality food for all of us.

The tragedy of this situation is that many of these family farms may not survive because of the aforementioned factors of low commodity prices, high energy costs, and drought. I believe it would serve all consumers well to help maintain the viability of our agriculture industry and to ensure that the family farm remains economically viable. I was pleased, therefore, that the Speech from the Throne noted that it would be a priority of this government to maintain the viability of our farms and rural communities.

I would also like to acknowledge the great contribution of our rural communities – our towns, villages, counties, MDs – to the economic well-being of Alberta. These communities are very dependent on a strong agriculture economy for their well-being. Many small businesses in these communities are struggling, and some have even closed. Not only are they suffering because of the problems in agriculture, but the sudden massive increase in energy costs is presenting them with a huge challenge. Although most are grateful for the government rebate programs to assist them, most have still experienced significant increases in their energy bills. Given these challenges, it was comforting to note the government's commitment to responsible spending, low taxes, and elimination of debt. I commend the Premier and the government for their efforts in reducing taxes and helping Alberta to become a tax-free province.

Mr. Speaker, as a father and grandfather I am concerned about children and about learning. I applaud the government's commitment in the throne speech to increase funding to school boards to improve learning. I am pleased that school boards will have the autonomy they need to deal with local issues such as class size. I believe it is important to leave as much decision-making as possible at the local level. Furthermore, I believe we need to ensure that the Department of Learning listens to local boards, administrators, teachers, and parents to get their ideas on what is best for the students and to whenever possible implement these ideas and policies to improve the educational process.

I would like to recognize, Mr. Speaker, the dedicated effort of the teachers, parents, and administrators who teach and work in the Cardston-Taber-Warner constituency. I have visited with and been involved with many of these people and know of their dedication, commitment, and excellence. As a parent and legislator I congratulate and thank them for their efforts.

Health care is a challenge in my constituency, as it is in many others. Regionalization has reduced beds available and care provided in all of the rural hospitals in Cardston-Taber-Warner. Waiting lists for some people seem to be too long. Doctors and nurses and our health care workers work long and hard to provide quality care. It is a challenge to keep doctors and nurses in small rural communities. I recognize that regionalization has many benefits and that available medical technology cannot be delivered to all small hospitals, yet we must recognize the concerns of many rural people about their proximity to acute care and emergency service. Many rural people in Cardston-Taber-Warner live long distances from rural hospitals and much farther from large regional hospitals. One of the current issues affecting many of my people is that there is not at present a kidney dialysis machine available on a local basis to the people of Cardston.

The Cardston-Taber-Warner constituency is also privileged to have many senior citizens living within its boundaries. These people have worked hard and contributed greatly to the status of this great province. They deserve to be able to live with dignity and respect and to stay in their homes as long as possible and, if they need long-term care, to be able to remain as close as possible to their families. I was pleased to see the throne speech commitment to publicly funded health care and for the focus on access to health services, illness prevention, and effective regional governance. I applaud the decision to elect two-thirds of health board members in the municipal elections this fall.

Families and traditional family values are very important to the people of Cardston-Taber-Warner. People work hard to support families and communities. People work hard to support and help one another and to improve schools, churches, and hospitals. These are a people known for their voluntary community service and charitable support of each other. I was pleased to see the throne speech reinforce those values, values of hard work and caring for others, confidence and innovation “that have guided Albertans throughout the province’s history, and they are the values that will continue to guide this government.”

In conclusion, I say that it is truly a humbling experience and an honour to have been elected to this position by my constituents. I thank them for the trust they have vested in me and pledge to them my commitment to undertake that trust. I also appreciate the kindness and friendliness that has been shown to me by you, Mr. Speaker, and also by my colleagues in this Assembly.

I believe that government should be open and responsible. I believe that the rights to life and property are truly inalienable rights and that governments exist to benefit people and that there is truth in the adage that the best government is that which governs least. Many of my constituents are concerned about some issues such as gun control, the taking of property without fair compensation – for example, the protection of endangered species – and high federal taxation. I believe that these people want us as a provincial government to do all we can to protect their rights and freedoms and to stand up to the federal government on these kinds of issues.

I know my constituents are appreciative of the efforts and progress the government has made in debt and tax reduction. They want us to continue this effort until the debt is paid and taxes are as low as possible and to continue to be fiscally responsible. They want us to be sensitive and responsive to the challenges being faced by rural Albertans, also to respect families and traditional family values, and to be innovative in encouraging and protecting the family and the children.

Alberta is a blessed province. It has great resources and good, hardworking people. Those who have gone before us have left us a great legacy. Our challenge is to move forward, to preserve those qualities of thrift, hard work, and traditional family values that got us here, and to be innovative and forward-thinking to successfully meet the challenges of the future.

I look forward to working co-operatively with my colleagues and fulfilling our promise to successfully meet the challenges ahead. May God bless Alberta and its people. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I now move adjournment of the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 3
Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate April 24: Ms Blakeman]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 3, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001. The act itself is, of course, very specific and confines itself to one part of the fish management strategy that the government has undertaken.

When reading the bill, it reminded me of the comments that the Auditor General had made about the fish-stocking management in the province. I went back to review those comments, because it seems that that’s the context for this bill, that it is one part and a very small part of the fish-stocking management.

It was in 1993, I think, and 1994 that the Auditor General made a couple of recommendations in terms of fish-stocking management. The first was that the department set some measurable goals that could be used to measure performance and to make sure that the kinds of activities that it was engaged in were ones that could be measured and that progress could be seen. The second was in terms of the information that the department has, and that was to acquire a better information base in terms of the fish stocks in the province.

3:20

I think one of the great concerns of the Auditor General is his attention to performance measures and making sure that those performance measures are specific and making sure that they are measurable. He addressed the last Auditor General’s report to that planning model, the one that’s been adopted by the department. It’s really made up of four components. First, a fish conservation strategy so that we’re actively trying to conserve the fish stocks that we have. The second part is a fish-stocking process for the province so that when stocks are replenished or added to, there’s a plan in place. The third part, an important part of the plan, was the recovery for individual species, that we go about trying to make sure there’s a plan in place to help those endangered species that we have in the province recover. The fourth part was that there be some specific action plans for various parts and areas of the province.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The department put together a strategic plan, and part of that was the fish management information system that’s being used. The Auditor’s complaint, of course, is that the fish conservation strategy defines high-level goals and objectives. I think that he was making the point that there’s a need for more specific, lower level measurable objectives that would address the habitats, the maintenance, fish conservation, and fish use allocations. So he was arguing for some performance measures at a lower level.

He acknowledged that plans have been adopted for six species of fish in the province: walleye, northern pike, bull trout, golden trout, Arctic grayling, and lake sturgeon. The objective for the department has been “to recover collapsed and vulnerable populations and to sustain stable . . . ones,” and I think that’s an objective that we certainly all agree with. Taking that overall objective and then operationalizing it for the various regions I think was a concern that the Auditor General had in mind when he made the comments that he did.

He noted that there are six regions and 17 areas in the province, that the province has been subdivided for management purposes. He pointed out that within those different areas there are often differences in the kinds of performance objectives that the staff, depending on the nature of the staff, will pursue. I think he also acknowledged that each of the 17 areas has particular concerns that the management strategies have to address, and of course they will be peculiar to an area or to a region. He looked at the work of the managers, and as I was reading Bill 3, I wondered how Bill 3 was going to be monitored to fit into those plans and whether that would be part of a performance objective that we would see in this year’s or a future year’s business plans.

He went on to comment about the department’s plans at the regional and area levels and that there was a need for them to have some consistency. Many of them, he indicated, did not include enough information on the kind of staff that was going to be required or when particular activities were to be timed. Again he went back to the problem of performance measures.

He did indicate that many of the actions and many of the action plans did not seem to be consistent with the provincewide fish conservation strategy, which would seem to me to be a real weakness. He gave an example that “in only two of the seventeen area Action Plans was the principle of no net loss of productive fish habitats mentioned.” This is, of course, the key principle in the fish conservation strategy. So he’s concerned about the planning, and I think those concerns about the planning are appropriately raised as we look at Bill 3 and the kinds of proposals that are in that bill.

I think an important part of his comment refers again, as I mentioned before, to staffing. He went on to indicate that in two of the areas “there was no fishery staff to manage the species,” and as a result there was no mention of the species in the plans. That seems to be unfortunate. If there’s no staff in place to do the work, then those important goals are abandoned and not acted upon. So concern about the staffing level and the action plans.

A further comment that he made about the action plans is that they had to be much more clearly expressed. This is a theme that I think runs throughout his remarks on the department in the last report he made, and that is a plea for clarity and a plea for having the operations well grounded in reality.

He gives a couple of examples of performance measures that, I take it, he thinks are inappropriate. For instance, he gives as an example: “Fisheries Resource is sustainable and resource is adequately conserved.” I think we’d all agree those are admirable objectives and goals for the department, but in terms of operation just exactly what does that mean? How are you going to know at the end of the year, at the end of the day whether you’ve made any progress on those two particular objectives? He again makes the plea in the report for the language to be more precise and for very, very specific performance measures to be articulated.

The problem, I guess, is that in many of the areas there’s inadequate staff and the staff that’s assigned doesn’t have the kind of time that’s needed to devote to planning. Yet I think we would all agree that consistent planning across the province is most desirable and that those regional and area plans are really very important. Staff has to have the time to develop the kinds of performance measures that the Auditor General has indicated and then have time to see what progress is being made on the measures that are articulated. The bottom line I think the Auditor General indicates is that without that kind of specific articulation of the goals and performance measures, without the staff in place to do the planning, without the staff in place to carry out the work, the habitat protection and natural reproduction could be compromised.

3:30

So as we look at Bill 3 and set the provisions of Bill 3, besides the kinds of comments that the Auditor General has raised, I think it does raise a concern that we can pass the best legislation in this Legislature, the most well-intentioned legislation, but if in reality there is not the staff in place, if the resources that are needed to carry out that legislation are not in place, that is all for naught. I think it’s a warning that as this new legislation passes through the House and is enacted, that has to be taken seriously, and we’ll be looking closely at the business plans of the department when we look at budget estimates to ensure that the resources that make the provisions of Bill 3 possible are in place and that there is adequate staff for them to be able to do their job.

I think with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I’d like to conclude and look forward to the bill as it moves on through to committee stage. Thanks very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As I look through the bill and consider its implications, I can’t help thinking of many years of experiences on Lake Wabamun and the history of Lake Wabamun as a sort of miniature example of the entire fish ecosystem in Alberta, and I’m concerned that Bill 3, you know, while it’s okay in principle, really isn’t going to do very much to protect Alberta’s fish stock. If you go to a small museum at Seba Beach – and I’d recommend it to anybody on a day’s drive – you’ll see in there newspaper articles posted up from the 1950s which indicate how extensive the fish stocks in Lake Wabamun and in other Alberta lakes were. Through the winters in the 1950s the whitefish supply in Lake Wabamun was so extensive that it actually supported an export industry to New York, and Alberta fish were served in the finest restaurants in New York. Today you’re lucky to catch anything in Lake Wabamun, really, except maybe an infection. So I’m concerned that this bill nibbles around the edges and, you know, if we’re going to have a bill with a real bite, then we’re going to have to take some more steps to protect fish stocks.

I think some of the other issues that I’d like to see incorporated in an effort to protect fish stocks have to do, for example, with forestry and forestry cutting right down to stream edges and lakesides, which disrupts the banks of the streams and causes extensive damage and disruption to the stream flows and indeed to the lakesides.

I’m also concerned about agricultural runoff, like many of us here. I’m sure we’ve boated and canoed on Alberta rivers. I’ve canoed down the Red Deer River through agricultural land. Frankly, it’s very disconcerting to watch the runoff of silt and manure and chemicals from agricultural activity into rivers and streams. Again, I suspect that’s at least as major a contribution to declining fish stocks in Alberta as is sportfishing. At least I’d be interested to see some study on that.

I’m also very concerned about stream crossings for trucks, oil trucks, forestry trucks, and cattle. It’s not uncommon in Alberta for streams just to be driven across without regard for protecting the banks, without any effort at building bridges. Again the stream flows are disrupted. There’s silting that occurs. There’s weed growth that occurs, and that damages fish stocks.

Another concern, of course, is hydro development and the impact of hydro development on the flow of rivers and their ability to sustain spawning fish having to move upstream past large hydro projects.

Yet another concern – and this is very effective – at Lake Wabamun is the concern over power plant effluents going into lakes either directly or indirectly through cooling ponds. I’ve already had constituents approach me with very detailed analyses of the impact of the Wabamun power plant on that lake. I should note that the word “Wabamun” is actually, I’m told, the Cree word for looking glass. It was at one time such a beautiful lake. It reminded the Cree of a looking glass. Of course, now if you go out there, what you see in the looking glass are several major power plants and a whole host of major strip mines.

The power plant at Wabamun, I am told – and I would be interested in information on this from the government – and I’ve seen figures to support this, routinely exceeds the federal guidelines for heat effluents into a lake, and the weed growth in parts of Lake Wabamun is choking the lake and killing off the fish stocks. Likewise, the lake is surrounded by huge, utterly huge coal strip mines, which have completely disrupted the watershed of the lake.

So that kind of industrial activity, which can be illustrated at Lake Wabamun but occurs, for example, around the oil sands developments in northeastern Alberta and around other lakes, is certainly of great concern. If we’re really serious about protecting fish stocks, we should be looking at that.

Those are some of my concerns over where Bill 3 fails to go anywhere far enough if we’re serious about protecting fish stocks.

A different kind of concern I have is simply hinted at in the legislation. It will be interesting to see how the regulations proceed, but a concern over a trend to pay for what you fish. Fishing goes back to the beginnings of human habitation in Canada and in Alberta, and it has always been something that people do freely. My sons fish with their grandfather, who himself is a farmer and who loves fishing. They fish with their uncles, and it's something that's done as a public heritage of Alberta.

If I contrast that, for example, to Britain, it's a remarkable contrast. What's happened in Britain is that access to streams is, in fact, privately controlled. You can't just go fishing on a stream or a river in Britain unless you own the land that abuts the stream or the river. They've lost that whole heritage of public fishing in Britain, and I would hate for that to occur here through licensing and regulations and the encouragement of privatization of a public heritage in Alberta.

With those comments, I'll wrap up my reactions in principle to Bill 3, to simply encourage the government to take much further and more thoughtful steps towards protecting what is a great heritage in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to close debate.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the opposition for the comments they've made. We had an opportunity, of course, to file the answers to what they had asked previously. We filed those today for their information and the information of the public. Again, I will have my staff review the Hansard and then provide in writing the answers to those questions.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

3:40

Bill 4
Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001

[Adjourned debate April 24: Ms Blakeman]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand in support of Bill 4, the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001. If you look at the principles on which the bill has been structured, it seems that one of those principles, at least, is that fair compensation for damages as a result of the actions of oil, gas, and mineral companies should be available through the board. I think it's a good move. In essence, the act moves the amount that they are able to award from a limit of $5,000 to a limit of $25,000, and I think that that will be useful.

The Surface Rights Board has a useful role to play in trying to resolve disputes between occupants or landowners and oil, gas, and mineral companies, and they, I think, have a fairly good record of being able to work at solutions and avoid at least two things. One is more costly legal battles that might have to be undertaken by aggrieved occupants, and second, it's freed up room in Provincial Court. It hasn't burdened the courts with matters that can be resolved elsewhere.

It's an important bill, Mr. Speaker, for landowners. I refer to an experience in our own family with a well being placed on farm property south of the city and a concern that that raised in terms of farming the land. Well, there were a whole host of concerns that ranged from where the access roads were going to be located to the relocation of fences. The problem of noise was raised and even the problem of aesthetics, where the tanks and equipment were going to be located on the property. Agreement was arrived at rather quickly with the company, but in other cases that wasn't the case. This gives those landowners with similar concerns an opportunity to be reimbursed without having to resort to the courts, and it gives the board, of course, much more flexibility with the raised limits to respond to specific items that are raised by landowners.

The work of the board is rather interesting. If you look at the kinds of requirements of board members, I think it's encouraging that one of the requirements is that they have a good grasp of the law covering expropriation and surface rights so that they know the kinds of problems that landowners and occupants will bring before them and that they have the ability to write concise definitions based on the law. So being able to take the law and interpret it when occupants come forward with cases is an important attribute of those board members and, of course, working knowledge of the related acts: the Surface Rights Act and the Expropriation Act and other acts that might impact decisions. So there's a real concern that board members who are making these decisions are knowledgeable, and that's rightfully so because for a small landowner who is facing trying to negotiate with a large company, it can be an overwhelming task. So I think it's good, when they appear before that board, that their case will be listened to by individuals who are knowledgeable and are able to make decisions that are well grounded in terms of the law of the province. Also, now with this bill those same board members will have an opportunity for a wider range of options in terms of responding to the concerns of occupants.

With those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to conclude. It's a small change to the act and one that I support. Thanks very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to close debate.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I'd like to thank the opposition for their questions, and of course I'll have my department officials review Hansard and provide the answers in writing. I will again table those in the House for all the people that are interested.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate on Bill 4.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Has the minister moved a motion to adjourn debate or close debate?

MR. CARDINAL: Close debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Close debate. Okay. For clarification it's for closing debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 7
Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001

[Debate adjourned April 26: Dr. Massey speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a range of comments on this particular bill. I do think it's a step in the right direction, and I would like to make that clear. We've been waiting for some clarification on the election of regional health authorities for a long time, and this is a step in that direction. It would be nice to have more detail on the regulations that will be guiding these elections. The minister has provided a media release which does indicate that there will be guidelines for these elections in some ways similar to what we as MLAs face. It would be nice to see more detail on that, but I'll take him at his word that these will be implemented, and I think that's a good step.

I would like here to note experience on these kinds of elections in the United States, a recent experience in Massachusetts which actually gives me some cause for concern. There were particular interests that wanted to influence the outcome of the health care elections in Massachusetts, and a number of individual businesses and corporations contributed each between $100,000 and $250,000 to campaigns to ensure that their particular point of view was victorious. I think we need to be very mindful of those kinds of developments occurring one way or another directly or indirectly in Alberta.

Though Bill 7 is a step in the right direction, it is only one step of what I think needs to be a much longer journey, and I think there will be some debate in the ensuing days and weeks over the nature of that journey as series of questions arise around the RHA elections. One is pretty obvious, I think, to everybody who looks at it. Why are we electing only two-thirds of the members of the boards? Do we only have two-thirds of a commitment to democracy? We don't apply that to municipal councils or county councils or school boards or other councils. Why are we choosing to limit democracy to only two-thirds of the members of a regional health authority? It makes me wonder how much democracy would be too much. If 66 percent is acceptable, is 68 percent too much or 70 percent too much or 75 percent too much? I'm not sure why we just don't elect regional health authority boards, period. There is nothing terribly wrong with democracy. It has its flaws, but as a number of noteworthy people have said, it's better than all the alternatives.

I'm also concerned that by only electing two-thirds of members, we are setting up situations in which there will be factions on boards. There'll be the elected faction, who will always be able to claim a legitimacy that the appointed faction will not have. There are risks of boards degenerating into divisiveness and friction and claims over whose rightful control should be exercised. I do think that in situations like this appointed members will lack a legitimation that is so fundamental in democracy, and indeed the minister will, I think, certainly find himself in a situation where candidates who have received thousands of votes through a duly followed electoral process will be pushed aside for a ministerial appointee. I do think that's a slap in the face for democracy and may be a problem for the minister when the situation arises. As only two-thirds of a democratic body I think there is a risk that these will be in many ways sort of paper authorities.

I also note that the minister reserves the right to appoint the chairman of each regional health authority, and as I understand it, that will be after the election. So as well as appointing a third of the members, the minister will be appointing the chairman, and I have to again ask: why is that? Is the government that frightened about what the general population believes they need to put those kinds of controls in? What legitimacy will the chairman have when he's appointed as a ministerial appointment, inevitably to be seen as a political position, when he or she will face a number of elected members who may challenge his legitimacy? Again I would point out that school boards choose their own chairman after the election, as I understand it, and of course in city councils mayors are elected at large through their own democratic process. So why the double standard for regional health authorities? We're tinkering around and meddling in democracy in a dangerous way. I wish the minister would address these issues. On the tax issue the ability for school boards to control their tax revenues has been virtually eliminated, yet we allow them to be fully elected.

As I understand it, the payment to members on regional health authorities is $10,000 per year, and it does seem to me to be a very small amount given the scale of responsibility that these people have. It's a smaller amount than major school boards pay to their trustees and certainly a smaller amount than municipal governments in cities pay to their trustees and this despite the fact that regional health authorities are actually typically larger. For example, the Calgary regional health authority, I understand, has a larger budget and more employees than the city of Calgary itself. It's an enormous organization. We are putting on the shoulders of these elected members huge responsibility. I think the least they deserve is a compensation that reflects that and is similar to people in parallel positions.

I'm also concerned about a particular section of Bill 7. I believe it's section 4(4), and I'm sure the minister will be able to explain this. The section allows, as I understand it, members of medical staff, employees, and their families to run for the regional health authorities. Again I think that the minister may be able to correct my perception, but as I understand it, this means that, say, a nurse or an employee of a regional health authority may well be able to serve actively on the board of that authority or that a medical officer, maybe the head of a medical department in a health authority, will also be able to serve and run for a position on that health authority. That does set off, I think, a dangerous situation, a potential, indeed probably a real conflict of interest. I'm sure that's not the minister's intention, so I would like some clarification on section 4(4) of Bill 7.

As I was saying in my opening comments, this is a step in the right direction. After years of waiting there is some advance towards RHA elections, and I commend the government for taking that step. I am and I think probably most Albertans also will be disappointed that the steps are not more decisive and more extensive, simply are too timid to really make a sufficient difference here.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will wait for the next round of debates and also, I think, wait for the minister's responses, which may be in a written form, which getting from the Minister of Environment on earlier bills were very helpful.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to finally get to speak this afternoon regarding the election of regional health authorities. This has been a campaign that certainly is overdue. With the billions and billions of tax dollars that are spent in providing public health care to the citizens of this province, the only way to ensure that that money is being wisely spent is to have an openness and also the concept of accountability. Public officials that are elected are of course accountable to those who walk into the closet where the ballot box is located. However, we need to look at this whole idea of electing regional health authority officials. This has been batted around since 1994, and at one point a former minister of health in the debate said that it just wasn't possible because of political sensitivities, I believe was the description, for another cancellation of the proposed regional health authorities.

Now, people in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar would say that we elect school board officials; what's the matter with regional health authorities? Of course, they have a very, very valid point. In fact, allowing two-thirds of all board members to be elected is a step in the right direction, but one-third will remain appointed. This disappoints me, because in the spirit of openness and the spirit of accountability and in regards to the huge sums of money – the Capital health authority is the fourth largest employer, I believe, in the entire province, with thousands and thousands of employees. So one more level of governance is fine.

When you consider that the whole debate surrounding this election will be public, that there are going to be, I assume, forums, that there will be town hall meetings, that the positions of the various candidates will be recorded, that their comments will be noted and probably published in newspapers, that their views on the direction that the public health care system will take in the next three years will probably be discussed in various media outlets, then for the minister to take all of this into account with the appointment of the chair of each individual board – I don't know if that's the right thing to do, because I think the board themselves, not the hon. minister, should appoint the chair, for those specific reasons.

There may be one individual that has a specific view on, for instance, let's say Bill 11. Now, I encouraged all citizens of this province who were active in the Bill 11 debate to please consider running for the regional health authority positions. It is my view that this is the one last check and balance that will be available if the regional health authorities decide that they're going to use Bill 11 for the purpose that it was intended, and that was to contract out insured services, contract out our public health care system.

Now, there may be people on the board after the election who believe that the economics of this is unwise, that it's not a sound use of tax dollars. We see the increase, always in the health care budget, but that is not being currently reflected in an increase in patient services. We're putting a lot of money back in there, and we have to wait and see if it is going to be well spent. I certainly hope that the regional health authorities are not going to get frustrated, and they're going to say: well, the answer is certainly Bill 11. The board of directors for the health authorities will be under pressure, but the comforting thing with the election, Mr. Speaker, of the regional health authority boards is that they can stand up and speak out if they see quietly the contracting out, the privatization of core health care services to private providers whether they be corporations that are registered here in Alberta or what are called HMOs in America.

I heard a consumer activist, Mr. Speaker, describe the HMOs as, "Hand money over before you get health care." That was his definition of the HMOs. Certainly the whole debate around the free trade agreement and if we're going to allow a company from Calgary or a company from Edmonton to bid on these contracts, then we're going to have to allow a company from Nashville or from Charlotte or from New York City even to have that same opportunity – that's coming. But this is why at this time I support the elections, even if it's only two-thirds of the regional health authorities. They're long overdue.

Now, certainly I hope that the first purpose of an elected authority will be as a watch dog to make sure that the real intentions of Bill 11 do not come out. You go back seven years, when the public first saw a system of decentralization and the setting up of the 17 regional health authorities and the two separate health boards, and we saw all this unfold. We are still looking at the difficulties that there are between various regions and the transfer of service. It remains to me a mystery when a person, for instance, who lives in Hinton and receives health care in Edmonton just exactly what sort of agreements there are between regional health authorities, how one health authority bills another. How does this exactly work?

If we have an election of the majority of directors – well, hopefully it'll be the majority – how will this affect transfers between regions? Hopefully it is going to get a lot less complex, and hopefully they can work together, because that has been the problem in the past. It has been very difficult.

You've got to look at Edmonton and Calgary. You've got to look at the contributions at the universities and the fact that teaching hospitals are located there. There are a lot of specialists in both Calgary and Edmonton whereas in some smaller centres there are not. What sort of co-operation will go on between elected officials? If someone, for instance, Mr. Speaker, in Hinton has to have heart surgery, how is this going to work? If there is a senior living in Valleyview and that senior wants to be transferred by younger members of their family to the Capital region for long-term care, hopefully, it will be easier. Elected officials can converse and hopefully can solve a lot of problems that do go on with regionalization.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we think of the 17 regions, I don't see provisions in this bill – and the hon. minister can certainly shed light on this. If we are to change the boundaries, what exactly will happen? As I understand it, the minister decides on electoral divisions. Let's, for instance, say that perhaps we're going to go down to six regional health authorities, that we're going to change from 17 to six. This is certainly a number that has been bandied around. There was a number similar to that with The Rainbow Report. There certainly weren't 17 regions. It could be simply that 17 regions were the number that we came up with because of political considerations. I know that if you visit the Association of Registered Nurses, they have a map up in their office, and they have the province divided up into six regions – I'm quite sure it's six – so that their representatives can get around to meet members of their professional association.

So what would happen if suddenly we decided that we were going to have six regions? Now, what would drive this, or what would be the issue that would lead to, say, the formation of six regional health authorities and how would this affect the elections? What happens if, say, we're going to have two or possibly three, if private companies who would be quite willing if they got the chance under Bill 11 to contract out for insured services thought to themselves, "Well, we've got to qualify for all of the 17 different regions, but if there were only six or if there were only three regions, then we would have a much better chance of being able to provide this service."

Now, all the boards of directors are elected, and suddenly they're put out of work. What guarantee is there that there will continue to be the 17 different regions? We can go through all this process, elect them all at considerable expense, and then suddenly these jobs are redundant, because, well, we're going to reorganize this again. I have a concern about that, and hopefully in the course of this debate we will receive answers. Perhaps there is going to be no further reorganization.

In my remarks this afternoon I would like to speak briefly about the whole issue of conflict of interest. The perception exists that regional health authority CEOs and other high-ranking administrators are friends of the government. That's the perception. That was the perception that was around in Bill 11. I used to have town halls, open forums, and citizens would come up to me with this newspaper article and that newspaper article and say: "Look at this, Mr. MacDonald. What do you think of this?" I would read it, and I would try my best to get back to them. They were concerned about this intricate little web that had been created. The positions of friends of the government are more about patronage than sound fiscal policy or quality health care.

Now, let's compare for a minute, Mr. Speaker, the two regional health authorities, the two largest ones, Calgary and Edmonton. The CEOs of both of them are very, very hard working. I can't for the life of me, unless I want to look at this – this is how it has been brought to my attention, as an issue of gender. They both have equally the same budgets, but the CEO in Calgary – and I know it cost a lot to park a car in downtown Calgary; I know that. But I don't think the CEO in Calgary should get I believe it is in excess of $80,000 more than the CEO here at the Capital health authority. I'm just not going to put that down to the high cost of downtown parking in Calgary.

Someone said to me: oh, it's just gender discrimination. I do not believe that that is true, but why the difference? Maybe when we elect the boards, they're going to end this. I certainly know that the Capital health authority CEO works very, very hard, and I think the health care delivery system in this region is grateful for her work and her diligence. Certainly the leadership that has been provided there has gotten us through some rough times.

This is another issue, conflict of interest.

As I understand it, not everyone is going to be eligible to run in the election in their home area. We were looking at a description here: "is an employee of a hospital or nursing home in respect to which the election is being held." Well, I go back to the AUMA conference that I attended two years ago, when there was a resolution put forward I believe from an area north of the city here. This resolution talked about not allowing members of unions, particularly health care unions, to run in the regional health authority elections if and when they did happen. Well, now they're happening, and it looks to me that these individuals are no longer going to be allowed to run. Perhaps we can look at this perception that already exists with regional health authority CEOs and other high-ranking administrators and how exactly this is going to work and how long it is before there's a court challenge with this, because I'm sure there will be one. Someone is going to feel that because of their employment they're not allowed to participate fully in the democratic process. Has the hon. minister any concern about that? If there are any records in his department regarding this, I think it would be to the benefit of all members of the Assembly if they were shared with us, because it certainly is interesting that we're going to make a list of those who are not eligible.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that even if it is only two-thirds of regional health authorities that are going to be elected, it's a step in the right direction. I would again encourage all individuals across this province who are interested in further development of our public health care system to participate in the elections, and I am looking forward very much this fall to hearing the comments and the platforms of the various candidates as they come forward for these positions. I think it is vital, again, with so much public money being spent on the provision of health care, that all health authorities be elected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before I call upon the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two guests very special to me seated in the members' gallery. One is a lady I've known for over 30 years. She's been very supportive and very kind and tolerant of me. She happens to be my wife, Linda. The other one is my daughter Paula. They came today to hear my maiden speech. Fortunately, they missed it. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm greetings of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Second Reading

Bill 7

Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act, 2001

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the government's Bill 7, the Regional Health Authorities Amendment Act. The act provides for a number of things. Particularly what it provides is amendments to what the government and the minister can do through regulation, and that is the problem that we have with this bill. It's a good idea that at least two-thirds of the members are going to be elected, finally fulfilling a campaign promise that had not been kept for a number of years. Now it's being partially kept by the government, and that, I think, is something that we could be grateful for, but there are a number of concerns that I have with the bill nevertheless.

It will permit the government to continue to appoint one-third of the members. Now, it's interesting how they can do that. They will be able to appoint the chairs of the regional health authorities, which will go a great distance towards allowing the government appointees to set the agenda for the other two-thirds of the elected people.

The government will appoint people to these boards after the elections are held. The government will then be in a position to survey the makeup of the elected members of these regional health authorities, and it will allow them, then, to determine which people are going to be appointed. They can ensure, I think, through those means a rather high degree of control over the activities of these boards, notwithstanding the fact that they have committed in principle to the elected principle of operation of these organizations.

Now, why would the government want to retain control? Why doesn't the government trust the people locally to make the right decision for their health authority? Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, the answer, at least from my perspective, is clear. The government does not want to lose control of the operations of the regional health authorities, and they are afraid that the unlimited exercise of democracy in this area will in fact put them at risk of losing control. Now, why would they be afraid of losing control?

Well, clearly the government has and continues to have a privatization agenda in the health care system. [interjections] Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The government wants to continue with its privatization agenda, and they are afraid of the people. They are afraid that the people will not elect people to these local health authorities that will further their agenda. [interjections] I'm glad that this Assembly is not as sleepy as it was a few moments ago. I'm glad that people are waking up all over the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's very clear that the government does not want to have transparency in the operation of these health authorities either. We now have a situation that almost every aspect of the operation of the health authorities is being set not in the act by the Legislature but in fact by the government through its regulation power.

Now, I just happened to pull up, Mr. Speaker, the Local Authorities Election Act, and it specifies in legislation, not through regulation, a huge range of the operations of elections with respect to municipal government in our province, as it should. These are things that ought to be done by the Legislature because they govern who will and who will not be elected to a body that is supposed to be democratically elected. Just some examples: it sets the ballot boxes; it sets voting subdivisions; it sets rules of residency; it ensures that there's secrecy of vote. It goes through a whole range of things, and it specifies them very clearly in legislation so the whole process is completely transparent.

The regulations for democratic government, no matter how insignificant, Mr. Speaker, ought to be made by the Legislative Assembly or the Parliament of Canada through open and public debate and not behind closed doors at the cabinet table or in the minister's office. This entire act, the Regional Health Authorities Act, is a monument, a testament to the power of government operating behind closed doors without reference to the Legislative Assembly.

Particularly worrying is the authority for the cabinet to set regulations regarding contributions and election finances. There's no transparency here. We all know that the rules around contributions and election finances have a huge impact on who is and who is not able to get elected. A party or an individual with a huge cash war chest will regularly outperform parties or individuals who have meager resources, which is really the only reason there are so many over there and so few here, Mr. Speaker. Now, the government understands that very well. The government understands the role of finances in elections very well, and that's why they're going to reserve setting the rules around the health authorities for themselves. I'm very worried that we might have on the health authorities every right-wing nut in Alberta after this next election if the government is allowed to set all of the rules behind closed doors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to express some concerns about the ward boundaries here. We haven't even seen what the ward boundaries are going to be. This is another thing that the government is going to do behind closed doors: set the wards. So where's the transparency, where's the democracy if this cabinet can by order in council determine precisely and in exactly which way they're going to set electoral boundaries, who the chair is going to be, who one-third of the members are going to be, how the election finances are going to be handled? It's not open, it's not transparent, and it's not democratic. Why are we rushing through this bill without an open disclosure and discussion of what the ward boundaries are going to be?

Another question that arises, Mr. Speaker, is the question of assistance for municipalities. Municipal governments have always had to carry out local elections. Whether their government wants to have a phony election for the Senate or whether they want to have elections for school boards, it doesn't matter. The municipalities are responsible for organizing, conducting, and paying for the election. It's high time that the government made a commitment financially to our municipalities to help offset the cost of these elections as they continue to load and load and load more and more elections on the municipalities and require them to carry them out.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to just indicate that I think this entire act, including the act which is amended by this act, is woefully inadequate, is a slap in the face to democratic principles. The government, if it was serious about fulfilling its campaign promise made a long time ago to have these health authorities fully elected, would bring forward legislation that would in a transparent fashion allow for the election by all citizens of the entire health authority, and they would ensure that all of the regulations were replaced with legislation when it comes to questions of ward boundaries, election contributions, eligibility, and all of those things. Those are not the things in a democratic society that ought to be done behind closed doors around a cabinet table. It is an affront to the parliamentary democracy that we defend.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to close debate.

MR. MAR: I have nothing further to add, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call the committee to order.

4:30

Bill 1 Natural Gas Price Protection Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been waiting to discuss this bill in a little bit more detail: Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, from the Calgary Herald of 1974. Again, for all members of the Assembly, I'm astonished that a flagship piece of legislation has been adopted from the first paragraph of a Calgary Herald editorial. I can't see any need for this Natural Gas Price Protection Act that already doesn't exist in legislation, specifically the Natural Gas Rebates Act. Also, upon further investigation there are specific provisions in the Gas Utilities Act and also in the Gas Resources Preservation Act.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this bill has been so hastily drafted after the election that definition (c) "marketable gas" as defined in the Oil and Gas Conservation Act is also the same definition that is in the Gas Resources Preservation Act. So obviously this bill was drafted in haste. That is one more indication that it was drafted in haste and pretending, whenever it was drafted, that it was concerned about consumer relations.

Now, the whole concept of price protection is discussed in section 2. How exactly is this going to be determined? The government already has the legislative authority to set gas prices in the Gas Utilities Act, part 1. It goes into a great deal of difficulty, Mr. Chairman. We can even list some of them. "The just and reasonable price or prices to be paid for gas" can be determined, et cetera,

- (ii) before it has been delivered into any gas pipeline;
- (iii) before it has been subjected to treating or processing by absorption or otherwise for the extraction from it of natural gasoline or other hydrocarbons;
- (iv) before it has been purified . . . [or]
- (v) at any point on a gas pipeline.

So I don't understand how this can be presented with much fanfare to Albertans as something new, something novel, or even necessary.

It's bad legislation. There's only one thing you can do, and that is try to improve it. Certainly you can try to improve it through debate, through discourse. It's an important issue, with millions and millions of dollars being transferred to consumers, to distribution systems in the form of rebates, I should say. So what exactly are we doing here?

Now, the national residential gas reference price. We're going to tie our natural gas price to a national price, and this is how this reads, Mr. Chairman, in section 5:

The Minister of Energy may, with respect to delivered marketable gas, publish from time to time a national residential gas reference price, based on such factors as the Minister considers appropriate.

Well, we all know, Mr. Chairman, that there have been record natural gas prices in the year 2000 as growth and demand outpaced growth and supply. Prices increased steadily throughout the year and by year-end had quadrupled over 1999 year-end prices. Now, Canadian producers responded by substantially increasing investments in land purchase. There were many gas wells drilled; that was noted this afternoon in question period. The majority of these gas wells were located in the conventional areas of the western sedimentary basin. There were developments in the Northwest Territories. Members are going to say: what does that have to do with us? There were developments on the east coast that resulted in two new sources of supply. Well, here in section 5 we are getting tied to what goes on across the country. You look at what happened in Fort Liard; there were some excellent wells up there. There was gas discovered offshore in Nova Scotia. How this is going to be done: I think we have to have answers at this stage of the debate, Mr. Chairman.

When you look at the entire Canadian natural gas market, Canadian natural gas sales – and this is where we're going to have to be very careful – have been estimated to have increased by 4 and a half percent in the year 2000, following a 3.6 percent increase in the year 1999. Growth was broadly based across the residential, the commercial, and the industrial sectors, but consumption in electricity generation also increased. So, now, without any discussion, are we allowing in this bill as it stands now, Mr. Chairman, a subsidy for generators of electricity who fuel their plants with natural gas? We're told time after time after time that we're out of the business of being in business, but the potential for that exists in this legislation. The potential is real. It's a reality.

This sudden rise in natural gas commodity prices obviously placed a heavy financial burden or cost on these homeowners, these commercial establishments, or these industrial facilities. There's no doubt about that. Each member of this Assembly has heard or will hear about this at their constituency office and probably phone calls to here. But there needs to be an understanding, and I don't think the understanding has come forward in the debate so far, of just what exactly the Minister of Energy is going to do here in respect to national prices.

Now, where will this lead? We're contemplating spending millions and millions of dollars. There's $125 million, I believe, allocated for further rebates. Considering that we've spent billions, I have to question how much more we're going to need.

We also have to question current production rates of natural gas not only, again, in this province but across the country. Also reserves: I note here that the initial reserves in billion cubic metres in Alberta – and these are figures that come from the AEUB – were around 3,919. This is a year ago, and of those reserves remaining, again in billions of cubic metres, it is 1,207. Now, that's in Alberta. So we have roughly a little bit more than 25 percent, or one-quarter, of those initial reserves left.

Prices are hardly going to go down. I'm not at this time, Mr. Chairman, going to go into the issue of natural gas and air conditioners and the consumption of electricity by the air conditioners in America and the fact that the rivers – or as it's described as the potential for hydraulic generation of electricity in northwestern America – are diminished because there's no water or the flow rates in the rivers has been substantially reduced by drought.

Canadian natural gas production in the last year recorded, in 2000, totaled 174 billion cubic metres. That was 2 percent more than the year before, but gas well completions in the year 2000 increased by 41 percent. I believe the Premier talked about this in question period today, the increase in drilling activity in our western sedimentary basin. The largest increase of all of this occurred in southeastern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan where the wells tend to be shallower. Of course, they're cheaper to drill and can be placed into production quickly. So it's much cheaper to drill a well there than, say, west of Hinton or out in Obed, somewhere like that, where you're going really deep. It can get very, very expensive in the foothills. Shallow wells account for about 70 percent of overall gas well completions in western Canada, so we're making the money. The producers are anxious to make money, and they're anxious to make money now.

It is up to the government – and this bill certainly doesn't do it – to ensure that there is some long-term planning. Again, this gas protection act, as it's called, doesn't do it, Mr. Chairman.

Now, earlier in my remarks I talked about subsidizing electricity generators. There are two outfits that come from across the border that are currently or contemplating building natural gas generating stations, and for the life of me I cannot understand, with this legislation as it exists, how their fuel source can be subsidized by the taxpayers of this province. At this point, I just cannot agree with that.

Whenever the minister is talking about having this reference price in section 5, we also have to look at exactly where we will be with natural gas exports and imports. In the year 2000 in this country exports of our natural gas reached a record 100 billion cubic metres, and that is again an increase from the previous year. If you look at it, in five years there has been an increase of 23 percent. Now, I think we could look at better ways of protecting consumers than this bill and this mystical price reference that the minister is considering. It's based on factors that not an hon. member in this Assembly knows anything about, that I'm aware of.

When you look at export sales, where did the gas go when it cleared the border at either Kingsgate or Emerson or even Monchy? Where did it go? The distribution, as I understand it, went somewhere like this: 37 percent to the midwest, 28 percent to the northeast, 19 percent to California, and 14 percent to the Pacific Northwest. So Mr. Chairman, 33 percent of Canada's export of natural gas went to places that are already experiencing electrical shortages. That was last year. That's how much gas we have exported to that part of America.

Now, the Pacific Northwest certainly has generating capacity, but California does not. How is our price here going to go way down with conditions that exist such as there are in California? I don't think it's going to happen, and this bill is simply a credit card with no spending limit on it for the Minister of Energy. What will happen? I don't think export volumes will decline. They may in the northeast part of America, but that's so far removed from us that I don't think it's going to matter. I think prices are going to remain very, very high in comparison to what they were, and if this bill is to make up the difference, it is going to be a real drain on the provincial treasury. It's just going to be a real drain. The hon. minister before talked about really sharp price increases. Well, this is going to be a real drain on the treasury.

Now, the substantial increases I mentioned in natural gas prices in North America are reflected domestically here in our price. The average price of Canadian natural gas exports at the international border in 2000 rose by about 68 percent. That's a big price increase, 68 percent, Mr. Chairman. What will happen? These higher export volumes and higher prices for Canadian gas translate into increased revenue, and this is an argument that, I'm sure, will be made by the Minister of Energy: the increased revenue from natural gas exports. We can pay for anything with that revenue, anything at all. We can have an unlimited rebate.

Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Just excuse me one second, please. The chair is experiencing a lot of difficulty hearing, so we would appreciate it if everyone would tone down the noise level. I would also appreciate that members take a seat and sit down. There should be only one person standing and speaking. That'll be much appreciated. Thank you.

You may proceed.

Debate Continued

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I talked earlier about this concept of an electrical subsidy to electrical power producers, which I don't agree with. I've heard before this whole notion, this calm assurance that we're out of the business of being in business. When you look at the electricity production in this province, it is simply not true whenever people express the belief that 35 percent of the generating capacity in this province comes from natural gas. It's not that high. It's not nearly that high. The maximum that it could be is 22 percent. You know, people are forgetting that we've got dams, a couple of good dams, one at Brazeau, one out in the riding of Rocky Mountain House. There's certainly capacity there to generate electricity.

We need to look at what happened in Alberta last year and at the transfers of electricity. Now, Alberta imported electricity from three locations – from B.C., from Saskatchewan, and also from America, incredibly – according to the information that I have received. From America we received about 50 gigawatt-hours. Interestingly enough, we received the majority from B.C., 837 gigawatt-hours. From Saskatchewan we received 327 gigawatt-hours. Because of the high cost of electricity there has been a considerable amount of . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm going to have to continue with my remarks in a minute.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments about Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. I didn't have the opportunity at second reading, so I have a number of comments that I'd like to make.

Of course, we're into the details of the bill, and Bill 1 is really a very interesting bill, not in terms of the substance of it, I suspect, because I think we're all aware of that, but in terms of what isn't in the bill or what's provided for through regulations. More than half of the bill, of course, is devoted to regulations, and I think it was timely that a former colleague, the Member for Calgary-Buffer, on the weekend took the opportunity to review for us through the media the history of regulations in this Assembly. It's a rather interesting history.

Each session this time of year – and this session may be different – we pass about 30 to 40 bills, and each of those bills comes to the Assembly and is debated in public. We hear from stakeholders, and we often have people in the galleries who come to listen to debate on the bills. If you miss the debate, you can pick it up in Hansard. During that same period when those 30 or 40 bills are being debated, between 400 and 600 regulations will become law, and they're quite different.

The regulations are done in private. They aren't open to public scrutiny. They're the work of the departments. The departments often claim that they consult – and I'm sure they do in most cases – the stakeholders that would be interested in the regulations that they are putting together. Nevertheless, it's all done in private, and there's no record of the conversations that are held with stakeholders. There's no record of the kinds of arguments that were used to support the regulations or the rationale for particular regulations. It's really the department officials, unelected officials, who decide on who will be consulted and come at it from the perspective of an administration of the law rather than the kind of perspective that we have in this House, and that is one of looking at the law in terms of a policy perspective.

There have been instances in the past where those regulations that were put together by department officials were very costly to Alberta taxpayers. It was a result of the regulations that were put together concerning access to information and the application fees that we have the highest application fees in Canada. As I listened to the debate on that legislation, it certainly wasn't the intent of legislators that access to information would somehow or other be constrained through very high application fees. It makes it difficult for people to gain access to laws and rules surrounding private hospitals or to school records or to a whole host of things, and that is the direct result of regulation-making being done in private and not being open to public scrutiny before it was put in place.

Even the Auditor General has indicated that those regulations that were put in place concerning oil field waste resulted in taxpayers paying an extra $100 million. So, again, an example of regulations being done in private, without public scrutiny, and the taxpayers are the ones that suffer. Regulations are very important in our province, and the fact that this bill would have more than half of it devoted to the making of regulations or delegated to regulation-makers I think has to be disturbing.

One of the things that the former Member for Calgary-Buffer did on the weekend was to remind us of the history of regulation-making in our province. It was the Zander committee under the Lougheed government that examined regulations and regulation-making in the province. They had looked at various provincial governments across Canada and at how the power to make regulations was being used elsewhere and came back to the Assembly with a number of suggestions.

One of the key recommendations from the Zander committee was to create an all-party scrutiny committee of MLAs which would take and would review the regulations that the departments, the executive branch, put forward. The intent was that that committee would be the watchdog on regulations that were being made and would ensure that the departments weren't acting in an arbitrary manner and that the regulations that were formulated were consistent with the legislation that was in place. So the oversight by the legislation was seen at that time to be a very important aspect of regulation-making.

Each session, the former Member for Calgary-Buffer points out, we appoint members of this Assembly – and we've just recently done it – to sit on the Law and Regulations Committee. I've been named to that committee myself, and the unfortunate thing is that the committee never meets. Since I've been in the House, the committee has not met. It has become a ritual, the appointment of that committee, a meaningless ritual and a ritual that I think none of us should be proud to be part of. I think we should ask ourselves, when we're asked to sit on that committee, exactly what we're doing by being part of an exercise that pretends to appoint a watchdog committee, but the watchdog never goes to work.

The previous Member for Calgary-Buffalo went on to indicate that since 1985 there have been generated 15,000 – 15,000 – pages of regulations and that in fact since 1993 the government has passed more than 2,000 new regulations and added another 3,000 pages to the already abundant list of regulations there. I think the bright spot in all of this is that in 1995 there was a law passed to fix a sunset date for new regulations. You know, the notion of an expiry date for regulations, I think the member pointed out, is a good one, but it still doesn't take away the need for an all-party committee to overlook the regulations that are being generated.

I think if you look at the regulations that Bill 1 would have generated, those regulations are exactly the concerns of constituents. They are exactly the kinds of information that Albertans would like to have information on. They're the kinds of concerns that they would certainly be interested in seeing debated in this Legislature. If you look at the list starting in section 7(1), the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) defining for the purposes of this Act and the regulations any terms or expressions not already defined.

So really it can change the purpose of the act. It can broaden or narrow the act.

The regulations have a huge impact on the administration of the protection that is supposed to be afforded citizens under this act. They can make regulations "respecting the determination of the Alberta price and the amount to be prescribed by regulation," so they have control over the price, which is a huge, huge factor in this legislation. In 7(1)(c) they can make regulations "authorizing rebates." So the very kinds of things that most homeowners and rent payers would like to know – when are the rebates going to be paid, and what is the basis for the rebates? – that kind of information will be determined by administrators behind closed doors and away from public scrutiny. That, Mr. Chairman, I think is really unfortunate.

They can go on even further, and they can determine "the circumstances in which a person is considered not to be an eligible consumer" and not eligible for rebates. People would like to know what those ground rules are. In the last round of rebates there was, as I'm sure you're aware, Mr. Chairman, great public discussion about the awarding of the $150 to every Albertan over 16 years of age and great public questioning as to the wisdom of using that criterion to spend tax money on a rebate program. So the eligibility of consumers is of great concern. They can make regulations regarding the application procedures, how difficult or how easy it is to apply for and obtain the rebates. Again, there'll be nothing said publicly until the regulations are generated and in fact have become part of the law, no public discussion of the conditions under which the rebates may be made, so no one will know what will trigger rebates. What is the threshold when citizens can expect that there will be a rebate available to them? Again, I think that is unfortunate.

The ground rules, the playing rules, are not going to be public until some administrator, some department officials have sat down in the privacy of their offices and decided when those rebates shall start to operate and the manner in which and the frequency with which the rebates will be made, and that's of huge importance to citizens and consumers. Is it going to be a credit on your bill, or is it going to be a cheque that you receive in the mail? I think the kinds of phone calls that our constituency offices are receiving about when the second $150 rebate will actually be made available give you some indication of the interest that there is in the manner in which rebates and their frequency are made available. Again, it's unfortunate that the members of this Legislature, who have been elected to act on behalf of Albertans, will not be part of that discussion.

The maximum amount of rebate that may be paid to an eligible consumer for marketable gas consumed in the province for industrial purposes is again going to be subject to regulation. I have some suspicion that some large consumers have the ability to influence decisions in ways that many small consumers don't, but they will still be subjected to the same secrecy regarding what is going to happen to them in terms of rebates as smaller consumers are.

I guess the last one that I would indicate is the administration of the rebates paid to vendors for the benefit of eligible consumers. The vendors are going to find out what the rules are in terms of them offering rebates to consumers once the regulations are made.

So it's a long, long list, Mr. Chairman, of regulations that are going to be made that affect Albertans, and it's an important program. For government to embark on a rebate program is very, very important to taxpayers because that money that goes into that program is not available for other programs. All of the really important decisions, it seems, concerning those rebates will be made behind closed doors, as I've indicated a number of times, by department officials and by administrators whose interests may vary somewhat from the interests of the consumers in this province and the interests of legislators.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I would make a plea to the new members appointed to the Law and Regulations Committee, under the chairmanship of the Member for Peace River, for that committee to take up its work. To the new members – the Member for Calgary-Egmont, the Member for Calgary-Shaw, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the Member for Edmonton-Manning, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, the Member for Edmonton-Calder – and other members on that committee, I would plead with them to make the Law and Regulations Committee a committee which does the work that it was originally intended to do and that would be very, very useful at this particular point in time in overseeing some important regulations, the ones that are going to be generated from Bill 1 should Bill 1 pass in this Assembly.

So it's with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'd conclude. Thank you very much.

5:10

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize the next speaker, who is Edmonton-Highlands, I'd just like to remind members once again to please tone down the noise level. The chair is experiencing difficulty hearing the speakers.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, traditionally after an election a government introduces as Bill 1 its most important piece of legislation, whether or not that's real or just symbolic. You know, when the Parti Quebecois government was first elected in Quebec, of course they introduced their Bill 1, which was their language law, which obviously was the most important thing to them at the time.

This also reflects the ideology of the government. It's of number one importance, and that is natural gas rebates. And why not, because it was in fact through natural gas rebates that the present government got where it is today. It was a number one issue in the provincial election and a number one election strategy for the Tory government in securing a renewal of its mandate. So I find it suitable that this particular bill would be the first order of business of the government after the election. The act, of course, allows the government to make use of the financial resources of this province to provide rebates to citizens of Alberta with very, very little restriction, if any.

We've advocated all along – in fact, we advocated a year ago, back at the time of the by-election in Edmonton-Highlands – that something had to be done about natural gas prices. I think we were the first to raise that as an issue, and we certainly found that the public was very responsive to the thought that the government needs to do something about rising natural gas prices. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, natural gas prices in Alberta in the last few years have gone through the roof, and that is largely due to the fact that the governments, both the provincial government and the federal government, have encouraged the export of massive quantities of natural gas to the United States, creating essentially a North American market for this commodity. That leaves Alberta consumers at the vagaries of the Chicago price for their own natural gas.

We've always advocated, at least for home heating purposes, that the price of natural gas ought to be capped at $3 a gigajoule, and we propose that it be done not through rebates but by actually fixing the real problem, which is the high price of natural gas. By a small increase in the royalties paid by producers, it would be very easy for the government to actually permanently reduce the price in Alberta to a level that was consistent with what it was a couple of years ago.

We continue to believe, Mr. Chairman, that that's the best course of action, but the government doesn't see it that way. The government is going to go in a different direction, and that is to provide rebates and let consumers recycle those rebates through their bank accounts and into the pockets of the gas company and of the natural gas producers. We believe our approach is superior, because for every $1 in increased royalties due to natural gas prices that the government receives, energy producers receive on average about $3. So they're very easily able to fund modest price protection for consumers out of the windfall profits that they're receiving as a result of the government creating this North American energy market.

Now, if we come to the specifics of Bill 1, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, to support this as it's presently drafted would be in our view reckless. It would undermine the Legislative Assembly and the duties of each member. The specific provisions of Bill 1 as set out in sections 1 and 2 give way too much discretion to the provincial cabinet in making its regulations. These sections of Bill 1 are nothing more than an empty shell. They do nothing more than delegate from the Legislative Assembly to the provincial cabinet who is eligible to receive rebates, the amount of the rebates they receive, and when they receive these rebates. I sincerely hope that the government will introduce amendments at committee stage to rectify this unacceptable situation.

Unless this bill is fixed, I can't see how the New Democrat opposition will be able to support it. What the government is asking the Legislative Assembly to do is to give a blank cheque to the provincial cabinet. What Bill 1 does is give the power to the provincial cabinet to decide based on political considerations when, how much, and to whom natural gas rebates will be provided. Bill 1, therefore, fails the test of good governance. A feature of good governance, Mr. Chairman, is that the Legislative Assembly should not pass a law which transfers the power of making laws into other hands. The specific provisions of Bill 1 failed to limit the discretionary power of the provincial cabinet.

I'd like to review the specific provisions of Bill 1 and how they fail the test of good governance. Section 1(b)(ii) of Bill 1 allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council discretion to decide both who is and who is not an eligible consumer. If rebates are to be given from the public chest, the Legislative Assembly should be the one who decides who is and who is not eligible. For example, is it the cabinet's intent to only make residential consumers eligible? Will rebates also be provided to farmers, to small business people, to school boards, and health authorities or even to larger industrial consumers? Or will the eligible consumers depend on how close we get to the next election or who exerts the most political pressure? Who knows, Mr. Chairman? You sure won't find any answers in Bill 1.

Section 2 deals with when a rebate might be provided. This section reads:

Where, in the opinion of the Minister of Energy, the Alberta price is or is likely to be greater than the amount prescribed in the regulations, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may authorize a rebate.

Provisions like this are not delegation but abdication. Here again we read a provision that allows the provincial cabinet wide discretion on matters that should properly be put within Bill 1 itself. There is no formula set out whereby there is any indication of what the rebate levels will be or at what price level they will kick in.

Additionally, the bill is named the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, but a careful reading of section 1(d) and section 4(1) indicates that an elevated price of other substances might entitle one to a rebate. However, "other substances" is not clearly defined. Section 1(d) states: "Other substances" [include] propane, heating oil and any other substance used for heating purposes." Again, Mr. Chairman, "heating purposes" is not defined within the bill. Does this mean home heating, heating of schools and hospitals, heating of greenhouses, heating for the purposes of generating electricity, or some other industrial purpose? Again, who knows?

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, Bill 1 is riddled with gaps and holes, and it would be irresponsible to leave solely to the provincial cabinet the discretion to fill these gaps and plug the holes. Instead of providing some certainty to Albertans about what kind of protection they can expect to receive from high natural gas prices, this is strictly a political bill which gives the provincial cabinet a blank cheque to decide to whom, how much, and when politically motivated rebate cheques can be sent out.

Mr. Chairman, as it stands, the New Democrat opposition cannot support the bill. This has the same deficiencies as I referred to in my comments on Bill 7. It is an abdication of the responsibility of this Legislative Assembly, the transfer of its powers on a wholesale basis to the government, where decisions, as I said earlier, are not made here in open, public debate but are made in private, behind closed doors around the cabinet table.

Something like rebates, which are such an incredibly powerful political tool for any government caring to use them, cannot be provided in a bill as flimsy as this one. It galls me that billions and billions of dollars that have been handed out in rebates as we led up to the last provincial election are now being enshrined in this legislation with far less legislative framework than things like the regulation of taxis or the regulation of co-operatives. We saw the massive bill on co-operatives by the hon. member opposite. It's this thick. It weighs half a pound, but here we've got a bill that will allow the government to hand out billions of dollars with no strings, with no scrutiny by the Legislature, yet this government has the arrogance to ask us to pass it.

Well, I don't think so, Mr. Chairman. I think this is a bad bill. There's something wrong here. This bill, the first priority of the government, is the first priority of the Legislature to defeat if we have any sense, if we have any commitment to the rules of parliamentary government that allows the elected people of this province or of this country to have a say as to how their expenditures are made. That is the first principle of our parliamentary system, and the government's bill completely flies in the face of that principle, of a thousand years of struggle for democratic representation in the British system. We need to do something about this bill. I'm appalled that the government could bring forward a bill with absolutely no scrutiny on billions of dollars of politically motivated expenditure.

Mr. Chairman, those are my comments at this stage of the bill. Hopefully we'll have much more debate. I hope that the government will actually bring forward some amendments when we continue to deal with this bill in committee stage. It can't stand the way it is now. It's got loopholes here that you could drive a Brink's truck through. I hope that something is done.

Mr. Chairman, that will conclude my remarks, and I will now move that we adjourn debate on this issue.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 1.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:25 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 30, 2001 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 01/04/30
 [Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay; we'll call the committee to order.

Hon. members, before the Committee of Supply starts considering the main estimates for the 2001-2002 fiscal year, the chair would like to confirm the arrangements that have been made by House leaders. In the April 10, 2001, agreement House leaders agreed that the minister whose department's estimates were before the committee would have 10 minutes for opening comments, followed by one hour for questioning by the opposition parties. Under the agreement the minister has five minutes to conclude consideration of the estimates for his or her department.

The agreement is silent on questions by members of the government caucus. Should there be any questions or comments by those members, it would have to be after the opposition parties have had the hour but, the chair assumes, before the minister concludes.

Under the agreement two departments are to have their estimates considered on Monday, Tuesday, and certain Wednesday evenings. On two Wednesday evenings and three Thursday afternoons the opposition parties will have up to two hours of questions and comments. All consideration of the estimates is to be completed before the normal adjournment hour of midnight on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings and 5:30 on Thursday afternoons.

The only other matter that the chair would add is that under the agreement the first estimates to be considered by the Committee of Supply are that of the Legislative Assembly, which are to be voted upon without debate. The chair wanted to take this opportunity to make sure that members are aware of the arrangements that have been made before the committee starts its work on the main estimates.

head: Main Estimates 2001-2002

Offices of the Legislative Assembly

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the offices of the Legislative Assembly, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Support to the Legislative Assembly
Operating Expense	$29,838,000
Office of the Auditor General
Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$16,986,000
Office of the Ombudsman
Operating Expense	$1,754,000
Office of the Chief Electoral Officer
Operating Expense	$7,035,000
Office of the Ethics Commissioner
Operating Expense	$212,000

Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner
Operating Expense	$3,287,000
Amount of Operating Expense and Capital Investment to be voted under section 1(1) of the Appropriation Act, 2001	$59,112,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Sustainable Resource Development

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Before I start, I'd like to introduce my staff sitting in the members' gallery: Bob Fessenden, deputy minister, and Bruce Perry, senior financial officer, both for our department and also Environment; also, Donna Ballard, my executive assistant.

I'm pleased to present this year's budget for Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. Today's presentation also gives me an opportunity to talk about our new ministry, which I'm very excited about and proud of. As a new ministry we're presenting a new budget that reflects a prudent transfer of resources. We have worked closely with the other ministries and have involved my other colleagues' departments of Environment, Community Development, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and Energy. We are working together to use our resources effectively. For example, the senior financial officer and the human resource director are a couple of the shared positions between our ministry and Alberta Environment. It also shows the co-operation that is occurring between the various departments as we continue to work towards a co-ordinated approach in this government.

Our overall ministry's budget for 2001-2002 represents our core business: $70 million for industry development and $146 million for resource stewardship. Of the $197 million voted appropriation for the department, $56 million is budgeted for regional operations and $63 million for Alberta's forest protection. I will talk a bit about that later.

I have had questions from many of you about exactly how our new role fits the recent organizational changes. Our focus at Sustainable Resource Development is on Alberta's renewable resources. We have responsibility for Alberta's forests, forest sustainability with responsibility for conservation and management, as well as development and collection of revenues, public lands, and also fish and wildlife.

I'll talk a bit about the manpower. The department is also a large one, with close to 2,000 people with a strong presence in regions and a lot in your local constituencies. Our regional staff, for example, are involved in conservation enforcement, fire management, public lands, and local planning and education. About 45 percent of our operating budget is on manpower.

The other area we have is public lands. By bringing public lands and forestry together in one ministry, we are putting the responsibility for the province's public lands back under one roof with the exception of the parks and protected areas, which are now part of Community Development. This allows us to co-ordinate both areas. Most importantly, it gives Albertans and industry a one-window approach to our services and information. In addition, the Surface Rights Board, the Land Compensation Board, and the Natural Resources Conservation Board fall under our ministry. If you'd like some information on land issues or have concerns, my doors are always open.

Forest protection. Alberta Sustainable Resource Development also is the steward of Alberta's forest resources. An important part of our mandate involves the protection and management of these resources. As I mentioned earlier, we have budgeted $63 million for forest protection. There is also $12 million allocated under the Alberta environmental protection and enhancement fund.

I want to assure everyone that we are taking steps now to prepare for this year's fire season, and of course we are already fighting fires. With the early indication of dry weather we began our fire preparation one month earlier this year. By gearing up early, we are in the best position to allocate our resources wisely and minimize the expenditures throughout the season. This puts us in the best position to protect Alberta's communities and people from the risk of wildfires. As well, just a week ago we issued a fire ban throughout a stretch of Alberta that was facing particularly dry conditions. We know that we can't control nature and that most fires are caused by lightning, but we can certainly reduce the risk of fires by humans.

With the management of forests it stands to reason that this ministry also is responsible for fish and wildlife and habitat issues throughout the province. We have approximately $4 million to $5 million allocated to fish and wildlife. There again we have key individuals in the field offices delivering our management and enforcement programs.

Alberta has shown the greatest provincial leadership within Canada in the development of our endangered species program. Together with stakeholders we will continue to develop this program. We'll have many challenges. We will work to ensure that Albertans continue to enjoy the benefits of well-managed fish and wildlife resources. Among other things I am interested in working to ensure the health and sustainability of our fishing resources in this province.

Industrial development. As I mentioned earlier, we are accountable for the sustainability of our forests. We must manage them in a way that offers economic, social, and environmental benefits for all Albertans. Our continued quality of life feeds on Alberta's forests. Forestry is the third largest industry in the province, contributing $8.3 billion to our economy annually. Albertans enjoy our vast forests, as do Alberta's wildlife. We are committed to managing the resources in a sustainable way, which brings the maximum benefit back to Albertans.

There are essentially three ways that the industry can have access to our carefully allocated forest resources. One is by permits, which deal with very small amounts over short periods of time; timber quotas, which result in licences to cut timber in a designated area over a longer period of time; and forest management agreements, which require a company to consider all forest values and consult the public in preparing long-term forest plans in a designated area. In all cases the government approves any management decisions and has legislative authority over the activities on Crown lands.

One of the big priorities for me is increasing the value that Albertans get from our forest resources. We initiated benchmarks to study last year that are going to help identify opportunities to expand the secondary forest manufacturing industry in Alberta. We'll continue to develop our relationships with industry and work together to build an even stronger industry that employs Albertans and continues to improve the quality of life for all Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, that is essentially an overview of our new Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. We have a big job to do. It is a job that we take very seriously, and it is a job I look forward to doing in the future. I will be pleased to hear your questions and provide written answers, that I will table in the House in the future.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have a chance to stand and speak this evening to what is really the first debate we're having on estimates of the various ministries. We've done supplementaries prior to this and did Leg. Assembly, but this is really our first opportunity to get into the meat of this whopping budget that we're going to be approving here in less than a month with this government. I'm happy to have a chance to discuss one of my favourite topics, which is sustainable development. In this particular instance, it's sustainable resource development.

I'd like to take a moment to talk about the most recent changes in the ministry shuffles that we've had since I've been in this Legislature, which is early '93. There have been four significant changes in the way the government has tried to do business since that time period. They came in in '93 talking about a reduction in the number of ministers and government departments, subsequently reduced those ministers so there was a shuffling of areas that we talk about now as being with sustainable development.

Sometime later they figured that wasn't working all that well and that all the ministries were in stovepipes. They wanted to flatten that out a little bit and try and do more co-ordination between the departments, so they added a couple of junior ministers and tried to make some changes that didn't seem to be too successful. We saw another set of small changes after the '97 election, and now once again in 2001 we've seen some significant changes: many more ministers on board, many more junior ministers on board, and another big shuffling of ministries.

I was trying to describe it to a friend the other day and said: you know, it's like taking a deck of cards and just when the people in the province and their voice in this Legislature, the opposition parties, have the decks all sorted out according to suits and according to ace to king and have them nice and orderly and can talk about them and compare figures from year to year in a manner that's reasonable and objective and comparable, the government shuffles the deck, mixes them all up again, and throws a budget at us and expects us to talk about how that works for the people of the province and approve the budgets.

The problem with how that works is that you end up with some inconsistencies and a great many numbers that are not comparable, which is quite a problem for anybody that has an accounting background and wants to be able to take numbers in budgets and compare them and see where there have been increases, decreases, and compare those numbers to benchmarks and targets and find out whether or not the government really did its job. The way these budgets are organized this year again, it's very, very hard to do that, Mr. Chairman.

The first time it happened after '93, I thought: well, they're trying to streamline things that really aren't the government's fault. Now after this fourth time that this deck has been reshuffled, I'm beginning to believe that the government does this with some deliberate attempts to make it hard for people to hold them accountable, Mr. Chairman, and that is a concern.

It isn't just my concern, Mr. Chairman, or the people that I represent in the constituency and the people that I hear from throughout the province, but it is certainly a concern of the Auditor General. Every year that I've been in this Legislature, he has made some remarks about this in terms of consistency and comparability and holding the ministries accountable, setting measurable goals, and actually being able to determine through the goals and the benchmarks and the objectives whether or not the government has done its job. Every year in virtually every department the Auditor General sets out some recommendations which would indicate that the government hasn't done all that great a job. They make it harder for everyone trying to study these figures by the kind of shuffling that happens. It's certainly no different this year than other times when they've done this.

Now we have this department, Sustainable Resource Development, which is primarily taking some parts of Environment, what used to be environmental protection, Mr. Chairman, taking a portion of that along with parts from Community Development and Agriculture and Energy and calling it Sustainable Resource Development. So we have a bit of a hodgepodge mix compared to the departments we had before and an interesting transition that I'd just like to spend a moment talking about.

Most of this department used to come under environmental protection. What's in a name, Mr. Chairman? I think quite a bit when we talk about government and how they decide what filters they're going to use for decision-making in this province. Environmental protection would suggest that a primary concern of the government was environment, protection being the protection of the environment, and that that was the filter through which they made the decisions, the business decisions, other spending decisions, protection decisions, on how the dollars were spent.

Then they dropped the protection part of it. The question I think we have to ask is: why is there no longer a department that deals with protection in this province? That's a problem for me and for many people who think that protecting the environment is a role of government and that they have a large role to do that, particularly when we see so many competing interests for the landscape in this province: business interests, pressures from people on land uses, agriculture interests, wildlife interests. All those issues are competing interests and need to be taken into account. Somebody out there has to stand up and say that at some point we have to decide what land loads are going to be for the environment and make our decisions based on that, which certainly incorporates protection and sustainable development from all perspectives, not just resource development, which is what we have here.

I understand the pressures on the department to do some of the separations that we've seen here, and I don't disagree with some of them, Mr. Chairman. I think that definitely how the departments were organized previously wasn't all that effective in terms of service delivery and in meeting the mandates that the business community wanted. But I think that they were somewhat effective in starting to take a look at a protection perspective, and I would certainly hope that as this Legislature unfolds over the next three or four years, we don't see any erosion in protection of the landscape.

Certainly what I feel we need and what many people feel we need is for protection to have more significance in decision-making, particularly in business decision-making in this province. We are seeing businesses take a lead in that in many instances, Mr. Chairman. What we're seeing is that businesses are seeing that protection is a big deal. It's a big deal in the global marketplace and in being able to sell their commodities abroad and to be globally recognized as world-class leaders in the industry that they're involved in.

I'm thinking particularly of forestry when I talk about this. We've seen many businesses really take a leadership role in this province in what they're trying to do in terms of sustainability and protection of the landscape and perpetuating forests forever as a good business decision. So I applaud those organizations. I hope the government will catch up with them, because in many regards they are not up to speed with what some of the organizations are doing out there and the issues that they're facing and the proactiveness that they're taking.

I certainly don't mean to offend anyone in the department when I make those comments, Mr. Chairman, because I think that certainly the people in the department work very hard. They're well qualified for their work. They're committed to the jobs they do, and I have always had a very good relationship in terms of feedback and questions being answered and seeing the commitment they have to the work that they do, but it doesn't mean that they're the leaders in this particular area. I think that business is out there a step ahead of them, and that concerns me a little bit sometimes when we talk about the choices that need to be made about competing interests in this province and particularly when I don't see incorporated into the business plans or the budgetary processes or the goals and so on a significant amount of attention being paid to cumulative impact.

I think that when we talk about sustainable development, be it resource or wildlife or landscape, we need to start talking about how important cumulative impact is on where we go in decision-making, and I don't know that that's incorporated into the decision-making process. I hear people in the department saying that it is. I've been asking this particular set of questions on cumulative impact for three or four years now in this Assembly, and I get answers, but they don't seem to be comprehensive in nature. I'm not sure that the department has a full handle on what it means to take not just a business decision in an area as their criteria for establishing cumulative impact but a sustained long-term perspective.

If we take a 20-, a 50-, and a 100-year look at a piece of land in this province, what are the impacts? What are all the cumulative impacts on that piece of land now, in the past, and in the very long-term future? We take a look at all the forests. We take a look at what the companies want to do with them. We take a look at the weather, what impact droughts, fires, floods have on the landscape. We take a look at the people impact, whether that be encroachment of urban sprawl or whether that be a tourism impact. We take a look at the impact on that land from a wildlife perspective: what's happening to the habitat for wildlife and how it is being impacted by all of these other factors. Then we take a look at the business development impact on that area and not just the landscape at that point in time. We need to talk about the air and the water at the same time. It doesn't happen, I don't think, in that kind of comprehensive fashion, and we need to take some leadership on this.

There's certainly enough expertise in this province, and there is certainly enough expertise in the department to be able to do this. I would like to see this minister take this as an undertaking for the next few years as something that he can show some strong leadership in in co-operation with the Minister of Environment. It's a little bit of an issue now with the way the departments are divided up, because as I understand it, essentially air and water decisions are in Environment and lots of the landscape issues are in Sustainable Resource Development. So they're going to have to have good lines of communication if they're going to talk about cumulative impact in those areas, Mr. Chairman. I know that can easily happen, but it's a big undertaking, not a small undertaking.

What do we need to do? We need to inventory the landscape in the province right now. What do we have in each region of the province in terms of these different kinds of impacts: the people, agriculture, wildlife, and industry? If we take those four basic areas and determine what the current inventory of impact is on the province, then we take a look at where the impact is causing pressure points at this particular time. We know that there are some areas like that in the province. Certainly we're seeing urban sprawl and industrial development in the area around Edmonton as a big issue. We are probably overimpacted on agricultural land and from an industrial development and clean air and water perspective in this industrial corridor now. So we need to determine where those pressure points are. The eastern slopes is another good example of where we are overimpacted at this particular stage with all the competing interests for the landscape. We need to do an inventory right now of what's in the province. We need to determine where the pressure points are because we have too much significant impact on them. We need to decide how to mediate and turn around some of those problems. That's a role for government I think, Mr. Chairman, and that's a leadership role. We need to then determine the areas that don't have maximum allowable impact right now. Where are they? What could we sustain in those regions, and how do we get there? Long-term kinds of things to talk about; certainly important to do.

We're seeing that some of the forestry companies are doing that now. They're understanding, I think, that if they're not overallocated on the forests – which I think we are, but they would disagree with me – then they at least don't have enough sustainable inventory to meet their business needs. So what are they going to do, Mr. Chairman? They're going to land farm. They're going to tree farm some parts of the province so that they can sustain the kind of inventory they want. They've done cumulative impact studies within their own organizations to determine that they don't have enough sustainable inventory. They're going to have to do something else, so they look elsewhere.

At some point government needs to talk about that as an issue. Where are they going to tree farm? Not on marginal farmland, that's for sure, because it'll take too long to grow the trees. They're going to be looking for prime farmland. So that's a competing interest for agricultural use, and it's something that I think needs to be talked about in terms of the direction this province goes. Do we grow sugar beets, do we grow wheat and barley, or do we grow trees? Those are choices that need to be made. We're going to be seeing, I think, industry butting heads with the agricultural community at some point in time or at least taking over some of the agricultural land, and there is a role there, Mr. Chairman, for government to be involved in the process.

It's nice to see the minister in his comments talk about the shared resources and co-operation that is there between the departments he's working with now and that they're working to achieve co-ordination. Certainly that's something that's been talked about by the Auditor General in the Environment audit coverage and recommendations, and certainly the next stage, the next part of that, is that they go to a consistent planning basis, which is in fact recommendation 13 in the AG's report. They talk about the Department of Environment's regional and area Action Plans used in the planning process be completed on a consistent basis.

There are 17 areas covering the Province for which Action Plans are prepared by the Department's Natural Resources Service.

There have been some areas where there are some issues, particularly when we talk about fish stocking management, Mr. Chairman.

That's a big issue in this province. We have a serious problem with fish stocks. When I first started talking about that in budget debates, they thought that was funny, that it was a very minor issue, and why would I spend so much time on it? But fish in this province are an indicator of things going wrong. If you can't sustain your fish inventory in the province, why is that, Mr. Chairman? Because we have too many people fishing? Perhaps, and that's one of the things the government has done, in terms of setting limits. In most lakes and streams now we're catch and release. It's a long way from where we were 20 years ago or even 10 years ago.

That's not the only issue. What else is impacting the fish stocks? Development certainly impacts them, development around and on fish streams and on lakeshores. Both commercial and industrial development is a big issue. You just need to read any of the hundreds of letters that I have received over the years from the residents around Wabamun to start to understand what that kind of impact is. Water quality impacts the fish stocks too. So what are we doing about this?

Those are just some of the issues that impact fish management. The government hasn't been able to get a handle on those source problems, and we see it outlined in the Auditor General's report. We see some significant time spent on the goals and key strategies and performance management indicators in this year's budget on that issue, and that's good. I hope they're not too late. I hope we're in a stage where we can be recoverable on these issues.

I'm just about out of time on this set of 20 minutes. Certainly I need to come back because I haven't gotten to really any of the details of the budget yet. But one question I would like to put on the record right away is the $7 million that the minister talked about in business development. He said business development. What I see under Core Business is Industry Development, and I'm wondering if he's talking about the same thing there. Are we talking about business development from the perspective of what the department is doing, or are we talking about some actual financial support to the industry? I see some of that outlined here in the key strategies in goal 1.1, and I'm hoping we can get some elaboration on that. I think it's not a bad idea that they're doing some development for industry.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'll be back.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to join in the scrutiny of the budget proposals for the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. Now, this department, Sustainable Resource Development, includes the Natural Resources Conservation Board, the Surface Rights Board, and the Land Compensation Board. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has already pointed out how confusing it is to try and keep a through line in watching performance measurement, monitoring and evaluation of this department, because over the years it has changed its outfit so often that it's beginning to look like a refugee from the Goodwill. I've been trying to track it through the Auditor General's report, and I'm kind of struggling to find all the pieces under what it used to be called, or was called very briefly for a year or 18 months, and then part of that. Once upon a time I think this was called forestry and a couple of other things all grouped together.

Looking at Industry Development and Resource Stewardship – those are the two core business areas in this department – I find that a really interesting combination. Number one, that it is – and I'm sure the words are very carefully chosen – industry development first and then resource stewardship second, which is always a concern for me. I know in Alberta over the long term, for the last 30 or 40 years, we've been trying to expand the base from which our revenue comes. Certainly with sustainable development we should be able to do that, but I think it's a very careful balance. I'm trying to understand if that balance is being achieved, if we are achieving sustainability in what's being proposed in this 2001-2002 budget. I'm looking for stability in the department because it has been changed so many times. As I said, it's wearing a coat of many colours now, having been patched together from a variety of other ministries.

I'm looking for whether there is good management in this department. I'm looking to see whether the choices that are being made in the direction the department is going in are equitable to all parties involved, particularly to Albertans because it is their legacy for the future. Frankly, it's a little hard to determine.

Now, when I started by looking at the Meeting Priorities, Sharing Benefits business plans for Budget 2001, one of the first things I noticed is the performance measurement for the first goal; that is, to "sustain growth opportunities in the forest resource sector through maximization of opportunity, secondary processing and exports of products." And when I look at the performance measurement, it's under review. This is something I've notice with the government in the past. They seem to do a set of performance measurements in a department, and then the next year they change it, so it's very difficult to track year to year to year how things are progressing. Again in this department it's under review. Now, perhaps that's appropriate, and that's a question I have for the minister, about why it's under review.

One of the things I noticed in the performance measurement that is in fact listed here, that being the target to "reduce the gap between the harvest and annual allowable cut," is that the gap in '95 was 7.0, and that dropped to a low in 1998 of 4.3, then skyrocketed in 1999 to 8.7. The estimate in 2000 is not available. That is disappointing. It's also difficult for anyone that's trying to measure whether the department is performing, and for two reasons. Is it a good performance measurement? Is it what we should be measuring? Is the outcome what is going to give us the information about good management and, in this case, sustainable resource development? So is the performance measurement accurate and valuable, and what is the information that we're getting from it, if it is a good performance measurement? Here we don't get anything. It's not available.

One of the other things that came out of that section that I'm reading – and I'm referring to page 328 in the business plan – is a section that says:

The sustainable harvest is calculated using only that portion of forest land base (e.g., excludes recreation areas, wildlife reserves, stream buffers, etc.) which the government makes available for timber harvest; and reflects the forest management strategies applied to that land base.

Now, at one point I thought I had read that every tree in Alberta that it was possible to allocate has been allocated. So if they've already allocated every possible tree, how is it even possible to measure this? I'd like to hear back from the department about what's happening there.

When I look at the second core business plan, Resource Stewardship, in the business plan there is no performance measurement listed at all. When I went through the secondary goals under Resource Stewardship, the first goal, 2.1, being to "protect Alberta's forests by preventing and suppressing wildfires," there's no performance measurement. When I look at goal 2.2, "improve environmental stewardship of public land," there is no performance measurement at all, nothing listed. When I look at goal 2.3, "promote fish and wildlife conservation," there is a performance measurement which is under review and seems to be saying that it's not a problem, because they're looking at the species of fish and wildlife that are in Alberta and which ones are considered at serious risk. They're stating that "only two percent are considered at serious risk" here and that the target was the "percentage of species at serious risk below five percent." So that seems to be a reasonable performance measurement. It seems to have given us the information. It, too, is under review.

When I look at the third goal, under Support Services, to "manage the department in an effective, affordable manner and provide an attractive work environment for employees," again no performance measurement. So how is the department being a good manager and even able to check how its own performance is moving along when it either has no performance measurement for key areas and key goals or they're all under review? I ran into the same problem under the Estimates book.

Now, here it states quite clearly that "given the newness of the Department" – well, yes, this particular combination of sectors is new, but, you know, resource development isn't new, the protection isn't new, and the sustainability isn't new. Come on here, folks. Yes, all these things have been joined together for perhaps the first time, but none of the activities that they're doing is new. It states quite clearly that because of the "newness of the Department, the performance indicators and targets are under review and should be treated as preliminary." What are we going to see in this thing next year, and how are we in next year's budget supposed to be looking back at the performance of this year when all these things were under review or don't exist?

You know, this government loves to get up and talk about how it's open and accountable and then seems incapable of producing the performance measurements by which it can measure itself and use as a management tool and allow the scrutiny of other legislators, the opposition, and the public to look at this. So there's a disconnect here.

As I say, I did try and locate the various pieces out of the Auditor General's report for '99-2000 and haven't been quite successful, so let me go back and look at the numbers. When I look at program 1, which in fact is listed as ministry support services, I'm looking at the full-time equivalents. The minister himself noted that there was a sizable staff, and I'm wondering how many FTEs are employed under the ministry support services in this budget before us, in 2001-02.

I'm also looking for the breakdown of FTEs for each of the subprograms in the ministry support services. This is another area where the government gets less open and less accountable as the years go on. When I go back and look at budgets from the late '80s or even the early '90s, we got a breakdown of where the FTEs were in each of the subprograms, and you were able to track that. Now you're getting a sort of lump sum at the end of the budget, one figure for the entire department. Particularly in a ministry like this one, which is really a collection of other components, I think it really is necessary that the FTEs be shown broken out by the programs. In particular here I'm just going to ask at this point for the breakout of the FTEs for the subprograms in ministry support services.

Now, the next question I have. The minister's office budget is increasing by it looks like $167,000. Yes, indeedly. Yowza, it's a leap, 95 percent. Let's get into this one. What is the breakdown of the $342,000 minister's office budget for 2001-02 by salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses? I'd like that breakdown for each of those areas, please.

Now, when we look at the human resources budget, that as well is increasing by $984,000, by 46 percent, but if you look back, the preliminary actual for the previous year is $355,000 underbudget. We're underbudget, we think, for last year by $355,000, yet they're asking for almost a million dollar increase at this point. What is going on here? Can we get an explanation for what is happening in the human resources budget that we're getting that kind of spread? I think we need to know what's happening there, whether there's a lot of retirements, pension contributions. What on earth would account for that?

As well, the budget for legal services is decreasing by $43,000, from $110,000 to $67,000, so that's a 40 percent decrease. Why? What are the choices being made there? Or has there been an ongoing legal cost that is no longer being called for? What's the reason for the discrepancy in that? Does the budget for legal services cover internal costs only, or it is used to cover legal expenses for intervenors' legal fees when a development is being challenged? If the intervenor fees are not covered from this budget, where does the government make allowances to pay the legal fees so Albertans' views can be heard on development projects? Is that covered under another area in these program expenses, and if so, where is it? We'd be interested in hearing that.

What was included in the $725,000 budget for achievement award in 2000-2001, and why has it been eliminated in this year, 2001-02?

Still under program 1, ministry support services, what is the breakdown of the $367,000 deputy minister's office budget for 2001-02? Again, salaries permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent, and salaries contract positions, and in addition travel, advertising and hosting expenses, and telephone and communications: so what's the breakdown in the deputy minister's office under that?

Now, program 2, policy, program, and standards. Same question that I started with before: what are the FTEs that are employed under program 2, policy, program, and standards, and could we have a breakout of these FTEs by the subprograms? It looks like there are about nine subprograms under that. Specifically what services are provided under 2.0.5, forest industry development, that are worth $2.682 million? Yes, there's not a lot of information on that. So what services are under that? What are the measurements that are being used to determine its successes? What sort of outcome are they looking for from that? Can the minister provide a written list of where the money was spent for forest industry development in 2000-2001 and where he anticipates spending it in 2001-2002?

What capital investments does the minister plan to make under program 2.0.6, public lands management, for $300,000? So what are those capital investments under that section?

Why is the capital investment in program 2.0.7, which is grazing reserves – now, this is interesting. In the comparable year of 2000-2001 preliminary actual, that was $131,000, and it's dropping to $25,000. What is in there, and why has it reduced by that much? Is there something that's being covered under another area or another program? Have they completely dropped a program? That's a significant reduction. I mean, we're not talking about a lot of money overall, but still to go from $131,000 to $25,000 is a fairly significant drop. So I'd be interested in what's in there and why that happened.

Can the minister provide a list of the capital investment projects that were funded under program 2.0.7, grazing reserves, in 2000-2001 and a list of the anticipated capital projects for 2001-02?

I'm aware that my time will be running out shortly. I know that my colleagues also wish to pursue scrutiny of this budget, but I'll go until the bell rings on me.

In program 2.0.2, enforcement field services, why is it being reduced from $2.869 million to $2.633 million? We think that's a real problem, because what effect does this decrease have on catching poachers and those who overfish? We know we have a real problem with the fish stock in Alberta lakes for all kinds of reasons, but certainly decreasing the enforcement field services isn't going to help us very much there if there is abuse of the system. So we're interested in that.

I'm sorry. I've run out of time, but I will try and proceed later.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to continue my questions about this particular ministry. I'd like to talk for a moment about the department's core businesses and some good things about those that I think exist and also what I feel are perhaps some inconsistencies that I would like some explanations for and I think maybe even some justification. So if we talk about the department's core businesses as being industry development and resource stewardship, which include such items as "foster development, investment, trade and research in Alberta's forest resources," I think that's good. Definitely that needs to happen.

Then next we talk about "development and research in Alberta's fish and wildlife and public land resources." Also good on the face of it, Mr. Chairman. An issue I have with that, though, is when we go over to the goals, key strategies, performance management indicators, and measures by core businesses and we take a look down at goal 2.3, promote fish and wildlife conservation, you look at that and think that's really good, and it is really good, but it's only half the job. What I think goal 2.3 should say is: promote fish and wildlife conservation and rehabilitation, because we know there are some huge issues in this particular province with fish. So it's more than developing and research in fish in this case, and I would suggest that carries through to wildlife and public land resources. In this case we have to see some rehabilitation.

Going back to my earlier comments about the cumulative impact and managing the land base in a fair and reasonable and sustainable manner, I would suggest that we need rehabilitation in several areas in this province, that we need to take a look at how demand is managed. If we go back to the core businesses, they talk about "establish and optimize Albertans' share of revenue from forest, fish and wildlife and public land development." Perhaps good from this government's perspective and perhaps from industry's perspective but not particularly good from the perspective of a protection mandate, ensuring that part of a sustainable future for this province is sustaining some areas that are if not pristine then certainly benchmark areas for what the landscape could look like to use as indicators, as a measuring tool for what happens in other areas in the province.

Also, if we're talking about things like wildlife corridors, which are very important, optimizing the share of revenue in those areas isn't going to help wildlife be sustainable. When you disrupt the wildlife, you disrupt the fauna, and so then we sort of have multiple problems in these areas. I would suggest that that particular goal is in direct conflict with their other goal that says, "Ensure Forest Protection." I think those are in direct conflict as they are stated in the business plans, and I would like some explanation on that in terms of how the government expects that it can do both, that it can give at least equal value to both of those. If they are not prepared to give equal value, then what kind of value, what kind of weighting are they putting on those two competing goals? What happens when there are instances when forest protection for whatever reason becomes a greater need than optimizing the share of the revenue in order to keep the forests sustainable? If those questions could be asked, I would like some answers to them.

Some overall concerns about how the dollars are being spent. We see a $3.4 million decrease from the 2000-2001 budget. It concerns me when we see decreases in ministry budgets in areas that involve any kind of protection, Mr. Chairman, because it seems to me that what this government does is what it does with the name of the department: it just cuts the protection off. So I need some assurances, some documentation from the department that getting less money is going to be able to still allow them to at least meet the minimum standards that we've seen in the past if not exceed them in some cases.

I think there are many documented times in this Assembly when we have registered concerns about the underfunding in particular areas, and that needs to be addressed, particularly in light of the fact that we see a department that overspent its budget by 14 percent in total and is overall facing about a 5 percent budget cut. So that's a bit of a concern for me, particularly when you then compare it to program 1 in ministry support services, where we are seeing significant increases in the budget dollars. So if we see the minister's office increasing by 95 percent and human resources – well, we'll talk about that separately. I don't think that's all that bad.

Some increases in some areas that are not direct program delivery, Mr. Chairman. That concerns me somewhat. What we need in this province from this particular department is more people in the field. There is no one who can disagree with that. Parks need more frontline people. Forestry needs more frontline people. We need more frontline people to manage the huge issues that are starting to evolve as people compete for land base use. We've seen all kinds of those issues emerge, from poaching of fish and wildlife to random camping issues to overuse of trails that interfere with wildlife: all kinds of issues like that. They're numerous and need to be addressed. I'm wondering how, when we see an overall 5 percent reduction with increases on the administrative side, this government expects this department to meet its mandate. So if they could talk about that, if we could get some written information about that, I would certainly appreciate it.

When we see the human resource budget increasing by 46 percent, I'm hoping that means more people in the field, yet when I take a look at the number of full-time equivalents, it looks like it's just increasing by 13 people. Are all those people going into the field? I'd like to think so, but I would like some detail on that, because definitely we need to have more people there.

My colleague from Edmonton-Centre talked about how necessary it is for us to have intervenor fees, and we are concerned, when we see the legal services budget being decreased, that that may disrupt that process. Certainly we need more dollars here. Intervenors are a necessary part of the process in this province. I think we have all kinds of instances where by having people who are directly or close to being directly affected intervene in particular areas, we have seen good decisions being made, decisions that encompass the many competing interests and not just a few interests. So that's something we would like to see more dollars spent on.

Definitely we've got some more questions on this budget in terms of fisheries and wildlife management. We see a little bit of money increased in program 2.0.3, and that's good. Just some details on where that's going. We're hoping that it's going to be to address the problems identified by the Auditor General in the management of the fisheries. As much detail as they can give us on what's happening there would be helpful, I think.

When we see a bill before us in the Assembly that addresses a few very, very minor issues, it almost looks like tinkering at the edges, Mr. Chairman. We need some substantive stuff done there. What we need is consistent reporting so that costing of fish stocks can be effectively managed. A big issue, one we've talked about for years, but seriously a problem in this province at this time, so what are they going to be doing for that?

Is there going to be money, Mr. Chairman, to track the problems coming from the resource data in program 2.0.9? It's increasing the budget for that particular department, and we'd like some detail on that if we can.

You know, we've been recently receiving quite a bit of information from the Western Wildlife Council. I'm sure many people in this Assembly also have been obtaining that information from the council. They've got quite a few concerns about the government talking about the stopping of stocking of walleye in two years. So could we get that confirmed? Is that what's going to be happening? If so, what are the justifications for doing that? If it's being phased out, why? What we're hearing from them is that they think this problem is going to cause stress in lakes that are currently stocked and that will also then be depleted. Are those issues they bring forward based on sound science, or are they just concerns that don't have any factual base? Could we do that?

You know, the way the landscape is going here, I think it's going to be important for us to talk about a little more serious promotion of aquaculture and private fishing plans. We're a landlocked province, but that doesn't mean that we can't see fish farming as a viable economic enterprise. There are some successful ventures now in the province and we would like to congratulate them, but clearly we're not meeting recreational fish needs, never mind those from a business perspective. So something's got to be done there. What's the government doing to support that particular industry?

We consistently have questions raised about the caribou from people who live in the northern part of the province. Particularly, caribou are a species that doesn't like intervention by people or by equipment, so seismic crews and forestry all impact their habitat significantly, significantly more than for some other species. You know, we see some species who seem to thrive when people and industry are around. I think particularly of the sheep that we see in the mountains around the coal mines. They really thrive in that environment, but caribou don't, Mr. Chairman, so we need to ensure that we're able to sustain their habitat. Particularly when we go in and cut seismic lines or move in and do any kind of forestry operations, what happens is that we open up the landscape, which makes it harder for the caribou to get away from their prey. So what we do is upset the balance of nature sometimes.

I know that the government has been doing some work on this issue. If we could get a little bit of factual data on that, that would be helpful, particularly in the area of habitat fragmentation. What studies is the government currently involved in, and what plans do they have to participate, either fully or in part, in studies being done by other organizations? If they could talk about that.

You know, we talk a lot in this Legislature about wildlife and maintaining their habitat and ensuring that they're sustainable, but something that's recently come to the attention certainly of me and I think of many people in this province is how wild animals are managed in captivity. I think this would come under here when we're talking about management of things like wildlife and fish. Previously it was the Department of Environment, though, and they were undertaking a review of zoo regulations in Alberta. We want to know who's responsible for that. It seems to me that the logical fit is here. If not, I'm hoping that you'll pass my questions on to the Department of Environment. How's it going with the drafting of those regulations, Mr. Chairman? We saw increasingly over this past year some concerns, and legitimate concerns, from the general public about how some zoos are operated, and certainly we need to know that those wild animals are safe too. So if we could get an update on that.

With the changes in the ministries, the delegated authorities are – we don't know who belongs to whom, Mr. Chairman. Could we just get a list so that we know who's reporting to the Department of Sustainable Resource Development so we know where to direct our questions? In the past the DAOs have been a huge item of concern for us. I'm not sure that that's still the case.

I think we are seeing some excellent progress with some of the DAOs in terms of how they are managing their operations. It's something that we keep a fairly close eye on. Certainly last year the Auditor General raised concerns about the Alberta Conservation Association and had some preliminary discussions with the association. I have been quite satisfied by the feedback that I've got on an informal basis from the department. We would like something a little more formal. Could we hear specifically how the concerns raised by the AG have been addressed with the ACA? What are the outstanding concerns, if there are some, and what steps are being taken to rectify those?

Now, I think this is a department where we have seen some good-news stories on the DAOs, and certainly I've seen some involvement in some of those, particularly with the Professional Outfitters Association of Alberta. I think that is a stellar example of how a DAO can effectively operate and manage, and that's kind of an interesting story, Mr. Chairman. We see that what most of us would think of as a pretty freewheeling group of people have spent some serious time and energy in making their delegated authority work efficiently and effectively for them, and it has turned out to be I think a good-news story for their organization and for the government. So I would like to offer my congratulations on that one, and we hope that they continue with the kind of strong mandate they've had and that they can be used as a good example for other DAOs in terms of reporting and operations.

Lots left to talk about here. For sure I want to talk about fire. It's a big issue in this province over the last couple of years, and managing fires and protecting the forest is a big deal from an economic development perspective, not just for the sustainability of the landscape and for the enjoyment of the tourism population.

It's interesting to see that we're seeing a decrease in those dollars here too, Mr. Chairman. I know that when it comes to fires, the government will spend the money that's necessary to fight them, and that's good. I know that they will come back in supplementary estimates and ask for more dollars if they overspend their budget, and I don't have a problem with that. But it is nice to know what the basis is that they're making their projections on for the upcoming year. I know that we've had a couple of heavy fire years, but we've had drought conditions again this year, so it would seem to me that we're likely facing the potential of a bad fire year again. We've been lucky so far, but that could change in a heartbeat, as we all know.

In addition, if we could find out the capital investments that have been made under program 3.1.1, provincial fire-fighting centre, I think that would be interesting to know. You know, with the reductions that we had in this department, we saw a significant decrease in some of the senior fire-fighting staff, and that was a real shame. I'm wondering if we could get a comment on what has happened since then.

I think two years ago we saw significant increases as a result of the lack of continuity in the history and knowledge of fire fighting. I'm hoping that they're on the road to recovering that. So if we could find out some information about that. In 3.2, the fire centres, could we find out why that's also being reduced? That's pretty significant, 31 percent. Maybe it's justified if they're well on their way to being where they need to be. But could we just have that information?

I don't have very much time left and lots of information. We need some copies of the reports on the effects of logging on watersheds and water quality and quantity. If we could get some information on that.

What's the government planning to do in protecting the Bighorn area? Will the minister continue to promote and support development in the Castle-Crown area, or can we look to some more good news in terms of protection? The Alberta Outfitters Association is looking for a 10-year access. We've heard that that's happening. Can you give us the update on that? We also heard that there are three pilot projects related to the 10-year system on the eastern slopes this summer. Could we get the status of those projects and some more information on them?

Quite a few things left to talk about. I never got to the petroleum tank management or regional operations or the reporting agencies or specific questions on the goals and business strategies, but I think, Mr. Chairman, what I will do, with the minister's permission, is submit the balance of my questions to the department, and hopefully we can get some answers to those. [interjection] He's saying that's fine. I'd like to applaud the minister so far for the co-operation that we've had from his department and from him, and I look forward to that continuing over the next few years. I think that I am pretty much out of time and am happy to conclude at this point.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: As per the House leaders' agreement the time allocated for opposition party members is over. Before I call upon the minister to conclude, is there anybody else who wishes to speak?

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to take a moment to thank the opposition for their keen interest in the department and also some of the good recommendations they made tonight. We'll definitely look at those recommendations.

Also, I'd like to take a moment to thank the staff for sitting up there and taking notes. I'm sure we'll have a lot of good answers for you. Sometimes we forget, but governments would not run without the staff. We have over 2,000 staff in the department, and we have very well-qualified staff. In fact, I believe we have some of the best staff in North America to manage such valuable sustainable resources. Our staff are to be commended because I believe, when you look around in Canada, we probably have some of the best-managed forest and wildlife resources in North America.

That doesn't mean that we can't continue listening very carefully and continue to improve the operations we have and continue to listen also to the opposition. They do have some good ideas, and I'm sure willing to work closely with their members to ensure that we continue providing the best we can to Albertans in relation to this department's responsibility.

Like I indicated before, we will be providing written answers to your questions and to the questions you submitted. We will provide written answers for those also. Again I'd just like to say thank you very much for tonight.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $197,134,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Municipal Affairs

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. For every hand that I heard clap, that was a million dollars, so I think I just counted about 400 more than I was budgeting for tonight. So that's good news for my colleagues and for my colleagues across the way.

Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to present the estimates for Alberta Municipal Affairs. Before I begin, as my colleague from Sustainable Resource Development mentioned, we also have staff from the department here. Deputy Minister Doug Radke. I'd ask him to wave. Doug has been with our government now for almost 32 years, and I thank him for coming tonight. [interjection] In fact, no, I wasn't even born when Doug was working for the provincial government.

As well, the assistant deputy minister of local government services, Brad Pickering, is here tonight. From our public safety division, Assistant Deputy Minister Dennis Gartner is here. From business planning and corporate support we have Joyce Ingram here as well, and my assistant, who keeps me out of trouble, Laurent Auger, is here as well tonight. Thank you.

Our Ministry of Municipal Affairs is committed to working with a variety of stakeholders to ensure that Albertans live in safe, sustainable communities and are served by open, effective, and accountable governments at the local level. I might add tonight that many of my colleagues in this room and across the way have had a considerable amount of experience in local government: aldermen, school trustees, councillors, mayors, reeves. I look for the insight and comments tonight that they bring in terms of our budget estimates.

Essentially, since our last review by the Committee of Supply we've continued to develop and articulate a more focused and coordinated approach to working with municipalities, and in the coming years we will pursue five specific goals. We will, first, work towards a financially sustainable and accountable municipalities perspective. As well, we will work towards an effective, responsive, and well-managed local government sector and also a uniform and equitable property assessment system in which stakeholders have continued confidence but which is also easily understood by all Albertans. Finally, the last two goals that we have are a comprehensive safety system that provides an appropriate level of public safety and a disaster services program that enhances and supports the capability of local authorities and also their partners to prepare for, respond to effectively, and recover from major emergencies and disasters.

First, let's talk about the ministry's expenditures for the year 2001-2002. The operating expense and capital investment total $204 million. This funding will support the operation of the ministry in four main areas: the local government services as well as the public safety division, the ministry support services, and the Municipal Government Board, which is, of course, a quasi-judicial tribunal that adjudicates matters specified under the Municipal Government Act.

Now, what about our revenue side? In the year 2002 the ministry statement of operations by program indicates that our revenue will be approximately $14.4 million. We will receive about $12 million from lottery revenues to support financial assistance provided under a municipal sponsorship program, and the remaining $2.4 million will come from services rendered to municipalities for assessment of linear transmission systems like pipelines as well as the sale of licences and fees associated with safety certificates and cost-sharing arrangements with the federal government for some of our disaster preparedness programs.

I want to talk about the local government services division, one of our four main areas, which is responsible for a significant part of the ministry's budget, $112.5 million. This includes about $94.6 million for grants to municipalities. That's almost close to 90 percent of our local government services. In terms of grants to local municipalities $94.6 million goes directly to municipalities. I think we all know, from the feedback that I'm getting from municipalities, that this is important and welcome news in terms of the large percentage of dollars that go to local municipalities.

From key initiatives within the local government services there are a number of initiatives that will be carried out under the nongrant portion of the local government services budget. That's going to total almost $18 million. One of our four major initiatives will be to encourage and help develop regional partnerships. You know, we've heard much about regional partnerships. Really a partnership is about: what can I do for you that you can't do, and what can we do for you that you can't do? Really, that partnership is something that I think we never want to take for granted, nor does this ministry, in working with municipal governments throughout Alberta.

In addition, we're going to continue to offer a highly successful intermunicipal dispute resolution initiative. Not always do we agree, and our ministry has played a very key role in terms of dispute mechanisms, in terms of dealing with disputes and working on resolving them. I think what's really important on this initiative is that it is not a top-down approach. We're using a bottom-up approach where we work with municipalities, because no matter if you're a federal, municipal, or provincial government, we view these as the McDonald's restaurants approach in terms of the fact that we are all horizontal in terms of serving the same taxpayer, because there is only one boss.

As well, though, we want to focus in on best practices, and this program of course encourages self-evaluation of excellence by municipalities. We want to continue to improve the processes for assessment and equalization in education requisitioning and continue to work with MLA committees to develop a uniform, equitable, and efficient property assessment system. I must say that the hon. member from Two Hills is of course chairing that committee. He's here tonight and, I see, listening very keenly and interested because he's also working with another key member of that committee, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

From a grants to municipalities perspective the local government services is administering the department's major grants to municipal governments, accounting for the $94.6 million. As I mentioned, that makes up almost 90 percent of that sector in terms of our main goals. I want to say that the major grant programs are made up of the municipal sponsorship program, which is $13.5 million, as well as the unconditional municipal grant program, which is almost $38 million, the municipal debenture interest rebates program, which is almost $11 million, and the grants in place of taxes program of almost $32 million.

As well, we have financial support in dealing with local authorities such as the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, that we work closely in partnership with, and the AAMDC, the Alberta

Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. These are important partners that of course we will continue to work very closely with.

From the municipal sponsorship program the innovative projects that improve municipal government are something we're very keen on but specifically are working toward things such as regional partnerships. The unconditional municipal grants program promotes grants to municipalities that of course allow general use and help offset some of the cost of restructuring municipalities, because the restructuring portion has been reduced and we have reallocated some funds to other priority programs, including the municipal sponsorship program.

It's important to note that the Future Summit, that's going to be coming up, is going to play a key role in terms of: what do we want municipalities to look like in the next 10 years? Big cities, small cities, medium-sized cities? If we were creating Alberta again, would we create the jurisdictions that we have today? How would we work towards more regional partnerships? Certainly that is one of the priorities of our ministry over the next couple of years in working in partnership with municipal governments.

From the public safety division I also want to say, now on to specifics, that this accounts for about $80 million in our ministry budget. This is a significant increase over last year because of the fact that $70 million is budgeted for the second year of the underground petroleum storage tank remediation program. Of course this is an important environmental initiative that's been around for some time, and I do know that all members in the Assembly agree that this is money well spent towards this environmental initiative. This program of course is conducting environmental assessments and remediating contaminated underground sites, that will go a long way towards presenting a clean environment for all Albertans alike.

From a divisional support perspective we'd also like to talk about and notice an increase under the public safety division of almost $203,000, not a lot of money, but that's for additional staff and support within that area. Of course, this area is going to provide critical support.

We have many other key initiatives, but I'm very interested in hearing the comments from across the way pertaining to our budget. In the meantime, I do want to say that safety services and the fire commissioner's office will continue to improve our assistance to municipalities in helping to ensure that safety codes are met. We also want, from a disaster services perspective, to continue to work with our municipal partners to ensure that emergency plans are tested and in place. Last year's tornado initiative in Pine Lake of course was an important initiative, that we want to continue to provide.

With that, I eagerly wait for questions, that we will be responding to, Mr. Chairman.

9:30

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It was a pleasure to listen to the minister's opening remarks this evening. I would also like to welcome the members from his department that have taken time out of their schedules to be here and to be involved in this process. I would also like to congratulate the minister on his appointment as Minister of Municipal Affairs. I'm sure that his experience in local government will serve our local leaders well now that he is directing this very important ministry.

I call Municipal Affairs an important ministry because of the influence this department has on the daily lives of Albertans. The Minister of Municipal Affairs is faced with probably the most number of cross-ministry initiatives since so much of the work done in the municipalities crosses over to other ministries. There are some key issues on which I would like to provide some opening comments. Then my colleagues and I will move into questions on the specific programs in the ministry's budget. I hope that if we are unable to get all of our questions on the table today, the minister will accept a letter with the remaining questions.

Alberta's local leaders are very appreciative of the government's recent announcement about the cut to the education property tax. The tax cut opens up room for municipalities to meet their local priorities and be more self-sufficient. That's a good thing, but I also see in the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association news release that was put out on April 24 that they still feel that provincial property taxes continue to force municipal governments to rely on grants and hand-outs instead of being able to raise and use their own funds locally.

If the Province is truly interested in creating self-reliant and accountable local governments then a significant cut in the amount the Province takes out of a community through property taxes is needed.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I'm concerned about the lack of connection between taxation and representation in the way the education property tax is collected. The province sets the tax rate, and the actual money is then collected by the municipalities and submitted to the Alberta school foundation fund. My understanding is that municipalities are still not being compensated for this required tax collection duty. The Alberta school foundation fund then takes the money and gives it to the school boards, who in turn give it to the schools to meet their budgets.

Municipal administrators in Alberta will tell all kinds of stories about the challenges of explaining to irate ratepayers that the town office is just collecting the tax and that if they don't like the rate, they should talk to their MLA. If a taxpayer doesn't like the way education is being funded, do they vote out the MLA who is not getting enough provincial funding or the school board for not spending the money the way the parents want it spent? Or maybe the parents are mad about the level of fund-raising that the school boards are now doing. Is that the fault of the provincial funding levels or local priorities?

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

I could go on about the problems with this tax, but I think the important thing to note here is that the education property tax is not just about the mill rate on property. There is a broad range of issues here, and hopefully we will see some action in the near future on them. After all, there's only one taxpayer to serve all levels of government.

I think the other key area for municipalities is the relationship with the provincial government. Alberta municipalities are looking for real action in terms of a new partnership. There has been plenty of time to talk and ponder and be philosophical. It is time to sit down at the table and start working on an agreement. The pen has to hit the paper, and the province and our local leaders need to clarify and accept their roles and responsibilities.

A third area, which I know is close to the minister's heart, is amalgamation. Each community and each municipality is proud of its identity and wishes to preserve that identity. Some continue to see amalgamation as a threat to that identity, but it sounds like it has worked well in what is now the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. I notice that throughout the ministry's business plans are commitments to working with the municipal leaders on regionalization. The ministry has for some time been pursuing regionalization through economics. By this I refer to programs like the 25 percent bonus in the lottery dollars for municipal projects. I'm not ruling out the benefits that come from regionalization, but I wonder if financial incentives from the province blur the lines between whose priority this is and who really benefits. If this were such a great idea, wouldn't the municipalities do it without direction and financial incentives?

Now, I'd like to begin to ask questions about specific programs in the ministry's budget. I would like to start by referring to the Auditor General's report which was filed March 31, 2000. It did contain his reservation of opinion. It goes on to say: "In my opinion, generally accepted accounting principles require the financial statements of the Safety Codes Council and the four DAOs." These four delegated administrative organizations are the Alberta Boilers Safety Association, the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Association, the Alberta Propane Vehicle Administration Organization Ltd., the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta. In his opinion he wants these to be consolidated in ministry financial statements.

Now, then, in my review of these statements I could not see where this recommendation by the Auditor General had been followed. I would think that if he has indicated that this is a very serious neglect in past reporting, this particular issue would have been addressed in these. So if the minister could please tell me if I have not seen these in here or if they were not included. If they haven't been, what are the plans to do this this year?

Now, Mr. Chairman, as well the 2001-2002 gross operating estimate for the department of $203.184 million reflects a $62.36 million increase over the 2000-2001 budget. Sixty million dollars of this increase is for the underground petroleum tank site remediation program.

The department's operating expenses from 2000-2001 are forecasted at 14.6 percent, $20,675,000, over budget, and their capital investment expenses are forecasted at 72 percent, or $693,000, over budget. The total forecasted budget is 15 percent, or $21,368,000, over budget. Most of this should relate to the Pine Lake disaster.

Now, then, I also notice in here that the number of full-time equivalent employees is increasing by 14, from 303 to 317.

MS BLAKEMAN: We need a breakdown.

MR. BONNER: Yes. I think it's quite in order that we do require a breakdown.

So I would ask the minister if he would provide a breakdown of the ministry's gross operating expenses of $203.184 million for 2001-2002 by object for the following components. If we could please have a breakdown of the salaries for permanent positions, the salaries for nonpermanent positions, the salaries for contract positions. If we could also have a breakdown of travel, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses.

Now, moving along, under the fee changes in the Budget 2001 fiscal plan. I'm referring to page 54 under Municipal Affairs. Municipal Affairs will be charging a fee for relocatable structure labels, from $140 per label to $30 per label. Again, if he could please provide for us what relocatable structure labels are, where they are used, who produces them, how many are produced in a year, and why the fee is dropping this year from $140 per label to $30 per label. If the fee has been too high in past years, where has the excess money gone? How many full-time equivalent positions are involved in producing and distributing these labels, and where are these positions located?

In the Municipal Affairs business plan for 2001-2002 – and again

I refer to page 296 – I see that the estimate of revenues for 2001-2002 is $376,000, and the actual is $591,000 from 2000-2001. So if the minister could please provide a breakdown of the revenues for the various types of premiums, fees, and licences. Also, a question is: why is this revenue source anticipated to drop from $591,000 to $376,000?

MS BLAKEMAN: Is it the year of decision?

MR. BONNER: Yes. Is this the year of decision?

Now, then, as well I see under revenue that the bottom line refers to "other revenue." I see that in 1999-2000 the actual amount of this particular line was $6,188,000. In the 2000-2001 budget this was $1,307,000 for a budgeted amount when the actual amount was $1,476,000, and the estimate for 2001-2002 is $1,531,000. So what I would like to know from the ministry is: what is included in other revenue, and how is this estimated?

Moving right along, I'd like to now go into program 1, the ministry support services, and I see that the estimate in 2001-2002 is $10.192 million. As well, the actual in 2000-2001 was $10.16 million, and the budget amount for 2000-2001 was $8.097 million. So the actual is $2.063 million, or 25.4 percent, over budget. The estimate is $2.085 million, or a 25.8 percent increase over the previous budget. Now, then, my questions in regard to program 1, ministry support services, are: how many full-time equivalents are employed under the ministry support services in the year 2001-2002? As well, what is the breakdown of the full-time equivalents by the three subprograms: the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, and support services?

I'd like to now refer to line 1.0.1, the minister's office. I see that in the year 2001-2002 we had an estimate of $270,000. The actual for the year 2000-2001 is $270,000, and the budgeted amount for the year 2000-2001 was $270,000. The $270,000 operating expenses represents no change from the previous year's budget or actual. So if the minister could please provide a breakdown of the $270,000 from the minister's office budget for 2001-2002. If you would please include in that the salaries for permanent positions, the salaries for nonpermanent positions, the salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and posting expenses.

Moving on to line 1.0.2, the deputy minister's office, I see that for the year 2001-2002 we have an estimated amount of $374,000. I see that the actual amount for the year 2000-2001 was $332,000 and that the budgeted amount for 2000-2001 was $302,000. So the actual is $30,000, or 9 percent, over budget, and the estimate is an increase of $72,000, 23 percent above or over the previous budget. What is the breakdown of the $374,000 the deputy minister's office budgeted for 2001-2002? If this could please be provided by outlining the salaries for permanent positions, the salaries for nonpermanent positions, the salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and posting expenses. If the minister could also indicate why the deputy minister's budget is increasing by $72,000 for this year.

The next line I'd like to refer to is 1.0.3, support services. I notice here that in the year 2001-2002 the operating estimate is $9,423,000. The operating actual for last year, 2000-2001, was $9,433,000, and for the same period the operating budget was $7,400,000. Now, as well in 2001-2002 we have a capital estimate of $125,000. For the year 2000-2001 we had a capital actual of $125,000, and for the same period we had a capital budget of $125,000. So the actual operating is $2.033 million, or 27 percent over budget, and the estimate is an increase of $2.023 million, or 27 percent over the previous budget. Then why are operating expenses of $2.033 million over budget? What is the breakdown of the $9.423 million operating estimate for support services in 2001-2002 by business planning and corporate support, communications, financial services, human resources services, information technology, and legal services?

I see that my time is running down, Mr. Chairman, so I will start with program 2, local government services, and hopefully I will have a chance later on this evening to continue with the questions. In local government services our operating estimate for this year is $111,827,000. For the last fiscal year the operating actual was $118,557,000, and the operating budget was $112,703,000. In 2001-2002 the capital estimate was $705,000. For last year the capital actual was $1,523,000, and for the year 2000-2001 the capital budget was $830,000. My questions are: how many full-time equivalents are employed under program 2, local government services? Also, what is the breakdown of full-time equivalents by the four sub-programs: division support, municipal services, assessment services, and financial assistance programs?

I see here, Mr. Chairman, that my time now has roughly expired for this particular portion, so I will take my seat and listen to comments by others. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. This is an area that I have a great deal of interest in. Being as I'm the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, I end up doing a lot of work in partnership with the city of Edmonton. I certainly attend a lot of events there, and I try to work as closely as possible with my colleagues on city council. I think that over the years we've seen some adjustments, some struggle in this department between the government's intentions and how the municipalities are receiving that and what kind of support they're looking for. It has been quite difficult.

The federal Constitution puts the authority for municipalities under the provincial governments, and certainly this provincial government is on record as saying that they regard municipalities as the children of the province, which is an astoundingly patriarchal attitude, especially in the year 2001, when we have cities that are close to a million people. I find that an astounding attitude, and certainly the Official Opposition, the Liberals, have argued for some time that there should be a more respectful and balanced relationship between the province and the municipalities.

Now, when I started to review what was being proposed through this budget, of course I went back to see where issues had arisen in the past, and my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry has already raised the issues of the delegated administrative organizations that are to report to the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. In fact, their financial statements do not appear, and they are not consolidated with the department, and that continues to be a concern. There is taxpayer money going out. Ultimately, the Safety Codes Council and the DAOs are accountable to and are controlled by the ministry and certainly get taxpayer dollars, and therefore they should form part of the ministry's reporting entity. So I, too, am asking the question of the minister as to whether that indeed is happening in this year's budget.

The second thing that I noticed from the Auditor General's report was a recommendation that the ministry establish a business continuity plan to enable the timely resumption of business in the event of a disaster. Now, specifically, what's being suggested here is that a business continuity plan should develop formal business continuity procedures, to be implemented in the event of a disaster. Alternative locations to conduct business should be identified, as well as the actions that need to be taken, and who is to undertake those actions. Without such a plan, critical time will be lost as Ministry staff will need to work out the details of how to resume business after the disaster has struck.

A regulation under the Disaster Services Act requires each department to have a business continuity plan.

That was not so, as brought forward in the annual report of the Auditor General '99-2000. I'm wondering if that indeed has been addressed in this budget. Where could I find that? When will the report be released? How do we know that the minister has indeed taken the recommendations of the Auditor General seriously and has got that under control? Given what we've seen by way of natural disasters in Canada that really have affected municipalities in the last five or six years, I think this is darn good advice, and I would sure like to know that it has been followed and that a plan is in place and is readily available and accessible to municipalities.

Now, the next thing I looked at, of course, was performance measurements, my favourite. To my dismay, there are indeed performance measurements, which is a good thing, but there's no measurement, which is a bad thing. When I look at pages in Meeting Priorities, Sharing Benefits, the business plans from Budget 2001, pages 294 to 295, I can see in fact that there is a lovely grid here. We've got goals in one column, performance indicators in a second column, the source of the information, a historical/current baseline, and a target. Delightful. Very nice. Well done. An easy-to-read grid. Just one column missing: what the outcome is.

So I read across here. Goal 1: "An effective, responsive, cooperative and well-managed local government sector." Good goal. Okay. Then I look at the performance indicator. There's quite a lengthy paragraph in here. "Level of satisfaction with the Local Government Services Division's activities, services, programs, and legislative framework in enabling," et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Okay. Great. "The individual performance targets . . . used in the calculation of the overall performance ranges from 65% to 90%." Yowsa. That's quite a range for a performance measurement. Just what is the outcome of that? Do I just pick a number that I like somewhere in between 65 and 90 percent? Do I just guess? I mean, what is it? What target has actually been hit here?

The next column: source. Well, it's an annual satisfaction survey. Boy, that'd give you a lot of information. So where is the information? Nope.

Then we skip right over to historical/current baseline. Well, the target for last year was 75 percent. Okay. Did we meet that target? Did we exceed it? Did we fall short? There's no information. That whole column is missing. Was there a printing error here? Was an entire column missed when this was printed up? Perhaps the minister could enlighten me, because the final column that fits on the page is the target, which tells me that in this budget year, 2001-02, 77 percent is what we would like to get, 77 percent of "an effective, responsive, cooperative and well-managed local government sector." In 2002-03, 78 percent, and in 2003-04, 80 percent. Well, where are we now, and where have we come from? What was it two years ago? Is this improving? We have no idea based on what's in here.

I search diligently. I go through all the pages. I read it all. I seek the knowledge, and it is not here, not one thing that tells us what the Ministry of Municipal Affairs actually did, what the outcome actually was, what the performance measurement actually was so that we could know how this department was doing. You know, close only counts in horseshoes and hand grenades, and we're a long way off on this one, Mr. Minister. I'd like an explanation on why there is absolutely no information in here, no column at all about what the performance measurement achievement actually was and where it's been in the past.

I mean, we get an hour to debate each ministry in this government, and despite the claim of being open and accountable, I just don't see the information in here. We have to go through and ask for breakdowns of every single department. Again, when I looked at budgets from five, 10, 15 years ago, all that information was provided.

Now, to be fair, they were not working on a system of performance measurements at that time, but we know better now, and we are trying to move ahead. But what is the point of saying that you're working with performance measurements when you don't actually do them? What kind of a management tool is that for the people in this department or for every single one of the municipalities that falls under this department? I'm almost at a loss for words, but I know you'll all be happy to know that I'm not at a loss for words. I could go on at some length about performance measurements. They are a useful management tool, and as government, as legislators here we are supposed to be ensuring that taxpayer dollars are spent effectively. That is the point of performance measurements. It's a good system that we've adopted here in Alberta. Some might even say and I might even agree on a good day that we were one of the leaders in this method of evaluation in the country, but not when I see this kind of thing. I mean, this is the second budget we've debated now out of the 24 of them. I sure hope I'm not going to see this kind of thing in the rest of the other 22 ministries.

Okay. So that's enough – well, it isn't enough on performance measurements. I really do look forward to what the minister is going to explain about why they're not here, how he's going to get them in there, and how he's going to get that information out to the other municipalities.

I'm going to pick up a bit from where the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry left off. We're looking at the FTEs in . . .

MR. BONNER: You were actually at a very good spot, because we're looking at goal 1.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, that's right, goal 1, which I had actually started talking about before, the "effective, responsive, cooperative and well-managed local government sector," which doesn't have a performance measurement. Anyway, questions I'm interested in. Will the minister continue using financial incentives, such as the 25 percent bonus funding in the Municipal 2000 sponsorship grant, to increase regional co-operation? All right. What type of support is the minister willing to give municipalities to effectively use technology? Is this financial or expert advice, and will this be in the form of further grants?

Now, one of the things that's happening here is that Supernet idea, where it's being run to every municipality in Alberta by such and such a time I think the promise is. I'll be real interested in the performance measurement on that one. Further to that, what's been brought to my attention is that the technology is only run to the outside of the buildings. I had anticipated that we would have this Supernet available in every library, in every municipality in Alberta, and I thought: that's wonderful. But then I talked to the libraries and some of the other agencies in these municipalities, and they go: "Well, you know, especially with library funding we don't have the money to, like, get it through the wall and upstairs and buy all the computers to hook up to this. We've got sort of a 486 in the back there that's kind of lumbering along, but we're going to have to do more chocolate bar sales, calendar sales, Christmas card sales, raffles, bingos, and casinos to raise the money to actually implement this idea, because the government's only paying to run it to the outside of the building."

Once again I just think: nice idea, great stuff. Why did you stop at the outside of the building? So what is the technical support that is being given to these municipalities to effectively use this technology? Is there nothing in addition that's going to be given? Are municipalities going to be able to apply for additional funds to get this Supernet actually workable rather than sort of a set of wires dangling on the outside of the building?

Where does the minister see opportunities for municipalities to make significant contributions to the reduction of greenhouse gases? Is there a plan that is being put forward or co-ordinated by this ministry to assist municipalities in a campaign on this? It's certainly something we all need to be working on. We certainly need a co-ordinated effort. What is happening around the municipalities?

Here's a big one: intensive livestock operations. What role does the minister see for his department in relation to regulations for intensive livestock operations? I have just felt so badly for municipalities that are out there looking for leadership from this government, looking for something concrete, and nothing. They've just been literally swinging in the wind there, and not too pleasant an odour in the wind.

MR. BONNER: One of the major questions from the AAMDC conference.

MS BLAKEMAN: And certainly a major issue at the AAMDC conference. Again, they're looking to this government for leadership, for stewardship. And a big nothing, a big zero.

I think this is one of the biggest issues to face our future, particularly for this department. I'm looking for what the minister will develop as a mechanism to address major municipal/provincial issues. What issues does he anticipate addressing? There's been a lot of talk about an initiative about, as I started out saying, what that relationship is. Where is a different kind of more equal partnership relationship between municipalities, particularly the larger municipalities in metropolitan areas, and this Department of Municipal Affairs and the government as a whole?

I note that we've had the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, in front of us for – what? – three out of the last four years or something like that. So I just thought that while I was at it, I would ask what changes the minister anticipates to the MGA in this business plan, this three-year business plan, between 2001 and 2004.

I'm aware there are others that are very anxious to speak to this, so I will cut my time short, and if possible maybe I'll sneak a bit more in at the end. I appreciate the opportunity to raise these questions. I look forward to the written responses from the minister. I appreciate the hard work of the staff in this department and I'm sure their continuing hard work to come as they answer these questions that I have put before them.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make these brief remarks on the budget estimates for the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, and I also appreciate the minister's comments about the people who have served in the municipal order of government. I would remind him, when he's doing work and talking about the role of members on committees, that there are also members on this side of the House who have some experience and would be only too happy to make a contribution.

Mr. Chairman, I served for a number of years on the Federation of Canadian Municipalities' board of directors, and every once in a while a member of that board would leave municipal politics to go on to one of the other orders of government, whether it be federal or provincial. At their last board meeting there was traditionally a speech by the president reminding them of the value of the municipal level of government and reminding them not to forget the things that we fought for while we were there, as so many people have done when they've gone on to another order of government. Some have not forgotten the value of municipal government and the many issues we have fought for, and I hope this minister is one that has not forgotten.

I realize he's new to this ministry. I congratulate him on that, and I know it will take some time to be able to put his own stamp on the department. He may or may not have had a great deal to do with the development of the budget here, given the recent election and his appointment, so I won't hold the shortcomings in this budget to his account right now, Mr. Chairman. I think he deserves an opportunity to show that he has, in fact, kept his municipal roots and understands the importance of that order of government which is the closest to the people.

There is a growing disconnection, Mr. Chairman, between the rosy financial position of the government of Alberta and the financial straitjacket faced by many Alberta municipalities, and also I include in that, of course, the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. Just a day after the provincial budget was delivered last week, Edmonton mayor Bill Smith was quoted in the Edmonton Journal as saying that the city of Edmonton faced a financial shortfall of about $90 million over the next two years.

Now, the major factor that is preventing the city of Edmonton from having to either significantly raise taxes or cut services this year is of course the profitability of EPCOR, something which I and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview campaigned very hard on, to convince the city council to reject proposals that it should be sold. We predicted, in fact, that it would become extremely profitable under deregulation, which indeed it has become. EPCOR was able to increase its dividend to the city just last year and to further increase it this year. In fact, there's some talk that if they continue to make the profits they are under the government's misguided deregulation scheme, they will allow the municipality to dispense with property taxes altogether. But I think, Mr. Chairman, that's a fantasy. That's not what it's going to end up as. Clearly the decision by Edmonton city council a couple of years ago was a very prudent one. However, relying on financial windfalls from the government's electricity deregulation scheme is no substitute for fair revenue sharing between the province and Alberta's municipalities.

When the province cut its budget back in 1993, municipal grants were cut perhaps the most deeply of all. Municipal grants were cut by more than 60 percent. Unconditional municipal grants were cut deeply and have never been restored. Policing grants were eliminated. Transit operating assistance was eliminated. Grants to support municipal public libraries were cut. Support for social housing was deeply cut. The effect of all these cuts was to download the province's budget deficit onto the backs of Alberta municipalities. The province's budget deficits are long gone. However, none of these municipal partnership programs have been restored.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think we need to take a look at that, because in this budget, if you look at the bottom line – this is on page 351 of the estimates book – the province is actually giving less support this year to municipalities than it gave to municipalities last year. The province is providing a total of $112.7 million in this year, down from $118.6 million last year. Now, can the government honestly say, can the minister honestly say that the pressures on Alberta municipalities have been reduced in the last year? Has the wind gone out of the economy? Are the number of cars on the roads fewer? Are there less people in the municipal jurisdictions? I don't think so. In fact, the pressures on municipalities have increased and with the growth in the province will continue to increase. This budget should be reflecting that, and it's not.

I'd ask the minister to consider and to respond to why the government has rejected the Alberta Urban Municipalities' position on property taxes, which says that the provincial government should vacate the property tax field altogether and give just half of that to municipalities. That would provide property tax payers with a 25 percent reduction in their property tax. It would provide an increase in property tax revenues to municipalities of one-third and should be sufficient for most municipalities to meet the needs of their citizens and to accommodate the growth that's occurring in this province. I ask the minister why the government has simply capped the portion of property tax taken by the provincial government and left it at that. It's not good enough, Mr. Chairman, in my view.

I have some specific questions to the minister. How can the government justify further reducing municipal grants when many municipalities are faced with the unpleasant situation of either having to cut service levels, raise taxes, or both? What plans, if any, does the government have to increase municipal grants in the future? Specifically in terms of line 2.4.3, grants in place of taxes, which municipalities would prefer to be called payments in lieu of taxes because they shouldn't be considered grants. They should be considered the cost of the government doing business. There should be no question of those just being considered a grant. They are the cost to the provincial government and its share of operating in municipalities in which they find themselves and their property.

In terms of that, why has the government failed to act on one of the recommendations of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, which wants the grants in place of taxes program expanded to include not only provincial buildings and property but also property owned by school boards and regional health authorities? Municipalities are required to make provision for community facilities like schools and hospitals in their land use plans and incur financial costs for roads, water, and sewer to service them, yet they have no ability to generate revenue for their property tax base. It's not fair, Mr. Chairman, and when is the government going to take action to address this?

I also have concerns about the ministry's unwillingness to provide additional funding for other municipal services such as public transit, libraries, and policing, but given that these programs are the responsibility of other government ministries, I will save my questions until those estimates are before the Assembly.

However, the Ministry of Municipal Affairs is responsible for public safety and disaster services. I note in vote 3 on page 354 of the estimates that $70 million dollars has been budgeted to do remediation for underground petroleum storage tanks. This is an important program, and I do have a couple of questions on it. Can the minister provide some additional detail on how this money will be expended? How many underground storage tanks will be remediated? Where are the storage tanks located? What efforts are being taken to recover costs from those companies who own or once owned those underground storage tanks?

Mr. Chairman, just in conclusion, it's my sincere hope that in this budget and particularly in the next budget we're going to start addressing the fundamental issue of municipalities in this province. Municipalities play an important role, a hugely important role, in the governance of this entire province, and they do so efficiently and with balanced books. It's always been a requirement that municipal governments may not run deficits, and as a result they have provided debt-free government and very efficient and very responsive government that looks after the basic needs of citizens right across the province. I think we ought to be rewarding that success. I think that municipal government has shown its efficiency, has shown its responsiveness, and has shown its democratic functioning.

Unlike the government here, Mr. Chairman, almost all decisions are made by municipal governments out in public view, with full public debate in front of the citizens. It's completely transparent, and everybody knows what's going on. We have very, very effective government at the local level in this province, something we can all be proud of. I wish the government would begin to take municipal government in this province more seriously and to provide it with the access to financial resources that it needs to meet the needs its citizens put upon it and also to meet the needs of those programs that have been downloaded from this level of government or from the federal order of government onto municipal government. It's time to take municipal government seriously, provide it with the resources and the financial capacities it needs, and it will get the job done for the citizens we all represent here.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and listen to others. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to continue along with my questions for the minister, particularly looking at page 353, program 2, local government services. I'd like to start with financial assistance programs and line 2.4.1, the unconditional municipal grants. I notice here that in the year 2001-2002 the operating estimate was $37,947,000. The operating actual for 2000-2001 was $35,434,000, and the operating budget for that same year was $39,619,000. My questions to the minister are these. Why is the estimate $1.627 million less than last year's budget? Does the minister plan on continuing cuts to this budget? What type of application process is there for unconditional grants? What monitoring is in place to evaluate how these funds are used? Will the minister provide a list of all the applications that were received under this program in 2000-2001 and all the applications that were approved?

Under goal 2 in the business plan it says: "Develop and administer new grant initiatives targeted at municipalities." What new grants does the minister anticipate developing? Would the minister also consider further reductions to the education property tax to give the municipalities more tax room to meet their local priorities?

Again, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has indicated, our local governments do a very good job, a very efficient job, a very responsible job in providing for their citizens and certainly are doing it on a shoestring budget, so this would be one way that we could give the flexibility where they could have a little more control under their own government. In exchange for this tax room, the municipalities may be willing to give up some of the smaller grant programs. Again, I know that is a major issue with our municipalities.

Now, then, looking at grants in place of taxes, line 2.4.3, I notice that in 2001-2002 the operating estimate is $31,690,000. For the last fiscal year, 2000-2001, the operating actual was $29,304,000, and the operating budget for that same year was $32 million. These grants are in place of property taxes on provincial buildings. Will the minister provide a list of where the $29,304,000 for grants in place of taxes was distributed?

Moving along to line 2.4.4, financial support to local authorities, again a very contentious issue when we do look at the whole idea of what occurs between municipal and provincial governments. I notice that in the current budget year of 2001-2002 our operating estimate is $730,000. Last year the operating actual was $14,485,000, and the operating budget for the same year was $519,000. Why is the operating actual $13.966 million overbudget? I would certainly hope the minister will provide an explanation for this. If these are with the Pine Lake tornado, could he provide us with more information in respect to that? Now, then, if it is in relation to the Pine Lake tornado, what contingency plans has the department put in place if a disaster of this scale happens again?

MS BLAKEMAN: As the AG pointed out.

MR. BONNER: Yes, as the AG pointed out in his review.

Is there any type of disaster reserve fund that the province has as a cushion in case of a major disaster like Pine Lake? Again, with our ever changing weather patterns in the province and, as a matter of fact, around the world, it seems to me we are getting more and more disasters in areas that didn't have these types of weather phenomena occurring at other times. So if there's no type of reserve fund, would the minister consider setting up some type of reserve or contingency fund for disaster support?

The next issue I would like to consider here is line 2.4.5, municipal sponsorship. I see that our operating estimate for this year is $1.5 million. In the year 2000-2001 the operating actual was $1,217,000, and the operating budget this year was a new budget item. When I look at what happened and that our dollars came from the lotteries, I see that the operating estimate for 2001-2002 is $12 million and that the operating actual and the operating budget for the previous fiscal year were also $12 million. Why has the minister not released the list of grants that were given in 2000 under this program? Will the minister release a list of all the grants that were applied for under this program since its inception? Will there be any changes to the type of funding that can be applied for under this program, or will flower pots, street paving and signs, computers, and employee wages all be covered under this grant? Also, how does the ministry monitor to make sure that the funds are spent as applied for? Again, a key question and certainly some accountability for these taxpayer dollars.

Finally, under municipal sponsorships, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister: has the ministry ever requested funds be returned because they were not spent as intended?

Now, then, as we move along here, I would like to move to program 3, public safety, and I see that our operating estimate for this year is $712,000. The operating actual for the last fiscal year was $845,000, and the operating budget for that same period was $509,000. My question for the minister: would he please explain why the estimate is $203,000 higher than the 2000-2001 budget when the actual expenses are $336,000 higher than the budget?

Also, as we look at public safety, I would like to look at line item 3.2, safety services and fire protection. Now, under line 3.2.1, program management, I see that our operating estimate for 2001-2002 was $367,000. The operating actual for the last fiscal year, 2000-2001, was $1,128,000, and the operating budget for that same fiscal year was $151,000. Why is the actual $977,000, or a whopping 747 percent, overbudget? Why is the estimate $216,000, which is also incredibly high, or 243 percent, higher than the 2000-2001 budget? Also, I would like to know what services are provided under program management in this particular category.

Now, I also notice the business plan for the years 2001-2004. In looking at goal 4, we are looking at "a comprehensive safety system that provides an appropriate level of public safety." Again, this is an issue certainly because of recent events in our province such as the Pine Lake tornado. As well, we had some very, very severe hail storms throughout the province last year. So the question to the minister: how does the ministry evaluate the appropriateness of the provincial codes and standards? Also, what is the status of the development of a provincial electronic permit system? What is the role of the municipalities in this partnership? How much will it cost? Will the system be developed in-house, or will it be in partnership with the private sector? Again, if it is in partnership with the private sector, how are these people in the private sector going to be selected by the government? Will the government or the private sector manage this particular service?

Moving along, I would like to direct my next set of questions to line 3.2.2, technical services. What services are provided by the department under technical services?

Mr. Chairman, I see my time is up. I want to thank you for this opportunity to address this set of estimates, and I also want to wish the minister and his department every success in dealing with this very difficult ministry. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Seeing no other speaker, the chair recognizes the hon. Minister for Municipal Affairs to make concluding remarks.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the members from Edmonton-Glengarry, Edmonton-Centre, and Edmonton-Highlands for their comments, and I also want to say that their feedback is very important. As I look around this room, I see mayors and aldermen and councillors and Reeves. I see a former mayor and a former president of the AUMA over there from Grande Prairie-Wapiti. As I look around this room, one thing is very important to the comments tonight: this government is and will continue to work closely with local municipalities.

To the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who I know is listening very intently of course: I will explain to him what horizontal management means in terms of the three levels of government. Of course, his medical training somewhat skewed his understanding, but I will certainly get him to that.

Now, I also want to say to the special member from down in Calgary that I look forward to his input. I want to assure the members of the Assembly that the ministry will respond in an expeditious manner to the questions they posed tonight in terms of putting together and providing a full and complete disclosure of the Minister of Municipal Affairs' budget for this upcoming budget year.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: After considering the business and proposed estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $204,014,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2002, for the following departments: support to the Legislative Assembly, operating expense, $29,838,000; office of the Auditor General, operating expense and capital investment, $16,986,000; office of the Ombudsman, operating expense, $1,754,000; office of the Chief Electoral Officer, operating expense, $7,035,000; office of the Ethics Commissioner, operating expense, $212,000; and office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, operating expense, $3,287,000.

Sustainable Resource Development, operating expense and capital investment, $197,134,000.

Municipal Affairs, operating expense and capital investment, $204,014,000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Bill 3

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to be the concluding speaker in committee on Bill 3, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001. While we haven't had a great deal of time to be able to go to different groups, different stakeholders and get some feedback on this bill, we have had an opportunity to talk to a few groups and have some debate in the Legislature on this issue, and in general we support where this bill is taking us. Certainly the amendments that we see here to this proposed act strengthen the manner in which we deal with individuals whose licences are suspended from fishing. It adjusts how fish in captivity are dealt with, some regulations that were needed as we see Albertans moving into this marketplace, and extends regulation-making authorities.

Now, I know this is a government who has not supported, certainly since '93, additional regulations, Mr. Chairman, but there are times when it is necessary, particularly when new issues arise or conditions change, causing different interpretations in acts, and this is one of those times. Our fishing industry is under great stress. We certainly need to look at options, alternatives, and new ways of doing things, and for that some regulations are necessary.

So we see these amendments as contributing to the province's capability in protecting wild fish, and that's helping to sustain the resource. We've heard some discussion tonight in the budget debates on sustainable resource development about how necessary it is to try and sustain that industry. While this bill isn't very substantive in nature, Mr. Chairman, it's at least a step in the right direction, and we look forward to seeing more action being taken in this area.

We see in this province that some of the most viable fish species are under significant pressure. They're under threat because of overfishing both commercially and through sportfishing. Part of the problem is not just the management of the resource, Mr. Chairman, but it's the way we've done the enforcement in this particular area.

I remember last spring, when I was up in the Slave Lake area talking to the people who work for the Department of Environment there about the challenges they faced in fulfilling their roles in that region. They were talking about the immense area that they needed to patrol. Slave Lake itself is a huge lake. It's a great resource and an asset for this province, but in terms of patrolling it, monitoring it to ensure that people using the lake for fishing, either commercial or sportfishing, were complying with the rules and regulations, it was an onerous task and something that they really just weren't capable of fulfilling to any sort of extent.

They have one fish and wildlife officer in that area to monitor all the lakes in the region, and it takes that officer a full day to traverse the area of the lake. So, in fact, it's absolutely impossible to properly police the area, Mr. Chairman, and that's an indicator of the kinds of issues that we're facing in this province on regulations and enforcement. While it's good to see some of these regulations being put in place, we know that they don't do us any good if we can't enforce them.

We haven't heard yet whether or not we can expect any more officers to help in that regard as a result of the budget debates, but we will. I'm looking forward to that answer and hope that in fact we see that progress in a manner that we need.

My colleague from Edmonton-Centre was going to discuss some of the feedback she'd had from parties that she had talked to, Mr. Chairman, but I will pass on her comments this evening. They were primarily around the part of the bill that deals with the derbies and the sportfishing. There is no doubt that when we see lakes and rivers under such great pressure in terms of fish stocks, we have to wonder what some of those causes are.

There are a great many people committed to sustaining fish stocks in this province who are recreational users of the lakes and rivers and who are very concerned about derbies and massive kinds of sportfishing like that. Their concern is around the kind of problems that occur in lakes and rivers during derbies. When we see a large influx of people using the lakes during these derbies, we see the resource being damaged in many cases. The lakeshore, which is habitat for egg laying, the fish themselves, even the number of fish that are killed throughout the derby, that die as a result of improper handling in a catch-and-release kind of scenario, all have a huge impact on fish stock. So there is a group of people who would like to see the end of derbies completely, not just regulations, but I think for the most part people see this as a step in the right direction. Let's try this first, let's see how it works, let's try and monitor this form of the sport to the best of our ability . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Use it to control it.

MS CARLSON: Use it to control it. That's right. Let's see where it takes us. Let's review it regularly and ensure that it's working, and then perhaps the regulations will be as far as we need to go here.

We did consult a number of stakeholder groups with regard to this particular bill. We talked to the Alberta Fish and Game Association. We thanked them for their participation. They were involved in the three-year consultation process with the government and other stakeholders. They expect that the regulations will take in most of these recommendations, so we look forward to seeing those recommendations when they come forward, Mr. Chairman, and seeing if they actually meet this group's expectations.

In general, they're fine with the bill except for the definition of sportfishing. They have a problem with that. Traditionally this has been limited to angling, and we see something new here in this particular bill. We see bow and spear fishing, which are new to me. I can't imagine being on a lake and encountering either a bow fisherperson or a spear fisherperson. Obviously they're out there, and clearly if they're out there, we need some regulations around them. Let's see where these regulations take us.

There's no doubt that when you're using a bow or a spear, catch and release doesn't work, so we need to talk about how that's managed.

Yes, definitely it's something that First Nations participate in – excellent for them – but certainly they need to participate in sustaining the fish stock, as does every Albertan. They do; they are really good when we talk about bringing forward information and practices about sustaining the environment, and certainly regulations need to be reviewed and brought forward with regard to them as well as everyone else in this province.

Trout Unlimited was also consulted on this bill, and they see it as dealing primarily with sportfishing and specifically walleye and didn't have any specific concerns. Once again, their key area of interest is habitat protection. We know that we are seeing a lot of the habitat for fish spawning particularly being degraded over time as a result of the competing pressures on the habitat, and it's a big deal for them. They do an excellent job, but they need the assistance of government and all Albertans in terms of this. The biggest concern for them is industrial development having significant impact on fish habitat. That's an area that isn't dealt with in this bill, so we'd like to see the government taking some responsibility in that regard.

The Western Walleye Council was also consulted, Mr. Chairman, and they've got some concerns. There are a number of questions they'd like to see answered, and I'd like to put those on the record and have the minister answer them for us.

They'd like the department's plans for stocking walleye in Alberta's lakes to be made public. If we could have that information. Are there any other fish stocking programs that the minister is considering cutting in the near future or any ones that he's considering adding? Are the government's plans to reduce fish stocking in public lakes tied to the promotion of private fishing opportunities in stocked ponds? If we could have some information on that, it would be helpful. Will the minister make a commitment to the Western Walleye Council and sport anglers in Alberta that they will continue stocking walleye in Alberta's lakes? They're particularly concerned about overfishing happening in those lakes that do currently have adequate walleye stocks, so what happens then is that we just perpetuate the cycle.

Mr. Chairman, those are my comments. I would like to thank the minister for his speedy responses to my colleagues' questions the other day in the House. The questions were well answered, I think. The one he didn't talk about in his response was the Auditor General's request and concerns with regard to fish stocks. We're expecting those answers to come as a result of our budget questions. So we're pretty happy with the responses and the speed with which the responses came forward.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude my thoughts on Bill 3.

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 4
Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm getting lots of direction from my colleagues here in the Legislature in terms of how long we should be speaking to this particular bill. It's not my fault that it's brought up at this time of night, and certainly we would be happy to hear any comments people have.

This is my first opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to speak to Bill 4, the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001. We're seeing legislation passed through this House at an alarmingly speedy rate this particular session. I understand everybody's keen interest in getting back to their home constituencies and their gardens or their farms or their families, but there is a rule for the Legislative Assembly and legislative scrutiny in this process. Certainly as part of the Official Opposition we will fulfill that role to the best of our abilities given our numbers.

All of these bills, when they come in, Mr. Chairman, we send out to a variety of stakeholder groups, and we hope that we will get the responses back from people prior to their flowing through all of the various stages available in this House. In fact, on this particular bill we haven't had feedback from the stakeholders yet. However, the surface rights group is a group that I have been in contact with regularly for a number of years now, and certainly I understand their concerns in this area. No doubt this bill is one good step in the right direction in terms of the kinds of outstanding issues we have on surface rights.

What we'll see with Bill 4 is that the compensation limit will be increased from $5,000 to $25,000 for damages that can be claimed by people who have problems with companies moving in on their land. That starts to come close to the costs of damages that can be incurred. With this larger ceiling being put on the claims, we're going to see less time and money being spent within the court system, and that's good, Mr. Chairman, because definitely our courts are backlogged. It's a speedy process, and most people would like to see their issues resolved outside of the court system.

The process now is that landowners negotiate compensation with oil and gas and mineral companies for giving them the access rights to move onto their land and access whatever it is they're going after. Sometimes the compensation for this is something that can't be agreed upon, and they have the option to go before the quasi-judicial provincial Surface Rights Board for a decision. So with these limits being raised, we're going to see that this board is going to be a lot busier than it was before. It's a step in the right direction, I think something that we support.

Definitely there are other issues on surface rights that need to be addressed, and certainly we look forward to their being addressed. Most of those are issues with adjacent landowners who are eligible with this particular bill for compensation. So a lot more outstanding issues to be talked about, but certainly this is a step in the right direction and something that we will support.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 1, 2001

1:30 p.m.

Date: 01/05/01

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly a number of international visitors who are here with us today and seated in your gallery: the Hon. John Aquilina, Member for Riverstone, Australia, and Minister for Education and Training, whom I will be meeting with later today to discuss a number of issues relevant to education. Mr. Aquilina is joined by his wife, Anne, and his chief of staff, Michael Waterhouse. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, our next international guest in your gallery is Maria Jose Viana, Secretary of Education, from Alagoas, Brazil. Ms Viana was sponsored through the Rainbow of Hope for Children in Wainwright to speak at the ATA learning network global environment and outdoor education conference in Canmore, April 26 to 29. Accompanying Ms Viana is George Bunz, president of the Rainbow of Hope for Children, and her interpreter, Anna Driedgr. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly today Mr. Colin Robertson, who's the Canadian consul general stationed in Los Angeles. This is Mr. Robertson's first official visit to Alberta since his appointment, and we're pleased to welcome him. California is Alberta's second largest trading partner, with exports totaling $5.1 billion last year. It's a strong, dynamic, and growing relationship, but there are certain ways to expand and improve it, especially in the context of the recent discussions about continental energy supplies.

There are also numerous opportunities for further partnership between Alberta and California in natural gas, high technology, education, agriculture, and particularly with respect to our Supernet initiative, where there are excellent opportunities. The consul general's visit is an excellent opportunity to discuss these areas and ensure Alberta has a strong voice in California. We look forward to building a strong and productive relationship with Mr. Robertson in the coming months and years. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 15 residents of Slave Lake, 132 residents of Lethbridge, Fort Macleod, and Coaldale, and 940 residents of the city of Edmonton. The petitioners are asking the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or belief that human life is sacred.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government to ensure that maximum penalties are enforced for all crimes committed with weapons and that all youth involved in weapons related crimes be tried in adult courts.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund I would like to table the report of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund for the 2000-2001 fiscal year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, May 2, I will be moving that written questions and motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 8

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 8, being the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2001.

This bill implements reductions to corporate income tax rates and the elimination of the capital tax on financial institutions as announced last fall in response to recommendations made by the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee. The bill also incorporates the amendments contained in Bill 22, which was introduced into the Legislature last year but not passed, and some technical amendments resulting from changes made to the federal Income Tax Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 8 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Bill 205
Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection)
Amendment Act, 2001

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Municipal Government (Farming Practices Protection) Amendment Act, 2001.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Bill 206
Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Regional Health Authorities Conflicts of Interest Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will bring about the same kind of conflict of interest legislation and guidelines as we have for a lot of the other government positions. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you. It is my pleasure to table with the Assembly today the required number of copies of Alberta Transportation's three-year highway construction and rehabilitation program, including the north/south trade corridor projects, covering the years 2001-02 to 2003-04. Also included are copies of the construction of public roads and bridges for the years 2001-02 to 2003-04.

Further, Mr. Speaker, each MLA will be receiving information relating to the project listing that applies to their individual constituency. With respect to the listing of highway projects, those MLAs whose constituencies are within a city will receive information relating to the entire city. Of course, if any further information is necessary, they can always get in contact with our office.

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Speaker, today I'm very pleased to table with the Legislative Assembly the annual report of the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal for the year 2000. Additional copies of the report are available through my office.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly this afternoon five copies of the 1999 vital statistics annual review. The review summarizes all births, marriages, deaths, and stillbirths that occurred in 1999 in Alberta and meets our legislative requirement under the Vital Statistics Act. My office will be providing copies to all members.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

1:40

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I would like to table five copies of the report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the Edmonton-Highlands by-election, held June 12, 2000, and the Red Deer-North by-election, held September 12, 2000. Copies were distributed to members on January 15, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three brief tablings, if I might. First, I'd like to table five copies of the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association, AMPPIA, award winners for 2001, which were announced last Saturday evening in Calgary, an event that was attended by a guest in your gallery, our consul general to California, along with our Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and our Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. This list reflects many of the excellent production projects that occurred during the year 2000 and reflects many projects that received financial and other support from our Alberta Foundation for the Arts. Congratulations to all of those winners.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter of congratulations to Dr. Horst Schmid, a former member of this Assembly and a close personal friend of many people here including myself, who received a great honour from AMPPIA this last weekend. He was presented with the 2001 friend of the industry award arising out of his many years of dedicated support to this industry, which included helping to create the Alberta film festival, the Banff International Film Festival, and the Alberta Motion Picture Development Corporation.

My final tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter to Mr. Leon Lubin, the former executive director of AMPPIA, regarding his recent retirement and thanking him for his tireless efforts to "keep it rolling" in Alberta. We all wish him very much success in his endeavours.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter from Ms Merla Gibson of the Canadian Federation of University Women, Alberta Council. In this letter she's urging, on behalf of this council, the government to eliminate public library fees.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a report just released today by the Canadian Orthopaedic Association and the Arthritis Society of Canada. The title of the report is Canada in Motion, and the main point that the report makes is the long waiting list for orthopedic surgery in the country.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today five copies of the agreed statement of facts filed in the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta between Her Majesty the Queen and Ziad Jaber.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table today a letter that I received recently from the Minister of Government Services regarding the elimination of the propane fuel tax in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the home page for the ConCerv.com web site, and this one is specifically entitled An Alternate Vision for Rosedale – Adaptive Re-use of Historic Powerhouses.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had the pleasure this afternoon of meeting with four young ladies, university students who belong to the Youth Coalition Against Poverty. They brought a petition to me which will be tabled in the near future. They also offered to help myself and the government address the whole issue of homelessness. I would like the Assembly to extend a warm welcome to Meera Pandompatam, Shreyasi Gollapudi, Aliya Jamal, and Roseanne Yeung. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a very special honour for me during Education Week to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the very first school from my constituency that I've ever had the pleasure of introducing in my history as the MLA for Calgary-Egmont, and it's great. We have with us today 32 very bright grade 6 students from St. William school in Willow Park with their energetic teacher Mrs. Donna Brashko. Helping Mrs. Brashko is another teacher, Mrs. Pat Jarabek, and three accompanying parents: Ms Diane Wirring, Mrs. Claudette Westerbeek, and Mr. Bruce Foxall. They all got here safely thanks to bus driver Mr. Roy Taylor. I had the pleasure of visiting with this class last Friday, and I can assure you that these students mirror the enthusiasm of their teacher, Mrs. Brashko, who really is opening up a world of opportunity for these bright young minds. I would ask that my guests, seated in the members' gallery, please stand and receive the warmest welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce a very special group of 24 bright young minds who are here visiting the Legislature from a wonderful school in my constituency, that being W.P. Wagner school. In their midst is another very special young gentleman, whom I believe you had the pleasure of meeting here not long ago at our Youth Parliament session. His name is Ken. They are all accompanied by a very dedicated and energetic teacher, who consistently helps these people achieve very high marks in all subjects. Her name is Arlene Cairns. I would ask this very special group to please now rise and receive the very warm and friendly welcome of our Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the K to 12 school from Mallaig, who will be arriving at 2 p.m. Mallaig community school, with 275 students, is a place where students honour and respect each other's differences and beliefs. Mallaig school is a strong community school offering dual-track education in French and English. The school also recognizes and teaches both Catholicism and Lutheranism. Mallaig is very famous for their school sports, especially for volleyball and their team, the Stingers. Visiting us today is a grade 10 class accompanied by their teacher Todd Tanasichuk.

Thank you, very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today, in particular it being Education Week, to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature students from the Mountain View school in Calgary-West. They are accompanied by teacher Mrs. Jane Lizotte and the school president, Mr. Doug Wright. Would they please stand and receive a very warm welcome from this Assembly.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I've just been advised that perhaps the youngest person in the members' gallery is with us today. Gordon Olsen, who runs our office in Calgary, has his young daughter with him, Catherine. I would like her – that's right – to be held and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members in the Assembly Jim Ragsdale from the Edmonton-Glengarry constituency. Jimmy was a tireless worker during the last election, and I would like him to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Teachers' Salaries

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. Why insert a 6 percent salary budget line in the budget if it is not a solid commitment that you expect the school boards to keep?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I said, that line item was put in the budget – I indicated this to the media yesterday, and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was present at that news conference – I think to remove all expectations on the part of the teachers' union, the ATA, that a 30 percent increase is in the books when in fact it is not.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, when the Premier says that they can actually take money out of the increase in the instructional grants to supplement this, how does he expect it to be any kind of a guideline?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we think that a 6 percent raise is enough for those school jurisdictions that haven't completed their negotiations with teachers to make their teachers amongst the highest paid if not the highest paid in Canada. The boards can negotiate higher salaries if they wish, using funds from their general instructional grants. That flexibility is available to the various school boards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the minister of human resources. Can the minister of human resources, who is responsible for the Labour Relations Code, tell us if the Minister of Learning has conferred with him to determine the possible impact of the salary line item on the collective bargaining process?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader, it's inappropriate to raise questions with respect to inner-cabinet consultations. However, if the minister wants to venture forth, he may choose to do so.

MR. DUNFORD: No.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Premier, please. How can the Premier say that there is flexibility in the system when the government has effectively given local school boards a floor or a guideline for teachers' salaries, which is basically 6 percent?

MR. KLEIN: A guideline is precisely that, Mr. Speaker, a guideline. As I indicated to the hon. member, the school boards do and will have the flexibility to increase wages, if they so wish, using the general instructional grants.

I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning further respond.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, as you know, included in this year's budget for the first time was a 6 percent line item that would ensure that our teachers would be the highest paid among provinces in Canada. During the election campaign we heard one very important issue, and that was the classroom issue. We heard about class size. We heard about functioning of classrooms. What Budget 2001 does is allow the school boards the flexibility of close to $135 million in the first year, followed by $240 million the second year, to be able to put those towards teachers' salaries, if they so wish, to be able to put them towards the classroom. The question that I always get since that time has been: well, you took away our flexibility. For the last 50 years the school boards have been negotiating teachers' salaries versus classroom issues out of their general grant. In actual fact what we have done is made it easier for them in that we have said that we want the teachers to have at least 4 percent and 2 percent. That's the issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When they say that they're going to make it at least 6 percent, does that not bind the school boards and create expectations on the public's behalf that the school boards are now expected to live up to? Does that not interfere with the collective bargaining process?

MR. KLEIN: No, it doesn't interfere with the collective bargaining process, Mr. Speaker. This is a budget item. I'm sure that the Leader of the Official Opposition would like the assurance that he's going to get a 6 percent raise. If he were back being a university professor and the board of governors said that he will be guaranteed at least 6 percent, I don't think he'd be whining.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I left the university when they told me how I could get my budget set.

Will the Premier confirm that the strategy of inserting 6 percent in the budget was a mistake now that he's indicated that it's only an opening offer?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker, it's not a mistake. It's a clear signal that school boards have at least 6 percent to give their teachers plus the flexibility to provide more, if absolutely necessary, from the basic instructional grants. I think it's a good deal. It's a good deal from a budget point of view, and it's a good deal for the ATA, because they know that they have that in their pocket. What do they say? A bird in the hand is better than two in the bush?

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Learning indicated that the budget included a final position of 6 percent for teachers' salary increases over two years. In the past number of days a number of figures have been attributed to the Premier. Yesterday, and I quote: a low position of something in the neighbourhood of 6 percent. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Was the 6 percent the opening offer or the final offer for teachers?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, for roughly the fourth time in this Assembly I will stand up and answer the same question. As I made it abundantly clear the day of the budget, as I made it abundantly clear one day, two days, and three days after the budget, the teachers are guaranteed a 4 percent raise this September 1 and a 2 percent raise next September 1. But there is nothing stopping the teachers and the school boards from sitting down and negotiating what is the most important factor in their school. If the teachers and the school boards feel the most important factor is class size, then the money will go to class size. If it's teachers' salaries, then it will go to them.

Mr. Speaker, what we have done here is put the flexibility in the hands of the school boards and the teachers, the people who know what's going on in the schools by far the best, and the decision is up to them as to how they spend that $135 million. We have guaranteed by using 4 and 2 percent that our teachers will be the highest paid in the land, and I think that's great, but if the school boards want to make them higher, they can. They have a flexibility in this budget actually to increase by an extra 10 percent, up to close to 16 percent, if they so wish. It is up to the school boards and it is up to the teachers to determine what the most important need is in their particular school district.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will negotiations be reopened with those teacher groups who have already settled for less than 6 percent?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, there are roughly seven boards who have already signed for the upcoming year, and these boards will have the ability as of September 2001 – again, in the contracts what has to occur is that both the teachers and the school boards have to agree to open the contract. They have the ability to take the 4 percent at that time if they so wish. If they don't wish, the school board can keep it. That 4 percent has to be for teachers' salaries because we on this side feel teachers are important.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier has indicated that there is no money hidden in the school board operations budget, just where is the money for settlements above 6 percent to come from?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I already indicated that there is a line item relative to salaries. There's also a line item relative to instructional grants. As the hon. minister pointed out, the school boards have the flexibility to use that instructional grant to assess and meet their own priorities.

DR. OBERG: If I may on this issue, Mr. Speaker. Included in the budget this year is $115 million, that they have the ability to use. Included next year is another 3 percent, which is close to $100 million or a little over $100 million. So in the two years they have $215 million that they can use for exactly what the hon. member has just asked.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Orthopedic Surgery Waiting Lists

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Canadian Orthopaedic Association and the Canadian Arthritis Society have released two studies, both indicating that the national indirect economic impact of excessive waiting lists is close to $18 billion per year due to lost productivity. In a survey of September 2000 the Capital Region Medical Staff Association showed that Edmonton patients were forced to wait up to nine months for orthopedic surgery. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the estimated economic cost of long waiting lists to the economy of Alberta?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can say with some confidence that those individuals who actually use the health care system indicate a very high level of satisfaction with the service that they receive. Having said that, there are some legitimate issues as they relate to waiting lists for a number of different areas, and I can say with confidence also that we are addressing them. We have made a number of announcements over the last year that have dealt with waiting lists in a number of critical areas, and we've made announcements and made good on our promises to invest in the areas of people, plant, and equipment. As a consequence and including some moneys targeted specifically at waiting lists, there are improvements being demonstrated.

I cannot answer the hon. member's question as it relates to an economic cost that I'm aware of – that kind of analysis has not been done – but I can say with confidence that our waiting lists are going down, Mr. Speaker. The number of physicians has gone up, the number of nurses has gone up, and the number of people waiting in lines and the times that they are waiting have gone down.

DR. PANNU: My supplementary to the minister: are waiting lists for orthopedic surgeries in Calgary and the rest of the province as bad as they currently are in the city of Edmonton?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of orthopedics in particular is a very interesting one. One of the areas that we have invested in is a centre of excellence in bone and joint in the city of Calgary. When it comes to strictly competing on the basis of remuneration for physicians and health care professionals, it will be very difficult for the province of Alberta to compete with many other jurisdictions that are able to provide more financial remunerations to such professionals. However, by providing investment and environments in research and gathering critical mass, we are being very successful in recruiting people. Again, it's not just people. It's a balance of people, plant, and equipment that we've invested in. We think the centre of excellence in bone and joint in Calgary is an excellent initiative and is already paying dividends for us.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the minister: is the private, for-profit provision of orthopedic services still one of the major options that the government is considering using to reduce the waiting lists?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, that I am aware of, nobody has put that proposal before us to have, for example, hip replacements done in a private surgical facility. I can say that for those services that have been approved under private surgical facilities, the total value of contracts, some 34 contracts, amounts to just under $10 million out of an overall global budget of roughly $6 billion. So it is a relatively small part of our health care system. I'm not suggesting it is unimportant, however. Should the College of Physicians and Surgeons determine that it is medically safe – medically safe – to provide any kind of service under a private surgical facility, then certainly we'll give it consideration.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, since the release of the budget there has been a lot of discussion in my constituency and elsewhere about teachers' salaries. It's been suggested that teachers are not keeping pace with inflation. Can the Minister of Learning tell me how the salary of a teacher who started teaching in my constituency of Red Deer-North in '92-93 would compare to a teacher starting today?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If I may, I will use figures from Red Deer public as opposed to Red Deer Catholic. A teacher who started off in 1992-93 in their first year of teaching would have received $30,864. Today that same teacher would be earning $54,330. With a potential 6 percent increase in the budget, that we've talked about several times here, they would earn $57,633 by 2002-2003. That's an 86 percent increase.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would again ask the Minister of Learning. Based on this salary grid, how would a teacher at the maximum end of the scale compare from '92-93 levels to current levels of pay today?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It does vary with jurisdictions, but in general the teachers with 11 years' experience in 1992-93 versus 11 years' experience today would have received a net increase of about 12 and a half percent. What that means is that they have received increases of 17 percent, and as you know, they did receive a decrease of 5 percent in the '94-95 budget year.

So in general a teacher with four years' experience would have been making about $52,000 in '92-93 and would be making roughly a little over $59,000 today.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, with these different rates of salary increase, can the Minister of Learning explain how this grid system works and how it benefits all Alberta teachers?

DR. OBERG: I'll keep it very short, Mr. Speaker. Very quickly, what happens is that for the first 11 years of a teacher's career the teacher receives an automatic increase on the grid, so over those 11 years, regardless of any increases, the teacher would be increased. What you have is a second component, which adds to the compounded effect of the increase which led to the 86 percent increase, and that increase is due to the actual amount per year. So that's what brings it up to the 86 percent increase that I talked about earlier.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

School Closures

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Education Week continues, so, unfortunately, do the school closures across the province. Yesterday the Premier said that he had no idea how many school closures we will see, if any. One estimate has put that as high as 20 percent of all public schools in the province. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier acknowledge that school closures are caused by his government's school utilization formula?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, school closures are caused by people or the lack of people. You know, if there are no students, there is no need for schools. I mean, that makes perfect, logical sense. Would this hon. member keep a school open to accommodate no students? Yes. Well, he's a Liberal, and he would.

Mr. Speaker, as I explained yesterday, the dynamics and the demographics of municipal districts and counties and municipalities are constantly changing, and to accommodate those changes, school boards have to make decisions. Where schools are being closed, new schools are being built in other areas where they are needed. It's happened in the past, it's happening now, and it will happen as long as we live and for many, many, many years thereafter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier acknowledge that the families hurt by school closures are those in inner-city neighbourhoods and those in rural communities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, school boards are not there to hurt people. They're there to administer good education and good education opportunities for our young people. They put themselves up for election, and they undertake a commitment to provide quality education, as this government makes a commitment to provide the funding for quality education to the best of our ability. The simple fact is that changing dynamics, changing demographics cause some schools to be closed and other schools to be opened. It's as simple as that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier:

will the Premier commit to celebrating Education Week by scrapping his flawed utilization formula?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: The utilization formula is not flawed, Mr. Speaker. It comes down to very simple mathematics and economics that perhaps even the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar can understand. If there are no students, then there's not a need for a school. If there are many students, then there's a need for a school.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Agriculture Safety Net Programs

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year this government recognized and responded to the economic crisis in the oil and grain sector of the agriculture industry by providing two payments of $4.29 and $6 for a total of $10.29 per acre. Just last Friday the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development announced a further payment for the year 2000 of $10.29 an acre, even though commodity prices have not significantly increased and the input costs have risen significantly, especially with nitrogen fertilizer going up by $20 to $30 an acre because of natural gas prices. So it's argued that natural gas prices have actually increased the provincial coffers while increasing farm input costs. Could the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development assure the farmers of this province that if the commodity markets do not improve over the summer months, this government will continue to listen to their concerns and provide a further acreage payment this fall?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the one thing I can assure the hon. member and all hon. members is that this government will continue to listen very carefully to agricultural producers' concerns.

Will we provide a further acreage payment? I think that would be purely hypothetical, although we do know that markets have not improved significantly, that commodity prices are rising slightly but not nearly as the rise of input costs. What I believe would be more responsive to the producers of this province is to continue the work on the review of the safety net program so that producers can operate from year to year with an assurance that they can manage some of the risks that are associated with producing a crop.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could the minister outline for this House how much of the recent payment that was announced on Friday comes from the Provincial Treasurer and how much comes from the federal government?

MRS. McCLELLAN: The federal government provided $500 million for all of Canada for oil and grain producers. Alberta's share of that was $126.8 million. I think that the agreement committed us to cost sharing that at 60 percent federal and 40 percent provincial, which would have meant that we would have contributed about $85 million. I think the hon. member will know, as producers do, that we contributed significantly higher than that, and from the calls I've had in my office, Mr. Speaker, the agricultural community is quite appreciative of that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, based on what the minister tells me, could she tell me why we are providing less per acre this year than we did last year, even though the input costs are higher this year?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the farmer is receiving exactly the same amount this year as they did last year. We would have liked to have been able to provide more. However, as we go through the budget debate department by department, we'll understand that we were trying to meet all of Albertans' priorities.

We've made some commitments to producers in other areas. We have a number of programs in place, so our commitment is much higher than the $10.29 an acre, and we'll continue with that commitment. It's maybe not enough, but it's what we could do. I think that if you look at the summer rebate program for irrigation farmers, if you look at the 30 percent reduction in crop insurance premiums, and if you look at the continued support they'll get through Bill 1, the producers in this province will recognize that this government supports what they're doing, appreciates what they're doing, and will continue to listen to them and work with them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Health Information Act

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although the Health Information Act was proclaimed last week, the minister of health has announced a six-month implementation grace period. My questions are to the minister. What steps will the minister be taking to prevent people from disregarding the act during this grace period?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a good question. I think the best answer rests with the fact that we worked greatly with stakeholder groups who will be working with the Health Information Act, and we'll continue to work with them. We provided such stakeholders with information sessions, indicated to them how the act is intended to work and how it is not intended to work. I should give a good deal of credit to the Information Commissioner, who has done a great deal of service in this particular regard.

Mr. Speaker, we know that there are some concerns as they relate to how the act should work and shouldn't work, which is why Mr. Clark, the Information Commissioner, indicated that he would have this six-month grace period to allow for transition before we got into a situation like the hon. member has identified. Also, we've made the commitment that if there are difficulties with particular parts of the regulations, we can take that six-month period and make amendments to them as may seem fit.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The act exempts medical records generated by private health care providers. Will the minister explain this exemption?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has said is correct. Our first priority has to be with the publicly administered system. It has been raised as an issue that perhaps private providers should fall within the scope of this act. That issue is being considered; however, the final decision on whether that will in fact be implemented has not yet been made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under section 38 of the act the Premier's personal medical records could be filed in the provincial archives without the Premier's consent if a future minister of health feels they have enduring historic value. Has the minister explained this to the Premier?

MR. MAR: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Library Funding

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Libraries: the past, the present, the future; exciting new technologies, new innovative ways of delivering service. Postbudget, post library conference held last weekend in Jasper, my questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Mr. Minister, will the $700,000 identified for libraries within your budget be used to increase the per capita funding, cut in 1994, or will it be used to bring the 1997 census figures now used to current 2000-2001 population numbers?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the $700,000 increase in this year's budget, which takes Alberta library funding from about $14.2 million up to $14.9 million, is quite specifically to reflect the population growth that we've experienced in various parts of this province. It is not part of the per capita increase that we heard so much about in the Jasper convention this weekend. That issue was raised on a number of occasions, and I did promise them that I would have a look at that and see what the impact is or isn't as we look at this very important aspect of the Alberta intellectual advantage.

MRS. GORDON: Again to the same minister. As new technologies evolve, are there any plans within your department – and I stress within your department – to further assist the Alberta Library, TAL, to expand the patron-popular, patron-satisfied Alberta Library card, that allows many Albertans walk-in access to borrowed books through any one of over 300 participating libraries in Alberta? A wonderful card, a wonderful system.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the project is a wonderful project, and I'm very supportive of it. TAL, as we may know, is the Alberta Library. It's a consortium that reflects the concerns of about 245 libraries in this province. One of their important projects is this universal access card for library services for those individuals or those libraries who are part of that particular membership system. While we do provide $50,000 a year annually to this consortium, there are no plans at this stage to expand that money to further the Alberta Library card project, not at this time.

I would say that we did increase the Alberta public library electronic network funding by another $1.75 million, which is a partnership project between us and the TAL group. Also, Mr. Speaker, on the weekend I presented a cheque for $25,000 to a project that involves the CNIB and the TAL group, and that's called VisuNet, to help users who find it impossible in fact to use conventional print materials. So there are two very good projects there that they've benefited from.

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Minister, what role postbudget do you see libraries playing at the community level in year 2001 and beyond, whether that library be in downtown Edmonton or in Mirror, Alberta, population 487?

THE SPEAKER: Well, that sure leads us to an opinion statement and request.

So let's move on to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Drug Treatment Courts

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Justice. Would the minister please inform this House about the status of his discussions with the federal Justice department concerning the establishment of drug treatment courts in Alberta?

MR. HANCOCK: I haven't had those discussions yet, Mr. Speaker, but I'm looking forward to them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Has the minister done any research at all in his department as to the estimated cost to the province of establishing and operating such a court?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of priorities in the department with respect to dealing with issues of significance, and certainly dealing with drugs is an issue of significance, but at the present time I don't believe we have any studies going on with respect to establishing a drug court. There was an announcement or a discussion from the federal minister some months ago about a keenness to get on with that type of a project, and I believe that we have at the senior officials level some discussions happening.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. As part of those discussions that are happening, then, can the minister enlighten the House as to whether the department is considering drug treatment courts in both Edmonton and Calgary or just one of those cities?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, no, Mr. Speaker, because as I've indicated, the discussions are at a preliminary level among senior officials. I've indicated that I have an interest in proceeding in that direction if we can do it within the context of our budgetary allotment. We've got a number of priorities on the table. I certainly think drugs are a priority, and if we can proceed in that direction, I'm very interested in doing so.

So I've indicated to our senior officials an interest in the area. As soon as we heard that the federal minister was interested in drug courts, I asked them to engage in the discussion, and when it gets to a level where we have some information as to what the federal government is prepared to do in the area, how much in the way of resources they're prepared to put into it, and how we can fit into their proposal, it'll come to my table for a policy decision.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Automatic Bank Debit Authorization

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of thousands of Albertans now pay their bills, mortgages, car payments, and make charitable and political contributions through automatic debits on their bank accounts. One of the most disturbing aspects of the National Post negative option billing case I asked about last week is the fact that they were given access to an automatic debit arrangement set up with a different supplier, being the Edmonton Journal. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. What protection, if any, exists to prevent a supplier from tapping into a consumer's automatic debit account to charge them for a service that they neither ordered nor agreed to pay for?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue that the hon. member brought up last week: I just want to let this House know that the matter is still under review. Evidence to this date appears to indicate that this particular campaign began about two or three months ago, and it's not really known whether or not anyone's account has actually been debited at this point in time. However, we're continuing to investigate. The newspapers that are involved have stated that they are prepared to provide a refund to anyone who has been billed, and that is still under review as well. The national newspaper that is involved has in the meantime suspended the entire campaign.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that, but it was not the question.

Will the minister commit to action to ensure that third parties cannot direct financial institutions to alter debit billings without the expressed permission of the account holder?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, under the financial act that we have in place today, we are not required to protect privacy, as banks and other federally regulated financial institutions are regulated by the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, which came into effect January 1, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question really is: can we prevent financial institutions from altering debit arrangements at the request of a third party without the permission of the account holder?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, section 22 of our own FTA states that a customer is not liable to pay for goods or services and would have a claim against any supplier or any financial institution if funds were withdrawn without authorization.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Protection against Family Violence Act

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Protection against family violence is an important issue to all of us here in this Legislature. It's an issue on which we all would like to see positive steps taken. There are many victims in these cases, and protection is extremely important. Removing the antagonist is certainly a major step in the protection of these victims. It's also critical to maintain some form of stable home life. My question is to the hon. Minister of Children's Services. The new Protection against Family Violence Act has been said to be a success story to improve the lives of abused persons in Alberta. Can the minister tell us how many victims have been able to stay in their homes because of this act?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure, indeed, to profile the new act and what it has resulted in. From June '99 when it was evaluated, from that period forward to February of this year we've had 224 victims that have been able to stay in their homes. It is not only a success because the abuser is prevented from contacting the victim either in the home, the workplace, or in the school but because in co-operation with the Minister of Justice and the authorities in Justice we've been able to get the abuser in to receive help more quickly. They are up in a courtroom setting. Agencies are there to start the healing process with all members of the family, focusing on the abuser but also being conscious of the needs of the victim and the victim's family as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary, then, is to the same minister. Can the minister clarify to us how the Protection against Family Violence Act has helped reduce family violence in Alberta?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, over the past few months, while we have had this opportunity to review the legislation, we have had a third-party consulting firm, Howard Research, conduct an evaluation of the success of the legislation. One of the most dominant characteristics is the increased awareness not only by those people that are involved, such as the police, social workers and so on, but the increased awareness of the kinds of support we can give to victims of violence.

Mr. Speaker, this report I will table today in the appropriate number of copies so that other members who may not have been privileged to hear of the release of it last year will have an opportunity to review the context in which we find ourselves today; that is, more people receiving help at an earlier stage. Families that have been previously subjected to violence are aware of another opportunity to create protection within the family as well. We have reduced the incidence of family violence behaviour. I urge people to read this report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Children's Services tell us whether funding has increased this year for shelters in Alberta?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it has increased from $11 million to $13.6 million. This is significant not only because of the help that we are being able to give people, not only in the 19 shelters inclusive of which are two second-stage housing opportunities, but because we are also going to assist the shelters throughout Alberta to track their statistics, to know where those people that are not in fact admitted to shelters are provided accommodation. Last year we provided alternate accommodation for some 8,600 people. We have to look at opportunities that allow us to be more knowledgeable and serve better the needs of the family that is a victim of violence.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

School Transportation

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Children's

Forum report of 1999 recommended that legislation be implemented to reduce the time that students spend on buses. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that busing students is an issue across this province, will the minister support legislation to reduce busing time for children?

2:30

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, what we have now is varying degrees of busing around the province. Obviously this is a large province. In some rural areas in my own constituency I have people that are probably 40 to 45 minutes from their closest school. That's purely an element of distance. In the urban surroundings what we do is for anything over 2.4 kilometres we pay for the busing. I don't feel that putting in legislation limiting the time in busing would be advantageous at all in this province, because we have so many people that are so spread out and, quite frankly, are a long ways from existing schools. We are not going to be building schools for one student.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is this government reluctant to reduce busing time for students when we know that these hours could be better spent on learning rather than riding?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has an excellent point. Obviously, if these kids were in school for the extra hour, it would be much better for the student. But there are some physical realities in Alberta, and those physical realities are that the people are a long way from schools and we have to get them there. We are not going to go back to the 4 by 4 system, that was instituted in this province in the 1900s, where they said that there would be a school every four miles because that's how far a person could walk. We're not going to go back to that system. He has a good point about expanding learning opportunities. I would love to be able to do that, but the distances are there in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Transportation. Does this minister support legislation to reduce the time students spend on buses and thereby increase the safety of our roads for all Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: We're on the subject of safety here, not the minister's personal opinion.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I would say that this province of Alberta enjoys some of the best roads in Canada, some of the best maintained roads and best side roads. I think that leads greatly to the safety of our most treasured possessions, and that's our children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Hotel Tax

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Presently the Alberta government collects about $45 million in hotel taxes. It's a lot of dollars. My hotel/motel association in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and their operators would like to see this tax eliminated. How was this addressed in this budget?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: You'd like me to stand up or speed it up?

THE SPEAKER: No. You can go with that, but we're going to have your estimates before us here, too, before too long.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The rationale for not addressing the tax in the recent budget was that the tax was indeed reviewed in the fall of 2000 by the Alberta Business Tax Review Committee. At that point the tax committee found that this hotel tax does not constitute an unfair tax.

My understanding of this issue that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne raises is that the money that's being raised in the form of a tax should be more directed towards tourism spending. This government doesn't as a rule tie tax revenues to specific programs. However, we are listening and in the last redefinition of our budget found $2 million more to put towards tourism spending. That brings the total tourism spending to $18 million. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that my department and I are very anxious to continue finding ways to promote the beautiful province that God's given us through tourism.

Thank you.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, leading to my last question: if the government is looking to review this, when will this review actually happen, and when will it be complete?

MR. NORRIS: Well, Mr. Speaker, part of the Alberta advantage of course is the fact that this government listens very closely to businesses and their input on taxes and how we deal with those taxes raised and spent. As such – and hon. members all know this – we have the lowest tax burden in Canada on businesses, and that's why they keep setting up here.

With regard to reducing business taxes, this government is committed to reducing business taxes over $1 billion in the next four years, Mr. Speaker. It continues to be the best and the envy of Canada. With regards to this specific tax, my department and I are continually reviewing it and finding ways to make it more effective for the hotel industry and the people involved. I would very much like to work closely with the hon. member and others involved in the tourist industry to find the best way to deal with this tax and how to spend it, but I should let you know it's always in the scope for change, and we will look at it in due course in the next year.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Lottery Fund

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, this year gaming revenue is forecast to be approximately $1 billion. As I understand it, gaming revenue is no longer allocated to the general revenue fund but, rather, is diverted to the Alberta lottery fund. Members of my constituency have asked me on numerous occasions how these funds are distributed to Alberta communities. My first question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister outline the types of projects and initiatives that are funded by the Alberta lottery fund?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, we could go on with this one for about an hour and a half. I would just like to point out that May 7 is day 5 and the hon. minister's estimates will be before the House. Please proceed.

MR. STEVENS: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, and I think I only need about three minutes in total.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is quite correct that the revenue from this source is approximately $1 billion this year and that it in fact is not part of general revenue. As a result of recommendations coming out of the 1998 gaming summit, those funds go into the Alberta lottery fund, which does incredibly good work throughout this province.

There are essentially two ways in which the funds are distributed. One is through various foundations and programs; the other is through special projects and initiatives. Foundations and programs deal with such things as helping communities build hockey rinks and playgrounds and community facilities, and the special projects and initiatives do such things as infrastructure projects and construction of health and learning facilities. I think, for the hon. member and all Albertans, indeed, who would be interested in more detail on this, they should look at the Internet at www.gaming.gov.ab.ca.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. minister was so eloquent in his answer, I'll proceed to my final question. Can the minister please advise me and my constituents how these funds are allocated through the various boards?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Essentially, the funds are in large measure allocated through grant programs and foundations. I've indicated that there are a number of those within the Ministry of Gaming. There are two specific ones: the community facility enhancement program and some 88 community lottery boards. In Community Development there are a number of foundations: the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation; the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation; the Wild Rose Foundation. All of these programs do incredibly good work within our communities. I can tell the hon. member that in this upcoming year some $128 million will be allocated to those foundations. Those foundations each have a mandate, and they're responsible for fulfilling the mandate and getting those funds out into the community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Regional Health Authority Boundaries

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Boundary changes to the health regions will result in the operations of the Mannville health care complex transferring to a different region. My question is: what assurances can the minister give the residents of Mannville and district that the level and delivery of service will not be compromised?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the member and members of this Assembly and Albertans that the boundary changes that are being contemplated are minor. They will not affect where Albertans go for health services, nor will it affect the level of service that they receive. Of the 17 regional health authority regions, there will be small boundary changes to 10 areas. These changes will allow us to better align the regional health authority boundaries with those of municipal districts.

Now the specific area that the hon. member is referring to is part of Minburn county. Minburn county was located in both the East Central and the Lakeland regional health authority regions, and under the new boundary all of Minburn, including Mannville, will be part of the Lakeland health region, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental question is also to the same minister. Would the minister confirm that the delivery of home care and ambulance services will remain comparable?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that home care and ambulance services to clients will not be changed as a result of the these minor boundary changes. The Department of Health and Wellness and the regional health authorities of East Central and Lakeland are working together to ensure that there is a smooth transition of the services, the finances, and the capital resources between the two regions.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, very shortly we'll call on the first of a number of members today to participate in Members' Statements.

May I say to all of you: congratulations; well done. My target today was to get all the members into the question period. We had 16 members participate. We had a total of 45 questions and answers in a time frame of 51 minutes, which is really very, very good. Thank you very much for your co-operation.

In 30 seconds from now we will go to Members' Statements, but in the interim can we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the indulgence of the Assembly to allow me to introduce a young woman from my constituency, who I believe is here today on some business but also thought that she should come and check to see if the person she worked hard to elect was actually in the Assembly doing her job. I'd like to introduce Wendy Gladdish of Hanna, and I'd ask Wendy to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call on the hon. Member for St. Albert to participate.

Education

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to lend my voice to the celebratory chorus honouring the remarkable learning and teaching that is taking place across this province during Education Week and, indeed, every week in Alberta. I am proud to say, as I did many times during the education forums during the election, that education is both my profession and my passion. Education provides the environment in which we shape and nurture our societal values, study our past and explore our future potential, and learn to think, evaluate, and open our minds to the worlds of literature and creative writing, the visual and performing arts, and the joys of science, research, and mathematics.

I am proud to say that in the year 2001 in the province of Alberta education is alive and well. Indeed, it is solid and sound. Our schools present a world of opportunity for learning, provided by caring, competent, professional teachers to students of varying needs and capabilities in the intended environment of safe and caring schools.

This week I would like especially to acknowledge the provision of free education in two equally publicly funded school systems in this province. I am proud to be a member of the Alberta Legislature, in a government that identifies education as a priority. In partnership with our school boards I'm also proud to participate cooperatively in creating educational policies and opportunities for the students of our province.

Education is always worth celebrating, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Columbia's Inclusion in the Summit of the Americas

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today, May 1, to speak out against the warm reception that was shown to the President of Columbia at the recent Summit of the Americas in Quebec City. The Quebec Declaration, which was signed by all the heads of government of the 34 nations in attendance at the summit, celebrated the so-called democracy clause in which the leaders pledged not to do business with countries that fall away from the ideals of genuine democracy.

I believe democracy is the system that allows for the peaceful exchange of differing views. However, over 1,200 union leaders and union workers have been assassinated in Columbia over the past 10 years by right-wing paramilitary groups operating in the country. The issue is not one of determining which group, the paramilitary groups or the union members, has correct political ideology. Rather, the issue is one of fundamental importance to Canada and Canadians, the issue of human rights.

If the government of Columbia has only halfheartedly tried to protect union executives from harm, why then did Canada show such a warm reception to President Arango at the Summit of the Americas? On the assumption that the countries that comprise the Americas are truly dedicated to the democracy clause, it is clear that Columbia should be excluded until such time as it shows true respect for democracy by halting the violence perpetrated by the paramilitary groups against union executives and union members.

Now is the time for Canada to review its relationship with Columbia as well as any other country that shows a flagrant disregard for democracy and human rights.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Immigrants of Distinction Awards

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to update my hon. colleagues about an annual event that I attended last Friday evening. It's the gala night of the Immigrants of Distinction Awards 2001, organized by the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society and volunteers. The immigrants of distinction awards honour newcomers to Canada who have made outstanding contributions and achievements to Alberta and to Canada. There are a number of categories.

The organization diversity awards are given to the organizations that made outstanding achievements in implementing their human resource diversity initiatives. The individual awards are given to newcomer individuals who have made exceptional contributions to Alberta society in the areas of arts and culture, business, community service, and professions. The youth scholarships are given to newcomer youths who have achieved excellence in academics, arts, sports, and the community.

Just to mention a few here. Dominika Boczula came from Poland, currently an outstanding high school student with academic honours, track and field records, and piano competition first prizes.

Shirley Ho came from Hong Kong, currently an excellent high school student overcoming an English language barrier to become the chairperson of the Calgary Stampede youth speech and debate tournament.

Jung-Mee Hwang came from Korea, currently a high school student with top honours in mathematics, the lead clarinet player in the youth orchestra, an award winner in badminton, skating, and martial arts.

Danijel Margetic came from Croatia, arrived in Canada in his late teens, overcame an English language barrier in high school and graduated in drama and psychology at the University of Calgary on the dean's list and planning for a career in movie production.

Sheila Ung came from wartorn Cambodia, currently a biochemistry researcher on the dean's list and with the goal to become a pediatric doctor. She was instrumental in the Minds in Motion, a summer science camp for children locally and nationally.

I thank the organizers for the opportunity of recognizing these outstanding immigrants.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Shawna Wallace

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring attention to an announcement that was made on Monday naming Shawna Wallace, an 18-year-old high school student from Hanna and member of the Byemoor Beef 4-H club, as the 2001 winner of the Premier's award. This is the highest honour for the Alberta 4-H program, and Shawna is the 38th Premier's award recipient. She was selected out of 131 candidates during the annual 4-H selections program in Olds on April 27 to 30, 2001, where delegates took part in activities designed to improve leadership and life skills.

In addition to receiving the Premier's award, as well as meeting the Premier, Shawna Wallace becomes a 4-H ambassador. Shawna's role will be to promote the 4-H along with 13 other 4-H ambassadors who were chosen at selections for their leadership, communication, and personal development skills for which Alberta's 4-H program is recognized.

I had the pleasure of meeting Shawna Wallace and the other ambassadors and all the other outstanding young 4-H leaders at the 4-H selections program in Olds over the weekend, and I have to say that I was very impressed with their enthusiasm and their commitment not only to the Alberta 4-H program but also to the agricultural and rural communities of this province. They will be tomorrow's agricultural and agrifood industry leaders, and I'm pleased that this government supports 4-H in this province.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 204
Medicare Protection Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 204, the Medicare Protection Act.

This bill represents a real health care protection legislation in sharp contrast to the government's Bill 11, which first and foremost is a blueprint for further privatization of our publicly funded and publicly administered health care system.

About a year ago I made a decision to leave civic politics and enter provincial politics. The number one reason I made this decision was because of my deep concern about the Conservative government's plan to further privatize Alberta's health care system.

When I was running during the Edmonton-Highlands by-election last June, I promised my constituents that at the first available opportunity I would introduce a bill in this Assembly to repeal Bill 11 and replace it with legislation that truly protects medicare and safeguards our public health care system. Today I am keeping that promise to my constituents. Bill 204, the Medicare Protection Act, does far more than just repeal Bill 11. It replaces Bill 11 with a set of provisions designed to strengthen rather than erode the public health care system so cherished by Albertans.

Second reading involves a debate about the intent of a bill as well as debate on its major provisions. The intent of Bill 204 is clearly expressed in its preamble. It states that the primary objective of health care policy . . . is to promote, protect and restore the physical and mental well-being of Alberta . . . through a public health care system.

The preamble enshrines the five principles of the Canada Health Act in provincial legislation. The Canada Health Act sets out accessibility, universality, portability, comprehensiveness, and public administration as the principles that guarantee access to medically necessary health care services without financial or other barriers.

Now, government members may say: well, the principles of the Canada Health Act are also enshrined in the preamble to Bill 11. While that is true, in addition to being in the preamble of Bill 204, the principles of the Canada Health Act are also contained in section 2 of the text of the bill. Because these principles are contained in the bill proper, not only in the preamble, they carry much more weight than they do in the government's bill.

Bill 204 is based on the premise that when patients are denied access to necessary health services on a timely basis, the credibility of the public health care system is undermined. There is no question that there is strong support among Canadians and among Albertans for a single-tier public health care system that serves everyone, rich and poor alike. It is only when waiting times for surgery or for diagnostic procedures like MRIs become unacceptably long that support grows for the development of a parallel two-tier system, where people with money can jump the queue and pay privately for medically necessary health services. If the guarantee of access to health care services without financial barriers is to have any meaning, we also have to be able to guarantee timely access to those services. That is exactly what Bill 204 does.

The major provision of the bill contained in section 2 sets out the rights of Albertans "to receive publicly funded and high quality health care services" in a timely manner and without financial barriers. It sets out the rights of Albertans to receive these services in a public health care system that "is accessible, universal, comprehensive, portable, and publicly administered." Moreover, it "recognises that a provider of health care services is a valued member of a multidisciplinary team." Finally, it requires that a patient bill of rights be posted in conspicuous locations in hospitals, other health care facilities, and the offices of health professionals.

Setting out in legislation a patient bill of rights to ensure access to medically necessary services is not in itself enough. Mechanisms need to be established that will ensure that the public health care system can actually deliver on the commitments made in the patient bill of rights.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The first step would be to establish an officer of this Legislature called the health care services commissioner. The duties of the health care services commissioner would include making recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on standards required to ensure timely access to medically necessary diagnostic procedures like MRIs and CT scans, timely access to medically necessary surgery and to cancer treatment, timely access to referrals, to medical specialists, timely access to emergency services and for admission into hospital. Finally, standards would be developed to ensure timely access to long-term care and to home care.

Bill 204 also makes provision for the health care services commissioner to review on an ongoing basis whether standards for timely access need to be developed for other medically necessary health services. The commissioner would also be mandated to consult with a wide range of stakeholders on the development of these standards, including health professionals, health care unions, patients, seniors, consumer groups, regional health authorities, government departments, and other levels of government. The commissioner as an officer of this Legislature would also be empowered to investigate and resolve complaints from patients who believe that they have been denied timely access to the medically necessary health care services set out in this bill.

Bill 204 also provides for the establishment of an all-party standing committee of this Legislature called the select special committee on health and wellness. This all-party committee would work with the health care commissioner to make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on establishing waiting time targets for health care services. At that point, it would be up to the Members of the Legislative Assembly and to the parties represented therein to pass these standards for timely access to health care services into law. I anticipate that some government members may say: well, developing standards for timely access to health care services is all well and good, but how much is it going to cost?

It is for this very reason that Bill 204 provides for consultation with health stakeholders to develop these standards. The Canadian health care system provides priority access to those patients who are most critically ill or injured. In other words, someone facing a life-threatening illness or injury is given priority in diagnosis or treatment over someone who can reasonably wait without damage to their life and well-being.

It is not the intent of this legislation to base the waiting time standards solely on the demand of the patient. However, I think we're all too familiar with situations where patients have had unacceptably long waiting times. A frail, elderly senior having to wait a year or more for a hip replacement is simply too long. An injured worker having to wait six or more months for an appointment with a specialist and then going another six months for surgery is simply too long. These are real-life examples, Mr. Speaker.

To its credit the government has, especially over the past year, reinvested moneys in the health care system to address these unacceptably long waiting times. The government and regional health authorities are beginning to measure how long patients are being kept waiting for important medical procedures. What Bill 204 does is introduce more accountability into the system by making sure that the buck stops with us as elected legislators.

Will introducing a patient bill of rights cost some additional money beyond what the government has already committed in this year's budget? It may, but we also have to ask ourselves: what is the cost to the government of failing to reduce waiting times to a reasonable level? What is the cost to society and to government when an injured Albertan is forced to draw WCB benefits or rely on social assistance or unemployment benefits simply because he or she has had to wait an unacceptably long time for medical treatment?

The Canadian Arthritis Society released a study today reporting that the economic cost to Canadian society for the delays in orthopedic surgery alone was $17.9 billion. Ensuring timely access to diagnosis and treatment may cost a few more dollars at the front end, but it could save all of us money in the long run.

Bill 204 also strengthens the public health care system in a number of other ways. Bill 204 would ban queue-jumping once and for all. It would base priority in medical diagnosis and treatment on the health needs of the patient, not on the size of their pocketbook. Unlike the government's Bill 11, which sets out a complicated process whereby patients can be required to pay out of pocket for so-called enhanced goods and services, Bill 204 would simply not allow these direct patient charges.

Bill 204 would require all medically necessary health care services that require an overnight stay to be performed in a hospital operated on a nonprofit basis. Unlike the government's Bill 11, which is a blueprint for the establishment of private, for-profit hospitals in this province, our Bill 204 shuts that door completely.

As a result of this Conservative government's pro privatization bias, there are over 50 private, for-profit surgical clinics operating in Alberta. These facilities are accredited by the province's College of Physicians and Surgeons under the Medical Profession Act. Many of them have contracts that give them access to public funds through regional health authorities. Bill 204 would not allow any new contracts between regional health authorities and these private, for-profit clinics. Bill 204 would give existing private clinics two years to reincorporate as legal nonprofits if they wished to continue receiving public funds. Existing private clinics that do not receive public funds and provide only nonmedicare services would not be affected by any of these changes.

Bill 204 contains similar provisions for nursing homes that contract with regional health authorities. It would give the existing nursing homes operated for profit two years to reincorporate as legal nonprofits if they wished to continue receiving public funds.

The distinction between public health facilities operating on a for-profit basis and those operating on a nonprofit basis is an important one. For many years in this province we've had hospitals operated by Catholic organizations. We've had nursing homes operated by Lutherans and other voluntary groups. These voluntary nonprofits operate for much the same reason as public health care facilities. They operate to serve a need, not to make a profit for a shareholder.

There are many sound reasons why we need to put a brake on the commercialization of our public health care system. The evidence is overwhelming that using for-profit corporations to deliver public health care services costs more and delivers less. Conflicts of interest between duties to patients and duties to the bottom line inevitably arise. International trade agreements like NAFTA and the WTO mean we will have to provide the same access to foreign health care corporations as we do to Canadian ones. We can and must put a stop to the creeping privatization of our health care system and focus on strengthening the capacity of the public system to ensure timely access to medically necessary health care. It can be done, Mr. Speaker.

I note that the government of Manitoba recently announced that it was buying the Pan Am clinic and making it part of the public system. The Pan Am clinic does a wide range of day surgeries and was used by this Conservative government as an example of privatization elsewhere in Canada during the Bill 11 debate. If other governments recognize the folly of going further down the road of health care privatization, why can't this government?

Finally, Bill 204 would also require any contracts between the public system and nonprofit health care facilities to be made public on the same basis as they are in Bill 11.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 provides real and meaningful protection to the public health care system, unlike Bill 11, which is a blueprint for gradual privatization. I look forward to the debate on this important bill and urge members on all sides of the House to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak against Bill 204, the Medicare Protection Act. The government has a long-term vision for health care in the province of Alberta. We call it the six-point plan. On March 12 of this year this government went to the people of Alberta and asked them if they shared the vision. The answer from Albertans was a resounding yes.

Mr. Speaker, I must speak against Bill 204, as it would undermine this vision for health care and the direction this government is pursuing. Under our six-point plan for health we have established firm guidelines and rules designed to protect Alberta's publicly funded health care system. This six-point plan for health care clearly states the government's desire to improve access to and enhance the quality of publicly funded health services in the province of Alberta.

The Health Care Protection Act is an integral part of the government's plan for health care. It put into place firm rules and regulations that will provide a public health care system that is efficient and responsive to the needs of all Albertans, and this includes reducing waiting times. Its regulations were developed after considerable consultation with organizations representing doctors, nurses, health authorities, and other concerned parties.

Private facilities have long been a fixture of health care in this province, and the Health Care Protection Act clearly lays out rules and regulations for them. Before the introduction of the act there were 51 private health care facilities that we had no control over in this province, and now, Mr. Speaker, they are regulated.

The act has also made the contract procedure for all private health care facilities open and transparent. Further facilities wanting to provide insured health services can do so only under contract with a regional health authority, and the health authorities have assured this government they have no plans to seek a contract for overnight stays. Also, all major surgery must continue to be done in a hospital, and the Health Care Protection Act expressly prohibits private hospitals. Therefore, only nonmajor surgery needing more than 12 hours of postoperative care can be done in a private facility offering overnight stays.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta recently approved the standards for facilities wishing to offer surgical procedures that require an overnight stay. The college had the authority to set these standards at any time but deferred until the Health Care Protection Act was in place to restrict and control private facilities in Alberta. The most important restriction requires that a surgical facility achieve both college accreditation and ministerial approval before it can operate. Mr. Speaker, neither the college nor the department has received an application for accreditation.

Bill 204 seeks to put in place a health care services commissioner to recommend the establishment of waiting-time targets for health care service. Mr. Speaker, this government has taken firm action on waiting times. Just one example is that in 2000 the number of heart surgeries performed in Alberta actually exceeded the number of people waiting for heart surgery. In fact, the demand for open-heart surgery in Alberta increased by 25 percent while the waiting list decreased by 14 percent. This government has accomplished this feat by providing increased funding to enhance service levels in heart surgery. This has resulted in more open beds and in the recruitment and training of additional cardiac staff.

Another example of this government's decisive action on waiting times is the availability of MRI scans in the province. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the Assembly that waiting lists for MRI scans in Alberta are steadily declining. The number of MRI scans being performed is now surpassing the number of people waiting to have MRIs. Just this month the government set a clear target rate for MRI scans of 24 scans per thousand population. This will be the highest rate in the country and is more than double Alberta's '99-2000 scan rate of 10.4 per thousand. Seven previously announced MRIs will be installed this year, and this will bring the number of MRI machines in Alberta to 15, more than double the number of machines in operation last year. That means that Alberta will have the highest MRI capacity in Canada.

This government has recognized the value of incorporating cutting-edge medical technologies in our public health system and is committed to making them accessible for the benefit of all Albertans. The government of Alberta is also taking action to decrease waiting times for hip and joint replacements. As our population ages and as surgical procedures and quality of artificial joints improve, there has been a major growth in the demand for these surgeries. This government has responded and made additional funding available to increase the number of replacement surgeries available to Albertans.

We need to optimize the value Albertans receive from our health care system. This government is committed to making every dollar spent on health care work towards an effective and efficient public health care system. Instead of spending our health care money on matters this government is already addressing, we should be spending it on new and innovative programs to meet the needs of the 21st century.

Bill 204 also calls for the creation of an all-party committee on health. This is unnecessary. The government of Alberta already has a number of committees made up of health care experts to examine the various elements of our provincial health care system. The standing policy committee on health and community living allows Albertans to provide specific input into health policies, programs, and legislation. This committee meets with health care professionals and organizations to hear their ideas on the health system. The Premier's Advisory Council on Health is comprised of leading health policy experts representing physicians, the nursing profession, and other key sectors. This council provides strategic advice on the preservation and future enhancement of quality health care services for Alberta and on the continuing sustainability of the publicly funded and administered health system.

Mr. Speaker, there is also the Health Information Standards Committee for Alberta, that oversees and co-ordinates the development and dissemination of approved health information data and technology standards within Alberta. The committee ensures that these standards align with approved provincial reporting standards as well as national and international standards.

The newest health committee that assists our government is the Alberta MRI Review Committee. It was established to build on the regional health authorities' current role in delivering MRI services. The committee will appoint physician specialists to review cases of privately purchased MRIs and, based on medical information and urgency, will determine if reimbursement is appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, these various committees were established to provide the government with a wide range of Albertans' concerns, interests, and opinions. Listening to these concerns helps chart the course for our public health care system.

I feel it's important to mention that the federal government has recently announced the Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada. Former Saskatchewan Premier Roy Romanow will head up the commission of inquiry. Mr. Romanow's commission will make recommendations on the sustainability of a publicly funded health care system that will balance investments in prevention and health maintenance with those directed to care and treatment.

Mr. Speaker, every government in this country is concerned with health care, especially this one. Alberta already has the committees necessary to provide our government with expert advice and insight. Another committee as recommended in Bill 204 is unnecessary.

As announced last week in the budget speech, Mr. Speaker, the government is substantially increasing the amount of money allotted to our health care system. Funding will be increased by 13.5 percent this year, and over the next three years it will be up a total of 28 percent. Within three years this government will be committing 35 percent of total spending to our public health care system. This means more funding for all elements of the system and will certainly reduce waiting times.

But, Mr. Speaker, improving our health care system is not dependent only on the money that is put into the system but on the people who provide the services. That is why funding has also been increased to our postsecondary institutions, and that means more qualified men and women to fill the ranks of our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, we have one of the best health care systems in Canada. This government has made a commitment to Alberta's health care system that will not waver. Bill 204 would undermine that commitment, and I urge the members of this Assembly to vote against it.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: May we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to take this opportunity to introduce to you a group of very special young people from the city of Medicine Hat. You know, it's not very often that I get to introduce students who venture all the way up to Edmonton from Medicine Hat, but to have an opportunity to introduce such a special group as the Crescent Heights high school band is a real pleasure for me. This band has a reputation throughout the community and, in fact, throughout the province as being an award-winning band. I understand that they're up here in Edmonton to compete in some Education Week festivities, and I wish them all the best. I'll be meeting with them shortly to have pictures taken and talk with them all, but I'm just so pleased that they're able to join us here in the Legislature this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that 81 students have joined us today along with teachers Mr. Bill Wahl, who is the head band instructor at Crescent Heights high school, Mrs. Joanne Jensen, Mrs. Shirley Woodward, and Mr. Andrew Strange. I can see a number of them seated in the public gallery. I'm not sure if they are all there or if some are in the members' gallery. I would ask that they all rise and receive warm recognition from all members of the Assembly.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 204

Medicare Protection Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to speak to Bill 204, the Medicare Protection Act. I am certainly a supporter of this bill and I think a supporter based on a tremendous amount of thought, reading, and consideration. I am confident that there will be widespread support for a bill of this nature across Alberta. I've certainly traveled from corner to corner to corner of this province speaking on these kinds of issues, and I know that Albertans hold a public medicare system close to their hearts and want to see it truly protected, not hollowed out. I think this bill would go a long way to achieving that.

There is extensive literature, truly thousands of academic papers written on health economics from around the world. I have at various times in my career spent many hours studying dozens and dozens of these. I've published in the area. One of the things I can say with complete confidence is that there is simply no evidence to support for-profit delivery of health care. Study after study from the United States, Canada, Singapore, Great Britain, and many other countries in the world suggests that we must go as far as we can to protect a public medicare system in Canada.

As a person with a business degree I am quite comfortable with markets. I support markets. I am comfortable with free enterprise. The evidence is clear that in many cases markets and free enterprise work very well. They can be efficient; they can be creative; they can be productive. There are countless examples of that in our lives every day.

At the same time, the evidence is also very clear that markets have their limits. There are a number of areas in which the evidence is simply overwhelming that markets don't work; for example, in health care. Trying to run the health care system through the markets is a profound mistake. We should be able to learn from the lessons of other countries and not make these mistakes. Again, I think Bill 204 would go a long distance to pre-empting or preventing those mistakes.

If we do as I believe will be done over the next four years under this government and supply more and more of our health services through private, for-profit clinics, we will see higher costs, we will see longer waiting lists, we will see reduced efficiencies, and we will see soaring corporate profits, profits that will be taken out of resources that otherwise could go to patient care.

Higher costs: why would we see higher costs? Well, we would see higher costs because a typical for-profit health corporation is looking for growth in returns annually of 15 percent to 20 percent a year. If they aren't achieving that kind of growth, their management will be replaced. [interjection] That routinely happens, and anybody who follows the market with care and intelligence will understand that. [interjections] If we incorporate that kind of approach into our public health care budgets, we're going to simply lose control of our expenditures.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, entering into debate is part of what this Chamber is all about, and I'll put your name down so that when the next opportunity arises, you may address the thing. Right now we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the recent column in the newspaper on a series of FOIP requests for information behind Bill 11 revealed how little evidence there was to support the provincial government's campaign. It was virtually nonexistent. On the other hand, there are truly bookshelves and libraries full of material that would oppose increasing the for-profit role in health care. I can also tell you that virtually any credible health economist would support this same position, and I expect that the great majority of them would support this bill.

Under the Canada Health Act we have developed in Canada an enviable medicare system. The kind of public panic that is being generated about out-of-control costs is largely unjustified. Despite claims by this government that health care spending was soaring out of control in the later 1980s and the early 1990s, the evidence, good evidence, showed quite the opposite. Once adjustments were made for inflation and population growth, health care spending in Alberta was actually flat from 1987 through 1993. There was no out-of-control health care spending crisis in Alberta through that period.

I will also address a couple of concerns raised by the hon. member's response to the bill. The fact that the number of procedures conducted in the health care system exceeds the number of people waiting for that procedure on the waiting lists strikes me as virtually irrelevant. I am certainly hoping that there are fewer people on the waiting list for appendectomies than there have been appendectomies performed this year, for example. There's, I believe, a breakdown in logic there.

I would also point out that the credibility of the government's health protection act is extremely low, and public suspicion is, I think, justifiably high. Again, repealing that act, I think, is a very important step in the right direction. It's something that, in fact, the Liberals have been committed to for a number of years, as I'm sure the hon. member will agree.

I would also point out that the contracting process for for-profit health care delivery is seriously compromised, indeed I would say profoundly compromised in a number of the regional health authorities because of conflicts of interest that simply would not be accepted in other areas of the public sector. So, for example, we have senior officials on the payroll of the Calgary regional health authority who are also major shareholders in for-profit companies that contract to that regional health authority.

We don't allow our senior public servants in other departments to be in those kinds of conflicts of interest. We don't allow senior members of the staff of the Department of Transportation to oversee contracts that go to their family members. We should not allow that to occur in our regional health authorities. As long as it does occur, there are serious, serious questions about the contracting process under which for-profit contracts are let in the regional health authorities.

With all of that said, I think there are a number of angles to Bill 204 that should be spoken for. The patient bill of rights is certainly worth very serious attention. The creation of the particular commissioner for public health is an excellent idea. The incorporating of the principles of the Canada Health Act into the active clauses of the act is an excellent idea, and as I've indicated a number of times, repealing the Health Care Protection Act that's currently enacted is urgent and important.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take leave. Thanks.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to participate in debate at second reading on private member's Bill 204, the Medicare Protection Act, at this time. I'm looking forward because I'm sure this is going to pass and go into committee and I can have dialogue with the author of this bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, regarding some friendly amendments.

It's a good piece of legislation. If imitation is a fine form of flattery, then the hon. member certainly has been reading some of the Liberal proposals from the past, in particular our 1998 health care bill of rights. We certainly had the idea of having an independent health ombudsman.

I commend the hon. member, after the debate that occurred on Bill 11 last year, for bringing this forward. I can see a role for this health care services commissioner already. After this bill becomes law, the first job of the health care services commissioner would be to appear before Mr. Romanow, the distinguished former Premier of Saskatchewan, who is going to go across the country and have a close look at the public health care delivery system in this country.

Now, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North talked about there being no need to worry. I believe the description was: there are going to be no private hospitals in Bill 11. But I would like at this time to take the opportunity to remind the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that private hospitals can exist by another name. We look at the Walter C. Mackenzie Health Sciences Centre. Certainly we know that that's a hospital. The Mayo clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, also is a hospital. So just because the name hospital is not on a building does not mean there aren't going to be overnight stays and it's not going to be a private, for-profit hospital. Or, as I said yesterday, many individuals I had the pleasure of getting to know during the Bill 11 debate said about the HMOs: hand money over before you get health care. That's what they affectionately called the HMOs: hand money over.

We also had the Cambie centre in B.C. The Cambie centre in B.C. is certainly not a hospital. There's no name on it, but it's a hospital and has overnight stays. It was started by the New Democratic Party in the last 10 years. So the New Democrats are not as innocent in all this as they would like to maintain. They had been advocating private hospitals in B.C. This is the reality.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but the time allocated for this item of business on this day has expired.

Second Language Education

501. Mr. Johnson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to make the learning of a second language a compulsory component of a high school diploma by the year 2006 and to increase the opportunities for Alberta students to participate in national and international student exchange programs with a second language component.

[Adjourned debate April 24: Dr. Massey]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today in support of Motion 501 sponsored by my colleague from Wetaskiwin-Camrose, because this motion has the potential to lead to significant change and improve the outcomes for our already good education system and all for the benefit of future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I've often said in this House that the difference between politicians and statesmen is that politicians do things for the next election, but statesmen do things for the next generation. I believe this motion is one of those that, if accepted, has the benefits for the next generation in mind.

Mr. Speaker, we're all familiar with the concept of globalization and what it's doing to the global economy. Every time we open a newspaper or turn on the television news, we see that word "globalization," and we become more aware that a growing number of nations are now preparing to become a part of the global system of commerce. The growing sophistication of technology, communications via the Net, and transportation systems make it easier and accelerate globalization trends.

Since our schools and universities must prepare the next generation of Albertans to succeed in this new environment, Mr. Speaker, it is our responsibility, then, as government to create the conditions that will provide our learning institutions with the mandate and tools to prepare our students as well as they can be prepared. The new globalization environment requires our students to be as prepared as possible not only for the challenges of the economy but, more importantly, for the new human relationships that must now effectively deal with many more different cultures and languages.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 501 speaks directly to the issue of ensuring our students are prepared for the challenges of today and tomorrow. Motion 501 urges the government to make "a second language a compulsory component of a high school diploma" within five years and seeks to also "increase the opportunities for Alberta students to participate in national and international" language exchange programs. Both of these objectives could produce measurable advantages for future generations for both our students and the province.

Mr. Speaker, having the opportunity to travel abroad and across Canada can have a profound impact on the shaping of a young mind and soul by involving our students in learning what is essential in human relationship building. A student fortunate enough to learn in a foreign learning system receives not only the benefits of an alternate form of education, but they experience firsthand and absorb the historical richness of diverse cultures, and that can't help but change you as a young adult. The benefits of such an experience would not only be invaluable to the student but also to the people of Alberta.

I have met countless foreign businesspeople being introduced to our environment and culture by exchange students who had begun to forge that relationship while learning abroad. Now, in the fullness of time those relationships are introducing potential foreign investors to the logic and good sense of investing in Alberta and its people. New agreements on tariffs and trades also help to foster these new relationships. So by providing our students this exceptional opportunity, Alberta also has a golden opportunity. Our province sends out young, bright emissaries ready to show that Albertans do excel in any environment anywhere in the world because of their ability to make lasting and meaningful human relationships with any culture.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Our province already enjoys international exchange agreements with well-established economies such as Germany, Japan, and Spain, and we are currently finalizing an agreement with Mexico. Well, that's a fine start, Mr. Speaker, but Alberta needs to expand its range of nations as their economies expand to global proportions. Our exchange programs should be taking us to new economic regions in Asia such as South Korea and Hong Kong and many others. We should also be expanding our contacts with emerging South American economies like Brazil and Argentina and other developing economies like India. It is these economies that will further develop and expand the fastest in the years to come.

However, the advantage goes both ways. As our students introduce us around the world, Alberta gains the advantage of learning from visiting students as well. We can gain valuable insight into how to deal with people with different nationalities, ethnicity, language, and culture, by helping them to succeed and learn in our province. What a tremendous advantage to a young Albertan, to a young mind a second language would be, and what a valuable future asset to Albertans.

But those are only a few of the reasons why I urge this Assembly to seriously consider approving this motion. Life is about relationships. Business is about relationships too, and these relationships are often very different in other countries. Success is largely dependent on being able to appreciate the difference in culture and, of course, understanding the language but, more importantly, bridging the gaps with lasting human relationships.

Mr. Speaker, for our province to keep up with the ever expanding global economy, we must develop Albertans who are fluent in several languages. We only have to look at the European community to realize that they currently foster and therefore enjoy a tremendous advantage because it's not unusual for them to function in four or five languages or more.

Sending our students abroad is important for Alberta, but we must also promote the benefits of learning a second language in our own backyard and through our education facilities. In the mid-90s 32.5 percent of our high school graduates had completed a 30-level second language course. Sadly, by the end of the '90s only 23 percent of our high school graduates could boast a 30-level second language. Now, this isn't moving in the right direction. It's not for the lack of opportunity or variety that there is this decline. Many of our high schools offer second language courses in several languages other than our two official languages. In fact, Alberta can offer second language instruction in 15 other tongues, ranging from Arabic to Polish, but let's provide our schools with the tools and the mandate to expand this. Let's make a globally relevant second language program compulsory for our high school graduates. We should approve Motion 501 and help make our already good education system even more of a success story.

Mr. Speaker, last October the city of Edmonton hosted an international symposium called Languages: Passport for the Millennium. Delegates from education, business, and the political arena all met to discuss the impact of second-language instruction on both students and society. To paraphrase the outcome, one report showed that students fluent in two languages displayed better measures of both verbal and nonverbal intelligence and that these children also had more diversified cognitive abilities. Others demonstrated that bilingual children had more effective problem-solving abilities than unilingual children. As well, these bilingual children had higher standardized test scores in mathematics, reading, and language arts.

So you sort of have to ask the question: why do they seem to do so much better? The reason, in my view, is that they understand the nuances of words and their meanings; in other words, comprehension, pure and simple. Words in any language have a history. They have a culture and in many ways are the souls of a nation. When you understand the emotion of the word, you have been changed forever in terms of how you view that world, because you now understand why that word is what it is because of the contribution of culture and history.

Mr. Speaker, I took Latin in high school, and I absolutely hated it. But why is Latin still the most precise language in the world? In my view, it's because of the myriad of conjugations and declinations that add precision to the picture the word transmits. Latin is still considered the legal language because of its precision. So when you understand the emotion the word conveys, you get the picture.

Through words you express your creative power. It is through words that humans manifest everything and clarify their intent. So, Mr. Speaker, the benefits of second-language instruction are not just economic or even academic, but more importantly they give the student the ability to develop cross-cultural awareness, the understanding required to build meaningful, lifelong human relationship skills. These students are generally able to adapt more effectively to different cultural settings and show greater cross-cultural sensitivity than their one-language counterparts. If everything in life revolves around relationships, then why not give the leaders of tomorrow, the principal citizens of the new global economy, the requisite skills to build these human relationships in the global village?

Mr. Speaker, to paraphrase and use perhaps a personal experience that I had to make a point, I recall so vividly the amazement I felt when visiting St. Peter's in Rome. I was absorbing and marveling at the richness and beauty of the paintings above many of the side altars, but as I came closer, I realized that they weren't paintings at all. They were mosaics with tens of thousands of painstakingly selected and shaped minute pieces of marble, each nuance in colour and texture playing their own small part to achieve the overall glory of the masterpiece. While I believe that in human beings each additional experience in culture and language contributes its own small part to the mosaic of life, enriching, understanding, and respect for the historical context of other cultures, languages, arts, and the soul of nations, the bottom line results in human relationships that make life more meaningful, more productive, more fun, more forgiving, and more peaceful.

So let's support this motion for the sake of our future masterpieces, our children. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak in support of Motion 501, which encourages the learning certainly of a second language and indeed perhaps even a third and a fourth for our high school students and then suggests that they put that learning into practice by engaging in some national or international exchange programs.

It is my belief that because we live in an officially bilingual country and it is my experience that because we live in a multilingual, multicultural community, it is very important for us to put into the curriculum structure of our high school programs one that encourages the learning of a second language. There are many people in this Assembly who have talents that I admire and certainly, I'd almost say, that I envy. Many of the Members of the Legislative Assembly here gathered can speak not only one but two and perhaps three or four or as many as five languages. This is something that they learned perhaps at home, but no doubt they also learned them in the schools which they attended.

I believe that of course language is certainly the way that we communicate and communicate extremely well. If we have the ability to communicate and reach out to another person in their language if it is other than ours, we breach and we reach over a chasm or an area that might perhaps precipitate some enhanced understanding. Learning a second language, I also know, enhances the growth of the brain muscle. It also teaches us to use our tongue in different ways for the benefit of communication and exchanges in friendship. Communication creates not only friendship, but it also creates commerce.

So those students in our schools and particularly in our high schools I do believe should experience the learning of a second language. I would hope that they have learned one of those languages initially in elementary school, at least been introduced to them. But when it comes to high school learning and curriculum, for them to be compelled, as the motion says, to a compulsory course or courses in a second language – it doesn't have to be the other official language; it can be any language – I think is only providing for them an enrichment and a valuable lesson that they will use for the rest of their lives.

My colleague who spoke previously indicated, too, that learning a second language, learning a language other than our mother tongue, helps us to increase our brain power, our brain activity. Studies have indeed shown that problem-solving comes more easily and becomes greater and more successful for those students who exercise their minds in other disciplines, one of them being, of course, learning another language.

A second language is a tool for learning, a tool for learning much more, not only for learning the beauty and the joy of the poetry of another culture in another language, but it also provides a tool for our students and for anyone who can speak another language to be able to communicate with others in their business dealings, in their cultural exchanges, and certainly in their own circumstances, which is what the second part of this motion encourages, and that is an exchange program.

To learn a second language and I daresay to be compelled to learn that second language in our high schools will increase students' appreciation of other languages, of other nations, and of other peoples. For they say – and I know it's true, because our daughter in particular, who learned one language taught by the father of one of our representatives sitting at the Clerk's table here, has learned a second language, but in so doing in that school also was introduced to a third language. She has gone on to use that language in her business experience and certainly found that learning a third language is easy compared to learning the second language and certainly compared to learning the first.

So I would say that if we are to support this Motion 501 and urge the government to make it compulsory for high school students to learn a second language in a course provided to them in the curriculum of high school, we are doing them and their futures a favour. We are planning and providing for their opportunity to grow, to grow personally, to grow in their business, and certainly to grow in the international and global milieu in which we live and do our commerce. It provides an opportunity, too, for our students to be interconnected to each other, because when we can speak to someone else in their language, which perhaps isn't our mother tongue, we can understand them better, and I hope and truly believe that we can appreciate them better as well.

So I do want to urge, Mr. Speaker, everyone in this Assembly to support this motion. Not only is it an opportunity for our students to be provided with this additional skill of knowing a second language, but it's an opportunity for them to move forward in all that they wish to explore. I would like to add, too, that being a former Latin teacher – and I understand that your Latin teacher, my member to the right, was obviously not impressive on you. It is a dead language. In fact, my students used to always change the cover of the book, which was called Living Latin, to Dead Latin. And it is a dead language – it's not something that is used – but it is the basis of understanding the construction and the grammar of many of our Romance languages.

There has been the provision, the compulsory provision, in the past in our high school curriculum that students should study a second language, but unfortunately we have lost that. But because we had it before and I feel that it was to the advantage of high school students, I would like to encourage everyone in this Assembly to agree to and to vote for this Motion 501. It will do nothing but encourage the learning and enhance the learning capabilities of students in high school.

I appreciate the efforts of the sponsor of this bill, and I do again encourage everyone to support this bill. Thank you.

3:50

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is an honour to be here today to be able to speak to this motion. At the outset I'd like to say that the Department of Learning and myself in particular as Minister of Learning are both in favour of this motion, and I think it's something we should move strongly towards.

What this motion is asking us to do is take a look at making a second language compulsory. Mr. Speaker, what I believe we need to do is sit back and ask the question: well, why would the hon. member bring this motion forward? I think you saw the answer today sitting in the Speaker's gallery, in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, where we saw the minister of education from Brazil, we saw the minister of education from Australia. What this shows us is that education, that learning, that people in general are a very globalized society today. We are no longer bound by the constraints of the boundaries of Alberta, the boundaries of North America. What we're seeing is a huge amount of traffic that flows back and forth between different countries around the world.

I'm a true believer that if a child, if an adult learns a second language, the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth languages will come that much easier. I truly believe that with this motion making a second language mandatory, it will do nothing but help our students in the long run.

A Japanese gentleman told me, if I can beg time to say this, in response to questions that were going around – they were probably very similar to questions that were in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker – that the language of the computer is English. The language of commerce, a lot of people will say, is English. The Japanese gentleman told me that the language of commerce is not English; the language of commerce is the language of the customer. I believe that to be extremely true in that when you're communicating with the customer, when you're communicating for an economic advantage, it helps significantly if you don't go through interpreters, if you are able to communicate directly one on one.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you know yourself, having been able to speak more than one language, the ability, the one-upmanship it gives an economy if you're able to communicate with your customer in the language of that customer. I truly believe that this will be a huge advantage to us.

Mr. Speaker, we have an excellent school system in Alberta in all but one area, and the area that I'm not happy with, the area that I'm not pleased with when it comes to education in the K to 12 system is the number of foreign languages and the number of students that are taking foreign languages. We're actually seeing the number drop off. I believe that that's truly a mistake, and I believe that this motion by the hon. member would do a lot to rectify that situation.

What he states in here is that he's making a second language compulsory for a high school diploma. I would even go one step further, Mr. Speaker. I would say that at some time in the future second languages should be compulsory throughout the school system, and at some point in the future I will guarantee that that will occur. It may not be within the next five years as in this motion, but I will guarantee that will occur.

Mr. Speaker, the second part of the motion was what I just came from, which is to encourage Alberta students, to encourage Alberta teachers to have more international exchanges. The hon. member would be pleased to know that I just arranged with the minister from Australia for more exchanges to take place between Australia and Canada. Presently we only have four teacher exchanges between New South Wales and Alberta. We hope to expand that, and it was his wish as well that we do expand that, that we do push the globalization.

Mr. Speaker, the average postsecondary institution in Alberta today is in 22 different countries. I will be going over to Beijing in August or September of this year, where the Medicine Hat College in the southeast corner of this province, a very small college of 2,000 people, is opening a school in Beijing. This speaks to the globalization that is occurring within our economy, and it speaks to the absolute need that our students have to have a second language and potentially a third or fourth. Are we talking about French? That's another question that comes up because people say: well, gee, you know, I took French in school, and I never use it anymore. No, we're not talking French. We're talking a second language, period. It could be French. It could be Spanish. It could be Greek. It could be Chinese. But I feel that the aptitude for learning languages comes from learning one language, in effect having one more language than what you're essentially speaking now.

Mr. Speaker, for that reason I completely support this motion, and I would ask that the whole Assembly do as well because I believe that it will sincerely help our economy, that it will help our students, and will help make this a much more global place.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Learning, but under Standing Order 8(4) I must put all questions to conclude debate on the motion under consideration.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

Agricultural Investment Shares

502. Mr. Fischer moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the possibility of increasing investment dollars in agriculture and the agricultural industry through the use of a tax vehicle in the form of flow-through shares.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to begin debate on Motion 502, which urges the government to explore the use of flow-through shares as an investment tool to attract capital investment in the value-added processing and marketing sector of agriculture. These issues surrounding the viability of farming today have created a great deal of discussion in my constituency and are vital for the well-being of every community in rural Alberta. I believe that Motion 502 could provide the missing link to the agriculture production chain. It has the potential to attract the necessary capital to be more competitive on the world market. Flow-through shares will encourage the growth of Alberta's value-added processing sector for agriculture products, which is necessary if our farmers are to remain profitable in today's increasingly competitive world marketplace.

The agriculture industry has been the number one economic engine for Alberta over the past hundred years, since the beginning of Alberta being a province. Grain, livestock, and agriculture food products have all been in demand around the world for the majority of those hundred years. There was not enough food for people in many countries, especially in the years of World War I and World War II and the many years that it took to rebuild and put European farmland back into production. Canada was in the fortunate position of obtaining preferred markets that would take all of the raw product that we could produce and at good prices. There have always been some transportation problems and marketing difficulties. However, in general things were quite good, and there was a reasonable balance between production expenses and the prices that producers received for their product.

[The Speaker in the chair]

During the past 30 years major changes began to take place. More productive varieties, new technologies, and unfair subsidies all encouraged increased production. Markets dried up, and importing countries became exporters and our competitors. Inflation drove up input costs, and product prices did not keep up.

Mr. Speaker, machinery costs have increased possibly 50 times from back in the early part of the last century. I had a copy of an old newspaper that in 1926 was selling number 1 wheat for $2.67 a bushel. Today that same grain may sell for around $4 a bushel. It's almost doubled since 1926. I would like to clarify something for the Member for West Yellowhead. Even though I may be among the senior members of this Assembly, I was not reading that newspaper in 1926.

The unfair competition based on multibillion dollar farm subsidies from the European countries has become ridiculous. Instead of a fair and even competition based on the capacity of the land and the ability of the farmers, the competition has only developed between trading blocs. It is clear that the European Union is not interested in importing our commodities except at the lowest prices and has established tariff barriers which make selling our commodities economically unviable. Also, there are subsidies that have caused the supply of food to expand so unnaturally, and the entire world market is saturated with cheap commodities.

Something must be done to help our farmers obtain fair value for their crops. Motion 502 will create markets for food commodities right here in Alberta, and Alberta goods will have the advantage of very low transportation costs to markets. This advantage will help offset the unfair world trade practices in agriculture that are now being used even by the U.S.

Flow-through shares that encourage value-added processing to the many products we produce would provide a valid option for farmers and producers and give a much-needed and long overdue boost to the agriculture sector. Currently flow-through shares are common shares subscribed from the treasury of a company engaged exclusively in Canada's oil and gas industry. The common shares are purchased according to a flow-through agreement at a premium to the market price of the company's shares, and this is compensation to the company for the benefit of tax deductions. Then it is passed on or flowed through by the company to the investor.

There are a number of investment tools that could also assist in this growth and investment. However, the flow-through plan is one that becomes very attractive to an investor who may be in a high tax bracket. His benefits are threefold: first, a substantial saving by lowering the tax rate by moving into a lower tax bracket; secondly, they are offered a share at a discount to the market price; and third, they enjoy the opportunity to participate in the success of the company. The flow-through plan is the right plan. It will make it much easier for entrepreneurs to raise venture capital.

Mr. Speaker, let's take a look for a moment at how flow-through shares have impacted the oil and gas industry. First, we must visualize that this incentive may not be available for all the multi-billion dollar international companies. There are many very small start-up companies that have flourished and grown through the use of this investment tool. It encourages higher than normal risk dollars for the exploration and development of new oil and gas wells. These dollars may not have otherwise come into the industry. It allows the investor to share part of the risk with governments, as the program can allow investors to write off up to 100 percent of the expense claimed.

The benefits to the oil and gas industry are enormous. Firstly, it allows small business to participate and opens up many opportunities for our young and talented Alberta entrepreneurs. Rig workers, drillers, and management all benefit from the high wages within that industry. Secondly, it provides the much-needed local competition, which results in a healthier industry.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of flow-through shares would work the same way in Alberta's agriculture industry as it does in the resource development industry. The capital raised would help finance the construction of value-added production plants around Alberta. Over the past two decades entrepreneurs in this province have moved ahead with secondary processing and value added, and there is growth in the industry. However, is it fast enough to keep up with the changing world markets? The answer to that is no. Just to demonstrate that, Stats Canada stated on Alberta's food and beverage industry that $9 billion is in that industry and only 9 percent of it is processed oilseed and grain products. Only 9 percent out of the $9 billion.

There are many good thoughts and ideas proven through research that fall by the wayside because investors will not risk the dollars. There are many more ways to add value to our traditional products. For example, turning grain into ethanol, which is an industry surprisingly slow to develop here in Alberta, is a major business in the U.S., using up to 20 percent of their total grain production. Motor oil from canola has not thrived here even though Alberta is a major canola producer, but it is going ahead in other areas.

By bringing the means of value-added production closer to Alberta, more jobs are created and the potential value of the raw commodity is gained by Albertans. This strategy of field to retail vertical market integration keeps profits inside Alberta and reduces the transportation costs. Our goods would compete well, and locally grown commodities would be worth more. Thus the farmer could bring in greater profits and be less reliant on government subsidies in the future.

Mr. Speaker, this government is interested in diversifying our economy. Oil and gas have been the bread and butter of the province for the past couple of decades, and we are making strides to reduce our dependence on this industry. Motion 502 proposes that we at least give fair treatment to agriculture and allow investment dollars to enter on a tax deductible basis in the same way as in the oil and gas sector. The reason that the tax deduction is allowed is because the money raised through the shares goes to new capital, and these costs are deductible to business. Allowing this type of investment tool in the agriculture sector would promote investment and innovation. Increasingly the markets for primary agriculture goods are declining and are not expected to increase in the near future, according to the World Trade Organization.

There needs to be a solution to help Albertans obtain fair value for their product. Presently Canadian agriculture goods are being priced out of international markets. Many European countries have given large subsidies to their farmers and agriculture producers which undercut the price of many competitors who trade their products internationally. Canadian farmers are not capable of keeping up with these subsidized prices and are forced to lose value on their goods.

Mr. Speaker, in order for the Canadian farmer to regain the preferred standing that they once had on the international market, we must find a way to maintain a competitive edge. Huge farm subsidies like the ones received in European countries are not an option. They are a quick fix to a problem and in the long run will prove to be a greater expense, with no long-term solution.

In order to maintain a competitive edge in the international market and even within our own country, we must look at changing the status quo. Why? Because, Mr. Speaker, agriculture is an industry unlike any other industry. It operates similar to others with input costs, costs for labour, land, and capital, but there's just one thing different about agriculture: if agriculture fails, people starve. It is a simple, brutal fact that's been proven time and time again throughout the history of the world.

Countries and provinces that are not self-sufficient in food production will not be able to receive food in trade if it's scarce globally. You cannot eat bonds, stocks, or equities, nor can you drink a nice tall glass of oil. Furthermore, no amount of money or other commodities will suffice in trade when food becomes scarce throughout the globe. It has happened in the living memory of many Albertans, when many were forced to revert to the hunter/gatherer lifestyle in the 1930s. Many people went to bed hungry in those years, and I hope that we are not so arrogant to think that it could not happen again.

My point is that it is wise to have a little bit more food than we need and to be able to produce that food within our own borders. Our economic prosperity may one day depend on it. This is why our attention should be focused on ways to increase the value of our agriculture products. By increasing the profit potential in the industry, we foster and maintain a diverse and healthy food industry, which is of great benefit for each of us as well as our future generations.

The investment need not necessarily come directly from government, which is an important aspect of Motion 502. Flow-through shares are an instrument that will provide capital for growth without government subsidies. Well-developed markets including processing, shipping, and retailing for Alberta agriculture goods all over the world are the ultimate goal. To be able to produce the highest quality food in the world and to process, package, and send it off to the retail market creates real jobs for Albertans.

Adding value to our resources is not a new idea. Other industries have provided many jobs to Albertans by processing our raw materials. A healthy economy must be diverse and add as much value as possible to the raw materials. I'm not against selling a boatload of Alberta grain to whoever wants to pay for it, but I think it would do us a lot better selling bread and pasta that sells for much more than $145 per tonne, which is the current price of wheat.

Tax incentives to promote diversity and prosperity in our ag industry are necessary for growth. Competitiveness in the raw commodities market is a futile game of keeping up with the multi-billion dollar subsidy programs of the Europeans. We need a real incentive for businesses to tear down the processing plants in other countries and to build them here. It is not enough just to keep up with the world economy. Alberta should be leading it, especially in the sector upon which our province was founded.

It is intended that the flow-through shares will attract much-needed investment dollars and offer investors tax incentive opportunities, assist with the construction of agriculture value-added processing plants, and increase the number of jobs within agriculture. Motion 502 will explore ways that we as government may accomplish just that. The purpose of this motion is to improve access to venture capital. I believe that it is time for us to take the lead and provide support to this very important sector of our economy.

Mr. Speaker, a flow-through share incentive is a sound, proven idea. It is a viable option, and I ask all members of this Assembly to support Motion 502 to explore that option.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much for this opportunity to speak to Motion 502, which is:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the possibility of increasing investment dollars in agriculture and the agricultural industry through the use of a tax vehicle in the form of flow-through shares.

This is a really interesting idea and is following through on some of the government incentives and plans that I have seen in some of the other sectors. There's a real encouragement for the sector to find dollars from other places aside from government dollars. Certainly I saw that happen in the nonprofit sector, which is the one I come from. There was great encouragement to raise more dollars through fund-raising and other activities: open gift shops, have tea parlours, and all those kinds of things to raise additional dollars, usually through commercial ventures, which is essentially what's happening here.

Part of what intrigues me the most about this is the potential for additional support into the value-added sector, which is a sector I've been really impressed with. I'm not fooling anybody here. I'm not a kid from the farm. I'm from the city.

AN HON. MEMBER: But you snowmobile.

MS BLAKEMAN: I snowmobile, yeah. Well, that doesn't qualify me as a farm kid.

I remember being struck on a couple of occasions by the amount of work that's been done in Alberta on value added, and there's certainly been support coming through Innovation and Science and through the Ministry of Agriculture on that. In one of the airports – I think it might be Calgary – there was an incredible display of the number of value-added products that were coming out of Alberta. It was quite extensive. I think this thing went on for a good long hallway, and there were all kinds of things in there, not just food but products beyond that. It really impressed me, particularly as a city kid, of what the potential was in the agricultural sector in Alberta to move beyond what we've always accepted as agricultural produce. I think that if we are going to be competitive and move forward with this, exploration into these new kinds of ideas is the way to go, and certainly any financing or ways of promoting additional research and development in this area is, I think, probably quite worth while to follow up on.

The other time I can remember – I think this was in either a budget debate or in Public Accounts – when the minister outlined the number of things that were being done with canola and canola oil, the list was quite astounding as to what all was being done with it now, even being used as machinery lubricating oil or something overseas. I thought: well, good on us for finding other ways to truly be value added, to make our resources go a bit further and be more attractive to others and find themselves another market. Truly, if we can find 500 different markets for canola, we're going to be well on our way here in Alberta to diversifying our economy, which is a goal that all of us share.

Now, I had not been familiar with the concept of flow-through shares when I first read this motion, so I had to do some reading on it, and I think I've got most of it. Part of the need for this is that venture capital is difficult to get, and certainly the member proposing this motion, the Member for Wainwright, had outlined in some detail how difficult it was to get that additional venture capital into this area. So, in that, this idea of flow-through shares is worth consideration. It is giving small companies an opportunity to raise capital that they may well not be able to qualify for or be able to raise from other sources.

It is pointed out to be a high-risk venture for investors. The investors do take all of the risk, and nothing is guaranteed. They also have to hang in there with it, because they may not get an immediate return on their investment. So I'm wondering what sort of research has been done by the member to establish what the investor pool is out there that would be interested in this kind of high-risk, very long-term investment. To my knowledge that isn't what you usually find in an investor. They're looking for a lower risk with more of a guaranteed return, and they want it quickly.

So what is the investor pool? Who's out there that's interested in this? Are they individuals? Are they corporations? Are they Albertans even? Where is the member expecting these investors to come from? Are they international investors? Are they Canadian investors? Where is he looking for this to come from? Eventually, if I understand this, the investor does end up with some equity in the venture, and I'm always a little concerned about having large amounts of foreign ownership of our farmland. Maybe the member himself or someone else can answer that question for me if we have time.

One of the other issues that came up as I did my reading on this is the point, well made I think, that farmers are pretty independent-minded folk. They'd have to be to get into the kind of venture that they get into, working so many hours often alone and taking on that risk basically by themselves or with their family to support them. This kind of venture does give someone else control over what they are trying to do. How well are farmers going to take to this? I'm wondering who the member was consulting with or who were the driving forces behind him bringing forward this motion. I was listening to the member, but I didn't hear things like UFA or other farmers' groups who were somehow behind this venture, pushing for this. I'm wondering if the farmers would even be willing to accept this kind of venture.

So that's the two sides of this. One, are the farmers going to go for it, and two, who are these investors? Who are they expected to be? Are they out there? Do we know that they're out there and they would even take it? I think the possibility for not necessarily abuse of this system but an unexpected outcome of this system is certainly there if we don't know already that that investor pool is there and it's who we want them to be and that there is acceptance of the scheme by the very people that are seeking the funds; that is, the farmers and the family-farm business. Truly, without those two groups working together on this one, we may well have put a mechanism in place, a process in place that's not wanted to be used by either of those groups, therefore open to abuse by others yet to be named. So I'm just looking to get the confirmation on what kind of research has been done behind this.

I understand that the government would likely be much in favour of this because it is a way of increasing venture capital for the farm industry without the government having to put any money up. I think there's a much longer conversation that we can all have about government subsidy and support of farmers and where that's going in the context of free trade agreements, NAFTA and now this larger free trade agreement, plus things ever looming on the horizon like the MAI.

I read an article recently about the whole idea of farm subsidies and government supported farms, a very interesting one saying, "Keep that kind of subsidy program we've now got in place," and the other side saying, "Dump it," and looking at different countries where those two systems are in place and seemingly working well in both cases. So there's a larger discussion underneath this idea of assistance to farmers that we have not ever really had in Alberta.

As we move increasingly from a rural-based population and economy to an urban-based population and economy, we continue to uphold all of those institutions that were put in place in support of a rural status. We haven't really revisited that and carried on that discussion, so I do find points still where there's an inequity between what kind of support and possibilities and opportunities are there for farmers and the rural way of life versus what's happening in the cities. But that's another discussion for another time.

The government does have to be involved with this or it does have to involve the feds, I think, in order to put the tax credit or the tax receipt in place to allow the first part of this scheme to work. My understanding of it is that an investor receives a tax write-off for a certain percentage based on whatever percentage has been established. Now, is that to be done through the federal government, and is the member aware of any negotiations or any movement on behalf of Revenue Canada being open to that or the federal government making a move to open up that legislation to include this kind of thing? Are we just kind of running this idea up the flagpole to see if it flies? Has that kind of investigation and research taken place?

If it's also to be coming from this provincial government, what sort of discussions have taken place with the Minister of Revenue and I suppose the minister of expenses? Essentially a tax receipt is forgone revenue, so what kinds of negotiations and discussions have taken place there? What kind of effect does this have on our Alberta bottom line if we are forgoing revenue as a result of this tax scheme being put in place?

One of the other things I looked at is: how is this process, this scheme looked at in the investing world? There was kind of a split decision there. Some people that were writing and talking about this scheme – I'm not saying "scheme" in any negative sense here; I just don't know how else to describe it – or this setup that's being proposed often seemed to be people who were in fact seeking this kind of a scheme to be set up – and it's already up and running in the oil sector, and it does mention the film sector as well. That's not in fact happening here in Alberta. I have checked with some of my contacts in the film industry, and while they have discussed this, they have not made any moves beyond that discussion stage that I'm aware of.

The investment community seems to be of two minds on whether this works or not. They tend to keep pointing out that it's a poor investment, and they don't tend to recommend it to their investors because it is risky, as they say, and often has a low return. So I guess that's a subsection of my concerns and comments around who that pool of investors is. These are the people who are advising those investors, and they don't seem to be entirely confident or promoting this particular way of doing things.

This investment sector – and I'm looking at those newsletters that all the banks and everybody puts out – keeps saying that the risk is totally on the shoulders of the investor, that historically flow-through shares have been bad and have not paid well for the investor, especially in the small resource-based companies. It's noted that governments like to encourage these flow-through shares, but the investment community seems to come out quite strongly saying, "Yeah, but the risk is totally on the investor," and they're not that keen to get people involved in this.

So I'm sure we'd be looking for . . .

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but the time allocation for this part of the Routine today has now expired.

4:30

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Tarchuk moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 30: Mr. Jacobs]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. GRAYDON: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the Assembly today and deliver my maiden speech in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Now, some may think that after 17 years of elected service to the city of Grande Prairie this occasion today might not be that significant. Let me assure you and other members of the Assembly here today that it is a significant day for me, for my family, and for the constituents of Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

While I have served these many years as an elected official, my constituency has changed considerably. Where previously I represented 36,000 residents of the city, I now represent about the same number, but they are split roughly in half, with half coming from the city, the other half coming from hamlets, towns, villages, the county of Grande Prairie, and the MD of Greenview.

I want to thank all those who supported and worked for me but especially those workers and voters from outside the city who took a leap of faith to support and trust a city mayor to bring their rural and small urban concerns to this provincial House. I appreciate their support and pledge to them that I will bring balanced representation to this Assembly and this government.

In my first few weeks I'm already seeing the new range of issues that I'm expected to help with, issues ranging from grizzly bears near a rural school to the construction of indoor soccer pitches at the Community Knowledge Campus in south Grande Prairie, a project that will feature two high schools, twin ice arenas, twin soccer pitches, and more, a co-operative effort of a public school board, a Catholic school board, and the city of Grande Prairie, a project that by working together will save the partners over $1 million per year in operating costs.

Now, of course, Mr. Speaker, a guy could go on and on about the qualities of the constituency that I've been elected to represent, but I think it's already a well-known fact that we have a robust, broad-based economy that contributes a great deal to Alberta's wealth and the Alberta advantage as well as a constituency that maintains a quality of life envied by many.

While thanking people, it would be remiss of me not to thank my wife, Anne, and our family of four children and five grandchildren for their support and understanding in the past and the present as I head off to Edmonton every week and they're left to keep the home fires burning. As well, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the encouragement and guidance of my father, the late John Graydon, a veteran of the Second World War and a farmer from Lacombe, Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I bring to this Assembly a reputation of one who makes short speeches, and I don't want to blow that reputation on my first opportunity to speak in the House today, but I do reserve the right to go on and on at some other occasion.

Let me wrap up by saying how much I've appreciated the warm welcome and help that I've received from all members, both returning and new, on both sides of the House as well as you, Mr. Speaker, and the staff here at the Legislature. You've made these first few weeks comfortable, a great learning experience, with so much more to look forward to. There's a quote that goes something like this: it's the set of the sails and not the gales that determine where we go. Well, obviously there are many gales here in this Assembly and in our province, but the throne speech laid out the set of the sails, and I have tremendous confidence and pride in the direction we are headed under the guidance of our Premier and my colleagues. Our province has a proud history and a very exciting future. I look forward with personal pride and anticipation to my role in this exciting future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Did the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti desire to adjourn the debate?

MR. GRAYDON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would move to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 3

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2001

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move third reading of Bill 3.

MS BLAKEMAN: This has been an interesting bill, and in third reading I just want to speak briefly to the effect of the bill. We here in the Liberal opposition have supported this bill at all stages, I think mostly because, certainly from my point of view, it gives us processes to be protecting water habitat and particularly water inhabitants, which would be fish, in Alberta. We seem to have in some cases lost control to limit the amount of fishing or the kind of fishing in a number of our lakes and streams.

This is essentially a housekeeping bill, a catch-up bill. Since I have stood in this House previously and complained that we're not doing enough in Alberta to update our statutes and bring them into the modern age, which would be 2001 now, I was pleased to see what this bill is attempting to do. Having spoken to this in second reading, I did say that I hadn't been able to consult with some of the people that I'm familiar with who are very concerned about what's happening in our waterways here in Alberta and especially around the fish stock. I have since been able to do that and got very positive feedback on what this bill is proposing to do.

It kind of surprised me actually. I was expecting more people to be up in arms about it, but no, it's pretty clear, even from the fishing groups that are out there. There's this walleye group that has written in to us about that, and I was also in touch with some folks I think from the trout fishing club – I'm sorry; I just can't remember the names off the top of my head – who all felt very strongly.

Actually, one group in particular felt pretty strongly that there should be no fishing derbies allowed whatsoever. They felt that what was happening with the fishing derbies in Alberta at this point was really causing problems in some of the lakes, because these fishing derbies are like golf tournaments. There are prizes for absolutely everything, so people are dragging fish out that they should not have in fact taken out of the water – they should have done a catch and release on them – to get one of these fabulous prizes. I think some of them are even doing, you know, the smallest fish, which is a particularly dumb thing to do in Alberta. Anyway, this group that I was talking to really had wanted no fishing derbies allowed at all because of what it does when hundreds of people descend on a lake and tromp around and run their boats around in the water and pull out all kinds of fish and then pack up, pull up stakes, and are gone.

So, as I say, I did my consultation. I did follow through, as I said I would, and I have to say that I'm supportive of the bill. I would like to see it go further, and I'm hoping that the minister is looking at further processes to put in place to control how people are fishing and to control our fish stock in Alberta more.

There is some talk of certain species of fish no longer being stocked by the government, which I think is a great concern to the fishing community. We've got to be able to manage better what we already have. Anything that's in place that allows us to manage what we already have – and that's what I'm assuming is going to be happening with this, particularly under the fishing derby part, where there has to be licences. I'm presuming that the minister foresees being able to not issue a licence for a derby if it was being held on a lake that would be deemed to be dangerous to the fish stock. If I can get him on record saying that, I'll be a happy woman.

That's really the only issue that I wanted to raise during third reading, and I'm pleased to have had the opportunity to be able to speak. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief in my remarks about Bill 3, but I first would like to express my gratitude to the minister for providing answers to the questions I had at second reading debate. I really appreciate his diligence and the diligence of his department in providing these answers. I am pleased to see that he's not scaling back in his efforts in regards to the Fisheries (Alberta) Act. I'm glad to see that there are penalties or jail or that there can be a combination of both if there are to be violations.

I would like to note for the record that I do have some concerns about the consultations with the sportfishing guides here, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, there has been no decision as to whether or not the Alberta Professional Outfitters Society will be involved in the administration of the sportfishing guide industry. I understand there's going to be a consultation process with the guides about the administration of their industry before any regulations are put in place. I know there have been complaints. There certainly have been complaints to the constituency office in Edmonton-Gold Bar from professional outfitters that they have felt that the government has moved and has not consulted them. So with that, I would caution the minister about that.

Again, I would like to express my gratitude. It certainly made my job much easier through his co-operation and the speed with which he and his department officials answered my questions at second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The effect of this bill, I expect, will be favourable if it's implemented, although I expressed concern earlier that it is not strong enough or doesn't take on enough of the issues that are putting our fish population at risk.

The quality of water is certainly a concern. In looking through some information on Alberta's wildlife, 50 percent of amphibians are threatened or endangered in Alberta and a quarter of the fish species are at risk. This suggests, of course, ongoing concern with the quality of our aquatic environment in Alberta, and I'm concerned that Bill 3 does not go nearly far enough. A number of organizations certainly do identify overfishing as a concern and one of the causes for Alberta's declining fish stocks, but with a quarter of the fish species at risk, I think we need to be looking at a number of causes.

Bull trout, walleye, pike, and perch are all subject to being depleted by overfishing, but they are also subject to other reasons for their decline, whether that decline is deterioration of water quality, pollution, overdevelopment, disruption of water flows and aquifers, and so on. This is affecting not only sport fishermen but the commercial fishery in Alberta. Alberta Environment's own figures suggest that in 1987 there were 3,000 tonnes of fish taken commercially out of Alberta waters. By 1993 that had declined to below 2,000 tonnes, and now we're seeing in the last couple of years, after a brief recovery through the mid-90s, a rather precipitous drop in the take from the commercial fishery in Alberta. It gets me to thinking that we may be facing the same kind of environmental collapse in the fishery in Alberta that we have watched unfold so tragically in Newfoundland with the cod fisheries.

The cod fisheries were thought to be virtually inexhaustible in Newfoundland, supported hundreds of thousands of Newfoundlanders over many centuries, and then with the advent of new fishing techniques in the last 20 years and with deterioration of environmental conditions, the cod fishery has collapsed. Even with the suspension of commercial fisheries, the virtually complete suspension of commercial fishing in Newfoundland, the cod population has not recovered.

Well, if we look at that example and wonder what's going to happen in Alberta, I'm worried that the same trend is occurring, that in fact we've seen a dramatic decline in the commercial fish stocks in Alberta and sportfishery success in Alberta. There have been steps taken to restock lakes, to increase the catch-and-release programs, to limit takes on fish, yet we're not seeing the fish populations recover at all, and that's very worrisome to me.

I think we need to reduce human impacts and protect the habitat for fish and indeed for all the vulnerable species. This is not just a matter of sentimentality, if you can be sentimental about fish. It's also a matter of economic prosperity for the province, and the annual losses in the commercial fishery incurred since 1987 in Alberta measure in the many millions of dollars. In fact, they decline virtually every year, and again going from Alberta Environment figures, I believe the value of the commercial fishery in Alberta has almost collapsed. It's gone from an index level of 100 in 1990 down to about 40. It's at about 40 percent of its value, and a large portion of that drop has occurred just in the last two or three years, where we've seen the value of the commercial fishery in Alberta decline by half in about three years, which tells me the fish population is just disappearing. The same kind of trend is clear in sportfishing, where we can see the value of sportfishery also following virtually an identical trend to the commercial fishery.

It's very interesting to note that going in the opposite direction, if you plot economic growth, the faster and the further the economy climbs in Alberta, the more rapidly the fishery collapses. It makes one wonder if there is a correlation here. As we open up our wilderness and our northern waters, our northern rivers and lakes, to industrial development, as we see cities expanding, as we see oil and gas wells being drilled in areas that have never been touched before, we are at the same time seeing the collapse of the natural environment and with that the fish stocks of the province.

With Bill 3 it's a step. It's heading in the right direction, but I think we will find that is woefully inadequate and that Alberta's fish stocks will be as low five years from now as they are today and that we will be looking at much more drastic actions or simply not only at abandoning the commercial fishery in Alberta but virtually abandoning the whole tradition of sport and recreational fishing, which would be a great tragedy for this province.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I'll take my seat. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to close the debate.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I only have a few comments to make. First of all, I'd like to thank the opposition for the comments and recommendations they've made and the support they've given throughout the debate on the particular bill.

4:50

I agree; this bill is a good bill. It's a step in the right direction. It's targeted certain areas, but in order to address some of the concern the opposition here and the public out there mentioned in relation to the whole commercial and sportfishing industry in Alberta, I intend to as soon as possible come forward with a plan to look at further rationalization of the whole fishing industry in Alberta. I think it's time that it's done. I will of course have to take that process through our own approval structure. I also will commit that I will be consulting with the opposition members to seek their support and help and guidance as we move forward with that industry, because the benefit is for all Albertans.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to say thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Bill 4 Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2001

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move third reading of Bill 4.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time on third reading of Bill 4, Surface Rights Amendment Act, I would like to say for the record that I think certainly this is an improvement in compensation claims, from $5,000 to $25,000. This may even be too low. I'm not convinced that it isn't, but it certainly is a step in the right direction.

However, when you see the increase – this maximum level of appeals for surface rights compensation claims to be considered by the Surface Rights Board can be in that range of $5,000 to $25,000 – it is unfortunate that due to the nature of the board's mandate, there's no impact on the environment by the operations of the board. All environmental issues before the board are dealt with by other agencies.

When you look at surface rights, there are many ways that landowners could be affected. There is generally no difference, in my view, between surface rights and environmental rights. For instance, let's take the case of a battery. Let's use for example, Mr. Speaker, a battery that is located on a quarter section of land where a rancher or a farmer has a herd of cattle grazing.

That battery produces many things. We can only naturally assume that battery is going to have a flare. It will have a flare, and regardless of whether that flare is burning, there's going to be gas at the flare tip. That gas will be emitted into the atmosphere, and some of the particulates in that unflared gas will land on that surrounding land, and where does the owner of that land go? There are many, many cases where the farmers' cattle have been affected by industrial activities like batteries.

Now, this surface rights amendment I don't believe goes far enough. There is an increased suspicion, particularly since deregulation has become fashionable with this government, that there has been an unacceptable decline in the relationship between landowners and petroleum companies.

Now, the activities around that battery can certainly affect the livestock, but the rancher or the farmer does not have the ability in this legislation to have his or her concerns addressed. This is something that I think we need to take a look at in this Assembly. The effect of this, of course, is not only on the cattle, but it's on the land. I believe it's residual. By that I mean it remains behind for long periods of time. Benzene is one chemical that's not suitable for man nor beast as it comes off the flare tip.

The whole idea of surface rights I think has to be discussed. We can look at landowners in Sherwood Park and how they feel, in Fort Saskatchewan, any area. Certainly north of Calgary there are some producing wells, some sour gas wells. How do the citizens feel about that in close proximity? Would $25,000 be enough to meet their needs? I don't think so. That's why I would caution the Assembly that perhaps $25,000 is not suitable.

Now, I'm sure the hon. minister has consulted extensively with the stakeholders regarding this issue, and whether the target of $25,000 was a mutually agreed-upon figure, I don't know, but the stakeholders that have been consulted by this side of the House, by the researchers, the ones that they talked to had no idea that this bill was even coming forward.

So when you look at the changes that this could have on the cattle industry, the changes that it could have on soil conditions in the immediate proximity to a battery or a pumping station, a gas plant even, a petrochemical plant but also the changes that this has as the urban areas grow bigger and bigger and get closer and closer to existing developments in the oil and gas industry, I'm sure that in the future – it won't be 20 years or 17 years – hon. members of this Assembly will be debating this very issue and the whole idea of what is adequate about that range between $5,000 and $25,000.

With those comments at third reading, Mr. Speaker, I shall cede the floor to another hon. colleague of this Assembly. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to close the debate.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the opposition for their comments and for some of their recommendations and some of their concerns they have brought forward in relation to this bill. I believe that again this bill is targeted on a certain area, but I believe it is in the right direction.

You can be assured this ministry will continue monitoring the situation. I believe there was some mention in relation to the increase in the dollars that that may not be enough. We will monitor it further, and if further adjustments are required in the future, then we'll come back and go through the process with the adjustments that are required.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the opposition and thank the House for listening to this process. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the good progress we've made this afternoon, I move that we call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene this evening, we do so in Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: Would all hon. members in favour of the motion put forward by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed? Please say no. Carried.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Assembly adjourned at 5 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 1, 2001

8:00 p.m.

Date: 01/05/01

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: We'd like to start Committee of Supply. For the benefit of those in the gallery as well as in the seats, this is the less formal part of the Legislature. People may move from one place to another and sit down and talk to a friend or a colleague if they do so quietly. Only one member is allowed to stand and talk at a time. People may remove their jackets. We may have coffee or juice or pop in here. So it's less formal. It is designed to promote ready exchange back and forth. You must speak, though, from your own place.

Again, just so everyone is clear on the new rules that have been agreed to by our House leaders and by ourselves, before the Committee of Supply starts, then, this evening, the chair would like to confirm the arrangements that have been made. In the April 10, 2001, agreement House leaders agreed that the minister whose department estimates were before the committee would have 10 minutes for opening comments, followed by one hour of questioning by the opposition parties. Under the agreement the minister would have five minutes to conclude consideration of the estimates for his or her department.

The hon. Minister for Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you. I wondered if it would be your pleasure to introduce those that are in the gallery this evening, if you had intended to do that.

THE CHAIRMAN: We do intend to do it as soon as we get the rules out. Sure, and I'll call upon you then; is that right?

The agreement is silent on questions by members of the government caucus. Should there be any questions or comments by members in that caucus, it would be after the opposition parties have had their hour but, the chair assumes, before the minister makes the concluding remarks.

Under agreement two departments are to have their estimates considered tonight and on Wednesday as well as on Monday. All consideration of the estimates is to be completed before the normal adjournment hour of midnight on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings and 5:30 on Thursday afternoon. The only matter that the chair would add is that under the agreement the first estimate to be considered by the Committee of Supply this evening is Infrastructure, and when we're finished with that, then we would go to Transportation. Anyway, that's just to refresh your memory – this was all given to you last evening by the chair – and just in case there are some people here tonight who weren't here yesterday.

Now, we have Introduction of Guests. The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

head: Introduction of Guests

MS EVANS: Thank you. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly this evening – perhaps that's a touch too formal – some wonderful young Albertans who are seated both in the members' gallery and in the public gallery who represent the Forum for Young Albertans, whom many of us have had the pleasure of meeting, talking with, and learning their ideas from today. They are great Albertans, over 50 of them, who I think will be proud inheritors of our legislative responsibilities some day in the future. Could I just ask the youth assembled from the forum to please rise and receive the acclaim of our Legislature?

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Speaker, if it pleases you, it is an absolute delight to introduce to you and through you a very good friend of mine. He's either a very good friend or he's very silly, because he ended up getting out on the freeway with me every morning at 7 o'clock to wave at traffic. [interjection] Both, yeah. That's the definition of friendship. I'd like to ask him to rise, be recognized, and please accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. It's my friend Quincy.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, those pleasantries are concluded.

head: Main Estimates 2001-2002

Infrastructure

THE CHAIRMAN: We can now commence this evening's considerations and call upon the hon. minister to begin his remarks.

MR. LUND: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and good evening, ladies and gentlemen. Before I start, I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce some of the staff that are here with me tonight. To start off, I'd like to introduce the new Deputy Minister of Infrastructure, Maria David-Evans. With her we have Ray Reshke, who is the ADM of corporate services, and we share him with Transportation; Malcolm Johnson, the ADM of Property Development; Debra Strutt and Larry James, executive directors, property supply and management; David Bray, director of communications; Tom Hong, executive director, business management; and Winnie Yiu-Yeung, executive director of finance.

Infrastructure's three-year business plan and 2001-2002 estimates indicate how we plan to contribute to Alberta's economic prosperity by managing the development of health care facilities, schools, postsecondary facilities, and seniors' lodges; planning, operating, maintaining, and developing government facilities; and managing services to government departments, including procurement of supplies, disposal of surplus materials, air transportation, and government vehicle fleet operations. We support the provincial government's ongoing strong financial management, which allows us to continue to maintain and enhance Alberta's physical and technical infrastructure.

Infrastructure continues to work with a number of ministries to address priority issues and ongoing initiatives and to increase our effectiveness and efficiency in addressing government needs. These include the Ministry of Health and Wellness, to ensure that long-term regional capital plans are developed in partnership with the regional health authorities; the Ministry of Learning, to plan and develop capital plans, programs, policies, and legislation for K to grade 12 schools and postsecondary institutions; the Ministry of Seniors, on the provincewide upgrading of seniors' lodges; the Ministry of Community Development, to develop and upgrade museums and other cultural facilities; the Ministry of Children's Services, to provide approximately 100 Alberta children's initiative offices across the province; the Ministry of Transportation, to lead the capital planning initiative for the government of Alberta; and the Ministry of Energy, to continue with the energy rebate program.

Overall, Alberta Infrastructure's 2001-2002 budget has increased by some $2.1 billion from last year. This budget increase includes $303 million in program funding restored for the capital health facilities and school facilities programs, as this was deferred from last year in order to provide partial funding for the energy rebates; $598 million to address costs of the energy rebates program, and this amount includes $473 million to continue with last year's program and $125 million for the natural gas shielding program, which is to commence on July 1; $600 million for health care facilities; $400 million for school facilities; $210 million for postsecondary institutions; $19.3 million to commence the centennial projects program, and this is part of the $85.4 million transferred from Community Development for the planning, design, and construction of the approved centennial projects; and $20 million for the operating costs of the Swan Hills treatment centre. This is onetime funding, as our objective is to sell the facility during the year 2001-2002.

I'd like to highlight some aspects of the 2001-02 estimates, including funding for Infrastructure's health care facilities. Additional onetime funding approvals, beginning with the 2001-2002 health care facility project budget, to over $870 million: these funds will be used to proceed with new capital projects to address waiting lists, priorities, upgrade or replace older, long-term care and acute care facilities, and develop new capacity to meet the need for Alberta's growing and aging population.

In addition, two new centres of excellence are being constructed, one in Edmonton and one in Calgary. These facilities are being constructed at a cost estimated at approximately $125 million each. Two million dollars will be spent in 2001-02 to develop plans for these facilities. Future year approvals for these two facilities, which are targeted to open in the year 2005, our centennial year, include $34 million in 2002-03 and $40 million in 2003-04.

The cardiac centre of excellence, to be built in Edmonton, will provide surgery including open-heart and transplants, coronary care units, ambulatory care clinics, as well as research in transplants and heart, stroke, and vascular biology. The primary site for this will be at the University of Alberta hospital. The bone and joint centre of excellence, to be built in Calgary, will provide orthopedic surgery including joint replacement and fracture reduction, chronic pain management, rehabilitation, expertise in prosthesis and orthotics, as well as research in bone and joint disease. The primary site for this will be at the Foothills medical centre in Calgary. The result will be shorter waiting lists for these critical services for all Albertans.

Alberta will continue to attract and retain the best people in these fields and produce a centre of expertise with a worldwide reputation. The new centres will build on Edmonton's leadership in cardiac services and on Calgary's excellent reputation in bone and joint research and education.

Alberta schools infrastructure is being improved under the new century schools plan. The multiyear plan commits $1.075 billion to Alberta schools. This funding is targeted to upgrade viable schools through modernization and to build new schools where they are most urgently needed. School facilities funding allocations in 2001-02 include over $700 million to address growth pressures and the renovation/modernization backlog identified through the school facilities evaluation program.

The 2001-02 estimate for postsecondary facilities is over $255 million. The level of funding will help the institutions address various program delivery requirements. I'm pleased to say that we are now in the process of doing comprehensive facility evaluation for the postsecondary facilities. We will be in a better position to determine actual facility requirements once the study is complete.

In 2002-03 $80 million is targeted for two new health research innovation centres for the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. Ten million dollars was already provided to these universities last year to allow them to proceed with feasibility studies. These facilities will be primarily for research and development but will also support the training of highly qualified personnel in the health sciences.

The total cost of these research facilities is estimated at $220 million, with $90 million contributed from Infrastructure. The provincial contribution is expected to leverage funding from the federal government through the Canada Foundation for Innovation and the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and from private and community partners.

The seniors' lodges program will be provided with $17.1 million to be used for the upgrading of lodges.

In 2001-02 we will provide about $40 million for accommodation and program delivery facilities such as Alberta's children's initiative offices and agriculture's food processing plant at Leduc.

We also will have a commitment of $96.7 million for the operation and maintenance of government-owned facilities. In 2001-02 $20 million is required from Infrastructure to provide for the operating costs of the Swan Hills treatment plant. We are currently operating the plant as a going concern using a private operator. The government expects to release a request for proposal in late spring of this year, seeking a qualified firm to purchase and operate the facility for the long term. Approximately $82 million has been allocated to the leasing and operation of private-sector facilities for government program use.

I would also like to mention one other major initiative that is involving the 100th anniversary of our province.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks. I am anxious to hear the praise and the glory that the opposition are bound to put on us for the fine management over the last nine years. Now, you have to remember, though, that you have to put your brain in gear before your mouth.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's certainly very valuable advice by the minister, and I certainly hope he follows his own good advice.

Good evening to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and his colleagues who are able to join us here this evening. The hon. minister has a very big task ahead of him and one that we appreciate takes up a considerable amount of our budget each year. While the responsibility for roads in the province, Mr. Chairman, has gone to his colleague from Vegreville-Viking, the Member for Rocky Mountain House has a lot of bricks and mortar to manage as well. With this year's plans for one more round of onetime spending he looks to be a very, very busy person.

There are some very big-ticket items in the budget this year, and I look forward to receiving a reply from the minister on the details of those programs. I hope that if we're not able to get through all of our questions tonight, the minister will accept a letter with the remaining questions in it, and I know he will agree to that. Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Before getting into the specific program questions, I'd like to make a comment on the challenges of making year-to-year comparisons in this ever changing ministry. Not long ago there was transportation and utilities and the department of public works, supply and services. Then we had the superministry of infrastructure. Now we have Infrastructure and Transportation. It is difficult to hold the government accountable when these changes keep happening, but change is what makes politics fun.

With those comments I would like to move on to concerns that I had when I read through the Auditor General's report. I'm referring to page 180 of the report, where the Auditor General talks about effective capital asset management systems. He goes on to say:

We found that the Ministry has many of the elements of capital asset management systems in place or is in the process of developing these systems through the implementation of the strategies of the Capital Planning Initiative. We also noted that improvements to the Ministry's systems could be made. Specifically, we noted that the Ministry should obtain additional information on strategic program delivery needs to develop long-term capital asset plans for owned and supported facilities, develop processes for monitoring the implementation of the CPI within the Ministry and review existing plans for the development and implementation of infrastructure management systems.

Now, again, Mr. Chairman, when we look at the incredible number of dollars that are in this budget and the enormous job that the minister is faced with in monitoring and tracking all of these assets and these dollars, then I think that this advice, this sound advice, from the Auditor General is something that the minister certainly has taken into consideration. I would like to know what his department is doing in order to implement this very worthwhile suggestion.

As well, I read further into the Auditor General's report on the ministry financial statements, and I'm referring to page 181 of the report.

In accordance with corporate government accounting policies, the Ministry reports the costs of site restoration in the period in which the restoration work is performed rather than in the periods in which the liabilities arose. In my view, the Ministry should estimate the cost and record the liability for sites that do not meet the required contractual or environmental standards. The estimate of the liability should be refined each year, as the extent of required restoration work becomes clearer. I believe that the effect of this departure from generally accepted accounting principles is significant; therefore, a reservation of opinion is noted in my auditor's report.

Once again I would ask the minister: what is the department doing in order to meet this recommendation of the Auditor General to get back to what is a generally accepted accounting principle at this particular time?

Now, then, moving along in the estimates, Mr. Chairman. As I mentioned, particularly with the changes in the department, it has been very difficult tracking the dollars, and this is one of those ministries that expands and contracts and has had a number of very significant changes over the last few years. Certainly, as I went through here, I could not find any notes which would assist any person trying to make a wise decision as to how those dollars are to be tracked between the various ministries, and when I looked through the business plans here as well, I also noted that again there were no notes at all to assist anyone when they went through these particular business plans. I also note that this probably would be the proper time to do that, particularly when we looked at the operating budget for the ministry this year increasing by roughly $2 billion, I think I heard the minister say.

When we look at program 1, ministry support services, for the year 2001-2002 the operating estimate is $15,364,000. For the year 2000-2001 the operating actual was $14,357,000, when the operating budget for the same period was $14,357,000. For capital estimates for the year 2001-2002 the amount was $410,000, and the capital actual for the year 2000-2001 was $410,000, and the budgeted amount was also $410,000 for ministry support services.

My questions relating to these figures. How many full-time equivalents are employed under ministry support services in the year 2001-2002? What is the breakdown of the full-time equivalents by the three subprograms: the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, and support services? My next question: what capital projects were funded by the $410,000 in capital investment in 2000-2001, and what will be funded in 2001-2002? Why is there an additional $1 million needed for operating expenses for ministry support services this year? Also, would the minister please provide us with a breakdown of the $390,000 in the minister's office budget for the year 2001-2002, and could you please provide that breakdown in salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses?

AN HON. MEMBER: Hosting expenses?

MR. BONNER: Yes, we have to host in this department.

Also I would like to know what is the breakdown of the $385,000 deputy minister's office budget for 2001-02, again for salaries in permanent positions, salaries in nonpermanent positions, salaries in contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses. Again, could the minister please provide the breakdown of the $14.589 million operating estimate for support services in 2001-02 and if he could please give us a category breakdown for business planning and corporate support, communications, financial services, human resource services, information technology, legal services?

Now, then, last year, Mr. Chairman, there was one Ministry of Infrastructure. This year there is a Ministry of Infrastructure and a Ministry of Transportation. Both of these ministries show budgets for ministry support services for 2000-2001, but these numbers do not seem to match the approved estimates for the Ministry of Infrastructure for the year 2000-2001. The capital investment appears to reconcile a portion of the approved amounts that have been allotted to each of the new ministries, but the budgets for the minister's office or the deputy minister's office do not seem to split out. It is very difficult for Albertans to see how much the supersized cabinet is costing.

Accurate reporting on this account is very important, because back under the old ministry of transportation and utilities the minister's office had a budget of $220,000, and public works had a ministerial budget of $270,000. Under the superministry of Infrastructure the amount was $388,000. Now that we have two new and improved ministries, Infrastructure and Transportation, the combined cost for ministerial offices is $775,000. That's $390,000 for Infrastructure and $385,000 for Transportation. Would it be possible for the minister to check with the accountants and provide an explanation as to how they arrived at the 2000-2001 budgets and actual numbers for these ministries?

Mr. Chairman, when I was going through and looking over the various goals and the business plans that occurred, I was quite amazed that we did have some key results, we had strategies, we had a number of different items that were looked at, but in all of this I could not see a column which stated the outcome. In other words, what was the target for the particular year for many of these strategies? Was that target reached, was it exceeded, or did it fall short? When we see numbers like 90 percent or 75 percent or whatever, this really doesn't mean too much. So I certainly would like to see in future years that there is a column for outcomes where we can track in a very definite manner what has happened as far as performance, as I mentioned earlier, in the three categories: whether we fell short, whether we achieved it, or whether we surpassed it.

Now, looking at program 2, construction, upgrading, and operation of infrastructure, I note here that for the fiscal year 2001-2002 the operating estimate is $11,827,000. Last fiscal year the operating actual was $118,557,000 and the operating budget for the same year was $112,703,000. I also notice that for the year 2001-2002 the capital estimate was $705,000, the capital actual for the year 2000-2001 was $1,523,000, and the capital budget for that same year was $830,000. Now, my questions in regards to construction, upgrading, and operation of infrastructure. How many full-time equivalents are employed under program 2, construction, upgrading, and operation of infrastructure? What is the breakdown of the full-time equivalents by the subprograms in program 2?

When I look at the budget line 2.1.1, health care facilities, under facilities infrastructure, I notice that the operating estimate for 2001-2002 is $750,100,000. I also note that the operating, lotteries, for this same fiscal year is $120 million, that for the year 2000-2001 the operating actual was $70 million, and that the operating budget for that particular year was $48 million. So looking at these particular figures, Mr. Chairman, my questions to the ministry. In the ministry's business plan, funding for health care facilities is targeted at $870 million this year, then dropping to $81 million in 2002-2003, and then back up to $132 million in 2003-2004. Can the minister provide some explanation for this spending pattern? Also, in health care facilities, will the minister provide a list of all projects being considered for 2001-2002.

The next line I would like to look at is line 2.1.2, school facilities, and I see that in the fiscal year 2001-2002 the operating estimate is $555,030,000. For the same period the operating, lotteries, is $150 million. In the year 2000-2001 the operating actual was $130,030,000, and for 2000-2001 the operating budget was $60,030,000. My questions to the minister in regards to school facilities are: will replacement of and repairs to schools be funded based on the recent and very detailed report on the status of our schools' infrastructure, or will school infrastructure be funded and repaired based on political expediency?

As well, on page 222 of the minister's business plans the strategy is to use $705 million in 2001-2002 "to address high-priority requests." I would like to know what makes a request a high priority. Is this a priority as set up by school boards, or is there some other measure which is being used to determine priority?

As well, I'd also like to look at line 2.1.3, postsecondary facilities. I note here that we have an operating expense for the year 2001-2002 of $195,700,000, and we have an operating, lotteries, for the same period of $60 million. For the year 2000-2001 we had an operating actual of $33,400,000 and an operating budget of $17,400,000. In looking at postsecondary facilities, I would like to ask the minister about funding from Infrastructure, which has an effect on postsecondary operating budgets and therefore an effect on tuition levels. We see a great difference between the budget and the actual for postsecondary funding in 2000-2001. So if the minister could please fill us in as to why there is such a difference in this particular situation.

The last item I'd like to discuss at this particular time, as I see my time is running out, Mr. Chairman, is seniors' lodges. I see that our operating estimate for 2001-2002 is $7,100,000. The operating funded by lotteries for the same period is $10 million. For the previous fiscal year, 2000-2001, the operating actual was $5,800,000, and for the same period the operating budget was $7,100,000. What I would like to ask the minister is why there is no increase in the budget for seniors' lodges despite the aging population.

I will end my questions at this particular time. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will carry on with the questions that were being pursued by my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry, particularly regarding seniors' lodges. The minister in his opening remarks addressed the fact that we have an aging population in this province, and I am concerned certainly about not only the quality of the existing seniors' lodges, but also I have concerns about the speed at which we are constructing new facilities. In this budget, is the budget for seniors' lodges going to create new spaces or just renovate existing ones? What are the government's plans this way? What inventory of seniors' housing is the government expecting it will need in the next 10-, 15-, and 20-year period, because I would love to see some long-term planning from this current government. I think it's very, very important, and we need to study other jurisdictions just to see exactly how they are providing quality, affordable housing for seniors.

Now, in the ministry's business plans for the year 2001 through to 2004 I understand they show funding for seniors' lodges decreasing to $12 million in 2002-2003 and then down to $8 million the following fiscal year. Our population is getting older, not younger. To the hon. minister: why is this funding level this way? It seems to me to be going in the wrong way, because we always hear from ministers and from hon. members in the government that we have an aging population. We have a crisis in this province. Just look at health care. But when I look at this, that concern is not reflected.

Now, the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. Another $20 million. I don't know when this is going to end. I don't know if it will ever end. It just astonishes me. It's all innocent funding, a little bit more and a little bit more. Certainly we're over the $470 million, and I think this is going to bring us up to $490 million and counting. We had very little money for the poor, for seniors, yet for the Swan Hills waste treatment plant there's no tomorrow.

I would like to bring attention to the Financial Administration Act, section 49.1, outlining when the government must bring business dealings before the Legislative Assembly. The Premier, Mr. Chairman, in question period has offered to table some documents relating to the Swan Hills waste treatment plant, because there are many, many unanswered questions there.

Now, I would ask the minister to please look at section 49.1(3) of the Financial Administration Act. Un program 2.1.10 for the Swan Hills waste treatment plant, the "waste" part has been removed from the title in the budget documents. This should have been brought before the Assembly. The act, as I understand it - now, I could be corrected here - does allow for some exemptions to this clause. So I'd call on the minister to either table the documents so these estimates can be voted on and so we all know what's going on here or indicate the exemption being used to prevent Albertans, the taxpayers - they're the ones that have lost millions of dollars here - from seeing how their money is being invested.

I don't believe I even should use the word "invested." I should use the term "lost," because it's been going up that incinerator stack, and it's just amazing. We're out of the business of being in business, we're told, but not whenever I see a $20 million line item here. We are not out of the business of being in business. We are still funding that, and I would like to know what this $20 million figure is based on. We are paying some very significant management fees, as I understand, for this plant. Also, on page 222 of the ministry's business plans there is an identified strategy to manage the Swan Hills waste treatment centre "during transition and develop and implement a long-term strategy for the facility." Any background the minister can provide on this initiative would be appreciated. [interjection]

Now, that's a very interesting question, about the environmental damage, because we know, Mr. Chairman, that there was some faulty welding in the waste treatment plant that led to a substantial release of PCBs, furans, and dioxins, and the taxpayers are going to have to pick up that bill. I'm wondering if the minister has had any studies done on what exactly that bill is going to total.

While I'm at it, I would also be curious just to see how far we've come along, if at all, with the construction of the proposed chain-link fence that was to be constructed around the waste treatment plant as part of the creative sentencing in the famous court case that occurred where the treatment facility was fined over $600,000, I believe, for two charges from the Environmental Enhancement and Protection Act. There was a fence to be built to keep the large mammals at the top of the food chain from grazing in the immediate vicinity.

The minister is smiling. This is the proposal that was put forward. Now, I don't know whether it's gone forward or not. The hon. minister is in a much better position to know than I. I'd have to drive up there and have a look and I just don't have the time, but I would be very curious just to see if that fence has been constructed. It was an area of 1.5 kilometres in a circular pattern from the centre of the plant. This was one of the solutions. I believe it was to cost half the total sum of the fine, close to $300,000. If the minister could look into that, I would be very, very grateful.

Now, will the minister provide some background information, please, and details on what is covered under the program services relating to energy rebates on line 2.2.1, and on line 2.3, program services, please, and also for financial transactions, line item 2.4. There is an operating estimate here of $2 million. If the minister could please explain what the $2 million budget for the program on line 2.4.3, consumption of inventories, covers.

We're getting to the next program, and that's program 3. My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods has some questions regarding cross-government services and the air transportation services, and I know he's quite anxious to ask those.

I have a few more questions from the business plan. Now, I see that goal 1 is that we're going to "enhance infrastructure planning and management." On page 221 we are discussing participation in the "development of a policy framework and guidelines for public/private partnerships." Oh, we're going to have more private/public partnerships. What guidelines are currently in place for these partnerships? What is the process for developing this framework and guidelines? Can the minister please provide some examples of the public/private partnerships? Please don't say Bill 11.

Now, we see here on page 221 as well that there is going to be some assistance. We're going to "assist consumers by reducing the cost of natural gas, propane and fuel oil through monthly rebates." This is a business plan until the year 2004. Does the minister see this as a viable program until 2004? Other members of cabinet are confident in their assurances not only to myself but to other Albertans that this is just a spike in natural gas prices. In fact, the hon. minister himself the other evening in the Assembly said that it was a real sharp spike. Does the hon. minister expect this real sharp spike to last until the year 2004?

Now, also on page 221 there is a discussion regarding working with "all government departments, industry and external stakeholders to achieve a reduction in power consumption." Well, this side of the House wanted to lead by example and have all government departments and offices reduce their electricity consumption by 10 percent. Mr. Chairman, sometimes I look up at the ceiling of this distinguished Assembly and think that perhaps the minister should take some light bulbs strategically out of there in a grid formation, and that way we could spell "no more deregulation." We could serve two purposes with that. We certainly could be sticking to his business plan here, and we could be saving electricity at the same time. Every time one of the members of Executive Council leaned back in their chair, they would be reminded of the folly of what they attempted with their plan to deregulate our electricity generation system. It would be a good idea, yes.

Now, by keeping energy prices artificially low – this is also in relation to page 221 – what are the minister's specific plans to reduce power consumption?

On the next page, 222, there is a discussion on developing "a facility to accommodate the provincial archives." Where does the minister anticipate the archives being moved to? What options are being considered at this time? We certainly need a permanent home for the archives, and I think it should be within a short walking distance of the Legislative Assembly. I saw the hon. minister himself, I believe with a couple of his assistants, the other day at noontime at Jasper and 107th Street, busy chatting, waiting for the light to cross, Mr. Chairman, and that would be about the maximum distance away from the provincial parliament that I would like to see the archives built.

Now, there are some people who expressed an interest in putting it down at the power plant, but all their important papers on the floodplain – I don't know how often that floods, but the minister will study this. If there's a hundred-year flood on the flats, then I don't think that's an appropriate place for the Provincial Archives but certainly somewhere within a distance of the Assembly. I would be delighted if that were to be one of the works that is to be concluded by our centennial year. I think it would be a very worthwhile project, and it's a project that will benefit generations and generations of Albertans, including scholars who will be coming to study the hon. minister's political career. I don't know how many different ministries he's been in charge of, but surely there are going to be people going through the papers, and they can have a look at just exactly what was accomplished by the individuals in this Assembly.

Also on page 222 there's a discussion to "renovate and expand the Food Processing Centre in Leduc." What are the specific plans for renovating and expanding the food processing plant in Leduc?

Also on page 222 what options are being considered for the Westerra Building in Stony Plain?

As my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry stated, certainly if the minister in due time can reply in writing if the answers aren't available immediately for these questions, that will be fine.

Mr. Chairman, in closing my questions at this time, I would like to thank the hon. minister for his attention, and I wish him well in his portfolio. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make these brief remarks vis-a-vis the 2001-2002 budget estimates for the Ministry of Infrastructure. The Department of Infrastructure has advanced a business plan that ostensibly identifies the priorities and concerns of the ministry. According to this plan, the people of Alberta are the primary concern, followed by their prosperity and their preservation.

Yet after reviewing the budget estimates for this fiscal year, it becomes clear that there's little agreement between those who created the business plan and those who completed the estimates. Indeed, projected spending of this ministry unmasks a profound ambivalence towards the people of Alberta at best and, at worst, sheer disdain for their prosperity and their preservation. With certainly one who contrasts the business plan and the spending projections would be convinced that there might be two divergent schools of thought within the government department.

We are all well acquainted with the fact that school classroom sizes are growing steadily larger and that waiting lists for medical procedures are likewise growing steadily longer, yet it is the minister's intention to allow the Swan Hills treatment plant to burn more of our hard-earned dollars, $14 million more than last year. The ministry is also proposing to spend $19.4 million on centennial projects. This is in addition to tens of millions of dollars of centennial projects and celebrations that are being funded by other ministries like Community Development. Where, oh, where, Mr. Chairman, is that big, tough just-say-no Provincial Treasurer when all the ministers are having a party at taxpayers' expense?

My questions to the Minister of Infrastructure are these. First, how can the government further justify pouring yet another $20 million into the Swan Hills treatment plant given the fact that it has already incinerated almost $500 million of taxpayers' money during its troubled existence? Why do we continue to throw good money after bad when it comes to this costly white elephant? Does the government have an exit strategy when it comes to the bleeding of red ink as a result of taxpayers' support of this facility?

Second, what useful purpose is served by the expenditure of $19.4 million for so-called centennial projects out of the Ministry of Infrastructure's budget? Am I saying that these funds are necessarily wasted? No, Mr. Chairman, I'm not, but there is no way of telling here. Are these funds being directed to community facilities owned by voluntary organizations? Are they going to schools and hospitals? Is the main purpose to provide photo ops for government MLAs to hand out cheques to community groups that lead up to the next election?

AN HON. MEMBER: Oh, you're so cynical.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, I'll just digress a little bit. I've certainly been involved in municipal government for many years before this and am quite aware of how government MLAs can show up regularly with a cheque in hand and how few times we saw opposition MLAs in the same position. You know, time and time again there was the government member, but of course our opposition members were often just empty handed. It's not difficult to be cynical about this government; that's for sure. I'm accused of being cynical but, I can tell you, with very good reason.

Now, I want to talk a little bit about energy rebates. There's an estimate here of $598 million. The budget overview indicated that government expected to spend $125 million on natural gas rebates under its natural gas price protection plan. Is the $598 million in the Ministry of Infrastructure budget on top of the $125 million, or is it part and parcel of the same program? If so, why is there a discrepancy between the two numbers?

Fourthly, the Ministry of Infrastructure is incorporating into its budget estimates spending not only for this budget year but is also spending for next year and for the year after that, and that's on page 275, Mr. Chairman, of the estimates. It's pretty clear when you look at the amounts being expended, which are going from about $700 million last year to over $2.1 billion this year. This is what I was trying to get at with the Provincial Treasurer in question period.

What we're seeing is the government including in this budget $2.1 billion of spending, and that spending will take place in subsequent years. That's not in accordance with normal budgeting practices. Normal budgeting practice would be to put that aside in a reserve fund and clearly indicate that it was to be spent in future years. But instead we have future years' funding, $2 billion worth, that's in this budget, and the result is that the government has been able to show, despite its very conservative budgeting around oil and gas prices, a relatively small surplus for this year, when if you really took a look at it and carefully analyzed it according to normal budgeting processes, the budget would show a surplus of nearly $3 billion. I think that is irregular, Mr. Chairman, and I think that it needs to be responded to in a little more detail than the answer we got from the Provincial Treasurer in question period last week.

A lot of this money is being paid to regional health authorities, school boards, and universities and colleges. Will the amount not just for this year but also for the following years be paid out of this year's budget? If the moneys are being paid out this year, will school boards and health authorities be allowed to put them into separate accounts and draw interest from these accounts? Will they be allowed to use the interest and spend it on things other than capital infrastructure? I think these are things we need to know.

Now, I want to just deal a little bit with the entire situation around utilization formulas. It's very clear that the government is withholding, as a matter of policy, funds for new school construction where they're needed as well as funds to rehabilitate and restore older schools, maintenance money, as a hammer over the heads of the school boards in this province to force them to close schools.

Now, time and time again the Minister of Learning, the Minister of Infrastructure, and the Premier have stood up and said: the government doesn't close schools; it's the school board that closes schools. They wash their hands of it like Pontius Pilate. But I can tell you that the school boards know and the parents know that the hammer is being held by the government, and it's a deliberate policy decision of this government to force school boards to close schools.

Often those schools are in the poorest neighbourhoods, where it is most difficult to move through busing. Often kids, for example, in these neighbourhoods are the most responsible members of the entire family. They get themselves up to go to school, and they're often late. They come to school hungry and they come to school late, but they got themselves there because they're the ones that are responsible in the family. This is all too common in some of these communities. This may not be something that's readily apparent to people who haven't spent time in the inner city. So if the child misses the bus, then there's no one to get him to the school in the next community. That's a really sad result, I'm sure unforeseen by the government, of closing some of these inner-city schools.

These inner-city schools don't necessarily need all kinds of fancy programs. It's more important to have a school in the neighbourhood, in the community where kids can walk and where there are small classes and caring teachers. It forms an essential link in maintaining at least the semblance of a healthy community in an inner-city neighbourhood. When you take these away, all hope of revitalizing that community is lost.

To revitalize some of these communities – and some of them could be very nice. They have tree-lined streets. They have nice older houses. They're close to downtown. They have great potential. But when you take away the school, no family will move there; they'll move somewhere else. So any attempts by the people in that community or by agencies or by the municipality to revitalize that community will not be successful after the school is closed. Of course, then you have more urban blight. You have conditions that breed more crime, more poverty, and the community continues to deteriorate. It's a very sad situation. I wish the government would come up with some creative ways to make more effective use of school space that didn't involve the closure of schools.

I think when we talk about the utilization formula, we need to also take into account that the government insists that things like libraries, computer rooms, or leased-out space cannot be counted in the utilization formula. So attempts by the schools to use the space in other ways is completely irrelevant to the purpose that they set themselves of trying to revitalize the school. The formula makes it almost impossible for schools and school boards and communities to save these schools. Even if they find a good use for it, whether it's an external use and the school board gets a little bit of money from renting it out or an internal use like setting up a computer lab, it doesn't make any difference in terms of the overall utilization rate that the school board reports to the ministry. As a result, they don't get anything for it. I think it's really a sad situation.

I hope the government's review will move quickly in this respect. I wasn't able to get a good answer to that question earlier last week, but I hope it goes ahead. I think we need to raise the whole question of the rationale of the Infrastructure department. The assumption is that if it's a building, it should be in this department, so you get a division between this department operating and looking after buildings and another department making use of them. I don't think that's necessarily the most efficient way to deal with it.

I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the government in the process of this review take a look at transferring control over school buildings and particularly the maintenance of older schools back to the Ministry of Learning, away from the Department of Infrastructure. I don't think it's efficient to say that the building you're in is run by one department and the functions that go on in that building are run by a different department. One department should have control of all of its resources if it's going to use them effectively. So I'd encourage the government to take a look at that as part of their review. Certainly we need to have a more sensitive approach to the utilization formula than we have so far, and we need to have it soon because schools are closing very quickly. Alex Taylor school and McDougall school are already proposed for closure, and Sacred Heart is coming up. I think these are very tragic decisions that have been forced on the school boards.

So, Mr. Chairman, that will conclude my remarks with respect to the estimates of the Department of Infrastructure, and I look forward to the responses from the minister to my questions. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I, too, am pleased to have an opportunity to ask some questions about the Infrastructure budget. I guess I would like to put into question form the comments made by the previous speaker, and that is to ask: is consideration being given to returning the School Buildings Board to the Learning department? Is that under active consideration? School boards have indicated that the split of the buildings away from Learning has now doubled their work. They have to make their case with Learning, and now they have to also make their case with Infrastructure. It seems not to be a very efficient way for decisions to be made. So my question is: is there active consideration to returning the responsibility for school boards to the Learning department?

I wanted to talk, too, and ask some questions about the utilization formula. We've heard and we've been told that there are changes under way to the utilization formula, and I think it's time it was recognized for exactly what it is. It's a mechanism for capping the amount of money that's spent on new schools and school construction. It's a very blunt instrument for accomplishing those goals, and it's an instrument that is very, very hurtful.

I don't know how many school closing meetings the minister has attended since he's been Minister of Infrastructure, but the agony of school closure is not felt in this Assembly; it's felt by citizens in those communities. When you attend those meetings and see the passion and the tears at decisions that are made that will close a school and, in many instances, close a community – and I don't know how many times the minister has attended those meetings. If he hasn't, I would urge him to attend a number of them and to see how you can't stand in this Assembly and make a policy and divorce yourself from what happens to citizens when that policy is implemented. You can't back away from the policy decision and say: oh, that's the school boards' fault. It's not. The school boards are implementing a provincial policy, and they're the ones that are held responsible.

So I would make a plea, if nothing else is done out of this discussion about Infrastructure, for the minister to spend some time at those school closure meetings and then to sit down and look at the utilization formula. Surely it does not serve us well when we have citizen against citizen, community against community, fighting over school facilities. Certainly we can be more creative in terms of the use of that space.

In terms of the use of that school building space, there's an item in the business plan to "establish approximately 100 Alberta Children's Initiative offices in existing and new leased space." My question to the minister is: are schools being considered for those children's initiative offices? What other creative uses of the space, community uses of that space is the ministry considering and would use, if the utilization formula does prevail, to help boards reduce their space and that would strengthen communities? I think we'd all agree that for many communities and neighbourhoods that community school is the heart of the community, and the more services that can be offered out of the building when there is space available would seem to be to the benefit of communities. So my question is specifically about those children's initiative offices and how much work has gone into making sure that they're in empty spaces.

In terms of empty space, again, I'd ask the minister to look at some of the things that have been done with space that has been closed and mothballed and then reopened. I give for an example the Bennett centre in the river valley here. The school board closed Bennett school for a number of years. It was mothballed, and then it was reopened as the Bennett environmental centre. It serves not just Edmonton public but serves the surrounding area, and classes come in from across the province. It preserved an old building that has a rich heritage in this community, and it also has served youngsters extremely well from across the province. So my question is: are boards being encouraged to mothball? Are they being encouraged to dispose of extra space? Is there active seeking of uses of that space which, like the Bennett centre, are possibilities?

I look at Donald Ross in the flats. I think the school board still maintains ownership of that building, but it's been used extensively. It was used by the Commonwealth Games, I think, when they were in the city. I believe it was used when they were planning the capital city parks area. The provincial government put money into that.

Again my plea is: can there be creative uses of that space that maintain it as a centre for the community and make it available should the opportunity for revitalization come about, that there's a school facility there? I think you'd agree that if a board disposes of land in the heart of the city, the chances of ever getting that back for school purposes are rather remote. It's going to be very, very difficult to acquire that land. It'll just be too expensive. So the concern about unused space.

I have another concern, and I should know the answer, but maybe the minister can tell me. What happens when a building is sold? Where do the proceeds go? Do they go to the local board, or do they go back to the provincial government? What is done with buildings? For instance, I think of Glenora school in Edmonton. It was funded entirely out of the operational budget of the school board at that time. There were no provincial funds put into it. I think at the time the province indicated that they wouldn't support it, so it was funded out of the operational budget. What happens if a building like that is sold or, in the case of many buildings, where the province paid part of the building costs? I remember that when I was on the board, they would pay a percentage, and the local board through the local requisition picked up the difference. The local community then has an investment that is beyond the provincial government's investment in those buildings. What happens to that money when those buildings are sold?

I look at the business plan of the ministry, and there are some really interesting key strategies. I go back to the comments of the Auditor General. The Auditor General makes the comment:

The business plan is a performance contract with the Legislature and the public. When it does not clearly describe the performance measures then various interpretations are possible.

I wonder where the performance measures are. Are they coming? How will we know, for instance, if these objectives and key strategies are met? For instance, goal 4, number 3, "measure client satisfaction with services provided by Alberta Infrastructure through an annual survey of stakeholders and clients." What is the measure that is going to be used, and how will we know next year when we come back to this whether that measure has been met? I think that same question applies to a lot of the items in Infrastructure.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Any further comments, questions?

The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the members that have participated in this discussion. Now, there were a lot of questions, and we'll try to answer some of those questions that were asked. I want to just make a few comments on some things that were policy as opposed to direct questions on the business plan and on the budget.

The first one I want to comment on is the Swan Hills Special Waste Treatment Centre. As I said in answer to questions in question period, that plant is extremely important to the province of Alberta, and for the life of me I can't understand how people that pretend to be wanting to protect the environment are anxious that we shut that plant down. What is going to happen to that waste? Where is it going to go? The fact is that we are the only province that has no PCBs, and that's because of the Swan Hills plant. Also, the dioxans, the furans, some of those other hazardous materials: where are they going to go? What's going to be done with them?

I think it's just irresponsible for people to talk the way they are about that plant. Certainly we are going to try very hard to move it out to the private sector, but I can tell you that we are very anxious that that plant continue to operate and continue to keep this environment clean in the province of Alberta.

The energy rebate: I find that one kind of interesting as well. We have before us Bill 1, and that talks to the energy rebates in the future. I'm afraid that maybe I don't have a crystal ball like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, yet the fact is that we don't know. Maybe in the year 2004 there will be a spike. We don't know. This last one came up on us – nobody knew that was coming – and there may be one in the future. Bill 1 puts in place a mechanism so that in fact we can respond to those kinds of situations. So we need some money in the budget to operate that, and that's what the $125 million is.

Talking about conservation and what we have done, currently the province has put in place a program, and we are well along the way to addressing conservation in all of our buildings. As a matter of fact, we're 50 percent done. It's really interesting, as well, when you look at what the government has done as far as greenhouse gas emissions. We are 19 percent below – below – 1990 levels. Ask your kissing cousins in Ottawa where they're at in their whole infrastructure. They're a long ways from that.

There were comments made about the archives and where they might be going. I don't know. We're not that far along in any kind of planning.

I found it interesting that Edmonton-Highlands doesn't seem to realize that operating and maintenance are in the hands of the school boards. It's given to the school boards. We do not do the operating and maintenance. So when you talk about the lack of operating and maintenance, we give block funding from education to school boards for the operation and maintenance of their schools. That's not something that we do.

The utilization issue is an interesting one, but I'm sure that the hon. member would not be excited about going back to the old schools where you have grades 1, 2, and 3 in one room, one teacher: that sort of thing. That's what will happen if you're going to continue to have schools very close to one another and not having the pupils to put in them. So that's part of what this utilization is. It's not the only factor that leads to closing, but that is a part of it.

The use of old schools. Yes, very good comments, and it's something that we are currently looking at. When a school is closed, there are options. The first, of course: is there another use as a school? The second would be: is there use by the government for one of their departments? Then to nonprofit and then, of course, to the private sector.

THE CHAIRMAN: That concludes the time portion.

After considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Infrastructure, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$2,832,240,000
--	-----------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Transportation

THE CHAIRMAN: Again, to begin this evening, we'll call on the Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I start with my opening comments, I'd like to introduce the ministry staff that are with us this evening. The gentleman who bought a brand-new suit for the night's event, sitting in the front row, our new deputy, no stranger to many people here: Jay Ramotar. Gregg is right behind; Gregg is the chair of transportation safety services. We have Mr. Lyle O'Neill, the gentleman with the white hair over to the right, acting ADM, transportation and civil engineering. We have someone that's doing double duty today. He sat through the hon. Minister of Infrastructure's presentation and will sit through mine, Ray Reshke, who is the assistant deputy minister of corporate services. He's doing duty for both departments. Brian Marcotte is executive director, policy and planning. Up front is Leanne Stangeland, director of communications. I know Winnie was here before; and of course Tom Hong, executive director of business management.

I'd like to thank them all for supporting me this evening, and I'd like to thank them for the excellent work over the past year. Quite frankly, they must be suckers for punishment, because they're still with me in this rearranged portfolio of Transportation.

Alberta's road systems are facing tremendous pressures as a result of the province's rapid economic growth. The flip side of growth pressures, of course, is growth opportunities, and developing a highway network which meets the needs for future years will only add to Alberta's future growth and prosperity.

The separation of Transportation into its own ministry shows how important safe and efficient highways continue to be to this government. Now that we have taken over responsibility for the former secondary highways and key primary highways through cities, it makes even more sense to have a ministry dedicated to these tasks.

Now, the main businesses of the department are transportation infrastructure and transportation safety. We'll keep working to continually improve the province's highways through the management of planning, design, construction, and maintenance activities.

A second core business of the ministry involves water and wastewater management as well as the management for the design, construction, and maintenance of major water management projects. Alberta Transportation will employ 824 people, with a total budget of $1.54 billion. Taking on the responsibility for secondary highways and key primary highways through cities requires the recruitment of additional staff to undertake the appropriate level of support and operations. I'm glad to say that this will be achieved without additional funding. Budget dollars have been reallocated within the ministry to accommodate this requirement.

Also, Alberta Transportation and Infrastructure will share corporate support services including human resources, business management, information technology, and finance. This approach, of course, is consistent with the government's overall objective to share services and resources wherever feasible.

For the upcoming year we'll continue to carry out recommendations of the Premier's Task Force on Infrastructure as they pertain to Transportation. To this end, we have received $200 million in advance funding. Approximately $35 million of the advance funding will be used to accelerate construction of the north/south trade corridor. The corridor runs from the U.S. border at Coutts to the B.C. border west of Grande Prairie. The highways making up the corridor will all be four lanes by the corridor's completion in 2007. The key objective is providing a safe and efficient highway corridor to accommodate increased trade traffic from the United States and Mexico. Since 1993 Alberta's trade with the United States has increased 60 percent, while trade with Mexico has gone up 279 percent. That is why the corridor is important.

Overall, Alberta Transportation will spend $196 million in corridor-related projects this year. Major projects include continuing the twinning work on highway 43 between the junction of highway 16 west of Edmonton to the B.C./Alberta border west of Grande Prairie; the continued construction of Anthony Henday Drive, or the Edmonton southwest ring road, and this road will connect highway 2 south of Edmonton to highway 16 west of Edmonton; continuing the extension of the Deerfoot Trail in Calgary through the southern city limits to link up with highway 2 just outside of Okotoks; and the continued paving of highway 4 from Coutts to Lethbridge.

We will continue the Alberta cities transportation partnership program in 2001-02. Under the program the cities of Edmonton and Calgary receive funding based on the equivalent of 5 cents per litre of road fuel delivered for sale in the respective cities. For Edmonton this translates into approximately $65 million a year and $85 million for Calgary. Other cities continue to receive the basic capital grant funding of approximately $60 per capita. Towns, villages, and summer villages also receive cost-shared grants under the street improvement program. Total funding is $51 million.

The grants to rural municipalities program provides annual formula-based grants to assist counties, municipal districts, special areas, and Metis settlements to develop and upgrade a network of local roads and bridges, and this program is budgeted at $132 million for this year.

In addition to municipal transportation funding programs the Premier's task force also transferred full responsibility for former secondary highways to the province. This includes construction, maintenance, and rehabilitation. A budgetary shift from operating to capital expense comes from the department contracting out the work rather than giving grants to municipalities. Estimated spending: $171 million.

The resource roads/new industry program will carry on. The program provides funding assistance to municipalities to upgrade local roads or bridges impacted by resource-based truck traffic. This program also assists municipalities to improve roads affected by the new industrial resource or value-added developments. Total funding: $34 million.

Now, there's more to Alberta Transportation than building roads, and that is of course ensuring traffic safety. It's a vital function of this ministry. Transportation safety services estimates will increase $3.1 million, or 15 percent, that again relocated within the ministry to accommodate the hiring of additional officers and will continue to do the work in areas like driver licensing, licensing enforcement, impaired driving programs, dangerous goods monitoring, and monitoring the commercial carrier industry.

Through innovative partnerships we'll support municipalities in solving their overall transportation, wastewater, and water infrastructure needs. The effective management of water resources aids our economic growth and enhances the quality of life for all Albertans. Funding for municipal water and wastewater is $35 million in 2001-02 and $33.6 million for water management infrastructure.

We are also supporting municipal infrastructure needs through the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, ICAP for short. It's cost shared equally by three levels of government and targeted to green infrastructure projects and really to water and wastewater treatment upgrades. Over the program's six years we'll contribute $171 million. We budgeted $138 million this year for ICAP.

I wish to mention that $200 million in program funding which was deferred last year in order to provide the partial funding for the energy rebates has been restored to the ministry and the municipal partnerships it was intended for.

Having efficient, world-class road systems is vital to Alberta in achieving its vast economic growth potential, and it's equally important to have, of course, safe roads in the province.

I was remiss earlier in making the introductions. Someone who has stuck with me since May of 1997 is, of course, my executive assistant, Ron Glen, who is also sitting up with the rest of the group.

Mr. Chairman, that brings my opening comments to a conclusion.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and make some comments and some observations on the Ministry of Transportation. I'd like to thank the hon. minister and his ministry staff for joining us here this evening and providing some insights into the ministry.

The first thing I'd like to do is commend the hon. Minister of Transportation on his previous job as minister of the supersized Ministry of Infrastructure. I'm sure he's enjoying the task of being able to focus on providing Alberta with the best blacktop in the country.

I have just a few remarks this evening, Mr. Chairman, before I begin my questions. As I requested last night in the Municipal Affairs estimates, I hope the minister would be able to receive a letter with additional questions if time does not permit all of our queries to come onto the table this evening. Thank you.

Unlike other ministries, Transportation is very, very focused. They build the roads and keep them safe. This seems to be the task at hand. Anyone in Alberta with even a short political memory will know that pavement is political in this province. One thing that I have found difficult in going through these estimates for this ministry – I mentioned this in the debate on the Infrastructure estimates, but I think it's important to repeat, Mr. Chairman – is that it is a difficult task in comparing year-to-year numbers when a ministry is always being reorganized. Albertans want their government to be accountable, and as a member of the Official Opposition it is my job to be their voice and to ask the tough questions. Well, when the numbers keep changing, the questions keep getting harder and harder to ask. While the business plan is detailed, I think there should be some mention of how this fits into the old ministry so that the reader has a better perspective on the new ministry.

Again, as I mentioned earlier in my comments on the Ministry of Infrastructure, it certainly would be quite appropriate and quite in order for there to be some explanation as to how the dollars flowed in the old ministry and how they impact the two new ministries which were formed when the split occurred.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would like now to begin my questions. Once again, in looking at the whole performance measures, looking at the business plans and whatever, I see a set of performance measures that really to any persons looking at these do not make a whole lot of sense. I refer on page 442 here to Mechanical Safety of Commercial Vehicles. It says that the maximum percentage of inspected vehicles requiring on-site adjustments in 1999-2000 was 23.3 percent. Now, what does that mean? When does that become a meaningful figure? Well, it certainly doesn't become a meaningful figure until such time as we know how many vehicles were tested. Of course, at that point, then, we can determine just how many of these on-site adjustments were required. Then it really does become a meaningful number.

When we look at the targets for 2000-2001, 2001-2002, and so on, again percentages mean absolutely nothing, and it is very difficult to compare if we don't know how many vehicles were inspected. How can you have a target when you have not said how many vehicles are going to be tested? Again, when we have a random number that are selected, it gives us a percentage. I think that percentage with an adequate sample would prove to be true, but again we don't know how many vehicles are being tested year to year. I would certainly in future years like to see a much better system used for performance measures that are much, much more meaningful than straight percentages.

Now, then, moving forward here with my questions and looking at program 1, ministry support services, we see here that in the year 2001-2002 we have an operating estimate of $13,960,000. We have an operating actual for the year 2000-2001 of $17,589,000 and an operating budget for 2000-2001 of $17,544,000. When we look at the capital estimates for the current fiscal year, it is $5,907,000, and for the previous fiscal year the capital actual was $6 million as well as the capital budget.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

Now, again, to give us a real sense of just how these dollars are being spent, it is critical that we know how many full-time equivalents are employed under ministry support services in the year 2001-2002. If the minister could also please provide us with the breakdown of the full-time equivalents by the three subprograms: the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, and support services. Again, because of the split in the department, I would also like to know from the minister: is the number of full-time equivalents increasing? Is the overall budget decreasing? Are there several positions that have been left open in past years that are now being filled?

As well, I also noticed in here that there were capital projects. What I'd like to know is: what capital projects were funded by the $6 million in capital investment in the year 2000-2001, and what will be funded in the fiscal year 2001-2002 with the $5.9 million being requested in the estimate?

Also, if the minister could provide us a breakdown of the $385,000 minister's office budget for 2001-2002, again, first of all, by the salaries for permanent positions, the salaries for nonpermanent positions, the salaries for contract positions, for travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and also hosting expenses.

Now, then, for the deputy minister's office, if the minister could also provide us with a breakdown of the $385,000 that were budgeted for 2001-2002, again by the same categories: salaries for permanent positions, nonpermanent positions, contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses.

Another question I have for the minister: why are the operating expenses for ministry support services, line 1.0.3, dropping by $3.629 million? What is being reduced to incur this type of savings? I think, as well, that when we look at the overall budget of the government this year, certainly it is good to see that we are saving money in some parts of departments.

Also, if the minister could please provide me with a breakdown of the $13.19 million operating estimate for support services in the current fiscal year, 2001-2002, by the following: business planning and corporate support, communications, financial services, human resource services, information technology, and legal services.

Again, last year, Mr. Chairman, there was the Ministry of Infrastructure. This year there's the Ministry of Infrastructure and the Ministry of Transportation. Both of these ministries show budgets for ministry support services for 2000-2001, but these numbers do not seem to match the approved estimates for the Ministry of Infrastructure for 2000-2001. The capital investment appears to reconcile – a portion of the approved amounts have been allocated to each of the new ministries – but the budgets for the minister's office and the deputy minister's office do not seem to split out. It is very difficult for Albertans to see how much the supersize cabinet is costing.

Accurate reporting on this account is very important. Back under the old ministry of transportation and utilities the minister's office had a budget of $220,000, and public works had a ministerial budget of $270,000. Under the superministry of Infrastructure the amount was $388,000. Now that we have two new and improved ministries, Infrastructure and Transportation, the combined costs for ministerial offices is now up to $775,000. That's $390,000 for Infrastructure and $385,000 for Transportation. Would it be possible for the minister to check with the accountants and provide an explanation as to how they arrived at the 2000-2001 budgets and actual numbers for these ministries?

I would like now to move on to program 2, construction, upgrading, and operation of transportation infrastructure. Again, under this particular program I notice that we have an operating estimate for this current fiscal year of $1,046,188,000. Our capital estimate for, again, this current fiscal year is $476,573,000. My question to the minister in regards to program 2: how many full-time equivalents are employed under program 2, construction, upgrading, and operation of transportation infrastructure? If he could also provide us with the breakdown of full-time equivalents by subprograms in program 2.

The next area I'd like to move on to is line 2.1, transportation safety services, again a very critical part of transportation in this province. There are certainly situations in this province that we have to improve on in order for motorists to know that they are on safe highways, so we have, Mr. Chairman, the Transportation Safety Board, which is comprised of the Driver Control Board, the Motor Transport Board. This is a quasi-judicial body responsible for conducting hearings in the interest of public safety on firms or individuals referred by the courts, police, the registrar, transport inspectors, driver records, and the minister. The boards' hearing process deals with specific issues under the Motor Vehicle Administration Act, the Highway Traffic Act, the Motor Transport Act, and the Off-Highway Vehicle Act.

So my questions to the minister here under transportation safety services. What services are funded under transportation safety services? I would also like to know how many cases were heard before the Transportation Safety Board in the year 2000-2001. Also, is the caseload for the Transportation Safety Board expected to increase or decrease for the year 2001-2002?

Now, then, I noticed as well, reading through here, that one of the major strategies in the ministry business plan is to "develop and implement new initiatives to encourage the safe conduct of commercial carriers and drivers," and I think this is critical. These are the professionals that are on our roads, and they make a living when their machines are moving. They don't make much money when they're sitting still. So the amount of time they spend on the highways is critical, and the amount of time they spend behind the wheel is critical, particularly when we have seen the increase in gasoline and diesel prices. We hear on the news today that gasoline could be as much as a dollar a litre this summer, and if indeed gasoline rises to those heights, then it's certainly very, very possible that our diesel rates will go up. So the margin of profit for these drivers becomes less and less, and of course to make that up, then they have to work more and more.

My questions on transportation safety services to the minister. When we look at the safe conduct of commercial carriers and drivers, will this include the required use of electric on-board monitors to replace logbooks? What other plans is the minister considering in looking at this whole issue of how drivers log their time? I'm sure all of us have heard how many drivers keep two sets of books. I've never encountered any, but it is a story that is very common.

AN HON. MEMBER: You hear that in the coffee shops.

MR. BONNER: Yes, you definitely hear that in the coffee shops.

Mr. Chairman, government officials in Canada are proposing to allow truckers in Canada to drive up to 84 hours a week over extended weeks. This compares to the 60 hours a week allowed in the United States. The new rule agreed to by federal and provincial governments is the same as that proposed by the Canadian Trucking Alliance in April of 1998 and clarified by the CTA in a public statement this past summer. The following are the essential features proposed by the trucking industry and agreed to by federal and provincial government officials in Halifax.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Now, one of the recommendations here is to increase the maximum driving shift from 13 to 14 hours. These are the longest in the regulated world. I would like to know what consultation took place in order to allow this increase of time on the highways. Again, that seems to be a contradiction when goal 2 is to "improve standards for the commercial carrier industry" and, along with federal, provincial, and territorial governments, "review and streamline hours of service legislation for commercial carriers and ensure the rules are consistently applied in Alberta." Now, how can we increase safety if we are allowing drivers to be on the road more and more?

9:50

As well, I see here that another recommendation is that there is to be a decrease in the maximum working shift from 15 to 14 hours. Of course that is good, but that means that somebody could drive for 14 hours straight. Then it would increase the daily rest period from 8 to 10 hours, but only 8 hours need to be consecutive. Again, this puts a tremendous strain on those drivers, and for anybody that is driving week in and week out for 14 hours per day, this certainly wears.

I think of a situation in northern Alberta where the air base at Cold Lake used to have their fuel hauled in by train. They lost a contract, so now the majority of that or all of that fuel is being trucked into the air base at Cold Lake. We have tractor trailers up and down that stretch of highway hauling this fuel. Now, if you've had a driver that's been on the road for 14 hours for any length of time and they are quite weary and fall asleep at the wheel, what we have is we have a rocket going down the highway. The biggest problem I have with this is that when we look at what's happening in the States, their amount of time is much less. It would seem to me that rather than us increasing the amount of time that drivers are allowed to be on the road, what we should be aiming at, particularly with a focus on this north/south corridor, is that rather than have these drivers going up and down the road, we try to harmonize that legislation with our neighbours to the south.

Thank you very much for this opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to continue where my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry left off, and that's dealing with highway systems. That's item 2.2.

The operating estimate is $758 million. That rolls off the tongue. It's a lot of money. The actual operating budget is $663 million, and the operating budget, again, is pegged to be $665 million. Now, my question for the minister concerns the economic climate. How is Alberta's economic climate affecting labour and construction costs for the north/south trade corridor?

I watch with amazement the budgets. You know, it's almost an echo to the boom. I sometimes think that it wouldn't be prudent, but of course the infrastructure system has been left without major reinvestment for a period of time. As a result, in order to catch up, there has to be so much money spent. I realize that the traffic volumes are increasing. And certainly things like the north/south corridor, the improvements in traffic flow, and arterial roads in Edmonton and in Calgary are significant improvements that will benefit all Albertans, but at some point I think we have to start looking at setting money aside in a special fund and use it in the future for roads.

When the economy slows down, there is more labour available. Construction costs will go down because materials and labour will be cheaper. Again, I would like to know: how is Alberta's economic climate affecting labour and construction costs for the north/south trade corridor? Other costs are going up because of the shortage of labour and in some situations a shortage of materials. Machines is another issue.

What sections of the corridor are being paved in 2001-2002, and when will the controversial section near Milk River be twinned? The Milk River highway has always been controversial in this Assembly, at least in the time that I have had the privilege of being a member. Has the department collected any accident statistics specific to the north/south trade corridor to show if the twinning project is improving safety on our highways? Again, why is the budget for operating expenses for provincial highways decreasing – this is program 2.2.2 – from $356 million in 2000-2001 to roughly $311 million in 2001-2002?

Another question for the minister is: what is included in capital investment for other road infrastructure, program 2.2.3, and why is this budget decreasing from $7.9 million to $5.4 million?

Now, at one time the idea of toll roads was floated in the Legislature, and the government rejected the idea not on principle but rather on economics. What are the department's views on toll roads? Is the government still looking at this as a possibility for Alberta drivers? It's not something that I would endorse, but who knows what this government is contemplating.

Program 2.3, municipal partnerships. This is very interesting. We're looking at a substantial difference between the operating estimate and the operating budget from one year to the next. Why did the department, again to the minister, only spend $335 million of the $539 million budget for municipal partnerships in the year 2000-2001? Why has the budget for Alberta cities transportation partnerships been reduced from $256 million in 2000-2001 down to $125.6 million in 2001-2002?
